Mr. Speaker: The Chair has had enough difficulty trying to bring some order out of this. I am sure Hon. Members recognize the need to stay in their places while a vote is being taken. There are certain difficulties when one gets to the hour of midnight. Hon. Members will bear in mind that the Chair is trying to interpret the rules as fairly as possible.

The next question is on Motion No. 37, Mr. Robinson (Burnaby) seconded by Mr. Fulton. Shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The House Leader of the New Democratic Party indicated by note that I could dispense. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) sends me a note stating he wants them all read. Will the Hon. Members please tell me what they want to do?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, as far as we are concerned, you can dispense with the reading of the motions.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 37.

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 46 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"section 13 or advice pursuant to section 14, utilizing only such techniques as are approved by the minister by regulation, such techniques not to include the use of undercover operatives or those for which a warrant is required under section 21 of this Act."

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. McRae: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) on a point of order.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I rise because I consider the proceedings are getting ridiculous. It seems to me that we have all made our point. I would suggest that the three House Leaders absent themselves from the next vote. I would be glad to absent myself as well so the two Opposition Parties would not consider there was a unevenness between the two sides. Perhaps the House Leaders can come to some agreement as to how this thing can be ended. I do not believe the public of Canada finds this a very pleasant proceeding and finds it ridiculous.

All I am suggesting is that three House Leaders absent themselves for a few moments. I would be glad to do what I said I would do, absent myself from the vote so there would be no unevenness. Let us see if we can come to some reasonable conclusion to what is becoming a farce.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member for Burnaby has the floor.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I would suggest to those Hon. Members who are concerned that they read the Bill and they will understand why this is happening tonight.

Mr. Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 38. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Fulton, moves:

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 16.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think, by the actions of the House tonight, we are in grave danger of having the whole evening declared null and void, simply on the ground, if no other, that it requires the unanimous consent of the House to dispense with the ringing of the bells before a vote. I am sure it does.

Mr. Speaker: I call to the attention of the Hon. Member that this is report stage and these are deferred votes. The bell has rung and the usual practice is that which is being followed.

The next vote is on Motion No. 41. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Fulton, moves:

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 17 by striking out line 5 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Where an arrangement or other form of co-operation is".

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In accordance with the decisions already made in the House, I think the Hon. Member for Roberval (Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet) should be discounted from voting as she came after the vote was well under way.

I would also like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that all Members at that end of the Government side who are having sandwiches and cokes should do so outside, like everyone else on this side of the House, because they may even lose a few motions. I do not think that food should be brought into the House. At least, those are the rules we have heard.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. member is perfectly right. Food is not to be brought into the House. The Chair is not aware of any food being brought into the House. However, the Chair can only observe a certain amount.

As far as the Hon. Member for Roberval (Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet) is concerned—

[Translation]

Does the Hon. Member for Roberval (Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet) agree with what the Hon. Member just said? Yes or no?

Mrs. Beauchamp-Niquet: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was outside.

[English]

Mr. Masters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) might wish to have his vote not reported, as he came long after the vote started.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Simcoe South have anything to say in relation to the matter? Obviously, the vote of the Member for Simcoe South and the vote of the Member for Roberval will be discounted.

The motion is still defeated and the vote will be amended accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wanted to raise with you at this point in time the question of the appropriateness of having votes take place without the vote having been called with respect to the motions before us. The point of order I raise is based on your observation that the Order does provide that 15 minutes before the time of expiry of the day of debate on any stage the motions will be put without further debate. I accept that as being the nature and effect of the Order we have before us.

But, Mr. Speaker, what we have now is deferral of certain groupings of votes which have taken place on the basis of your ruling during the course of the deliberations which we have had at report stage. There are certain consequences that flow as a result of a certain negative vote with respect to those groupings. The results in many instances are that if there is a negative vote with respect to a particular vote where it is a vote on which we commenced the grouping, the Speaker will then call individual motions.

I submit to you, Sir, with the greatest deference, that in accordance with the order you would be entitled at that time to call those individual motions for a yea or a nay. We have never had the opportunity to deal with them specifically, precisely, except as a group. When you do call a specific motion you should call the yeas and the nays, and as my colleague the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) suggests, we would then be able to have a voice vote on those subsequent individual motions. I think then you would be able to determine whether or not at that time there was a disposition to pass a motion on the basis of the voice vote. If necessary we could then determine whether a standing vote would take place. We do not have the option at this time of seeing whether or not these particular motions can go through on the basis of a voice vote.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's point is very well taken. The Chair has listened attentively and we will call the yeas and nays on a voice vote and have only recorded votes when five or more Members rise.

May I, under such circumstances, dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether we are going to dispense with the ringing of the bells. I think that the ringing of the bells will at least give us an opportunity to consider what we are doing around this place.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I think that all the voice votes were called and deferred before tonight on each of the amendments. I do not think we are allowed under the rules to start the process all over again.

May I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to Standing Order 79(11) which reads:

When a recorded division has been demanded on any amendment proposed during the report stage of a bill, the Speaker may defer the calling in of the Members for the purpose of recording the "yeas" and "nays" until any or all subsequent amendments proposed to that bill have been considered. A recorded division or divisions may be so deferred from sitting to sitting.

● (0050)

The process was that on each amendent or on each group of amendments upon which Your Honour ruled, the yeas and nays were asked for. Then the recorded division was deferred until tonight. Thus I do not think this is a good idea.

I do not think that intelligent people need bells to talk together. I did not need the bells to talk with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) a few minutes ago. I would have liked my hon. colleague to have responded to my invitation and to have come and talked with me too.

I am under the impression that in fact the ones who are delaying the Bill are the whole Opposition, not only the NDP. They have made a proposal which would have cut the votes by half. It was not enough for me, but I would have agreed to that. However, for a while the Official Opposition has been denying consent, so we will have twice the votes we would have had under the not so generous proposal of the NDP.

I am renewing my proposal. I am still willing to talk with the House Leaders. I have talked with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. I do not think we need to have the bells ringing to have these talks. I am willing to meet with my colleague during the next vote in the lobby or in my office. However, I think it would not be in accordance with the Standing Orders, anyway, to have the bells ring at this stage. The bells have rung, and I think that is enough; the stupidity has gone far enough. I am willing to talk with all reasonable Members to shorten this proceeding. I invite my hon. colleague to come and talk now.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair would like to make one or two observations. First, we have proceeded motion by motion seriatim. In no case have we violated the Standing Orders or procedures of this House. In the case of deferred votes, this has been the practice of the House, without the bells.

In respect to the groupings, the Hon. Member is right. He has made some observations with respect to the groupings. In my interpretation to the House, a vote on one motion would sometimes deal with subsequent motions. We are paying careful attention as we go along to these situations. We are now coming into some of them. We have not up to this point.

However, the Chair is anxious to serve the House. At this stage we are following the votes as deferred, according to the expressed wish of the House up to this point. If the House Leaders wish to confer and come forward with unanimous agreement on some matters, certainly the Chair is a servant of the House where there is agreement. However, at this stage the Chair feels obliged to put the motions. It is perfectly true, as the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has pointed out, that in some of the groupings we are facing the interpretation of the Chair has been that a vote on one motion will dispose of subsequent motions. We will make a careful note of these as we come to them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, whenever there are to be discussions with respect to suggested arrangements, the House Leader of this Party does not make a decision on his own; he consults his caucus.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: When I make an arrangement, it is done with the full approval and approbation of my colleagues. I do not go around telling the sheep how to operate. If we are to take a little time off, then I want an opportunity of finding out what are the proposals and discussing these matters. I will have a chat with my own colleagues. Then perhaps we could bring some sense into this place.

If I were the Government House Leader, I would not be skulking around in my office trying to pretend that I was running this whole show. I would run it and I would try to show some leadership, instead of sitting around here and causing this chaos to happen.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, my hon. and learned friend says that he would like to put the proposals to his caucus. The purpose of the meeting to which I invited him was to make a proposal so that he would have something to tell his caucus. Perhaps he will reconsider.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why not adjourn the House?

Mr. Speaker: At this stage the Chair has no option but to proceed.

Security Intelligence Service

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would seek unanimous consent for the House to stand over until nine o'clock in the morning and recommence then.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. The next vote is on Motion No. 43.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Chair could tell us approximately how many votes are remaining.

Mr. Speaker: We are dealing with Motion No. 43, and there are 174 motions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: According to the Chair's rough estimate, we might make it by eleven o'clock tomorrow. We might not at the rate we are going.

The Clerk informs me that we have voted 28 times out of a possible 91. However, the Chair hesitates to predict whether or not that 91 figure is firm. It is a minimum of 91 votes that are indicated on the basis of the present procedure.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. My calculation was exactly like yours. If we are to go until noon tomorrow, we will lose tomorrow anyway, boys; you might as well decide to sleep tonight and finish her off tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent to the Hon. Member's proposal.

The next vote is on Motion No. 43. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Fulton, moves:

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 18

(a) by striking out line 10 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"person shall intentionally disclose any information that the"

(b) by striking out lines 16 to 23 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, may I put a proposition to you? I think we are making some progress in terms of the question of deferred votes as opposed to consequential votes. The government House Leader has indicated that all votes are completely covered on the basis of deferral. I would put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that on the basis of the vote on Motion No. 42, if that vote were in fact negatived, it would then require that we have a vote on Motion No. 43. This is the first time that Motion No. 43 will come before the House for deliberation and voting. The conventional way of dealing with a motion which has not been voted on before and which is only consequential to certain negative results on Motion No. 42 is that you place the question to the House on a voice vote. This is the normal procedure.

The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that this is the first time this question has been considered by the House. It is not a matter of dealing with an affirmative result on Motion No. 42 which would then deal with subsequent motions. We are dealing with a specific direction given by Your Honour with respect to groupings. You have indicated that a negative vote on Motion No. 42 would then require a separate, new, novel vote on Motion No. 43. I am putting that to you as an example. It seems to me that the normal procedure would be to then call a voice vote, at which time we could determine whether or not there will be a disposition on that basis.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the question of the ringing of the bell is a matter which the House would have to decide depending upon the rules of the House. In that circumstance, there is the provision for five Members to cause the division bells to ring. I submit to you, Your Honour, that in that particular situation, because of the fact that arising from a negative vote is a subsequent motion which comes before the House for the first time, conventional and standard procedure is to ask for a voice vote.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is guided by past practice of the House. This is not the first time we have faced this situation. In the past, as I have been reliably informed by the Table officers, the practice has been the one we are now following. The practice has been that when the debate took place in the House and the voice vote was called, it was not logical, reasonable or in any way the practice of the House that the other motions which would be denied if the first motion were to be negatived could be voted on.

In the spirit of deferment, the intent of the House and the practice of the House has been to dispense with voice votes and bells and to follow the practice that we are now following. The Chair so rules.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, might I be heard on this very important procedural point? The procedure that we have been following has been concerning me all evening. The normally very sound advice of the Table does not meet with my recollection. In the past, at report stage of a Bill the Chair has deferred voting on the grouping of the motions. When the bells have finally been rung in accordance with the terms of the House order, then the groupings are called and voice divisions sought.

I see that you are shaking your head, Sir. However, I can remember Madam Speaker Sauvé saying time and time again: "Shall I dispense with the bells?" We have always given that consent.

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), whose experience the Chair does respect, the recollection of the present occupant of the Chair is quite the contrary. With deferred votes, the practice has been that there is a 15-minute bell at the beginning, a bell which was of a specified duration. Subsequent votes were taken by recorded division or by other agreement by unanimous consent without the bells and without voice votes. The Chair does not intend to innovate a practice at this stage of dealing with this series of recorded votes.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to query your ruling. I realize you have made a ruling, that is clear, and I do not intend to comment on it.

[English]

However, under the circumstances, I understand that this is the practice. With unanimous consent, in exceptional cases, we can do something that is different from the normal practice but something which would not set a precedent. Therefore, rather than seeking the unanimous consent for a 15-minute bell to dispose of Motion No. 43, which would be the effect of the request made by my learned colleagues—

Mr. Speaker: We have already disposed of Motions Nos. 42, 43 and 45. We are now dealing with motions which are subsequent to Motion No. 45. I say this just to set the Hon. Member straight.

Mr. Pinard: I am referring to the motion following Motion No. 45, if you wish, or whichever motion on which they wish to ring the bells. Rather than seeking unanimous consent to have the bells ring for 15 minutes in order to call the Members to the House to dispose of the next motion, at this stage I think it would be useful and certainly humanitarian for you to seek unanimous consent to suspend the proceedings for 15 minutes, after which we would then return to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Proceedings are suspended for 15 minutes. There will be a five-minute bell at the end of the 15 minutes to call Members back to the chamber.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Speaker: In fairness, there must be a method of calling Members back. I would suggest a very short five-minute bell.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Speaker: There will be a 15-minute suspension of proceedings. There will be a five-minute bell, and then we will resume proceedings. Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 1.17 a.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 1.32 a.m.

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding, the Chair would like to say a word for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). The Chair has made some preliminary checks and, while there are some practices one way, there is perhaps a balance in the direction indicated by the Hon. Member for Yukon and the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West. In the circumstances, the Chair will certainly resume and examine the record more carefully.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I can only express my gratitude to the Speaker for an obvious concern that I had after we were into the first five or six votes here.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I suggest you continue to ask for votes. We are willing to keep these votes to a minimum. I think the Opposition Parties can speak for themselves. As far as we are concerned, this bill is one of the Government's priorities. You will see that on this side of the House, we are maintaining our traditional Liberal solidarity. We are prepared to sit all night, if necessary. We are going to pass this Bill if we have to sit without interruptions until five o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The next vote is on Motion No. 46. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Fulton, moves:

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 19 by striking out lines 25 to 33 at page 10 and substituting the following therefor:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am going to try to make this point once again. In so doing it is not my intention to reflect in any way on the action of the Chair during the last vote. I maintain that when calling Motion No. 46 the proper practice would have been for the Chair to have called for the yeas and nays rather than calling for the standing division. I cite page XXV of yesterday's Order Paper where the item in the left hand column will be noted under the heading "Deferred, June 19, 1984". There follows a note. The last clause of that note on the Order Paper reads as follows: "A negative vote on No. 45" which was the preceding vote which we took just before we recessed for 15 minutes, "necessitates separate votes on Nos. 46", the one we just concluded "and 47". We are coming up to No. 47 and I am concerned about the practices we are following here. I am suggesting that when the Chair calls Motion No. 47, the correct practice should be for the Chair to call for the yeas and nays and cause a voice division.

I can tell the Government House Leader now that we are prepared, in advance, to respond positively to the usual request of the Chair when the Chair calls for the yeas and nays and declares the winner of the voice division. The Chair then normally asks whether it should dispense with the ringing of the bells. If that question is put, I can tell you, on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, that our response would be positive and we will dispense with the bells. I am concerned with the practice.

I submit to you, with all the strength at my command, that the practice which I have described here is the proper one backed up by all sorts of precedents in the House. I would suggest that you put the question in that fashion and cause the voice division. I can tell you that there will be no intentional bell ringing as far as we in Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition are concerned. I cannot speak for all Members because, of course, any five Members can rise to cause that actual recorded division.

Mr. Speaker: The task of the Chair is not an easy one. After midnight it gets more difficult. I can only observe that the Chair acted in terms of its own recollection. During the break a check was made. Clearly there are more precedents in the direction indicated by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) than in terms of the recollection of the present occupant of the Chair. In terms of the record of the majority of instances in the House there has been a voice vote called in such circumstances. The Chair obviously has certain difficulties at this point. Perhaps the House can show a little generosity. We will proceed with a voice vote at this point.

Mr. Pinard: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard).

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly, you just admitted that you made an error and are changing your ruling.

Some Hon. Members: Shame! Shame!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. President of the Privy Council is perfectly right. The Chair made a preliminary ruling on the basis of the best understanding of the Chair. The Chair made further investigations during the period of the recess.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair can only say that it does its best and in these circumstances the Chair apologizes to the House.

The next question is on Motion No. 47. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Fulton, moves:

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 19

(a) by striking out lines 27 to 33 at page 10 and substituting the following therefor:

"disclosure of the information to any minister of the Crown is essential in the public interest and that interest clearly outweighs any invasion of privacy that could result from the disclosure, to that person."

"disclosure, and shall submit a report to the Review Committee with respect to disclosures referred to in paragraphs 2(a)(b) and (c)."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is negatived on division.

The next question is on Motion No. 48. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Fulton, moves:

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 20.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the Motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion negatived on division.

The next question is on Motion No. 50. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by the Mr. Fulton, moves:

(a) by striking out line 44 at page 10 and substituting the following therefor:

"officers, provided there shall be no breach of the Criminal Code."

"Review Committee, and the Attorney General of the province in which the employee may have acted unlawfully."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, on the motion of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), was his name read out as having voted?

Mr. Speaker: He was not in the Chamber and could not have voted.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have been here now for five hours and I will only take a second. If we are to be here another five hours could you turn off the television lights?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I can help the Hon. Member in this respect. There has been some dimming. Order, please.

I have all the time in the world if Hon. Members do not wish to come to order.

There has been a request concerning the lights of the House. I have made some inquiries. The question relates to television taping. If we reduce the intensity of the lights the quality of the tapes will be very seriously impaired.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have expressed their views.

The next vote is on Motion No. 52. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Heap, moves:

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 21.

I understand we have a grouping subsequent to this motion.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have now been five hours voting. In the 27 years I have been here, this has now exceeded even the income tax revision Bill in 1970 which was about 10 times as thick as this Bill. This impasse can only be brought about by—I do not know what it is—stubbornness, incompetence, but it certainly is a breakdown in parliamentary leaderhship. I regret to say this, but I have no further intention of participating in this charade on parliamentarianism tonight. That's it. I withdraw.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I ask for unanimous consent of the House that the vote which was just recovered on Motion No. 59 be applied to Motion No. 60.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am agreeable to that, Mr. Speaker, as long as those Hon. Members who have come in from the time of that vote will be able to declare themselves as additional votes for the purpose of this motion.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would have let it go on division, but, of course, if you want to have the vote apply, I will be happy to agree to that.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the vote on Motion No. 59 be applied to Motion No. 60, with the addition of which Hon. Members? Would they please rise? Mr. Cooper, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Nielsen, Mr. Andre, Mr. Blenkarn, Mr. Manly, Mr. Lewis, Mr. Young, Mr. Murphy. Mr. Turner, Madame Begin, Mrs. Erola, Mr. Lachance, Mr. Dubois, Mr. Gourde, Lévis and Mr. Campbell, La Salle. Is that correct?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 60.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I seek the unanimous consent of the House for the vote which has just been recorded on Motion No. 64 to be applied to Motion Nos. 66, 67, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. President of the Privy Council, but according to the decision of the Chair earlier, the vote on Motion No. 64 will apply to Motion Nos. 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 80, 82, 87, 88, 90, 92, 98, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 110, 111, and 112. That was the interpretation of the grouping by the Chair. The Hon. President of the Privy Council sought unanimous consent for two additional motions.

Mr. Pinard: That is a very good decision, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate you. I am very pleased. I think you will get unanimous consent for the vote recorded on Motion No. 64 to apply to those motions between Motion No. 64 and Motion No. 78 exclusively, except for Motion No. 68. I hope to be understood because there are some motions between Motion No. 64 and Motion No. 78 that you have not mentioned. We would like to see them disposed of with the vote on Motion No. 64, except for Motion No. 68.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear whether the Government House Leader included Motion No. 78.

Mr. Pinard: No.

Mr. Deans: He did not. For Motion Nos. 66 and 67 that is fine. Perhaps you could read others out to me.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the vote on Motion No. 64 apply to Motion No. 66?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The next vote is on Motion No. 66. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Heap, moves:

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 24.

During the taking of the Vote:

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to compliment the Table Officers on their ability to recognize Members, but I was not in my seat during the vote and, therefore, I should not be counted.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The rules clearly state that, in order to vote, a Member should rise in his place and be counted. I noticed in the last several votes that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) merely waved his hand and did not stand up. Therefore, I request that his vote not be counted.

Mr. Speaker: It may well be that the Chair's vision gets a little less clear at this hour, but the Chair recognized motion at that point and it was counted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would ask for unanimous consent that the recorded division on Motion No. 119 be applied to just a few motions, Nos. 119, 120, 121 and 122.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I can agree with the application on Motion Nos. 119 and 121, but I cannot agree to Motions Nos. 120 and 122.

Mr. Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 119. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Deans, moves:

That Bill C-9 be amended be deleting Clause 54.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I distinctly heard the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) suggest that the previous vote be counted for Motion No. 119. I heard the Member—

Mr. Speaker: No. It is Motion No. 119, this vote, the result of this vote that was proposed.

Mr. Pinard: The previous vote applies to Motions Nos. 119 and 121.

Mr. Deans: I am quite prepared to have the outcome of vote on Motion No. 118 count for Motions Nos. 119 and 121.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair stands corrected. At this hour we make a few mistakes. The vote on Motion No. 118 will, by unanimous consent, be applied to Motion No. 119. Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I declare Motion No. 119 defeated. I understand the same vote will apply to 121 by unanimous consent with the addition of the vote negatived Mr. McKnight and Mr. Elzinga.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, no, in favour. It is not negatived. It is affirmative.

● (0410)

Mr. Speaker: It appears that there are Hon. Members wishing to be added. I believe that I am interpreting them correctly. Mr. McKnight, Mr. Elzinga, Mr. Wise and Mr. Young wish to be recorded as additional affirmative votes. As additional negative votes, Mr. Lachance, Mr. Gingras and Mrs. Côté wish to be added. Is that correct?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The next vote is on Motion No. 119.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I declare the motion carried on division.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the motion we have just voted on is a motion in the name of the Government. There is another one, Motion No. 160. I think there would be unanimous consent to carry Motion No. 160.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Does the House give unanimous consent to carry Motion No. 160?

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I declare the motion carried.

The next vote is one Motino No. 154. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Deans, moves:

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 80 by adding immediately after line 35 at page 37 the following:

"(4) Notwithstanding subsection (3), the Minister shall not cause to be filed a certificate pursuant to that subsection in respect of paragraphs 19(1)(e) or (f), or paragraphs 27(1)(c) or (2)(c) where the person believed to engage in subversion has neither used, nor advocated the use of violence.—

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Shall we dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada) moved that Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, be read a third time and do pass.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The tradition on third reading with respect to legislation has been for the Minister who introduces the motion to address the House. In terms of the point of order, I simply want to know whether it is the intention of the Minister to make any remarks on this, or is he going to continue in this arrogance, which I cannot understand, with respect to such important legislation when we have closure imposed upon us. I would like to have some indication of whether there will be some initial remarks. If there will not, our Party is prepared to debate this vigorously during the course of the day.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I agree that there are a lot of traditions and some of them must be followed. Others should be changed. For example, what happened last night was most childish, especially coming from the NDP.

With regard to the request made by the Hon. Member, I do not think that tradition need be followed either. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) is free to speak at any time on third reading. If he wants to speak, he will rise and deliver his speech. There is no tradition that on third reading the mover should speak first. That is not true.

[Translation]

Mr. Kaplan: My answer to the question is that, in the last few months and especially the last few hours, many of the comments I heard on this Bill were so far-fetched, inaccurate and destructive that I have now decided not to listen a great deal to the arguments of the Opposition. However, I think most of what was said last night about this Bill was so far-fetched it was not worth responding to.

• (1110)

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the House Leader of the Government indicates that he is unhappy with certain traditions. I simply want to say to him that if we could find a way to do today, tomorrow, next week and next year what we did last night and stop this Bill from passing, we would use it. The Bill is so bad, so offensive, and so disgusting in nature that it ought not to pass.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is having difficulty at this point. Are any Hon. Members wishing to be recognized for debate?

Mr. Masters: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt the debate, but I would ask unanimous consent of the House to present the first report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, which is prepared in both official languages. The subject matter concerns the taxation of visual and performing artists and writers. With the permission of the House I would like to present the report now.

Mr. Speaker: This can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have not been apprised of that intention. While I do not see that there would be any objection, the normal courtesy is to let the Opposition know precisely what the intention is, particularly the Opposition House Leader.

I will take the matter under advisement. Maybe we will be able to meet with the Hon. Member later in the morning to see if we can make some arrangements to look at what he wants to do.

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent for the Hon. Member's request. In the circumstances, he cannot move his motion.

Mr. Masters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I only want to add a brief remark. I recognize that, and do not wish to take up the time of the House, but to my knowledge there had been an understanding. I would simply request that the matter be looked into.

Mr. Speaker: It is quite clear that there is not unanimous consent.

Security Intelligence Service

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, this is the last day of debate on Bill C-9, which is the legislation concerning the Canadian security service. You will know, Mr. Speaker, that we are at what is called third reading stage. If my hon. friends on the government side do not stop talking, I will sit down until they do. I wonder if Your Honour could call for order.

An Hon. Member: Wake up, Chairman.

Mr. Fraser: It is not my place to call order, Mr. Speaker, but there is too much noise.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): There appears to be too much noise, including a Member who said, "Wake up, Chairman", which is certainly offensive. Members should listen to the Member who is speaking.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, it certainly was not I who made that remark about which you complained. It must have been somebody on the government side.

I was saying that we are here today because this is the last day of debate on Bill C-9. For those who are not knowledgeable about the terms of Parliament, this is what is called third reading. Just so that the public knows what has happened, I think it should be on the record that a number of months ago this Bill was first debated in the House at what is called second reading. That is supposed to be a debate on the principle of the Bill.

At that time the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) said that the Bill contains a legislative mandate which sets out rules which will become law, within which the security service of Canada must operate. It was obvious at that time that the security service of Canada, which has been operating for many years under the aegis of the RCMP, had and needed some extraordinary powers. It was the decision of the Government to mandate those powers into law primarily because, after the revelations of wrong-doing in the early 1970s and late 1960s, it was stated publicly in 1977 in this House that the Government felt there should be such a mandate so such wrong-doings would not happen again. On that, your Honour, there obviously cannot be any disagreement.

The Government also felt that the security service should be removed from the aegis of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Government's reasons for this were that almost 14, maybe 15, years ago—certainly as long as 12 or 13 years ago—members of the security service who also were Royal Canadian Mounted Policemen did things they should not have done. Therefore, after the revelations of 1977 in this House, the Government appointed the McDonald Commission.

The McDonald Commission studied the matter for a number of years and it came up with many recommendations, one of which was that the security service should be removed from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. A not very thinly disguised implication was "because you can't trust the Mounties".

It was also very clear, however, that what went wrong with the security service under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police back in the early 1970s and late 1960s was that a Prime Minister and various Solicitors General on the government side in the Liberal Party failed to exercise appropriate control over the security service, and failed to ask the most fundamental, ordinary questions that any good commander of any force would ask, and they implicitly told the Mounties to find information and not to discuss with the Government what they would do and how they would do it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I sincerely apologize to my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), for interrupting his excellent presentation, but in light of the fact that unanimous consent was asked on behalf of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications to table a report, I have now had an opportunity of discussing this matter with the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Geoff Scott), and I think if you were to seek unanimous consent now consent would be forthcoming to table the report in question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent to table the report now?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, we would be pleased to give unanimous consent. I thought there must have been a breakdown in communications someplace, and I am delighted to see the report table in the House today.

Mr. Masters: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for the interruption in the dissertation of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). I thank the Opposition House Leader for his courtesy. We all have communication problems from time to time, even the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Kaplan that Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact An Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, be read a third time and do pass.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, what happened in the early 1970s, and it happened partly at least as a consequence of the concerns of the FLQ in Quebec, the Government of the day, was that the Solicitors General of the day, and the Prime Minister of the day, with a wink, a nudge, and a nod, told the Mounties in the security service to go out and find everything they could and "not tell us, the Government, what they were going to do or how they were going to do it". That is an abysmally disgraceful part of the record of any Government of Canada.

I remember well, Sir, hearing the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) make a statement when questions were being raised in the House of Commons in 1977 as the revelations came out. Questions were being raised by the Progressive Conservative Party and the other Party in the Opposition, which were being stonewalled by the Prime Minister. The questions were: What has gone wrong? Why can the Government not control illegal actions of the security force? The Prime Minister's notion is one which should be studied by law students for many years to come. His notion was that it was not up to him, that it was not up to the Government, to be concerned with the everyday activities of the security force and that if it did secret, illegal things, the courts would protect us. That was the theory of the Right Hon. Prime Minister, a theory which every first year law student knows is absolute nonsense and any practising lawyer knows is absolute nonsense, because secret, illegal activities will not even get before the courts.

I remind Hon. Members of that, because there was an attitude at the time on the part of the Prime Minister, and apparently on the part of Solicitors General, that in the murky world of intelligence gathering the Government ought not to know and certainly did not want to know. As events transpired, when members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police exceeded what was appropriate and proper, they were abandoned immediately by their political masters who should have taken their responsibility.

The point I am making is that the RCMP and the security service of Canada were betrayed by their political masters, and those political masters were Liberals, including the Prime Minister of Canada. It became very convenient to find someone else to blame other than the Government. Finally, as more revelations became clear, the McDonald Royal Commission was set up under Mr. Justice McDonald and two other eminent commissioners.

It is interesting that the McDonald Commission came down with the conclusion that the security service should be removed from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It indicated that members of the RCMP could not be trained properly in intelligence gathering work, that it was impossible for an agency working under the aegis of the RCMP to do the special and sophisticated work required. The Commission believed, for reasons which I never found very logical, that it had to be some kind of special breed of creatures, perhaps born in some distant land, and only they, after special training, were fit for work in intelligence gathering.

Also, it pointed to the abuses which were certainly there for many years. It is interesting that it completely ignored the fact that the RCMP is a very sophisticated police force in crime detection, prevention, and the collection of information with respect to crime. The Commission forgot, as it sat month after month, year after year, in its deliberations, that it was looking backwards, not forwards, and that what it was examining had happened many years ago. It did not seem to occur to them that the difficulty was not with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as such, but the lack of control and the lack of adequate constraints on the part of their political masters. The blame lies squarely with the Prime Minister and Liberal Solicitors General, and to place the blame anywhere else is a cruel and wretched cop-out. This is 1984, and the sins of commission or omission that were complained of happened 13, 14 or 15 years ago.

When I asked the Solicitor General about this security service in committee, this security service which until at least today is still under the aegis of the RCMP and reports to the Government through the Commissioner of the RCMP, I pointed out that all this talk of the new security service under this bill was just not so, that there was nothing new about the security service. After this Bill passes it will be the same people, the same building, same files, same typewriters, and same telephone. All that will change under this Bill is that, instead of an RCMP commissioner, there will be a director reporting to the Solicitor General. Then there will be some consequential changes with respect to pensioners, payment, and internal administration.

I asked the Solicitor General how, if there was such a desperate need to remove the security service from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the traditions, constraints, and concepts of justice and duty and country which go with that magnificent force, it was getting along all these years since those distant days 13 or 14 years ago when things went wrong. He had to say they were getting along very well with the security service under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. He said the people were very fine people, that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was a very fine organization, that his relations with the Commissioner were very good, and that he had nothing but good things to say about the RCMP. That seemed a little strange in view of the fact that the whole reason for getting the security service away from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was because they had had a lot of bad things to say about it.

I asked the Minister, and I quote:

> The fact is, Mr. Minister, that for many months now—for many years in fact—since the revelations in the House of Commons in 1977 and the action which was taken consequently, the security service has been working as a part of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Commissioner has been reporting to the Solicitor General effectively, competently and in a manner which I am sure you would agree meets with your approval. You testified that this has been done in a manner which meets the appropriate sensibilities of the Canadian public. Is that not so?

That was my question to the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General replied: "Yes, that is so." If the security service today is exactly the same security service which was in existence months and years ago, and which has been operating properly and well, it is very difficult to understand the strange, tortured logic of those who say that the only route to go is to take the security service away from the aegis of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

One can say that the attachment to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is just emotional, just sentimental. It is a romantic view that the traditions of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are such that perhaps there would be more public trust in the knowledge that a secret intelligence-gathering organization fell under the aegis of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. After all, though, that is all romanticism and this is 1984. There is not much room for that any more.

Let me tell you what another group said about the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The British Columbia Civil Liberties Association is an association which is well and favourably known to me and to many others. It is a serious association acting within my province and it concerns itself with the whole question of civil liberties.

When I was a boy growing up, we did not use the phrase "civil liberties" very much. We used another phrase that was well understood, "British justice". It was the tradition that we thought we had brought from the best of the old country and incorporated into our system. Today, the phrase "civil liberties" is used, but then it was justice and it is today justice for individuals living in freedom in this country of which we are speaking.

The British Columbia Civil Liberties Association is an association which is concerned with justice and is understandably and properly concerned with the ever-present potential for abuse in a police system or in a security intelligence system. But it is one which does not have a romantic, sentimental attachment to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, or to any police force for that matter. Its purpose is to be skeptical and to be careful in its consideration of police and security services. Therefore, it has no romantic notions about the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. A representative of this association had the following to say before the committee:

> The second concern deals with the civilianization of the security service. The Senate Committee and McDonald Commission cite essentially two reasons for civilianization. One is that the intelligence personnel of the security agency require different training and abilities from those training and abilities that RCMP officers have and, secondly, the police hierarchy is incompatible with the strict process of review and control that is envisaged for a civilian security agency.

Mr. John Russell, the member of the association who was giving evidence at the time, had this to say:

> I think the lie is given to the first item by the fact that the RCMP security section is going to be given over to the new security service.
> We are left with the conclusion that either the RCMP does train competent personnel, in this case, or the service will begin its life with unsuitable employees. In our view, we would prefer that the security service, if there is to be a security service, should remain within the purview of the RCMP, where threats to national security are more likely to be placed in a realistic context. That is, they will be assessed in relation to other criminal activity and not isolated.

Your Honour—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair regrets to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his time is up.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, it is unlimited time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair will let the hon. gentleman continue for a moment.

Mr. Fraser: I am placed in a difficult position, Your Honour. I had inquired of the Table this morning and I was told that under the rules today I had unlimited time. I do not intend to go on in an unlimited fashion but I had structured my remarks accordingly. I hope I have sufficient time to finish my remarks.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on that point of order. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that under the provisions of Standing Order 35(1) which deals with time limits with respect to interventions in debate, the following is the case:

> Unless otherwise provided in these Standing Orders, when the Speaker is in the Chair, no Member, except the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, or a Minister moving a government order and the Member speaking in reply immediately after such Minister, or a Member making a motion of "no-confidence" . . . shall speak for more than twenty minutes—

Accordingly, I would suggest that at third reading stage there is not the constraint of a 20-minute limitation on the person replying on behalf of the Opposition with respect to this legislation. I would suggest that the Hon. Member, as he has indicated, has something further to say. Although he will not abuse the privilege, I know that he would like to complete his remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair has just been advised along the lines put forward by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). As a matter of fact, the Chair invited the Hon. Member for Vancouver South to continue his remarks.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Listening to the reading of the rule by the Member opposite, it struck me that the Hon. Member speaking was not entitled to unlimited time because he was not speaking in reply to a speech made by a Minister on this stage of the Bill. On the other hand, the Hon. Member did indicate that he had structured his remarks in such a fashion and that he had had some assurance that he would be allowed to complete his remarks as he had structured them. In view of that, Hon. Members on this side have no objection to his continuing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair has made the decision in any event. Second, the hon. gentleman is not speaking in reply to a speech, he is speaking in reply to the mover of the motion. The Minister moved a motion earlier today. Although he has not yet spoken, he actually moved it and the Hon. Member for Vancouver South is entitled to unlimited time.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of my friend, the Hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), and I appreciate his indication that, whatever the rule may be, there would be no objection to my continuing. I do want to assure the Hon. Solicitor General that I will not be overly long, but I do have more things to say.

We were discussing the question of the removal of the security service from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. In addition to the remarks made by the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association to which I just referred, in which it is clearly stated that in terms of public trust it would be preferable if the security service remained under the aegis of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, others who are knowledgeable had much to say as well. The Attorney General of British Columbia submitted a brief to the Justice Committee, and, among other things, he had this to say:

> It seems to me to make a lot more sense to build on the institutional credibility that is already established, to use the umbrella of confidence that there is there, and to direct it and make it an effective security agency and make it an accountable one. I believe the Royal Canadian Mounted Police can be made an effective security police force.

The Attorney General of Ontario on February 7, 1984 had this to say:

> But I find extremely unattractive and fundamentally unsustainable the assertion in this legislation that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police would exceed a statutory defined mandate, evade the formal external review mechanisms, thwart Ministerial accountability and abuse its defined statutory powers. The history and tradition of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police suggests very clearly to me that once there is an end to the absence of governmental direction and responsibility, which gave rise to the RCMP wrongdoing, the force will respond willingly and effectively to the wishes of the Canadian people as reflected in the new legislation.

The Attorney General of Saskatchewan had this to say:

> There is no indication, however, that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, as it is presently being managed by its senior officers, is not being responsive to the needs identified by MacKenzie and McDonald for flexibility and change.

● (1140)

During the consideration of this Bill, we have argued strenuously that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is getting a bum rap. A lot of people across this country have fallen too easily into the error of forgetting where the responsibility for the abuses of yesteryear really lies. The amazing thing about those who have said that the security service should be removed from the RCMP is that it has never occurred to them that for many years now, as the Solicitor General has admitted, the security service has been operating competently, effectively and properly under the Commissioner of the RCMP. The Solicitor General admitted that only a few weeks ago. Since the abuses of the early seventies and late sixties, it has never occurred to those individuals that things have been running very well and very efficiently. The training has been upgraded. The internal organization has been made more sophisticated. There have been administrative guidelines set down on the security service to ensure that what happened then would not happen now.

Some people have the strange view that unless this legislation is passed today, the security service could again do terrible things. That shows an incomprehensible lack of understanding of what happened in 1977, after revelations were made in the House. At that time everything was tightened up. Senior officials in the security service over the last number of years have ensured that nothing similar to the abuses which happened before could happen again. that view is extraordinary. To suggest that until this legislation is passed there will be continuing abuse does not do justice to the senior personnel who have been in the security service over the past number of years.

That is only one part of this Bill, it is not the main part. The main part of this bill establishes a set of rules within which a security service will operate. At second reading, the Government indicated that when the Bill reached committee, and when Members from all Parties considered the Bill and looked at the individual clauses, then there would be an opportunity to call in concerned citizens of Canada and listen to their suggestions. Then if the Bill appeared to be flawed, if errors were apparent, if it appeared to be inadequate, and if a persuasive case could be made by the citizens who came before the Members of Parliament, of course, that would be the time to put amendments. In the normal course of things, if one is dealing with a responsible government which is sensitive to the fact that this is a democracy and citizens matter—not just bureaucrats, Cabinet Ministers, and Senators who are unaccountable to anybody or anything—and if the attitude is right, amendments are accepted.

In this case, 25 groups and many individuals appeared before the committee. Over 50 briefs were filed. Evidence was given that the Bill was flawed. I am not referring only to the RCMP aspect. Of course, there was evidence submitted regarding that to which I have referred. The committee was told that the language in the Bill was too loose and that the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" had not been properly thought through. Because the language was imprecise, it was suggested that it did not establish adequate constraints on the security service. In particular, Hon. Members who have been paying attention to this legislation will know that subparagraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Clause 2 set out what are threats to the security of Canada. That is the clause which triggers what the security service can do in terms of intrusive surveillance of people. That is just another way of saying that wire-taps, illicit but now legal entry into residences and offices, search and mail opening—all of these things—if the threat to the security of Canada is great enough, become justifiable.

I have said before that it is too easy to talk about the illegality of what the intelligence-gathering security force will be required to do. Under certain circumstances this Bill allows conduct to be legal which ordinarily would be illegal, because of the concern for threats to the security of Canada. Witness after witness appeared before the committee and told us that the Bill was flawed and inadequate. They suggested amendments. Suggestions for amendments were made concerning the definition of threats to the security of Canada. Suggestions for amendments were made with respect to the RCMP and the review committee which would be established under the Bill. That committee would be established in order to ensure that someone was watching the security service because of its awesome power. It was suggested that Cabinet documents, which dealt directly with the security service and which could well contain directions to the security service, ought to be seen by the review committee. It was further suggested that there should be a review committee made up of Members of Parliament in order to achieve greater accountability. It was suggested that warrants for wire tapping should be limited to 60 days, as is the case under the Criminal Code, and not for many months as set out in this Bill.

There were many other suggestions. By the time the Bill reached report stage in the House, the Progressive Conservative Party had amendments for Clause 2, which is the definition section; Clause 3, which would have retained the security service within the RCMP; Clause 12, which dealt with better wording and the duties and functions of the security service; Clause 20, which related to more precise language and direction regarding the alleged unlawful conduct and the consequences thereof of employees within the security service; and Clause 21, which related to the method by which warrants would be applied for and the limitations of time for those warrants. I am speaking now of warrants of intrusive surveillance, wire-tap or otherwise.

We proposed amendments to Clause 22, which would have put more constraint on the renewal of warrants. We proposed amendments to Clause 24 which were designed to clarify the position of an innocent third party who found himself acting on orders for someone, by someone, who was acting under a warrant. We proposed amendments to Clause 31, insisting that the Inspector General, who is set up under this Bill as part of the review process, would at least be able to see the Cabinet documents which are in the control of the service. We proposed amendments to Clause 38, saying that the review committee should see Cabinet documents. We proposed amendments to Clause 56 relating to the establishment of a parliamentary oversight committee. And we proposed amendments to Clause 61 relating to a direction in which the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who are acting as a consequence of work done by the security service at the federal level, should consult with other police forces at the municipal and provincial level. We had other amendments as well.

I believe Hon. Members would agree that those are substantive amendments which go to the very sum and substance of this Bill. I believe Hon. Members who will remember what was said at the second reading debate by the Solicitor General and by Government Members would agree with me that it is that very kind of substantive amendment at committee stage to which the Government ought to pay attention.

We in the Progressive Conservative Party did not dream up those amendments all by ourselves. We framed those amendments as a consequence of testimony brought in front of the committee by a very wide range of people, including the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association, other civil liberties associations, the Attorneys General of a number of provinces, police chiefs and others. The suggestions which were brought to this committee were not brought with the design to destroy the security service. They were not brought with the design to prevent a legislative mandate for a security service. They were not brought by destructive design. They were brought to improve the piece of legislation which had been presented.

It should be recorded that there was good reason for these witnesses to come before the committee. Following the McDonald report, the infamous Bill C-157 was drafted by the Liberal Government and instead of presenting that Bill, which was the forerunner of Bill C-9 with which we are dealing now, it was presented to a Senate committee, a committee no doubt of distinguished Canadians who were appointed to the Senate, but they do not have to get elected to be there. That Senate committee took a look at Bill C-157 and said, "Wait a minute; this is not a very good Bill". They were very critical of it and the Government sensibly withdrew the Bill.

I would hate to put out the thought, the suspicion, that someone drafted Bill C-157 in extreme terms with the idea of letting a Senate committee have a whack at it, then coming in with another Bill with some less obvious extreme terms in it. I could never prove that, of course. However, I practised law for many years and I used to teach young lawyers that when they are preparing a lawsuit, they start off knowing a lot of things they cannot prove. I suppose today, standing here in this Chamber with Hon. Members, I am very much like a lawyer who has been through a long lawsuit, and I may not be able to quite prove that last allegation; but it fits the piece.

So we got Bill C-9. We went to committee and, as I have recorded, Mr. Speaker, many people came in front of us. A lot of things happened at that committee which I am not going to go into now. There were attempts to close off debate. The Chairman of the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee, a distinguished Member of this House, was put into an intolerable position by the antics of his own Party and was only just the other day supported by this Party in our nomination that he continue as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. So I want it clearly understood we are not being critical of him. He was put in an impossible situation.

Apart from all that, I have said in this House that no substantive amendments were accepted at committee, and I carelessly at one point said "no" amendments were accepted at committee. I was wrong there and I apologized to the Solicitor General yesterday. However, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that what was accepted at committee was practically nothing. An amendment of my own on Clause 4 changed the words with respect to the term the Director would serve from "good behaviour" to "during pleasure". I am not saying that is not important, but it is not the substance of the Bill. On Clause 12 the committee accepted another amendment which took out some superfluous words, which was a very sensible thing to do but hardly an amendment of substance. On Clause 2 the committee accepted an amendment of a former Solicitor General, Mr. Allmand, which was the same amendment being proposed by both the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), and myself, which more precisely modified the word "violence" in Clause 2 by adding the word "serious". That was not unimportant but it hardly went to the very substance of the Bill.

The Government also accepted another amendment which put some limitation, at least, on warrants aimed at subversion; in other words, aimed at domestic activities of Canadians who had not yet committed any crime. But the most extraordinary amendment which was put before the committee was to Clause 39. It was put by myself, supported not only by the Hon. Member for Burnaby but—by accident—one Hon. Member of the Government side as well. That amendment would have allowed the review committee access to Cabinet documents.

Just so there is no doubt on the record when someone comes back and asks what we did with this Bill and why did we not do something proper, it should be made very clear that that was the limit of amendments made at committee. That last amendment, which was substantive, was met yesterday by a counter-amendment from the Government wiping it out.

My point is this. We have been invited to engage in a phony process and I do not believe the Government was ever serious about accepting any substantive amendments whatsoever in committee. The Solicitor General over and over again said: "Well, what is all the fuss about anyway? This whole issue has been debated for years. First there was the Mackenzie Commission in 1969, then the McDonald Commission after the revelations of 1977, then its report in 1981. Then there was Bill C-157 which went to the Senate, and then there was the Senate report. My goodness, what is holding it up? Why do you have to keep talking about it?"

This line of the Minister was echoed by some editorial writers across the country. I can understand why, because they are busy people and they have to write editorials every day. They do not have time to see through the smoke and mirrors every day and they miss the point. The fundamental point is that under our system we, as legislators, have to look at the words of the Act in front of us now, not at something that was in the Mackenzie report in 1969, the McDonald report in 1981, or the Senate report a year ago. We have to look at the Bill in front of us.

It astounded me when Members of Parliament who were putting these amendments got advice from some editorial boards and others to stop talking and get on with it. Pass it, they said, because it has all been discussed over and over again. This despite the fact that we had 50 briefs, 25 groups and witnesses in committee, all saying we can make this Bill a lot better and we ought to do it. They do not have to take my word for it; I can quote some editorial boards to support my position. On April 24 The Globe and Mail wrote a thoughtful editorial about this Bill. It said:

> Whatever happens, Bill C-9 should not be passed in its current form. While its flaws are less numerous than those of Bill C-157, its previous incarnation, the bill would still grease the wheels of the domestic intelligence-gathering force at the expense of the rights of the public the Government purports to defend.
> Agents would still be empowered, with a judicial warrant, to "demand, seize or detain" first-class mail, examine health records and violate the confidentiality of income tax returns. The agents could, with judicial approval, place wire-taps on telephones for 365 days, rather than the 60 days permitted in criminal investigations.
> Their actions would be monitored by a review committee which, Solicitor-General Robert Kaplan says, would be independent of the Solicitor-General and the agency and would "be there to blow the whistle on (the agency)." Yet the committee members, who would take an oath of secrecy, could report nothing to Parliament unless the director of the CSIS first certified that their report complied with that oath.

Dealing with its powers, it goes on:

> Bill C-9 is too ambiguous in this area. It defines a security threat as, among other things, activity within Canada in support of the threat or use of violence against persons or property to achieve a political objective within a foreign state. This could, without stretching the point, empower CSIS agents to monitor groups raising money to help rebels in Afghanistan or El Salvador, or even, since the phrase is "within a foreign state," the Governments of Nicaragua and Israel. Mr. Kaplan says this would not happen; but then, we doubt many people in the early seventies expected the RCMP would steal the membership lists of the Party Québécois.

It ends by saying:

> As it stands, however, Bill C-9 is not the remedy Mr. Kaplan believes it to be. In its present form, it would only perpetuate the disease.

A more recent editorial in the Vancouver Sun, my city, of Monday, June 18, shows that they were watching carefully what was happening to us in committee. It says:

> The government choked off consideration of the legislation by the Commons justice committee after making only a few cosmetic changes. The bill remains the seriously flawed product of a lame-duck administration and should be either thoroughly rewritten or shelved.

It goes on to say:

But as long as the security Bill makes Canadians insecure, it does not deserve passage into law.

Then I suppose I would be amiss in not quoting Toronto's other voice, as that newspaper advertises itself, the Toronto Sun, a paper which prides itself on taking a pretty hard-nosed view of the world. In an editorial on June 20, 1984, headed "False security", it says:

It's downright criminal that Canada has to meander along another six months or so without a security agency.

But we've done just that for the last eight years or so. We can manage another six months to avoid dangerous legislation—and the bitter taste of closure.

Those comments are in marked contrast to one of the other Toronto newspapers, the Sunday Star, dated April 8, 1984. It asks the question at the head of its editorial: "Why delay security Bill?" It then says:

All in all, Kaplan's legislation is an honest effort to strike the "delicate balance" between collective security and civil rights that a special Senate Committee called for last year. Unless the Tories and New Democrats have a better idea, they shouldn't delay its passage.

The fact of the matter is, Your Honour, that not only did the Tories and the New Democrats have a better idea, those better ideas were proposed by amendments in committee and at report stage, including amendments from a former Solicitor General on the Government side. Those amendments were a direct consequence of listening to some of the most eminent lawyers and civil rights people and others, including the United Church of Canada, who came in front of that committee. But the whole process has been a waste of time. All those people came from across the country at taxpayers' expense, and I see there are taxpayers in the gallery today, and made their suggestions, but none of the substantive ones were acted upon.

The Members of Parliament who made recommendations after listening to the evidence have all been ignored. The process has been cut off with closure. That was the first act this Government took after the election of its new so-called reform leader, Mr. Turner. Why should we be surprised? Mr. Turner was the Minister of Justice when the War Measures Act was brought in, a move which almost every observer today says has never been justified and that whatever had to be done could have been done under the criminal law.

Mr. Blais: Hindsight.

Mr. Fraser: It was not hindsight. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) sits in his seat and says that what I am saying about the War Measures Act is hindsight. Let me say this to my good friend. I was practising law in the courts when the War Measures Act was brought in. If the Minister thinks there were not common law courtroom lawyers at the time who said it was wrong, that the Government had not justified it and it ought never to have been allowed, the reason must be because the Minister was too young then to know what was going on.

● (1210)

Mr. Blais: I was practising law like you were.

Mr. Fraser: If the Minister was practising law at that time, he was a lousy lawyer. If he had learned anything about the common law he should have known that the War Measures Act did not have justification for its passage. It is clear that no one other than hysterical, ranting people can get up today and try to justify it. It has not been justified anywhere across the country among a critical, intelligent and thoughtful audience. The same man who supposedly reformed the Liberal Party last weekend moved in and closure was imposed on the security Bill.

The Minister wants me to believe that he was a good lawyer in those days. He cannot remember what was wrong with the War Measures Act. I would like to hear the Minister of Defence get up right now and tell us what the reasons were for the War Measures Act. I would like to have him ask his leader to come clean with the Canadian people and tell us what he reasons for the War Measures Act were. He says it is all locked up in the archives and we can look at it after he is dead and gone. That is disgraceful.

Probably to the relief of the Solicitor General, I am coming to the close of my remarks. I want to quote just one more person for the record. Many Canadians know Alan Borovoy. He is the General Counsel to the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. That is hardly a left-wing coup group. He said that this Bill is "one of the greatest threats to civil liberties Canada has seen in many years".

My point is that the Bill is flawed and could be a lot better. The Bill is flawed and should be better. The Bill, as it presently stands, leaves the door open to abuse. There is no excuse for that because many amendments were introduced and rejected by the Government which, if passed, would have made this a much better Bill. The whole process has been a sham and a fraud, a waste of time and money.

Mr. Blais: That is an incredible statement! That is an "objective and non-partisan analysis".

Mr. Fraser: In closing, I will say that we have a security service and in a few more days the men and women in it will come under the mandate in this Bill, imperfect though it may be. On behalf of my Party I think it is important to record that we understand the obligations which they have to our country. We understand the importance of their work. We must wish them well in that work and in the continued responsible action which they have exercised for many years. We deeply regret that we did not manage to give them a better Bill which would have secured the liberty of Canadians and given better guarantees against excess or error for the employees of the security service. We want it clearly recorded that we have confidence in them as Canadians. We expect them to do their duty in the very high tradition of that force which helped make this country and which counts for something in terms of duty, loyalty, discipline and patriotism under which the security service has been operating effectively for these number of years. I refer to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

We wish that we could have delivered a better Bill to the security service. For the sake of the future, we wish that we could have delivered a Bill in which Canadians would have more trust. However, we have done the best we could while dealing with a Government which had no real intention of accepting any suggestions from the very beginning of this process. That is the shame of all this. That shame should be recorded and should be pondered upon.

Mr. Blais: That is completely false.

Mr. Fraser: I hope there will never be a day when someone asks what the Government Members were doing with this Bill and why they did not accept some changes. If that time ever arrives, I hope that the Minister of National Defence, my legal friend, will have thought out the answer he is going to give.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few remarks at this final stage in the legislative process of what is unquestionably one of the most important Bills to come before this Parliament.

Before commencing my remarks I would like to note that as I entered the Chamber today I was informed that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) had described those of us who have done everything in our power within the rules of this Parliament to oppose this legislation which constitutes such an assault on civil liberties as "parliamentary terrorists". I think it is rather interesting that the Solicitor General would use that description for Members of Parliament who have sought, in good faith, using every vehicle at our disposal, to force the Government to come to its senses and accept changes to a Bill which we view as fatally flawed.

In describing Members of Parliament as terrorists and as having resorted to parliamentary terrorism, the Solicitor General is suggesting that the objectives of the Bill which we are now debating, which the Solicitor General has suggested would include combating terrorism, in his words, may be turned against Members of this House who choose to exercise their democratic right to dissent. By describing opponents of this Bill as terrorists, the Solicitor General in suggesting that one of the primary reasons why we in this Party and Canadians in general are so concerned that if this Bill becomes law, Canadians who have broken no law whatsoever but who engage in dissent or opposition to the government of the day may be targeted by the new security service.

I do not doubt that the Solicitor General genuinely believes that this Bill is a step forward. He believes that the safeguards contained in the Bill are adequate. The reality is that the Government is placing in the hands of the present and future Cabinets, of whatever political stripe, a very dangerous instrument. This Bill could easily be placed in the hands of a totalitarian Government, a repressive military dictatorship. Of course they would not need very many more powers than those the Solicitor General is seeking. He asks us to trust them and says that they will not abuse their powers. But he is asking for a blank check. Given the record of the Government, it is certainly not one that we are prepared to give.

Hon. Members will be all too familiar with the history of what it was that led to the appointment of the McDonald Commission in 1977. There were revelations of a series of what were not just isolated incidents of breaches of the law but of what amounted to a system of institutionalized disrespect for the law, as clearly documented by the McDonald Commission. Despite the clear and overwhelming evidence of breaches of federal statutes, including the Criminal Code and provincial statutes, there has not been, outside the Province of Quebec, any respect whatsoever for the rule of law in this country.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if my friend from Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) would excuse a brief intervention. I realize that no one likes to be interrupted when making a point and the Hon. Member's point is very important. However, I was interrupted during my speech a couple of times. I thought that courtesy demanded that I rise at this time.

When I was speaking a few moments ago, I got into somewhat of a shouting match with the Hon. Minister of National Defence. It occurred to me after I had left the Chamber that I had referred to him as a lousy lawyer under certain circumstances. I would ask that that be corrected to read "less thoughtful than he ought to have been under the circumstances". I do not want to leave the impression that on a general basis we cast slights of that sort. I would like that on the record.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I was indicating before I was interrupted that I believe that the rule of law in this country, which is supposed to be the foundation of our system of law and indeed is referred to as one of the guiding principles of this country in the Charter of Rights, has been undermined by the failure of the federal and provincial governments to ensure that this same law also applies to those who are entrusted with its enforcement.

I do not believe that the political masters of the RCMP security service should escape that judgment because we are well aware of the willful blindness of those political masters. For example, in 1970 the Cabinet Committee on Security and Intelligence was informed by the Director of the security service that they had been breaking the law for 20 years. The Minister of Justice at the time, Mr. John Turner, has no recollection of that.

Immediately after the tabling of the McDonald Commission report, the Solicitor General moved to undermine the essential recommendations of that report with respect to the question of the rule of law and the question of powers which might be accorded to a new agency in a democratic society. Last summer he brought forward Bill C-157 which succeeded in uniting perhaps the most diverse coalition in opposition to any Bill in the history of Canada. The Bill was denounced across the country by provincial Attorneys General, civil libertarians, academics, church leaders and indeed a broad cross-section of Canadian society.

I regret to say that the one group that unfortunately remained silent about that piece of legislation was the Official Opposition. Let me also note that had they been a little stronger in their opposition to the Bill which is now before the House both in committee and in the House, perhaps it might not see the light of day.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The record should show that the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is daft.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair wishes to say that this is not a point of order and it is an unpleasant practice to interrupt another Hon. Member who has the floor.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, any false pretence should always be brought to the attention of the highest court of the land.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. It is not useful at all to anyone in the House that someone be interrupted. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills may not appreciate or like what the hon. gentleman is saying, but it is a matter for debate.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the sensitivity of the Conservative Member, given the failure of his Party to speak out at all on Bill C-157, given their complicity with the Government in the passage of this Bill and given the fact that, even though that Party will have an opportunity to block this Bill in the Senate, I predict the Conservative Party will stand idly by in the Senate and permit its passage there as well. Therefore I am not surprised that spokespeople for the Conservative Party are sensitive when it is suggested that they are co-operating, at least implicitly, with the Government in the passage of this reprehensible legislation.

This is a fundamentally flawed Bill in a number of major respects. The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs heard many witnesses who represented a broad cross-section of the country. I have a couple of telegrams from church groups that I do not believe can be accused at all of extremism but who have deep concerns about the legislation before us. The first telegram is from the Reverend Dr. Clarke MacDonald, Moderator of the United Church of Canada.

> Bill C-9 an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service in its present form should not be passed by the 32nd Parliament. Its definitions are too vague and broad. It expands powers of a secretive agency to supervise and interfere with the freedoms of Canadians. It provides inadequate democratic control over the new agency. It opens the way to collaboration with security services of states which are dictatorial or practice gross and systematic violations of human rights. Church and community representatives have detailed the flaws and suggested alternative ways of serving the legitimate security needs of Canadian citizens. We urge you to withdraw the Bill in its present form.

I have another telegram which was sent by the Reverend Dr. Donald W. Anderson on behalf of the Canadian Council of Churches. It states:

> Bill C-9 an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service should not be pressed by the present Parliament until: A, It makes clear and rigorous provision for the accountability of the service; B, Defines national security and describes more precisely those activities which are illegal under the Act; C, Provides for the continuation of a free and vigorous participatory society in which work for justice on behalf of the poor, the marginalized and refugees may be carried on without fear of surveillance and prosecution.

Those are genuine concerns that are deeply felt by members of the church community and I suggest they are the concerns of literally thousands of Canadians across this land.

I have indicated that of course the status quo is not satisfactory. Operating under the sweeping 1975 Cabinet mandate is not satisfactory. We have seen the abuses. I will not go through the litany of abuses once again but I would note, for example, that in pursuit of their mandate they opened some 800,000 files on Canadians.

● (1230)

The wording in the clauses that define threats to security is now so elastic that it covers the list enumerated by the McDonald Commission in connection with the opening of files on millions of Canadians, including union leaders, Communists, friends of Communists, parents of Communists, separatists, native leaders, student leaders, the New Democratic Party, the Cabinet of the Province of Quebec, homosexuals, immigrants and refugees, extra-parliamentary opposition and now, Mr. Speaker, we can add pacifists.

[English]

We do not have to remind Canadians of the abuses which have taken place historically. But the question which we must address is whether this Bill is an appropriate and a sensitive response to those abuses. It is our view that the Bill, far from being an improvement on the status quo, represents a very profound threat to civil liberties and should be rejected in its present form.

The mandate of the proposed security service is far too broad. I would note under the definitions which have been proposed by the Minister, which define the scope of the potential targets of this new service, that hundreds of thousands of Canadians who have broken no law whatsoever, but who fall within this sweeping and vague mandate, could be subject to all of the most intrusive techniques of the service.

Under the terms of this Bill, a church group, Mr. Speaker, which chooses to send money to the African National Congress to support its liberation movement against a system of institutionalized violence in South Africa, a labour union which wants to support a Central American labour movement struggling against a military dictatorship, could indeed be targeted by this new service. Under the terms of the Bill, those Canadians who wish to protest the testing of the Cruise missile or who wish to protest against the insanity of the nuclear arms race could be targeted if some future government believed they were foreign-influenced. We do not have to look very far south of our border to hear that kind of rhetoric and that kind of suggestion with respect to peace movements in the United States.

Not only are the potential targets for this agency far too broad, but the powers which are proposed are sweeping, indeed are unprecedented in any western industrialized society. No democracy anywhere in the world is prepared to accept the kind of powers the Minister is suggesting this Parliament should accept.

Under the provisions of this Bill the proposed security service would be able, following a traditional warrant in some cases but not in others—and that warrant process we have seen at work in the case of applications for telephone wire taps and we know what a rubber-stamp process that is—to tap the telephones of Canadians, to break into anyone's home, to steal liberally anything from that home and not return it, to look at confidential medical records, confidential psychiatric records, and to have access to journalists' files, to any government record, including income tax records. In short, Mr. Speaker, the service would have access to every nook and cranny of Canadians homes. What a massive invasion of privacy! What a rather ironic fact that these kinds of Orwellian, big brother powers are being proposed to this Parliament and being accepted by Liberal Members of Parliament in 1984!

As well, the placement of informers is countenanced in this Bill without even the minimum safeguard of a warrant or a requirement for ministerial approval.

There is no statutory bar on disruptive or countering techniques despite the fact that Members of this House, the members of the Justice Committee, proposed a motion in terms similar to those contained in other legislation in Australia and New Zealand that would prevent the kind of disruptive techniqus, Operation Tentpeg, Oddball and Checkmate, operations which did so much to bring into disrepute the operations of the security service. This Bill, which is supposed to be providing for safeguards, in many instances is simply making legal what was identified as illegal in the context of the McDonald Commission report.

There is no provision whatsoever for effective parliamentary oversight. There is a watchdog committee that has been gutted of any power whatsoever. It has no access to Cabinet documents in the possession of the security service, no right whatsoever to ensure that all of those players within the intelligence community come under their umbrella so that the Government cannot escape scrutiny by simply shifting responsibility to another agency in the intelligence community.

This Government is not prepared to trust elected representatives of the people of this country with oversight of the operations of the service, despite the fact that the oversight process is functioning effectively in the United States in terms of congressional oversight.

The service would have the power to open first-class mail. The service would have a new and unprecedented power to target any foreigner in this country, even if he or she posed no threats to the security of the country, if it is felt that that person might hurt Canada in the conduct of its international affairs or national defence. Nowhere, Mr. Speaker, is such a power afforded in another country except in the kind of brutal, totalitarian dictatorships which we are supposed to be fighting with this legislation. Indeed, we have received representations from a number of distinguished academics, including the Canadian Association of University Teachers and various member groups, pleading with us not to impose this kind of restraint on Canadians and on foreign visitors.

Michael Mandel, Professor of Law at York University, following the tabling of the McDonald Commission report said:

> If there is one lesson to be learnt from the RCMP scandal, it is that the Canadian sense of democracy is not adequately developed to resist these kinds of moves. And if they are successful, we may never have the breathing space within which to develop our sense of democracy any further.

Members of this House, Mr. Speaker, look back, as Canadians look back, at some of the blots on our history. We look back to October 16, 1970, the day the War Measures Act was proclaimed. That was a sorry day in the history of this country. The War Measures Act was approved overwhelmingly by Liberal Members and Conservative Members of Parliament. Only the NDP Members stood and said no.

We look back and recall with shame the actions of this Government, of Liberal Governments, in interning Canadians of Japanese origin, confiscating their property and putting them in concentration camps. Historically we look back and say that was wrong. I suggest that our children will look back on this day and say that indeed, this was a dark day for democracy in this country; a dark day for freedom. They will ask: Where were Liberal Members of Parliament as their fundamental rights and freedoms were being eroded? In the name of protecting our national security, the Government brings forward legislation which could ultimately destroy our fundmental civil liberties and privacy. Bill C-9 is an affront to democracy.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise at the end of this amazing democratic process through which we have all struggled once again. We are all somewhat short-tempered as we voted from approximately nine o'clock last night until 5.30 this morning. I am sure we would all agree that sometimes the system seems bad and inconvenient to our wonderful staff who serve the House, such as people in the cafeteria who remained up all night, when the Parties have solid differences of opinion. The strength of the system is that we resolve those kinds of disputes here rather than on the streets.

We are only a thin wedge from being like so many other countries in South America or Eastern Europe that do not have forums in which people can clash, fight and yell back and forth in support of heartfelt positions. It is not a simple process, but it is much better than those of other such countries. As Winston Churchill said at one time, democracy is the worst form of government except for all the others.

I know the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) is frustrated with the entire process. He thinks the Opposition is allowed to a much time in which to speak. We lambaste him and sometimes become personal in our remarks against him and his colleagues. By the same token, they call us names which we would not call each other as friends over coffee. However, that is part of the process because we all speak on behalf of our own heartfelt positions, as we gathered them on our mothers' knees and in the parts of the country from which we come.

I think the Minister was somewhat extreme, if in fact it is true that he called the Opposition "terrorists". I do not feel like a terrorist. I feel that I presented a very legitimate perspective on behalf of the culture and the people I represent. Therefore, I do not apologize for one moment. Equally we have called the Minister some ruthless terms.

Mr. Kaplan: I was called a traitor by the NDP.

Mr. Thacker: Yes, that was an extreme. We still have this Parliament. If the new security service is as bad as the NDP believes it is, or if it is as bad in some areas as we think it is, then a future government will have to change it, assuming the improprieties are brought out. I am sure a future Parliament will.

We are now into that broad court of public opinion. The Canadian people will have to judge the Government on its activities, our Party on our activities and the NDP on its activities. The Government has to face and accept some legitimate criticisms. It brought forward the original Bill, Bill C-157, which emanated from the Cabinet and the bureaucracy. It was really an extreme document which polarized Canadians. Then the Government came in with Bill C-9 as a result of the Senate process. It incorporated many improvements to Bill C-157; however, many people were still polarized. They were unable to see the strengthening in Bill C-9. There is no doubt that Bill C-9 is much better than Bill C-157. It is regrettable that somehow the process is not adequate to generate a document which is closer to the Canadian consensus on the first drafting.

We in Her Majesty's Official Opposition found ourselves faced with Bill C-9. At the start, many members of our caucus appreciated the arguments in favour of the civilianization of the security service in comparison with leaving it with the RCMP. Then the witnesses began to appear and those of us who sat on the committee heard their evidence. We could genuinely see that there were still some defects in Bill C-9. Therefore, as a Party we decided that our strategy would be to try to select five or six of the major areas on which we could document the defects with hard evidence. We knew that we could put our arguments and amendments in committee and, if they were not accepted there, that we could appeal to the whole House. We had some success in talking with Government Members privately and at committee stage. I think Canadians will judge our actions in that regard as being fair and reasonable.

I should like to refer to the conduct of members of the NDP. They made a political Party decision which was to be the ultimate in terms of extremism. They decided to fight every clause of the Bill equally. Since the Bill contained almost 100 clauses as well as many subclauses, we were faced in committee with several hundred substantive sections which polarized the situation. I believe Canadians will judge them harshly. There are five or six areas where I am convinced that had it just been for the Government and the Official Opposition, we could have convinced the Government of the logic of our arguments in favour of these reasonable changes. Perhaps we would have obtained changes to the oversight committee; perhaps we could have juggled around the provision respecting access to Cabinet documents to cover our legitimate concerns as well as those of the Minister, the powers being too wide in subclause 2(d).

Also the Government became polarized when it was faced with the NDP strategy, a publicly acknowledged strategy of fighting every clause equally hard whether or not it was important. Canadians will judge the NDP harshly because it did not protect the interests of western Canada.

I will travel anywhere across the country and debate this matter with any NDP Member of the House, and I am sure I will carry the weight of opinion of western Canadians because they are reasonable people. I think the NDP will come out second best. As so often is the case, members of the New Democratic Party end up hurting the very people they purport to protect. They rise in the House and claim they are protecting and caring for the old people of the country. In 1972, during the minority government with John Turner as Minister of Finance, they started this Government on a process of deficits which has now resulted in inflation.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Although it is interesting to hear the record of John Turner and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and how similar they are, I suggest that we are dealing with a security Bill and that there is much to be discussed in that context.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The point is well taken. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) would do well to try to relate his remarks to the Bill.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, just as it did in the debate on Bill C-9, where the NDP claimed to protect people whereas in fact it has injured the legitimate interests of those people, so it is with its claim now that it protects the interests of old people, that the deficit and inflation are destroying those old people and that it protects the unemployed. When it drove out investment, Mr. Speaker, it hurt people far more.

Canadians will judge NDP Members. The polls already show that. The actions of the NDP on Bill C-9 will add to the decimation of that Party. That will be good for Canadians because that Party has perverted the legitimate political process and the method by which people, through their elected representatives, reach a decision on issues. We will return to a period when the NDP will be routed out of this place by Canadians themselves and the political process of resolution will be much more reasonable.

Let me turn to the substance of what we have proposed. The Government felt that the agency should be civilianized. We felt that it should be left with the RCMP. We heard the arguments of the Mackenzie Commission that it was not satisfactory, and we heard the McDonald Commission reinforcing that position. We looked at some of the evidence and we did not feel it was sufficient. We felt that the RCMP had become very sophisticated in terms of tracking the mafia, drugs and so on. We felt they had sufficient skills and capacity to take on and continue this role.

I speak as one from western Canada where the RCMP is much more a part of our very institution and culture. That is because it is our sole police force. We do not have in Alberta the equivalent of an Ontario Provincial Police or Quebec Provincial Police. Therefore, the RCMP are a part of our lives. They are our friends. We go out with them socially. I have two first cousins who served the country well in the force. It is more a part of us. We feel they could fill that role. The Government does not and it will have to live with the consequences just as we will.

There is no doubt that the Government will suffer in western Canada. It is a tragedy from their perspective politically that their new Leader did not step in immediately and alert them to the fact that they want to get into western Canada, to get some seats back and become a national party. Either he promoted this process or he was not adequately briefed to make a decision. I think he would have been more sensitive.

The Government will be judged and judged harshly across this country on its National Energy Program. It proposed to put in the Constitution a permanent veto for Ontario and Quebec. To be from the regions, to see that being done and to be locked into your future forever is a terrible feeling. That is why separatist parties develop. It is because the Liberal Party has failed in the last few years to be able within its caucus to strike a national consensus. It has also failed on this issue in Bill C-9.

Then we swing into the powers. The Government feels that the powers of the agency are appropriate and necessary. It says that because there is a judicial warrant system, that will be a sufficient check. It feels the Inspector General in combination with the review committee will be a sufficient check and Canadians need not worry. I hope they are right. I hope that our fears are unfounded, even though they are based on the evidence of those such as the Canadian Jewish Congress, parts of the Canadian Bar Association and some civil liberty groups. People who work in the area of human rights all the time have expressed some grave concerns. We in our Party tried to take those concerns and put them into a practical amendment to improve the Bill. Unfortunately the Government did not accept that.

We feel with regard to subclause 2(d), which is the definition of "domestic subversion", that the powers are too wide. When you use in the statute words such as "activities directed toward . . . or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of the constitutionally established system of government in Canada", the words "intended ultimately" can be used by the security service to trigger an investigation of you, Mr. Speaker, me, or one of our constituents who might be part of a church group that is helping some freedom group in South Africa, or some group in Poland. Using the wording "intended ultimately", they can trigger that person and use all of these intrusive mechanisms to his or her disadvantage. Once you are triggered they can open your mail, put devices in your car or in your home, get into the records of your doctor or lawyer, and genuinely bear down on you. There is no doubt about that. They are far more broad than in the grand republic to the south of us where they have very real problems with Soviet agents and internal subversion.

We have no trouble going after the KGB under subclauses 2(a), (b) and (c), but (d), where we are dealing with Canadian citizens, is drafted too broadly. I hearken back to the way we treated Japanese-Canadians in World War II. It was not that they were aliens. They were Canadian citizens with Canadian citizenship. Surely Canadian citizenship must mean something.

I am looking at the constitution Act, 1982. I am always struck by the irony of the Liberal Government which stands and proudly proclaims that it brought out the Constitution Act, 1982 to protect the people. They proudly state that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out, subject to reasonable limits. That some Government has brought in this Bill where the intrusive mechanisms have been expanded dramatically from what we had before the Constitution Act. Before 1982 we relied on the ephemeral protections that were fought for by our ancestors in 1215 under the Magna Carta, the Petition of Right in the 1600s and the judicial protections we developed. We had the feeling in this country that we were free to do anything unless it interfered with your right personally, with your property or your fundamental freedom. That was the starting point.

Contrast that with the left-wing regimes where everything is banned unless you are told by statute that you can do it. Hundreds of millions of people in this world operate under that system. You are not free to do something unless the government tells you so. Our system is the opposite. We are free to do anything unless it is prohibited. Some of us are concerned that those limitations are being added and added and added. With all of the federal statutes and regulations, provincial statutes and regulations and municipal by laws, Canadians have lost those fundamental freedoms for which our ancestors fought so hard.

The Constitution Act, 1982 states in Section 8 that everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search and seizure. Yet a secret service agent who believes that somebody might be engaged in something which is intended ultimately to get at our government can trigger all of the investigative and intrusive devices that I have mentioned.

I am convinced that the success or failure of this agency will depend to a great measure on how sensitive the Government is in appointing people, in contolling how the Director will hire his agents, in the directions that the Minister gives to the Director of the service and how impartial the Inspector General and the review committee are in reviewing the agency.

That was one of the other amendments we made. Unfortunately, the review committee will be appointed totally by the Government only with consultation with the Leader of the Opposition. Our belief is that the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) in his official capacity is part of our Constitution. We believe the Leader of the Opposition should have been able to choose one of three of the review committee or two of five. That would have lent genuine credibility to the organization, but the Government refused that.

We know from past appointments to Crown corporations, boards and agencies that too often the Liberal Government has appointed defeated Liberal political candidates and people who work for the Party, ignoring a vast body of Canadians who are not active in politics but have a genuine love for this country and could make a real contribution. If we could rectify that process, the whole thing would be better. The result of a failure of this group is that you and I, Mr. Speaker, will feel less free in our dealings to enjoy our constitutionally entrenched freedom of conscience and religion, less free in our freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, our freedom of peaceful assembly. Our freedom of association will be somehow intimidated by this agency unless the statute is changed or the Government is prepared to be very open and sensible in the appointments of people and its monitoring process. When talking to people from these countries, one finds that there is no doubt that their greatest fear arises not from hunger or famine; their greatest fear arises from the security services of those countries. That is true of both the extreme right-wing governments in South America and the left-wing Marxist and communist governments.

People fear a civilian security service that is answerable only to a government. We now have such a service in Canada. Unless Canadians are prepared to monitor it very carefully and to press for changes, there is the possibility that within a generation or two, or perhaps even less, we will find ourselves in a situation in which the people are being intimidated. I hope that never happens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Questions or debate? Debate.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I would like to review some of the things that have been said in opposition to this Bill. I agree that there is very little new to be said now but I think it is useful to review what has already been said. I will go into detail only on one specific point with which I will deal in due course.

This Bill to establish a security service, which I think can be easily identified as this "police state Bill", will take away the security of the Canadian people. It will not add to our security but will undermine our security. We will be under the pressure and insidious attacks of a group that will no longer be under any serious democratic control. This is in keeping with the conduct of the present Government and the Governments led by that same Liberal Party in previous years. It is in keeping with its fully unjustified and dishonest use of the War Measures Act against Canadians of Japanese ancestry 40 years ago. It is in keeping with its unjustified use of the army against the people of Montreal 14 years ago.

At that time, the then Prime Minister and the now outgoing Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised that the War Measures Act would be reviewed and that a better and more just law would be put in its place. He never even attempted to do so as far as can be seen by the public eye. No serious attempt was made to replace or amend the War Measures Act though there have been many requests to do so.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That Party's critic objected very strenuously when Conservative Members began, in their last intervention, to speak of matters other than the Bill before the House. The Hon. Member is now taking off on a long discussion of the War Measures Act, an Act which is not before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I have heard many references to the War Measures Act during the discussion of this Bill. In any event, perhaps the Hon. Member will heed the warning and try to stay relevant to the subject under discussion.

Mr. Heap: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with you that the War Measures Act has been seen as being very relevant to this Bill. This is a kind of civilian version of the War Measures Act and it is in keeping with the past conduct of Liberal Governments that we should now have the War Measures Act translated into a measure that will not be temporary but will be permanent. It will be a big brother Act.

There has been widespread public condemnation of this Bill. The Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) read at length from editorials in the Toronto Globe and Mail and The Toronto Sun. Neither of those newspapers are ever accused of being left-wing or subversive, so far as I know, except perhaps when they poke at each other. The gist of those editorials was that this Bill ought not to be passed in the form which the Government has insisted it must keep and cannot change. Both newspapers indicated that it ought not pass and that the status quo, bad as it is, would be preferable to life under this Bill. That was the gist of the editorials in The Globe and Mail and The Toronto Sun.

Those editorials described three general complaints about the Bill, complaints which have been made by witness after witness, in letter after letter, by public personage after public personage. The definition of the target is too vague. I will not go into that complaint in detail, but in fact the definition casts far too wide a net. The amendment proposed by the former Solicitor General that would have narrowed the target and made it more acceptable to the public was rejected by the present Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan).

The means that are proposed to be used to legalize power in the hands of the new secret service are far too broad, particularly for use against dissidents or people who disagree with government policies. These people are to be harassed as though they were criminals, as though they were already enemy agents. They are to be harassed in that way without any evidence that they have earned that harassment in cases where they are expressing and promulgating views with which this Government is uncomfortable.

In my opinion, the most serious complaint that has been made is that there is no effective parliamentary review of this service. The Inspector General is not an appointee of Parliament; he is a creature of the government of the day. He is answerable only to the Minister. He is not answerable to Parliament. He may confer a report upon Parliament but it will not contain anything that the secret service does not want it to contain. Such information that it does not want to disclose will be called information that is restricted by security.

The Bill makes provisions for a so-called review committee which again is not answerable to Parliament. Members of this committee will be appointed exclusively by the Government with perhaps a show of consultation with leaders of the Opposition Parties. However, there is no requirement that Leaders of Opposition Parties give their approval to the appointments, nothwithstanding the false statement made yesterday to that effect by the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen).

This is probably the most serious part of the Bill. It is this part of the Bill which, had it been corrected, had the Solicitor General been willing to accept the amendments of his own colleague and predecessor on this point, would have caused many people who are unhappy with the Bill in many other ways nevertheless to be inclined to say that the Bill was one with which they could live. However, the Minister has insisted absolutely that there will be no shadow or trace of parliamentary control over this service, over the review committee or over the Inspector General.

The Solicitor General has behaved very strangely and very irresponsibly with regard to this matter. He does not like me to say so because he feels that an Anglican priest should not call him irresponsible. However, the information he gave us last night flies directly in the face of the information that was documented before the committee on which he sat. He has now run out of the House because he is afraid that the facts will be put before Parliament while he is present and perhaps he will not be able to avoid blushing.

Last night the Solicitor General made the extraordinary statement that the committees of the Congress and Senate in the United States have less power to require evidence and information about what the secret service is doing than the committee proposed by this Bill. That statement was extraordinarily false. When I challenged him on it, he kept interjecting. I am sorry that Hansard is not yet available. I would like to be able to quote him precisely. He kept interjecting by saying that the statements I was making were not true. I said that the Congressional committees can call any witness and require any document to be brought forward. He said that that was not true. I have before me the Compilation of Intelligence Laws, Related Laws and Executive Orders of Interest to the National Intelligence Community as Amended through March 1, 1983, Prepared for the Use of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives of the United States of America. Their director, Mr. Simmons, appeared before our Justice Committee and was interviewed extensively about his work. The document which set up the select committee in the United States reads as follows:

SEC. 5(a) For the purposes of this resolution, the select committee is authorized in its discretion (1) to make investigations into any matter within its jurisdiction, (2) to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate, (3) to employ personnel, (4) to hold hearings, (5) to sit and act at any time or place during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate, (6) to require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance of witnesses and the production of correspondence, books, papers, and documents, (7) to take depositions and other testimony,

I underline the relevance of paragraph (5), Mr. Speaker.

The Senate and Congressional committees have the powers which I have read from this American document of legislation. Americans exercise those powers, as we saw a few weeks ago when the wrongdoing of the CIA in the mining of harbours in Nicaragua was exposed. They hauled the director of the agency before the committee and they bawled him out. Barry Goldwater, who is vice-chairman of the committee, expressed himself in language which I suppose would be considered unparliamentary.

What are we to do about a Solicitor General who stands in his place and boldly denies facts which have been placed in testimony before the Justice Committee? If an ordinary Member of this House expressed such ignorance, we would suppose that he had not been doing his homework. If a member of the Justice Committee who heard Mr. Simmons speak expressed such ignorance, we would wonder if he had attended the committee meetings. The Solicitor General, the person who has expert advice at his beck and call, who brags that he sat through the committee hearings and heard all the testimony, who says he is very weary of answering questions, and who says "Trust me", last night stood in his place and roundly denied facts which were placed in evidence before the committee in which he sat.

We could, of course, ask why the Solicitor General should so mislead the House. I would not suggest at this time that he was deliberately misleading the House. Frankly, I find it astonishing that he would think that he could get away with that. The only other alternative would be to suggest that the Minister closed his mind several years ago and does not let anything enter it except what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the new Leader of the Liberal Party puts into it. He did not listen to the testimony which was placed before his committee. He does not listen to anything he does not want to hear, or he allows it to go in one ear and out the other without any interference between the ears.

At any rate, the Minister is asking us to believe that he does not know that the committees of Congress and the Senate in the United States, which are made up of ordinary elected representatives, can review the budget in detail of all the intelligence agencies in the intelligence community. Those committees can review all of the appointments which they wish to review. Those committees can call any person to appear before them and require that that person bring the information which they want.

Another document which was filed with the committee was the report to the Senate of the United States of the Select Committee on Intelligence for the period covering January 1, 1979 to December 31, 1979. It reads:

> The general principle embodied in these provisions is that all the information that the oversight committees require will be provided when the committees require it and in the detail that the particular occasion demands.

There is no limitation, qualification or suggestion that Congressmen and Senators are not fit when they undertake the appropriate oath of secrecy to review what the appointed and hired public servants of the government have been doing. The Minister cannot bear to hear the contrast between the freedom and responsibility which is exercised by the committees of the American Congress and Senate and the childish impotence and phoneyness which he wants to enforce on Members of Parliament and Senators for whose vote he is asking in order to give him the power to set up this petty little dictatorship.

It is bad enough that this bill is being rammed through by some of the extraordinary perversions of procedure which the House has witnessed on the part of the Government in the past two weeks. However, it is alarming that we have a Solicitor General who is so astonishingly ignorant of the very matters for which he has achieved responsibility in this land. If we are to believe that he was not willingly trying to mislead us, he must be disastrously ignorant.

In conclusion, I would like to read two telegrams which I received from people in Toronto with regard to this Bill. I received a telegram from Mr. Y. Forgang which reads as follows:

> What is subversion? If a subversive is someone who agitates for social change, those people should be elected, not harassed. I am amazed and angered by Bill C-9.

I received another telegram from S. Perston which reads as follows:

> It is far too easy to label someone who is lobbying for social change a "subversive". Bill C-9 does not offer Canadians greater security, but rather creates opportunity to harass.

That is the opinion shared by many Canadians across this land that this Government refuses to listen to. Within the rules of parliamentary procedure, we must only suppose that we have a Solicitor General who is invincibly ignorant about matters of true security, the very matters on which he is asking us to legislate.

We do not know who drafted this legislation upon which he is adamantly insisting. We do not even know if it was drafted by Canadians, since it contains provisions for putting the security service into contract with unnamed foreign powers while it has no continuing obligation to this Parliament. We do not know on whose orders the Solicitor General has imposed this Bill. What we do know is that he has shown himself completely unable to answer simple questions of fact regarding the powers which are possessed by the American Congress and Senate, powers which he has denied to the Canadian Parliament and Senate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I want to preface my question by saying that I believe the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) should be commended by Hon. Members of this House—indeed, I know he will be commended by his constituents—for the untiring fight he has personally waged against this repressive piece of legislation. When history is written on this Bill it will certainly show that the Hon. Member for Spadina played an outstanding role in committee and in this House in helping to fight this repressive piece of legislation.

I certainly would be most interested, in the context of the question of congressional oversight, to know the extent to which senior Senators are prepared to chastise inappropriate behaviour on the part of members of the intelligence community. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Spadina might be a little more explicit as to precisely what it was that Senator Goldwater had to say with respect to the operations of the CIA on the mining of the harbours of Nicaragua.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member, in the limited time which is at his disposal, could perhaps comment on some of the concerns he already has expressed very eloquently in other forums on the impact that this legislation may have on refugees and political refugees from other countries such as Chile, El Salvador and elsewhere. Could the Hon. Member comment in the context of the immigration provisions, Mr. Speaker, as well as in the context of general concern about these refugees having fled from one police state to come to a country in which this kind of repressive legislation is being put forward? I would like to hear from the Hon. Member for Spadina, Mr. Speaker, both with respect to the question of congressional oversight and the nature of the frank and candid exchanges between the elected representatives and the senior officials of the service, and with respect to the implications for political refugees, in particular.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the matter of the refugees does concern me very much. I have had occasion in the last three years particularly to meet with a good many refugees, especially from Latin America, and with a good many Canadians serving refugees such as those in the Interchurch Committee for Refugees. There is great ground for concern about the present activities of the RCMP in relation to refugees from some of the Latin American dictatorships such as El Salvador and Chile. People from those countries who have been established here for several years, landed immigrants, some of them citizens, have been quizzed at their homes about their associates here and back home. It is very disquieting, Mr. Speaker, to them, and to many of us, to think that the RCMP would be gathering information about the associates of those people here and back home since the only likely purpose for doing so would be to pass on the information to the dictatorships of El Salvador and Chile for the purpose of further repression in those countries.

Refugees who have come here, not only from those countries but from Eastern Europe and Southeast Asia, are very uneasy about the activities of secret police. They have had too much experience with them in their homelands to feel easy about them. The broad and unsupervised powers being given in this legislation are going to be a very great worry to everyone who was born in another country, but especially to refugees.

With regard to the oversight of the Senate committee, the only information I have is that at the time when the newspapers brought out the fact that, indeed, the CIA had directed the mining of the harbours in Nicaragua, the vice-chairman of the committee, Senator Goldwater, said that the committee was supposed to be given advance notice. This is, in fact, contained in the very documents which were put to our committee here by the representative of the United States security service. These are the very documents which the Solicitor General now cannot remember, apparently. Senator Goldwater said he had not been given that advance notice and his expression publicly, Mr. Speaker, was, "I am pissed off with the service".

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I was listening to the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) just now when he put a question to the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). In the preamble to his question, he mentioned the important role played by the Member for Spadina in committee. Now, I attended each and every sitting of the Committee, and I do not remember hearing the Member for Spadina. Perhaps he could tell us how many times the Hon. Member intervened in committee? How many times did he comment on the Bill? Could he inform the House whether his presence at the Committee was for the sole purpose of helping the Member for Burnaby when he started his filibuster, which lasted about five or six hours?

[English]

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the point of the questioner is well taken in the sense that I was not present at the committee for the purpose of intervening. I was present at the committee, however, for the purpose of learning what the committee was doing and, for example, observing the behaviour of the hon. gentleman who has just asked me the question. And I must say his behaviour indicated to me that he had stopped thinking many months ago about this subject and was simply there to ram this Bill through regardless of what anyone might say.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would be interested to hear the response of the Hon. Member as to why the New Democratic Party decided to fight every clause with equal vehemence when there were only four or five clauses which were substantive in affecting the rights and freedoms of Canadians. It seems to me that that action minimized its case and resulted in the Government becoming polarized so that we could get no action at all.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, what happened in the committee was that after the Liberal representative tried to close off debate, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) responded with a filibuster. That was when he introduced, as I understand it, amendments to every clause in the Bill. If the Government had not polarized the situation by insisting there would be no changes to the Bill, it might have been possible to pursue a very different approach and to focus not only on just five or six clauses. There are a lot more than five or six parts of this Bill which are bad. There are probably three general areas which are the worst. However, since the Government made clear from the outset of the committee's deliberations, after the witnesses had been heard, that it was not going to listen to anyone, that is to say, that Government Members were going to sit there like bumps on a log with either their ears closed or their minds turned off and simply vote as the Solicitor General directed them to vote, then it was necessary to draw to the attention of the public—and this was successfully done, Mr. Speaker—just what kind of dictatorial practice was being followed by the Government. It was only after the public became aroused that the Hon. Member who just asked me that question, and some of his colleagues, began to feel that if they did not begin to hustle around and oppose some parts of the Bill, they would be exposed for conniving with the Government is passing the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the end of the ten-minute period for questions and comments. Continuing debate.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, all legislation, if it is going to be successful in a country, must have the confidence and the trust of the people. Any legislation that the people do not trust, particularly if they do not trust the administration, causes difficulties in a country.

• (1330)

We have come to the point now where we are in the last stage of passing this Bill. Judging from what has happened so far the Bill will be passed later on today by the Liberal Government with opposition from all other sides of the House. Since it is going to become law, then we as Canadians have to do our utmost to make the Bill successful. Surely none of us wants subversion and fifth columnists. We are not going to be quitters, like the former Minister of Finance and Prime Minister designate who went back to Bay Street to practise law for ten years. We are going to see it through. I think that is our responsibility.

I was delighted today with the splended address by our critic, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), and his chief lieutenant, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker). Both gave knowledgeable addresses, outlining in a fair way why we oppose the Bill.

I have to say that none of us has a monopoly on loyalty or integrity. That is one of my biggest complaints, if you can call it that, concerning the NDP. They seem to think that they have a monopoly on wisdom, loyalty, goodness and honour. Well, none of us has. We are all citizens of the same country, even though we may be members of a different Party with different outlooks. We should all be sincere enough to realize that each of us is trying to improve the country in our own way. I will never be a socialist. I have no use for communism or socialism. I respect those who think that type of system can make Canada a better country; therefore I am prepared to listen to the Hon. Members of the NDP. But when they make charges which are so completely wrong and unfair that anyone can tell it is being done for political purposes, then I cannot go along with that.

For example, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), who is a sincere young man, said this morning that the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) and the Conservative Party had helped the Liberals to pass this Bill. How can anyone say that when the Hon. Member for Vancouver South and the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills, indeed the whole Party, have been endeavouring to make the Bill a better Bill? We have advanced the things our people asked us to advance. Members of the NDP should respect that. I think the Hon. Member for Burnaby, when he is a few years older, will realize how ridiculous it is to think that every single clause in this Bill is wrong. No Bill could be that wrong, even this one. That is why I wish the NDP would attempt to be fair and recognize that other people have points of view.

That is what we are going to endeavour to do with regard to this Bill. If it becomes law, then the things we have pointed out will either prove to be true or not true. That will depend largely on who administers the Bill, on the attitude of the Director, the Government and the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). If they take a wholesome attitude and say they are going to make sure that the interpretation of this Bill is not going to be as wide as it can be, then it may work out without too much difficulty. However, whether it does or not, we are going to be stuck with this legislation, stuck with the civilian intelligence service. Therefore, in the interests of this country I think we have to say that while we prefer the RCMP because we think they could do a better job, we will have to give this new intelligence service our co-operation.

We do that for three reasons, which reasons are set out right in the Bill. I refer to the threat to the security of Canada in the interpretation clause of the Bill. Whether it is the RCMP or this civilian agency, these three things are paramount to the interests of the security of Canada. The first is that:

(a) espionage or sabotage that is against Canada or is detrimental to the interests of Canada or activities directed toward or in support of such espionage or sabotage,

That is a very serious threat to the security of a country. One of this agency's main jobs will be to watch for that. Then the next one is:

(b) foreign-influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person,

I do not want to be in a position where people come from other countries to threaten me, my family of friends. None of us do. We do not want foreign influences coming here to subvert us. We want to run our own country. But they could come here. Spying is not something new. Spies are found in every country. Every country has its fifth columnists so we have to be aware of that. Thirdly, we have:

(c) activities within or relating to Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state,—

There you have the three very serious threats that this intelligence service is going to have to watch. None of us would support such type of activity. I come from a coal mining town. Certainly the communist element is very evident and conspicuous in coal mining areas. Our society is so free and we are so tolerant that communists can organize and endeavour to disrupt the entire country. The objective of a communist is world domination. He believes in the government telling everybody what is good for them and he will work towards that end. But when he starts interfering with our system and threatening the property of our people, then that is a different thing altogether. For those reasons we have this intelligence service and we have to hope they will keep these saboteurs and fifth columnists in check.

The next definition of a threat to the security of Canada is a little more worrying. If it is not watched very carefully it could become a very serious threat to the liberties of the Canadian people. This is what it says:

(d) activities directed toward undermining by covert unlawful acts, or directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of, the constitutionally established system of government in Canada,

● (1340)

We in Canada have the right to work for the type of Government we want. Sometimes I think we have gone too far. We allow people in the country who want to have a complete communist, Nazi or fascist government in the country. I do not think that 90 per cent of the people of Canada want such types of governments. We do not want them to start using so much influence that we eventually get those kinds of governments. We believe in a democracy where people are elected and are responsible to the people who elect them. As I have said many times in the House, one of the major principles of democracy is that we reflect the thinking of the people who elect us. We do not tell the people what is good for them. That is my biggest argument against the present Government. It is forever telling the people what is good for them instead of reflecting the thinking of the people in its legislation and administration. That is contrary to democracy.

Some Liberal and NDP members have gotten up in the House and said that they give leadership to their people. At least 80 per cent of the people in my riding want capital punishment reinstated. I have heard Liberal and NDP members of the House say that they give leadership. They do not do what their people ask them to do. Consider that for a moment. Could that be considered by this committee as being "directed toward undermining by covert unlawful acts, or directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction . . .”? It is certainly not a democratic principle to tell people what is good for them.

We must be very careful with this type of language. The language is too loose. It is going too far. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills referred to the phrase “intended ultimately”. Is this committee going to have the power to see into the future to see what you are aiming at? I told the story the other day about one of the strikes in the Drumheller Valley. One big union, OBU, was determined to overthrow the United Mine Workers of America which is a good union. They carried out sabotage. They threatened to burn down houses. They shot a man near a washhouse. They threw rocks at cars. They burned a house just a block away from our house at the old Newcastle mine. That was going too far. That was sabotage. They were trying to replace part of the operation of administration in the country. There was not any action taken on it. I am wondering if this section is going to be used in the wrong way. I urge the Solicitor General to watch this very carefully. That could be used by a Nazi, communist or fascist government because people are working towards a democracy.

These are some of the reasons I feel we have to now examine the civilian agency and make the best of it. This Party worked hard at the recommendations which it made. I admire the fair, honest and excellent way in which our critics, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South and Lethbridge-Foothills, advanced our cause with regard to keeping the RCMP as our security service. The RCMP has been our security service through the years. Even the Attorney General has admitted that it has done a good job. I want to pay tribute to the RCMP security service.

The son of an excellent Canadian of Chinese origin in Edmonton was trained in that intelligence service. He joined the RCMP and had training in policing. He had training in intelligence too. He became a very excellent man. When he heard that they were going to move all the RCMP into the intelligence service, he asked for a transfer. He said he wanted to be a policeman. He loved the intelligence service part under the RCMP. He said that he wanted to continue to wear the uniform and had dedicated his life to being a policeman. Now he is stationed in Alberta doing an excellent job in one of the detachments there.

People cannot tell me that the RCMP do not train their people. It amazes me when they claim something like that and then they say they are going to take that whole RCMP section and make it the foundation for the civilian service. They will take their uniforms away but use all their brains and training as the foundation of this civilian service. That is one thing which I think is in favour of the civilian service.

The civilian services of Britain and the United States have shown that they are prone to spies and fifth columnists. They can get in there and get a highly specialized education. They can have doctorate degrees by the score and become highly educated and trained in that type of thing. It has been proven in Britain and the United States that their training was there, but as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) said the other night, their heart was not for their homeland. Their heart is for another country and they become a fifth columnist within our country. When you get a fifth columnist in the civilian intelligence service; beware. I say beware because they can do a tremendous amount of damage and harm.

Many people wonder about the term “fifth column”. That originated during the Spanish war. Franco was going to march into Madrid and, as he was marching in, said that he was going to overthrow the government with five columns. He said that he would have four columns marching in with him and that he had a fifth column in the city already. Therefore, the fifth column refers to people who are going to destroy the very thing which they should be supporting or trying to change rather than overthrow.

We wanted to have more accountability, and not only to the Solicitor General and the Governor in Council who appoint the review committee. I see, Mr. Speaker, you are indicating my time is running out. May I have just two more minutes? I am only a third of the way through; I guess I will have to talk in a hurry.

The review committee is appointed by the Government. We should have an overview committee to enlighten Members of Parliament. Every section of this service should be accountable to Parliament. As Members of Parliament we are then accountable to the people who elected us.

I wanted to deal with some of the powers which are given to this committee. It may examine medical records, break and enter, look into income tax files and medical records and open your mail. There is one safeguard. They must go to a court and get a warrant from a judge. I think some of the warrants are too long in duration. Our Members dealt with that. There are some items there to protect.

• (1350)

In closing, I have three major objections to this Bill. My first objection concerns the attitude of the Government in refusing almost every amendment. It is the wrong attitude for a democratic government to take. My second objection is that closure was introduced on us almost as soon as the Liberals had a new Leader. That will be seen with suspicion by the people of Canada since it is the same Leader who brought in the War Measures Act. Third, we must be very wary that this service does not harass ordinary citizens of Canada who are honest, upright citizens with integrity and loyalty to this country. We must ensure that they are not harassed, and if they are because their views differ from the government of the day, it will be time for the people of Canada and whatever government is in power to review this civilian agency.

In the meantime, let us hope that it works and keeps the fifth columnists and saboteurs out of this country while not harassing everyday, honest Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Questions, comments. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Gourde).

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member informed the House earlier that he was against creating a separate civilian service. When the Senate Committee chaired by Mr. Pitfield made its recommendations, the Committee was unanimous on this issue, with the exception of Senator Kelly, a Progressive Conservative Senator who objected to separation. All other senators were in favour of creating a separate civilian security service. Am I to understand that the Progressive Conservative Senators who spoke out in favour of creating a civilian service were expressing views opposed to the position taken by the Progressive Conservative Party and the Caucus?

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the Mackenzie and the McDonald Commissions recommended a separate service. However, in my view, those recommendations were made without any basis for comparison. They simply found that there was something wrong with the RCMP intelligence service without saying what should be corrected. They recommended the creation of a civilian service. Perhaps the same thing will be wrong in that service along with many other inadequacies.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that I am here to represent the people of my constituency, not the McDonald Commission and the Mackenzie Commission. I am satisfied that close to 75 per cent of the people want the RCMP to remain as the intelligence service. The Hon. Member can use all the arguments he likes about the big shots. To me, the big shots are the people who elected me and sent me here. Those are the people I intend to represent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): A supplementary for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General of Canada.

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, this has no connection with the MacKenzie or McDonald Commission. Bill C-157 was tabled during the previous session and examined in the Senate Committee.

My question earlier was: Did the Progressive Conservative Senators who spoke out in favour of creating a civilian security service at the sittings of the Committee chaired by Mr. Pitfield, say they were opposed to the position taken by the Progressive Conservative Party or Caucus? That was the first part of my question and I would like an answer.

Second, the Hon. Member informed the House earlier that the Government refused to accept any amendments. Will the Hon. Member acknowledge that since Bill C-157 was tabled, at least fifty amendments have been tabled, approved and considered in Committee, by the Government?

[English]

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member on the Government side who just spoke said that since Bill C-157 was introduced, 50 amendments have been tabled. I think it is incumbent upon the Member to explain just what he means, because 50 amendments have not been tabled on Bill C-9, which is the Bill that is in front of us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I do not see that as a point of order, but a point has been made.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is criticizing his own Government. It brought in a Bill that was so loosely and poorly drafted that it had to be withdrawn. Furthermore, there was not even enough time to thoroughly review that Bill or to determine what our constituents felt about the Bill.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): It went to the Senate.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, it went to the Senate. If the Government introduced its Bills in an appropriately drafted manner so that it would not have to withdraw them and reintroduce another Bill, we would have much better legislation. His comments are criticizing his own Government and I commend him for that.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). It relates to comments he made about the new Leader of the Liberal Party who is either unaware of what is before us or is condoning what is before us. Could he explain exactly where he believes Mr. Turner stands with respect to this legislation as far as closure is concerned and with respect to the principles involved as well. Is it the Member's belief that Mr. Turner is adhering to these principles and actually condones them?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Before giving the floor to the Hon. Member for Bow River, I should mention that the questions are supposed to be directed to the remarks that the Hon. Member has made in his speech. I do not see the question as being appropriate.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, almost before the convention was over the new Leader had closure introduced on this Bill. His record with respect to the War Measures Act is not good. He is an experienced parliamentarian and as Leader of the Party and future Prime Minister he knows that he is responsible for the legislation before the House now. If he did not want this Bill to pass he could have told the Solicitor General to drop it and it would have been dropped like a hot potato.

I am satisfied that the new Leader of the Liberal Party was well aware that closure was being introduced and that he wanted it introduced because he is in favour of this Bill. If he is not in favour of it he is a very strange leader. Furthermore, he talked about such things as free votes in the House. His first act was to bring in closure. The people of Canada look at his record of deficits—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. I am afraid I have to tell the Hon. Member that the discussion is irrelevant.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Bow River served for over 20 years in the Legislature of the Province of Alberta. He came to power in the province during the Depression years when the provincial government was bringing in statutes to try to save its people from the Depression, when three out of four had to leave the land and bankruptcies were rampant. Part of this Bill permits the Attorney General of Canada to take over the prosecution of offences in the security area. Would the Hon. Member share his views with the House about how that will affect that delicate balance between the federal and provincial governments?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent question. It brings to the foreground the fact that provincial governments are elected by the people of the provinces. The Attorneys General of those provinces should be kept informed about items such as this. In fact, one of our motions was to keep our attorneys General informed. We are in serious difficulty if matters are so determined to the future of this country that the Government cannot even inform our attorneys general in the provinces. We even had a method for keeping them informed.

The success of this country will depend on the co-operation between the federal Attorney General and the Attorneys General of the provinces. We must remember that the Attorney General and the Attorneys General of each province are elected by the people.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being two o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

CULTURE

CREATION OF NATIONAL HOUSE OF ACADEMICS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the Royal Society of Canada announced not long ago that it wanted to establish a National House of Academics in the vacant building formerly occupied by the Teacher's College, on the corner of Elgin and Lisgar, in Ottawa.

The Royal Society, which was founded by the Government of Canada in 1882, would like to bring under the same roof all our national scientific and cultural institutions and associations, to facilitate the sharing and exchange of ideas and resources. There is no centre of this kind in Canada, unlike other developed countries. The Royal Society feels it is time that Canada, like most of the world's civilized countries, had its own National House of Academics.

Teacher's College, now the property of Public Works Canada, has been empty since 1978. Now that the July 15 deadline for termination of negotiations between Public Works Canada and the City of Ottawa for renting the property is drawing near, I would like to suggest that this House support Dr. Alexander Mackay, President of the Royal Society, in urging the federal Government to assign Teacher's College to the Royal Society, on a rental basis, so that it may become Canada's "National House of Academies".

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

REJECTED ACCESS TO QUEBEC MARKET FOR ONTARIO TOMATOES

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), and through him the Government, will be aware that the farm community of southern Ontario and, by extension, all agriculture, were dismayed at the actions of the Province of Quebec last year when it refused tomatoes and other product from Ontario in litre containers.

The federal Government has, we know, passed the appropriate regulations for use in Canada of the four litre containers, and the Province of Ontario has provided certain guarantees for container cost subsidies, but the Province of Quebec to date has not passed implementing regulations, and the season will be fast upon us.

Undertakings to study will not allow the free movement of product, and in the end the farmers will be those who will be made suffer through packing products for which they will not be paid. This is clearly unfair and unacceptable.

The time has come for trade between provinces to be unhampered by artificial barriers, and if necessary the Minister must convoke a meeting of his Ontario and Quebec counterparts in order that a political will be developed and enforced, such that the necessary regulations will be put in place before the shipping season commences.

At a time when Canadians should be pulling together and Canadian markets should be shared openly and fairly so as to create more jobs through increased productivity, no stone should be left unturned in our search to remove restrictive trade barriers within Canada.

[Translation]

We should explain to Mr. Garon that by opening the market to Ontario products, he is helping Canadians from Quebec who are trying to find jobs in Ontario through the federal Department of Employment and Immigration.

We are one country. Let us find the means to act like it.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY LEADERSHIP

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, perceptive Canadians will have noticed something of considerable impact over the last several weeks. With the Liberal Party in disarray, divided and squabbling among itself, with a lame duck Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who has lost interest in government, and a new Leader who seems more interested in milking the last few dollars from his corporate directorships than in taking over the reins, it is the Official Opposition that is assuming, even now, the role of government and conducting itself in the responsible and competent manner expected of a Government, but which is so sadly lacking with the Liberals.

For example, just yesterday when Mr. Turner was pontificating over how many non-elected bodies he should co-opt into his Cabinet, it was the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) who was in Washington, preserving jobs for Canadians in our threatened steel industry, and fighting against the hazards of acid rain.

Canadians are realizing that even before the next general election it is the Conservatives, not the Liberals, to whom they should look for leadership in conducting the affairs of the nation.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILE AND CLOTHING INDUSTRY—CLOSING OF PLANTS

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement under the provisions of Standing Order 21 and ask this Government to consider the disastrous effects of textile and clothing imports which seem to be out of control, with or without quotas. This is causing serious harm and creating an intolerable situation. The closing, announced yesterday, of Celanese Canada Limited in Coaticook, in my riding, is not only a social and economic tragedy for the employees who will lose their jobs, but also a very real disappointment, first to the employer, considered to be progressive because of investments in modernizing a plant which, unfortunately, has been losing money since 1982, and an even greater disappointment to the workers, especially since they had made every effort at the right time to get through the slump in the textile industry and the economic recession.

The people are asking the Government to do what can be done to protect their jobs or give them new ones right away, because the only thing these workers want is to keep their jobs. If they cannot, they feel the Government should create new ones, since uncontrolled imports are one of the immediate causes of the lack of sufficient markets.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in announcing its response to the report on visible minorities yesterday, the Government has taken the first step in dealing with the Japanese Canadian compensation issue. It did acknowledge the injustices done to Japanese Canadians in World War II and its aftermath. It did acknowledge the suffering caused thereby. However, it is only a first step, and in announcing only a very general fund to combat racism it has not dealt adequately with the complex issue of compensation.

Now is the time for Parliament to act, and there still is time before the end of the session. Parliament should spend one hour addressing this issue with all-Party support. There should be a motion acknowledging these injustices, and an opening of the door to compensation with proper negotiations with duly elected representatives of the National Association of Japanese Canadians.

Further, Mr. Speaker, it is important that there be a re-examination of the War Measures Act, the legislation that enabled these injustices to happen in the first place. It is not enough to say that now that we have a Charter this will not happen again. These injustices did occur in the United States, which has an entrenched Charter, and we have to work to change the legislation that permitted them in the first place. The Japanese Canadian community expects no less from Parliament, that Canadians, representatives of all Parties, speak on this issue. We will not have justice in the future until we recognize the injustices committed in the past.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ATTITUDE OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY MEMBERS

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I must admit that last night it was extremely embarrassing, as a Member of Parliament, to witness the parliamentary circus in which all Members took part. I want to censure the attitude of the NDP, which certainly abused the privileges of this institution yesterday. I know that today, in some parliaments, we find people who want to settle problems with guns, and what happened last night and early this morning just goes to show that people are right to be suspicious of the qualifications of parliamentarians or the validity of the institution as such.

Mr. Speaker, I wish the Chair could make some new rules about this sort of thing, because what we saw last night is certainly unacceptable. Mr. Speaker, I would also like to know the cost to the House of Commons in terms of overtime for all services that had to work from nine o'clock last night until five o'clock this morning. The NDP claims that public money is being wasted but I think that yesterday, those same people showed an incredible lack of responsibility and lack of respect for Canadian taxpayers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EDUCATION

FRENCH FRANÇOIS-BUOTE SCHOOL IN CHARLOTTETOWN

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of Parliament to the existence of a French school in Prince Edward Island, in my riding. It was founded in September 1980. Today the school has twenty-one pupils, from the first to the eighth grade. The school employs two teachers full time and one teacher part time.

Initially, the school's expenditures were paid for directly and almost exclusively by the federal Government. Today, the provincial Government is gradually increasing its contribution with funds derived from federal transfer payments. More than half of the school's pupils are children of employees of the Department of Veterans Affairs. In fact, establishing the school was a prerequisite for moving the Department from Ottawa to Charlottetown. At the François-Buote school, English is taught only as a second language. Next week, we will have the pleasure of inaugurating the new building of the Department of Veterans Affairs in Charlottetown. The François-Buote School—

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S TREATMENT OF ARTISTS—COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, last winter the House ordered the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture to investigate the impact of tax policies and tax administration on Canada's arts community. I had the honour to chair a special subcommittee on the issue, and we reported on it today.

We found one problem which requires fast action. We urge Revenue Canada to review the files of artists reassessed prior to April 1, 1984. Many were asked to pay very high amounts of tax which they cannot afford. On the other hand, artists assessed after April 1 face lower demands. We found that their tax deductions and claims were similar to those of the first group.

The difference is that Revenue Canada has changed its assessment policy. The change is welcome, but has created inequity for some artists. After April 1 Revenue Canada is looking only at claims for the current year and back one year. Before April 1 it looked back at claims for four years. I urge the Government to make these reassessments equal and fair for all artists. The new policy is much better. The situation should be made consistent by providing refunds where past demands went back too far into the past.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CONDUCT DURING PRIME MINISTER'S TENURE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was reported earlier this week as saying that he was happy that there had been no serious scandals, I think the phrase was, during his 16-year administration. We must congratulate the Prime Minister on this achievement, and in future perhaps we should refer to some of the peccadillos which took place as errors of judgment by the Prime Minister and his Cabinet colleagues, rather than as scandals.

Many of these minor errors of judgment involved Cabinet resignations, and included such careless mistakes as participating in an illegal international uranium cartel, airport shop sales, bid-rigging and price-fixing in Hamilton, contempt of court both by criticizing a judge's ruling and also by phoning a judge and trying to influence him, evasion of income tax, building in national parks against the rules, lobbying within two years of resignation, extensive examples of conflict of interest especially in connection with anti-dumping problems, forging of abortion papers, suppression of information and failure to act regarding illegal activities by the RCMP, bribes to achieve atomic sales, maintenance of blacklists unknown to the victims—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE CANADA COUNCIL

REQUEST FOR EXCLUSION FROM PROVISIONS OF BILL C-24

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask, as others have before me, that the Government remove the Canada Council from the listing of Crown corporations and agencies included in Bill C-24.

Considering the operations of some Crown corporations in the country, there is little doubt that legislation is needed to make these agencies accountable. In fact such legislation is long overdue. However, the Canada Council is not an economic machine. It produces no profits or losses, and the Auditor General has never complained about its accounts. What is more, the Canada Council was never intended to be under the kind of direct Cabinet control outlined in Bill C-24. Instead, it was supposed to be an independent funding organization for the arts, and direct Cabinet control of its operations would compromise the Council's independence.

There is no need for the Canada Council to be governed by Bill C-24. Such action will only threaten the future integrity of the Council. Obviously the monolithic tendencies of the Government have once again manifested themselves. I urge the Government to leave well enough alone and allow the Canada Council to operate as the efficient and independent agency it is and must remain, outside the provisions of Bill C-24.

FINANCE

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA RATE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, of the Deputy Prime Minister, and of the Minister of Finance when the Bank of Canada rate is announced today, I will direct my question to the Charlie McCarthy of the Department of Finance, the Minister of State for Finance. He will know that today the Canadian dollar hit its lowest value.

An Hon. Member: What should we call you?

Mr. Evans: His name is Mortimer Snerd.

Mr. Crosbie: The birdbrain should keep quiet for a minute.

An Hon. Member: Sit down then, John.

Mr. Crosbie: Today the Canadian dollar hit its lowest value ever in our history. The Bank of Canada rate has gone up again to 11.98 per cent, which will force up the prime rate and all interest rates in Canada.

This has been done in lieu of a report of the OEDC which indicates that our unemployment, currently at 11.7 per cent, will stick close to that level until the end of 1985. For the next 18 months it sees unemployment averaging about 11 per cent for the whole period. Also it indicates that the jobless rate for young Canadians under 24 years of age will be at least 19 per cent during the whole period. At the same time the jobless rate in the United States will be about 7 per cent.

In view of the fact that the resurrection of Mr. Turner, Pierre Elliott Turner, has not given any confidence to the financial system, and apparently has not done our economic situation any good—there is no confidence in him either—will the Minister recommend an immediate election to the Government unless the Government can take steps to reverse this increase in interest rates, the weakness in the Canadian dollar, and the horrendous unemployment situation? Will you get your courage about you and call an election, if you cannot do any better than this?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the Member's last question is no. The answer to his earlier question is that the basic reason for what has happened today in the case of the Bank of Canada rate is that in the United States there has been the publication of what is called a "flash" on second quarter growth in the U.S. Substantial economic growth has been estimated for the second quarter, and the estimates for the first quarter have been revised upward.

In the United States there is rapid, real economic growth. At the same time there is a continuing concern in the U.S. that nothing is being done about the very high levels of government deficit financing. Equally, there is severe continuing monetary restraint. Those factors have come together to produce, in the United States, a fear that interest rates may go up again. This has had its impact in Canada, both in terms of our bank rate as the Hon. Member noted, and upon the Canadian dollar.

I would, however, point out to the Hon. Member opposite that all major currencies have weakened against the U.S. dollar, not just the Canadian, as the expectation, fear or speculation about an increase in U.S. interest rates has continued. The Hon. Member opposite knows perfectly well that Canada is a major trading nation with open currency borders. It is not immune from, and indeed is vulnerable to, interest rate movements in the United States. That is exactly what has been happening—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has concern at this point about time limits. We are not getting questions and answers; we are getting debate when a very long preamble with a long initial question is followed by a lengthy answer. If it takes ten minutes for the original questioner, it is at the expense of the back-benchers of the Member's own Party. It is very difficult for the Chair to enforce time limits because the Chair has no guidelines on this. Will the Hon. Member for St. John's West bear this in mind in posing his supplementary question?

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the same Minister. The Minister just flashed at the Canadian public. The Canadian public is not interested in these silly reasons for what is happening here. We have now had three months of inactivity while the Liberal so-called leadership convention went on and Mr. Turner received his coronation, and Mr. Chrétien was crucified by the Deputy Prime Minister among others.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for St. John's West, being an experienced parliamentarian, knows that it is not the practice of the House to refer to Cabinet Ministers by name. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that his question should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Crosbie: In view of the fact that Statistics Canada shows that residential construction activity, that is housing, has fallen 3.4 per cent, and over-all building construction has fallen 1.5 per cent, how can the Government allow interest rates to go up again? How can the Government force interest rates up through the Bank of Canada as you are doing today, and what are you going to do to reverse that? Will you—

Mr. Speaker: With respect, the Chair is not doing any of these things. The Hon. Member should bear in mind that questions should be addressed through the Chair.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that Canadian interest rates are affected substantially by those in the United States. For him to speak in terms of this Government driving up interest rates is a lot of poppycock. He knows that.

With regard to his query about the OECD report, as usual he chooses to take the gloomiest and most pessimistic view that he possibly can. No wonder he talks about being mean and nasty. It seems to come natural to him to choose the most pessimistic of all aspects of any report. If he had taken the time to read the OECD report he would have seen that it says that the Canadian economy should continue to perform favourably compared with other countries. It states "Canada's economic performance last year was unexpectedly favourable. The recovery saw output rebound and unemployment ease while inflation decelerated." Against that good news about the Canadian economy, it has been possible for us to continue, during the period under review, to pursue economic growth policies that have allowed us to close the interest rate gap with the United States. The Hon. Member opposite knows perfectly well that interest rates in Canada are now no greater than and, in a few instances, less than those in the United States.

Mr. Speaker: It would be helpful to the Chair if something like the 90-second rule that governs Standing Order 21 could somehow be introduced on both sides.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my final supplementary question to the Prime Minister who, I am sure, will give a short, concise answer. On June 19 the Minister of Finance stated at Jasper: "New foreign direct investment has increased, not decreased, and has increased substantially in recent years." That is entirely incorrect. In fact there has been a net loss of foreign direct investment since 1980 of $4 billion. Will the Prime Minister advise the House whether he will keep in his Cabinet, even for the few short days remaining, a Minister who tells fibs to the investment community and attempts to deceive the public? Will Fibber Lalonde and the dollar be removed from office by the Prime Minister before he goes, in view of the untruthfulness contained in his speech to investment dealers on June 19 which has destroyed any confidence there may have been remaining in that Minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): What a lot of empty phrases, Mr. Speaker. I remember that when the Minister of Finance was quoting from either the Bureau of Statistics or from one of the well-known economic research bodies in Canada, I do not recall which, he was really making public information that he had received from a very authoritative source. This Member stands up and says it is not true. He has no evidence of that. He is just making it up, like most of his questions which are founded on nothing but air.

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Finance. I want to put the Minister's good news in the context of the 1.5 million Canadians who are unemployed today, and tell him that Canadians are becoming fed up with the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance saying that everything is rosy in Canada, that everything is going well in Canada. It is not, because there are 1.5 million people unemployed. If Canadians had had the same job-creation rate as in the United States, the unemployment rate in Canada would be 8.7 per cent, not 11.7 per cent. In the face of the drift we have in Canada, when is the Government going to act to face this problem?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite engages, as usual, in his gloomy pseudo statistics which do not show the real picture at all. As the Hon. Member knows, and as I told him last week when he asked the same question, the growth in the Canadian labour force has been at record levels. It has been greater than the growth in the labour force in other major industrialized countries. The Hon. Member opposite should know, if he does not already know, that from 1968, for example, the increase in the Canadian labour force was some 40 per cent, whereas in the five other major industrialized countries it was at an average rate of 13 per cent.

Second, he makes a comparison between rates of unemployment in Canada and the United States. I would point out to him that if the Canadian labour force had grown only at the rate that the U.S. labour force has grown, we would have only 4 per cent unemployment today.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are fed up with the professorial response. They want action from this Government, not a lecture. I wish to quote from one of the Government's documents:

Manufacturers appear to be facing a slowdown in new orders, particularly for such things as cars and steel . . . Rising interest rates appear to have cut into final demand and investment, and this is working back through the production chain, curtailing orders—

It is causing greater unemployment in our country. Since the change in Liberal leadership last weekend has done nothing to stop the drift in confidence, as seen in the Canadian dollar today, in the bond market and in the stock market, what is the Government going to do to face up to these very serious problems that are real out in the streets, and not as the Minister points them out as he stands here in the House like a professor?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member again describes, as he always does, a gloomy outlook for the Canadian economy, by choosing a few selected statistics. If he will look at the facts and look at the release of information the other day by my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, he will find that in fact companies responding to a survey of business capital investment intentions have indicated that their spending will increase by about 2 per cent in 1984 from the comparable 1983 level. This is the first net increase since 1982. If the Hon. Member does not know, a 2 per cent increase is a substantial increase for the period under review.

Partly as a result of the Government's policies in the previous two Budgets, there is now evidence of a real reaffirmation of confidence in growth in the Canadian economy, particularly in the manufacturing sector where companies now expect 17 per cent real growth in spending versus 10 per cent indicated in the previous survey of last October. Contrary to what the Member opposite is indicating, there has been, in the private sector, a vote of confidence in the Canadian economy similar to that expressed in the OECD report to which the Hon. Member for St. John's West drew our attention.

HOUSING

CONSTRUCTION OF SOCIAL HOUSING UNITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. I am sure the Minister is aware that the actual number of housing starts this year on an annual basis is running at about 50,000 housing units behind the projected need, and about 30,000 housing units behind what was projected to be the actual number of starts by the Government at the beginning of the year.

Given those two facts, what possible reason can there be for the Minister to recommend that there be cutbacks in the number of social housing units to be built in Canada, from the level of 25,957 last year to the level of 22,500 this year? I would ask the Minister please not to tell me that he is paying back the loan from last year, because that just does not wash.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member began by quoting statistics. I might tell him that the seasonally adjusted rate of housing starts in May was 135,000 dwelling units. This represents an increase of 7 per cent over the April, 1984, total of 126,000.

That being said, the Hon. Member must remember, as I am sure he does, that the increase in the allocation to social housing was very clearly understood by everyone. He may say that it does not wash with him, but I am sure that if he made a commitment to do something when the housing starts had improved, as they have in the last year or year and a half, then at that point the social housing budget would return to its normal level.

PROJECTED HOUSING CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that the number of housing starts is at 135,000. He knows full well that the projected need is 200,000 units a year. He also knows that in the first quarter of this year alone we were building housing units at a rate of only 145,000 per year, which leaves us on a yearly basis 65,000 housing units behind our need or, on a quarterly basis, 55,000 housing units behind our need. Taking that into account, and recognizing that there are 12,000 people in metropolitan Toronto alone who have no fixed address because they cannot find affordable housing or accommodation, how can the Minister justify making these cuts in the field of social housing?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I did not make cuts. The fact is that we have been running at a level of 30,000 housing units on a program which was intended to run at a level of 25,000 housing units. We simply had to accept the fact that the building of these units which were received as an advance payment would not continue forever. However, the Hon. Member speaks of housing starts. In 1982 housing starts were at a level of 125,000 units. In 1983, they were at a level of 162,000 units, and the estimated level for the current year is 171,000 units.

PLIGHT OF SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in quoting the statistics the Minister does not seem to recognize that in each of the years about which he is speaking we ran at least 40,000 housing units behind our need. With 12,000 people in Toronto in need of housing of a social nature, with 3,000 senior citizens in Toronto unable to find senior citizens' accommodation, and with thousands of others in almost every municipality from coast to coast unable to find housing at an affordable price, how can we afford to take 2,500 to 3,500 units away from the social housing allocation this year, knowing full well that we will not be able to meet either the immediate need or the projected requirements?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has served in the provincial Legislature of the Province of Ontario, if my memory is correct. He seems to forget that housing does not fall totally under federal jurisdiction. In fact if he compares the amount of money this Government is putting into housing, and particularly social housing with the amount of money spent by the provinces then he may want to speak to his counterparts in the provincial Legislature of his own province and, in fact, in the Legislatures of most provinces. The federal Government is doing more than all of the provinces of Canada combined.

FUTURE PROSPECTS—UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance, who was speaking of confidence. I would wonder what kind of confidence the people have shown in the Government of Canada with the Canadian dollar at its lowest level in history today.

Across the country today there are billboards which read: "Celebrate the Future" and on which yesterday's man is featured prominently. I would like to know what kind of future we are to celebrate? Are we celebrating a future that now sees Canadians with a full-time employment level of 2.4 per cent less than it was in January, 1981, when full-time employment levels in the United States are up 5.1 per cent? What kind of future are we celebrating? What kind of future do these unemployed Canadians have to celebrate?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite should look for a moment at the OECD report with which the Hon. Member from St. John's is so preoccupied. In fact that report offers good news. If he wants to receive good news, he should read what the OECD has to say.

The OECD predicts that Canada's economic growth in 1984 will be second only to that of Japan and will be substantially ahead of that of the United States and other industrialized countries. The OECD believes, and the Canadian Government shares its view, that our growth in 1984 will be in the 4 per cent to 5 per cent range. This, of course, will in turn bring increased investment in the Canadian economy and an increased creation of jobs.

When talking about job creation the Hon. Member should also know that over the last years we have set record levels in job creation. Indeed, since the end of the recession we have created almost half a million jobs in the Canadian economy, the creation of which has played a substantial part in offsetting the effects of the recession.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, if we had all of the jobs that government Members say have been creating, every Canadian in the country would be working night and day, and on weekends. We would be bringing in great numbers of immigrants. We would not know what to do with all of the jobs they say they have created. The fact is that we have gotten nothing but blarney and nonsense from the Government.

COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, why does the Minister not pay attention to what is being done in the United States? In the United States there was a growth rate of 9.7 per cent in the last quarter. I would point out to the Minister that Statistics Canada has now delayed stating the Canadian growth figures three times. However, those figures are likely to show a 2.4 per cent or perhaps 2.7 per cent rate of growth for the same quarter. Why are we doing so poorly when the United States, our major trading partner, is doing so well? What does the Minister have to say about that? Why has the Government given us nothing but yesterday answers, and now a yesterday Leader?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the Canadian economy is doing well. We shall see increased growth during the course of this year. This growth is estimated to be ahead of that of the United States for the year.

The Hon. Member opposite should know, as should his colleague, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre, that in fact the increase in the Canadian workforce has been at levels greater than that of the United States, or, indeed, of any of the other summit countries. The Canadian labour force has grown at rates which have been unparalleled, not only in our history but in comparison with those of other industrialized countries. In those circumstances we have had high rates of unemployment. I regret to say that we shall continue to have a substantial rate of unemployment in the time ahead. However, we shall equally be creating jobs at a very rapid rate to absorb as many as possible of the new workers who will be entering the workforce.

HEALTH

SAFE DRINKING WATER

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the continuing concern about acid rain, both from environmental and health points of view, will the Minister indicate if she is encouraging new initiatives to protect the health of Canadians and, in particular, what is being done to ensure that drinking water in unorganized areas, where the water quality is not controlled by municipalities, is safe?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I know that this is of great concern to the Minister and to the Department. There is a good deal of study being done in this regard, particularly as it relates to people's health. We hope to be able to have something more definitive when those studies are completed in the near future.

NATIONAL REVENUE

SUPREME COURT FINDING ON MINISTERIAL POWERS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I imagine that the Minister of National Revenue is being briefed on the answer to the question which I am about to ask him. The Minister will know that the Supreme Court rendered an extremely important judgment today in which it found against the Department of National Revenue in favour of James Richardson and Sons Limited. In view of the fact that the decision of the Supreme Court included the following statement: "The Minister cannot under subsection (3) of Section 231 of the Act conduct a "fishing expedition" into the trading activities of the customers of one broker," I would ask the Minister what assurance he can give to the House that any attempt to conduct this sort of fishing expedition in the future will be stopped. Also, would he assure the House that no attempts, similar to the one which was made with the request to the City of Kitchener for complete access to the computerized data base of that city, will be made in the future?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the judgment was made public this morning. We are studying, in the Department, the nature of that judgment. I want to ensure the Hon. Member that the application of Section 231 and the administrative practices related to it will be put in line with respect to the judgment which was made today.

RESPECT FOR RIGHTS OF TAXPAYERS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the judgment opens up two possibilities. The first is that in a case such as this the Department could have asked for the files of very brokerage firm and gone on an even more massive fishing expedition than it had contemplated. The second possibility is that the Department would not target one individual firm.

I would like to ask the Minister for the assurance that he will not take the option of simply casting the nets farther and increasing the ability of the Department to go on this sort of a fishing expedition, but instead that he will opt for the privacy of Canadians and for some respect of their basic rights. Can he at least give us that assurance, which was recommended by the PC Task Force on Revenue Canada?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I want to give the assurance to Members of the House that we will continue to respect the rights of Canadian taxpayers as we have always done. I also would like to assure the Hon. Member that the judgment of the Supreme Court and the suggestions which were made will be respected by the Department.

HOUSING

ASSISTED HOME OWNERSHIP PROGRAM—DIFFICULTIES FACED BY OWNERS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. It has to do with the survivors of the AHOP Program, many of whom have loan payments which are coming due. They are asking that the Government give consideration to forgiving those loans altogether. In view of the fact that many home owners were lucky enough not to subject to the wrong assumptions behind the AHOP Program and received the $3,000 grant, those who remain in the AHOP Program are asking that their loans be forgiven. I would like to know if the Minister is considering doing this, given the difficult situation in which many of these people have been placed by that program?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I interpret the Hon. Member's question as a representation. He well knows that that program was intended to help people whose revenue was limited or reasonably modest. I am sure that anything the corporation can do to be helpful will be done.

REQUEST THAT LOAN PAYMENTS BE FORGIVEN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it is not a representation. I am asking the Minister to indicate whether he will authorize CMHC to forgive the loan payments. CMHC is willing to take a dive in other respects. I have the real estate sales listings for Winnipeg for the months of February and March which indicate that CMHC is willing to sell approximately one dozen homes at $3,000 below the market price, to one company. CMHC is willing to sell those homes to that company at fire sale prices, but to private people it is asking approximately $3,000 more. If CMHC is willing to take a $3,000 dive to benefit one company, why will is not take a similar dive on behalf of the people who have stuck it out in those homes, who have tried to make a go of it, and who are asking for the same kind of consideration which was given to the people who received the $3,000 grant?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's representations may be perfectly justified. I think they might have been weakened by the demagoguery which he is trying to put before the House.

LIBERAL PARTY LEADER—CORPORATE DIRECTORSHIP FEES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it has to do with Mr. Turner. Mr. Turner is reported to be earning in excess of $100,000 per year in director's fees. I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell us how much money Mr. Turner is receiving in director's fees for the period in which he has access to confidential Cabinet documents? Would the Prime Minister also tell us why the Government and Mr. Turner believe it is appropriate that he should be paid by private companies while he has access to confidential information which could help those private companies?

Mr. Speaker: The concerns the Chair has at this point is whether such information should be presumed to be within the knowledge of the Government. The rules of the House are clear with respect to questions within a government or ministerial responsibility.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, your instincts and your knowledge are great. You took the words out of my mouth. I can confirm the basis of the doubts. In fact, I do not know how much Mr. Turner is earning. I do not know the answers to the questions which the Right Hon. Member is asking. However, I am sure Mr. Turner will take notice of those questions.

PARLIAMENTARY RESPONSIBILITY OF NEW GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I would like to examine a field about which the Prime Minister may well have more certain knowledge, as it has to do with when he will be leaving. Another aspect of Mr. Turner's "old boys' club" approach to government is that he is considering appointing new Ministers to Cabinet who will sit neither in the House of Commons nor in the Senate.

I would like the Prime Minister to tell us whether this new Government will meet Parliament before this session adjourns on June 29, or will it act as an extra-parliamentary Government, without the legitimacy of either being elected by the people or being approved by the House of Commons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the answer to that question either. I know that, traditionally, the transition between one Government and another—and the Right Hon. Member has two experiences in that regard, and so do I with him—generally takes about a fortnight. I have told Mr. Turner that I would be ready to offer my resignation at a convenient time within that general time frame, a few days earlier or a few days later. I do not know what his decision will be.

Mr. Crosbie: You are going, though?

Mr. Trudeau: I think I will be going, yes.

TRADE

TEXTILE AND CLOTHING IMPORTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT JOBS

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade who is responsible for import controls.

The textile industry in the Eastern Townships is steadily declining, and the closing of the Celanese Canada Limited plant in Coaticook is one more in a series of final shutdowns that has already been announced.

Could the Minister inform the House whether the fact that imports are being tolerated by the Government is a sign that the Government is unwilling or is no longer willing to protect jobs in the textile industry, and if so, can employees and the people of Coaticook expect that this Government will make up for the loss of jobs by urging or even obliging high-tech industries to locate in the area, thus providing jobs in presumably more modern and more lucrative sectors?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say that the jobs of workers in this area are very important to the Government. In the case mentioned by the Hon. Member, it is very important—

Mr. McDermid: A coté de vous, M. Diefenbaker était vraiment doué pour les langues!

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that the Coaticook plant is not a modern one. Furthermore, we must bear in mind that our polyester imports do not come from countries where prices are lower than they are in Canada. Many of our imports are from the United States and Japan, which means we must develop modern and competitive plants in our own country.

LIBERAL PARTY LEADER—POSSIBLE APPOINTMENT OF NON-ELECTED CABINET MINISTERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): M. le Président, c'est le français parisien?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Silenzio!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Svyenya! C'est Ukrainien!

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are all having difficulties after last night, but the Chair can only recognize two official languages and is having some difficulty.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It deals with the question of whether or not Mr. John Turner, the future Prime Minister, has in fact received or sought from the Government a legal opinion as to the legitimacy, constitutionality, or appropriateness of an unelected Prime Minister appointing a cabinet, which is made up of a significant number of persons who are non-elected, in the dying days of a dying Government in a dying Parliament, especially in light of the fact that the President of the Liberal Party of Canada and members of his own caucus have pronounced this type of activity, which is unprecedented, as being repugnant?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that your instincts are to interrupt the Hon. Member and indicate that this is not, as well, anything under my purview. Whether Mr. Turner has sought legal advice or not, he certainly has not done so through me.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Did he ask the Government?

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, I apologize. The Hon. Member asks if he asked the Government for such advice. I have no knowledge that he had or would ask such advice of the Government, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member himself gave away, I believe, the fallacy of his question when he asked whether it would be legal or appropriate. The Department of Justice, perhaps unlike the Supreme Court, does not give opinions on what is appropriate, only on what is legal.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, judging from some of the opinions the Prime Minister has received, I can believe that to be the case.

BRIEFING BY SECRETARY TO CABINET

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): The Prime Minister has committed Mr. Osbaldeston to brief the future Prime Minister with respect to confidential documents, government documents, which are available normally only to members of the Cabinet. He said yesterday that he instructed Mr. Osbaldeston to show Mr. Turner some but not all of the documents. I wonder if the Prime Minister would tell us, in light of Mr. Turner's corporate connections, which have been a question of some prominence as well as speculation in the editorial pages, what documents there are which Mr. Osbaldeston is not showing to Mr. Turner? Having regard to the conflict of interest guidelines of the Prime Minister, what documents has he directed Mr. Osbaldeston to refuse access to Mr. Turner?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not given any such specific directions to Mr. Osbaldeston. I indicated my confidence in Mr. Osbaldeston and in Mr. Turner. Both gentlemen, I am sure, would want to make sure that any possibility of conflict of interest would not arise if there were some document dealing with some subject with which Mr. Turner, as director of a company, had been involved. I am sure both gentlemen will be very aware of that danger because of the suspicious nature of the Opposition.

FORESTRY

STATUS OF INDUSTRY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. According to the Financial Post, a report prepared for the Minister's Department by Woodbridge Reed and Associates, confirms what the New Democrats have been trying to tell the Government about British Columbia's forest industry. The report paints a picture of a devastated industry, locked into outdated technology, with inadequate research and development and poor levels of utilization of a mismanaged and threatened forest base.

The industry has depended on raw and semi-processed products and cannot compete with more developed products because it has not developed the infrastructure for marketing. Considering Liberal Government promises in 1979 to help the lumber and plywood industries of British Columbia, and considering that no such help has been given, what proposals does the Government have to help the forest industry of British Columbia get out of its present devastation so that it can act as the proper solid foundation for a decent economy?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is apparent from all of the actions which the Government has taken with respect to every province which has a forestry sector—British Columbia is the most important, but by no means alone—that we are taking steps to encourage the provinces to have primary responsibility in this area, particularly with respect to reforestation. That is where the real devastation has taken place in Canada. We have taken steps to move ahead with joint agreements in order to give effect to the national forestry strategy which the Government adopted in 1981. The Hon. Member is quite right that the industry is in a sad state across this country. The provinces have not done their share of reforestation and taken other steps which are necessary in order to preserve what is one of this country's greatest national resources, and the major export from Canada.

We will be, I hope, entering into negotiations with British Columbia in order to sign an economic and regional development agreement with that province. It is one of the few provinces, I might point out, Mr. Speaker, with which we have not yet embarked upon substantial negotiations. We have now signed off in fact seven economic and regional development agreements. In each instance, as I can recall, forestry, of course, has been featured as one of the major areas of development. The same, of course, obviously has to be true with British Columbia.

With respect to research and development—

Mr. McDermid: Come on!

Mr. Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member has given his answer.

TAX CREDITS PROPOSAL

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Government is able to get some action going. The report concludes that the industry itself is in such debt that it is not able to finance any long-term restructuring or expansion. That is largely, of course, because of mergers. It suggests that the federal Government—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please ask his supplementary question?

Mr. Manly: Considering that the report suggests that the federal Government should allow the industry to sell tax credits to finance equity, would the Minister tell the House, if the Government adopts such a doubtful approach, what guarantees would there be for the Canadian people that this will not be another scam such as we saw with the research and development tax credits? What guarantees have we that this will not be—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has asked his supplementary question.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the conclusion that there is some kind of a scam associated with research and development tax credits, of course, is nonsense. I believe we should all be pleased that so many Canadians have taken advantage of those research and development tax credits. The important thing is to ensure that they are being applied in a constructive way in terms of the R and D which is now begun in Canada. I suspect that that will be evaluated very soon. Instead of being critical of that, I feel we should be delighted that more money is going into research and development in these areas.

I come back to the point, Mr. Speaker, that this is an area where we have to work hand in hand with the provinces. I would hope that the kind of representations which the Hon. Member is making here today will also be made by him in his own province to the provincial officials and to provincial politicians.

ACCESS TO QUEBEC MARKET FOR ONTARIO TOMATOES

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture will know that, notwithstanding the undertakings by the federal Government to implement the litre container legislation and regulations, the Province of Quebec is still holding to a July 15 deadline for possible implementation of the regulations, which will be two weeks after the start of the tomato season in southwestern Ontario. Will he take the lead and offer to meet with Mr. Garon and obtain assurances that in fact we will not have the same kind of fiasco we had last year where trade between Ontario and Quebec will stop because of the containers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will.

Introduction of Bills

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put to the President of the Privy Council the usual Thursday question with respect to the Government's legislative intentions over the course of the next few days and weeks.

Mr. Pinard: Perhaps I can begin with the business starting on September 10, but let us try to get something done before the end of next week.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the House will be considering four Bills, in the following order. The first Bill will be C-40, which concerns the guaranteed income supplement, followed by C-37 dealing with the mortgage rate protection plan for homeowners; the third Bill will be S-14, which concerns a tax agreement with the United States; and the fourth Bill to be debated tomorrow will be C-36, to amend the Interest Act, which is related somewhat to Bill C-37, the second Bill on the agenda tomorrow. So we shall be considering Bills C-40, C-37, S-14 and C-36.

As far as next week is concerned, a number of Bills were discussed at a meeting of the Parliamentary House Leaders held earlier today. At this point I cannot say we have a firm agreement regarding consideration of these Bills. However, we are confident, since the House is sitting for extended hours and we shall automatically adjourn on June 29, and also considering the spirit of co-operation required under our new system, that the three Parties will be able to agree on adopting a reasonable number of measures before we adjourn on the 29th. I believe that in the circumstances, now that we have determined the order of business for tomorrow, next week's order of business should be set for one day at a time, since we shall probably be having regular meetings of the Parliamentary House Leaders, and we can then do so according to daily progress in the House on the items of legislation concerned.

For the time being, I shall therefore set the order of business for tomorrow only. Tomorrow I can be more specific, depending on our progress and the results of my talks with the Parliamentary House Leaders of the two Opposition Parties.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Kaplan that Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact An Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, we are now at third reading stage of this Bill. There are four very important aspects of the Bill which deserve further consideration. You will recall that last evening we spent some time on votes on this Bill. However, we did not have an opportunity, before coming to those votes, to finish consideration at the report stage. There were still a number of very important matters before us when we had to turn to the vote.

There are four elements of this Bill which I want to emphasize most particularly. The first is the separation of the agency from the RCMP. That has been a matter of some controversy. I suppose it is the element which divides the Government Party from our Party and our attitude toward the agency, whether it be within the RCMP or separate. Our Party favours the retention of the agency within the larger ambit of the RCMP.

That is one element. I think the Canadian public is concerned about that particular element. A lot of people have made up their mind. I am sure that a lot of others are still wondering. If there is a balance swinging in one direction or another, it is in favour of the retention of the service within the RCMP, for the very simple reason that the RCMP is a known quantity. The separate service outside of the RCMP is an unknown quantity. Given the history of intelligence agencies around the world, the separation of that agency from a known quantity is causing concern.

I will mention the second matter and return to it later, and that is the element of ministerial responsibility. This is a deep and abiding concern. Ministerial responsibility does not exist in this Bill. I know it is difficult to retain ministerial responsibility. However, there must be a link between an agency such as the Security Intelligence Service and the Parliament of Canada. That does not now exist, even with the review committee.

The third element which is causing concern is the threat to human rights and the imminent invasion of privacy which are inherent in the type of organization which is being created by this Bill. Mistakes can be made and innocent people can have their rights affronted and their privacy invaded. What recourse do individuals have to secure what they believe to be their rights? How do they protect their privacy?

One of the interesting elements in timing is that this potential for invasion of privacy or assault on human rights in Canada comes right on the heals of the Charter of Rights which is now embedded in the Constitution. People now feel that they have their rights and they are damn well going to be sure that they are recognized. How are they going to be recognized under this legislation unless there is some sort of ministerial responsibility? That is a tragedy. The Bill was not properly thought out. The link between the individuals, the legislators and the Government has not been properly worked out.

I am not questioning for an instant the need for a security intelligence agency. My experience in a previous career has taught me, and my reading since that time has reinforced what I learned, that there is a need for a security agency. However, in creating that agency we must not avoid this parliamentary institution which is a safeguard of the rights of the Canadian people. That is what we are doing with this Bill.

The fourth element arose over the past weekend. It has two aspects. It is the emergence of a new Leader of the governing Party. Mr. Turner was elected last weekend as the new Leader of the Liberal Party. In the course of time he will become Prime Minister. For the first day or so we were prepared to concede that Mr. Turner was not aware of what this Bill might contain. He had been Minister of Justice at a very critical time so he should have been aware. He should have been following what was happening, but of course he was busy campaigning. Perhaps he had not focused clearly on the contents of this Bill. Therefore, for the first day or so we were prepared to concede that, being unaware, the process of legislating this Bill was proceeding without his knowledge. That period has now passed. Mr. Turner must be aware that this Bill is before the House of Commons. He must also be aware of, and therefore must have condoned, the imposition of closure or time limitation on debate.

In two senses the future Prime Minister of Canada is coming in with two strikes against him. He is prepared to back a new institution with which he must have been familiar because he was working with the agency before. Starting out with those two heavy strikes against him on this particular piece of legislation is a pretty tough way to begin.

Let me come back to ministerial responsibility and leave the names out of it for the moment. Others have spoken about other elements of the Bill. My prime concern today is that element of ministerial responsibility.

Let me read extracts from a book that I was looking at recently. I believe reading these extracts give the gist of the story. This is the story of a person who became embedded in the security institutions of the Canadian Government. I admit that it is a novel, but this person became embedded within those institutions and it finally became clear that this person was a plant or a spy. The book first points out that those who were investigating the matter found a number of unused one-time cypher pads. Unused one-time cypher pads are used for cyphering plain language to transmit over the wires, which can then be unscrambled at the far end. However, in the belongings of this particular person they found some one-time cypher pads, a list of call signs, tables set to 24-hour cycles keyed to five-year calendars, and so on. It is the manual that is used for conveying information in a secure manner.

It became apparent that this person, having suspected that she had been detected, fled from Ottawa to Montreal with her son. Their car was traced to what was called Pier 11. The head of the service said: "Pier 11, is that not where the MS Alexandr Puskin normally docks?" The trail became a little more interesting and the fears were being substantiated. It then became apparent to the head of the intelligence service who had all these ideas in his mind that he would have to tell the Prime Minister. He was sure that the Prime Minister would not like what he had to tell him.

The book goes on to say that the head of the intelligence service saw the Prime Minister in his Centre Block office in the Houses of Parliament. He gave his account to the Prime Minister. Finally the Prime Minister, having heard the story, asked the head of the intelligence agency where was the car that was used to get from Ottawa to Montreal. He was told by the head of the agency that it had been impounded by the RCMP in Montreal. It had been found on federal property within the jurisdiction of the agency and therefore could be impounded without anyone knowing it had been impounded.

The Prime Minister thought for a moment and said: "I intend to call a special meeting of the Cabinet Committee on Security and Intelligence early tomorrow morning. I would like you to be there. We will have a number of decisions to make". The Prime Minister said: "In the meantime, arrange to have that car moved to Ottawa in a closed van and stored in a secure garage. By the way, you and the Secretary of Cabinet will be the only officials present tomorrow. I do not want the meeting advertised".

That is normal. These matters must be dealt with in a very careful manner when the security of the state is in question. He brought the Cabinet Committee together on short notice. The Prime Minister said: "I am sorry we have to meet on such short notice. As you will know, the only officials present are the Secretary of the Cabinet and the Head of the Security Service". He said that the reasons for that will become apparent. He instructed that no minutes be kept of the meeting and went on to say: "I do not intend to raise the matter in full Cabinet and I would ask that each of you refrain from discussing the subject matter of the meeting with anyone outside this group".

The scene is set. When he came to make his report he began: "Gentlemen, we have a problem. The secretary of this Committee, Mrs. Heide Latour, was discovered not long ago to be a spy, an agent of a foreign power, the Russians". This, of course, caused consternation. The Prime Minister proceeded with his account and laid out before his colleagues the full story of the operation that had been undertaken to find the leak at first, and then focusing on Madam Latour. One of the Ministers said: "Why in the hell didn't the RCMP keep her under surveillance?" The question was passed to the head of the security service who said that when it was agreed that the person in question could visit her in-laws in Quebec with her son, he suggested that she be accompanied by the woman operative who had been stationed in her house from the time they first picked her up when suspicions started to gel.

The RCMP had been dealing with this matter. The Prime Minister then said: "It appears to me that there are two practical alternatives to dealing with the problem. Make a statement in the House disclosing the facts of the case, or provide some credible public explanation for her disappearance which avoids disclosure of the true facts". It is necessary to hide the true facts. I suppose this is normal within a security operation. Someone spoke up and said: "The first alternative could be political suicide given our minority position in the House". Political considerations come into play.

The Prime Minister did not wait. He said: "Exactly my feelings. Instead, I propose that her disappearance be attributed to an accident to her car", the gas tank of which would have exploded causing the vehicle to dissolve in a pillar of fire. They had the car and he had instructed that the car be brought to Ottawa. That can all be staged.

While I am reading from a novel, it is an interesting novel which bears directly on what we are talking about. He mentioned that the car had been found and brought to Ottawa. He said that he gave instructions that Mrs. Latour's car be removed to Ottawa in a closed van for storage by the RCMP and arrangements were accordingly made that it be found as having exploded somewhere. He turned to the head of security and said: "I assume your people can make the necessary arrangements?"

The head of the security agency then turned to the Prime Minister and said: "Mr. Prime Minister, there is no doubt that if the affair becomes public the damage done to our extensive and sensitive relationships with various foreign security and intelligence agencies within and outside NATO would be considerable". They had to avoid that. Then comes the crunch. One Minister who was very smart said: "Fine, but it could become messy. If it does, you will understand that we have to deny all knowledge of the affair". That essentially ends my reading but those words "we will have to deny all knowledge of the affair" are important.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, who wrote that book. It was written since his retirement by the first civilian director of the Canadian Intelligence Service, Mr. John Starnes. It is based on his experiences. The book is called "Deep Sleepers". That is a term used in the intelligence world for those who are placed many years in advance into positions of significance and influence so they could do their spying.

I just read a small part of the book. How does it end? The Minister says: "If this becomes public you will understand, of course, that we have to deny all knowledge of the affair". There is an absolute absence of ministerial responsiblity. This is not good enough. Mr. Starnes speaks from experience.

Yesterday in our debate before we came to the vote we were considering an amendment which was brought forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), that this House set up a Commons committee, or a committee in conjunction with the Senate which could meet in camera or openly, depending upon its agenda, to review the administration, provisions, and operation of the Service.

This Bill was not fully studied in this House—in committee, yes, but not in this House. We were not given enough time, thanks to the connivance of Mr. Turner and the Government, to deal with all the provisions of this particular legislation. It is essential in my view that there be a committee of this House to ensure that there is some responsibility to the Canadian people for the activities of that agency and for the manner in which this Bill is being implemented.

There must be a Minister who will answer. That is one of the reasons that, through the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and the Commissioner of the RCMP, that channel exists. But what does this Bill propose? It proposes that the RCMP be cut out, that a separate agency be instituted and that there be no ministerial responsibility. That is the tragedy of this Bill, Mr. Speaker. It is so important that I felt I had to rise this afternoon to explain why it is such a dangerous Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): A ten-minute period is provided for questions or comments relating to the remarks of the Hon. Member. Are there any questions?

[Translation]

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. I asked the same question to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) this morning, but he did not bother to answer.

There are various positions concerning the establishment of a civilian agency. The position of the Government is very well known since it is in keeping with the recommendation of the McDonald Commission and the MacKenzie Commission, and that is the creation of a civilian agency. As usual, the New Democratic Party has not made up its mind, it is like a weather vane. As to the Progressive Conservative Party, the senators who belong to that Party spoke in favour of a new civilian security agency during the proceedings of the Senate committee chaired by Mr. Pitfield. However, it would seem that the caucus of Conservative Members does not see eye to eye with the caucus of senators since it appears to be against the creation of a civilian security agency.

Could the Hon. Member enlighten us and give a clear, unequivocal and precise answer to this question: what is the exact position of the Progressive Conservative Party concerning the creation of a civilian agency? And perhaps he might try to be less evasive than the Hon. Member for Bow River?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Progressive Conservative Party is clear and unequivocal. It has been explained by our spokesman, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), and it is this: there must be no breakdown between the security agency and the intelligence service of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

At the beginning, during those studies . . . and the senators, as the Hon. Member must know, are free to think otherwise and to have their own opinion.

I do not remember exactly the dates on which the comittee sat, but in the final analysis, some of them were in favour of separating the agency from the RCMP, while only one Progressive Conservative Senator favoured integrating the Service within the RCMP. However, since then, following the study carried out by the caucus and the submissions made by the Attorneys General of the Provinces, it became obvious that the present situation needed to be cleared up; indeed, a Bill was required to resolve the problem, but there is no need to have the intelligence service separate from the RCMP.

Mr. Gourde: In its findings, the McDonald Commission recommended that a civil security service be created; on the other hand, the tenors in the Progressive Conservative Party have often rejected this very important recommendation of the McDonald Commission, even though they have often based their arguments on the findings contained in the McDonald report. Am I to understand that the Progressive Conservative Party supports and approves the McDonald Commission or is the Official Opposition against the general conclusions of this report?

Mr. Munro: The McDonald Commission made many recommendations, but as concerns separating the service from the RCMP, we do not agree with its conclusions. If I may say so, Mr. Speaker, this might be the first time that the Government is accepting the recommendations of a commission it has itself created. Generally speaking, the commissions appointed by this Government have been set up to delay matters. Indeed, when the Government does not want to make any decision, it appoints a commission to study the issue and finally comes to its own conclusions even though they may go against the recommendations of its own commissions. I am not necessarily referring to the McDonald Commission, but this acceptance by the Government of a recommendation made by a commission it has itself appointed is quite unusual.

[English]

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): In rising to speak to Bill C-9, you will recall, Mr. Speaker—I think you were here last night—that many of us were here until five o'clock this morning. As a result, we are very tired today. We have not much desire to do anything with this Bill other than to throw it in the wastebasket. I do not think anybody, even Members of Parliament, should be asked to vote 130 times as we were last night.

Subject to that expressed concern today, I would speak on four aspects of the Bill, if I may, Sir; first, the question of the civilianization of the force, second, on the question of judicial warrants, third on the question of powers and civil liberties, and fourth, on the question of the review committee.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, my Party, and specifically the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) and the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) have made it very clear that we do not wish to see a civilian security force established, separate and apart from the security service of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, or The "Force" as we call it in western Canada.

I should like to give eight personal reasons why I would not like to see the security force separated from the RCMP and civilianized. Perhaps I will state my bias in indicating that.

I have worked with members of the RCMP in Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia as Crown Attorney over a number of years. I have strong respect, affection and goodwill for the force and its unique ability, recognized worldwide to obey the law and do its work without fear of favour. As the House may know, that is the oath which every recruit takes when he or she is sworn into the force. I have the highest regard for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. As a western Canadian I am unhappy to see the force being told that it cannot handle the security service and that it will be civilianized.

First, the attitude of the Canadian people is the most important factor. One's personal views are not as important as the views of Canadians. I have been told that an opinion poll taken about a year or so ago indicated that 75 per cent, or three out of four Canadians, do not want to see the security service civilianized. If that is correct, the overwhelming majority of Canadians share my view, that it is not a positive step forward.

Second, what is the attitude of RCMP members? Having spoken with members of the force in Ottawa, and primarily in Alberta, both within and outside the security force, my impression is that they do not want the service taken away from them. They see a loss of career opportunities if suddenly a regular member cannot apply for the security service. It is a blockage in their career opportunities. In short, RCMP members in western Canada do not want to see the security service civilianized.

Third, what is the position of our allies with respect to this matter? We all know about Hugh Hambleton, and about other cases which regrettably have proven for one reason or another that Canada is not as secure as we would like it to be. My impression—and it is not based upon any survey or poll—is that our 15 NATO allies, including the one closest to us geographically, would not like to see the RCMP lose its identification with the security service. If my judgment is correct, our allies do not want to see this aspect of the Bill implemented.

Fourth, in my experience 99.9 per cent of RCMP members across Canada obey the law all the time, unless superior officers tell recruits or younger members to go and do thus and so. Very rarely will a member of the RCMP break the law. One of the issues confronting the McDonald Commission was whether or not practising politicians and Cabinet Ministers—and the House knows the names as well as I do—ordered the security service to carry on activities in Quebec which either tacitly or implicitly led to barn burning, stealing of membership lists and so on. Again, in my experience of dealing with the force over a decade, and complaints against it, its members do not break the law unless ordered to do so by superior officers. Indeed, as the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), pointed out, maintiens le droit is the motto of the RCMP. In my experience, members of the force follow it better than any other force in the world.

I could exaggerate and say that someone recently graduated from university with a political science degree or a sociology degree could be made a member of the security service. However, a person who has been trained as a regular police officer knows more about investigating, obeying the law and dealing with various people than such a graduate.

Fifth, the Government has relied heavily upon the recommendation of the Mackenzie Commission a number of years ago which indicated in effect that the RCMP could not handle high technology and, therefore, we required a civilian security force to do the job. The RCMP is becoming thoroughly involved in high-tech. We could visit detachment offices in western Canada where we would find the RCMP well trained in the use of high technology on land, sea and air. The premise of the Mackenzie Commission that the force could not handle high-tech has been effectively overtaken by events. Therefore, in my view, that reason largely collapses and the Government does not have it to fall back upon.

Sixth, I should like to deal with the question of career opportunities for RCMP members now in the security service. The Government says that they will all be given jobs. However, members of the security service have indicated that if they wished to return to regular force work at the time of the establishment of the civilian security agency their chances would be very small. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) knows well that the amount of regular RCMP work in provincial contracts is becoming smaller. At the moment there are no recruits in Regina and there is no ongoing training, to my understanding. In effect the Government is telling them that they cannot return to regular police force work because there is little or none available, especially for someone who has worked in the security service for 10 or 15 years. That is unfair in terms of the careers and the good faith with which people joined the RCMP, thinking that they could return to regular police work if they wished to do so.

Another aspect of the matter is that regular members will not be able to go into the civilian security service from regular police work. That career opportunity will be cut, and I think it is undesirable.

Seventh, I should like to touch upon a matter I dealt with previously. According to the McDonald Commission—and the details seem somewhat hazy—the RCMP security service was ordered by political masters to conduct a number of illegal acts. I am worried that a civilian force would be subject to even more political control and direction than a group of men and women who have been trained since the day they entered the RCMP. You obey the law. You do not break the law. You do not step on people's rights.

The CIA is a civilian security service. Under bad or incompetent political management or both, it did things far worse than what the RCMP appears to have done during the 1970s. We have heard reports of CIA actions which are almost beyond belief in a civilized country. The CIA experience is an argument against having a civilian force in place of a force that has gained world-wide respect.

My eighth reason for not wanting a civilian organization is the McDonald commission itself. The Parliamentary Secretary cited the question to my colleague a few minutes ago; at least I think he did. The argument of the McDonald commission carries no weight whatsoever. Mr. Justice McDonald is an Albertan. He and I knew each other as lawyers, and latterly when he became a judge. One of the reasons he was appointed to head the commission was that he was past president of the party opposite in Alberta. It was hoped that he would not create waves for the Liberal Government as a result of that appointment. In my view, he was not a suitable person to have been given that job. The test of the pudding was in the tasting. In my view, his report is not taken very seriously by many people in western Canada, at least by those who know Mr. Justice McDonald as I do.

Even while the three commissioners were sitting, if my memory is good, Mr. Gilbert continued to make donations to the Liberal Party—even while he was purporting to sit in judgment on his Liberal colleagues during the period in question. I know Mr. Justice McDonald well. I put it to you that his report is not to be taken very seriously when he calls for this to be taken away from the RCMP.

The second subject is the matter of judicial warrants. The Liberals want these warrants to be alive for a one-year period. The spokesmen for our Party have said that these warrants should collapse or expire after 60 days. We believe that is sufficient. I am told that a number of witnesses who appeared said the same, that we do not need year-long warrants. If you are concerned about civil liberties and the effective use of warrants, you do not need that period. I think that reflects the view of most witnesses, at least those concerned with civil liberties. The Government's refusal to accept amendments on that principle was unsound.

The third heading is the question of power. I refer to subclause 2(b) which in part states "intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of the constitutionally established system of government in Canada." They can unleash the whole panoply of arsenal tools against you. This includes opening mail and taking records, including medical records. There is a whole range of very severe actions that can be taken against you if it is decided that you fall within the definition of a security threat. We have argued, as did many of the witnesses, that that is too broad, that there must be a more narrow definition of security threat before triggering all of those actions I mentioned. Why will the Government not at least start with a smaller definition? If it proves too constrictive, it can go to a wider one. Why go to such a wide area if it is truly concerned about civil liberties in this country?

The fourth matter is the question of the review committee. The Hon. Member for Vancouver South and the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills said that the review committee should have access to Cabinet documents. The Government refused all amendments to that effect. If this Bill passes, as it obviously will, the review committee will not have access to Cabinet documents. I am told that nobody demolished the Government's position better than the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). He pointed out in committee that public servants and executive assistants see Cabinet documents, and even secretaries have access to them. The fact that the Government has taken the view that Privy Councillors sitting on the review committee should not have access to Cabinet documents does not reassure one of its good intentions in this matter. Unless there are things going on in Cabinet that should not be going on, the Government should believe in the open, accessible and democratic principle through which this committee should have access to documents.

You have indicated my time is just about up, Mr. Speaker. Let me repeat the point made by others. My Party wants an overview committee consisting of Members of Parliament. The security intelligence committee of the United States Senate consists of only elected Senators, albeit, to be elected to that committee you require the support of all other Senators. That guarantees that you have democratic and political control. It is a much better concept than what we have here. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for letting me make my points on the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Questions or comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, my colleague also spoke at length to the issue of separation. He seems to have forgotten that two important commissions, the McDonald Commission and the Mackenzie Commission, did come out in favour of separation or the creation of a civilian agency. The Pitfield Committee was also in favour of separation. He even made some allegations which, if we were not in the House and did not enjoy parliamentary immunity, would be a serious breach against the bench, for he implied that, for partisan motives, Mr. Justice McDonald had been influenced or ... anyway, his remarks could have meant that.

However, that surprises me somewhat because he was referring to an Alberta judge. One member of his party, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), and perhaps the Hon. Member might explain to me ... On February 20, 1984, as shown in Hansard on page 1545, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West said this:

I would personally tend to favour a civilian agency ...

I repeat, a civilian agency, referring to Bill C-9 and the civilian agency—

I would personally tend to favour a civilian agency with a director with much more responsibility to the Minister ...

That is exactly what we are advocating in the House today.

Under these circumstances, do the remarks of the Hon. Member against Mr. Justice McDonald apply as well to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West?

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his question. I must say that I am not in complete agreement with the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that the new service should be a civilian agency. I respect the opinions of the Member for Edmonton West, but as I said earlier, I have spent a lot of time with the RCMP and I respect these people. I may have had longer experience with their officers than the Hon. Member for Edmonton West. I am convinced that the agency must remain under the aegis of the RCMP for the reason I have just given. The Hon. Member also said that both the McDonald and the Mackenzie Commissions recommended this separation. For the same reason, I do not agree with the findings of either Commission.

Finally, the Hon. Member even mentioned the Senate Committee chaired by Mr. Pitfield. He may not be aware of Mr. Pitfield's former activities; he was Secretary of the Cabinet for several years. In short, if I may say what I think about it, the Hon. Member should look for a more democratic, a stronger and a more effective source than the Pitfield Committee. For my part, as someone who strongly believes in a democratic government, chosen by the people because, or at least I should hope so, of its ability, and so on—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any other questions? Debate.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it has been said that there are none so deaf as those who refuse to listen. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) claims that he has listened to a wide range of advice and, on the basis of the advice he received, has brought forward a Bill which is the best Bill he could bring forward. The fact is, however, that a wide range of very responsible organizations with which the Minister worked closely before he became a Minister appeared before the Justice Committee, made representations, criticized important clauses of the Bill, made concrete proposals and drafted amendments which they believed would make the Bill better. All of those efforts were ignored and rejected by the Minister and by the Government.

We on this side have continually said that we accept the fact that Canada, like other countries, needs to have a security agency. We have said that we want a security agency which will do its job but will respect the rights of Canadian citizens, will observe the law and will perform its duties in a manner which will permit it to do its job while not infringing on the rights of Canadian citizens. I think the Canadian Civil Liberties Association put it very well in its brief, part of which reads as follows:

In the troubled and dangerous world of today, we do not, indeed we cannot, object to the performance of security and intelligence functions on behalf of the Canadian people and their institutions ...

But the endorsement of the goal does not carry with it a carte blanche for the means. The lessons of history demonstrate all too well the ease with which national security has been invoked improperly to curtail personal liberty.

We have heard a great deal of evidence about the fact that our security agency, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, did in fact break the law. That particular assertion was made by the McDonald Commission. The RCMP did in fact break the law and infringe upon the rights of Canadian citizens on many occasions. Its members were involved in kidnapping, barn burning, the theft of dynamite and the theft of the membership lists of a legitimate political Party. Those are just a few of the things which were done. Canadians learned of these facts almost by accident.

Again and again, we have been told that security operations must be kept secret or horrible things will happen. That is the position taken by the British security organizations. Yet many people who were very high in the British security service turned out to be double agents and spies for the Soviet Union. It seems to me that if they had not kept everything so secret, and if the public had been given more facts, those spies would have been discovered much sooner than they were.

In the United States, because the Congress has access to so much more information than Parliament, and because the American Freedom of Information Act gives the public access to so much more information than ours, both the FBI and the CIA were found to have committed acts which were absolutely contrary to the law. These are the facts, Mr. Speaker. What we want is a security agency or service which lives by the law.

It has been suggested that we are asking for too much. It has been suggested that this Bill in fact meets the requirements of our country. It has been suggested that, as compared to an earlier Bill which was withdrawn, this Bill has met most of the objections of organizations and individuals to the earlier proposed legislation. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The fact is that a host of very responsible organizations have made clear their objections to the present Bill. They have indicated how they think the Bill should have been drafted in order to have a security service which would do the required job, but would give the people of Canada the needed protection to continue to express their views and promote their policies as they should in a democratic country.

We have heard some of what I am about to say before, but I want to point these things out to the Minister because I think that what the Minister has done in bringing forward this Bill is to forget his past, to forget the things for which he supposedly worked in earlier years and to forget the belief in civil liberties supposedly held by members of the Liberal Party. He has brought forward a Bill which has been drafted by senior officials in his Department and in the security service. The Bill does not give organizations in Canada, some of which may hold views which are accepted by the majority of the people of Canada, the right to continue to do the things they wish to do and to advocate their views without being put under surveillance, without being infiltrated, without having their mail opened, without having their telephones tapped, all of which should not happen in a democratic society.

The Canadian Council of Churches includes all the major churches in Canada, except the Roman Catholic Church. It includes the Anglican Church, the Baptist Convention, the Greek Orthodox Church, the Lutheran Church, the Presbyterian Church and the United Church, to mention just a few. In regard to this Bill, the Council has said:

> In our view, Bill C-9 is sufficiently broad in scope and vague in definition to permit intrusive surveillance in the form of electronic bugging of conversations, surreptitious entry of offices and homes, invasion of confidential records, mail openings and infiltration of social organizations, churches, agencies members and employees. It makes possible surveillance or interference with many lawful activities. It is inconsistent with our vision of the sort of Canada in which we seek to work and live.

The Canadian Council of Churches is a very large and well respected organization. Why would the security service want to do this kind of thing to the Canadian Council of Churches? If the security service does not want to do this type of thing, why does the Bill require a clause which would permit it to do so?

I would like to quote further from the brief which was presented by the Canadian Council of Churches which reads:

> We are particularly concerned about the effect of broad interpretation of Paragraphs (b) and (c) of Section 2. Our submission is that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service could construe lawful church activities, for example in mission work, and/or lawful church and community activities, including development education, peace advocacy and human rights defence as falling within these definitions, and hence to determine previously lawful activities as threats to the security of Canada.

The Council is not speaking without some knowledge of what might happen, because the World Council of Churches of which the Primate of the Anglican Church of Canada, Archbishop Scott, until recently, was the head, has been accused by some people in the United States of having given money to the African National Congress which was used for the purchase of arms. The World Council of Churches has denied that and has explained that the money they gave to the African National Congress was to be used for welfare and relief. If some people believe that about the World Council of Churches, obviously it would be quite possible and likely that the security service, as proposed in this Bill, would have the authority and might well intrude into the activities of the World Council of Churches.

I would like to quote from a submission which was made by the Canadian Association of University Teachers to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. That submission dealt with the right, as provided in one clause of this Bill, for the security agency to keep under surveillance—which means the opening of mail, the wire tapping of telephones, and so on—foreign academics who visit Canada. The CAUT submission reads:

> It seems to say . . . that two Ministers of the Crown can sign a document which will allow the security forces to collect intelligence relating to the capabilities, intentions or activities of any visiting foreign professor or any foreign student at a Canadian university. It does not require that this be triggered by reasonable suspicions of involvement in terrorism, espionage or subversion. It need only be done pursuant to the conduct of the international affairs of Canada.

In other words, if a university professor from an eastern European country, who is in all likelihood a communist, comes here to give a lecture, arranged by a Canadian university which is interested in extending its knowledge of what is going on in eastern Europe, that professor who comes here for purely academic reasons could be put under surveillance by the security agency.

The CAUT suggested that a section be added which reads:

—a bona fide visiting foreign professor under contract to a Canadian university chartered by Her Majesty in right of Canada or any of the provinces.

The CAUT requested that section because foreign professors should not be placed under surveillance.

I would like to turn to the submission made by the Canadian Jewish Congress. It produced a tremendously well-documented submission at the time Parliament was discussing the Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That Congress has done a similar job in connection with this Bill. I would like to quote from their brief as follows:

Canadian Jewish Congress recommends that the members of the Review Committee be appointed by the Governor in Council with the consent of the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons and after consultation with the leader in the House of Commons of each party having at least twelve members in that House. This requirement for the participation of each major political party in the selection process is intended to provide the Committee with the benefit of expertise and independent judgment.

I believe what we ought to have is an oversight committee made up of elected representatives, as is done in West Germany and in the United States. The Canadian Jewish Congress does not go as far as that, but it makes it clear that it believes that the review committee should be appointed with the approval of not just the Prime Minister, who would call in the Leader of the Opposition or the leader of another Party and inform them of what the Government is doing, whether they like it or approve of it, and tell them who are the people who will be appointed. The Canadian Jewish Congress made the recommendation that the appointments should be made with the approval of the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of any other Party which has 12 or more Members. What is wrong with that? What is wrong is that this Government is afraid to open the doors and let anyone except the trained seals whom it appoints see and do anything about what it is going to do.

The Congress goes on to say, in connection with the threats to the security of Canada, that the clause should have been amended to read as follows:

Unlawful activities directed toward undermining or directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow, by violence, of the constitutionally established system of government in Canada;

In other words, there would not be surveillance, infiltration or wire tapping of those organizations which are expressing views and positions which they have the right to do in our democratic system. The security system would only be allowed to investigate organizations which have as their objective the overthrow or destruciton of our country by violence.

I would like to refer as an example to the province from which the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Gourde) comes. The security service had every right, and it had the duty, to investigate the FLQ and its activities. However, I would say to him that the security service had no right under the law, and certainly it did not have any right morally, to steal the membership list from the Parti Québécois. We live in a democratic society. Parti Québécois has said openly that it believes in the separation of the Province of Quebec. I oppose that view and I congratulate the people of Quebec who have already, and who I am certain will again demonstrate by their vote in a free and democratic election, that they do not want separatism.

I say to the Parliamentary Secretary that there was no reason for the security service to steal the membership list of the Parti Québécois. And I suppose it will be 30 years or 40 years, if ever, before we find out whether it was done with the knowledge or without the knowledge, with the consent or without the consent, of the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice of that time. However, I say to the Hon. Member that that was inexcusable. It is for that kind of reason that we in this Party do not trust this Government. It illustrates why this Party will not vote for this Bill, Mr. Speaker. We would, however, vote for a Bill which gave the security service the power which it needs, but which would protect the rights of the Canadian people.

I would like to quote another section from the excellent brief of the Canadian Jewish Congress. The brief states that there should be a section as follows:

The Service is prohibited from investigating the affairs or activities of or engaging in surveillance of any person or group of persons solely on the basis of the participation by that person or group in lawful advocacy, protest or dissent.

Let me again challenge the Parliamentary Secretary to explain—if one accepts that as a very reasonable proposal by the Canadian Jewish Congress—why the security service stole the membership list of the Parti Québécois, and why after having committed that act, which the McDonald commission says was illegal, the response of this so-called Liberal Government is, "It was illegal before but we are now going to change the law to make it legal so we can do legally in the future what we did illegally in the past"? That is wrong, wrong, wrong, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to hear the Solicitor General give me an explanation of why he seems to want that kind of thing to continue.

[Translation]

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who seemed to suggest that there would be no actual protection for our rights and freedoms under Bill C-9. The Hon. Member probably ignored volontarily the list of review and control mechanisms provided under this Bill. Whether we are speaking about the Director reporting to the Minister, the Inspector General, the Review Committee, the reports to Parliament, the judiciary control in the issue of warrants, and so on, I do not agree that there will be no protection of individual rights and freedoms. I believe that, on the contrary, this Bill will, for the first time, provide official mechanisms to protect our rights and freedoms.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member, who said for instance that he did not trust the Government, whether the New Democratic Party is willing to trust those who will work for the new security service and how far this trust may go. Indeed, from what the NDP Members have said, anyone who works for a security service would need someone else beside him to monitor what he does and this second person would have to report to a third, who would report to a fourth or to a group which could be a Parliamentary Committee, and this would create such a massive agency or security service that it would no longer be able to serve its purpose.

In view of the circumstances, can the New Democratic Party tell the House to what extent they will trust the people in these services? Where does trust begin? Is it where ends the trust of those who work in the Departments or the people who work in the security services? This is what we want to know.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I thought I made it quite clear that the criticism in the suggestions which I put on the record came not from me. I would not be surprised if the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary took the view that I, or any other Hon. Members of my party are not really knowledgeable in this field or any other field. That is their usual approach. However, what I did, Mr. Speaker, was to put on the record the very valid questions, complaints and fears of respected, responsible, large organizations. The Parliamentary Secretary does not have to convince me that all the protections are there. He must convince those organizations. I have not heard any one of the organizations which made representations at the committee, wrote to the Minister or to any Member of Parliament, say, "Now you have your amended Bill, we are satisfied that our objections have been met".

I would like to do something which I do very seldom, Mr. Speaker, and that is to give a personal illustration. I do not know whether the Parliamentary Secretary knows, but the Minister does, that nine Canadians, of whom my wife is one, are now in the process of suing the Central Intelligence Agency in Washington, D.C. for coming to Canada to a hospital in the Province of the Parliamentary Secretary and funding an experiment in mind control. How was it able to do that, Mr. Speaker? It is able to do that because the American Freedom of Information Act is so much better than ours. Investigators in the United States were able to obtain access to tens of thousands of pages of CIA documents from the 1950s and 1960s. Without those documents they could not have acted against the CIA. That could not happen in Canada, Mr. Speaker, because our Access to Information Act does not permit it. In fact, the Minister knows there are records of the RCMP having do to with security which are not 10 years or 20 years old, as in the CIA case, but they are 50 years and 60 years old, and they are still being kept secret.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, some of us have questions and doubts and suspicions about the way in which the security service in Canada has operated in the past, and the way in which it will be able to operate in the future, whether it be a civilian agency or the RCMP, given the law which we are going to pass today. And if some of us have some worries, the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary should not be surprised.

[Translation]

Mr. Gourde: A very short question. Since Hon. Members from the New Democratic Party so often pick on the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the RCMP, how come they do not support the establishment of a civilian security service?

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I think I have made it clear—and I am only speaking for myself at the moment—that the question of whether we are to have a civilian security agency or a security agency as part of the RCMP is not important. What is important to me, whether it be a civilian agency or part of the RCMP, is that it operate under the rule of law and that the law be very clear as to what the security agency can do. It should not be able to intrude, for example, into activities of legitimate churches, trade unions, peace groups or student organizations, and there is plenty of evidence to indicate that it has done so in the past. If this Act made it clear that it could not do those things, then we would support this Bill. However, the question of whether it will be a civilian agency or part of the RCMP is to me, personally, not important.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any more questions? Debate.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, just a week ago today I was speaking on the closure motion which was brought in at the last stages of the debate. That closure motion totally gutted the debate; the right to debate the Bill was taken away from us. Once that was removed, for many of us, especially those from western Canada, the debate was practically closed. Coming from central Canada, the Minister has perhaps overlooked the high regard we have in the west for the RCMP. They were a part of the west. They were formed to maintain law and order in the west. The RCMP as a whole is considered to be a friend of western Canada. In a sense the force was established as a result of the friendship it developed with the first people who lived out there, the native people. The force was fair, honest and it could be trusted. This above all is why the native people held the force in high esteem. This esteem has carried through to the modern day generation in western Canada. For those reasons this is perhaps something to which the people in central Canada have not given a great amount of thought. This is one of the reasons why we in the west are very suspicious about what the federal Government is doing with this legislation.

Why are we doing this in the last days of the so-called Trudeau regime? We have other Bills which will be carried over into the next Parliament. The Minister shakes his head, but there is a Competition Bill and the Bank Act. Goodness gracious, the Bank Act kept coming back through different sessions and even different Parliaments. There did not seem to be as much of a hurry with that as there is with the establishment of the security agency. Why is the Government so intent at this particular stage on getting this legislation through the House of Commons? I referred to last Thursday as "Black Thursday", and I will call today "Black Thursday" because this is the day that this Parliament is going to pass this legislation. We spent seven and a half hours voting last night—

Mr. Kaplan: Not because of us.

Mr. Towers: —on this legislation, trying to impress the Government with the fact it should take a second look at it.

Another thing I have to ask is why is the new Leader of the Government Party not taking a hand in this? If he is going to do something for the west, as he promised us he is, I tell you that there is nothing better he can do for western Canada at this time than to put a hold on this legislation until such time as he is installed in office and can have a look at it. Apparently he has overlooked that. A great deal of distrust is created in the minds of western Canadians if he can do something but is doing nothing. He has a perfect opportunity here to ask his Minister to delay this legislation. There might be a spot in his future Cabinet for the Minister, or he could carry on as Solicitor General. I am sure my Party would agree with that. But the Government has to take a second look at this Bill.

In any event, I do not want this debate closed with a shadow over the image of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I am satisfied that all Members of my Party would agree with me when I say that there does not exist a law enforcement body in any part of the world superior to the RCMP. Why, then do we have to distrust them when we set up this security agency? This is one area where my colleague and I from Winnipeg North disagree. He just said it was immaterial to him whether it was left with the RCMP or placed with a new agency. Well, it is not immaterial to us. We trust the RCMP. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) made a statement some time and I want to put it on the record. He said:

> As a law enforcement agency the RCMP enjoys an international reputation; it is one of the best police forces in the world. They deserve our respect and our admiration for their success when enforcing the law. But in its security intelligence work—work that occasionally deals with sensitive political questions affecting the rights and freedoms of Canadian citizens—the RCMP has been entangled in innumerable difficulties. Those difficulties centre on activities which are not acceptable in Canada, and we need to find a way to prevent them.

Isn't that some admission? The reason the RCMP got into trouble was because of Government interference. That came out in this House of Commons concerning the seizure of lists of Quebec separatists. Who inspired that? I am as sure as I am standing here today that the RCMP would not have done that had there not been some suggestion, either from provincial politicians or federal politicians.

My friend on the Government side is smiling. Well, we are good pals, and I bet he would agree with me on that very issue. There had to have been some influence there or the RCMP would not have done that. Why would they need to? They have other things to do. Therefore I am sure the suggestion was made somewhere along the line that this had to be done. So the officer or officers set out to do a job and this is where the Government went wrong.

Take, for example, the October, 1970 crisis in Quebec. It was not the RCMP that created that situation, it was the Government. It did not give the required guidelines to the force. This is what an officer of the force told me. If they had been given the guidelines under which they knew they had to operate, they would have stayed within them. There is no guarantee that this new agency the Government is setting up is going to be under that kind of regimented control which exists in any force such as the RCMP. They are all subject to their superiors.

What guarantee do we have that the members in this agency are going to be under any kind of control? We have none whatsoever. That is why this debate is so strenuous. If the Government was satisfied and could prove to us, in a legitimate way, that it was right, and could prove to us that the new agency was going to be under adequate control, we would go along with it.

The Government is now bringing in legislation 14 years after the last act took place during the October Crisis in 1970. Why are they bringing it in at this particular time? The RCMP had been doing a reasonably good job until such time as the McDonald Commission was put in place. I believe it existed from 1977 to 1981. I was told at the time that the RCMP were kept so busy trying to dig up information at that particular time they did not have the manpower to do the job for which they were intended; that is trying to control any espionage which was taking place in the country.

The RCMP have been treated shabbily by the Government. I want all Canadians to know that. As far as western Canadians are concerned, as this Bill comes into force and effect, the image of the RCMP is held in as high regard in western Canada today as it ever was. Although the Government opposite questions that image, it does not mean that our feelings have been allayed. Western Canadians are loyal and they are loyal to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

I have a fear that we will never know how successful or otherwise this new agency will be. There is no way we will be able to measure what is taking place. We will not know about their successes or otherwise. That creates a real dilemma for all Canadians. We are not going to be secure in the knowledge that those people who have adverse opinions or ideas or want to get involved in espionage in Canada will be under control. This is one of the reasons we are concerned.

I will read an article into the record from The Globe and Mail of September 15, 1983. This relates to the Senate study of this Bill. The article reads:

> A Senate committee now is studying the move to set up the agency. When the Senate makes its report, Mr. Kaplan said, "the Government will consider it and I've indicated I'm very amenable to amendments."
> The new bill "will respond to sensible suggestions" made during the Senate hearings, but he added he hasn't drawn up his own list of what might be retained when the bill is redrafted.

This is when he was dealing with the former Bill, C-157. The article continues:

The changes would "not just be a question of editing but a question of principles."

However, Mr. Kaplan said no substantive change will be made in a much-criticized section of the bill that would allow members of the security service to take any reasonable actions which are "necessary to enable them to perform their duties and functions."

That section will stand because "the principle is already accepted across the country," the minister said. "People want members of the new agency to have the same protection as peace officers."

Mr. Kaplan suggested the wording of the article could be altered slightly "to find a formula that supports that principle."

"That's all we want. We don't want more protection" for members of the new agency than exists for peace officers, Mr. Kaplan added.

I think the Minister errs in that, Mr. Speaker. He needs more protection for the citizens rather than for these people who will be political appointees. That is another feature of this agency which frightens us. There is not an elected politician in Canada today who has any effect on the appointments within the RCMP, or at least they should not have. If they have, they are intruding into areas where they should not be involved. This should be left up to that body itself.

There is too much room for the Minister to manipulate the system. Once it is put in place, how is it changed? A lot of people are concerned about the placement of this body. I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, as well as other Members of the House, received this press release from the Canadian Medical Association. I will read it into the record. It reads:

Some parts of the federal government's proposed bill to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service threaten the confidentiality of Canadians' medical records and are against the best interests of both patients and their doctors.

This was the essence of a letter from the Secretary-General of the Canadian Medical Association to the chairman of the House of Commons Committee now studying Bill C-9.

Mr. B.E. Freamo pointed out three areas of the proposed legislation which should be of particular concern to the public.

Under Section 16 there is absolutely no protection for the patient against having his records examined and/or having his physician provide information about him over and above what appears in the record.

Section 19 appears to provide unlimited disclosure of a patient's medical information as the Security Intelligence Service sees fit.

Section 23 of Part II of the proposed bill authorizes the holder of a warrant to enter any doctor's office and take any patients' records found there.

Section 24(b) can be interpreted as directing physicians to release their patients' medical records if the physician believes "on reasonable grounds" that the investigator has a warrant. In other words, search and seizure may be carried out in the absence of a warrant if the physician is led to believe that one exists.

"I must express to you in the strongest possible terms the CMA's concerns over the potential mis-use and abuse of the information in medical records if the aforementioned sections are retained in the bill," reads the letter to Claude-André Lachance (MP Rosemont).

"Physicians may be reluctant to commit to writing information provided by a patient on a confidential basis if either the doctor of the patient believes such information can be obtained, used or disseminated by the Service."

Mr. Freamo added that patients would be reluctant to provide all relevant details of their illness to a doctor, thus affecting their chances of recovery. "This aura of distrust would be detrimental to the practice of medicine and certainly not in the best interests of the patient."

He concluded by requesting that the sections in question either be removed or at least modified to reflect the concerns of the medical practitioner for the rights of his patient.

We have been asked where this search and seizure stops. What happens if a mail carrier, while carrying mail to an individual, is accosted by an individual with a warrant to seize the mail? I am sure that the mail will be handed over and opened.

You have signified to me that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I do want to impress upon you and the Members opposite the high regard with which the RCMP are held in western Canada. Regardless of the implementation of this security agency, and regardless of what was said about the McDonald Commission, one of the questions that western Canadians ask first and foremost is whether any member of the force ever benefitted personally from any of these actions. The Mackenzie Commission and the McDonald Commission never once suggested that a member of the force ever received any personal benefit. I can say that this is where the line is drawn. Of course there was not, as far as the RCMP was concerned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There follows a 10-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has indicated a sensitivity as well as an affection that is held by western Canada for the RCMP. Has it been explained to the RCMP that most of the officials in the new civilian agency might be drawn from the ranks of the RCMP?

Mr. Towers: Yes it has, Mr. Speaker. While the concern is not immediate, they are afraid of what might happen in the future. Those officials in the new agency will only be there for a certain period, because new people will be appointed as a result of retirement or the general attrition that takes place. We are as farsighted in western Canada as you members from Ontario. If it had not been for the farsightedness of Ontario people, I would not be here, because my stock goes back to Ontario.

Nevertheless, they are concerned about the future. The concern is that these people are appointed politically, by a minister or whatever, and they would rather see the members of this agency come up through the ranks of the force and be controlled through a regimental condition. They would feel much more secure with that rather than with these appointments.

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member earlier mentioned the October 1970 incidents in Quebec. I would like to refer to the Pitfield Committee Report, which discriminated between a police force and an intelligence service. It is a very short quote:

The differences are considerable. Law enforcement is essentially reactive. While there is an element of information-gathering and prevention in law enforcement, on the whole it takes place after the commission of a distinct criminal offence. The protection of security relies less on reaction to events; it seeks advance warning of security threats, and is not necessarily concerned with breaches of the law.

Would the Hon. Member not agree that had we had in 1970, or the preceding years, a civilian security service as we now propose, we would have had every chance of getting advance warning of the unfortunate events of 1970? I am not implying this would necessarily have been an insurance against such acts, but at least we would have had all the chances on our side to find out whether the activities of those FLQ cells would not eventually lead to the events of October 1970.

[English]

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, certainly I am not an authority on it. I have always been very cautious to talk about what takes place in other provinces, because when people comment on matters in my province I want them to be very correct in what they say. Therefore I do not want to make any inferences.

However, I have tried to make the point that to my knowledge they were brought in after the fact. They were not given any guidelines with respect to searching to see what was happening. They were brought in after the fact. I am sure that the inference I drew in the House of Commons from listening to debate, questions and answers is that it was as a result of political influence that the RCMP was put into that position. If the RCMP had been left alone, or had been given a particular objective such as takes place with the Army in a war, and if they were given guidelines for that objective, they would not have been in the trouble they were. The RCMP were told to do something without being given any guidelines. I think everyone would agree that they accomplished their objective successfully because the operation was stopped immediately. For that reason I do not like to see them criticized at this point for doing something at which they were successful.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have always considered the Hon. Member to be a man of honour. I was somewhat disturbed by his remarks that he was sure that a political leader in Quebec or at the federal level instructed the RCMP to conduct the illegal acts in Quebec. He just repeated those remarks. He did not say that he suspected or thought that this was the case; he said he was sure. If he was sure it would seem to me that it is incumbent upon him to put forward in the House the facts upon which he makes that assertion. It was not a thought but an assertion. Knowing him to be a man of honour, I am sure that he would want to take the opportunity to do so. I ask him to do so now.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, all I am drawing on is the information and the retention of the knowledge that I gathered sitting as a Member in the House listening to debates, questions and answers. I mentioned that fact during this debate. The inference from those debates which took place is that a request went to the RCMP to do this. I would have to do some research to find it. I am sure that if it is in the House of Commons debates, it is in Hansard somewhere. I could not give it to the Hon. Member at the present time.

I am satisfied, and know that I did not dream it. In the days prior to the establishment of the McDonald Commission there were many questions and answers relating to what happened. It is as a result of that debate and those questions and answers that I arrived at that conclusion.

Mr. Dick: Would the Hon. Member indicate if the true feeling about why the RCMP would like to have the security service is that people in western Canada have felt that the present Liberal Government has done away with and desecrated all federal institutions in such a way that a new civilian institution would not have the same respect that an agency coming under the RCMP would have?

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, that is a fair comment. This is one of the concerns of western Canadians. If any members opposite want to know why they have little representation in the House from the West, it is as a result of the loss of the traditions that we have lived by. We are losing another tradition. This is what irks so many people in western Canada. As far as we are concerned, the RCMP is a tradition. We are seeing that tradition desecrated, diffused and taken away. While this is taking place, the RCMP is being more or less slandered. That is why we in western Canada are standing up for the RCMP. My colleague is particularly right.

NATIONAL FLAG OF CANADA MANUFACTURING STANDARDS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH STANDARDS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria) moved that Bill C-234, and Act to establish standards for the manufacture of the national flag of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first I understand there is agreement in the House to give unanimous consent so that we can attempt to get this Bill through all stages this afternoon during the hour we have for Private Members' Bills. You may want to ask for an expression of opinion from the other side to ensure that my information is correct, namely, that we do have unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Massé) has the floor.

Mr. Massé: Mr. Speaker, it would indeed seem that all parties are in agreement to the Bill being passed today. However, some Hon. Members wish to express their views on the Bill, including the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). And I am sure the Hon. Member will have the opportunity to explain his proposal. Members on this side of the House will have the same opportunity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

[English]

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly prepared to facilitate passage of this Bill in all stages this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the House shall dispose of Bill C-234 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) at all stages before the conclusion of Private Members' Hour today?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Cousineau).

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, before giving my consent, I would like to consult the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services, in order to be quite sure that we do have unanimous consent.

An Hon. Member: The House has agreed.

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this Bill to be passed at all stages before the expiration of the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon).

[English]

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I assure you there have been considerable discussions about this Bill. I wish to thank my friends on all sides of the House for their concurrence. I understand the Government would like to make an amendment to the Bill. That has been discussed with me, and I am quite prepared to receive it at the appropriate time, which I imagine will be when we are sitting as a Committee of the Whole House.

The purpose of the Bill, Mr. Speaker, is to ensure that a high quality of material, design, and colour will be used in the manufacture of the Canadian flag. The objective is to reduce fading and other signs of wear which render our flags unsightly after a relatively short period of use. I have found, as have many Members, who attend international conferences and meetings, that if there is an outdoor part of the ceremonies we attend it is not unusual for a Canadian flag to be of very cheap design and not colourfast in comparison with flags of all other nations. This is embarrassing and is unworthy of this great country.

Several things have caused me to introduce this Bill. I was visiting in the United States a couple of years ago and I was asked to participate in a Chamber of Commerce function because they looked forward to having many Canadian tourists. I admired the Canadian flag beside the doorway to this Chamber of Commerce, but I found out to my surprise that it was made in Chicago. It had been outside for a couple of years, and looked much better than our flags do that are made in Canada. That started me working on this project which is coming to fruition today.

The rules concerning the Canadian flag are very meagre indeed. They are spelled out in the Proclamation of the National Flag of Canada. In heraldic terms it is referred to as "Gules on a Canadian pale Argent a maple leaf of the first". For laymen, a more comprehensible description is also provided as follows:

—a red flag of the proportions two by length and one by width, containing in its centre a white square the width of the flag bearing a single maple leaf.

Strangely enough it does not spell out what colour the maple leaf must be. It is a red flag with a white square, so we automatically assume that a maple leaf is red, and we have become accustomed to that over the last 20 years.

This proclamation is the only official statement relating to the flag. There is neither legislation nor regulations governing the design, manufacture, or use of the Canadian flag. The only effort toward improving the quality of the flag has been made by the Canadian General Standards Board, the CGSB. It has established a committee on the flag made up of scientists, manufacturers, and other individuals, to devise technical standards for the fabric, dyes and processes to be used in manufacturing the flag. These standards are voluntary, and there is no effective means of establishing which flags meet the standards and which do not, that is, up to the present time.

It has been a considerable surprise to me why material manufacturers in the country seem to be able to find dyes that are colourfast, except when it comes to the material of the Canadian flag. If there is one thing you can say about it, it fades to various shades of pink, orange, and brown, and tends to unravel very quickly at the fly end of it.

At the present time only price and size distinguish one new flag from any other. Consumers have no way of judging the quality of a flag or of knowing whether it meets the current CGSB standards. This Bill will create a legal obligation on the part of the CGSB to establish standards for flags intended for various uses, and will permit the identification of manufactures which meet the standard. The standard will continue to be voluntary in that flags may still be produced with cheaper material and methods. But purchasers will now be able to compare the quality of flags, knowing that those which meet the standard are of consistent and superior quality.

This Bill will ensure that flags which do meet the standards carry a trademark. I expect we will discuss this a little more in committee when we hear the government amendment, which I understand is to delete Clause 5 of the Bill.

Clause 4 reads:

All flags, whether manufactured in Canada or imported into Canada, which are manufactured in compliance with the standards for manufacture referred to in Section 2 shall bear a mark identifying that flag as having met the standards for manufacture established by the Canadian General Standards Board.

We will know when we are getting one that meets the standards that all others may or may not meet. I hope this will enable people to shop for flags with a great deal more certainty of what they are getting than they do at the present time.

I might also point out that this Bill will ensure and direct that the Canadian Government, which must be by far the largest purchaser of Canadian flags in Canada, to buy only those flags which meet the standards set by the Standards Board.

In view of the number of stages we will go through this afternoon, that is all I have to say by way of introduction, Mr. Speaker. I trust we will be able to run on schedule for the rest of the day, and I look forward to hearing the remarks of my good friend from Saint Jean.

• (1710)

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I realize that we have an agreement to pass the Hon. Member's Private Bill with some modification, as has been discussed. That could happen earlier than the normal hour for the adjournment of Private Members' Business at six o'clock. So that the Opposition knows precisely what will happen at that time, I would like to seek the unanimous consent of the House to revert automatically to Orders of the Day and the debate on Bill C-9, should we complete consideration of this Bill before six o'clock.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, that is our understanding of the arrangement as well.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I believe we will concur with that arrangement as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that at the conclusion of Private Members' Hour, the House will revert to the consideration of Bill C-9?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am happy that this Bill is before the House. We are being asked to consider an Act to establish standards for the manufacture of the national flag of Canada. I think it is about time. Also I think it is a good occasion to put a few thoughts on the record with regard to our national symbols, particularly our pre-eminent symbol, the flag. I often see occasions when the flag is not treated with the respect it deserves. Since we have agreement and we know that by order of the House the Bill will pass, I should like to take this opportunity to express a few thoughts.

Every nation has its symbols. They serve to identify a people, to unite members of a group by appealing to their emotions, their sense of history, their deep human need to feel linked to previous generations and rooted in the land. Among Canadian national symbols are our arms and emblems, our flags and our national anthem. These symbols express, in striking imagery, the history, beliefs and aspirations of a people who inhabit a precise territory. They reflect its geographic characteristics, its flora and fauna.

The flag is a very early symbol for humankind. Reference to flags was made as early as 1122 BC when it was recorded that the Emperor of China had a white flag or banner carried before him. The word "flag" seems to have come into use in the 16th century and derives from an old Saxon or German word meaning to fly or float in the wind.

Flags have formed the focus of much action and attention. Carried into battle, they often served as a rallying point as troops tried to turn the tide to victory. Flags have draped coffins to honour the heroic war dead. Flags float over state buildings including, in Canada, our Parliament. Indeed they are an important visible symbol of national pride and unity.

Symbols are the manifestation of tradition. They are linked with historical or legendary events as a reminder of past and present forces which hold society together. The Government of Canada has always been aware of the importance of our national symbols and their proper and effective use. Since 1868 the Secretary of State of Canada has held responsibility for promoting understanding and awareness of Canada's national symbols and for organizing state ceremonies, with their attendant protocol and regulated use of our national symbols.

Symbols and other trappings of state form an extensive subject for study and control. Many of our symbols, even a number that precede Confederation in their origin, are original to this continent, for example, the flags and coats of arms of the provinces. Ontario, Quebec, and the Atlantic provinces all had their symbols before the fateful accord which saw the foundation of Canada. The Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) is concerned with all these matters. When the provinces wished to make changes or additions to their coats of arms or their flags, the Department of the Secretary of State provided advice and access to royal approval.

It was also deeply involved in an important development in national pride—the final adoption of "O Canada" as our national anthem. This was not nearly as inventive as our creation and adoption of a new flag, for it had already been sung for 100 years, and there had long been little doubt as to what song would be chosen as the national anthem.

As the Guardian of State Ceremonial, the Department of the Secretary of State plans and directs state ceremonies such as the proclamation of the Constitution Act, the installation of a new Governor General, and state funerals, ensuring that proper protocal is followed.

Another important responsibility of the Secretary of State, which will be discharged very soon this year, is to plan, with the help of volunteer committees, a national celebration marking July 1. Of course it is on Canada Day that we see the most flags flying across the nation. Much of our symbolism descends from past events, sometimes even from semi-legendary sources shrouded in antiquity. Our own precious flag, while it is founded on precedents, is of relatively recent creation. There is no doubt that the Union Jack and the Red Ensign were held in great respect. They had flown proudly in Canada, and many Canadians had followed those flags to war, to fall, or to see their comrades fall in defence of their country. Yet there were Canadians who expressed the wish for a flag uniquely their own, and I was one of them.

Although the Union Jack was the official flag, an Order in Council passed on January 26, 1924, granted authority for displaying the Red Ensign with the Canadian Arms in the fly on suitable occasions from all buildings owned or occupied by the Canadian Government and situated within Canada. This extended the use of the Red Ensign, which was formerly used properly only on vessels registered in the Canadian Mercantile Marine. The Blue Ensign was, of course, used on government vessels.

It might be of interest to read the following excerpt from the June 10, 1925, edition of the Ottawa morning Citizen:

> Following in line with Australia and New Zealand, Canada is to have a new flag which will be recognized as the flag of the Dominion. The Government has passed an Order in Council appointing a committee to consider and report on the most suitable design for a Canadian national flag for use ashore.

This news was not greeted kindly by the Loyal Opposition of the day, and further action did not take place, to my knowledge, until the time of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. Having promised the electorate a new flag, Mr. Pearson took upon himself the responsibility for carrying out this pledge. In the fall of 1963 he indicated that a maple leaf design would likely be chosen. He said that the crying need in Canada was for a patriotism which put Canada ahead of its parts, with national symbols which encouraged national unity and reflected Canada's status as an independent sovereign nation.

He declared his belief that a flag designed around the maple leaf would symbolize and would be a true reflection of the new Canada. Such a flag, he added, would not mean any disrespect for the United Kingdom or for the Union Jack and Red Ensign. These Flags would continue to be flown as a symbol of our membership in the Commonwealth of Nations and of our loyalty to the Crown.

Mr. Pearson made the proposal for a new flag to Parliament in 1964. As occasionally occurs in a free Parliament, his proposal did not meet with unanimous consent. A very lengthy debate ensued. In supporting his concept of a new flag, Mr. Pearson said:

> I believe we should have a national flag that stands for Canada alone, that flies as a symbol of Canada alone, that neither dishonours nor betrays the past but looks to the future; a flag that will say one word and that word is "Canada".

A parliamentary committee representing all Parties was established to study the question and make recommendations. The committee welcomed suggestions, and there was a very considerable response as briefs and design proposals poured in. After due consideration the committee finally proposed the design now in use.

It was a time of passionate debate and dispute throughout the nation, for symbols become dear and many Canadians experienced a sense of bereavement over the passing from official use of familiar flags and emblems. Yet the committee chose well.

This was evident for more than a single reason. As I would like to explain, it drew on a number of honoured precedents and so perpetuates established symbols. Our flag is described as a red flag of the proportions two by length and one by width, containing in its centre a white square the width of the flag bearing a single red maple leaf. The first flags to fly over Canada were the white standards of England and France. The English flag planted by Cabot in 1497 carried the red cross of St. George. The French flag placed by Cartier in 1534 bore the gold fleur de lis. Thus, the white in our flag.

It is much more official than that. The tremendous effort and sacrifice of Canadians in World War I earned Canada the right to sign the treaty that ended hostilities, as a free and independent nation. To mark this historic event in our development, King George V granted Canada a new coat of arms on November 21, 1921, and declared our national colours would be red and white, The crest of the coat of arms depicts a lion holding aloft a red maple leaf, a symbol of the sacrifice through which Canada obtained her independence. It is appropriate, therefore, that our flag bear the colours red and white and it is appropriate that it be made proper, red for valour, white for truth. The red is precisely the same shade as that used on the union jack and the red ensign. The presence of a red maple leaf in Canada's coat of arms is added validity to the choice of a maple leaf for the flag.

Mr. Thacker: Especially on the Prairies.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I did not think we would have anybody heckling the flag today. The maple leaf has long been emblematic of Canada. Research by a former President of the Royal Society of Canada led him to conclude that the maple leaf was already looked upon as a fit emblem for Canadians as early as 1700, if not before. Maple leaves were widely used for decorating purposes when the Prince of Wales visited in Canada in 1860. In 1868 they appeared in the first coat of arms granted by Queen Victoria to Ontario and Quebec.

The new flag was approved by the House of Commons and the Senate. The effective date of the Royal Proclamation of the flag was February 15, 1965. At 12 noon local time across the nation the red ensign was carefully lowered and a new flag raised. The scene was particularly colourful on Parliament Hill as the new flags unfurled in bright sunshine before a large crowd. I am sure—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In terms of relevance, I should draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that the explanatory note contained on page 1A of the Bill states:

The purpose of this Bill is to ensure the quality of material, design and colour used in the Canadian flag for use within Canada in order to reduce fading and other signs of wear.

I appreciate that the Hon. Member has been establishing an historical basis for what, I presume, he will eventually come to, namely, the object of the Bill under discussion. I invite him to indicate to the Chair if he intends to do that soon.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi); Mr. Speaker, I thought it was important on this occasion, when we are discussing the materials and colours of the flag, that we have some understanding of why it is important. That is what I was trying to establish. We are not debating a frivolous Bill, but something that is of extreme significance to the nation. I respect Your Honour's remarks, but I believe the history and significance of the flag are something that should necessarily be brought to the nation from time to time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has no dispute with the quality of the Hon. Member's oratory or his historical knowledge of the basis and foundation for the establishment of a Canadian national flag. The title of the Bill is: "An Act to establish standards for the manufacture of the national flag of Canada". Interesting as his remarks are, and respectfully as the Chair may be listening to them, nevertheless under our Standing Orders the Chair has an obligation to invite the Hon. Member to be a little more relevant to the motion now before the House.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, on your injunction I will dispense with the remainder of the history and protocol that I was going to speak about, and get directly to my remarks concerning this important Bill. It can be seen from my remarks, and I know you have been listening, that it may well be concluded that the Government of Canada holds its national symbols in great esteem, including the flag.

The one important remaining action with regard to the flag is, I believe, the proposed standards in this Bill, which set out the requirements to ensure that our flag is produced in the correct colour shade, and of fabric of suitable weight and durability. It proposes that the Canadian General Standards Board establish standards for manufacture of the national flag of Canada corresponding to its intended use, under varying conditions, including use indoors and outdoors, one-event use, and such other uses to which the Board may determine that the national flag of Canada may reasonably be subjected.

The Act states that, upon establishment of approved standards, no Crown corporation, Department, branch, agency or office of the Government of Canada shall purchase or use other than a national flag of Canada manufactured in compliance with the standards for its manufacture and use as set out in such standards as may be established by the Canadian General Standards Board from time to time. Flags manufactured in compliance with the national standards shall bear a mark identifying them as having met those standards.

I submit that the Act meets an important requirement, that of ensuring the quality of that important symbol of national pride, our flag. The very nature of this national symbol demands that consistency and quality be beyond question, an absolute certainty.

Parliament expended much thought and energy on producing the design of a flag that would be accepted by the people of Canada as a national symbol. The final legislative step, as I mentioned earlier, seems to be the current proposal to ensure that our flag is correct and of good quality, a fit object of affection and inspiration for all Canadians. I hope Canadians will learn the protocol on how a flag is to be flown. That may be irrelevant to this Bill, so I will not go into it. In closing, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Victoria on bringing this important Bill before the House.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party I rise in support of Bill C-234. I join the former speaker in commending the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) on bringing this Bill before the House. Some people might say this is not all that important an item, but it is. It is small, but it is important. It deals with a national symbol, the flag.

Surely the flag is one of the most important of our national symbols. It is a symbol that all members of Canadian society, regardless of where we live and what our backgrounds are, can look up to as one of those common elements that remind us of the grandeur and the history of our land. It gives us something about which we may feel united. The sight of that flag, that symbol, faded and ragged, flying limp on some mast, with pieces of it torn away, conveys to me a disrespect for the symbol as well as a disrespect for the country. We are a young and vibrant country. When I see the flag in a ragged and faded condition, I feel that it conveys something that we are not.

I am generally not much of a sentimentalist. I think that symbols can at times be overused. I would say, quite honestly and openly, that something stirs within me when I leave my office late at night and look up to the Peace Tower and see our flag flying in the wind lit up by a spotlight. Something stirs within me because symbols do have the power to evoke certain emotions. I think our flag is an honourable flag, because the history of our country is an honourable history. We have done no malice to people in other parts of this world. Therefore, we can be proud of our symbol.

I cannot help but take the odd dig at the political Parties in this House. It is a bit ironic that a member of the Conservative Party is asking for a bit of government regulation to govern the standards of our flag. Perhaps it is a slight indication that the free enterprise system and the market system have not produced a quality item, and that we do need an Act of Parliament to make sure that we do have a quality item in our flag.

Mr. Crosby: We call it consumer protection.

Mr. de Jong: It is called consumer protection. So be it, Mr. Speaker. Of course I agree with this proposition and feel that we do need the standards called for in Bill C-234.

I also wish to take a dig at my friends and colleagues across the way. It seems to me that government Members sometimes overuse the symbol of our flag. When they begin to do that, they begin to degrade the potency that a symbol can have. If they begin to use the symbol on every letterhead, for every commercial enterprise and for every political enterprise, the symbol will be over used in the end and it will become degraded. People would then begin to associate the flag with only a Liberal symbol. In the process, something would be lost. I think even the Government and the Liberal Party would lose something because Canadians would begin to feel that the Canadian symbol, our flag, is being used in inappropriate circumstances and that that misuse degrades our flag.

I was in my early twenties when the flag debate occurred, so I remember certain aspects of it and I remember the strong and very legitimate emotions that it evoked in the people. It was a stage in our growing up as a country. Not at that time being active in electoral politics, I sort of chuckled to myself. There was a part of me that said: "How truly Canadian this is that we, in a country which is nearly 100 years old, are still debating whether or not we should have a flag, still debating what type of symbol we should have." In some ways I think that was typical of our history, of our evolution as a country and of our growth to maturity.

We were not born in a revolutionary fervour. We came to exist in a way which some people would call very Canadian, which is to say very gradual. Our traditions and institutions evolved to become more and more responsible. We became more and more independent. It was a slow evolution. The passage of the Act that established the maple leaf as our flag was just one more stage in our growth toward greater maturity.

The Bill that is now before us is one more step in that same direction. It seems to me that at the time the legislation that established the maple leaf as our national flag was passed, the Government of the day should perhaps have thought in terms of establishing some standards. It has taken some 18 or 19 years for a member of the Conservative Party to introduce a Bill that corrects that oversight which occurred so many years ago.

I do not wish to speak I think that there is an agreement among all Members of all Parties of the House that this Bill be passed. I simply wanted to rise to indicate the support of our Party for this Bill and to indicate some of my own personal feelings about the Bill and about our great national symbol, the flag.

Mr. Paul-André Massé (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) for bringing this matter to the attention of the House.

I also wish to take this opportunity to thank my hon. friend from Regina East (Mr. de Jong) and to inform him that it is quite normal for a Government and for Canadians who are proud of their country to display the symbol of that country. I do not think this could be qualified as "over-use".

I also wish to thank the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) for talking to us about the history and symbolism of our flag, to explain why, today, the Hon. Member for Victoria is presenting Bill C-234.

I am sure that I am speaking for all Members of this House and for all Canadians when I say that the sight of a ragged national flag flying from buildings does not fill me with patriotic pride. If it is to be a symbol of national unity, displayed throughout the country, I think we should all make an effort to ensure that our flag and the brilliance of its colours reflect the respect of all Canadians for that symbol. I am of course aware that in the case of flags flown from federal buildings, these are quickly replaced as soon as they start showing signs of wear.

If we can do anything at all to extend the wear of these flags, I am sure all Members of this House will agree that it is worth the effort.

The purpose of the Bill is to establish national standards for flags manufactured in Canada or imported from abroad. Hon. Members are probably aware, Mr. Speaker, that in 1974, the Canadian General Standards Board published a national standard for the Canadian flag. Another version of this standard was published a little later, in May 1979, as the national standard. Since then, there have been two revisions, the last version being published in April 1983.

The standard applies to all materials, designs and colours used in manufacturing, and as such, seems to answer most of the questions regarding the Bill. It may, however, be necessary to have a majority of members of the Committee of the Canadian General Standards Board examine the contents of the standard and revise this document to bring it into line with the intent of our legislators.

That being said, I would like to refer to Clause 5 of the Bill, which requires that the Canadian General Standards Board certify manufacturers or importers of the flag.

At this point, I would like to make it clear that the Canadian General Standards Board is not a certifying body. In this respect, its role consists in keeping a set of lists of names of companies that have agreed to comply with certain standards.

As a general rule, the Government prefers private companies to be self-regulating in the matter of complying with national standards, and to do so by establishing their own certification procedures. Business and industry have been complaining for some time about Government interference in their affairs. After all, a company's survival depends on manufacturing goods that are acceptable to the buyer. Consequently, it should be enough to let the market play its role. A responsible company, knowing that its products will be evaluated according to a national standard, will use its judgment and business acumen without the Government breathing down its neck, which means that the company will ensure that its products at least meet if not exceed the standards published by the Canadian General Standards Board. If the CGSB were to act as a certifying body, a number of problems could result. Manufacturers or suppliers might be tempted to drop their own quality control programs or let the certifying body take over this kind of inspection. In case of any problems or complaints about a product, the manufacturer or supplier might try to blame the certifying body. There would also be a number of legal and political liabilities for a Government approving a private company's products, if the products do not meet the usual standards.

I suggested earlier that we let the industry regulate itself, and I think that is the answer. Some companies might ask the Canadian Textile Institute or the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, for instance, to set up a certification program. Manufacturers or suppliers could also retain the services of private certifying bodies such as Underwriters Laboratories of Canada, Warnock-Hersey or the Canadian Standards Association.

Mr. Speaker, all these organizations enjoy the trust of the public and exist for the purposes mentioned. There are equally reputable organizations such as the Ontario Research Foundation and the Retail Research Foundation of Canada, and I am sure there are others as well.

After discussing these matters with the Hon. Member for Victoria, who presented the Bill, I am now able to announce that he has agreed to the removal of Subsections 1 and 2 of Clause 5 which stipulates that the Canadian General Standards Board is to be responsible for certification.

Mr. Speaker, considering this spirit of co-operation, I have no hesitation in supporting Bill C-234, provided those subsections are removed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is moved by Mr. McKinnon that Bill C-234, An Act to establish standards for the manufacture of the national flag of Canada, be read a second time and by unanimous consent referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read a second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Corbin in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-234, an Act to establish standards for the manufacture of the national flag of Canada.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 5—Certification of manufacture or import

Mr. Massé: Mr. Speaker, as agreed with the Member for Victoria and as I mentioned earlier in the House, I wish to move an amendment that consists in removing Clause 5 with Subsections 1 and 2, in other words, Clause 5 would be removed altogether from the Bill.

The Chairman: Normally, amendments are to be presented in writing. In any case, the Chair must inform the House that it cannot accept this kind of amendment.

[English]

I would draw to the attention of the House that the Chair would have to reject the amendment. I would like to quote in support of that ruling Citation 773(6) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which reads as follows:

> An amendment to delete a clause is not in order, as the proper course is to vote against the clause standing part of the bill.

Therefore, if the objective of Hon. Members is to delete Clause 5 which is now before the House, the Chair would invite them to vote against that particular Clause when it is called. In other words, if everyone says, "no", the effect will be that Clause 5 will disappear from the Bill.

Shall Clause 5 carry?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: I declare Clause 5 defeated.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Kaplan that Bill C-9, and Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, be read a third time and do pass.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I think it is interesting to be returning to Bill C-9, the Bill which will establish a civilian security service, after the House has debated standards for the manufacture of the Canadian flag. That debate evoked a great deal of patriotism. I certainly enjoyed that debate. I do not express any shame in being a Canadian patriot. I remember being very pleased when I saw the Canadian flag unveiled for the first time. I think that it is very much as a patriot that I express shame at what is before us today in Bill C-9.

Yes, we do need a civilian security service. Canada is a middle power, not a major power in the world. Our security needs are not as great as some other countries, nevertheless they do exist and we require an appropriate service to deal with them. Our requirements for national security are not as great as those of the United States. Some of the remarks which I will make this afternoon will deal with our safeguards. The safeguards which are in this legislation are not as good as the American safeguards, even though our own security needs are not as important as those of a major power such as the United States.

I think it would be useful in addressing this issue to examine a bit of the history in order to realize how we came to be in the state which we are with regard to Bill C-9. It does bear some relevance to what is wrong with the Bill as it currently stands. We will all remember that it was in a criminal trial in 1976 that members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police security service were discovered to have been involved in criminal wrongdoings. In 1977 the McDonald Commission was established. It sat until 1980, and it reported in 1981. At that time it was extremely critical of the practices of the current RCMP Security Service. It reported evidence of criminal wrongdoing in four provinces, but there were prosecutions only in the province of Quebec. The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has said that there will not be further prosecutions, and the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has referred to disciplinary action to be taken against the culprits in question. But in fact we have not been advised of any specific disciplinary action which has been taken against any of them.

I do not want to agree with all of the provisions and recommendations of the McDonald Commission. In some places I would consider them too lax. Nevertheless, it did come up with a number of safeguards which should be built into the legislation for a civilian security service, and most of these recommended safeguards have been ignored. We saw them ignored in Bill C-157, and they are still left out of the current legislation. It was in May, 1983, that Bill C-157, the predecessor to Bill C-9, was tabled. It was met with denunciations from provincial attorneys general, civil liberties organizations, church groups, and from all kinds of private citizens all across the country. My own Party strenuously opposed this legislation. I regret to say that the Conservatives were not quite as vigorous in their opposition. Some of those Hon. Members, indeed, thought that the safeguards in Bill C-157 were quite adequate and, indeed, it was a rather civil libertarian kind of Bill.

I am very pleased to see the Conservatives have come along and are now joining in very concerted opposition to this very drastic and draconian legislation.

A Senate committee was established to hold public hearings on the old Bill, C-157, last summer. I cannot say anything too good about Senate committees. My own Party would like to see the Senate abolished. Certainly most of us feel very strongly that there should not be an appointed Senate, that elected people should be the people to do this. Our own Members, of course, were not involved in the Senate committee hearings because we do not have members in the Senate. Nevertheless, even with this rather senatorial committee looking at this Bill and holding these hearings, it did come up with some recommendation for additional safeguards. You might say it is a body not known for vigorous stands on civil liberties, but nevertheless it did see the need for additional safeguards. I regret to say that the Government did not even act on the advice of the Senate which is, by and large, appointed by the current Liberal Government.

Bill C-9 which is before us today is only very slightly changed from Bill C-157, and this whole process of consulting the public and holding hearings has really been a charade. In effect what Bill C-9 does is to make legal many of the activities which were condemned by the initial McDonald Commission and by the Canadian public. We had an example of wrongdoing, and what was done about it? Was it stopped? No, it is made legal. That is how we deal with wrongdoing on the part of the security service. We have 800,000 files opened against Canadian citizens. There is no way, Mr. Speaker, you can persuade anyone in this House that there are 800,000 terrorists or spies operating in Canada. We have a Government which has overreacted in how it has dealt with security matters in the past, and it has overreacted in trying to deal with security matters in the future by legislating a civilian security service with inadequate safeguards and far too many powers.

We are faced with the prospect of the opening of first class mail, wiretaps, doctors' and lawyers' records being invaded, people being bugged in their homes and offices, and all of this in the name of national security. Many of these activities certainly went on previously even though they were against the law and we now have this very shameful approach, instead of stopping it, that it would be made lawful.

I want to argue this afternoon basically three things which I believe are wrong with the Bill before us. First of all, the threats to security have been ill defined. They are far too broad. Second, the powers which have been given to the civilian security service are far too great. There is no proportion. It is given excessive powers even for dealing with quite trivial matters. Its excessive powers are not confined to major instances of threats to national security but can even be used for information gathering. Third, the accountability procedures are far too weak. They are thoroughly inadequate.

I would like to refer to a brief which has been submitted by a physician, Doctor Philip Berger, on the definition of "threats to security of Canada" from his experience. While this is an individual brief it does represent a considerable amount of opinion from a professional community. Doctor Berger reports that many physicians in Canada have examined and documented the cases of persons seeking refugee status in Canada who were tortured in their own home countries. The results of these investigations have been used to substantiate claims of torture for the classification of refugee status under the Immigration Act. They have also been used to expose human rights violations by foreign Governments.

This kind of activity can lead to a perfectly normal law-abiding physician being targeted, and the groups which are using the information obtained in these physical examinations could be targeted for intrusive surveillance. These physical examinations, medical examinations, have been used by groups within Canada who are opposed to totalitarian regimes. But some of these groups are perceived to advocate threats or use of acts of violence for the purpose of achieving a political objective within a foreign state. That brings it within the definition of a threat to security.

Some physicians are members of organizations which donate money to opposition groups in foreign states, who defend themselves in violent confrontations with their Governments. Clearly, these physicians are engaged in activities directed toward helping opposition groups trying to achieve a political objective within a foreign state. That makes them come under the definition of "threats to the security of Canada", preposterous as this may seem.

The Canadian Civil Liberties Association has noted a number of instances in which groups could be targeted for activities which, I believe, any normal person would consider quite appropriate, quite lawful and, indeed, quite laudable. There is within the Act a definition of activities directed towards certain types of security related misconduct. To what extent could this invite speculation about security threats which might happen at some indefinite point in the future? Consider, for example, the power the Bill would create for intrusive snooping into activities within Canada, directed toward or in support of acts of violence for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or foreign state?

This Section could mandate the use of bugging procedures, for example, or mail opening against a Canadian citizen, who, without any foreign direction whatsoever, took up a collection for the State of Israel or the Palestinian Liberation Organization. Suppose such citizens got involved with rebels in El Salvador or even in Afghanistan and raised money for them? That certainly makes them liable to intrusive investigation.

Another Subsection would make intrusive surveillance available for activities intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of the constitutionally established system of government in Canada. What does "ultimate" mean? "Ultimate" is certainly a very long way away. It may have no immediate connection with any kind of violence or any kind of serious activity whatsoever. It is highly speculative that some activity carried on by what could be a perfectly lawful dissenting group could bring it under surveillance.

The Canadian Civil Liberties Association may draw inspiration, or may be seen to draw inspiration, from the American Civil Liberties Union. Does this mean that that organization is foreign influenced? What are the limits of detrimentals? Supposing a Canadian citizen were employed by a foreign corporation involved in commercial negotiations with the Canadian Government—obviously an activity which happens all the time—this would permit targeting of such an individual. Bill C-9 is a threat to law-abiding people and legitimate dissent.

In the opinion of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, this threat will continue so long as intrusive surveillance is permitted on the basis of such shadowy, ethereal and overbroad concepts as "activities directed toward", "ultimate" intentions, and "detrimental" interests. There is supposedly an exemption for activities such as lawful advocacy, protest or dissent. But this is not an adequate definition. It is not clear that activities such as fund raising or commercial negotiations would be included. But some of the activities I just mentioned could be kept out of the exemption section and the group concerned could then come under surveillance by the security service.

There is good reason to question how much additional security is obtained through this level of preventive intelligence gathering. There have been plenty of instances in the United States, and the American Government has moved away from this kind of vague fishing expedition to try and get intelligence from groups engaged in quite lawful dissent. It has simply not come about that any additional security has been obtained from this. Generally, the FBI did not report advance knowledge of planned violence. We really cannot have any hope that by having these Draconian measures we will actually achieve any national security objectives.

Between Bill C-157 and Bill C-9 a few amendments were made but they did not in any significant way increase the protections given, so that the kind of criticism we have been raising still largely holds. These very modest wording changes have not been at all adequate to the task. The NDP has proposed much more substantial amendments. We have passed the stage where we can get them through, but to give you an idea of the kind of constructive alternative we see as appropriate—yes, we do need a civilian security service and it does need to have powers to do things but it must have adequate safeguards. We do have some constructive proposals and we would like to see the Government abandon the Bill as it is now, hold some public hearings and listen to the citizens it has been elected to serve. It can then come back with legislation which would provide adequate protection for the civil liberties we want to have in Canada.

This would mean changes in the definition of threats to the security of Canada. We want to be sure that so-called domestic subversion is not included in this section. The RCMP should continue to have a mandate to deal with domestic subversion according to criminal standards, a procedure which has been used and a distinction which is accepted in the United States. We do not know how serious this threat of domestic subversion is, but we think, in so far as we are going to need it, the ordinary criminal operations of the RCMP with the ordinary standards and safeguards would be the most appropriate way of dealing with these threats.

The criteria for security assessments is another point on which the Bill goes much too far. Too many public servants are subjected to security clearance procedures. In 1982 over 75,000 people were security cleared. It is just very hard to imagine that the threat of spies in the Public Service of Canada is so serious that we need this large number of clearances. The criteria should be spelled out in the Statute or, at the very least, provision made for criteria established by regulation to be made public and subject to review by an oversight committee. The civilian security service should not have responsibility for conducting the security assessments. Their role should be restricted to threats to the security of Canada. Either the RCMP or a branch of the Public Service Commission, as recommended by the McDonald Commission, should have the job.

As to the foreign intelligence function, the Bill would confer new and unprecedented powers on the civilian security service to target individuals who pose no threat to the security of Canada. This could include political refugees, visiting professors and business or labour leaders. This power does not currently exist and there is absolutely no justification for it being included in the legislation.

On the exchange of security information, the Solicitor General has stated that the RCMP security service presently shares information on Canadians with foreign security agencies, including those which do not have proper recognition in their own country. This is a rather dicey procedure at the best of times, but this Bill would codify this practice.

We need a much more adequate review process. The McDonald Commission and many witnesses recommended that there be a Parliamentary oversight committee. Other countries have them. They need full access to Cabinet documents and the information the security service itself has so that it can ensure there have not been violations of civil liberties.

Apart from powers of electronic surveillance and surreptitious entry, as well as the power to make copies of records, there is no justification whatsoever for the expanded powers sought by the new agency. Even the McDonald Commission recommended that intrusive techniques not be used against domestic subversives. Where we use these intrusive measures, there has to be good reason for it. The threat has to be a serious one. They should not be used on fishing expeditions or for security clearance and things of that sort. The RCMP Commissioner stated that if he were denied access to these intrusive powers, his ability to perform his duties would be impaired only to a "very, very marginal extent". Yet the potential invasion of privacy is incredibly broad. Here we have this threat of far too expensive powers being used even where there are not serious matters of national security.

This Bill would arbitrarily deny collective bargaining rights to virtually all employees of a new service. That is simply inappropriate and unfair. When we compare the safeguards in the U.S. with those here, we see that the Americans and the FBI have far more adequate safeguards. They have to show standards that are similar to ours for criminal investigation, and it gives a far better understanding to the people in this system of what they are legally entitled to do and what they are not.

Our Bill, however, has one merit that the Americans do not have. These safeguards, if we had them, would be legislated. Here we have before us a Bill which would do a desirable thing. It would institute a civilian security service and legislate its powers clearly for all to see, as well as the safeguards. The problem is that what is legislated by way of safeguards is fairly inadequate.

The options before us are quite simple; either to pass the legislation as it is and bring in a new era of substantial abuse of Canadian civil liberties, or we can go slower, the Government can not proceed with the Bill. We have a security service in place. The RCMP are performing that function right now. There is no risk of harm by taking another look to see that we have adequate safeguards.

I see my time is just about up. I want to say that I am very distressed at what we have before us today. It is an interesting point that we see this at the end of the Trudeau period in Government, a piece of legislation that would violate Canadians' civil liberties. We see a former civil libertarian at the end of his parliamentary career bringing in a despicable piece of legislation. It is a sad way for someone to go, and I am sad to see this legislation before us. Last night we had the example—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair has been very considerate to the Hon. Member. She has been extended extra time. I have to inform the House that her time has expired. A 10 minute question and comment period is now provided for. Are there any questions or comments. For debate, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby).

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, we are now proceeding to the final stage of the deliberations in the House of Commons on Bill C-9 which enacts the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act. It has been a tedious process, but it has not provided sufficient time in terms of the close examination which ought to be applied to the legislative provisions contained in Bill C-9. The debate is under the strictures and duress of time allocation or closure. Members of the House of Commons are restricted in the amount of time they can devote to the debate on this legislative measure and the provisions of Bill C-9.

It becomes necessary in the final hours of this debate to explain in clear and careful terms what one's position is with respect to this legislation which deals with the security of the citizens of Canada and Canadian institutions. I will explain very carefully my own position. I recognize that there is a potential for threats to security in Canada. I recognize that our democratic society allows a large measure of freedom for its citizens and all residents of Canada, regardless of whether they enjoy the status of citizenship. Within that conglomorate of people there could be those who would harm our society and institutions. The principle of freedom and liberty ought to prevail over all threats, including threats to the security of the nation. That is why this nation was created in the first place. Democracy was established and survives because we believe in freedom. The risk of that belief is that we must recognize that there is the potential in our society for the destruction of our own democratic institutions.

When the predecessor of Bill C-9, Bill C-157, was before the special committee of the Senate, the Senators who dealt with the legislative provisions contained therein recognized the need for that balance between the handling of threats to our society and liberty. They said as a committee that that balance must be maintained. That was the test which governed security legislation. I do not think the members of the Senate committee directed the balance in the right way. That is to say, the members of that committee were prepared to err on the side of protection of society, in the way in which they envisioned that protection, rather than to err on the side of liberty of the subject. The real protection of Canadian society is the liberty of the subject. It is not the laws that are designed by legislators that protect the society. It is the principle of liberty of the subject that protects society.

That principle was established long ago in the mother country of Great Britain. It continues there today, notwithstanding parades to Trafalgar Square and mass movements of labour supporters and ban the bombers which my colleague from Dartmouth-Halifax East has seen on many occasions in the streets of London. Notwithstanding that apparent almost revolutionary attitude, liberty survives in the United Kingdom as it survives nowhere else in the world. If we allow that tradition of liberty to be eroded because of real or alleged threats to Canadian institutions arising from subversion or breaches of security, we may endanger the very society that we are trying to protect.

It is in that context that I want to examine the provisions of Bill C-9 for the last time. We must recognize the need for a balance between the protection of society and the absolute need for civil liberties to be maintained throughout Canada. It is interesting to note that the sponsor of this Bill in the House, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) who now sits in his seat, would in most respects be the advocate of civil liberties. In the debate which involves Mr. Sakharov and Mr. Shcharansky I am sure the Solicitor General would be the first to endorse the right of peaceful dissent as a principle of democratic society. I am sure the Solicitor General would be willing to write to the ambassador from the Soviet Union and ask why Mr. Sakharov and Mr. Shcharansky have been treated in the way in which they have been. I am sure he would ask why their liberties are restricted simply because they disagree with the duly constituted, if not elected, government of the Soviet Union.

If we are going to apply the principle of peaceful dissent to citizens of other nations, particularly those which we do not regard as democratic, then we had better be darn sure that we allow for that same kind of peaceful dissent in our own country. Does that make me, or any other Member of the House of Commons who endorses that principle, an advocate of peaceful dissent? Does that colour me as a revolutionary? Does that make me a foe of the system and an enemy of the country? Of course not. I am here to protect the citizens of this country. That is why I examined Bill C-9. I say that it is tipping the balance in the wrong direction and does not recognize, to the extent that it should, the liberty of the subject.

At this stage of the deliberations on Bill C-9 we cannot examine the provisions of the Bill in detail. That was done under the constraint of limited time provided by the closure order imposed by the Government majority. We in the Opposition cannot fight that. All we can do is to explain once again what our position is and what the concern of Canadians ought to be.

I will mention another incident in the House of Commons which dealt with the civil liberties of Canadians. It was passed under the guise of urgency and the need for immediate action. On October 25, 1983 the House of Commons passed Bill C-169 which amended the Canada Elections Act. It made some very useful changes to that Act.

Mr. Kaplan: You voted for it.

Mr. Crosby: One of the changes which was made related to advertising during election campaigns. Members of the House who were interested in improving the Canada Elections Act wanted those changes instituted because some of them would be very helpful to the electorate in the important task of choosing its representatives in the Parliament of Canada. We wanted those reforms to take place. However, not all Members were aware that an amendment to Section 70.1 might have the effect of outlawing legitimate protests in the form of election period advertising. No one was aware of that. The haste with which Bill C-169 was passed by the House of Commons caused difficulty and concern among a great many Canadians about this intrusion on their liberty by the elimination of their right of free expression. The haste was responsible for that.

Let me make it clear that all Members of the House of Commons have to bear the responsibility for that. We created the haste and allowed it to exist. We allowed it to be carried out and did not fight it. We went along with it because we wanted those reforms. Now we have the result. We cannot now get the co-operation of the Government to make changes to rectify the error that may have been made by the House of Commons in passing Bill C-169. We are not able to say that we made a mistake in not realizing that the provision had that effect. Had we realized that, we would not have participated in a unanimous endorsement of Bill C-169. The Government says no, it is sorry, we made a mistake but the provision is there and it will be applied. The Government says, "We will tell the people of Canada that they cannot advertise during an election campaign in the way that it is now alleged to be prohibited by the statutory provision". It says that we made the mistake and the people of Canada will pay for it.

That is what will happen with Bill C-9. If there are any mistakes made by the House of Commons, the people of Canada will pay for them. That is why we must stand here and protest the provisions of the Bill. That is why we must stand up and tell the Government to give us more time because there may be provisions in the Bill that will cause grave concern to the people of Canada.

Remember Revenue Canada. Whoever looked at legislation governing Revenue Canada to find out that it could have secret forces examining the habits of people in Canada in order to determine whether it might affect the manner in which they pay their income tax? Who would have thought that when an institution like Statistics Canada was created, a legitimate institution to compile statistics, that they would be out running around asking people about their income and demanding that they fill out forms that make inquiries ranging from their sex life to their financial demands?

Mr. Forrestall: Like calling Richardsons to ask for files.

Mr. Crosby: Anything in the name of statistics. That is not what the Parliament of Canada intended for Statistics Canada. It was not creating a snoop service to create statistics that nobody needs or finds useful. Yet there are employees of Statistics Canada this very day throughout the country who are knocking on doors and demanding that people fill out forms that those citizens quite sincerely believe this action is an instrusion on their privacy and their right as Canadians citizens to live the way they want without violation of any law. Those government employees are invoking a law against those citizens which was never intended to be invoked and applied in that way.

It is the fault of Members of Parliament for not building a mechanism into the system which would prevent that kind of action. Who ever thought in the House of Commons, when the concept of social insurance numbers was introduced, that they would be used as an intelligence gathering technique? Who ever thought that one's SIN number was going to be used to find our whether one paid one's Visa bill or the Royal Bank of Canada. Who ever thought these things would happen?

Not only should we be on guard for these kinds of changes, we have an absolute duty to be on guard and make sure that any such changes or anything that involves the liberty of the subject in Canada has to be carefully scrutinized or we will end up with Sakharovs and Shcharanskys in Canada, and it will be the Russians asking how we are treating our citizens and why are we snooping around asking where their bank accounts are and how much is in them. I wonder if they do that in the Soviet Union? I wonder if they knock on doors and ask those questions.

We can be ashamed of some of the things going on in Canada because they do not need to take place. We do not need that kind of activity because this is a democratic country. Perhaps there is an element of subversion and threat to our security. We do not deny that. However, it is not necessary to use an elephant gun to kill an ant and that is what the Solicitor General is doing.

Incidentally, what does he know about these situations? He has been harboured away in the middle of the City of Toronto all of his life. What does he know about threats to our society? What information has he received and what information is he relying on?

I have lived in this country. I have served in the administration of justice for a number of years. I never saw any great threats to our society that required the urgent passage of legislation in the Parliament of Canada creating the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. It is not required on an urgent basis so that the rules must be stopped and the process must be stopped in order to get it passed. That is nonsense and the Solicitor General should know that.

If he thinks that the people of Canada agree with him and not with what I am saying he is wrong, because there are very ordinary people in Canada who write very ordinary letters to Members of Parliament to say things such as, "I have just finished reading an article in the paper stating that the Conservative caucus proposes to maintain the RCMP security service as is. I wholeheartedly support this idea". This person happens to be a member of the Canadian Armed Forces. He goes on to give some very cogent reasons for maintaining the RCMP as an intelligence service.

A woman who is in business in my constituency wrote me asking to maintain the RCMP and not to establish a civilian security agency. She knows what government agencies are like and what their track record is. She knows what will happen. She has dealt with Statistics Canada. She runs a business and knows what Revenue Canada is like when it comes to forms, details and records. Are we to believe that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service will be any different? Are we to believe it will be any better than Revenue Canada or more considerable than Statistics Canada in getting reports? Not on your life.

I'll bet that within six months the Inspector General of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service will have a uniform with more gold braid on it than any admiral ever thought of having. I will bet that it will have everyone institutionalized and militarilized in a matter of months. The Solicitor General had better not laugh. Has he not seen his correctional officers prancing around the country with their gold braided hats. Is not the Canadian Correctional Service a civilian service? What are they doing in uniforms and why are they marching? Its a potential disease. It is called fascism.

Mr. Forrestall: You know it.

Mr. Crosby: The Solicitor General should certainly know what the results of that disease can be if it is not stopped.

Mr. Forrestall: If you don't, 15 years down the road you will wake up one morning and wonder why it happened.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosby: We want to balance rights and we want to balance it in all types of legislation. But we want to do it particularly with legislation that deals with civil rights and the liberty of the subject in Canada.

Let me talk about the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in that situation. The Royal Mounted Police is a national institution that was created in 1873. It has 110 years of history in Canada. What has happened? This is the report of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police included in the Solicitor General's own report. According to that report, its mandate is to enforce Canadian laws, prevent crime, maintain peace, order and security.

When we examined this report we found with respect to airports that the RCMP ticketed 250,000 cars. That is to say, they issued 250,000 tickets to Canadians at airports. The RCMP has been allowed to degenerate as a police service in Canada. They are not the same as they were in 1873, there is no doubt about that.

This will just be another blow to the RCMP. I do not care what Commissioner Simmonds says about that. He is not on the streets. He is not in Sackville, Nova Scotia, or out in British Columbia. He does not chase after Olson and those kinds of people. He does not know how the ability of the RCMP to perform normal police tasks has been destroyed.

I would like to hear from the Solicitor General on the subject of drugs. They talked about drugs and drug activity. They estimate the value of drugs with which they were involved in 1981 at $8 billion. They say that is the value of the drug market in Canada and that it may be exaggerated. It is in this report. Eight billion dollars is total nonsense. In 1981, that was more than 15 per cent of the total revenues of the Government of Canada, yet they say that is what is out on the streets of Canada. What streets of Canada? I have travelled all over Canada and while there is a serious drug problem which must be attacked, do not tell me that there is $8 billion floating around Canada in the drug market.

It is those kinds of activities in which the RCMP are involved. They are not providing the basic police service that they ought to provide. The Canadian Security Intelligence Service will be taking that much more away from the RCMP and leaving them in parking lots at airports ticketing cars and leaving them out on the streets chasing impaired drivers or speeders, when they should be chasing rapists, murderers and people who break and enter private dwellings.

It is not the history or the employees that is hurting the RCMP, it is the direction it is getting from the top. Members of the RCMP who endorse a transferring of security services to a so-called civilian from the RCMP are not contributing to the future welfare and well-being of the RCMP. That force has been in existence for a long time. It does not belong to the officers at the top of that organization. It does not belong to the Solicitor General. It belongs to all Canadians. It is a Canadian force created by Canadians. It is an institution in Canada.

The RCMP is now responsible to the government—to the Solicitor General. He does not have the right to take any act that is going to hurt that force as a Canadian institution, but that is what the Government is doing with Bill C-9. It is taking action that will be harmful to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, a Canadian institution, and harmful to Canadians, mark my words, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Kaplan: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): For debate, the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer).

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): I have spoken several times on this important bit of legislation, Mr. Speaker, and I make no apologies for that. I think every Member of this House should be on his or her feet opposing this legislation. I think they should be on their feet as often as is necessary to get this Government to change this very flawed legislation. Certainly I do not think I have seen a more important Bill come before this House of Commons. It directly affects the rights, the privacy, and the freedoms of every individual Canadian in this country. I think the Opposition has an obligation to effect changes in this legislation.

We in the Opposition recognize the need for a security force in Canada, but we are not prepared to approve of or respond to legislation which makes that force or gives it the right seriously to hamper the freedoms of Canadians and seriously intrude on their private lives. Unfortunately, the Government has seen fit to exercise closure on this Bill. It has used the guillotine of time allocation to ensure that the Government gets the Bill through the House before the end of the session. I cannot understand why the Government is doing that, Mr. Speaker. Certainly there does not seem to be any reason for this unseemly haste. I can assure you, Sir, that what this Government does in haste with respect to this legislation, the people of Canada will repent at leisure. As sure as I am standing here, this Bill will lead to great injustice to Canadians over the next few years.

The Canadian Catholic Conference has called upon the Government to have a sober second look at the legislation. Many organizations, in fact every organization that appeared before the committee asked for changes in the legislation and told the Government to slow down and take a good look at it.

Let us see who made appearances before the committee. Here are just a few: The Canadian Medical Association, the Attorneys General of Canada, the Voice of Women, the Civil Liberties Associations from most provinces, trade unions, from across Canada both large and small, the Association of University Professors, ethnic groups who are really concerned about what this legislation will do to their organizations and the Canadian Council of Churches. There were many, many others, not the least of which was the Canadian Bar Association. All these groups had valid complaints in areas of concern to them.

I think one of the most penetrating comments I have heard in relation to this legislation was that made by Bishop De Roo of Victoria, the President of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops. Bishop De Roo wrote a letter to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) with a copy sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In part, this is what Bishop De Roo wrote:

> The content of the Bill worries us considerably. Its adoption without major amendments could very well indicate that Canada is not afraid when it comes to introducing repressive measures aimed at attacking civil and political liberties in order to control social unrest provoked by the application of restraint policies.

Bishop De Roo has got to the heart of one of the problems in this legislation, and certainly this Government cannot claim a good record in that regard. We have only to look at the imposition of the War Measures Act to see how quickly this Government would respond to a farce, and how quickly it would depress civil liberties on some bogey men appearing. That is exactly what this legislation is in great danger of doing.

I am worried, members of my Party are worried and the Canadian people are very worried about this legislation.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Hear, hear!

Mr. Dantzer: The record will show that the changes proposed by the Progressive Conservative Party to this legislation are generally supported by the groups I have mentioned, indeed generally supported by all Canadians. I think the changes in the legislation that we have put forward have been prompted in the main by the response of Canadians to the establishment through this legislation of a security force.

I want to put on the record tonight, although I have mentioned it before, as have other people, the main changes we have requested. I think this Bill will get Canadians into a lot of trouble and we should be able to look back historically and find out where the trouble started.

First, we have proposed three main areas of change. When I say three main areas, I am not including all of the amendments that were put forward, some of them very important, but I do not have the time tonight to go through them all. I would like to go through the ones I consider most important.

First, we propose that the new security force stay within the RCMP. You might well wonder why, Mr. Speaker. I think it is very clear. This is new legislation. It creates a distinctive secret service security force of which Canadians instinctively are suspicious. I say that particular about western Canadians. They are very worried about the establishment of this kind of thing. Frankly, in western Canada we have not had too much good come out of Ottawa. We look with a jaundiced eye on any kind of legislation, and we look at a fearful eye on any establishment of more security forces. Therefore, it is most important to overcome that fear; some of which may be justified, parts of it not. Why not keep the force within the RCMP which is a highly respected and successful force? All over Canada and all over the world the RCMP has earned recognition and respect. Its members are trained to respect the law in Canada. That is why they have had the confidence of the people.

We have had a security force in this country for a long time. And the Attorney General, in response to questions at the committee, admitted that the RCMP had done a very good job, that there are no complaints, that the RCMP has successfully used all the methods necessary and it has developed a highly successful security force.

The question is, if you have a successful operation, why change it? We have pushed very hard to have the Government accept the idea of the security force remaining with the RCMP.

Let me be the first to point out that that was not essential to our position. I am sure we would not have had this long debate if the Government had made some other changes and said that it would keep the force or make a new force. I think we could live with that, reluctantly, but we could live with it. Certainly most of the Attorneys General of Canada support the force being within the RCMP as did the Civil Liberties Association of British Columbia who are not inclined to put the RCMP on a pedestal. That association indicated that if we must have this legislation, it should be left with the RCMP. However, that is not the main issue. The main issue is the definitions contained in Clause 2. I think most Hon. Members have spoken to that particular clause and its horrendous definitions.

We in the Progressive Conservative Party have taken the position throughout this whole matter that if we are to have legislation creating a security force, it is absolutely essential to define the limits of its activities. Without that, a legislative sanction is given to a large group of people without any restraints whatsoever. Clause 2 has been badly drafted and provides no protection at all. In fact, it allows the security force to conduct activities which the Government did not intend.

In the time remaining I should like to point out the dangers. In part, Clause 2 reads:

> "threats to the security of Canada" means

(a) espionage or sabotage that is against Canada or is detrimental to the interests of Canada or activities directed toward or in support of such espionage or sabotage,

However, the word "sabotage" is not defined. The dictionary defines that word as wanton destruction of equipment. That kind of thing happens frequently in Canada. I could point to industrial and labour disputes where machinery gets damaged. Surely it is not the intention of the Government to have the secret police investigate industrial and labour disputes, yet that definition allows them to do so. It is just one example of many loose and poor definitions.

The clause continues:

(b) foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person,

Let us examine that closely. It could mean that the director of this super-snooper force could begin an intrusive investigation of Japanese automobile dealers in Canada meeting in secret to determine their pricing policy. That is exactly what it could mean, but surely that is not what the Government intended. It has admitted that it did not intend that, yet it is allowing the secret service force to have the ability to participate in wide-ranging activities. Any time any force is given limits to their activities they tend to use them to the limit, and we are lucky if they do not exceed them. I have yet to see this proven otherwise.

If a citizen met discreetly and quietly with Chilean exiles opposed to the Pinochet regime with which Canada has domestic industrial relations, he or she could be in trouble. I could continue listing a number of examples. I think this situation is very dangerous and that it should be looked at carefully. Before this evening is over perhaps the Government will change its mind. If it does not, it should be warned that the people of Canada will not change their minds and they will have their retribution at election time.

I should like to continue referring to Clause 2. I have not reached the worst part as yet. It continues:

(c) activities within or relating to Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against person or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state,—

This means that the security force might investigate, and probably would investigate anyone who attended an Israel bond drive dinner or anyone who supported the PLO organization in Canada or the rebels in Afghanistan. Who knows? They could be under investigation by the force. Surely the Government did not mean to have the activities of such people investigated. Perhaps it did, but I cannot believe that. What possible excuse could the Government have for including such a wide definition?

Now I should like to turn to what is probably the worst definition of all. It should not even be in the Act. It reads:

(d) activities directed toward undermining by covert unlawful acts, or directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of, the constitutionally established system of government in Canada,

This goes to the fundamental right of Canadians to protest or dissent. It goes to the heart of the democratic system. It is a very delicate subject, I am quite aware of that. However, I should like to read into the record what John Starnes said, as reported in the June 18 edition of the Weekend Observer. I think he dealt with the point very well when he said:

The definition of politically motivated violence has been widened so that those engaging in relatively unimportant acts of political violence can become targets of the service.

The Bill defines subversion as "activities . . . directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow of the constitutionally established system of government in Canada." The McDonald Commission proposed the phrase, "the democratic system of government in Canada." A small but important distinction.

Presumably the definition in the Bill means the service, using all the means at its disposal, could investigate activities aimed at the separation of a province.

He went on to say that if the Government intended to resort to this kind of thing, it should make it very well known. That is exactly what this definition allows the service to do. Is it any wonder that the Government of Quebec is so upset by this piece of legislation?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is the Hon. Member referring to the amended Bill which contains the word "by violence"? I am not sure whether his quotation made reference to those two words.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, I agree that that is not a point of order. However, I am not referring to the old legislation. I am referring to the new one. I am well aware of the differences.

Be that as it may, this clause will be opposed. There are many separatist organizations out west. They are sincere in what they mean. They are running around rose-bushes and things of that nature. I do not agree with them, but I certainly agree with their right to exist. Just because of their political philosophy, they should not be investigated by a security service. In that regard this is the worst legislation we have ever had in the country. Our citizens certainly do not need political dissent triggering intrusive investigations. That is the one thing we do not need.

The definitions are far too broad. If anything in the Act is bad, it is Clause 2. The entire Bill could be cleaned up in a few areas. The Government could readily do this. I know the Government will say in reply that it has done so, but if we look at the last paragraph in Clause 2, it reads:

but does not include lawful advocacy, protest or dissent,—

Then it continues:

—unless carried on in conjunction with any of the activities referred to in paragraphs (a) to paragraph (d).

In other words, the Government does not want to exclude anything. That is the meanest bit of doubletake in draftsmanship I have ever seen.

I understand that I have a minute remaining. I plead once more with the Government to withdraw the Bill or to accept some changes so that it could at least be more acceptable to Canadians.

● (1850)

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a few questions to my colleague. First of all, I sincerely hope that, after the intervention of my colleague from Laurier (Mr. Berger), he did not mean to imply that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service would be unable to investigate, should any kind of organization seek to undermine Canada's constitutional regime through violent means. I do hope that is not what he meant, because that would pave the way for anarchists in Canada. I wish he would comment on that first part.

The other thing which has me worried is that it is somewhat difficult to find out just where the Progressive Conservative Party stands with respect to the creation of a civilian intelligence agency. The House knows the position of the Canadian Government: in light of the Mackenzie, McDonald and Pitfield reports, it proposes the creation of a civilian security intelligence service independent from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Then we have the New Democratic Party which is openly against the RCMP and its alleged activities and which, in the same breath, wants the RCMP to continue to work in the field of intelligence security. And then, the Progressive Conservative Party, which brings me to this question: can anyone tell us in clear, unequivocal and specific terms just what the position of the Progressive Conservative Party is?

In committee, it sounded as if they were against the creation of a civilian security intelligence agency, and yet four Progressive Conservative senators sat on the Pitfield committee and only one was against the creation of a civilian security intelligence agency.

What I would like to know is, what is the exact position of the Progressive Conservative Party, and what is the position of the Members of the Progressive Conservative caucus? Does their position differ from that of the caucus of senators, if indeed there is such a thing? And how can we reconcile the position expressed by the Progressive Conservative Party critic of the Solicitor General with the statements made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who tends to favour the creation of a civilian security intelligence agency?

[English]

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, I of course cannot speak for the Senate, the other place. I can say that the position that our Party has put forward has been consistent and clear. First, we recognize that there is a need for a service of the kind proposed in this Bill. We say ideally that service should be located as it is now, within the ranks of the RCMP. I think that answers the question. Is that what the Hon. Member wanted clarified?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I will preface my question with a comment. I find it rather interesting that there is not a single member of the Liberal Party who is prepared to stand and defend this Bill other than the Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary. I find that a most revealing indication of the nature of the real support and commitment to that legislation, the fact that during the entire period—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I allowed the first phrase, but I am afraid the Hon. Member cannot continue. He must direct his remarks to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer).

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer). Having sat with him in committee, I know that his personal views are very strongly in opposition to this legislation. Perhaps the Hon. Member might enlighten the House and, through the House, Canadians. I know that the Hon. Member has very strong views, but if his Party feels so strongly about this legislation, why did it not make any effort whatsoever to join with me as the representative of my Party in committee in attempting to block passage of this Bill? It was obvious that the Government was not prepared to accept any serious amendments. His Party was, unfortunately, silent on the predecessor Bill C-157. I wonder if the Hon. Member could enlighten the House as to why it was that at that crucial time, when perhaps the Conservative Party could have joined with the New Democratic Party in really going all out to block this attack on civil liberties, they stood by.

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, I am quite aware that one's perceptions of events are coloured by the position in which one is standing. The Hon. Member who asked the question sees a far different role for my Party than I see. We have opposed this legislation at every opportunity, including the long, long hours in committee. In this House we had speaker after speaking opposing this legislation. In fact, we put up more speakers than the NDP. We will continue to oppose it.

I fail to see how the Hon. Member can take the position he has unless it is purely for political capital. I would think that his interest in opposing this Bill is such that he would not attempt to make political capital out of it. This Bill is too important for that sort of thing. The Conservative Party recognizes that and opposes it most strenuously.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, certainly the record of that Party in committee will speak for itself. I take it from what the Hon. Member for Okanagan North is saying that, given the fact that the Conservative Party in the Senate has the ability to prevent this legislation, which we know is not amended as the Government refused to accept any amendments of substance, and there is only one week left on the parliamentary timetable before we rise on June 29, his Party will in fact match its tough rhetoric in this place. Is he prepared to indicate that Conservative Senators will take the action that they must take in order to block this Bill from proceeding? It is now up to them.

The only way that this attack on civil liberties of Canadians can be stopped is if Conservative Senators in the other place wake up to their responsibilities and block the Bill. Unless they co-operate with the Government in the Senate, that is exactly what they can do. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Okanagan North can indicate whether his Party is going to stick to its principles and to its guns and do what it can in the Senate to block this Bill, or is it going to let it slide through in the Senate?

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, my response must be the same as it was to the Hon. Member on the Government side. I do not speak for the other place. I know that in this House our Party has demonstrated its opposition to this Bill and we will continue to do so.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General of Canada for one more very short question.

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) said earlier that there had not been any major change. Is the Hon. Member who has just spoken willing to admit that Bill C-9 represents a greatly improved Bill C-157, considering that something like 40 amendments were tabled in January, 1984, that even before the Committee began its clause by clause discussion, seven amendments had been tabled by the Minister, and that further amendments were moved afterwards even though these amendments certainly might not be as important? Is the Hon. Member willing to admit that we now have before us a greatly improved Bill C-157 and that a great majority of witnesses have said so?

[English]

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, of course I am prepared to admit that Bill C-9 is better than the first one the Minister brought forward, which was an insult to the intelligence of Canadians. The Minister continues to point to that fact and I admit that. I also admit that there are a few minor improvements to the Bill from when it was first presented; but no substantial amendments were made to this Bill in the House of Commons committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The period for questions and comments has expired.

• (1900)

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, as we debate the last stage of Bill C-9 I cannot escape the sense of sadness and melancholy that I feel. After sitting and voting until five o'clock this morning, I think the nerves of all of us are frayed and we feel physically and emotionally exhausted. I believe that is true for all Members of the House.

Despite all of the efforts displayed by the combined Opposition, the Government has refused to budge. We have used almost every instrument that is available to an Opposition to impress upon the Government our fears and uncertainties about the security legislation. The Government has refused to consider seriously any and all of our representations.

Members of the two opposition Parties do not oppose this legislation because we wish to score some political points or play some political games. We have a very genuine fear that the secret service agency to be established by this Bill will pose serious threats to the civil liberties of Canadians and hamper genuine and legitimate dissent. We are not alone in our fears. Church groups, the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, and all of the provincial Attorneys General share our fears. Yet the Government continues to ignore these very real fears. It abuses it majority by blocking amendments, by imposing closure and by ramming this Bill through the House.

I am still genuinely puzzled why the Government insists it needs such wide powers over the lives of individual Canadians. Government Members, and particularly the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), have not proven that a state of anarchy or insurrection exists in Canada. They have not shown that a threat exists with which the Government does not already have the means to deal. Why when does it need a secret police service with more powers than any other police force that exists in any democratic country? Are there greater threats being made by terrorists or subversives in Canada than in the United States, Italy, Germany or Great Britain? Certainly the Government has not even attempted to prove that this is so. Why then is the Government so insistent on getting this legislation through the House without any amendments?

Some Liberal Members have stated that Bill C-9 is what the McDonald Commission recommended. However, that is entirely false. Government Members have claimed that this Bill will rectify the injustices and illegal acts that were committed during the Quebec crisis. Sadly, I find this argument to be an example of Orwellian doublespeak. It was this Liberal Government that imposed the War Measures Act and that determined the manner in which it would deal with the FLQ threat. History has now shown that the Liberal Government overreacted. To absolve themselves of their collective guilt, Liberal Members have attempted to make the RCMP the scapegoat, and they have used the McDonald Commission report as an excuse to make legal all of the illegal acts that occurred. It is cynical, it is Orwellian, and it is repugnant to reasonable men and women.

I am still at a very genuine loss to understand why the Government wants this legislation so badly now. Perhaps some time in the future we will discover the real reason why this is so. We cannot accept the half-baked arguments that government Members have proposed as justification for this legislation. There is another reason for this, which we do not know. Another reason exists in the background of which Canadians are not aware. Hopefully, at some point in history, the complete truth will be known why the Government wanted this legislation so desperately at this time.

Why have we been so adamant in our opposition to this Bill? First, as many Members on this side of the House have indicated, and as others who have brought forward briefs and presentations have also indicated, the definitions in the Bill are much too loose. For example, the definition of what constitutes a threat to the security of Canada is so loosely worded that all sorts of very legitimate political organizations and activities can be considered a threat to Canadian security. On the domestic front it could mean that unemployed workers who are involved in demonstrations, farmers who are going into bankruptcy and using tractors in demonstrations, and peace groups and activists involved in peace marches and in collecting petitions, could all be defined as a threat to the security of Canada.

We are not saying that those groups will be defined in such a way, but we are saying that there are enough holes in this proposed legislation that one individual person obsessed with his notion of the nature of Canadian society could decide that these farm groups, work groups, and peace groups constitute a threat to Canadian society. As such, the people involved in those organizations can have their telephones tapped, their medical records and taxation records looked into, their homes broken into at any time of the night, and they can essentially lose their basic civil liberties as Canadian citizens.

The second reason why we are so afraid of this piece of legislation is the nature of the powers it gives to this agency. The powers are much too wide. They are frightening. They are repugnant to Canadian traditions and to the Canadian way of life. For the Government even to dare to enter Parliament with a type of legislation that gives these powers to a group of men and women should be an unthinkable act. Yet this Government has, in the dying days of this Parliament, done just that.

The third area with which we are concerned is the area of accountability. If we need a secret service agency with wide powers, then at least we must do everything possible to make certain that that agency has some accountability. If we are at all concerned that this agency does not get away with itself, then we must put in place a method of checks and balances so that this agency can be accountable and so that the men and women who are in charge of this agency are accountable to people outside the agency. The accountability provided for by this legislation is much too weak, and in fact, hardly exists at all.

Government Members will, of course, say that this agency cannot get away with itself. We cannot accept that argument. There are too many examples of bureaucracies under this Liberal régime running away with themselves. The most recent and glaring example of this is, of course, the recent controversy surrounding Revenue Canada. It is a Department which has no real policing powers or policing mandate, yet it created an entire internal police network that rode roughshod over individual civil liberties of the Canadian people.

We are very much afraid that this security agency can run away with itself in the same fashion. We are very much concerned that a secret police bureaucracy can be created that will no longer be held accountable to its political masters. The history of the Liberal Government in this country should be a fair warning to all of us that this indeed can happen.

Administratively the Liberals have shown themselves to be quite incompetent. They cannot even hold their own bureaucracy in check. How well can the present Solicitor General, with his great brilliance, be able to hold in check the monster he is creating? I have a personal admiration and respect for the Solicitor General as a human being, but I have no confidence in the Solicitor General having the smarts to be able to control the secret service agency which he is creating. In fact I would suggest that he is the very opposite—relatively incompetent on that matter.

We have challenged the Government to hold an election on this issue. We have told the Government that if this is such an important item it should come out of the closet, go public and tell the Canadian people exactly why we need this agency and why these policing powers are necessary. What threats exist to the security and well-being of the people of Canada? Of course government Members react to that suggestion by laughing at us.

Going through the process of the debate on this legislation at second reading, and now third reading, the one area which I find particularly saddening is the lack of media attention and concern about this Bill. Surely it is the duty of the media to inform Canadians on all matters which directly affect them. Surely the legislation with which we are dealing today has tremendous impact on the fundamental freedoms of Canadians.

The debate on this Bill should have been front-page news. All of the arguments should have been reported, pro and con. Had we had more attentive media and had the media insisted that the debate on this Bill be a high item on the social agenda that Canadians would read and talk about, the Government would have accepted more amendments. Had the media played their role, the Government would never have been allowed to get away with introducing closure. In fact, had there been an attentive media, more Liberal Members of Parliament would have stood to justify the legislation. Unfortunately, the media have not played their true and important role in this matter.

In a very few days this Bill will receive Royal Assent and it will be law. We can only hope and pray that the men and women who will have unprecedented powers over their fellow Canadians will use those powers judiciously and wisely. I hope that they will not cynically dismiss the fears and concerns of the churches, the provincial Attorneys General, and the civil liberties unions, as just the outpouring of a bunch of touchies and feelies. I hope these men and women will not ignore what members of the Opposition in the House of Commons have been saying. After all, we are the representatives of the people. I fervently hope that these men and women do not become consumed by their own visions of what Canadian society should be, and that will not be allowed to harass and intrude into the private lives of Canadians whose visions are different from theirs.

We face a very uncertain future. It is a future of tremendous technological changes. Many of these technological changes will endanger the private rights and security of Canadians.

The computerization of medical and legal files, electronic banking, border transfer of data, and some of the most sophisticated electronic devices to listen to conversations, are readily available on the market today. All these new devices and all these new social institutions will restrict individual privacy. We expected legislation which would protect individual Canadians rather than legislation which will help to facilitate the invasion of the privacy of individual Canadians.

As Canadian society moves into the future, it will encounter different social and economic changes and upheavals. Some individuals will be displaced. Today we see hundreds and thousands of men and women who are not able to find work. In today's Globe and Mail there was an article about the slave trade in Calgary. Men gather in a block area, and people drive by in trucks and vans to pick up unemployed men and hire them as labourers for a day. Those men do not have any protection in terms of working conditions or minimum wage standards.

Every day in the City of Vancouver there are four or five block-long line-ups of young Canadian men and women who are waiting to get a sandwich because that is their only source of food. Indeed, these are difficult times for many Canadians. These are times in which it is inevitable that some will get angry at the conditions in which they have to live their lives. For these people to have a secret service agency on top of that, will drive some of them underground. I predict that the existence of a secret service agency will create the opposite effect than what was intended by this Bill. It will create more subversives. It is like a mirror image—the one creates the other. When Canadians fear that they can no longer advocate the changing of the conditions in which they and their fellow citizens must live, and that they are afraid that a secret service agency will spy on them because they are advocating some change in the power and in the economic structure of this country, then they will feel that they must go underground. The one does create the other.

As we move into a very insecure future, this piece of legislation will not help us to find a new and just future for Canadian men and women. It will have the opposite effect. It is a sad day for this Parliament. This great democratic institution will pass into law a Bill which limits and restricts democracy. Democracy is the most fragile of flowers. The experience of men and women in the history of our democratic race is a very recent experience. It is a very fragile flower indeed, which is being attacked by changing conditions as we move into the future. I am afraid that what the Government has proposed and what it is asking us to pass in this session is a Bill which will help destroy that flower. In the name of attempting to protect it, the very mechanism which it is creating to protect democracy becomes a threat to democracy. The Government has been unwilling to listen to us and to take seriously our fears and representations. It has been adamant in pushing this Bill through the House. I must return to the question—Why?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Gourde: Questions or comments, Mr. Speaker. Earlier, the Hon. Member referred to the fact that he had challenged us to call an election on the basis of Bill C-9, to establish a Canadian Security Intelligence Agency. I have now been sitting in this place for a little over three years. If we had acted on the recommendations of the New Democratic Party, we would have had, if I am not mistaken, at least three general elections. I came here during the debate on the constitutional review when we were challenged to call a general election. Last year, I followed very closely the Crow rates review process. Once more, we were challenged to call a general election. We are now debating the establishment of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and, once more, we are challenged to call a general election.

Well, I will reply to the Hon. Members that we shall certainly be calling a general election within the next few weeks and I challenge them to have a fraction of the results that the Liberal Party will get since it will form the next Government.

Mr. Laniel: I think that half of them will no longer be here!

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, after my trip to Regina and Vancouver in Western Canada last year, I was able to see how isolated the NDP Members are in their ivory towers and how far they are from the people, because last year, mayors in the Vancouver area criticized them for having made a great many more representations on behalf of some of their own Members than on behalf of the people in their constituencies. At that time, the Hon. Member for Burnaby—

[English]

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is grossly misrepresenting the facts. In fact the "mayors" in question were one Liberal mayor who suggested that a local New Democratic Party Member of Parliament was not sticking to liberal line but instead was defending the interests of his constituents. We make no apologies, Mr. Speaker, for standing up for the people we represent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That, of course, is not a point of order. It is a point of debate.

I also suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary he should put questions to the Member who spoke.

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, I thought this was a period of comments and questions. This is why I had a few comments.

Mr. Crosbie: What is the question?

Mr. Gourde: I very well remember the mayor who was there. He represented a community of mayors, somewhat like municipal regions we have in our Quebec constituencies.

I would like to know, from the Hon. Member who spoke of the problems that might stem from the establishment of a new Security Information agency, whether he is fully aware of the review and control process in the Canadian Security Intelligence Agency. Did he inform the people correctly, referring to the review by the judicial process, by the Minister, by the Inspector General, by the Review Committee, whose Members are appointed in consultation with the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of any party holding at least 12 seats in this House? Did the Hon. Member have the decency to tell the people in his constituency and Canada what impact is at stake in the legislation?

[English]

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I have informed my constituents that the Government is afraid to have this agency reviewed by their representatives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there any other Members wishing to put questions or make comments?

Continuing debate.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to speak on this particular piece of legislation. I am glad I am going to have the opportunity tonight before the Government carries this to a vote and uses its majority to pass it through the House. By the way, Mr. Speaker, I was away last night on a mission. I was attempting to overthrow the Government. I have been engaged in many missions in recent days attempting to overthrow the Government. I consider it to be a patriotic duty of anyone in this country who has a grain of common sense, to attempt to overthrow this Government. I am constantly at it. That is why I am not in sympathy with the purpose of the Bill, to tell you the truth. I feel that anyone who attempts to overthrow this Government is doing a public service.

I just mention that I was away last night, Mr. Speaker, because I missed the performance which went on here last night when this institution sat through hour after hour of voting on amendments until 5 a.m. in the morning, as I understand it.

Mr. Lambert: Senseless.

Mr. Crosbie: Not only senseless but useless, and a shame to the institution. If we cannot find a better way, Mr. Speaker, to operate this House, or a better way to record votes in this House, then the House may as well pass on, because anyone in Canada who pays any attention to it will lose any respect they have for it. As a matter of fact, as one can observe from the Question Period, Mr. Speaker, and how it has degenerated in the last couple of months, the institution is just about on its last legs, in any event. You can no longer expect an answer from the Ministers on any subject of any sense whatsoever. In the economic area, of course, it is worse than in any other. That is epitomized in the kind of answers to questions which we heard here this afternoon.

This country is staggering toward another recession, Mr. Speaker, with interest rates about to go up, the bank rate up, the Canadian dollar, with no underpinning to it at all, in a tremendously vulnerable state, and one asks a question of the Minister, who is almost like a automaton in the response he gives—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. It has been drawn to the attention of the Chair that the subject for debate is Bill C-9.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, what I am addressing now is the intelligence of members of the Government. This is a Bill called "The Canadian Security Intelligence Service", and I am pointing out there is no one on the government side who has any intelligence, much less any security. So I feel, Mr. Speaker, I am quite relevant. But I will, of course, be guided by your wisdom. You have been a Member of this House far longer than you deserve to be, and you have a lot of experience and I will, naturally, be guided—

Mr. Lumley: Have some respect for the Chair.

Mr. Crosbie: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will move on to another subject. I have not had the chance to speak to this Bill before. I do not pretend to have any expertise.

Mr. Blaikie: It shows.

Mr. Crosbie: I think I heard a mumble from the Hon. Member from bird's nest, Winnipeg-bird's nest, who sits there behind his beard, Mr. Speaker. He has a lot of security. He has a security blanket plastered all over his face. He has the audacity to interrupt me when I am trying to speak on this subject for the first time in this House.

One of the regrets of being a Member of the House of Commons is that you do not have the time, Mr. Speaker, to get involved in all of the areas in which you would like to be involved. This is an area in which I would like to have some expertise but have not because I am busy in other areas and, therefore, have not been able to follow it with the close attention I otherwise would have devoted to it. However, I hope I have a few observations to make that will not be too repetitious.

I was listening to the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), who made an eloquent speech here tonight, and I heard him bewailing the fact that this legislation had been presented to the House and that the Liberal Government was using its majority to impose closure and push this through the House. I thought to myself what poetic justice this is. There are two ways of voting for a Liberal Government, as you know, Mr. Speaker. One way is you vote for the Liberal candidate, and the other way is you vote for the NDP candidate. A vote for the NDP is a vote to have a Liberal Government in Canada, as we saw in December—

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, first of all there are certain questions about the relevance of this misstatement of fact with respect to the Bill before the House. More important, Mr. Speaker, I believe the people of Canada know that it is the Tories who vote twice as often with the Liberals than the NDP do. So the record should be put straight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That, of course, is not a point of order. It is a point of debate. However, the Hon. Member for St. John's West may try to get back to Bill C-9.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, Mr. Speaker. What I am saying is that the New Democratic Party is responsible for this Bill. Those Hon. Members made it possible for the Liberals to form a Government in Canada and they have to bear equal responsibility with the Government for the legislation which comes before this House. The NDP are here in a hypocritical pose, bewailing the fact that their partners whom they put in power have brought in this legislation that they do not like. If these gentlemen stop interrupting me I will get from point to point and you will follow my reasoning and you will be fascinated with the tenuous connections that follow between all the points.

• (1930)

Mr. Kaplan: We already are.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, as I say, I have no great knowledge about this Bill. It is enough for me to know that the present Solicitor General introduced it to make me shudder at the effect it might have if it goes through the House. One thing that particularly annoys me is that the Government will not agree to a parliamentary oversight committee. We are to have a review committee which, as I understand it, is to be composed of persons who have been Privy Councillors. That was bad enough. We have had some persons sworn into the Privy Council of Canada who I would not want reviewing anything. Once we successfully got them out of power, I certainly would not want them back reviewing anything else. The fact that you have been a Privy Councillor does not mean that you are going to be attentive to your duties or that you have the capacity or interest to properly oversee the security service, or look at the rights of the public and make sure that abuses do not occur.

It is bad enough that this House will not have a parliamentary oversight committee, I am further advised that the Government has stated that if it wishes to appoint someone to the review committee who is not a Privy Councillor, it will simply swear him into the Privy Council and then appoint him to this review committee. If anyone thought there was some particular value to having been a Cabinet Minister and sworn into the Privy Council, that is all gone. It was a thin hope in any event, but the fact that someone could just be taken off the street—

Mr. Crosby: Michael Pitfield.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, he is one possibility. Or Trotters McCarthy. It could be Tommy Toe. It could be anyone brought in off the street, sworn into the Privy Council and appointed to the review committee. That is not my idea of assurance to the people of Canada that they are going to have an oversight committee with the courage, independence and resourcefulness to see that this really works.

Just compare us with the United States of America. Compare the miserable state this House of Commons is in, this legislative body, with the United States. It has been emasculated and Members are without power. The only people in this House who have any power at all are Members of the Cabinet. Today they do not have any power; they are all sitting around stewing and wondering if Pierre Elliott Turner is going to take them into his Cabinet or not. They have had their safe berth with the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who is very lackadaisical about performance. He does not care whether they perform or do not perform.

But now there is a new Liberal Leader so even the present Cabinet Ministers do not have power at the moment, except for the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). He slithered across the convention floor on Saturday to make sure—now, I am addressing the Bill, Mr. Speaker, because I am talking about security. The Deputy Prime Minister wanted some security last Saturday and he saw his security blanket sitting in the Turner box and he slithered over, as I said the other day, just like a worried crab that spots a dead herring in the moonlight. He went right for the old rotten herring. Once again he illustrated the fact that he is the most security conscious Member of the Government.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) was not far behind, of course. He could hardly wait for the first ballot to be counted before he made his break for security. He showed his intelligence. There were several other Members not so security conscious. They are more intelligent. They went with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). God knows where they are going to end up. They may end up as members of this review committee or some other big job like that.

In any event, here we have a situation which epitomizes the low estate of the Canadian House of Commons, the legislature in Canada, if we compare it with the U.S. Their parliamentary system has survived to the present day with the legislators having some real power. When President Reagan and the executive branch wish to encourage an invasion of Nicaragua or finance some irregular troops or former Nicaraguans, or whoever they might be, to invade and interfere with the internal security of Nicaragua, they have an oversight committee in the U.S. Congress which has some powers. It is composed of Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The Senator from New York, the big Irishman—

Mr. Darling: Patrick Moynihan.

Mr. Crosbie: —Senator Moynihan, just by his threat to leave the vice-chairmanship of that committee, was able to bring about a change of policy in the U.S. and have the Government state that it was no longer going to use subversive techniques to try and overthrow the Government of Nicaragua. That is something meaningful. The members of that legislative body have some meaningful power and influence. That is what we should have in this legislation. This should apply not only with respect to the security intelligence review committee, it should happen with all committees.

Why does the Government not want help in controlling the bureaucracy? It is not just that we need to control the security intelligence service. We have to have special techniques for that because a lot of their work must be secret. But the Government generally needs assistance in controlling the bureaucracy as a whole. Why not use the 282 Members we have elected to this House for that purpose? Why should the Government carry on, satisfied, with the Members of the Opposition having no real authority or power? Yes, when Question Period comes along we can question the Government and show our anger, dismay and all the rest of it. But that is not real power.

The back-benchers on the Government side have no real power either. Some of them are fairly decent people. I often say that I know many Liberals, and some of them are very good friends of mine, but would you have one married to your sister? No, not if you could avoid it. Nevertheless, there are some very good people in the Government backbenches who should be utilized.

Mr. Bloomfield: What about your brother?

Mr. Crosbie: I know I will always be looked after by the Government opposite. They put me brother in charge of Fisheries Products International Limited. I know if he needs an executive assistant, they will fire me in there too. I hope I never have to do that, however.

The point I am trying to make is a serious one. There are many good Members on the Government side and on this side who would be more than happy and delighted to serve on committees such as this, and who have the talent and the ability. They would make the time to do it. Those are the people who should be doing it, the people who represent the public. The public knows, for example, that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), if they approach him on a security intelligence problem or something like that, will be interested. He has been in public life for many years and is identifiable as a public figure. He is still active. If there was some irregularity, he would be bound to see that it was followed up. If he was a member of this review committee, he would get to the bottom of it. If he could not get satisfaction behind the scenes, he would get it publicly by simply asking questions in the House, or wherever it might be. That is the kind of person we need on the review committee.

I am not quite sure how many members it is supposed to have. But supposing there are five, then of course three should be from the Opposition and two from the Government. There should always be a majority from the Opposition who are not going to be embarrassed if the Government has to be embarrassed to rectify some injustice which has occurred.

That is one of the reasons I am very happy to support the position of our Party with respect to this Bill. There is a major defect in the review of these operations alone. We all know we have to have a security service, but why does the Government not know that in addition to a security service we need to be in a position to defend ourselves effectively? It makes one a bit sick to see the pressure put on to put this Bill through the House when we know the Government does not care about the defence effectiveness of Canada whatsoever. It has ignored our NATO obligations and responsibilities for donkey's years, for 16 years at least, since the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who told me today that he is going, took office. That is the first time I really believed he was going. I asked him this afternoon and he said that yes, he was going to resign. He confirmed it. I do not think that he would disappoint me by saying one thing in the House and doing something different. For the first time, Mr. Speaker, I really got the impression that the Prime Minister is going to go. More is the pity that he did not wait till we had defeated him before he went. Nevertheless, we wish him well in his retirement. He would be a dandy to have on this committee, by the way.

An Hon. Member: You were taking too long. He could not wait any more. He gave up on you guys.

Mr. Crosbie: He gave up on us having the chance to defeat him. We wish him well anyway. Pass that on to him, please; you never know when you might need his goodwill. He might not mean what he said today.

The Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) mentioned a more attentive media. One thing we cannot count on is for the media to be the protector of the civil liberties and rights of the Canadian citizen in this day and age. The media are the froth and the foam on the river of life. That is all they are. They are only skin deep. They are only on the surface. The media no longer dig deeply into anything. They are just prepared to get their bons mots or their 30-second quote. Then they run off to the newsroom and get it on the air and go and have a beer at the press club. If we are going to depend on the media to defend us against the transgressions of the security service, God help us! We will be in pretty slack shape. They are just a liver spot on the escutcheon of mankind. We cannot depend on the media to defend us.

The kind of people we could depend on are cantankerous Members of this House, Members who are crusty, independent, saucy, impatient, fed up, nasty and obnoxious. You would not want to bump into them in the dark. That is the type of person that we need.

Mr. Lumley: That sounds like the Tory caucus!

Mr. Crosbie: Have I described anybody over there?

Mr. Lumley: You have been in the Tory caucus too long, John.

Mr. Crosbie: These are the kinds of persons we want on an effective committee to protect us.

How many more points have I, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Blaikie: You have not made any so far.

Mr. Crosbie: Winnipeg-Birds Nest pipes up. Is there a birdbrain to match that bird's nest I wonder?

In my final couple of minutes I will say that the Government has not made any pretence of making a real effort even to put Canada in a position where we can defend our own shores or control our own coastal waters. That is one of the things that really offends me. I am from an island, Mr. Speaker, the island of Newfoundland. If we need to be defended we need a navy and an air force. As I have said here before, the people in Newfoundland cannot sleep at night because they do not know the day or the moment that St. Pierre et Miquelon is going to invade. Who can prevent St. Pierre et Miquelon from invading Newfoundland? We may wake up one day French. In a way that would solve my problem, Mr. Speaker. I would be a French citizen. Nobody could say that I was not. I might even learn the language more rapidly than I am now.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, it well behooves a government that is not prepared to devote sufficient resources to provide adequate defence forces to control and patrol our own territory to ask us to pass a Bill with the imperfections of this one and to rush it through in the last moments of this Parliament.

The NDP Member for Regina East suggested that an election be held. There are many reasons for having an election today, Mr. Speaker. This is a Government that has not governed this country—and I am going to be generous about it—certainly since January.

I have to wind up my remarks. I am delighted, Mr. Speaker, that I had a chance to give you some of my views on security and intelligence. I vote against this Bill confident in the fact that I am right in doing so for some of the reasons that I have outlined tonight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a 10-minute period for questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the honourable and distinguished Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) a question. I note that he talked of subversion. He was recently on a subversive mission to my constituency attempting to undermine the foundations of democracy in my constituency in support of one of his political cronies.

The Member for St. John's West has waxed eloquent about the fact that he does not believe that the Conservative Party should be assisting the Government in any way in rushing this Bill through the House. I am very pleased that at the last minute of the debates in this House the Tory Party has finally joined with us in opposing the Bill.

I would like to ask the Member for St. John's West a specific question. There is an opportunity for the Conservative Party to make its apparent opposition to this dangerous legislation a reality. That opportunity will come next week when the Hon. Member's colleagues in the Senate are asked to co-operate and play a little game of footsy with the Government to rush this Bill through in a week. If the Party of the Member for St. John's West is serious about stopping this legislation which is such a threat to civil liberties, are the Conservative Senators going to play footsy with their Liberal colleagues and ram this Bill through? Or are they going to stick to their principles, such as they are, and do what they can to prevent this Bill from passing the Senate next week?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Member for Burnaby asked that question. By the way, I was to the hon. gentleman's district last week. We had to turn away thousands.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): They did not want to come; that is why you turned them away.

Mr. Blaikie: Did you say thousands were turning away?

Mr. Crosbie: Everywhere I went there they asked with some mystification where their MP was. I said: "I do not know where he was but I know where he is not; he is not here today and I have come in his place to deliver a message". The message, Mr. Speaker, you may imagine, is not one which would warm the cockles of the heart of the Member for Burnaby. While I was there I met the new Member for Burnaby after the next election. The hon. gentleman will be languishing before the next election is over.

On your question, the way it is with Conservative Senators is this. There are not too many of them. They are very infrequent.

Mr. Blaikie: They are old.

Mr. Crosbie: Some of them are well up in years. They are independent thinkers. They are civil libertarians and we cannot taken any liberties with them. We cannot impose any rigid discipline on them. They were appointed to the Senate to speak and think for themselves. They were not appointed as Liberals to do what they are told. A Liberal is never appointed to speak and think for himself. He is appointed to speak and think as his Whip tells him. You can see that here in the House, Mr. Speaker. When the Whip is here you can see him sending communications by way of "photovaletic" brain cells to the Liberals here when they speak and vote in the House. We do not have the same arrangement with our Senators so I cannot tell the hon. gentleman what they are going to do. They are not going to force a vote in the Senate until 5 a.m. It would clean the place out. There would not be one survivor. They are not going to commit mass murder by forcing votes on 175 amendments. But you can be sure that they will strike a vote for liberty when this Bill goes before the Senate.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, as always, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is extremely entertaining. This must be one of the best and most fun-filled shows in the country when he speaks.

I wish to ask him a question about the operations of the CIA in the United States, since he was referring to its operations in Nicaragua and other countries. Did he mean by his references that he was happy with the operations of the CIA? Further, does he know what the mandate of the CIA is and how it compares to the mandate of the security service that we are considering this evening?

It is my understanding that the mandate of the CIA is established by each incoming President, often by secret directive. For example, President Carter, wanting to limit the mandate of the CIA to a certain extent, passed a directive stating that the CIA should not engage in political assassinations in carrying out its mandate. Is he happy with the controls on the CIA? How does he compare them to the controls that we have established here for the Canadian Intelligence Security Service?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, by no means am I an expert on the CIA. Of course I read the popular magazines and try to keep up on events.

The only political assassination that I have seen in recent years was the political assassination that occurred last Saturday when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) was assassinated politically by his colleagues in the Liberal Party who loved him so much and felt that his honesty and emotions were the greatest of any member of the Party. They felt that he had all of the virtues that a good Liberal could possibly have, and then turned around and assassinated him, led by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) who sunk the dirk in most decisively at the dirty last moment that he could do it, by walking across to the box of the incoming Prime Minister. All I know about political assassinations is what I saw last Saturday. I happened to be down at the very scene of the crime.

With respect to the CIA, I do not know what their instructions are. I just know that the CIA is a body that needs to be carefully watched. I know that the Congress of the United States of America has two committees of members of that Congress who oversee the CIA. I know that, even so, members of those committees are very loath to embarrass the CIA or the Government publicly, and are very careful not to do so.

However, if the committees that were overseeing the CIA were all appointed by the executive and not by members of the legislative branch of their governmental structure there, there would be no checks and balances on the CIA at all. That is why I made the comparison because I do not consider the committee that will be set up and appointed by the Government of Canada, the executive branch of which is the Cabinet, and not by a committee of the House, to be any check or balance on the security service whatsoever. It could quickly get out of hand again, just as it got out of hand in the early 1970s.

It was the Member for Regina East (Mr. Ogle) who mentioned that we can see in this country how easily we can panic, and how easily people panicked when the Pierre Laporte murder took place in Quebec a few years ago.

I have only had 20 minutes to speak. If the House would grant me some more time I would advance further arguments why I do not favour the Bill. However, that is my reference to the CIA. I happen to think that the CIA has too much power as well, but at least in the United States they have some checks and balances through committees of the Congress.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no further questions or comments, continuing debate.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I had some rather testy remarks to address to the House about the charade it went through with regard to voting clause by clause on the amendments. Never in my life have I seen such a base demonstration of an abuse of the rules by people who should have known better and who had lost total contact with one another.

There was a way to conduct that vote. It seems to me that having had to do much the same thing on legislation that was as complex as this and on which many amendments were put, three negotiators on behalf of the respective parties in the House were soon able to sift the wheat from the chaff and insist that there should be recorded votes on only those points of importance.

Frankly, last night we were being asked to vote on a lot of drivel, although relative drivel as far as the importance of the particular clauses were concerned.

Having said that, I can only say that, on reflection, I was amazed at the moderation of my words. The point is that many Members on both sides of the House have commended me for those remarks.

This is likely my last opportunity to address the House because I am going on a five-day mission to the Atlantic Provinces to receive parliamentarians from one of our European friends. I am to return next Thursday, when there may not be an opportunity to address the House. We will then be adjourning.

It is quite conceivable that we might resume on September 12. I see Hon. Members shaking their heads. I want to point out to them that their idea of getting attractive candidates quickly in western Canada is just a myth in the minds of those in central Canada. No matter what the importance may be of an individual or the fact that he may have been given a high profile in the newspapers, it will not be possible for that person to give an immediate yes or no answer to a Liberal candidacy in western Canada. Therefore, I may have an opportunity in September to address the House.

However, I pray for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, to avail myself as others have who are retiring from the House of Commons, to say thank you to my colleagues and express appreciation for being able to work with many of them. At times I have been known to be a little testy—

Mr. Evans: Never!

Mr. Lumley: Don't get soft now.

Mr. Lambert: —with a short fuse. But may I say that while I violently disagree with ideas as expressed at times, over the 27 years there are very few people who have come to the House of Commons about whom I could say I disliked them personally. Some I liked a great deal more than others. We all have those preferences. We have some contacts.

It has been my lot to be on this side of the House for 20 years. While we sometimes say harsh things about the actions or inactions of Ministers, we knew them when they were like ourselves, part of the foot soldiery of the House, fighting in the trenches of the committees, and we got to know them rather well. They were decent chaps.

I do not like to be patronizing and say the same thing about the lady Members who have been with us all through those years. To say they were "decent chaps" I do not think is accepted in that sense! It was an honour to serve with them and we enjoyed their influence in the House. My only regret is that we did not have many more. I am not going to pick anyone out except one, the former High Commissioner for Canada in Great Britain, who is now part of the Macdonald Commission. When she was here, her presence graced the House.

My colleague opposite me, the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel), came here in 1962. I recall many people who came here as freshmen in 1962 who were bright, perky young Members on the back row on this side as I sat in the Chair where you are now, Mr. Speaker, and I recognized that they were a pretty hardy breed.

Mr. Laniel: And much younger!

Mr. Lambert: Yes, much younger then. Twenty-two years have passed and it is remarkable how much 22 can add to a man's life when he starts out in his late 30s or early 40s.

There are many things in this House that one would want to see changed. My colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), alluded to something that could happen in the United States Senate which has a singular effect on changing administration policy. It is very difficult to make those changes here, but it should be possible. The ordinary Member on the Government side of the House should be released from the overpowering albatross of Cabinet control, of everything that moves or breathes in the Chamber, and so have some independence of thought.

One has only to go back to the books of 1920 describing the lives of the people who were the first bureaucrats, the mandarins in the administration of the Public Service. The philosophy is still the same. Gracious me, I heard an analysis of Bill C-24 on the radio this afternoon. It just happens that I have been very active on the committee hearing that Bill. One can see the almost Machiavellian hand of bureaucratic control that is being imposed through the net of Crown Corporations, not only Crown Corporations of a business type, but the cultural ones in particular. The Government has now reneged on its position. We see now that directors general of the National Arts Centre and people in the Canada Council were intimidated by telephone calls not to object to Cabinet power to appoint. We hope we will get the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) before the committee if the Government majority will allow the motion to be put by my colleague the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) to the effect that the Minister and his deputy minister appear before the committee. That is as it should be.

I want to see more power and better services for individual Members. I want to thank the officers of the House who have served over the years. One also has to say goodbye to constituents, but one does not do it here because they are not present. As far as that goes, I think I have served them reasonably well as a parliamentarian. I did not have that opportunity, nor could I, nor would I, of being a Member of Parliament and conducting, shall we say, full practice of law at the same time, because I lived 46 hours away by train when I was first elected. Then it became 14 hours' flying time, and it is now three and a half to four hours.

Having said all that, Mr. Speaker, and having said some other things the other night on my motion with regard to the Commissioners of Internal Economy, I would like to say a few words about this Bill. I was torn really, I felt in a dilemma, over the proposal because I felt, and I still do, that ideally it would be better for a civilian intelligence agency to look after that side of the business and for the RCMP to concentrate upon being the federal police force and to carry out any of its duties that might involve the RCMP with the operation of civil intelligence and so forth. I said ideally. There I think I share the opinion of many of my colleagues. But having gone into this Bill rather more deeply in asking questions, particularly the one that was answered the other day by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) himself as to why does the Director of this agency, why does the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and why do three or four other directors who have the rank of deputy minister now, in the last 15 years and in this case with the implementation of this legislation, report through the Deputy Solicitor General? The answer given to me was fashioned by the bureaucrats. It was self-serving. The Minister shakes his head.

Mr. Kaplan: I shake my head because it was my own answer.

Mr. Lambert: The Minister has been under that influence so much that he cannot escape it. I want to tell him that I was a Member and knew the commissioners of the RCMP at the time the change was made. Hitherto the Commissioner reported directly to the Minister, but then the force suffered the indignity of having its Commissioner report to a deputy solicitor general. It is the same with this Bill.

The Minister may say that he prefers to read an additional set of condensed memos of a Solicitor General in addition to the files and the recommendations he will see from the heads of the services who report directly to him. I am one of those who asks why hire watchdogs and have someone else do the barking? Or another good lesson for a Cabinet Minister is why hire a watchdog and do your own barking? In other words, you do all the messing around down below and cannot keep your hands off the Department.

This is one of the fundamental reasons I do not like this particular Bill. I am awfully uncomfortable about the definition of "subversive". Of course, I share the total unease of my colleagues and of, I am sure, some Government Members with regard to the review committee.

Turning to Clause 6(3), it reads as follows:

Directions issued by the Minister under subsection (2) shall be deemed not to be satutory instruments for the purposes of the Statutory Instruments Act.

Why not? It is because they will escape review. It is unfortunate that the Senate of Canada does not have the same power as the Senate of Australia. The power of the Australian Senate with regard to the Statutory Instruments Act is that statutory instruments can be revoked if it is felt that they are improper. When the Statutory Instruments Act was passed, if I recall and subject to error, the future Prime Minister was Minister of Justice. It is the biggest mish-mash which exists. First, it allowed the mandarinate to determine what were statutory instruments and thereby remove as much as possible some of the directives from public examination by the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

Have Hon. Members seen—and I think it was the only time it was ever attempted—the review section in the Statutory Instruments Act wherein there are positive reviews and negative reviews, wherein are written rules of procedure for the House and for the other place which have never been incorporated into our rules and procedures? In fact, the last special committee looking into procedure totally ignored the review provisions in the Statutory Instruments Act.

My last point concerns the responsibilities of the Director. For the general operational policies of the service, he must consult with the Deputy Minister. If the Director or any of his designated employed persons seeks a warrant or the renewal of a warrant, it has to be done in consultation with the Deputy Minister.

Briefly, notwithstanding the charade on votes last night and this morning, notwithstanding a general sympathy which I have in separating the roles of the RCMP, and notwithstanding what I think is a more proper central intelligence service, I will vote against this Bill. The Bill as it stands before us is a thoroughly bad one in its main provisions.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I should like for the moment to set aside the partisan debate we are having in so far as this particular Bill is concerned. I have not put in the number of years which the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has put into this place, but I, too, will be leaving the House of Commons very shortly.

It might be of interest for him to know that the future Prime Minister, when I had the privilege of serving as his Parliamentary Secretary, said: "When Marcel Lambert gives you his word, you know that that is his bond". Quite often we considered tax legislation and as two young bucks received a lot of good advice from the Hon. Member who would say: "Don't be rushing it. Just give us time to play with it. You will get your Bill next week", and we always knew we would. That was a significant tribute from the then Minister of Finance.

I made a point of going back and looking over some of the debates. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West on more than one occasion was called upon on Budget night, when all the focus was on the Minister of Finance, the Budget and the lock-up of the press, and had what I always thought was a very difficult task. He had to respond immediately on the particular night to a Budget which he had only seen shortly before. The then Minister of Finance said: "Go back and read the Budget speeches which Marcel has made because they are classics in responses to Budgets". It is significant to indicate that they were all different. There were different emphases and different lengths. Sometimes, as he said, the Hon. Member even had a tendency to lose his temper.

I should like to say that it has been a privilege to be in the House while the Hon. Member was here. He has a long and distinguished career not only in the House but as a veteran who was taken prisoner at Dieppe. Those of us who have known you as a friend will forget some of the partisanship and say that we hope you will enjoy your retirement, if that is the proper word, although I cannot see a man as active as you actually retiring. I know I do not intend to; I am going to another job.

In terms of this particular Bill I, too, am convinced that it is necessary to go to a civilian service. I, too, feel that some of the definitions could be tightened up somewhat. However, the difficulty we have is that which the Hon. Member signified and indicated many times in the past. When someone does not get their way and brings in some 300 amendments at committee stage, there is no legitimate debate. Some of the amendments moved by the Hon. Member's colleague, the new critic of the Solicitor General, warrant more careful attention than they frankly received. However, when 300 amendments are being brought in by one Party and we are trying to debate a Bill which contains over 90 clauses, it is somewhat difficult to have a legitimate debate. One is almost bound to go with the Minister and with the Bill because it is significantly better than the status quo, with the Mounties there and no control.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The fact that both hon. gentlemen may not be with us much longer is not reason enough for them to talk to each other. Remarks must be directed to the Chair.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I suppose one could forgive-two old hands having a little sentimental discussion. In reply, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) has struck upon one of the salient points which characterizes this particular debate. Tactically I think it was disastrous to have dumped on the Order Paper this plethora of useless amendments. The points could have been made with a few well chosen amendments, the same as did the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) who wanted to emphasize those points worth emphasizing. Then the House could have been engaged in meaningful debate. The Solicitor General might not have been moved in frustration, and I can understand his frustration, to bring in allocation of time. It might have resulted in a better Bill. The net result is that I find I am a loser. Since the Bill could not be changed in compliance with the desires of the House, not the bureaucracy, we are the losers.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I wish to first say a few words of best wishes to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) on his retirement. He has been here a long time, since 1957 if I am not mistaken. As one who was five years old when the Hon. Member was first elected to this House, I wish him well in his retirement.

I want to comment also on some of the remarks he as an experienced parliamentarian made on what transpired last night. In the short time that I have been here, I have seen both Opposition Parties, because they felt strongly about a particular Bill and felt that no indication whatsoever had been given by the Government that there was an openness to amendments or change, demonstrate symbolically within the rules how strongly they felt about that.

That is what the Hon. Member's colleagues did on the Constitution when they came up with question of privilege after question of privilege, ad infinitum. That is what they did when they rang the bells for 16 days over the National Energy Program. We presented petitions ad infinitum because of the way we felt about changes in the Crow rate. Last night we felt that the final thing we could do to show the Canadian people that we really think that this is a watershed in the history of how we deal with security problems in this area was to make the House sit until five o'clock in the morning. That was not the end of the world. It is something Opposition Parties do from time to time to signal to the public, and indeed to the Government even if it does not bring about any change, how strongly they feel.

We should not get up and heap abuse on ourselves collectively by pretending that the only Parliament that is worth its salt is a Parliament that efficiently passes legislation put before it by the Government. Opposition Parties will feel strongly from time to time, that is how we felt last night. Plenty of people in my riding have had to work two shifts in a row. I do not think it was a biological disaster for people to have to stay up until five o'clock in the morning.

The Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Turner) knows that sometimes people work a shift on the railway and go right back out again, and they are in charge of millions of dollars of equipment for another eight hours. All we had to do was stand up and indicate where we stood on votes which the Hon. Member called trivia. But I notice he voted with us all the time. I just say to the Hon. Member that is the way that Parliament works. He ought to know that even better than I.

[Translation]

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Chair to allow me to say a few words, as a member who has been here since the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) first came to the House and who has worked well with the Hon. Member for Edmonton-West (Mr. Lambert) first as a fellow member and also in another capacity as the chairman of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and I am very grateful to him for his expert contribution in establishing the rules governing the Chair. I want to wish him on my behalf and on behalf of those who worked with him on the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, all the best on his retirement from Parliament. I am very happy to know that I will have a lifelong friend in Western Canada. And for a Liberal, that is quite something.

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that Hon. Members have taken the opportunity to pay tribute to my colleague for his many quality years of service in the House. I hope that sometime in the next five or six days the House will take some time to do the same for all Members who have decided not to return to this Chamber. That is not to take away from my good friend from Edmonton West who has taught us a lot. I came here ten years ago as a total greenhorn, not only to Parliament but also to politics. I have learned something every time the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has spoken. As I said, I hope that in paying tribute to him we do not at the same time in the next week overlook the fact that there are others who will not be returning. We owe to them all a debt of gratitude for the work they have done here. We will have an opportunity to honour them. These are the closing hours on this debate on Bill C-9—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hope there is no misunderstanding between the Hon. Member and the Chair. There is a minute left in the question and comment period. I had not yet called for debate. I had recognized the Hon. Member for a comment or question. We will now go back to debate.

• (2030)

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to use at least some of the time I am allowed, in concluding the debate on Bill C-9, to pay tribute to the Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) and the Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

When I was elected in 1979 and re-elected in 1980, the first committee on which I was privileged to sit was the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. At the time, the Committee had the honour or perhaps the misfortune to consider the Bank Act. Mr. Speaker, you will agree that the task was a difficult one and when I compare the debate on Bill C-9—I must say it is small beer, especially when we consider that the Bank Act is reviewed every ten years—with the eloquent and incisive comments of the Member for Edmonton West and the wisdom of the Chairman, the Member for Sarnia . . . Having known them both as friends, I am very sad to see them go, although I realize they will both still be able to do great things for this House and for our country.

Mr. Speaker, I have had the honour of speaking two or three times before in the debate on Bill C-9. The first time, I surprised a number of Hon. Members on a Friday morning by putting the previous question, which had the effect of referring the Bill to Committee. I did so to satisfy my own concern, as a Member of this House, that my colleagues in the House and on the Committee would have a chance to examine thoroughly this piece of legislation. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, and you understand I am referring to my hon. friend from Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) . . . The real problem with the Left in this country, which is strangely similar to that of the American Left, becomes obvious when they are faced with legislation like the Bill on the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. If they really want to improve a Bill they consider to be defective, obstruction is not the way to do it. The answer is not to prevent debate but to encourage it.

Mr. Speaker, there is a saying that you cannot have your cake and eat it too. However, my hon. friend from Burnaby not only wants to have his cake and eat it, he wants the icing and the candles, and he wants the candles lit the way he wants them to be lit, otherwise he does not want the cake at all. That is not our attitude. Mr. Speaker, if we consider that this debate on Bill C-9 is not something new . . . The debate on Bill C-9, on this particular service, has been going on for at least fifteen years. Fifteen years of intensive study and debate. Unfortunately, we have met with a complete lack of common sense and understanding for parliamentary procedures, especially on the part of Members of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Gourde: A lack of common decency!

Mr. Deniger: A lack of common decency, says the Parliamentary Secretary, on the part of the Members opposite.

Mr. Speaker, the Government had a choice. It could have decided to do nothing. However, it decided to act responsibly and to do so while taking a number of precautions. What were those precautions, Mr. Speaker? That should be obvious. We had two Commissions of Inquiry: the Mackenzie Commission and the McDonald Commission. And as if that were not enough, we then decided to refer the matter to the Senate. And as if that were not sufficient, after the MacKenzie Commission, the McDonald Commission and the Special Senate Committee, we referred the matter to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, under the able and talented chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), who, unfortunately, is leaving us as well. And throughout the process of dedicated hard work on this Bill, we did not get the co-operation we were entitled to expect from the Members opposite, considering the Bill is a reform Bill and should satisfy people who want to make a better world.

Mr. Speaker, people who see a glass with a little water in it will say either that it is half full or that it is half empty according to their own way of thinking. Unfortunately, the Hon. Members opposite always see the glass as being half empty. However, it is important to note that this Bill clearly identifies the mandate and the powers of the Security Intelligence Service. These powers are now subject to judicial control.

Mr. Speaker, to give as an example of how frustrating it is for us to discuss with the Members opposite in this House, I would like to recall the debate on Motion No. 61. This was an amendment moved by the Members opposite which we had rewritten, and the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) told us that such an amendment made no sense, even though it was his own amendment which had simply been rewritten to comply with the criteria applicable to legal literature. As a Member of Parliament, I find this type of comment absolutely nonsensical, incredible and unsatisfactory because this judicial control does indeed constitute the insurance policy which should tell all of us that there cannot be any abuse of the system.

Beside, Mr. Speaker, there will not only be judicial control, especially under the Constitution which we have given ourselves and this country, and which should ensure this independence and guarantee that our most fundamental rights will be preserved just in case someone does not do his job as he should or fulfill his mandate as provided.

There will also be an independent review process which will be carried out by the Inspector General and the Security Intelligence Review Committee, which will both be accountable to Parliament, something which is not provided for at this time. Now what do we have exactly? Mr. Speaker, we have several controls to guard against the abuses about which we have been hearing so much from the Members opposite, especially the NDP Members, because they are altogether negative and pessimistic. Instead of trying to improve this Bill, they have tried to see to it that it is completely destroyed.

An Hon. Member: They do not trust anyone!

Mr. Deniger: First, Mr. Speaker, there is the judicial control, which should be the most sacred for lawyers! Second, there is Parliament. Third, there is the service itself and the Solicitor General.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to guarantee the security of Canada while providing better controls, better monitoring mechanisms, through which we can guarantee that the basic rights and freedoms of Canadians will also be protected.

Certain critics have asked about the very substance of this Bill and said: What is it that must be protected? Some have even denied that the security of the country is threatened. Some would want us to believe that, here in Canada, we are living in a completely serene and pure world where we shall never need such a security agency while the facts revealed by the Mackenzie and McDonald Commissions clearly show the opposite to be true.

Canada is a nice country! It is a great country. However, it is a country which needs to be protected. Past and recent events prove it. Let us look at past events. I had the misfortune to be more aware of one of these events than any other Member of this House. In 1945, Mr. Gouzenko's revelations shook Canada and the Western world and showed to what extent it was possible to have a wide-ranging spy network in a country as peaceful as ours. This spy network was present throughout our society. Even a Member of the House of Commons named Fred Rose was found guilty of espionage. Mr. Speaker, this threat did not disappear; it still existed in the seventies, for instance. We closed our doors to 44 Soviet diplomats. We expelled 111 between 1978 and 1983.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak about the events of the seventies. Because as Member for La Prairie—I was not a Member in 1970—I had a member who was still alive, he was called Pierre Laporte, he lived in Saint-Lambert on Robitaille Street, the street next to my in-law's, less than a quarter of a mile from my home, and perhaps I am the last constituent whom Pierre Laporte saw alive. Mr. Speaker, I am the last constituent whom Pierre Laporte saw alive. I was a law student then and we had a project on parliamentary procedure. So, quite naively, I called my MNA, who was a Minister at the time. I told him: Mr. Laporte, perhaps you do not know me, I am a student and I would like to see you because, as a law student, I have some work to do on parliamentary procedure. He asked me: Are you Médard's son? I said yes. He told me: Come and see me anytime. So I asked him: When, Mr. Laporte? He said Friday. I asked him at what time? He said 5 p.m. I saw him at 5 p.m. for a 15-minute appointment, but I stayed an hour and half. The day after he was kidnapped. He was kidnapped at noon the following day, was never again to be seen alive. That happened to me, it happened at home. It was done by Longueuil residents who lived on the street where I was born. They lived at 240 Gardenville Street and I was born at 186 Gardenville Street. And they kidnapped my MNA who was a Minister at the time. He was a friend of our family. He spent his last hours helping a student who had a law project. And he died. Perhaps he was even tortured, but nobody knows. And they tell me that we have no problems in Canada? They tell me that we do not need that in Canada? They tell me that it cannot happen in Canada? Well it did happen and we were there. And I was a lot closer to it than many people. I still see Mrs. Laporte and her children. If you think that they are not hurt, Mr. Speaker, and it you think that they would not have liked to have that kind of agency which might have prevented this odious crime, this murder ... I, for one, think that they would have felt more secure knowing that such an agency existed and could indeed have prevented that murder. And that did not happen in Afghanistan, it happened in Saint-Lambert. Those people who lived on my street, Gardenville Street in Longueuil, and who kept him prisoner at Saint-Hubert, on the south shore, my home. And they tell me we do not need it! They tell me that an agency such as we had in the past is adequate, but past events show clearly that it was not adequate.

Mr. Speaker, we are not talking only about local attempts because there are attempts which originate outside this country. Armenians do not agree with Turks and, unfortunately, they kill Turkish diplomats here in Canada. Those diplomats have families. Do they not deserve protection? Should we not protect as well those who might be injured in those attempts? Should we not make sure that the people whose sole responsibility and mandate is to look after the security of this country can do their job? That seems obvious to me. As we all know, Mr. Speaker, terrorism is not on the wane in 1984, it is increasing.

Let us think of what is going on in Lybia. Let us think of what is going on about everywhere in the Middle East. Let us think of the terrorist acts in France, Britain, even the United States, Mr. Speaker, and even Toronto! Let us think of the bombs that were put in certain plants, because someone might not agree with the type of products they were making. And Hon. Members suggest we might not need that! Our rights might be threatened! I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that our rights are threatened in the absence of such an agency. They are threatened if we do not take the necessary steps to ensure there will be no recurrence of those crimes.

Mr. Speaker, Thomas Jefferson said, if you allow the quote, that God granted man liberty under the condition that he show eternal vigilance.

If we are to blame, it is not for putting forward this legislation but for having done nothing about it for 15 years. Finally the Solicitor General had the courage and ability to defend his convictions, to put the legislation forward. Some Hon. Members criticized the bill, but did they truly attempt to determine the true intention of the legislation? Not at all, Mr. Speaker, all they did was filibuster! With his competent Parliamentary Secretary, the Minister succeeded in giving countless marks of patience to ensure that the bill goes through. And some Members have the gall to state it is not perfect. The real shortcoming would be in not having it. What would be wrong would be to be deprived of it.

Mr. Speaker, that system will be envied by all free nations, by all civilized people in our world. When I see such a security system administer a civilian agency, which will surely be staffed with former RCMP officers . . . I have 144 RCMP officers living in Brossard! And if you think they are against it, you are dead wrong. Quite the opposite, they want those people finally to know exactly what their mandate is, what their job is. This is something they did not have. A former Crown Attorney, the Hon. Member for Halifax must have been quite something of a Crown Attorney judging by his attitude, Mr. Speaker.

So, I want to suggest that this legislation was needed. It meets a requirement. Not an academic, hypothetical requirement, but a requirement we all experienced in this country. A requirement that is evident every evening on the newscast, when we look at what is happening in France, in Britain, in the United States, among certain groups. Hon. Members talk of freedom. My answer Mr. Speaker, is Jefferson's statement: Freedom is vigilance. Vigilance itself. Just as taxes are the price to be paid for democracy, police is a price to be paid for vigilance. And that agency, Mr. Speaker, does not infringe upon our basic rights, on the contrary.

It is this very agency, Mr. Speaker, which will preserve our fundamental rights. As for those who do not believe in this Parliamentary institution, who do not believe in the judiciary, who do not trust the morality of our present police officers, who do not believe that there are people in this country who are prepared to ensure that the country works, to see to it that their freedoms are maintained, well, what can I say, Mr. Speaker? They live within their own world . . . too bad for them! However, I am sure that if ever we face a threat such as we were unfortunate to face in the past, Liberal members of Parliament, who had the courage to stand behind this Bill which will be put to a vote in a few minutes will be praised by the Canadian public, Mr. Speaker. On the other hand, the opposition party will be scorned because it did not have the courage to improve this legislation! Canadians will say to members on the other side that they did not live up to they responsibilities, that they were remiss in their duty. And they will be the ones who will bear the brunt of such criticism, Mr. Speaker, because we on this side did not shirk our responsibilities. This legislation has been in the making for 15 years, we have been considering it for 15 years and we had to bear with the filibustering and the arrogance of members on the other side. The Hon. Member, the former Crown Attorney, does not know what he is talking about, Mr. Speaker; if only he had gone through what we had to go through . . . I can assure you that we intended to pass this particular bill without time limitation and with full opportunity for the opposition members . . . Since we had good participation—

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED TELEPHONE RATES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, many concerned citizens in my riding of Grey-Simcoe and surrounding area have brought to my attention the Bell Canada proposal which would change the billing procedure now in force to a system whereby the customer will be charged for individually made telephone calls. It has been correctly pointed out that this would create undue hardship for seniors, the handicapped, low-income families on fixed income, and those who rely heavily on the telephone as their main source of communication.

As well, seniors and handicapped persons often have to order medicines, groceries, et cetera, by telephone, when no transportation is available. They have to consult and report to their physicians more often than others, and the cost of individual calls would be astronomical.

This would cause extra monetary worries for those who can ill afford the extra cost, and would result in a loss of community involvement to seniors and others who have continued to keep involved in church groups, service clubs and so on, by telephone.

Therefore I call upon the Government to exercise every possible influence on Bell Canada not to proceed with such a proposal which would prove very detrimental to all Canadians.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TAX DEPARTMENT'S TREATMENT OF VANCOUVER SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MUSICIANS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, for years there have been discrepancies in the income tax treatment of musicians who are members of Canada's symphony orchestras. Some are treated as employees and are thus denied deduction of expenses and capital cost allowance, while others are considered to be self-employed and are allowed proper deductions in arriving at net income for tax purposes.

Even though the Subcommittee on the Taxation of Visual and Performing Artists and Writers was considering this very subject and has since recommended amendments to the Income Tax Act to allow deduction of expenses incurred by symphony musicians, the Minister, in the meantime, changed the treatment for Toronto Symphony members, leaving only the Vancouver Symphony members as employees denied deduction of expenses.

The Minister has received copies of the Vancouver Symphony Society telegram that was sent to the Chairman of the Subcommittee outlining the injustices and discrimination against western Canadians. I appeal to the Minister to implement the needed changes in treatment immediately, so that a measure of equity will be restored to the application of the Income Tax Act.

CANADA DAY

SALUTE TO CANADIAN FLAG AT GASPÉ

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, this year Canada Day will have a special significance since we are celebrating the 450th anniversary of Jacques Cartier's first voyage to Canada and his arrival in Gaspé.

As part of the Canada Day celebrations in Gaspé, the flag raising ceremony will take place at five o'clock in the morning, at sunrise.

I invite all Canadians to celebrate Canada Day with pride and joy and to recite the Salute to the Canadian Flag at the flag raising ceremony, as we do in our schools and especially in the Scout movement. These are the words of the Salute to the Flag:

SALUTE TO THE CANADIAN FLAG

To my Flag and to the country it represents, I pledge RESPECT and LOYALTY.

Wave with PRIDE from sea to sea and within your folds, keep us ever UNITED.

Be for all a symbol of LOVE FREEDOM and JUSTICE

God keep our FLAG
God protect our CANADA

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DEBT BURDEN OF LATIN AMERICAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday a joint statement issued by the presidents of Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, and Colombia warned that they cannot indefinitely accept the burden of existing loan repayment plans. The total foreign debt of 11 Latin American countries is estimated at $300 billion. The increase in the U.S. prime rate of half a percentage point added $4.5 billion to the Latin American debt.

• (1110)

Canada is no stranger to this fiscal strangulation of developing countries. Three of Canada's five major banks have a total of $14 billion in loans outstanding with Latin American countries. When the Canadian prime rate rose from 11.5 to 12 per cent, an additional burden of $5.8 million monthly was added to that debt.

While the International Monetary Fund, the enforcer for world capital, wants to impose austerity measures, such as withholding wage increases for an already overburdened population in Latin economies, and the American Federal Reserve Board would "cap" interest rates, postponing additional interest payments in fact, the OECD argues that only an easing of international interest rates can provide any lasting solutions.

I call upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to protest to the U.S. that this deliberate impoverishment of struggling Latin economies must stop and there must be no further hikes in interest rates, that the developing nations—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I took issue with the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) view of earlier this week that his Government has been without a serious scandal for 16 years. I mentioned many examples of the abuse of public office by Liberal Members of Parliament, Cabinet ministers, and political friends over that period.

The reality is that a Prime Minister sets the tone for conduct in this city. The reality is also that, as far as this Prime Minister is concerned, virtually anything has been tolerable. "Say anything, do anything, break any commitment, as long as it might help us cling to office" has been a major operating principle of successive Governments over 16 years.

In the 1980 election campaign, for example, the Prime Minister and his Liberal candidates campaigned on four promises: "The 18 cents a gallon gasoline tax of the Tories is too much, we will slow Government growth, we will reduce unemployment, and we will reduce interest rates." Since 1980, of course, the Liberals have done precisely the opposite in all four areas. Government tax on gasoline has tripled, the cost of gasoline and heating oil has at least doubled, federal government spending and growth have increased geometrically, 1.5 million Canadians, including 600,000 younger ones, have been out of work for at least the last two years, interest rates are high now and moving higher, as our dollar yesterday reached an all-time low.

The one reason, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians are going to elect a Brian Mulroney Government this summer is the general feeling that we can conduct the national business both more competently and more honourably.

CHANGE IN VOTING PROCEDURES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in this day and age of advanced technology in information gathering and recording it is a regressive and backward practice to be a slave to a traditional voting procedure in this House which necessitates an individual personal response of standing and then bowing to the Chair in sequence to one's announced name.

As a medical doctor I feel that such a mode of voting, when numerous votes are scheduled on a given day, can be a type of psychological and physical torture to Members. Being confined to their seats for hours places considerable physical and emotional stress on Members, regardless of their baseline state of health. It is unwise to push Hon. Members to, or beyond, their physiological limits. These limits are marginal in those with underlying medical difficulties.

In other words, this traditional mode of voting in the House, carried out to the extreme as it was the night before last and through the early hours of the morning, can be a form of personal physical and mental assault on Members, and thus is no longer an acceptable procedure. I strongly recommend that the parliamentary committee which reviews the rules of procedure and the Standing Orders of the House should consider the introduction in the House of an electronically activated recording mechanism for voting, such as the one used by the United States House of Representatives.

DISASTERS

FATAL MINING ACCIDENT AT SUDBURY, ONT.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, we are all shocked and saddened by the tragic events which occurred in one of Sudbury's mines on Wednesday morning. Four miners were trapped by a sandfill cave-in, and yesterday the body of Sulo Korpela of Garson, Ontario, was found and removed from No. 5 shaft of the Falconbridge Mine.

Heroic rescue efforts were not enough to save the life of 22-year-old Wayne St. Michel who survived the ordeal for 27 hours, only to succumb to his injuries in hospital after his rescue. At this moment we are still anxiously awaiting the fate of two more miners whose presence is not yet accounted for.

As one who has lived in a mining town and has witnessed similar tragedies, I am painfully sensitive to the traumatic effects on the whole community, and the anxiety with which every bit of news about the situation underground and the fate of the miners and the rescue team is received. Our thoughts are with everyone who is touched by these tragic events in Sudbury.

I know the House would wish to join with me in expressing on behalf of all Canadians our deepest sympathies to the families of the deceased, as well as our hopes and prayers for those still missing. We also commend all those who, often at risk to their own lives and safety, are contributing in heroic fashion to the rescue efforts.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ECONOMIC POLICY OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE AND LIBERAL PARTIES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, we are seeing higher interest rates to protect the Canadian dollar, which is falling out of sight. The reason is that money is being sucked out of the country to the United States.

News reports this morning quoted the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) as saying that he approves of the economic policies being pursued in the United States. No one should be surprised that the Leader of the Opposition stands firmly behind Ronald Reagan, but everyone should be aware of what it means. One of the reasons for the growth of the American economy is a level of military spending which stands at the highest in the history of the world.

It is time to stop and look at what this massive military spending in the United States—and perhaps later in Canada—is doing. Helmut Schmidt, a former Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany and a defender of the Atlantic Alliance, made a statement recently in the New York "Review of Books". He said that because of this massive military spending:

> The high interest rate policy—the highest real interest rates in centuries—dictated by the Reagan deficits let the world's richest economy become the world's greatest importer of capital. This has been occurring at the expense of real investment . . . and therefore employment in the other industrialized countries and in all the developing countries that do not export oil.

The policy of the Leader of the Opposition and of the Turner Liberals applauds the fact that it has cost thousands of jobs in Canada and driven poorer nations to the verge of bankruptcy. That is the kind of policy which they both want to adopt in Canada, and it has to stop.

FINANCE

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—INTEREST RATE LEVELS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. As he will know, the Canadian dollar has dropped yet again, this time this morning to 76.52 cents, a new record low. In light of such a dire situation, would the Minister tell the House whether it is the policy of the Canadian Government and of the Bank of Canada to allow interest rates to continue to rise in order to maintain the value of the dollar at its current level? If so, how high does the Minister think the Government will have to push up interest rates to achieve that purpose?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite will be aware, in drawing attention to the fact that the exchange rate with the U.S. dollar has indeed declined in past days, that at the same time the Canadian dollar has appreciated against every other major currency. Further, every major currency has depreciated against the U.S. dollar. Therefore the situation facing the Canadian dollar is not unlike that which faces every major currency at a time when interest rates in the United States are increasing.

Interest rates in the United States have increased as a result of high government deficit and high private sector borrowing. Such interest rates attract money into the United States, seeking a higher rate of return. Interest rates in Canada and in other countries then go up, and the exchange value of their currency vis-à-vis the United States dollar goes down.

What the Hon. Member opposite overlooks in drawing attention to the fact that in the last days we have seen a decline in all major currencies against the U.S. dollar is that the Canadian economy has been performing well. If he will wait until later this morning, Statistics Canada will release the first quarter national accounts. He will see from that that the growth in the first quarter has been very real. It has been at .8 per cent.

Mr. Andre: Hallelujah!

Mr. MacLaren: To the skeptics opposite, .8 per cent will give us an economic growth rate between 4 per cent and 5 per cent during 1984. The Hon. Member opposite scoffs at that. He thinks that a growth rate of 4 to 5 per cent during 1984 is something to laugh at. The OECD does not think it is something to laugh at. In fact it forecasts that our growth rate will be second only to Japan during the course of the current year.

Canada's economy is performing well. It performed well during the last quarter of 1983. With a revision upwards, to be released today, the growth rate in 1983 was 3.3 per cent, not 2.9 per cent as forecast in the Budget. The Canadian economy has in fact performed better than forecast. In those circumstances it is evident that the Canadian economy is strong, is growing, but equally that we are faced with a situation vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar that we share with all other major trading companies, that is our vulnerability to increases in U.S. interest rates.

1980 ELECTION PROMISE

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister who has just blamed Canada's devastated dollar on trends in the United States and on policies of the American administration. In the February, 1980, election the present Prime Minister promised "to manage the economy in such a way that interest rates would in fact come down because the economy would be administered in a sounder way". That is what the then leader of the Opposition, now Prime Minister, promised in the 1980 election. In other words, the Prime Minister made a direct link between interest rates and sound management of the economy by the Canadian Government, not by the American Government. Now that interest rates are soaring, why has the Liberal Party changed its position so fundamentally on the issue, blaming the mess on the United States rather than on the incompetence of the Government?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite should know, if he does not already, that Canada to a substantial degree is dependent upon economic movements and trends in the United States. Having 70 per cent of our export trade with the United States we are vulnerable to exchange rate and interest rate movements there. Traditionally that vulnerability and the influence of U.S. interest rates in Canada have meant that Canadian interest rates have been a point or two or three above those in the United States as a means of attracting capital into Canada and retaining capital in Canada.

What has happened recently, thanks to the success of government policies and to the very real growth in the Canadian economy, including our success in beating inflation, is that the differential between Canadian and U.S. interest rates has largely closed. Today, for the first time in a long time, Canadian interest rates are only marginally above, and in some cases lower than, those in the United States. That is a measure of success of economic management in Canada.

The Hon. Member opposite speaks of some sort of regime in which Canada would be free of U.S. interest rate pressures. Throughout much of his question he quoted the Prime Minister. Let me quote back to him the words of his finance critic, the former Finance Minister in the Conservative Government. Back in 1979 he said:

● (1125)

We have a free market economy and the forces of competition will regulate rates.

That is what is happening today. We have a free market economy, and the forces of competition are regulating rates as much today as when the Hon. Member for St. John's West spoke in 1979.

If that quotation is not enough for the Hon. Member opposite, let me remind him that the former Finance Minister of the Conservative Government also said in October, 1979, "We see why interest rates have had to continue to go up, and why they have gone up in the United States". That's why they have gone up in Canada. The situation today is no different. We have a free market economy, including free transfers of capital between our two countries. The borders are open. Unless the Hon. Member opposite has some cloud cuckoo-land idea about closing the borders between our two countries for currencies exchanges, he must know that American interest rates will continue to have a significant impact on Canadian interest rates.

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. In the 1980 election the then Leader of the Opposition, who is now the Prime Minister, said that high interest rates were a function of the sound management of the economy by the Canadian Government. Now members of the Liberal Party and of the present Government are saying that high interest rates in Canada, interest rates which are rising through the ceiling, are a function only of trends outside the country over which the Government has no control.

Would the Minister tell the House, and through the House the electorate of Canada, why it is that members of the Liberal Party promise one thing in an election campaign and do exactly the opposite when they get elected to government on the strength of those same promises? For instance, they campaigned against wage and price controls in 1974, and against high interest rates and high gasoline prices in 1980. Why is there such duplicity? Why the double standard? Why the hypocrisy for purely partisan purposes at the expense of the Canadian people who are now being punished by high interest rates and the incompetence of this administration?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the word "hypocrisy" would stick in the craw of the Member opposite. After hearing his two previous questions, I am surprised to hear him speak of hypocrisy.

The fact is that interest rates in Canada have gone down substantially since the peak that occurred in the past few years. The Hon. Member opposite knows that there has been a substantial reduction in interest rates in Canada. Mortgage rates were over 20 per cent and bank rates well were over 16 per cent. We now see mortgage rates and the bank rate down from those peaks.

The point I would like to make to the Hon. Member opposite, which I will try once again to get through his head, is that Canadian interest rates are, to a substantial degree, affected by U.S. interest rates, as are interest rates in Germany, Switzerland, France or any other major trading country. Further, in the past, thanks to the management of the economy by the Government, we have had the opportunity to bring Canadian interest rates down to a level equal to those of the United States. That is a substantial achievement. It is one that we have not often seen in the past. It is an achievement which has brought real benefit to Canadians. Although we have closed the gap between U.S. interest rates and Canadian interest rates, if the Hon. Member opposite believes that there is some nostrum by which we can release ourselves completely from the influence of U.S. interest rates when we are the major trading partner of the United States, and when provincial Governments, the federal Government, and the private sector are dependent on U.S. capital markets, he is very much mistaken.

UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS—COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. He must be the only one in the country who has any confidence left in the Government and the direction it is going.

If, in fact, things are so marvellous and if, in fact, we are growing at the rate the Minister indicates, how is it that the unemployment rate in Canada is 11.7 per cent compared to the unemployment rate of 7 per cent in the United States? How is it that the smart money of Canadian investors is leaving Canada as quickly as possible and heading for the United States, driving our dollar down? The dollar is falling like a stone, and interest rates are again reaching record levels.

In view of those circumstances, which can only be described as a crisis, could the Minister indicate when he expects the dollar to reach 70 cents U.S.? When does he expect interest rates to reach 15 per cent and 16 per cent? That is precisely what will happen unless there is some recognition by the Government that the country is in a crisis situation. The nonchalance and Pollyanna attitude of "I'm alright; everything is fine" is no satisfaction to the 1.5 million people who are unemployed and have no hope under the leadership of this Government.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that I would prefer to be a Pollyanna rather than a Dr. Pangloss or a Cassandra. Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, the Member opposite raised about six points in one question. I should like to deal with the first point.

He raised the question of levels of unemployment in Canada. The Member opposite should know that the increase in our labour force has exceeded the rates in any other western industrialized country. For example, between 1968 and 1984 the growth in the Canadian labour force was 40 per cent. The growth rate of the labour force of the other five Summit countries averaged about 13 per cent. We have had a substantial growth in our labour force, a record growth which far exceeds the rate of growth in the labour force of any other industrialized country.

We have succeeded in creating jobs at record rates in an effort to provide employment for all those who seek employment in the workforce. Nevertheless, with the very high rate of growth in our labour force, there is, and there will continue to be, a level of unemployment which none of us are happy about and which we, as a Government, are continuing to combat through private sector policies and public sector policies.

CONFERENCE BOARD OF CANADA FORECAST

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, according to the economic overview of the Conference Board of Canada for 1984, Canada will have, under the policies of this Government—unless things change and there is an election—the worst growth rate in the coming year of the 14 nations which it surveyed. That is the confidence which the Conference Board and international investors have in the economic policies of the Government. That is the reason why the dollar is falling like a stone. That is the reason why interest rates are going up. That is the reason why 1.5 million unemployed Canadians have no hope for the future.

Has the Minister informed the new Leader of the seriousness of the situation? Can we expect some action from the new Leader? Obviously the current Prime Minister is not willing to take action. Can the Minister offer some hope to the 1.5 million unemployed Canadians? If he cannot, will he recommend to his Leader that we have a general election soon in order that the people of Canada can have the chance to judge on the question?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we are ready for a general election any time. We shall take on the Tories, and we shall beat them. If the Member opposite wants to quote statistics from the Conference Board, I could quote some statistics from the Gallup polls in connection with elections. He would do well to read those numbers. It might give him a more sober attitude toward his prospects.

However, if he wants to trade statistics and wants to quote the Conference Board, I should like to quote an organization which is a good deal more prestigious internationally then the one to which the Hon. Member referred. The OECD stated in its recent report that Canada's growth rate in 1984 will be greater than that of any other industrialized country, except Japan. The OECD forecasts a growth rate in Canada for 1984 of 4.5 per cent. That is approximately the same growth rate which the Government forecast in the April Budget. The OECD forecast for Japan is slightly higher. It is 4.75 per cent. However, for every other industrialized country the forecast growth rate is substantially lower than for Canada this year. The growth rate which is forecast for Germany is 3 per cent. The growth rate which is forecast for the United States is 2.5 per cent.

The Member opposite is on the wrong track when he engages in his usual doom and gloom forecast about the Canadian economy. He should know that in almost every sector of the Canadian economy there was real growth in the last quarter of 1983. In the whole of 1983 there was a growth of 3.3 per cent. The continuation of that real growth during the first quarter of 1984 is spread over every section—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has some concern with the length of the argument. The questions obviously invite long answers. Sometimes the answers are short, and sometimes they are longer, but is it fair to other Hon. Members who have been seeking day after day to be recognized? With regret, the Chair interrupts the Hon. Minister. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

OECD REPORT—REQUEST FOR NEW POLICY TO DEAL WITH INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to keep my question short, although I cannot guarantee that the answer will be similarly short. It is directed to the same Minister. The OECD also indicated, in taking into account such things as unemployment and the decrease in domestic output and demand, that Canada's record is the second worst among the nations which the OECD surveys. Canada is second worst only to Margaret Thatcher in Great Britain. The Government indicated in its budget documents this year it expected that by 1985 unemployment would be down to 10.1 per cent. The OECD has indicated that it anticipates that the current level of 11.7 per cent will be maintained through the next 18 months to at least the end of 1985. It identifies the primary cause of this problem as being high interest rates in Canada.

I would ask the Minister of State what new policy will the Government come forth with, which will tackle the interest rate difficulties that the country presently faces, and which result in unemployment, decreased domestic demand, and people who are forced to face lives of misery?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite is wrong when he quotes the OECD, if he is referring to its report of recent days. In fact the OECD stated, while reviewing Canadian unemployment, that it expected it to be at a rate of 11 per cent this year; not 11.7 per cent as the Hon. Member said. It cited that number as a result of what it described when it said:

> Canada's economic performance last year was unexpectedly favourable—the recovery saw output rebound and unemployment ease, while inflation decelerated.

The fact is the OECD recognizes, as the Hon. Member does not seem to want to recognize, that as a result of bringing down inflation below 5 per cent—and it was 4.8 per cent in April—and as a result of our increases in productivity, we have succeeded in reaching record levels of export. We have also succeeded in improving our productivity and our international competitiveness to the point where we can have an interest rate policy which will allow us to maintain our rates at the level of, or in some instances below, those of the United States.

I would say to the Hon. Member opposite, as I said earlier, that this is a very real achievement in Canadian economic management. If he believes that there is some way in which the Canadian financial markets can be isolated from the impact of the U.S. financial markets, he is mistaken.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members are crying "order" to the Chair. There have been six questions in a row which essentially put the same question. The format of a debate on interest rates, employment, projections, and forecasts, within Question Period does raise very serious problems for the Chair in terms of the length of answers and in terms of the nature of the questions which invite long answers. It is for Hon. Members to decide if there is to be an equitable sharing of Question Period time with back-benchers. I am inviting Hon. Members and Ministers to bear in mind that there are other Hon. Members who would like to be recognized.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate you lecturing those people beside me. It is time they shortened their questions.

However, I would like to ask the Minister a supplementary question. Recognizing that the OECD identified that the average level of unemployment among the member nations would be 8.5 per cent in the foreseeable future, at least until 1985, and recognizing that Canada's interest rate was identified to be at the level of approximately 11.7 per cent, as I said before—during the same period, and that Canada's record is the second worst in the world as it is monitored by OECD, and that interest rates are the primary reason, why does the Government not rethink its position with regard to tying itself so closely to the U.S. interest rate structure, strike out on its own, and attempt to establish some sense of fiscal responsibility, while at the same time recognizing that people in Canada must have jobs in order to eat?

● (1140)

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member speaks about fiscal responsibility he should recognize that we have managed our economy and government spending in a way which stands comparison with any of the industrialized countries. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member overlooks a factor which the OECD does not, that is, that the Canadian labour force has been growing faster than any other industrialized country. It has grown faster for the past two decades.

We have had the challenge of producing proportionately jobs for many more people than other industrialized countries. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that we have created three million more jobs since 1968, at a rate which stands comparison with and, indeed, exceeds that of other industrialized countries. The root problem of unemployment in Canada is not economic management but the very large numbers of new workers coming into the workforce during the past two decades.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, that last answer is absolute nonsense. The 1.5 million people who are unemployed are primarily people who were in the workforce up until two years ago and who no longer can find employment.

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, recognizing that the Government's answer to the falling dollar has apparently been higher interest rates in Canada, and recognizing that higher interest rates have in fact caused unemployment, have in fact reduced economic output in this country, have slowed down consumer demand, and have not resulted in a strengthening of the Canadian dollar, are there no alternative measures which can be proposed by the Government which will in any way ease the massive problems which unemployment creates? Is there no way the Government can bring forward new policies, rather than simply following lockstep the policy of the U.S.A. which is intended to solve its problems, not ours?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): The Hon. Member opposite, Mr. Speaker, should be aware that Canada is a principal beneficiary of economic growth in the United States and, more important, a principal beneficiary of the high degree of trade with the United States. Does the Hon. Member opposite seriously want to jeopardize our trade with the United States which, as I mentioned earlier, represents some 70 per cent of our total export trade? Does he believe that there are practical ways in which Canada can somehow maintain an independent interest rate policy—

Mr. Deans: Yes!

Mr. MacLaren: —while at the same time benefiting from trade with the United States?

Mr. Deans: Yes!

Mr. MacLaren: Well, I shall tell the Member opposite that that is not so.

Mr. Deans: Other countries have done it.

Mr. MacLaren: You cannot. One cannot maintain a high level of trade with another trading partner and at the same time cut off capital flows between the two countries.

Mr. Deans: What did Japan do?

Mr. MacLaren: Does the Hon. Member opposite believe, in addition, that we are going to curtail the free flow of capital with regard to tourists and with regard to the purchase of seasonal produce? Are we going to tell the stock markets of Canada and the United States that they can no longer engage in a free market, and tell provincial Governments that they may no longer borrow on the U.S. capital markets?

Mr. Deans: Are you going to tell the unemployed that they can starve?

Mr. MacLaren: There would—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair again hesitates to interrupt, but in 25 minutes only three questioners have been recognized. The Chair will now recognize the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River.

DISASTERS

FATAL MINING ACCIDENT AT SUDBURY, ONT.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. I know that the Minister is aware, as we all are, of the tragic events which occurred at the Falconbridge Mine in Sudbury. I know that the Minister is as concerned as we all are for the families of the two Miners who lost their lives. I wonder if he could take this opportunity to update us on the situation there, particularly with regard to the safety of the mine. What is the Minister's latest information?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I am sure he joins me, along with all Hon. Members of the House, in expressing our deep sympathy to the families of the two miners who lost their lives, Mr. Wayne St. Michel and Mr. Sulo Korpela, and we would also like to express the hope that the other two miners will be found alive.

This is certainly a tragic accident, and I believe it shows that we have to redouble our efforts in health and safety in that respect. We on this side, certainly, through CanMet, intend to do just that. We are at the service of Falconbridge and the Ontario Government in helping to investigate. The Ontario Minister of Mines will be calling an investigation into the accident and we stand ready to help with our research branch.

However, Mr. Speaker, we must on the whole redouble our efforts to find out why these things happen so that we can try to prevent them in future. The mine is closed at the moment, and I have no indication of when it might open, but we are certainly working closely with the company and doing all we can.

FUTURE OF MINE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I realize that it might be early for the Minister to make an assessment. I know his officials have worked with the provincial officials who are on the scene. A shock like this disaster is always more difficult to absorb for a community which is already hard hit by the uncongenial economic circumstances which the mining industry faces at the moment. May I ask the Minister whether he would be prepared, perhaps next week, to make a statement in connection with this accident, particularly with reference to the future of the mine? Can the mine be repaired? Can the situation be improved so that working conditions will be safe? Can the Minister give us the assurance that everything possible will be done to save the jobs of those people who are, hopefully, out of work only on a temporary basis?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, it is also my hope that this is a temporary situation. We will be keeping in touch with the company and with the Ontario Department of Mines in order to make sure that everything possible is done. If it is possible to reopen the mine in the near future, I would hope that that will be done. Certainly next week I should have further information, as we keep in touch on a regular basis.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S TREATMENT OF VANCOUVER SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MUSICIANS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question was meant for the Minister of National Revenue, but since he is not in the House, perhaps I may direct it to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, if I may have his attention, in the hope that he will want to make a final decision for the arts community in Canada.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister is aware that the treatment received by musicians with the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra with respect to their income tax is less favourable than it is for members of the Toronto Symphony. Since working conditions in both orchestras are practically identical, could the Right Hon. Prime Minister inform the House when his Government is going to stop discriminating against Western Canadians and when it is going to change the rules for musicians with the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I am not aware of the situation. If the Hon. Member had given me advance notice, I could have checked the facts.

Nevertheless, I object to the Hon. Member's insinuation, and this is typical of the Official Opposition, that we are discriminating against the West. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the situation is in Vancouver compared to Toronto. If the situation is as the Hon. Member says, I would be surprised if similar circumstances did not exist in Halifax or Moncton, for instance.

So are we discriminating against the West or against the East? I would be surprised if there were not some orchestra in Quebec whose circumstances were a bit different from the one in Toronto. Why does the Official Opposition insist on spreading the myth of systematic bashing of Western Canada by the Government? This comes up in all their questions, and I am sick and tired of it!

[English]

TREATMENT OF TORONTO MUSICIANS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister could explain how his Government, his Minister of National Revenue, was able to make a decision to change the treatment given to the Toronto musicians while the sub-committee studying the matter was still studying the matter, and now he is unable to make a decision about Vancouver?

● (1150)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not say that we were unable to make a decision about Vancouver. I said the Hon. Member did not have the courtesy of giving me notice of the question; therefore I do not know the answer. I did object to his insinuation that we are discriminating against the West, which is a pure fabrication on his part, which is added on to the question and which has nothing to do with the difference between the orchestra in Vancouver and that in Toronto. But it will not be the first time that pettiness emerges from the other side.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just salute western Canada again.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM—GRANT PAID TO EAST COAST ENERGY LIMITED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I have a report which says the Government of Canada paid $1,645,540 to a company called East Coast Energy Limited between January 1, 1981, and December 31, 1983. A Mr. Walter Wolf, in part of that period, owned 10 per cent of the shares of East Coast Energy. Mr. Wolf has declared he participated in the funding of the dump Clark campaign.

Has the Government investigated East Coast Energy to see if any directors were doing any political work at the same time the company got the grant, and were being paid, directly or indirectly, with Canadian Government money?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of the facts or of whether an investigation has taken place. I presume the Hon. Member is not making an allegation. If he is, we will investigate. If he is just stirring up dirt, then I will not investigate.

PERFORMANCE OF POLITICAL WORK

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about this $1.6 million in PIP grants going to this company. Mr. Wolf's nominee on K.D. Marine (Maritime) Ltd., Michael Cogger, said he was paid a retainer of between $3,000 and $4,000 to do political work. A Mr. Alfred Doucet, in June, 1981, was a shareholder in East Coast Energy and he went on to do political work as chief of staff of the Leader of the Opposition. In light of that, what assurances does the Government have that no government money went to pay directors of this company to do political work? Wolf's nominees and directors were doing political work in other companies with which he was associated. If the Government does not have those assurances, is it not worth doing some sort of investigation, since this involves $1.6 million in government money?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has a concern again about the nature of the question. It seems to the Chair that such a question should be on the Order Paper, the response to which can possibly be followed up. A presumption that knowledge in that level of detail about a specific situation could be expected of the Prime Minister or any member of the Cabinet seems to be unreasonable.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can ask the Prime Minister a more general question. The Prime Minister must be concerned, as a lot of people are, that it is getting pretty expensive to pay for a political leadership campaign. One can easily end up in the hands of big business, big labour, or whatever it is. Would the Prime Minister be prepared to start an investigation into ways of funding and accountability, so it can be above board, to pay for leadership campaigns of any political Party in Canada on the federal level, in the future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, now I understand the Member is making a representation. It may well be a valid one. If I do teach political science in the future, I will make it the subject of a thesis for one of my students.

AGRICULTURE

INTRODUCTION OF RED MEAT STABILIZATION LEGISLATION

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He kind of promised the whole field to the people of the agricultural community while he was campaigning in the Liberal leadership campaign. He has not been able to get much done in the last 12 years. Is he going to table the Bill today regarding red meat stabilization? If he is, does he have any House time from the House Leader to get that Bill through? The livestock industry is in serious trouble in Canada and is looking to this Bill as an opportunity to breathe some life into that community.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to follow my track record he will find that there are very few federal Ministers of Agriculture who have as good a track record as I have in performance for the agricultural community.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is just what John Turner was saying to me the other day.

Mr. Whelan: Any of the things I promised in the campaign are all reasonable and possible, if anyone wants to put them in place. I understand the Bill will be given first reading today. We have already had discussions about it. It is a reasonable Bill, and I am sure we can find reasonable time to have it passed so that whoever happens to be the federal Minister of Agriculture can deal with the provinces on July 20, I believe, on that Bill. They are the ones who want it. That is the kind of Bill they want, and I am sure it is not an unreasonable presentation. He will see it when it is presented to the House later today.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, it sounds like the Minister is not too sure that he will remain the Minister of Agriculture. Perhaps he is making some announcement today.

PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, why has the Minister waited so long to bring these bills forward? The Western Grain Stabilization Bill is here and it is needed by the agricultural community, as is this other Bill. Can he give any assurances that he will press for House time to get these Bills through next week?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I said, we have already had discussions. The Western Grain Stabilization Act is not a controversial piece of legislation. I am sure if the House wanted to take ten or fifteen minutes we could pass them all.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. Some weeks ago he stated that if he became Prime Minister he would establish 12 per cent interest rates for farmers. Now that he is not going to be Prime Minister, has he given up on the 12 per cent, or has he given up on the farmers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I quoted a well-known Albertan, the head of the Nova Corporation, who said in August of 1982 that interest rates should not be over 12 per cent and there should be international monetary control. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of that person. We know one another to speak to one another, and we certainly agree on that. It might be even better if you had that farmers' bank that I talked about. We could call it a "gene" bank.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PROTECTION OF WOMEN WORKING DURING PREGNANCIES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, there are seven Cabinet Ministers here out of 37. We should either have an election, or someone should make them come here and do their job.

Mr. Rossi: Where is Mulroney?

Mr. Oberle: Out saving the country.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is aware that comments on the presence or absence of Hon. Members in the House are not in order. The Chair can only observe that it appears to be a general phenomenon.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I do not know which of the seven Ministers is prepared to answer for government policy but I am very disturbed about this. Backbenchers in all three Parties in this House are concerned about safety in the workplace. We worked until 1.30 this morning trying to increase the degree of safety for workers. However, it is now clear that it is government policy that the rights we extend to workers to protect their safety are rights that the Government is not prepared to give to unborn children.

Pregnant women will not be able to refuse a task in the workplace simply to protect the life of an unborn child. When did the Government reach that policy decision, and is it willing to reconsider that policy decision? I am pleased to see that the Minister of Labour has just come back into the Chamber. Perhaps he can answer that for us.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather odd that discussions that took place in committee should be commented on in this way in the House. The question was debated and it was even voted on and settled in committee.

[English]

SAFETY OF UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I am not commenting on a vote taken in committee. I am commenting on the fact that the spokesperson on behalf of the Government told Members of Parliament of the three Parties that it was government policy that unborn children would not have the same protection in the workplace as other people would have. I am wondering when that decision was reached and whether the Government is willing to reconsider that decision and give that protection to unborn children. That is all I am asking.

• (1200)

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is all wet. He does not reflect accurately the discussion which took place in committee. He cannot do that. He should know better. The rules of Parliament do not allow him to comment on discussions that took place in committee. The report of the committee is not even presented. I think it is grossly unfair of the Hon. Member to reflect on the discussion which took place in the committee, and more particularly to reflect in such a contrary way on the discussion which took place there.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Labour tell us whether it is the policy of the Government that practices and regulations respecting the workplace will not extend protection to unborn children? If that is the policy of the Government, will the Minister tell us why that is, and whether the Government is prepared to change that policy?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the former Leader of the Official Opposition and former Prime Minister would certainly have been welcome last night in committee to express his position. The question was voted on when the Bill was being considered, and I think I have nothing to add to what was said yesterday.

MEDICAL CARE

ONTARIO CHARGES FOR ACUTE HOSPITAL CARE BEDS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare perhaps the Minister of State (Finance) may be able to comment on this. In Ontario some of the acute hospital care beds are being surcharged $100 a week over and above the cost of the bed. This charge is being made to patients who are forced to wait for a transfer to chronic care or nursing homes. What action has the Government taken to ensure that the Ontario Government will stop this outrageous use of the sick and elderly as hostages for extortion?

Mr. Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary may answer if he wishes. However, it appears to be a question within provincial jurisdiction or policy.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, what you say is absolutely correct. It is a question primarily within the provincial sphere. As far as the federal Government is concerned, the question is well looked after within the Canada Health Act. The sanctions are in place. If the provinces disagree with the position of the Canada Health Act they are within their rights to take whatever legal action they can. We feel the protection is there for the citizens of Canada. We only ask the provinces to do what we feel is equitable for those same people. If they do not, the provisions are there to deal with the inequitable actions of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary. The Chair is concerned about the jurisdictional aspect of the question.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the reason I raised the question in this jurisdiction is because of the Canada Health Act which the hon. Parliamentary Secretary has just mentioned.

ROLE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Is the Ministry of National Health and Welfare taking action with Ontario to ensure, inasmuch as the Government pays part of the cost of the health program in Ontario, that the health program in Ontario will be protected so that the patients in these cases will not be overcharged by this $100 a week? What action is the Government taking to ensure that Ontario honours the obligation which it undertakes by receiving the money from the federal Government?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the concern of the Hon. Member. That concern is shared by myself and many other Members as well. I am sure that he can appreciate that the federal Government has no way of intervening in provincial jurisdiction. Discussions are continually taking place between the Minister of National Health and Welfare on the one hand and the provincial Ministers of Health on the other. Dialogue is continuing. The Minister is presenting what she would like to and hopes to see in relation to this situation. However, what the provinces do within their own sphere of jurisdiction is entirely up to them. All we can do is follow the regulations and stipulations as set down under the Canada Health Act and deal with them as the Act provides.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CLARKE—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MR. TRUDEAU

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege arises out of the remarks made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in replying to my question during the past hour. I notice that the Prime Minister has left the Chamber. Perhaps I could reserve my right to raise this question when the Prime Minister is present and after I have had a chance to refer to the record in Hansard. During his response I heard the Prime Minister say the words "complete fabrication".

Referring to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition I note in Section 320(2) that "Since 1958, it has been ruled unparliamentary to use the following expressions:" Included therein are several examples of the word "fabrication". With Your Honour's permission I would like to reserve my rights.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member alleging unparliamentary language?

Mr. Clarke: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member is alleging unparliamentary language, the Chair is concerned with the changing practices of the House. If the Chair attempted to enforce all the items on a list of 1958, the proceedings of the House would be substantially disrupted. The Chair will review the "blues" and will see if, in the judgment of the Chair, there is an element of unparliamentary language, if that is the allegation of the Hon. Member.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I obviously have not had the time to consider at any length the implications of the statement you just made. However, I think that many of us in the House would be concerned if the Chair were going to use the occasion of this particular matter to render a judgment which would make obsolete a list that has been serving the House—

Mr. Pinard: That is not what he said.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —of terms that were seen to be unparliamentary. If that is in the mind of the Speaker, I am sure he would be the first to admit that Members of Parliament would both want and have the right to have an opportunity to debate that question before a decision were entered.

Mr. Speaker: Since the present occupant of the chair has been in the chair, the term "fabrication" has been used so often I could not count it. If the suggestion is that the Chair should go back to the list of 1958 and literally try to enforce it, I can only say that, in the judgment of the present occupant of the chair, the usage has changed so substantially from that time that I do not think Hon. Members would accept it. The Chair is quite prepared to look at situations where unparliamentary language is used. If Hon. Members have a view that unparliamentary language is used, the Chair is quite prepared to look at situations.

However, the Chair must be expected to exercise consistency. The Chair has overlooked the term "fabrication" so often that to ask the Chair in this instance to judge it unparliamentary is to ask for a substantial break in recent practice of the House.

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Chair will give due consideration to the record as it appears and to the list as it appears. I am sure that the Chair would not wish, by any decision which it would arrive at, to authorize the use of all of the words that are in the list which the Speaker referred to as the 1958 list. It only says that "Since 1958, it has been ruled unparliamentary to use the following expressions:". If that list were to be liberated, we would find such expressions allowed as "sick animal, pompous ass, bullshit", and a few others all the way down to "treason" and "untrue".

Mr. Pinard: Order. That is unparliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: That is not fair. The Chair has tried to use discretion and good judgment. I can remember on one occasion the Chair ruled an expression about a chief reptile unparliamentary. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) is laughing because he well recalls the occasion. Let me quote from the latest edition of Erskine May, the Twentieth Edition, page viii of the Preface:

● (1210)

Such a list can never be exhaustive and its value to the Chair appears increasingly doubtful. Those who wish to learn of expressions which have been held disorderly from time to time in this and other Parliaments may continue to have recourse to the annual volumes of 'The Table' (the Journal of the Society of Clerks-at-the-Table in Commonwealth Parliaments).

The Chair is trying to indicate the policy that the Chair will follow. An expression that appears to contribute to the disorder of the House will be very carefully examined. Use of unparliamentary language is something that the Chair feels does offend the decorum and dignity of the House. As such, the Chair will try to exercise its best judgment in the circumstances. However, the term "fabrication", I call to the attention of Hon. Members, has been used frequently in the House.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my only concern is that the term "a complete fabrication" is synonymous with calling a person a liar. While other words may be used, I know that the word "lying" has not been allowed. It is really synonymous.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has accepted "fabrication" in place of "lying". When the Chair has asked a Member to withdraw that word, the Member has said: "I withdraw the accusation that so and so is lying; it is just a fabrication that he uttered".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has accepted it. The Chair is simply calling to the attention of Hon. Members that they have to expect the Chair to be reasonably consistent. Do not ask the Chair to rule as unparliamentary expressions that have been used on a number of occasions by different members of the Hon. Member's Party.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on one of these rare occasions to support the Chair wholeheartedly and to suggest to the House that, this being 1984 and the punk era, perhaps we could update our swear list in the fall.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that that is helpful.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I see that the Government House Leader also wants to gain the floor. I was going to suggest that perhaps the way to solve this problem is simple and straightforward. Let us call a lie a lie.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that that is helpful.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of Members in this House who think they know everything. They are behaving like real aliborons. I repeat: they are behaving like aliborons.

Words should be considered in the proper context. I think it is wrong to take a word out of context, interpret it subjectively, and thus give us an erroneous interpretation.

I think the Chair is right in saying that lists of words that go back to 1958, and I see here the word "ignoramus". Apparently, it is unparliamentary to call someone an ignoramus. To say that is to say somebody is ignorant. I think this is absurd and out-dated. I think we have all heard expressions that shock us a bit more than that one. In any case, people who are claiming today that the word "fabrication" is unparliamentary do not know what they are talking about.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to use up too much time on this matter but there is an important element to it. I am concerned about the kind of advice that you are getting, not only from members of the New Democratic Party who are now suggesting that we accept the use of the word "lying" and "liar", but from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) who is condoning the use of derisive references to Members of this Chamber.

I know that you, Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament who has served for some years now, will fully understand that what we are talking about now is the integrity of this institution. We are not talking about whether individuals are worthy of serving in this particular institution but whether we are going to have a poisonous aspect to our debates and an element of unreasonable personal accusations in debate. We want to avoid that. We want to debate the issues.

There are strong feelings held with respect to the issues and with respect to the personalities in the House. I do not think that this is a flippant matter at all. I do not think that the way we address each other and address this Chamber is a laughing matter at all. I do not think these matters are cute or funny at all.

I suggest that we get the kind of legislature we deserve by virtue of our activities and the way in which Members of Parliament conduct themselves. There is a difference between levity and accusations against another Member. I think that should always be in the back of the minds of Members of Parliament, even as we come to the end of this Parliament.

The important consideration is that this is a great country and a great institution and we are only worthy of serving here if we in fact respect each other despite our political differences.

Mr. Speaker: I cannot help but agree with everything that the Hon. Member has said. I will review the matter.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I do not at all want to prolong this. I believe there may well be a problem for Private Members of the House to which I want to draw your attention, although I am sure you are already seized of it.

The practice has been that when there is a suspicion of unparliamentary language, either the Chair intervenes or a Member raises a point of order based upon the list at hand. I quite understand that the passage of time may have ruled as acceptable language which might not have been acceptable at an earlier time and that the list may be in need of changes. However, if the Speaker needs a list for his interventions on these matters, so do Private Members need a list for our interventions on the matter.

My simple request would be that if there is to be a change in the list or in the principles determining language that will be parliamentary and unparliamentary, those of us who sit in the House and might be either guilty of using that language or accused of being guilty of using that language would like to know what the new standards are. That is the extent of my request.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's request is very reasonable. It is not easily answered. The Chair will certainly reflect on the matter.

EXPERT ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON MANAGEMENT OF SEVERE PAIN

Question No. 171—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there an Expert Advisory Committee on the Management of Severe Pain and, if so (a) who are the members (b) what is the (i) background or expertise (ii) term of appointment of each member (c) what remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses, do the members receive and, for the length of each appointment to date, what amount did each member receive (d) what other funding, if any, is provided by the Government?

2. (a) What are the terms of reference of the Committee (b) what matters did it consider in the fiscal year 1982-83 (c) how often did it meet and how often is it required to meet (d) what reports and/or recommendations did the Committee publish in the fiscal year 1982-83?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, there is an Expert Advisory Committee on the Management of Severe Pain. Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Parliamentary Secretary escaped quickly, but I want to bring to his attention that questions Nos. 302 to 317 inclusive were put on the Order Paper on December 20. The Government is now in the process of attempting to sell NTCL and these questions have not been answered. I have commitments that they shall be answered. Will the Parliamentary Secretary in fact be answering them next week?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his point. No doubt he will have an opportunity to make it again if necessary.

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING BIRTH OF CHILDREN

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are aware that, as I indicated yesterday, there is unanimous consent to allow second reading of Bill C-47 to take place now without debate. After that, I would like to rise on a point of order to outline the business for Tuesday.

Mr. Pinard (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-47, an Act to amend the Indian Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the business for Tuesday will be Bill C-5, which is a Bill that has been reported by the committee, it was in the committee for ten minutes or so; Bill C-7 which is at report stage; Bill C-8 which is at report stage; Bill C-49 which was introduced yesterday; and Bill C-43. We will proceed in that order.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Russell MacLellan (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-40, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacLellan (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Parliamentary Secretary might like to have preceded me, and if he so wishes, I would be quite happy to accommodate him.

Mr. Speaker: It has just been brought to my attention that a Minister should have moved the motion for third reading of Bill C-40 rather than the Parliamentary Secretary. The Bill will, therefore, be moved by Mr. Pinard.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to say that I am quite prepared to speak following the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday).

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly pleased to lead off this third reading debate. I thought perhaps we might have heard from the Parliamentary Secretary initially. I am hoping that he will have something to say on this Bill that will be news for us. There are some areas that were raised in the committee stage which we had hoped the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary might have addressed this morning.

Let me say first that I am a little disappointed that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is not here today. It would seem to me that a Bill as important as this one on pensions, about which the Minister from time to time has shown such concern over the years, is not one she sees fit to bring into the House herself at third reading. She may very well have some important business to attend to today and I am in no way denigrating the presence today of her Parliamentary Secretary. In my ten years in the House and with the experience I have had with Ministers and Parliamentary Secretaries, there has never been a Parliamentary Secretary more co-operative with us in the Opposition and easy to get along with in a non-partisan way than the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacLellan). We appreciate his co-operation because occasionally we are sometimes too partisan on certain important issues.

Be that as it may, it is disappointing to note that the Minister is not here. I thought she would have some rather interesting announcements about some new thoughts or attitudes she might have toward addressing the income security problems of the disabled, particularly those who receive workmen's compensation benefits or compensation itself. However, we hope the Parliamentary Secretary will address that.

As we move into third reading, the purpose of this Bill is to make amendments to the Old Age Security Act, and in particular to change the maximum amounts payable under the guaranteed income supplement. None of us will dispute the need and we are glad the Government has seen its way clear to bring in something that will bring to a more reasonable level the payments made under the guaranteed income supplement Act for certain pensioners.

In addition the Bill does provide a number of technical amendments that are certainly non-controversial, such as amendments regarding residency requirements with respect to retroactivity for people who have, for one reason or another, not made their application at the usual time for benefits. I do not think we want to debate that or indicate any question about the wisdom of those technical amendments.

As for the general purpose of the Bill, Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition support it completely and as a result we are willing to support this Bill. But I think it is incumbent upon us to point out to the Government and to the people that this Bill does not really address the whole problem of pension reform. When one considers the amount of talk we have had from the Government for years and years, going back at least five years, and the number of times we have heard the Minister herself speak about the need for pension reform, we would have thought that by this time, particularly with an election in the offing, we would have had something more definitive and substantive regarding the question of pensions.

Let us look at what Bill C-40 does address and at the very limited way it addresses the subject of appropriate increases to the guaranteed income supplement. The actual amount of the increase will be $25 effective in a few days, on July 1, and another $25 effective on December 1, for a total of $50. I will not become involved in giving statistics in this third reading debate. However, I remind the House, the Parliamentary Secretary and through him the Minister, that when the OAS and GIS were originally brought into effect in this country there was an existing relationship between the maximum combined payment available and the average industrial wage. The maximum payment available under OAS and GIS amounted to approximately 20 per cent of the average industrial wage. One might have argued that it should have been more, but nonetheless that was the figure accepted at that time. It is interesting to note that today even with a $50 increase, the level is only 14 per cent of the average industrial wage in Canada.

The Government could have avoided completely the necessity of this catch-up Bill if it had treated our senior citizens more properly from the beginning. Having given them an initial payment which amounted to 20 per cent of the average industrial wage, why did it not see fit in the interim—and it has been in government most of the time since then—to maintain that ratio? Rather, it let it slip down to 14 per cent, as is the case now, just because it refused to increase the payments sufficiently to maintain that ratio in light of the inflation we have suffered. It is disappointing that we have to deal with this Bill when it could have been completely avoided had the Government maintained its original promise of a payment sufficient to provide 20 per cent of the average industrial wage.

Let me look at the delays of the Government in most recent years, particularly this year, in bringing forth such a simple amendment to the Old Age Security Act. The Minister has repeatedly said over the years that pensions were one of her prime concerns. We took her word on that. It was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne in December, 1983 that it would be a priority of the Government to increase the benefits payable to pensioners, particularly those entitled to GIS benefits. Then we had the Budget on February 15 of this year. At that time, over four months ago, a commitment was made by the Government to bring in amendments to the Old Age Security Act which would boost inadequate payments with respect to GIS benefits. Having waited from February 15, we in the Official Opposition thought it was ridiculous to have to wait longer before bringing the subject before the House of Commons for debate.

Among the subjects which we as members of the Official Opposition thought had high priority was the subject of pension reform. Therefore we used one of our very precious Opposition days or allotted days on May 10, almost three months after the Government had promised in its Budget Speech that there would be amendments, to bring the whole subject matter before the House for debate as nothing had been brought forward by the Government. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), among others, led off in a very effective debate drawing to the attention of the House and to the people of Canada the failure of the Government to deal adequately with Canadian pensioners. Despite our exhortations at that time, we had to wait until May 29 for first reading of a very simple Bill which effectively offered an extra $25 in July and another $25 in December as increases in the benefits to be paid under the GIS provisions of the Old Age Security Act.

There was a lesser delay with respect to the presentation of the Bill for second reading on June 4. Of course, at that point the Government realized that time was running out. If one looks at the time sequence and the delays which the Government built into the delivery of Bill C-40 just to provide an extra $50 in payments, one realizes that the Government had ulterior motives. It was more interested in something other than offering senior citizens $50. It was more interested in providing something which it thought would be of benefit come election time. Therefore, within a month or two of the probable dissolution of Parliament, we find a simple Bill before the House which could have been before us late in February or early in March if the Government had been really serious and anxious to use it for other than ulterior motives.

We did not delay the Bill at second reading. We thought it was a very essential amendment to the Old Age Security Act with which we should deal as quickly as possible for the benefit of senior citizens. We were anxious to see the Bill reach committee stage, which followed fairly promptly after second reading because the Government had no alternative if it wanted the Bill passed before the end of this Parliament. If my memory is correct, the committee met on three different days to consider Bill C-40.

A few moments ago I took the trouble to total the number of hours which we were allowed to discuss the Bill at committee stage. According to my calculation, it came to slightly under three hours or very close to three hours during the course of three different days. Witnesses appeared before the committee, including the Minister herself, which we appreciated. It provided us with an opportunity to direct questions to her. She did a reasonably good job and made a good attempt at trying to answer our questions. There were some to which she could not reply, such as the question dealing with the relationship between workmen's compensation pension benefits that 25,000 Canadians receive and how they will suffer either a complete or partial reduction in their GIS payments. Of course, the Minister acknowledged the problem. It was one area on which she promised further review and discussion with her colleagues. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to elucidate today some of the thinking of his Cabinet colleagues who have expressed disappointment at what turned up regarding the earlier amendments to the Income Tax Act which worked to the disadvantage of these 25,000 Canadians.

While we had the Minister and her senior officials concerned with the welfare side of her Department and with the pension plan before us in committee—and I must say that they gave good testimony and answered our questions in a reasonable manner—I must say there was one item lacking in the evidence at that time. I am referring to the results of the studies which had taken place between the federal department and various provincial departments with respect to income security for disabled persons. The big disappointment was that on a subject matter as important to Canadians as pension reform, we had a Bill which dealt only with a slight increase in GIS payments. We did not have a chance when dealing with a subject as important as pension reform to have other witnesses before the committee, obviously because of lack of time. That was probably done deliberately because the Government held off first reading of this Bill until so late in the session that it was impossible for the committee to discuss at greater length some of the important issues which flow out of the whole subject of pension reform.

I know the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us that a task force dealt with this, and that is true. Unfortunately, the Minister has refused at this point in time to implement any of the recommendations coming out of the task force other than the matter of the increase in the guaranteed income supplement.

I have alluded to the fact that this Bill, good as it is for what it does, is completely inadequate as far as pension reform is concerned. I made reference to the fact that in the last five years the Minister has repeatedly said how important she feels pension reform is, that we had a national conference two or three years ago and a task force, as well as dealing with it in Parliament. Out of all those efforts in Parliament, in the private sector and at the national level by way of the national conference held in Ottawa, we still have no definitive or substantive legislation being brought forward by this Government that will bring meaningful reform to our pension system.

There is an increasing need and urgency for this. The Minister voices this and acknowledges that fact. We have to admit that we have seen what happens when we have a big bulge in our population at the elementary and secondary school levels, the pressure that places on society in general to accommodate that increase in population at that age group.

Today the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) alluded to the massive increases we have had in the labour force and the pressures that brings to bear upon our society. Here we have this Liberal Government refusing to look ahead to the days when we will have that same bulge in our senior citizen ranks of those over 65.

If we do not take cognizance of that now in a meaningful way and do something other than talk about it, we will be in great difficulty in a few years, the year 2000 for example, when we have this massive increase in the number of people who will be in that age group. It will require not only pension reform and support for them in their older days, but support will also be required for their health care.

This reminds me that not many months ago we debated Bill C-3, the Canada Health Act. We had there the same situation as we have now. That Bill was brought in by the Government allegedly to improve the health care of Canadians. When we got to studying that Bill, we found it was the same situation that we now have with amendments to the Old Age Security Act. It was nothing more than a very technical amendment to the provision of health care in Canada whereby the provinces would be penalized if they did not fulfil certain obligations that the federal Government thought they should fulfil.

The Canada Health Act, like Bill C-40 before us today, refused to address the future needs of the health care of Canadians. It ties in with this same bulge in our population. When this same bulge hits those aged 65 and onwards, we will have massive increases in cost vis-à-vis our senior citizens. The increase will be in the order of 50 per cent above what we have now in proportion to the general population. It is something we have to look at well in advance of being faced with the crisis.

This is the second time within six months that this Liberal Government is bringing in picayune legislation to address a very minimal problem in the health care situation or pension problem situation. It is not tackling the real problems that exist, namely what we are going to do for health care and pensions when this big bulge in our population hits those aged 65 and onward.

On March 17 of last year, about 15 months ago, the Minister gave the "cold, hard facts" about our pension needs in Canada. She was saying at that time essentially what I am saying now. She recognized the fact. I do not deny that she realizes what I am saying. I am sure she would be the first to admit it. She acknowledged then that the cold hard facts demanded that there be some pension reform in Canada. Fifteen months later we do not have one substantive change to our pension system which recognizes these cold hard facts that she spoke about, other than this simple social assistance increase. All we get in this Bill is an increase of $50. There are no new ideas in it, no new approaches to the pension system of this country. It is a simple increase in a monetary sense prior to an election to try and convince Canadians that the Liberal Party is a good Party and that it will give them a little extra money. They have refused to tell Canadians that we need more than that kind of a change to our system. We need fundamental changes to our pension system that recognize the difficulties this country is getting into today.

This ties in very closely with the subject of pensions. I will not get into a lot of figures. As I said earlier, third reading is not the appropriate time for that. However, let me remind the Minister and her Parliamentary Secretary that there is a lot of talk about the poverty line. The Minister tries to pretend that what she is doing by way of this $50 increase will make some magic increase in the level of income for those unfortunate Canadians who live below the poverty line. It may be if you apply averages and take those from the rural areas and smaller municipalities and average them with those in the urban areas, she may be able to claim that Bill C-40 will bring Canadian pensioners up to the poverty line. The figures we have do not suggest that at all.

Even with this increase in the minimum that will be payable under the OA/GIS payments, if you take pensioners who are eligible for those payments living in cities of 20,000 or more, those people would be receiving something in the order of $1,900 under the poverty line. Therefore, it is not fair to say that Canadian pensioners will be brought up to the level of the so-called poverty line. Tens of thousands of Canadians will still be under the poverty line, particularly those who live in urban areas. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will take note of that. If he has figures to disprove that fact, we would like to know about it.

The other major disappointment and inadequate component or feature of this Bill is that it has failed to address the severe problems of the old age pensioner in this country who is female. The Minister was one of the first in this House to deplore the inadequate pension that was and is being paid to women in so many facets of our society. There is no area that is neglected more, even by this Government, than pensions for women. My colleague from Kingston and the Islands probably more than any other person in this Chamber throughout the years has attempted to bring to the attention of the House and the Government the fact that this is one of the great deficiencies in our pension system in Canada. I refer to the fact that the women of this country are not adequately covered by appropriate pensions. That is true not only for women who are in the workforce, some of whom are obviously better covered than others, and women are more inadequately covered than men, but it is true as well for housewives.

The biggest deficiency in the pension system exists for the two million or three million Canadian women who are housewives and who do their day-to-day work on behalf of the country and on behalf of their families in the home. No provision has yet been made by the Government to supply any kind of pension for those women. That should be a real priority for any Government but this Government, after talking for years and years about the need for pension reform and after the Minister having been aware for the last 15 months of the cold hard facts, has still not been able to bring before the House any legislation to correct this problem.

I suppose the Canadian people realize that this is one of the deficiencies of the present Liberal Government. I daresay that the Canadian people are now making up their minds and in fact may have already made up their minds that the time has come for a change in government if they are to receive the kind of legislation they are looking for. I think the women of Canada have long since realized that the present Government is not interested in providing that kind of legislation. The Government has had years to do so. Nothing has come forward other than seminars, conferences and parliamentary debate. Nothing meaningful has been done for the women of Canada with regard to pensions.

Let me now turn to another subject to which I alluded briefly a few moments ago. This represents another of the gross deficiencies in this Bill and it is the need for pensions for the disabled and the handicapped. I had the privilege of serving for three years on the Special Committee of this House on the Disabled and the Handicapped. I thought it was one of the most enlightening, rewarding and satisfying experiences I have had in my ten years in the House of Commons. This committee was headed up by the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Smith) who was an excellent chairman of that committee. He gave good leadership to the committee. I would also like to give him credit for the nature of the report that came out of that committee. That report has received what I would deem to be unjustified criticism from some Members of the House because of its alleged elaborateness.

I think the committee deserves credit for coming up with some 130 recommendations, some of which dealt with the subject of pensions and income security. Among those recommendations were something in the order of 11 recommendations that dealt significantly with income security for disabled people. I think with some chagrin that Members on both sides of the House have shown some disappointment in that report. As well, the administration of the House has made some suggestions regarding reforms to approval of committee expenditures, suggestions which give me cause for alarm. The administration has made these suggestions because we spent some extra money to produce a very effective report, a report with an innovative layout and one which included a number of pictures of disabled people designed to show that a disabled person was not different, Mr. Speaker, from you or me. Because we included these pictures and because our format was innovative and probably used a few more pieces of paper and some coloured photographs which had not traditionally been used in parliamentary reports, attempts are now being made to cut back on expenditures on subsequent committee reports.

I believe that committee report was probably the most effective report that has ever been produced by a special parliamentary committee. It is a report which has received world-wide recognition from groups of disabled people. There have been three printings of that report, indicative of the fact that when it was first seen it brought to the attention of Canadians the need for some action in this area and the fact that it was so well received by the people who understood the need in that area that there was an increased demand for copies of the report. Parenthetically, as it were, I wanted to bring this up in debate today because it is germane to today's discussion that that special committee on the disabled and the handicapped spent a significant amount of time on the subject of income security for Canadians who are disabled. Among that group of disabled Canadians are many who are over the age of 65 and are eligible for the OAS and the GIS benefits.

One of the things that our committee tried to get across in its report—and if I can brag for a moment, perhaps no one pushed this point more than I did—was the need for the acceptance of the fact that disabled people have expenses over and above the expenses of those of us who are able-bodied. If we are to provide adequate income support for those people when they are in their senior years, we must provide them with more than the traditional OAS and GIS benefits. Those benefits are not sufficient. They need more benefits because they have added expenses. That is one of the recommendations that the Government has completely ignored up until now in its assessment of the report of the Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped.

I would like to stress the fact that there is a real need for the Government to look into the matter of how we shall adequately reimburse the handicapped of the country, particularly with regard to income security and the acknowledgement of the fact that they have increased expenditures. Along those same lines my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), when he spoke at second reading, and several others including the colleague of the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), have spoken of the fact that senior citizens who now receive GIS as well as worker's compensation benefits because of disabilities suffered years ago will suffer a loss of income because they must now take those compensation benefits into account when calculating their GIS benefits.

In closing, let me touch upon two or three more points. First, the lack of adequate coverage in the pension system partly stems from the fact that the results of the Government's economic policies have been catastrophic. The Government has failed to introduce any kind of economic policy to make it possible to pay adequate pension incomes to our senior citizens. As acknowledged by Dr. Larkin Kerwin, the President of the National Research Council, the Liberal Government saw fit in its early years following the Second World War to set a policy of spending no money on research and development. In order to have a sound economy today, it would have been necessary to make such expenditures. That is why Japan's economy is so good today and why ours is so inadequate as compared to those of the United States and Japan.

Had the Government adopted different policies some years ago and spent some money developing the economy in the country, there would have been a more adequate pension system than the one that exists today. Instead of that, the money that was available to the Government was spent on bailouts for Maislin, bailouts for de Havilland and the purchasing of Petrofina gas stations when it could have been spent on pensions for senior citizens.

Let me conclude by saying that we in the Opposition feel that Bill C-40 needs to be passed. Indeed, pensioners are in desperate need of this $50 increase. That increase is perfectly fine, but let us not forget that the real purpose of this Bill, coming before the House as it does months and months after the Government recognized the problem, coming before the House one month before the House is to be prorogued, is political opportunism. The Bill was brought before the House for one reason only, and that is because it was a matter of political expediency for the Government to tell the senior citizens of Canada that the Liberal Government allegedly cares about them and will offer those who are entitled to receive GIS benefits another $50 per month. I do not think the people of Canada will be fooled by that kind of legislation when the election rolls around in the next few months.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) is right. It is entirely possible that the measures which are being introduced are being introduced for strictly political reasons. If that is the case, I am not satisfied with the measures. I would not be satisfied with those measures even if that was not the case. Quite frankly, any government which thinks it can buy the votes of the Canadian public with $600 a year is dreaming. Therefore, I do not much care what the motivation was, because the end result is inadequate.

First, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Oxford. He covered a variety of different legitimate and related concerns. I was particularly interested in his comments with regard to the plight of elderly women who are single. Indeed, that is a legitimate concern and should be a major concern of the Government. As well, I concur with the suggestion that he made at the end of his speech concerning the matter of financial support for those who fall into the category of being disabled. That matter has not been adequately addressed by the Government. We must find new and innovative ways to provide additional support. The majority of those individuals who fall into that unfortunate category will not receive benefits from this particular measure. I mention those two items because I found them interesting and worth listening to in terms of their substance.

The Bill which is before us is totally inadequate. It is another example of the piecemeal approach of the Government to matters of financial support. In many ways it is misleading inasmuch as it left the impression—one which was first brought forward when the suggestion was made—that there would be an increase in pension levels. The inference that Canadian pensioners would benefit in the over-all, rather than simply those who happen to be single and on GIS, was there. It is unfortunate.

No one in the House would deny that my hon. colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has been in the forefront of the debate on the inadequacies of pensions in Canada since the time before which many of us were born. Had it not been for his tenacity, his strength of character and his capacity to influence by the spoken word the direction which government should take, the inadequate levels of pensions which we now have would have been even more inadequate. I know that if my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre were here today, he would be the first on his feet trying to convince the House of Commons to do what I am proposing should be done—that is, to immediately increase the base level of the Old Age Security.

It must be recognized in Canada that this piecemeal approach to income maintenance will not satisfy today's recipients. Neither will it satisfy the large numbers of people who will ultimately become the recipients of Old Age Security. I say to the Parliamentary Secretary, in the absence of the Minister, I do not deny for one moment that the providing of adequate pensions to Canadians is costly. I am prepared to accept the fact that there will be some in society who will want to argue that the cost is too high. But I want to make it clear that I neither subscribe to nor support that view. I find it offensive. When people who have the means and find themselves quite comfortable in their existence can argue the point, as they frequently do, that the cost of guaranteeing others less fortunate than themselves an adequate level of income during their retirement years is too high and impossible to provide, we must rethink the ways in which we spend tax dollars. If it is true that the current treasury cannot find the money to provide levels of pension for those who retire and who have built this country, and if it is true that we have to do that, then there is no time more suitable for starting than now. The Government is charged with a responsibility and that responsibility goes beyond its terms of office. The Government and Members of Parliament must assume that the actions which they take on behalf of the public of Canada will be beneficial in the long term of office, and that successive Parliaments will be supportive of the new direction that should be proposed. We must build into our pension system, not only the adequate base of which I speak, but a means of ensuring that those who retire and those who must exist on pensions are able to keep pace with the ever-increasing cost of living. I am prepared to be in the forefront of those who say that, whatever the cost is, it must be borne. However we find the money, we must find it. Therefore, we must start that process.

There have been reports on this subject. My colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller), sat on a committee which discussed the problems of pensions, which included the interrelationship between private and public pensions and the interrelationship between the Old Age Security system and the Canada Pension Plan, together with all of the assistance programs which flow from that—the guaranteed income supplement, all the way through to supplementary benefits which are given by certain of the provinces to the aged.

The question arises as to how to deal with the contribution which is made by housewives. What is that contribution to the over-all growth of society? How can it be measured when there is no clear income which flows to those women? I do not think that anyone has been able adequately to come to grips with that question. There have been a number of suggestions as to how it can be done, but the one thing which worries me is that there does not appear to be the parliamentary political will to proceed with those suggestions. We can find time in the House of Commons to do any number of things some of them valuable, some somewhat less valuable. But on a question as fundamental and as basic as guaranteeing a woman who has worked at home, raised a family and looked after the household an income at the time of retirement, due to age, loss of husband or partner, we should provide that woman with the opportunity to live in a society of which she has been so much a part. For some reason that question does not seem important enough for the House of Commons. For many women in this country, it is the single most important question that they face.

It worries me, Mr. Speaker, that we end up dealing with a $50 a month increase for a select few individuals in need. It is a $50 a month increase which, no doubt every single one of them will be delighted to receive, but it is a $50 increase which will in fact be totally inadequate at this time to meet their needs. We can find time to deal with that but we cannot find time to deal with the basic and fundamental question of how we can establish an income maintenance program. Perhaps it is time for us to look at how we can guarantee people an income. Perhaps the whole thought process must be changed. Perhaps the way pensions per se have been allocated in the past is not the right way. Perhaps we have to move towards the adoption of a guaranteed annual income program, which can be more easily funded, I say to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). These things are difficult, but I think he will agree that we can work them out.

I believe this House of Commons should be meeting in session and trying to find a solution to a guaranteed annual income. I believe that is important. We would then begin to address a number of questions, not only the problems of pensioners, but the question of giving the disabled an income which would begin to meet their needs. We would begin to address the question of those who are single, who go through their lives without partners, who perhaps do not have an adequate private pension arrangement. We would speak to unemployment in many ways and to the question of early retirement. What happens to people when they get to an age when they are physically unable to do the work they have always done? Yet these same people continue to have obligations which demand an income sufficient to meet those obligations. What do you say to someone who has been a labourer in a field of work which is onerous and physically demanding when that person reaches the age of 50 or 60 and time has taken its toll? They can no longer continue to climb to the top of a high building to put the bolts in place which hold the girders. What do you say to that person when he gets laid off or he cannot climb up there any more on a daily basis and does not qualify for a pension or any kind of assistance? To tell him to go find another job is ridiculous.

I feel we are evading the real question. The real question before us today, surely, is how we can make sure through legislative action that people who live and work in Canada—and I include people who work at home—are able throughout their lives to have a base income level which will be sufficient to meet their basic needs. I am not talking about extravagance; I am talking about basic needs. That is never talked about and we must do so. The question is always, can we afford to give another small supplement to this group? Can we afford to subsidize this or that group? Can we extend UIC a little for another group? Can we in some way meet the peculiar needs of one group of individuals who happen to have peculiar needs which are different from the needs of the balance of society? Frankly, I believe in doing it that way, but we tend to approach the topic in a piecemeal fashion and, therefore, lose sight of what the real problem is.

The real problem for people basically is, how do they get enough income to meet their needs? That is why they work; that is why they need unemployment benefits when they cannot work; that is why they need workmen's compensation when they hurt; that is why they get a pension when they retire; that is why we provide an allowance when they are unable to work and do not qualify for any other assistance; and that is why Canada Pension Plan was brought in and extended to meet the needs of those who are ill for long periods of time. It was not done on a humanitarian basis—or perhaps it was partly. It was certainly not done primarily on a humanitarian basis. It was done because we recognized that people's financial needs are fundamental and, therefore, must be addressed.

What I am really saying today is that it is always disappointing to be handed a piece of legislation which—and I say this quite categorically—is no doubt being welcomed by those who will receive the benefit, but which does not address the real problem. Obviously, any little bit of help is going to be supported by everyone. It is certainly better than leaving things the way they are. But I would ask that we begin in this House to start talking about the real problems. We must begin a process of making sure that the committee of the House of Commons start to look seriously at what is involved in creating an income base program which will guarantee that Canadians, in whatever condition they find themselves at any point in time, will have an income at least sufficient to meet their daily requirements.

One might argue, and I can see the argument coming, how do we decide what are the basic daily requirements?

Mr. Gamble: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I can appreciate that the Hon. Member who applauded, the Hon. Member for—what is the riding?

Mr. Gamble: That is all right; you just wander on.

Mr. Deans: I am not wandering on. I want to say that I can understand that someone as affluent as that Hon. Member from the Conservative Party would expect that his basic needs would be considerably higher than those, say, of the average New Democrat. I can understand, therefore, that the average Conservative would not want to share his ill-gotten gains with the balance of society.

Mr. Gamble: Why do you not make a contribution yourself?

Mr. Deans: I can appreciate that Conservatives would want to have income-tested programs to make sure that people at the lower end were subjected to the humiliation of having to provide information about their day-to-day lives.

Mr. Gamble: No one said that.

Mr. Deans: I can understand the Tory position.

Mr. Gamble: You are dreaming again in technicolor.

Mr. Deans: I have lived through the Tory years. I know what the philosophy of the Conservative Party is. The Hon. Member who is interjecting is reinforcing on a daily basis that those who have hang on to what they have, and those who are in need, to hell with them.

Mr. Gamble: That is your theory. That is what you practise.

Mr. Deans: That is the typical Tory attitude. I listened to the Hon. Member when he ran in the leadership contest of the Conservative Party. I saw through all of the smoke and mirrors—

Mr. Taylor: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: —as he tried to appear as if he was in some way—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, let us use another day to discuss our political Parties. We are now talking about the disabled and the pensioners.

Mr. Deans: That was an interesting interjection. You are afraid to hear the truth, are you? However, as I was saying, I understand the Tory philosophy and I can appreciate that they do not want to see the kind of support base for the people I am talking about.

Mr. Taylor: That is completely untrue and you know it.

Mr. Deans: I can well appreciate that they want to hold on to what they have, no matter how they got it, and share it with no one.

Mr. Taylor: That is complete baloney!

Mr. Deans: It has always been the case. I do not deny for one moment, Mr. Speaker, right on that point, that if those Hon. Members came across a poor person on the street who should be benefiting from one program or another, they would be the first people to put their hands in their pockets and hand that individual a dollar. I do not deny that for a moment because they believe in the charity approach. They believe that if they give that poor person something, that person should be grateful forever.

Mr. Taylor: Baloney!

Mr. Deans: What they do not seem to understand is that that poor person they meet on the street is but one of thousands, if not one of tens of thousands, of people who are facing similar kinds of problems. It is to that larger group that we are speaking today. We all want individual generosity but what we want more is to have people with an income by right, and an adequate income at that. I know it is foreign to the Tory philosophy to propose something like that, or even to listen to it. If they want to get up and tell us that somehow they will bring forward these programs, why have they not done so? I just find it offensive to listen to them.

• (1320)

However, let me say in conclusion that this particular proposal will pass because it does begin to address one particular small problem. But the real and more fundamental problem is one of basic income maintenance. Until we address that problem in a satisfactory and adequate way, we will be forever faced with piecemeal legislation which will never satisfy the basic needs of the majority of retired or unfortunate Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): A ten-minute period is now provided for questions or comments related to the Hon. Member's speech.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I was interested as always in the Hon. Member's speech. I listened to him very carefully. He was talking about a guaranteed annual income, which has a great deal of attractiveness and it is something we should be looking at very carefully. Later in his speech he said, in response to comments from the Conservative Party, that the Conservatives would like to see everything means-tested.

Mr. Fennell: No way.

Mr. Evans: I am just repeating what the Hon. Member said. He said that means testing was demeaning and it is not the way that we should be going. Is he not aware that a guaranteed annual income is the ultimate means-tested form of income security? It is given to people so that everyone has a minimum and it is phased out beyond that point on the basis of a means test. You cannot have a universal guaranteed annual income where everyone gets exactly the same amount regardless of their need. The purpose of a guaranteed annual income is to give it only to those who have the need, and it is phased out for income above that. There is a fundamental inconsistency in what the Hon. Member said. A guaranteed annual income is the antithesis of universality.

Mr. Deans: I disagree with the Hon. Member. We, of course, disagree on a number of technical points and on this one I disagree again.

Mr. Evans: You cannot disagree with that.

Mr. Deans: You can. If you had a universally applied guaranteed annual income, you establish a tax base that will allow you to tax back from those who are in excess—

Mr. Evans: So then it is not universal.

Mr. Deans: Of course it is universal.

Mr. Evans: Universal in the front row, selective in the back row.

Mr. Deans: No, it is absolutely universal. I think the Hon. Member would agree with me that, although he may not find it a satisfactory way of dealing with it, it is a practical approach to the problem he raises.

Mr. Evans: You are going to have a 100 per cent tax rate at some point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Debate.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to delay the debate. There are just three points I want to raise. I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) that the socialists of Canada do not have any monopoly on compassion, love or sharing.

Mr. Deans: That is right.

Mr. Taylor: I take objection to any Member imputing motives to members of any other Party. He claims we do not have compassion.

Mr. Deans: I did not say that.

Mr. Taylor: Our record will show that we have. However, I am not going to deal with that now. The Hon. Member is fully qualified to speak on socialism but he certainly does not know much about the PC Party or free enterprise.

One of the two main points I got up to speak on today is the Canada Pension. It is a splendid thing, but there are a number of people who never had the opportunity of contributing to the Canada Pension Plan. Consequently, when they reach the age of 55, 60 or 63, particularly if they are ill, they have no access to that fund. Many years ago we had pensions like the disability pension or the widows' pension. They have gone by the board and now we have the Canada Pension. It is a sad indictment of our society today that we leave a group of people without access to anything other than welfare when they reach the senior years of their lives. I think it behooves every government to look at this problem very carefully and come up with some solutions.

I am sure that every one of us here has had people come to us who, at age 55 or 60, have a sudden sickness and can no longer work. They are used to a reasonable standard of living. They are hard workers. Some of these people have looked after a widowed mother or a crippled father and so on. We do not need to go into all the causes, but there are people in that category and they have applied for the Canada Pension. They have to be told that we cannot pay them because they have never contributed. Well, they never had the opportunity to contribute. I hope we can deal with that problem because I find it very heartbreaking.

Another part of that question concerns the person who, because of sickness, has had to apply prematurely for the Canada Pension. They have not yet reached the age of 65. It takes too long, six to nine months, to process the application. This is a period of anxiety for these people. I would like to suggest to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that we endeavour to cut that time down to some degree.

The second reason I wanted to speak on this motion has to do with the misunderstanding about workmen's compensation. When a person is injured on the job and is no longer able to work, he gets compensation. During the period he is off work, that compensation is replacement of wages. He gets two-thirds or three-quarters of his wages and sometimes the employer provides the rest. Those are wages, but that is not what we are talking about. We are talking about those who have a permanent injury. They lost a hand and will never get it back. They are not on ordinary compensation; they are on what is called a temporary, partial disability, or they lose both legs and are on a permament total disability. The payment received is compensation for losing part of their body. I want to emphasize that difference. The compensation should not be included in wages.

It is so sad to see that some people who are getting the $50 increase this year are actually going to end up with less money than they had before. That is sad and it surely was never intended. I am sorry the Government has not brought in an amendment to cover this, because it was outlined very carefully by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) and several others. I raised it personally with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) and she was going to take it up with the responsible Minister. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) raised it on the floor of this House at least twice, and he indicated that he raised it in caucus also. I hope the Government will give this matter further consideration because it is utterly unfair for these people to get less money, when they have been promised an increase because of a sudden change in the rules and these payments are considered as wages. They are not wages and they should not be considered as wages.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks. I thought you were going to ask if there are any questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No one rose, but I will find out if anyone wishes to put questions to the Hon. Member who just finished speaking.

Mr. Deans: I have a very brief question just to clear up a point. I do not believe the Hon. Member thought that I said that Conservatives did not have compassion. It was the opposite. I said that I did not doubt for a moment that Conservative Members had compassion.

• (1330)

However, that was not the issue. I said that I did not doubt for a moment that they would be the first to put their hand in their pocket to give some poor person $1 or $5 or $10. That is not the issue either. The problem is the tens of thousands of people you do not meet who are in dire need. Obviously you cannot reach into your pocket for all of them. That was the only point I made with regard to compassion. I think they are Neanderthal but I do not think they have no compassion.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether that requires an answer. However, we were not discussing handing money out of our pockets to people. We were talking about pensions for disabled people, old people and people in general. That is what we were talking about, not handing money out of our pockets because we feel sorry for someone.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there further questions or comments? The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare on debate.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) for his comments. I certainly appreciate the Hon. Member's sincerity in the remarks that he has made, as I appreciate the sincerity of his colleague, the Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday).

I would like to take exception though to the comment made that the Government is not tremendously concerned about the question of pensions. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first outlined the federal Government's major objectives for pension reform in 1979, I wonder how many of us realized how difficult this question would be and how much research and questioning would have to be done on this subject. The first thing which was done was to look at the system in place and discover why it was not working. This was done through a number of studies, including those by the Economic Council of Canada, the task force on retirement policy and the special Senate committee's report, Retirement Without Tears. Next came the national pensions conference in the spring of 1981.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I apologize for interrupting the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary at this time. I must inquire of him whether he is closing debate on second reading on behalf of the Minister.

Mr. MacLellan: Third reading, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is fine.

Mr. MacLellan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Included in the national pensions conference were representatives from the federal Government, provincial governments, private sector pensions employees, employers, women's groups and other individuals who were interested in this question from across the country. All of these groups continue to play an important role in the reform process and will continue to do so.

After the national pensions conference, work quickened on this subject and many groups came out with specific proposals. These proposals were very carefully studied. In December of 1982 we released a green paper that outlined these options and proposals which we felt needed further feedback. The parliamentary task force on pension reform was formed as a result of this green paper. After several months of public and private hearings the task force reported and two months later the federal Government, via the February, 1984 budget, outlined its strategy for reforming Canada's retirement income system.

While this is a very sketchy history of what has been done since 1979, I think Hon. Members will agree that it shows just how thoroughly pension reform has been studied. We have studied this subject well and I agree that at the present time we must implement some of the recommendations which came from this very important study. Bill C-40 is evidence of the period of study. As Hon. Members know, during the study period just past, a great deal of effort was directed to the various pension arrangements available to Canadians on retirement. The emphasis was on improving pension vehicles so that when an individual retires he or she will have a standard of living not unlike that enjoyed prior to his or her retirement.

The problems and concerns of pensioners within this retirement income system have not been forgotten. That is what we want to deal with through these amendments to the Old Age Security Act. We are not saying that we have a panacea for all questions within the retirement income system. It is for a specific purpose that we do not say that. The reason is that the subject is so detailed and has so many ramifications that we cannot possibly deal with this whole question in this particular Bill. We are saying that there is a very definite need among pensioners, particularly single pensioners in the country. We must deal with this question as soon as possible.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) says that the Government should be doing more on this question. He says that we should be looking at other aspects of the retirement income system. That is a very accurate statement but very much a simplification of the problem and the question. I sat with the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) in committee on the security Bill. In my opinion that Bill was literally filibustered by the Hon. Member. If the Hon. Member is serious about dealing with these questions, he must realize that these questions have to be dealt with as quickly as possible.

With regard to the record of certain Opposition Members in the very recent past, if we are going to tie up Bills the way Bills have recently been tied up—and I refer to the security Bill specifically—these important specifications are not going to be brought into law and made available to the very people who need them.

The guaranteed income supplement benefit was first introduced in 1967. It has been increased specifically by the Liberal Government since that time. Work toward the level of income that is needed in the country has taken place. Single pensioners received a full $20 increase as the first increase in 1969. Under the GIS program in 1980 single pensioners received an additional $35 increase. Married pensioners each received $17.50.

The proposals contained in this Bill will ensure that the two groups of pensioners that are not yet guaranteed a sufficient income under the Old Age Security Program, that is single and partial pensioners, will receive the increases they require. The first major proposal contained in Bill C-40 is the $50 increase for all pensioners getting what we call the single rate guaranteed income supplement. That includes GIS pensioners who are single, widowed, divorced and separated, as well as one-pension couples where one spouse is an Old Age Security pensioners and the other spouse is under the age of 60 and therefore does not yet qualify for spouse's allowance.

The $50 increase also goes to the spouse's allowance recipients who have been widowed and are now living alone. This increase will be made in two stages. The first $25 payment will be made next month and the second in December. These increases will, of course, be over and above the regular quarterly cost of living increases. In total, $50 in increases to the GIS single rate will be made. By December of this year single pensioners will be guaranteed 62 per cent of the income guaranteed to two-pension couples through the GIS and OAS programs.

The Hon. Member for Oxford stated that the OAS has been reduced from 20 per cent of the average industrial wage since its inception to 14 per cent of the average industrial wage. That is an accurate statistic. While we on this side of the House support the universality of programs such as Old Age Security, such a statistic demonstrates the need to pay particular attention to certain areas. Although we believe in universality for assistance to pensioners, should the funds that we have available be distributed to all pensioners to bring them from 14 per cent to 20 per cent of the OAS, or should we pay particular attention to pensioners in need through the GIS? With due respect to the Hon. Member for Oxford, I believe the funds would be better targeted toward the GIS for those people in particular need.

Appropximately 750,000 people will receive the $50 and approximately 25,000 more pensioners will qualify for the GIS for the first time as a result of the higher benefits under the GIS program. Hon. Members will know that this helps a segment of our population that is particularly in need.

The Hon. Member for Bow River talked about the needs of single women. Of this group who will receive benefits according to this Bill, 73 per cent are women. This is particularly important, as the Hon. Member for Bow River pointed out, because the majority of people living below the poverty line are single women. These are women who have spent a lifetime working in the home and in the community without access to the various work-related pension plans that are available to members of the workforce. Their only access to a pension plan is usually indirectly through their spouse. Quite often, these women are ultimately alone in retirement without the benefit of their spouse's pension plan.

Special emphasis on the problems facing women has been evident throughout the whole pension reform process. Today, the Government is taking a very important first step toward alleviating these problems. It is a first step because the $50 GIS increase has not solved the pension problems of all women. The Government fully recognizes that this increase is a short-term, even stop-gap measure to deal with an immediate concern, which is the well-being of today's elderly women and men who stand little, if anything, to gain from the reform of other aspects of our pensions system.

The partial Old Age Security pensioner is another group who have not yet been guaranteed a sufficient level of retirement income. They will receive the required increases as a result of other major amendments in this Bill. This will be accomplished by adding a flexible element to the GIS paid to partial pensioners. We will ensure that these pensioners will have access to the same total income as that provided to full pensioners through the OAS and GIS programs.

For example, according to the provisions of the Act, a pensioner who is entitled to only one-quarter of the basic Old Age Security pension is entitled to the same level of GIS as is provided to full pensioners. According to the proposals contained in this Bill, That pensioner will have access to the GIS benefit that is equal to the maximum benefit guaranteed to full pensioners, plus an amount equal to three-quarters of the OAS pension.

The Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) stated that even the inequitable treatment of one Canadian is worthy of the Government's attention. I agree with him. Some of the provisions in this Bill are particularly geared toward addressing the specific needs of some Canadians. For example, according to the present Act, Canadians can only apply for Old Age Security one year retroactively. According to this Bill, that period of retroactive application will be increased to five years. It is estimated that this only applies to approximately 50 people per year who do not apply for Old Age Security within a year after reaching the age of 65. Therefore this provision is very important to those 50 people.

Incidentally, I believe a partial reason why there are only 50 people who do not apply is that the Department is very efficient in giving notice to people approaching the age 65 to ensure they apply for their earned right. It is an earned right, as Members opposite have pointed out, because these people have built this country. We owe them for what they have done for the country during their working lives as homemakers or people in the workforce.

In the time I have remaining, let me deal with some of the questions that have been raised by Members at this stage of the debate. The Hon. Member for Oxford spoke of the workmen's compensation problem, as did the Hon. Member for Bow River and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. Unfortunately, a provision implemented in a finance Bill means that workmen's compensation benefits have now been deemed to be included in income. This is not something that the Government can ignore and it is currently studying it very carefully. However, it is not a matter which can be dealt with in this Bill.

Hon. Members have also mentioned the poverty line. We must consider the poverty line in the context of the whole question of income and the needs of senior citizens. As I said, the increases in the GIS payments will bring single pensioners to within 62 per cent of the incomes of married pensioners in this country. I think that is a significant statistic.

The general needs of pensioners are an ongoing question. It has been stated that the Government should have introduced this Bill earlier and that third reading should have taken place before now. That is completely irrelevant. It does not hold any credence at all. The first increase under this amended Bill will be due in July. Whether the Bill were passed February 29 or whether it will be passed June 30 is of no consequence. The importance is that it is passed in time for our senior citizens to receive the increases they so richly deserve.

I find that this is a tremendously important piece of legislation, and that has been recognized by the co-operation all Members of the House have given to its passage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

National Housing Act

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. As Hon. Members know, there are two motions at report stage of Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, standing on the Notice Paper in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney).

The required notice for these motions was waived last night by unanimous consent of the House. Nonetheless the Chair has the duty to draw any irregularities in any motion to the attention of the House.

May I direct the Hon. Members' attention to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(8), which states:

(a) An amendment may not amend a statute which is not before the committee. Journals, March 28, 1969, p. 862. Journals, June 11, 1970, p. 993.

(b) An amendment may not amend sections from the original Act unless they are specifically being amended in a clause of the bill before the committee.

Of course, these rules apply equally to the report stage of Bills and I refer Hon. Members to Beauchesnes' Fifth Edition, Citation 792, to that effect.

In a similar situation, Mr. Speaker Jerome ruled that similar motions——clearly seek to amend the parent Act in a way that was not envisaged by the amending Bill.

For these reasons, I regret that I must rule that the report stage motions are irreceivable.

Mr. Taylor: I rise on a point of order. Could you enlarge on this matter a little bit, Mr. Speaker? In the Alberta legislature we followed the rule that when there was a Bill to amend a statute it then was left open to any Member to amend any item in the original statute. While these two amendments amend the original statute, they are also very germane to the statute we are studying. I would appreciate your comments. I am not questioning your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair appreciates the Hon. Member's comments. However, the ruling I have just made is based on the practices, customs and Standing Orders of the Canadian House of Commons. The Chair recognizes that other Canadian legislative assemblies may from time to time follow a different course. That is quite proper in their jurisdictions, but the practice in the Canadian House of Commons has not been parallel. Therefore, I will now put the motion to the House:

Mr. LeBlanc, seconded by Mr. Whelan, moves that Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act as amended, be concurred in. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. LeBlanc moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in connection with third reading of Bill C-37. May I also express with regret that our critic, the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), is unable to be here. I want to express regrets on his behalf.

Let me say that I hope at least the gist of the amendments might be included in the regulations. The Hon. Minister I believe is prepared to take a careful look at them, and I appreciate that very much.

For a few moments now I would like to deal with third reading of this Bill, a very important Bill. We should cover a few points. First, what is the Bill going to do? It introduces something new as far as legislation in Canada is concerned, at least as far as the federal Government is concerned, and that is to provide a mortgage rate protection plan, which we refer to as MRPP. This was mentioned by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in his Budget. We have been waiting for it, as have a great number of people.

The MRPP is an attempt to protect mortgagors from unaffordable increases in their interest rates, and as such, this has merit. The program is supposed to pay for itself. The Minister expressed the hope that no general revenue would be required to handle it. The premium is 1.5 per cent of the principal, and the highest principal permitted is $70,000 of the mortgage debt, or the face value of the mortgage, whichever is less. There is no repayment for the first two percentage points; there is a 2 per cent deductible, after which the program will pick up 75 per cent of the increase to an additional 10 percentage points. There is no protection at all beyond an increase of 10 percentage points.

I think it is important to make note of those items as well, as another one to which I will make reference. I am referring to the reference rate or the reference point which was discussed in committee. Many people will think that at whatever rate their mortgages are established, even if they are below the market value at the time, that the two percentage points start at that point. Of course that is not so. The program refers to a reference rate, and I would like to read into the record the information given to the committee in connection with that, so that the people who are following this debate with the idea of taking advantage of the program will not be under any misapprehension. Page 6:38 of the committee report reads:

This reference rate will be established by taking the five major lenders on the market and taking the median of these five rates at any given time. So today, for example, the five-year term may be something of the order of probably 14.5 per cent. Let us say that five years from now, just for the sake of illustration, it is 19.5 per cent on that day. So then we will say that the reference rate has grown from 14.5 per cent to 19.5 per cent.

There is another statement which I think should be read. It appears on page 6:40 of the same report and reads:

The 5 per cent it goes up will be covered provided it is not only yours which goes up 5 per cent; it is the market which has gone up 5 per cent in that interval we are talking about.

The reference point should be taken into consideration.

A number of points have been raised about the MRPP which do not bear repeating. They were mentioned at second reading. However, I want to indicate that the Progressive Conservative Party is very concerned about the Canadian housing industry. We feel that Canada needs a housing program which will meet the needs to the greatest possible degree of all people. Of course that is easier said than done. We feel that there should be a multiple number of programs because home ownership is distinctive to our way of life. We think everyone possible should have the opportunity to own homes. It should be feasible for as many people as possible to own homes. This particular mortgage protection plan will not enable the housing industry to start meeting all needs. It will provide only one item of protection that may benefit a number of people.

Of course a great many people are concerned and interested in it. The document given to us in committee by the Minister's Department indicated the amount of interest evident at that point throughout Canada. It gave the number of telephone calls and written requests following the address of the Minister of Finance. The total accumulated telephone calls and written requests according to that document amounted to 5,161, most of which were from the Province of Quebec with 1,197 inquiries. My own province had 357. The second highest was the Province of Nova Scotia with 698, followed by British Columbia with 569. It is interesting to note that Yukon had none, but every province had some interest in the program. We have to conclude that a number of people are interested in it.

It behooves those people to check very carefully the premium payable for the life of the mortgage. It is not a one-year premium. It could amount to $1,050 on a $70,000 mortgage. They have to weigh the chance of interest rates rising more than the 2 per cent deductible and whether they will go up high enough to cover the increased interest as well as their premiums. They may actually be better off to use the premium of $1,050, or whatever it happens to be, to reduce the principal or their over-all mortgage. Surely the objective of everyone with a mortgage is to reduce it and eliminate it entirely as rapidly as possible. It will be a responsibility of the people themselves to look carefully at the provisions of the program. This Bill gives them the opportunity to purchase protection if they think it might be needed.

Had such a program been in effect in the last 10 years, there were very few occasions when it would have provided protection. Of course it would have provided gigantic protection in 1980 when interest rates rose from 14 per cent to 21.4 per cent. It would have provided tremendous protection during that period, but over the last 10 years or so there would not have been any particular advantage to a protection program. Of course, when people take out fire insurance they do not know whether their houses will burn down. They hope they will not, but they are purchasing protection in case they do. It may be that many people will be interested in coverage from that point of view as the interest rate is very unstable. It may rise significantly or not very much. We are all hoping that it will go down, not up.

If a person takes out this protection policy and the rate goes down, he is simply out the premium and would argue that it would have been better to reduce the principal on the mortgage rather than take out the policy. It will be up to people to decide in light of their own circumstances and the interest situation across the country.

Also the Bill deals with mortgage and home ownership security. The Government has indicated that there is a feeling that longer term mortgages should be available, for example, that mortgages should be renewed every 10 years instead of every five years. It feels that would contribute to the stability and growth of the building industry. It may. However, I would question going into a longer term mortgage unless I was fairly sure that the interest rates would keep rising. Over a 10-year period there is a great chance of interest rates falling as well, and one could end up stuck with a longer term mortgage. A large number of people lost their homes in 1980 and 1981 because they could not meet the costs of their mortgages as a result of large increases in rates of interest. While there are arguments on both sides for longer term mortgages, I am inclined to think that they might give stability to the building industry, but I am not so sure they will give any particular benefit to the rank and file.

I should like to deal for a moment or so with another aspect of the legislation. People certainly want the opportunity to own homes. However, many people across the country have reached the conclusion that they will never be able to purchase homes. For example, I spoke with a young married couple who have a son. They have given up all hope. This man works steadily, as does his wife. They have no hope of raising the down payment for a home. That is sad, but they reconciled themselves to that fact. They would like some security in renting, and we must give careful consideration to rental security.

The other day I received a letter from a constituent. He had been renting the same apartment for over ten years. The apartment building has been sold and he has been given his walking papers. That will disturb his whole life and that of his family. He thought he had security. We have to look at every angle of rental accommodation so that it meets the housing needs of our people. If they cannot have a home, rental is the next best thing.

There are a number of rental programs. I will just deal with one of them, co-op housing. I have an interest in this. I know people in the Calgary area who are very happy to be in a co-op housing project. It gives them security. They have a house, social life, and are happy with the amount of rent. Their rent is not subject to all the fluctuations that occur in normal renting.

If I owned an apartment, I could well increase the rent and still be competitive. I may want to charge all the market can bear. On the other hand I could be compassionate and charge the lowest rent possible. The rent in co-op housing is only affected by increased expenses. The co-ops have a democratic organization to run their projects. If there is an increase in taxes, the rent is increased to cover just that amount. It is not increased to provide a profit. If there is an increase in the insurance cost or other expenses over which they have no control, cognizance is taken of that and it is dealt with. That is one of the big advantages.

Something I like about co-operative housing is that it meets the needs of those who need it most. I made a check on this at a meeting I attended in Toronto. I wish to put on record how their wages relate to co-operative housing: 18.4 per cent had an annual income of less than $5,000, which is very low, at the poverty level; 52 per cent had an income of less than $10,000 a year, not a very high amount; 12 per cent had an income of $15,000 or less. That means that 82 per cent of those in the housing project had a salary of less than $15,000. They had a home, security, and a social life. They can run their own affairs. The others earned above that: 2.5 per cent with an income of less than $25,000, and 3.4 per cent with an income of more than $25,000.

People in almost every wage bracket live in the project. There is no social stigma if one person earns $5,000 and his neighbour earns $25,000. That is something I like about it. In building the houses, the construction industry benefits. The building of 10,000 units creates 16,000 jobs. That is what normally happens. There are a number of advantages to such a project.

There are other types of rental accommodation that I will not mention. We should look carefully at the building of new houses to see what benefits they provide, particularly for those who need it most, those with lower incomes. We should spend a good bit of time and provide a good bit of money in this area. We should increase that type of rental accommodation. That is very important. Many times subsidies to landlords do not help with rental costs. They do not produce one new house. That is the sad part about many of those programs. Money provided to co-operative housing projects produces new homes as well as the other advantages I mentioned. That is an important aspect of housing.

The third item covered in this Bill is very close to my heart, the rural and native housing program. This program does a tremendous amount of good. I recently referred a widow in my constituency to this program. She did not know what to do. Her roof was leaking, and she needed new windows and doors. This woman had two children. She was working but did not have enough income to repair her house. She did not want to give it up. Her husband had paid for it before he passed away. She cannot borrow money. The RRAP Program covers that need. She can get much of this work done. Some of it she will pay back, and some of it will be forgiveable.

This program is of tremendous advantage for such people who needs their homes rehabilitated, something all houses need sooner or later. I like this program very much. It was questioned to some degree in committee. In committee we received a lot of information about the number of people who benefit from it. I will not deal with that. The program is applicable both to those on reserves and those in rural areas. A good percentage of the money is spent in both places.

There are three reserves in my constituency. I visit them periodically. They require more housing. Those that have been built are excellent. You have to be proud of them. When a family moves into such a house, it is like entering a new era. It brings happiness and satisfaction not only to those who live there but to everyone who sees it. Others on the reserve want this type of housing as well.

This program does a tremendous amount of good. If there were nothing else in this Bill other than the rural and native housing program, I would support it. The members of the New Democratic Party say they are going to oppose the Bill. Maybe they will have a change of heart. I hope so. I know the need on our reserves for new housing and the rehabilitation of present housing.

I know the need in rural areas. The Drumheller Valley was once a rich coal mining area. The mines have closed. Miners are not noted for building wonderful houses. The inside of their homes is better than the outside. The widows of those miners have been left with those homes. They are nice inside, but the windows do not keep out the cold. Storm windows and other things are required to make that house the kind of house that can stand weather with temperatures of 20 degrees below zero and 40 degrees below zero. This program is an excellent one and I would like to commend the Minister for continuing it.

He is now going to continue the program unilaterally. I think that is a good idea too. We asked the Minister in committee if the provinces would still be able to contribute if they wish. The answer was yes. We are getting the best of both worlds. Those of us who live in provinces in which the provincial governments want to contribute get 25 per cent more added to the total. No province will lose. The provinces can gain by joining the program, but if they do not wish to join, they then exercise their freedom of choice. That part of the Bill is, as well, an excellent part.

Canada needs about 210,000 housing units every year. We have not been meeting that need, but every old house that is made habitable goes toward meeting the housing need. Many people do not wish to leave the houses in which their children were born, or the houses in which their husbands or wives passed away. Those homes form a part of their entire being. This Bill enables them to keep their homes right up until the time they are no longer able to look after themselves.

As the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) said, we are supporting this Bill. I could go into a great deal of detail about housing but I will not do that today. I hope there will be other opportunities to do so. I will simply close by saying that we in the Progressive Conservative Party were somewhat disappointed with the Bill. First, we think it should have included some kind of tax credit program which would enable people who are otherwise unable to buy homes to do so. We would like to see the building of a greater variety of homes. We would like to see the building of a greater variety of rental homes so that those who cannot buy a home can live in a good home. We would like to see all those things, but I suppose we cannot do everything at once.

We are somewhat disappointed with this Bill, but we are going to support it because it does give people an opportunity to protect themselves in some adverse circumstances if the interest rate rises. It will enable people to consider longer mortgages, which will perhaps have some benefit to the industry upon which we depend to build new houses. Finally, it extends the funding available to the rural and native housing program, and I think that that is excellent. We plan to support this Bill on third reading.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Bill has already been debated at second reading, has gone through committee, and has been studied in detail. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has discussed the various component parts of the legislation. the only problem I have with the legislation is with that part which deals with the mortgage insurance plan. The balance of the legislation is supportable, although perhaps inadequate.

Unfortunately the mortgage insurance program is not, in my judgment, a particularly good proposal. It does not go to the heart of the problem. The heart of the problem is not the insurability of mortgage increases but the fact that mortgage rates have now reached the point where a significantly large proportion of the total population is excluded from home ownership. the events of the last two or three days alone have excluded something in the order of another 100,000 renters, who previously had the option of purchasing a home, from being able to qualify for mortgages at the current rate. This Bill does nothing about that. Those are the fundamental problems related to home ownership. The capacity to insure oneself against usurious increases does not solve that problem.

Quite bluntly, I do not like this approach to the problem. I do not think this is how we should deal with what has become a cancer in our society, the apparent right of individuals to gouge others. That is what has happened in the mortgage field. When mortgage interest rates rose to 21 per cent some 20 months ago, there was not one single person in the House who did not feel that something had to be done to separate mortgage interest rates from all other interest rates and recognize the absolute necessity for the funding of affordable accommodation. This Bill does not do that.

The only redeeming feature of this proposed legislation as it deals with mortgage insurance is that the program is voluntary. I suppose if people want to spend something in excess of $1,000 to buy themselves protection, then all I can say is I think they are being gypped and are making a mistake. Perhaps they should protect themselves some other way. Perhaps they should reduce their mortgages, or put their money in a bond, or do something as productive, rather than handing it over and finding that in the long run they will receive virtually, if not totally, no benefit from it.

We know that mortgage interest rates would have to rise by 4.2 per cent before the people who had paid $1,000 out of their pockets would receive any benefit, taking into account the interest value on that money or the direct benefit they would receive if they reduced their mortgages by that amount. Taking those factors into account, mortgage rates would have to rise by 4.2 per cent before they would receive one single penny of benefit. They have to pay 1.5 per cent on the premium and do not receive anything for increases of another 2 per cent. They then receive the benefit of a reduction of three-quarters of 1 per cent for the next full point of increase. Even at that there is no guarantee that the calculation will be based upon their current mortgage interest rate since the Government has come up with some magic number called the reference rate.

All I can do in the time available to me is to say to the people: "For heaven's sake, be careful." To anyone who is listening today, or who might read Hansard, I say: "Be careful. Do not spend your hard earned money on this. It will not satisfy you, it will not protect you, it will not solve the problem of interest rates." In my judgment this program may in fact contribute to the interest rate difficulties, because the financial institutions will now feel less pressure as a result of the availability of an insurance program. The financial institutions will not feel compelled to work as actively as they might otherwise have worked to hold interest rates down.

From my point of view the main point of this exercise is to recognize that if interest rates for mortgages go from 14 per cent—and they are now in the environs of 14 per cent—to 18 per cent or 19 per cent, then the whole damned economy will be in a mess. If we allow that rise in interest rates to happen, then the problems of unemployment, domestic production, and domestic consumption, will be problems that will have to be faced by the House of Commons. If interest rates ever rise to a point where the purchase of this insurance would benefit anyone, then it is pretty clear to me that that rise in interest rates by itself will have triggered so many other problems in society that the end result will be a deterioration of Canada's economy.

The Minister knows my feelings on this matter. I have told him about them privately, and I have told him about them publicly. Without taking up a lot of time, I would therefore say to the Minister again: "I do not like it." In my judgment this program may exacerbate rather than solve the problem of mortgage interest rates.

I do believe it will become necessary, if not for this Parliament then for some subsequent Parliament, to devise new ways of funding mortgages in order to ensure that people will be able to acquire homes while retaining some sense of stability about repayment and the degree to which they have indebted themselves. I think that that will inevitably have to come to pass, and when it does then this program will be of absolutely no use.

Having said that, I am prepared to say that I do not disagree with the balance of the Bill. I found some little wrinkles in it of which I was not particularly fond, and I do worry about the capacity of the owner in some instances to benefit from the tax dollars that are apportioned for repairs and improvements to properties which otherwise might be uninhabitable. In my opinion that might encourage certain absentee landlords to deal improperly with their properties, to let them run down and to use access to government funding to offset their own obligations. However, it will, by virtue of the fact that it can be made available to the tenant, improve the living standards of the individuals in the homes. I suppose that is a benefit. I am prepared to live with that.

I would vote against the Bill because of the mortgage insurance program, but quite clearly I will not do that because it does not make much sense. I just hope that people who might be encouraged to buy into the program will heed my words, look at it carefully and come to the conclusion, as I have, that it might not help them. I hope they will decide to do something else with their hard-earned cash. If they choose to buy in, then I hope to God they will not receive any benefit from it because, if they do, the rest of society will suffer intolerably high interest rates.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments with respect to Bill C-37. The Bill is designed to accomplish three major purposes, one of which is to provide some measure of mortgage relief to home owners. It is with respect to that aspect of the Bill that I will make my comments.

The Bill is designed not to be a give-away program because people are expected to pay for what they are getting. What they are getting is a lot less that I fear they may think they will be entitled to. For a fee of 1.5 per cent of the amount of the mortgage, the mortgagor is granted relief with respect to 75 per cent of mortgage rate increases above a level of 2 per cent that is really self-insured from the beginning, up to a maximum of 10 per cent in terms of increase. That 1.5 per cent of the principal part of the mortgage is limited to $70,000. I am quite convinced that the majority of the people in the country think that—given the figures which I have referred to—in the event there is an increase in the mortgage rate at renewal above the 2 per cent which is covered, 75 per cent of that increase will be covered by this plan. That may or may not be the case.

I say it may or may not be the case because of the provision of Clause 34.83. Through a very convoluted system of prescribing interest rates, the insurer or, in this case, the corporation, may indeed determine that when a mortgage on an individual's home is up for renewal, the interest rate that is normally charged in the marketplace is less than the interest rate charged by the mortgage at the time of renewal.

Let us assume that the prescribed rate, which is an average or determined rate by the corporation, is less than the rate which would be charged by the existing mortgagee. What is the position of the insured who has paid 1.5 per cent? It is very clear that he will not be entitled to be covered for 75 per cent of the increase over the initial 2 per cent up to a limit of 10 per cent of the renewal rate, but rather 75 per cent of the prescribed rate which is in effect at that time after taking into account the initial 2 per cent self-insured amount. That may be a difference of a substantial nature, depending upon the circumstances at the time. I think the public should be aware of that fact and recognize that they are not necessarily getting what they believe they are getting.

What is the justification for these differences? The Government may well say that if the average rate in the trade is something which can be determined, then the mortgagor should in fact renew at the average rate. How can anyone know what circumstances will apply at the time the mortgage matures? It is not a simple matter for someone to say that there is half a percentage point that he can obtain it for elsewhere if he will only go out and obtain it.

If one goes to another mortgagee—another financial institution which will provide funds—it means the following—the retaining of the solicitor of the mortgagee to search the title for the property so that he may in fact certify by legal opinion to the new mortgagee that the mortgagor has good and unencumbered title to the property. How much does that cost? Once again it depends upon the amount of the mortgage. In these cases it is not inconceivable that the cost would be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $500 or $600.

What else is required? It may well be that the new mortgagee will say that he does not wish to accept an old survey which the former mortgagee was prepared to accept and that he wants to know that the building is situated upon the land on which he has taken the mortgage. What would a new survey cost? It too may cost $400 or $500. In addition it is necessary for the mortgagor to discharge the existing encumbrance. Once again, the preparation of the discharge documents—which are set by fee under a schedule in most provinces—will cost $50 or $75.

We are then told that the mortgagor should—for the half a percentage point which he will lose—go to the average mortgage lender and obtain the average rate of interest and not have this corporation, for the payment of his premium of 1.5 per cent, cover the actual—not the deemed or the assumed—rate of interest that is in effect in the country at the time that the mortgage comes up for renewal. It is obvious, by the time that individual pays $1,200 or $1,300 to change mortgages, that it is more appropriate for him to assume the loss personally that he would sustain as a consequence of buying this insurance which does not cover him for what he thinks it will cover him. There will be a great number of times when individuals with this kind of coverage will ultimately be confronted with this problem. That will happen as mortgages mature. People will come screaming to the Government, telling it that they did not get what they bargained for. It is the fine print that those people are not reading. It is the fine print which is not being advocated and publicized by the Government so that the people will know exactly what they are getting for what they are spending.

There is another matter which I would like to draw to the attention of the House. It arises as a consequence of the provisions of Clause 34.85. The concept is that with this insurance—having paid 1.5 per cent of the principal amount of the mortgage—the mortgagor has an asset which can be assigned to a subsequent purchaser of the property. Or, so it seems.

● (1440)

If one examines the provisions of Section 34.85, one will notice under subparagraph (b) there is a provision for that assignment which reads as follows:

> A contract entered into under subsection 34.82(1)
> (b) may not be assigned on the part of the home owner, except to a person
> (i) who assumes all the liability of the home owner in relation to any base loan or protected loan outstanding . . .
> (ii) who acquires the interest of the home owner in his principal residence, subject to any encumbrance securing the base loan or protected loan . . .

There are two ways, in effect, which are covered specifically by this section. One is with an absolute assumption of liability, which very rarely, incidentally, Mr. Speaker, any purchaser of a home undertakes. In most circumstances there is no specific assumption in law; if you acquire the interest of the home owner and begin to make those mortgage payments you are one of the persons obliged to continue to make those payments. Without actually being on a covenant, you are one of the persons obliged to make the mortgage payments but there is very rarely any direct assumption of the mortgage loan.

Section 34.85(b)(ii) normally covers the situation where you simply buy the property subject to a mortgage and do not assume the obligations of the original mortgagor. The only trouble with that circumstance is that it applies to the principal residence. It may well be, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the way in which we have dealt with principal residences, that the purchase by the new owner is not of the principal residence. It may not be in fact the principal residence of the home owner at the time of the acquisition, because he may indeed have used it in the interim for some other purpose which destroys the principal residence concept. Accordingly, I draw that matter to the attention of the House as well because the full ability with respect to assignment may not in fact be as it appears on the surface of the Bill.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to take a few moments and discuss the mortgage protection plan under Bill C-37. I worry about this plan. I believe it gives the Canadian public some false hope that possibly there will be security in interest rates. But this Bill is not really accomplishing that and I can give you some statistics on it.

It will not help a person in a period of very low interest rates who at that time takes out a five-year mortgage—and that is only if the mortgage renewal happens to come at the right time. But if that person takes out his mortgage at an interest rate of between 10 per cent and 11 per cent and those rates soar up to 17 per cent or 18 per cent it will help. However, it is too costly for a person today to gamble with $1,050 which is in essence added to the principal of his mortgage. It costs too much. I believe it is too expensive and I do not feel it will work.

If this Bill was to be effective it should have been brought in when interest rates were high, not when they started to decline. I believe this Bill, as a solution to our housing problems today, fails Canada.

I know the Hon. Minister who is responsible for CMHC has a problem in these times. I know he is not in control of the economic situation in the country. However, the statistics on the housing industry show a very serious situation right now. I understand part of the reason for this situation, to which I am going to refer, is because of the grants given by both the Ontario Government and the federal Government last year.

When housing starts were down 27 per cent in the month of April, I started to worry. When housing starts are at 50 per cent of what they should be, I worry. One of our key responsibilities should be to encourage all Canadians to own homes. I believe the Minister agrees with me on that. I believe that the Minister is totally in agreement with home ownership, to as large an extent as possible.

There are several other statistics on housing which worry me as well. In 1983, home ownership dropped—and this will not sound like very much—to 62.4 per cent from 62.7 per cent in 1982. That is a downward trend, but that is not the trend that bothers me as much as the longer term trend. The percentage of all owner households in the country is now below what it was ten years ago. In trails 1963 levels by almost six percentage points. That is the period of time in which the Liberals have been in power. It proves to me that this Government has not identified this crisis and has not dealt with it. It has not put the proper incentives in place to solve the problem.

I feel that this Bill is not going to solve the problem. This is a patchwork bill, it is a band-aid bill. We have seen enough band-aid bills in this House. This Bill is not going to encourage home ownership so that we can even get back to the 1963 levels. I know the Minister would tell me that it is a different society today, there is greater mobility in the work force and people do not have the same interest in owning homes. Perhaps the Canadian psyche today is not to save money, but to spend it while we have it, but I feel very strongly that one of the prime interests we should have in this country is to create home ownership for every single person.

My constituents have called me about the mortgage protection plan. They have asked me what they should do. I have told them that at the present time I cannot recommend it. And I put it in a partisan way. I said to them, "There will be an election. I am certain that following the election a Conservative Government will come in. Because of our policies we will put stability into interest rates. We will not allow these large troughs and peaks which the Canadian people have had to suffer through".

I read in an article the other day that since 1977, $40.5 billion in equity funding has left this country. We then in turn go overseas to borrow debt capital to bring it back in. Part of the trouble in the housing industry is that the Government, which is trying to provide so many safety nets, has not paid attention to the average Canadian who wants to own a home, or to the farmer, many of whom, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) knows, are in a very critical position. Many of them have over financed, which I will acknowledge, but those who have not, cannot afford to borrow money at even a 12 per cent interest rate and make a decent return on capital.

In essence this plan protects the homeowner for 75 per cent of an increase above 2 per cent. For example, someone takes out a one-year mortgage at 12.75 per cent and renews at 18 per cent. After deducting the $1,050 premium he would be saving only $431. I could not recommend to anyone spending $1,050 in order to receive $1,481 in return. I think that is bad business.

We are on the right track here, and I would like to see this given deep study. The idea is good. It is a beginning. I have not had enough time to really analyse it. It has to be looked at in a broader sense. Perhaps two or three years down the road when interest rates are at a reasonable level it will be to the advantage of the home owner. But at present, when mortgage rates are 13 per cent and 14 per cent, if they went up to 18 per cent there would not be much protection. The premium would be an additional burden in that critical first year.

We must have a committee to analyse housing in this country. We have to determine what we can do to get homeowners back to the 1963 level, which was in excess of 68 per cent. Everyone should own a home. Home construction is 100 per cent Canadian. They are manufactured here, the raw materials come from here, as do the finished products such as kitchen and washroom fixtures. Everything is made in Canada. If you doubled the number of homes being built this year you would create 230,000 jobs, given 2,300 jobs for every 1,000 homes. That would take a big chunk out of our unemployment figures.

The program of last year, even though I do not agree with grants, did work. It assisted people. I have to commend the Minister. I have had some difficult problems with those grants. Some have been marginal because of a question as to whether the foundations were in on time. I appreciate the co-operation the Minister has given me because it has assisted my constituents. For that I am grateful. The grant system worked last year in a recession, but possibly it will not work this year.

We should sit down and see what will work. I am afraid this program will not catch fire. I am afraid that if we pass this today, by the end of the year it will be as successful as the Sports Pool, which was a disaster. If this is in place when interest rates go down to—and I am dreaming now—8 per cent, then I would recommend that every home owner buy mortgage insurance. Possibly the problem is in the timing, but obviously if it is in place it may help in the future, as long as interest rates go down. But we must not underestimate the problem. How can interest rates go down when the Government borrows 92 per cent of our savings? That is not the Minister's fault, it is the fault of the entire Government. It is a problem brought upon this country after 21 years of Liberal rule.

I would like to conclude my remarks by saying that I will not support this Bill. I do not think it is right or that it has been well thought through. It should not be approved at this time because it is patchwork. It may fool the public but it cannot fool the actuaries or the Members of this House. It will not solve the problems we face. However, I have appreciated the opportunity of saying a few words on the Bill. I hope the Minister will continue to think about it and look for ways to improve the housing program to assist all Canadians to own their own homes.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a short intervention on this housing Bill. The only point I want to discuss is the mortgage insurance program. I want to associate myself completely with the remarks of the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

In my view this mortgage insurance Bill is politically motivated. It is only a veneer so that the Liberal Party will be able to go out during the next election campaign and tell people it has done something to try and stabilize interest rates for those who are going to own their own homes. You have heard the figures given by the two Members I just mentioned. People in the insurance industry feel that the homeowner would be better off paying $1,000 off the principal amount of the mortgage rather than paying this premium for so little benefit.

I think to a certain degree that the Private Members' Bill I introduced a number of years ago is the reason that this sort of politically motivated Bill has been brought forward. At that time my Bill proposed that if people had paid a mortgage for a year they should be allowed out of the mortgage on payment of a three-month penalty. That is the situation in the United States and in the United Kingdom. However, the banking community in Canada was very upset about that. As a matter of fact, a few days after I introduced this Private Members' Bill I had a visit from the president of the Bankers' Association who thought it should be withdrawn.

But my proposal went to the real problem faced by people with mortgages at high interest rates. If they had taken a five-year mortgage at 18 per cent interest, for example, after one year they could have paid it off with a three-month penalty. If they went the full term the difference could be as much as $13,000 between what they might pay at interest rates as they were last winter compared to what they are now, around 12 per cent.

This Bill has been introduced to try to show the people that there is a concern by the Government and a sort of protection. In actual fact I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that very few Canadians will ever take advantage of this mortgage insurance plan. The reason is that you can try to bring forward good looking legislation, and you can dress it up, but the native intelligence of the people at large is such that they are not going to waste their money. Most of them are going to believe that they are wasting their money. If they reduce their principal by $1,000 each year over the period of time they are going to save themselves an awful lot in interest payments. They are probably going to save themselves as much as they could gain by investing in a mortgage insurance protection program.

I really believe this is a politically motivated Bill designed to give the perception to the Canadian public that the Government is acting in their interest. All Parties are going to let it go through because no one wants to be perceived as being against something which is being dangled out. It is only cosmetic in nature. Other provisions in the Bill are more meaningful than this cosmetic provision. I think it is trying to pull the wool over the eyes of the Canadian public.

The interesting thing is that there is a small credit union in Prince Rupert, British Columbia which has been offering mortgage insurance at .5 of a percentage point rather than 1.5. If they have been able to do that for three years, why are we charging three times the premium? Having said that, there is no doubt that it is going to go through. It is not going to be used by anyone. The perception may be there but the Canadian public is going to be an awful lot wiser than the Government thinks. In the long run this is just going to be another useless statute on the books.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps the Chair should explain to the House that the Hon. Minister chose not to speak when he moved the motion.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Have we motivated him?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As an observer of the proceedings in the House, it was my understanding that the Hon. Minister, out of courtesy, allowed his vis-à-vis to speak first. I nevertheless have to seek the unanimous consent of the House to allow the Minister to make his remarks at this time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, we welcome the intervention of the Minister with respect to this legislation. We would be interested to hear his response, particularly to some of the questions which have been raised by my colleagues on this side of the House with respect to the legislation and also with respect to the situation which has been discussed between my colleague from Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) and himself, and between myself and the Minister, with respect to the floating homes problem, if I may put it in those terms. On our part we welcome the intervention and are anxious to hear the Minister speak and explain the Government's position with respect to the items which have been raised during the course of this debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed. The Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc).

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will first thank the House for its courtesy. I was distracted and thought we were on second reading. I would like to make a few short comments.

In response to the Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), under no circumstances have I indicated that this was a total solution to some of the longstanding housing problems, although I did put some statistics on the record in an answer to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) yesterday which indicated that the picture may not be as dark as it seems. In fact there was an increase of 7 per cent in housing starts between April and May of the current year.

With regard to the question raised by the Opposition House Leader referring to an amendment requested by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), it was ruled out of order. But we were sympathetic to the substance of what was proposed. In fact, in the case of the mortgage protection plan, floating homes or that type of houseboat will be covered under the mortgage protection plan. The difficulty arose, and arises, when the mortgage insurance applying to floating homes is discussed, for the same reason that mobile homes at one time were not covered by mortgage insurance. Discussions with the industry and a willingness to try and find solutions brought forth some amendments which have worked.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre forced us to focus on the issue more quickly than we might have liked. Although we were quite sympathetic to the substance, I am sure that it will come up again and we will continue to work and where possible, by regulation, try to find some acceptable solutions.

Some Hon. Members have referred to the mortgage protection plans as an innovation. Some have expressed doubts as to whether it will see heavy take-up in applications. Some have pointed out some of the limitations that it does contain. I do not think I should spend too much time quibbling with some of these opinions. It is innovation. In our examinations in other countries we have not found cases where this type of program is used, although in some countries we have found an insurance formula for people who were threatened with the loss of their homes because of the loss of a job or similar problems.

The legislation is voluntary and obliges no one to make a decision in this matter. My hope is very firm that over time we may find that there are some amendments which would bring considerable improvement. The mortgage protection program is a service to Canadian home owners who may be worried about possible increases in mortgage interest rates. It is addressed to people who are afraid that, when the time comes to renew their mortgage, interest rates may have risen so high that they will not be able to make the monthly payments. To these people it offers, for a fee, some help and protection to assure that any increases will be kept within their ability to pay.

I hope that it is clear, and I believe Hon. Members on both sides have said that it is not a subsidy program and is not designed to protect home owners against any increases, however small, in mortgage interest rates. It is not designed to shelter home owners from every shift in interest rates. Most Canadians who decide to invest in a home anticipate changes and are prepared to cope with them. During the interest rate crisis of a couple of years ago we saw that many Canadians were prepared to make rather considerable adjustments. The MRPP is intended to help with abnormal circumstances, with eventualities which we do not expect and which people may not be in a position to deal with.

There are other reasons as well, Mr. Speaker, why the plan includes risk sharing provisions such as the 2 per cent deductibility feature. It is important that the mortgage market, like other free markets, should remain competitive. As long as the home owner is going to have to share the cost of higher interest rates, he will shop for the best deal he can get when his mortgage comes up for renewal.

• (1510)

In that connection I would like to emphasize again that the mortgage plan is voluntary. If in their judgment it is not a wise investment, then obviously Canadians will make the judgment that they feel is right.

Although we dealt with the Bill rather quickly, I believe that the committee discussion was informative and useful. I think it went a long way to answering some of the hesitations that Hon. Members had.

I would like to thank Hon. Members for their support and their interest in that part of the Bill which deals with the rural and native housing programs which extend, for the first time, benefits to all parts of Canada. Perhaps I should indicate quickly what the changes are.

As Hon. Members will recall, the legislation as it is now requires that assistance to allow people in designated areas to acquire their own houses can be provided only if the cost is shared between the federal Government and the provinces. Some provinces dropped out of the program and one province never participated. Other provinces, while participating, made their assistance conditional on such terms and conditions that we felt they were inconsistent with the very objectives of the program.

Some Hon. Members have expressed regret that we have not achieved unanimity among all governments as to the objectives and methods of operation. I agree, it is regrettable. This divergence of opinion, however, cannot be allowed to deprive people of urgent need of shelter. That is why we are proposing that the funding and administration of the program can be assumed unilaterally by the federal Government. But those who wish to continue to participate will be welcome. In fact, as the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) indicated, it will be an additional contribution to that sector of the population which is very often most in need.

I appreciated the contributions made by all Hon. Members who expressed a sincere interest in the operation of this program and in the welfare of rural and native people who live in remote areas of the country. I believe that by enacting this Bill into law we will have given new life and strength to this vital and rather successful program. I am grateful that we have been able to move as we have with this legislation. Again, it is not a cure-all for all housing problems, but I think it goes some way and makes available to those who choose to avail themselves of it a form of insurance and a form of protection. However, I suspect that over a period of time we will be back with some improving amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Questions or comments? Debate.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, let me say first to the Minister that I appreciate his contribution on third reading. When the Minister is handing out tributes with respect to this matter I know he would want to say that we in the Official Opposition have been constructive. We have attempted to deal with legislation on the floor of the House in that manner, particularly with respect to this legislation.

He will appreciate that we find that there are considerable shortcomings. We have tried to point these out to the Minister, and have tried in many ways at committee stage and in the course of debate in the House to indicate to him that some of the initiatives fall far short of the mark. We rather take the position that when it comes to the question of mortgage interest protection, it is because of the Government's handling of the economy that we found ourselves in phenomenally high interest rate circumstances with a crushing burden on the home owners of Canada. Those have been the circumstances that have really precipitated this legislation.

Of course, I do not want to be partisan, but I remember the pronouncement of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) when he was in the opposition. Interest rates were at 13 per cent. I was a member of the Government of Canada at the time and a member of the Cabinet. I must admit that I had difficulty shaving in the morning when I contemplated interest rates of 13 per cent. I thought to myself that these were usurous levels of interest rates and that we must do what we can to bring them down. Of course, there was an election and the results are known. The new Government came in.

But when the President of the Treasury Board was in opposition and speaking with respect to financial matters, he made a statement that any person in political life with integrity who allowed interest rates to exceed 14 per cent had only one honourable course. That was to resign from any Cabinet which allowed that level of interest to rise above 14 per cent. I was impressed with the sincerity of the President of the Treasury Board when he said that, because I felt very strongly that as a Government we had to do what we could to keep interest rates low for the average home owner and businessman.

History is there for us to see. Interest rates skyrocketed to 22 per cent, a level that was described as being the level of interest rates which at one time would be charged to customers of organized crime who were rather untrustworthy. That was the prime rate for a long period during the time that the Government has been in power.

We need some form of protection for home owners when they are faced with having to renew mortgages, as we all are. I have a mortgage coming due on July 1. It is at 13 per cent. I was considering what to do, whether to have a mortgage of one or two years at 15 per cent, or perhaps of three years in excess of 15 per cent. It is a lot of money for a humble working man like myself.

I say to the Minister that this particular response falls short of what we had hoped and expected in this country with respect to the problems we face with present high interest rates.

There are reasons why we have tried to deal with this Bill and put it through at this point in time. I will admit candidly that there is a political element to it. Our position is simply that this is the Government's best shot. This is the best it can do. This is as good as it will give us. As the Loyal Opposition, we are prepared to put the Bill through and tell the people of Canada that we in this Party are thinking about the horrendous problems that are created by high interest rates. We are thinking in terms of the policies and initiatives that can be taken by the Government of Canada which we hope to form after the next election. When we become the Government, I can assure the Minister and members on the government side that we will devote our attention and energies toward protecting home owners in a more significant way against the very ugly prospect that comes with high interest rates than has this Government.

We intend to do everything possible to make sure that home mortgage interest rates go down. I can tell the Minister that our Party is committed to protecting the average person in this country, the average home owner as well as the person who lives in rented accommodation. That is the basis upon which we in the Opposition allow this legislation to go forward. That is the basis upon which we say to the Minister that we have tried to do a responsible job in our consideration of this legislation. We find very significant shortcomings. While we wish the Minister all the best with this legislation and hope that it has some good effects, we say that it is far short of what the people of Canada should be able to expect. Accordingly, we will see the Bill passed by the House of Commons today so that it can be sent to the other place for consideration.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Any other questions? Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Mr. LeBlanc, seconded by Mr. Whelan, moved that Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TAX CONVENTION ACT, 1984

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Mr. Whelan for Mr. MacLaren, seconded by Mr. LeBlanc, moved that Bill S-14, an Act to implement a convention between Canada and the United States with respect to taxes on income and capital be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) has been in the Chamber in effect I believe, since question period. I understood that he would be coming forward to make some introductory remarks with respect to this legislation. I do not know whether he is just behind the curtains at the present time, but he spoke to me not more than five minutes ago, in fact just before I addressed the previous legislation.

Is it my understanding now that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ferguson) will be making the remarks on behalf of the Minister of State for Finance?

Mr. Ferguson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is very interesting, Mr. Speaker. We will listen with great interest to the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary. I swear I saw the identical likeness of the Minister of State for Finance a minute ago.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I hope the Hon. Member's point of order is a point of order.

Mr. Deans: My point of order, I think, may well be a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It was my understanding from discussions I had previously that this matter, rather than it being referred to the standing committee, was to be referred to the Committee of the Whole with consent. I note that the motion read: "to the standing committee". Has that been either overlooked, or has there perhaps been some change? I just want to be clear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair had no choice but to put to the House the motion as it stands. The House may well wish to seek unanimous consent to do otherwise and the Chair will be pleased to entertain the wishes of the House.

Is someone seeking unanimous consent to amend the motion somehow?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and it was the intent that the Bill would go to Committee of the Whole and be given third reading today as well. Perhaps we might amend that motion to send it to the Committee of the Whole after the completion of second reading, and then be given third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent for the proposal of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the understanding was that the matter would go to Committee of the Whole. We will consent to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Agreed and so ordered.

It is now moved by Mr. Whelan for Mr. MacLaren, seconded by Mr. Pinard, that Bill S-14, an Act to implement a convention between Canada and the United States with respect to taxes on income and on capital be now read a second time, and by unanimous consent referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just a second, Mr. Speaker, we want to hear the Parliamentary Secretary on second reading.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): In view of the very heavy work load, Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief.

The purpose of Bill S-14, passed by the Senate on June 6, is to implement the double taxation convention between Canada and the United States of America. The implementing legislation is found on pages 1 and 2 and the text of the convention together with its two amending protocols are found in schedules I, II and III, pages 3 to 64.

Canada-United States fiscal relations are governed by a tax treaty which was signed in 1942. It would be clear to everyone that a tax treaty that has not basically changed in 40 years needs to be modernized, even though it has been a useful instrument. The new convention, when in force, will replace the 1942 tax treaty.

The convention is a balanced instrument which addresses a broad range of issues and problems affecting a significant number of individuals and corporations on both sides of the border. It took some ten years to negotiate. Its ratification is eagerly awaited by those affected. The text of the proposed convention was made public on the date of its signature, September 26, 1980. Following its publication, a number of professional associations in the two countries commented extensively on its terms and pointed to a number of deficiencies. That, plus important changes in the U.S. legislation concerning the taxation of capital gains made it necessary to introduce some amendments to the original text. The first protocol was signed and published on June 14, 1983.

Finally, a change introduced in the U.S. concerning the taxation of social security benefits lead to the signature of a second protocol on March 28, 1984.

I shall now refer briefly to some of the provisions of the convention. It provides that the maximum rates of withholding taxes on non-residents may not exceed 10 per cent on direct dividends, patent royalties and technical know-how payments and 15 per cent on portfolio dividends, interest and periodic pension payments. Under the existing treaty, the withholding tax rates on non-residents are generally 15 per cent. Copyrights royalties and certain interest payments are exempt from the withholding tax.

Income or profits from immovable property, including natural resource royalties, may be fully taxed in the country where the property is situated. Gains arising on the disposition of certain property may also be fully taxed in the country where it is situated. In view of the fact that the treatment of capital gains represents a significant change from the existing convention, special rules are also included to avoid the disruptive effect of this change on investment existing at the time of signature of the convention.

The convention contains a number of other important provisions such as: the scope of the exemption for international transport profits is extended; social security benefits will be exempt in the country in which they arise and only half of their amount will be subject to tax in the country of residence of the recipient; the deduction for contributions by a resident of one country to a university or a charitable organization in the other country will be liberalized; special problems affecting border workers will be addressed; the two-year exemption for visiting teachers will be removed.

This listing is not intended to be comprehensive, but it gives an indication of a number of the issues dealt with in the convention.

The convention will enter into force only after it has been ratified. It will generally be applicable, for the withholding tax, on the first day of the second month following the date of ratification and, for other taxes, on the first day of January following the date of ratification. I have been informed that the United States is likely to be in a position to ratify the convention in the near future. It is important that Canada also be in that position soon, therefore I commend this bill to the favourable consideration of this house today.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party and the Official Opposition to Bill S-14 which relates to the tax convention between Canada and the United States of America, I think it is important and highly desirable that we place on the record some general comments with respect to the processing of this legislation, and indeed this kind of legislation.

We have seen in the House of Commons in the last few days a demonstration of what we earnestly believe is parliamentary democracy, a duty of the Loyal Opposition to oppose the Government in that official way. Our responsibility under the British tradition in force in Canada since Confederation in 1867 is to examine with great care and diligence all the measures put before the House of Commons by the Government. In those cases where we think those measures may not be to the advantage of Canada and the citizens of Canada it is our bounden duty to raise the objections we can and bring to public attention those provisions which may have an adverse effect on Canada and Canadians.

That is what indeed the Opposition did with respect to Bill C-9 which was before this House and dealt with the Canadian Intelligence Security Service. The Opposition brought to the attention of Parliament, and through that parliamentary vehicle to the public, the faults of that Bill, the philosophy behind the Bill with which we have real disagreement. In that parliamentary exercise, I am sure we have cast a great deal of attention on that legislative measure, Bill C-9. If it appeared to be extreme in terms of parliamentary action, then we accept whatever responsibility we must assume for that action, because we thought and earnestly believed it was in the interests of all Canadians to focus attention on the legislation contained in Bill C-9 relating to the Canadian intelligence service.

We see quite the opposite attitude evidenced today in what I will say with respect to Bill S-14. We regard this Bill as the legitimate action of the Government of Canada in following the process which led to the adoption of a convention after agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States. We will co-operate, as we are now doing, to see that this Act of government receives proper attention and concurrence from the Parliament of Canada in such a way that it will benefit the taxpayers of Canada and indeed, incidentally and at the same time, the taxpayers of the United States of America.

My point is that we see our duty very clearly. Sometimes our duty is to oppose the Government to the bitter end. On other occasions our duty as opposition Members is to co-operate with the Government in order to achieve a benefit for the citizens of Canada, the people whom we represent in the Parliament of Canada. It is with that preface that I want to make some remarks about Bill S-14. It is with that thought in mind that what we are doing here in our function is co-operating in the way that we must in order to bring about what we are told is action beneficial to the people of Canada.

As has already been indicated, Bill S-14 simply is the authority from the Parliament of Canada to the Government of Canada to concur in and implement a convention between Canada and the United States of America with respect to taxation and the collection of taxes. In legislative terms, the Act itself is very simple. It contains only the necessary technical provisions. What is of wider importance is the convention itself which contains the operative provisions. As I have indicated already, we in the Opposition in these circumstance must rely upon the advice we receive from government, through its representatives in the House of Commons, in this case the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren).

As I understand it, the provisions were negotiated in good faith between representatives of the Government of Canada and representatives of the Government of the United States of America. For us to examine with a fine-tooth comb, or put under a parliamentary microscope, the provisions which have been agreed to between the representatives of those contracting parties would not be an appropriate response to the request to give concurrence to this legislative measure. In other words, it is not the function of Parliament to review what the officers of Canada and what the officers of the United States have in good faith consummated. However, at the same time we cannot simply absolve our duty or our responsibility to the people of Canada by saying that we are placing total reliance upon the officers whose responsibility and duty it was to construct this convention. We certainly have to give it some kind of review, and that is my purpose in speaking to Bill S-14 today.

The purpose of the convention, as we know in all such conventions in relation to taxation, is to avoid unfair treatment of taxpayers in the contracting states, in particular the unfairness of double taxation. In that respect of course we concur in the principle of avoiding double taxation, because it simply is unfair. It is unfair by definition. To the extent that the convention is approved by Bill S-14, of course we concur, but we are not certain that that is the only way the matter can be resolved. However, as I have already indicated, we are entitled to rely upon the advice given to us by the Government of Canada through the Minister of State for Finance.

Notwithstanding that we concur in the principle of avoiding double taxation between taxpayers of Canada and taxpayers of the United States, there are matters which should be recorded, as they will have a real effect upon Canadian and American taxpayers. Our concern is for the taxpayers of Canada we represent in the House of Commons and in the Parliament of Canada.

There are a number of matters to which I want to direct some specific remarks, but first I want to deal with the whole system of conventions between Canada and the United States. We have different systems. We both employ democratic systems of government in respect of which we are both proud. However, they are different systems. The United States of America has a presidential republican system of government. The power in that country is divided between the legislative body in the United States Congress and the executive represented by the duly-elected President of the United States.

The executive in the U.S. has negotiated a convention with Canada, but it requires the approval of Congress. As the Parliamentary Secretary indicated, approval of this specific convention relating to taxation has not yet been granted. That is a matter we have to take into account. Why do we have to take it into account? When we approve the legislation which enables the adoption of the convention by the Government of Canada we in Parliament have abrogated the power to do anything about this particular measure. We have left it up to the Government of Canada. We in Parliament have left other things up to the Government of Canada relying on the good faith and good judgment of the Government, and we have been very sorry that we allowed them that authority. But we recognize that with a majority in the House of Commons and with control of Parliament, the Government would do it in any event. However, that does not excuse us from raising a protest about legislation when danger signals occur.

I want to raise a danger signal with this process because we have been through it in other ways. I am quite serious in my statements in this regard. I have before me material with respect to what is of grave concern to myself, and particularly to people in Nova Scotia living in that part of the province called South Western Nova. It relates to Georges Bank. We are experiencing a certain amount of déjà vu with this convention because the Government of Canada negotiated with the Government of the United States a convention with respect of fisheries rights in relation to Georges Bank, the most fertile fishing grounds in the world, upon which many Nova Scotian fishermen are totally dependent for their livelihood. The negotiations were conducted in good faith, as I am sure the negotiations with respect to the taxation treaty were conducted in good faith. The end result was that the Congress of the United States would not approve the convention. The matter was deliberated over a long period of time. The articles were formulated. The "i's" were dotted and the "t's" were crossed. It was negotiated and renegotiated, considered and reconsidered, viewed and reviewed. Finally the convention was formulated, but it was not approved by the Congress of the United States because a Senator from Rhode Island took a look at it and said that he did not agree with it, and that he did not think it was fair to U.S. fishermen on the East Coast. He decided that that convention ought not to be approved. There was not enough interest in the Congress of the United States to override the view and opinion of that particular Senator, and one or two others, one of whom was unfortunately that great guardian of civil rights in the United States, Senator Kennedy. A few of them got together and blocked consent and concurrence of the United States Senate to that treaty.

It is not a light matter when we in the Parliament of Canada just automatically give approval to a convention which has been negotiated by the Government of Canada with the Government of the United States, because we do not always get reciprocity on the other side; we do not always enjoy have the same response by the appropriate House in the United States Congress, as evidenced in the Georges Bank situation.

Because I think it is of vital importance, in that it involves the very livelihood of thousands of people in the Province of Nova Scotia, let me review briefly what happened as a result of the refusal of the United States Congress to approve the treaty and convention relating to fisheries rights on the Georges Bank. They are now before the International Court in the Hague. They are arguing like fishmongers literally before an international court of dubious jurisdiction over who will be allowed to harvest Georges Bank.

Mr. Waddell: They have jurisdiction.

Mr. Crosby: There is the difference between a young lawyer and an old lawyer. I said dubious jurisdiction. The young lawyer apparently does not know that an international court has no inherent jurisdiction. Nobody gave it jurisdiction. There is no super power that formulates an international court and gives it jurisdiction.

Mr. Waddell: I have my Master's in international law.

Mr. Crosby: An international court only gains jurisdiction from the parties that come before the court. They can confer jurisdiction generally by a treaty, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) knows, or they can confer jurisdiction with respect to a particular case. In the case of the Georges Bank matter, jurisdiction was conferred by consent and concurrence for that specific case. The international court in the Hague has no right to intervene in disputes over Georges Bank and fishermen. That is why I used the term dubious jurisdiction. There is no basic inherent reason why the International Court in The Hague should be deciding a problem between fishermen from the eastern United States, the New England States, and from Southwestern Nova.

The only reason they are deciding that is because the Government of Canada, sitting in the national capital of Ottawa, and the Government of the United States, sitting in the national capital of Washington, have decided that that is the way to get rid of the problem, that that is the way to treat the fishermen of Nova Scotia and New England.

There is a group of lawyers like my friend from the New Democratic Party arguing over what are the essential, vital and important rights. They are talking about ancient history, legal documents and so on. They are not talking about people or about lives. They really do not care if the multimillion dollar scallop industry is lost to Nova Scotia. It is just a matter of charging fees. No doubt many lawyers are charging immense fees to handle this case. That does not bother the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party. He is a lawyer. Like he says, he has a Master's degree in international law. He thinks that is the way these things should happen. I do not think that is the way things should happen. I think the future of the parties is largely dependent upon the determination of this dispute. They should be involved in it, not a bunch of lawyers in The Hague.

That is the problem with international conventions. When we cannot agree. All sorts of terrible and horrible things can happen. That is why we consider with a great deal of responsibility a measure like S-14. We do not want to end up in international courts over this kind of dispute. We do not want people in the State of Texas or the Province of Quebec to be burdened with excessive taxation because we cannot come to some kind of sensible agreement on how to treat the matter. That is why we are prepared to contribute our consent to the passage of this Bill in the Parliament of Canada, so that the measures can be implemented.

In the course of deciding what action to take, we have to point out those things of real importance to the taxpayers who will be affected by this convention. First, there is the matter of freedom of information. Every taxpayer in Canada, including the House Leader for the Liberal Party if he gets involved in any cross border events, will be subjected to the application of this convention and the provisions of the convention. As a Canadian dealing with matters in the United States, information concerning his fears will be a public record. Under the provisions of the convention, the United States authorities will have full access to that information. They can require any information that they normally require in the enforcement of their tax measures. That will be on file in the United States of America. That may not bother the House Leader for the Liberal Party, but there are some Canadians who do not particularly want all their files in Washington, the capital of the United States, or any other place.

We have seen the other side of that. Canadian Pacific, that great Canadian company, files documents and other materials with the Government of Canada under legislation of the Parliament of Canada under which the corporation is constituted. However, they do not tell us anything about their inside activities, trading in shares and that sort of thing which they are required to disclose in the United States. If you want to find out anything about Canadian Pacific, the salaries of its directors and officers and other inside information, do not come to Ottawa, the capital of Canada. Go to Washington. You will get it there. They have all kinds of information.

There is an exchange of information. The provisions of the convention provide for free flow of information. I could look up the specific provision. It is Article XXVII headed "Exchange of Information". I could read it, but why should I? Let the member from the New Democratic Party read it on his own. I will just note for the record of the House of Commons that there is a provision in the convention relating to the exchange of information.

This means that information concerning Canadian taxpayers who find themselves subject to this convention can flow freely to the United States of America to be held in their information banks. Under their freedom of information laws, which we do not have in Canada, anybody in Canada can probably gain access to much of that information. That is an important point to consider. It is not all one way. We are giving up some things here. That may be acceptable in the broad concern of avoiding double taxation.

There are very specific things that we do not have time to look into. As I indicated, it may not even be the function of Members of the House of Commons to look into them. It has been pointed out to me that these provisions may pass to United States companies and small business enterprises the benefits intended to be granted to Canadian small business and enterprises with respect to the special tax concessions recently granted. As I understand it, corporations and persons subject to these convention measures are entitled to the lowest form of taxation. Consequently, if a United States business concern becomes subject to the provisions of this convention, I understand it will be entitled to the benefits that would flow through to a small business enterprise in Canada.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) recently introduced a budget in the House of Commons that had special specific measures designed to encourage Canadian small business. As a result of this convention, those same benefits would flow through to a U.S. enterprise to which the convention was subject. In other words, we have agreed in this Bill and convention to pass on to the United States concerns and enterprises to which the convention applies the same benefits that we give to Canadians. Of course, in exchange we will be getting in the United States, as I understand it, similar benefits. We must be aware of that reciprocity.

The Government of Canada as one of its stated policies has tried to encourage Canadian ownership, Canadian control of our own economy. Here is a measure that is going the other way. We are saying "Look, let's share this continent, this part of North America in economic terms." I would say that is a contradiction in Government policy, but not one with which I have any special agreement. I believe there has to be free commerce, free exchange, with protective provisions, of course. We should be moving in that direction. That is the effect of the convention. The effect of approving Bill S-14 will be to give consent and concurrence to a legislative directive.

I think I have indicated what I have set out to do; first and foremost that we want to participate and co-operate in the process by which conventions negotiated between officers of the Government of Canada and officers of the Government of the United States are ratified and implemented. We do not want to block the measures. We do not take it as our parliamentary duty to examine the provisions with a fine toothcomb. We do not take it as our function to undo what has already been done and agreed to, but we do take it as our responsibility to review in a general way the situation to make sure there is nothing blatant, improper or unfair in the provisions, to the extent that we have that capacity, and then give it approval in that spirit of co-operation.

It is quite different from our attitude toward Bill C-9 where we thought that the liberty of the subject in Canada was at stake and that there were other vital matters relating to personal freedoms at stake. This is simply an administrative measure. We recognize that. We want to co-operate, but we want to give a warning that we should watch this sort of thing carefully. We should watch the provisions. There may be effects of which we are not aware. We could have repeats of situations like Georges Bank.

Why do we give things away when we should be bargaining? How did this process with respect to the convention on Georges Bank come about? Did anyone speak to the Senator from Rhode Island beforehand to find out what he thought? Did anyone go to Kennedy to find out that this opposition existed before we gave our interests away? That situation will probably not arise at all with respect to this tax convention, but, as the Parliamentary Secretary said, no approval has been given through Congress. How do we know that that approval will be given? How do we know they will not hold up that approval for some other concession that is part of the international bargaining arrangements and so on?

In a sense, we approve this Bill with a blind eye. I make no apology for that because that is the way our system works. As I said, it is the spirit of co-operation that is important. It is important to get the business that is in the interests of the public and the Canadian taxpayers done. That is why we reviewed the Bill and that is why we are prepared to give it consent. Once again, we are placing faith in the Government of Canada. People may say that it is a mistake to do so, that we should not even think of doing so. However, under our system we must place faith in the Government of Canada.

I for one, on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party, can only say that we are going to do it once, we are going to place faith in the Government of Canada. We have been told that this measure benefits the people of Canada in relation to taxation and we accept the word of the Government. We consent to the processing of this Bill as quickly as possible so that it can be approved by the appropriate authorities and given effect, in the hope and expectation that it will benefit taxpayers in Canada.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who just spoke said: "I think I have indicated what I have set out to do." He has not done that at all. I cannot understand members of the Conservative Party. Here they are filibustering the Bill through a long-winded and convoluted speech which ends up by saying that they are trying to support expeditious passage of the Bill. What are they filibustering? They are trying to take up time this afternoon so that we cannot get to Bill C-36, an Act to amend interest rates, an Act which will give my constituents a break on their mortgages, which is exactly what the people need.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. One of the basic traditions of Parliament is that one does not impute motives to another Member of Parliament. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has risen and said that I am trying to filibuster the Bill. I am simply stating the position of the Progressive Conservative caucus with respect to Bill S-14. I am not filibustering anything. It is certainly not my intention to do so, but I do object to the imputation of that motive by anyone, and particularly by that Member of Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The point is well taken. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has been recognized for the purpose of expressing his opinion on Bill S-14.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am entitled to debate the words of the Hon. Member. He said that the International Court of Justice has dubious jurisdiction. He said that there is no basic inherent reason for the Court to decide this case, except that it is a legal problem. It is a problem which is international in its scope. It is a question of two jurisdictions giving consent to the International Court, and that is precisely why that Court is set up. It is exactly the kind of problem with which an International Court should deal. The Hon. Member has said that the International Court is not talking about people. What does he think the courts in the country are doing every day? It's absurd.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway is invited to speak to the subject which is before the House.

Mr. Crosby: He is not speaking, he is filibustering.

Mr. Waddell: I am replying to the long-winded and ridiculous speech made by the Member who spoke previously.

I want to say something about this Bill. The Parliamentary Secretary said that its ratification is eagerly awaited by all those affected. I do not know that, but I will take his word for it. I gather those taxpayers will benefit because I have never heard of taxpayers eagerly awaiting tax legislation that would take more money from their pockets. Presumably the taxpayers will receive some benefit. I understand it is fair in the sense that they are paying double taxation in two different countries. Therefore, we in the NDP are prepared to support the Bill and support it expeditiously. The Parliamentary Secretary has a point when he says that the double-taxation convention goes back to 1942. It is about time that it is updated, and this treaty will update it.

I would like to make one further point. Notice how quickly we can pass a change in tax law or implement a treaty or change a tax policy in the House. If we can do it that quickly, I would say to the Government and the Canadian people that we could pass a Bill allowing for a fair system of taxation in Canada just as quickly. We could deal with the tremendous problems of growing high interest rates, housing problems and taxation problems in Canada just as quickly as we can deal with this Bill. The Government would have our support in that. If we were the Government we would do it.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The question is on the following motion: Mr. Whelan, for the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. MacLaren), seconded by Mr. Pinard, moved that Bill S-14, an Act to implement a convention between Canada and the United States with respect to taxes on income and capital, be read the second time and, with the unanimous consent of the House, be referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Guilbault in the chair.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill S-14, an Act to implement the convention between Canada and the United States with respect to taxes on income and on capital.

On Clause 2—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I did not wish to say anything with respect to this provision. However, now that the Minister is in the House I wonder whether he might want to respond to some of the questions or concerns expressed regarding that aspect of the Bill relating to access to information, and the implications with respect to dividends to small businesses raised during the course of the debate. Is the Minister satisfied with the observations made by my colleague with respect to the implications to Canadians of having information through our Access to Information Act made available to the Americans?

We currently gain access to information with regard to corporate salaries in the United States under the American freedom of information legislation. Does the Minister think it would be possible for Americans to obtain information with respect to salaries in Canada, including those paid to heads of Crown corporations or civil servants? Will that be involved in this legislation?

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Chairman, in view of the time I shall be very quick, as I am sure it is the intent of the Hon. Member opposite to see this Bill go through the proceedings before four o'clock.

In fact, under the American practice, the salary levels are made available, not so much through any freedom of information legislation but rather through the practices of the Security Exchange Commission under an Article called 10K. Under that Article, United States corporations are required to provide information about senior employees' salaries. That is not a practice that we have used here in Canada. Our practice will continue to conform entirely with the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act and the spirit of commercial confidentiality.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been attempts made to proceed with Private Members' Business, but we have not been successful for various reasons. Notwithstanding the Order which was passed with regard to the sittings of the House, I would suggest that you now call it five o'clock.

Mr. Prud'homme: I agree.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent to call it five o'clock?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. First, I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Waddell: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): If there is not unanimous consent, I will hear the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: Speaking on behalf of the NDP—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Well, if Members do not want to consult me about these matters, I will not give my unanimous consent.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No one has been consulted.

Mr. Waddell: Bill C-36, to amend the Interest Act, is before the House. That Bill would give people a break on the interest rates of their mortgages. I thought we would deal with that this afternoon. Through you, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the government House Leader could tell us what is about to happen with that Bill. Could it be dealt with this afternoon, or will it be dealt with expeditiously next week? I have not been informed about that, and I see no reason to give unanimous consent until I am informed.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we had scheduled Bill C-37 to be debated today, and I wanted to see that Bill passed. However, we succeeded in passing three Bills today which are most important—the GIS Bill, the Mortgage Protection Plan and Bill S-14, the Tax Convention Act between Canada and the United States.

I thank the Hon. Member for his comments and his generous offer to allow the Bill to amend the Interest Act to be adopted. Unfortunately it is past four o'clock and it is time for Private Members' Business. That would require the unanimous consent of the House. If we had unanimous consent to pass the Bill which amends the Interest Act before five o'clock we would agree to that. However, it has not been discussed among the House Leaders that the House should sit beyond four o'clock to deal with Government business. There were meetings yesterday and the day before with the House Leaders. The House Leader for the Progressive Conservative Party is here, however the House Leader for the NDP had to leave, and I understand he had a very good reason for doing so. I would not like to force something on the Official Opposition without having consulted with them. However, if they are willing to sit spontaneously and deal with the Interest Act, fine. If not, I am not in a position to blame anyone because the time provided to deal with Government business has expired.

I thank the Hon. Member for his generosity. If we do not receive consent today, then maybe next week we will be successful in including this piece of legislation because of the trend which seems to be developing now. That trend will show the people of the country that Parliament can work and that it will adjourn on June 29 with a number of very important Bills passed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, it never ceases to amaze me that the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) sits in oblivion of what is happening in this House. This is another demonstration of the Member again speaking without having the slightest idea of what he is talking about. Of course, he proposes to speak on behalf of the NDP. That is easy for him to say. Where is his House Leader? Can he assure me that he has spoken with his House Leader about the order of business for today, and the matters which have been discussed in confidence with the Government House Leader regarding the way in which this legislation will be proceeded with? I suggest not, Sir.

We have tried to pass a lot of legislation. We have been successful in passing several pieces of legislation here today. For the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway to attempt to grandstand himself before the 20 or 30 people in the galleries here today is typical of the level of his participation in this House. I would say to him that if he wants to find out what is going on he should consult with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

We have discussed the order of business and the sequence on the floor of the House of Commons. I know who is standing in his place and wants to speak on the interest Bill. He only began his remarks. It was not a Member of my Party, it was the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) who had the floor of the House. I suppose, miraculously, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway will stand in his place and tell us that he has had a transcendental discussion with the Member from Winnipeg-St. James and finds that he does not want to say anything further. The last time this Bill was up, he just cleared his throat. He had the floor when the House adjourned. When the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway stands up and tries to suggest that we are holding up legislation which is helpful to the people of Canada, I would remind him that these allegations are contrary to the truth—to put it in parliamentary terms. I think that he should allow the House Leaders to carry on with these negotiations and that he should not grandstand during the last days of a dying session. We are all nervous about the election. We are all trembling in our places and wondering about our own seats—particularly the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Pinard: We are not.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Of course the Government House Leader would not be worried. He comes from what is known as a rotten borough. That is what he told me. He told me, "No problem. I don't care. People will re-elect me because I am so wonderful". I take my re-election seriously. I would simply say to the Member that I do not appreciate being accused of doing things which are detrimental to the people of Canada. If it comes down to it, I will put my record against his any time.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I do not need to be lectured by the Opposition House Leader as to my record or position. I would be prepared to listen to the Government House Leader, who properly put the matter into perspective. He suggested that they were prepared to go ahead. I was prepared to agree with him, but after hearing the arguments and the insults of the Opposition House Leader, and after seeing that this Bill in fact changes interest rates and helps the real people of the world who badly need this legislation because they are paying 17 per cent and 18 per cent interest rates on their mortgages—and they are locked into those mortgages—I am seeking the unanimous consent of the House, and I have spoken with my House Leader and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper), to proceed with this Bill now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. Is there unanimous consent for the proposal of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, there is not. I am sad to say that the Hon. Member did not consult with the House Leader for the New Democratic Party, contrary to what he has said. Under the circumstances, I refuse to give unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. There being no item for consideration during Private Members' Hour, the House will now adjourn.

Pursuant to Order made Thursday, June 21, 1984, this House stands adjourned until Tuesday, June 26, 1984 at 11 a.m.

The House adjourned at 4.08 p.m.

RADIATION EMITTING DEVICES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-5, an Act to Amend the Radiation Emitting Devices Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a third time?

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Nielsen: By leave, now.

Mr. Pinard (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Bill is to correct limitations in the Radiation Emitting Devices Act in order to protect better the public against hazards to health resulting from the sale and use of unsafe radiation emitting devices.

The Radiation Emitting Devices Act was proclaimed in force in 1972. It provides for the establishment of standards for radiation emitting devices and prohibits sale or importation unless such devices comply with the prescribed standards. Standards have now been prescribed for television sets, dental X-ray equipment, microwave ovens, baggage inspection X-ray devices, laser scanners, ultrasound therapy devices, diagnostic X-ray equipment, and therapeutic X-ray equipment.

In respect of the areas of jurisdiction, the federal Government is responsible for the regulatory control of the design, construction, and functioning of radiation emitting devices at the point of importation and sale. Provincial Governments are responsible for the control of the installation and use of such devices after sale has taken place.

At the present time standards established under the radiation emitting devices regulations apply only to devices manufactured after the date of coming into force of regulations for those devices. Radiation emitting devices manufactured outside Canada prior to that date can continue to be imported indefinitely for sale in Canada, even though they do not conform to the standards and may be potentially hazardous to Canadian users. Manufacturers outside Canada are aware of this weakness in the Act and could exploit it by producing and stockpiling for sale in Canada devices manufactured under less stringent conditions.

The Act does not now provide authority for regulating radiation emitting devices for which standards have not been prescribed, and which are defective or create a risk of injury to the health of the user. New types of radiation emitting devices can be introduced in Canada without any prior knowledge or evaluation by the Department. Such devices can be ineffectual for their intended purpose, or totally unnecessary and detrimental to the safety of the Canadian public, yet could still be sold without restriction until standards are developed and promulgated, often a lengthy process. Under the present Act there are no restrictions on representations made by manufacturers in respect of the safety, performance or effectiveness of the devices. For many radiation emitting devices, design, construction and performance standards alone are insufficient to ensure safety. Proper and careful use of a device requires adequate written instructions for the use of the device to complement equipment standards.

The Radiation Emitting Devices Act presently limits the prescribing of standards, in the form of regulations, to devices that emit electromagnetic waves having a frequency of ten megacycles per second, or ultrasonic waves having frequencies greater than ten kiloycles per second. However, the biological effects of electromagnetic radiation and acoustical energy propagation are governed not only by the frequency but also by the intensity of the propagated radiation and by the absorption properties of exposed medium. There is an increasing use of a variety of devices which propagate such high levels of power that, in spite of the low absorption coefficient, sufficient power is absorbed to be injurious to biological systems.

Extending the scope of the Act to include all acoustic frequencies would permit an assessment of the health effects of high levels of infrasound which come from air conditioning, heating and ventilating systems, compressors, and large diesel engines. The biological effects which have been attributed to infrasound include hearing loss, involuntary eye movements, nausea, slowed reactions, and fatigue.

The following comments address specific points raised in the debate on second reading on May 18, 1984. Fear was expressed that regulations might be promulgated for new noise emitting devices such as chain saws. In any regulations designed to protect hearing, not only must the level of noise be stipulated but also its duration. The very stipulation of duration of exposure then becomes a "use" parameter and properly falls under provincial jurisdiction. Microwave ovens are now controlled from a health hazard point of view. The unauthorized use or misuse by children is again a provincial responsibility.

The suggestion was made that the regulations must be compatible with those in the United States or country of origin of the equipment. The United States is the major exporter of radiation emitting devices to this country, and every effort is made to ensure compatible regulations, with only minor variations such as wording and language of warning signs. The same applies to international standards where promulgated. Some countries have minimal or no standards for such radiation emitting devices which, if it were Canadian policy to accept the regulations of the producing country, could result in the dumping into Canada of potentially hazardous devices.

A question was raised with respect to genetic and pregnancy effects from video screens. There are no levels of exposure to the operator from ionizing or non-ionizing radiation which can reasonably be expected to give rise to such effects.

The suggestion was made that the control of some radionuclide devices be transferred from the Atomic Energy Control Act. The Radiation Emitting Devices Act specifically excludes all emissions controlled by the Atomic Energy Control Act, and no redistribution of responsibility is being sought.

We intend by this Act to leave the Atomic Energy Control Act intact for its own responsibility, but by the Radiation Emitting Devices Act to have a separate Act which would be responsible for such things as consumer products and dangers in the home to the average Canadian.

This is a very important piece of legislation directly affecting the health of Canadians and the safety of our families. I ask for swift passage on third reading.

● (1120)

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appropriate for me to begin my comments by congratulating the Hon. Member who just spoke on the new addition to his family. I am sure that he speaks with considerable enthusiasm today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gurbin: I understand the new arrival is a healthy baby boy so the Hon. Member has every reason to be properly concerned about the environment in which this young fellow will grow up. Very appropriately, Mr. Speaker, we are today dealing with an Act which deals with the environment in which Canadians live.

I would make the very strong point that the healthiest thing the Liberal Government could do for the Canadian people would be to have an election. However, I do not wish to expand on that point too much, having just congratulated the Hon. Member on the expansion of his family.

Today we are dealing with Bill C-5. I do not think I could do anything but waste time by repeating the very well prepared and reasonably appropriate comments that were made by the Hon. Member who just spoke. However, there are some points that I think need to be made. In some cases those points are broad, and they will certainly become more specific as we turn to some of the more specific issues that are involved. Indeed, the Hon. Member has already addressed some of those issues.

We are dealing with a Bill that does affect the health of Canadians vis-à-vis the variety of things in our environment to which they are exposed. I would like to bring to the attention of the House some of the things that were discussed most recently, in fact in this last week, by the 24 member nations of the OECD. That meeting of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development was precipitated by the state of our environment and all of those things that the environment means.

In this Bill, we are dealing with a reasonably specific and very technological part of the environment. Indeed, it is very much a part of that with which the OECD countries were dealing, being the state of the environment and the health of the environment, including the quality of life which we may all expect because of that environment. In the long run the environment will determine both the physical health and the economic health of the people who are exposed to a variety of industrial, technological, and other innovations that are occurring around the world today.

There is a global distribution of a considerable variety of pollutants. Here we are speaking of everything from noise to ionizing and non-ionizing radiation. This variety of pollutants is seriously threatening the sync of the global community. In the long run they are probably jeopardizing our ability to sustain a healthy economy and to sustain a healthy lifestyle. There are many things we do not know about the impacts of these various influences on our environment. One of the things that has come to light, with which I will deal specifically now, is radiation. I take the point made by the Hon. Member that nuclear radiation is excluded from consideration in this Bill, but I would also have to say very specifically that we are considering some of the same effects. I would think it would be appropriate to discuss them in the same context.

As recently as the last several months, reports have been made which bring to light new impacts of radiation that have as yet been unknown and not understood. One of the most important factors in understanding those impacts is the knowledge of the length of time between exposure to and the ultimate effect of radiation. We have all been living with a source of radiation, the sun, since the world began. We need that particular source of radiation and, as a healthy planet, we have been nourished by that source of radiation. We have also exposed ourselves along the way to additional radiation sources. Here I am talking about everything from video display screens to the effects of X-rays which are being used for diagnostic purposes. We have exposed ourselves to those additional components in which there exists risk.

Originally there was a notion that there was a limit and that people could expose themselves to a certain amount of radiation without any physical costs. That is to say, so much exposure per year to an amount of radiation would be a so-called safe level. However, I think evidence is mounting which indicates that there is no such animal as a safe level of radiation. That includes the radiation which people may be receiving from the sun.

It is a well-known fact that people who expose themselves to the sun—and I say that in a gentle sense—for suntanning purposes, or people who work in the sun for long periods of time, suffer more from skin cancers. Evidence is mounting which indicates that while certain prescribed levels have become acceptable in the community for different levels of radiation, if a time study were taken it might indicate that there may well not be any so-called safe level of radiation exposure. That is not an indication that everyone should run down into the coal mines. There are dangers there as well, as was unfortunately demonstrated in the last week. Many of us have a lifestyle which includes sunbathing. We look forward to sunbathing. However, it is not without risk.

It is unlikely that there is an absolutely safe limit of exposure to any of the radiation sources. Clearly, that indicates that there is a need to understand what the effects will be over long periods of time. I believe that there is good and reasonable work being done on this matter by the scientific community around the world. It also means that at a given point in time—and we are taking a snapshot of where we stand today in terms of the effects of the radiation to which we are exposing ourselves—we need to be reasonable in establishing, as far as we can determine, exposure limits which will keep adverse effects to a minimum.

The first question that I would put forward with regard to this Bill is: on what premise will the regulations be made? I have some degree of insecurity about how evenly, reasonably, and accurately these regulations will be applied. We could go back to the time of Madame Curie. She did not know that the radium with which she was working, and which she discovered to the benefit of us all, would leave her with hands which needed to be covered completely because of cancerous changes before the time of her death. Another example, in more comtemporary times, is the shoe stores which had fluoroscopes which allowed people to see whether their toes were pinched when they bought a new pair of shoes.

There is more and more evidence about the adverse effects of radiation. I have some degree of difficulty in believing that the bureaucracy will know when it is appropriate to make regulations, and how to weigh the costs and benefits of some of these devices. If we go too far we may be denying ourselves what would be reasonable and valuable components in our lives—whether it is electrical generation or the use of computers. If we do not go far enough, 50 years from now there may be an exceedingly high rate of adverse effects which we would all regret. Therefore, the premise on which these regulations will be established is something which should not just be left up to public servants, who, from time to time, will have different attitudes.

I think that is something which requires a watchdog. We require some form of reporting mechanism in order that what is happening can be understood as far as possible, on what basis decisions will be made to provide limitations, and to ensure that the Act and the amendments which are being proposed today will in fact do what is intended. That is the first point I would make, and there are minor points which I would like to include.

I have a Cabinet document here, Mr. Speaker, dated September 12, 1979, from the then Minister of National Health and Welfare, indicating the changes to Cabinet which he thought were implied by the Act which at that time, I believe, was Bill C-15. That is a period of five years between the time that that document was presented to Cabinet and now. Perhaps some of the problems have become greater during that period of time. However, we are now in the second last day of Parliament and I feel it is kind of weird that we are dealing with this Bill today. This is an important issue which might have been dealt with at almost any time in the last five years instead of today when we have some of the crushing social consequences of economic policies which need to be changed, bread lines which are running out of food sources in Toronto, as well as a number of other critical situations which are affecting the health of Canadians. Suicides are on the increase. I do not want to belabour the point, but it seems passing strange that we are dealing with this now instead of something of consequence which would help to deal with the problems of unemployment, interest rates and all of those things which I feel are of critical and immediate importance to the Canadian public.

It was in 1979 when this Cabinet document was produced. It indeed describes many of the amendments, which I will not go over again. My understanding is that we have now expanded this legislation to some degree to address the areas of lower levels of emissions. The Hon. Member used the example of a chain-saw. I am very happy that he made specific mention of the fact that there is a provincial jurisdiction here which needs to be respected. This is a broad area. We are talking about a wavelength of something; then we get into a wavelength with an energy imparted to it; then we get up to a certain energy level and with it, perhaps, an additional factor in terms of the momentum or time factor and other qualities which would in fact bounce off electrons in cells which they might hit and so cause harm to health. This problem is common throughout the world.

I started out talking about the environment and it is really the environment we are talking about here because, as someone said, we could apply this to John Turner's voice, if we wanted. If we did not like the quality of his voice, we could regulate it and perhaps get him to say the things which are important to the Canadian people. That is just how broad this Bill is and that indicates some of the potential problems we could have.

I do not believe that civil servants in the first instance are necessarily misdirected or ill informed or out to do us harm. However, I can see problems if we do not respect the fact that this is a broad concept we are talking about, that there are other jurisdictions which must be respected, and it does require that additional level of watching and understanding before things get out of hand. That is my second point.

There are many natural environmental changes but there is no single change we can get away with without cost. Economists talk about economic rents, and there is a cost. We have developed, with the help of technology and the improvement of nutrition and so on, a situation in which human beings, if they do not get blown up in the meantime, can expect to live to the age of 70 or 80, if they live in a favoured country. This has not been accomplished without costing us something along the way. There will be costs. Exposing ourselves to radiation of all types has its costs. What we must do as carefully as possible is balance those costs and those benefits and keep that progression of improved health and economic climate and environment on the right track.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Conservative Party, that we do support this Bill. However, we raise those cautions which I have expressed and we hope the Government will take them into consideration as this Bill goes forward.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacLaren moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-7 is a repeat of the incompetent way of handling the Customs Tariff in Canada by this Government. The incompetence is expressed so perfectly in the schedule to the Bill that it is important that once again this matter be brought to the attention of the House of Commons.

Somehow we have developed a tariff system with four different tariff items. We have a tariff for the British preferential situation. We have a tariff for most favoured nations. We have a tariff for the general tariff. Then we have what is called the general preferential tariff. In addition, Sir, we have special rates for the United Kingdom and Ireland. All in all, we have a tariff system which makes little if any sense; a tariff calculation and computation system which has grown without any attempt at review. I want to go over how this developed and what we think should happen to correct the matter.

In the first place, Sir, you will recall that back in the early 1930s there was an effort made by the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, as Prime Minister, to organize a British Commonwealth free trade or virtual free trade system. The empire, then the Commonwealth, more or less like the empire prior to World War II and very shortly after, was cohesive and worked well. We had a British preferential tariff whereby rates of duty on goods coming to Canada from Commonwealth and empire countries came in at a very much lower rate of duty than goods which would come in from other countries under what was then the general tariff.

Now, Sir, change has taken place. The British Commonwealth still exists. We are proud members of that Commonwealth. But Great Britain and Ireland have joined another tariff unit called the European Community. They have aligned themselves in a new free trade arrangement with Europe.

However, we still retain the British preferential tariff for no purpose at all other than that it might possibly be of some help in our trade with Australia and New Zealand. It is really of no purpose because following the war we created something called most favoured nation status. Some of those most favoured nations are the most heinous totalitarian countries it the world. For example, Soviet Russia, East Germany and Czechoslovakia are most favoured nations. They are favoured as much as the finest democracies in the world, including the United States. This status covers almost all the countries in the world with the exception of Albania, the Balu Islands, North Korea, Libya, Mongolia, Oman and Saudi Arabia. It has long been said that if everyone is favoured, no one is favoured; if everyone is special, no one is special; if everyone is a somebody, no one is a somebody. We have a tariff system which provides that everyone is a somebody with the exception of Albania, the Balu Islands, North Korea, Libya, Mongolia, Oman and Saudi Arabia. We do not do much business with those countries. We do some business with Saudi Arabia and Libya, basically importing oil. The fact is that we just have not got round to negotiating a treaty with these countries. If we did, they would be most favoured nations too. But I suppose they do not really care.

Nevertheless, we carry the general tariff in our big, weighty tariff tomes. Duly printed in this Bill is the general tariff, including photographs, chromos, chromotypes, artotypes and oleographs, whatever they are. General tariff countries will pay 22.5 per cent duty, whereas most favoured nations will pay 15.7 per cent. We keep this garbage in this statute. Why? If you are amending a statute, surely you look at the problems that multitudinous rate structures create and get rid of them. But not these fellows. They are happy in the bureaucracy carrying on with this sytem, piling new changes on old change, changes on changes, until we build up tomes that are incomprehensible and undefinable.

We have the Bill before us to make sure that labels for cigar boxes coming from Saudi Arabia will attract 35 per cent duty, but if they come from East Germany it will be only 14.6 per cent. Why we should discriminate against the Saudis and make them pay over twice the duty for labels for cigar boxes, I do not know, but there it is in this bill.

The poor people from the Balu Islands are treated the same way. But it is different for Czechoslovakia, that home of democracy which has managed to keep as a prisoner one Vasclav Pivenec. I bring this up because I think it is important. This man worked for the Czecholovakian trading company in this country. When he went home one Chritsmas he was immediately arrested. His wife and kids defected and they are now here as landed immigrants. When he tried to return to his wife and kids, that most favoured nation which we allow to import into Canada goods produced by slave labour said he could not go. He tried to escape and they put him in jail. They still say he cannot come because they do not really care about the Helsinki Agreement. But they are still a most favoured nation; favoured by this Government.

It is a great Act we have here. It really indicates the lack of thinking in a ministry that would produce it and a government that would bring it in and say it is important that it be passed. Well, Sir, we are going to let the ministry and bureaucracy know right now that they better get their act together, because this legislation is incomprehensible, has no regard for the ultimate benefit of Canada as a world trader and it has to go.

We are going to let the Bill go through because it has a provision to extend the general preferential tariff this country has generously given to underdeveloped countries so they can bring their goods into Canada by and large duty free. If it is not passed by June 30, that right would expire and all of those underdeveloped countries, would be stuck with the general tariff or, at best, the most favoured nation tariff, and that would be unfortunate for them. Another reason for letting the Bill pass is that it goes on to increase, from $100 to $300, the amount Canadians returning home can bring in duty free. Those two provisions are very important and must be passed.

I want to bring to your attention Clause 1, which still exists, and the unfortunate things that have happened with respect to which countries are entitled to the general preferential tariff. That tariff is a fourth tariff item. That tariff gives underdeveloped countries the right to bring in goods at a rate below or equal to the British preferential tariff and below the most favoured nation tariff. It allows goods to come in at a very substantially reduced rate. In creating the list of countries entitled to the general preferential tariff, there seems to have been no effort made by the Government to bring that list up to date. While certain countries are underdeveloped and are entitled to this tariff privilege, some countries have become less underdeveloped. Some of them have become major industrial countries.

I speak, for example, of Brazil. There is no question that there is a lot of poverty, underdevelopment and distress in parts of Brazil. There is also a high degree of technology and expertise in this country. There are manufacturers of airplanes, auto parts and automobiles which compete head on with us on the world markets. We allow them tariff concessions which are totally unrealistic in comparison to their degree of development. Brazil is not an underdeveloped country. It may be a poorly managed country. Instead of reinvesting in their country the rich people of Brazil may put their money in bank accounts in Switzerland. There may be little redistribution of wealth in that country, but there certainly is not a total lack of technological ability. To the extent that it is underdeveloped, it is because, through the management of their own affairs, the Brazilians make it underdeveloped.

One wonders why a country of that nature should be entitled to the general preferential tariff. I say that also in relation to Argentina. That country is entitled to the general preferential tariff. In Argentina the people are not illiterate and in poverty all over the country. Argentina has the capacity to produce, create and build and to be a modern industrial machine. The fact that it is badly managed may make it underdeveloped. Our country is badly managed and we are underdeveloped in terms of our potential. However, that does not justify that country having general preferential tariff status.

If one looks at the list of countries with general preferential tariff status, one begins to wonder why they are entitled to the general preference to come into Canada at a rate which is less then the British preferential tariff ever was, when their manufacturers and subsidization of manufacturing is such that, because of free entry, they are able to do damage to Canadian business.

Cuba has that status. Is there any real justification for Cuba, a communist country in the western hemisphere which causes us all sorts of problems in connection with national defence, to have the benefit of a tariff lower than the British preferential ever was? Why would you treat Cuba better than you treat Australia? Is there any real justification for that? Why would you treat communist Cuba better than you do the United States? I say that there is no justification for that at all. One begins to wonder where the priorities of the Government are. Where does the Government intend to take us trade-wise?

In 1968 Canada had 5.74 per cent of world trade. We had a larger percentage of world trade than Japan had. At that point Japan had only 5.71 per cent of world trade. The last statistics I was able to get are from 1981 because these do not come through that quickly. In 1981 we had 3.8 per cent of world trade and Japan had 7.93 per cent. In 1968 we had a larger percentage of world trade than Japan. Now Japan has more than double the world trade we have. We have not been holding our own as a nation. We have been giving tariff privileges to other countries. Yet we have not done anything for ourselves. Candy manufacturers in Canada have protested the way Brazil is able to dump candy into the country. Sugar refineries protested as well with respect to Cuba. Automobile companies have said the same thing to us. I have protested on behalf of people making cordage about what was happening in terms of import and how that was affecting manufacturing jobs in Canada.

Our percentage of world trade has dropped. That of our trading competitors has risen. Germany has 9.21 per cent of world trade, which is nearly three times ours. France had 5.59 per cent in 1968. In 1981 it had 5.57 per cent. That is virtually the same. They do not lose their percentage against Japan. The country that loses is Canada. Our percentage has been going down dramatically more than other countries.

We conducted a study on these matters. It is no secret that our Party has been examining what we could do to make this country grow again and get people back to work. For example, we know that if we could bring Canada's trade up 1 per cent, not even back to what it was in 1968 but to 1 per cent more of trade in the world market, there would be another 600,000 jobs in this country. Yet we are faced with a tariff Bill that repeats the confusion, the inconsistencies and the lack of policy developed by the Government during its history.

Is the Government attempting to get people back to work and to build the country, or is it trying to pretend that this country means something to everyone and that each nation is a most favoured nation? Each nation that says it is underdeveloped is allowed that status and therefore is entitled to virtually free access to our market no matter what the extent of their development. It does not matter to the Government whether a nation is able to make short-take-off-and-landing aircraft that compete with us and drive us out of the South American and African markets with its subsidization programs. It will let them into our country virtually tariff free.

Where is the Government's trade policy? Where is its intention to get tough and to build Canada so it can grow again? It is not provided in this Bill. This Bill really does nothing except extend the privilege to some underdeveloped countries. There are some underdeveloped countries that deserve the underdeveloped status and should be allowed to send goods into the country tariff free. Perhaps that is the best way to help them. However, there seems to be no discrimination. Apparently any country which says it is underdeveloped can qualify and the Government does not reserve that status to those countries in real need. The Government does not reserve the privilege of trading in the Canadian market duty and tariff free to a select group to whom this privilege matters. It is those countries with which we could have free trade, to whom our manufactured goods and technical expertise could be sold while importing from them raw products which cannot be found in our country. That would be a trade policy, but it is not done.

The Government gives this general preferential rate to virtually every country which asks for it. It does not matter whether it is Cuba or Brazil. The Government gives the most favoured nation status to all the others, without regard to politics, how they conduct their trade, whether we can have access to their markets or whether they can sell to Czechoslovakia freely while we cannot. They sell $53 million worth of goods to our country while we sell $11 million worth of goods to their country. It does not matter to the Government, it lets them come in as most favoured nations.

Since the Government has not yet negotiated an agreement with Saudi Arabia and the Balu Islands, it says they must pay the high general tariff. Since they are paying that high general tariff then everyone could be most favoured nation status who is not either in the Balu Islands or North Korea.

This Bill lacks thinking, development and intelligence. It should be passed only for two reasons. First, it will help those who really need the assistance of most favoured nation status and are included in the schedules. That status should be extended. Second, Canadians who are returning from overseas will be able to bring in $300 worth of goods.

I am not sure they will be able to do that any longer. The House will recall that when this Bill was presented in January the exchange rate was well in excess of 80 cents. As each hour goes by, the value of the Canadian dollar seems to drop in terms of international purchasing power. Perhaps the value of $300 Canadian duty free goods coming into Canada has decreased by 4 per cent since the Budget, which is $12 since the Bill was introduced. Since the Budget, that preference has been reduced to approximately $287 and perhaps tomorrow it will be $286. Its value is getting smaller. Canadians believe they are getting something for this privilege, but as the international value of our currency drops, it is not much of a privilege.

The Bill should go through but the Department should be warned that it will have to rewrite the Customs Tariff and put the customs tariff schedules into comprehensible form. Unless it is prepared to begin doing that, some changes will have to be made.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), since 1968 the Government has had to increase the duty free limit from $100 to $300 not only to counteract inflation but the devaluing of our dollar. Therefore, I would say that going back 16 years we are no further ahead, perhaps even a little bit behind.

This Bill is what I would call a good neighbour Bill. While neighbour nations are allowed to send goods into our country without any restrictions, they have a different set of rules when we export our products. I am particularly concerned about the automotive industry. The report of the auto task force was made almost two years ago but nothing has been done about it. That report requested that the preferential tariff rate extended to developing countries for their automotive products be limited to two-thirds of the most favoured nation tariff rate for automotive goods. That is a reasonable request.

I represent an auto industrial area. In order to get around the tariff from West Germany, Mercedes Benz now produces their products in Brazil. As a result, they come into Canada duty free in direct competition with our own industry. This is not the best example because the demand for trucks is not great, given that the economy is at such a stalemate.

However, another example is the South Korean Pony. I will admit that it looks a very good product. It sells at a discounted price and is put together by people who probably earn less than $1 an hour, in a country where the standard of living is much lower than that in Canada. We in Canada try to protect a standard of living for all Canadians. While this product which is brought into the country may benefit consumers, it removes jobs for the workers.

As I said, the Government takes the attitude of being good neighbours and accepts products from anywhere. It will not put duties on the products of other countries and is not concerned about the duties that are placed on our export products.

I would like to point out the reason for that, which came up in our research about what has to change in government. We are not producing as many products now as we did ten years ago. We are still depending upon the export of raw materials. This situation is hurting Canada by eliminating jobs. We have to address methods of producing Canadian products that create jobs, that create additional research and will produce additional profits, allowing further research for new products. We should not just import such things as Mercedes Benz trucks from Brazil and Pony cars from North Korea.

Canada is being very kind to the rest of the world. We put no blocks in the way but everyone else puts blocks in our way. We come across one roadblock after another. We have not been quite as smart as other countries. We have not subsidized industry as much as other countries. We have not enacted adequate legislation for our citizens enabling them to be working today.

As my colleague mentioned, our trade has dropped from 6 per cent to 3.9 per cent. Japan, which traded less then Canada in 1968, now trades more than double the amount that Canada does. How long will we have to wait for other newly industrialized countries to surpass our 3.9 per cent figure? We should be addressing the major problem of pushing our 3.9 per cent trade up to a reasonable level that will create jobs for Canadians. Moving up our world trade one percentage point would create over 600,000 jobs. Moving that percentage in world trade to 5 per cent would create 750,000 jobs. That would cut unemployment in Canada in half. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, I think this country could live with 50 per cent of the unemployment rate we have today, but we cannot live with unemployment rates of 11 per cent and 12 per cent. People do not want to stay at home watching television all day. People want to be productive. This Bill does nothing to encourage our trade. I should correct that: yes, it does. It encourages everybody else to trade with us but what does that do to help Canada export more products?

This Bill will be in place until June 30, 1994. You wonder why we object, Mr. Speaker. We object when we see a democratic country like ours being treated in a different fashion from communist countries such as Czechoslovakia, Poland, East Germany and Russia.

Let us examine our position with Saudi Arabia. We probably export more to Saudi Arabia than to many other places. We have had tremendous success in our exports because of Bell Canada and Northern Telecom. Yet, as a favour to Saudi Arabia because it buys Canadian research and development and technology, we turn around and say to the Saudi Arabians: "You must pay a different rate than the Soviet Union". That situation is not addressed in this Bill. That is wrong. Saudi Arabia requires secondary industry. Saudi Arabia buys from us and we buy from Saudi Arabia what we have to, that being oil because we are running out of oil. We do not create that many jobs in Saudi Arabia by simply buying oil; nor do other countries create many jobs in Canada by buying our coal, our aluminum and our zinc. This Bill does not really solve any of our trading problems. I realize this is something that has to be done every ten years. We have to adjust duties. We had to change the British preferential tariff because Britain is now part of the EEC. But we have many inequities which should have been changed much sooner.

I am concerned, as I said earlier, about the preferential duty for automotive parts and auto products. Yes, Canada is in a positive position today, but I am not at all certain that six months from now Canada will have a positive trade balance on cars. Canada was fortunate that the United States allowed us to retain large car production facilities in Canada. The United States did not really allow us; the situation just happened. All American plants were changed over to the new styles. The Americans left in Canada the "B" bodies—the Monte Carlos, the Pontiacs and the small Oldsmobiles. The United States did not anticipate there would be a boom for those cars. That boom happened because the price of oil did not go up as quickly as anticipated. I am worried and that is why I am dwelling on duty on cars. I am concerned about these new industrialized countries that are able to bring their products into Canada duty free, because we could be in a very dangerous position just six months from now. I hope I am wrong. The new industrialized countries, some of which are in far better shape than Canada, are developing much faster than we are.

I have requested a number of times, to be fair to Canada and to our automotive trade which creates many, many jobs, that we impose two-thirds of the most favoured nation tariff rate on automotive goods. I know that requesting it will not do any good but, believe me, the people in my riding would be appreciative, Mr. Speaker.

Let me digress to the auto task force report which was written two years ago. Nothing has been done about it. Fortunately the industry has done something to help itself. In Canada industry knows that the only way for it to survive is to help itself.

If we are going to accept this Bill—it will be accepted and it will be passed—we have to address what we can do in Canada similar to what the Americans did with the DISC program. We have to deal with subsidization programs throughout the communist world and the slave labour rates in other parts of the world. We must do something to protect Canadian industry. We cannot accomplish it through tariffs, nor by increasing tariffs on goods coming into this country. But we can do something by allowing the free enterprise system to fly. We have put too many constraints in its way, yet we have taken away the constraints on all other countries in the world except for about a half dozen. I am continually amazed that we are such good neighbours. I wish they were as kind to us.

We still protect some items. For example, the British preferential tariff on biscuits is higher than the general preferential tariff. Since I was a child I have eaten more British biscuits than I have those of the rest of the world. Obviously Britain has a higher productivity rate in biscuits than any other country.

The Government is acting in an inequitable manner. For example, we can purchase lobsters prepared and preserved from the communist world at a lower price than we can purchase them from Australia and New Zealand, our friends. Also it is interesting to note the situation with respect to caviar. I am very fond of caviar; I really have a tongue for it. The Government places a tariff on caviar from Britain, a most favoured nation tariff, but caviar from communist countries comes into the country duty free. That is from where most caviar comes, other than that from the Middle East, which I think comes from Iran and perhaps from Saudi Arabia. We charge our friends an excessive tariff, but our enemies bring in their caviar duty free.

The Hon. Deputy Whip likes champagne to go along with his caviar. As he knows, champagne is very heavily taxed coming into Canada. It is not taxed to keep champagne out; it is taxed in the same way as oil, as a money machine. I could deal with all the different items to show the inequity or unfairness. In the case of cigars, the tariff is much less on those from Cuba than on those from other countries. Possibly the Minister enjoys a good cigar after dinner. I do not know, but I feel the situation is inequitable. We must address the importance of encouraging our Canadian industry to produce products so that we do not need to worry about tariffs. If we turned the situation around and took a positive economic step forward, we would start producing more products and become highly productive. Then it would not matter what were the tariffs in other countries because we would be competitive and would accomplish free trade, about which everyone talks. This Bill does not provide free trade. It provides unilateral free trade—everything coming into the country is free; everything going out is taxed.

How can the Government justify this Bill and at the same time go down to Washington and discuss sectoral free trade? That should have been done first and this Bill should have been brought in second. Our best friend and largest trading partner is the United States of America. It had better remain our friend because it protects us and we buy its products.

I agree with sectoral free trade, but I do not agree with Canada allowing in products from wherever the Government wants at any price. I know this is third reading debate and that I must deal with the Bill. Therefore, I should like to refer to another item about which the Hon. Deputy Whip should be very concerned. I am referring to brandy. French brandy probably has a tariff on it but brandy from communist Russia comes in duty free.

When I look at the area of ceramics, I am glad the Government has left in some protection because a ceramics industry is developing in Canada with fine people who have come from Portugal and Italy, Mexico and Spain. They have developed small cottage industries in the ceramics field. The Government has left reasonable tariffs in place so that ceramics do not come in duty free.

There are parts of the Bill which are right, in particular those which protect the cottage trade in Canada. We must address this area. I have not had an opportunity to review each item covered in the Bill. However, there are other items which could be harmful to the cottage trade. If the cottage trade is flourishing, it means that people are being taken from the welfare and unemployment rolls and being allowed to do something productive.

This is another poor Bill. We do not want to have to vote upon it. However, we realize there are problems and that there are serious implications with our other trading partners if we do not pass it. Once again I state that we must review the auto task force report and the tariffs on the Mercedes Benz from Brazil and the Pony from Korea to ensure that we are protecting jobs in the Canadian automotive industry, which comprises a large portion of our population.

In that my time is up, I thank the House for allowing me to express my concerns about this Bill.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a few comments on this Bill, particularly as it relates to the whole question of our approach to customs matters.

A story recently appeared in the press which typified the rather silly extents to which the Government goes in terms of some customs regulations. The story—and it has not been denied by the Government—dealt with a circumstance in which regulations relating to customs tariff requirements were passed. They referred to various commodities which were being imported into Canada. The story concerned the importation of dance apparel by a woman in Winnipeg who ran a dance school for young children and students. She was in the habit of importing dance apparel from different countries including the United States. One requirement of the customs regulations was that the country of origin had to be prominently displayed on the apparel. In this particular situation there was a tab on the costumes being imported on which the name of the manufacturer was displayed on the front. On the back the tab it indicated that the apparel was manufactured in the United States. This seemed to the woman in question to meet the appropriate regulation under the Customs Act.

However, the official at the customs office was not satisfied with the 125 dancing dresses that were coming in for these students. He required the importer, the owner and proprietor of the dancing school, to sit in a room at the international airport in Winnipeg and to reverse the labels on the back of each of these dresses so that the place of origin would face up rather than down. I found this to be an incredible perversion of what we are trying to accomplish under our customs regulations.

We have schedules in this Bill with respect to items that are going to be dealt with under the Customs Tariff. When we have a provision with respect to importation of goods into this country, what is accomplished by a bureaucrat requiring some poor individual importer, the proprietor of a dance school in Winnipeg, to sit for the course of one whole day and re-sew labels on the back of dancing apparel? That is an outrageous example of the preposterous extent to which a very small minority of unthinking bureaucrats are in fact enacting the laws that we pass in this Parliament.

This was not a person who felt there was no alternative. The person involved in making this decision at the port of importation in Winnipeg said that it was good for this woman to sew those labels on the dancing dresses, that it was a good education for her and that she sure would not import dresses again with labels turned the back way. When we talk about changing the customs laws of this country, it is time that some of us stood in this House to point out that some of the same problems exist in terms of the dealings under the laws that we enact at our borders for our own Canadian citizens, as we experienced in Revenue Canada with respect to the taxpayers of the country and some of the enormous abuses that have come to light in the last few months.

When we in Parliament review the provisions of this Bill and look at what we are now doing in terms of changing the Customs Tariff for a variety of commodities, we should do so on the basis that these laws will be enacted and put into practice and operation on a sensible basis. When we find circumstances of abuse where Canadian citizens are harassed or treated unfairly, it should give us cause to stop and think about the way we are giving directions, the directions being given by the government of the day to its employees with respect to the laws we pass in Parliament.

This is only one step in the whole process. Here we set the bare bones law with respect to legislation. We determine by such legislation what the level of import tax will be, the percentage and the preference, if applicable. We think our responsibilities finish there. When those who are importing goods and commodities of all sorts and descriptions covered by this legislation have to deal with the administration and customs branch, we should be vigilant. We should send out a signal to ensure that, while there is a purpose in enacting this legislation and giving protection to Canadian manufacturers and producers of all sorts with respect to goods made and produced in Canada, that does not give the agency required to administer these laws carte blanche to act unreasonably with respect to people who are interested in importing goods into Canada.

There has to be an even-handedness demonstrated in the administration. In the same way that we have proposed in terms of Revenue Canada, there should be a bill of rights for the taxpayers of this country so that they know they will receive fair and reasonable treatment from Revenue Canada when dealing with that Department. This same principle should apply with respect to the customs side of Revenue Canada.

I do not want to get involved in discussing in a wide-ranging way the problems faced by people with respect to some of the regulations that have now been passed with regard to our customs law. However, we are more and more getting into an age where many of our laws are not passed in Parliament but rather by Order in Council. The Deputy Minister and the bureaucracy really set the rules with respect to the application of those laws which we pass. There is a highly arbitrary element with respect to the administration of the laws that we pass in Parliament. This is happening more and more. I do not say it is unique to the Parliament of Canada, it is happening in legislatures across this land. More and more power is being vested in the Public Service, the administration, the bureaucracy, so that we in Parliament do not set the rules regarding the application of those laws.

Mr. Kelly: What was that again?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Unfortunately my colleague's microphone is not on, so I am not able to get the benefit of his wisdom. I am concerned about this development regarding legislation where wide powers in terms of passing laws which very much affect the way in which legislation such as we are now dealing with are dealt with through regulation, through administrative orders which have very serious consequences in terms of our over-all customs policy.

I know that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren), who is a very sensible and honourable man, agrees with me in this connection. He has had experience trying to figure out whether when coming into Canada he should declare the toothpaste and shaving cream he bought in Washington, where he spends a lot of his time getting instructions with respect to his portfolio. It is time for parliamentarians to remind themselves again of the growing incidence of government by regulation. It has a very serious impact in the way in which legislation such as we are now looking at, which will be approved today, will be administered.

I go back to the rather human example I mentioned at the outset of my remarks. It is inconceivable that any person acting on behalf of the customs branch of Revenue Canada would think it a wise decision to make some poor proprietor of a dancing school sit with a needle and thread all day to reverse labels that have been placed on garments because they did not meet his view of how those labels should have been sewn on the dancing garments. What kind of mentality would exist in a branch of government for it to allow these kinds of circumstances to exist? As that woman said, she felt like a criminal. She somehow felt that there was no alternative but to follow the instructions of the customs official. I think we would all find ourselves in the same position. We tend to respect authority. When a police officer, a customs official or a person from Revenue Canada tells us to take a particular action, 99 per cent of us will accept that authority and will follow through on the instructions because Canadians are law-abiding people. As well, Canadians believe, and rightly so, that there are sanctions attached to these positions.

All I can say is that when considering this legislation, it is time for us to make sure that the principles embodied in the Bill before us are not distorted or perverted by the administration of the Department through the ability of the Deputy Minister to pass laws by regulation with respect to administration which give wide and arbitrary powers to officials. I say that because we in this Party feel strongly about the expansion of government by regulation. That is why we have spoken up with respect to this particular Bill.

While the Bill will pass, we simply serve notice that under a new administration, people who are involved with Revenue Canada, whether on the taxation side or the customs side, will take a new attitude with respect to their need to deal with people in a fair and sensitive way. We in this Party believe that Canadian citizens have rights and should be treated as human beings who should be entitled to carry on discussions and negotiations with the Government free from harassment and arbitrary treatment.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) would advise us of his view with respect to the various schedules contained within the Bill. He will note that there are schedules for British preferential tariffs, most-favoured nation tariffs, general tariffs and general preferential tariffs. Certain suggestions have been made regarding the consolidation of those tariffs. Perhaps the Hon. Member could give us his views with respect to these tariff schedules.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the question put by the Hon. Member because it gives me the opportunity to say that we are given the responsibility of dealing with a wide range of commodities which are dealt with under these schedules. We as parliamentarians have been asked to pronounce judgment on these matters and we do so on the basis of advice we have received from the Government indicating that these are the appropriate tariff levels for each of the commodities listed. To a large extent, in the dying days of this Parliament we are dealing in good faith with a variety of items listed in each of the schedules. We are doing this in the belief that the Minister has done a thorough review and is able to substantiate that these in fact are the appropriate levels for the various commodities.

In a general response to my colleague, I would say that one of the difficulties is that when we deal with these items as we are doing now, that is only part of the story. The administration of the customs laws in our country very much affect the success or otherwise of this particular legislation because wide and arbitrary powers are given to customs officials through regulations passed by the Deputy Minister by Order in Council.

I appreciate the opportunity my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), has given me to comment on the schedules and to assure Canadians that, when dealing with this kind of legislation, much of the law that is enacted is not enacted on the floor of the House of Commons. At least in this case, we have been given the courtesy of being able to look at the various items and pass judgment on them. We have been given the opportunity to stand up and say that this particular item should fit into another category or should have a higher or lower rate of tariff if we have any specific objections to certain items. However, that is just the tip of the iceberg. Very often three-quarters of the rules and decisions are made not on the floor of the House of Commons but in the offices of bureaucrats. These rules and decisions are, as I say, subject to no accountability or scrutiny excepting the scrutiny of, I am proud to say, the House of Commons and Senate Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, a committee of which I am a member.

A very substantial amount of work is placed before the Committee to which I have just referred and we deal with our responsibility in a painstaking way. However, we deal with these matters after the fact as opposed to before the fact. We do not pronounce on these regulations before they are enacted but after they have been passed to the Privy Council Office and have been in existence for two, three or even four years. In many instances these regulations have done great damage to individual Canadian citizens. These laws are the same as any law that is passed by Parliament but it is legislation that is delegated.

I know that 100 per cent of my colleagues would agree with me that a new government will take a serious look—

Mr. Deniger: New image, new face.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is not only a new image, Mr. Speaker. Liberal Members like to speak about new images. We do not want only a new image; we want real change, and that is where we differ from members of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CURRENCY AND EXCHANGE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-8, an Act respecting the imposition of anti-dumping and countervailing duties, to amend the Currency and Exchange Act, the Customs Tariff and the Export and Import Permits Act and to repeal the Anti-dumping Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacLaren moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, by and large, this Bill follows the recommendations contained in the report of the Subcommittee of the Finance Committee on special import measures. Therefore, we are very much in favour of the Bill. In particular, the Bill proposes that the anti-dumping and countervailing duties legislation should place specific time limits on various stages of the investigation of dumping and subsidization, as well as the conduct of injury inquiries. To complete cases more rapidly, the Department of National Revenue's investigation of dumping and subsidization, and the Tribunal's inquiry into injury, should coincide to a greater extent than they do at present. Basically, those recommendations have been followed in Clauses 31, 32, 38, 41 and 43.

• (1250)

In the past when complaints have been laid it has been possible to use the favourite lawyer's trick when defending a matter—that is, to delay, delay and delay. As a consequence, the injury carries on. Even if a finding has been made that there has been dumping or undue subsidization, the damage has already been done and in many cases the Canadian industry will have gone under or will have been severely damaged to the point where even an order by the Tribunal would do nothing except tell that industry: "It is too bad that you are good Canadians and that you waited for this legislation to assist you, but now you are dead and we will send you roses; or we will send you the investigators from the Department of National Revenue, or the bankruptcy group from Consumer and Corporate Affairs to find out why you went under". Therefore, we welcome the proposal to move ahead and complete more rapidly the investigations and hearings of the Tribunal.

The second proposal which was made by the subcommittee reads as follows:

> The new anti-dumping and countervailing duties legislation should permit the suspension of investigations if price undertakings have been accepted by National Revenue from exporters who are dumping, or price or quantitative undertakings from exporters and their governments in the case of subsidized exports to Canada.

That matter has been dealt with in Clauses 49 to 54 of the Bill.

The third proposal which the subcommittee made was that the new countervailing duty procedure should generally parallel anti-dumping procedures. That raises two matters. First, there is an order on dumping which imposes a duty or charge that is an anti-dumping levy. Often the problem is not the dumping of goods but situations in which countries have subsidized their internal producers to the extent that the goods are for sale in their own country at an exceptionally low price. When those goods are shipped to Canada, those countries can properly say that they are not dumping the goods. For example, Italy can say that their tomatoes are for sale in Italy at the same price as they are offering them for sale in Canada. We could ask why canned tomatoes are so cheap in Italy. The answer is that they subsidize their farmers to grow tomatoes. In effect, the canned tomatoes are cheap because Italy also subsidizes their steel can makers. Therefore, the result is that tomatoes are a product which is exceptionally low-priced. If it is low-priced to Italians, then why can they not sell it at the same low price to Canadians? The answer is that Canadian farmers and can companies will be put out of business. Why is Italy able to do it? Not because their price of production is any lower—indeed, it is probably higher—but because the agriculture and steel industries are subsidized to such an extent that the products in those industries are coming into Canada at an unfair price marking. If we were to allow that to continue, we would seriously damage our farmers and our steel industry.

There is a problem in the country today with respect to wine. As many of us are aware from reading articles, some members of the European Common Market—the countries of Germany, France, Italy and Portugal—have been producing excellent crops of grapes over the last few years. The consequence is that they are virtually floating in a sea of wine. To a large extent this is because agriculture in Europe has been excessively subsidized by rebates on land taxation, subsidies of one form or another in terms of interest on loans to farm groups, acreage subsidies and the like. The effect is that subsidized agriculture ends up with enormous production. If producers have a good year on top of that, they wind up with enormous production.

Without some kind of protection, the Canadian wine industry would be wiped out. We could place certain tariffs on wine, but if we are prepared to sell it for virtually nothing, then it is a tariff on nothing. If fixed prices are placed on wine as is the case in Ontario, which indicates that foreign wine cannot be sold for less than domestic wine, then the pressure is still on and it makes it impossible for our own producers to produce. This legislation is exceptionally important as it gives another layer of protection and makes it possible for Canadian industry to be protected, not against ordinary and proper foreign trade—because I think we must recognize that we are a trading nation—but against subsidized imports and situations in which producers in other countries decide that our market is a place for their surplus.

The next proposal recommended that the anti-dumping legislation provide authority for the establishment in exceptional circumstances of a basic price system. That is, I suppose, the philosophy of the legislation. When someone is bringing something to our country, the product which comes in must have a price structure which indicates that it could in fact be produced for the price at which it is offered. A constituent of mine informed me of a case recently which involved paint brushes in China. The brushes are made of hog bristles. They are good brushes. The fact is that the Chinese were selling paint brushes in our market at about half the price at which they would sell the hog bristles themselves. This is a case in which there is no basic price at all because there is no way of finding out what the market for paint brushes is in China. China does not have the same kind of society as Canada. They do not have hardware stores and the same merchandising system. The brushes were essentially made for one purpose: they were made for export. Hog bristles are also available for export. However, the brushes were coming into the country at significantly less cost than the brushes could have conceivably been made for if the hog bristles were worth what the Chinese were prepared to sell those bristles for.

Obviously, we must reach a fair price. This legislation will enable the establishment of a basic price. If we took the hog bristle price and the price at which China is prepared to sell those bristles and we added the price of putting a brush together, it would end up as a fair price. After all, China determines the price of the ingredient—the bristles. Why should that not be the basic cost of producing the brush? It is not a question of inquiring whether in fact it is a subsidy, because in a country where there is no market system it is difficult to determine whether it is a subsidy. There may be in fact no subsidy paid. It may be just the way the marketing system of that country values its product. On that basis, it becomes difficult to determine whether it is a subsidized import or whether it is dumped. What one has to do is to determine what is a basic fair value and charge duty accordingly or put on a countervailing duty or something of that nature, and this legislation provides for that.

With respect to the proposals, proposal No. 5 was the criterion for finding injury: the new definition of regional industry contained in international agreements or anti-dumping duties and on subsidies and countervailing duties should be taken into account by the Tribunal. That is dealt with in Clause 42(3) of the Bill. The recommendation was that the injury criteria specified in the GATT anti-dumping code be adopted into Canadian legislation as a reference for injury inquiries, and that the definition of "regional industry" contained in the GATT anti-dumping code should be taken into account by the Tribunal.

We live, Sir, as you know, in a very large country where we have five, six, and perhaps even more separate regions. The importation of an article at a very low price into one region of our country can hurt manufacturers in another region of our country where that importation is not taking place. Therefore, dumping or subsidization has to be looked at not only on the basis of the whole country, but on the basis of the regions of the country. We are pleased that that particular provision is in the statutes.

Proposal No. 6 of the committee was that the existing Canadian legislation permitting imposition of import quotas based on injury findings by the Textile and Clothing Board or the Tribunal should be maintained. However, there should be provision to place the products on the import control list for monitoring purposes based upon the recommendation of the Tribunal and the Textile and Clothing Board. This whole question of imports and monitoring imports is dealt with in Clause 106 of the Bill and further dealt with on a three-year review period provided in Clause 104 of the Bill.

The next proposal was that Section 8 of the Customs Tariff should be amended to permit surtaxes to stay in effect for more than 180 days without parliamentary approval in the case where the Tribunal, or where appropriate, the Textile and Clothing Board, finds on a reference by the Government serious injury or threat of serious injury to Canadian producers. Clause 103 of the Bill provides for that but also provides that the review would have to be every three years instead of being an annual review. Therefore, there is provision in Clause 103 to make sure that the surtaxes can in fact stay in effect longer than the 180 days which was the case in the past.

Proposal No. 8 with respect to the legislation is that the legislative authority for applying surtaxes should also permit the application of surtaxes after certain quantities of the product have been imported. Again, if there is a quantitative import allowed, Clause 103 of the Bill provides that a three-year review should be held on those quantitative limitations. Proposal No. 8 of the committee was that the legislation should provide for specific authority for Canada to take safeguard measures for balance of payment purposes. Obviously, we live in a trading world but occasionally we can have, and have had in the past, balance of payment problems. We do not seem to have those right now, although I may point out to you, Sir, that in the first three months of this year we suffered a balance of payment deficiency. We have been very fortunate in our foreign trade to have a surplus of trade, and that has more than overcome our ordinary deficiency in terms of the tourist industry and our deficiency in terms of payments of interest and dividends to foreigners. However, we can, and have had in the past, serious problems with respect to balance of payments. Section 102 of the statute provides that we can interfere to safeguard our balance of payment problem.

Proposal No. 10 is that the Government should have the power to suspend or withdraw rights or privileges granted by Canada to other countries and to impose surtaxes, quotas or a combination thereof, or to impose countervailing duties, and in cases where it is deemed to be appropriate to respond to actions by foreign governments which either affect Canadian trade, goods and services or impair Canada's rights under trade agreements. That again is part of the provisions in Section 102.

There were some additional recommendations. First, that the Tariff Board should be empowered to undertake a review of decisions made by the anti-dumping tribunal when so requested by consumer advocates and when, in the opinion of the board, it is in the national interest to do so. This was not completely done in the Bill, but Clause 45 of the Bill will permit interested parties such as consumers to make representations to the Anti-dumping Tribunal. Perhaps that ought to happen more often. But, of course, we are all consumers and it is difficult to get people interested in making representations to tribunals when the cost of going to a tribunal gets to be rather horrific in terms of legal fees and disbursements.

The subcommittee recommended further that there was a unique problem with respect to capital goods, and that problem continues. Clauses 89 to 95 of the Bill, to some extent, with regulations, perhaps help here. However, we may be building, for example, a transit system and another country may come in and make a bid on that transit system which is a one-of-kind item. In one-of-a-kind items it is very difficult to say whether an item is being subsidized or whether it is being dumped because, after all, if it is one-of-a-kind, how can you say it is being dumped in your country? So we always have a problem with capital goods because there is no specific market for a particular exclusive and unique type of machinery or equipement. It is on the basis that there must be some study made of it. We are not entirely happy with the way it is handled, but we will see how it goes. It may be impossible, really, to legislate here without interfering with the over-all requirement that we as trading nations should have our regulations for imports generally available to people to see and read and understand. We cannot have a situation where the Government is asked by some people to stop a foreign importer at the border because some Canadian all of a sudden objects that some foreign importer or manufacturer is bringing in goods cheaper than the Canadian thinks they can be produced. Indeed, world trade would cease to exist if the Government used that type of regulatory procedure, particularly when there is really no market for a product. It is exceptionally difficult on a capital goods matter to protect yourself. These clauses do something but we are not at all convinced that that is going to solve the problem, but again the problem probably defies a solution.

The subcommittee further recommended that the role of current import agencies be examined in relation to one another. That was not dealt with, but there are businesses in this country whose sole purpose is to buy foreign products, bring them into Canada and distribute them. They should be examined as to how they are working. We have not done it in this Bill and perhaps it should be done at some future time. The committee should continue to monitor the question of import regulation and control because after all, Sir, the question of goods coming into this country and their effect on jobs is pretty important to us. Therefore, the role that import agencies play in this country's trade patterns is important and has to be looked at continually.

There is provision concerning public disclosure in Clauses 78, 79, 82 and 88. The committee suggested that the legislation should outline a greater disclosure of information collected by Revenue Canada during an investigation and the reasons underlying a decision. That is important. Importers are entitled to have the reasons why a countervailing duty is imposed, why the countervailing duty is 29.5 per cent or, in the case of the paint brushes I mentioned, in excess of 500 per cent. The committee also suggested that all confidential information be accompanied by a non-confidential summary. In other words, if there are matters brought to the Tribunal that are confidential, then surely they can be summarized in a non-confidential manner. It is not necessary to give away a company's trade secrets, but there is no reason why they could not be summarized in a non-confidential manner. The committee recommended that the Government be given the right to disregard any confidential information not accompanied by a non-confidential summary. Perhaps that is the way it should be. Then the committee recommended that the Government review all information claimed to be confidential in order to verify that fact. If it does not appear to be of a type that must be confidential, steps should be taken to convince the company to reclassify the information as non-confidential.

One of the greatest ways to avoid telling anyone anything, and we see it here in this House time and time again, is to say that the information is somehow confidential. Well, often what is confidential is just prejudicial. It is information that may cause the Government a great deal of distress, but it is not confidential. The recommendation is that it be handled in that fashion.

On balance, this is a worth-while Bill. I guess it goes against the grain of free trade, but I suppose in looking at legislation of this nature, we have to understand that while free trade is important, it also has to be fair trade. Too often we have been like boy scouts. We have said, "My goodness, we belong to GATT, we are free traders and therefore we will not step in when people take unfair action against us". Well, we have to realize that other countries subsidize their exports. We have to realize that other countries are prepared to use taxpayers' money to subsidize interest rates in order to finance capital goods. Some countries as a matter of national policy will encourage their steel industry to the extent where the importing country, such as the United States, is faced with a tremendous amount of steel imports and they are now looking at ways to reduce those imports. That is going to affect us. We should not be affected; we have been fair traders with the U.S. on steel. But when countries like Korea and East Germany dump steel in the United States at prices far below any realistic cost of production, then it becomes a question of unfair trade. When there is unfair trade, then we must be capable of protecting ourselves.

This Bill goes a long way toward making sure that trade remains free. At the same time that it makes sure that those engaged in unfair trading are stopped quickly. There will be a quick investigation, a quick order and a countervailing duty which redresses the balance. I commend the Bill to the House. I think it is important that it be passed, and it is essential that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs continues to monitor the question of trading practices.

It is a fast moving world out there. People are not afraid to take advantage of our relatively low tariffs and our open market. Canada is one of the few countries where it is not difficult to distribute goods. If you sold to Sears, Canadian Tire and Hudson's Bay, you have sold half the market or maybe even 80 per cent of the market in some goods. So you really do not have to hire a distributor who goes door-to-door across the country; it is much easier to merchandise products in this country. So when we allow importers that ease of access to our marketplace we must insist that they trade fairly. But we should have the same ease of access to the Japanese market as they have to our market. If we had that ease of access to the markets of Japan we would not have to impose the quota system which we have on Japanese automobiles because we too could sell our automobiles in their market. We could do as well in their market as they can do in ours. However, the ease with which they can get into our market is entirely different from the way we can get into theirs. I commend the Bill to the House on the understanding that the Bill and the trade activities be monitored over the years to come.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, some of what I will say today may appear to be a repetition of some of the remarks just made by the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I believe that they are worthy of further emphasis. I am not being critical, but I would like to draw some matters directly to the attention of the Minister who moved this Bill. I hope that it is possible for him to return because there are some serious problems in Canadian trade. There are some inequities which I think must be addressed by the Government. It is too late to address them through this or the preceding Bill, but I do think they deserve consideration.

Unfortunately, the negotiations which Canada has conducted on an international basis, and by which it has become a member of GATT, have not been conducted in a fashion which protects Canada against some of the unfair trade practices to which we are subject. As a result, goods are arriving on the Canadian market at prices which bear no relationship to our cost of production or to the cost of production in the export country. We have been weak. We have not protected ourselves as other nations have, either by artificial trade barriers or by agreement with our international partners in trade.

The steel situation is a prime example of what has happened to us. We have not protected ourselves in any way against being excluded from a market by virtue of the dumping of others. Yet that is exactly what we are experiencing with the United States today as it has decreed that there is injury when steel arrives in the United States from other countries at depressed prices. Although Canada has been able to prove that our prices are competitive, but not cutthroat, in respect of the steel market in the United States, we are excluded from exporting steel to the United States.

This could not be addressed in the discussions on the preceding Bill nor on this one. We must address this at the international trade level in a very serious fashion. Apparently we have come up with a negotiated trade deal in GATT which only allows the total exclusion of the product concerned, whether from our market, the American market or others. Therefore, the innocent are classed with the guilty and punished in exactly the same fashion. We need further negotiations and further improvements in our international trade negotiations.

The former speaker mentioned wine. I think we can extend that to fruit juices and fruit juice concentrates such as from apples and grapes. The source from which they come and the terms and conditions under which they arrive here must be given serious consideration. The European Economic Community has subsidized the export of virtually all of its agricultural products. Canada has been a market for one or another of them at various times in virtually every year. Irish beef has been arriving in the Canadian market. European wines are presently arriving and will continue to arrive at prices which are more than competitive with the price of a comparable sized bottle of coke bought at the wholesale price. It does not make much sense that a bottle of wine can arrive in Canada at a price competitive with a bottle of coke produced in Canada because it involves a much more expensive process. That is implicit in the decision-making process which will decree that there is in fact injury to our Canadian market and dumping from foreign sources. We must address these problems.

I am not satisfied that by virtue of earlier negotiations this Bill does address that problem. There are literally billions of bottles of wine in excess of the European capability to consume which will have to be marketed somewhere in the world. Some of that wine is presently arriving in Canada at prices which bear no relationship to cost. However, because of the mechanism of indirect subsidy which was described in part by the previous speaker, we have not been able to establish a legal framework within which we can say that that wine is in fact being dumped in Canada. That is because the subsidy does not go directly to the farmer or the winery. It goes directly to the selling agency, whether that be a private broker or a private exporter. He is the one who receives the subsidy, and it is reflected in the price paid to the farmer for his goods or to the winery for its product.

This will just not work in the world of trade. Our wine industry would be a healthy one if given proper access to the Canadian market. It is small but it deserves consideration and reasonable protection, either by virtue of anti-dumping legislation or by renegotiation of the terms and conditions which apply to it. Either course may solve the problem. However, I do not believe we can solve it with this Bill, because I think it contravenes our agreement with GATT. It is merely a mechanism which was not defined in GATT. Therefore, it is not acceptable for us to accuse them of dumping. We must address these questions properly.

It is rather unique that the Member for Mississauga South would have so much to say in common with what I want to say. The Hon. Member mentioned brushes and hog bristles. He was talking about the largest single brush manufacturer in the British Commonwealth. That manufacturer is located in the City of Saint John and has been subject to very unique pressures of pricing by foreign suppliers over the years. Its very existence has been threatened. This needs to be addressed. Such manufacturing does not exist in Toronto and therefore may not be addressed as it deserves.

I will also bring to your attention two tea packaging companies located in the City of Saint John. The consequence of inadequate protection for that industry may mean that it will fold up completely. It presently employs approximately 500 people in the reception of the raw product at the Port of Saint John and in its processing, packaging and sales operations. Every one of these jobs in the City of Saint John and the nearby town of Sussex is presently in jeopardy because the two companies find that they are exporting some of their product to the United States with a duty applied against exports to the United States. On the other hand, they are competing in the market in Canada on a duty-free basis with products from the United States packaged the same way. This spells the demise of these industries. This is one of the items which I would particularly like to draw to the attention of the Minister who has moved this Bill. It is imperative that he study it. The industry has made representations to the Government of Canada stating that in a few months it must make a decision whether to go out of business completely or to move the plant to the United States where it will have free access to both markets. The members of the industry say that they cannot exist in Canada when they are subject to duty on their exports to the United States but in competition with the same source of supply in Canada duty free. Free trade is a great thing, but I repeat the phrase of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South that fair trade is what Canada must accomplish in its negotiations and through its legislation. Nothing less can be acceptable.

I have yet to hear to what degree we will be able to apply this Act in its literal intention without being subject to penalty by our GATT trading partners. Is this Bill designed to be used in that fashion and does it set up any of the artificial trade barriers which have prohibited us from selling our wares abroad? For instance, it is impossible to get an agricultural product into the European market today unless it is something that they do not produce. Nothing that they produce can be imported except by special permit. However, Canada is open to virtually free trade on exports arriving from Europe in the same field. For example, recently I saw in the storage space of the Parliamentary Restaurant, a five-gallon can of fruit salad. There was a time when Canada would have made that fruit salad primarily from Canadian products. However, that product arrived in Canada at a price below the cost of freight and packaging in Canada. It could not have been packaged in the Okanagan Valley for the price for which it was sold there. It could not have been packaged in the Niagara Peninsula for the price at which it was sold in the Niagara Peninsula. Consequently, that fruit salad trade is totally lost to the peach, pear and other fruit producers in Canada.

We must have reasonable measures because the markets from which this product came do not accept a comparable amount of fruit under any terms if it were to be shipped from Canada. There are sanitary and other artificial trade barriers that would absolutely prohibit our sale to the country of origin in this particular instance. This requires redress and the renegotiation for fair trade between ourselves and our world trading partners.

There are many small producers in Canada, particularly in the farm trade, who are unorganized and therefore cannot afford to prepare for action which is taken against us in such places as the United States. They cannot afford to prepare the evidence which is necessary to establish that there is in fact injury done to the Canadian market as a result of improperly and unfairly priced products arriving in our market.

I hope that this Bill we are debating today will at least address this in part. It does not address such circumstances as took place when the potato industry came under review in the United States. There was no viable organization that could in fact fight that case in the quasi judicial process which took place in the United States. Consequently, the potato agency in the Province of New Brunswick is absolutely strapped. There was no government assistance to protect Canadian trade and its just rights in a foreign market. These matters must be addressed. It will take several years before the potato industry in Canada can recover a viable operation as a result of the expenditures it incurred to protect the interests of the export trade in the United States. Our representations to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), have all been rejected out of hand.

Another example is the forest industry. I agree that the forest industry was able to finance itself because its group included giants that could have assumed the total expense with only a small dent to their treasury. However, when it comes to exports in the agricultural market, the Government must recognize that the total trade is the very lifeline of our financial survival. This problem should be addressed differently. I ask the Minister to give consideration to this.

The disposition of surpluses by other countries can take place in many ways. For instance, a group of agricultural processors in the United States decided that they had an excess of their product. They determined that if they sold 10 per cent of their total storage holdings at any price anywhere in the world, they would then be capable of marketing the balance at a profit and could recover any loss on the first 10 per cent of sales. This did not take place with government sponsorships but through the co-operation of the processing industry itself. There is no vehicle in this Bill, in any other legislation in the House or in other international agreements to protect an agricultural product from the efforts of a cartel to dispose of surplus. These are matters which must be given much more serious consideration. They should be addressed in this Bill.

In closing the debate, perhaps the Minister could tell us if the Bill leaves us totally without the responsibility of paying penalties or compensation to a trading partner whose trade may be perceived to be interrupted by virtue of dumping or any other exercise which this Act permits the Government to take to prohibit the trade of a particular product. According to our negotiations with GATT and our legislation, we have only applied penalties against imports subject to a compensation to be paid to the country which may consider that it was damaged because it could no longer export to Canada. There are a number of products which need attention. While we must deal with the agricultural industry in general, it is presently the wine industry that is in particularly serious trouble. We must ask for fair trade from those who would take up our market at the expense of our own producers.

The tobacco industry must be examined on somewhat the same basis. Are the imports of tobacco coming in under fair trade practices or are those imports arriving at prices which do not bear proper relationship to the cost in the country of origin? Perhaps we may have to establish some artificial trade barriers of our own and negotiate them as acceptable in order to preserve any production in the horticultural field in this country.

I implore the Minister to arrange for the acceptance of the notion that the moneys spent to subsidize exporters—not producers—from the European Economic Community will be paid instead as a subsidy to the farmer himself, because it seems that this is the only way we can impose dumping duties and penalties for the appearance of that product on our market.

There is no question that it is an invasion of what was intended in the GATT agreement. We should no longer accept an improperly established artificial subsidy. It is time to make a decision about the wine industry. I would also ask the Minister to address the problems of the tea industry. We need duties on the import of tea into Canada that are comparable to those which our industry would experience when it exports. It is necessary for the preservation of jobs in Saint-John, Montreal and the Toronto area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments. If there are no questions, or comments, we will proceed to debate.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to point out to the House that the report on this Bill was presented in June 1982. The emphasis was to get this Bill through so legislation could be put in place. That was 24 months ago. Now we are being asked to rush this Bill through the House. I am in favour, in general, of what has transpired. But why have we had to wait 24 months?

There are many inequities relating to the Anti-dumping Tribunal which should have been addressed a long time ago. Let me relate a difficult experience concerning one of my constituents, a Japanese Canadian who is a tool manufacturer. There has been an ongoing battle for 18 months regarding whether a certain drill is of an industrial type or a consumer type. In spite of the fact that 93 per cent of the sales are in the consumer market, three years ago one catalogue in Japan showed that the drill was equal to an industrial tool, and this drill is now being treated as an industrial tool. That is an inequity that has not been looked at in depth. The literature is looked at, but no one takes the trouble to find out what the facts really are. The case I have outlined is a serious problem. The company set up a manufacturing facility in Canada and created 50 jobs. But because of the attitude of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) and the Anti-dumping Tribunal the company may move its entire operation to Georgia. When we put this type of Bill together, we must be careful not to drive more industry and equity capital out of the country. We have lost billions of dollars since 1977. I stated in the House on Friday that we lost some $40.5 billion. I think the figure is $47.8 billion of equity capital that has left Canada, and in turn Canada has had to borrow foreign capital to the extent of almost $100 billion to keep covering the deficit.

This Bill addresses subsidized exports. It addresses situations where other countries, in order to create an industrial base, do the entire financing, not only for the building but for all the equipment and the working capital. We cannot go that far but that is what we have to compete against. Let us look at what happens when we have to go to the capital markets and borrow money at current rates which at the moment for medium industries are 13.5 per cent to 14 per cent. We have to compete with zero interest rates. Now how can we do that? The United States has certain programs that provide for minimal interest rates to companies that borrow, which rates are in effect until production is at full volume. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, we have to compete against different plans in different countries. In the Bill it states that this will be taken into consideration. The words are: "Subsidies and Countervailing Duties should be taken into account by the Tribunal. Notice that the words "should be" are used. Those words should be "will be". Otherwise how do we protect Canadian industry?

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) mentioned hog bristles. When he talked about that I thought about the petro-chemical industry. The Chinese are probably wiser than we are. Chinese sell hog bristles at an extremely high price. Hog bristles are a raw material. This allows the Chinese to fill the hog bristle brush market with China's own manufactured products. How does this relate to the petro-chemical industry? On Friday, the Minister announced a great plan to save the Canadian petro-chemical industry. He has offered to provide loans to the petro-chemical industry in order for people to convert their process from oil to natural gas and natural gas liquids. What value have loans got unless you bring down the cost of the raw material to a level competitive with other trading partners? Why not remove the taxes from natural gas and natural gas liquids in order to be competitive? But we throw money out the window when we say: "We will give loans, guarantees and grants". Why create an industry when you have a surplus of raw material? Why not bring the price of that raw material down to a level which will enable us to compete? Why can we not use some ingenuity so we can export a finished product from one of our natural resources?

We have iron ore. The supply is diminishing at economical prices. Why should we ship iron ore out of the country at minimal cost and in turn buy steel from foreign suppliers? Perhaps we should protect the price of the base material. We have to do something to protect our industries.

I would like to address the steel industry. Dofasco is probably one of the finest steel companies in the world. Dofasco is so advanced in technology that its productivity equals that of any corporation in the entire world. Dofasco reinvests its profits and its cash in research and development. Dofasco continuously brings in Japanese engineers to the plant. People at Dofasco continuously check with other people elsewhere in the world to make certain that it has the highest level of productivity of any steel company in the world. If it is faced with competition because we have not done our job against dumping, that is wrong.

Stelco has built an entire new complex. It is probably the ultimate in new technology. The money that went into that complex was not in the form of grants, it was not in the form of interest-free loans, it was money earned and raised in debt by the corporation to bring up the standard to world-class level. We have industries at world-class level that must be protected.

About a year and a half ago several of our steel companies imported steel plate that would have hurt Algoma Steel. Algoma is a smaller corporation located in northern Ontario. It creates employment for an important part of our population. Fortunately, the Anti-dumping Tribunal jumped in and imposed a penalty on the people who imported the product. I spoke to a gentleman involved. He said: "I am delighted I have to pay that additional duty. It is wrong that I, as an importer, should be able to bring a product into Canada, similar to a product made in Canada, at distress prices."

We must also look at finished products. I hope they will conduct an analysis of products from Pacific Rim countries and from Third World countries. Grants will be provided from Canada to some of these countries at no cost to them. If we start importing products from those countries for moneys which we have given them, again Canadian citizens will be subjected to an inequity. Not only will they face the inequity of giving money to other countries for which there is no return, but people will be driven out of work because those countries can compete and undercut our costs. This is a serious matter.

Free trade is fine, but what is free trade? No one has answered this question. I have not found an economist in Canada who can tell me what free trade is. Furthermore, economists never talk about the profits of corporations when they refer to what will happen in the economy. Free trade is no longer free because non-tariff barriers have been put in place by every country in the world. Non-tariff barriers are either subsidies or financing at zero cost. Other countries are aware of the importance of creating jobs. They are much more aware than Canada. If we were concerned about creating jobs, our trade would not have dropped to 50 per cent of Japan's trade today when we exceeded that of Japan in 1968.

We are trying to put teeth into our border. We are trying to put teeth into our duties. However, I am nervous that we do not have the expertise to analyse the costs which have been incurred by other countries. We must bring in experts from the private sector. They are the ones who will be affected. Public servants who have not manufactured a piece of steel do not know how to assess what goes into a piece of steel. Philosophically they know, but they do not know the hard facts concerning the comparison of products.

What about the Pony? A great many of them are coming into Canada from Korea. I should like to know the costing which permits the sale of a product in this country at about 30 per cent less than we can produce it. My friends to the left will say that it is because large bonuses were paid to executives of automobile manufacturers. That would not add a dollar per car. I do not agree with the executives taking those funds. It was greed on their part and it was the wrong time to do it. However, how do we know the true costs involved in the manufacture of those vehicles?

Let us look at what happened just recently in terms of our lumber exports to the United States. In effect, the Americans were extremely fair to us at the time. There had been a great deal of subsidization of the lumber industry to upgrade its facilities so that our productivity level would be higher than that of others. The Americans were right in looking at it but they were fair to us. They are our biggest trading partner and we must protect that. We must look at the products of other countries which are coming into Canada on an equal basis, as they look at ours. We should not attack Canada, we should defend it.

I was concerned as a result of committee consideration that the Tariff Board was to be empowered to review decisions made by the Anti-dumping Tribunal. However, that was not permitted. Interested parties may make representations, but we wanted someone else in there as a doublecheck. We do not have checks and balances in this country. We need a doublecheck to ensure that the system is equitable both to consumers and to manufacturers. Let us not only think of consumers. Manufacturers create jobs. When there are two million people unemployed in the country, that is our major concern. Possibly that is the reason this Bill sat for two years in the Department and nothing was done about it. Perhaps it was because unemployment levels had not reached the critical level of today.

In terms of the capital goods sector, we recommended further study of the innate problems of that sector. A little was done but not enough. Why are we not the major manufacturers of mining equipment? We were very progressive in mining in the 1930s, 1940s and 1950s. We used to produce a great deal of the mining equipment required in Canada. Now we import more than we produce.

Also we recommended that the role of current import agencies be examined in relation to one another. This was not acted upon. We should review the agencies importing these products. We should review the deals in which they are involved under the table. We should review state to state deals which are being made. We must review products from steel mills in Japan, for example, which came into the country from Houston. This pipe was going into Houston and filtering through to Calgary at a cost which was a third less than the price for which Phoenix Tube could make it in Saskatoon.

Whether the Tribunal will catch up with all the slips in the market is a big question, but we must at least start. This Bill is nothing but a start. It should be reviewed by the Finance Committee at least every six months because of the tricks which are being pulled on us and because the possibility of creating pure fair trade in the world is important.

These are difficult times for Canadians. These are difficult times for unemployed Canadians. This Bill could have a direct impact upon many lives in the country. This Bill could assist Canada, but it would be only one spoke in the wheel. It could help Canada to get from its pathetic trading position now back to its trading position of 1968. We must put an economic policy in place which will bring out the entrepreneurial spirit. If we do, at least it would be in place to protect Canadian citizens who undertook risks and created jobs. We must be careful that the Bill is not directed against our major trading partners, those who buy a great deal from us. We must ensure that the Bill only addresses those countries which are unfair or are not dealing with us in an equitable way. Hopefully, in the future the words "free trade" will become meaningful.

Mr. Speaker: It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY ON FARMERS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express the hurt, frustration, and anger of many thousands of family farmers at the boast of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that Canadians now pay 12 per cent of their disposal income for food as compared to 16 per cent when the present Liberal Party came to power. As a result of the Liberal cheap food policy, Canada has lost tens of thousands of family farmers. Their net incomes have dropped dramatically. Over 50 per cent of our family farmers must work off the farm in order to sustain their families and to remain on the land.

The Liberal Party's cheap food policy benefits consumers in the short run, but when the Liberals have destroyed the family farmer, consumers will pay, pay, pay. It need not happen.

THE ADMINISTRATION

SWEARING IN OF NEW CABINET—CLOSED TO TELEVISION CAMERAS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, by barring the media from Saturday's swearing in ceremony of the new Cabinet, Canada's new temporary Prime Minister has given the Canadian people a clear indication that the Liberal Party has not changed one iota in form or substance.

Closed door swearing in ceremonies are a throwback to yesterday, from whence the temporary Prime Minister comes. What is so secret about a swearing in ceremony? The temporary Prime Minister replies: "I thought I would do it in a business like way." That may be the way the temporary Prime Minister did business yesterday as a director of CPR, but it will not wash on Main Street.

It is obvious that the real reason the temporary Prime Minister wants a closed door meeting is because there is no real change. The Ministers of Transport, Treasury Board, Labour and International Trade, who brought Canada high record interest rates, unemployment, and bankruptcies, are still running the store, and the temporary Prime Minister has not changed a thing. As the Minister of Energy can testify, the same backroom gang are in charge. Nothing has changed. The temporary Prime Minister just wants to hide it from the Canadian people.

FISHERIES

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED PACIFIC FISHERY LEGISLATION

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a telegram from the Mayor of Ucluelet, a community in my riding which is dependent upon the fishing industry and tourism. He asked me, on behalf of the community, to do everything I can to stop the proposed Pacific salmon fisheries legislation from passing before his community and others have an opportunity to assess the impact. It is clear to Mayor Larson, and it is clear to me, that the impact will be devastating. The proposals outlined in the draft legislation to restructure the Pacific fishery would wreak havoc on the West Coast. Coastal communities sense this, and so do fishermen. Yesterday some 1,500 fishermen tied up their boats in Port Alberni as a demonstration against the Government's proposals and its inability to manage the West Coast fishery.

Fishermen, coastal communities, native leaders, and all others in B.C. who are concerned about the future of our salmon stocks, are angry that the Government's proposals do not address in any substantial way any measures to increase salmon stocks. This proposed legislation does little more than ensure the financial ruin of fishermen.

If the Government continues with its present approach, it will lead not only to the gutting of the commercial fleet and the loss of thousands of jobs, but it will also lead to the eventual closure of the sports fishery and have serious impact on the native food fishery. Many coastal communities may not be able to survive. If the Government is serious about conservation and restoration of our salmon stocks, it should introduce buy-back legislation which is acceptable to most, and allow the rest of its proposals adequate scrutiny, as is being demanded.

THE PAPACY

SCHEDULED VISIT OF HIS HOLINESS THE POPE TO FORT SIMPSON, N.W.T.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has invited His Holiness the Pope to make a state visit to Fort Simpson, Northwest Territories. Fort Simpson is a village with a population of less than 1,000. It may well experience an influx of up to 50,000 souls at that time. The planning committee estimates local expenses, not otherwise covered, will amount to about half a million dollars. Obviously Fort Simpson is unable to come up with this large amount of money, and such expenses should be borne by Canada.

The Department of External Affairs will not pay and says it is the responsibility of Indian Affairs. Indian Affairs will not pay and says it is the responsibility of External Affairs or of the Canadian Council of Catholic Bishops. Everyone is passing the buck. The situation is getting desperate. If the Government cannot decide which Department is to provide the funds, the Papal visit to Fort Simpson may well end in a fiasco.

TOURISM

STATE OF INDUSTRY—CALL FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, for the past several months the Members in this House have heard the Government pumping itself up for the wonderful state of the economy. Perhaps these same people would care to tell us why a shocking 50 per cent of Canadians do not take an annual vacation. I doubt that half of the families in this country forgo a holiday by choice. More likely, they cannot afford to travel during their leisure time. The Government has dealt Canadians a real double whammy. On the one hand it has taken away the right of Canadians to enjoy vacations. On the other hand it has crippled our tourist industry without batting an eye.

Ten years ago Canada enjoyed 4.2 per cent of the international travel market. Now, due chiefly to government waffling and languid lip service, our share has plummeted to 2.6 per cent. The Government is hurting itself. It appears to be bending over backwards to slap its own behind. Instead, it should be hard selling Canadian vacations to the people who live here. The systems are already in place to accommodate vacationing Canadians. The only road block is the Government itself.

PROPOSED FLAT TAX RATE

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I was disturbed to learn this weekend that the Liberal Government is toying with the notion of a flat tax that would tax every Canadian taxpayer at the same rate, regardless of income. In considering the flat tax proposal the Government has to share the stage with such notables as the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), and Peter Pocklington, one of the more outrageous contenders for the Tory leadership last year.

It is not hard to tell what a flat tax would do to Canada. It would attack what little fairness there is in our tax system by taking more tax from the poor and taking less tax from the rich. Even that ultra right wing think tank on the West Coast admits that.

At a flat rate of a little more than 19 per cent, people who earn between $5,000 and $15,000 a year would pay on average $176 more in income tax. Those Canadians who make more than $200,000 would pay $37,000 less in income tax. It should not surprise anyone that the people who would be hardest hit by this notion would be the elderly poor because they have little chance of increasing their income in the future and taking advantage of the tax saving that goes with it.

Proponents believe a flat income tax rate is good because it would leave money in the hands of the rich and they know what to do with that money to stimulate the economy. That sounds like a pretty thin excuse for a major tax grab on behalf of Canada's richest citizens. The notion of a flat earth was relegated to the trash bin of history centuries ago. The flat tax proposal deserves nothing less than the same fate.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REDRESS URGED FOR VICTIMS OF VIOLENT CRIME

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Jerry Amernic, author of "Victims: The Orphans of Justice", and four Ottawa parents of murdered children, made some important points at a press conference about our national criminal justice system. Let me repeat only two of the many points which they made.

First, the federal-provincial criminal justice system now spends about $4 billion yearly on policing, judging, jailing, et cetera, but only $12 million on compensating victims.

Second, the present mandatory supervision scheme, which incidentally, as one of the group pointed out, was brought in by the new Leader of the Liberal Party when he was Minister of Justice as Bill C-150 in 1969, remains a societal time bomb. A recent Solicitor General's study showed that of 15,000 prisoners pre-released on MS between 1974 and 1979, fully 5,300 were released directly from maximum security. In other words, they were not considered safe enough to be in the normal prison population, but by operation of law were released before completing their court awarded sentences, to the public.

The most current figures available indicate that fully 2.8 million Criminal Code offences were reported across Canada during calendar 1981. Far too many of them involved violence and innocent victims. Despite, for example, the fact that the Liberal Government has denied even a tax registration number to all of the victims' groups across the land, the hour for redress for victims has arrived. I believe a Mulroney Government would show a great deal more concern both about crime victims and the protection of the public—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

AN INDEPENDENT MEMBER'S REFLECTIONS

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, this is a week of reflection for each of us in this Chamber. The future is uncertain, but the past is known. For me, the last five years have been memorable. I have had the privilege of occupying a chair in three of the four back corners of this Chamber. From these three prominent corners I have had my say, and represented my constituents and the nation to the best of my ability.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yurko: What a rare privilege it has been to occupy a chair in this place—even a corner chair. Where else in all of Canada could one embrace centuries of democratic evolution? Where else could one feel the searing fire of man's vanity, or the cold winds of deception and hypocrisy; where illusion becomes reality and where silence is the greatest sin? Yet is this not a place where truth triumphs, where reason is fundamental, and where justice is supreme? It is so, and it will continue to be so.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, it has been a privilege and an incomparable gift to toil herein for the last five years. I want to say thanks to all who gave me the opportunity to sit here.

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE ADMINISTRATION

COMPOSITION OF FORTHCOMING CABINET

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, from watching CTV network television last night we learned that yesterday's man is about to appoint a Cabinet. The cornerstone of that Cabinet will be four regional Ministers, Axworthy, Regan, Gray, and Ouellet. Taking the first initials of those four names and putting them together—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that he should not refer to individual Members of this House by name but by constituency.

Mr. Hawkes: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I simply could not resist mentioning the fact that, put together, the first initials of those names spell Argo. All of us in this country know about the record of the Argos. We know that yesterday's man was an undying loyalist to the Argo cause. We know that there is a great deal of hope in Toronto that this year's Argo team will be better. However, those of us in the rest of the country know and understand that record and what it means for our country.

We would have felt a lot better if we had heard news of a Cabinet with a track record of success in creating jobs rather than success in dispensing patronage. That is the difference between the Conservatives and the Liberals. We believe in jobs; Liberal Members believe in patronage. Yesterday's man is proving that.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL TASK FORCE REPORT—GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, on Friday afternoon the Minister responsible for the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion presented his report in answer to the report of the petrochemical task force. I read through that report a number of times on Friday afternoon as I was sitting in the House of Commons and found that the more I read the less I could find.

The report presented by the Minister is hollow and does not provide the information the petrochemical industry needs. A 9 per cent reduction in the price of natural gas was mentioned. That reduction would only apply to a brand new ammonia gas plant that would get an 8.8 per cent reduction in price. For the rest of the petrochemical industry, that reduction would be 2.2 per cent.

The Minister has indicated that he will provide financing with guaranteed loans or some other form of financing. He does not even tell us what form that financing would take. He has indicated that he will provide financing, but to provide financing when the raw material is not available at a competitive price is the most ridiculous thing any Government could do.

If the Government is to do something for the petrochemical industry, it should first remove the taxes from the natural gas liquids and natural gas so we can change over from oil to the lighter fuel gas liquids.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time, unfortunately, has expired.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

RECOMMENDED APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SUBCOMMITTEE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, one of the key recommendations that the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped included in its report entitled Obstacles was that the Cabinet should appoint a Minister responsible to disabled persons, who would act as a form of policeman within Cabinet to ensure that Cabinet made every attempt to implement the recommendations made in that report. A Minister was appointed to such a position and, to be quite frank, the results have not been as positive as we would have hoped. As a result of that, many of the groups that were affected by that report have recommended to the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that a subcommittee of a Standing Committee should be established so that these groups could have a sounding board to which they could speak.

From rumours and speculation that abound, I am extremely concerned that the new Prime Minister of Canada who will be appointed on Saturday will have a reduced Cabinet. In all likelihood the Minister who the disabled and handicapped had hoped would be a force in implementing recommendations of the task force will no longer hold that position on Sunday. Therefore it becomes extremely important for the Government and the House to consider establishing a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Communications to deal with the issues affecting the disabled.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance, one of the three or four Ministers who is present here today. It has now been 10 days since Mr. Turner became the new Leader of the Liberal Party. It has not been 10 days that shook the world, for the world has not shaken. However, Canadian economic conditions continue to worsen. The dollar closed yesterday at 76.14 U.S.

The U.S. prime bank rate has just risen to 13 per cent. The Canadian prime rate is at 12.5 per cent. We are told it is expected that interest rates in the United States will rise another 1 per cent to 2 per cent in the next few months. Is the Government going to permit Canadian interest rates to continue to go upward even though we have a faltering, barely discernible and barely perceptible recovery? If the Government continues to say it has no option but to allow interest rates to rise because of the falling dollar and rising U.S. interest rates, will the Minister recommend to the Government that an election be called so that the Canadian people can exercise their option, which is the PC Party of this country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that an election will be called in due time. However, I must say that if I were a member of the Conservative Party I would not hope for such a day. I am sure that once the Canadian public sees what the alternative is, the PC Party will indeed be dramatically rejected if only for the good reason that on the very issues raised by the Hon. Member, members of the Conservative Party keep contradicting themselves. In particular, the Hon. Member for St. John's West and his own Leader have done so.

The Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party said on television on Sunday: "Let the dollar go down," and at about the same time the Hon. Member for St. John's West was speaking on a radio program and said: "You cannot let the dollar go down". Before speaking of alternatives, I would hope that the Hon. Member for St. John's West would first sit down, if he still cares to sit down, with his Leader, and reconcile their contradictory views.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is responsible for the alleged financial policy of the Government and now has the power to do something about the economy. He is failing to do anything so we have the worst of all worlds. We have a falling dollar and increasing interest rates, and that situation has existed during the Minister's entire term of office.

EFFECT OF INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Turner dollar is no better than the Trudeau dollar. They are both falling to the ground. There has been no change, and there is no confidence in Mr. Turner.

At page 15 of the Budget of February 15, the Minister of Finance said this:

> If nominal and real rates of interest were to rise significantly from current levels, the recovery itself could be at risk over the medium term.

Interest rates were then at 11 per cent. They are now at 12.5 per cent, and are heading higher. Does the Minister therefore agree that the recovery itself is now at risk because of the interest rates? Will he permit those rates to go higher and doom the recovery altogether? He is in power and has the responsibility. What does he intend to do?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, to begin with, I find it rather strange that the Hon. Member would try to blame the new Leader of the Liberal Party, who will be the next outstanding Prime Minister, for the rise in interest rates in the United States. He referred to 13 per cent in the U.S. Surely that is not something for which Canada can be held responsible, or can do much about. I would not try to argue that the visit of the Hon. Member's Leader to Washington had an impact on the increase in interest rates in the United States.

I would remind my hon. friend that the Canadian dollar has gone down vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar, for example, since June 20 by 0.9 per cent, the same percentage as the German Deutschmark; it has gone down less than the Swiss franc, the British pound sterling, the Japanese yen, and the French franc. The Canadian dollar has behaved quite well vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar when compared with the other major currencies with which it must be compared.

These factors result from higher interest rates in the United States and speculative moves in terms of the displacement of capital resulting from those higher interest rates. Again I would remind my hon. friend, as he stated in his question, that the prime rate in Canada today is still half a point lower than it is in the United States. Our policy is to keep the rate of interest as low as we can while ensuring that there will be no speculation against the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Crosbie: The Minister of Finance has stated that there is nothing much Canada can do about this situation. That is where we differ. We think Canada can do a lot about it, and we will do something about it. We will have lower interest rates when we form the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR ECONOMIC FORECASTS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the despairing Minister of Finance who can do nothing. The Minister met Mr. Turner yesterday and apparently gave him new economic forecasts. Will he tell the House what are those economic forecasts, and will he make an economic statement in this House, give the House new economic forecasts and a plan of action before we adjourn on June 29, or will he continue his "do nothing" attitude of despair that dooms the people of Canada to unemployment and lack of economic growth?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, far from a "do nothing approach", this Government has been very active in terms of attempting to promote growth and in terms of ensuring that interest rates will remain as low as possible. For instance, I would remind my hon. friend that, on the basis of the growth of the economy in the first quarter, the projected growth for this year would still be 4.4 per cent—

Mr. Crosbie: 3.2 per cent.

Mr. Lalonde: It is 4.4 per cent on a year over year basis. I would invite my hon. friend to look at that.

As far as interest rates are concerned, I would tell my hon. friend that in Canada we have a policy which has succeeded in achieving a lower rate of interest than that of the United States. That is a record which was not achieved in the short period when the Hon. Member was the Minister of Finance. I am sure it will not be achieved as long as the Hon. Member contradicts his own Leader on what they should do with interest rates.

With respect to the last point raised by the Hon. Member, I did not provide Mr. Turner with forecasts yesterday.

LONG-TERM POLICIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. I would remind him that he should not be so very pleased with the performance in Canada. It was 3.2 per cent against 9.7 per cent for the comparable period in the United States. That is performance?

The only action with which the Minister has responded against the weak dollar is a short-term policy which will prop up the dollar with high interest rates. I would remind him that it is not a short-term problem. It is a problem which has been going on since 1977 when our dollar was $1.03. It is now 76 cents. I would ask the Minister, in face of this and in face of the need for a long-term recovery program which would re-establish strength in the Canadian economy and would give fundamental strength to the Canadian dollar, when will he bring in a policy of long-term growth and not just short-term propping up?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to compare figures with the United States he will have to accept the figure of 4.4 per cent which I have mentioned. I would invite him to check his facts and consult his advisers in that regard.

As to the issue of providing long-term policies and long-term approaches—indeed, medium and long-term—that was the basic approach contained in the last two Budgets. They have produced good results for the Canadian economy, and are continuing to produce good results. We are not going to put ourselves into the situation of inventing short cuts which will damage the Canadian economy. We have adopted medium and long-term measures which are producing results.

At the same time we have taken steps to help those most in need in this country, whether it was the $50 increase of GIS which was recently approved by the House, whether it was the $4.8 billion worth of incentives contained in the recovery program and which is being spent at the present time, or whether it is the billions of dollars being spent in the Department of Employment and Immigration for training and direct job-creation. This Government has put forward a combination of short-term, medium-term, and long-term measures to ensure that the economy will be able to compete with the rest of the world and will be one of the most efficient economies in the industrial world. That is what we are working toward. That is what we are achieving. I recognize that it will take longer than I wish, and longer than the Hon. Member wishes. But, indeed, we are working on the basis of medium and long-term measures which will be helpful to our economy.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is making my point for me. Canadians have been waiting for 20 years for performance from this Government. We have seen the result of this in an 11.7 per cent unemployment rate, against 7.5 per cent in the United States, and a growth rate in the economy in the first quarter of this year of 9.7 per cent in the U.S. against 3.2 per cent in Canada. We must do better.

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the subject of the Canadian dollar. Canadians are seeing the cost of the low dollar in their food, vacations, cars which they buy from abroad, clothing, television sets, gasoline, and virtually everything. The cost of financing the Government's borrowing overseas has increased over $1 billion as a result of the recent decline in the dollar. Does the Minister regard the current exchange crisis with a sense of urgency? Is he determined to bring in policies which will attack the situation, or are we going to see a long drift through this summer in which nothing will happen and the dollar will go as low as 70 cents or 75 cents?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I refuse to talk about an exchange crisis. As I have mentioned, the Canadian dollar has gone down vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar at the same level as the German Deutschmark. It has gone down less than the currencies of all the other main industrial countries, whether it be Britain, Switzerland, France or Japan. If the Hon. Member would look over a longer period he would find that the Canadian dollar, rather than falling against those other currencies, has increased in value against those currencies in the last year or two.

One of the problems which many exporters have mentioned to me was the difficulty they had in penetrating European and other markets where they were in competition with European and Japanese products because the Canadian dollar was relatively strong against those currencies. They had great difficulty penetrating those markets because the Canadian dollar was stronger than those of other countries, both in their domestic markets and in their export markets. The Hon. Member should bear that in mind. He should not only consider the relationship between the Canadian dollar and the U.S. dollar, but the relationship between the Canadian dollar and all the other currencies. If he looks at other currencies he will find that indeed the Canadian dollar has gained strength over the last several years.

As far as the comment of waiting for 20 years is concerned, my hon. friend should know that during the last 16 years this country has created more jobs proportionately than any other industrialized country. That is what we have done. This country has known, as an average, a higher rate of growth than the other industrialized countries, except Japan, over the last 16 years. This is what has happened in this country during that period. Rather than disparaging this record we should, as a country, be proud when one looks objectively at what has been done here.

Mr. Crosby: Tell the jobless.

Mr. Lalonde: And that has not been done by constantly moaning and complaining.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—REQUEST FOR NEW MEASURES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As he knows, the Canadian banks increased the interest rate on Friday, and the American banks followed again yesterday by increasing their rates. This means that the vicious cycle will continue, which will create a loss of jobs in this country and destroy a lot of our small farmers, as well as make things difficult for home owners and small business. Can the Minister of Finance put rhetoric aside for a moment and tell the House whether he is even considering any new ideas or approaches in order to bring interest rates down? Or is the Minister content to do like the Leader of the Official Opposition and cuddle up to Ronald Reagan in the White House, and his policies?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, of course I am always ready to examine alternatives, suggestions, and views, and weigh their positive as well as negative elements to see whether it would be to the benefit of the Canadian economy to adopt this or that particular step. If the Hon. Member has particular proposals to put forward, I will certainly be happy to look at them. As a matter of fact I have examined a very large number of suggestions over the last several months. The Hon. Member should realize that although interest rates have been rising in the last couple of months, the fact is that we in this country have been able to keep our interest rates lower than in the United States. That is already quite an achievement and one the Hon. Member should recognize.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE SPECULATORS' TAX

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has said he is willing to consider new ideas. Because of the fact that speculators are now sending a lot of money to the United States which is, of course, hurting our dollar, driving up inflation and hurting jobs in this country, would the Minister be willing to consider the possibility of a new speculators' tax, which would be a tax on the difference between the rate in the United States and a much lower made-in-Canada interest rate? I wonder if the Minister would consider that as a new idea which would keep Canadian money in Canada for investment in Canadian jobs.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have already considered that idea, as a matter of fact, and I have found it an idea which is wanting in many respects. It would have more negative elements in it than positive, and I have rejected it.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that all the Minister is doing by rejecting new ideas is putting more gasoline on the fire. When polluters pollute the environment, they are often taxed in order to clean it up. I wonder why this Minister will turn down a new idea or a new policy which would tax the economic looters of this country? Why turn down the idea of a tax on speculators who are shipping money out of this country and hurting the Canadian economy? A tax on the difference between the American rate and a lower made-in-Canada rate—why not?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt the honesty of the Hon. Member and his genuine concern in asking the question. However, I would at least say that he is very naive to assume that a scheme could be developed whereby you could differentiate the dollars and say: "This dollar is speculative. This dollar is a real transfer. This dollar should stay in Canada, and this dollar is allowed to go out without a tax". I believe what he is inventing may be an idea. I have no objection to the Hon. Member having an idea. However, if the Hon. Member talks about pollution, that one is a real polluted idea because it would require probably two million or three million public servants checking every transaction to find out which one is speculative and which one is not.

I invite my hon. friend to reflect a little on how much confidence this would inject into the Canadian economy on the part of foreign investors who want to come into this country and who are going to start wondering whether they will be able to take their money back without having to pay some kind of tax along the lines which the Hon. Member is talking. Surely this is not a very realistic idea. I invite him to keep working. He will get a better idea.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION FROM TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

Mr. Speaker: I would like to call the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of a delegation of parliamentarians from Trinidad and Tobago, led by Senator Carlton Alert.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—REFUSAL TO ISSUE EXIT VISAS TO REUNITE FAMILIES

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Hon. Member for Niagara Falls, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre, Senator Yuzyk, Senator Haidasz, and I have just returned from a two-hour meeting with the Polish ambassador regarding the three Polish hunger strikers in front of the Polish Consulate in Etobicoke. The ambassador urged our delegation to convince the strikers to end the strike, and for every day the strike is ended it will be to the strikers' advantage. You can put your own interpretation on that bottom line, Mr. Speaker.

To prevent similar strikes from taking place across Canada, and to assist the reunification of all families divided between Poland and Canada, would the Secretary of State agree to meet with the Polish ambassador as soon as possible to help end this strike and to set up some sort of guidelines for speeding up the reunification of these divided families between Canada and Poland?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have had a continuing series of consultations with the Polish authorities, one taking place as recently as yesterday. I am pleased to learn that the Hon. Member and other parliamentarians have met today with the Polish ambassador, because I am proposing to have a meeting with him on the same subject this afternoon, shortly after three o'clock. I hope that I will be able to reinforce the concerns which the parliamentarians have expressed to the ambassador earlier in the day. Our object is to attempt to reach a speedy resolution of these humanitarian cases, and to avoid a repetition in the future.

REQUEST THAT ASSISTANCE OF HELSINKI ACCORD SIGNATORIES BE SOUGHT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the previous question to the same Minister, since I was at the eleven o'clock session and not at the one o'clock session. Will the Minister tell us now whether he has given consideration to the request made to him earlier by the Hon. Member for Rosedale to the effect that the signatories to the Helsinki Accord should all be encouraged collectively to make their views known on this issue to the Polish Government? And will the Minister in fact say to the Polish ambassador this afternoon that he supports the proposal that the Helsinki group meet to resolve these issues, since part of the problem is that the Polish Government is a signatory to the Helsinki Accord but, notwithstanding that fact, believes it has the right to keep people within that country who wish to leave and join their families in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a suggestion which was made. I found it an interesting suggestion, considered it, and decided that it would not be helpful to ask a large group of countries to join Canada in dealing with the family reunification cases affecting our country. The reason I did so was because, as the Hon. Member knows, the Polish record on family reunification is a record which is quite sensitive to Canadian representations. Of all the Eastern European countries, the Polish Government has responded most sympathetically. For example, in 1983 some 1,900 persons, permitted exit from Poland for the most part through normal immigration procedures, were reunited with their families in Canada.

I believe the Polish Government has been attempting to respond to our concerns, and I feel a bilateral approach is likely to achieve better results. However, I do appreciate the suggestion which was made by the colleague of the Hon. Member.

POSSIBLE REACTION OF POLISH AUTHORITIES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's words. I would ask him this supplementary question. The Minister will know that there is some apparent view on the part of the Polish Government that no action will be taken with regard to any families who are involved in a hunger strike, but in fact there may be a new regulation which suggests that people who have been involved in a hunger strike will have the applications for their families delayed. Will the Minister tell this House what he proposes to do or say to the Polish Government should it refuse to allow the families of the hunger strikers to come to Canada?

● (1440)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is the attitude of the Polish Government. Certainly with respect to at least two of the cases, their attitude is not a firm refusal. I think they would prefer to see a termination of the hunger strikes so as not to be put in a position of rewarding strikes which are undertaken, understandably, while cases are being examined by their authorities. They have said in this case that they would be prepared, if the hunger strikes ceased, to give consideration to providing the exit permits at a specific time in the future. I would like to discuss that with the Polish ambassador, and I hope to persuade him to take a more sympathetic approach to the humanitarian aspects of these cases.

THE ECONOMY

IMPACT OF INTEREST RATES—COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Finance indicate whether, in his review of the interest rate structure in Canada and its interrelationship with American rates, he has discovered the fact that an American rate of 12 per cent has roughly half the impact on the consumer in the U.S., because of interest deductibility, compared to that in Canada? He will bear in mind that, if you have a 33 per cent tax level, a 12 per cent rate in the U.S. is equal to 8 per cent here, but you have to get 18 per cent here to equal that 12 per cent in the U.S.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all I may remind the Hon. Member that the preferred lending rate offered by banks in the United States is now 13 per cent and not 12 per cent as the Hon. Member is claiming.

Second, he is referring to differences between the tax rates or tax systems in Canada and the United States. There are obviously many differences between the tax systems in our two countries. The Hon. Member is aware of that. For instance, he ought to know that in Canada, Medicare is provided free to the general public, and is paid for through taxes, with premiums is some provinces, while in the United States, one has to take out private medical insurance. There are many differences between the tax systems in our two countries. All I can say is that right now, interest rates in Canada are still one-half point lower for the consumer than they are in the United States.

[English]

INTEREST TAX DEDUCTIBILITY

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Minister got his cards mixed up. He gave me the answer the bureaucrats gave him as a response to a tax question. My question is simply this. Has he looked into the impact of interest deductibility in the U.S. and the lack of it in this country, which means Americans feel half the impact of the high interest rates he is locking into, compared to Canadians? That in turn has dampened our recovery and buoyed the recovery in the United States?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, once again, that is not what I heard from my bureaucrats. I informed the Hon. Member very clearly that there are differences between the tax systems in Canada and the United States. The Hon. Member referred to interest deductibility. This deductibility applies in certain cases to mortgages, but, generally speaking, does not apply in the United States the same way as it does in Canada. There is also interest deductibility on investments. In Canada, we have interest deductibility on the investments we make. In some cases, for instance in business investments, and so forth, we have the same kind of interest deductibility they have in the United States. I would urge my hon. colleague to take a closer look at this matter or to at least allow for the differences in various areas. He will then realize that in some cases, the situation is the same, and in other cases it is different, in Canada and the United States.

HOUSING

SOCIAL HOUSING UNITS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. He knows from the annual CMHC reports that his Government has cut the number of social housing units it funds by over 17 per cent in the last three years. That means that public housing, rental, native, rural, rent supplement, public and private non-profit, and co-operative housing have been cut from over 31,000 units in 1980 to less than 26,000 in 1983, with further cuts projected for 1984.

Does the Minister recognize that cities such as Toronto and Vancouver are reporting that the number of people seeking food handouts has doubled or tripled in a year because of the number of them who have to pay double or triple rent on scarce housing? Will he reverse his policy of cutting the social housing commitments, and fund a total of 50,000 units for 1984?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the problem with the Hon. Member's question is that it is a based on a whole series of distortions of fact. He knows, because I have answered this question at least twice, that we borrowed units from future years in the social housing program in order to create some economic activity in the years 1981, 1982, and 1983. It was understood all along that there would be a gradual readjustment. If the Hon. Member persists in repeating what is not factual, I cannot do anything but say that I hope he at least listened to the answers given previously.

TORONTO SITUATION AFFECTING LOW INCOME TENANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Minister to recognize not some program established five years ago which he talks about borrowing from, but the need of the people in Canada today. Will he recognize, for example, the brief presented to the CMHC in April which shows that over 50,000 units of limited dividend housing, 14,000 in Toronto alone, may be lost to low income tenants during the next year or two because the owners, who built them with a public subsidy in return for guaranteeing limited rents and space for low income tenants, are now becoming free to sell them at inflated prices? This will wipe out the low rentals available to over 50,000 tenants. Will the Minister, recognizing that some of these owners have already begun selling these units, act now by Order in Council, or legislation, as appropriate, to protect the remaining low income, limited dividend units, for low income tenants?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to act in the future; I have acted in the past. On those limited dividend units units built before 1968, which might have been sold, I issued the order that they should not be sold. Those that were built in 1968 and thereafter, I am told by my legal advisers that under the contract that was signed I have no authority to prevent their sale when the terms of the contract are fulfilled.

Mr. Heap: You can break a union contract.

DISASTERS

WEATHER DAMAGE SUFFERED BY MANITOBA FARMERS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council who has the responsibility for Emergency Planning Canada. A very serious situation exists in urban and agricultural areas of Manitoba. Because of severe weather conditions there has been serious flooding of Manitoba farmland, as well as of basements in Winnipeg. Has the Minister received, through Emergency Planning Canada, a request from the Government of Manitoba for financial assistance for this important part of the country? Is Emergency Planning Canada going to respond in a positive way, because a storm hit Manitoba for the fourth time last night?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe at this stage we have received a request from the Province of Manitoba, but I will look into the matter. I can assure the Hon. Member that, following this natural disaster, we have a program called the Disaster Financial Assistance Program and I will make sure that, if we have the proper request from the Province, the program will apply and co-operation will be given those who are looking into the matter in Manitoba. In other words, I want to assure the Hon. Member of the co-operation of Emergency Planning Canada the minute we have received a request from the Province.

DAMAGE TO BUILDINGS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer. It is not only water in the basements that is the problem. Farm buildings have been destroyed and the mud and water have backed up in places to about waist high. Therefore will the Minister look into it to see if Manitoba can receive the maximum amount of funding?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Of course, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows well that under this program there are thresholds that have to be met. This depends on the population of the province where the disaster occurred, as well as on the amount of damage. I will ensure that the minute we receive a request we will respect that threshold and allow Manitoba to get the maximum provided for by this financial program.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I have a very serious question for the Minister of Agriculture, who just ducked out. I believe his Parliamentary Secretary ducked out after him. If I may, I will hold until he returns.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for South Shore.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I will have to wait until he returns.

PENITENTIARIES

HOMICIDE AT EDMONTON MAXIMUM SECURITY INSTITUTION

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. He is no doubt aware of the latest incident at the Edmonton Maximum Security Institution where there was a homicide. Would the Minister finally consent to an external inquiry into the many difficulties which this institution has experienced over the last year and one-half in order that we may have an outside view, rather than an internal inquiry as we have had in the past?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that an external inquiry is required in the situation at Edmonton Maximum Security Institute. I am concerned about these incidents. All of the incidents which have occurred have been followed up by an Inspector General's investigation. Where it was appropriate, the local police were called in to see whether charges should be laid against anyone in the circumstances. I just do not see circumstances there which justify an outside inquiry.

On the other hand, I would remind the Hon. Member that there is an excellent citizens' advisory committee at that institution, made up of citizens who live in the community and who have accepted, as volunteers, to act as two-way explainers. They help people in the community understand what is happening inside the institution, and the reverse. I would suggest that the Hon. Member get in touch with the chairman or members of the citizens' advisory committee and go over his complaints. I think he will be satisfied by the citizens' advisory committee that these regrettable incidents are all being handled by a pretty effective system.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that these regrettable circumstances are not being handled properly.

PLEA FOR EXTERNAL INQUIRY

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Would the Minister make the Vantour inquiry public? Although the Minister will not make it public, I understand that it offers recommendations on how to deal with difficulties similar to those experienced in the Edmonton Maximum Security Institution. It deals with overcrowding, the lack of granting of local autonomy to the various prisons across Canada, and the low morale amongst the prison guards themselves because of the grievance procedure not being acknowledged by the Minister and Mr. Yeomans. Because of fear that there may be more uprisings which could cause conflict in the prison and in the citizenry around the prison, I plead with the Minister to have an external inquiry, rather than allowing an internal inquiry with its cover-up procedures.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Since passage of the access to information legislation, the Inspector General's reports have been made public regularly. I do not think it is a fair criticism to say that the Inspector General's reports are a way of covering things up. In fact they are a way of getting to the truth of problems and assisting the Correctional Service of Canada to correct them. As I have indicated, I am concerned about it.

I am waiting for a translation of the Vantour report so that it can be made public. The Stewart report, the correctional investigator's report, is now being translated. When these reports are made public I look forward to discussing, with the Hon. Member, what sort of action should be taken.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, my question, of which I sent notice, was for the Minister of Agriculture who has left the Chamber. I will have to defer.

ONTARIO BICENTENNIAL

PRESENTATION OF FUNDS TO CITY OF BRAMPTON

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. The City of Brampton received a $4,000 grant for the bicentennial program which it is staging on July 1. Why were officials of the City of Brampton summoned—a command performance—to a Liberal Member's office in Mississauga in order to receive the funds?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the details of the case raised by the Hon. Member. If he had had the courtesy to inform me before question period, I would have been able to give him the information at this time. However, I doubt that his own information is accurate.

[English]

METHOD OF PRESENTATION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister deny that in order for groups to receive their cheques they must travel to the offices of Liberal Members, not have the cheques come out to the ridings of opposition Members to present them? Did that order not come from the Minister's office?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I never ordered any group to come to the office of a Liberal Member of Parliament to pick up their cheque. I offered all Members of the House the opportunity to deliver the cheques themselves if they so wished. They just have to notify—

Mr. McDermid: You never made that offer in your life.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Joyal: —my office that they are interested in delivering the cheques themselves, if they so wish. If they do not express that wish, the cheque is sent through the mail to the sponsors of the various proposals and initiatives.

An Hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Joyal: That is the way it has operated in all the programs, and that is the way I intend to operate it. Everyone has the same chance. If the Member wants to deliver the cheque himself or herself, he just has to notify the office and we make sure that their request is passed on.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Joyal: I could give to Hon. Members a list of Members of Parliament on this side of the House who have expressed the wish—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

AIR TRANSPORT

LOCATION OF ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION BRANCH IN MONTREAL

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Can the Minister explain the rationale behind establishing the accident investigation operation of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board in Montreal, since it will involve the transfer of more than 50 senior people, considerable inconvenience, heavy costs, and unnecessary disruption? Additionally, it will affect the ability of accident investigators to co-ordinate their work with other government agencies such as Transport Canada, the National Research Council, the Aviation Safety Bureau, and many others?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very surprised at the Hon. Member's question, coming as he does from a part of the country in which there is always an interest in making sure that there is a fair and equitable distribution of federal government activity. The Government is committed to the basic principle that the entire country should be able to support and secure federal activity, offices, and operations. I gather from the Hon. Member's question that that is not a principle endorsed by the Conservative Party. That is one reason why they are on the opposition benches.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Until the next election.

EFFECT ON MORALE

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, we are quite in tune with decentralization when it makes some sense. Since the news which I just spoke of came out, three senior investigators have taken early retirement, two senior analysts have taken lateral moves, more personnel are considering similar options, and morale is low in the Department. Will the Minister agree that this will impair, rather than enhance, air safety in Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, quite to the contrary. I would say that it will substantially fulfil the basic objective which we put forward in establishing the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. It was to be a board quite separate and independent from the ongoing functions of the Department of Transport. The original purpose of the safety board was to divorce the investigation inquiry of accidents from the standard setting and review functions of the Department. One of the ways to ensure that that would happen would be to separate them in a geographical as well as a functional way.

I can think of no better location than the City of Montreal, which is very much the centre of aviation development for Canada. It is the head of the international aviation agencies. It is the area where we have our major airline centres and our major maintenance bases. Both logic and justification show that the placement of the aviation safety bureau in Montreal is a decision which will enable that board to fulfil its functions most appropriately and accurately.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

PROPOSED VISIT TO CANADA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State, who seems to be very eager to talk today.

My question concerns Her Majesty The Queen: Is the Queen still coming to Canada this summer? What is the present situation with respect to Her Majesty's visit to this country?

• (1500)

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to inform the Hon. Member that preparations for Her Majesty's visit to Canada on the dates scheduled in July 1984 are proceeding as planned. The official program of Her Majesty's trip was released by the Prime Minister's Office as soon as it was approved. If the Hon. Leader of the Opposition in the House could learn to be polite when we are referring to Her Majesty, perhaps he would get some information on this trip. A detailed program was published by the Prime Minister's Office. It was approved by Her Majesty's representatives and at this moment, it is assumed the visit will take place as scheduled. All mechanisms are in place. The co-operation of the Provinces is excellent, and the list of suggested activities is entirely in line with the objectives of the visit.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to announce a change to House business for today. After consultations with Opposition House Leaders, rather than dealing with the Nova Scotia offshore oil agreement this afternoon, the last item of business after Bill C-8 and Bill C-49 which remain to be dealt with will be Bill C-36. There is an understanding that we would allow second reading to be given today in order to allow Bill C-36 to go to committee for a short meeting, the understanding being that we will give third reading to this Bill later this week in due time.

Tomorrow we will be dealing with two Bills, C-34 and C-33. The understanding is that we will divide the time available for Government business tomorrow into two equal parts to deal with those two Bills. We will deal first with Bill C-34 and the second part of the time available for Government business will be devoted to Bill C-33, it being understood that if there are a few minutes left we could complete third reading of Bill C-36, if possible.

The understanding also provides that we will allow Bill C-34 and Bill C-33 to be adopted through all remaining stages tomorrow. On Thursday, if a report is made on the Peace Institute Bill on time by consent, we will be dealing with it as a first item of business Thursday morning. It will be followed by Nova Scotia offshore, Bill C-43, which was supposed to be dealt with this afternoon, and the Bank Act, C-30. This business for Thursday is subject to modification depending on the talks we will have, but this is what we are planning for today.

Assuming that all business that I have just indicated is completed by that time, Friday is open to deal with so-called non-contentious matters. We will have to wait until later this week before specifying the order of business for Friday.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the discussions have been referred to by the Government House Leader. In terms of Thursday, my understanding would be that all we are talking about is the sequence of legislation. That is to say, if the Peace Institute Bill were to come forward, we would be able to deal possibly with that matter first. Otherwise, we might proceed with the Nova Scotia offshore treaty first, for example, and take that to its conclusion.

In terms of these items of legislation, the Government has decided to bring them forward on its legislative agenda. We are prepared to deal with them but I should say that the proposal for business with respect to Thursday in regard to the Peace Institute and the Bank Act, particularly the Bank Act, remains the subject of negotiation.

With respect to the Bank Act, as the Government House Leader will appreciate, I must have further discussions in terms of the extent of our participation in that legislation. My understanding is that there have been negotiations with the other third Party in the House with respect to their attitude on it. I will be interested in having the definitive statement with respect to their position on that legislation and to have further consultation with my caucus colleagues, in view of the fact that this Bill is now coming forward. As long as it is understood that we are going to consult with respect to the Bank Act, I would like to have a reasonable period of time to debate important issues such as the offshore and the Peace Institute. I do not want those important items and the Bank Act to be dealt with in five-minute periods.

I believe there are important statements to be made with respect to these items of legislation, so I hope that the Government House Leader, in setting forth these items, will allow us a reasonable period to deal with these Bills.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my House Leader, whom I understand will be returning this evening, our attitude toward the Bank Act will be determined at that time through formal discussions between the Government House Leader and the Official Opposition House Leader. As far as other legislation is concerned, we are prepared to deal with that as the Government brings it forward.

PETITIONS

MR. GURBIN—GOVERNMENT OF NICARAGUA

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting a petition on behalf of 271 residents of the Province of Ontario and my constituency of Bruce-Grey, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that this honourable House will therefore provide a remedy. These petitioners humbly sheweth that, in keeping with their Canadian ideals of respect for human rights and national sovereignty, they affirm the positive steps taken to date by the Hon. Allan MacEachen to recognize and support the new Government of Nicaragua. They encourage our Canadian Government to establish an embassy in Managua, Nicaragua, to promote dialogue and strengthen our relations. They recommend that the Government of Canada actively support the Contadora Group by consistently and publicly reinforcing their policies for the region; and finally, they request that the Government of Canada communicate clearly to all governments involved in the region that Canada is vigorously opposed to armed interventions into the affairs of Nicaragua.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon the Honourable House to impose such changes. And as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 711 and 761.

CBC—COVERAGE OF 1984 WINTER OLYMPICS

Question No. 711—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. How many Canadian Broadcasting Corporation personnel attended the 1984 Winter Olympics in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia including all reporters and technical staff?

2. What did it cost the Corporation to (a) fund its personnel while in Sarajevo (b) transport its personnel to and from Sarajevo?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. The number of CBC personnel attending the 1984 Winter Olympics in Sarajevo, including all reporters and technical staff was 71. This group serviced four CBC networks—English television, English radio, French television and French radio—and provided coverage of Olympic events from seven different venues.

2. (a) and (b) Such costs are components of the over-all cost of the special programming produced for the Olympics, and it has not been customary for Parliament to require the Corporation to provide such details of its internal management and administration. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, answered November 6, 1975.

CBC—COVERAGE OF WOLF HUNT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 761—Mr. Oberle:

1. Did the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation provide news coverage and documentation of the wolf hunt in British Columbia and, if so, what was the total cost of (a) (i) travel to (ii) accommodation in Fort St. John and Fort Nelson (b) food and other expenses (c) communications (d) the charter of aircraft, cars and other equipment?

2. How many persons, employed by the (a) English (b) French network, were involved in this coverage?

3. Did corporate employees, at any time during the event, transport or otherwise assist members of the protest group?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. (a), (b), (c) and (d) Yes. These expenses are components of over-all program costs, and it has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530 answered November 6, 1975.

2. (a) Ten. (b) One. In the period January 30, 1984 through March 7, 1984, these employees were in the Fort Nelson/Fort St. John area at various times to provide radio and television coverage of the wolf hunt. It should be noted that the services of, and/or the tape produced by, those recording for English television were shared between the Journal, CBC British Columbia regional television, the National and the CBC's French national television newscast, the Téléjournal.

OUTSIDE CONSULTANTS EMPLOYED BY DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Question No. 193—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. In the fiscal year (a) 1981-82 (b) 1982-83 were outside consultants employed by the Department of the Environment and, if so (i) how many (ii) what was the total amount paid?

2. Were any consultants paid more than $20,000 and, if so, in each case what (a) was his/her name (b) was the amount (c) services were provided?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Evans: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, since the House is going to recess at the end of this week, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary what is causing the delay in answering the questions which I placed on the Order Paper some time ago. Question No. 6 was placed on the Order Paper on September 20, asking whether the Department of the Secretary of State or the Department of Multiculturalism authorized funding of the Manitoba 23 Organization or any other ethnic organization in Manitoba. It is not a complicated, detailed question but the answer is a matter of great interest to the citizens of Manitoba.

I also placed question No. 2 on the Order Paper on October 24 asking whether the Minister of Transport has a private parking stall at the Winnipeg International Airport. I understand it was installed at a cost of $100,000 and I would like some information about that.

If you can believe this, Mr. Speaker, I placed question No. 13 on the Order Paper on November 18, 1981, in regard to three Ministers flying Liberal campaign workers to work in the last provincial election in Manitoba. I would like to have details on how Liberal Cabinet Ministers can use JetStars to fly campaign workers around Canada.

In addition, I placed a starred question on the Order Paper on April 10 of this year and I am still waiting for an answer regarding what salary Mr. Zarry of the Advertising Management Group is receiving. Is it $1,500 a day or $2,000 a day? I ask what his expenses were for 1983.

As I understand the purpose of starred questions, Mr. Speaker, they are to be answered within a reasonable period of time. Otherwise, what is the point of starred questions? If starred questions are supposed to be answered within a reasonable period of time, can I have an explanation from you or from the Parliamentary Secretary as to why a starred question placed on the Order Paper on April 10 has not been answered as of this date?

Mr. Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, for the one hundredth time at least may I say that a starred question simply means that when the answer is given it will be read orally in the House. That is the only purpose of a starred question. I have said that in the House a hundred times and I hope that this time Hon. Members opposite will finally understand the rules of this House.

I will look into the other matters for the Hon. Member and see whether I can get him an answer before the House rises.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary has a particular way of making a statement about starred questions; he takes every advantage that he can for the Government. I am wondering why I have not had an answer to question No. 840, which I tabled on May 29 of this year. It is a replica in part of a question that I tabled four years ago and have not had answered. It asks what the increases in real terms in Department of National Defence expenditures have been over the years. It is fairly common knowledge in the Department and is a question they can answer in five minutes if they want to. I am afraid that recent statements made in the press by the current Minister of National Defence leave me as skeptical as have statements made by all the other Ministers of National Defence, with one exception, in the last ten years about the increase in spending. I would like to find out whether they dare table the true figures so that we know once and for all what has been happening to our defence expenditures.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM CIVIL AND COMMERCIAL JUDGMENTS CONVENTION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

No royal recommendation is needed. I understand the Table has located the copy of the Bill, so perhaps we could return to Introduction of Bills, with your permission and that of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) is perfectly right. Is there consent to return to Introduction of Bills?

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the said Bill?

CURRENCY AND EXCHANGE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-8, An Act respecting the imposition of anti-dumping and countervailing duties, to amend the Currency and Exchange Act, the Customs Tariff and the Export and Import Permits Act and to repeal the Anti-dumping Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) had finished his opening remarks. There is a ten-minute question period if Hon. Members wish to put questions or make short comments.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that we have received many representations from the Ontario Wine Council clearly indicating that there is what they consider massive dumping or subsidization of wines coming into Canada from the European Common Market. This is placing our own domestic wine industry in a very serious situation, to the extent that a year or so ago we had to purchase grapes under our agricultural subsidy program in order to make brandy. Our own production capacity is seriously being hurt by very low prices. I am wondering what are the Hon. Member's thoughts on this situation and whether he feels the Bill goes anywhere toward helping the Ontario wine industry.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) for bringing up this very important point. I hope the Bill does address that problem. This year Ontario wine growers have sold 20 per cent less than during the same period in the previous year. It is not only one product; there are so many other things being dumped in Canada, wine being but one example.

The wine industry in Ontario is very important. I am not convinced that our method of taxation of wine is done equitably. In such countries as France and Italy you can buy what is commonly referred to as vin ordinaire at a very nominal price, a little less than you would pay for a Coca-Cola. When good French wine comes into the country we tax it very heavily, but what is happening is this. The French and Italians used to have control of the whole market, but many other countries have now infringed upon this exclusive market which France and Italy controlled for a long time. People like the Ontario wine growers are producing a wine that is palatable to the Canadian palate, and to the American. Therefore, in order to compete the French and Italian wine industry have been subsidized so as to dispose of their product, since they cannot afford to store any more than they have already. Thus, they are dumping it in Canada.

We have to look carefully at the Bill. As I said earlier, there is a weakness. I believe it will take experts from the wine industry to assess the damage being done, as opposed to public servants or people appointed by Liberals to this board. I am really concerned because in the Niagara Belt there are 24,000 acres of vineyards and 16,000 full-time and seasonal jobs. For each of these jobs there are indirect ones. The multiplier effect takes over. I have great apprehension about the Bill accomplishing everything anticipated, but it must be adjusted to protect an industry which is so critical to southern Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any further questions or comments? For debate, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with at least four principles involved in the Bill. The first one concerns the beef industry. The other day the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) did not seem to take seriously the fact that the beef industry in Canada, certainly in western Canada, was being ruined by the dumping of beef into the country. I take great exception to that. This industry has been very profitable for Canada. It is one of our mainstays. Now, because the European market has subsidized its industry to the point where it has piled up food, that product is dumped in Canada below the cost of production. Some people may say that that is very nice for consumers, but it is not because it means the cattle industry will be ruined. It will take years for the industry to recover, if at all. I deplore the attitude of the Government in not taking action immediately to deal with the dumping of beef in Canada. It is a serious matter and it hurts one of our industries.

My second point concerns the importation of natural products from the United States. The principle is that when no tariff has been established, someone somewhere decides what tariff the product will carry. I am referring in particular to a natural product used in the preparation of a pollutant. It came into Canada for a long time without any duty or tariff. Suddenly out of the blue there was a tariff change which demanded that importers pay a 15 per cent duty on all such imported products. A sudden change such as this forces small companies out of business. If there is to be a change in tariff, surely companies should be notified. The Department should not wait until these companies have gone to a lot of work organizing their affairs. In the case of a small company involved in the importation of this natural product, it had to prepare labels both in imperial and metric, as well as in French and English. It went to a lot of expense on the understanding that the importation of the product was duty free. Suddenly it was stuck with a 15 per cent tariff which it was told it had to pay. Certainly it hurt this small company very much.

The tariff which was used was the one on materials of all kinds used in producing or manufacturing products under heading 93811 when imported exclusively for such use or whether or not otherwise enumerated in Schedule A. It definitely showed 85001.1 as being free not only for the most favoured nation but also from the general tariff and throughout. Then a 15 per cent tariff was imposed. It is pretty serious when such a company is left in a precarious position.

Approximately a year and a half later I received a letter from the Minister which indicated that to date a tariff item for the goods in question had not been introduced into the Customs Tariff. The Department floundered around for a year and a half using this tariff and that tariff. At the same time it extracted money from the business and ruined it. At the end of that period of time the Department indicated that it had not yet introduced a tariff. If that is the case, why was it not continued on the pre-tariff which was used when the business was started? This type of action does great harm. Surely the Department should not endeavour to put small companies out of business. That is what a sudden change in tariff does. It did not make up its mind as to what was the tariff. It certainly hurt small businesses but it also hurts any business in Canada. It is not much credit to the Department. It indicates that the Department does not know what it is doing.

Another area of the Bill to which I would like to refer is the one dealing with the importation of dental supplies. A dentist in my constituency ordered dental supplies by mail from the United States. He included the full postage in both directions. The dental supplies arrived in Calgary. Recently he received a telephone call from the customs office saying that duties were due on the goods. The dentist asked how much the duties were. The official told him that he could not tell him over the telephone but that the declared value of the goods was $111.25. Also the dentist was told that he had to come into the customs office himself, that he could not send anyone else. In other words, the dentist had to close his office, inconvenience all his patients slated for that day, drive at least 35 miles there and 35 miles back. What for? Customs seems to be completely inflexible. It does not seem to realize that it is there to serve the public. Also he was told to bring in his invoice when he attended at its office. He said that he did not have an invoice because it was attached to the goods. The officials told him that he had to bring an invoice with him. From where would he get an invoice since his order was made by mail? It was attached to the goods. This type of nonsense on the part of customs officials should be stopped. It is hurting business across the country. How many businesses have folded due to ridiculous attitudes such as this on the part of customs officials? They seem to think they are so powerful that they can do anything they like. Apparently they are getting away with it.

I hope the Minister will deal with this case, not just tap officials on the fingers. The invoice was attached to the dental supplies. The doctor should have been able to obtain them without wasting his time by going to the office himself. They should have been able to tell him over the telephone how much the duties were. It was nonsense to give the declared value but refuse to give the amount of duty. This type of inconvenience should not be taking place.

The next item with which I would like to deal concerns another beef or grievance I have with the Department. For many years the American Quarter Horse Association has come to Canada to take part in equestrian competitions. Many Canadian horsemen went to the United States to do likewise.

Suddenly in 1983 there was a change and the Department indicated that they would have to pay 16.7 per cent on their saddles and all equipment on their competing horses. That was unheard of before. Equestrian competitors, both American and Canadian, have been crossing back and forth across the border without any duties. Suddenly someone had the idea that they would have to pay. They were not bringing in this equipment to sell. It was to be used in competition. It is a reputable organization, but it was told that it had to pay a duty on the equipment. It is a ridiculous situation.

We got in touch with the Department. The Department said they must make a deposit of several hundred dollars in order to be able to compete in Canada. When these people come to Canada they spend money. When these people come here they use hotels, buy food and purchase gifts to take back home. They spend money here. The Minister does not seem to realize that. He says they have to make a deposit. The rule reads:

Animals and equipment for use therewith for pasturage, competition, training or breeding.

That is free. That is what it states in the regulations. Why is authority given to someone at the border and somebody in the customs tariff office to force these people to pay or leave a deposit when they are just coming here to take part in a competition? They are not coming from Russia. They do not have to escape from the United States; they are coming here to take part in a competition. They will leave money here, something that is good for the country, yet we have this type of behaviour. A clean-up is required in many of these areas.

The last point I want to raise in this connection is a very serious problem. It involves farm machinery. Under the tariff rules, farm machinery should come in free. Somehow or other the Department has decided that if your farm equipment breaks down and you require a replacement part, you have to pay duty on that replacement part. Farm machinery wears out. Parts will be required.

Let me talk about the 1600 Ford Easy-Rider air-flow self-propelled fertilizer, a machine used for fertilizing. That is straight farm use to increase production in this country. Under the tariff it comes in free. The self-propelled fertilizer spreaders manufactured by Lor-Al Corporation, complete with fertilizer, spreader and applicator incorporated therein, comes in free under the respective tariff.

An accident occurred. The chassis was destroyed. The fertilizer equipment was fine. They were told they would have to pay duty on the replacement chassis. This chassis is not used on any other farm machinery. It is not used off the farm. Only 50 were manufactured in the United States for Lor-Al specifically for the 1,600 Easy-Rider air-flow self-propelled fertilizer. Only 50 were made. One was ordered. They were told they would have to pay duty on it, as if it were part of a car or truck. This is farm machinery.

I appreciate the attitude of the Deputy Minister and his chief assistant. They say that this is now being reviewed so that all farm equipment with a chassis will no longer have the chassis come in duty free. There will be a tariff. It is a new classification. It is supposed to start this year. I take serious objection to that. When the House of Commons set out that farm equipment coming into Canada for use on the farm to increase our production would enter free, the public servants or bureaucrats should not change that and say that duties and tariffs will apply to replacement parts. It does not make sense.

A chassis for the 1600 Ford Easy-Rider air-flow self-propelled fertilizer is a specially made chassis. It is for that machine only. No one will buy it for anything else. It is now said that every machine with a chassis will not come in duty free whether it is for agriculture, working on the highway or working in the mountains. There will now be a tariff fee. That is completely contrary to what the Members of the House of Commons said when they said that all farm machinery coming into Canada to produce food cheaper and help agriculture, our basic primary industry, should enter free. Now it is being changed, not by leaps and bounds but by inches at a time. First the chassis will be taxed, then the pistons, and so on. It does not make sense.

I wish to bring these cases to the attention of the House of Commons and the Minister. Every case I mention affects a number of people across this country who are dissatisfied and unhappy. It is hurting farming and small business. It is time that we in this country help to keep our small businesses and farmers in a fluid position so that they can continue to operate rather than go into bankruptcy.

The next point I want to mention is with regard to the importation of clay. Many people in this country do clay modelling, producing beautiful vases and other items. Clay had been coming into Canada duty free. In some parts of Canada it now enters duty free and in other parts of Canada duty must be paid. That is not right. This was brought to the attention of the officials. They are still quarrelling about it.

Truckloads of this clay come into Alberta and British Columbia. It depends on which port it enters as to whether it is charged duty. This is to be used to produce in this country. It is necessary for the manufacture of the pottery in that industry and it should enter duty free. It should not be taxed. If there is going to be a tax on any of these items, it should not be so great that it drives small businesses out of business.

Any equipment brought into this country to help us produce for farm purposes should not be taxed whether it comes in in whole or in part. There is no rhyme or reason to put a tax on the chassis of a 1600 Ford Easy-Rider air-flow self-propelled fertilizer. It is a farm machine and should not be taxed. I emphasize that over and over again. Once we tax the chassis on this machine, we will inch by inch get to the point where we tax everything used in the production of food in this country. That would be a disaster.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It would appear that the Minister does not wish to make any comments. In view of that, we do not have any opportunity to ask questions of the Minister. Would it be possible for us at least to have the pleasure of a ten-minute question period with the Minister rising to make a speech of one sentence? There are questions which must be addressed to him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am afraid the Chair cannot help the Hon. Member in the circumstances. I remind the House that the Bill has gone through several stages where opportunities were provided for questions or comments. However, the matter is in the hands of the Government. I cannot help the Hon. Member.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the Minister will not permit any questions to be addressed to him? We would like to ask questions in view of the subject matter raised in connection with this Bill.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, you did state the situation accurately. Ample opportunity was provided for questions and answers on this Bill, both at committee stage and earlier.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there further debate? Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

WESTERN ARCTIC (INUVIALUIT) CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before you read the order on Bill C-49, I think you should know that there have been discussions and there is agreement that Bill C-49 should be sent to Committee of the Whole and proceeded with through all stages of the House this afternoon.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, there is an understanding to that effect. However, before we commence our proceedings on Bill C-49, I feel obliged to bring to your attention that, due undoubtedly to negligence on the part of the Government, the Bill appears to be improperly before the House in that in the printed version that has been circulated to Members there appears on page 2 in Clause 2 certain blanks that have not been filled in. I would request a ruling from the Chair as to whether this Bill is indeed properly or improperly before the House.

[Translation]

Mr. René Gingras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of meeting the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) and I told him about the mistake, which is just a printer's error. I was going to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to proceed with second reading, after the requisite corrections for first reading: at Clause 2, line 30, read "for the Minister" instead of "by the Minister", and insert in the blank spaces: "June 19, 1984" and recorded as Document No. "322-7/20". If the Hon. Member agrees, we can now proceed with second reading.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There are two matters before the Chair at this time. First, there is the point of order raised by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) whereby he sought the unanimous agreement of the House to proceed with the committee stage of the Bill this afternoon in Committee of the Whole. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered. The other matter raised by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), to which the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Gingras) has responded, deals with, if I can use the expression, the printing of some blanks in Clause 2 of the Bill as it now stands before the House. The Chair has had this matter researched and has been informed that this omission arises out of a very straigthforward or bona fide printing error, if I may put it in those terms.

The Bill as introduced and as deposited with Table officers, a copy of which I have in my hand at present, was, I can confirm, properly tabled with the said blanks duly filled in. If they so wish, Hon. Members will have to take the word of the Chair that in fact the Bill was properly presented and introduced at first reading but through some technical error at the time of printing contained these blanks in the text. The Chair of course regrets that, as I am sure do Hon. Members.

That being the case, I should ascertain that the House nevertheless intends to proceed with the Bill at this stage this afternoon. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) seconded by Mr. MacLaren, moved that Bill C-49, An Act to approve, give effect to and declare valid the Agreement between the Committee for Original Peoples' Entitlement, representing the Inuvialuit of the Inuvialuit Settlement Region, and the Government of Canada and to amend the National Parks Act in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. René Gingras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have this opportunity today to speak to Bill C-49, the Western Arctic (Inuvialuit) Claims Settlement Act.

Hon. Members are probably aware that the purpose of this Act is to legalize the claims settlement concluded with the Committee for Original Peoples' Entitlement which defends the interests of the Western Arctic Inuvialuit. Mr. Speaker, it is a historic measure, since it enshrines the first comprehensive settlement of this kind concluded with a native group in Canada's North. This Bill shows us what the future has in store. We hope we shall soon see the day when similar settlements will occur throughout the North and native claims in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories will have been settled in a definitive and satisfactory manner.

For some time now, the settlement of outstanding native claims has been a decisive factor in developing Canada's regions north of 60.

Certain aspects of the economic, political and social situation that has prevailed in the North for many years are a source of profound concern. After the rate of economic expansion slowed down, the people of the North, instead of trying to plan the future together, were often paralyzed by bitter disputes about development, the environment and other issues. Mr. Speaker, in these conditions it was important for the federal Government to choose a plan of action that would put stability and co-operation in the place of uncertainty and discord, a plan that would encourage the people of the North to become more active participants in planning the future of their territory; a plan that would involve the native peoples of the North in decision-making on political and economic issues. However, native claims must be settled satisfactorily before this plan can be expected to show any results.

As long as the problem of native claims is not resolved, distrust and resentment will prevent parties from co-operating and making the concessions that are a pre-requisite for developing a plan of action for development of the North. Settlement of the claims is a key element in our plans for the North.

Hon. Members will recall that more funds have been earmarked for research and negotiations. We have made it clear to the native groups concerned that the federal Government was very serious and sincere in its desire to negotiate a fair settlement for outstanding claims as soon as possible. Despite the complexity of this type of comprehensive negotiations, real progress has been achieved. Furthermore, the agreement in principle with respect to the claims of the Council of Yukon Indians was recently accepted by negotiators for both parties, by the Government of Yukon and by the federal cabinet. Now the agreement only has to be ratified by the Yukon Indians.

As for the claims of the Dene Association and the Métis, which represent the main native groups in the MacKenzie Valley, and those of the Tungavik Federation of the Nunavut, on behalf of the Eastern Arctic Inuit, negotiations are proceeding satisfactorily. Since we started making tangible progress on the claims issue, there has been a considerable change in atmosphere in the Territories, both in relations between the North and Ottawa and within the Territories. Distrust and intransigence have made way for mutual trust, co-operation and a willingness to make concessions. The people of the North, including the native peoples, are once again prepared to work together with the federal Government and define and set priorities for the future.

We shall therefore continue to pressure for progress in settling comprehensive claims in the North. During the next ten years, we shall see a new upsurge in economic development in the North, in the mining and oil industry as well as in other sectors. Economic growth will be largely stimulated by improving economic and political conditions which will stabilize as a result of substantial progress in claims settlements.

I shall now, if I may, return to the legislation before the House. This Bill concerns claims presented by the Inuvialuit.

These are some 2,500 Inuvialuit living in six communities in the Northwest Territories, along the coast of the Beaufort Sea and on the islands off the coast. The territory they have always inhabited is immense, covering nearly 435,000 square kilometers of land and sea. The Inuvialuit who have lived there for centuries, depend on hunting and fishing for their livelihood.

Mr. Speaker, it was not easy to negotiate a comprehensive settlement. The Committee for Original Peoples' Entitlement presented its claim seven years ago to the federal Government. This agreement demonstrates the sincerity and determination with which all parties have worked towards a definitive solution that would be fair to the Inuvialuit, the people of the North and all Canadians. Comprehensive claims are not concerned exclusively with land, although environmental planning is a very considerable factor in negotiations. Comprehensive claims are based on the principles of ancestral rights, in other words the historic claims of a population that has lived for centuries within a certain territory on which it depends for its livelihood and whose cultural and economic survival depends on the future use and development of that territory.

Through these comprehensive negotiations, we have tried to conclude an agreement that:

Preserves Inuvialuit cultural identity and values within a changing northern society;

Guarantees the equality of the Inuvialuit and enables them to be meaningful participants in the northern and national economy and society;

Protects and preserves the Arctic wildlife, environment and ecosystems.

This agreement which will be implemented through this act is basically an agreement under which Canada will grant to the Inuvialuit certain rights, privileges and benefits with a view to achieving the objectives already mentioned. In exchange, the Inuvialuit agree to relinquish any title on certain lands in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon as well as on certain adjacent offshore islands.

The agreement we have concluded deals basically with three major issues: the land and its use, the provisions related to economic expansion, social progress and compensation, and finally wildlife and environment.

With respect to the land, the Inuvialuit will receive titles to approximately 91,000 square kilometres of land within the 435,000 square kilometre area they traditionally occupied. They will own both surface and subsurface rights to almost 11,000 square kilometres of land adjacent to the six main communities. They will also receive title to a further 78,000 square kilometres, with full surface rights and subsurface rights to sand and gravel, but not to oil, gas or minerals. Approximately 2,000 square kilometres of land in the Cape Bathurst area will also be held as a protected, non-development area.

Among the economic and social benefits provided under the agreement, they will receive $45 million, in 1977 dollars—the year they filed their claims—to be paid directly in a series of payments to be made annually until 1997. There will also be an Economic Enhancement Fund of $10 million to help the Inuvialuit participate fully in the Western Arctic economy, and a Social Development Fund of $7.5 million to help the Inuvialuit solve the problems which accompany social transition.

The agreement grants the Inuvialuit certain preferential and exclusive rights to harvest wildlife in the settlement region. The agreement also provides assistance in integrating the Inuvialuit into the decision-making process involving wildlife management within their territories.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions of this agreement will give the results which the Inuvialuit and the federal Government are seeking. It will enable that group of native people to maintain their ancestral way of life and go on with their traditional activities.

Thanks to the Economic Enhancement Fund and the Social Development Fund, the Inuvialuit will play a greater role in the economic growth of the North, and they will also have their say in setting their own social and economic priorities.

The agreement was concluded earlier this year by teams of negotiators representing COPE and the federal Government. I might add that the Governments of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon as well as the federal Cabinet gave their agreement.

The Yukon Indian Council, the Nunavut Tungavik Federation as well as the Dene and Metis of the Northwest Territories have signed bilateral agreements to settle the problems created by the redistribution of their interests in the lands described in the agreement.

Last month, when the Inuvialuit voted to ratify the agreement, the overwhelming majority—81 per cent—was in favour. The only thing left to do, Mr. Speaker, is for Parliament to adopt this Bill so that the agreement be implemented. We hope Hon. Members will consider this Bill quickly and agree to its adoption.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) on a point of order.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I was listening very attentively to the presentation of the Parliamentary Secretary. I believe he might have inadvertently misled the House in that he said that the amount of land to be transferred to the Inuvialuit was 90,000 square miles. From my reading of Section 7(5) of the agreement it is quite clear that it is 35,000 square miles. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary would be kind enough to check that?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, if I may have a few moments, I will check.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is checking those figures. The House may want to proceed with debate at this stage and in due course we could recognize the Parliamentary Secretary on a point of order, if need be.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, before I get into my presentation, I would like to inform the Parliamentary Secretary that when the Bill goes before the Committee of the Whole it is my intention to ask several questions. I hope there is expert advice available to him at that time so that committee stage might be dealt with expeditiously.

I was rather disappointed, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) has not seen fit to appear in the House this afternoon on this issue. It may be that he is still pondering his political future after the events of the weekend before last. However, I would have liked to hear from the Minister personally with respect to Bill C-49. It is also disillusioning, Sir, when we have to wait for several minutes before we get two Ministers of the Crown sitting in their seats so that the motion for second reading could be properly moved and seconded. I guess it just goes to show the importance which the Government attaches to these issues.

When we consider the COPE agreement and the resolutions of various outstanding comprehensive land claims, Sir, we know that it is an agonizingly slow process. I am disappointed with the rate of progress which has been made over the last five years or six years in particular. When the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development took on his responsibilities in 1980, he put out a press release wherein he said he was going to resolve these outstanding land claims in a matter of six months. So far to date, since he has been in that portfolio, this is the first claim which has reached the point of resolution. And there are many more yet to come.

I do not know why this is so, Sir, but I can guess at several reasons. It might be inherent difficulties involved in the negotiation of land claims. It might, however, be deliberate stalling on the part of the Government. Alternatively, it might be ministerial incompetence. I will leave it for others to make that determination.

However, we have the COPE agreement before us now and we find ourselves in the position that it is virtually a fait accompli. We have the agreement before us today which has been ratified by the Cabinet, agreed to by the Government, and which has been ratified by a substantial 80 per cent majority of the Inuvialuit. Whatever we do with it in this House at the present time, we are unable to alter it in any substantial way, or in any way whatsoever, as far as I can determine. Therefore, it falls upon us to allow the passage of Bill C-49 without undue delay and that is the course of action which we on this side propose to undertake.

I want to say a few words about the public perception of this agreement in the area involved, the western part of the Northwest Territories, in the Delta area. The agreement is generally regarded by everyone as something which is second or third best. Most people would have liked something else but I suppose they can live with this if they really have to. That is the type of attitude which people have about it.

They are also tired of talking about it. Negotiations have gone on for so many years and caused so many dissensions that what we have now is what might be called "an agreement by attrition". People are so tired of talking of it, going into it, renegotiating it and then going back again, that they more or less are ready to accept anything that is put before them. It is not the first time I have seen this happen with the present Government.

There are some things to be said in favour of the Inuvialuit settlement. In my personal opinion, I feel it is better than the James Bay settlement. It is still a lengthy document but it is a little easier to read than the James Bay settlement. It is complex but not as complex. The provisions in it tend to be a little more specific. I believe we will have some problems with interpretation in the years to come but I do not feel the problems of interpretation will be as bad as those experienced with the James Bay agreement. The Inuvialuit settlement agreement does not envisage further legislation which will have to be passed several years hence.

You will recall, Sir, the passage just a few days ago of the Cree-Naskapi Act which was something contemplated within the James Bay agreement but which took some additional eight years to negotiate. In the meantime things were left up in the air. That situation is not contemplated in the Inuvialuit agreement, although it might arise. That is something we cannot tell at the present time.

I believe that the negotiating process ran into many difficulties because of the secrecy involved. The Government insisted that virtually everything be done behind closed doors. It did not want the general public in on it. It chose the people with whom it wanted to negotiate, kept everyone else out of the negotiations and would not tell them what was going on. I do not believe this is the right approach. The public somehow always finds out in the end what is going on and what is going to affect them. The process in my opinion, should be open so that mistakes do not occur, or so that they can be nipped in the bud.

I will give you, Sir, some examples of avoidable mistakes which happened during the COPE negotiations. First of all, going back to the time of the agreement in principle, way back in 1978, there was the question of sand and gravel. As you are probably aware, Mr. Speaker, sand and gravel is most important in an area of permafrost. When one is doing civil work such as constructing roads in a municipality, one cannot use cut and fill techniques. It is all fill. One must dump four feet or five feet of gravel on top of the permafrost in order to preserve the frozen nature of it. Therefore, sand and gravel is very important.

Under the original agreement, the municipalities found themselves without access to sand and gravel. Had we not had that secretive process, that mistake would not have been made and we would not have beaten our heads together for months on end over a question of sand and gravel, a question which could have easily been resolved during the course of the negotiations. Subsequently we had the problem with the overlap in the Aklavik area, the overlap between the Inuvialuit claim and the Dene-Metis claim where two sets of people have traditionally used the same area. That would not have happened had the negotiations, or the partial result thereof, been made public as we went along. Instead, once people found out what was proposed to be written into the final agreement, everything blew up in the air because this matter had not been properly considered and those other people with a very real interest in that area of land had not been brought into the negotiating picture.

Another very good example of this is the 10 per cent differential which I understand was put in expressly at the request of the federal negotiator. I understand that other people involved in the secret process told him that if he did that, all hell is going to break loose. He would not believe them and that is precisely what happened when people found out what was to be in the so-called final agreement. All that could have been avoided had the Government undertaken negotiations in a proper open manner rather than trying to keep everything secret. The issues to which I referred have now been resolved, but they need not have arisen in the first place.

This Government's penchant for secrecy extended even after the final agreement had been initialled. Even though the other party to the agreement was quite willing that the document be made public, the Government insisted on secrecy. It would not even let Members of this House have access to a copy of the agreement. I find that deplorable. It is not the way for a government to act.

When people found out what was in the proposed final agreement, they complained, as they knew they had to, in order to get things changed. Senator Austin went up to the delta and made promises to all the people in that area that they would be able to present their case in some kind of public debate on the issue. But the proceedings from there on in remained secret, and Senator Austin's promise was proven to be just another Liberal promise: worthless.

There is with this agreement one unresolved and very important problem. It does not involve that many people but it rests on a principle. The prior rights of all the people of that area have not really been recognized and dealt with properly. One particular case is that of Canadian Reindeer and one Mr. William Nasogaluak. The reindeer herd, which had been owned and controlled by the Government of Canada for many years, was sold quite a few years ago to Mr. Nasogaluak. He was and is a very enterprising gentleman. He made a viable commercial success of reindeer herding in northern Canada, something that had never been done before. The idea had been started by the Government but it had never been commercially successful until it got into private hands. When that reindeer herd was sold to Mr. Nasogaluak it was quite evident that the Government had transferred to him the right to graze those reindeer within the reindeer grazing preserve established by Order in Council. Quite a proportion of that land had been transferred to COPE without consultation with Canadian Reindeer or Mr. Nasogaluak.

I consider this to be shabby treatment of a Canadian citizen by a shabby government. It is incumbent upon the Government of Canada to work out a deal with Canadian Reindeer, not tell them to work out some deal with COPE. They made their original deal with the Government of Canada. If the Government refuses to do this, it would be my suggestion that Mr. Nasogaluak has an extremely good case in law because I think the Government has broken its contract with him. Certainly he has an extremely good moral case.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has gone out of his way in this agreement to protect the prior interests of oil and mining companies, as well as the Government itself; but when it comes to an Inuvialuit, he finds himself completely out of the picture. This has to be resolved.

To go back to the agreement proper, it has some good points. It is not my job as a Member of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to overly dwell on the good points; they have all been presented to this House by the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. Gingras), so I will concentrate on some of the points that are not quite as good.

I think those bad points were summarized for me by an old pensioner, an Inuvialuit himself, whom I visited in the old folks' home in Inuvik—shortly after the signing of the agreement in Tuktoyaktuk. He said that the only thing the agreement means for hims is that once a year he will receive in the mail a little piece of paper that is going to tell him how wealthy he is. That is all he is going to get out of it. He is not going to get a piece of land, a house or any money for the few remaining years he has to live. All he can see himself getting out of it is this piece of paper telling him he has lots of money. But where is it? There are no dollar bills for his pocket. He does not get a cheque; he gets nothing.

That is the other side of the story. In my opinion, this results from the rather socialistic and collectivist nature of the agreement. I can see why we have that type of agreement dealing with collectivities rather than individuals. First of all, that is the policy of the present Government of Canada and especially that of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who ran as a left-wing candidate in the recent Liberal leadership convention. Negotiatiors and advisers to native organizations are frequently of this bent. It is unfortunate, but I guess of necessity native organizations very often become mirror images of the bureaucracies with which they have to deal.

In the Inuvialuit community, many individuals have excelled in many fields, such as industry, trade and commerce, in the arts and many others. I venture to suggest that there are more millionnaires per thousand of population among the Inuvialuit component of our population than any other. But in the negotiating process over many years these people were generally concerned with their own affairs. They did not really get involved in the long, slow process. As a result, the individual point of view was lost because people who are individualistically inclined were going about their own business. It is only when the final agreement was initialled that an action group was put together.

I would like to present some of the views of that Inuvialuit action group to the House. We know that 80 per cent of the population found in favour of the agreement and voted in that way. However, there is still one-fifth of the population with a different point of view. That point of view deserves to be heard. There was concern about the institutional nature of the agreement. One has only to look at a list of the institutions which are to be set up pursuant to the agreement. There are six or seven community corporations, each with a game council. There is the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation, the Inuvialuit Land Corporation, the Inuvialuit Development Corporation, the Inuvialuit Investment Corporation, the Inuvialuit Environmental Impact Review Board, the Inuvialuit Environmental Impact Screening Committee, the Inuvialuit Research Advisory Council and the Inuvialuit Wildlife Management Advisory Council. There are two of those, one for the Territories and one for the Yukon. There is the Inuvialuit Comprehensive Settlement Arbitration Board and various panels made up under that Board. There is the Inuvialuit Approval Authority, the Inuvialuit Game Council, the Porcupine-Cariboo Management Board, the Fisheries Joint Management Committee, the Yukon North Slope Annual Conference, the Inuvialuit Social Development Fund and its trustees, the Inuvialuit trust, the Inuvialuit Land Administration and the Inuvialuit Land Use Planning. There are two sub-groups of that, one for the Territories and one for the Yukon.

You can see from that, Mr. Speaker, that it is a very institutionalized approach to life. It was a concern that any profits derived from economic development ventures or disposition of land or anything else would be eaten up in administrative costs. The 20 per cent of the people who opposed the agreement argued in favour of a cash settlement with some cash coming into the hands of individuals. They wanted guaranteed hunting and trapping rights. Other Inuvialuit wanted individual title to land rather than collective title to land. I think it is incumbent that the other side of the argument be heard at this time as well as the majority view.

Under this agreement, the 2,500 beneficiaries will share in some 5,000 square miles of 71-A land—that is land with mineral rights—and some 30,000 square miles of so-called 71-B land to which the mineral rights are not attached. This land will be free from the power of expropriation by any government other than the federal Government. It will also be free from taxation. However, that does not mean to say that improvements made upon the land will be exempt from taxation.

Just to put it in perspective, the land part of the over-all settlement area, a lot of it being water, is about the same size as the Provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and you can throw in Prince Edward Island for good measure. That is the type of area we are talking about under this agreement. In addition to that there will be cash payments of over $152 million over the period of time up until 1997. There is also the economic enhancement fund of $10 million, which was the buy-out for the 10 per cent bid differential which the Parliamentary Secretary has already referred to, and a social development fund of some $7.5 million. That brings the cash payments up to a total of $169.5 million, if my arithmetic is correct.

In addition to that, through one of their institutions the Inuvialuit have the right to borrow at an 8 per cent rate of interest to a maximum outstanding amount of $87.5 million. In financial terms you can see that the settlement is reasonably generous.

There are some additional concerns with this Bill which I have raised previously so I do not want to go into a great deal of detail about them. However, I would like to have them on the record. First, there is a very unusual nature of the tenure to some of this land. I foresee difficulties in the future. If you cannot sell something, do you really own it? That is a question which has always bothered me. There are constraints put on the disposition of some of this land. I do not know what could happen if you wanted to mortgage some of it to get funds with which to develop the land. I do not know whether that is possible. Just the other day we dealt with that problem with respect to the Cree-Naskapi Act and the necessity of writing provisions into the Act so that mortgages could be held on the land. I do not know if we are going to run into similar difficulties here.

There is a very complex regulatory process set up pursuant to this agreement. There are a number of advisory boards in addition to the regulatory system which presently exists. It is going to slow things down and make it very difficult and expensive to go through this process. I suspect that at some point in the future people will look back and realize that they have tied themselves up so badly that they cannot then do the things they want to. That possibility also arises.

Another criticism which I have of the Bill is that there is nothing in it immediately for the elderly people. The old people had tough times in the past because it was pretty hard to make a living 50, 60 or 100 years ago in the Arctic areas before we had proper transportation and the other things we have today. Some of the old people went through some rough times and I do not see them getting anything out of this agreement. In my opinion, the old people should benefit more than anyone else. They should at least receive a half decent pension. The younger folks have education and the opportunities which we have in Canada today. I would prefer that the old people get something out of this rather than being neglected. That is what it looks like is happening to me.

Let us take another brief look at the proposed corporate structure. It is important to do this. Several things happened with the Alaskan settlement which was made some time ago. The old couple who were living in an old shack somewhere out in the bush before the settlement are still there with a fish net. Their lot does not seem to have improved very much. The settlement in Alaska created a new class of elite. The people who are involved in the corporate structure sit in their cork-lined boardrooms, draw big salaries, deal with millions of dollars and have a great old time. Somehow that has not filtered down to the little people.

Many objections have been brought up in Alaska. Tom Berger has been appointed to look at the agreement. That is something we want to avoid in Canada. If we make an agreement we do not want to have to say 15 years later it was a mistake. It is pretty important to study this. If you take the agreement and try to put all these institutions and bodies corporate in order, it comes out in kind of a spider's web pattern. The Inuvialuit Regional Corporation is stuck in the middle. One way or another it controls all the other organizations. It controls the Inuvialuit Development Corporation and the Inuvialuit Investment Corporation. Those two are set up to receive the cash payments. The Inuvialuit Land Corporation controls that too in a roundabout way as well as a direct way. The Inuvialuit Land Administration, which reports directly to the regional corporation, administers the land which is held by the Inuvialuit Land Corporation. Presumably it appoints directly the administrators and the ILC does not get to appoint the administrator.

Although in theory the community corporations are supposed to have some control over the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation, in reality I expect that it will work out the other way around. Even that is contemplated in the agreement. For instance, 71A/1 lands are supposed to be under the control of the various Inuvialuit community corporations, but the disposition or the control is always subject to the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation. The trust, which is the repository of the funds that may be made available to individuals, is also subject to a substantial amount of control by the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation.

We can see that whoever controls and exercises this power within the Inuvialuit Regional Corporation will exercise power and control moneys of a magnitude undreamt of by anybody like myself. It will be a fantastic amount of control and power available to whoever manages to usurp that organization.

If that control is misused, then we can expect discontent. There is always a problem when a collective approach is taken, as we see in this agreement and in the Bill, instead of an individual approach to matters. Of course, there is some potential for abuse in every way it is done but I believe that by using the collective model or socialist model, that potential for abuse is exacerbated. All one needs to do is to see the various states in the world today. We find that those that have adopted that model can be far more abusive of the citizens of those countries than those that take an individualistic approach.

That is the gist of my presentation this afternoon. In conclusion, I repeat that the agreement is finished. What we have to do now is to try to make it work. That will be pretty tough. I suspect that making it work will be just as difficult a task as negotiating the agreement in the first place, if not more difficult. I simply want to add my rejoinder again, that I hope that the little people will not get shafted as has happened before. I fervently hope that we do not find ourselves, five decades down the road, standing up again in the House and saying that this did not work, let us try to renegotiate it again. I sincerely hope that this agreement works out to the benefit of all the people who live in the settlement area.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to seek unanimous consent of the House to revert to tabling of reports from standing and special committees on behalf of the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee. The Chairman consulted with both opposition parties and received their approval on this. I would ask at this time if the House would give its unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposal put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

WESTERN ARCTIC (INUVIALUIT) CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Campbell (Cardigan) (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) that Bill C-49, an Act to approve, give effect to and declare valid the Agreement between the Committee for Original Peoples' Entitlement, representing the Inuvialuit of the Inuvialuit Settlement Region, and the Government of Canada and to amend the National Parks Act in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Standing Orders do not provide for questions and comments following the first three speakers.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-49 which gives effect to the agreement that was reached between the Government of Canada and the Inuvialuit of the Northwest Territories, reaching into the Yukon.

First, I would like to extend my congratulations to the Inuvialuit and the Minister. Our Party supports speedy passage of this legislation and the implementation of the agreement. While we support the speedy passage of this legislation, we want to note the very slow and painful process that has generally marked land claims and aboriginal claims negotiations and settlements in Canada over the past few years. That is especially true with regard to comprehensive claims.

It has been noted that this is only the second comprehensive claim to be settled, the first being the James Bay Agreement. I think every Member of the House is aware of the frustration and problems that were involved in terms of implementation of that agreement, problems regarding the flow of funds, with regard to relations between the Government of Canada, the Government of Quebec and the new establishment of government by the James Bay Cree and Inuit.

I have particular concern in this Bill over Clause 3 which is really at the heart of the principle of the settlement of claims in the present government policy. Clause 3 states:

All native claims, rights, title and interests, whatever they may be, in and to the Territory, of all Inuvialuit, whatever they may be, are hereby extinguished—

Our Party has a great deal of concern over the idea that aboriginal claims must be extinguished before any settlement can be reached on those claims. Aboriginal people have been moving toward the concept that an aboriginal right per se is something that cannot be extinguished. Rather, it is something that should be recognized. Having recognized it, the Government of Canada or the province or territory should negotiate for use with that aboriginal people. We should be involved in a process of recognition of rights rather than seek to terminate those rights. The termination of rights smacks too much of a real estate process. Real estate processes do violence to the concept of land that the aboriginal peoples of Canada have. Their relationship to the land is more basic and cultural and spiritual, in such a way that a real estate process often does violence to it. For that reason we support them in their concern to find some other approach rather than out and out extinguishment.

I note that the Minister has said he would explore alternatives to extinguishment. I hope that an alternative can be found and that that alternative can be applied to the Inuvialuit as well as to other aboriginal peoples. We were very concerned about the slow progress in the settlement of comprehensive claims in British Columbia, for example, when the Haida, Heltsuk and Nuu Chah Nulth submitted claims both to their land and to some offshore resources. It took months and it stretched into years before the Government even accepted these claims for negotiation. This slowness in processing is very discouraging for aboriginal peoples. It is one of the reasons this is only the second agreement to be reached. I suppose it returns to the fact that the Department, through the Office of Native Claims, is really the judge, jury and executioner in terms of the entire aboriginal claims process.

Aboriginal people coming up against the Department find that it is very easy for them to be stonewalled. When they are stonewalled, they have no real process of appeal. We would like to see the entire claims process opened up and made more fair, in a way that aboriginal peoples would know that they had certain rights and processes to follow by law instead of being at the good favour of the Government.

When claims are recognized and accepted for negotiation, the Government is very slow in its different processes. For example, we are concerned about the Kaska Dene in northern British Columbia. They received only a quarter of the funding which they recognized as being necessary if they were to do an adequate job of researching their aboriginal claim. Having received only a quarter of their funds, their entire claim process is now in some difficulty. We must recognize that it is a very expensive process to establish what is a claim, to establish traditional patterns of land use and occupancy, and to establish traditional hunting, fishing and food-gathering processes. The research involved is very expensive. Having established a pattern of research, it is important that there be continuity, that it not be interrupted. As the Kaska Dene received only a quarter of their funding, and unless further funds flow fairly quickly, they will have some difficulty maintaining continuity. There is a possibility of fairly rapid development of the mineral, timber and hydroelectric resources in their area. It is important that they be able to conduct the research now rather than have to wait. Also they are in a situation where some of their traditional lands overlap some of those under claim by the Council of Yukon Indians. It is important that they have funding now so that they can conduct the necessary research to solve any overlap situations on a fair and equitable basis between themselves and their good friends in the Council of Yukon Indians.

The Special Committee on Indian Self-Government recommended that there be a new claims process. This is something that we in our Party would heartily endorse. It recommended a claims process wherein the Department was not the judge, jury and executioner, a claims process which recognized the legitimate claims of Indian peoples and other aboriginal peoples in settled areas. Presently there is a concept, which the Government follows, whereby it says that aboriginal claims in settled areas such as in southwestern British Columbia have been superseded by law. In effect, what we are saying by that process is that aboriginal rights, claims and title have been superseded by might. Might makes right is what the concept superseded by law means. We should open up the process to recognize that if people had basic aboriginal rights 200 years or 300 years ago and if they never negotiated those rights away, they are still intact. The concept that they can be superseded by law really says that they have been taken away by force. That is not a concept of justice to which most Canadians would want to subscribe.

Another area which we would like to see changed in a future land claims policy would be the removal of the present separation between settlement of land claims and settlement of political issues. For aboriginal people, political rights are an integral part of the claims which they are seeking to put forward. Also the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government, through a long series of hearings, established very clearly that aboriginal peoples had political rights and exercised those political rights long before the coming of European colonists to this continent. Those political rights are the essence of their aboriginal rights. To talk about an aboriginal land claims process which neglects those political rights does violence to their whole concept of the land.

The Union of British Columbia Indian Chiefs has a slogan: "The land is the culture". Basically, land, culture, spiritual values and political rights are interrelated among aboriginal peoples. To say that we are willing to negotiate land rights here but that we are not willing to discuss political rights which have to be resolved in a separate forum, is to do violence to the basic understanding of aboriginal peoples of themselves and of their relationship to the land.

We support the whole concept that political rights should be involved in the settlement of aboriginal claims. Coming from British Columbia, I am concerned that while the federal Government moves very slowly in the settlement of claims, the Government of British Columbia is actively stonewalling and preventing the claims.

For a number of years now significant progress on a number of claims had not been possible until the Province of British Columbia moved on the claim of the Nishga people. The process has been very slow and very painful. Anything the federal Government or the Canadian public could do to move the reactionary, right-wing Government of British Columbia toward a more positive recognition of aboriginal claims would be helpful. It would help to solve a long-standing injustice. It would help Indian people of British Columbia to take their rightful place in the culture and economy of British Columbia.

We want to see the claims process speeded up. It should recognize the rights of aboriginal peoples in Canada. Whether it be the Indians, the Metis or the Inuit, they should have their rights recognized. They should have a decent land base from which they can operate economically so that they will no longer be at the bottom statum of society in terms of the economy. There is no reason that being a member of the aboriginal peoples should be equated with poverty. However, that is the situation in Canada, because in effect these people have been robbed of their rights.

It is important to institute a new and more speedy land claims policy which will not extinguish those rights but will recognize them. This policy should not try to separate those rights from their political rights. It should see them as being integral and it should recognize their rights to a decent economic base.

With those few remarks, I am pleased that the Inuvialuit have made some progress in the negotiation of their claim with the federal Government. They negotiated, as most aboriginal people have had to do, under considerable pressure. I congratulate them on their settlement. Like all Members, we hope that it works for their betterment. We look forward to speedy passage of this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is it the pleasure of the House to adop the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Herbert in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-49, an Act to approve, give effect to and declare valid the Agreement between the Committee for Original Peoples' Entitlement, representing the Inuvialuit of the Inuvialuit Settlement Region, and the Government of Canada and to amend the National parks Act in consequence thereof.

On Clause 2—Definitions

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I assume that this is the opportunity for me to ask questions of a general nature. The document entitled Inuvialuit Settlement Agreement dated March 27, 1984, the one I have in my hand, and I would expect the Parliamentary Secretary to be familiar with it, is this the agreement that was voted on by the Inuvialuit?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: If the Hon. Member will wait a few moments, the officials will soon be here.

In the meantime, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) that I quoted a figure of 91,000 square kilometres earlier, which is 35,000 square miles, according to my calculations. I do not know whether the translator said 91,000 square kilometres—

[English]

Would the Hon. Member please repeat his question?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, the document entitled Inuvialuit Settlement Agreement, dated March 27, 1984, the one that I have in my hand, and with which the Parliamentary Secretary should be familiar, is that the agreement that was voted on by the Inuvialuit?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: I can assure the Hon. Member that the people voted on the basis of this document, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Which agreement was signed by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and by the COPE representatives and everybody else at the grand signing ceremony? Was it this document, the one to which I have referred, or was it another document?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Yes, it was the document entitled "The Western Arctic Claim. The Inuvialuit Final Agreement", which is dated June 5, 1984.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, that is precisely what I thought. The document that was voted on and ratified by the Inuvialuit was this document, the one dated March 27, 1984. The one that presumably was signed by the parties to the agreement—and we have just been told by the Parliamentary Secretary that that was indeed the case—was a different document from the Western Arctic claim, the Inuvialuit Final Agreement. That is the title of it. Is it a different document altogether. There are several discrepancies between these two documents. How can it be held that the document that was in fact signed was the one that received the approval of the Inuvialuit?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: I can assure the Hon. Member that every minor differences between this document, which comes from the Department, and the one on which the Inuit voted was agreed upon by all concerned.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, although I am not going to pursue it at this time, I would suggest that it could leave some doubts in the future as to the validity of this agreement when you have people voting on one agreement and then signing yet another agreement. I want to make one observation on the same point. Members of Parliament had circulated to them the Western Arctic claim, the Inuvialuit Final Agreement. Then we had a separate sheet of paper, not attached to this document at all, with the signatures thereon. Why is a copy of the agreement not available, the one which was presumably signed, with the signatures attached thereto? Why do we have a separate sheet of paper, which really does not say what it is all about, floating around with the signatures on it?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: I am most surprised at the nature of the question asked by the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker. The only difference between the copy which will be distributed and the copy which we have here today is in the format. This page will be inserted inside the document, like this. I do not know how this is done technically, but I know that when the document is distributed, the signatures will be inserted inside, like this, and will form an integral part of the document. I must point out that the difference between this document and the other one is that this one is the legal document.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, how many beneficiaries are there under the Inuvialuit Settlement Agreement?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, there are now approximately 2,500 registered Inuvialuit.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, how many of the beneficiaries under this agreement are already receiving benefits pursuant to the Alaskan settlement?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: There are four, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary misunderstood my question. I think that there are considerably more beneficiaries under this agreement, who are at the same time receiving benefits pursuant to land claim settlements made outside of Canada, particularly in Alaska. Very many of the Inuvialuit originated in what is now Alaska and came into what is now Canadian territory in the early part of this century. I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary could reconsider that figure.

The Deputy Chairman: Because I have to interrupt the proceedings, maybe the response could be given when we resume discussion on Clause 2 at six o'clock. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the Bill later this day.

Progress reported.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING STAFF OF MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Blaker: Thank you for recognizing me on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. You may recall that on June 4 of this year, the House considered a Private Member's Bill, Bill C-215, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae). As debate continued during Private Members' Hour, it was proposed by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Foster) that the subject matter of the Bill be referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. There was then a subamendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). That subamendment was in fact passed by the House unanimously.

In order to continue with this effort of assisting the staff of Members of Parliament, the proposal would now be for you, Mr. Speaker, to seek the consent of the House, the consent of the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis) on behalf of the Official Opposition, as well as the consent of the Hon. Member for Beaches. To the best of our understanding, there would be unanimous consent to accept the amendment made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board that the Bill be withdrawn and the subject matter referred to that committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The House has heard the proposal made by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. Does the House give its unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is as follows: Mr. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan) moved that Bill C-215, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act (staff of Members of the House of Commons) be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Foster moved an amendment thereto that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor: Bill C-215, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act (staff of Members of the House of Commons), be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Young moved: That the said committee submit a report to the House of Commons within a period of 10 days.

The question is on the amendment as amended. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It was my understanding that the question being put to you for unanimous consent by the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Blaker) was that the subject matter be sent to a committee without time restrictions or that the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) be treated as though it were never made.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The problem the Chair would have is that the amendment as amended has already been approved by the House in that form. In effect, I would submit that it would require a change to eliminate that time restriction.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I believe that what the Parliamentary Secretary has said is absolutely right. The time remaining to us between now and Friday obviously does not amount to 10 days. If the motion to have the Bill referred to committee presents any difficulty to the House at all, then to accommodate that concern, I would be prepared—I am not sure what form it would take and I do not wish to get into a procedural hassle—to move an amendment to strike the requirement of 10 days, if that is a proper procedure.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, it is the understanding of the Official Opposition, through discussions with our colleagues, that we would prefer that the amendment be deleted and if the Chair feels that the proper way to do that would be to pass a motion in the House deleting that amendment, then we would concur with that ruling.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair is in some difficulty procedurally. In fact, the irregularity is such that all I can suggest at the moment is that there might be a disposition to give unanimous consent to eliminate the amendment to the amendment, it being the requirement for the submission of the report within 10 days. Unfortunately, the Hon. Member who proposed this particular motion is not present at this time. It imposes some difficulty on the Chair, but if Hon. Members of the House wish to give unanimous consent for this rather unusual procedure without setting any precedents, then under the circumstances, perhaps the Chair would be willing to accept that unanimous consent. In that case, the amendment would be amended by deleting the amendment to the amendment and the Chair would then read only the amendment without the amendment to the amendment. Is that clear? It is not clear to me but if it is clear to the House, I shall read the amendment as amended.

Perhaps in order to save time, may I assume that the House is giving its unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Agreed and so ordered.

Just to clear everything up, the question is on the motion as amended. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Accordingly, the order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn, and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

MOTIONS

[English]

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ADVISABILITY OF CHANGING NAME AND EXPANDING RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of (a) changing the Canadian Wheat Board's name to the Canadian Grains Board (b) expanding the Board's responsibility by placing the major grains—barley, corn, flax, oats, rapeseed, rye, soybeans and wheat—under its jurisdiction and by giving the Board full responsibility for marketing all feed grains delivered to primary elevators in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the other matter was cleared up in so short a time.

The agricultural industry across Canada is in trouble. In the last three or four months, there has been an increase of almost 150 per cent in the number of farm bankruptcies. At the rate we are going, there will be fewer and fewer farms across the country every year to the point where the agricultural industry is bound to suffer. It is too bad that an industry the workforce of which at one time made up approximately 90 per cent of the population of Canada is now down to a workforce of 5 per cent of the population and dwindling fast.

The situation is particularly bad because the industry could support many, many more farmers than it is now supporting. The consolidation that is going on may be good for the individual farmer but is not good for the country as a whole. Therefore, although this particular motion deals with one small part of the problem, I feel that it is important to put this motion before the House and have it discussed as part of the solution to the problem.

This particular motion deals with only one part of the agricultural industry, that part of the agricultural industry which is the growing of grain on the Prairies. That grain is the key to a great portion of the money from foreign exchange which Canada earns every year. Therefore, it is very important that we have a stable structure which will allow grain to be gathered, shipped and sold. That is the duty of the Canadian Wheat Board.

The mandate of the Canadian Wheat Board is to buy the grain, sell it at the best possible price and turn over as much of that sale money to the farmer as is possible. That is the key to the Wheat Board. It operates in the best interests of the farmer, not in the best interests of a variety of other people who handle the grain between the farmer and the consumer.

The global problem is that we do not have a system in place which allows income security for farmers. To some extent, I suppose I am being remiss in my duty in treating only a small portion of the problem rather than the total problem. A couple of weeks ago my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), brought forward Bill C-232 which dealt with parity of prices for farm products. That Bill was sent to committee to be discussed. The very fact that that Bill was sent to committee indicates that the House recognizes that agriculture generally is in trouble and that we must take a good global look at what should be done.

If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) were here today, he would stand and say that agriculture in Canada is doing better than agriculture in any other country in the world. Then he would list all sorts of good things which he is doing for agriculture or which the Government claims it is doing for agriculture. Let us look at a few of the things which the Government says it is doing.

It claims that the farmers are being well financed and are better off because the Farm Credit Corporation is in place. It can be interpreted that way, but it can also be interpreted that the interest rates of the Farm Credit Corporation are probably the biggest factor in the number of farm bankruptcies.

In the last year the Government has dealt with freight rates. That is a very important factor in the bringing of grain to market. How did the Government deal with it? It increased those rates. If we take a look at that process to find out what the rates will be in the next few years, we will see that the increase has only started and that there will be many more increases. Every one of those increases puts farmers in the position in which there will be a much smaller chance of making a living. Many more farmers will leave their farms because they will not be able to make an adequate living.

Both opposition Parties have often asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Agriculture if they would relieve some of the pressure on farmers by taking the tax off fuel. They tell us that it sounds like a good idea, but they will not do it. The Government has made no effort to improve the situation as far as farmers are concerned.

That seems like a rather convoluted approach to a motion which deals directly and specifically with the Canadian Wheat Board, but I am trying to put forth the idea that what we need in all approaches to agriculture—if we are to deal with tax on fuels, freight rates and interest rates—is an income security structure which will allow farmers to know that they will get the best possible return for their labour. We are talking about a structure which the farmer can recognize as fair. That was the basis of the development of the Wheat Board initially and it is still the basis of its operation. It seems incongruous that what works well for wheat should not be extended to other crops.

For example, at this moment we probably have the best example in years of what can happen to grain if there is not a structure which protects the farmer. Last fall when farmers began selling rapeseed and canola, they received approximately $5 per bushel. Since that time, the price has increased to as much as $16 per bushel. Most of that grain was sold by farmers at $5, $6, $7 or $8 per bushel. That grain was stored. Recently it was released into the market at $16 per bushel. Who received the profit? Not the farmers who planted the grain, took the risk, hauled it into town and sold it to pay for their production. The people who received the advantage of the increase were those people who speculated on the price of grain. They bought the rapeseed and held it. They did nothing. They did not work. It was no effort for them. Sometimes they did not even hold the grain. They simply held a piece of paper for a six-month period and then sold the grain at $16 per bushel. They received a profit of approximately $10 per bushel. Had that money been turned into the system, as it would have been had the grain been sold under the Wheat Board, it would have been spread out among the farmers who produced rapeseed last year.

I grew up on a farm before the Wheat Board was established and I can remember very vividly my father selling wheat at 75 cents per bushel in the fall. At that time he hoped that he could hold on to at least half of his grain in order that he could sell it for $1.75 in the spring. In the spring, the Winnipeg Grain Exchange would have manipulated the market to the point where the grain which they had held and had bought from the farmers for 75 cents per bushel in the fall would have increased in order that the Grain Exchange could make $1 per bushel. Again, that profit was made with no effort and no risk. The grain was bought and they sold it when they had manipulated the price of grain upward. That was the reason the Wheat Board was established, by the Conservatives. The same thing is going on right now.

My motion suggests that the Government take a look at extending the structure, which now controls wheat, barley and oats sold for the export market, to cover other grains in order that other farmers are not ripped off in the same manner as they have been in the past; as they were with the change in canola grain costs from $5 to $16 per bushel. Possibly the return would have been less than $16 per bushel, but if some farmers could afford to keep enough to receive $16 per bushel, they would be the only ones in that whole block who probably did well.

What I am really doing in this motion, Mr. Speaker, is plunking for fairness and against speculation. Farmers who did not grow up in the days when speculation ran rampant, do not realize how well they are served by the Wheat Board. Many of the younger farmers feel that they could go out on the market themselves and do better. I would challenge any of them to do so. A number of years ago we had a rather long discussion on the possibilities of putting all of the feed grains on the open market. The result of those discussions was very interesting. Although a portion of the feed grain is sold on the open market, Mr. Speaker, there still is a certain amount of it sold through the Wheat Board. It is not surprising that when the Wheat Board does well, when it sells well on the export market, the open market then does well, because what is happening is that the Wheat Board is taking off the domestic market a certain amount of feed, which allows the prices to go up. That would not happen if that dual system was not in place. Prices for the cattlemen in years when the Wheat Board sells a lot of grain overseas would not go up the way they do. And in those years when the Wheat Board does not sell well overseas, the price of grain goes down, which is good for the cattlemen but not for the producer of feed. That kind of up and down roller-coaster approach to agriculture is what we had back in the 1930s, but it is not what we want now. It is still happening with canola. It would be a good approach to put before the grain growers of Canada at least an opportunity to take a look at how that kind of market would work.

The Winnipeg Grain Exchange is a well established group of people. It claims it is helping the farmers. It buys as low as possible and sells as high as possible. In the process it makes money. It gets that money from either the consumer, because he pays more for his grain, or from the producer, because he receives less for his grain. No one can argue with that. The grain exchange will tell you that sometimes it loses but, obviously, on the average it does not, because if it lost or even if it just balanced out, the grain exchange would soon disappear. Therefore, it is there to make as much profit as possible, and that profit must come either from the producer or from the consumer. The grain exchange will tell you how good it is for the market, but it has never proven that it is anything other than a parasite on that market because it takes money out of the pockets of the farmers and the consumers.

The Canadian Wheat Board, Hon. Members will say, is a good operation. It buys its grain from the farmers and sells it on the world market. It returns as much of that profit as possible to the farmer. Why is it then not possible to take every grain which is produced and put it through the same kind of structure so that the farmers receive the maximum return from their efforts and labour? This habit of living off the farmers should not go on. What is happening, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, is that we have a situation which becomes less fair as time goes on, to the point where fewer and fewer farmers are going to survive. It is very disappointing to realize there are places where a few years ago ten farmers lived quite well on what now only support two farmers. The surprising part of it is that statistics show that the amount of income tax paid by the farmer who is now ten times as big as he was before, is actually less than paid by the farmer next door to him with the half section or the section. We are developing an agricultural system in the grain country which is not providing for as many people as it possibly could, and that is not good for the country.

Let us take a look at the organizations and the global structure of agriculture and try to develop some sensible and logical ways of making sure that the farmer will get enough to survive on. One of the ways we might help is to take a look at the Wheat Board and at least develop a stable structure for our marketing.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the motion which has been put before the House by the Hon. Member. I wondered, listening to the Hon. Member speak, how many farmers who operate in the free market system would still be alive if it is true that they are all broke. However, that is not the case. The Hon. Member has put forward a reasonable argument for his motion and I understand that the strong argument for the motion is the concept upon which the Wheat Board has operated since its beginning, that is the concept of pooling, of sharing, so that the price at the beginning of the year for the farmer is the same as at the end of the year. That process—of which we are very proud—was put in place by a Conservative Government to meet a problem which was in place some 50 years ago. Of course, many things have changed since that time, but something which has not changed is that the Canadian Wheat Board has served the western farmers well.

I want to put forward a couple of suggestions to the Hon. Member. First, we object to his suggestion that the name of the Canadian Wheat Board be changed. Every farmer, whether old or young, recognizes the good service of the Canadian Wheat Board in this country. The Canadian Wheat Board has an international reputation of being able to sell the farmers' grain at a reasonable and often better price than other countries have been able to get on the international market. I know that the Hon. Member is somewhat jealous that the Progressive Conservative Party brought in the Canadian Wheat Board. Of course, every time he gets on a political platform in Saskatchewan, I know he has trouble swallowing the fact that a Progressive Conservative Government brought this Canadian Wheat Board into being. That is probably why he wants to change the name. He is not satisfied to just bring other grains into the market and leave the name the same. He would rather change the name and hope that the New Democratic Party could then take some credit for it. We take exception to that for two reasons: first, it was brought in by an excellent government some sixty years ago, and, second, the international reputation of the Canadian Wheat Board is well known; there is no need to change the name and try to get other countries in this world to understand that we now have a new operation in Canada which is attempting to sell wheat, oats and barley in that market.

That is one part of the motion with which I have difficulty. The second part is this. The Hon. Member was not clear, and I would like to have asked him this question. If the NDP were in power would they impose this on Canadian farmers? We all know their record of defending western farmers when it came to a change in the Constitution. Their leader was all too willing to side with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and impose a Constitution. When it came to the National Energy Program, the NDP could not run up behind the Government quickly enough to impose that on western Canada. Therefore I ask if they would impose this on the farmers of western Canada if they were in power.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this Party would not do that. We want to try to get farmers to work together rather than against one another on how to market their grains. This was the difficulty we faced during the Crow debate. The solution to the problem is that if the farmers of western Canada make the decision that they want to market canola, rapeseed or flaxseed through the Canadian Wheat Board, then we ought to respect that decision. But that is not the message the Members of my Party have gotten from their constituents. The question is still open. In fact, when the wheat pools did a survey in 1981 they found the majority of farmers were opposed to this move.

Today many farmers have the opportunity to judge the performance of the Canadian Wheat Board. The most important crop in this respect is canola. It is a cash crop to many farmers. They are not interested in getting an initial price; they want the cash up front. Canola is not the sole crop for most farmers. It is grown as a cash crop because in the West, particularly on the Prairies, a farmer does not have the opportunity to grow a variety of crops. He is limited to a certain number, and that is one of the reasons that most of the canola growers in western Canada are satisfied with the present system.

The assumption that if you grow canola and sell it at the beginning of the year the price will be less than at the end of the year is just that, an assumption. In some years that is the case, in some years it is not. The assumption that the grain companies are always the winners, along with the speculators on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, if you want to call them that, is not true. They establish a market, a price, which in turn establishes freedom. The strongest argument by farmers opposed to putting these grains under the Canadian Wheat Board is that they want some element of freedom.

Then we have the argument of the feed grain users, the cattlemen, hog and poultry growers. They also question the value of having feed grain under the Canadian Wheat Board. This was the case up until 1974, when the decision was made to allow feed grains some freedom. The question is still open as to whether that is the way it should stay, or if it should revert to the Canadian Wheat Board. The 1981 survey showed that 55 per cent of the farmers in western Canada wished the system to remain the same as it was in 1974. I have to say again that I respect that decision.

There is a point I think the Wheat Board ought to take very seriously. If they want the feed grains under their jurisdiction they ought to show some flexibility. Many farmers along the southern part of the Prairies have been able to find markets in the U.S. for their feed grains at substantially higher prices than they could in their own locales. Yet the Wheat Board turns down every one of those export permits. That is totally unfair and it does not show the kind of flexibility which is needed in the interests of western farmers, should the Hon. Member's motion turn into reality and all feed grains go under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. Farmers say it is nice to have the advantage of pooling and sharing, it is nice to have these experts out in the world selling their grain, but then they are faced with this situation and they wonder about the flexibility of the Wheat Board.

I think it is clear that while the Member's motion has something to offer, it is an open question which farmers ought to be discussing. They ought to be giving their elected representatives their views on whether the system should change, but there is no way it ought to be imposed upon them.

There are arguments on both sides of the coin, both of which are very important, such as imposing a name change on the Canadian Wheat Board. Cash cropping is important to many western farmers, but they will not be able to do that under the Canadian Wheat Board. Western farmers are concerned that the initial prices set for grains are far too low given the international market. They question the kind of service they would have if everything was under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. These things have to be addressed, so rather than move too quickly on this motion, there are many other things we should look at. I have in mind things like the Bracken formula, things like producer cars, revisions to the Crow rate, updating of the elevator system, branchlines, West Coast and East Coast efficiency in moving grain, and the opportunity to have value added industries on the Prairies such as meat, grain and canola processing. These are all very essential things which we must move on very quickly, perhaps even more quickly than on the suggestion the Hon. Member is making.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today proposes that the government should consider the advisability of changing the Canadian Wheat Board's name to the Canadian Grains Board and expanding the Board's responsibility by placing the major grains—barley, corn, flax, oats, rapeseed, rye, soybeans and wheat—under its jurisdiction and by giving the Board full responsibility for marketing all feed grains delivered to primary elevators in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this motion may have substantial repercussions on the Canadian grain and oil seed industry and on the producers, organizations, government and non-government boards and private companies that constitute the industry. At the present time, the Canadian Wheat Board, and I may add, Mr. Speaker, that in 1985 the Board will be celebrating its fiftieth birthday and I think it would be appropriate to wish the Board, somewhat in advance, a very happy birthday and offer it our best wishes for a successful future.

The Board is the only marketing body for wheat, oats and barley grown in the Prairies and destined for export or for human consumption in Canada. The Board may also sell feed barley, oats and wheat on the domestic feed grain market. The Canadian Wheat Board's primary purpose is to sell as much grain as it can at the best possible price and to maximize returns for Prairie wheat, oats and barley producers.

Although the Canadian Wheat Board plays a major role in the Canadian grain industry, we must not forget that the industry includes a wide range of government and non-government bodies that work together to transport grain to Canadian exporters and consumers. I shall, if I may, take a few moments to talk about the principal members of the Canadian grain industry. I shall, of course, leave enough time for the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) to make a few comments before six o'clock, because I would be very interested to hear what he has to say.

Producers are the most important group in the industry. Without them, the Canadian grain industry would not exist. Grain is produced in all Canadian provinces. According to the 1981 Census, and this is very important, Mr. Speaker, Canada had 162.8 million acres of farm land in 1981 with 76.5 million acres being farmed and 24 million acres in fallow, most of the land being used for growing grain and oil seeds. Still in 1981, 127,359 farming operations stated they grew wheat, 81,417 oats, 102,190 barley, 33,543 corn, 12,819 rye, 12,083 flax, 10,655 soya beans and 14,804 canola. This shows how diversified grain production is in this country. Farmers in all provinces stated they grew at least one of these grains or oil seeds. The four provinces where most of these farmers are concentrated are, of course, the Prairie provinces: Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and Ontario. Quebec, British Columbia, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island also have a substantial number of grain operations.

According to estimates, total profits from grain and oil seed amounted to $7 billion in 1983. Grain producers are therefore a major force in determining the structure, components and functioning of the grain industry. Although the Canadian Wheat Board is a federal body and is subject to federal laws, it is above all an organization that is concerned with selling wheat, oats and barley on behalf of Canadian producers. Over the years, producers have established the marketing system they want to facilitate grain sales. In his motion, the Hon. Member is suggesting that the Government consider the advisability of changing the name of the Board. Mr. Speaker, I think most Hon. Members would agree that it would be very high-handed of the Government to want to set unilaterally the conditions for the sale of a specific grain or oil seed.

We recall that in the seventies, producers decided, by referendum, to maintain a free market for canola. Today, canola is sold on the free market. Rye and flax grown in the Prairies are also sold on the free market. Grain corn produced in Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba is also sold on the free market. Oleaginous grains marketing boards do not sell all the harvests of producers, as do the Canadian Wheat Board and the Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board. This board is responsible for buying and selling the wheat grown in Ontario, except for wheat sold among producers for agricultural purposes. The Ontario board must seek the best market price for any Ontario-grown wheat, in accordance with well-established marketing principles. There is another kind of board, such as the Ontario Soybean Producers Marketing Board which negotiates for producers rather than representing them.

Just to say a few words about the Ontario Soybean Producers Marketing Board, it was established in 1949 to improve marketing conditions for Ontario-grown soybeans. Every year it negotiates the conditions of soybean sales to dealers. However, the producer sells his harvest directly to a processor, a cattleman or a grain agency. Cooperatives and companies which buy and sell grains in their own name also provide worthwhile services for the Canadian Wheat Board and the Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board. Cooperatives and private companies own and operate primary and terminal elevators as well as sales outlets for farm and processing equipment.

Mr. Speaker, I think I do not have enough time to explain to the House the ideal way in which the Canadian Wheat Board and the Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board operate. Keeping in mind the outstanding business done by grain producers and the quality of services offered over the years by the Canadian Wheat Board to all the producers who joined together within organizations or institutions to market their products, it does not seem advisable, as suggested by the Hon. Member of the Official Opposition who spoke before me, to change anything in the structure of the Canadian Wheat Board.

In Canada, there are also grain companies, the first and foremost being farmer co-ops. There is no need to insist on the value of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Alberta Wheat Pool, the Manitoba Pool Elevators, the United Grain Producers in the Prairies, United Co-ops in Ontario and the Coopérative fédérée in Quebec. It is my view that all those groups, working for the welfare of grain producers, have demonstrated their worth.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to leave some time to the Honourable member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), who wishes to speak on the matter, but I want to state that the motion put by the Honourable member for the new Democratic Party is rather well stated, although I wonder if all the possible ramifications have been examined. Although farmers are not unanimous, and indeed other interested groups, and this has been a fact for a long time, the same motion has been put forward on various occasions by the New Democratic Party. In fact, the same member introduced a motion that was almost identical in 1980. It has been said that his motivation was sincere, which I do not doubt. But since he keeps reviving the idea, it seems to me that his party is not aware of all the evidence pointing to the practical problems that the implementation of that concept will raise. Books and treatises have been written on the pros and cons of a marketing board and other systems. And although the Canadian and provincial governments are giving much attention to the issue, the choice finally should rest with producers. They are most directly involved. As has already been mentioned in the debate, there is no evidence that the establishment of a national Board would get significant support accross the nation, and even among the main crop growers. Clearly producers still want some flexibility in their operations.

However, Mr. Speaker, it is clear to us that after 49 years of existence, the Canadian Wheat Board has been fulfilling its mandate. I was happy to hear the honourable member from the Official Opposition, who spoke before me, state the Canadian Wheat Board was an internationally famous agency that was a credit to Canada and Canadian grain growers.

[English]

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) has put forward a Private Members' Motion in two parts. The first part is to change the name of the Canadian Wheat Board. Let me quickly and simply say that I cannot support that, primarily because of the implications that flow from the second part of his motion. That is what I propose to comment on briefly.

The second part of the motion proposes to expand the board's responsibilities by placing the major grains; barley, corn, flax, oats, rapeseed, rye, soybeans and wheat under its jurisdiction and by giving the board full responsibility for marketing all feed grains delivered to primary elevators in Canada. Of course, by implication, that is primarily in western Canada.

Let me say that I cannot support this proposal that would put our domestic feed grains delivered to our western country elevators completely under the authority of the Wheat Board as the Wheat Board's total responsibility.

This proposal quite properly invites comment on our so-called domestic feed grain policy. This most important issue, especially for western Canada, was deliberately and skilfully avoided during the six-month Crow debate last year. It is an issue that should the debated publicly and here in Parliament, along with the so-called Canadian Livestock Feed Board, when an appropriate occasion should develop.

All domestic feed grains may now be delivered to our western country elevators by producers with the appropriate permit book. But for livestock feeders to get that feed grain out of the elevators for local livestock feeding is quite another matter.

Of course, the Board's policy is to eventually ship all or nearly all of the feed grains for export. It can be purchased from the country elevators after the necessary permit is obtained from the Wheat Board, but at substantially higher prices than is available for deliveries of that same feed grain, even after allowing for a modest elevator charge.

It must surely be obvious that our domestic feed grain policy must be thoroughly reviewed and changed significantly to serve its biggest total market for that feed grain. Surely that is our total livestock feeding industry, essentially cattle and hogs, especially in western Canada.

It should be obvious to all of us that the greatest potential value-added industry for our grain sector in western Canada is not our flour milling, our meat packing and processing industry or even the oil seed crushing industry. It is by far the total livestock feeding industry for cattle and hogs and utilizing huge amounts of western barley and oats right in western Canada. That is by far our most important value-added industry in agriculture in western Canada.

If we are going to change our feed grains policy in the West, let us allow our country elevators to serve this industry by taking it in for local storage and also selling it locally on an open market, right out of the same elevator.

The well known and outdated corn competitive pricing formula should be scrapped. If a new feed grain pricing formula is necessary it could be related to the barley export price worked back to the country elevators.

The proposal by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert would be the kiss of death for this tremendous potential for a total livestock feeding industry all across western Canada. Let us make some changes in our feed grain policy, but let us make those changes work for our western agricultural future, where the feed grains are produced and where the value-added industries are logical and can be done most efficiently.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 127 seeks government consideration of the advisability of changing the Canadian Wheat Board's name to the Canadian Grains Board and expanding the Board's responsibility by placing the major grains under its jurisdiction and by giving the Board full responsibility for marketing all feed grains delivered to primary elevators in Canada.

In essence, the motion seeks the universal adoption of the Board marketing system for the grains marketed commercially in Canada and consequently the elimination of the open market system which continues to be used for many of the major grains sold for domestic use in this country.

Public controversy over the relative merits and shortcomings of these two marketing systems has waxed and waned with strong feelings held on both sides, ever since the Board marketing system was first employed as a temporary measure to tide over a period of market uncertainty at the end of World War I. Thus, the debate on this motion is simply the revival and continuation of the debate on an issue which has not been resolved to the satisfaction of all producers over the past 60 years.

Let us review that debate. It should be recognized that the development of the Canadian Wheat Board marketing system was related closely to the importance of wheat exports to the economy of the West and the history of efforts in western Canada to develop a marketing agency to deal with its major customers abroad. It had little to do with the appropriate marketing systems for sales within Canada. In considering the motion which is simply a continuation of the historic debate, the debate over the best marketing system for grain is often influenced by the nature of grain or oil seed under discussion, the type of markets to which this is to be sold and whether domestic processing is an important part of that market. A further development of this debate relates to the discussion over domestic marketing of feed grains in Canada.

The decision by the Government to modify the marketing system for domestic feed grains in 1974 was mainly in response to problems perceived by users of food grains in Canada with respect to price equity and assurance of supply. At that time some producers again considered that the Government should place the marketing of all western feed grains under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. Others considered that the open market system should be retained both for sales within the Prairie region and in the rest of Canada.

Some believed that the Canadian Wheat Board should be the only seller of feed grains to parts of the country outside the Prairies and that the Livestock Feed Board of Canada should be the sole buyer. However, the price would have to be negotiated between the two boards and no effective method for doing this could be found. Consequently, a new policy was developed to provide a national market for feed grains with prices established by the full interplay of supply and demand. This provided all users in Canada with access to feed grains in all regions of Canada.

The marketing system was changed to provide direct access to western supplies by users in all parts of Canada through the open market. Subsequently, arrangements were developed involving the Canadian Wheat Board and the Livestock Feed Board of Canada on a basis for sales of Canadian Wheat Board grains into the domestic feed market at corn competitive prices. This is a very condensed review of facts concerning the evolution of the open market and the board marketing systems.

However, the hours provided for the consideration of private members business has now expired. Pursuant to the order of Thursday, June 14, 1984, the House now resumes the consideration of Government Orders.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please! Pursuant to Standing Order 58, I now leave the chair for the House to go into a Committee of the Whole.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN ARCTIC (INUVIALUIT) CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-49, an Act to approve, give effect to and declare valid the Agreement between the Committee for Original Peoples' Entitlement, representing the Inuvialuit of the Inuvialuit Settlement Region, and the Government of Canada and to amend the National Parks Act in consequence thereof—Mr. Campbell (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development)—Mr. Herbert in the chair.

On Clause 2—Definitions

The Deputy Chairman: At five o'clock when we interrupted the discussion, Clause 2 was before the committee and the Hon. Member for Western Arctic had put some questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a correction to the answer I gave earlier concerning the number of Inuvialuit covered under the Alaska agreement. They are included in Canada if they are not party to other claims within Canada, but for those Inuvialuit who are registered under the Alaska agreement, practically . . . those are "cash basically, cash payout" settlements and, generally speaking, the number is insignificant compared to the problem which would have faced the department or the agreement with respect to discrimination against people who receive $6.88 or $7 a month, or about $600 a year, I believe. I wanted to correct the answer I gave earlier to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

[English]

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to butt in on the questions of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, but the answer of the Parliamentary Secretary begs a further question as to what were the numbers. He did not give the numbers. Also, what kind of research was done to determine the cross-over between the two countries, between Canada and the United States? How much and what kind of research was done?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Chairman, there were 179 all told, more or less, and according to the research that was done, it was noted that even Old Crow Dene were covered under the Alaska agreement. As to the kind of research it was done by inscription. Concerning the settlement of native people claims, under the terms of the ONC settlement, it does not matter whether they are beneficiaries under other treaties outside Canada, the important thing is to know whether they are beneficiaries under another treaty within Canada, in which case it would not be allowed.

[English]

Mr. Schellenberger: I am to assume by the answer of the Parliamentary Secretary that an individual could be the beneficiary of the COPE agreement as well as a beneficiary of the agreement in Alaska. If the Government is not concerned about an individual being the beneficiary of a claim other than the one in Canada, it is possible for a person to be a beneficiary of both claims—one in Canada and one in Alaska.

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: The hon. member is quite right. Undeniably, the act makes it possible for a person to be a beneficiary of two claims, provided they are not both in our country.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, my questions relate to a different subject. If the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin wants to pursue this particular point, I will defer to him.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Chairman, I have one further question. I have always been concerned that there could be a transfer of beneficiary for a person who followed herds in the North for the purpose of hunting. Any individual could claim that in fact he had travelled in both countries. Therefore, it would be very important for our Government not to provide benefits to an individual who in fact was a resident of Alaska, even though he perhaps hunted in this country. That would not seem to be fair.

I would assume that the Government and the negotiators have found out the principal residence of individuals and whether the people involved in the COPE agreement agreed that they ought to be beneficiaries. If that has been done, I have no concern about individuals being beneficiaries in both areas. However, it does not seem fair that Canada should be so gracious and generous as to provide an individual with a principal residence in Alaska who received settlement there with the same agreement here. The people in the North are beneficiaries of the agreement.

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer to paragraph 5(1) of the agreement which reads:

The Inuvialuit are best able to determine who should be eligible under the Inuvialuit Land Rights Settlement—

Paragraph 5(2) reads:

A person shall be eligible to be enrolled as a beneficiary if, as of the date of the Settlement Legislation, that person is a living Canadian citizen—

An individual is eligible if he can vote here, was born here, or qualifies under any of the other conditions listed on page 4 in the section entitled "Eligibility and Enrolment".

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I have some questions dealing with Annex E which appears in the two separate documents before us.

The Deputy Chairman: I draw the Hon. Member's attention to the fact that we are discussing Clause 2 and that the subject he wants to discuss will be coming up at a later date.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to let the opportunity pass. Normally there is a general discussion on Clause 2. Rather than go on to a clause because there is an interrelationship between several clauses in the Bill and several paragraphs in the agreement, if it meets with the approval of the Chair, I would prefer to do it all now.

If the Parliamentary Secretary would compare Annex E, which is a map of the north slope of the Yukon, as it appears in the Inuvialuit Settlement Agreement, with the one in the Inuvialuit Final Agreement, he will see a significant change has been made in the drafting of the maps. I am given to understand that the Government of the Yukon approved the map as it appeared in the inuvialuit Settlement Agreement. However, if we look at the Inuvialuit Final Agreement, which is presumably the one that will come into law, we find that the dividing line between the western portion of the north slope and the eastern portion of the north slope has been moved quite a bit eastward and that an additional area in excess of 100 square miles is to be included in the western portion.

Could the Parliamentary Secretary tell us why this discrepancy exists? Why has that change been made as between the two agreements?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, what I find in this book entitled "Inuvialuit Settlement Agreement" is not a map but rather a sketch; and in reply to the hon. member's enquiry, I can assure the committee that it is the description which appears in Part XI which shall prevail over any sketch. And in the French text, they refer to the north slope of the Yukon—approximately. I can also assure the committee that from now on in any future document, the map will match the description exactly, and the dividing line will follow the Babbage River, as indicated on page 5 of the Bill, line 5: "to its intersection with the right shoreline of the Babbage River".

• (1810)

That is the right definition of the boundary of the national park. It is the centre line, the right side of the river Babbage. The description in the Bill takes precedence over the sketches. Be sure that what is in the law is not in the sketch. Maybe I see a difference between them, but I can assure the Hon. Member that in the final distribution we will have the correct point on the map.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, it looks like we are going to have three to choose from. I have read the description of the western portion pursuant to the two agreements, Section 12(5) in the Inuvialuit Final Agreement, and it would appear to me just by looking at this map that the correct map or sketch, as the Parliamentary Secrectary cares to call it, is the first one if you go by the description in Section 12(5) of the Inuvialuit Final Agreement. Therefore, I would suggest that the map which corresponds to that is to be found in the Inuvialuit Settlement Agreement and not the map that is to be found in the Inuvialuit Final Agreement.

When things are brought before Parliament, we should not have these discrepancies. The Department should do its work in a more accurate fashion. The western portion of the north slope is to be set aside as a national park. If you contrast that description to the description found in the Bill that establishes the national park you will see there is a considerable difference in the description of this land. Major changes have been made. Why has this been the case?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, it is not on the floor of the House that I could determine whether the river really appears on the sketch where it should be, but I can assure the House that the description of the Northern Yukon National Park in the Bill is really the official text which I could read . . . but it is so technical . . . I can assure you that that is what we have right here. However the sketches which appear in the Schedules of the Act or the Schedule of the Agreement are not official. But I cannot, on the basis of these technical descriptions, determine where the river should be.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, it is not the accuracy of the map or the sketches, but the difference in the legal description of the land in the first instance in the agreements and in the second instance in the Bill before us that is of concern. I will not pursue that at the present time.

I have one further question. On page 5 of the Bill, line 22, there is reference to an approximate latitude of 69° 22′ 20″. Apparently geographers in the employ of the Government of the Yukon have questioned whether that indeed is the correct latitude to have placed there. Can we be given an absolute assurance that no misprint is present in the Bill and that 69°22′20″ is indeed the correct figure that is supposed to be there?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer this question just now. I should have to fetch my theodolite and go and check in the field whether it is exactly 69° 22′ 20″. How can the Hon. Member ask me to assure him that it is indeed 69° 22′ 20″ and not 69° 22′ 21″? Mr. Speaker, let us not... I should like to find out what is the point the Hon. Member for Western Arctic is trying to make. Then, and only then, could we reply to his question. Does he doubt the accuracy of the Agreement or does he think that the negotiators tried to fool the Inuvialuit? I should like to find out at the very beginning. Otherwise, I could not assure the Hon. Member that my theodolite is well fixed on this.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, there is no question of deliberately misleading. What we are doing today is establishing in law the boundaries of the Yukon North Slope Park. People who have gone over this description in the Yukon, in the employ of the Government of the Yukon, question whether that indeed is the correct latitude. I was just making sure that we do not pass into law something that is erroneous. That is the point behind it. We will go on to—

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, before the Hon. Member switches to another subject, I would like to clarify this point. In Canada, we have a General Surveyor who does the surveying of the land. He then submits his report and tells us where the boundary will be. This description is accepted by the parties involved, the Yukon Government, the Canadian Government and the other interested parties. Then, I am asked in this House whether the land measurement are accurate. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether you have ever been to the Northwest Territories or the Yukon, but if you ask me whether or not the boundary is in the right place, I cannot answer this question. I rely on what the General Surveyor of Canada says.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, nobody is questioning The Survey General, not the general survey but the Survey General. We are questioning whether there is another misprint in the Bill. It has come to light that the Bill contained misprints when it arrived before Members of Parliament. There is a possibility that there might be another misprint in the Bill. Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us how many square miles are contained in the national park that is proposed to be establish pursuant to this Bill?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, we could perhaps start from the description and walk around to determine exactly how many square miles there are. I did this when I was at school.

I do not know the figure in square miles or square kilometers, but one thing is certain, the area of the Park lies within the boundaries specified in the document.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: It is almost incomprehensible, Mr. Chairman, that the Government should come before us today to establish a new national park and not be able to tell us how many square miles are in it. It is evident that the Government has not done its homework on the matter that is before us today. I am very disappointed in the performance of the Government.

• (1820)

I have another question to ask which deals with a matter I brought up in my presentation on second reading of this Bill. It deals with a reindeer grazing preserve and the rights to graze reindeer in certain areas of land that have now been transferred to the COPE jurisdiction. May we have the assurance of the Government that it will deal honestly and faithfully with the owners of the reindeer herd so that those owners do not find themselves at a loss as a result of the passage of this Bill?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to hear that, because the treatment that has been meted out to these people so far has left a great deal to be desired.

My final question deals specifically with Clause 8, but I might as well ask it now since you have been so lenient with me, Mr. Chairman. The coming into force of this Bill is to happen on a day fixed by proclamation. I wonder if we could be advised of when the Government contemplates that proclamation will take place?

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, if we could pass this Bill quickly this evening, the Senate would have it for consideration tomorrow. In fact, they have already looked into it today. I believe that the Bill could become law before the end of the week.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, what the Parliamentary Secretary is saying is that he would expect the Bill to come into force upon the giving of Royal Assent. That is the normal way of doing things when a coming into force clause is not included in a Bill. If he is telling us that that is the intention of the Government, why has a coming into force clause been included in the Bill at all? The only time such a clause is included is when something must be put into being before the Bill can become law; something that usually takes a matter of several weeks, several months or, on occasion, several years to happen before the Bill is proclaimed and comes into law. The answer he just gave to my question simply does not make sense.

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, I do not know the specific reason why no date was mentioned in this Bill. Many of the Bills passed by the Government of Canada specify in their final clause that they will come into force on the day of their proclamation. I cannot anticipate the wishes of the Senate or of His Excellency the Governor General and say when the Act will be proclaimed. I am still waiting for the Bill to be passed, and I hope that the people in the Western Arctic who have accepted this agreement will be happy to see it enacted.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, that is precisely why I asked the question. The people in the area affected would like to see this Bill passed into law. It is rather passing strange that there should be such a coming into force clause in this Bill, a clause which would enable the Government, even with the passage by both Houses of Parliament and the giving of Royal Assent, to delay having this Bill actually become law and the terms of the agreement become effective. That is precisely the reason why I asked the question. It is very apparent that the Parliamentary Secretary does not know why it was necessary to include that particular clause, and neither can he give us any indication of when the Bill might come into force and have the strength of law.

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, I still do not know what the Hon. Member for Western Arctic is trying to say. We have here an agreement signed by the people of the area, who are partly represented by the Hon. Member, and of whom a great majority have voted in favour of this agreement, which clearly provides that the Government agrees to have legislation passed to bring the agreement into effect. I really do not know what the people of Western Arctic will tell him. There may be a few people in his constituency who are against this Bill, but this does not mean that the majority of the people are against it. I would even say that the majority of the people are in favour of it, and I hope that, during the summer, they will have an opportunity to say so to the Hon. Member.

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, this is becoming an exercise in stupidity. I am asking questions and receiving no answers whatsoever. I am simply receiving stupid statements that do not make any sense whatsoever. Precisely what I am saying is that the people of the western Arctic, after many, many years of negotiations, want this Bill to come into force. All I am asking the Parliamentary Secretary is why it will not come into force upon Royal Assent, which is normally the case with a Bill which does not include a coming into force clause? This clause is included in the Bill. Why is it included in the Bill? Why does the Government contemplate some form of delay and how long will that delay be? These are very simple questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, Clause 8 specifies that this Act shall come into force on a date to be fixed by proclamation.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the Bill carry?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INTEREST ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, June 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Interest Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to review a few problems which regard the Interest Act and to relay a few of my concerns with regard to the Bill. First, I would like to state that mortgage interest rates have been the disaster of the eighties. Interest rates have caused very unsettling conditions for the housing market and have created an unsettling condition for Canadian citizens who want ot own homes. This Bill is not solving the problem. The problem is deep and, as I have previously mentioned, home ownership on a percentage basis has declined from in excess of 68 per cent during the last seven years. My concern is that homes are something which every Canadian citizen should be permitted to own, live in and enjoy.

Part of the trouble with the housing industry has been brought about by the Government. At the present time the Government is consuming approximately 92 per cent of savings. That affects the interest rates. The Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) tells us every day that Canadian interest rates are tied to American interest rates. If the management of this economy had been better, I believe that we would have been in a better condition and we would have retained the equity which fled the country between 1977 and the present time. Another problem is housing starts, which are currently at 50 per cent of demand. It is interesting that every time 1,000 additional housing starts are created, 2,300 additional jobs are created.

This Bill was partially brought about as a result of the change in the Bank Act which permitted federal banks to become involved in mortgage financing. Prior to that, mortgages were principally handled by trust companies, building associations and similar vehicles. The change in the Bank Act permitted the banks to become involved. Prior to that time, because there was not the variation in rates that there is today, the traditional understanding was that in order to cancel a mortgage there would be a three-month bonus to the mortgagor. During the recent period of dramatic increases and falls in interest rates, the three-month bonus was hidden in the body of the mortgage. It was used as another explanation for the penalty the person would have to pay to readjust a mortgage which would be based on the interest rate which was in effect at the time it was to be rearranged. Therefore, if a person took out a 20 per cent mortgage and the rate dropped to 12 per cent, that person would be required to pay 6 per cent on the commuted value of the mortgage over the life of the mortgage. That has created a misunderstanding. The public has been faced with the tremendous burden of serious penalties. Those penalties were imposed upon them and hidden in the body of the mortgage document. That has caused financial losses to a number of people.

I know of a number of people who wanted to move in order to upgrade their homes. When they attempted to sell their home, they found out that they had lost $3,000 to $6,000 in penalties on which they had not counted. Some of those people had received information which was incorrect, not from the lender but from the general public. At least this Bill spells out what they will encounter. However, I do not believe it is fair. It is legitimizing the clauses which were included in mortgage documents by the banks and the trust companies to protect themselves against great losses from a change in the interest rates. We must keep in mind that the banks have billions of dollars of non-interest bearing deposits. The banks can better afford losses than can the individual home owner.

We need to have mortgage interest stabilization. This subject has not been addressed nor has it been dealt with. However, we require stabilization to encourage home ownership which will bring it back up to the 70 per cent level. If that were done, it would create at least 100,000 additional housing starts per year, which would take close to one-quarter of a million people off the unemployment ranks. If we could get six of those, we could solve the major effect of unemployment in Canada. I do not believe it can be done by the Liberal Government. It has been unimaginative in its legislation. It has done nothing to help the people of Canada. Farmers have suffered and home owners have suffered.

On Friday, I spoke on Bill C-37. That legislation was intended to protect the mortgagee against an increased rate upon renewal. I gave statistics which indicated that the Bill would do very little for those individuals unless they had a five-year mortgage on a 10 per cent rate. If rates went up to 18 per cent they would get the difference between 12 per cent and 18 per cent, for a net of 6 per cent. In that case, the mortgage insurance plan would work, but it is being implemented at the wrong time.

During this period there have been some companies which have been extremely helpful. I would like to mention them because I have had hundreds of complaints from people who could not afford the penalty which was imposed. I have had co-operation from a number of institutions. There are three institutions in particular with which I have had some success. One is National Trust. I went to the regional vice-president and he, in turn, sent me to the regional manager. I had success with the Canada Trust which, through its executive vice-president, gave me some consideration. I had great help in several cases from the Bank of Montreal. But the examples I give you were in the minority. There were many other financial institutions which just said, "Tough bananas. Tell your constituents to lump it". Those institutions were totally unfair and unrealistic with these people. However, I did want to mention the three institutions I had success with because they were a great help to my constituents. They were fair to them and have assisted them.

The Hon. Member from British Columbia—I cannot think of his riding—has brought out the fact that we have to provide somehow long-term mortgages with reasonable interest rates. There was a committee hearing today at which, unfortunately, I was not present. The hearing related to agri-bonds to help lower interest rates for farmers. A possible expansion of that may be one route which could be taken. I have not investigated this route nor have I reviewed it, but possibly through that system we could experiment with providing long-term interest rates so that when a man bought a home he could buy a 20—year mortgage, as he was able to do in the past. In the United States until recently, that 20-year mortgage meant that the rate you established when you bought that home lasted for the full life of the mortgage, and at the end of 20 years your mortgage would be paid off unless you refinanced. We must provide some stabilization in the interest market along those lines in order to help people to own homes.

What this Bill provides is a rate differential between the mortgage and the prevailing rate. As you know, mortgage rates are traditionally at a higher rate due to the risk factor. And there is a risk in a mortgage as compared to a money instrument. But the interest rates are higher. Part of the mortgagor's risk was taken into consideration through this higher interest rate. I feel that we should maintain the three-month penalty. I understand that it cannot be done. I understand there must be some compromise between the three-month penalty and something to assist the large mortgagors, but possibly a formula cold be developed where all mortgages, no matter of what length, could have a three-month penalty. On top of that there could be an additional penalty of one-half month for each 1 per cent variation in interest rate, up to a maximum of a six-month penalty. The reason I suggest this is that it is a compromise to help the mortgagors and it will help the mortgagees. It is something which would work for both of them. The mortgagor would know that the maximum penalty he is going to suffer is six months. At least we have gone from the potential of three months at the low end to a six-month maximum penalty at the high end.

I believe this is a plan which should be investigated in committee. I will bring it forward myself in committee. I am delighted to hear the Minister of State for Finance agree that there could be some compromise plan which would help all people.

We cannot afford this interest rate variation, the peaks and the lows. It can be stabilized if we get economic growth back in Canada, but I have seen no Bills go through this House which will encourage economic growth in the medium and small business sector. I must admit that our present upswing has been basically caused by the multinationals, particularly the automobile industry which is selling bigger cars. Chrysler came out with a new product which it is producing in Canada. That is the only thing which has brought us around. I noticed an article in the local Whitby Chamber of Commerce bulletin which says that bankruptcies were down this March from last March. My answer to it was to keep in mind that there have been so many bankruptcies over the last four years that there are fewer businesses to go bust. That is a critical problem with which we are dealing here in Canada. We need more entrepreneurs to create business and in turn to create jobs. Nothing has come down the pipes from this Government which is going to create jobs. It has made some minor adjustments in the Income Tax Act, of which I approve, but they are minor adjustments. They have made some minor adjustments in the research and development allowances for tax relief. But there is nothing to say to the Canadian people, "This is a great country. We will be behind you. We will simplify your life and make it easy for you to become an entrepreneur and to be successful".

To be competitive with the rest of the world we must put some things in place now. I do not think we have time to do so before we recess. We will not block this Bill any more, but we would like to discuss it extensively in committee. We would like to find another solution, because the average citizen, when he reads this Bill and reads his mortgage document, would not understand what the cost is going to be. Give him a fixed sum of money based on certain interest variations. Do not leave it the way it is, because the mortgagee would not know he has a chance of losing his home if the interest rate goes up beyond a certain point.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this Bill, Mr. Speaker. I am concerned about Canadian ownership and I would like to see this Bill in committee so that we can review it and come up with a solution.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in speaking briefly to Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Interest Act, I would first of all like to read briefly from the explanatory note to the Bill as it appears in Clause 2 on page 1a of Bill C-36, and I quote:

> Clause 2: These amendments would require certain terms of mortgages on real property to be disclosed if any interest and certain charges are to be payable on or with respect to any money secured thereby. These amendments would also provide a new statutory right to prepay moneys secured by mortgages on real property and further provide that prepayment charges can be recovered only if they are disclosed in the required manner.

That is one of the items in the Bill before us, Mr. Speaker, and of course this Bill is very limited in its impact, but it does do some things. It can perhaps be said that it is an example of the classic definition of a Liberal, which is that a Liberal is a person who believes in reform as long as it does not cost him or her anything; in other words, the impression and perception of change without any real substance. From now on, thanks to Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Interest Act, when a home owner finds himself or herself, due to a change in rates, faced with the choice of prepaying moneys secured by a mortgage on real property, he or she will have less call to complain legitimately about the cost. He will at least be required to be told in advance what the cost of any penalties will be. In that sense it will be a plus in terms of the fact that it is a public relations job for the banking industry and the trust companies. Home owners may still get shafted, but at least they will have the right to see the shaft coming. It is also, to be fair, a concession to the rights of the public and consumers to know. That is a plus, albeit perhaps a minor plus, to the Bill.

No one can oppose it and no one in the House will be opposing it. There will perhaps be some attempts at change, slight adjustments, but the Bill is of course doing nothing, nor does it pretend to, to solve the interest rate crisis looming once again before Canadians. Interest rates have again been rising in the last few weeks to the same astronomical levels which caused the electoral defeat of the Conservative Government in 1979. They refused to act at that time to protect Canadians, just as the Liberal Government has been refusing to act to protect Canadians in the last few months. They failed even more miserably going back to the period of the absolutely devastating rates of 1981 and 1982.

My colleagues and I in the NDP made a number of proposals over the last few months, and I do not intend to repeat them now. There is no point. We will be raising this subject again, and our proposals to attempt to deal with the interest rate crisis, with the electorate over the next few months. I do not think anything I could say now would convince the Government or the Official Opposition to act in a way other than the way they have acted over the last five years. Their record has been one of failure.

In any case I will not take up any more time of the House at this juncture except to say that here we are getting the appearance, but no real action. It will not stop anyone from being shafted, but at least they may be able to see the shaft coming. I suppose that is a bit of a plus and we ought to be thankful for small mercies.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I want to address a very few remarks to this Bill which will be going from here to committee. I think that is the very least that should happen to it. The Bill is symbolic of what is wrong with this Government. What is the Liberal Government's approach to the question of the right of people to prepay interest on their mortgage loans? It is this abomination, this bureaucratic, mind-boggling, impossibly complicated abomination. We have to say to ourselves that we are simply passing this legislation in the last stages of a dying Parliament because this is the best shot the Liberal Government can give to a very serious problem. When I look at this Bill it is obvious that it will take every Rhodes scholar who ever came from Canada to explain what the Liberal Government had in mind with respect to this legislation.

The Bill removes a very simply concept with respect to existing prepayment provisions. Everyone in this country understands that after five years a mortgagor has the right to prepay the amount of his loan with three month's interest as a bonus. Under this legislation the whole thing is now committed to regulatory law. It makes you wonder what these people are thinking about.

I was interested to hear the NDP point of view again with respect to interest rate policy. I remember when the NDP stood cheek by jowl with the Liberal Party in their traditional role of support. At election time they always try to make sounds as if they were moving separate and apart from the Liberal Party, but they were there to help bring down a government at a time when they said the interest rates were at an unacceptable level. They were there standing by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) when he said that anyone in government who had any principles would resign if interest rates exceeded 14 per cent. That is what he said he would do if he were part of any government which allowed interest rates to escalate to what? I think they were 13 per cent at the time I was part of the Government. There they were, the Liberals and the NDP, conspiring together. This is outrageous, the NDP said, and supported the Liberals in bringing down our Government. Now they are trying to dissociate themselves from the Government. But where were they when interest rates went up to 22 per cent? These people were still supporting the Liberals on every important vote.

I only mention this to put things into perspective, because I think the previous speaker may have left the impression that somehow he was "Simon Pure" with respect to the matter of support of the Liberal Party. I do not want to put too much of a blot on the record of the NDP by bringing these facts out. But we should remember these facts, because the people of Canada remember what that Party did to a sane and reasonable government with a sane approach to the interest problems of this country.

There is apprehension and concern on the part of the average Canadian about the future of interest rates in this country. People across Canada with mortgages on their homes have every right to be concerned. Interest rates in the U.S. will have an impact here. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) has been very vocal about the suggestion that we are the slave of what happens down in the U.S. and we have absolutely no ability to protect Canadians. If American interest rates go up, we stand ready, aye ready, to follow. Well, we know what is happening in the U.S. and we know what has happened with this Liberal Government. Interest rates went up to 22 per cent, a fantastic level. We know the hardship that caused many people. We know they were put in an impossible situation. Now the Liberal Government has spoken with the approval of its new leader. I am sure Mr. Turner must have been consulted on whether this Bill should go forward in its present form. If I were Mr. Turner, I would be looking at the legislation package for the end of the session and saying, I will take that one, and kill that. I will take this one, and kill that. I am sure the Government has gone through that consultation process. If they have not, Mr. Turner will still not be able to say that this belongs to another government, another era, and he had no part of this. He is leader now, this legislation is his best shot on mortgage interest policy in this country, and I hope that when the election takes place this summer we will not have the unfortunate scene of Mr. Turner trying to say, "well, this is all part of the Trudeau era, I have other ideas." It will not wash. Mr. Turner is in control of the Party and if he said this Bill was not to go through, it would not go through.

We have some very serious concerns about this legislation. It is muddying the waters. The people of Canada should not expect these proposals to be anything more than a panacea for the difficulties they face. In fact, I suggest it is going to complicate their lives. People who have mortgages will not have their expectations met. It was pointed out by a number of my colleagues that this legislation has serious defects. No one has any objection to disclosure; what the people of Canada want is a simple formula which will let them know what their rights are on prepayment. They do not want some cockamamie piece of paper which says that some bureaucrat somewhere in the bowels of Ottawa is going to devise a set of rules to allow them to somehow know what their rights are or what their mortgage interest rates are going to be. We now have smoke and mirrors. This Bill personifies pretty well what is wrong with the Liberal Government. It is beyond belief that the government Members would bring this Bill forward at this point in time in the session. We will let them have their best shot. We will put it through to committee. We will be asking some hard questions in committee. We will expect the Minister to be there with his officials to explain what this means and how this is going to be of any assistance at all to the mortgage holders of Canada. There is concern.

One way that the people of Canada will be able to get good legislation through with respect to various problems is to have a real change. They do not want a cosmetic change or a Liberal Party with a new leader. They want a new administration that is going to deal in a responsible manner with respect to two elements. A Progressive Conservative Government will let people know what their rights are, in very simple legislative terms, in terms of prepayment of their mortgages. Not only will the people know, the people involved in the mortgage business will have a very clear legislative direction.

All the people sitting on the Liberal benches will be able to watch Parliament after the next election from their living rooms in their own home constituencies. I want them to understand that we tried to tell them that this legislation is not adequate to meet the problems faced by people with escalating interest rates on the mortgages on their homes. We tried to be constructive. We tried to tell them to come to their senses before it was too late. We will pass this legislation if the Government wants to ram it through with its majority. We will deal with the matter. We are not going to be obstructive. It seems to me that this is an indication that the Government has run out of ideas and perspective. It is out of touch with the Canadian people. If the Government had consulted with the Canadian people and found out what they were saying, this abomination would never have been presented to Parliament for swift consideration. We tried to tell them what to do and we tried to be helpful. Regrettably, Mr. Speaker, this is their best effort. We will have the matter go to committee, at which time we will have some questions to ask and some positions to put forward. If this is the best they can offer, it is a sad commentary on the kind of Government they are presenting to the Canadian people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? For debate, the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to participate in debate on Bill C-36, and Act to amend the Interest Act. Clause 2 of the explanatory notes reads:

> These amendments would require certain terms of mortgages on real property to be disclosed if any interest and certain charges are to be payable on or with respect to any money secured thereby.

I listened with interest to the Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). It was interesting to note that he tied the New Democratic Party with the Liberals. In fact the newly elected Leader of the Conservative Party was a director of the Bank of Commerce. The newly elected Leader of the Liberal Party also served as a director of the Bank of Commerce.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are wrong.

Mr. Parker: Well, one of the major banks. There are very close ties in industry as well as in banking.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Get your facts straight and come back later.

Mr. Parker: There are ties with one of the major banks. We see some very close ties there. Until we start to address the problems with regard to mortgages and interest rates, those are the kinds of ties that will have to be addressed. We see political Parties tied with major banks and major industries through directorships. How is the ordinary individual going to get anyone to stand up in the House and really address the question of interest rates?

The Conservative Party and the Liberal Party are the same. They are the same as they are in British Columbia where the Liberals and the Conservatives sit together and call themselves Social Credit. This afternoon we are debating interest rates. It is a token program introduced by a dying Government in the last stages of our session. It is a token program to address this very urgent and pressing requirement of the Canadian people. Mortgage interest rates must be addressed in a positive way. There is only one way it can be done, that is, through the Bank of Canada. Mr. Bouey of the Bank of Canada and the Canadian Government must come up with a policy setting out mortgage rates as they were after the war when the Veterans Act was passed and special consideration was given to mortgage rates. If it could be done then, it can be done now.

As elected people we can sit down and develop a program through the Bank of Canada. Our problems lie in the fact that the Leader of the Official Opposition and the newly elected Leader of the Liberal Party have histories of sitting on the boards of directors of major industries and major banks in Canada. We must recognize that Canadian people need affordable housing. Interest rates must be such that when mortgages are taken out the people will have confidence that they will be able to carry them through.

We talk about interest rates. We talk about the various governments and their policies and we talk about equality. Where is the equality in people not being able to live in affordable housing in Canada with proper interest rates? Where is the equality in someone being forced out of his home because of a Government that does not recognize that a person's home is his sanctuary? There must be a program put in place to meet those financial needs. Mortgage interest rates must be kept at affordable levels. There is virtually no protection of any long-standing nature in this Bill. When are we going to present something concrete which will allow people to enter a long-term mortgage with the confidence that they will be able to fulfil that agreement?

Until we address that problem and separate the Leader of the Official Opposition and the newly elected Leader of the Government from their ties with the corporate structure and the banking industry, we are going to be faced with this kind of problem. This Bill will not address that. We strongly oppose this kind of measure which really has no significance to any of our people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Dionne): Questions or comments? Debate? Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

• (1910)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We on the Government side are fully prepared to move on to the next order of business as indicated by the Government House Leader, which I believe would be the Bank Act, Bill C-30. However, I understand that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) wants to talk on that. As a result, I believe there were discussions to the effect that, notwithstanding the House Order on extended hours passed some time ago, we should call it nine o'clock at this time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not want the House or anyone to be under any misapprehension. The Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) clearly stated the order of business today. I responded by saying that it was satisfactory.

There has been no consultation or discussion about dealing with any other items of legislation. Of course, we are prepared to proceed on the basis of having some advance knowledge about government Bills that are supposedly coming up. There was no back-up Bill with respect to the Bank Act.

The Government House Leader was quite clear and unequivocal. He has not consulted with me about any other legislation. To be quite frank, I asked him what would happen if we finished before nine o'clock and he said that will be the end of the day.

I do not want it to be laid at my Party's doorstep that we are not prepared to work. We are prepared to work in the interest of Canadians morning, noon and night. We will consent to it, but it is not because we are not prepared to sit here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I gather that there is unanimous agreement to adjourn the House at this time?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed by unanimous consent to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow—

An Hon. Member: The late show?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, but there can only be debate on the adjournment motion if Hon. Members are here to debate. Of course, it is not for the Chair to indicate what the wish of the House is at the moment. My interpretation of what the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said, which seemed to be confirmed by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), is that the House now ajdourn for the day.

Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 7.14 p.m.

EMPLOYMENT

SPECIAL EMPLOYMENT INITIATIVES PROGRAM—APPLICATIONS NOT ACKNOWLEDGED

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament I am accustomed to making representations on behalf of my constituents in order that they may take full advantage of government programs, especially job-creation funds.

I also appreciate receiving courteous treatment by Ministers of the Crown. I regret to say, however, that my efforts to secure funding for deserving projects under the Special Employment Initiatives Program have not been well received. In fact I have sent in many requests for various projects and have not even received a reply.

I recognize that the Minister was a busy man in his quest for the Liberal Party leadership. But I understand that matter has been taken care of and we have a new temporary Prime Minister. Would the Minister now see to it that I receive an answer to my queries? A yes or a no would be sufficient. I do not mind being refused; however, I resent being ignored. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King), has had the same type of problem. Perhaps the Minister will see to it that the dust is brushed off our files and acknowledgements are sent to us post-haste, to show his good faith.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

TRIBUTE ON ISSUANCE OF UNITED EMPIRE LOYALISTS COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, it is not often that an opposition Member makes a statement which is complimentary to a Crown corporation such as Canada Post, but today I should like to take this opportunity, on behalf of my constituents and millions of descendants of the United Empire Loyalists across Canada, to pay tribute and show our appreciation to Canada Post for issuing a beautiful United Empire Loyalist stamp.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vankoughnet: I should also like to express appreciation to all those responsible for their approval to launch this bicentennial stamp on July 3, 1984, in the historic Township of Adolphustown, which is on the Bay of Quinte, the site 200 years ago of the landing of Major Peter Van Alstine and his party of Loyalists. This was also the boyhood home of Canada's first Prime Minister.

It is most fitting that this commemorative stamp be issued from Adolphustown, as on July 17 Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II will officially open the Loyalist Parkway which runs through this, the smallest township of Ontario.

Despite its size, Adolphustown is recognized as one of the most important settlements in what was called the Midland District and is now part of eastern Ontario. The settlement of Adolphustown has played a major role in the history of Ontario as well as of Canada. Therefore, it is most fitting that this Loyalist stamp be launched from Adolphustown.

IMMIGRATION

SPONSORSHIP OF LANDED IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, every Canadian citizen and every permanent resident may, if he or she is residing in Canada and is at least 18 years of age, sponsor an application for landing made by one relative regardless of age or relationship to him or her, where he or she does not have a spouse, child, parent, grandparent, brother, sister, uncle, aunt, nephew or niece who is a Canadian citizen, who is a permanent resident, or whose application for landing he may otherwise sponsor.

The problem occurs when the Canadian resident wishes to sponsor a younger member of the family, such as a brother or sister, niece or nephew. If the Canadian resident has a parent or grandparent still living, he or she is advised that the elderly relative may be sponsored but not the latter.

This is an unreasonable condition in that elderly parents or grandparents are not always in a position to emigrate to Canada due to age, health, or attachment to familiar surroundings. This condition of the Act denies the Canadian resident the right to have a close family member join him or her in Canada, resulting in emotional stress and hardship in many cases.

I have some constituents near retirement age who are in need of companionship and emotional support from family members, and who have been good citizens, yet are denied the comfort they deserve in their later years. While the Department of Employment and Immigration is sensitive to family reunification, it is my hope that the Minister will review present legislation and make amendments to this legislation to give these Canadians compassionate consideration.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

FAILURE TO PROVIDE DOOR-TO-DOOR DELIVERY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, there is an urgent need to expand door-to-door postal service to many growing communities across Canada, but Canada Post has not conducted a survey to establish qualification for door-to-door delivery since 1975. Communities in my riding, including Sooke and Ladysmith, have, according to Canada Post standards, qualified for this service since 1976. Saanich also qualifies and has not received door-to-door service.

I understand there has been a directive to cut 73 person-years from Vancouver Island and Powell River postal staff by the end of 1985. This will mean that communities which presently have service may have it reduced, and those which have qualified for almost a decade will not be given consideration. It will also increase the already high and unacceptable unemployment level. This directive must be rescinded and, in addition, a survey must be conducted so that there can be equality among the various communities in this region of British Columbia in the receipt of postal service.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FAREWELL MESSAGE BY MEMBER FOR BEAUHARNOIS-SALABERRY

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, since I have decided not to run in the event a general election is called and also because the House is adjourning for the summer at the end of this week and on Thursday I shall be travelling with the Minister of Veterans Affairs to Charlottetown, I want to take this opportunity to say goodbye to all my colleagues in the House.

Mr. Speaker, after twenty-two years in Parliament, I think my decision is certainly justified, but I want everyone to know that it is as hard to leave as it is to enter politics. One becomes very attached to the task of serving the people and to the duties of an elected representative, which include sitting in this Chamber and watching history being made every day. There are also the friendships that develop between colleagues and transcend differences of opinion, political parties and ideologies.

Mr. Speaker, I too have developed a great fondness for Parliament and this House where, for nine years, I was one of those who sat in the Chair, and where for five of those years I was Deputy Speaker. Mr. Speaker, I personally want to thank you and your predecessors for the consideration you have always shown me.

I want to thank the entire staff of the House with whom I have had an excellent working relationship and whose services were many.

Finally, a special word of thanks to all my colleagues for the spirit of kinship we shared. I want to thank the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Leader of the NDP and their predecessors, and also the Member for Yellowhead.

The best of luck to the new Leader of the Liberal Party and future Prime Minister of Canada.

My best wishes to all, my dear friends, and until we meet again.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—CANDIDACY OF MINISTER OF ENERGY

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, politics is a partisan battle, but respected politicians exhibit grace and compassion when they win and when they lose. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) exhibited incredible grace and compassion before, during, and after the Liberal convention. The President of the Liberal Party stated that he was number one in the hearts of the delegates. However, his Cabinet colleagues continue to stab him in the heart.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) put the knife in before the convention when he abandoned the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to support John Turner. His colleagues continue to twist the knife. The Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) has questioned his loyalty and impartiality. He suggests the Minister is too emotional for the job. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) stated that the Minister of Energy has no class. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) was ready to move to Turner at the convention, but did not have to because he was so far ahead on the first ballot.

As Liberal MPs battle for internal power they signal to the country the rot into which the Liberal Party is sinking. Having conned the Minister of Energy into thinking he had a fair chance in the leadership battle, the least his colleagues in the Liberal Party can do is to start to treat him with some dignity and decency.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Do you want me to cross?

INDUSTRY AND COMMERCE

CAMPAIGN PROMOTING PURCHASE OF CANADIAN PRODUCTS

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, regarding the comments we are hearing from the opposite side of the House, I appreciate the remarks about the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). However, when they start talking about loyalty, I would like to talk about their Leader, who, if we consider his loyalty to Mr. Claude Wagner and to the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), was the first one to start back-stabbing! I suggest Progressive Conservative Members think about that for a minute.

However, Mr. Speaker, my comments today were to be about the campaign launched at noon by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Lumley), the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) under the slogan: Think about it, think Canadian. The purpose of the campaign is to promote Canadian products and urge Canadians to buy products manufactured here in Canada at competitive prices. The launching was attended by the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Retailers Association, many businessmen and people from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, who said they were very pleased to be taking part in this campaign to promote Canadian products. This initiative by the Government of Canada is certainly something to be pleased about, and Canadians should be urged to think Canadian whenever purchasing products for their own use. The slogan "Think about it, think Canadian" is well suited, Mr. Speaker, to the present Government of Canada, and I am sure that Canadians will also think about it at the next election . . . and think about the Liberal Party of Canada.

TOURISM

IMPORTANCE OF GOOD WEATHER FORECASTING

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to address an area of concern to me which affects the tourist industry in Canada. The tourist industry is a rather seasonally based industry which is affected by many factors. To have a successful year, tourism must rely on weather conditions. Being actively involved in the tourist industry on Prince Edward Island during the summer months, I certainly know the importance of good weather to the industry. Our particular tourist industry on Prince Edward Island relies on good summertime weather to encourage tourists to come to the area. In light of this, I would like to discuss the importance of weather forecasting to the tourist industry.

● (1415)

There must be more emphasis placed on sunshine. I realize that weather forecasters must project the weather as it exists, but I cannot help but feel that there has always been an emphasis placed on the negative aspects of weather conditions. Emphasis should be placed on the positive aspects of the weather, such as the percentage of sunshine in a forecast.

Weather forecasters seem to deal with determining the negative factors of the weather. The probability of precipitation is determined, rather than the amount of possible sunshine for the day. For example, a broadcaster will say that there is a 10 per cent chance of rain, rather than a 90 per cent chance of sunshine. I feel that visitors to Canada would, either consciously or subconsciously, be more encouraged to travel to various locations in Canada by hearing the percentage of sunshine forecast, rather than the percentage of rain forecast. I feel very strongly that our weather forecasters should emphasize the positive rather than the negative.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL TASK FORCE REPORT—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Lumley) finally tabled the Government's response to the petrochemical industry task force report which was received five months ago. Five months is a long time to wait and, unfortunately, the Government has offered nothing that would give any encouragement to the industry, or to the tens of thousands of Canadians who could benefit directly through the new jobs that would be created if the recommendations of the task force were followed.

If the task force recommendations were implemented, 75,000 to 175,000 new jobs could be created by 1990. In addition, billions of investment dollars were ready to be earmarked for investment in Canada. These dollars may potentially be lost unless the Government is willing to move in a positive direction on the recommendations of the petroleum industry task force.

Neither the Government nor the Conservative Party has indicated that it is prepared to provide the positive incentives necessary to assist the petrochemical industry so that it may survive and grow in Canada. I urge the Government to reject its present shabby response to the needs of such an important industry, and to reassess and support the thrust of the recommendations of the petrochemical industry task force report.

FINANCE

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—BANK OF CANADA GOVERNOR'S STATEMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, the Quebec lieutenant who is out protecting his position, I would imagine, and in the absence of the Prime Minister, and in the absence of any Acting Prime Minister—

Mr. Chrétien: Over here.

Mr. Crosbie: I am glad to see that the acting sub-lieutenant for Quebec is here. My question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. No, my question is now directed to the Minister of Finance. I have been saved by the bell.

The Minister of Finance will know that confusion compounds the lack of confidence that now exists in the Government. At Charlottetown yesterday the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Bouey, said this about interest rates:

> The rise in rates has not been sufficient to prevent a significant decline in the exchange value of the Canadian dollar to the point where it presents a new risk to our progress on inflation . . . it is because of the substantial inflationary risk involved that I have never favoured depreciation where it could be avoided or at least limited.

Mr. Minister, the dollar has declined 6 per cent since March 7, the time when you said you were not staying up nights worrying about the dollar being at 81 cents U.S. You do not have to worry about that any longer.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to assure the Hon. Member that the Chair is only remotely concerned, because I am sure that the Hon. Member knows that he is addressing the Chair.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Minister apparently disagrees with the point made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada about the significant inflationary impact of the depreciation of the dollar. Does the Minister disagree with Governor Bouey's statement of yesterday? If so, which view now governs Canadian monetary policy? Nothing could be more important to the country today.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the last person who should be talking about confusion is the Hon. Member for St. John's West. Yesterday I referred to the contradiction between the stand taken by his own Leader, who has said "Let the dollar go down", and the stand taken by the Hon. Member, who has said that this was a counsel of despair and that there was no question that such a policy should not be followed. If there is any confusion it must be within the Conservative Party. One thing I can tell the Hon. Member is that there is no confusion in the minds of the Canadian public about the position, lack of position, or contradictory positions taken by the Conservative Party on fundamental economic issues at this time.

As far as the statement of the Governor is concerned, I had an opportunity to read the speech before it was made. That speech has my full support and agreement.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I would set the Hon. Minister's mind at ease on this issue of confusion. In the present situation, the only possible alternatives are to have a lower Canadian dollar or higher interest rates. We opt for a lower Canadian dollar, and not higher interest rates which will ruin economic growth in this country.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The statement which was made yesterday by Mr. Bouey, which the Minister said he approved, implies that the new risk of inflation through a lower dollar will be opposed by higher interest rates. Will the Government, which has permitted three interest rate increases in the last three months, now permit additional interest rate increases, which will lose tens of thousands of jobs for Canadians and stop the piddling recovery which is under way?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for St. John's West is correct, I must say that it will not be the first time that the poor man has had to swallow himself in the course of the last few months—between his contradictary statements and those of the Opposition Leader. I am sorry that he has lost once more in the fight with his Leader. I wish him better luck.

As far as the question of the Hon. Member is concerned, he knows very well our position in that regard. It is to have the lowest possible interest rates in this country while ensuring that the Canadian dollar is not subject to speculative devaluation.

Mr. Crosbie: The Minister is saying that the Government will permit more interest rate increases. It is the old policy with the same old gang—Pierre Elliot Turner doesn't give a hang. That is what the Minister is saying. I thank him for that. Interest rates will be allowed to go up.

UNITED STATES DOLLAR RELATIONSHIP

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is directed to the same Minister. The Minister claimed yesterday that Canada's dollar had depreciated only against the U.S. dollar, and had appreciated against other currencies. The Governor of the Bank of Canada rejected the Minister's argument when he said: "We really have to focus our attention on the U.S. dollar relationship". Does the Minister agree with Governor Bouey's statement that we really must focus our attention on the U.S. dollar relationship, which repudiates as nonsensical the Minister's own views?

Also, will the view of the Governor of the Bank of Canada prevail rather than the views of the Minister which were given to the press yesterday? Will the Minister tell us, after four years and three months of economic failures, of higher interest rates and a lower dollar, when the Government will call a halt and give the Canadian people a chance to make a choice as to who they want in charge of their affairs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the problem with the Hon. Member is not only does he not understand a number of issues, but he cannot read properly. The speech of Governor Bouey stressed the importance of our relationship to the U.S. dollar, indeed, because 70 per cent of our exports and imports are with that particular country.

The Hon. Member must recognize, as Governor Bouey has mentioned many times, that when talking about the relative value of the Canadian dollar we must take into account the value of the Canadian dollar not only vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar but also vis-à-vis other currencies. The situation at the present time is not that the Canadian dollar is weak vis-à-vis all other currencies. In fact all other currencies are weakening vis-à-vis an extremely strong U.S. dollar which is supported by high interest rates and which is attracting capital from around the world at the present time.

These are the facts of life which indicate that all other major currencies have known a significant decline against the U.S. dollar in the last several weeks. But, comparatively, as I mentioned yesterday, the countries which have known the smallest decline vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar have been Germany and Canada. That decline has been at the same level. All other major industrial countries have known a larger decline, including the Swiss franc, which is recognized internationally as a very strong currency, and the Japanese yen. All those currencies have declined more vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar than the decline of the Canadian dollar. My friend should know that.

• (1425)

Mr. Crosbie: So what? Mr. Bouey says it does not matter.

Mr. Lalonde: If he does not know that, I invite him again to read the facts and the statistics, and perhaps some day he will learn.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the Minister talks about the facts of life. The fact that he seems to forget is that every time interest rates go up, unemployment goes up. That is what the Minister does not understand.

Oral Questions

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Will the Minister of Finance tell the House what he intends to do to offset the unemployment effects of increasing interest rates? If the Minister does not act now, then he is forcing this Parliament to leave here and leave behind it 1.5 million Canadians without jobs, and without hope.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to use the Opposition's own argument, including the argument of the Hon. Member's own dear friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, who likes to refer very often to the United States, to indicate to my friend that the fact that we have higher interest rates at a particular time, or increasing interest rates, does not necessarily mean that we have higher unemployment taking place. Look at the United States, to use the argument of the Hon. Member for St. John's West, where it has not occurred automatically. On the contrary. The decision of investors, in particular, depends on many factors, not only on whether there is an increase in interest rates but also on whether there is going to be a demand for their products, whether they are going to have greater productivity from their workers, and whether their export capabilities are going to be favourable. The Hon. Member knows that. The best evidence of this is the latest survey carried out by Statistics Canada compared to last October.

Last October the large businesses in this country had foreseen a decline in investment in real terms by 3 per cent. In May they foresaw an increase in real terms by 2 per cent. That was a change of 5 per cent in real terms over and above inflation during that period, even though interest rates in May were higher than they were in October. Therefore there is no automatic relationship.

I do not like interest rates to go up. I regret that they have increased in the last several months. We have done and are continuing to do everything we can to keep that increase at the minimum possible level, and this is going to continue to be our policy.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that high interest rates completely stifle recovery. He knows that to be a fact.

COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I would like to ask the Minister, then, if high interest rates are not directly related to high unemployent, to explain this—when the Minister brought down his Budget in February he said " . . . we shall create new opportunities for Canadians to find good, satisfying, permanent jobs". At that time the unemployment rate was 11.2 per cent. Now it is 11.7 per cent. Unemployment is going up in Canada and going down in the United States. Will the Minister explain that to this House and to the 1.5 million Canadians who are left out there without jobs?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should be happy to explain this at length to the Hon. Member if he gives me a chance. I may remind him of previous statements I have made on the subject, both here in the House and elsewhere. The Hon. Member will recall the figures released by Statistics Canada each month, and he will realize that the number of jobs has increased. He is talking about rising unemployment but he has omitted to mention the increase in the number of jobs created in this country over the past year, and even within the last few months. If the Hon. Member would take the trouble to look at the facts, he would realize that the number of jobs created in recent months in this country has increased, and I am confident that their number will continue to rise in the months to come.

[English]

EFFECT OF INCREASED MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister knows, obviously, from his response to the questions just asked, that the interest rate issue is perhaps the most serious question confronting the Canadian economy. The Minister also knows, I am sure, that as a result of last week's increases in the bank rate, the five-year mortgage rate has risen to 15 per cent from 12.5 per cent in January. This puts housing out of the reach of another 100,000 Canadians. It means that a person who renews a $75,000 mortgage over five years will have to pay $8,000 more today than that same person would have had to pay in January. It means that the housing starts which were predicted at 170,000 at the beginning of the year will not reach 135,000, and we are going to have 75,000 more people out of work.

● (1430)

Given that the Bank of England has now stated categorically that it cannot follow the U.S. lead in interest rates and it will establish an independent policy in Britain, why is it that the Canadian Government cannot do likewise on behalf of Canadians?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to five-year rates because he prefers to choose the highest possible rate. He knows that if you want a three-year or one-year mortgage you will get a lower rate than the ones he mentioned. He must realize that there are some choices in the market for interest rates you are ready to pay and the risk you are ready to take. He also knows that in the last several days this House passed, thank God, a mortgage rate protection plan. This will ensure some protection for borrowers who want to buy a house against future increases in interest rates in years to come.

As to the specific point raised by the Hon. Member, I will study with interest the position of the Bank of England. But I must remind him that some European countries tried a similar approach a while ago and they had to reverse their position completely, 180 degrees. They ended up having to pay a very, very high cost indeed. I only have to remind him of the experience of socialist France which tried a similar approach of going it alone at a particular time. They had to pay a tremendous economic price for the policy choice they made. They had to reverse course completely a year later, and they are still paying for it.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand how the Minister can evaluate an economic price and draw the conclusion that those unemployed will not have to pay a tremendous economic price for the policies of this Government, or that those people who will not be able to renew their mortgages will not have to pay a tremendous economic price as a result of the policies of the Government.

The Minister knows full well that since 1981 interest rate increases have resulted in over 500,000 jobs being lost, and 30,000 businesses, along with 80,000 individuals, going bankrupt. There are now over a million more people in poverty in Canada than there were in 1981. Given that, how can the Minister stand in his place and say that he is prepared to support Gerald Bouey's insane high interest rate policy at the expense of the lives of Canadian families?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is good at rhetoric, but he is not so good at analyzing the facts. I may remind him that the point is not whether we can do our own thing and ignore the rest of the world in which we live. The Hon. Member was quoting figures on unemployment in Canada. I may remind him that in France, for instance, after following a direction that differed from that followed by the rest of the industrialized world, at a given time, they finally created a situation where, unless I am mistaken, the French franc has decreased in value by about 90 per cent over the last two years. I may also remind him that the present unemployment rate in France is higher, not lower, than it was two years ago. It has gone up. So the point is not whether unemployment is too high today, or whether interest rates are too high. I realize the unemployment rate is too high. I realize that interest rates should be lower. I am doing everything I can to bring these rates down to the lowest possible level. However, I shall certainly not adopt policies that will result in more unemployment and in devaluating our currency, which happened in a number of European countries as a result of pursuing policies that appeared to be expedient in the short term but soon proved disastrous. I shall certainly not take the lead of the New Democratic Party in this instance.

POSSIBLE CONSEQUENCES OF REDUCING INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the hardship inflicted upon average Canadians who cannot find employment, pay their mortgages, and who will be faced with poverty from now until the day they die, the Minister is saying he will do nothing. Is it not reasonable to assume that if we strengthen the Canadian economy by lowering interest rates and making it possible for people to buy in Canada those things they need, by following that course of action independent of the United States, we will be able to stimulate Canada's economy, make it possible for people to go back to work, and in that way strengthen the Canadian dollar?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the Hon. Member must have missed some translation. I spent a few minutes explaining to him that my position and that of the Government is to avoid creating more hardship for the Canadian people by following short-sighted policies which are going to boomerang on the Canadian economy and the Canadian people. I told him what happened to some European countries which tried this trick. They thought they could do it by resorting to that kind of magic short-term expediency, and they ended up in more serious trouble than they were in before. We are not going to follow that kind of snake-oil remedy the NDP is recommending, thank you very much.

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON FUNDING

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board I will put my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Will he give this House an absolutely firm and iron-clad guarantee today that no further funds will be advanced to the Sports Pool until the House of Commons has had, at the very least, a full, complete and proper accounting of every penny spent to date?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the statute passed by this Parliament provides for the possibility of an advance of funds to the Sports Pool. That is provided under the authority of Parliament, and the decision as to whether funds should be advanced and how much, will be made by the Government. The Government will assume its responsibilities in that regard.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY ACCOUNTING

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is emerging as one of the four horsemen of the new Liberal apostasy. Since we now know that only the Liberals could open a casino and lose their shirts, my question is very simple. Every $10 million advanced to this corporation, money which will be lost, represents lost job potential for young people in the order of 3,000 to 4,000 jobs. Given what is known about the contracts, the Minister's own people and staff who have been hired, the situation regarding the advertising contracts, and the impossibility of this operation making a penny, will the Minister tell the House why the House of Commons should be prevented from getting a proper accounting of everything done to date before that Minister, on behalf of the people of Canada, puts more money into the Sports Pool, to be lost?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have difficulty understanding why the Member keeps on trying to make a fool of himself with allegations like the ones he is making. The authority given by this Parliament is clear. The Hon. Member knows that when you start a lottery it takes time to build up a clientele and profits.

Mr. Nielsen: It is not supposed to be a lottery.

Mr. Lalonde: This has been the case with all games like this, whether it was the Olympic lottery or the provincial lotteries. We are facing difficulties, and competition, and restrictions which the provincial lotteries have imposed. The Hon. Member is aware of that. We are going to make sure that we are going to have the funds available to make this project a success.

INDUSTRY

PURCHASE OF CANADIAN GOODS PROGRAM

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion my question is addressed to the Parliamentary Secretary. In view of the fact that imports of manufactured goods in Canada represented approximately $64 billion in 1983, can the Parliamentary Secretary say what level of import substitution, particularly in manufactured goods, he expects to be achieved by the domestic marketing program launched today, and how soon he expects the program to be reflected in new jobs?

[Translation]

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it would be very difficult to comment in terms of the figure of $64 billion mentioned by the Hon. Member. However, I can assure the House that if Canadians could increase their purchases of Canadian made products by 1 percent, this would mean thousands and thousands of jobs for Canadians.

CANADIAN UNITY INFORMATION OFFICE

COSTS OF QUEBEC ANALYSIS CONTRACT

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. I think he is temporarily out of his seat.

Mr. Crosbie: He is temporarily out to lunch.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I have been informed by the Minister of Supply and Services that $97,680 was paid to Contrefort Incorporated on behalf of the Canadian Unity Information Office for an opinion poll taken last year of young people in Quebec to determine their political attitude to the Liberal Party and its leaders. Will the Minister, who reports for the Canadian Unity Information Office, tell the House if he approves of this use of public funds and how such an expenditure is justified?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, given the information that the Hon. Member was supplied with in error by my colleague—

Some Hon. Members: In error!

Mr. MacGuigan: —I would hardly have expected him to do other than to ask a question about it in the House. In fact there has been no such survey made as mentioned by the Hon. Member, and which he quoted from my colleague's letter. In fact the contract which that Company, Contrefort Incorporated, has with the Government through CUIO is not for surveys at all. It is for analysis. They produce a document called Dossier Quebec. To show the hon. gentleman that their work is open and above board, as indeed everything in the Government is, although this is not normally reviewed I will undertake to make a copy of this available to the hon. gentleman so that he can verify it for himself.

Mr. Howie: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister very much for this very revealing information. I can understand his difficulty in working with the Minister of Supply and Services, who appears to be relatively inefficient.

REQUEST THAT ANALYSIS CONTENTS BE MADE PUBLIC

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): As the Minister has indicated, will he release the contents of the analysis so the information can be examined and evaluated by all Members of Parliament on behalf of their constituents who have paid for an analysis which appears to be extremely partisan?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on the assumption that what I would make available to my hon. friend would become public anyway, I will be glad to make it public.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. This month another batch of students are out on the streets looking for jobs that do not exist. Many of them will be living off their families, or lining up at food banks. What does the Minister intend to do about this intolerable situation? Does he accept the statements of the Minister of State for Youth that over 800,000 young Canadians are unemployed now and that this situation will remain? What is he going to do about this? Is this the Liberal election platform for youth?

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, last week when we released our report, Focus on Youth, we realized that there was indeed unemployment at the rate of 18.5 per cent and that this does not include those who are not looking for jobs and would need to be trained. In the last Budget of the Minister of Finance, $150 million was set aside, and $30 million is now going to be devoted to a youth training option which I feel is certainly a beginning to finding a solution for those people who are unskilled and have a hard time finding a job.

MANITOBA GOVERNMENT'S INITIATIVE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns economic policy. By adopting a "jobs first" policy the NDP Government in Manitoba has reduced youth unemployment from 21 per cent to 10 per cent in one year, while the unemployment rate has gone up in other provinces, as the Minister knows. Why does the federal Government not adopt a similar kind of economic policy and put jobs first as a national priority? Why is this happening only in Manitoba? Why should it not be for young people right across Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can understand that last gasp by the NDP. I welcome initiatives being taken by provincial Governments across the country. There have been a number of provincial Governments which have taken some initiatives. Some have taken more than others. It shows that when federal government and provincial government programs get together and go in the same direction, they produce good results. I remind my hon. friend that in Manitoba, as in other provinces, federal Government programs are at work and are quite effective. As I said, we have allocated more money than ever in our history for the support of young people in need of jobs or training. It runs into billions of dollars.

When provincial Governments agree to do their share in addition, and to contribute to this effort, it will obviously have better results. I would hope that Conservative Governments in the other provinces will take a leaf from Manitoba's book and help the federal Government reduce unemployment all across the country. The Hon. Member knows that the Government has put economic recovery and growth and job creation at the top of its priorities.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

FIRING OF EMPLOYEE WHO CONSULTED WITH MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Ad Varma, an employee rated by Canada Post Corporation as outstanding in his ability, quality of work and output, has been fired by Michael Warren for consulting with Members of Parliament in regard to waste and mismanagement within the Corporation. This employee has been assessed as carrying out his assigned projects with the highest degree of industrial engineering, expertise, enthusiasm and skill, which clearly indicates that he is fully qualified to make comments and recommendations.

As employees should be encouraged and rewarded for coming forward with information, will the Minister take immediate steps to have Mr. Varma reinstated, and take the necessary steps to provide an appropriate committee with an order of reference to conduct a full and complete investigation into the problems—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has concern about a very specific case. Such a question should be on the Order Paper. However, if the Minister wants to comment, he may.

An Hon. Member: It was on the front page of The Star.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are trying to follow certain procedures. I have been given a very long list of names from the Official Opposition today. There is no way I can possibly do justice to it. However, if the Hon. Member will quickly get to his point it will help.

Mr. McKenzie: We usually do not put questions on the Order Paper about someone being fired, Mr. Speaker.

Will the Minister have a proper committee set up so that we can hear witnesses under oath, including Mr. Varma and Mr. Warren, to study the problems within Canada Post?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Canada Post Corporation, Mr. Warren, has already responded to all the allegations made by Mr. Varma before a Parliamentary Committee. I do not see how it could be useful to refer the matter to another Parliamentary Committee. Mr. Varma has not raised any new points and the information he released has been checked and proved to be unfounded, on most counts.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: I want to point out to the Minister that nothing was checked, investigated or answered by Mr. Warren in committee.

UNION POSITION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. A. M. Davies, the former special representative of the Executive Vice-President and Chief Operating Officer of Canada Post Corporation, stated in November, 1983, that he supports everything that Mr. Varma says and is just as concerned as Mr. Varma, and the line supervisors confirm what Mr. Varma says. He also stated—

Mr. Speaker: I am trying to be fair with the Hon. Member. He is raising a very specific case. I have indicated certain guidelines with regard to supplementary questions. If the Hon. Member insists on a long quotation on a supplementary, could he not just ask his supplementary?

● (1450)

Mr. McKenzie: The union is in a position to strip Michael Warren of his credibility. What will the Minister do about this problem of the union stripping Mr. Warren of his credibility? Will he please reconsider appointing a committee and have all the witnesses called in under oath to examine the charges made by Mr. Varma and other employees of Canada Post?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's conclusions are rather strange. He started by trying to defend the position of one specific employee, and he then proceeded with considerations of a general nature, namely that the entire union is involved in this conflict with Mr. Warren. I have the impression that it is a personal matter between Mr. Varma and the Hon. Member.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES ACT—INTRODUCTION OF TOBACCO AMENDMENT

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It pertains to the proposed amendment to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, which would include tobacco. I do not have to relate the importance of this issue to the Minister; he is well aware of it. He is also well aware of the commitments that have been made in the past and of the many rumours that are presently passing around. Is the Minister prepared to tell us when the proposed amendment will be introduced in the House?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I hope tomorrow.

Mr. Bradley: I thank the Minister for that, finally. We have been waiting since December. I am sure that we have heard promises of this type before, and the word "hope" bothers me.

PASSAGE OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister tell us if this Bill has been approved and printed? Is it in the hands of the Government House Leader and has he been asked, or is he willing to negotiate with our House Leader? Is it his intention that this amendment be passed before the week is out?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member sounds as if the whole House is in full agreement. If he can come to me and say: "We are in full agreement and we will give immediate passage to this Bill", I can go to the House Leader and say that the opposition Parties are in full agreement with this Bill. The Bill is being printed—

Mr. Lewis: What Bill?

Mr. Whelan: The Bill is being printed at the present time. It was only approved yesterday, and the Bill should be in the hands of the House Leader later today.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST THAT SOLICITOR GENERAL PAY SPECIAL ATTENTION TO DANGEROUS CRIMINALS

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I would like to ask the Minister if, following a recent court judgment, he intends to be particularly careful about dangerous criminals who, as a result, may be put back into "circulation" in greater numbers. Second, regarding individuals who are released under mandatory supervision and commit offences or escape, does the Minister intend to take any special action in this respect? I should like to know whether Bill C-35 deals more specifically with this question and whether the Minister will want the Bill to be passed before the end of this session?

[English]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we only have two days to go. This is a very important piece of legislation which would permit us to keep violent offenders longer behind bars.

I have written to both my opposition critics. The Conservative Party indicated that they support the legislation and that their critic would be prepared to give it three-stage passage this week. Unfortunately the NDP have taken the position that the Bill is too tough on violent offenders, and they are seeking amendments to this legislation that would reduce its effectiveness so as to make it practically useless. That is where we stand.

FARM FLOOD DAMAGE IN SASKATCHEWAN AND MANITOBA

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to my friend, the Minister of Agriculture. He is no doubt aware of the very serious flooding problem in northeast Saskatchewan. I had a chance to see some of it on the weekend. The northwestern part of Manitoba is affected as well.

In my province the provincial Government is putting up a paltry $8 million to help the farmers, which is about $10 an acre. Has the Saskatchewan Government made an official request for federal government aid in terms of the designation of that area as a disaster area? Will the Minister also tell us whether there will be any federal assistance for the hard pressed people of northeastern Saskatchewan?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I received a telegram yesterday or the day before from the Minister of Agriculture in Saskatchewan, pointing out the need of farmers. However, what is needed is an official declaration by the Premier of the province to the Prime Minister of Canada, calling it a disaster area. As of yesterday I have not seen that.

If they go through that formula and it then goes to the President of the Privy Council, the House Leader, under the national disaster plan, I would think that that is the procedure they should be following. I had not seen that as of yesterday.

Mr. Nystrom: I am rather surprised that the provincial Government has not done this, because it really is an emergency.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The facts are wrong. They have had it since March 16. You are not telling the truth.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, despite the laxness of the provincial Government, can the Minister assure the people in northeast Saskatchewan that there will be some federal assistance, and can he assure the people in that part of the province that that aid will be coming very quickly, because they need that assistance right away?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if they have declared it a disaster—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You have had it since March 16. You are not telling the truth.

Mr. Whelan: I saw the telegram from the Minister of Agriculture in Saskatchewan that I have in my office, asking for assistance.

Mr. McKnight: What about March 16?

Mr. Whelan: In the press they called it a disaster area, but I have not seen any official declaration sent to us that it is a disaster area. That is all that I am saying. I have not seen it. If it is there as of yesterday, I have not seen it. Any declaration that is made by any province is considered. I do not know of any declaration of a disaster area that is too big for a province to look after, that the federal Government has refused.

ENERGY

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM GRANTS FOR EXPLORATION IN ARCTIC

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I am sure that he is aware that the funds for PIP grants for exploration in the Arctic are mainly derived from Canadian consumers of petroleum products through the PGRT paid at the gas pumps. He must also be aware that much of the equipment being used in that exploration activity is bought, hired or contracted offshore, as his brochure shows very clearly.

Would the Minister tell us why Canadian generated funds should be used to subsidize offshore drilling equipment and offshore shipbuilding, when there is a Canadian product and Canadian shipbuilding on shore which those Canadian funds could be used to help?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the PIP grants are a subsidy that we gave to the companies for drilling on Canada Lands in the North and in the Maritimes. Each contractor who drills is trying to get equipment at the cheapest cost possible so that the PIP grants will not be overspent. There is no law that forces anybody to use only Canadian equipment.

A lot of Canadian equipment has been used in the North or the offshore, and some other equipment was leased out there because there are a lot of rigs available at a cheaper cost in the world market at this time due to the surplus of rigs. The contractors, or companies, are trying to drill at the lowest cost possible so that the taxpayers will not pay too much money for the grants.

AVAILABILITY OF MOBILE ARCTIC DRILLING PLATFORM

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The Minister must know and, if he does not, his colleague will tell him, that the Mobile Arctic Island Drilling Platform is available. It is a Canadian product and a Canadian innovation which employs Canadians.

We have been urged to buy Canadian. Why is the Minister awarding PIP grants to companies that do not buy Canadian? Why does he not put it into law?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if it is Canadian built I think it would be easy for them to be competitive in getting contracts. There is no law that forbids Canadians or drilling companies to get their equipment abroad. There are some Canadian rigs operating in the North Sea. This is a worth-while situation, and they all compete to get the work.

ATLANTIC PROVINCES FEED FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In 1976 there was a commitment made through the Domestic Feed Grain Policy of Agriculture Canada that feed freight assistance to the Atlantic provinces and eastern Quebec would continue unless a high degree of self-sufficiency was achieved. Assistance has been substantially reduced, and Maritime farmers are now less sufficient than they were in 1976. In light of the eroding position of Maritime livestock and poultry producers vis-à-vis other parts of the country, what steps is the Minister planning to take to stop this erosion and put our maritime producers in an equitable position with producers in other parts of the country?

• (1500)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the President of the Maritime Farmers Association was in Ottawa last week. He had meetings with agriculture officials and with the Canadian Livestock Feed Board officials. They are trying to put together certain recommendations that will amount to an expenditure of somewhere between $2 million and $5 million. I do not know whether that will be satisfactory to them, but it should offset some of the inequity that exists in that plan at the present time.

PROPOSAL ADVANCED BY MARITIME FARMERS' COUNCIL

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. I am sure the Hon. Minister is aware that, unless steps are taken, our livestock and poultry producers will not be able to survive. Will the Minister give favourable consideration to the Maritime Farmers' Council proposal which, among other things, asks that a system be implemented to make payment of feed freight assistance benefits to producers so that they will have a positive effect on local feed grain and forage production marketing in the Maritime area? This would be in addition to the cash the Minister has indicated would be made available.

Tabling of Documents

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, all other proposals are being considered both by my Department, Agriculture Canada officials, and by the Canadian Livestock Feed Board. The recommendations have not all come together yet, but I would hope they will in the next day or so.

PETITIONS

MR. WISE—INCREASE IN VIOLENT CRIME

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasant responsibility and duty today to table two petitions signed by the citizens of St. Thomas in The Constituency of Elgin.

The first petition reflects the opinions of my constituents regarding the increase in violent crime that we are presently encountering and also the very light sentences that are being handed out, in particular to repeat offenders. I sincerely hope that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) will give serious consideration to the opinions of my constituents.

MR. WISE—DISTRIBUTION OF PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIALS

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my second petition is signed by the citizens of St. Thomas in the Constituency of Elgin. This petition, like the first one, reflects the opinions of my constituents regarding the harmful effects of pornography on our society. Again, I sincerely hope that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) will give serious consideration to my constituents' wishes by restricting the distribution of pornographic materials to society.

MR. DARLING—INSTALLATION OF RAILWAY CROSSING LIGHTS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of Morrison Ward, Town of Gravenhurst, in the Province of Ontario, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that at mileage 102.98 of the Newmarket Subdivision of the Canada National Railway, intersecting the Sparrow Lake Road "C", two persons have been killed by trains while crossing the tracks in motorized vehicles and that motorists believe that visibility of approaching CNR trains is made difficult by the topographical nature of the crossing.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation for the installation of railway crossing lights at the aforementioned intersection. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. SCOTT (VICTORIA-HALIBURTON)—USE OF CNR LAND

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and pleasure to present a petition signed by a number of my constituents in the Village of Fenelon Falls in the Township of Fenelon. They all have property adjoining the now abandoned Canadian National track bed from Lindsay to Haliburton. They hereby formally attest to their objection to the track bed abutting their respective properties being used for public bike recreational trails. They ask that they be allowed input into the use of this land before it is disposed of.

MR. FLIS—HUNGER STRIKE OF POLISH CANADIANS

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table a petition by 693 undersigned residents of the constituency of Parkdale-High Park and other parts of Ontario who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy. The undersigned citizens strongly support the hunger strike staged by three Polish Canadians, and urge the Canadian Government to help the spouses and children of the strikers to join them in Canada. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. STEWART—RIGHT TO WORK IMPEDED

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, the petition of the undersigned residents of the Province of Ontario who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy humbly sheweth that qualified Quebec pipeline welders have been working throughout the rest of Canada while the actions of the Government of the Province of Quebec are impeding the ability of non-Quebec resident welders to obtain work in that province.

Wherefore we humbly ask for your assistance in seeking redress for these grievances which violate our rights as guaranteed by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. HEAP—IMMIGRATION POLICY

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from some 1,500 residents of the City of Toronto who petition this Parliament to recognize that Canadians recognize family reunion as an integral part of Canadian immigration policy, that sons and daughters over 21 years of age are not recognized as part of the family for purposes of immigration, and that for many Canadian immigrant families unmarried sons and daughters do not cease to be part of their families simply because they attain the age of 21, resulting in the fact that many Canadian immigrant families are denied reunion and are suffering hardship.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to direct the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) to amend the present immigration regulation so that a sole remaining unmarried son or daughter of a Canadian resident shall be admissible on the same basis as minor children. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

CBC—LOGO AND CORPORATE SIGNATURE

Question No. 681—Mr. Clark (Yellowhead):

1. (a) Which agency or agencies or person or persons, and working in what city or cities, conceived and designed the logo and corporate signature of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (b) what amount and on what date was each agency paid for these and any related services?

2. What means were employed by the Corporation to protect its logo and corporate signature from use by others either within, or external to, Canada?

3. Is the Corporation represented by any subsidiaries, agents or offices in other countries and, if so, in which other countries and by what other subsidiaries, agents or offices?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. (a) Burton Kramer Associates Ltd., Graphic Design Consultants, 206 Bloor Street West, Toronto, Ontario, Canada

(b) The contract signed on June 27, 1973 with Burton Kramer Associates Limited called for the payment of $50,000 for the research, design and development of a symbol. The contract also called for assessment and application phases, the fees for which were to be based upon standard design office rates.

No accurate statement of the amounts paid under these later phases can now be provided since the accounts payable records for these related services, dated nine and ten years ago, are no longer in existence. The requirements of the relevant federal legislation which sets out the period of retention of such records, have been met.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the admonition of the Parliamentary Secretary in recent months in this Chamber with respect to the Government's attitude regarding starred questions, I rise once again and ask him why people living in the Maritimes, shipyards and entrepreneurs in the shipping community, cannot obtain an answer to question No. 699 which was placed on the Order Paper on February 22, 1984, some four or five months ago.

It simply asks for the number of ships, drilling rigs and other platforms described as vessels imported into Canada. It asks how many there have been, how much revenue has been collected and how much it has cost to police. It concerns questions which have been raised consistently in the House with respect to PIP grants and other legislation.

When will we get an answer to this question? Will the Government not concede and simply acknowledge that the practice in this Chamber for over 100 years now has been to respond expeditiously and swiftly to starred questions? Otherwise, there is very little point in having starred questions. The answers to written questions are printed. It is either a useful practice or it is not. The Parliamentary Secretary has consistently said that there is nothing about this in our Standing Orders; but my point of order is as much to appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the precedent in the Chamber upon which we rely so frequently for the proper discharge of our duties. Would the Parliamentary Secretary simply indicate whether or not he has any intention of responding to that question during this Parliament?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, we will try to obtain an answer to that question as soon as possible. As the Hon. Member indicated in elaborating on his point of order, it is a complex question. The Government is moving as fast as it can to obtain an answer for the Hon. Member.

With regard to starred questions, that issue has been raised time and time again. I can only say that the Government tries to act expeditiously on all questions, not just starred questions.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, seeing that the Parliamentary Secretary is in such a good mood, would he be willing to advise me, in terms of the dozen or so times he has told me that he would inquire of the Department of National Defence about question No. 840, what kind of response he obtained? Is it that they are too incompetent to fulfil the requirements of the question? Is there some security reason, or is it simply that the Minister of National Defence has been misleading the country for years?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Hon. Member, we are trying to obtain an answer to that question for him. I know exactly what the question is and what information he is trying to obtain.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INDIAN SELF-GOVERNMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

On the Order: Introduction of Bills:

June 22, 1984—The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—Bill intituled: "An Act relating to self-government for Indian Nations".

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, through an error the royal proclamation was sent by air to the Supreme Court rather than here. It is on its way. In view of that, would it be possible—and I understand unanimous consent might be forthcoming—to revert to Introduction of Bills to have the Bill relating to self-government for Indian nations introduced? I understand that it will be in Your Honour's hands momentarily.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is nothing we can do about it now.

Mr. Speaker: We do not have the royal recommendation. I believe the House might be disposed, as soon as it is received, to interrupt proceedings and perhaps give consent to the introduction of the Bill. In the circumstances the Chair's hands are tied.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I now understand there is a disposition to do it at the time it arrives, for which I thank House Leaders of the Opposition Parties.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Financial Administration Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Speaker: As Hon. Members are aware, there are five motions standing on the Notice Paper at report stage of Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Financial Administration Act.

I have examined these motions and have concluded that Motion No. 1, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), should be debated and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), should be grouped for debate and voted as follows: (a) a vote on Motion No. 2 will also dispose of Motion No. 3; (b) Motion No. 4 will be voted on by itself; and (c) Motion No. 5 should be debated and voted on separately. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I am putting the first motion for debate at this stage.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved:

That Bill C-34 be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 16 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"pleted three months of continuous service".

He said: Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members are aware, the motion before the House would have the effect of saying that women or men who have three months of continuous employment with the same employer would be eligible for the maternity leave and child care provisions as set out in the Act. This would mean that women and their husbands could choose after three months whether or not they wished to take maternity leave or child care leave. It would affect those women who come under the protection of the Canada Labour Code.

My motion, in effect, is the proposition which was introduced to the Minister when he tabled the Bill in the House in May. What has happened over the last week is that, in collusion with the Conservative Party, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) backed down in committee from the promise he made to women across the country, to people who wanted the child care provisions to apply after three months. By moving to a six-month qualifying period many women, many parents throughout this land, will not qualify for the leave.

● (1520)

I will give an example of how this would operate. In committee we had representations from the Canadian Construction Association. They did not want the present law, which provides for maternity leave after 12 months' continuous employment, changed. In my questioning of the representatives of the Canadian Construction Association, they admitted that most of their tradespeople only had three or four months' employment with any one employer. What the provision which the Liberals and Conservatives agreed to in committee will do is this: Women who work in the construction trades will not qualify for maternity leave and neither parent will qualify for the child care provisions. In my amendment I am trying to re-establish what the Minister promised to women and parents across this land when he tabled this Bill. I am trying to undo the harm of the Liberal-Conservative coalition in committee which prevents many women and parents qualifying for this leave.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly to this amendment. We spent a week in committee where we heard many witnesses. The first witness we heard was the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet). He assured us that the Bill represented his best judgment as to a compromise between the interests of labour and the interests of employers. At that point I asked whose responsibility it was to protect the interests of society. It is all right to have vested interest groups. I believe it is fair to say that labour is a vested interest group and that employers are a vested interest group. Surely it is the purpose and the place of the House of Commons of Canada and the parliamentarians who serve in this House on behalf of all the people in Canada to have the responsibility and the function of protecting the public good.

As the week unfolded, it became clear that the Bill was not a true compromise between the two vested interest groups. In fact, the Bill as presented to us was clearly a Bill which favoured the vested interests of organized labour. Parts of the Bill favour employees, wherever we find them, but large parts of the Bill dealt with conditions of work that are normally part of the collective bargaining process.

What the Minister of Labour was attempting to do was to take those and, through the legislative process, remove the possibility of collective bargaining. That is something we expect the New Democratic Party to support. I am sure they would support an amendment that said zero months, that there be absolutely no qualifying period; that for employees under the union banner, those that are captive of the union movement, there would be no qualifying period required. The individual employer would be responsible for the costs associated with it.

The only Party that faithfully attended all the hearings and attempted to serve the public well was the Conservative Party of Canada. We truly tried to find the best kind of labour legislation. You can have a piece of legislation dealing with the necessity for some period of continuous employment to be served before an employee acquires a right, in this case the right to 41 weeks of leave. There is one set of conditions which prevails when society pays the cost of that leave. There is a different set of conditions which prevails when the individual employer must pay the cost of that leave. That is one of the flaws in this piece of legislation, that the Government, the Liberal Party of Canada, in conjunction with the NDP, refused to change the Bill to remove the obligation of an individual employer to provide certain benefits that cost money.

Many witnesses before us testified that when you are going to cause individual employers to pay that money—

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member would let me have a moment or two. With the indulgence of the Hon. Member, because of the time frame, I wonder if the Hon. Member would permit me to present a motion. There has already been unanimous consent indicated that we revert to motions so that we can have the introduction of the Bill providing for Indian self-government.

Mr. Siddon: Can you wait five minutes?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member might be agreeable to doing it now inasmuch as a press conference has been staged with respect to the Bill of which the Opposition Parties are aware and are going to participate. Inasmuch as there is unanimous consent to do so, I wonder if the Hon. Member would mind. It will only take a minute.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I was out of the Chamber when the Minister rose. I gather that he now has the royal recommendation.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Quite so.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Accordingly we are prepared to allow the Minister to proceed with the introduction of the Bill now that this deficiency in the procedure has been corrected.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I wish to indicate that the NDP is very happy to give its agreement to the introduction of this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Financial Administration Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to do that for the House. I am pleased that occasionally we do something unanimously.

The principle to which I was addressing myself was the principle of who pays. The Minister has brought forward a Bill which states that an employer will hire someone who subsequently becomes pregnant. That someone, or the spouse of that someone, is entitled to 41 weeks of leave and the employer is responsible for the benefit costs during that period.

If we are going to require in the laws of Canada that an individual employer pay the benefit costs for someone for a period approaching 41 weeks, the least we can expect is that that person provide some period of continuous service before being entitled to that leave. It was 12 months, 52 weeks. The Government proposed that it be cut to three months or approximately 13 weeks. The committee in its wisdom came to somewhere in between and moved it to a period of 26 or 27 weeks, in effect six months.

I suggest that probably we are still wrong in principle to require the individual employer to carry the cost of that leave. If that period of leave for child care is something that our society values, then I suggest that society in total, through general revenues, some kind of insurance or some other scheme, should pay the direct costs associated with that period of leave. However, the Government was unwilling to so provide.

The Government has supposedly had a change in leadership and a change in direction. It is still a government that is loading a specific cost on to a specific employer that is totally out of the control of that employer. That cost is in the hands of those who seek the leave and if such leave is deemed to be of benefit to society, then it is a cost which should be paid for by society rather than by the individual employer.

Surely, given the fact that the Government insists that the individual employer be responsible for that cost, it is at least reasonable for any employee who is to benefit from that provision to provide the employer with a period of continuous service that is longer than the normal probationary period which attaches to many forms of employment. That is why the committee was virtually unanimous in its decision to amend that provision of the Bill from three months to six months. I would encourage the House to accept the six-month provision. It is not a great provision, it is not a perfect provision, but given the individual responsibility, it is certainly better than the three-month provision.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak very briefly to the amendment to Clause 6, where it refers to Section 59.2 of the Canada Labour Code, proposed by the New Democratic Party. Originally, the Canada Labour Code, as the previous speaker just said, prescribed a period of twelve months, and when Bill C-34 was introduced, this was reduced to three months, more or less as proposed in the amendment by the New Democratic Party.

Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, the groups that testified before the Committee of Labour, Manpower and Immigration, especially those representing management and obviously those representing workers who are all very much in favour of the Bill. In all fairness to the employers, we cannot really say that they are against the Bill but they did use a term, and this term was used by Mr. Masters who is President of or represents a group called Fetco . . . employees who fall under federal jurisdiction and work for a Crown Corporation. He said quite simply to bring in a balanced bill. So, regarding the existing period of twelve months and the three-month period proposed in the Bill, we felt in Committee and also in the Government that to balance the situation and strike a bargain that would be fair to both workers and employers, a period of six months would be entirely reasonable.

I was very pleased to hear my hon. friend from the Progressive Conservative Party say that he wanted the period to be set at six months. I know that on their side, they supported the amendment I proposed on behalf of the Government, which meant that all employees with six months' continuous service shall be entitled to what we provide under Clause 59.2.

Since we were talking about more balanced legislation, in Committee all three Parties tried to deal equitably and fairly with the groups appearing before us. I know that the Progressive Conservative Party was very much in favour of the six-month amendment, and that the Government proposed the six-month amendment since it wanted to expedite this Bill.

As for the three-month proposal, I myself and other Government members believed that going from twelve months to three months was too great a step and that some kind of compromise was preferable. Of course such compromises are necessary whenever a Bill is considered in Committee by the various parties, and I believe that this time we were very successfull, considering both the time element and the number of witnesses that were heard. We were able to reach an agreement among the Parties so that the Bill could be reported back to the House without delay. Mr. Speaker, that is why, if we are talking about balanced legislation, I feel that we should vote against the amendment proposed by the New Democratic Party and that we should proceed with the Bill as amended. I think we should put the question on this Bill unless some of my hon. friends have further comments to make.

[English]

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I will be prepared to have the question put in just a moment. Regarding this particular provision, I think the members of the New Democratic Party are saying that we did not have enough time to deal with this Bill. I believe it is a cry for help. We did not have time for a proper consideration of the Bill or to make better improvements to it.

During the discussion of this particular clause, I for example proposed that there might be some sort of a sliding scale of from three months up to 12 months, and perhaps even have extended benefits on one end or the other. Our real concern is for the formation of families. How does this provision affect mothers and fathers who are bringing children into the world and into their homes? We were concerned, for example, that the provision of 24 weeks and 24 weeks cannot run at the same time or that any part of those weeks cannot run at the same time.

This Bill should have accommodated the fact that a mother goes to the hospital, has a child, brings the child home and that is when she needs the help of the father or husband. Most people cannot afford to take two weeks, three weeks, a month or 41 weeks off work. However, they need that immediate time at home to help get the family started. That is the kind of concern for men, women and children that we were trying to have reflected by an amendment. I feel that if we had had more time, we could have in fact met the needs of individual families and the needs of the creation of families in a more considerable and appropriate manner.

If that is what is being expressed by the motion moved by the NDP, then I am in support of the idea of expressing concern for inadequate amendments that have been made by the Government. We then came up with a compromise and this compromise will have to stand until a Conservative Government can look at this matter in more detail.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. A few moments ago one of my Conservative colleagues suggested that the main beneficiaries of this legislation and particularly of this clause were organized workers in Canada. He somehow attempted to infer that members of the NDP, as Conservative members often charge, are in the pockets of organized labour. I would simply point out that the main beneficiaries of this provision in the Bill are the workers in Canada who are unorganized and do not have union protection. That is a fact. If anyone would care to study at least 50 per cent of the collective agreements in Canada, and particularly those for the industrial sector and perhaps even more for the public sector, he or she would find that these kinds of benefits are already in existence.

It should also be made very clear that we are not talking about paid maternity leave. We are talking about leave of absence for reasons of maternity. There is a vast world of difference between the two, particularly in terms of the cost. The original Bill that came before the committee contained a provision the same as that contained in this NDP amendment requiring that the employee must have completed three months of continuous service before becoming eligible for this maternity leave. On the initiative of, and after pressure by, Conservative members on that committee who requested that the provision be extended to six months' continuous service in order to qualify for unpaid leave of absence, the Government acceded to that Conservative pressure. What my NDP colleagues and I are attempting to do with this amendment is to restore this particular clause of the Bill to its original form so that after three months of continuous service, a period of time which I and I believe most Canadians would deem as being fair, employees may be entitled to unpaid leave for reasons of maternity and for child care where it is required following birth.

I think the amendment is fair and I think the concept is fair. We have been waiting a long, long time for it. Particularly, Canadians who do not have the benefit of being protected by a collective agreement and by the benefits of union representation have been long awaiting an opportunity to have fair treatment. Unpaid maternity leave is certainly the minimum they should be able to expect and demand of their elected representatives in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion defeated on division.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Murphy) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 which have been grouped for debate.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-34, be amended in Clause 20, by striking out line 21 at page 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"(e) co-operate, to the best of his ability, with any person exercis".

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-34, be amended in Clause 20, by striking out line 24 at page 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"(f) co-operate, to the best of his ability, with the safety and health".

Motion No. 4

That Bill C-34, be amended in Clause 20, by striking out line 39 at page 18 and substituting the following therefor:

"thing constitutes a danger to himself or herself or her unborn child or".

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to determine whether some of the arguments which were used in committee the other evening might be a little more persuasive in this Chamber today. Hon. Members will recall that the New Democratic Party, in the midst of the time constraints which the Government had placed on the House, chose to keep the Chamber sitting until 5.05 a.m. in the morning for voting purposes. Members will also recall that at 9.30 a.m. that same morning, the committee commenced its hearings once again. That same day we discussed this Bill clause by clause and finished at approximately 1.30 a.m. in the morning.

Members were tired when we reached the proceedings which dealt with possible amendments. It seems to me that the committee did not act with the kind of wisdom which the Chamber has come to expect from committees. Perhaps the Minister, with a good night's sleep under his belt, may have had some occasion to reflect on the instructions which he gave to his voting troops who appeared. They had not heard the witnesses, but as is customary in this Chamber they came to vote.

The Speaker has grouped these three motions for debate and has indicated that there will be two votes in order to dispose of the three amendments. Motion No. 2 and Motion No. 3 have been grouped together.

The most positive feature—and it is a very, very desirable feature—of this piece of legislation is the degree to which it extends the principles which are important to the preservation of health and safety in the workplace. Human life and health are important to all of us. This Bill is an important step foward in the preservation of human life and health in the workplace. The basic principle of that extension is that today we are legislating workers' rights. We are extending to individual workers, to workers collectively and to health and safety committees, certain rights. In Motion No. 2 and Motion No. 3, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) is proposing the logical extension of that mentality. He is proposing that a right should be accompanied by a responsibility. A right which is not accompanied by a responsibility is not as much of a right as it could be or as it should be.

The amendment reads:

(e) co-operate to the best of his ability, with any person exercising—

That indicates that any individual in the workplace has the responsibility to try to the best of his ability to co-operate with worker health and safety committees. The amendment indicates that individuals have a responsibility to their fellow employees and to the public to try to the best of their ability to co-operate and to put into practice good health and safety measures. There could be the best rules in the world, there could be 20 people in the workplace, and there could be the best health and safety committee, yet if one of those 20 workers refused to co-operate with the health and safety committee, what is the purpose of it?

Those of us who have children have said to them: "Do not touch the stove when it is on. Do not touch the burner. Do not grab the kettle when it is full of boiling water". That is a good safety precaution. However, if the children do not obey those instructions and go ahead and touch the stove or grab the kettle, they will get hurt. Quite often a child might not hurt himself, but the child will hurt his baby brother, baby sister, or best friend with that kettle of boiling water.

• (1550)

That is the little chunk of logic, Mr. Speaker, that is missing in this Bill which the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) spotted. He asks Hon. Members of this Chamber to approve just the simple piece of logic that a right is stronger and more effective when it is accompanied by a responsibility, in this case, the responsibility to co-operate with health and safety committees and officers. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is not too much to ask of the Government. That is what Motion No. 2 and Motion No. 3 which we will dispose of with one vote are asking for. I urge Hon. Members of this Chamber to vote yes in order that we can deal with it in a positive way and enshrine it in this legislation.

I really do not know why the Speaker has grouped Motion No. 4 with Motions Nos. 2 and 3 because Motion No. 4 is a very different principle. We are enshrining, Mr. Speaker, in this legislation the rights of individual workers in several ways, the most important of which is the right to refuse to carry out a task which would endanger that worker's life or health. Motion No. 4, Mr. Speaker, extends that right to the unborn child.

If the Minister is going to vote against Motion No. 4, I wish he would stand in this House and tell us why. In committee, Mr. Speaker, he would not tell us why. He would not speak to it at all. He just shook his head no, and members voted against it. Surely, if Hon. Members of this Chamber are willing to give adults certain rights to protect their own health and safety in the workplace, they should also give the right to those same adults to protect the life, health and safety of the unborn child. Who else will act for the unborn child?

It is a tiny amendment, Mr. Speaker, with significant repercussions. Motion No. 4 simply extends the right which we afford to adults, who are capable of taking care of themselves, to the unborn child, who is not capable of taking care of himself or herself. If Government Members do not want that right for the unborn child, surely one of them at least will have the courage to stand in this Chamber and tell us why he or she believes that the unborn child does not deserve that kind of protection.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative amendments under Motions Nos. 2 and 3, while they appear to have no great substance or purpose other than to allow a discussion on these particular clauses in a general way during debate of this Labour Code Bill, cause me some concern. To most people these amendments would sound reasonable, if they were not acquainted with the reality of the workplace. I quote Clause 83(1) (e) of the legislation with respect to Motion No 2:

While at work, every employee shall (e) co-operate with any person exercising a duty imposed by this Part or any regulations made thereunder;—

And with respect to Motion No. 3, Clause 83(1)(f) reads:

While at work, every employee shall (f) co-operate, with the safety and health committee established for the workplace—

The amendment in motion No. 2 reads:

(e) co-operate to the best of his ability, with any person excercising—

The amendment in motion No. 3 reads:

(f) co-operate, to the best of his ability, with the safety and health—

Those amendments sound very reasonable and justified on the surface. However, putting this wording in may have an impact of a nature which causes me some concern. It may force employees to take an unrealistic degree of responsibility for enforcing safety, whereas under every provincial workers' compensation act and regulations, the prime responsibility for enforcing safety properly rests on management because it alone has the right to direct the workforce.

I do agree that an employee has a heavy responsibility for protecting his own life and the life of his fellow employees. However, the prime responsibility must rest upon those who have the power of management. These amendments would tend to force employees rather than management to take the prime responsibility in enforcing safety, to a far greater degree than it is reasonable to expect them to do without placing their jobs in jeopardy. That is the key point.

I would like to give a couple of illustrations. As chairman of an industrial union safety committee and as secretary of a joint management-labour industrial safety committee in my own place of work, Kootenay Forest Products, now Westar, in Nelson, British Columbia, I had to risk my own job a number of times in order to enforce the laws of that province. I had to do so in defiance of warnings and instructions from my employer. While some of us may be a little more gutsy on occasion, I feel it is a little much to expect an average employee to put his job on the line in order to enforce the laws of the workplace, the contract, the province or the country. Most people will just not do that.

I will give an example of a situation under provincial jurisdiction, but it could happen in some industries under federal jurisdiction. It is contrary to the Workers' Compensation Act and regulations in the Province of British Columbia to walk across a moving conveyor or a moving chain. However, in order to keep production moving, workers do that because, contrary to some mythology, the basic purpose of most employees is to put in a good day's work for a good day's pay. Most employees are very conscientious, so conscientious in fact that they sometimes put their lives at risk. The law is very clear in British Columbia. You do not cross a moving conveyor or a moving green chain, but in order to clear up plug-ups, workers are always following the example of their supervisors and jumping up while the machinery is moving to try to straighten out a jam. They take the chance of injury and sometimes the chance of being killed just to keep the production line moving.

On a number of occasions when I saw a worker going beyond what I thought was reasonable—and I was not rigid on that; there has to be some flexibility because our main job is to keep the production flow going—I would simply shut down the machinery and stop the mill. I did that because I could see that some workers were getting too careless and doing that sort of thing too often without forethought. I was threatened with discipline many times but I was prepared, if necessary, to go before the compensation board, take it to the press and to the public in order to draw attention to the lax enforcement of the safety and health laws of that province. Not every employee is willing to do that.

In other cases, my colleague, who used to rotate with me sometimes between being union plant chairman and chairman of the safety committee, has physically picked up employees by the scruff of the neck and threatened them for doing acts which endangered their fellow workers. He was placing himself in jeopardy in order to co-operate to the best of his ability with the decisions of a safety committee and safety management and the laws of the province. He had physically to threaten people, which is a possible Criminal Code violation, in order to stop some of his fellow workers from threatening the lives of their fellow workers by acting carelessly in order to keep production flowing. These amendments may be with the best of intentions, but that is often the problem.

● (1600)

We have an assembly here which is composed largely of people who do not understand the realities of the real world in heavy, blue collar industry. If you have never done anything more dangerous than stabbing your finger with the end of a paper-clip, you cannot understand the values of and the way things work in the real industrial world. For that reason I think the dual amendment, while I believe it is made in good faith, is a mistake and would compound the problems of safety and health enforcement rather than help alleviate them.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to understand how Motion No. 4 can be grouped with Motions Nos. 2 and 3. Presumably it is for procedural purposes and we will be voting on them separately in any case. I intend to confine myself to Motion No. 4.

This is an important piece of legislation and we have to be careful that we do not rush it through the House. I did not participate in the committee phase of the Bill, but my colleagues did and I believe had sufficient time to focus attention on a number of serious ways in which this Bill is flawed. One of those flaws is addressed in Motion No. 4.

During my examination of the evidence presented to the committee by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, I was struck by their brief. The chairperson of their employment committee recommended that Clause 85(1)(a) of the legislation be amended to protect not only the woman operating a video display terminal, but her unborn child.

Before I get into arguments supporting that position, we would do well to remember that VDTs are becoming more and more a part of the workplace, particularly the office workplace. We know from statistics that 80 per cent of workers in the service sector are women. If you narrow that down still further to clerical occupations, the percentage is probably higher. All you have to do is go into any bank in this country to see a dramatic exemplification of that fact. We also know that the service sector will probably be the one most affected in the short term by technological change. We now have the introduction of microchip technology in the office workplace through the use of word processors and various other kinds of computerized equipment which, of course, carry with them video display terminals.

What we do not know is just exactly what is emanating from these VDTs. There is a grey area here that science has yet to identify. There is some evidence to indicate that it does constitute a health hazard both to a woman and to the woman carrying a child. Surely, then, the benefit of the doubt should be given and that situation addressed. The amendment proposed by the NAC seeks to correct that situation, and I quote the chairperson of the NAC:

> We would ask that you include a paragraph which would read: Every employer shall, in respect of every workplace controlled by him, provide a 15-minute break to each employee who has completed one hour of work in front of a video display terminal.

She goes on:

> The employer shall provide annual eye examinations by an ophthalmologist chosen by the employee for employees who work on video display terminals and the employer shall pay to the employee the equivalent wage that he would have paid had the employee remained on the job for the period of time spent undergoing the examination.

That deals with the impact of VDTs on the eyes, but what concerns me here is the impact of this relatively new source of radiation on the unborn child. We are not dealing with something new or breaking new ground because it was addressed by the task force commissioned by the Department of Labour. One of the recommendations of that task force was that employers accept the following guidelines concerning VDTs. First, that pregnant women have the right to be reassigned to other positions without loss of pay, seniority and benefits. That is pretty straightforward. They were impressed enough by the arguments they had encountered during the course of their investigation to come to that conclusion. To quote from page 53 of the task force's report, which goes back to March, 1982:

> —the National Action Committee on the Status of Women brief reminded us that standards of what is "safe" can change, as was the case with asbestos. The argument goes that perhaps old VDTs or inadequately maintained VDTs emit more radiation. Or perhaps some sort of synergism occurs in a worksite comprised of several VDTs that could amount to a hazard?
> The following excerpts from the many briefs we received show the quandary we found ourselves in. For instance, the Canadian Air Line Employees' Association stated that at Dorval Airport in February, 1981, seven out of thirteen pregnant VDT operators miscarried. The Hospital Employees' Union, Local 180, British Columbia, told us that out of six pregnant VDT operators, two miscarried and of the four babies carried full term, only one was born normal. The B.C. Federation of Labour reminded that four out of seven pregnant VDT operators in the classified ad department of The Toronto Star gave birth to babies with congenital defects.

That seems to me to be sufficient evidence to give the benefit of the doubt to the protection of the woman carrying an unborn child who is exposed to a VDT.

It seems strange, indeed a bit of a paradox, that this amendment would be moved by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. One of the things that group is well known for is its position on the abortion question. But here they join the argument and have put forward the case for the protection of the unborn child, which I think is rather interesting. It reminds me of the fact that medicine is treating the unborn child as a patient in its own right. Indeed, medical science permits doctors not only to treat the unborn child as a separate patient, distinct from its mother, but in certain instances to perform surgical procedures on the unborn child by removing it from the womb without severing the umbilical cord and, upon completion of the surgical procedures, putting the child back in the mother's womb. Usually that stage of the pregnancy is completed. Medical science recognizes the importance of the protection of the unborn child and the right of the unborn child in terms of medical practice. The law is coming around to that recognition as well.

• (1610)

Surely the onus is on us to correct what I consider to be a very serious flaw in this Bill. We must ensure that women are protected from the emissions of VDTs and that pregnant women know that the child they are carrying in the workplace receives this protection also. I believe the problem was addressed quite adequately by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and is summed up in the amendment put forward by my colleague which I commend to the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is prepared to recognize the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). I doubt that there would be any opposition to his speaking at this time. Nevertheless, I must inquire, since he is the mover of the motion, whether there is unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to speak at this time. Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, through all of these amendments we are trying to send out a signal that the Conservative Party cares about people. We are serious about public health and safety. We are concerned about public health and safety as it relates to new technology. That is not just the technology of a video display terminal. It could relate to other technologies still unspoken of today and still to be found. That is why it is expressed by the word "thing" in the amendment. If these technological developments may bring damage or threat to the mother, who is the worker in this case, or to the unborn child, we should demonstrate care and concern. If we are wrong in this legislation, all we will do is err on the side of caution.

Doctors tell secretaries who are working before video display terminals to be careful. They say that although there may be no proof yet, they should try to stay away from those display terminals because the unborn child may be affected. We want to provide protection and give that kind of insurance.

In these amendments we are setting a tone which recognizes the health and safety of people. People are the basis of our workforce and our whole productivity. They are significant and important. By passing these amendments we indicate those kinds of things. It will be very regrettable if the Government does not accept those motions and the intent of the motions.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) spoke on Motion Nos. 2 and 3. I would like to speak on Motion No. 4 with respect to the rights of female workers. The amendment basically says that she would be able to refuse work if she had reasonable cause to believe that the operation of the machine or the "thing" constituted a danger to her unborn child.

If we do not have this provision in the Bill we run the risk that arbitration in the future will decide that a woman does not have the right to refuse dangerous work if it does not affect her health but only affects the health of her unborn child. I would prefer that we specifically mention the right of a woman to refuse dangerous work or the operation of a potentially dangerous machine if she has reasonable cause to believe that it could hurt her unborn child.

I believe that if the Minister had spent more time considering this very important amendment he would agree to it. One of the previous speakers mentioned the history of VDTs. Some people on the other side may say that there is no evidence that VDTs do harm. On the other hand, if a woman believes that it is a dangerous situation which is going to be harmful to her unborn child, she should have the right to refuse that work. The same thing can apply in many areas.

I find it ironic that in the past employers have refused to allow women to do certain jobs because they believed it would be harmful to the unborn child. We have allowed that in many situations. An employer can tell a woman that she cannot work on a particular job because it would be dangerous to her unborn child. We should certainly give the mother that same right. I believe all of us in the House can agree to that. I would like to hear a reply from the Minister on this issue.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment briefly on the three amendments.

First, amendment No. 2 and amendment No. 3 which have been grouped for the vote, and then amendment No. 4 which has also been grouped with amendments Nos. 2 and 3 for debate, but which will be voted on separately.

My comments concerning amendment No. 2 and amendment No. 3 are very simple. Indeed, I made those comments when the committee was considering the Bill and I pointed out to my Progressive Conservative colleagues that the amendment they were proposing was redundant in the sense that we already have the expression "due diligence", in Clause 83(1)(e) of the Bill, which is found in Clause 105(5)(b) and, therefore that is was not necessary to have an additional amendment which is nothing more than a repetition of what is already proposed in Clause 83.

I gave the same explanations to the committee, Mr. Speaker, and I should think that there is no need at this stage to repeat in the act what is already in Clause 105.

As to the proposed amendment motion No. 4 which would allow an employee to refuse to work if there is a danger not only to himself or herself and her unborn child, that is indeed a very important question. The Government wants to protect not only the mother and her unborn child but all employees under the Canada Labour Code. The series a of amendments we have proposed to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, which include a number of important amendments to provide better protection for men and women at their work place, have been the subject of extensive consultations between union representatives and employer groups.

There was no specific recommendation concerning this question submitted by the representatives of either the unions or management. To accept at the very last moment this amendment without any proper consultation with the representatives of management and the unions would not be well received in my opinion. I cannot, at the very last minute, accept such an amendment which could change substantially the rules of the game and create a very important exception to our Labour Code as it was not discussed as thoroughly as it should have been with the representatives of the unions and the employers.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the objectives which the representatives of the Progressive Conservative Party wanted to achieve in moving this amendment will certainly be acknowledged. There is no doubt that, during the discussions which will take place between the representatives on the committees . . . In passing, Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that the amendment we are proposing to Part IV of the Code provides for the setting up of committees in the workplace including representatives of both employees and employers to deal with all matters related to work safety. I am convinced that the setting up of these committees under the Act will protect not only mothers, but also unborn children, and that appropriate action will be taken to protect adequately Canadian women in the labour force.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Minister entertain a brief question which might be helpful?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Minister willing to answer a question?

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: The Minister encountered Motion No. 4 in committee last Thursday evening. It is six days later. Did the Minister attempt to consult with employers and labour in the intervening six days? Has there been a solid attempt to consult to see whether or not this amendment was acceptable?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, for weeks on end all kinds of consultations were held not only by myself but by senior department officials. It has not been felt at this point that the matter should be included in amendments to the Labour Code. I am not saying that eventually, labour market developments will not lead to other amendments along the lines proposed by my hon. friend. But at this point, I contend that such an amendment would be premature, considering there has not been adequate consultation, especially since information on VDTs is not complete, and the studies which were made are not conclusive.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before putting the question on Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4, I should remind Hon. Members that a vote on Motion No. 2 will dispose of Motion No. 3. Motion No. 4 will be voted on separately.

The question is on Motion No. 2. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost on division. Therefore, this also disposes of Motion No. 3.

Motions Nos. 2 and 3 (Mr. Wenman) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question now is on Motion No. 4. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Wenman) negatived.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-34, be amended in Clause 29, by adding immediately after line 15 at page 48, the following:

"(c) the rationale for the change"

He said: Mr. Speaker, again this is a tonal amendment. It is meant to add a tone of civility to the Labour Code regarding how employers and employees will hopefully react to one another with respect to technological change. The amendment adds the word "rationale". In other words, it asks that reasons be given for the introduction of new technology. We would hope that by bringing those reasons forward technological change could be brought on line in a manner that is co-operative, as opposed to the confrontationalism which presently seems to be the tone of labour-management relations in Canada.

The purpose of this legislation is to instil a new attitude in our concern for women, unborn children and other such concerns. That is why we have added the word "rationale". It is only reasonable that if an employer is going to make changes that could affect the workplace he should explain the reasons for those changes to the employees before the rumours begin.

It is a very concrete motion. I am confident that the Government will accept this motion, in keeping with the spirit in which it is proposed.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to speak in favour of the amendment. It is a particularly minor amendment which I do not believe the Government should have any trouble accepting. I suggest that the very fact that the Conservative Party can propose an amendment which will be an imposition on the employer would indicate that it would be acceptable to most employers across the nation.

If technological change is going to be introduced, as it would come under the auspices of this Bill, certainly employees have a right to know the reasons for implementing those changes which will cost people jobs or affect their job opportunities in the future. If we could hear from the Minister, perhaps he would accept this amendment. I believe it would help the relationship within the workplace.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I heard the representations of the two Hon. Members who spoke before me, and I feel this amendment has prima facie merits. I do not think it is improper to ask an employer to tell his employees the reasons for the change when he is attempting to make major technological changes.

Therefore, I am ready to accept the amendment on behalf of the government.

• (1630)

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear that all three Parties are supporting this amendment. Most Members of this Chamber know that along with Senator Nurgitz I worked for several months this winter developing a report on the issue of technological displacement and manpower training and retraining. I felt disappointment in the Bill concerning the clauses affecting technological change in view of the calibre of the evidence we had before the committee on the issue.

One of the conclusions from those months of investigation about new technology in Canada is that we are more like a Third World nation than a modern nation when it comes to our willingness and commitment to adopt new technologies which would put us back into a competitive position in world terms. Our failure to adopt new technologies is one of the primary reasons that our economy is in trouble, that our dollar has dropped so dramatically, why our interest rates are so high, why we have two million unemployed people and why Canada has slipped from having the second to having the thirteenth highest standard of living in the world. We do not have the attitudes, the systems, the tax policies and the people necessary to take this country into what I might think of as the 20th century, but certainly the 21st century. It is a crisis that we are facing, Mr. Speaker.

I am pleased this amendment has been accepted by all three Parties. I think it has been sufficiently explained. All it really does is provide that an employer who is introducing a new technology will share with those employees who will be affected by it the reasons for the change.

The biggest problem we are facing when it comes to the introduction of technology is the knowledge problem. We do not have enough Canadians at the management level or at the employee level who know, understand and have a feeling for the new technologies. That was clear from the responses we got to the questions we asked in committee. The most disappointing group of all, in my opinion, was the group representing the Canadian Labour Congress. I think those people had a contribution to make. The sense of panic which their leadership felt about the possibility of the whole Bill failing made them say to us: "We will not help you. We will not testify and we will not put on the public record our best ideas as to how to make this piece of legislation better". They said: "Hold your nose and pass it because we are panic-stricken". I think the Congress sold their members short, this Parliament short, and the Canadian people short with that kind of attitude. Certainly in this area of technological change, the Canadian Labour Congress has put some resources into it, it has some understanding of it, some clear-cut ideas of what needs to be done, and the nation would have been better served if the Congress had put those thoughts on the public record so we could have had better consideration in committee.

I am pleased at this small step we are taking. I wish we could have taken a larger step.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 5. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Wenman) agreed to.

Mr. Ouellet moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Ouellet moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to debate Bill C-34 at third reading, I must raise some points that I have repeated time and time again in committee. The Government has not allowed adequate time for proper study and representation, nor has it allowed enough time for input. The nature of the amendments which have been received indicates the Bill was inadequately drafted, not completely thought out, and that not enough time and consideration was given to consultation by all three Parties.

When the Minister first came to the House he talked about consultation. I accepted that the Minister and his Department had consulted widely and recently had made his intentions known as to the nature of the legislation, and that he had somehow received general approval. We can see by the Minister's own admission today that new technology, video display terminals for example, simple technology that has been with us not since yesterday but for many years, was a subject that was not really talked about and that there were not really any consultations.

Why was that? Certainly there is concern raised throughout the community about video display terminals. Is it because the Government says that first you have to harm women who are pregnant, that you have to have damage done to unborn children, and then when we can prove children have been damaged and a mother has suffered serious harm, we will consider legislation? Why not consider some legislation in advance? Why not make this an important part of the study? Why was this subject not introduced into the committee, allowing the committee to bring forward a study or to raise awareness in the community about it?

The Minister said he had been consulting for four years. We heard from witnesses that the Minister has not consulted with them for months, even years. We heard from major groups who are affected by this legislation. This makes one wonder about consultation. This point was brought out time and time again in committee. Areas that were not dealt with were pointed out and these included areas of technology, health and safety and issues of concern to women generally.

We are concerned that we did not have sufficient time in committee because the Bill was not introduced sooner, although we did spend hour upon hour upon hour in committee. The House should be aware that, in spite of the late presentation of this Bill, members of this committee worked long and hard. They heard brief after brief after brief. We started hearings early in the morning. We could have started earlier. We wanted to start two weeks ago, but unfortunately we could not because the Government had not introduced the Bill into the House. We could have started then, but even when we started we agreed to start at 9.30 a.m. and kept going every night to almost midnight in most cases. We came to the House of Commons. We sat until six o'clock in the morning, after which time we went home and changed our clothes. We were back at 9.30 a.m. to start the committee hearing again. From 9.30 a.m. until 9.30 p.m. we heard presentations before the committee. We were still sitting at midnight. We were still sitting at one o'clock or two o'clock in the morning, at which point we adjourned.

We did not have time to read the briefs but just had the briefs presented to us. The presenters did not have time to read them to the committee. As committee members we did not have time even to read the briefs. We were listening and we were busy throughout that time. It was an insult to those who spent even a limited time preparing their representations. They complained that they had only two or three days in which to prepare. To their credit, many of them did a fine job. It was an insult to them that the committee did not have the time to hear them fully or to explore their avenues of concern. It is anti-democratic. It is wrong to do this in a democratic society. It is an abuse of our freedom. It is an abuse of our responsibility. I am disappointed to have been forced to participate in it in that manner.

Most of the shortcomings of the Bill as presented could have been corrected with further consultation, even at committee level. If it had been tabled earlier in the session, it could have been discussed for a more extensive period of time with the parties affected, who would understand its implications. It could have been discussed with Members of Parliament. The Government could have allowed us to have an appropriate amount of time in which to prepare the required research, research which should be at the level of debate and discussion of Members of Parliament. However, because of shortage of time the treatment has been only half a loaf.

Of course, those who were mostly left out tended to be those in employers' groups, the people most directly affected. As I stand here today, I am receiving new telegrams from groups across Canada that only found out this week, having read about it in the newspapers, what was happening. They are writing or telegraphing us saying "Just a minute", yet we in our political expediency are forced to rush the Bill through the House.

When announcing the legislation, the Minister set the whole tone of pressure, hurry and lack of caring. In fact, that is what it represented as far as I could see. Even in the press conference which we attended the Minister referred to extended compulsion. In the committee hearings another Minister used the following words: "We will force them". Where is the necessary element of consultation, co-operation and civility in this attitude of force and confrontation?

The Canadian Bankers' Association, not a great favourite of mine, testified before the committee. They said that to say there has been consultation is a little misleading. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business called the exercise a charade and refused to appear before the committee because it had not been consulted.

The Government and the New Democratic Party did not want the Bill to go to committee. My colleague indicated that he was surprised and disappointed in that the New Democratic Party did not want full consultation. When in fact the Progressive Conservative Party insisted upon hearing the Canadian Labour Congress, business groups and interested parties such as academics, religious groups, women's groups and individuals, they said that it would delay the Bill. They indicated that the Bill would not be as good and that something would happen to it. But we insisted upon the hearings. We insisted upon a democratic process. We indicated that in fact we could meet those provisions, bring the Bill before the House and in fact improve it.

We have improved the Bill. If this Bill is not an improved one, I do not know why all Parties in the House passed unanimous motions supporting changes. Why are amendments being put forward by the New Democratic Party? It has been demonstrated that because the Conservative Party insisted upon full democratic hearing, we had full democratic hearings. We worked very hard, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) and others. In fact, I want to put on the record that the Conservative Party was the party of workers on this Bill. At all times in the committee hearings we had a full complement of members. We were entitled to three members and we had three there. In many cases we had four or five there. That cannot be said by either the Government or the NDP.

Mr. Deans: We are not entitled to that many.

Mr. Wenman: No, but they are entitled to have one member there. I am sorry to tell the Hon. Member that there were occasions when they did not even have one there. Also I am sorry to tell him that that happened in the labour debate in the House of Commons. It was the only labour debate to have been held in the House of Commons during this Parliament. It was held on a motion of the Conservative Party. During that one brief afternoon there were many occasions when there was not even one New Democratic Party member in the House of Commons.

Mr. Deans: You did not know what you were talking about.

Mr. Wenman: If we did not know what we were talking about, why did the Hon. Member not rise and say something? He did not rise and say a thing. His Party sat there quietly throughout that debate. We were concerned about this legislation at that time. We tried to get second reading on the floor of the House of Commons. The Government would not bring it forward. Therefore we took one of our Opposition days and brought it forward. We expressed our concern that the Bill was not adequate to meet the concerns of women in the workplace and that it was not adequate to meet the concerns of health and safety. That was our motion. That was the only one debated. The level of participation on the part of the Government and in particular the New Democratic Party in the corner over here was disappointing.

Mr. Deans: Not a soul in the world would believe that.

Mr. Wenman: I hear the Hon. Member. If that is so, I would ask the House Leader to obtain the minutes of the committee meetings. He could simply look at the recording of who was present. The world will have to believe it because it is recorded and it is true. In fact, I have the record somewhere right here. If the Hon. Member does not know how to read through it, I could give him the specific pages and dates. I have them right here. They indicate who was present and who was not present. I am disappointed to say that it is demonstrated by the record that on occasion the New Democratic Party did not even have one representative there to hear the points of view of the groups appearing before the committee. It is too bad, it is a tragedy, but that is the way it is. In fact he will notice in every copy of the minutes that Conservative Members were present. Usually it was a full or better than full complement.

It is partisanship to express that kind of disappointment in the New Democratic Party and, of course, in the Liberal Party, as I have enunciated again and again, over the whole process it has placed upon the Bill. However, there was a very worth-while moment in committee. That moment was when a Conservative motion was put forward which received unanimous consent. The NDP supported the Conservative motion. The Liberal Party supported the Conservative motion. It was a motion of substance and great principle. In fact, it probably discussed one of the greatest principles in the House of Commons. Of course, I am referring to the amendment to the Rand formula for conscientious objectors—the right of individuals in this great society to dissent or to opt out, the very basis of freedom.

Our Leader, the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney), spoke about another minority issue in the House of Commons on October 6, 1983. He spoke about the generosity of the spirit typical of Canadian society and said:

● (1650)

> Our respect for the rule of law, our unparalleled record in civil liberties, our sense of tolerance, our respect for neighbour and his property have combined to make Canada an admired nation of the world. . . . The issue before us today is one of simple justice . . . the sanctity of minority rights. There is no obligation more compelling and no duty more irresistible in Canada than to ensure that our minorities, linguistic and otherwise, live at all times in conditions of fairness and justice. . . . Mr. Justice Hand referred to it as the "spirit of liberty." He told the group of immigrants that the spirit of liberty is the spirit that is not too sure that it is right. The spirit of liberty seeks to understand the minds of other men and women. The spirit of liberty weights their interest alongside its own without bias. The spirit of liberty knows that not even a sparrow falls to earth unheeded. The spirit of liberty, he said, is the spirit of Him, who near 2,000 years ago taught mankind a lesson that it has never quite learned and never quite forgotten, that there may be a kingdom where the least shall be heard and considered side by side with the greatest.

If I had my choice on this particular part of the amendment, it is that the legislation would have gone much further than the amendment that has been proposed. If I had my personal choice, intellectual conscience would also have been recognized as well as religious conscience. Intellectual conscience is the trinity of body, mind and soul. There are equal and valid reasons for an exemption on the basis of intellectual conscience as there are for religious conscience.

I do, however, realize the great implications if in fact we had gone that far. I realize the great debate it would have caused in the House of Commons, again delaying this legislation. But what a shame that somehow in this House of Commons I so seldom hear debate about freedom, about the rights of individuals, about individual choice, about ultimate democracy, about intellectual choice, the value of intellectualism. These lofty debates do not occur enough here. Sometimes we touch these debates just a little bit with an amendment. This is such an amendment. It is worthy of support of all members of a democratic House of Commons such as this.

I am disappointed that the Government did not include it in the Bill. Again, it must have been their hurry. I would be interested to hear the Minister clarify that somehow he is accepting an amendment, certain parts of which he did not like. That really surprised me about this Minister. I hope in this debate the Minister will clarify why he did not support religious conscience or why he did not put this in the Bill in the beginning, and why he reluctantly gave his consent as he did. I have reviewed the transcripts. I am going to give him the benefit of the doubt before I carry on further about what he said, but I was very disappointed and surprised that a democrat such as he would have had the reservations that he had regarding this legislation.

In this particular amendment the tenets of faith of the major fundamentalist group who advocated this exemption are in fact the very foundation and value structure upon which this nation of Canada is built. In fact, not just Canada but all western nations have been built and maintained upon the basic tenet, the basic value of religious freedom, freedom of conscience. This faith has carried forth the whole basic value concept of our society, our concept of democracy and the very foundation of our lives and our belief structures.

It is essential that it be recognized that this amendment in fact did, as I said, cross Party lines. It does more than cross Party lines. This amendment is not new in the House of Commons; it has been brought in by political Parties of all persuasions across the country.

I was particularly pleased with the motion. I chose to introduce the motion of the Seventh Day Adventists, which I particularly liked because of the way it sprang from their conviction, and I liked the positive way they presented it to us. In the end, in discussion we felt that because it had been tested in the courts, we would move to another great Conservative jurisdiction and seek the advice of the Government of Ontario. We chose the amendment basically of the Government of Ontario. This is the amendment that was accepted. It states:

> Where the Board is satisfied that an employee, because of his religious conviction or beliefs, objects to joining a trade union, or to the paying of regular union dues to a trade union, the Board may order that the provision in a collective agreement
> (a) requiring, as a condition of employment, membership in a trade union, or
> (b) requiring the payment of regular union dues to a trade union,
> does not apply to that employee so long as an amount equal to the amount of the regular union dues is paid by the employee, either directly or by way of deduction from his wages, to a registered charity, within the meaning of the Income Tax Act, mutually agreed upon by the employee of the trade union.
> Where an employee and the trade union are unable to agree on a registered charity for the purposes of subsection (2), the Board may designate any such charity as the charity to which payments should be made.

In the committee we talked about improving even that particular amendment from the Ontario Conservative Code. We felt maybe there was some way to move it away from the Labour Relations Board, that somehow this could be between the worker, his union and his employer, because the principle is so significant that it could not be a mutual agreement, that we would have to add to the workload of the Board.

I would like to have seen some type of an amendment which could have caused that mutuality, that tone. Maybe in future Parliaments we will have time to do that. Again, even with this amendment we had to reach out and grab what was available. Nothing was prepared by the Department. We had to reach out to other resources where they took time to study and to listen. As I said, I am disappointed that there was not more study done on probably what was the most significant amendment to this Bill.

We tried to do other things with this Bill as well as move that amendment. Some amendments have been successful, some not. In committee, and now as part of the Bill that has been reported back to the House of Commons, the Conservative Party strengthened the provisions that protect workers from sexual harassment through an amendment brought to us by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women.

I pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) who worked very hard. After we sat in committee, she met again with the group and they worked on drafting such amendments. To her credit, working with that committee and assisting the committee resulted in amendments such as those the Conservative Party made on behalf of issues of concern to women.

We clarified the definition of sexual harassment as being any conduct, comment, gesture or contact of a sexual nature that might on reasonable grounds be perceived by that employee as placing a condition of a sexual nature on employment or on any opportunity for training or promotion. Before this clarification, the perception of sexual harassment could have been made by any employee, including those not involved. The clarification leaves the perception of sexual harassment of the employee involved. I think that was an appropriate amendment.

The Conservative Party also strengthened the Bill's sections on occupational health and safety. We were concerned about people and the accident rate in Canada. The accident rate causes more work stoppages in Canada than all the strikes put together. That is serious. The workplace needs to have greater concern about health and safety. We did not feel that this Bill was in any way going far enough as far as measures of health and safety are concerned.

One area that we wanted to change was where an employer's duties include the obligation to investigate, record and report to the authorities as prescribed all accidents, occupational diseases and other hazardous occurrences known to the employer. We added the words "known to the employer" in order to clarify that such incidents known to the employer will be his responsibility.

Not only were we concerned with the safety of workers in the workplace, but as well we wanted the protection to extend to the general public. To the clause which described the obligation of the employee to "report to the employer any thing or circumstance in a workplace is likely to be hazardous to the safety or health of the employee or any of his fellow employees", we added the phrase "or other persons granted access to the workplace by the employer". In other words, we took what I feel is quite a progressive step.

Through this addition, we have said that we are not only concerned about the health and safety of an employee or employer but we are also concerned about the health and safety of other persons granted access to that workplace. We are concerned with public safety and public safety is as important as individual employer and employee safety. I am very, very pleased that our amendment was accepted by the Government and now forms part of the Bill that is before us today.

The addition of those words broadens the range of persons whose safety should be of concern to employees when reporting accidents or hazards in the workplace. People in the workplace who are not employees now enjoy the same protection as do others. These are just some of the improvements that our Party introduced in committee that have been accepted by the Government. Unfortunately, the Government failed to accept the greater protections for workers which were contained in other amendments made by members of the Progressive Conservative Party in committee. Those amendments were dealt with very quickly. They were amendments upon which even I would have liked to have had more thought, more discussion and more broad consultation.

We wanted to define very clearly what actions an employer could take to punish those guilty of sexual harassment. We suggested that the employer be empowered to take disciplinary measures as outlined in the policy or as provided in the collective agreements. Instead, the Government stuck with its own vague wording: "the employer will take such disciplinary measures as he deems appropriate".

We are concerned about the potential hazards to workers resulting from exposure to video display terminals and we expressed that concern in an amendment. Unfortunately, the Government decided to turn that amendment down. We proposed several amendments other than the one that is before us today relating to new technology and the health dangers that are created thereby. I am disappointed that those amendments did not receive more consideration and that there is not more time to include them in the dicussion here this afternoon. Of course, the Government rejected those amendments on the basis of cost, putting the health and safety of workers secondary to economic considerations.

The most tragic rejection of an amendment was the Government's failure to protect the rights of the unborn. We are still disappointed by that. Just today, we have pleaded with the Government to hear us. The Government has yet to announce that there will be some form of in-depth study done to assure the protection of our workers from new technology and particularly the technology of video display terminals. Again, there was a principle inherent in this particular amendment. I believe that the Labour Code is important because it deals with principles and is supposed to show the way. I believe that any government legislation that shows the way by going beyond a worker to a child and beyond a child to an unborn child is legislation with a worthy principle. That worthy principle should in fact have been included in this Bill and I am disappointed that it has not been. I am pleased that we have at least taken some time this afternoon to discuss in the House of Commons this particular situation. I am sure it is a situation that a new Conservative Government would wish to address on an early occasion.

Time is passing quickly and we certainly do want to give others an opportunity to speak. I could go on to speak of a great many other things we brought up in committee. Those are on the record of the committee hearings. Of course, we wanted to recognize the contribution made by academics to the creation of this legislation through the presentation of ideas. Therefore, we called for a particular amendment that related to the megaprojects provision in Clause 22 because we felt that there had not been enough empirical study on the implications of "carve-out" agreements.

The Canadian Construction Association presented a 600-page academic study entitled Megaprojects, which was written by Weiler, Hebert and others. That study outlined some of the adverse effects that magaproject carve-out agreements may have. We want to see any legislation that we create somehow add to the stability of the workplace because that is what workers want and that is what our society needs. It is to the mutual interests of all that we should have that stability, that agreement and those sound labour-management relations.

According to this academic study to which I just referred, the intention to create such an attitude may in fact create the opposite. It would appear to us that this study was not looked at adequately before this matter was brought forward. The representations of Mr. Weiler included concerns regarding too much ministerial power being granted in determining what constitutes a major project. We suggested that this should be defined in the Code and qualified only if necessary to the public interest. There was also a fear that short-term major project contracts with high wages could cause instability and work stoppage in general construction projects by drawing workers away. However, I would put on the record of the House of Commons that the Minister did make a promise. I hope he will make that same promise here today. He made a commitment to have further consultations and make further studies regarding this megaprojects provision. He spoke about the method by which this particular clause of the Bill may be proclaimed in order to ensure that there would be no disruption.

On behalf of the Dominion Marine Association and the Canadian Lake Carriers Association, we also moved to exempt the shipping industry from Part IV of the Code because of the jurisdictional overlap that could occur with the Canada Shipping Act and the Canadian steamship Act. We did not secure that provision but the Minister has assured us that full consideration of the legal implications will be undertaken before royal assent. We will hold him to that, although we may be looking to a new Minister by the time we get around to that process.

In committee on May 15, after my prompting and questioning, the Minister made the following promise:

> I think that indeed it would be very useful that there be public hearings and that the number of union and employers' representatives be invited as witnesses to give views on the legislation and possibly to suggest amendments to improve the legislation one way or another. I would think that it would be very useful. I would look forward to it and indeed I would not oppose it. I think I would encourage such a thing to take place.

The fact that the Minister did encourage and allow such consultations to take place is a tribute to the Minister, even if it did take him 43 hours to do so. I believe we got two hours' sleep out of 43 or 45 hours at that time. However, I did wish to recognize and appreciate the fact that this has gone through the democratic process and, as we complete the Bill today, it is still going through the democratic process and will have full process of law. The only thing that did not follow the full process was the fact that there was not as much time as there should have been for members of the public to understand the Bill before they made presentations. Timing was the greatest villain, and in this case it was the responsibility of the Government.

I could carry on, Mr. Speaker, but as I look at the clock and in view of the time, I would like to demonstrate to members of the New Democratic Party something we demonstrated in committee. One of the members of the New Democratic Party said in debate that if the Conservative members proposed it, it must be all right because employers listen to Conservative members. I wish to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we have demonstrated that we did listen. We heard not only from employers but from union groups, women's groups and academic groups. We listened to as many of the individuals and groups as we could. We even heard from religious groups. We called for and heard from a cross-section of the Canadian public and that is who we represent. We do not represent only the workers. We do not represent only the employers. We represent all groups. We are not bound or tied to anything except the interests of the public and the broad public will. The only interests we represented in every case were the interests of a broad cross-section of representatives. We spoke fairly—

Mr. Hovdebo: Just like Bill Bennett.

Mr. Wenman: I am sorry that the Hon. Member who just spoke did not attend the committee hearings. We made amendments on behalf of all of these groups. We were their spokesmen in committee. We protected their right to be heard. Once they were heard, we presented amendments on their behalf for discussion. Many of those amendments were accepted.

• (1710)

Hopefully, the Conservative Party has signalled to Canadians that it is open to hearing and willing to working in a manner of co-operation, open-mindedness and civility. We want to end the tone of confrontation which has been featured in Canada far too long. We will be a government of reason which will be open to all groups and representative of the broadest cross-section of our society.

I thank the House for the opportunity to speak on this subject. I look forward to an opportunity in the fall when we can begin to study these appropriate and important issues in more detail.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments? On debate, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey).

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say at the outset that I listened with great attention to the contributions made by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) on third reading of this legislation. I was very impressed by his remarks, as I was by his performance in committee, which as he stated was of a marathon proportion. He worked together with his colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), who has a particular interest in human relations. I think the Conservative Party has been more than co-operative in the passage of this Bill. I do believe that the contribution made by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) meant that the committee consisted of Members from all Parties and had common objectives.

The first objective was to pass the Bill on time because of its admitted advantages. Some of the changes were obvious and were required for the benefit of workers. Second, I think we felt an obligation to produce what has been described as the balanced Bill. Unless labour Bills are balanced to the optimum, they can hardly be effective.

I would like to speak very briefly about a number of matters on which the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West spoke—technological change, safety and women in the workforce. I do so, if not with expertise, at least with concern for these particular issues.

I arrived here in 1962. It might have been before the Hon. Member was born, although I am not sure. My maiden speech in the House of Commons was about industrial relations, although I was an employer of labour at the time. Later on, I had the privilege of being the Minister of Labour who brought in the first modernized Labour Code. In order to signify the progress which has been made in the last 15 or so years, that Labour Code reflected the findings of what I had recommended to students in the industrial relations field. The Woods task force was established. It was a multimillion dollar study performed by academics and experts over the better part of two years. That study reflected the terrible labour unrest of the sixties, when technology was brought very much to the fore and the Labour Code of the day made it virtually impossible for workers to have any input into the impact, whether negative or positive, of technology.

Indeed, I remember in the early 1960s when the railway workers of western Canada lay down on the railway tracks in Wainwright and Nakina in order to make their point. Because collective agreements were of fixed durations—and under no circumstances could they be re-opened for negotiation—management would astutely introduce amendments which dealt with technology or technological change in the middle of a contract. The most flagrant example of that was the introduction of diesels which replaced steam engines. That made it possible for the railways to by-pass the beautiful little communities of the west which were entirely dependent on the trains stopping for coal. Virtually, those communities were wiped out by the new technology. The railway officials had a very good case. They said that they could not reject technology any more than a cotton gin, the Industrial Revolution or the wheel. We were determined to bring in a labour code which made it imperative for management to consult and then negotiate with the workers, not whether technology should be introduced, but that the impact be minimized if it was negative and that the rewards be shared if the impact was positive.

I must congratulate the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet). He has brought in a Bill which, as his critics have already stated, is not perfect and is not the ultimate, but it is a dramatic step forward from the Bill which I presented and passed through the House of Commons in the late sixties. There are some things about this legislation, as the Minister knows, which concern me. One of the things which concerns me is the blurring of lines between the rules which cover collective bargaining. Yet, necessary standards are needed for more than two-thirds of the workers of this country who have no protection because they are not unionized. Sometimes the lines get blurred and abused. I would have liked to have seen a clause which permitted organized labour and their employers to opt out of the impact of the Labour Code. That may happen the next time this legislation comes before the House, but this is probably my last speech and I will probably not be here. There is no substitute for a negotiated settlement and no substitute for collective agreements.

One of the most significant things which we were able to do in the House of Commons—because we allowed labour to open collective agreements if technology was introduced without sufficient notice—was to force labour and management to include in collective agreements the ways and means to deal with technology. It was brought out in committee that there have not been more than a dozen cases sent to the Canada Labour Relations Board, at the request of unions, which were based on complaints that there was no opportunity to negotiate. Therefore, management has become enlightened. They have become enlightened just in time, because if this country is to continue to produce and generate the capital which is needed for social policy, pensions, maternity leave and so on, we must be a more productive country. We must have a more productive workforce in order to generate the additional capital. We are not only behind Japan, which we hear about all the time, we are falling very far behind the other countries in the OECD. In Europe, unions have been a way of life, particularly since the second World War. Management in Europe has tended to recognize the social contract. Some of the things which we have attempted to include in this Bill recognize the unique problems of women in the workforce, including sexual harassment. I believe we have at the present moment a very unique worker coming on stream. Unlike 15 years or 30 years ago, the worker today tends to be a knowledgeable worker rather than simply a skilled worker. He or she has had a college or university education. These new workers are mobile. They are intelligent. They face the new world with great confidence and they are not afraid of technology or computerization. They only ask to be informed and consulted and to be listened to. Employers who refuse to recognize that fact do so at their own risk as does the country which does not put through the type of enlightened legislation with the thrust which this Bill has. It is not Utopia but it is a considerable improvement over the basic Labour Code.

● (1720)

What concerns me is that the Department of Labour, the Canada Labour Relations Board and others do not always understand the spirit behind the proposed legislation. What was the intent? Why is the clause written in that way? What did the legislature mean when this clause or that clause was discussed? I would like to give an example which is very close to my heart. In 1966, the most difficult labour situation in Canada was at the waterfront, the longshoring industry. It involved not only Montreal and Vancouver but all of the waterfronts of Canada. Men were treated little better than animals. They had to go every morning to a hiring hall to be selected for employment with no guarantee when they arrived there on a cold day that they would be hired. It was the law of the jungle with strong-arm tactics. There was corruption. It was a very bad situation. Ports like Montreal were strike-bound for weeks and weeks. The Smith inquiry was set up to improve the situation. I rejected its report because in my opinion it was based on the premise that the trouble in the ports was essentially caused by employees. I recognized that those employees were stripped of their dignity, and we set out to do something about it. We also recognized, Mr. Speaker, the need for increased productivity. Today the number of employees in the Montreal waterfront is approximately half of what it was in 1968. The productivity is hundreds of per cent greater. Why? Because the worker now goes to work in dignity, in an automobile, with a guaranteed 40 weeks wages out of 52 weeks whether or not there is work. The hiring halls have been eliminated, pension plans have been introduced. Technology is not rejected. It is encouraged because so many cents per tonne coming in through technology, through containerization, find their way into the union for its particular projects, sickness benefits, pensions, or whatever.

This was not accomplished, Mr. Speaker, by myself or the Department. It was accomplished by intelligent use of new legislation. It was accomplished by making it mandatory for all employers to bargain as one and for all unions to bargain as one, thus eliminating the old game of playing one off against the other. If you look at the old Code, I believe Section 132, you will find that we set it up in such a way that these associations would have total jurisdiction over what was called "geographical delineation". I believe that is the way we put it. It simply meant that when negotiating time arrived, management would speak as one voice and so would the union.

In recent years, Mr. Speaker, in the 1980s, the Canada Labour Relations Board seems to me, as an observer, to have lost the sense of what was the intent. So we have a situation now where across the river some intelligent employer is setting up shop with union or non-union people who are prepared to work for less, not bothering to bargain but simply taking advantage of collective agreements which are eventually struck across the river, thereby reintroducing, if you like, the seeds of discontent, the destruction of something which has proven to be successful.

There has not been a major strike in the waterfronts of Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Quebec or Three Rivers in ten years. The workers average between $30,000 and $40,000 a year. They earn it and are entitled to it. Yet the Canada Labour Relations Board, through decisions made in good faith, threatens that situation because it does not understand the spirit behind Section 132. It does not understand the importance of keeping the unions and management together. I mention this as an area which I do hope will be looked at every thoroughly by committee or by the House the next time the Code comes forward for debate. Perhaps Section 132 could be amended to make a little clearer to the members of the Canada Labour Relations Board what was the original intent of that particular section.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I share the views of the officials critic for labour of the Conservative Party. I share his concern for the argument advanced so eloquently by the Adventist Church. However, I must remind him as well that the Rand formula is not exactly breaking new ground. It is something which has been around for decades. It was introduced in the automobile industry. It was meant to provide a solution to people who did not want to belong to a union but who recognized that unions work on their behalf whether or not they are members. I have no opposition to the amendments which provide something whereby people of conscience could remain in the workforce and contribute indirectly to the work of the union.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that this is probably the most important piece of legislation which has gone through the House for some time. It is important because it is, perhaps, a belated recognition by the House and by the Government that unless the climate of co-operation between management and labour is such that the adversarial characteristics will be minimized, and unless the climate in this country is such that management, labour and government can work in unison in co-operation and dignity, we are not going to be able to maintain the flow of private capital to production, because we are still a decade behind the kind of industrial relationships which prevail in many other countries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, in my speech I was highly critical of the lack of participation of Hon. Members of the Liberal Party and of the Conservative Party in committee. I want to correct that. Because of the fact the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) has been here since 1962, and the fact that he has contributed his energy and a big chunk of his life to this House of Commons, one would have expected him to have been the last person to be at the committee meeting at 2 a.m. But he was there at 2 a.m. and then at 9.30 a.m. and throughout the hearings. He was there caring, being constructive and being positive. I thank him for that contribution and I did mean to include him in my comments, along with the Hon. Member for Calgry West (Mr. Hawkes) and the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) who sat there hour upon hour to make this legislation better. I wanted to recognize that and to thank him for his service and the comments he made today.

• (1730)

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. gentleman that I did not take any of his remarks the wrong way. I know exactly what he meant and I share his views. I suppose I was there, as he was, because I was brought up in a school of thought that you have an obligation to the job you take on, wherever it may be. When work is a pleasure, then you attend to it. When the Minister asked me to join that committee I looked on it as an opportunity in some simple way, through moral persuasion or seduction or even bullying, to come up with a Bill which I felt was non-partisan in nature. At no time in committee did I think we had broken down into pro and anti-labour, pro and anti-Liberal, or pro and anti-anything. I think all of us sensed that our frustration was that if we only had more time, we could do better. I just wanted to say that when you get discouraged, look at the original Bill in 1968 and see what progress we have made in 15 years. It has really been remarkable.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to see that this Bill is finally at third reading stage. As I mentioned when we started the second reading debate on this Bill, our caucus had been working ever since the election in 1980 to have changes made to the Canada Labour Code. I mentioned then that we had asked for a special House order which would allow this legislation to go to committee so that representatives from different groups could appear and we would report back for final disposition in the last couple of days of the sitting. When I hear some of the rhetoric coming from the spokesmen for the Conservative Party, I recognize that it is basically a defensive reaction by a Party which was smoked out a number of times here and in committee. An impartial observer of that committee would tell you that the Conservatives were doing everything they could to stall and not be caught. Their attempts to add more and more witnesses as the week progressed were not to hear more voices but to prevent the Bill from passing.

Mr. Mayer: What a bunch of garbage.

Mr. Murphy: I regret we have had to take this tone in debate but after hearing the wild rhetoric of the official spokesman for the Conservative Party, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), it is very obvious that they have only looked at this as a political exercise rather than as a very important piece of legislation.

Mr. Mayer: We are getting wild rhetoric from you right now.

Mr. Murphy: Four years ago our caucus toured federal and provincial work sites right across this country. We went to every province and all sorts of industry and came out with a report called Graveyard Shifts: Life and Death on the Job in Canada. We presented that report to successive Ministers of Labour and got up in this House many times asking for changes to the Labour Code. I am glad to see that some of those amendments came forward, even if it took until the fifth year of this Government's rule. It is unfortunate that the actual debate on this legislation did not take place until the last three weeks of this sitting.

I agree with one aspect of what the Conservative representative said, that we should have had more time to study the legislation. I believe there could be amendments made that would strengthen the legislation. There were groups who, had they had more time, could have come forward with suggestions which would have improved the legislation. But that is not the case. We were forced to deal with the Bill within a week in committee. Even though it meant sitting late hours and committee members were fatigued, we agreed to hear from every group who wished to speak. But as our House Leader said the day after this Bill was tabled, we wanted it passed because we recognized that for the most part it was an improvement which would protect the life and safety of more Canadian workers. It would provide legal protection for federal Government employees who come under Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, protection they never had before. We also saw that there were some benefits in maternity leave and child care for those people who come under the Canada Labour Code. I must say that we saw some strictly token efforts in the area of sexual harassment, part-time workers and technological change. But they were improvements and, recognizing this session was coming to an end, we agreed to pass the legislation. We did all in our power to force both the Government to act and the Official Opposition to move on this legislation.

I make no apologies for our position. It was a deliberate attempt by us to get the legislation passed. We recognize that there were some who saw political benefit in not seeing it passed. There are some who felt they could benefit whether or not it passed. But to our way of thinking the women of Canada, the workers of Canada, are much better protected if it is passed, and that was the only goal we had. We accomplished that goal.

Some of the presentations we heard this afternoon at report stage and third reading talked about how the legislation was improved because the Conservative Party made representations on behalf of the individuals who came forward. However, were the women of Canada who came forward asked by the Conservatives or Liberals if they wanted the maternity leave or child care qualifying period moved up from three months to six months? No, they were not. So when people get up and make sanctimonious speeches about how they represent others, take a look at what they really did.

Mr. Wenman: Which amendments did you present?

Mr. Murphy: Look at the amendments the Conservatives had included in this Bill which will hurt many parents over the next couple of years. I hope we do not have to wait for four years into the next Parliament to make improvements in this legislation. I said earlier that part-time workers were just barely mentioned in this legislation. The technological change provisions are mere tokenism at this stage of the game. There is a lot left to do and I hope that with some improved rules in the House the committee can sit down fairly early in the next Parliament and look at what needs to be done to protect our workers who come under the provisions of the Canada Labour Code.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Questions or comments? Debate.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak on third reading of Bill C-34. First of all, I wish to thank Hon. Members for agreeing to deal expeditiously with this Bill. There certainly was a time when we did not think we would be able to have this legislation passed before the House adjourned for the summer. However, I believe that especially the firm resolve of Canadian union organizations, which did not hesitate to make direct representations to the three Parties sitting in the House—as I said, I think this very firm resolve on the part of Canadian unions to see this labour legislation approved, and of course thanks to the efforts of all three political Parties, all this was an incentive for us to take all action necessary to get this Bill through the House, even when it meant sitting very late, on occasion, to expedite consideration of the Bill in committee.

Mr. Speaker, at this point, I would like to pay tribute to all those who helped realize this Bill. I think it is a piece of very important legislation for labour, and I am very proud to say that my senior officials have worked unremittingly for months to prepare these amendments to the Canada Labour Code. They conducted major consultations with all parties concerned in this country. I would like to stress more specifically the support, good advice and enthusiasm of my Deputy Minister, Mr. Mark Daniels, who has helped me enormously during the last few weeks in working towards passage of this Bill.

I also wish to mention the very professional and very thorough work done by the two Assistant Deputy Ministers, Mrs. Wendy Porteous and Mr. Bill Kelly, who both took part in consultations on amendments to Part V and Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, and thanks to whom we now have a Bill that, to a considerable extent, meets the aspirations of Canadian unions.

I also wish to offer thanks for the often important but unspectacular work done by many officials in my Department who helped to draft and prepare documents and prepare the Bill, especially Mrs. Elizabeth MacPherson, Mr. Mac Rowe, M. Doug Baldwin, Mr. Jim McLellan, Dr. Ratna Ray, Mrs. Carol Racine and Mr. Peter Sorokan, who all worked to help make this Bill acceptable to both union and management representatives.

Once again, I think it is important to emphasize that we have been able to improve the Canada Labour Code thanks to the many groups in the labour and the business world we were able to consult. Thanks to these consultations which I myself, my predecessors and my officials have had with these representatives during the past years since these consultations took almost two years we were able to define a number of practical and realistic considerations and, especially, to formulate amendments that are progressive and appropriate at this time.

Mr. Speaker, more than ever I am confident that industrial relations in this country will be able to exist in an atmosphere of trust, civility and mutual respect. Undoubtedly, the Bill we are about to adopt today is particularly welcome to the unions, but I think that management representatives who made representations to the Committee understood that it was important to respond to the legitimate claims of the unions. The Bill we are proposing and are about to approve today is a step in the right direction towards improving the job environment and labour relations. I believe that our society, like all other western industrialized societies, will continue to develop rapidly and that this will be due to the incredible rate at which technology is progressing. However, I think that basically, we must have legislation that ensures that all of us, wherever we are, will be treated fairly and equitably. I think that this legislation, which is well-balanced and responds to the legitimate concerns of Canadian workers, nevertheless can be accepted and acknowledge by management as a Bill that is appropriate to our modern society.

I think that one of the major social facts of the eighties is the change in composition of the labour force population. The proportion of women in the labour force has risen over the last thirty years from 22 to 40 per cent, and in 1980, the participation rate of women exceeded 50 per cent. This massive arrival of women on the labour market has obliged people to re-examine their values and governments to rethink their policies.

Twenty years ago, labour policies did not have to consider the family responsibilities of workers. As a general rule, once women were married, they withdrew from the labour force, while men dedicated themselves to their careers. However, due to a number of reasons that are economic, educational, demographic and psychological in nature, these differences have ceased to exist. Although men no longer dominate the sector of paid employment, women however, still have, though not willingly, a monopoly over unpaid domestic work. That is why they are often unable to take full advantage of their newly won access to paid employment. As many female workers are well aware, interrupting their period of employment to have and raise children reduces their years of seniority and adversely affects their chances of promotion and their eligibility for social benefits.

Mr. Speaker, these are so many irrefutable arguments in favour of the revision of Part III of the Canada Labour Code which I proposed to the House and which will very soon be approved by this Parliament. I have no hesitation in saying that in all my political career, after the cooperative housing program established when I was Minister responsible for urban affairs, this is the second most important social measure which I have had the privilege of being involved with as Minister. I think it is important to point out that the amendments we have submitted to Parliament are definitely to the advantage of Canadian working women, with respect to Labour Code Part III and most of the series of amendments found in Part IV concerning occupational safety and health.

Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of repeating the details of every aspect of this Bill. They are now well known. During previous interventions in the House, I had the opportunity to elaborate on the major amendments to Parts III, IV and V of the Labour Code.

Since I do not want to speak at length at this stage and would rather conclude my remarks as quickly as possible, I want to say before closing the debate that I was extremely pleased with the reaction of the unions. I want to thank publicly the CLC and the other labour organizations which gave their support to Bill C-34. As Minister of Labour, I was particularly glad to hear so many positive comments about this labour legislation which, I am sure, will stand us in good stead and certainly pave the way for more harmonious labour relations in Canada. I am convinced that the adoption of this Bill will signal the onset of a new era of harmony, understanding and co-operation between the Government of Canada and the Labour movement and, I should hope, between unions and the business community.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge Hon. Members to give unanimous approval to this Bill for which Canadian workers, men and women alike, have waited so long.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Any questions or comments?

• (1750)

[English]

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I see that the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) has returned to the House. I wanted to bring to his attention and yours, Sir, a certain remark made by the Hon. Member for Lincoln when he referred to another Member of the House as a "sidekick from Calgary". I would suggest that that is contrary to the rules of the House. It is disrespectful to the Member in question and leaves me not knowing to whom the Hon. Member for Lincoln referred. Perhaps he would like to withdraw the remark or rephrase it somehow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. I do not think it is necessary for the Member for Lincoln to rise. The Chair has not heard the Member referring specifically to an Hon. Member, so it could hardly be considered an insult.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a point. I was referring to the friend of the Official Opposition critic of the Department of Labour. I suppose that I could apologize because we became rather close in the committee. I want to assure the hon. gentleman that I used the word "progressive", which hardly includes him, so he should not be worried about confusion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): We were on questions.

Mr. Hawkes: I thank the Member from the Northwest Territories for his intervention. I think I was the Member from Calgary who was referred to.

If the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) values the committee process so highly and the commitment that committee members made to that process, how did we end up with only four days in which to hear witnesses and have a clause by clause discussion? How did that happen if it is such a valued process?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I cannot resist the temptation of answering the Hon. Member by saying that, our parliamentary process being what it is and because of recent incidents such as the bell-ringing incident which made us waste valuable time and which was sparked by the Progressive Conservative Party, as were endless, abusive and never-ending debates by the Opposition on many Bills introduced in the House, unfortunately Parliament is forced to sit until the very end of the session and quickly adopt a number of Bills.

Had the Progressive Conservative Party not made us waste so much time in the House, we would probably have had a few extra days to consider Bill C-34 in committee.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister is way off base now and again, and this happens to be a good example.

[English]

The Minister will know that the bells rang for democracy and freedom because the Government was attempting to deny adequate examination of legislation. A four-day period to hear witnesses and to deal with legislation clause by clause is another example of the fact that this Government and this Minister in particular—who seems to be a critical Minister with a changed leader and someone of influence—still believe that it is bad for Canadian society to have a process which allows for a little daylight and permits sufficient time to question witnesses and argue for amendments.

Let me ask the Minister the question that I had in mind originally. I was going to compliment him because it is the first time in the life of this Parliament that I had seen a sufficient number of senior officials present at all times during the questioning of witnesses. It is the very first time that any Cabinet Minister of the Government brought senior officials in and left them there to hear witnesses and the questions and arguments. That resulted in 13 amendments, which is considerably more than the average, even though the time frame was short. Does the credit belong to the Deputy Minister or was it the Minister's idea that those senior officials be present?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the example Parliament has given us with Bill C-34 should normally be followed for all pieces of legislation. Although the Progressive Conservative Members claim that they have not had enough time to consider this Bill, I believe that they have had ample time to consider the principle of the Bill at second reading stage, to receive all the submissions they wanted in the Committee, to examine these submissions and even to question certain witnesses, to examine the Bill clause by clause with the Minister and the departmental officials, and finally to come back to this House after working hard in the Committee to give passage to Bill C-34 in one day.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, we should spend as much time as we have spent on Bill C-34 at all stages for a great many other pieces of legislation. I believe that this Bill received the attention it deserved. With a lot of good will on both sides, we showed that we could study a very important Bill within a few days, as is regularly the case in the British Parliament, where even the most important and controversial Bills are passed within a few days. Which brings me to say that, in the next Parliament, I hope that we shall have the cooperation of the Progressive Conservatives, who will still be in the Opposition, to amend parliamentary procedure so that we may deal with our legislative program within a reasonable time—

An Hon. Member: In the interests of the Canadian public!

Mr. Ouellet: —and especially, as my friend has suggested, in the interests of the Canadian public.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any other questions? Debate. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

● (1800)

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise today with somewhat mixed emotions. I would like to assure the Minister that as the next Government we would welcome his input in the future. We fully intend to be that Government and we fully intend to demonstrate a little bit of openness and give sufficient time to hear witnesses and as well ensure sufficient process to allow Members of Parliament to make a real contribution to legislation which will pay off in better government for Canadians.

Let me begin by complimenting the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) who spoke at some length today. He did an excellent job of encapsulating the process, the type of amendments we were able to include in this legislation, the reasons behind them, and the difficulties that we as a Party had to overcome to achieve those gains.

Having said that, let me revert to what I said at the beginning, that I had somewhat mixed emotions. This process has brought back some memories to me. One was my maiden speech in this House in 1979 when I tried to explain that the exploration of the oil and gas industry was really an occupation fraught with danger. I did not think Members of this Chamber really understood that industry or the difficulties it faces. I stand here today knowing the National Energy Program is in place and some of the consequences from it are a pretty clear indication that I did not do my job in 1979. Obviously I was not persuasive enough in this Chamber.

I also remember July, 1950, some 34 years ago. That is a long time in the lives of any of us. The last two or three weeks have reminded me of a switchman on the Canadian National Railways. In the middle of the night he was swept off the top of a box car by wires belonging to the Alberta Government Telephones and fell on an embankment. Workers of the City of Calgary were digging a ditch alongside the railroad. He rolled down the embankment and under the wheels of a Canadian National train and was killed. That was July, 1950, 34 years ago. The mixed emotions come because that man was my father. I was 16 at the time. I have since participated in a process where something like that is a little less likely to happen today, and of that I am proud.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: But mixed with that sense of pride is anger. I am angry at a process that trades workers' safety for some of the other garbage that was brought forward in the Bill. We have to accept some of the garbage in the process. The protection for the Canadian people that has been worked out in the British Parliament and in this Parliament is the time to examine, the time to hear witnesses, and the time to make sure that we are not making a mistake. It is a terrible choice to have to pick between a worker's safety and the abrogation of the process. It is not right. It was not right in the beginning and it is not right here today.

A few minutes ago the Minister talked about parliamentary reform. I would love to see a reform that did not allow for this kind of abrogation process. I would like to see a reform that required a responsible Minister to sit through every hour of public hearings on a piece of legislation which the Minister proposed. I would like to see Ministers sit and listen to witnesses before Ministers make up their minds and nod their heads yes or no as to whether an amendment is acceptable. I do not think that second-hand information is sufficient.

I saw the Constitution of Canada, the fundamental law of this land, amended. I knew that many of the groups who put their hearts and souls into their submissions came to this city and appeared before the Committee on the Constitution in the belief that they could be and would be heard. Many Members heard them. But the decision-makers all too frequently did not. That is why I asked the Minister whose idea it was to have senior officials before our committee. In four and a half years that is the first time I have seen so many officials in Committee, and I compliment them for their capacity to listen and, ultimately, to have some influence on the Minister. One thing I have learned is that the Opposition very, very rarely has any influence on a Minister. All a Member of the Opposition can do is to try to persuade some other people who in turn might have some influence on the Minister. In this case that is influence through the bureaucratic mechanism.

There is a better way, and that is to force the Minister to be part of the process, to listen to witnesses, and to give individuals the opportunity to persuade a Minister directly.

I mentioned earlier today that I was somewhat angry at the Canadian Labour Congress. In standing here today I do not know whether to blame the people representing the Canadian Labour Congress. I know what they did, but I cannot be privy as to why they did it. People from the Canadian Labour Congress came before our committee and said: "Hold your nose and pass the Bill." We asked them how we could make the Bill a little bit better. We asked them what was right and what was wrong with the Bill. They said: "Hold your nose and pass the Bill". I think that is short-changing the one to two million members of the Congress, Mr. Speaker. I think the leadership of the Canadian Labour Congress knowingly or unknowingly short-changed its membership.

We do not get many opportunities in this Chamber to change the Canada Labour Code. The Leader of the Progresive Conservative Party said: "We like the thrust of these amendments. Yes, we will do our bit to make sure they get through before the end of this Parliament." In that atmosphere, perhaps the Canadian Labour Congress did not trust the NDP or the Liberals, but I think the Canadian Labour Congress had an obligation to share with committee members its thoughts on how to make Bill C-34 better. If this Bill is inadequate and if there are clauses that could have been included and they were not, the Canadian Labour Congress deserves some of the blame. That has worried me. In committee I have pointed it out to the Congress. But if the Congress is indistinguishable from a political Party, then an atmosphere of suspicion is created which makes it more difficult to function together on behalf of the workers and on behalf of Canadian society. What part of the remarks made in this Chamber today or in committee will the Canadian Labour Congress and its affiliates choose to reprint in its newsletters sent out to the membership? Will there be a fair and accurate reflection of the debate and the reality of the process? There will probably not be because the Canadian Labour Congress has attached itself to a political Party in this Chamber.

When this process began, I was almost totally convinced that the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party had no interest in passing the Bill. I stand here today with the suspicion that that was really true some three weeks ago. The only reason the Bill was brought forward was to create an issue for a political campaign.

The filibustering of the New Democratic Party on other pieces of legislation jammed our calendar and kept us here one day until five o'clock in the morning. That provides evidence consistent with that belief. It was trying to create a climate in which to go into a federal general election, having missed the opportunity to provide a better health and safety climate rather than accomplishing it. That would have been the strongest electoral position for the New Democratic Party. Also it would have been a strong electoral position for the Liberal Party of Canada.

That was our concern right from the start. If that was its strategy, it got a hell of a surprise. No Party worked harder than our Party at making sure that the Bill was examined as well as it could be within the time frame allowed and that it was returned to the Chamber in an acceptable fashion or the best we could make it.

The tragedy is that the process could have been better. The Bill could have been better. We would have welcomed an opportunity to help. The Government let us down. For that, we should all be a little sad and not get carried away with joy. It is better to have tried as hard as we could than to have settled for second best, for a process which did not allow us to try.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments? On debate, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen).

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I will try to be very brief. I understand that we are working under a schedule, but I have a few comments to make. I am, without any equivocation, very happy at the results we are seeking today. No one with experience in collective bargaining or the process in which we are engaged here—and there are some similarities in these processes—expects a perfect package. That is not what this process is all about. The idea is to make progress, hopefully substantial progress. By whatever variety of methods we have used to arrive at this point today, the Labour Code Bill before us is substantial progress for the working people of Canada.

I congratulate all of those people who have been involved. I will not rise to the bait of my Conservative colleague who spoke a few minutes ago by responding to what he said. That is not the mood I want to create at this point.

An Hon. Member: Congratulate the Minister.

Mr. Kristiansen: I will congratulate the Minister of Labour and his two predecessors. I congratulate the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan), the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet). I congratulate the Canadian Labour Congress and the representatives of hundreds of democratic organizations of working people across the country who had, directly or indirectly, some input into this Bill. All their advice was not accepted, but that is not the way we work. That is not the way the labour movement works. That is not the way industrial relations works.

I am sad at the delay in the introduction of the Bill. We could have had more time to deal with it in committee and in the House. However, I do not know whether we would have achieved any more substantial progress than is to be found in the measures now included in Bill C-34. Time was provided for extensive consultations between the various Parties. Not only were the unions, the Government and other political Parties involved, but many employer groups were consulted over the last three or four years as well. It did not all happen in one, two or three days in committee. My colleagues in all Parties in the House know that, despite their protestations to the contrary. It has been a very worth-while exercise.

In relation to the process of collective bargaining, this process here today reminds me that the best contract agreements are achieved in the minutes preceding a strike deadline. Of course the House of Commons does not face a strike deadline, but it faces an election in the very near future. Strikes and elections have something in common. We see the end of a particular opportunity and no one wants to gamble on the outcome. When there is a chance of achieving significant progress, the question with which we are all faced is whether or not we want to gamble on blowing the whole thing. This is what any union has to face in a strike deadline situation. It has to decide whether it will settle for what is on the table or squeeze out a little more in the last few minutes.

My colleagues and I faced up to that option. We decided that it was not worth the risk. When it comes to an election, we are all in the lap of the gods that are known as the voters. They are unpredictable, just as it is unpredictable when a union or a company has to decide to strike or lock people out rather than settle for a compromise.

My purpose in being here is to obtain the best results, at the least cost, for the people I represent. That is the same job I had when I represented a union and it is the same job I have today in representing some 75,000 constituents in the riding of Kootenay West. My riding has a very large body of industrial workers as well as government employees, more provincial than federal. It has many working people as well as a mixed population of various different economic interests.

If this matter poses a choice of either swallowing my pride or trying to play hero—whether it be a working class hero, a political hero or anything else—if I have to trade that off to obtain benefits for the people I am sworn to represent, I will choose to get results every time because my people are a lot more important than I am and that is my job.

I should like to refer to one problem in industrial relations. It is probably one of the most misunderstood human activities in the world. It is misunderstood by many trade unionists, managers and employers alike, and it is vastly misunderstood by the public at large. This is also reflected in the misunderstanding which is often evident in the halls of government. At one time I was a representative, both full-time and part-time, of the International Woodworkers of America. I was also president of the Nelson, Trail and District Labour Council for some three terms. Very often I took the opportunity to visit the high schools in my constituency and talk with students. Very few students, even in areas which were involved in mining and lumber, ever thought that after graduation they would have to work for wages for a living. This is one of the problems with television and the other media in this age of ours. Everyone thinks they will be professionals, semi-professionals or independent business people. I just ain't so. People also have misconceptions because they do not understand what their role in life will likely be and they thus do not feel the need to understand what industrial relations and unions are all about. Unions, industrial relations and personnel management are not people who spend 90 per cent of their time negotiating. Anyone in industrial relations spends 90 per cent of his or her working time on the grievance procedure, which is, in turn, the single most misunderstood instrument by managers and even active unionists. It is not essentially a method for finding fault. It is simply an attempt at an orderly mechanism to resolve possible errors in judgment. That is all it is. We require similar appeal methods both in the courts and in industrial relations.

What makes me happy about this Bill is that it begins—and it is not the first beginning as we have made attempts before—to recognize some of these realities. The process that we used has recognized some of the realities that exist in the industrialized world. It is not about perfection. We are not dealing with fairy tales. We are dealing with the lives of people. There are gains that have been made in terms of maternity leave. For women, we have made some but not great progress in recognizing the need for protection against sexual harassment in the workplace. As well, there are a great many measures that tend to build a more intelligent system for enforcing occupational health and safety in the workplace. I just mention that one area. There is substantial progress in that area in the Bill.

I would like to pay particular tribute to my fellow Members of the NDP Task Force on Occupational Health and Safety, the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), and the Hon. Member for Kootenay-East Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) who, along with myself, spent three years going back and forth across the country, trying to get the maximum input into what we then thought would be an early consideration of this subject in the House of Commons.

We do not feel that time was wasted, because we learned something. Even those of us who had some past experience in this area learned a great deal. We were able to communicate some of what we had learned to those in management and in the labour movement as well as to those in Government. As well, we recognized the fact that the Government was carrying on consultations with other people, mostly through its departmental officials, but some very personally, with a direct concern outside of the political sphere.

One thing that does concern me tonight is the final statement of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). I do not know whether it was a promise or a threat. I will paraphrase what he said. His final phrase went something like this: "We look forward to looking at the legislation again in detail in the fall". I cannot foretell what the electorate will do in the forthcoming election, but I do know what a certain provincial government in British Columbia has done in the last few months by looking in detail at previous good, progressive labour legislation which used to exist on the statute books of that province. They are attempting to turn it upside down.

My concept of freedom and socialism has always been that it is "a responsible society governed by responsible men and women in a responsible manner." I have always rejected paternalism and I do not like paternalism today. That has caused me to disagree from time to time with some other people who call themselves socialists as well as many people of other political persuasions. I do not like a government that tries to do things for people. I prefer to have a government that accords to democratic institutions and communities in society the power to help themselves.

The Code before us helps to redistribute some of that power, and devolve some of that power and responsibility into the workplace, to the workers, managers, and employers, and set up a framework in which they can co-operate and work together, to try to produce the greatest good for the greatest number. That is what it is all about. That is why we should be here. I support the Bill. I thank everybody involved. I congratulate them once more for having participated in what was a healthy exercise and what will be, I hope, something that produces good results for the working people of Canada and all other Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Malone: Filibuster!

Mr. Dubois: —two minutes, my dear friend from the West!

Mr. Speaker, to be very brief and at the request of my colleague for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), and my colleague for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne), who was most happy to hear my speech this afternoon, I would like to add a few words and say that, as far as we are concerned we have been very happy to receive the suggestions made both by labour and by management concerning Bill C-34. In this regard, I believe that there have been important discussions in recent months, not to say in recent years, about possible changes to the Canada Labour Code. When the representatives appeared before us, they indicated that they were in favour of the Bill generally, and as I said at the report stage, what we were asked by employer groups was to try to have a balanced Bill as they were themselves aware of the need for changes. I see the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) who agrees with me that this Bill is very important for the workers. He even told us that he was president of a union. He therefore speaks for the workers and probably because of that he was in touch with his colleague for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) and he asked him to support the Bill and to move amendments so that the Bill could be passed.

Mr. Speaker, a number of changes have been made, especially in Clause 28 and Clause 29, and I am referring to the matter of notice of technological change. I remember that both labour and management agreed on this point. More specifically, I recall that the Association of Canadian Bankers agreed with the 120-day notice so that workers could see what could be done in terms of these new developments.

Another important point, as the Minister of Labour pointed out, is that today, women represent nearly 50 per cent of the labour force, and that it was high time to amend the Canada Labour Code so as to take into consideration this category that is now on the labour market. That is why, when considering Clause 6 and Clause 59.2, we had to give a number of rights to workers that were both necessary and timely. In the Canada Labour Code, as the legislation stands now, employees with twelve months service have certain rights and are eligible for a certain number of weeks of leave, and now, the Government has introduced an amendment to reduce this period to six months.

Mr. Speaker, at this stage, however, since we want to adopt this Bill, I wish to thank my colleagues on both sides of the House who took part in the debate, listened to witnesses, took part in the debate on second reading, and after the second reading stage, heard many witnesses in rather quick and repetitive succession—in other words, we had a pretty busy agenda, and at the clause-by-clause stage, we finished at one o'clock in the morning last Thursday—I wish to thank both Opposition parties for their co-operation in helping us pass amendments. We on this side of the House accepted the amendments proposed by the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party also made its point.

My hon. friend from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who is a former member of the FTQ—

An Hon. Member: Still a member!

Mr. Dubois: —who is still a member of the FTQ, agrees that this is a major piece of legislation. He was there too until one o'clock in the morning, but nevertheless, he is very happy that workers in his riding—he says it is a predominantly working class riding—will be able to take advantage of the provisions of this Bill. For that, he can thank the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who is Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker, I think we all have reason to be pleased with our work. I think people in the labour world will be happy with this Bill which, I hope we will be able to adopt within a few seconds.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Any questions or comments?

[English]

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, in the thank yous it was not mentioned that in the committee we had special support staff. That special support staff took amendments that were impossible, a number of amendments, and distilled them so that they were in a very usable form. If the committee worked long, they must have worked ten times as long. To that particular staff of the committee, I am sure all Members would want to join me in expressing appreciation, along with the Minister's staff, who have sat in the gallery through this debate. It is appreciated.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any further questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I want to put my comments on the Bill before us in the context of my final speech in the House of Commons. I ask for your latitude, Sir, and the indulgence of the House for a few moments to allow me to express some thoughts that I feel deeply as I take leave of this great institution after 12 years.

• (1830)

I found it instructive to re-read the first speech I made here. I criticized then high government spending, called for a better deal for western Canada and urged greater Canadian attention to the global problems of security and development. Today in my final speech, I could repeat these themes with even greater urgency. Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose.

These 12 years have been the most informative, educational and challenging years of my life. For the rest of my life I will be grateful for the opportunity, and indeed the honour, of walking onto the floor of the House of Commons to represent my constituents. It is they who sent me here and it is they whom I must thank first. The people, first of Edmonton Strathcona and then of Edmonton South, placed their confidence in me during four elections. I have tried to help them as best I could.

Of course, my political supporters and election campaigners were instrumental in bringing me forward. No politician ever had a stronger team. They stayed with me even when they did not always agree with me. My staff, both in Ottawa and in Edmonton, provided me with loyal assistance and hard work through the years. As well, I owe a debt of thanks to the officials in the House, the Parliamentary Library and Research Bureau, as well as to the messengers, pages and guards who ease the path of Members.

I take away with me friendships with Members on all sides of the House, friendships that I will always treasure. I have benefited especially from the counsel of members of my own Party and I thank my colleagues for their consideration of me and of the views I have expressed over the years. It has been a privilege to serve under three distinguished Leaders of our Party, the Hon. Robert Stanfield, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) who will become the next elected Prime Minister of Canada. As for my family, I cannot adequately express my appreciation for their devotion to me.

There is no practical way to sum up in a few minutes one's experiences with so many events in the past 12 years. However, there is one dominant thought that I want to share with my colleagues as I prepare to depart, and that is, the desire that I and so many people have today for collective security and economic and social justice in the world.

Science and technology have made today's world a dazzling place and offer the potential for every human being to enjoy a life of quantity and quality. But just as our age abounds with the promise of life, it is fraught with the threat of death. While science can transform the world into a more habitable and safer place for everyone, it has also unleashed the potential for global destruction.

The massive buildup of nuclear arsenals and conventional weapons could wipe out most of the earth's species including mankind in a matter of hours. Conflicts rage in all parts of the globe. Chaotic imbalances of food and population hold a quarter of the world hostage to hunger, disease and despair. The earth's population is burgeoning and its already strained resources recklessly squandered while the environment is precariously poised on the edge of disaster. Human rights are repressed on a massive scale; millions are forced to flee their homes. Can anyone doubt that our world today is in crisis?

Two issues above all others stand out in the struggle for peace in the world today: disarmament and development. The reduction of nuclear arms is at the centre of East-West relations. Accelerated economic development is the theme of North-South relations. There is not a human being today unaffected by the vast ramifications of these two global issues. Untold millions are directly caught up in the expanding militarism and deprivation of our time; intensified military competition in turn worsens economic pressures on both developed and developing countries. The deterioration in the world economy has exacerbated political instability and social crises in Third World countries which have a potential for setting off widening conflicts. How the two issues are resolved will determine the prospects for true human security around the world.

We must seriously ask ourselves how much time is spent in Parliament on finding equitable solutions to these two paramount issues. Are we not so caught up with the daily pressures of parliament that we have no time for the wider view? This problem of priorities has troubled me for some time. I remind Hon. Members that stopping the arms race is not just a spiritual desire but is essential for world survival. Closing the rich-poor gap is no longer just a matter of striving for social justice but is essential to the continued development of the industrialized North. Some form of world law is necessary to resolve major international conflicts without violence and to retain the human and material resources needed to redress the global problems which confront us. Management of the planet by nations agreeing to co-operate in their common interest, thus ensuring that the promise of life prevails over the now suffocating threat of death, must be achieved.

All of this, Sir, is the work of the United Nations, the only global instrument we have to protect the global community. But today, critics maintain that the United Nations has not fulfilled its promise. The failure, however, lies not in the UN but in those nations that bypass the UN except when it suits their narrowly defined purposes. The Secretary General of the UN, Perez de Cuellar, has said that "the world is perilously near a new international anarchy," and has called for a recommitment by nations to the Charter as the UN prepares to observe its 40th anniversary in 1985.

What can—what must—Canada do now to strengthen the international machinery of the UN system? Drawing on our influence with Commonwealth countries, our increasing contacts with the Francophone countries of Africa and our evolving links with Asian and Latin American countries, Canada could stimulate the development of new coalitions of interest. The rigidities of bloc voting that have stultified the UN in recent years must give way to more universal expressions of concern and action on such pressing questions as peacekeeping, economic development assistance, global economic negotiations, human rights and environmental problems. Canada's success in developing consensus positions at the Law of the Sea Conference could be repeated in other areas. The UN is waiting for such a country to fill a leadership void in the crucial issues of disarmament and development, the two key issues which are at the root of the struggle for peace.

By putting a new focus on human rights, Canada could contribute to significant progress in these two fields. Human rights today are no longer confined to civil and political liberties, though much work remains to be done to guarantee rights in those areas. Human rights must also be protected in economic and social areas of life, and the UN has concentrated much of its activity here. Increasingly, human rights are associated with the right to physical security, and in an age of unending nuclear arms proliferation with a massive destructive capacity, the human rights of every person in the world are jeopardized today.

Canada, the country which pioneered the dispatching of peacekeeping forces to trouble spots, could now strengthen the machinery of peace by working to obtain an international inspection organization able to monitor disarmament using both satellites and on-sight inspection, by verifying arms agreements and by observing world military deployments. A true security system needs such an organization able to act with some authority.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in the field of development, Canada, working with like-minded countries, could stimulate greater concern about the straggering effects on the developing countries of the rising debt burden, monetary policies of the industrialized countries and trade barriers. The failure of the North to recognize that its own economic recovery depends on the ability of the growing markets of the South to buy has crippled global economic development. Millions face starvation with little hope for improvement. The pledge of Canada in the Throne Speech of December 7, 1983, to reach .5 per cent of GNP in official development assistance in 1985 and to reach .7 per cent in 1990 is an indication of human concern. However, the lesson of the 1970s was that development aid is but a fraction of what needs to be done to build the economies of the South.

The independent North-South Institute has laid down a program of action. Canada, through the UN, should work to expand the resources and quotas of the International Monetary Fund so that it provides greater help to the least developed. It should take an active part in efforts to initiate a process of basic reform of world trade and financial arrangements; contribute actively to negotiations within the GATT and preparatory discussions regarding a new trade round; play a leadership role in efforts to further integrate the developing countries into the GATT system; act against protectionist trade barriers; develop a new strategy of international development co-operation in harmony with the UN's international development strategy for the 1980s, and promote greater public understanding of the development process. The last point—public awareness—was considered so important by the parliamentary task force on North-South relations that its first recommendation called upon the Government to devote 1 per cent of official development assistance to encourage the awareness and involvement of Canadians in global concerns. Non-governmental organizations working in the development and disarmament areas have become part of the landscape. Because they involve so many Canadians at the local level, they are capable, with more government support, of building a climate of public opinion which can be an enormous strength for a government to move ahead on UN strategies.

● (1840)

Canada with its history and geography, its freedom and democracy, its resources and technology, and its space and industry, is ideally placed to work for the conditions of peace. As I take my leave of this great institution, that is my wish and my prayer for us all. Au revoir and good luck to us all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is on the following motion: Mr. Ouellet, seconded by Mrs. Hervieux-Payette, moved that Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Financial Administration Act, be now read the third time and do pass.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-33, an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport) moved:

That Bill C-33, be amended by adding immediately after line 5 at page 15 the following:

"21. Notwithstanding anything in the Western Grain Stabilization Act, where, prior to the end of the year ending July 31, 1984, the Minister determines that stabilization payments will be made in respect of the year, interim stabilization payments to participants in respect of the year shall, on the requisition of the Minister, be paid out of the Stabilization Account, whether or not the year has ended, on account of the stabilization payments that will be made in respect of the year to participants, based on such information required to be considered at the end of the year in determining stabilization payments as is available to the Minister at the time he first determines that stabilization payments will be made in respect of the year."

and by renumbering the subsequent clause accordingly.

He said: Mr. Speaker, after a very long and interesting debate which dealt with matters of labour, I am pleased to be able to introduce measures which will have an important impact upon the lives of so many western Canadian grain farmers. I do not believe it will require a lot of explanation for Members in the Chamber as to the objectives and purposes of this Bill. It is a matter which has been widely discussed and entertained in various Question Periods, committee hearings and debates. However, I think it is important to underline the fact that the amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act will serve to improve what is already a very important and substantial piece of legislation for the protection and income security of western farmers. We will present amendments which will add to the protection and income security substantially by offering an alternative mechanism for the payment of pay-outs by which the Western Grain Stabilization Program can support the income position of the farmers.

We all recognize that in the last two or three years western farmers have been squeezed between cash receipts and the expenses with which they are faced. With the depression which is apparent in some areas of the pricing of grains on the international market, it is very important that the Western Grain Stabilization Act be flexible and adaptable to respond to those conditions. One of the flaws which was recognized was that the formulas were not able to incorporate the additional sales and volume which occurred at the same time as expenses rose. Therefore, the fund was not able to respond effectively to the income requirements over the past two or three years. It is quite clear that amendments had to be made in order to ensure that the calculations arrived at would reflect the realities of both the international price situation and, at the same time, reflect the cost problems which western farmers face.

I would suggest to the House that the new pay-out mechanism is not a replacement of the existing legislation but is a secondary pay-out mechanism which will make the program more sensitive to cost and price variations. The present trigger mechanism, which is based upon the net cash flow over a five-year period, will be a continuing part of the Bill. But, the secondary pay-out mechanism, which relates more to the unit cost, will also be available. Therefore, we will be able to trigger pay-outs which will incorporate additional volume or inflationary tendencies.

I realize that there have been a number of recommendations, proposals and alternatives brought forward over a period of time, but in our judgment this will be the most effective way of ensuring that the Western Grain Stabilization Program is one which can be sensitive and flexible to the current needs of western farmers.

It is also important to note the significance of changing the time period in which calculations will be made from the calendar year to the crop year to ensure that there can be a more immediate pay-out. Rather than having to wait for nine or ten months until the end of the calendar year, calculations will now be made at the end of the crop year—on July 31. Therefore, we will be in a position to make the pay-out in the early fall, in October or November.

The amendment which relates to the participation of eligible spouses simply removes a discriminatory feature of the previous legislation. I think all Members of the House will welcome that amendment.

Finally, the major amendment allows participants to withdraw from the program once every ten years. That amendment protects both the stability of the fund and allows a certain amount of choice which can be exercised by the participants if they feel at some point in time that they no longer require protection.

Over all, the amendments are in the best interests of the western farmers. They will help farmers who are presently experiencing cash shortages. We hope this situation will not continue. We hope that through these amendments the stabilization fund can meet its basic requirements and obligations.

The amendment which we have just introduced at report stage is exceptional in that it introduces an interim payment for this year only. This will allow us to make a special response to the plight of the western Canadian farmers at this time. The interim payment, we feel, can be justified because there have been no pay-outs for the last several years.

I know Hon. Members have recommended during committee hearings a continual interim payment provision. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that while it sounds all right in theory, in practice it would be an impractical provision simply because of the inability to calculate the kind of pay-outs for which farmers might be eligible. It is subject to a number of factors which cannot be predicted with any high level of accuracy such as international prices, volumes, costs, all of which can vary from month to month. For us to be continually under the obligation or requirement to make interim payments would mean we would always be making payments without having an accurate prognosis of what the total payment would be after the crop year had closed. Therefore, I believe, Mr. Speaker, we can justify the interim payment amendment, but if we got into an annual interim payment, we would constantly be in a high level of uncertainty as to what those payments would be. It could happen, if you would allow the scenario, Mr. Speaker, at some point in time, under some pressure from Hon. Members opposite, the Conservative Party in particular and perhaps the NDP, which will be opposite for years to come, that we might make an interim payment and then find out, after the calculations were made, that the payment was too large and that the farmers would have to return the money or we would have to pass special legislation.

I would suggest that while in principle it sounds like a good idea, the practicality of it would not be particularly useful. Therefore, I would recommend to Hon. Members of the House that they accept our judgment that while an interim payment can be warranted this year, generally it would be prudent simply to allow the payments to occur after the crop year has closed. As I said earlier, the amendments which we have introduced as part of the Bill will allow those payments to be made in a reasonably short period of time after the close of the crop year.

The purpose of these amendments is to ensure that the Western Grain Stabilization Fund is one which is appropriate to the circumstances and will be most helpful for western Canadian farmers in this period of real need. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that it does underline the ongoing and continuing commitment of this Government to improve the position of western farmers, to provide for a number of initiatives which demonstrate that we want to provide for a good and secure agricultural system in western Canada because we all recognize that it is certainly a major backbone not only of the western Canadian economy but of the entire Canadian economy. Through good legislation and good initiatives, we are able to provide those two things.

I know from some comments of Hon. Members on second reading, that they tend to overlook some of the accomplishments which have been achieved by this House and by the Government over the past couple of years. I only point to the major payment of $651 million for the Crow benefit which is being provided—

Mr. Mayer: It is all going to the railways. How does that benefit the farmers?

Mr. Axworthy: We have put in place a superb new system of arriving at decision-making in western Canada through the mechanism of the Western Grain Transportation Act. We have just put in $150 million to double the order of hopper cars. We have a new plan for branchline rehabilitation. There is a new $520 million program which will virtually complete the entire network of branchlines, which is something which western farmers have been anxious about. As well we have provided for a reserve fund to allow for new innovative measures and to respond—as I pointed out to the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) from time to time—to certain initiatives in the area of the Stettler subdivision and other important areas. I want to point to the measures which were introduced in the last Budget allowing the one time RRSP investment by farmers who are retiring in order to alleviate the problems of capital gains. These amendments we are bringing forward today is simply one step in a series of initiatives which this Government has taken in order to make sure western Canadian farmers are well served and that the western Canadian farm economy will be a prosperous one.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise this evening to take part in this debate and, in particular, to respond to the Minister. First of all, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that what we are about to pass this evening is an improvement over what we have had. I do not believe there is really much question about that. We certainly want to give the Government credit for doing this, but let me stop right there as far as handing out accolades is concerned, because I feel that that is as far as it goes. We on this side have been urging the Government to bring forward amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act for about a year and a half. We believe there are other ways we could have amended the Bill which would have made it more flexible. The Minister talks about flexible and adaptable amendments. We did not have enough time in committee. The Government mentioned this measure in its Throne Speech on December 7. Yet we did not receive it in committee until almost the end of May. We got it through committee as quickly as we could to make sure the Government could not blame us in the Opposition for not passing the Bill. If we had had it in committee in January or February, we certainly could have looked at other amendments. In fact, we did not even get a chance to look at the amendment of the Government until just now because the amendments we moved were ruled out of order at committee and we were told that the government amendment would also be out of order because of the royal prerogative. Therefore, in essence, we are looking at the government amendment for the first time right now.

I would like to submit, Mr. Speaker, that if the Government had truly been serious about looking at the problems in the Western Grain Stabilization Act, it would have acted a lot more responsibly by ensuring that we had a chance to look at it in committee.

There are many ways to adjust the formula—to use the words of the Minister—to make it flexible and adaptable enough to meet the purpose of the Bill. The purpose of the Bill is to stabilize incomes of the western grain farmers by protecting them against sharp declines in the net cash flow. Statistically, we could have looked at a three-year moving average. There were all kinds of things we could have done in terms of studies which would not have affected the actuarial soundness of the Bill. There are all kinds of ways we could have considered to amend the Bill without jeopardizing the financial stability of the Bill. Yet, because of the way the Government managed its affairs, we did not have a chance to do that. I find that rather sad because we do have a very good Committee on Agriculture. As a rule we act in quite non-partisan ways and are generally interested in seeing that things happen in the best interests of Canadian agriculture. Yet we were not given an opportunity to do that. I feel that that is sad. We all suffer, ourselves, the Government and, above all, the people who have sent us here to serve them, because I do not think they are going to get the kinds of amendments they could have had if we had had more time in committee.

There are four amendments in the Bill to which the Minister referred. A very complicated triggering mechanism is going to be used. I could read it to the Minister and I am sure that if we had a chance to question him, he could not explain it to us because it is so complex. However, it will be a mechanism which is more responsive and will trigger some pay-outs in this crop year of something like $300 million and in the next crop year of something like $400 million. While we agree that the amendments which are there are going to be helpful in the immediate term as far as putting cash into the producers' pockets is concerned, I am not so sure it is the right triggering mechanism. I am sure we could have come up with a better one had we had more chance at committee. The Minister said that "our" judgment—obviously, he means that of the Government, the Treasury benches—is that this is the most effective amendment. How does he know that? Surely the committee could have determined which would have been the most effective amendments to put forward. At least we would have had a better opportunity to look at some of the other proposals which came forward.

The problem is being changed to a crop year basis which is, to my mind, a mixed blessing. If you are to have an effective stabilization program the pay-out should be made as quickly as possible after a crop loss. In this country we operate around the growing season. If you harvest a poor crop in the fall of 1984, you will need some help to get your crop in the ground next year. Ideally you should have some money in your hands from this program when you put in your crop in the spring of 1985. Yet moving to a crop year eliminates that possibility.

It is fine to say that this will make the program more responsive, but if the Minister understood anything about farming he would not be saying the things he did about this amendment. If that is the extent of the Minister's knowledge of western agriculture, then I fear for his new leader, particularly if this Minister is his chief lieutenant in western Canada. He has demonstrated tonight that he knows very little about western agriculture.

The Minister went on to talk about how in theory an interim payment sounds fine but in actual practice it does not work. To be polite, that is a bunch of nonsense. The Government has made two interim payments under the present legislation, and the amendment we moved in committee simply suggested that the Minister may authorize an interim payment. It did not compel the Government to do so. The Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) made a very good point in committee when he said we do not want to tie the hands of future governments. This amendment will only allow an interim payment for the present crop year.

What is wrong with an amendment which states that the Minister may authorize an interim payment? He does not have to do it on a regular basis but the authorization is there if it looks like there is going to be a substantial payment and an interim payment would benefit the producer. Surely that should be the result of properly designed legislation. Then we would not get into this nonsensical scenario where every time we require a pay-out we have to go through this procedure so the producers will have some money in their hands.

This amendment should have been in the House probably three or four months ago. Then producers could have had the benefit of the money in the fund. By the way, there was $864 million in this fund at the end of December, 1983. We did not hold it up. Even the NDP was with us on this one, thank goodness. They get their heads out of the sand once in a while and see the things that should be done for farmers. Everyone on this side was in favour and it should have been done a lot sooner.

Also, I urge the Government, when it makes an interim payment, to make it as large as it can. Members opposite have talked about a 50 per cent or 60 per cent interim payment, but I see nothing wrong with an interim payment of 75 per cent or 80 per cent. That is the basis on which the Canadian Wheat Board establishes initial prices.

In addition, the Government talks about agricultural initiatives. This Government has done absolutely nothing for agriculture in this session. There was one minor Bill which doubled the cash advances on western grain, and dealt with increases in farm credit rates. A motion from this side by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) to reduce the tax on-farm-fuels went to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for study. A motion by the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) concerning the concept of agribonds went to that same committee. When this Government talks about what it has done for Canadian agriculture, I am sure farmers all across the country know what a hollow ring that has to it.

We are pleased to do what we can to get this Bill through this evening so that western farmers at least have the benefit of a big pile of cash the Government has been sitting on for far too long.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the report stage of a Bill which amends the Western Grain Stabilization Act to provide a pay-out of some $250 million to $300 million to western farmers as soon as possible. The Minister mentioned that the Government decided to opt for a one-time interim payment provision. The Bill also contains changes in the formula from five years to three years, and adds to what is already a fairly complex formula something that will be known as "the per unit net cash outflow" component. There has also been a change in the treatment of spouses. Where both husband and wife are involved in the farming operation, both will be permitted to participate in grain levies and any pay-outs that might accrue. There is a new provision which will permit participants in the program to withdraw every ten years. Because the Bill came into effect in 1976, this means that in 1986, 1996 and every ten years thereafter the producer can opt out of the program.

In 1976 our Party raised the issue of some basic shortcomings in this program. We reiterated some of them in committee. I think it is fairly well understood by farmers that it is a very inadequate means of guaranteeing farmers' income, but that was never the intention of the Bill in the first place. It had very little to do with that, but everything to do with guaranteeing incomes to the Prairie region of Canada.

In its application the Bill has some very real inequities. It is available to people who want to opt into the program, and approximately 70 per cent or 75 per cent of farmers have decided to participate. I submit the inequity occurs when wheat and barley growers in parts of Canada other than the Wheat Board region find themselves covered by the general Agricultural Stabilization Act and have indeed received payments under that Act which were not available to farmers in the Wheat Board region who decided not to participate in the Western Grain Stabilization Act. There is some built-in discrimination which creates a wall around a certain region or a province. Because producers decide to opt out of a program, they are forever after ineligible as well for the programs financed nationally.

There is also a real inequity in the financing of the two programs. The Agricultural Stabilization Act is financed entirely by tax dollars, whereas the Western Grain Stabilization Act is financed presumably one-third by producer levy and two-thirds by the Government. One of the myths that was shattered concerned this whole funding business, that it should always be and will always be on a three to one basis. That myth was shattered in committee when we started hearing from expert witnesses and began looking at the record. We know that close to $1 billion has been accumulated in the fund, taking into account producer pay-outs and the Government's share. Since its inception in 1976 there have been two pay-outs. Something like $122 million was paid out in 1977 and an additional $293 million was paid out in 1978. We are expecting a pay-out in the order of $250 million to $300 million with this one. Farmers have participated in this particular program with the understanding and expectation that for every dollar they contributed some day in the future when they get into trouble they would be able to recoup $3.

We looked at the expert testimony and went through some of the numbers which had been generated by an economist from the Department of Agriculture in Manitoba. We went back 18 years using real data. Using the old five-year formula we found that for the 6 per cent collected of producer and federal Government money together, the potential pay-out over the full 18 years would have been 2.84 per cent. Not quite half of the moneys collected as premiums would be paid out in a period of 18 years. That pay-out procedure improves only slightly with the new improved formula which this Bill is attempting to introduce. Using the same data of the last 18 years and assuming contributions of one-third by the producer and two-thirds by the federal Government for a total input of 6 per cent, the total pay-out would be 4 per cent. The expectation among producers was that for every dollar put in they would eventually collect $3. However, the reality is that even with the new improved formula, for every dollar put in they are only able to collect $2.

The formula and calculation of the premium has been done on an extremely conservative basis. It is not designed to provide the kind of income protection that farmers had expected. The pay-out is always going to be much less than the expectation. For that reason we were a bit unhappy that major changes to the Bill had not resulted from a full review of the Act. It has been in effect for eight years and the past fall and winter would have been an excellent time to have done a complete review. We could have looked at the obvious shortcomings in the Bill, turned it over to the committee, and allowed it to come up with a much more comprehensive program which would have gone some way toward providing some income insurance protection to farmers. The fund which has been built up could have been used in a way which would provide real dollars in farmers' pockets when their income is down, due to low prices or bad markets. I am really sorry that that did not happen. However, since we are up against a time limit at this stage, we are prepared to allow the Government to put the amendments forward to trigger a pay-out so that this money will get into farmers' hands before the next election.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to the House tonight on this very important legislation. I must begin by expressing the disappointment of my own constituents which I have heard reiterated over and over again since my entry into politics some 14 months ago. When I began to campaign about 14 months ago, one of the things of which I became immediately aware was how bitter the farmers in my constituency were about the inadequacies of the Western Grain Stabilization Act. By and large the farmers I talked to during the course of this time were of one mind. They said two things. They said that this program had failed to do what it purported to do; it had failed to stabilize the industry. They had very little difficulty convincing me of that because the bankruptcy figures speak tragically for themselves. As you know, they have risen to near record levels year by year since 1979.

They also told me that most of them would prefer to be permitted to leave the program if they were able to recover the money which they themselves had invested. Of course, they were denied that opportunity. Although the amendments will now permit them to leave on the tenth anniversary of the program, they will, of course, have to leave without recovering the contributions which they made. By and large, the western Canadian farmers which I am acquainted with have been exceedingly disappointed by this legislation.

We now have before us amendments which come far too late and do too little. However, in some ways it is like the saying that a half a loaf is better than none. While we on this side of the House are disappointed that the Government failed to take the opportunity which was before it to perfect this legislation so that it would do what it purported to do, we are in a position where we must support the legislation if only because it is a step in the right direction. I would hope that we will be given the opportunity to again amend this legislation in the not too distant future. We hope to be able to take the opportunity to reform it in such a way as to make it truly responsive to the needs of western Canadian agriculture with sufficient flexibility to meet the year by year needs of cash starved Canadian grain farmers.

Farmers are now saying to me, with obvious justification, that the Government has betrayed them in that they are receiving only what they themselves contributed. As you know, western Canadian grain farmers have contributed almost exactly the amount of money which will now be involved in the interim payment to be made in July and the final payment to be made later in the autumn. Those farmers ask what has happened to the Government's contribution. They are critical of the amendments, with just cause.

However, thanks to the amendments and to the pressure which has been put on the Government by the Conservative opposition and the organizations which represent farmers across the country, the Bill is better now than when it was introduced into the House some time ago. There will at least be a very necessary interim payment toward the end of July. That interim payment is of the utmost importance. Farmers desperately need to augment their cash flow during the first few months of the year. That has always been a problem with western Canadian agriculture. There is a reasonable amount of cash flow in the autumn of the year at harvest time, but there is a serious shortage of funds in the spring of the year.

We have hoped that our amendments would be accepted. Those amendments would have provided for an interim payment in each and every year in which there was to be a pay-out. Unfortunately, the Government has seen fit to deal with this year only on an ad hoc basis. We are grateful for the concessions which the Government has made, but we regret that it failed to take the opportunity to redress a serious grievance which has existed. I am also disappointed, as are my colleagues, that the Government failed to take the opportunity to make the changes retroactive. Had the Government made the proposed changes retroactive to the 1982-83 crop year, we could have generated at least another $100 million into the western Canadian grain economy. That would have assisted those farmers very substantially. Many of those farmers are very young and are on the verge of bankruptcy.

The situation in agriculture in western Canada today is very serious. I speaker of western Canada because I know it best. There are many young farmers who will not survive this fall unless we have an exceptionally good crop. If it is only an average crop, many of those farmers will tragically be forced into bankruptcy. They request us to provide them with whatever assistance is available because they need it. In fact, they need a real stabilization program.

One of the characteristics of the agricultural economy is that it tends to have serious ups and downs. As legislators, we must take steps to even out those returns in such a way that there can be some stability in the industry. We will need those farmers and their productivity in the future. If we fail them in their moment of need and they are forced off the land because of the current crisis, then they will not be producing at a time when Canada and the western world needs their food products.

What is needed is a genuine stabilization program, one which will address itself to the price that farmers receive for their product, and one which will address itself to the cost of their production. Unfortunately, the present program has failed to fulfil either of those two objectives. It has not dealt adequately with the price that the farmer receives for his product each year, and has not taken into consideration all of his costs of production. Because of the increased volume which has affected the value of the over-all crop and has ignored the question of the cost of production, there has been an inadequate response on the part of this program to the needs of western Canadian agriculture.

While the Government has moved in the right direction, unfortunately, as the Government has done so often, it has taken only half a step. I am not sure if this is because it is excessively cautious or that it lacks concern. It has taken a step in the right direction but it has failed to respond in the manner in which western Canadian farmers have asked.

We need a program which is more flexible. I submit that a program which use three-year averages rather than five-year averages would be more flexible and would meet the needs of the western Canadian agriculture better than it now does. We need a program in which there is ample opportunity, whenever the need is there, to introduce the interim payment rather than deal with it in an ad hoc manner. I cannot help but regret that this program did not take those necessary steps forward. I cannot help but regret that this program did not take into account the poor crop years of 1982 and 1983.

What we have before us is something which is better than nothing. Constituents have said to me that we in the Opposition should oppose this legislation because of its inadequacy. They wanted us to vote against it. They wanted us to fight it every step of the way. I understand the frustration of those farmers, but what they are asking us to do is not practical, because this Bill is better than nothing. Unfortunately, it is not nearly enough. It may well be, and in fact appears to be, that we will have to wait until the next election and the next Conservative Government in order to get the kind of legislation which western Canadian farmers so desperately need.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words about this Bill, which will be given third reading tonight and become law at the end of this Session of Parliament. It has taken a long time. We on this side have been pressing for amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Bill for the last two or three years. We realize that the Bill itself is not an effective means of stabilizing the income of western farmers.

I was interested in the Minister's remarks this evening. His speech was rather good until the end when he began setting forth the various government programs which he indicated had been helpful to the farmers of western Canada. It sounded to me as though he was making a speech in anticipation of an election which we expect to come very shortly. However, the Minister did not tell the people of Canada that the programs he was talking about are programs which are funded with taxpayers' money, not government money. The $250 million or $300 million that will be paid out under this Bill will be welcome in western Canada. However, I suggest that it will not do the job.

An Hon. Member: It is a great government.

Mr. Neil: The Hon. Member across the way says that it is a great government. We will see after the next election whether the public feels that you have a great government. I doubt very much that they will.

As I said before I was interrupted, that $300 million will be welcome in western Canada. I repeat that it will not do the job because it will be an average of approximately $2,500 to each producer. That money will come out of a fund that is close to $1 billion. The $300 million is simply a return of the contributions that the farmers have made over the years and does not give them a return of interest on their money.

For the last several years, as I travelled throughout my constituency, almost without exception the farmers asked me why they cannot opt out of this program. I told them that they are locked in. I am pleased to see that there is an amendment which provides for a ten-year opting out clause. It will be interesting to see what effect this will have on the producers. Unless there are more changes to this Bill I suspect that there will be an increasing number of producers opting out of this program.

Farmers in western Canada are in serious financial difficulty. Their input costs have been rising; their cost of fuel under this Government has more than doubled. The cost of fertilizer has been rising as a result of the National Energy Program.

Furthermore, machinery prices have doubled and tripled and interest rates continue to go up to the extent that many farmers are finding it almost impossible to meet the interest payments on the loans they have with the banks or the Farm Credit Corporation.

It is interesting to note that recently a farmer came to my office to talk about his Farm Credit Corporation loan. He was unable to meet his payments last year and, lo and behold, a few weeks ago a representative from the Farm Credit Corporation came to him and said, "You are in arrears. We want to take a statement of your assets because we are considering taking foreclosure action." This man was worried and told me that he had put in his crop and that if it rains, and it has since, he will have a reasonably good crop and will hopefully be able to meet his commitments. He wanted to know how fast they could take his farm. I said, "First, the legal procedure in foreclosing is a fairly lengthy process". I also told him that there will be a payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Program. While it will not be very large, there is an election in the offing and I also suspect that just prior to the election there will be an interim payment by the Wheat Board. I told this farmer that if he added those two payments he would probably be able to pay a substantial amount of the arrears to the Farm Credit Corporation and they will get off his back. I certainly expect that prior to the election there will be an interim payment and another payment on account of the final payment on the grain sales.

The problems faced by farmers also become the problems of the small businessman in the communities, such as the implement dealer, the fuel dealer and the fertilizer dealer. If the farmer does not have the money and is unable to get money to pay his operating expenses, the small businessman is also affected. You will find bankruptcies occurring among small business people.

● (1930)

The Minister talked about this Bill as one to stabilize farm income or to help the farmer. But really it is not such a Bill. The Bill is simply one to put money into the economy of western Canada without regard for the individual producer. The Minister said that the amendments will make this Bill sensitive and flexible. It will make some changes, but it will not make it a Bill satisfactory to the farmers of western Canada. When the original Bill was before the House and before the committee we on this side of the House told the then Minister that the plan would not work in a satisfactory manner. First we said it was a global plan and anyone who has any knowledge of agriculture in western Canada knows that year in and year out the whole of the Canadian Wheat Board area does not have a good crop. You have areas, sometimes large, where the crop is poor. We have an area in northeast Saskatchewan today where there has not been a crop for three years, and the Western Grain Stabilization program has not helped the farmers in that area. Even on a regional basis, Mr. Speaker, it would not serve the purpose. Some of us who served on the committee in 1973-74 recalled that we had participated in the old Prairie Farm Assistance Act, and know it did not function. If Members on the other side or the Minister would refer to the committee hearings, they would note that we on this side of the House made several proposals whereby the Bill could be made to function on an individual basis without any particular complications. But the then Minister, Mr. Otto Lang, would not listen to us. He said in the debates and in the committee: "We will pay out in the spring of the year." That money has never been paid out in the spring. He said it was important that the farmers have the money in the spring so they could put in their crops. That has not happened. We gave him a solution, but he did not listen to us.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling to me that my time has just about run out. In closing, let me say that it is vital that the Bill itself, the concept of grain stabilization, agriculture stabilization, should be examined and examined in detail with the provinces. I would suggest that after the next election when there is a new Progressive Conservative Government that that examination and those changes will take place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order having to do with House business for tomorrow. I would like to indicate that the order of business for tomorrow will be as follows: Bill C-32, C-43, and C-30. If there is to be a change in the order, I will make sure to consult with my colleagues, the House Leaders, and that the House is informed on time before eleven o'clock.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of consultation from time to time about the order of the legislative agenda as presented by the Government. I appreciate the context in which the Government House Leader has spoken and that he will do me the courtesy, as I will him, with respect to discussing any possible change in the order. I appreciate his advice as to the present intention of the Government. If there is any change, we will have consultations and be able to agree on any alteration at the beginning of tomorrow's sitting.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-33, An Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture; and the amendment (Mr. Axworthy).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): For debate, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger).

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, the Crees of the Peace Hills will wonder about your pronunciation, but many people have trouble with the name of my riding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schellenberger: I am pleased to join in the debate on the Western Grain Stabilization Act. As farmers contemplate the crop year—they have just planted their crops incidentally—the indications are that it is going to be another tough year. The only opportunities for them seem to lie in the possibility of one country or another in the world having a crop failure which would boost the prices of grains. That is a tragic situation that farmers have to hope for in order to get more farm income.

At one time many farms were much smaller than they are today. At one time the farmer as he was farming, producing a crop and selling it, could anticipate a reasonable profit, and along with it he had the opportunity to put some of that money into a savings account, now called a stabilization account. In those days there were no such things as stabilization or crop insurance. The farmer had to put aside part of his income to make sure that if he suffered adverse weather conditions, whether it was drought or too much rain, he had the capacity to deal with it. But now in modern times when farm equipment has become very expensive the price for produce versus the cost of putting the grain in the ground has forced farmers to go to bigger farms, to produce higher volumes in order to survive, because volume is the only basis upon which they can continue the farm and buy equipment. We are now as governments, both provincial and federal, forced to assist in the setting up of stabilization accounts. This was not the case in the past. Farmers stabilized their own income. They were able to do that.

Now as farmers contemplate their abilities, they have only three bases upon which to continue to farm. They can hope that prices for their produce will increase enabling them to continue to farm. First, they have to get the price of their produce up or the cost to produce down. Because we sell on the international market it is difficult to get the price up. For some commodities that are controlled by supply management boards that is a situation that can be altered domestically, but most of our produce, particularly western grain, is sold on the international market and that is not the case. There is not a lot of room for farmers to get the price for their produce up.

The other option of getting the cost down is one where the Government can effect the situation. We have talked about things on this side, such as interest rate reduction, agri-bonds and farm fuel decreases, and I could go on to mention other bases upon which we can get the cost down.

Then there are the stabilization programs. This is one of them and there are others. We have talked about a Bill which the Government just introduced for a beef stabilization program where there will be three participants. Another way is for more international agreements under which we would guarantee our markets into the future. We could have something like the two-price wheat agreement where the domestic market pays more for the consumption of domestic food in order to assist farmers in the export of their produce. We are now faced with one of those programs, the Western Grain Stabilization Program. We are attempting to make things better for the farmers of Western Canada.

As my colleagues have said, this is not an individual plan. It was intended to be a plan to stabilize prairie income, most of which is derived from the farming community, particularly in Saskatchewan. It is also a very important part of the Alberta and Manitoba economies. The rural communities in which many of us grew up are changing rapidly. The main reason for that is that farmers are no longer able to buy most of their necessities in small communities. The community dealers cannot compete with large machinery dealers and large hardware stores for the types of goods farmers require. As a result, in many parts of the Prairies small communities are having great difficulty surviving.

This Bill was intended to assist in that survival. It was to put money in the hands of farmers at a time when the total economy of the Prairies was in a recession. While we had some difficulty with the Act, it was passed in 1976. It worked reasonably well until factors such as volume of grain exported, inflation, interest rates and so forth, changed in the late seventies and early eighties. The Bill was no longer functioning properly, so amendments were brought forth. We welcomed those amendments.

Also, as my colleagues have indicated, across the Prairies it was seen as the only piece of legislation or the only fund of money upon which farmers could get their hands to put their crops in the ground and survive this year. The indications from the Canadian Wheat Board were that the initial price would be lower, not higher. Of course farmers had to have crops before they could receive advance payments. Their only opportunity to put crops in the ground this year, other than by borrowing money on the backs of fertilizer and fuel dealers, was the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. However, we did not get the Bill through in time. Because of that I assume many accounts are being carried by small businesses in western Canadian communities today. That is the only reason many grain farmers are still in production.

This interim payment is very welcome across western Canada. This is why I found it difficult to understand why the Government, when it brought in an amendment allowing an interim payment this year, restricted the interim payment to only this year. I know the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board said that farmers need money in the fall just as they do in the spring. Anyone in the House who farms knows that one's opportunity for cash is much greater when a crop has been harvested than when it is planted. Planting is the most expensive of the farming processes. Therefore an interim payment, if it is to be made, should be made in time for farmers to pay their planting bills. Not much interest would be involved in order to obtain an interim payment in July.

I certainly agree with the other amendments, but the point I am making is that the interim payment should not be restricted to this year. It ought to be available in future years if there is to be a payment under this plan. That is a serious deficiency. At a time when we have opened up this Act, we should not close it and leave it closed in this fashion. I ask the Government to reconsider this. I know it is too late at this stage, and I think that is a failure. How could the Minister stand to speak on the Bill and brag about some of the other things he is doing with taxpayers' money in western Canada, such as the Crow Bill? I hope he campaigns on that in the next election in western Canada. We will see what happens.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, you may or may not know that a west wind is blowing and that there is a strong odour of an election in the air. Jimmy Carter has risen again. The Government has a new set of twisted mirrors with which to persuade farmers that their own money is a gift from Lloyd's of Winnipeg and the keeper of the western gate to Gritsville. The boom and bust cycle has become bust, bust, bust, election year boom; bust, bust, bust, election year boom. This is what Lloyd's of Winnipeg is offering farmers with their own money.

Confidence has gone. Unfortunately—and I could dwell on it for some time—if farmers had a real and honest free choice to get back the money invested in the Western Grain Stabilization Fund and get out, the majority would do so today. It is not the concept of the Western Grain Stabilization Fund which is wrong, but confidence has been destroyed. Farmers no longer believe in the program. Moreover and equally dangerous, that destroyed confidence or lack of confidence is spilling over into any other concept of stabilization. If we ask farmers and ranchers in my riding about whether or not they want a red meat stabilization plan, they will say that they do not want it. Whether intellectually or academically a good and workable idea, it is set aside. The response of those people is to say: "If it is like the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, I want no part of it".

We used to have stabilization funds in the 1930s, and beyond. They were called chickens, pigs, milk cows, gardens, Saskatoon berries and the muscle power of animals and humans. Once farms were paid for, farms with low capital costs and subject to low interest rates, a farmer could not be starved off the land. He could feed and look after his family. Today input costs are so high that they can no longer afford crop losses. Persons farming today who have virtually paid for everything can be destroyed by two crop losses.

At the present time the Prairies of northeastern Saskatchewan have faced crop failure. Major parts of Manitoba are into their third year of crop failure. We see farmers going bankrupt, not at the Prairies average which is already too high, but at regional averages which are excessive to the extreme. As long as the pay-out is based upon the whole area of the Canadian Wheat Board it will be merely a stabilization of the machinery manufacturing businesses and fertilizer plants of central Canada.

These people propel a certain amount of business into the Prairies year after year. Now they have a guarantee. If the whole Prairies went broke, machinery dealers and manufacturers would be able to market in the Prairies. That is really what the plan is all about, unfortunately. Every small region of the Prairies at one time or another experiences crop failure. It shifts around from one region to another. Some years the Peace River country of Alberta is frozen over. This year northeastern Saskatchewan will be rained out. Surely they should be able to stabilize their farms, not the manufacturing industry of some other region of Canada.

The Government is gasping for breath at the eleventh hour and fifty-ninth minute before the election call. Well after seeding has been completed, it comes along and tells farmers that it will give them back their own money which they paid into the fund. The truth of the matter is that had farmers invested their money when the fund was initially conceived, even at bank interest rates, they would have been about $8,000 better off than by investing in the fund.

As the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) just mentioned, when a farmer plants seed in the ground he cannot go to the bank and ask for a loan to carry him over on the basis of there being seed in the good earth. But when there is a 50 or 60-bushel crop lying in swath, the farmer can make projections because the predictability of cash is much better than it was in the spring of the year. They need the money in the spring. As the Minister said, they have expenses in the fall as well, but they are much closer to predicting what their income might be.

• (1950)

Last weekend I met with a farmer who told me that he argued in favour of the Liberal Government when this program was initiated. He said: "I argued with my neighbours that any time that I as a farmer could put up $1 and the Government would put up $2, that was a deal I could not afford to pass up." He went on to state: "Boy, was I dead wrong. I feel damn cheated." He did go on to say some other words. Because I want to continue my speech for some time, I will not put them into Hansard.

This Government has chosen to stabilize the farmer when he is broke. It is not the notion of what grain stabilization is about at all. We recognize that there are ups and downs in the income of farm people. They waited until the very last breath of farmers and decided at that point to come in with stabilization. Coming in then basically means that we continue the path of bankruptcy for all too many farmers.

The present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has been Minister for 12 years. In that time there have been five major pieces of agricultural legislation. That is a record that damns this Government in terms of its agriculture policy. There is no industry in the world as important as agriculture. Every year 70 million persons suffer permanent and irreversible brain damage from the lack of protein; four-fifths of this world suffers from malnutrition and 40,000 children under the age of five die of starvation. There is no commodity in the world as important as food. There are only two sources of food. One is soil and the other is water. Unfortunately, and I do not blame only the Liberals who govern us, against that devastating background, there is no nation in the world that places fish, forestry or food among its highest priorities for government spending. The whole world needs to turn itself around to recognize that we live by the good earth. If we do not put some research, marketing, development and skills back into the production of foods, we will continue as we have in the past, living in a world where four-fifths of our people suffer from malnutrition.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) took the occasion this evening to tell us that the West should be pretty happy because we have this great thing he calls the new Crow rate. We got exactly what we should have expected. We have Senator Ian Sinclair in the other place. He is now part of this great new Government team. We have a new Leader of the Liberal Party. He did not dare resign his directorship of CP. A good constituent, of mine, the Hon. Jack Horner, the former Chairman of CNR, is now the western grain car co-ordinator. If I was a farmer against that background I would hightail it like a jack-rabbit.

It is those people who gave us exactly what we should expect, a Crow rate that allows the railway companies to renege on about $2 billion which they said they would spend. They are not going to spend that because somehow it is not in the interest of the railway. This country is not about railways. It is about people who produce, whether it is forestry, fish or agriculture. When we have people like Sinclair, Turner and Horner looking after farmers, it is analogous to sending a tomcat to guard mice. They will look after the railways every time.

We have to recognize that we face a $2 billion shortfall. That is against the background of a 140 per cent increase in farm production in the last decade. Statistics Canada predicts another 110 per cent increase by the end of the year 1986. We tax fuels used by the farmers. We have front-end taxes on natural gas which makes fertilizer prices too high. Land prices are escalating far too high. We have machinery costs that cannot be justified. Interest rates are too high. They are exorbitant, and there is no means of resolving the situation. There is a failure in marketing and research in terms of farm production and agricultural needs. Against that background, there was one committee meeting at which the Liberals did not show up. At the other meeting, one Liberal Member showed up and he walked out.

The Government left this measure until the second last day before the recess. It brings in this Bill at the last second, 11 hours, 59 minutes and 59 seconds. It tries to tell the farmers it is going to give them some gift from Lloyds of Winnipeg at the last moment with the farmers' own money.

I know this is a good speech, Mr. Speaker, but you do not have to come down here. I will keep going if I can do so. No? If that is the signal, I will resume my seat. Thank you very much.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I sat through virtually every committee meeting when this Bill was being considered. From day one, its primary purpose was not to come to the aid of the farmer. Its primary purpose, and it is so stated in the Bill and in the Minister's presentation, and in its support by Government, was to make sure that there was a total income in the West, including all industries and not just agriculture, so as to maintain a healthy western economy. As a result, the provisions of this Bill are not properly triggered at the time when farm income declines to the point perceived by farmers are the one described by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) a few moments ago. It was perceived by the farmers as their Bill. It was utterly and totally impossible to indicate to the public at large that this was not to be triggered by farm needs, but rather the total economic needs of the total western area. The farmer now realizes that he was utterly and totally misled by the propaganda associated with the presentation of that Bill.

We now find ourselves considering an amendment which is vital to the farm industry of western Canada. It is high time that it was here. This Bill was needed when people were planting crops so there would be an attraction to plant, and encouragement for farmers and creditors alike to ensure a healthy plant and healthy agriculture in western Canada.

This is the first recognition of the weakness of the original Bill that we are amending, the first recognition of its weakness as it is being presented for amendment today. I do not know how farmers in Canada can ever be bewitched again into a state of ignorance of their own affairs and the legislation which was supposed to attack the problems they face.

We have gone through a period of time when costs of production have skyrocketed. Price stabilization, whether it be for western grains or other items, is something which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has refused to recognize. He has preached a cheap food policy for Canada. As he preached that, net farm income has gone down and costs have gone up. There have been all kinds of presentations to this House; to the Minister, to the Cabinet and to Opposition Parties, pleading for recognition of the problem of the red meat industry and the horticulture industry. They suggest that the policy of this Government has not been adequate to look after the farmers' needs while the Cabinet and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) preach that we shall have cheap food for Canada. The birds are just coming home to roost by this Bill.

What the Opposition Parties said when it was in the process of consideration by the Committee in the House has now been admitted by the Government. It was inadequate the day it was drafted. It was not subject to amendment like most government Bills. Government Members had all the brains. They bewitched the farmers and passed the Bill as it was when amendments had been offered to try to have payment triggered by farm needs rather than total economic needs. That, of course, was a reversal of the situation.

If one follows the economic charts of Canada through history, one sees that when the farm industry is prosperous, so is the rest of Canada. There are a few exceptions to that rule, being times when the peaks do not entirely coincide, but there are no times when the impact of farm prosperity is not reflected into the curve of prosperity for all of Canada. The decline of the agricultural economy may precede the decline of the Canadian economy, but then one wonders whether or not the agricultural economy has dragged the entire economy down.

Here we are considering this Bill after hearing a snide remark made by a Member on your right, Mr. Speaker, a remark which was intended to be deceptive after mention was made of the 18 cents. How many times must one tell those who will not hear—I suppose one can tell them in perpetuity and they will still not hear—that the 18 cents did not apply to agriculture, to fishing or to the heating of homes. Remarks such as that do not do the dignity of this House very much justice.

I regret very much that, as of now, we have not properly addressed at least a few of the agricultural problems. I do not have to name those problems because the Minister of Agriculture himself receivd a telex urging a response to the request of the Canadian Horticultural Council. This response was not mentioned as the business for tomorrow, nor was it promised as the business for Friday. I must say that this would be a default in the responsibility of any Government. This is a position about which we have known for weeks and for which no correcting legislation has been presented to us as of yet.

As was mentioned earlier, it seems as though the ghost of Jimmie Gardiner has finally injected his thinking into the policy of a Government that is just about to attack the public with an election campaign. The same tactics are being applied, but this time the farmers will not have their eyes shut because there have been too many examples of neglect and too few examples of progressive, constructive, promotional legislation for the welfare of agriculture in all its spheres. This is just a hypocritical example of the historic neglect which has been going on for too many years.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be afforded the opportunity to say a few words on this Bill tonight because my constituency is largely agricultural. There are some excellent tourist areas such as Lake Louise, Banff, Drumheller and a few other places in my constituency, but the vast number of people who live in the constituency of Bow River either depend directly or indirectly upon agriculture for their living. There is a great deal of ranching and livestock production and there is a tremendous amount of grain growing that goes on in the Bow River area. Consequently, this Bill is very important to the livelihood of the people of my constituency.

I wish to deal with some of the fundamentals first. I wonder why it is that agriculture and farmers, to put it colloquially, always get the dirty end of the stick. That is what has happened over the years. Agriculture never gets a fair break. I have thought about this and wondered why this is so. The agricultural industry is basic to our entire lives. If we do not eat, we do not live. We do not eat unless there is production and production comes largely from our farms. Almost everything we eat comes from the land or from the sea. Farmers have a tremendous part to play in the production of the food that keeps us alive. So why is it that the agricultural industry always seems to be lagging behind the rest of the economy?

As the Hon. Member who just spoke said a few moments ago, when the farmers have money and are reasonably prosperous, the entire community is buoyant. I have seen that happen many, many times. I have seen times when our coal mines were working full blast, and that brought prosperity and buoyancy to the entire area around the coal mines. I have seen times when our farmers were getting a fairly reasonable price for their produce, and that brought buoyancy to the entire area. Consequently, it is important to analyse the situation and find out why farming has never been given its proper place.

The situation is like that of the Government's job programs. Every time a question is asked, the Ministers stand and say that we spent so many millions on this, so many billions on that. Government members are throwing money at jobs and they think the money, like an aspirin, will find the sore spot and cure it. Money does not work that way, and that is why the more millions of dollars that are spent, the more unemployment goes up.

If the Government were to diagnose the problem and find out what is causing unemployment—and the Government itself is causing it with things like the capital cost allowance—and then try to find solutions to those particular problems, it would be attacking things in a logical and scientific way. However, the Government does not do that. Government members just say that they are spending so many million dollars and they think that that satisfies the problem, even if the rate of unemployment keeps increasing as it does. The same is true with farmers.

Tonight the Government is saying that it is giving $300 million to the farmers. In the first place, it is the farmers' own money. The Government should stop arguing about the ratio of three to one. That stabilization fund was brought in so that the money contributed to it by the farmers and the money contributed to it by the Government would belong to the farmers. All of that money belongs to the farmers. That was the deal that the Government made with the agricultural community. Now it is telling the farmers that it is giving them two for one. By law and by agreement, every dollar in that stabilization fund belongs to the farmers. I do not like the Government now beginning to change that agreement and divide it up.

Let us look at the situation. Each part of the economy depends on every other part of the economy. Each part of the economy must be in proper balance for the economy as a whole to work. I think that is an important point. Basically, this means that the price received by one sector for its production must fit properly with the price received by other sectors.

There must be a proper balance between the prices. When that proper balance exists among all of the sectors, including the agricultural sector, then there is parity.

Farmers have been asking for parity for a long time. Parity simply means that there is a proper balance between the various parts of the economy, including the agricultural sector. If one sector charges prices that are too high, then it exists at the expense of the other sectors. If one sector receives too little for its production as farmers normally do, then it becomes the victim of the other sectors. If one sector borrows to the hilt, that too hurts the agricultural sector.

Producers have been the victims of our economy. Of the entire national income of Canada, 14 per cent should go to the agricultural sector. However, it is very seldom that the agricultural sector receives even close to that amount. There is no parity. Farmers do not get their fair share of the national production. As a matter of fact, probably the closest farmers have ever come to getting a fair share happened shortly after the war when farm produce was receiving a half-decent price.

Normally farmers receive an amount way below the national production and sometimes receive only 1 per cent, 2 per cent or 3 per cent of the national production. Consequently, they cannot exist. These low incomes create problems for more people than the farmers. The income that was not received by farmers fails to spread throughout the rest of the economy. When farmers do receive money, the benefits are spread throughout the rest of the economy. When the farmers do not receive it, their share of national production is way down.

In such times what do farmers have to do? They have to borrow. This starts that wicked cycle all over again—the farmer gets into debt and things get worse. High interest rates have hurt farmers and home owners more than anybody else. People produce with credit. Farmers need credit to produce. It is no wonder that 400 farmers went bankrupt in western Canada in 1983. Many more farmers went bankrupt across Canada because they could not meet their costs.

The Farm Credit Corporation and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) tell those farmers that they should sell some of their land. Farmers paid into the stabilization fund in the hope that when bad times came they would receive a little help with the money which they put into the fund. That is not the case. PC Members have begged, pleaded and prayed for the Government to make pay-outs. Month after month the Minister of Agriculture said, "soon". The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) told us that the Government was studying the legislation. It was studied for months, and in the meantime farmer after farmer went bankrupt. The money which was in that fund could have saved scores of those farmers if the Government had acted.

Why did it not act? It did not act for a very simple reason: The fund did not cover total costs. The program is spread over half the country. As well, it covers a number of products. Some farmers have no hope in the world of ever receiving a pay-out. About the only thing which will trigger a pay-out is the wheat of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba. All the other producers will probably never see a pay-out. We asked the Government to include the total costs of production. The Government has improved the legislation somewhat, but it still does not include all of the costs of production.

What about the interest costs? That is one of the biggest costs of agriculture. That is not included. What about inflationary prices? They are not included. What about the costs of transportation? That is a factor in production. What about the costs of machinery? Oh, no, the Government leaves out the important things.

I am glad to see this Bill. At least it will give farmers something to put in their pockets. It will give back to the farmers some of their own money. However, this Bill is still unfair. There will be farmers who put money into this fund who will never get back a cent. These farmers are being robbed by the Government. When these farmers opt out, if they have not received as much or more than they put in, plus interest and plus the contribution by the Government, they should be paid the difference. If they did not receive any pay-out at all, they should get their money back with interest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: Absolutely. Any other business in the world would do that. It is highway robbery. The Minister can laugh if he likes, but the farmers are not laughing. The Government takes their money year after year after year and then we in the Opposition have to beg the Government to give those farmers a little bit back—a few crumbs so that they can stay alive. It almost seems that the Government is trying to bankrupt the farms.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that I am disrupting the proceedings of the Chamber, but I am asking for the unanimous consent of the House to revert to the presentation of reports from standing and special committees. The reason I am doing this is that this afternoon the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs had an opportunity to consider Bill C-36, which deals with amendments to the Interest Act. Those amendments affect home owners and their mortgages. Therefore, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to revert to that proceeding in order that I might table the report from the standing committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent to revert to the presentation of reports?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Forrestall: No, I would like to intervene—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair cannot entertain speeches on such a proceeding. All the Chair can do is ask whether there is unanimous consent to revert to the presentation of reports.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): There are two points of order. I will first recognize the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order simply because the intervener rose on a point of order. I rose merely to ask whether we might have the benefit of looking at what is to be presented. I am aware that there were previous negotiations and I am not withholding unanimous consent. However, the matter was raised as a point of order and I simply intervened to ask whether we might not see the report. I believe that we are quite prepared to give consent. There is no question about that. But, it was a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I was particularly intrigued by the question which was asked by the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) who, in rising, asked what the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) was asking to present. I was waiting to hear, and now I know. At this precise moment, he is being shown the document which is the subject matter of the request for unanimous consent. I just took a look at it and I am sure that, now he has seen it, it would be possible to gain the unanimous consent which is necessary to allow the report to be tabled.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, now that we know perfectly well who is in bed with whom, of course we are quite prepared to give unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair will again ask if there is unanimous consent to revert to the presentation of reports. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the implication of the Hon. Member who spoke last is one that I cannot refuse. I appreciate very much the consent of the House in allowing me to rise to present the Sixth Report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I thank the House very much for the privilege it has accorded me.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-33, An Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture; and the amendment (Mr. Axworthy).

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, this Bill is before the House of Commons at a time when Canadian farmers are in trouble. They are in trouble for a number of reasons. Part of the problem in my province might have been due to the weather in the spring of 1984, and the weather which we have experienced over the past few weeks, namely, excessive rain. But, farmers throughout the ages who have followed the pursuits of farming, the production of food, have always been able to cope with that kind of trouble. What is causing more farming bankruptcies today is not due to the weather, it is due to government policy.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), mentioned, the Bill before us will be passed in the last minutes of this House before it rises for the summer, and possibly the end of this Parliament should an election intervene. It is a Bill which is, at best, a minimal attempt to address the issues which farmers in Canada are facing. What farmers are facing, Mr. Speaker, is a debt load and an increasing interest rate problem which is jeopardizing their economic viability more than any other single factor.

This weekend, before I came back to Ottawa, a young farmer in my riding called me. I know him very well. He is farming with his father and they have a successful farm. He asked me whether or not the Western Grain Stabilization Bill would be passed before the House rose for the summer. I told him that from our point of view, we not only had asked for the Bill, but through the weeks we had pressured the Government for the Bill, and that we would do everything in our power to see the Bill passed before the end of June. At that point in the conversation I asked him if it would make a great deal of difference in their farming operations. He said to me, "It is not going to solve our problems but anything which will in some way address the financial squeeze we are in is welcome". That, Mr. Speaker, is why we have pushed for this Bill.

I want to tell the House that this Bill does not resolve or solve the financial problems of the farming community today. I have already said that the major problem is the financing of the debt load. That is why farmers are going bankrupt. That is why we are seeing foreclosures. That is why we are seeing unrest on the Prairies, for example, among people who, when they produce food, are at their best. When you look at the economic history of Canada over any period, but especially the post-war period, there has been no group of people in society who have been more efficient and whose productivity has increased more dramatically than the farmers, and it is because of that that they are still surviving.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, if one takes a look at the more traditional industries, what some people would like to call the multinationals, one will find that with respect to their post-war labour situation, on a net basis they have not created new jobs. They have stabilized their labour force, and in most cases their labour force is down. There are three areas in which the labour force has been increased. One area is the public service, which has had tremendous growth over this period of time. The other two areas are small business and agriculture. We cannot even measure what the effect on the labour force is when agriculture is doing well or is not doing well.

Many years ago I was working in a small business in my home community which sold cars and trucks for General Motors. It is very interesting to note that in Ontario at that time the automobile manufacturers felt they had a good year when the economy was growing. They had an excellent year when farmers would come in at the tail end of the tax year and put in orders for trucks, cars and machinery. It is no different on the Prairies today. They are shrewd business people. I say to you that agriculture is the industry which creates jobs, and today part of our labour problems are due to the financial squeeze which our agriculture communities are in.

We now have the stabilization bill before us. On average this Bill will give $2,500 to farmers who will simply be getting the money back which they put into the fund in the first place. I do not know if you know this, Mr. Speaker, but I know that there are some of my colleagues in this House—and I will not identify them—along with farmers in my riding, who will spend more money today in spraying their crops than the average pay-out from the grain stabilization is going to give them. That is the situation. There is no point, Mr. Speaker, in saying in this House of Commons today that this legislation is going to do wonders for the farm economy. It is only of minimal help, but thank goodness, at least there is something.

I remember when this Act was passed. At that time, a former Hon. Member for Assiniboia, now the Leader of the Liberal Party of Saskatchewan, was working with the then Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Hon. Otto Lang. I remember him running up and down the aisles of this House trying to convince us from western Canada that this would be a good deal for western farmers. I will never forget it. I remember him going back and forth trying to get the deal put together. We consistently asked him what guarantee will the farmers have? Where is the commitment from the Government? But he was absolutely convinced that this was the best thing which would ever happen to western agriculture. What is ironic is that this Government, which passed that legislation, today, last week and last month, has been forced, pushed and cajoled into bringing forward legislation which would at least reflect in part the economic reality that is now facing western Canada. The Western Grain Stabilization Act was simply not realistic.

It is important to note today what we said then when that Bill was passed. We said that those clauses were of such a nature there literally had to be a disaster if there was going to be a pay-out. It was not the Government which was taking a risk. It was the farmer who was putting the money into the fund who was taking the total risk. That is what we were dealing with. And all we are doing today, Mr. Speaker, is correcting in part, in a small way, what was wrong in the first place.

I want this Bill to be passed today, but I want notice to be served that I am not impressed with this Bill. Nor am I impressed with the government's agricultural policy. It takes more to give leadership in agriculture than to walk around the country wearing a green stetson. If we are going to get this country turned around economically we must get back to the basics, such as agriculture. There has to be more emphasis placed on agriculture. In the 12 years I have been here, Mr. Speaker, this Government has brought forward few bills relating to agriculture. More importantly, agriculture has not been a priority of the Cabinet. Some of my colleagues might disagree with my next statement, but a least sometimes I thought the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was trying to give some voice to agriculture, but it fell on the deaf ears of his colleagues.

All we are doing today, Mr. Speaker, is correcting in part that which was wrong in the first place. What I am saying is that we have to place much more emphasis as Canadians on agriculture. If we will do that, not only will our agricultural community prosper but jobs across the country will be created. That lack of emphasis is the legacy of this Liberal Government. That is why its platitudes or sudden revelations that it knows where the West is finally located is not going to make any difference. The record speaks for itself and the agricultural record of this Government is something for which it should be condemned.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to take part in this debate. For a long, long time, I believe since before we broke at Christmas, Hon. Members of my Party have been asking the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) when the Western Grain Stabilization Bill would be brought into the real world and address the realities involved in farming in western Canada.

There is one day left before this House rises for the summer recess. In all likelihood we will be going into a general election. At least that is what we on this side are hoping for. But we have presented to us in the dying hours of this session a Bill that does not reflect the realities of the production of food. It does not reflect the realities of interest rates, the cost of fuel, machinery and fertilizer. Indeed, it does not reflect the realities involved in purchasing land or putting up farmstead buildings.

• (2030)

We on this side are going to support this Bill. I hear the Minister of Transport saying "good". I hope when the election is called he has the opportunity to come to my riding of Kindersley-Lloydminster in Saskatchewan. I invite him to come and discuss with my farmers their feelings about the Western Grain Stabilization Act, indeed their feelings about the last 20 years of Liberal administration. I offer him the opportunity and we will see one another in Kindersley-Lloydminster in Saskatchewan.

Some $300 million is to be paid out under this Bill which the producers themselves have placed in trust with the Government of Canada so that it would be available to them when they needed it to stabilize their income. The Minister of Transport knows full well the amount of taxpayers' money, not farmers' money, which has been put into the riding of Winnipeg-Fort Garry, his own riding, some $700 million to $800 million. The Minister is saying "yes, somewhere around there". He is not sure. That works out to $100,000 per voter. Now he is doing the math to see how much money he has spent on each one of the voters in his riding. He finds I have come up a little high.

Mr. Epp: Not much.

Mr. McKnight: That is $700 million into one riding, and some 150,000 Wheat Board permit holders are being offered $300 million which the producers paid into the fund in the first place. The Government is offering to give it back, some $2,500 per farmer as estimated by the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

I am not a cynical man. I do not look for hidden motives or angles like some people on the other side of the House. But I am not sure, indeed I have great doubts, whether we would even be debating this Bill if there was not the possibility of a general election.

There is another thing which should be brought to the attention of the Minister. If the media reports are correct he is going to be—and I hate to say this because it refers to a native son of my province—another Jimmy Gardiner. He is now going to be responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Woe to the producers of grain in western Canada if the Minister has that responsibility and is allowed to run amuck among the most sacred thing the producers of western Canada have, the only thing that protects them from the deviations of the world market, the Canadian Wheat Board.

We have noticed in the past that there seems to be a tendency on the part of this Government not to pay too much attention to the people who produced the grain, but to pay a lot of attention to the people who derive their livelihood on the backs of producers. A prime example would be Bill C-155, the transportation Bill, which the Minister of Transport brought in. After some debate and some amendments, he used closure to put it through the House. We have heard the estimates of the number of jobs being decreased and increased. It is now estimated at about 155,000 jobs, where before it was 300,000 plus. Think back to that debate. We heard about $16 billion being invested, but now it is only $12 billion. If you think back, we never once heard the railways give those numbers. We never heard them say there would be over 300,000 jobs created. They never said they would invest $16 billion. But I heard the Minister of Transport and his predecessors say it. I read the expensive propaganda distributed throughout Canada saying that these investments would be made. But these statements were made by the Government, never by the railroads. Now we find that the railroads are not going to invest that money. But the Government used its propaganda machine to make people believe these investments would take place. I know the Minister of Transport is proud of being the co-campaign chairman for Mr. Turner who won the leadership of his Party. That is a political achievement, I am sure. Mr. Turner happened to be a director of Canadian Pacific.

Mr. Epp: Still is.

Mr. McKnight: I am sure he was very close and comfortable with "Mr. six and five", Ian Sinclair. He now sits in the Senate, having been appointed by this Government.

Then there is that man who had his life reversed, Mr. Horner. Most people, if they are going to become a socialist, do so when they are young. Mr. Horner did it in reverse. He became a socialist Liberal when he got older. He is now the chairman of the Senior Grain Transportation Authority.

Then there was another Minister of Transport, the man who said, "Transportation is a mess but what will I do about it?" He went to the Senate and became Speaker. Then the present Minister of Transport had him appointed chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission.

Do you really think the grain producers in western Canada are being cynical, are being anything more than reasoned and rational people when they say "We really do not think we have a chance with this Government the way it stacks the deck for the Canadian Pacific Railroad". Does anyone wonder, given the Minister of Transport, the Leader of the Liberal Party, Senator Sinclair, Senator Marchand, now the chairman of the Canadian Transport Commission, and Mr. Horner, the chairman of the Senior Grain Transportation Authority?

Agriculture is a multimillion dollar industry, a megaproject which goes into the ground every year whether it is dry or wet. If farmers do not have the money, they borrow it. It is the biggest megaproject this country has and it is a renewable megaproject. It generates some $19 billion in Canada. Over half of that is generated on the Prairies. Right now costs have tripled since 1971. The prices received by producers are well below 1973 levels. There has to be some consideration for people who invest their lives and those of their families in the production of food. If there was, they could go ahead and do what they enjoy doing and contribute, not to just Canada but to the world. It does not make sense when we have the Farm Credit Corporation charging 15 per cent interest for farm loans, while at the same time this Government, through CIDA, gives some $44 million interest free to India for the production of forests. It does not make any sense. There has to be a happy medium.

I see I am keeping the Minister of Transport up. He looks tired. I know he has had a busy day, but the people out in Kindersley-Lloydminster, Provencher, Portage-Marquette, Crowfoot, Bow River, Wetaskiwin and Moose Jaw are just coming in from spraying. They have been spending money to buy chemicals produced in another part of Canada. They get off a tractor that was built in another part of Canada. They get into a half-ton truck built in another part of Canada.

Mr. Axworthy: Don't you know about Versatile?

Mr. McKnight: In 1967 I bought a Versatile tractor and the total price was $9,000. It was a 118 horsepower four wheel drive. Do you know what it would cost to buy that today? It would cost $65,000. In 1967 I was getting $2.25 for a bushel of wheat. Today I am getting $4. The cost to increase my horsepower rose from $9,000 to $65,000. I see that my time is up. I hope the Minister understands the problem of the farming areas in western Canada.

• (2040)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The question is on the amendment of Mr. Axworthy. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Axworthy moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Axworthy moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I will just make a few points to put our position about the Bill clearly on the record. I think the amendments improve the Bill. We lament the fact that we were not given more time in committee to make more improvements to the Bill. As the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) said, we served notice that there were other things to be done to the Bill which could have been done.

The comment which needs to be made is that it is too bad the Government did not have a Minister in the House to deal with the Bill. I think that would have made a difference. I would like to defend the Senate before I say what I am going to say. I think there are some excellent Senators and they do some excellent committee work. However, I have heard the Senate defined on occasion as living proof of life after death. If you look at the way in which the Minister who was responsible for this Bill performed on this Bill, it may put a little credence in that definition of the Senate. I say that just to make the point that I think we could have dealt more effectively with this Bill had we had someone in the House who was prepared to deal with it in a little more urgent and animated way. We probably would have had some better amendments.

We are happy to see the change in the trigger mechanism so that there will be a pay-out this year. In saying that, I would urge the Government again to give the Bill Royal Assent and to get the arithmetic done so that we can have an interim payment which is as large as possible and as quickly as possible. That has been our concern since the start. We hope that the Government will take this as notice and get the payment out as quickly as possible.

We have some concerns about having it changed from a calendar year to a crop year basis. The jury is still out as to whether or not that will be an improvement. It is certainly a welcome improvement to allow spouses to be eligible to participate on a multiple basis. That is a worth-while improvement to the Bill and something which could have been done sooner. It is certainly welcome now.

With regard to the withdrawal procedure, I think it remains to be seen whether we need to go on a 10-year basis. I am not convinced that that could not be shortened. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) talked about producers wanting to have the option to withdraw. I think that is a valid concern. Ten years seems excessively long to a lot of producers. I wonder how that is going to work. We basically support the amendments. The Government has caught us between a rock and a hard place by bringing it in at this late date in the session. We certainly have to give approval to the Bill but I would like to reiterate the fact that the improvements could have been substantially better in many ways and the legislation is still flawed. It is going to require improvements in the future. With that I will close by saying that we hope the Bill is given Royal Assent as quickly as possible and that the cash which is urgently needed will be in the producers' hands as quickly as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

* * * * *

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with reference to an incident which transpired earlier this evening. The Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) stood in his place and indicated to the House that there had been consultations and consent given with respect to reverting to Motions in order that a report from the finance committee could in fact be tabled. I have spoken directly to the Member for Willowdale about this matter indicating my displeasure with the step that was taken by him in indicating that he had consulted. He had in fact not consulted.

We try to operate this place on the basis of a person's word being taken for granted. I was out of the Chamber very briefly. I am sorry this has happened. I do not like to see this kind of a matter dealt with in this way. If there are going to be consultations I am pleased to have discussions. I am sure the matter could have been resolved. However, for the Member for Willowdale to come into the House and indicate that he had consulted with me is simply not the fact. I want to put that on the record. If that happens again we are going to find ourselves in a position where we simply will not agree to anything except in the normal course of events. I think that would be a very unfortunate way to have to operate the House of Commons. We operate on the basis of consultation with the House Leaders. I would not presume, nor would any member of my caucus, to say that there had been consultations with the Government House Leader if there had not been. I would do him the courtesy of making sure that there was a clear understanding with respect to the matter. It is a fait accompli. I simply bring this to your attention because I am concerned about the activities that have taken place. I have said that I have spoken directly to the Member for Willowdale and indicated to him my intense displeasure with what has transpired today.

● (2050)

[Translation]

Mr. Dubois: Mr. Speaker, concerning what my colleague opposite just said, I was in the House when the Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) rose on a point of order. He did not mention consultation. He asked for unanimous consent, and I want to set the record straight. He only asked for unanimous consent to table the report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, in connection with Bill C-36. That is what he said in the House. In any case, my hon. friend will be able to check the record in Hansard tomorrow. He never mentioned consultation, he just asked for unanimous consent and that is when the Hon. Member's colleague behind him, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), rose and asked to see what it was. As far as I know, there never was any consultation. He just asked for, and obtained, the unanimous consent of the House to table this report.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): On this point, whether or not there were consultations of course is not within the purview of the Chair. The Chair heard an Hon. Member asking for consent and the Chair asked whether there was consent in the House. It eventually became clear that consent was available. However, with regard to consultations, there is not much that I can do.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I think the observations with respect to this are very pertinent to the activity and the work we must do over the next two days. There was no question in my mind whatsoever that, implicit in the words of the Hon. Member, there would be agreement if you were to seek unanimous consent. I certainly would not have given unanimous consent until I was certain that there had been consultations, either with my House Leader or the finance spokesman for our Party. Indeed, I would not have risen had I not taken that inference. Of course I am imputing motives. There is no question about that. It is an unparliamentary thing for me to do and I very rarely do it. If I am, I will apologize. On the other hand, with any further occurrence of that kind, unless I am absolutely satisfied that in the absence of my House Leader there has been consultation on concurrence, unfortunately there will not be consent given; not until such time as there is some assurance on all sides of the House.

The inference from the distinguished House Leader of the NDP, implicit in his question about why I was objecting, gave even further rise to my concern. There was no consultation and it was implicit in the seeking of consent.

In any event, I suspect that in the parliamentary process, with the courtesy that we follow, there is no attempt to seek unanimous consent without prior consultation in some usual or informal sense. You are nodding your head in the negative, Mr. Speaker. In the 19 or 20 years that I have been here there has always been the courtesy of consultation, conversation or discussion and then a process, unless in the usual way, the Government House Leader is attempting to further the Government's own ends. That was not the case this evening.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise very briefly. I understand that perhaps my hon. colleague has not witnessed in the past the seeking of unanimous consent without previous consultations having been held. I believe him. I have no reason to doubt his word that that never happened while he was physically sitting in the House. But he must have been away for many long periods of time. I have only been here ten years and during those ten years I very often have witnessed Members seeking unanimous consent without previous consultation.

Mr. Forrestall: Not so at all.

Mr. Pinard: Probably my hon. colleague was campaigning for his nomination convention in Halifax, but that is understandable. However, that is the case.

What is clear now is that a colleague of mine was in the House when this happened. I see that the Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) is here and he will have an opportunity to clarify it. But we were told that he never indicated that previous consultations had been held. He was just merely seeking unanimous consent. I believe the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois) has just indicated that. I was not in the House, but if the Opposition suspects that we wanted to play a trick on them, I can assure them that we will not deal with this Bill before the end of June without their consent. So they should be very at ease. We are very sincere and acting in good faith. What was done was done in the normal practice.

Mr. Forrestall: That is not normal practice.

Mr. Pinard: If my hon. colleague felt tricked, betrayed or that in his opinion the usual practice was not followed, he should rest at ease. We will not deal with the Bill before the end of June unless we have the unanimous consent of the House. I can give him that assurance.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I think the Opposition is making a mountain of a mole hill. I was called to the Chamber, on a couple of minutes' notice in my capacity as chairman of the Finance Committee to table the Sixth Report of the Finance Committee. It is a matter which had been discussed by all Parties this afternoon.

I came down in my capacity as chairman of the Finance Committee to do this and I sought the unanimous consent of the House. I explained the matter to the House. The Hon. Member opposite was shown the report, as was the House leader of the NDP, which we sought to table. I sought the unanimous consent of the House to revert to Tabling Reports from Standing and Special Committees.

What happened, unfortunately, is that the House Leader for the Opposition approached me outside the Chamber. I said yes, I understood that there was consent to table this particular report at that particular time. I never assured the Hon. House Leader for the Opposition that we had consent, I said that I understood that we had consent. For him to stand in the House and try to make it appear that I have deliberately tried to mislead the House bothers me a great deal.

Mr. Forrestall: There weren't very many here but you sure as hell misled me.

Mr. Peterson: I did not under any circumstances indicate, other than to the House Leader outside the Chamber, that I had understood that consent had been obtained to do this tabling at that particular time. There was no attempt to mislead Hon. Members opposite. I do not see how there can be any complaint in terms of what our House Leader has said, that nothing will be done with respect to this Report without the unanimous consent of the Chamber. I do not know how our House Leader could be more fair. I do not know how the House Leader of the Opposition could have been more misleading in terms of what I had said to him.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that if I have ever heard an admission of guilt from any member, it came out of the mouth of the Member of Willowdale (Mr. Peterson). I simply do not think we can take his word with respect to matters in the future.

Mr. Pinard: Hansard will speak for itself tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. I believe that some members will have to resolve these difficulties between themselves with regard to consultations. Unanimous consent has been sought and obtained in a legal fashion.

It being nine o'clock this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 9 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN INSTITUTE FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a third time?

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Speaker: By consent, now.

Mr. MacEachen moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the final step in the creation of the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. This legislation is an expression of the hopes and dreams of all Members and all Canadians who want nothing less than a peaceful and secure world. The creation of the Institute, first proposed in the Throne Speech last December, is important to all Canadians because it is Canada's way of injecting fresh ideas and developing new and better solutions for a world troubled by conflict and uncertainty.

I think it is quite appropriate that Canada should be taking this initiative. Throughout our history we have consistently striven to realize a better and more peaceful planet, especially since the last World War, the beginning of the end of which we recently marked in the fortieth anniversary commemorating Normandy. Successive Canadian Governments, with the active backing of all Parties, have sought to save succeeding generations from the scourges of war which, twice in this century, has brought untold suffering to mankind.

Canada's adherence to the United Nations Charter, and its active membership in multilateral organizations like the Commonwealth and the Francophonie have had one basic goal in mind—to build a better, more secure and peaceful world. As peacekeepers, as participants in the North-South dialogue, as members of the western alliance, and as a bridge between East and West, Canadians have certainly attained and deserved a reputation on the world stage. I believe that we are continuing that tradition with the action which I hope will be taken today by Parliament in the House of Commons.

The Institute for International Peace and Security is the legacy of Canada's latest peace initiative, an initiative which all parliamentarians have supported and earnestly encouraged. In recent months we in Canada have made a special effort through the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his associates to make a contribution to the search for peace, and particularly to bring about an improved atmosphere in a deteriorated East-West relationship. As I said, that effort has been encouraged by Canadians. It has been supported by all Members of the House, and I believe the effort that Canada has made, led by the Prime Minister, has been outstanding, has drawn attention to very important issues, and has had an effect in lessening the tensions which still exist in a serious way between the East and the West.

Our proposals for the resolution of international conflict have been based on sound and considered principles, because that is the way of Canada. These principles are borne out in the clause defining the purpose of the Institute. That purpose is to look outward, to promote scholarship, to encourage public discussion, and to collect and spread information and ideas on international peace and security.

The public interest in this Bill has been great, and its influence profound. By letter, by appearance before the committee, and in discussion with Members, Canadians have spoken out about what they wanted in this Institute.

There have been few other pieces of legislation about which consultation between the Government and the opposition Parties has been so close and so co-operative. Throughout these past weeks the Prime Minister has had correspondence with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and with the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), and I myself met frequently with representatives of the opposition Parties, and particularly with the Deputy Leader of the Official Opposition and the foreign affairs critic for the New Democratic Party. I have also had discussions with the Leader of the New Democratic Party. At times, we have been stalled in our efforts, and the road which we have followed has taken us around some rough corners. I believe that I can say that, throughout this endeavour, we have shared one single goal and that is to create a world-class institute of which Canadians can be proud.

I must say that while the Leaders or representatives of the Parties were conducting their discussions, the members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence were giving the Bill their very careful consideration. Meeting morning, noon and night, over a period of weeks, this committee heard from members of the dozens of groups from across the country to whom this Institute means so much. The work of the committee cannot be under-emphasized. Despite difficulties they persevered. Positive progress was made, and a better Bill was born. I pay tribute to the industry of all the members of the standing committee. I pay particular tribute to the chairman of the standing committee who provided the required leadership. I believe that those who are inclined to deprecate the value of our committee system can point to the labours of this particular committee as an example which should moderate their views.

• (1115)

Through all-Party consultations we have agreed to a board of directors, and a method by which that board will select its chairman and executive director. However, that cannot be done until the Bill has received proclamation. I believe it would be appropriate to identify the persons who will be approached by the Minister to serve as representatives on the board. The list of directors which we are proposing and who, it is hoped, will serve as directors when asked, is as follows:

Norman Alcock, President, World Federalist of Canada;
William Barton, former Canadian Ambassador to the United Nations;
George Bell, Director, Canadian Institute for Strategic Studies, former General, Canadian Armed Forces;
Christoph Bertram, Editor of Die Zeit, former Director of the International Institute for Strategic Studies, London;
Harriet Critchley, Director, the Arctic Institute of North America, University of Calgary;
Paul Desmarais, Chairman of Power Corporation;
Gwynne Dyer, International affairs journalist and military historian;
William Epstein, former Director of the UN Disarmament Division;
Margaret Fulton, President of Mount St. Vincent University, Halifax;
Albert Legault, Professor of Political Science, Laval University;
Joanna Miller, Project Ploughshares, Saskatchewan, former President UNICEF Canada;
Denis McDermott, President, Canadian Labour Congress;
John Sigler, Professor of Political Science, Carleton University;
Ian Smart, former Director of Studies, Royal Institute of International Affairs, London;
Paul Warnke, former Director, U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency;
Lois Wilson, former Moderator of the United Church of Canada;
Gerald Wright, Vice-President, Canadian Donner Foundation.

I believe that is a very impressive list of proposed directors. The list represents a balance. The list has been agreed to by all Parties, but it also contains names which were suggested by organizations which were asked to make suggestions. I should add that we have agreed that the first chairman and the first executive director will be chosen by the members of the board, as indicated in the legislation. That would give the board an opportunity to choose the chairman and the executive director from among their own membership.

• (1120)

I should add that it is my intention, and the intention of others who participated in the discussions, that the 14 Canadian board members will be chosen first. That initial group of 14 Canadians will meet to choose the chairman and executive director, as provided for in the Bill. Of course, when the executive director and the chairman have been chosen, the three non-Canadians on the list will then be approached to serve. Of course it is understood that if any on the list refuses to serve, the consultation process provided for in the Bill will come into operation.

I want to add a further point, to ensure that we are quite serious about carrying out these undertakings or understandings, that I have consulted with the new Leader of the Liberal Party who will be sworn in as Prime Minister on Saturday of this week, and he has assured me that he will carry out the undertakings, or the understandings, which I have just listed. That should be of greater interest to Hon. Members of the House.

I would like to make a few additional comments, Mr. Speaker, about the Institute. We have, by legislation, established a role for the parliamentary committee to which the annual report will be referred. In so doing we have really broken new ground. By virtue of Section 32 the committee will also have the ability, in accordance with the rules of the House, to request the Institute to undertake research for, or provide advice to, the committee.

There was a provision in the Bill which made it possible for the Minister to ask for advice and to ask the Institute to conduct research. I personally placed a good deal of store on that provision because I wanted the Institute to be independent, but I also wanted it to be able to give advice, when required, to a Minister or the Government on very important questions. In that way it could be tied in more closely to the current preoccupations of any Government. The Minister is not running the Institute but he is permitted to ask for advice and policy guidance.

That same opportunity is provided to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. There is, I believe, a simple way by which that can be done, and the Deputy Leader of the Official Opposition was quite active in discussing with me the particular amendment which might carry that out. That is an important point in the Bill.

By including in the Act as well a schedule of organizations, we have firmly entrenched the role of Canadian groups and established their role in the selection of future boards of directors. The schedule contains a quite lengthy list of organizations, I understand 89 in number. Not all organizations have been included, but there is a provision that additions or deletions can be made in the future. It may be that with experience and reflection it will be found that some organizations can be removed from that schedule. Perhaps some will go out of existence and ought to be removed. Others may appear with a greater relevance to the work of the Institute. That flexibility is provided.

• (1125)

There was a great deal of concern that the Institute be non-partisan and independent. It certainly was never my view that it should be anything but non-partisan, and independent, and objective. It has been given that role. Indeed, we have it guaranteed in law that the Leaders of all recognized Parties in the House of Commons will continue to have a voice in deciding the board's membership. By legislating an annual endowment we have given the Institute a means by which it can preserve independence of a certain quality.

Those were the main points I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker. We have come a long way to this conclusion and I hope it will be possible for us to give third reading to this Bill very quickly. I pledged in my speech on February 17 that the Institute would complement and not compete with existing groups, organizations, and institutions devoted to peace and security. Let me reaffirm that promise. No group will suffer adverse consequences in terms of support, financial or otherwise, from this or successive Governments, I hope. Rather, we foresee the Institute stimulating the level of interest in peace and security for the benefit of all.

We have before us a sound piece of legislation. It exemplifies the best of the parliamentary process. It reflects the goals and aspirations of all Canadians. It was achieved not through excessive partisan wrangling and bitter conflict, but through discussion, compromise and, in the end, the consensus of all Parties. I am sure we will give it speedy passage so that the other place can deal with it and let it be one of the achievements for which this Parliament can be remembered. It is a tribute to all Members, and one of which we can be proud.

We are coming to the end of the parliamentary session and some of us will not be back to this Chamber as Members, certainly not myself, because I announced yesterday that I will not be reoffering myself in the election, whenever it comes, so this is probably my last speech in the House of Commons.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You never know.

Mr. MacEachen: I have made a lot of them in the years I have served in the House of Commons since being first elected in 1953. When I came here I was so far away on the back bench that, if I were any further, I would be sitting in the lobby or in the corridor. But I survived those years, and I can only say that in making my last speech I am terribly grateful to my electors who have sent me to Parliament for these 30 years. I owe them a great deal of thanks.

Parliament and politics have been my life, and I am certainly grateful for the years I have spent here, and thankful for the opportunity to be part of this magnificent assembly which is the very heart, in my view, of Canadian life. I have seen much good work in the House of Commons by Members of Parliament, and many significant accomplishments. Among these significant accomplishments I certainly number the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security.

• (1130)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, before those of us on this side of the House speak to the Bill, for purposes of clarification would the Minister answer a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It is in order for the Minister to answer a question if he sees fit.

Ms. Jewett: When the first 14 members of the board, the Canadian members, are choosing a chairman and executive director, and particularly in the case of the latter, would it be possible for them to establish a search or selection committee and possibly, through that process, choose an executive director for the Institute who is not at the moment a member of the board? Would it be possible for that to be done, or must they choose the executive director from among the 14 nominated Canadian members of the board?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as provided for in the Bill, it is the obligation of the board of directors to select a chairman and director from among their own membership. No one could become a chairman or director unless that person were a member of the board. I think it will be possible for the board to select a member from among themselves. If that is not possible, they will have to use their ingenuity to solve that problem. I could give them some advice if they want to call Lake Ainslie when they reach that impasse.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, as I was sitting here listening to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), I reflected that I was hearing him for the last time in this House as a Member of the House. I had the opportunity this morning of telling him personally that I was rather sad to see this doughty fighter leaving the House of Commons. We have fought many battles here and the relationship which I have enjoyed with the Deputy Prime Minister has always been one of collegiality and cordiality despite the intenseness of some of those battles.

The Deputy Prime Minister mentioned that when he first came into the House in 1953 he was so far back in the back-benches that if he were any further back he might be somewhere in the galleries. The Deputy Prime Minister will remember, of course, that that is exactly what happened to him in 1958. He sat for four years in the Members' Gallery where I first became accustomed to seeing him. However, he was back again in 1962. I am sure I am joined by my colleagues on all sides of the House in wishing the Deputy Prime Minister well in whatever the future has in store for him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I would also like to make the assumption that, in speaking on behalf of the Government on third reading of this Bill, the Deputy Prime Minister will be the only speaker for the Government today. On that assumption I can assure him that I will be the only speaker for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition on this Bill today. I would expect the same arrangement would prevail with the New Democratic Party.

I too want to compliment the members of the Standing Committee, particularly the Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), who worked so assiduously to achieve the amendments of which the Deputy Prime Minister spoke and which have vastly improved the Bill.

Immediately prior to the Bill's receiving second reading in the House last May 11, I put before Members what I believed was the agreement between the Government and my Party with respect to Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. As Members know, and as spokesmen for our Party have made clear in debate and before committee, we welcome the establishment of this Institute. Indeed, our Leader indicated to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last April 9, after receiving the draft Bill from the Prime Minister, that the requirement in Canada for institutional restructuring and innovation in this field is beyond question. However, as was made clear to the Government both before and after Bill C-32 was introduced into the House, we viewed the Bill as proposed to be fatally flawed in respect of the lack of independence of the centre, its lack of accountability to Parliament, and the politically negative effect that private funding of the centre might have on existing indigenous centres of research.

I need not refer today to the lengthy and very productive exchanges between the Prime Minister and my Leader which led the Government to support substantial amendments to this Bill prior to its receiving second reading support last May 11. These amendments would strengthen the independence and integrity of the Institute and provide for an appointment process which would leave no room for doubt that the board of directors would be non-partisan and would enjoy the confidence and support of all Parties. At that time I was able to report to the House, as reported at page 3656 of Hansard, the three main points of agreement between the Government and Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Hansard reads:

> First, the Government has accepted the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that consultations on the composition of the board of directors start immediately, especially with respect to the appointment of the chairman and the executive director, as they will be key appointments for establishing the tone and quality of the institute. Second, the Government has agreed to immediate consultation with national organizations and interested Canadians with respect to receiving nominations for the board of directors. It is our expectation, as I know it to be the Prime Minister's, that there will be full agreement on the composition of the board of directors prior to the end of committee consideration of the Bill. Third, concurrent with this consultation, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence will be examining the Bill and recommending a formal list of national organizations which, once the Bill is passed, will become the pool from which nominees for the board of directors will be selected.

● (1140)

I believe this process has been respected and that consultations have been meaningful, that Canadians have participated fully in the selection of candidates for the board of directors and that the process itself has underscored the independence and integrity of the Institute.

In committee the Government presented the full and detailed amendments to which I reported agreement last May 11 and which we now have before us today.

With respect to the selection of the board of directors, the Deputy Prime Minister and I began consultations on May 25 with a view to reaching agreement on the board of directors prior to the end of committee consideration of the Bill. At that time, on behalf of my Leader, I recommended to the Deputy Prime Minister the following criteria in considering candidates for the chairmanship and executive directorship of the Institute, criteria which would enhance, I believe, the integrity and independence of the board: first, it is imperative that we consider the chairmanship and executive directorship together as a team; second, we would recommend that no present bureaucrats be considered for either position; third, it is important that the executive director in particular have academic credibility; four, these appointments should reflect concern for and competence in both disarmament and security matters; five, we would like to consider a woman for at least one of these positions.

I was most pleased when the Deputy Prime Minister put into play candidates who clearly met these criteria, and on behalf of my Leader I indicated that our Party would have no objection to these nominees.

With respect to the board of directors, at a meeting with the Deputy Prime Minister on June 1, I suggested the following criteria for selection of candidates, again with a view to enhancing the independence and integrity of the Institute: first, they should be broadly representative of the existing indigenous research community. Second, they should be nominated from the pool of recommendations the committee is receiving. Third, as the Minister for External Relations (Mr. Pepin) stated in the House, the board should not include any serving bureaucrats. Fourth, the board should include at least five women. Fifth, while the Act provides for up to seven foreign directors, we would recommend that initially there be no more than three. Six, that there be a geographical and language balance.

Current with our discussions, the Standing Committee and the Secretary of State for External Affairs initiated a detailed consultative process with national organizations and interest groups to elicit their nomination for the Board. Out of this list, and respecting the criteria outlined above, the Deputy Prime Minister wrote to me on June 12 and proposed the list which he has presented to the House today. It will not be necessary for me to go over that list in my remarks.

After reviewing this list with my Leader, I reported to the Deputy Prime Minister that my Party had no objection to the nominees as put forward by the Government. It is our expectation that the Government will continue to act in good faith and adhere to these nominees. Should any nominee withdraw his or her nomination, we would expect the Government to re-establish the consultation process with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) until such time as the first board of directors is in place. And it is on this basis that my Party gives its approval to this Bill.

I next received a call from the Deputy Prime Minister on June 21 indicating that consensus could not be reached at this time respecting the Government's nominee for executive director, and the Deputy Prime Minister suggested an alternate course which, if acceptable, would preserve the integrity of the board without putting into jeopardy the substantial agreement between the Government and Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Specifically, he suggested that the Government nominate the board of directors as I have outlined and leave to the board itself the election of a chairman and executive director out of the existing membership. To ensure that such voting was done only by the Canadian-based nominees, any foreign-based nominations would not be made until after the selection of the chairman and executive director had been completed.

I am grateful to the Deputy Prime Minister today for his putting on the record the commitment of the future Prime Minister to honour the undertakings as presented to the House today. While this was a change from our earlier understanding, I indicated to the Deputy Prime Minister that we would have no objection to this procedure.

The committee has now reported on the Bill and the amendments reflect the points of agreement I have described to the House.

The establishment of a Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security is a substantial achievement. It is fitting that it should have been the subject of the Deputy Prime Minister's speech today, it being in all likelihood the last one he will be making to the House.

I am happy to acknowledge that the Bill before us today represents a substantial improvement to the original draft Bill. This is a tribute to the Government and to the Leader of the Opposition. I commend them for their genuine contribution to achieving a process which has enhanced the integrity and independence of the Institute.

Now, as the Institute is formed and in its early days, we must all continue to be vigilant so that the gains which have been made over the past number of months might continue to characterize the Institute. We have the genesis of a world-class Institute with integrity and with public support.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I almost had a catch in my throat when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), in his speech today, said that it would probably be his last speech since he will not be running again for a seat in the House of Commons. We may see him at the U.N. or perhaps in the Senate, but we are bound to see him again. Many of us are sorry that we will not see him here.

I am pleased that in what is probably his last speech he was able to speak on this extremely important Bill to create a Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security.

I would also like to say that we in this Party have been very appreciative of the efforts made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as well as the Secretary of State for External Affairs to create this Institute. I think it is largely owing to the zeal of the Prime Minister that such an Institute should be created that we now have the Bill before us. I suggest that the award of the Albert Einstein peace prize to the Prime Minister the other day is a tribute to the efforts he has made in his pilgrimage of peace. More importantly, I feel that he is leaving a lasting contribution as a result of the Bill we are discussing today.

The Minister has had to do much of the work in consultations with the House Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, with my Leader and myself to bring the Bill to its present excellent form. May I say, Mr. Speaker, he has also been assisted enormously by the Chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. That Hon. Member showed great patience and understanding throughout the very long and somewhat strained deliberations in committee. The fact that the Bill should now be in the House for third reading is due in no small measure to the excellent conduct of the committee by its Chairman. I know he is not leaving politics, but if he were this too would be a very fitting tribute to him to have accomplished so much.

● (1150)

I think we should once again recall the title of the Bill and the name of the new Institute, the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. Some of us in this Party would have liked to put in the word "research" and called it the Canadian Research Institute for International Peace and Security, but that was not approved by a majority in the committee. As one reads the purpose of the Bill as newly defined, one sees that a good deal of its purpose will embody the fostering of research.

It is the other part of the title of the Institute that I want to say a word or two about. It is an Institute for International Peace and Security. The word "international" prefaces both peace and security. We are talking about international peace and international security. It brings to mind the efforts that were made by people like Olof Palme and the members of the Palme Commission a few years ago when they were studying disarmament issues and who coined the phrase "a common security". When they talk about security, they are not talking about it in terms of each nation building up its defences, each nation vying with others to be as militarily strong or, if possible, superior to others. Not at all. They are talking about, and I think it is implicit in the new Canadian Institute title, a common security, the wish of all of us to reach a position where there is international security which is a common security. It is therefore extremely important for me, at any rate, and for members of this Party that the Institute should be dedicated both to international peace and international security.

We feel that the purpose clause as studied and drafted and redrafted has come through very strongly indeed, taking many of the ideas brought to us by witnesses before the committee and from many of the submissions made to the committee. Perhaps since other speakers have not mentioned it, let me put on the record the purpose clause, which is Clause 4 of the Bill. It reads:

International Peace and Security

4. The purpose of the Institute is to increase knowledge and understanding of the issues relating to international peace and security from a Canadian perspective, with particular emphasis on arms control, disarmament, defence and conflict resolution, and to

(a) foster, fund and conduct research on matters relating to international peace and security;

(b) promote scholarship in matters relating to international peace and security;

(c) study and propose ideas and policies for the enhancement of international peace and security;

(d) collect and disseminate information on, and encourage public discussion of, issues of international peace and security.

Other important amendments were made to the Bill, some proposed by the Government and some proposed by the Opposition Parties. I would mention particularly the enhancement of the role of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and the strengthening of broad and general parliamentary oversight. Some amendments we would have liked to see did not get through. We would have liked at least half of the board of directors to be women and we are sorry that in this first list only four are women. The reason I mention that particularly, Mr. Speaker, is that from the Voice of Women onwards Canadian women have played such an incredibly important and strong role in the peace and disarmament movement in this country. I would only hope subsequent appointments will show a greater recognition of their enormous efforts of these many decades.

One puzzle that remains, and the Minister in reply to my question did not entirely resolve it, is if the board of directors, after it chooses its chairman from among its number—and it seems quite appropriate that it choose its chairman from among its number—should decide that it would like to look outside its membership for an executive director, it is not entirely clear yet to me that it can do so. At the meeting of the standing committee, the Minister implied that it could do so, and in answer to my question today he still left the door slightly ajar for that to be possible. But I would have liked that point to have been made more explicit.

It seems to me the position of executive director is absolutely crucial to the success of the Institute. A search should be made to ensure that the very strongest and best Canadian be chosen for this position. The best way would be for the 14 Canadian members of the board to establish a search committee, a very common practice in the academic world, to receive and accept applications for executive director. Then this committee would conduct a series of hearings with such nominees in order to ensure that the very best executive director is chosen. If a person outside the board were so chosen, then by the Governor in Council that person would be made a member of the board. This would then raise the board membership to 15, leaving two spaces for non-Canadians. When the Minister is talking with members of the board, the first 14, I hope he will make it clear that that oportunity is open to them. We have had many discussions, the Minister and I, about the very important role of the executive director and about the kind of person who might well be chosen for that position. I know that many members of the disarmament community have also given this matter a great deal of thought and have provided a great deal of input as to the kind of executive director they think would be best for a Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security.

I hope it is clearly understood that the 14 Canadian directors could indeed establish such a search committee, go outside their number, find a person they consider best for the position of executive director, and have that executive director then made a member of the board.

I am worried that the amended Clause 7 does not provide for this. It indicates that the first executive director shall be elected by the board from among its members, yet the Minister indicated in committee that the first executive director could be chosen in the way which I have just outlined and then be made a member of the board. I am assuming that this is possible.

We in this Party are very glad that the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security is to become a reality before the end of this session of Parliament. We have been glad to assist in a variety of ways, which I hope have been helpful to the Minister and to the chairman of the committee, to ensure that the Institute would be a world-class Institute and that it would at least have sufficient funds to get started. We are very supportive of all the efforts which I know the board will make to ensure that the Institute is the world-class Institute we all want it to be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN INSTITUTE FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for giving me the opportunity to say a few words on this most important Bill. When I spoke to it on April 18 at second reading, I said the following:

> Mr. Speaker, as the culmination of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) peace initiative we have before us Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. The principles involved in this legislation are sound. Let us cease this ongoing nitpicking and send this legislation to committee where we can adjust the language and change "shalls" to "mays" if advisable. Let us get on with this legislation. With regard to the principles behind this legislation, we need only ask whether it is needed, what its dimensions are to be, and where the institute shall be located.

The Bill has been considered extensively in committee. Many people appeared before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to express their views. Some amendments to the Bill have been made. I am pleased that the Bill will be passed before we adjourn tomorrow.

I want to say again that I support the Bill, but let no one think that the proposed Institute will solve the conflicts of the world or, for that matter, reduce in the short term present tensions between the two superpowers of the world. However, it is a breath of fresh air in the world process of dialogue and study toward world peace. In particular, it may be some help in building the bridge of reason, discussion and accord between our two mighty neighbours to the south and to the north of us. Again I say let us locate this Institute in western Canada as a beginning of that bridge between our two neighbours.

In closing, I wish the retiring Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) well in his future endeavours. I suggest to him that he should wear his kilt more often; it is becoming.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I know the understanding is that there should not be more speeches than those of the three Parties in the House and the one of the independent Member. However, I am sure everyone would allow me to say a few words.

I thank very warmly all Hon. Members of the three Parties, as well as the independent Member, for their immense co-operation during the work of the past month. We toiled and smiled together. I thank Hon. Members of the Official Opposition, Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party, Hon. Members of the Government Party and the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko).

[Translation]

Without wishing to prolong debate unduly, I want to express my sincere appreciation for the unremitting efforts of Hon. Members sitting on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, which I have the privilege of chairing. Thanks to their efforts, as was so eloquently said by a Member of this House who spoke earlier, we were finally able to return to the House, on time, a Bill sent to our Committee by Parliament for consideration and amended after the Committee heard several witnesses.

I also want to join the other Members in offering the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister of Canada and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) our best wishes, since he has announced that he will no longer be sitting in the House. Parliament will no longer be the same, and we shall miss him. I wish him the very best, and in doing so, I know I speak for all members of the Committee, who are sorry to see him go.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for letting me join in this concert of eulogies. We on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence are very pleased that the Bill can now be adopted thanks to this admirable understanding between the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and the critic for the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Pauline Jewett).

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Canada-Nova Scotia Oil Agreement

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA OIL AND GAS AGREEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-43, an Act respecting the Canada-Nova Scotia Oil Agreement on Offshore Oil and Gas Resource Management and Revenue Sharing and to make related and consequential amendments, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You mentioned that Mr. MacEachen is moving the motion in the absence of Mr. Chrétien. Given the fact that we intend to move to Committee of the Whole, can we have some clarification as to who will be here to witness on behalf of the Government throughout that phase of our proceedings? Does this transfer the responsibility for that phase to Mr. MacEachen or will Mr. Chrétien be here to answer for this agreement?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, as often happens in these circumstances, this is a very good occasion for Parliamentary Secretaries to carry out their duties as Parliamentary Secretaries and assist the Minister in the House of Commons. The Parliamentary Secretary, with the help of the officials, will be very pleased to answer the few questions which any Hon. Member may have on the subject.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce second reading of Bill C-43, a Bill to establish in law the Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Oil and Gas Agreement. As Members will recall, the Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Oil Agreement was signed on March 2, 1982. Legislation to ensure the full implementation of the agreement was introduced in this House and in the Nova Scotia Legislature on May 31, 1984.

Bill C-43 establishes in law the major elements of the agreement, a co-operative regime to manage offshore petroleum activity and a revenue-sharing regime that ensures the province reaps the lion's share of benefits in this activity.

This legislation, and the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement which led to it, are excellent examples of federal-provincial co-operation. Both were achieved in a climate of close and positive negotiation. Major benefits have already accrued to the province. Since March, 1982 33 exploration agreements worth more than $2.4 billion have been negotiated. In 1983 approximately $150 million was directly invested in Nova Scotia by the offshore petroleum industry. About 2,000 jobs have been created in Nova Scotia by offshore petroleum activity, and another several hundred resulting from the multiplier effect such job creation produces.

Two hundred companies in Nova Scotia are now involved in the offshore effort. Many of these are local firms that specialize in marine and logistical services as well as fabrication. Others have moved to Nova Scotia to establish businesses and employ Nova Scotians. These are real achievements made in just two years. The legislation before us will implement the Agreement that contributed to them and ensure that these benefits continue to accrue to Nova Scotia for many years to come.

The concept underlying the implementation of the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement is unique in the history of federal-provincial relations. Both governments have agreed to put aside their respective claims to jurisdiction over the offshore and to introduce complementary legislation to implement a common, unified system for revenues and the joint management of petroleum activity.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA OIL AND GAS AGREEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Chrétien) that Bill C-43, an Act respecting the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement on Offshore Oil and Gas Resource Management and Revenue Sharing and to make related and consequential amendments, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the legislation before us today, Bill C-43, will make the interim Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Oil and Gas Board a permanent institution with legal authority to manage petroleum activity in the offshore Nova Scotia area. Both Ministers will delegate substantial authority to the Board. Where authority is retained at the ministerial level, complementary delegation by the two federal and provincial Ministers to one another as appropriate will ensure a unified regime.

The operation of the interim Board over the past two years has been completely satisfactory to both Canada and Nova Scotia. Not once in those two years has there been a need to use the mechanisms dealing with conflict resolution. Agreement has always been achieved through positive discussion. The makeup of the interim Board will remain unchanged as it gains the status of a permanent body. The reason for this is quite simple. Why change a good thing when it is working? The Administrator of the Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration will continue to be the Board's chairperson and the federal Government will continue to have two additional representatives on the Board, as will the provincial Government.

Under the authority set by this Bill, the Board will be responsible for managing oil and gas activity everywhere off the coast of Nova Scotia. However, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be empowered to accept or modify a decision of the Board. The Minister will also be able to make a decision in the absence of one made by the Board providing he or she has asked for one from the Board. The federal Minister will delegate to the Nova Scotia Minister of Mines and Energy ultimate authority for management of the Bay of Fundy, Sable Island and its "footprint", the shallow area around the island. The federal Minister will retain ultimate authority in all other offshore areas where significant or commercial discoveries or projects overlap the Sable Island "footprint" and the rest of the offshore. Both Ministers will have the authority to execute decisions. The delegation will also provide that each Minister will be able to delay decisions relating to the other's areas of ultimate authority.

These management provisions are important for two reasons. First, they ensure that both federal and provincial interests are protected. Second, they provide the petroleum industry with the certainty it needs to proceed with development. We fully expect that the Board will continue to make decisions on the basis of a consensus, as it has done without exception, for more than two years.

One aspect of Bill C-43 that is particularly important is the formula to share revenues from the offshore. The legislation ensures that Nova Scotia will receive the lion's share of offshore petroleum revenues. In fact, in the early years of the agreement, the province will receive substantially more revenues than if it owned the resource on land. There will be wider sharing of revenues only if the province's relative fiscal capacity—that is, its capacity to raise revenues from taxation and from revenue-sharing agreements with the federal Government—exceeds that of almost all other provinces.

Until Nova Scotia's per capita fiscal capacity reaches 110 per cent of the national average—adjusted upward by two percentage points for every one percentage point that the province's unemployment rate exceeds the national average—the province will receive all offshore revenue, including a major federal tax, the petroleum and gas revenue tax, but excluding the federal share of the corporate income tax.

These revenues are substantial. They include the basic royalty; the progressive incremental royalty; bonus payments and licence fees; revenues that are equivalent to a provincial-type corporate tax and retail sales tax in the offshore region; and, the federal petroleum and gas revenue tax. All of these revenues collected from the Bay of Fundy and from Sable Island and its "footprint" will go to the provincial government, no matter how high its fiscal capacity.

The federal Government will begin to share in revenues from other areas of the offshore only when the province's per capita fiscal capacity exceeds the 110 per cent level, adjusted by the unemployment factor. In the meantime, a Nova Scotia Offshore Oil and Gas Revenue Fund will be established by the federal Government to collect the province's share of the revenues.

Some concern has been expressed about the impact this agreement will have on equalization payments to Nova Scotia. I want to assure Hon. Members that Bill C-43 contains special measures to ensure that Nova Scotia experiences real net increases in its revenues. In accordance with the principle upon which the equalization scheme is based, equalization payments to Nova Scotia will be reduced as the province's fiscal capacity increases because of offshore petroleum revenue. However, Bill C-43 contains a special provision to protect the provincial government from a situation in which it loses a dollar of equalization for every dollar of offshore petroleum revenue. Under Bill C-43, Nova Scotia will be reimbursed for much of the reduction in equalization payments. In fact, the province will be protected for up to ten years from the full effects of reductions as it gains offshore revenues.

A third aspect of this legislation which I would like to address is the provision to allow the Government of Nova Scotia to purchase up to 50 per cent of any Crown share in a natural gas field, and 25 per cent in an oil field. It is important to note that this special clause in no way changes the Crown share provisions of the Canada Oil and Gas Act. Rather, it deals with how the Crown share is divided between the federal and provincial governments.

Bill C-43 also provides for the establishment of a $200 million development fund to help Nova Scotia defray some of the costs of providing an infrastructure for offshore petroleum activity. Basically, this fund will assist Nova Scotia in putting in place the kinds of facilities and services necessary for the province to take maximum advantage of offshore petroleum opportunities. The fund will be made available in four annual instalments of $50 million. Nova Scotia will start to repay the $200 million only in the third year after substantial natural gas or oil production begins in the offshore.

I would like to take a few brief minutes to address some of the other special provisions which are contained in the legislation. For example, the Bill will require petroleum companies negotiating exploration agreements for offshore Nova Scotia to submit a plan which shows, to the satisfaction of the Canada-Nova Scotia Board, how the province's residents will benefit from the activity. Companies involved in exploration projects will be required to show how they propose to employ Nova Scotians in all aspects of their work. They will also be required to provide manufacturers, consultants, contractors and service companies based in Nova Scotia with a full and fair opportunity to compete in the supply of goods and services to an exploration program. Further, companies will be required to submit programs satisfactory to both governments for training, education and research, and technology.

Finally, before being sold elsewhere, oil and gas produced in offshore Nova Scotia will be made available in the province to satisfy consumer needs and to serve as a feedstock for existing industries. New industrial facilities will also be ensured of the availability of those feedstocks in excess of that needed to meet the demand of the existing industrial capacity in eastern Canada.

I am confident that the Members of this House will support this new legislation because it provides a co-operative and workable way of managing the offshore and a generous revenue-sharing system that ensures major, long-term benefits to the Province of Nova Scotia.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, we have reviewed Bill C-43, an Act respecting the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement on Offshore Oil and Gas Resource Management and Revenue Sharing, which was tabled in the House of Commons on Thursday, May 31, 1984. This Bill, with one major exception, basically gives effect to the provisions of the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement on Offshore Oil and Gas Resource Management and Revenue Sharing which was signed by both the federal Government and the Government of Nova Scotia two years ago on March 2, 1982.

The major exception in this Bill to the original Agreement is the provision that Nova Scotia's equalization payments will not drop by more than 10 per cent a year. This recognizes that the Atlantic provinces, which lag behind the rest of Canada in average family income and economic development, will require support from the rest of the country through equalization payments for some time to come.

The economic discrepancy between Atlantic Canada and other regions of the country is an important factor to keep in mind. It has placed provinces like Nova Scotia, which was one of the most economically active provinces at the time of Confederation—rich with shipbuilding, forestry and fishing—in the category of the "have not" provinces. The offshore oil and gas resources represent a unique opportunity to release Nova Scotia from that category and transform it into a "have" province.

• (1240)

This Agreement, with its acknowledged flaws, represents the best deal which Premier John Buchanan of Nova Scotia could wring from this Liberal Government. Premier Buchanan should be congratulated for getting any deal from this Government. Already the Government has had brought to its attention flaws in this Agreement as late as a few moments before we rose to discuss it in the House. Major flaws have been found in the wording of the Agreement. There are also aspects of the Agreement which we feel are not practical in terms of such items as the PGRT, which allows any province a vested stake in revenues from a federal tax, allowing that province to possibly hold the rest of the country hostage.

However, events may pass this Agreement by. The Conservative Party has been formulating a concrete set of new and innovative policies to promote economic development in Atlantic Canada. An important component of our program is the promotion of a positive and constructive climate of co-operation between the national Government and the provinces. A major feature of our policy for economic development is the proper management of the offshore oil and gas resources.

I was wondering, Mr. Speaker, if I could ask my colleagues to allow me to continue my speech?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): What is the problem to which the Hon. Member refers?

Miss Carney: The noise level, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Of course, the Hon. Member is allowed to have proper order in the House while she is speaking.

Miss Carney: I will continue.

The Hon. Brian Mulroney has written to all Atlantic Premiers to communicate to them our proposals for the development of the offshore, proposals which we feel are more equitable than those contained in this legislation. Our agreement in principle has already been accepted by Premier Brian Peckford in St. John's, Newfoundland, earlier this month. When we assume office, we have made commitments to introduce the necessary legislation to effect our Atlantic offshore accord for those provinces that wish to avail themselves of its more equitable terms. Therefore, viewed in that light, many features of this Agreement may become irrelevant in the future.

Why, Mr. Speaker, do we say that the Conservative Atlantic offshore accord is more equitable than the legislation before the House? Let us compare some of the features of both Parties' positions. Under the terms of the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement, the federal Government will fully manage and administer the offshore and would make all the final decisions, as has been explained. The federal Government would have an absolute majority on a management board which would be headed by an Ottawa bureaucrat—no matter how able, still a bureaucrat. In the case of disputes with the provincial governments, the federal Minister could overrule any decision made by the board. In addition, the revenue-sharing scheme provided for in this Bill follows a fairly rigid formula under which Nova Scotia would receive more revenue up front than in later years. However, at some point in time—and this was just glossed over by the Hon. Member—the federal Government would receive most, if not all, of the additional revenues. In effect, there is a cap on the province's share which restricts the amount of wealth which a province can earn from the resources off its shore.

In contrast, the Atlantic offshore accord, proposed by Mr. Mulroney, would recognize the right of the Atlantic provinces to be the principal beneficiary of the wealth of the oil and gas off their shores consistent with a strong and united Canada. An essential feature of the Atlantic offshore accord is the concept that all provinces should be treated the same for revenue-sharing purposes, whether their oil and gas resources are on land or offshore. Mr. Mulroney is proposing that the Atlantic provinces will have the right to establish and collect resource revenues as if these resources were on land, giving them equality with other producing provinces such as British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

A second major feature of the Atlantic offshore accord is the recognition by the Conservative Party that a region should be a full partner, not a partial partner, in its economic development. The Atlantic offshore accord allows for joint management of the offshore resource by both the federal level and provincial level of governments.

A third feature of the Atlantic offshore accord is that it charts a new course in the often stormy waters of co-operative federalism. It was negotiated over several months with the support of other Premiers and energy ministers of the western oil-producing provinces before it was accepted by Premier Peckford. In accepting the agreement in principle, Premier Peckford said: "We are showing Canadians the first rays of light in the new Canadian dawn". Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia had this to say about the Atlantic offshore accord in his communication to Mr. Mulroney—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair regrets to interrupt the Hon. Member but this is the fourth time she has referred to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) by his name. She may refer to him either by his riding or his official title as Leader of the Official Opposition.

Miss Carney: You are quite correct, Mr. Speaker.

Premier Buchanan in his communication said, and I quote:

> The Government of Nova Scotia, while not having sufficient time to totally assess the proposal, has read it with great interest and is most impressed with your attitude. The idea of an Atlantic Canada oil and gas policy is one which we would be interested in discussing in more detail.

In our discussions, Premier Buchanan has acknowledged the Atlantic offshore accord to be both unique and, in his words, equitable in its approach to both revenue sharing and to the administration and management of the resource. The Government of Nova Scotia has, of course, already passed its mirror legislation regarding this Bill before the House today, but under the terms of that Act the Government of Nova Scotia could exercise its right to accept any elements of a further agreement negotiated with the Government of Newfoundland or, presumably, any other offshore province.

For the record, let us establish the 15 points of the Atlantic offshore accord as it would apply to Nova Scotia. The first heading is "Management". Point one: we recognize the legitimate desire of Nova Scotia to ensure that the pace and manner of development maximizes the social and economic benefits to the province. We will be prepared to establish a system of management which recognizes Nova Scotia's right to share in the control of all aspects of resource development.

Point two: the principle of joint management will be achieved by the establishment of a joint agency consisting of three representatives of the federal Government, three representatives of the provincial Government, and a mutually acceptable independent chairman.

Point three: our agreement will give this agency clear and precise management criteria which will govern the exercise of each Government's authority in areas specified in the legislation.

Point four: federal jurisdiction with regard to environmental protection under the Fisheries Act, the Canada Shipping Act, and other areas of federal jurisdiction, would not be affected.

Point five: a further principle concerns the protection of Nova Scotia workers and, especially, Nova Scotia's traditional industry, the fishery. Such protection will be ensured by the application of the province's social legislation to the offshore.

Point six: if either the agency or Ministers fail to reach agreement, a suspensive veto provision will apply. In the national interest, the federal Government will have the ultimate decision in matters affecting the pace and mode of exploration and the pace of production until national self-sufficiency is reached or if self-sufficiency and security of supply has been lost. There will be an independent, objective determination of what constitutes self-sufficiency and security of supply. The province would have the ultimate decision in matters affecting the mode of development or the actual development plan, subject to a federal override which would only apply if the province's choice, as determined by an independent objective process, delayed unreasonably the attainment of self-sufficiency and security of supply.

The second heading of the Atlantic accord is entitled "Revenue Sharing". Point seven: we believe that the principle of revenue sharing between the federal and provincial levels should be the same for all oil and gas producing regions, without discrimination. Therefore, Nova Scotia will be entitled to establish and collect resource revenues as if these resources were on land. The federal Government will maintain the right to establish and collect federal taxes, where appropriate. Federal and provincial taxes of general application, such as the corporate income taxes and sales taxes, will apply.

Point eight: offshore oil will be included in the category of hydrocarbon resources which attract market-sensitive prices.

Point nine: a Progressive Conservative administration would agree to establish a joint offshore development fund in order to provide an accelerated revenue flow to help finance infrastructure required to bring the resource onstream.

Point ten: if, on assuming office, the new Government decides to vest in itself the Crown-carried shares of offshore Nova Scotia, then these rights and shares will be shared equitably by both Governments.

● (1250)

Point 11: local job creation and labour development would be of paramount concern. Oil-related infrastructure could be expanded and the offices of oil companies, including, where possible, Petro-Canada and federal departments, dealing with Nova Scotia offshore and the staff of the joint agency, would be located in the province.

Point 12: upgrading of infrastructure facilities in relation to the offshore would begin as soon as possible, following the signing of an agreement.

Point 13: it is important that there should be no dollar for dollar loss of equalization payments as a result of offshore revenues flowing to the province. The current equalization provisions will apply. Nova Scotia would receive offset payments from the federal Government equal to 90 per cent of a year's reduction in equalization payments. Beginning in the fifth year of production, this offset rate would be reduced by 10 per cent for each subsequent year.

Point 14: we believe that the question concerning ownership is secondary to control of the resources and the wealth they will produce. Should the Province of Nova Scotia or any other province wish to propose a constitutional amendment concerning an entrenchment of the offshore agreement, and if the necessary number of other provinces agree, as is provided for in the Canada Act, a Progressive Conservative Government will propose to Parliament the appropriate amendment.

Point 15: it is proposed that an agreement would be concluded immediately following the formation of a Progressive Conservative Government, with legislation being introduced within a reasonable period thereafter and, in any case, not more than one year. In announcing the agreement in principle in St. John's, the Conservative Leader said:

> We want the energy policy to be a unifying force in Canada—not an instrument of division so favoured by the Liberals.

He told his audience:

> This commitment today is an indication that new attitudes and new approaches to common problems can transform them swiftly into splendid opportunities for economic growth and prosperity.

In comparison, the legislation before the House today can be categorized as rigid, centralized and discriminatory. Rigid, because of the various formulas used for revenue sharing. Centralized, because management rests with the federal Government. Discriminatory, because the Atlantic Provinces are treated differently from the western oil and gas producing provinces. That is why we say our proposal is a better deal and that is why we will be introducing it before this House when we are in government. That is why Premier Brian Peckford, in accepting the agreement in principle for Newfoundland, said:

> Both sides approached the issue in good faith with a genuine desire to reach a mutually satisfactory agreement and the process was successful.

That is why Newfoundlanders gave the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) 14 standing ovations and why they cheered him from the balconies of the House of Assembly.

The accord we have reached, which has been offered to the other provinces, is respectful of Canadian constitutional law, protective of national energy priorities, and sensitive to the social and economic needs of the people of Atlantic Canada. As I said, it was conducted in full consultation with the Premiers and energy ministers of the other provinces. It provides for a fair share of offshore revenues and for a real and positive role by both governments in the management of the development of the offshore resource. We firmly believe that the offshore will be an important building block for Canada in the years ahead, particularly Atlantic Canada. In coming to this agreement we are showing that Canadians are willing and able to listen to each other, to identify concerns and act together in a common cause.

Although we support Nova Scotia's effort in winning any concessions over the offshore in these dying days of a dying Liberal Government, there is one feature of this Bill which is repugnant to our Party and which should be repugnant to all Canadians. That, of course, is the retroactive back-in, which effectively appropriates without compensation exploration and production rights previously issued. This retroactive back-in was introduced in the Liberal Government's national energy policy.

It is repugnant because it is the action of a country which cannot or will not keep its commitments. Investors around the world lost confidence in Canada because the rules of the game were changed after the investment was made and the property right acquired. Our Party is firmly on record in its opposition to the retroactive back-in component of the Crown share. The Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) and the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) and other members of our caucus have been adamant in voicing our opposition to what amounts to straight theft. The Leader of the Opposition, in one of his first statements on energy policy, said:

> The federal action resembled nothing more than a hold up at a corner gas station at 3 a.m.
> There is so much obvious retroactivity and confiscation in the NEP that investors lost whatever trust and confidence they had in the federal government. Simply put, they would no longer make long-term commitments because they had no longer believed that the Government would honour its own undertakings.

Opponents of the retroactive back-in claim that expropriation without compensation violates Canada's obligations under international law. The concept that Canadians would welch on their word and tear up old agreements led to an unprecedented outflow of capital from Canada following the introduction of the NEP. Billions of dollars held by both residents and non-residents fled the country seeking more secure and stable investment climates. The damage caused by the retroactive feature of the back-in may never be fully measured in terms of the lost opportunities this punitive measure denied.

In discussing the retroactive back-in it is important to note the difference between providing for Canadian participation and retroactively expropriating property without compensation. The Conservative Party fully supports the concept that Canadians should participate in the wealth of oil and gas resources. Other countries such as Norway and Britain have reserved for their own right a share of the production of the oil and gas wealth. But it is critical that such intentions be announced at the time the exploration and drilling rights are being acquired, and therefore known in advance to all parties concerned. When the oil and gas industry is investing billions of dollars, much of it raised from Canadian investors, the industry simply wants to know the rules of the game and they wish some assurance that the rules will not be changed retroactively. That is the effect of the retroactive back-in.

The second point deals with the back-in provisions in the legislation now before the House. There is some confusion in the oil industry with regard to the reference to the back-in in the Act, and I gather some confusion on the part of the Government which wishes to propose an amendment to this point. The retroactive back-in is not necessarily enshrined in the legislation before us. It was introduced in Bill C-48, the Canada Oil and Gas Act. As Premier John Buchanan points out, the Bill before us simply provides for Nova Scotia's participation in the event that the back-in clause is ever activated. It is important to note that it has never been exercised because it applies to the acquisition of production rights, and the oil and gas discoveries affected by the back-in are still a long way from production.

This Act simply states that, prior to transferring or disposing of any Crown share in the offshore region, the Nova Scotia Government shall have the right to acquire a 50 per cent portion of the Crown share in respect of the natural gas field, and a 25 per cent portion of the Crown share in respect of an oil field. In other words, Nova Scotia is saying that if the federal Government picks up a share of the action in the offshore production game, it wants a piece of the action.

In contrast, under the terms of the Atlantic offshore accord, there would be no need for a retroactive back-in because the accord permits any province to impose any revenue regime it desires on the offshore resource. If the revenue regime is uneconomic, the oil and gas development will not proceed. The onus is on the province as well as the federal Government to ensure that the fiscal terms make that development viable.

Some Liberal opponents in the Atlantic region say that the Conservatives want to give all the money to the oil companies, but exactly the reverse is the case. We are proposing to give all the money to the provinces themselves, reserving for the federal Government the right to impose federal taxes. It is not, therefore, the Crown share itself to which we are opposed, but the execution of the Crown share retroactively without compensation, which is basically unCanadian.

In closing, let me summarize the basic position of the Conservative energy policy which has evolved in discussions and consultations over the last few months. Details of the policy will be announced in the next few weeks but it follows basic principles. First, these include the fact that energy should be used to unite the country, not divide it as the national energy policy has done.

Second, in order to ensure energy security Canada needs balanced development of its energy resources from all regions of the country and from all sources—oil and gas, hydro, nuclear and alternative sources. With adequate resources no region of the country can hold the rest of the nation hostage when it comes to supplies of energy.

Third, it is the responsibility of the federal Government to ensure that the fiscal regime in place will permit the development of the resource in order to create jobs and tax revenues. A punitive tax regime which discourages the development of the resource, as is the case under the NEP, is not in the national interest. I have personally visited Venture and some of the other offshore areas and there is great concern that if the taxation provisions of the NEP are applied, those developments will never go ahead. In fact there is no energy development in the country today, whether Husky Oil in Saskatchewan or the oil sands in Alberta, except where the taxation provisions of the national energy policy have been waived. The national interest is served by an energy policy which allows industry to get on with the job of finding and developing the oil and gas reserves in order to create jobs and revenue and to contribute to a strong and united Canada. That would be the goal of a Conservative energy policy under the Hon. Member for Central Nova.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will not speak at great length. Much of what can be said about the Bill has been said either by the mover of the Bill, the Parliamentary Secretary, or by the Official Opposition critic. It is not necessary to analyse the Bill any further. The content of the Bill is self-explanatory for those who are interested in this particular kind of legislation. I suspect that that would encompass a large number of people in a variety of different jurisdictions across the country. I hope that the fact that the Government of Canada was able to work out an agreement with the Province of Nova Scotia is a foreteller of things to come. I hope that attitudes are in fact beginning to soften and that the conciliatory and necessary process of making agreements is going to become the order of the day. It has not been over the past number of days. That fact has contributed significantly to the lack of trust which had developed and is still in evidence between the various provincial authorities, regardless of their political stripe, and the federal administration.

I am always amused that my colleagues in the Official Opposition spend so much time telling us what they will do when they form the Government. I think that that is perhaps somewhat self-serving. It is quite legitimate nevertheless. I am also interested in listening to the views of the members of the Conservative Party as they explain how they would have worked out a better agreement. They point with some pride, which is perhaps justifiable, to the fact that as an Opposition Party they have been able to come to an agreement with the government in a province which happens to share their particular political philosophy. I want to assure you that we in this Party could probably come to an agreement with the government of the Province of Manitoba on a variety of different issues. I do not doubt for a moment that we could from time to time unveil policies which would be of interest to the public of Canada and which would show quite clearly our ability to put in place agreements which would work to the advantage of Canadians coast to coast. In the process we would indicate that that would be what we would do if we were the Government.

I will give the House an example to consider. It is known by all that the Province of Manitoba has an enviable record in terms of the creation of employment for young people. Its record is the best in the country. If we formed the federal Government, I am quite sure that we could work out an arrangement whereby the federal Government could arrange for similar kinds of programs to be put in place in all other provinces. I think we could probably issue a press statement to that effect indicating how we would do it. However, we are not the government and therefore it is idle rhetoric because it means very little to anyone. As I was listening to the official spokesman for the Official Opposition speaking of that Party's agreement with Newfoundland it reminded me a lot of the time when it was in government. When that Party was in government, but with a minority, it was going to govern as if it were a majority. Now that it is in opposition, it is going to operate as if it were the government. I cannot help but wonder if that is a particularly useful way to operate. However, I will not dwell on that. That is politics.

Mr. Blais: Unwise?

Mr. Deans: Well, it is politics. This kind of legislation is useful. Hopefully, it will be useful to the Province of Nova Scotia. If it had been otherwise, I am sure it would not have signed the agreement.

I would like to express a concern which we have expressed over many years. It is absolutely necessary when dealing with the Atlantic provinces to move toward putting legislation in place which, if used wisely, will bring about the desired economic results and will establish for those jurisdictions a far greater degree of economic independence. We are all striving for that. That would be the most desirable of situations. Hopefully, as a result of this agreement together with others we will be able to see the Province of Nova Scotia move more rapidly toward a position where the economy of the province will be operating at such a level that the provincial government would be able to say with some assurance that it is able to operate in a reasonably economically independent way. Hopefully it will be able to provide employment for those who live and want to live there and to provide economic opportunity for those who want to become part of the development of the province. This is one of the ways that that can be accomplished.

The very fact that we are able to pass this legislation today is indicative of a desire on the part of everyone in the House of Commons to try to come to an understanding and to ratify agreements which, although they may not be everything that everyone would have wished, are satisfactory to both parties. In this case I believe that to be true. Although in this case the Province of Nova Scotia would have wanted more and perhaps a greater degree of independence in its entire operation, after careful consideration and negotiation it accepted that this would work to its advantage and therefore was worthy of its signature on the bottom line.

In saying that I do not want to nit-pick over the terms. I do not want to spend a lot of time going into the details of how the legislation could have been improved, the reason being that it would not serve any useful purpose at the moment. The key is that the parties involved are satisfied that this is the agreement they want at the moment. It is not the last agreement, neither is it the final agreement on this question. Hopefully a continual negotiation process will go on. Hopefully, as time passes, this agreement will be modified and improved in such a way as to do two things. It should be improved to ensure that the province receives the maximum degree of benefit from the resource. It should be improved also to guarantee that the country will receive significant benefit from the resource. The development of an energy policy is not simply for economic purposes for the jurisdiction involved, although it certainly is useful in that regard. I am not suggesting that anyone said it was. I am saying that it provides a stability for the country as a whole. The better we are able to produce energy from the resources which are available to us in all parts of this country, the better we are able to transport that energy from one point to another, the better we are able to interconnect those areas where the need is evident with those areas where the resource is abundant, the better we will be able to create an economy in this country which will be forward looking, dynamic, aggressive and job-producing. I recognize that there is imperfection in everything that we do and I admit that this could be improved upon. But I say that this kind of agreement and willingness to compromise and the capacity to seek out the best common denominator and agree to it is what co-operative federalism is all about.

● (1310)

I hasten to add, in using that particular term, that that is very much part of our Party and what those who established this Party envisaged when they set it up. They envisaged the development of that co-operative spirit and the capacity to give and take by recognizing and fulfilling the needs of one area with resources from another area which has the capacity to do so for the benefit of all. That is what the spirit of co-operative federalism is all about. That is what agreements such as this exemplify.

We will support the Bill and the amendment. With respect to the amendment, I must confess that at the time and amendment was given to us we had no knowledge that it was in the offing.

Miss Carney: There is no amendment.

Mr. Hawkes: There will be no amendment.

Mr. Deans: That makes it somewhat different. I did not hear that said. However, not being aware that an amendment was in the offing, I took the opportunity to discuss the matter briefly with federal and provincial representatives and I had the impression from those discussions that they were satisfied that the amendment would have been acceptable to them. However, it is quite clear that the Official Opposition does not want the amendment to pass.

Miss Carney: There is no amendment.

Mr. Deans: I will accept that. We support that passage of this legislation and in fact recommend to others that they begin the process of attempting to work out similar agreements in order to show the country that the federal and provincial governments, if the will is there, can work together toward the common good.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is always somewhat edifying to listen to the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I suggest that he could have been a little more generous in acknowledging that the Conservative Party of Canada has recently demonstrated its commitment to co-operative federalism in a very concrete and positive way through the agreement with Newfoundland. Instead, he chose to indicate that he could reach an agreement with the Province of Manitoba. Our Party would prefer that the New Democratic Party put in writing what are some of its future commitments.

Let me relate some of the action taken by the NDP during my brief life in this Parliament. I recall that it was the NDP that voted against a government that had a fairly strong orientation to the west. It kicked it out of office. I wonder if it will put that in writing for the future. It was the New Democratic Party that chose to kick that government out of office when it brought in a budget that was the fairest to poor people in the whole decade of the 1970s. I wonder if it will put that in writing for the future.

Mr. Blais: It is not true. Why should it?

Mr. Hawkes: Those are the kinds of agreements that the NDP keeps.

I wish to compliment the Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), for the clarity, brevity and insight which she has provided to this Chamber today in relation to this piece of legislation. I believe that her remarks will be educational for all those who choose to read them. Their degree of understanding of what is involved here will be increased, and for that I thank the Hon. Member. She is doing an excellent job on behalf of our Party as the shadow cabinet minister in the energy portfolio.

I would also like to pay tribute to Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia. Entering into a bargaining process with what has served as the federal Government over the last few years is never easy for provincial Premiers. Particularly when Nova Scotia is one of the smaller provinces in Confederation and must deal with that bureaucratic machine in the Department of Energy, it is a tribute to Premier Buchanan that he was able to bargain so effectively and hard on behalf of the people of his province. Having said that, I believe there is a certain amount of nervousness in this Chamber over what we are about to do. In one day we are about to approve a 100-page piece of legislation. It deals with a very complex topic, that of oil and gas.

Let me point out a couple of facts to the House. The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) entered into an agreement with the Province of Nova Scotia on March 2, 1982. It is June 28, 1984, two years and three months later. For the very first time, elected Members of Parliament are being allowed to consider whether or not that agreement is in the best interest of all Canadians and particularly those who choose to live in the Province of Nova Scotia. When was the first time we saw this legislation? It is dated May 31, 1984. Members of the House first saw it two years and two months after the agreement was reached in private between the Premier and the Prime Minister or his representative.

Members of Parliament have been put into a very awkward position. If one believes in co-operative federalism and good faith bargaining, there is no choice at this late date but to approve a contract that has already been in effect for two years and three months for all practical purposes. That is the dilemma we face today. We must approve the contract because it has existed for a long time and must be legislated in order to take effect. At the same time, however, we look forward to an early election for a change in government and a re-opening of that agreement so that it will make more sense for the future.

I come from the City of Calgary. When I was elected to this Chamber some five years ago we had one of the lowest vacancy rates in the world. We had one of the lowest unemployment rates in the world. We had one of the most aggressive and growing economies in the world. But what happened? The then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in co-operation with the then Minister of Finance, produced the National Energy Program. It was a bureaucratic nightmare. It took effect as soon as it was produced in budgetary form. The legislation respecting that program was not introduced in the House for quite some time. Members may recall that that omnibus piece of legislation was so onerous and such a denial of the basic principle of free speech and basic common sense that we rang the bells for 17 days.

• (1320)

That was to get that piece of legislation split into manageable parts. That was quite some time after the actual event. We did it with the certain conviction and knowledge that it was a rotten piece of legislation that would be bad for the country. Standing here in June 1984, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that that Bill is one of the worst pieces of legislation that has ever been inflicted on any nation anywhere in the free civilized world. I am speaking of the National Energy Program. That is what it was and that is what it is.

As a result of the National Energy Program the City of Calgary has seen a lot of suicides and it has a lot of people in mental hospitals. It also has a lot of unemployment. The vacancy rate in office buildings is 25 per cent and for apartment accommodation the vacancy rate is 13 per cent to 14 per cent. The unemployment rate is higher than the national average. These are the circumstances not because the people of Calgary have lost their skills, their desire, or anything else. We have those kinds of conditions because the Liberal Party of Canada in conjunction with the New Democratic Party decided it knew how to run the oil and gas industry. Surely by June 1984 it is self-evident that the Government has no business trying to run that kind of complex industry.

I have a warning for the people of Nova Scotia. Because of the insistence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) and because of the insistence of the new Leader, Mr. John Turner, who is supporting the Minister of Energy, this House is being seized with Bill C-43 today. We are going to make it law. But the motion before us does not allow the Parliament of Canada, the elected people of this country, to hear witnesses for even five minutes. It will not allow us to hear witnesses for four minutes, for three minutes, for two minutes, for one minute, not even for one second. There are 100 pages of legislation affecting the oil and gas industry. This is surely one of the most technical industries in the world today. It is one of the most competitive industries, and it is one of the really international industries in existence today. But we are not allowed as parliamentarians to take this piece of legislation to committee and to invite knowledgeable people to come before the committee so we can ask them questions and learn whether or not the ideas contained in this Bill are good or bad. That is the Government's choice, Mr. Speaker. That is Mr. Turner's choice. That is the Minister of Energy's choice. They could have arranged the world in a different way. This Party would have welcomed the opportunity to take Bill C-43 to committee. We would have liked to have had a month or two or three to call witnesses and have them help us examine the clauses.

What is going to happen to the potential jobs and the potential income of the Province of Nova Scotia? There are parts of this Bill that talk about income sharing. The spokesperson on behalf of our Party has indicated that we are in favour of the basic pattern of that income sharing. Surely this nation is waking up to the fact that there can be no sharing without first having some income. The primary obligation that rests on all of us in this Chamber is to arrange the affairs of this nation in such a fashion that wealth is produced. If we do that well, then we have the means to help those who cannot help themselves.

If this is a bad agreement—and I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there are parts that give all of us much concern—then the people of Nova Scotia will be mightily disappointed. The people of Canada will also be mightily disappointed because that income sharing will not amount to anything. Let me ask you why, Sir. If you were to set out to attract an oil and gas industry to your region, why would you have a provision such as the one found in Clause 90 in this Bill that taxes the industry in that region at a higher rate than it does in other regions? Is that the kind of carrot that will attract an industry? Maybe it will. But that is a federal tax. That is the federal Government laying on an extra 5 per cent tax that is not applicable in other parts of the country.

There is another section in this Bill that deals with definitions and the implications of definitions. I believe that is found in Clause 22, if my memory serves me well. That clause deals with pipelines and with the provision that the Province of Nova Scotia is entitled to the right of first refusal to a 50 per cent ownership position in off-shore pipelines. But if you read the definition of a pipeline as closely and as carefully as you can, may I suggest to the Chair and to the Chamber, to the Premier of Nova Scotia and to the Minister of Energy, that that clause of the Bill is sufficiently unclear that it is very, very likely to end up in the courts.

Is a gas plant a pipeline? If we get an image of a pipeline in our minds we see it going through the ground and we say that this is a pipeline. A gas plant? That is a different kind of structure full of all kinds of pipes with different machines and dials. The definition in this Bill of a pipeline is sufficiently broad, in my view, that the Government of Nova Scotia has the right to first refusal of a 50 per cent ownership position in a gas plant. Is that what was intended by the Premier of Nova Scotia and the Minister of Energy? I suggest it probably was not. I suggest that if this Bill were to be subjected to the normal process that this House, that the parliamentary system, has come to put in place over years and centuries, then we could have testimony as to whether or not we have a definitional problem. If we have, if I am correct in my assessment, we could have suggested some modifications to the clause that would be designed to clear up the discrepancy and make the world a better place.

Having been born in the City of Calgary and lived there about half a century, I have been around the oil and gas industry almost since the first day it came into operation in our region. That is close to 50 years of experience. It is a sensitive industry. It is characterized by mobility. It is a funny industry. At the exploration end of it, it takes money. Money does not respect provincial or national borders. Money is a commodity which travels relatively freely around the world. That is the first thing it takes. Second, it takes committed, dedicated and knowledgeable human beings. They are welcome around the world because they are in short supply. Third, it takes mobile equipment. An oil drilling rig is designed to dig a hole. When the digging is done, it has to be dismantled and moved. If it is on a drilling ship, it simply has to be moved. The characteristic of the required equipment is its mobility.

If we have an agreement which is unsatisfactory to those people who own and control that equipment and to the knowledgeable people who make it work, as well as to those who are willing to take a risk and invest, then it will go. It is mobile. It is easy. It leaves. When it goes, we have increased unemployment, vacancy rates in office buildings and in apartments, increased depression, suicides, heart attacks and spousal battery. Those are the consequences of economic legislation which is badly designed, ineffective and does not work.

We are living through those consequences. Federal politicians in the Liberal Party have forced those of us in the City of Calgary, in the Province of Alberta, to live through those consequences. I do not want that for the people of Nova Scotia. They deserve better. They should have better. Hopefully this agreement will produce better. However, standing in this Chamber on June 28, 1984, all I can say is that it is a hope.

If the Government had chosen to follow a decent process, to allow committee examination and to allow expert witnesses to give testimony, then all of us would have some sense of confidence about what the legislation indicated it would do, what it intended to do. That would have been better for the nation and for the people of Nova Scotia.

I look forward to the day when we have a government which values the process of seeking informed testimony from people in the country before putting in place pieces of legislation which may do a great deal of harm.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a 10-minute period for questions and comments. Are there no Hon. Members wishing to put questions?

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues who preceded me in mentioning again, because it bears mentioning, that this method of passing legislation is really an affront in many ways to the parliamentary system.

Bill C-43 is not a trivial Bill of two or three paragraphs. It is a Bill of 100 pages and some 39 clauses, many of which are technical. It flows from the agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia regarding the development of the offshore. As a responsible Party and as responsible members of that Party, obviously we do not want to wreck the agreement reached by those two levels of government acting in the best interests of their respective jurisdictions in producing an agreement which would seem reasonable and adequate. On the other hand, there is something fundamentally wrong with that kind of procedure.

Bill C-43 has been brought forward to provide a legal basis for the agreement. After its passage, it will be said that Parliament has acted, Parliament representing the people of Canada, all segments of Canada. However, at no time in this process were the people who must live with the consequences of this law afforded an opportunity to make known their concerns and observations so that we might examine the details of the law in that regard.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) talked about some of the problems with the definitions, for example. I did not hear all his remarks. He may well have mentioned, and probably did mention, the fact that at least six clauses in the Bill allowed ministerial discretion. That sounds like a good thing when we talk in terms of allowing flexibility to accommodate different circumstances, but it also means that there is no certainty as to what are the rules or how to plan. The offshore activities governed by this legislation and this agreement involve the expenditure of many hundreds of millions of dollars, indeed billions of dollars. It is at least unfair, probably unreasonable and very likely damaging to the prospects of investment, to produce a regime which makes it impossible for planners to know precisely what are the rules because they can be changed at any time on ministerial discretion.

We ought to have had the opportunity of examining those clauses and discussing them with the persons who have to live with them—and I am talking about industry people—to find out the consequences on their ability to operate. Will it result in costs being higher? Will it result in their having to employ more lawyers than geologists and engineers to handle the paperwork as opposed to getting on with the job of finding oil and gas?

Any number of questions could be raised. We ought to have had the opportunity to examine them, but we did not. Why? It is because the legislation was not brought forward until this week. Here we are with one day left in the session and the onus is placed upon this Party as to whether or not to allow the agreement to go ahead, with no concern about the fundamental wrongness of proceeding in this manner in the first place. This agreement was signed last year. We ought to have had the legislation debated at second reading months ago, so that we would have had the opportunity in committee, albeit Committee of the Whole, to examine the legislation clause by clause to ensure that it was workable, to ensure that the industry which has to live with it could in fact live with it and that we are not burdening it with excessive regulation, red tape, costs and so on.

It is not just the interest of the people who have to live with it that is involved. There is also the question of the development of these very important resources off Nova Scotia around the Sable Island area. That is a very important natural gas find that needs to be developed. With our dollar falling like a stone and interest rates going through the roof, the ability to produce and export that natural gas would have tremendous benefits for our dollar and the interest rates in this country and, needless to say, for the economy of the Maritimes, Nova Scotia in particular, where this development would take place. That is very important.

Because of the way the House Leader and the Government have treated this Parliament in bringing in this Bill at the last moment, we do not have an opportunity to ask those questions. We have to take it on faith that it will work. Frankly, given this Government's record on energy policy, you have to be fairly dense to take anything it produces on faith.

Since 1980, the over-all impact of this Government's energy legislation has been to drive the energy industry into the ground. It has created 25 per cent vacancies in my community of Calgary. Unemployment levels have increased from 3 per cent to 12 per cent and 13 per cent. It has bankrupted thousands and thousands of Calgarians. That has been the effect of this Government's energy program. Therefore, it hurts a lot at this point to pass more energy legislation without detailed examination to ensure that it will not have that effect on the energy sector, albeit the Nova Scotia energy sector this time.

My colleagues, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) and the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) mentioned this, but I want to mention again the question of the 25 per cent back-in provision of the national energy policy. I do not know that Members opposite appreciate yet just how costly that provision was to Canada, just what it cost us in terms of investment, both Canadian and foreign. I had a conversation with the chief economist of the Conference Board of Canada. He estimated that the National Energy Program in general, and in particular the 25 per cent back-in, cost the Canadian economy $40 billion to $50 billion, representing, generally speaking, about $20 billion of Canadian money that left Canada and $20 billion to $30 billion that did not come here.

Last summer I had the opportunity to spend the day with pension fund managers and other investment managers in Great Britain, in the City of London. We discussed the attractiveness of Canada as an area for them to invest some of their pension funds which they manage. As a rule of thumb, they tried to invest some of their money offshore for risk minimization. Historically, Canada has been a very attractive country in which to place some of that money, along with the United States, Australia and some other countries. However, as a result of the National Energy Program, and in particular the 25 per cent back-in provision which confiscated privately owned property, Canada was no longer looked upon as an attractive area to invest. A democratic country whose Government would authorize and carry through with confiscation of privately owned property without compensation is a country governed by a Government that cannot be trusted. The atmosphere has changed incredibly.

In about 20 minutes or so, we will hear from the Bank of Canada what is happening to interest rates. We know for sure that they will go up because of the incredible pressure on the dollar. I wonder what might be happening if the National Energy Program and the 25 per cent back-in provision has not been introduced by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when he was the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in 1980. There is no doubt that we would not be witnessing this tremendous pressure to the Canadan dollar or this tremendous pressure on increasing interest rates. Incidentally, there would be several tens of thousands of Canadians currently unemployed who would be employed. That is the cost.

The new leader of the Liberal Party, Mr. Turner, apparently intends to cultivate western Canada. He intends to be more open to the west, have a government that is more concerned about the west and have a government that is more responsive to the west. He puts that contention to lie immediately by apparently reappointing the Minister of Finance to that position. The Minister of Finance is the man who single-handedly devastated the economy of western Canada with the National Energy Program. He is being reappointed to the key financial post of the federal Government by a man who says that his objective is to make the west feel a part of Canada.

My suggestion is that if he wants to give my colleague from Calgary West and myself a little concern about our seats in the next election, he ought to make a public statement that under no circumstances will he allow in his government any person associated with the National Energy Program which devastated western Canada. If he made that statement, my colleague and I would have to get back to Calgary and campaign a little harder. However, it does not appear he is going to do that. He is going to reappoint the Minister of Finance, the man who single-handedly destroyed the economy of western Canada. Supposedly this is a new team that will bring the new nirvana. Well, it ain't so.

My colleague from Vancouver Centre went on record as indicating that a Progressive Conservative Government would eliminate the 25 per cent back-in provision. I want to repeat that. It is absolutely the situation. It is very high on the priority list and will occur very quickly when a new Progressive Conservative Government takes over as a signal to Canadians and the rest of the world that the Government of Canada does not confiscate private property but that it respects private property.

Other aspects of the National Energy Program that will be changed are those dealing with the question of the bureaucratic nature of the program which means that to do anything, one needs the approval of seemingly unlimited numbers of bureaucrats on this committee, that committee and the next. The whole program is full of ministerial approvals, which translates into some darn lower level bureaucrat having to approve everything that is being done. The burden of that on any company intererested in exploring and trying to find oil and gas is absolutely horrendous. We have to get away from that.

This Party is determined to get away from that kind of interventionist hands-on bureaucratic red tape approach to an approach of providing adequate incentives, a firm and fair set of rules and instructions so that the doers, the people who are actually going to do something of value for Canada, can go out and do it on the basis of these incentives and rules, as opposed to the current system which says that if you want to do anything, you have to come to Ottawa, get on your knees and beg permission from some bureaucrat to be allowed to do it. That process is marvellous for lobbyists, lawyers and accountants. It does not do a darn thing for the people who are going to try to find the oil and gas this country needs if we are not only to achieve our goal of self-sufficiency and security of supply but also if we are going to get the benefits from this industry which the industry can provide. There is no question that the modest changes a Conservative Government intends to introduce in the beginning will put tens of thousands of Canadians back to work very quickly in this industry alone. There are many more industries about which similar things could be said.

I have one last point to make regarding a concern that goes beyond the energy question to the role of Parliament in our federal system. It is a dilemma for which I do not have the answer. On the one hand there is the question of the responsibility of parliamentarians. What is the role of Members of the House of Commons in the making of law? Do we have a duty and an obligation to examine every piece of legislation that passes through here with the kind of detail necessary so that when we vote approval, we can do so with a clear conscience in the knowledge that this is the best legislation that can be made or that we have at least had the opportunity to make suggestions which may or may not be taken up by the Government? On the other hand, there is the question of the Government of Canada and in this case the Government of Nova Scotia having reached an agreement, and those sovereign Governments having reached that agreement obviously want to get on with it.

This is related to the question of the role federal-provincial conferences play in the governing of this country. If some of the Premiers and the Prime Minister reach an agreement, does that automatically mean that Parliament ceases to have any responsibility or obligation in terms of the effects of that agreement on the jurisdictions for which the Members are responsible? This is not a new problem. It has been with us for some time. I think it is a problem that must be addressed, because I find it very frustrating to stand in the House and look at this Bill which contains 100 clauses of enormous complexity and say in all good conscience that I am confident that this is good legislation and I am prepared to vote in support of all of its details. Apparently I do not have any alternative.

I did want to put that protest on the record. I think this is the wrong way to be treating Parliament. We ought to have had an opportunity to look at this legislation much earlier on so that we would not find ourselves in a rubber stamp position. On the broader question, let no one but no one in the House or in the country believe that approval of Bill C-43 in any way, shape or form means that we approve of the National Energy Program, the 25 per cent back-in feature or any of the other horrendous features of that program, some of which are unfortunately referred to in this legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a 10-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say that the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) puts into words that which is in the hearts of the people of the west. Those who heard the words that came out of his mouth in the last few minutes will know that that is the way 95 per cent of the people of the west feel.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre a question. The new Leader of the Liberal Party, who will apparently take over the Government of Canada on Saturday, has made two statements that I think are very much in conflict with each other. First, he stated that he wants to win the west and make the west feel a part of Canada. That is a very noble aspiration. He then said that he will make no changes whatsoever to the National Energy Program, the program that literally destroyed not only the physical works of the oil and gas industry but broke the hearts of hundreds of people who went bankrupt. I would like to ask the Hon. Member, who has a tremendous knowledge of this industry, how he thinks the people of the west will feel about being told that they will be a part of Canada when the same man tells them he will continue to subject them to all the horrors of the National Energy Program?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I do not find that the question really pertains to the speech made by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). However, I will let the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre respond.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I thought it was a very probing question. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), is absolutely right in noting the conflict between winning the west and retaining the National Energy Program as well as retaining the architect of the National Energy Program as a key member of the Government of the new Leader of the Liberal Party.

A truly national Government that will understand or even try to understand the hopes, aspirations, concerns and frustrations of people in every part of the country including western Canada must understand that the impact of the National Energy Program on western Canada was absolutely devastating. It is simply not possible to suggest that one understands western Canada or wishes to understand western Canada at the same time as one believes that the National Energy Program is a good thing which will be kept in place and that its architect will be kept in place as a key member of the Government. It is impossible for those two poles to come together.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) brought up the issue of the increase in the number of civil servants involved in the field of energy at the federal level. I believe that the Hon. Member was in the House in 1974 when that rapid growth in the bureaucracy started. I believe John Turner was the Finance Minister who was responsible for that rapid growth, but I am not sure because I was not here. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre could tell us a little bit more about that growth? Perhaps he could tell us how much the bureaucracy has grown and whether or not John Turner was responsible for that growth? Perhaps he could tell us if the slasher of Cabinet was the increaser of bureaucrats in the energy field? I would like to know from the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre whether or not that analysis is correct.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, it is correct. In my talk, I did not mention, although I might have, that the new Leader of the Liberal Party was the Minister of Finance responsible for the first devastating blow to the oil and gas industry in 1974. His Budget of 1974 made provincial royalties non-deductible for tax purposes and brought the industry to a grinding, screeching halt. It resulted in hundreds of drilling rig companies leaving the country, large lay-offs and the slowdown to next to nothing of drilling activity. In fact, in that sense the Minister of Finance and the new Leader of the Liberal Party have a lot in common. They each participated in creating Budgets that devastated the oil and gas industry.

Subsequently, when trying to repair the damage created by that Budget, came the era of more bureaucratic intervention. Having first devastated the industry by his Budget of 1974, the new Leader of the Liberal Party then said that we must get the industry back on track. The way to do that, of course, was to keep adding bureaucrats who were smart enough to know what to do and who would run the industry better than the private sector, the owners of the industry, could. We know what the consequences of that have been. Proven reserves have declined steadily since then and self-sufficiency has been put further and further into the future.

Mr. Speaker: It being two o'clock, this House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEMAND THAT DEPARTMENT RETURN FUNDS SEIZED FROM TAXPAYER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, again I rise in this House the case of my constituent who paid $1,000 on an instalment plan and then the Department of National Revenue went into his bank account and took out another $1,000 to pay the same tax bill.

The Minister admitted that his Department received the $1,000 through the Calgary branch of the Mercantile Bank of Canada on October 14, 1975. The Minister assumes that this $1,000 was sent back to the Mercantile Bank but has no record or proof of same. The President of the Mercantile Bank of Canada has stated that the bank has no record of National Revenue returning the $1,000, and neither has the Minister who assumes it was returned.

All evidence indicates that the Department of National Revenue received the $1,000 and that the $1,000 tax bill was paid twice. Revenue Canada should return the $1,000 to this new Canadian. But the Minister refuses and simply says: "The case is closed". The case is not closed.

The Department of National Revenue has either lost, misplaced, or stolen the $1,000, and I want it returned to my constituent. Is the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the new Prime Minister going to condone this misdemeanor on the part of Revenue Canada? The refusal to return the money will be tantamount to stealing $1,000 from a hard-working Canadian citizen. This case will never be closed until the Government returns the $1,000 to my constituent.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun-Saint Paul): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of the riding of Verdun-Saint Paul, I would like to pay tribute to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Our Prime Minister will go down in history as a great Canadian who always served his country with intelligence and dignity.

Canadians have always been proud of their Prime Minister as a worthy representative of Canada on the international scene and the man whose aim was to protect and defend minorities by enshrining the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in our Constitution.

Finally, I would like to congratulate our Prime Minister on receiving the Albert Einstein peace prize.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG PROFESSIONAL CLASSES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, at least the lackadaisical Liberals cannot be accused of forcing unemployment only on the uneducated. Canada's sickening unemployent figures are striking out at all sections of society. We find high numbers of persons presently seeking work who are classified as professionals. Unemployment figures are often considered indigenous only to the trades and the lesser educated, but this is simply not the case.

Consider that 400 of the 1,000 lawyers who were called to the bar in April are out of work. As well, 50 per cent of the graduating engineers from ten engineering schools form the ranks of the unemployed. Only 30 per cent of teachers graduating in Ontario this year will get a permanent job.

There is little comfort in knowing that the Liberal boondoggle has treated all of society with equal indifference. Only a decade ago a university education was considered a respected route toward self-sufficiency and high standing in society. Thanks to this Government it has sadly become a bad joke for thousands of young people who have dedicated most of their lives to this honourable pursuit. The graduates are outraged. Their outrage is clearly echoed throughout the ranks of the Progressive Conservative Party.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words to what was said by the Hon. Member for Verdun-Saint Paul. With all my constituents in the riding of Lotbinière, I wish to join the Hon. Member in congratulating the Prime Minister on receiving the Albert Einstein Foundation's international peace prize. The prize is a tribute to the Prime Minister, in recognition of his exceptional qualities and his efforts for peace in this world.

Mr. Speaker, I have only one wish for the Prime Minister: That he wins the Nobel Peace Prize. I think that throughout the world, the Prime Minister is widely known and recognized as a great statesman and great leader. I believe that with the prize bestowed on him yesterday, the Nobel Peace Prize would be the crowning of a very brilliant career. I think he deserves to win this prize and that Canadians would be delighted if he did. That is what I wish him, now that he is about to retire as Prime Minister. I am sure all Canadians would see this nomination as something to be proud of, both for the Prime Minister and for the entire country.

PENSIONS

CALL FOR INCREASE IN PUBLIC SYSTEM BENEFITS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the failure of Canada's private pension system is obvious from the growing dependence of elderly Canadians on the Canada Pension Plan, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, and additional tax incentives proposed in the February Budget to support private savings.

Over 50 per cent of elderly Canadians are dependent on the Guaranteed Income Supplement and provincial top-ups to support CPP and private plans. Only 54 per cent of working men and 33 per cent of working women have any private pension coverage, leaving the rest dependent on the public pension system for income replacement in retirement. They face a future of poverty unless the public system is designed for adequacy of retirement income. It is presently designed to be inadequate so private plans can flourish.

The Liberal and Conservative response to the inability and unwillingness of private employers to provide pension saving opportunities is to increase tax incentives to private plan holders and virtually ignore coverage for low-income earners by rejecting mandatory pension coverage or increasing CPP benefits and contributions.

To address pension coverage and adequacy for all Canadian workers and their families seriously, we should be striving to reduce the welfare aspect of the public system by increasing the universal Old Age Security to its former prominence, increasing CPP benefits, and adapting credit splitting so that all pensioners may enjoy their own pensions and ensure retirement with security and comfort.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

FREEDOM OF COMOX CONFERRED ON CANADIAN FORCES BASE

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on June 25, 1984, an historic happening was witnessed in the annals of the Canadian Armed Forces when Mayor George Piercy of Comox, British Columbia, conferred on CFB Comox the freedom of the town at an extraordinary meeting of council. Never before has a Canadian military base with a detachment of U.S.A. military been honoured in this country with the freedom of the town.

On that day the neighbouring city of Courtenay also officially recognized Military Appreciation Week honouring CFB Comox and its squadrons and supporting staff, including its detachment of 50 United States military personnel.

The granting of the "Freedom of the City" by the civilian population to a military formation has its roots deep in history. Its honour pre-supposed very great confidence by the civilian authorities in the integrity, goodwill and discipline of the military base people who live in their community.

It is my concern that the image of a town in the vicinity of a military establishment has been traditionally viewed as a garrison town. This image has now been dispelled. Instead, thanks to the class of soldiers and airmen enlisting in the Canadian and U.S. military today, they form a relationship with their non-military neighbours which goes well beyond the formal affiliation, and has extended to co-operation, mutual support, and friendship.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

TRIBUTE TO VOLUNTARY WORK OF SERVING OFFICERS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the recent debate on the Security Agency, it is apparent that Liberal Members of Parliament are not aware that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police force goes far beyond the call of duty as a law enforcing agency when serving the people of Canada.

For instance, these Members of Parliament apparently are not aware that an officer of the RCMP is the chairman of a committee of interested citizens that has been formed to assist in the prevention of suicide. Several officers of the RCMP are involved with this organization, with Crime Stoppers involving local citizens, and also with the Block Parent Program. They work with young people in the prevention of crime, serving as lecturers in schools and outlining the dangers of getting involved in criminal activities. As well, they assist the Coast Guard and the Red Cross in water safety education programs.

Many people are not aware that in a city the size of Red Deer the RCMP have to deal with approximately 1,400 lost or stolen bicycles in one year. Many youngsters' tears are dried up as a result of returned bicycles.

Members of Parliament should be aware that the RCMP are of great assistance in developing good, safe, and healthy communities in Canada.

INCOME TAX

REFUNDS FOR ARTISTS AND WRITERS

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, last week the Subcommittee on the Taxation of Visual and Performing Artists and Writers issued its report. It stressed fast administrative action on tax problems between Revenue Canada and Canada's artists.

At that time, I suggested, as an urgent matter, that the Minister consider refunds for artists whose files had been re-examined four years into the past. The Minister announced yesterday that he is accepting that recommendation. His Department will initiate tax refunds to those artists who can be identified. As well, the Department will welcome enquiries from artists in cases where their identity cannot be automatically located.

• (1410)

The other reactions from the Minister are equally sensitive to the arts community. He has considered the subcommittee's ideas carefully and has accepted our major principles. In addition, a conference is scheduled between Revenue Canada and artists' representatives for the autumn. These decisions are welcome news, indeed, to our artists, and are a sincere and substantial beginning to the settlement of these issues.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

JAPANESE CANADIAN INTERNEES—PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY POSITION ON COMPENSATION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, fully 22,000 Japanese Canadians living in British Columbia were forcibly evacuated and interned by the Mackenzie King Government during the 1942-1946 period. Even after the war was over one constituent of mine, whose family had originated in Japan, was required by law to obtain a letter of approval from the Mayor of Calgary before she could move from the Taber area, to which her family had been forcibly moved, to teach in Calgary.

The attitude of the outgoing Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Collenette) on this issue must be reprehensible to all thoughtful Canadians. It is my firm conviction that the Mulroney Government will quickly seek an all-Party resolution regretting these events of 1942-1946.

I am delighted that my Leader was quoted in The Globe and Mail on May 16 as indicating his support for a more than symbolic sum of reparation. He said: "I feel very strongly that Canadian citizens whose rights were abused and violated and trampled upon indeed should be compensated". Our Party spokeman on multiculturalism, the Hon Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), indicated to one media outlet only yesterday that a Mulroney Government will sit down and negotiate the nature and amount of a fair settlement to Japanese Canadians soon after the coming election.

THE PRIME MINISTER

RECIPIENT OF ALBERT EINSTEIN PEACE AWARD

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, some 19 years ago a new phenomenon burst upon the Canadian political scene. In the short span of three years he literally catapulted from Pierre Elliott Trudeau, the iconoclast, to the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Prime Minister.

No period in Canadian history since 1867 has been so eventful and exciting. Through his efforts and leadership Canada moved from the age of puberty to national maturity. While he sometimes infuriated some Canadians and often excited many more of us, he left none of us indifferent. Many times he made us aware that "the folly of mankind is man". He also tried and succeeded in showing us that it need not be so. Of all his great achievements, none demonstrated that more than his final great effort as Prime Minister. I speak, of course, of his mission for world peace, for which he has been awarded the Albert Einstein Peace Award. It is richly deserved!

An era is coming rapidly to an end. It has been an honour and a privilege to have served under his leadership. I know he will continue to speak and work on behalf of Canada and Canadians. When his resignation is accepted by the Governor General on Saturday morning he can leave in the full and confident knowledge that, in parting, he has left very large footprints in the sands of time. "When shall we see his like again?" Thank you, Mr. Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC SERVICE

POLITICAL RIGHTS OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, during the Liberal leadership race the Minister of Transport lamented the fact that public servants could not attend the leadership convention. The Winnipeg Free Press has quoted the Minister as saying: "I think it is a little bit of a denial of their rights. We cannot do very much. It is the public service that makes the rules". All Hon. Members of this House, Mr. Speaker, know that that is not true. All Hon. Members of this House know that it is the Liberal Government which introduces the laws of this land, and it is the Liberal Government which is denying 300,000 federal employees the right to become involved in the next election campaign.

I would urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), and others who have lamented the fact that people could not attend the Liberal leadership convention because they are federal government employees, to remember that it is their legislation which prevents government workers from working in election campaigns and denies them a very basic right.

I urge all Hon. Members of this House to support a Private Members' Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) which will be coming up for debate later today. This Bill would reinstate political rights for federal government employees.

Mr. Robert Gourd (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, in a few days, Canada will lose a great man in the person of the Right Hon. CANADA POST CORPORATION

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL FROM INVOLVEMENT WITH COMMERCIAL ENTERPRISES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, it is time that Canada Post started minding its own business. That business, of course, is delivering mail. For the price of a 32-cent postage stamp, taxpayers expect efficient delivery of the mail. That being the case, Canada Post has no right to throw more irons into the fire. The Post Office, it appears, is looking at getting into lotteries, selling insurance, and airline and travel packages. Consumer's Distributing had a brief fling with Canada Post, but it looks like the affair has gone sour.

Is it fair for this gigantic Crown corporation, which is subsidized by the taxpayer, to get involved with activities which will compete with the citizens who subsidize it? I say no, absolutely no. Canada Post and other Crown corporations should not be allowed to use facilities paid for by all taxpayers to have advantages over others.

The public purse has been abused enough, the latest example of which is the baseball pool, which we all know has struck out. It is well known that business and the private sector are able to create jobs at much less expense than Crown corporations or slush funds. Let us have less monkey business and more private business so Canadians can get back to work.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

RAILWAYS

WESTERN GRAIN TRANSPORTATION ACT—PROMISE OF INCREASED EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. During the consideration of Bill C-155, the grain transportation legislation, the Government, and this Minister, promised the creation of some 375,000 jobs in Canada. Now, Mr. Speaker, rather than creating jobs, both railways are laying people off in record numbers. System employment in both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific has been reduced by 6,000 people this year over last year. Canadian Pacific, in particular, is currently engaged in a very ruthless program of eliminating operating and maintenance workers in western Canada.

This loss of jobs, Mr. Speaker, and railway investment, constitutes an outright betrayal of the railway workers and the farmers of Canada. What action is the Minister of Transport and his Government taking to ensure that the railways will live up to the commitments made with respect to this legislation? What action has the Government taken to fulfil the promise it made during consideration and debate on that Bill?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member is confusing two different sets of issues. The proposals which were put forward during the course of debate on the Western Grain Stabilization Bill indicated that the change in rates was necessary in order to provide financial leverage to enable the railways to engage in major capital expansion for the railway system in western Canada. Without going into the entire debate, we know that if the investment had not been made there would be a substantial drawback in the ability of that system to deliver grain to our international markets, which is absolutely essential to the health of the economy. I know the Conservative Party has fought against that, but we have always said it was a foolhardy and shortsighted fight, because if we in any way hamper the ability of the transportation system to deliver the goods on time, at efficient prices, then we have totally and completely undermined our international market for grain.

The railways have committed $1.1 billion this year alone into that capital expansion. The Canadian Pacific Railway, as one example, has already started its work on the Rogers Pass tunnel, the largest construction project in North America.

For the Hon. Member to say that there is no work going on and that there is a betrayal, simply shows the Hon. Member does not understand what is happening in western Canada, which is that the railways are engaged in major expansionary programs to expand our transportation system so that we can sell our grain abroad.

• (1420)

Mr. Mazankowski: If there is any confusion it is in the mind of the Minister. He is obviously being bamboozled by the railroads.

EMPLOYEE LAY-OFFS—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, there have been job losses and further lay-offs each and every day. The railways are laying off full-time productive employees, maintenance way workers, B and B workers, railway carmen, electricians and mechanics. In the past two weeks CP issued lay-off notices for another 150 people. It is now estimated that close to 2,000 people in the operating and maintenance trades have been laid off in western Canada. It will be recalled that the Minister proposed a very elaborate advertising program costing some $3.5 million, telling the Canadian people how many job and investment opportunities there were going to be.

Because of this failure to fulfil a promise and commitment, is the Minister prepared to launch a full-scale inquiry to determine why there are job losses rather than job creation? Will he undertake to do that, rather than pussyfoot around with the railways? When will he start treating the workers first rather than the railways, as he suggested in a speech in Toronto recently?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I certainly welcome the new found interest of the Hon. Member in transportation workers. It is too bad he did not show the same interest when he was in this job himself. The fact is we have already referred the matter of railway employment to the Senior Grain Advisory Committee, which was established to bring together all the major participants in the transportation system. The grain producers, elevator companies, railway companies, and unions are all there. That is the place where the issue will be examined. The railways have been asked to demonstrate that they are living up to their commitments. That is the mechanism we put into place to provide all participants in the western grain transportation system with an opportunity for that kind of review and examination.

If the Hon. Member does not believe in that kind of system, if he wants to go around it, if he does not trust the judgment and assessment of all the major participants in the system, it simply shows exactly who is pussyfooting and fooling around.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is not a farmer in the West who believes you.

Mr. Mazankowski: I certainly have faith and confidence in the judgment of the people involved in the transportation sector, but I certainly have no confidence in the chairman of this committee who happens to be the former chairman of the CNR. How can they expect an unbiased opinion from him on this very critical issue?

PACKING PLANT CLOSURES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, one of the primary objectives of Bill C-155 was to encourage value added processing in western Canada, particularly in the livestock industry. This would create thousands of new jobs. It was suggested that the processing industry would be enhanced by some $350 million. When can we expect—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has some concern as to whether this is a supplementary flowing from the answer to the previous question, which is the usual requirement for a supplementary.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, if you would hear me out you will find that it is directly related to jobs supposed to have been created under Bill C-155.

Since the passage of that Bill two packing plants in Alberta, Canada Packers and Burns, have closed their operations, with the loss of 1,000 jobs. I ask the Minister when western Canadians can expect the Government to fulfil its commitment to increase jobs in the livestock processing industry? When are these things going to become a reality?

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, the Chair again expresses concern about lengthy questions followed by lengthy answers. Again, there are a number of people on the Hon. Member's side seeking to be recognized.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to express my concern about the accuracy of the Hon. Member's questions. In his very lengthy preamble he stated that the chairman of the Senior Grain Advisory Committee is a former head of the CNR. He is dead wrong. The chairman of that committee is Mr. Murray Cormack, a very distinguished member of the grain producing industry in western Canada. He is the chairman; not the former head of the CNR. I suggest that the lack of information and knowledge on the part of the Hon. Member in that one instance is illustrative of his total lack of knowledge of the entire area.

ENERGY

EXPORT PRICE OF NATURAL GAS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance. He will know that the quickest way to support the Canadian dollar without raising interest rates is to sell more natural gas to the U.S. The Government's decision to stick with a single border price is creating hardship for the West, particularly for natural gas processors in an industry where employment has fallen by 50 per cent. Since a more flexible natural gas pricing system would earn billions of dollars in export sales, help the Canadian dollar, and create new jobs, why does the Government insist on staying with an obsolete pricing system? Is the Minister working with his colleague, the Minister of Energy, to ensure that there is a more equitable and economically efficient way of selling our resources?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know better. First of all, the price of natural gas was established after extensive consultations with the industry and the producing provinces. The arrangement arrived at represents the point of view of the industry and the provinces concerned, as well as of the federal Government. It was arrived at in agreement with the American authorities.

Obviously the Department of Energy and the Department of Finance are always examining and reviewing the situation, and are open to representations from anyone with views on how we could improve or expand our exports. But surely the Hon. Member cannot assume that just reducing the price would increase the revenue. You might be able to increase sales a little bit, but if you cut the price by half and increase sales volume by only 25 per cent, you end up with less money than you had before, not more. That is not going to help the Canadian dollar, or Canadians. It will only help Americans who would be able to buy Canadian gas at a very cheap rate, without the Canadian industry or people getting more benefits. As a matter of fact they would end up selling their heritage at a lower price than they are getting at the present time, with a lower total revenue. The Hon. lady's recommendation is one that she should examine much further.

Miss Carney: The Minister's answer indicates why the Government is so totally out of touch with economic reality. He must be the only person in the country who believes the single border price for natural gas is not obsolete. Everyone else doesn't.

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP CHARGE

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, dealing with obsolete taxes and prices, I would like to deal with the Canadian ownership charge imposed by the Government three years ago to pay for Petrofina. That has long since been paid for, yet the Government continues to pile up about $800 million in this account, and another $900 million next year. Since the Government has not brought forward the legislation which will terminate this account, and since Petro-Canada is offering cash discounts amounting to 16 cents a gallon on gasoline, is it the intention of the Government to return this money to the consumer, not through Parliament but through Petro-Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the main obsolete feature in this House certainly has to be the view of the Hon. Member of the situation of natural gas. The price of natural gas was determined in full consultation and with the full agreement of the industry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Is it the Conservative Party's view that they are going to establish this independently of the views of the producers and producing provinces? That is not the view of this Government, and that is not the policy followed by the Minister of Energy, nor is it the policy we are going to follow. We are going to continue a policy of consultation with the provincial Governments and the industry, and make changes once they have been considered appropriate by all concerned.

As far as the question raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, she knows the tax to which she referred is going to be assigned for energy purposes in Canada, and steps have already been announced in the Budget in that regard.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—EFFECT OF INCREASES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Just about three months ago we had a major increase in interest rates. Then I pointed out to the Minister that we were going through a bad old movie, which has since become a tragic movie in its impact on the people of Canada. The Minister said on March 15: "We have forecast a decline in interest rates between now and the end of the year." I point out that, since he said that, interest rates have gone in one direction and one direction only, that is up. Today they went up by almost a half a percentage point. The 2 per cent increase in interest rates which has taken place in the last 60 days has cost the typical home owner $24,000 on a mortgage. It has cost Canadian business over $2 billion in interest rate cost increases. When is this madness going to stop?

● (1430)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member deplores the increase in interest rates. He will certainly not be alone in that regard. This is generally deplored, not only in Canada but in the developing world and among industrial countries. If he looks at the European countries, or other countries around the world, he will find very serious and strenuous objections to the fact that interest rates are going up at the present time, fundamentally because of what is happening in the United States. For instance, interest rates have gone up a half a percentage point in Austria and Germany in the last day. They have gone up a full point in Sweden, and there are similar increases taking place in a number of other countries. The Hon. Member knows the tragic impact of these developments on developing countries also, and debtor countries in particular.

The issue is obviously related to what is happening in the United States. Strong representations have been made to the Government of the United States by other industrial countries as well as developing countries. We hope that steps will be taken, particularly in the United States, to reverse that particular trend which we all regret and certainly cannot support.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I point out that the people of Canada have some interest in what the Government of the United States is doing in this issue. However, they have particular interest in the actions of the Government of Canada on interest rates rather than in what other people are doing.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): We have made a proposal which we think could be effective in at least curtailing the rate of interest rate increases. The Government discarded that. Farmers, business people, and home owners are suffering. Is it the Government's intention merely to sit back and watch what happens, and allow interest rates to rise to the 20 per cent plus area again, or is the Government going to take some kind of action sometime soon to stop these increases?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have heard rhetoric rather than proposals from the NDP. I indicated to them that I had examined carefully the suggestion they made, upon which they did not elaborate. I indicated to them that it was filled with counterproductive elements—

An Hon. Member: Like what?

Mr. Lalonde: —which would make it a very ineffective and counterproductive proposal.

With regard to whether we would sit and do nothing, I want to remind my friend that the last time interest rates went up the Government took a number of steps to help farmers and home owners.

An Hon. Member: What?

Mr. Lalonde: Now they ask what. The NDP do not even remember what took place over the last two years.

Mr. Broadbent: Bankruptcies, that is what.

Mr. Lalonde: I will tell you what is happening now. If you want to buy a house now you can open up a $10,000 RHOSP which is income tax deductible. That means that you can save several thousands of dollars on the purchase of a house at the present time. That program is available at the present time for people who want to buy homes. We have come up with a mortgage interest rate proposal which we had to drag the NDP, kicking and screaming, into approving. That is going to provide support and help for people who have loans at the present time when they must renew their mortgages.

Mr. Murphy: More for the banks.

Mr. Lalonde: These are only two among many steps which we have taken. There are a number of programs of the ministry of housing which are helping people at low income levels in terms of social housing. The Hon. Member knows, or should know, that.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I point out to the Minister that it was not only the NDP but the business people involved in the mortgages who pointed out that they could not recommend to the people of Canada the proposal made by the Government. It was totally useless.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE SPECULATORS' TAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to return to the one concrete proposal which was made in the House. It certainly was not made by the Conservatives who have talked on both sides of this issue, as they have on every other. Will the Minister tell us why he is not prepared to put a special tax on large amounts of money invested outside Canada by speculators who want to take advantage of a national economic crisis? Why does he not put on such a tax to try to deter the outflow of capital, so that we can keep interest rates down for the people of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the NDP was not telling the truth—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —when he said that the construction industry was opposed to the mortgage rate proposal plan. I want to remind him that every organization, from the Consumers' Association to the housing organizations and the construction association, gave their full support to the mortgage rate proposal program.

Mr. Deans: That is not true.

Mr. Lalonde: If he had been in the House and followed the issue he would have known the degree of support which that Bill had.

Mr. Deans: That is not true.

Mr. Lalonde: It had very large and broad support. The fact is that that is what ended up pushing the NDP into allowing the Bill to go through.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: They realized they were alone out there against that Bill.

With regard to the other question, I answered it at length while the Hon. Member was visiting throughout the country in the last two weeks. I invite him to read Hansard.

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA RATE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. There was a major increase in the Bank of Canada rate to 12.36 per cent today. In other words, Governor Bouey is carrying out the intention which he expressed in his speech in Charlottetown that the Minister approved yesterday. This will cause the fourth round of increases in interest rates in Canada in the last three or four months.

Output in Canada has barely reached its level of three years ago before the recession began. In view of the fact, how can the Minister justify allowing this increase in the Bank of Canada rate, and the subsequent increases we will experience in interest rates at this time? This will bring on the recession which we are just steps away from right now.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): The best answer I could give to the Hon. Member would be to quote his statement of November 16, 1979 when he said: "Canada, quite literally, has no alternative to a temporary regime of higher interest rates." He should go back and read his own stuff.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has been there for four years and three months. That is not temporary. He has had lots of time to do something about the mess the Liberal Government left behind in 1980. The Leader of the unofficial Opposition puts the Liberal Government in, and then all he does is complain about the Liberal Government he has put in.

SALES TAX INCREASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): In addition to the increase in interest rates which is now going to go forward, the Minister has a tax increase going forward for Canadian consumers on October 1. In the next three years the Government is going to take $2.4 billion from Canadian consumers through the new special recovery tax, a 1 per cent increase in the sales tax. This year the government will take $300 million. How can the Minister justify these increased taxes on Canadian consumers whom he is crucifying with increased interest rates at the same time? How can he justify that, the unemployment it will bring, and the recession which will follow it?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that question has been asked many times and I have answered it. I am afraid the Member must have been outside the House at that time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PACIFIC SALMON TREATY NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A delegation from the Canadian section of the Canada-U.S. Parliamentary Association met recently in Washington with the two Senators from the State of Alaska and the two Senators from the State of Washington, to discuss the stalled West Coast salmon treaty negotiations. One of the recommendations of the Canadian group was to have the Minister appoint a personal representative, just as the United States Secretary of State has appointed a personal representative. Would the Minister indicate whether or not he will accept this recommendation and if, in fact, he has appointed a personal representative to fulfil these duties?

• (1440)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at the last meeting which I held with Secretary Shultz, the question of the Pacific salmon negotiations was fully discussed. At that time I made the suggestion that we ought to take some new steps and inject some renewed impulse into the negotiations, and raised the idea of representatives along the lines mentioned by the Hon. Member.

Since that time Mr. Shultz has appointed a personal representative and I have asked the Hon. Mitchell Sharp to act as the representative of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Mr. Sharp has accepted. I think that he is particularly qualified to act in this capacity because, through his experience as the Northern Gas Pipeline Commissioner, he has established a personal relationship with quite a number of the persons who will be involved in this negotiation.

I make particular reference to the Senators to whom the Hon. Member has referred, because without their co-operation I doubt whether it will ever be possible for Canada to reach an agreement. We have been very close to an agreement from time to time, but in each case we have had to draw back because of some new element that was injected into the talks mainly by one State or the other, in the person of one of the Senators.

STATUS OF WOMEN

SHARE IN EMPLOYMENT TRAINING PROGRAM

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. According to a report published recently by the Canadian Congress on Learning Opportunities for Women, the female share of skill training places in the Canada Manpower Training Program has fallen from 39 per cent in 1981-82 to only 29 per cent in 1983-84. As the Minister knows, women constitute 40 per cent of the Canadian labour force. Will the Minister explain this shocking situation which has developed since the introduction of the National Training Act in 1982? Did she and her officials see this coming?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I too am disturbed by the statistics. However, I must point out that it is not because there has been a decline in the availability but that there has been a decline in the demand. We had very serious discussions with the provincial Ministers responsible, regarding this decline in demand. We are looking into the matter more thoroughly at the moment.

Mr. McLean: The Minister must know that the data suggest that this is a profound neglect on the part of her Government toward the women of Canada.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, rather than blaming the provinces, as the Minister responsible what representations has she made to the Minister of Employment and Immigration in regard to this discrimination against women in the workplace?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, again I think the Hon. Member has his facts mixed up, because we have increased the number of places available to women. The demand has not kept up with what is available to these people. It is of great concern to me, because it is important that women go in for retraining, particularly in those jobs which offer them non-traditional occupations. I repeat that those spaces are there. We have, through Employment and Immigration, increased the number of spaces available to them through the training programs.

Mr. McLean: What have you done about daycare?

Mrs. Erola: It is the demand that is simply not there. I was suggesting to the Ministers responsible, and to the Ministers of Education, that we do a better job of explaining to these women that they must take advantage of these spaces and these training programs, and that we must have a greater program of public awareness—

Mr. McLean: It is all the women's fault, is it?

Mrs. Erola: —to make sure that they do take advantage of those seats.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF INCREASED INTEREST RATES ON SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, who has left. I do not blame him a bit for leaving. I will redirect my question to the Minister of Finance, who will know that, as a result of the interest rate changes over the last three months, the cost to business in Canada has increased in excess of $2 billion. He will also know that as a result of these changes the level of bankruptcies will increase, the level of receiverships will increase, and the number of people simply walking away from their businesses will increase.

The Minister of Finance will be able to walk down the main street of Canada and see it boarded up in the next number of weeks as a result of his high interest rate policy. He knows full well that the situation will get significantly worse as a result of these high interest rates. In light of this evidence, what does he plan to do to assist the small business sector?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have introduced a number of measures to help the small business sector. The Hon. Member is aware of those that were contained in the Budget of last year, which meant several hundreds of millions of dollars of tax advantage to small business. Just now, there is before the House an Income Tax Act Bill—

Mr. McKnight: Where is it?

Mr. Lalonde: It is before the House. We are in negotiations with the Conservatives to get it passed. The problem is that the critic of the Conservative Party cannot make up his mind whether he is ready to support this Bill or not. The fact is that there is a Bill before the House right now that will mean tax simplification for small business, which will mean a tax reduction of $150 million for small business this year. But what do we see? We see the Tories divided amongst themselves and unable to make up their minds. I hope they will put pressure on their spokesmen and make sure that the Conservatives will support the measure that the NDP and the Liberal Party are ready to pass today or tomorrow, if the Conservatives want to co-operate. This will mean help for small business in this country. Please get together and co-operate, and we will be able to get this for small business.

Mr. Riis: I want the Minister of Finance to leave us out of this family dispute that they are having. He knows full well that we have been ready to discuss that legislation for weeks and weeks.

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism who will know that the cost for small business has increased nearly $2 billion as a result of increased interest rates over the last three months. The Minister says he is interested and concerned about small business. He took away the Small Business Development Bond. What does he plan to do—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is raising another question on a supplementary.

Mr. Broadbent: It is the same one.

Mr. Speaker: There are many Hon. Members seeking to be recognized. We will let it go, but we must have some rules on supplementaries.

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has forgotten some of the other things that this Government does for small business. Of course the figures just came out this week that last year we had a record year in providing loans through the Small Businesses Loans Act because of the support and the commitment of this Government.

Oral Questions

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

AWARDING OF CANADA DAY FIREWORKS CONTRACT

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. It concerns the awarding of contracts for Canada Day fireworks displays.

Of the two companies that submitted tenders, two-thirds of the total contract was awarded to Amplemen of Montreal, which is a company that imports its fireworks. Hands Fireworks of Ottawa, which manufactures its product, has been forced to lay off production workers as a result of this action. Both bids were well within 2 per cent of each other. So much for the Government's buy Canadian policy.

Why was consideration not given to awarding the contract to a firm that manufactures its product here in Canada? Obviously the Government has a greater preoccupation with paying out political patronage than with saving Canadian jobs and using Canadian products to celebrate Canada's birthday.

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, instead of talking nonsense, the Hon. Member would be well advised to find out exactly how contracts are managed in Canada. The Department of Supply and Services awards 360,000 contracts annually. If the Hon. Member had had the courtesy to give me notice of her question, I would have had the requisite information, which I would then have made available to the Hon. Member. However, I will now have to check before I can give further details. As far as Canadian content is concerned, Mr. Speaker, it is one of the criteria that is always considered when we evaluate contracts. However, we always try to get the best products for the best value, so that Canadian taxpayers will get their money's worth.

[English]

TEST SAMPLING OF FIREWORKS

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister if he will also conduct an immediate investigation into all the reasons why the majority of the contract was awarded to Ampleman. On April 17 his departmental officials were advised that a random sampling of the Ampleman product showed that the shells were only partially filled with pyrotechnic composition. The remainder contained rice hulls, bits of paper, and other stuffing which fill the shells at no cost. In other words, officials at Supply and Services, with full knowledge of this information which, in effect, constitutes possible fraud, award the contract to Ampleman, resulting in lost Canadian jobs. The Canadian taxpayer is paying for fireworks displays, not rice krispies.

• (1450)

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is very fond of rice krispies, but I think she should be more careful about referring to the possibility of fraud. I think she is using very tendentious terms. As I said in my first reply, I shall make the necessary inquiries and as soon as I have the information, I shall pass it on to the Hon. Member.

INDUSTRY

AWARDING OF BRAKES CONTRACT FOR CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD RAIL CARS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the congenial Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Yesterday he announced his plans for a great new Shop Canadian program which will ask Canadians to compare products and buy Canadian where possible. The day before yesterday the Minister received a telex from Wabco Limited of Stoney Creek, Ontario. In it, I believe Wabco Limited asked for a review of the recently awarded contract given to New York Airbrake for 50 per cent of the brakes for wheat cars bought by the Canadian Wheat Board. What does the Minister intend to do about this request in light of the fact that the Canadian content of the New York Airbrake parts does not even approach that of Wabco's, and the price differential on this order was only 3.5 per cent?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, when I received the telex I undertook to inquire why the decision was made to buy the vehicle with the component parts as indicated. I have not yet had a response.

EFFECT OF AWARDING CONTRACT TO UNITED STATES COMPANY

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question was to be for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, because I am told he as well received a telex from Wabco. However, I shall direct my question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion again. Considering the fact that awarding 50 per cent of a contract to a firm based in the United States will cause the loss of 150 jobs immediately, and more in the future, what does the Minister propose to do in response to the telex he received? I trust the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion will speak to the Minister of Employment and Immigration about this. Surely the Minister of Employment cannot stand by, nor can the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, and see that number of Canadian jobs disappear?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will make representation to my colleague as requested by the Hon. Member. But first I must get the facts to find out whether the Canadian company was competitive. I made it very clear in the announcement yesterday that in the "Think Canadian" campaign we were not saying "buy Canadian at any price". One of the most important aspects to create jobs in this country is that we have to be competitive in quality, price, service, and all the other facts that dictate why consumers buy, whether they are industrial purchasers or individuals.

HOUSING

INCREASE IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—MORTGAGE PROVISION AGENCY ADVOCATED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I was looking for the Minister of Finance, but if he is not available I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. It is now clear that mortgage interest rates simply cannot be tied to the normal interest rate flow. As a result of the increases that have taken place in mortgage interest rates since February, 100,000 Canadians are in a position where they cannot enter the housing market as purchasers. Will the Minister of Finance take into consideration that it is quite well within the area of responsibility of the Government of Canada to establish a separate and independent mortgage providing agency? Will he move now to eliminate the tie between normal interest rates which fluctuate daily, weekly, monthly, normally going up, and mortgage interest rates, in order that Canadian families can afford to buy homes?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that there is a plan available at the present providing for tax assisted home ownership. That was provided under the last Budget. Canadians who want to buy homes can use the establishment of a registered home ownership scheme whereby they will get substantial benefit if they want to get a tax advantage coming from this particular development.

The Hon. Member knows that we have also passed a mortgage rate protection plan which is going to ensure that if interest rates rise by more than 2 per cent from the time a mortgage is taken out to the time it is renewed, there will be protection over that 2 per cent increase for the same length of time as the first mortgage was taken. We have already taken these steps, and if additional steps are going to be needed, they would be announced in due time.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well that the mortgage insurance plan offered by the Government was criticized severely by the Canadian Real Estate Association and by the Canadian Consumers' Association. In both cases they said they could not recommend the plan to anyone.

MORTGAGE PROTECTION PLAN

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. Given that he knows people who already own a home and already have a mortgage cannot take advantage of the Registered Home Ownership Plan provisions—there is no point in it for them—and given that they are going to be affected now by the escalating interest rates, to the detriment not only of those home owners but also of the people who would normally build the homes that would be purchased in Canada, will the Government not now recognize that mortgage protection is necessary and that a mortgage plan must be introduced in Canada, independent of all other funding arrangements for other purchasing?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the beauty of being in the New Democratic Party is that you can propose all kinds of expenditures and never have to account for the financing of them. There they are proposing another scheme that would mean significant expenditures for the federal Government. I remind my friend that we already have a $30 billion deficit in this country, and that every NDP member who rises wants the Government to spend more and more. I would be able to take the representations from that Party more seriously if New Democrats would be a little more responsible, indicate how they would finance all their activities, and indicate what kind of a Budget they would present. But thank God they will never have such a problem, the problem of presenting a Budget for this country.

INCOME TAX ACT

PASSAGE OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, who has seriously misled the House and the country with respect to the so-called provisions of the Income Tax Bill which, as he knows, have not yet been tabled on the floor of the House of Commons. How can the Minister ask this Parliament and its Members, when we have been calling for the introduction of this legislation consistently from the time of the last Budget, when the Minister did not even have the draft legislation ready until the end of May and when it was finally, because of this Party, brought before the committee for a preliminary look to deal with this legislation at this point? Will the Minister not admit that the reason this legislation has not now been passed by this Parliament is because of the incompetence of the Minister of Finance, the incompetence of this Government, and the incompetence of the House Leader of the Liberal Party?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for his efforts at—

Mr. Trudeau: Obfuscation.

Mr. Lalonde: —obfuscation and sloughing over the serious divisions inside his own Party. This Bill has been produced in draft form, as he indicated, many weeks ago, referred to a parliamentary committee—

Mr. Epp: Where is the Bill?

Mr. Lalonde: —and has been endorsed by the parliamentary committee. The ways and means motion has been tabled in this House. The spokesman for the Conservative Party has had the Bill in his hands for the last while—

An Hon. Member: Where is the Bill?

Mr. Lalonde: —and the Conservatives—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Finance has the floor.

Mr. Trudeau: It hurts over there to hear the truth.

Mr. Lalonde: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. The Conservatives do not want to hear the truth. The fact is the Liberals are the Government. We and the NDP are ready to pass this Bill, today or tomorrow, with one speaker.

Mr. Epp: Where is the Bill?

Mr. Lalonde: That Bill means hundreds of millions of dollars of help for the farmers and for the small businessmen, and it means simplification of the tax system. It means many other benefits and advantages to Canadians. At least there are two Parties in the House which have the interest of Canadians at heart. I hope the Conservatives will muster their courage, get together a little, talk with their spokesman and ensure that the Bill is passed before we adjourn.

● (1500)

Some Hon. Members: Where is the Bill?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We know that the Liberals and NDP Members are very cozy. They will be able to work together even more closely after the next election, in the Opposition, because that is where they will be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, why has the Minister of Finance not yet brought the Bill forward for introduction? I have not heard one word from the Government House Leader with respect to this legislation. The Minister of Finance misleads the House, because he knows that we are and have been prepared to give the income tax provision expeditious treatment. However, I can tell the Minister right now that when it comes down to one speaker per Party, he is dreaming in technicolour.

Will the Minister at least bring forward the Bill, or introduce it at the appropriate time? We will have a look at it. I am meeting with the Government House Leader at four o'clock this afternoon. Perhaps we could discuss whether we have enough time to deal with the matter, but it will not be on the basis of one speaker per Party. We in this Party do not operate in that way.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is the trouble with the Conservatives. They cannot operate on the basis of an agreed policy. They will want to have 35 speakers who will say different things. This is not new. This has been their record over the last four years. They cannot make up their minds on anything. They cannot agree. The Bill is there. We are ready to proceed. If the Conservatives want to proceed with it, that is fine.

Mr. Dick: Table the Bill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where is the Bill?

Mr. Lalonde: If not, Canadians will know whom to blame when the next election comes. Because small businessmen and farmers will not have had the benefits to which they are entitled, they will blame the Tories.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CLARKE—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MR. TRUDEAU

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as Your Honour will know, this is the first time I have had an opportunity since last Friday, when I raised the question of privilege concerning the language used by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in response to my question on that day—

Mr. Speaker: The matter raised by the Hon. Member on Friday related to alleged unparliamentary language. The Chair found at that time that there was no unparliamentary language. An examination of the "blues" has substantiated the opinion of the Chair.

Is the Hon. Member rising on another matter?

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that the Chair had made a decision. I understood that both the Chair and I were to wait until—

Mr. Speaker: No. A question was raised concerning the use of the word "fabrication", whether or not it was unparliamentary. The Chair made very clear that the frequency of usage of that term where it had not been deemed unparliamentary rendered the Chair in a position of not being able to recognize this instance as being an unparliamentary one.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in my exchange with the Minister of Finance during Oral Questions, there will be a meeting of House Leaders at four o'clock this afternoon. I simply say to the Government House Leader that, in that we carry on negotiations with respect to Government business, it alarms me when a Cabinet Minister rises and makes reference to supposed arrangements which have been entered into. As the Government House Leader knows, there has been no consultation whatsoever with me as House Leader of the Official Opposition. Putting all that aside, I know that in the last and dying days of this Parliament the Minister of Finance is probably concerned about his future in Cabinet.

I bring to the attention of the Government House Leader some items of business which we may be able to introduce today, with the idea of discussing them for the purpose of making some progress. There has been much discussion about the Bill to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. The Minister of Agriculture indicated publicly to a number of groups that he wanted this Bill tabled in the House. In light of the fact we are reaching the end of this trimester, as evidenced by the Speaker's invitation to Room 16 at the end of the day, is there any possibility of that Bill being tabled today for first reading? We are certainly prepared to give unanimous consent for that Bill to be tabled, if there is any difficulty with respect to bringing it forward.

Mr. Pinard: What Bill?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The proposed Bill to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

Mr. Pinard: It is included.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: All right, it will be tabled today. Also I should like to mention to the Government House Leader the Act to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms and errors which deal with matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Statutes of Canada. Traditionally that Bill could be passed. I know the draft Bill has been received by the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It has received its approval and the necessary assurances have been given by Government officials with respect to it. As far as I am concerned, that Bill could go through without debate if the Government House Leader is able to table it for first, second and third readings and disposition. I would be prepared to do that immediately.

In terms of the other items with which we can deal, such as proceeding expeditiously with Bill C-50, an Act to amend the Agricultural Stabilization Act, I think the Government House Leader will find that we are prepared to deal with them. I am prepared as well, as usual, to see how much business we can get through before the end of this trimester.

Could the Government House Leader give us a report with respect to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act and the anomalies Bill to which I have referred? We will carry on discussions at four o'clock today.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I must confess shock and dismay at the actions of the Official Opposition House Leader, given that when I rose not a month ago to ask a question which I felt was necessary he dressed me down for having attempted to negotiate on the floor of the House. I must say to him that I find his action today, in light of his comments on that day, reprehensible.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think I am making progress. I feel a lot better now.

Mr. Deans: Since the matter has been raised, the Government House Leader knows full well from private discussions which I have had with him that we were prepared to pass immediately the section of the Bill relating to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act which deals with the request of tobacco farmers for the right to establish an orderly marketing procedure, if it could be separated from the balance of the Bill.

Mr. McKnight: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: We believe the balance of the Bill requires some further consideration and hearings. However, I am prepared to make my representations on the other items at the House Leaders' meeting in 50 minutes.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West would like sugar in his coffee at four o'clock.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, as the Government House Leader knows, I do not take sugar; I am sweet enough as it is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: When I hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain say that anything I do is reprehensible, I know I am on the right track, because this man has no judgment.

I am prepared to discuss matters in confidence, but when the Minister of Finance rises in his place and suggests that there have been negotiations in terms of legislation passing when in fact there have not been, I have to rise and ensure that the record is clear.

I have no problem with the Government House Leader in terms of the way in which negotiations have been carried on. I think we have made great progress. I look forward to black coffee and to his putting a collar around the Minister of Finance so that he does not make statements which cause me to stand in my place to repudiate them.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I can hardly let this statement pass. A little earlier, towards the end of oral question period, when I was not in my seat and the Hon. Member probably thought I was not in the House, he said that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) had acted improperly and that the Government House Leader was not any good. Now he says that everything is fine, that we reached an agreement, that I am very good, and that the coffee in my office is excellent. I wish he would make up his mind. I am at my seat, and I am willing to negotiate in good faith and to continue to do so, but I do not think it is proper to reproach the Minister of Finance for his action regarding the Bill on amendments to the Income Tax Act.

In the House it is common practice that Ministers with bills to table in the House discuss them with the respective critics in the two Opposition Parties. The Income Tax Act, that's it. The Minister of Finance consulted me yesterday and asked whether he could send a copy of the Bill to his Finance critics on the opposite side of the House. The Minister confirmed that he sent a copy of the Bill to the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). He also sent a copy to one of the Members of the New Democratic Party. I think that is the polite thing to do and that the Minister of Finance is to be congratulated on his attitude and the way he acted. If the Opposition is really in good faith in this instance— They could have had knowledge of the Bill. The Notice of Ways and Means appearing on the Order Paper is basically what the Bill contains. Hon. Members are familiar with the procedure, as is my hon. friend.

In the circumstances, the Hon. Member is wrong to criticize the Minister of Finance. The Minister is extremely competent and has done wonders at a time when the economy was in great difficulty. His 6 and 5 policy and his other policies have been very successful in this country, and the Hon. Member should be glad that the Minister, in spite of his success, is not easily influenced and has remained very close to the people and to the Members of the Opposition, and that he decided to trust them and submit bills to them prior to tabling them in the House, something he did again only recently.

Mr. Speaker, it is not unusual for the Minister of Finance to negotiate directly with his parliamentary critics. This is common practice. If these negotiations prove to be successful, forty-five minutes from now the Hon. Member, who is Parliamentary House Leader for the Progressive Conservative Party (Mr. Hnatyshyn) will have a chance to agree on a limited debate tomorrow to adopt this Bill. If there is no agreement, the Bill will be considered in the fall when the House sits again.

But I certainly do not want to hear any complaints about not being consulted. The Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party have both been advised of the details of this Bill. All they have to do is tell us that they agree to a short debate. When the Hon. Member says that, to him, only one speaker per party on a Bill of this kind is unacceptable, I can understand he is not happy about having only one speaker, but, even if we had three or four speakers, we could keep debate within reasonable limits so that we could adopt the Bill in time for Royal Assent to be given before the House adjourns for the summer.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, the point I am trying to make is that the Hon. Member was wrong to criticize the Minister of Finance. The Minister's approach to these things has always been exemplary, and if the Hon. Member is really prepared to act in good faith, we can reach an agreement on this Bill, which has already been sent to his Party, this afternoon at the Parliamentary House Leaders' meeting.

As for the Bill about archaisms to which the Hon. Member referred, we shall probably have time to introduce the Bill and proceed, I hope I make myself clear, to adoption without debate.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order concerning House business. The Government House Leader said, and I wrote down his words, "Members opposite have had access to the Bill". I am a Member opposite and I have not had access to the Bill. We are talking about an amendment to the Income Tax Act. Quite frankly—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is engaging in debate. That is not a point of order. The matter has been raised by the House Leader for his Party and there has been a very explicit exchange on this subject.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member is raising the same point, there has been a very explicit exchange between the House Leader for the Hon. Member's Party and the Minister of Finance on the subject on which he is apparently touching. Does he have something new to add? At the moment the Chair fails to see how privilege is involved. If the Hon. Member has a point of privilege, we will hear it.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Speaker, this is an issue which is fundamental to my being in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Bye, bye.

Mr. Gamble: If there is anything that strikes at the privilege of a Member, it is the denial of an opportunity to read a piece of complex legislation which is about to be introduced by the Government—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not a point of order, nor is it privilege. There has been a very explicit statement by the Minister of measures taken to date. There has been a question directly on the point and repeated with supplementaries from the House Leader of the Hon. Member's Party. In the circumstances, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis).

PETITIONS

MR. RIIS—TELEVISION LICENSING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of presenting two petitions today, one signed by a number of residents of the Kamloops-Shuswap area who are concerned about the MAT-TV systems that are operating within the licensed area of a legitimate cable firm in the Kamloops area. The undersigned employees of Kamloops Cable Net hereby petition the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) to enforce the above mentioned Act, namely Section 29.3 of the Broadcasting Act.

MR. RIIS—CANADA POST/CONSUMERS DISTRIBUTING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting on behalf of a number of jewellers in the Kamloops area a concern that they have regarding Canada Post becoming a partner with Consumers Distributing and really not carrying out the business of the Canada Post mandate, namely to deliver mail. They are concerned that by entering into an arrangement between Canada Post and Consumers Distributing it would be creating unfair competition for local independent retailers who pay heavily to operate their own shops, while Consumers Distributing is able to use taxpayer-financed buildings as well as taxpayer-paid employees.

[Translation]

MR. BERGER—ESCALATION OF THE ARMS RACE

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table petitions signed by some 500 individuals, including 150 residents of Nova Scotia and 350 residents of the riding of Laurier and the Montreal area. These are in addition to the 1,200 individuals who signed the petitions I tabled on April 18 of this year.

The petitioners are encouraged by the efforts of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to promote a dialogue between the super powers, and they ask that Parliament support the Prime Minister in those efforts.

These petitions are particularly appropriate today, now that the House has just adopted the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security Act—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is not entitled to make a speech at this time.

Mr. Berger: To finish what I was saying, now that the Albert Einstein Foundation has awarded its international peace prize to the Prime Minister, we can say it was ordinary citizens like those who signed this petition who awakened the conscience of Parliament and the Members of this House.

MR. McKNIGHT—MAIL DELIVERY TO ADANAC, SASK.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition to the House by the undersigned residents of the Adanac area in my constituency in the Province of Saskatchewan. The undersigned are strongly protesting the decision by Canada Post to terminate rural mail delivery to the residents of Adanac. The residents of Adanac pay the same number of cents per stamp as anyone else in Canada and at times will have to travel up to 35 miles to secure mail. That does not strike me as being equitable for the people of my area.

• (1520)

MS. McDONALD—TREATMENT OF JAPANESE-CANADIANS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a large number of petitions on the issue of redress to Canadians of Japanese origin for injustices during World War II and afterwards. I will group these petitions which contain hundreds of signatures of people from all over Toronto and a few from people from other parts of Canada.

One of the petitions states that the National Association of Japanese-Canadians seek official acknowledgement from the Canadian Government of the injustices committed against Japanese-Canadians during and after World War II. Whereas the internment, exclusion and exiling of Japanese-Canadians violated individual human rights and freedoms and destroyed the fabric of the community, the National Association of Japanese-Canadians seeks redress in the form of compensation. Moreover, the National Association of Japanese-Canadians seeks a review and amendment to the War Measures Act and relevant sections of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms so that no Canadian will ever again be subjected to such wrongs.

Further, I have a petition signed mainly by persons who are not Japanese-Canadians who state that they support Japanese-Canadians in their democratic process and in their redress efforts. We urge the Government to enter into negotiations in full consultation with President Arthur Miki of the National Association of Japanese-Canadians.

Finally, there are a large number of signatures on a petition which states quite categorically that the petitioners reject Multiculturalism Minister David Collenette's proposal on the topic of Japanese-Canadian redress on the basis of lack of negotiations with the National Association of Japanese-Canadians. They support Japanese-Canadians in their democratic process and urge the Government of Canada to begin full negotiation and consultation with the National Association of Japanese-Canadians through President Art Miki.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-255, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act (supremacy of the Act) and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to allow the Hon. Member to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. The purpose of this Bill is to affirm the supremacy of the Official Languages Act over the powers and regulations of Parliament and the Government of Canada, in order to stress the truly national nature of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, the purpose of this Bill is to empower the Canadian Transport Commission to order the construction of six-foot chain-link fences along railway rights of way to protect children entering onto rail lines.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

LOUIS DAVID RIEL

MEASURE TO REVOKE CONVICTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-257, an Act to revoke the conviction of Louis David Riel.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair may have reservations about the infringement on a royal prerogative of mercy, but with this caveat I shall proceed. Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in a number of previous years, I and other Members of the House have introduced Bills calling for the pardon of Louis Riel. From what I have heard from the Métis people of Canada, those people would prefer a Bill that revokes the conviction of Louis Riel rather than the pardoning of Louis Riel. I take great pleasure in moving this Bill and hope we can pass it through all stages tomorrow.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in order for Canada to set an example, it should cease to be a target or a participant in the preparation for a final holocaust. I move this Bill in the hope that any participation by our country in the nuclear weapons race would be totally meaningless and therefore Canada should be declared a weapons-free zone.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

On the Order: Introduction of Bills:

June 22, 1984—Mr. Murphy—Bill intituled: "An Act respecting the electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador)".

Mr. Speaker: At this point we do not appear to have the Bill of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) before us. In order for us to proceed, it is necessary for the Clerk to have a copy of the Bill. If the Hon. Member can get a copy to the Table, perhaps we can do it by consent or perhaps we can do it tomorrow. It is as he chooses.

Mr. Murphy: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with first reading of Senate Public Bills, I would like to ask the unanimous consent of the House for reverting to Introduction of Bills. Earlier, the Opposition Parties generously offered to allow introduction today of a Bill for which notice was given by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and which concerns the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

The notice appears on today's Order Paper, but normally, the Bill would have been introduced tomorrow. If you have the Bill, we could perhaps, with the unanimous consent of the House, introduce the Bill now. If you do not, we will see that you do receive the Bill, and it could be done later on.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-56, an Act to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Whelan, seconded by Mr. Pinard, moves that Bill C-56, an Act to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I did not agree. I am prepared to give this matter expeditious treatment, and I can assure the Minister that the Bill has now been introduced. But as the Government House Leader will appreciate, he has stated the order of business and, therefore, we will deal with the Bill later this day. We are quite prepared to have the Bill put through later this day. However, I think it would be appropriate first to distribute the Bill to Members for their consideration.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? By consent, later this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we were prepared to put the Bill through all stages now. However, if we are to deal with the Bill later today, we will seek the proper consent in due time. It may be that we will have the time to deal with the Bill today. If not, it will be made an order of business for tomorrow. In any case, it will be called before the end of this session.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

Question No. 398—Mr. Howie:

Who in the National Film Board is responsible for maintaining levels of acceptable good taste in its productions?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Film Board as follows:

The Government Film Commissioner is the final authority on whether or not a National Film Board production will be released for public viewing. It is useful to note that NFB films represent the work of one or more artists working to make the most effective film possible for a designated audience. The question of taste is recognized as a matter of individual perception and each film director as well as the Government Film Commissioner is careful to ensure accuracy of information while assuming that standards of good taste are observed.

2. Were there any computer analyses of how various sulphur-dioxide-emission-reduction strategies would accomplish a reduction of wet sulphate deposition in sensitive areas in Canada, east of the Saskatchewan—Manitoba border and, if so, what were their results?

3. Did the Department of the Environment state that an annual loading limit of 20 kilograms of wet sulphate per hectare would protect moderately sensitive areas in eastern Canada from further deterioration and, if so (a) what scientific justification is there for the statement (b) on what studies, papers or reports is the statement based?

3. Yes. (a) Research (described in the report named below) indicates that moderately sensitive aquatic ecosystems that were studied in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Ontario, Nova Scotia, Maine and New Hampshire which received substantially more than 20 kilograms per hectare per year wet sulphate deposition, experienced effects such as increased acidity and damage to fish population. Ecosystems receiving substantially less than 20 kilograms per hectare per year deposition experienced no effects. Therefore, the value of 20 kilograms per hectare per year is considered to be a reasonable first approximation to a target loading.

(b) Canadian justification of the 20 kilogram target is based on field research that has been described in the final report of Work Group 1 on Impact Assessment under the United States-Canada Memorandum of Intent on Transboundary Air Pollution.

CANADA-NEW BRUNSWICK SUBSIDIARY AGREEMENT

Question No. 809—Mr. Howie:

1. Does the Government have any financial commitment, or did it expend any funds, for the revitalization of downtown Moncton, New Brunswick and, if so (a) what amount (b) under what programs and, in each case, how and when were assistance applications filed?

2. Did any department oversee the federal role in the project and, if so, what department?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) The federal Government entered into a Canada-New Brunswick Subsidiary Agreement under the General Development Agreement on a 80/20 cost sharing basis with the federal contribution not to exceed $8,000,000. Of this amount approximately $825,000 was expended in 1983/84.

(b) Funding for this project was made available under the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program announced in the April 19, 1983 budget. At the time the program was announced, it was anticipated that the Government would be requested to contribute to the revitalization of the downtown core of Moncton. This was confirmed on August 4, 1983 when representatives of the City of Moncton met with the Minister of Public Works Canada and senior officials of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, Public Works Canada and the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development to present their "Revitalization of Downtown Moncton Plan" and to request financial assistance.

2. The responsibility for the Moncton Core Revitalization Subsidiary Agreement was transferred to Public Works Canada.

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA OIL AND GAS AGREEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen, for Mr. Chrétien, that Bill C-43, An Act respecting the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement on Offshore Oil and Gas Resource Management and Revenue Sharing and to make related and consequential amendments, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Herbert in the Chair.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-43, an Act respecting the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement on Offshore Oil and Gas Resource Management and Revenue Sharing and to make related and consequential amendments.

On Clause 2—Definitions

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Is there a Cabinet Minister here today who is responsible for this Bill? Are we going to have anyone acting on behalf of the Government who will have officials in the Chamber in order that Members can satisfy themselves as to some of the complexities of the Bill?

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the intention of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to respond to the question?

Mr. Hopkins: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I see the officials in the Chamber and I am pleased about that. However, there is a Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is drawing a salary for that purpose. Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us what is more important to the Minister of Energy than being in this Chamber at this time to answer questions about this very important piece of legislation? Why is the Minister of Energy not with us?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has assigned this responsibility to me. I would suggest that any questions of that nature should be addressed to the Minister himself.

Mr. Hawkes: This legislation refers to an agreement. Was the Parliamentary Secretary present when the agreement was reached? Was he physically present?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is obvious. I was appointed Parliamentary Secretary on March 1 of this year. As the Hon. Member knows, the agreement precedes that date.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I have allowed this exchange to carry on although it is hardly a point of order. It is not essential for the Minister to be present. However, if there is another point which the Hon. Member for Calgary West wishes to raise, he may do so.

• (1540)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I would like to turn over a decision to you. This Chamber is being asked to approve an agreement. An "agreement" is an understanding between at least two parties, perhaps more. Do we have someone from the Government side who is recommending this agreement to us who was present when the agreement was reached? Do we have anyone who can testify before us as to what happened, as to how the agreement was reached, as to the importance of it? If we do not, are we proceeding, Mr. Chairman, in the proper way for a Committee of the Whole of the Parliament of Canada?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It is not necessary for the Minister to be present. It is not a point of order. It is entirely up to the Government to proceed in the fashion it wishes. The questions should be put and if the Hon. Member is not satisfied with the answers he takes the appropriate action.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, this is being ridiculous on the part of the Hon. Member. We are dealing with a Bill, and we are at the Committee of the Whole stage. All the Hon. Member has to do, and all he is allowed to do, is to comment on the Bill, ask questions on the clauses of the Bill, but not on anything else. Parliamentary Secretaries are appointed to assist Ministers in their parliamentary duties. We have an excellent Parliamentary Secretary here. He is very well assisted by very competent officials and he will be glad to answer questions in relation to clauses of the Bill.

For the Hon. Member opposite to refer to something which happened outside the House, and to blame someone because he is not here to answer questions, is not according to parliamentary practice. We are dealing with a Bill. The Hon. Member is allowed to ask questions on clauses of the Bill. We are willing to answer him, and that should settle the matter.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry, I must cut this discussion off. This is purely debate. There is no point of order. The exchange has been made. Two points of view have been expressed. I feel that should be the end of that particular point. We are discussing Clause 2. Shall Clause 2 carry?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have some questions on Clause 2. The clause refers to an agreement reached on March 2, 1982. Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us whether or not there is anything added to this piece of legislation which was not agreed to by March 2, 1982? Is there anything subsequent which has been added? If so, can the Parliamentary Secretary identify it for us?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, there are some sections here which were not referred to in the original agreement. They will be identified as we go on.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us, then, why we have this definition of "agreement", if it is not an accurate definition?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this Act, of course, is to implement the agreement. For clarification, I might say to the Hon. Member that in certain areas we had to go into explanations, and to implement the ideas, to put further definitions into the Bill to cover those items. Those are the differences we are referring to.

Mr. Hawkes: Can I repeat my question? I believe the wording of the definition of "agreement" refers to the situation as at March 2, 1982. The Parliamentary Secretary tells me that the agreements reached in this Bill extend beyond that date but it does not say that in the definition of "agreement". I am simply inquiring why it does not say that.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, the answer supplements the agreement which was made at that time. As we go through the clauses we have to have some flexibility in describing the agreement and putting it in. Therefore, I believe in a general sense the spirit of the agreement is in this legislation and I do not believe there are any great departures from it.

Mr. Hawkes: The same clause refers to a definition in the oil Act for oil and gas. Can the Parliamentary Secretary give us in his words the difference? Can he define for us the difference between oil and gas? It is really quite critical to some parts of this Bill.

Mr. Hopkins: Which parts specifically is the Hon. Member referring to?

Mr. Hawkes: Clause 2(2).

Mr. Hopkins: The term "gas" refers to gas or gas liquids. That is the reason there is a separation of the two.

Mr. Hawkes: I appreciate the fact that the Parliamentary Secretary is trying to be helpful. What is the critical difference between oil and gas?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there has ever been any difference between what is oil and what is gas and gas liquids. I am not quite sure what the Hon. Member is driving at.

Mr. Hawkes: If I can refer to a clause which appears a little later on the Province of Nova Scotia, the people of Nova Scotia and the Government of Nova Scotia have a right to a 25 per cent interest in one kind of deal and a 50 per cent interest in the others. Therefore, we must be able to define which is an oil field and which is gas field. We had better be able to do it precisely or we will end up in a court of law. It is pretty disturbing that we are being asked to push this Bill through the House in one day when the Government reached an agreement two years and three months ago. If something as fundamental as the definitional difference between "oil" and "gas" is not known to the Government, or it has not decided what that difference is, or if it cannot explain it, then, Mr. Speaker, I suggest we are really in trouble.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, the definition which the Hon. Member is seeking is laid down in another Act and I will attempt to get that definition for him.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, can the Parliamentary Secretary define for us the term "field"?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, the term "field" is described in another Act. It says right in subsection (3) that "field" has the same meaning as in the Oil and Gas Production Act. A lot of the terms which are included in this particular section of the Bill are already laid out in other Acts which are in place.

Mr. Hawkes: The Bill refers to the Oil and Gas Production Act or the definition of "field". Is the difference between an oil field and a gas field described in that Act, the Oil and Gas Production Act?

• (1550)

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, "field" is described in the Oil and Gas Production Act and the other is described in the Canada Oil and Gas Act. The Hon. Member is asking questions related to quite a number of Acts in the energy field. I can only assure him that these definitions are already in place in those Acts.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Government tell us why it is satisfied with the definitions?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, obviously if the Government has already passed other Acts with these definitions in them, then yes, the Government is satisfied with the definitions.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Government tell us how long those definitions have been in existence in the legislative sense and whether or not they have caused any trouble or led to lawsuits, disagreements or problems of any kind?

Mr. Hopkins: These definitions are used in the collection of taxes and royalties. There seems to be no great problem there, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Careful use of an adjective, no "great" problem. The definition of "great" is a subject for another time. Is there or is there not a problem with the definitions as they exist? Are they leading to lawsuits or problems in the Tax Department of any kind, great or not so great?

Mr. Hopkins: We have a legal view on that, Mr. Chairman, if you can give us a few seconds here.

There has been no problem to our knowledge, Mr. Chairman. We are not aware of any at this particular time.

Mr. Hawkes: Is there a procedure in place where the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister would necessarily have knowledge of problems, or is that something that might simply accrue to the Minister of National Revenue, for instance? Or is there provision somewhere, somehow, that the Parliamentary Secretary has knowledge of?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources collects the royalties, not the Department of National Revenue. As the Hon. Member knows, there is liaison between and among Government departments affected by legislation in place.

Mr. Hawkes: May I confirm, then, that there is no necessity for the Parliamentary Secretary to have that knowledge? Is that what he just said?

Mr. Hopkins: What I said, Mr. Chairman, was that the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources collects the royalties and taxes. There is liaison among the departments. As I said before, to our knowledge there has been no difficulty.

Mr. Hawkes: Has the Parliamentary Secretary himself made any personal inquiries of any private sector company as to whether or not these definitions are causing problems?

Mr. Hopkins: No, Mr. Chairman. Neither have I had any representations from them. My experience in politics is that if there is a serious problem out there, someone will be talking to you.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Parliamentary Secretary define for us the definition of "Crown share", because it is also important to other parts of this legislation?

Mr. Hopkins: Again, Mr. Chairman, the Crown share is defined in the Act as a 25 per cent interest reserve by the federal Government in any exploration agreement that is signed. I believe that definition will be found in Section 18 of the Act.

Mr. Hawkes: The limitation is the reserve when a lease is let out, the 25 per cent reserve. So if Petro-Canada had a 50 per cent interest, even though it is a federal Crown corporation, that would not be a Crown share?

Mr. Hopkins: To my knowledge that is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: Does the definition of Crown share apply to any known oil and gas anywhere in Canada not on Canada lands? Does the concept of Crown shares simply apply to Canada lands?

Mr. Hopkins: In this particular legislation it would apply to Nova Scotia lands because it is a Canada-Nova Scotia offshore agreement. It would apply to the Canada lands and the Nova Scotia lands as well.

The Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member's time has expired. Are there any other Members wishing to put questions? If not, then back to the Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Can the Parliamentary Secretary delineate for us, because it is not in the Bill, the difference between Nova Scotia lands and lands related to the offshore? He has indicated it is offshore and he is dealing with Canada lands and Nova Scotia Lands.

Mr. Hopkins: This Act, as the Hon. Member knows, sets aside the jurisdictional debate for argument, and the Bill itself defines what would be Nova Scotia's area of jurisdiction and the federal Government's jurisdiction. To my knowledge, and I stand to be corrected, it would apply only to federal lands out there, and then in the case of the province, it would apply to Nova Scotia lands depending on the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. Hawkes: Is the Parliamentary Secretary defining Nova Scotia lands as dry lands or is there Nova Scotia lands involved in the offshore?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is trying to draw me out here.

Mr. Hawkes: Agreed.

Mr. Hopkins: He is asking me to make a legal interpretation of where Nova Scotia lands are, even though no court or body has ever decided that issue. I say to him in all fairness that yes, to my knowledge there are certainly Nova Scotia lands there but I would ask the Hon. Member, with all due respect, not to have me draw the lines. I do not think anyone would pay very much attention to that kind of decision.

Mr. Hawkes: In the first arrangement on the lands that are of concern around Nova Scotia, the first agreement to allow drilling to occur, was there a 25 per cent reserve on behalf of the federal Government? Or was there a fee paid or agreed to which did not include a reserve for the federal Government?

• (1600)

Mr. Hopkins: The answer to the Hon. Member's question is no.

Mr. Hawkes: Is the Parliamentary Secretary saying that in the first agreement there was no Crown share?

Mr. Hopkins: There was no such item in place before the Canada Oil and Gas Act. The answer is no. I assume that is the area which the Hon. Member is inquiring about.

Mr. Hawkes: With the passage of that Act during the life of this Parliament the Crown all of a sudden had a 25 per cent share. What did the Crown pay for that share?

Mr. Hopkins: That is a rather complex question. At the time of transfer there could be an ex gratia payment, but none has been made yet. We have had no transfers to date. It is in the Canada Oil and Gas Act that ex gratia payments would be made at that time. Since no transfer has taken place, the answer is no. Nothing has been exercised yet.

Mr. Hawkes: I am a little confused. In existing agreements there are no Crown shares?

Mr. Hopkins: The actual Crown shares would not originate until such time as there is that transfer. They are there at the present time as a potential, but they do not actually take place until the transfer takes place. The Crown has not exercised that interest yet but they are potentially there. They do not have them in fact.

Mr. Hawkes: Given the definitions in clauses which follow, the federal Government has chosen not to exercise that right. Through the mechanism of this legislation are we transferring the power for the Government of Nova Scotia to force the exercise of that right? Are we passing power from the federal Government to the provincial government in terms of forcing the exercise of that right?

Mr. Hopkins: The Government of Nova Scotia would have that right to claim at the time that the transfer takes place, when a significant discovery takes place and is declared. It has not happened yet.

Mr. Hawkes: I think the answer is yes, that the provincial government has the power to do that. What is the cost to the provincial government to get its part of that Crown share?

Mr. Hopkins: At the time they make the transfer it costs the province 2.5 times the amount of PIP money that has been paid out.

Mr. Hawkes: So the oil industry out west is taxed. The federal Government takes the money and gives it to the companies that drill. If Nova Scotia wants to have its share it must take money out of its general revenue and pay that to the federal Government for its share. Am I correct in saying that for its portion of that Crown share the Government of Nova Scotia will pay a great deal more than the federal Government paid for its portion of that Crown share?

Mr. Hopkins: There are other areas where the federal Government is involved in payments. We are putting up money for exploration of the fields. While the Nova Scotia Government pays 2.5 times the PIP money, this does not take into consideration the ex gratia payments. It does not take into consideration the fact that we will never get money back for the dry holes.

Mr. Hawkes: Are we talking about holes or fields?

Mr. Hopkins: They are holes, whether they are on land or not. Perhaps the Hon. Member wants to call them offshore or wet. But there is no production of the product.

• (1610)

Mr. Hawkes: I suppose we could probably take quite a bit of time on Clause 2 of what is a very lengthy Bill. I would just like to state before we move on that my worst fears have been confirmed through this process. We are not in a process that allows elected Members of Parliament to do their job on behalf of the Canadian people. We are not in a process in which we can adequately examine the legislation and call witnesses to determine whether or not there are in fact problems of definition, real or imagined. This is certainly unsatisfactory.

On top of an unsatisfactory process, I find the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to be an absolutely reprehensible abomination of what on earth the Parliament of Canada is all about and what ministerial responsibility and authority is all about. I think it is atrocious.

We are prepared to let Clause 2 go on division. If there are no further questions, we can move on.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

Mr. Hawkes: On division.

Clause agreed to on division.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 3 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause agreed to on division.

On Clause 4—Amendment of Agreement

Mr. Hawkes: Clause 4 allows two appointed people, Cabinet Ministers, one provincial and one federal, to meet somewhere and change everything. Is that the correct interpretation of what Clause 4 would do? No matter what the Parliament of Canada or the legislature of Nova Scotia decides, those two appointed individuals could amend everything? If they cannot amend everything, would the Parliamentary Secretary tell us where the limits are?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, the two Ministers can change the agreement but they obviously cannot meet and change legislation that has been passed by the legislature of Nova Scotia or the Parliament of Canada. They can meet and decide on changes in the agreement itself.

Mr. Hawkes: This Bill establishes a board. Can those two people simply change the powers of that board?

Mr. Hopkins: In the agreement, the Hon. Member will realize that the powers of the board are laid down; but the Ministers can change the power of the board as it can change the agreement from time to time by way of delegation of authority.

Mr. Hawkes: Can those same two Ministers alter the terms whereby the province can acquire its portion of the Crown share? Is that something else those two can do?

Mr. Hopkins: No, Mr. Chairman, they cannot. That is set down in the legislation and it would take legislation to change that.

Mr. Hawkes: That is a nice reassurance. Could the Parliamentary Secretary tell me the exact clause that restricts them from doing that?

Mr. Hopkins: Would the Hon. Member define what he means? Restricts them from what?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, it would seem to me that the Province of Nova Scotia can acquire a portion of the Crown share based on the agreement. It seems to me that Clause 4 says that the Minister can amend the agreement without going back to anyone. You are telling me that those Ministers cannot amend the agreement; or if you are telling me that the acquisition of Crown share is not part of the agreement, please indicate from where you get that knowledge?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, the Crown shares mentioned in the agreement could not be changed by the Ministers. The legislation will lay out how this is to proceed, but the Ministers cannot change the legislation without coming back to their respective Parliaments.

Mr. Hawkes: Let me see if I can put it in a different context for the Parliamentary Secretary. Can the two Ministers, one at the federal level and one at the provincial level, decide between them the terms and conditions that shall prevail for the acquisition of any particular Crown share without going to Parliament or anywhere? Can they or can they not?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, if I can clarify this, the two Ministers must honour Clause 17 in this Bill. We can do nothing with the Crown shares until we have the legal authority of this Bill to do it. However, if the Ministers want to change something in Clause 17, then of course we are back to the legislative process.

Mr. Hawkes: Let us go back, given that explanation. What is Clause 4 all about? It says that those two Ministers can amend the agreement. What is the agreement?

We had trouble with Clause 2. My first question was related to the meaning of the word "agreement". What is it that they can amend?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, it must be clearly understood that the agreement itself is a political document, it is obviously not legislation in itself. The Bill that is before us today lays out the framework of that agreement. There are even things in the agreement itself that the Ministers could adjust and change without coming back to Parliament, because they are of an administrative nature. However, if they want to make any major changes that involve legislation, they must come back to Parliament. In the meantime they must honour what is stated in Clause 17.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, in that context, what is the relationship between Clause 17(9) and Clause 4 which we are dealing with now?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, it refers to the way in which the province will pay for its Crown share. I think that is what the Hon. Member is looking for.

Mr. Hawkes: Clause 17(9) states:

An acquisition pursuant to subsection (2) shall be made on such terms and conditions as are determined by the Minister and Nova Scotia Minister in accordance with the Agreement—

Clause 4 states that those same two people can modify the agreement. Does that mean the two Ministers for each individual acquisition can do what they please without reference to Parliament? If they can modify the agreement, and the acquisition is dependent upon the agreement, does that in effect result in a situation where two appointed people can determine the method and terms of acquisition?

• (1620)

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, under law and in an Act the specifics override the general statements. The Hon. Member will agree, I am sure, that Clause 17 lays out the specifics whereas Clause 4 is more of a general nature.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, is it the Government's position that Clause 17 overrides Clause 4? Does that in effect make Clause 4 redundant or unnecessary? My original question was, why is Clause 4 in the Bill? What can the two Ministers do? Can they do everything or can they do nothing?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, I understand that Clause 4 was placed in the Bill at the request of the province in order to make the agreement a little more flexible and to give a little leeway in the dealings. Clause 4 is not strictly necessary, but if you stick strictly with Clause 17, you have a more inflexible Bill. As I said, Clause 4 was put in at the request of the province.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I have one last comment on Clause 4. It cannot be implemented without the concurrence of the federal Minister plus a provincial Minister. We are still in a concurrence agreement kind of situation. Can that clause be used to alter the formula relating to the retail sales tax, revenue sharing or things like the PGRT?

Mr. Hopkins: First, Mr. Chairman, the sales tax is set out in the Bill. The revenue sharing is set out here and royalties are already fixed by statute. Again, Clause 4 is a very general statement.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, is the Parliamentary Secretary saying that it is the Government's conviction that Clause 4 could not be used? Is that really the sum total of what he is saying, that Clause 4 could not be used to change any of those taxation arrangements? Is that the Government's position?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, Clause 4 cannot be used to amend legislation by the two Ministers but it does allow them to consider changes to those parts of the agreement that are outside this legislation. That is the flexible part of the agreement that I spoke of earlier. There are parts in the agreement that, because it is a political document, the two Ministers could change. But they cannot change those parts of the agreement that are included in legislation.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, is there judicial experience with a clause like Clause 4? If there is, could the Parliamentary Secretary tell us what other Act in Canadian jurisprudence has a similar clause in somewhat similar circumstances?

Mr. Nowlan: The Canadian Oil and Gas Act?

The Deputy Chairman: Before the Parliamentary Secretary responds, the Chair would question whether the question itself is permissible. I will let the Parliamentary Secretary respond if he wishes.

Mr. Hopkins: To our knowledge, Mr. Chairman, there is none. The Hon. Member is asking a very far-reaching question. To our knowledge, no.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair finds such a question to be a legal-type question.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, thank you for allowing the question. It is a clause in the Bill and it is difficult for the Parliamentary Secretary to testify because I think it is an untested clause, an untested type of clause. It is a leap into the future, a leap into the unknown. Clearly the government of the province and the federal Government wants to take that leap. I think it is important to identify that there is a leap here with unknown complications and unknown potential for the future.

Unless there is someone else from our Party who wants to ask a question, we are prepared to let Clause 4 pass on division.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, let me say in reply to that that I think this legislation implementing this agreement is a real leap forward into new grounds of federal-provincial relations. We hope it will lay the groundwork and solid framework for such future agreements.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, this Bill would have had a lot more positive vibes if we had had it introduced a long time ago and had Members of Parliament had an adequate time to look at it so they could be helpful to the Government in making sure it was a good, solid, helpful agreement.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 4 carry?

Mr. Hawkes: On division.

Clause agreed to on division.

Clauses 5 and 6 agreed to.

On Clause 7—Establishment of Board

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, what consideration is given to reconciliation of an impasse? If the board reaches an impasse on something important, how do they get out of it?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, the board has a total of five members. Because there is an uneven number, hopefully there will not be an impasse.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On Clause 9—Directions

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, Clause 9 provides that if the board is directed jointly by the representatives of the federal Government and the representatives of the provincial government, the board must act in accordance with those written directions. Is there a potential problem for a board member getting different directions from whomever it is who appointed them?

• (1630)

Mr. Hopkins: Not really, Mr. Chairman. Even the federal Minister might be influenced by the provincial Minister or vice versa. I believe the people on the board are well qualified. I might say that this board has been operating to date without any real legal status. It has been working very smoothly. It has been a very good experiment. That is why we are implementing it now in the legislation. It is certainly a part of the Bill which has been tried and found to be a very successful procedure. The credibility and qualifications of the people on the board and the fact that they are compatible speak well for the process.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 10 to 16 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 17—Definitions

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, why did the Government agree to Nova Scotia having up to a 50 per cent interest in a gas field and only a 25 per cent interest in an oil field? Why the discrimination against oil in favour of gas for Nova Scotia?

Mr. Hopkins: It is simply the result of negotiation on a large number of items. These two were adopted as being fair when all financial items in the Bill were discussed. It simply came out on balance this way, and the two parties were very agreeable.

Mr. Hawkes: The portion which accrues to the people of Nova Scotia would be 12.5 per cent of an oil field. If we look at provinces such as Saskatchewan, British Columbia or Alberta, what portion of an oil field tends to accrue to those provinces?

Mr. Hopkins: In this agreement the provinces get 25 per cent of the oil shares and 50 per cent of the gas shares. In addition, Nova Scotia is getting the whole series of other items to which I referred in my speech this morning. Its income from those other revenues is tremendous and very substantial.

Mr. Forrestall: That is a nasty rumour. There has not been a nickel made yet.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, I hear the Hon. Member. I know he is a very positive thinker. He is just waiting for this legislation to be passed because his home province will benefit tremendously and perhaps his own provincial taxes will go down.

Mr. Forrestall: I want it, I want it.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, let me apologize. It is 12.5 per cent of the gas and 6.25 per cent of the oil.

I will put my question to the Parliamentary Secretary in a different way. Given that there is as much oil offshore Nova Scotia as we might find onshore in the Province of Saskatchewan, in which place would you rather live if you were after the oil in the ground? Do you think the Government is being as generous to the people of Nova Scotia in this agreement as it might be?

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Hon. Member should direct his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Hawkes: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Does the Government think that it has been as generous with the people of Nova Scotia as it should be? Are the people of Nova Scotia being treated equitably compared with the people of Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia when it comes to their capacity to participate in the revenue from oil?

Mr. Hopkins: In this agreement the province is getting equalization payment protection and all the revenues which I mentioned before. It will actually receive more taxation money for its offshore sources of oil and gas than it would receive if the wells were on dry land.

As far as the question of the Hon. Member is concerned in which be asks me where I would rather live, I think that is a pretty dangerous question. I would have to say to my own people in the Ottawa Valley that I wish the rest of the people of Canada well in the agreements with the provinces. We are all very loyal Canadians, but I would rather not answer that question except to say that I am quite happy living where I am.

Mr. Hawkes: The Parliamentary Secretary is indicating that the people of Nova Scotia will receive greater revenue from the oil offshore than would be the case if that same oil were onshore and totally under the control of the people of Nova Scotia. Is he saying that the revenue to the people of Nova Scotia will be greater offshore than it would be onshore?

Mr. Hopkins: To my knowledge that is correct, unless the Province of Nova Scotia gets to the stage where it is very rich in revenues from oil and gas offshore. It would be more than it would receive if those same wells were onshore.

As the Hon. Member knows, the Bill spells out that there will be equalization arrangements for any government in Nova Scotia so that when it becomes wealthy it will not be hit with a sudden, drastic cut in transfer payments from the federal Government.

Clauses 18 to 20 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 21—Security of supply

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, in this clause the Government of Nova Scotia is given a "reasonable opportunity" to acquire a 50 per cent interest in a pipeline. Generally the word "reasonable" is defined in economic terms. However, could the Parliamentary Secretary tell us the sense of the word "reasonable"? How and who will decide on what is reasonable?

Mr. Hopkins: Normally the National Energy Board would decide on that. It has guidelines to follow on those items.

Mr. Hawkes: If it is the Government's intention and if it is part of the agreement to have the National Energy Board decide what is reasonable, why has the Government chosen not to specify that in the Act? Why was this situation left so unclear?

The Deputy Chairman: Just for the purposes of clarity, is the Hon. Member discussing something in Clause 21?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, it is on the following page. Excuse me, it is not Clause 21. Are we on Clause 21 or Clause 22?

The Deputy Chairman: Clause 21 is before the committee.

Mr. Hawkes: I am sorry, my questions were dealing with Clause 22.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 22—Definitions

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, may I have my questions answered?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, I might add that the National Energy Board has a vast amount of experience in dealing with these matters. This is why it has its guidelines and formulas to go by. On Clause 22, there were discussions earlier, which were not finalized, as to whether the House would be inclined to allow an amendment by unanimous consent with regard to Clause 22. I wonder if we could have an indication from the other Parties whether they would now be willing to go along with the introduction of this amendment to Clause 22.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I wish to address the question posed by the Parliamentary Secretary. It was the hope of the Province of Nova Scotia that an amendment might be included that would clearly spell out with respect to Clause 22(1) that notwithstanding anything else in the provision as suggested, it does not include laterals, gathering lines, blow lines, structures and facilities for the collection and processing of oil and gas.

I suppose there are two problems. The first is the admissibility of the amendment and, second, the undertaking that the matter would go through as it is presently in front of us. As has been pointed out by my colleagues from Calgary and others, it is a matter that will have to be addressed because it does cause some concern. There have been widespread discussions with respect to it. For the time being, the matter can be clarified by some instruction or advice from the parties concerned. It is perhaps an oversight, a matter that perhaps falls between a number of schools. Nevertheless, we are faced with it. For the time being, we will not give consent to its introduction at this time. It may just lend further confusion.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair should say that unanimous consent is not required in order to introduce an amendment at this stage.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Hon. Member for that explanation. This morning the Hon. Member for Calgary West was zeroing in on Clause 22(2). The amendment which we were going to propose, which now we cannot, was by way of clarification of the definition of a Nova Scotia offshore pipeline in which the province has the right to acquire on a commercial basis up to 50 per cent ownership to apply only to a trunk line and specifically to exclude gathering lines, flow lines, structures and facilities for the production and processing of hydrocarbons. Because there is no agreement, we will let it go at this time.

The Deputy Chairman: Just for clarification, there is no restriction if the Parliamentary Secretary wants to pose the amendment at this time. He may choose not to, but he can if he wishes.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, there was the clear understanding that there may be some procedural difficulties with respect to this because it does have the effect of substantially changing the definition sections. I would invite the Parliamentary Secretary's comment. It is unfortunate, but perhaps for the time being it is best left not dealt with.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair has had the benefit of being advised of the amendment so as to be able to study it. The Chair finds the amendment admissible if the amendment is proposed. However, it is entirely up to the Government whether it wants to propose the amendment.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, in the best interests of everyone and for the sake of continuing the rapport with which the Bill is being discussed, we will not carry that further if there is no agreement.

On Clause 92—Amendment to Access to Information Act

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, in Clause 92 I think you will find some major discrepancies between the French and English versions of the clause. I do not know which of the versions the Government intends to be the official one. However, I think it might be easy to correct that at this point in time before we finish the Bill.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, could the Hon. Member please point out the precise discrepancy?

Mr. Hawkes: I do not think that the English version of lines 7, 8 and 9 accord with the French version of the same lines.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. The English version is the correct one and the French version will be changed accordingly.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, may I further point out to the Parliamentary Secretary that the first part of paragraph 2 in the English version is not repeated in the French version? Lines 14, 15 and 16 are the same, but lines 17, 18 and 19 in the English version are not repeated in the French version.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, those changes will be made. The French version will be translated from the English version.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair regrets this, but there must be an amendment proposed to correct the Bill. This is not simply a translation error. There will have to be an amendment proposed to put in the correction.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps you could consider standing this clause with unanimous consent so that we could draft the proper translation while we finish dealing with the Bill clause by clause.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair would also like to point out that this clause by clause study goes on until five o'clock, at which time we proceed to Private Members' Hour. We could stand the clause now, proceed if you wish with the remaining clauses and then return to that clause at the appropriate time.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, we are certainly agreeable to whatever works best and fastest.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the interests of saving time or in the interests of not wasting time, I bring to your attention that when we dealt in the Alberta Legislature with a large Bill like this one, the entire Bill was dealt with using one or two words. If any Member wished to speak to any particular clause, he simply asked to do so. That procedure did not delay debate or hurt debate but it did facilitate the passage of a Bill like this very rapidly. I would suggest that we do that. Otherwise, it is simply a matter of saying agreed over and over again and that is really a waste of time.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair thanks the Hon. Member for his intervention, but this is the Canadian Parliament and not the Alberta Legislature.

Shall Clause 92 stand?

Some Hon. Members: Stand.

Clause stood.

Clauses 93 to 97 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: At this stage, the Chair would suggest that it might be appropriate to call it five o'clock so that at six o'clock we could return and continue this discussion.

If that is agreeable to the House, then the Chair could report progress. Is that agreeable to the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair will then report progress and will continue the discussion at six o'clock after Private Members' Hour.

Progress reported.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave)—Railways—Alfalfa products freight rates. (b) Request that Minister conduct investigation; the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Tessier)—Trade—Textile and clothing imports—Government action to protect jobs; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Bilingualism—Education of immigrant children. (b) Native Indian children—Access to aboriginal language education.

Order. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have had consultations with Members from all sides of the House and I would beg leave for unanimous consent to deal with Bill C-252, a Bill which stands in my name and is seconded by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), through all stages. This Bill deals with the provision of access to the records of the Special Committee on the Defence of Canada Regulations which sat during the Second World War. This is the only way these records can be opened up. Since the Government has made available most of the other records relating to the Japanese and others, this is the only set of documents from the Second World War that has not yet been released dealing with these items.

The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills is the seconder of the motion. I do not see him in the House, but the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) has agreed to second the Bill in his place. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills has just walked in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposal of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

STADACONA MINES (1944) LIMITED

Mr. David Berger (Laurier) moved that Bill S-16, an Act to revive Stadacona Mines (1944) Limited and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have engaged in consultations with representatives of the other two Parties. I believe if you would seek the consent of the House, we would have agreement to pass this Bill today through all stages.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, the consultations referred to by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) have indeed taken place. We are more than pleased to accommodate the passage of Bill S-16.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposal which was made by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore, the motion should read: "Mr. Berger, seconded by Mr. Gimaïel, moves that Bill S-16, An Act to revive Stadacona Mines (1944) Limited and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act, be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole House".

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT
PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved that Bill C-248, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act (political rights), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the umpteenth time that a Bill of this nature has been presented in Parliament since the 1950s. However, the last time this occurred was on April 30, 1982, at which time Members from all sides of the House agreed with the Bill, but there was no agreement for it to be passed. At this time I called as my witness the late lamented and departed Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton who spoke in favour of this Bill and urged that it be passed. I want to remind Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, that a gentleman by the name of Guy D'Avignon was Chairman of the special committee appointed by the Government to review personnel management, conditions of employment, the merit principle and other aspects of the Public Service. I would like to read to the House the first paragraph of his report, which reads as follows:

• (1710)

Citizens of a democracy have a right to take an active part in the political process; by their actions they assure a healthy, responsive democratic system of government. Today, no one would lightly propose the extinction of this right with regard to any individual or group.

But the Government chose to ingore that part of the report having to do with political rights. The report was made, by the way, in the spring of 1979. The Chairman of the committee recommended that public servants be put in three categories when it came to political rights. The third category would cover probably 85 per cent or 90 per cent of the federal Government and Crown corporation employees.

Just two or three weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, we witnessed a situation where rank and file federal public civil servants elected as delegates to a national convention of a Canadian political Party were threatened with dismissal, or will be dismissed, because on their own time they took part, as can any other citizen, in the political process. One of those delegates comes from the City of Winnipeg. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) said it was a little bit of a denial of their rights but that it is the Public Service which makes the rules. The Public Service Commission makes rules, Mr. Speaker, based upon the legislation, and until we change the legislation, the Public Service Commission cannot change the rules.

I want to remind Hon. Members that in the experience of the United Kingdom, which has, one has to concede, a professional public service, that public service has had full political rights for many years. Whether or not it chooses to exercise those rights is entirely its own decision. Many public servants do, some do not.

My Bill, Sir, would exclude those who are in what one could call the "Order in Council category". They could still exercise their political rights because they have a contractual arrangement with the Government, with the Cabinet, whether it be a Deputy Minister or the head of a board or whatever. They can still choose to be politically active and would know ahead of time that they were taking their chances as to their reappointment. However, Sir, that does not apply to the tens of thousands of clerks and stenographers, people in many categories of employment in the Public Service.

In 1945, the Government of Saskatchewan under Tommy Douglas not only provided for the right to organize, the right to bargain collectively, but also the right to take part in political activity. Once and for all we removed the ability of a government of any political stripe to prohibit or inhibit any public servant or Crown corporation employee in Saskatchewan from taking part in the political process if they chose to do so. Four other provinces have done the same thing. However, this place, which should have been setting the example and leading the way, has not done so.

I can cite my own experience, Mr. Speaker, as an employee of Canadian Pacific Limited. You will agree, Sir, that there was not much love lost between my Party and the CPR in terms of what we considered bad corporate behaviour on its part for a hundred years or more. However I felt then from 8.30 in the morning until 5.30 in the afternoon, at no time did

I say or do anything of a political partisan nature when I was on duty and being paid by the company which employed me. I did all I could in as conscientious a manner as I could to earn the salary I was being paid for conducting the company's business. However, after 5.30 in the afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I went to political meetings. I obtained leaves of absence to work as an organizer, to be a candidate, and I returned to my job without any loss of seniority. It ended up, Mr. Speaker, that that corporation and I severed relationship, at my decision. I resigned. But for all the years I worked for that corporation I was able to participate in the political process on my own time, on leave of absence without pay or on holidays with pay.

Surely, Sir, we cannot allow that right for some groups and not for others. We must allow that right for all. Some day, and I am surprised it has not happened yet, some federal public servant is going to take the Government of the day to court and will win. Why should we wait around asking for that kind of trouble?

My Bill provides for deletion of Section 39(2) of the Public Service Staff Relations Act which would mean, Sir, that the organization to which the federal public servants belong could use the dues which were paid to it in any manner it sees fit, including contributions to a political Party or a candidate of a political Party. Again, Sir, other organizations in other parts of our economy are able to do this, whether it is a trade union, business association, or any other kind of organization. The members of the organization themselves decide how much they will pay in the way of dues and how they will spend those dues, and that is perfectly proper. If a chamber of commerce, a business organization, a trade union or a farm organization decides it wants to expend some of its own funds, a decision agreed to by its members, on behalf of or opposed to any political Party or candidate, it can do so and in fact it does so now. It has the right to do so.

That is a minor part of my Bill, Mr. Speaker. If the Public Service employees of the federal Government were to decide by a democratic vote that they wanted to spend their money on behalf of a Conservative, a Liberal or an NDP candidate, or any political Party, or if they wanted to spend some money against that Party, they should be able to do so as well as anyone else. That is only a minor provision of the Bill compared to what I and others before me are trying to accomplish. We have to recognize that employees of the federal Government, including the House of Commons, taking part in the political process while off duty do not harm the Government of the day or Parliament. Experience in several provinces here and in the United Kingdom has shown that any time public employees have participated in a political process, no matter what their success or otherwise, they returned to their duties and carried them out in a conscientious and trustworthy manner. That certainly was our experience in Saskatchewan. We had provincial civil servants who ran as candidates for the Social Credit, Conservatives, Liberals and New Democrats. Some of them won, some did not. The ones that did not, returned to their duties. We even had former members of the legislature from different Parties who kept their positions in the employ of the government long after they were members of the legislature, even when the government changed. To their credit, they all carried out their duties in a conscientious manner.

We are no longer in the days of patronage when federal public servants had no bargaining rights. They were all hired and fired by the government in power. A government in power can no longer do that. These people have their own organization and the right to bargain collectively. Those rights include their political rights.

Since the House has been in such an amenable mood these last few days, and since we just passed two Bills in Private Members' Hour by unanimous consent through all stages, I would like to ask the House to do the same thing in this instance. I have spoken to Members on all sides and I would like to obtain agreement that we pass this Bill through all stages so that it becomes the law of the land before the next federal election. Tens of thousands of federal public servants have been told by Members of all political Parties, publicly and privately, that they should have the same political rights as others. This is an excellent opportunity for all Members in this House to put their actions where their mouths are. I hope my good friends in the Conservative and Liberal Parties will rise in their places for five or ten minutes, if they want to speak on this Bill, but not talk it out. I hope they will support what our former colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, had to say on this Bill in 1982. We have had two years to think about it. Surely it is time to provide federal public servants with the same political rights that the rest of us enjoy. Democracy is indivisible; you cannot divide our people into groups, one of which can go to a meeting but another which cannot. Surely it is time, particularly given our new Constitution, to put an end to this treatment of federal public servants. I hope that my colleagues on all sides of the House agree that we can put this Bill through in all stages today.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has certainly put forward an interesting proposition this afternoon. Bill C-248 relates to political activity by public servants and amends the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act concerning political activity. It is my understanding that the present Act provides for limited activity such as party membership, the ability to attend certain Party meetings and so on, but it does not provide for high profile political activity or senior positions in political Parties. The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has been studying for the last few days matters relating to the ability of people to become candidates in election campaigns and so on. The Hon. Member has made the argument about how the Bill of Rights grants certain political rights in this country. Obviously he firmly believes that we should change the historical nature of our Public Service from one that is politically neutral to one which is politically active.

I think of the Jacksonian democracy in the United States. I believe it was Andrew Jackson in the U.S. election campaign of 1820 who said that to the victors go the spoils. That of course is a very important part of the U.S. democratic system, but it is quite different here in Canada. I think the Public Service generally, certainly at the federal level, has operated very well on a neutral basis. In fact, there are very strict rules about Party activity.

I appreciate the arguments the Hon. Member makes, and if you looked strictly at the Charter of Rights I guess you would agree with his arguments. On the other hand, I think we have to look at it from the public's perception of how the Public Service operates. It is perceived to be neutral? The Hon. Member outlined how he was able to be completely neutral in the daytime and be a Party activist in the hours off work. I am interested in those comments because I noted that when the Government introduced in the House what was to become the 1967 Public Service Staff Relations Act, it had been subjected to further scrutiny and consultation on the part of interested parties. When the matter was before the special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons concerning the public service the late David Lewis said that it may perhaps surprise members of the committee to hear that he was in favour of organizations of public servants being prohibited from acting on behalf of a political Party. Whatever the case may be with other employee organizations, Mr. Lewis said that he did not think you could have a public service organization affiliated with or working on behalf of any political Party.

● (1730)

Mr. Benjamin: That is not the point.

Mr. Foster: The public perception of the public service is very important in this regard. Senior executives have been prohibited from becoming candidates in election campaigns because it is felt that they have a senior managerial or executive role. Staffing officers have been prohibited under Section 32 of the Public Service Act because it is felt that if they were perceived to be partisan and people got turned down for jobs that would adversely reflect on the public service. Officers enforcing regulations have not been permitted extensive political activity because when they are enforcing regulations and laws it is felt that it is important that they be perceived to be completely neutral and impartial.

Page 36 of the report of the Special Committee on Personnel Management and The Merit Principle reads as follows:

> With respect to public servants who perform a regulatory role, many intervenors stated that these public servants should not be given freedom to participate in Party politics. Otherwise, the public might well perceive that a licence denial had political connotations when, in fact, it stemmed from failure to meet the requirements for granting of a licence. The theme of most intervenors who took this position was that, when public servants are in direct contact with the general public, they must be seen to be politically neutral. The possibility of meeting a public servant during the day as a regulator of Government policy and meeting him again at night as a campaign worker for a political Party could be damaging to the credibility of the public service. Examples of employees in this category were given as: radio inspectors, customs officials, CEIC officers, and fisheries inspectors.

I think it is good that this issue be debated. Times are changing and nothing is cast in stone for all time. People are more active politically and want to be so. The Charter of Rights suggests that these are principles of freedom of expression and association which are important. I think that we have been generally served by a public service which has been able to act impartially and be perceived to be impartial to political partisan association. Before we change that we should make sure that any new directions would be perceived by the general public to be better. I think it is good that we debate this issue from time to time. However, I personally would not recommend making the changes which the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is proposing to us this afternoon.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, two-thirds of the Bill, in terms of section numbers, makes eminent good sense. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) for bringing the Bill forward in the fashion that he has. It is most appropriate having regard to recent developments with respect to a certain Crown corporation, an employee of which, a certain Ad Varma, was dismissed on Wednesday of last week because he approached two Members of Parliament with information that he had. Both Members of Parliament were sitting on this side of the House.

This gentleman, who happens to live in my constituency, was dismissed by the senior officers of Canada Post because they alleged that he had a conflict of interest. That conflict of interest is a rather strange one, having regard to the fact that he behaved in a fashion which should have resulted in his being awarded recognition by the House and the people of Canada generally for what he endeavoured to do. If this Bill in its present form were to have been in place and extended, as it should be, to Crown corporations, Mr. Varma would still be serving as an employee of Canada Post and discharging duties in the fashion that he has for the benefit of the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. Varma came to two Members of our Party, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), having been frustrated in his endeavours to convince senior officials of that corporation, which is the successor of a Government Department, that there were some unusual occurrences within the Department which were not remedied when that Department became a Crown corporations. In particular, Mr. Varma indicated that he was hired to assist in a managerial position with respect to computer programs. He indicated that it was very strange to find, despite the fact that the corporation had acquired expensive pieces of computer equipment, that the equipment was set aside and replaced with a system acquired as a consequence of the recommendation of certain senior officials of the Post Office Department, as it then was. Upon investigation, it appears that those senior officials had a vested interest in the company supplying those services. I am not talking about small, non-consequential amounts of money. There was some $3 million involved in that little project.

He tried to convince other officers of the Department that there was something amiss with the equipment that they then had and which was developed internally, in that the equipment broke down with some surprising regularity. Such regularity smacked of sabotage. There happened to be two sets of this equipment operating in two separate locations. It was only the set in the location where the senior officer had an indirect interest with the supplier of the new product that the product on site continued to break down.

Matters became so serious that the RCMP was called in to investigate the circumstances surrounding both the breakdown in the equipment and the supply of the new equipment, and whether or not there was in fact a conflict of interest. The conflict of interest should be given its proper name, that is corruption. The RCMP investigation has never been made public and the officials of Canada Post today allege that to make that information public would reflect badly on both officials within Canada Post and people with whom Canada Post has business dealings.

As a consequence of the release of this information by this honest, public spirited citizen, the Auditor General has undertaken a complete investigation of the activities of this bloated Crown corporation to determine whether the charges made by Mr. Varma are accurate.

It is interesting to note that this man, while hired at a senior post, resigned that position to take a position as a postal clerk. He then agreed that in the event that his charges were not substantiated he would cheerfully resign. He was approached and intimidated by officers and finally fired by a man named Mr. Bodrug in the Toronto office of Canada Post. Mr. Bodrug is a man who I have endeavoured on numerous occasions to reach by telephone to deal with this problem and others that have concerned my constituents. This pompous potentate, who believes that he is above all other authority and beyond the realm of the House, has absolutely refused not only to return my telephone calls but to even speak to me. The message that he has left is that he will not have any conversations with me at all. This is the man who fired Mr. Varma.

Mr. Varma is the man who has gone to the extent that he has jeopardized his livelihood for the sake of assisting the people of Canada in getting a fair and honest deal from suppliers to Canada Post. He is fired and Bodrug is there, the man who dismissed him. Of course, Bodrug will not have any conversations with Members of Parliament. However, they have appointed an official who will have conversations with us, but this official has no authority to either say or do anything. That has become so typical of the way in which Crown corporations and government departments function.

These public servants are not asking for a reward, they are simply asking that some justice be done because there is some chicanery taking place. I believe very clearly that in the event public spirited public servants cannot, within the realm of their own departmental or Crown corporation function, convince their superiors that something is amiss, and if they cannot get a fair hearing to unearth the trouble, they are surely entitled to go to the only place where there should be people interested in bringing the matter to light, that is the House of Commons. They should be able to do so without risking their livelihood.

While this Bill deals with political activities, and indeed running for a position in the House of Commons, it will go a long way in remedying some of the ills that currently exist.

However, in my view Clause 3 of the Bill is not to be supported. It is so typical of the NDP. They have an excellent idea and then ruin it by promoting something that may appear to make good sense at first, but upon reflection and examination is an underhanded way of avoiding the normal consequences that apply with respect to donations made to political parties under the Income Tax Act.

I am aware that the Hon. Member for Regina West has said that he believes all citizens should be treated the same. I suggest to him that that should be true indeed. However, certain groups of citizens should not have special rights that others cannot enjoy.

It is clear that according to the provisions of the Income Tax Act individuals, and indeed corporations are restricted in the amount of tax advantage they gain as a result of making political contributions. As a matter of fact, the amount on an annual basis is $1,150. Beyond that, one might as well pay money out and expect no tax benefit. However, up to that amount, and indeed on a declining basis, there is certain tax relief for all contributors to political parties.

But in the event that an employee of a trade union, including a Public Service union, makes a contribution with respect to his union dues, it is deductible in total whole. No limitation may be placed on them. The Public Service union does not include one nickel of the receipt in the computation of its income. If the Hon. Member for Regina West wishes to stand in his place and say that he believes union dues should be taxable in the hands of the union, we would have a different ballgame. However, knowing his inclinations, I rather suspect that that will indeed not be his message. He wants to create a special privileged group, the union bosses who reach into the pockets of the employees, extract their funds and pay it over to the NDP. Therefore, you will find that from my standpoint—

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt my hon. friend. Would he permit a brief question because I know that he would not want to inadvertently mislead Members of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member accept a question at this time?

Mr. Gamble: Perhaps the Hon. Member can put his question to me when I have concluded my remarks. I am almost finished.

My point is simply that while the Bill contains some very beneficial provisions, it is the final clause that breaks the camel's back. It is indeed based upon a special preferential arrangement which the Hon. Member decried in his own speech as being unsuitable. Therefore I could not vote for this Bill.

Had the NDP, and particularly the Hon. Member for Regina West, really wished for this Bill to pass and truly wanted to remedy the ill of which he speaks and about which I am in complete accord with him—the freeing of public servants from the detrimental effects of the Public Service Staff Relations Act as it relates to political activities—he would have left the third clause out of the Bill. However, knowing full well that he did not really want this Bill to pass but simply to make a show, we now have a situation where this Bill, because of the preferential treatment granted as a consequence of tax considerations that appear in Clause 3, has little chance of passing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West on a question.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, is my hon. friend now repudiating the support given to this same Bill by the late Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton two years ago? Second, is he not aware that the union dues of employees have already been calculated in their taxable income and they have already paid the income tax on it?

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should do one thing before he pursues this matter any further, and that is to look at the provisions of the Income Tax Act before he indicates to the House and the public generally what its provisions are. I can tell him that union dues are deductible in the computation of income. They are not treated in the same fashion as political contributions. They are deductible, to the last dollar. Accordingly, it is that issue which has not received the attention of the House before.

With regard to what Hon. Members in the House today, or who may have been in the House before, have done with respect to legislation, I am not answerable. I am, however, answerable for bills that are brought in today for examination. I feel perfectly content in examining every piece of legislation and commenting on it as I feel it should be commented upon. Indeed, that is the duty of every Member of the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I put part of my question badly. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right. I meant that a trade union organization that makes a contribution on behalf of its members gets no tax benefits since it pays no taxes in the first place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will proceed to debate.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I too would first like to commend the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) for bringing the Bill before the House. I also have concerns about the Bill. I will not speak long so that other members will have an opportunity to speak.

I suggest that there are two problems with the Bill. The first problem is clearly that which was pointed out by the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble). I think it is blatantly obvious why that particular clause was put in the Bill by the Hon. Member for Regina West.

• (1750)

Second, and we have discussed this at length in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates with the Chairman of the Public Service Commission, others and my constituents, the Bill is too broad. It is precisely what I said when we debated this Bill two years ago when the late Hon. Member for Nepean Carleton was here and made a contribution. If my memory serves me correctly, he agreed with me that the Bill as it is drafted is too broad.

A separation has to be made in this legislation in defining political rights. This is not the case now. They are not well defined. It is a very vague situation that public servants face. But the differentiation has to be between those people who are involved in policy, who interact on a regular basis with a minister, which goes far beyond the deputy head who is the only person excluded by the Hon. Member's Bill. It has to separate those involved in direct dealings with the Minister in a policy aspect and those who are not. Those who are not involved in direct policy dealings with a Minister should not be restricted in their political activities. I do not know how many times we have to say this among ourselves before it finally gets through, but that is the way the law should read. Those involved in policy who are meeting with a minister on a regular basis should refrain from overt political activity. It is obvious why. If Governments change, it can place the jobs of those senior people in the bureaucracy in jeopardy.

The Hon. Member for Regina West knows very well what happened to identified New Democrats in the Province of Saskatchewan when Mr. Devine's government came to power. Those people under Saskatchewan legislation at the senior level were allowed to politicize themselves. They did. When Mr. Devine's government came into power he swept them out of their jobs.

We want continuity in the Public Service. It is important to have continuity. The way you can combine the notion of continuity in the Public Service with the freedom to have political activity is to separate that notion on the basis of policy. Those people who interact with ministers and those people who have a policy impact should be precluded from overt political activity. Those people who do not should be free to have political activity. But the Bill before us is too broad. It says only deputy heads, and order-in-council appointments cannot involve themselves in political activity or politicize themselves. That is where the Bill goes wrong. Again, it is still wrong. Two years ago I said to the Hon. Member, and I say it again, if he brought forward a Bill that took that into consideration I could certainly stand in this place today and support it.

We have laws in place now. Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act says that a public servant cannot participate on behalf of a candidate or a political party during an election. And then there was some misconstrued interpretation, according to me, and I am on the record in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts when Mr. Gallant, the Chairman of the Public Service Commission was before the committee. The misconstrued interpretation of the Public Service Commission was that somehow that applies to all cases of political activity by public servants. Through the use of Section 7 of the Financial Administration Act, which allows the deputy head to take disciplinary action, notes and memos were sent out to every public servant prior to the Liberal leadership convention indicating that no public servant could involve himself or herself in any way in the leadership convention.

There are some other problems, Mr. Speaker. The Act allows individuals to be members of political parties and to attend political meetings, make contributions to political parties, but a person cannot work on behalf of a candidate during the period of an election. We have to make this clear.

What if, for example, a person wants to run in an election. That is precluded by the Public Service Employment Act. A public servant may not stand for election to federal office, to provincial office, or to territorial office. But a public servant may, if he or she gets leave of absence from the Public Service Commission. You apply for leave of absence from the Public Service Commission, as I did when I was a public servant. I was denied. The person who ran against me for the New Democratic Party works in the National Archives. That person applied for leave of absence and he was granted leave of absence. When he was defeated in my riding he went back to the National Archives.

What criteria did the Public Service Commission use? It used precisely the criteria I am describing today. Does this person have a policy input? Does this person interact with a minister? Yes, he does. No, he may not have a leave of absence. No, he does not. Yes, he may have a leave of absence. The law the way it stands now in this particular case is an ass. It is ridiculous.

Mr. Benjamin: Pass my Bill then.

Mr. Evans: The leave of absence is clearly given so a person can express openly and plainly, so the world can see, political affiliation, political partisanship. But the person has to do it off the job so to speak.

What is the purpose of the law? The purpose according to the Chairman of the Public Service Commission, in discussions I have had with him, is that public servants' political leanings should be veiled so the public does not get the feeling that there is a partisan aspect to the service of the public. How can you possibly say that there is a veil before the partisanship of a public servant when you have just granted that person a leave of absence, he or she has gone through an eight-week campaign, having his or her name plastered all over the riding and then the individual comes back to work afterward, having lost. You now say: "The veil goes back up again. You really did not see that person campaigning."

The criteria are so loose and the provisions are so vague that public servants do not know what is possible, what is allowable, what is not allowable, or what is fair or what is not fair. The situation we have now is not fair. It is not clear, it is not just, and there is no way that we should be trying to administer a law that allows a bureaucracy to arbitrarily decide what is and what is not appropriate behaviour in the workplace on the basis of guidelines that do not exist.

Mr. Deans: Why don't we change it, then?

Mr. Evans: As I said before when we debated this Bill two years ago, if the Hon. Member would bring in a Bill that makes the kinds of distinctions that I have put forward today I will support him 100 per cent. If a person is not involved directly in policy-making, does not interact directly with the Minister, that person can undertake partisan political activities off the job, on their own time. There should be no restriction whatsoever on those kinds of people undertaking those kinds of activities on their own time. On the other hand, people involved in policy should continue to be restricted, as is the case in Britain, for example.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will say that I have every sympathy for the apparent intentions of the Hon. Member, but his Bill just does not cut the mustard. That is the problem. I will not support the Bill as it stands, but I will not talk in out either.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In order to speed up the proceedings of the Chamber, and if it will help my colleagues on the Government side and those from the Progressive Conservative Party, we could now pass second reading and move to Committee of the Whole, where, in order to get half a loaf, I will be quite happy to move an amendment to delete Clause 3 from my Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member cannot move at this time. He has already spoken. The Chair would recognize the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Shroder), but I must inform the House that the time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

Pursuant to Order made Thursday, June 14, 1984, the House will resume consideration of Government Orders.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA OIL AND GAS AGREEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-43, an Act respecting the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement on Offshore Oil and Gas Resource Management and Revenue Sharing and to make related and consequential amendments—Mr. MacEachen (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources)—Mr. Corbin in the chair.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. With what clause are we dealing?

The Chairman: I was about to do that. Clause 92 was stood earlier in committee proceedings. Clause 92 is before the committee.

Canada-Nova Scotia Oil Agreement

On Clause 92—Amendment to Access to Information Act

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, during the past hour we contracted officials of the Department of Justice. They have reviewed Clause 92 and have informed us that all is in order. The items on the English side of the page are not in the same order as they are on the French side. However, the clause as it stands is ready for passage.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, we in this Party are prepared to accept that that is what the Parliamentary Secretary was informed by officials of the Department of Justice. However, it still looks to us as if subclause (2) somehow or other contains a great deal more information on the English side than on the French side of the page. We will certainly not become involved in an argument in this Chamber. I do not have the credentials to attest to being an expert on translation, and I do not intend to try to translate it.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Fox (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to participate for just a minute in that we have spent a good part of today on the Bill. Again I pay tribute to the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia. Upon reading the Bill it is clear that the Premier has driven a hard bargain on behalf of the people of Nova Scotia. I think he deserves credit for that.

Also I should like to repeat some of my introductory thoughts, thoughts which I think were expressed by Hon. Members who spoke on behalf of our Party. There is something very wrong with pieces of legislation and with thought patterns which enable the Government of Canada, in the name of the people of Canada, to confiscate a portion of someone's property without compensation. This is what the back-in provision on Canada lands really represents.

I do not blame the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia. Once the individual landholder has been robbed, then the Premier of Nova Scotia wants a part of the proceeds for the people of Nova Scotia, and that is probably appropriate. However, it is the federal Government which is doing the robbing, and that is inappropriate. I wish we could go back in time, and that the Chamber had reached a different conclusion.

One of the things we do in the House of Commons is pay Ministers an extra amount of money for doing ministerial tasks. Surely it is an insult to the Chamber and to the people of Nova Scotia that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) showed up today for Question Period but has not been with us at any other time during second reading, consideration in Committee of the Whole or now a third reading. It makes one wonder whether or not the Minister of Energy has earned his paycheque on this day. If there were a way to move a motion to dock the Minister of Energy at least one day's pay, if not one month's pay, I would hope the Chamber would take that action. It is an insult to the Chamber and to the people of Nova Scotia that he cared so little about this agreement that he chose not to be with us at any point in the proceedings.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) on a point of order.

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members ought to realize that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) has a host of other duties. If this agreement is adopted in the House today, it is thanks to the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been giving this matter special attention during the past months, and not to the comments of the Hon. Member opposite—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fox: There is just no comparison. Without the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, there would be no agreement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall).

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I wanted to express some appreciation to the Government. I take particular note of the fact that this is just another step in a continuing process which started with the Right Hon. Robert Stanfield, which continued with the Hon. George Isaac Smith when he was Premier of the Province, then with the present Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan), and in recent years with the Hon. John Buchanan, the present Premier of Nova Scotia. These premiers, together with hundreds of officials, worked diligently to try in a small but very significant way to delineate the areas of jurisdiction and the questions of revenue sharing. This is but another step in that process.

As was pointed out, while the Bill may well be frustrated in the years ahead, nevertheless for Nova Scotians it is a step of some significant note. It is historic in the sense that we now know where we stand. We know now what are the rules of the game and we are prepared to play with those rules.

I suppose it remains only for us to echo our reservations with respect to the back-in provisions. Some of the provisions within the Bill will be deemed to be confiscatory because in fact they are. It was never intended that Nova Scotia would have ownership or control of the feeder lines, the collectors or all pipelines lying offshore. In essence they are the very valuable properties of that section of our life, the private sector which put the dollars into it. The taxpayers have put very little into it.

• (1810)

With that caveat, I express my appreciation to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I am sure the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia would want us to do that. I extend very particular thanks to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hopkins) and the officials who sat with us today and helped guide us through a very technical and difficult piece of legislation. It is historic. I was pleased to be here and be a part of it. As Nova Scotians, we thank you. Keep your dollars coming.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to point out that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) in no way deserves criticism on this package today. Indeed, he deserves our compliments. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who directed his staff and who himself participated in the discussions of Bill C-43 and on the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement on Offshore Oil and Gas Resource Management and Revenue Sharing, was indeed the negotiator with Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia. With an alliance like the Premier of Nova Scotia and the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, how could any agreement fail?

I am glad that my Minister gave me the opportunity to pilot this legislation through the House. I appreciate the remarks of the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), who was elected to this Parliament on the same day I was, for commenting on it. Indeed, it is a very historic day for the Province of Nova Scotia. Our compliments must go to those who put this agreement together and followed up with the legislation. I was not concerned about the comments about this Bill today and the other comments that were made about my Minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, because I have faith in his negotiating skills. We have faith in Premier Buchanan. With a team like that, you are going to have a very good piece of legislation for Nova Scotia.

Following on the comments of the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, it is fair to say that this is indeed a very historic day in energy legislation. It is a perfect example of absolute co-operation between the federal Government and one of the provinces. Within this framework we hope that other agreements will come much easier in the future.

I want to thank my colleagues on both sides of the House for their co-operation in getting this Bill through, and to say that we wish Nova Scotia well. We hope that other negotiations between Nova Scotia and the federal Government will be as constructive, useful and as long term. I am sure the Minister would want me to express on his behalf our appreciation to the House for the quick passage of this legislation.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I will be even more brief than the other speakers. I certainly appreciate the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Hopkins). I want to associate myself completely with the remarks of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), in what he said about this Bill and the historic note that it has. Finally, after many years of discussion and planning, the officials of both governments put the details into an agreement that is complex, complicated and does go into unchartered waters. We are in a new era. This perhaps establishes the legislative framework in this new era which certainly we in Nova Scotia look forward to with eagerness, anticipation and hope.

With the greatest respect to my colleague from Calgary West, I want to completely disassociate myself with him and his remarks about the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), who has many things on his mind. Perhaps he had even more on his mind today, if I understand some of the reports correctly. I do not give a darn whether he was here today or not. The fact is, he was the one with the Premier of Nova Scotia, the Hon. John Buchanan, who came together in the agreement of general principle. We have seen the results of it here in the Bill. It illustrates that there can be federal-provincial co-operation. Co-operative federalism is not dead as long as Members look at things constructively in the interest of their constituent parts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

BANK ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-30, An Act to amend the Bank Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There has been discussion, and the agreement is that the Bill will be referred to a Committee of the Whole, not to a standing committee, and that we will deal with all stages of the Bill tonight.

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the understanding that we have.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, we also agree.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course, the Chair can only take cognizance of the proposal for unanimous consent once it is put to the Chair. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

Bank Act

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, since the Bank Act revisions of 1980, which allowed for the first time foreign bank subsidiaries to become Canadian chartered banks, nearly 60 foreign bank subsidiaries have been incorporated as full members of the Canadian banking community. Under the terms of the 1980 Bank Act, foreign bank subsidiaries are limited to 8 per cent of the total domestic assets of the banking system. The legislation now before the House would raise the domestic asset ceiling on the foreign bank section to 16 per cent.

Experience suggests that the foreign bank subsidiaries have benefited Canadians in a variety of ways, including the provision of a competitive source of medium-size business financing, promotion of export activities and the creation of new employment opportunities. Moreover, the foreign bank sector as a whole is responsible for a substantial inflow of new capital into the Canadian economy. I would add that this is a matter of some urgency since some of the foreign bank subsidiaries now benefiting borrowers are already constrained in their ability to make additional loans.

It has long been a policy of the Government to increase competition in the banking industry. This reflects the fact that a handful of major banks control an overwhelming share of the domestic banking market. Accordingly, the 1980 Bank Act made provision for the entry of foreign bank subsidiaries as a way to increase competition. At the same time, however, the Government was conscious of a need to ensure that control be maintained in such an important sector. As a result, the foreign bank subsidiaries were limited in their share of the domestic market. The 8 per cent domestic asset ceiling is enforced by provisions in the Bank Act that limit the total domestic assets of each subsidiary of a foreign bank to 20 times the deemed authorized capital distributed by the Minister of Finance.

We are a trading nation, dependent to a large degree upon international trade and capital flows for our prosperity. The fact that Canada's largest chartered banks are active internationally is a reflection of that basic fact. The presence of Canadian financial institutions in foreign markets benefits Canadian exporters and serves as an efficient conduit for the international flow of funds. Since Canada has a comparatively small capital market, we require foreign funds to assist us in developing our abundant wealth of natural resources and to create jobs. However, the fact that our domestic banks are active in foreign markets results in demands for reciprocity by foreign Governments. Consequently, the Government feels that it would be advantageous to our long-term interests to ensure that Canadian banks remain active in foreign markets. The measure now before the House will assist in achieving that goal.

When the 8 per cent domestic asset ceiling was implemented, it was envisaged that as the domestic assets of the Canadian banks grew, so too could the domestic assets of the foreign bank subsidiaries. That is, the foreign banks would expand their asset bases, but because the banking system as a whole would be growing, the 8 per cent ceiling would be maintained. However, in late 1982, the banking system began to contract as personal and business borrowers repaid bank debt. Consequently, while foreign bank subsidiaries applied for and were granted increases in their deemed authorized capital as they neared their individual lending limits, there was an increasing risk that the 8 per cent domestic asset ceiling would be reached. As a result, the issue of the domestic asset ceiling and the status of the foreign bank subsidiaries was referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The report that was prepared by that Standing Committee was tabled last autumn. It contained a number of unanimous recommendations including a recommendation that the domestic asset ceiling be removed completely. The committee also proposed that the Government undertake a review of all financial institutions. I am pleased to say that this process is already well under way. However, the foreign bank sector remains constrained by the 8 per cent domestic asset ceiling.

In making its recommendation that the ceiling be lifted, the Standing Committee noted that foreign bank subsidiaries have greatly contributed to the development of more competitive practices. This view was voiced by most witnesses who appeared before the committee. In addition, the committee found that the foreign bank subsidiaries have been a source of innovative financing practices and an important catalyst for change. Further, the evidence clearly indicates that the foreign bank sector has become an important and competitive source of funds for medium-sized businesses.

Since the Government's objective in introducing foreign bank subsidiaries into Canada was to promote competition, I am gratified that the committee determined that this goal has been met. As I have noted, the Government's policy is to encourage competition in the banking system. All the available evidence suggests that raising the domestic asset ceiling would benefit Canadians by providing a greater level of competition.

It should be pointed out that some Members are concerned that Canadian non-bank financial institutions are not getting a fair deal from the Government. I can assure them, however, that this is not the case. I have personally been in contact with representatives of such institutions and have held useful discussions with them. Moreover, at the beginning of this year, I established a private-sector advisory committee to assist me in identifying potential policy problems inherent in the changing structure of the financial services industry and examining proposals for change to non-bank financial institution legislation.

The convening of this committee underlines the fact that the Government has no intention of embarking on an ad hoc program of legislative change. Rather, it seeks to formulate a reasoned, well balanced approach to important public policy issues. I should like to point out that the Standing Committee explicitly recommended that this review process be undertaken. This has now been done. It is now our intention to respond to the main concern raised by the committee, namely, that the foreign bank subsidiaries be given the opportunity to expand.

The Government's decision to raise rather than remove entirely the domestic asset ceiling reflects the fact that the removal of the ceiling would involve important questions of principle that should be considered in the context of a broader review of financial institution legislation including the decennial Bank Act review. At the same time, however, raising the ceiling to 16 per cent will provide the foreign bank sector with the additional room to expand and to continue serving Canadian borrowers in a manner consistent with the original intent of the Government.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the House to consider the following facts. First, foreign bank subsidiaries have contributed to the introduction of more competitive banking practices, particularly by providing services to medium-sized businesses. This was the guiding principle which lay behind the 1980 Bank Act revisions. Second, the all-Party Standing Committee unanimously recommended that the domestic asset ceiling be removed completely. Third, while the Government endorses the view that foreign banks have made the Canadian banking system more competitive, the retention of a market share restriction will ensure that Canadian control of the financial system will not be gradually eroded. Finally, the Government has been responsive to the concerns of non-bank financial institutions. The review process now being conducted by my committee will assist us in ensuring that the process of legislative change is conducted in a rational and orderly manner.

It is the Government's view that Bill C-30 will enable the foreign bank sector to continue to serve Canadian borrowers and that Canadians have reason to expect to benefit from its passage. A larger foreign bank sector will make our banking sector less concentrated and should contribute to a business environment more conducive to small and medium-sized enterprises.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the rosy prediction just read by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren), it seems that there is no doubt that this Bill should pass, if we are to believe all that we have heard. I have some serious doubts about the comments that were made, however.

For instance, the Minister said that Canada's control of the banking system will not be gradually eroded. In 1980, four years ago, the maximum amount of domestic asset holdings by foreign banking institutions in Canada was 8 per cent. Four years later, it will double to 16 per cent under this Bill. Is that gradual erosion or is that rapid erosion? Did the Minister really say that Canadian control of the banking institutions in this country would not be gradually eroded but would be rapidly eroded? Is there any significance to Canadian control of the banking institutions in this country? If there is, then I think the Government might well look at what it is doing.

There are a number of things about this Bill that bother me. Indeed, in his rather lengthy written speech, the Minister made no reference to those things at all. I am troubled by the fact that the chief reasons for the amendments to the Bank Act of 1980 that was given to the House and the country was that it would permit Canadian banks to engage in activities worldwide. It was indeed a measure of reciprocity. Canadian banks were becoming international with head offices in Canada. If that is the case, where are the reciprocity clauses? We know, for instance, that Canadian banks cannot engage in banking activities in France because the French Government has nationalized the banks in France. Unless our banks wish to become nationalized, they cannot engage in banking activities in that country. Why then are French banks entitled to engage in banking activities in Canada?

I know what the Minister would say in answer to that. He would say that he heard evidence from those who appeared before the Finance Committee indicating that the emergence of foreign banking activities in Canada has created greater competition and the customers of Canadian banks have all benefited from that. I was not present at the hearings of the Standing Committee on Finance. That evidence may indeed have been offered. I do not doubt it for a moment.

However, I will say that there has been in large measure an attraction of foreign banks, carrying on activities in Canada, to the subsidiary businesses of foreign corporations that operate in Canada. Some of these corporations are large and very profitable and the banking profits that can be generated from them would be an asset to the Canadian banking institutions. By and large there has been an attraction, as I have indicated, and a siphoning off of that very profitable banking business which was formerly done exclusive by Canadian banks. It is now done by foreign banks which, through their parent operations in foreign nations, act for the parents of the Canadian subsidiary customers.

There is a matter which has been drawn to our attention which should be dealt with before this Bill is passed. The matter concerns an action by a foreign justice department against a Canadian bank. I am talking, of course, about the U.S. Justice Department and the bank is the Bank of Nova Scotia. Members will know that as a consequence of an investigation into organized crime, the United States Justice Department went to its Grand Jury with evidence that ultimately gave rise to the issuing of subpoenas for material which was in the hands of a U.S. branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia. That branch had been used by a customer to dispatch funds to another branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia in the Cayman Islands. The suspicion of the U.S. Department of Justice was to the effect that the funds were derived as a consequence of illegal activities in the United States and, more particularly, the offensive and horrendous drug trade activities in the U.S.

The laws of Cayman would apparently preclude the release of information which was in the hands of the Bank of Nova Scotia through its branch on the island. The U.S. Justice Department employed the tactic of pressuring the Bank of Nova Scotia, through its U.S. branch, to provide information to it which it did not have at its disposal and could only obtain through the branch in the Cayman Islands.

In order to obtain that information in a third jurisdiction, it was necessary to approach the Government of the Cayman Islands with evidence of the illegal nature of the activities which gave rise to the transfer of those funds. The U.S. Justice Department refused to do so and its officials said that under their laws, because the issue had first been presented to the Grand Jury, it was contrary to the rules of evidence to admit to the scrutiny of a foreign country the nature of the evidence before the Grand Jury had ruled on it. That is all very well. It would then appear in law that the U.S. Justice Department was precluded from exercising its ordinary rights to obtain that vital piece of information from the Cayman Islands.

However, they decided to proceed in a devious fashion. They decided that they would oblige the Bank of Nova Scotia to release the information to them on penalty of a substantial daily fine. Of course, that fine would ultimately be paid out of the revenues of the bank. They are asking a Canadian bank to breach the laws of confidentiality in a third foreign country on penalty of a substantial fine every day that the information is not made available. It has made a determined effort not to follow the normal course that is available to the U.S. Justice Department of going to the Government of Cayman and releasing the information, which would then give rise to a proper release of whatever information the branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia happens to have on the Cayman Islands.

The U.S. Government has made a mistake and it is trying to make a Canadian bank pay for it. I believe that that kind of issue should have been resolved before this Bill was brought before the House. We rarely get an opportunity to have any direct influence from this House of Commons on the way in which our nationals, be they individuals or corporations, are treated in foreign countries. The Government allegedly looks after Canadian citizens and corporations. Sometimes it does that in a rather slipshod fashion. It is in this House that we might well have delayed the passage of this Bill until we had an undertaking by the U.S. Government to proceed in the proper fashion and not badger and fine excessively a Canadian banking corporation which, if it follows the demands which have been made upon it, will be subject to criminal proceedings in a third country.

In making these comments, under no circumstances do I wish anyone to interpret my remarks as being some kind of condonation or protection for illegal activities. However, there is a way to obtain the information in a very proper legal fashion. Certain governments fail to take the steps required in order to obtain what they say they need and then use the clout of a fine against a Canadian bank to get indirectly what they cannot obtain directly. It should have been the duty of this House and its Members to speak out with respect to this issue before the Bill was brought before the House. I regret the fact that that has not been done.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-30, and Act to amend the Bank Act, particularly when we consider that Canadian home owners today are being driven to the wall, that the Canadian farming sector is experiencing probably the most difficult time since the 1930s, and that the small business sector is debating whether it is time to walk away from its operations and declare receivership or bankruptcy.

It is a very tough situation. Canadians are expecting action from this Government on a regular basis. That action is not forthcoming. However, there are certain groups which are receiving some attention by this Government. We are discussing one of those groups at the moment—the foreign banks which operate in Canada.

Almost 60 foreign banks have asked for a very special concession. They have said that we ought to break with tradtion and freeze the Bank Act in this country for ten years in order to bring some stability into the banking system of Canada. The foreign banks have asked the Government to change this precedent. They have asked for a special concession. The 58 foreign banks from Japan, Korea, Israel, Greece and France which are operating in Canada, want a special concession from the Government. The Government is allowing that special concession.

The Government is ignoring Canadian small businesses. It is ignoring the fishing sector, the forest sector and the mortgage holders of Canada. The Government is ignoring the average Canadian individual who wants to borrow from the bank. However, when it comes to foreign banks, the Government feels that they ought to receive special treatment. That is what Bill C-30 gives—special treatment to the handful of foreign banks which are operating in Canada. I think it is a very black day when the Government considers this to be a priority item. It brings this legislation forward in the closing minutes of this Parliament. The Government considers this to be a priority item and it wants the House to pass this particular Bill. The assumption was, in terms of the government's explanation, that these banks provide a great deal of competition. Having 58 foreign banks operating in Canada with a greater amount of flexibility in terms of their banking operations, and with more of the banking action available to them, the Government says is going to help the small business people. But when one looks at the facts, they indicate something totally different.

The foreign banks have come into this country, almost falling over themselves, since 1980, getting into position to cream off the corporate loans of Canada. After all, when one considers that the overwhelming majority of these banks are located in three cities, Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, and the overwhelming majority of them is in one single province, and when one considers that for all intents and purposes there are no branch offices at all, one cannot help but see that it is impossible for the foreign banks in their present state to offer much of a service to the small business sector and to the consumers of Canada. Yet these banks say, "Oh, yes, we are interested in helping the small borrower". However, when one looks at the size of their loan portfolios, one finds that loans in the $5 million to $25 million range account for 44 per cent of the foreign banking action, whereas with respect to domestic banks, only 16 per cent of their total banking action are the $5 million to $25 million accounts. What about the loans under $1 million? The foreign banks have 6 per cent in that particular category, whereas the domestic banks have 28 per cent. It is perfectly clear from the data available, Mr. Speaker, that the service to the small business sector is simply not there. Of the assets of foreign banks, 70 per cent has been loaned to corporations with yearly revenues in excess of $80 million. This is not where we need help today, Mr. Speaker. This is not the sector which requires special consideration. We are saying that if the foreign banks want to expand their operations in this country, if they want special consideration in order to benefit themselves, they ought to indicate a little more clearly that they are here to assist those people who need help these days, namely, the consumers and the small business sector.

Out of the House of Commons report on foreign banks came a set of eight recommendations. It was agreed upon by the Finance Committee that some changes ought to be required, but the Government chose to focus on only a single recommendation. We have not not heard clearly about the whole set of other recommendations which came out of that particular analysis, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, I feel it is a little arrogant of the Government to say, "This is the kind of approach we are going to take. We are going to ignore seven recommendations out of eight and, by and large, focus on the one which is going to provide special assistance to the foreign bank". The institutions most likely to be hurt by this Bill are going to be the small Canadian owned banks which are today struggling against the oligopolistic role which the "big five" have in our country, and one can see that they are also going to to be up against the 19 American banks, the two Israeli banks or the seven Japanese banks, and now with this Bill there will be another seven or eight Arab banks and a number of other banks coming in. When we look at the smaller banks such as the Mercantile, the Canadian Commercial or the Northland, we can see that these banks are going to be up against some very special competition, and the Royal Bank of Canada and the Bank of Montreal are not even going to notice these new banks in place.

What we are going to see as a result of this move is a widespread closing of branch offices across this country, branch offices which exist in small communities and in the rural areas of Canada. These are the banks which are available to the small business people and to the general public. We are suggesting in this Bill that we now bring more of the foreign banks into Canada. The existing cross-subsidization which exists with the larger banks, which enable them to keep open a number of money-losing branches, simply will not be there any longer, Mr. Speaker.

I cannot, for the life of me, see how this Bill is going to benefit Canadians by allowing more foreign involvement in our particular economy. I suspect it is certainly going to result in a greater outflow of banking profits from this country. There have already been concerns raised because of the expanding role of Canadian banks overseas, that certain funds will be moved out of Canada to take advantage of those overseas opportunities. What I feel is worse than that, Mr. Speaker, is that the profits from these 58 foreign banks, of course, are naturally going to be going back home, to the United States, to Japan or into the European banking system.

The foreign banks would also be less likely to assist in the pursuit of national goals such as the promotion of Canadian exports. Indeed, country lending limits imposed by the parent bank, whether that country be the U.K. or West Germany, could actually hinder the banking subsidiary operating in Canada from financing the sale of Canadian goods to one of the many financially hard-pressed developing countries.

What we are suggesting, then, is that at a time when we should be asking our banks to work with us in pursuing certain goals as a nation, goals which would see the economy revived and some direction in terms of economic development and investment, we are asking our friendly foreigners to join with us in this endeavour. We are asking them to act against their own set of priorities.

I am very concerned about this particular Bill and I am concerned that it is being brought forward in this particular fashion. I am concerned that it is not going to assist us in terms of providing greater competition, although the challenge will now be there. I believe that, as we work toward the next major change to the Bank Act, because of the fact that this concession has been given to the foreign banks by the Government, the foreign banks in the months and years ahead will have to indicate to the Government very clearly that a major portion of their loan portfolio has been moved into the small business sector and that a major part of their banking business has been done in co-operation with credit unions or other financial institutions. We are really tossing the ball now, Mr. Speaker, into the court of the foreign banks and saying to them, "Now that we have allowed you to increase your roll from an 8 per cent to a 16 per cent ceiling, we want to see some benefit accruing to the average Canadian citizen and to the small business community."

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we are very concerned about the nature of this particular Bill. We stand unconvinced that it is in the best interests of our country or that Canadians are going to benefit. As a matter of fact, from some of the points which have been made, Mr. Speaker, we are convinced that the net result will be a loss to Canadians, that in fact the existing level of the banking and financial services will deteriorate as a result of the so-called competition which these additional 58 banks—and likely to be more—will offer the people of Canada. So we will be opposing this particular Bill with some enthusiasm.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, contrary to the previous speaker, I must say that I support this Bill wholeheartedly. I believe the more competition which we can get in our banking service and banking facilities, the better off we are going to be. We are a trading nation. Exports are more important to us than probably to any other nation of our size. I believe the Schedule "B" banks, with additional capital, will help us with some of that export financing.

• (1850)

The subject matter of Bill C-30 was before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs several weeks ago and, after hearing from witnesses that included the Inspector General of Banks, representatives from the Schedule "B" banks and representatives from the Trust Companies Association, the committee unanimously recommended that Schedule "B" banks be allowed to increase their capital base in their operations in Canada. As you are aware, the present Act limits the assets of Schedule "B" banks to 8 per cent of the total domestic assets of Canadian banks, as shown on a schedule prepared at the time that provision was enacted. The committee recommended that the 8 per cent limit specified in the legislation be lifted. This recommendation was based on the advice of the Inspector General of Banks that adequate control could be exercised by monitoring the deemed authorized capital of the Schedule "B" banks. However, when the Bill came through, it did not follow the recommendation but it raised the limit from 8 per cent to 16 per cent of the total domestic assets of all banks in Canada. That is the matter we are dealing with today.

We, of course, support Bill C-30 notwithstanding representations made to the committee. I understand the Canadian Bankers' Association supports the Bill, but some members of the CBA are not happy with it and would like to see this Act used as a lever against certain governments which will not grant reciprocal arrangements to our banks. There is another matter of the extra-territorial application of the law of a country against a Canadian bank where its court levied substantial fines for non-compliance. I understand that both these matters are the subject of discussion at a ministerial level and a resolution may be forthcoming. The request of the trust companies association was more direct. In effect they asked that we not pass this Bill until we have dealt with the trust companies, insurance companies and other financial institutions.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) has set in motion a committee of representatives from trust companies, insurance companies and other financial institutions to get their recommendations as to where they should fit in a new expanded picture of financial services. Certainly they want to broaden their base of operations to utilize their substantial cash flows. Some would alter their base so as not to be so dependent on one service. I agree that we should await the report and have discussion with the provinces so as to prevent the sort of jungle that was developing in the trust industry through unclear jurisdiction between federally and provincially chartered trust companies. Certainly there is a need to overhaul the legislation covering trust companies, insurance companies and other financial institutions. But while we want to see this matter dealt with on an urgent basis, we did not feel we should hold back this matter until we could deal with that larger question.

We are constantly being told that we must find a solution to higher interest rates. Perhaps competition is the best solution. We noted, when the trust companies ran mortgage rates up to 21 per cent and locked in the mortgages with unreasonable penalties for prepayment, that our chartered banks found themselves very liquid because of a low level of demand of commercial loans. They moved into the mortgage field, and the rates came tumbling down. The trust companies followed the bank led mortgage rates down the scale until housing starts increased and the sluggish real estate market came alive.

Perhaps what we are doing here today will have a ripple effect and with more money available in the market-place the rates may modify. Of course, the one action that may defeat this is if the Government of Canada moves to take a larger piece of the money market. In the past year it took about 75 per cent of the money available in the commercial market, thus making it difficult for those businesses which need term money to find adequate sources. It is plain for anyone to see that we need a more active equity market. Most of our businesses have equity problems. Many have serious cash flow difficulties as they adjust to the regime of low inventories on hand and "just-in-time" suppliers. We wish to co-operate and pass this Bill through all stages so that we may send it to the Senate which we hope will deal with it on a priority basis.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to speak fairly briefly on this matter in support of Bill C-30 to amend the Bank Act. I am certainly in general agreement with the idea that foreign banks be allowed to operate in Canada. Since we started this experiment some years ago with an initial 8 per cent ceiling, the experience has been good on balance. It has added competition in the banking field, of which I would like to give you a couple of illustrations.

The first that comes to mind is in the market for municipal loans. I know one or two municipalities in my area which wanted to borrow money but were not able to do so at competitive rates from the Canadian chartered banks. However, they were able to do so from foreign banks which were looking for customers and very interested in this particular market. Another example, on a geographic basis this time, is the market for loans to people in the oil and gas field, not necessarily the big operators, the Essos and the Domes—although some of the people who lent money to Dome will have wished they had not—however, the people in the shipping and other businesses ancillary to oil and gas exploration and production. When the National Energy Program killed the oil and gas business generally in western Canada, the banks, the headquarters or the regional offices of which were in Calgary, automatically came up with the idea that they were not to make loans to people who were dependent on the oil and gas industry because that industry was pretty sick as the result of Liberal Government policy. However, in the Beaufort Sea the opposite was happening. There the exploration business was booming, so to speak. But the operators there found themselves caught up in the same net because the banks with which they dealt had their offices in Calgary where things were going badly. A number of people and businesses in that area were unable to borrow money from the Canadian banks at reasonable rates, if at all, but they were able to borrow money from the foreign banks.

These are two illustrations of how the presence of foreign banks in the Canadian lending market can be an advantage to Canadian municipal taxpayers on the one hand and small and medium-sized businessmen on the other. I do not know where the 8 per cent limit came from. It was probably a compromise between 5 per cent and 10 per cent. I do not know where the 16 per cent comes from in this Bill but it seems to me to be a reasonable figure. I do not know why it is 16 per cent rather than 15 per cent or 17 per cent or 18 per cent. Perhaps that can be explained to us. But it would seem to be a reasonable figure. Recommendations have been made that there be no restrictions on them, that foreign banks be allowed to do as much business as they can get without any restrictions. I think it is prudent of us at the present time to continue with the experiment, so to speak, and raise that ceiling. However, we should have some ceiling there for the time being. Perhaps in a few years we could review the situation again and elevate the ceiling or remove it in its entirety.

Others have argued that there should be no restrictions. I have some doubts about that. Although the amount of lending which can be done and the amount of assets which a foreign bank can hold are controlled, I do not think we have quite as much control over a foreign subsidiary as we do over a Canadian bank. I am going to argue this in reverse order. A few years ago in the halcyon days the banks were making a lot of money and lending money to Third World nations. That was the business to be in. That was where the big profits were in banking. I remember the Canadian banks coming to the standing committee and arguing that the reserve requirements imposed upon them should be removed or reduced in respect of loans which Canadian banks were making overseas. When you start reducing the reserves which a bank is required to hold in respect of loans it has made, you are getting on shaky ground. Everyone knows that any system of fractional reserve banking is inherently insolvent. It is incumbent upon governments to prescribe certain mandatory reserves in respect of loans which have been made.

I suspect that the arguments which were made by Canadian banks at that time may well have come back to haunt them, because a lot of the loans that were made offshore prove to be of doubtful value today. The same argument which was used at that time by Canadian banks in their efforts to enhance their profitability overseas has probably been made by foreign banks in their country of origin. In certain circumstances there is a likelihood that foreign banks may be more shaky than our Canadian banks. To a certain extent we must protect the interest of Canadians who make deposits in these banks.

In view of the time and the amount of further business which the House has to do this evening, I think those are the main points which I would like to make. Although there are one or two small additional ones that I would like to make. I listened with interest to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). He was presenting the official NDP position. However, I hope that he was really trying to encourage the foreign banks to be more competitive and to stay honest. I hope that was the intent of what he was saying.

In conclusion, I would like to register some concern about a matter which has already been alluded to by the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble) with regard to banks from countries which do not allow Canadian banks to operate in their countries. There ought to be reciprocity. If we allow banks from another country to operate in Canada, they ought to allow our banks to operate in their country. One of the biggest bugbears here is France. France will not allow our banks to operate in their country, but presumably we allow French banks to operate in Canada. I would encourage the Government, through the Department of External Affairs, to try to get agreements with countries whose banks we allow to operate in Canada so that they will allow our banks to operate in their country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) on debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to say a few words on this Bill which is to accommodate foreign banks. In this session we passed the Bank Act which allows foreign banks to work in Canada to the extent of 8 per cent of the Canadian market. A couple of years later a number of banks are close to reaching this level and we are suddenly going to accommodate them.

I have heard Members on both sides of the House talk about how much they abhor the control of the economy which foreign corporations have. If they could possibly get rid of it they would like to do so. Foreign business and financial institutions have such a hold on the country that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) admits daily that we are unable to do anything about the interest rates. Does the Government think that by adding foreign banks and increasing their control of the country we are going to improve that situation? At the moment, every time profits are made by a corporation in Canada they are either sent out of the country or used to buy up more of the country. Does the Government think that by increasing the amount of investment by foreign banks in the country and allowing them to get a greater control of the financial structure we will improve the situation?

Instead of giving foreign banks extra control over the economy, we should be giving the Government the structure to allow it to take much more control of the economy than the Minister of Finance suggests it is able to take at present. These foreign banks have suddenly decided that Canada is a very lucrative market which they can enter with very little investment. They can move their money in here and maintain one office to supply other banks or only large business corporations. As my colleague pointed out, we know that 70 per cent of the assets of foreign banks in Canada has been lent to corporations with yearly revenues in excess of $80 million. They are obviously going for the lucrative and large markets. That is not going to help the man on the street.

Canadian banks are in support of accepting foreign banks into the market. They have told us that they want this. They support this move because the "big five" are not really worried about this little bit of competition. It will give them a lever for investing in other countries. I suggest that we should perhaps study this. Is the ability of our so-called Canadian banks to invest in foreign countries going to help our economy? Is it going to put the man on the street to work? Will it help the unemployment situation at all? We are ignoring the basic requirements that would help the economy of this country and would make a difference to the man on the street. Instead, the Government and the Opposition are accommodating the large banks in Canada and the foreign banks, which really cannot be expected to make decisions that are in the best interest of Canadians. Consequently, we are opposed to this Bill and would rather not see it come forward. It does give an indication of the priority which the Official Opposition and the Government gives to the financial institutions of Canada which are in the process of selling us out to foreign countries as much as possible and will continue to do so.

• (1910)

Canadians must consider a government which will move away from large financial institutions. Perhaps that will be the issue in the next election; large corporations against the people. The Official Opposition and the Government will be led by leaders whose real responsibility is not to the people of Canada but to the large corporations in Canada that are closely connected to the foreign banks. It has been shown here this evening that both of those Parties support the take-over of Canada by foreign interests.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Questions or comments? Debate. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Guilbault in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the Bill carry?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Bill reported.

Mr. MacLaren moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacLaren moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to on division, Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There was a disposition to move forward now with Bill C-24, but it appears that the report has not yet come down. Rather than begin now with Bill C-36, which is the other business we were to deal with tonight, I suggest that the House recess to the call of the Chair until the report is available to be tabled in the House by the chairman of the committee. I understand that that will be at approximately 7.30 p.m. Perhaps the House could take a 15-minute recess until the report is available for tabling.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate that kind offer of the Parliamentary Secretary. We are anxious to deal with these matters. Bill C-24 is an important Bill.

I think the staff deserves a 15-minute break. They have been working very hard over a period of time and I appreciate that offer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent that the House recess to the call of the Chair?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, it is my estimation that the report will be available at 7.30. Perhaps we could recess to the call of the Chair and agree that there would be a five-minute bell to call Members back to the House at the time the report is prepared.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there consent for a five-minute bell?

Mr. Cook: No, there is not consent to a five-minute bell. Rather than a five-minute bell, I would suggest that we bring the House back at eight o'clock.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The point I wish to make is that if you ring the bell for five minutes everyone will think they will be coming back for a vote. Why do we not just agree to return at 7.30 and let it go at that?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think there is probably a consensus developing that if you were to return to the chair at a certain time and we would agree to a specific time, that is, 15 minutes hence, which would make it 7.32 p.m., the House will reconvene at that precise moment and we will try to get the word to those who are participating to be here. I think you would find agreement to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there agreement to this last proposal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 7.17 p.m., the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 7.36 p.m.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a disposition or unanimous consent to revert to the tabling of reports of standing and special committees and to recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent to revert to the presentation of reports?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. Also I would like to table evidence on Bill C-24 with this report, as agreed.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, contrary to normal procedure, if you would seek unanimous consent, you would find that there is unanimous consent for us to receive the report now and to proceed with report stage and third reading of this Bill at this sitting tonight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent for the proposal just enunciated by the Parliamentary Secretary?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): When shall the Bill be read the third time?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: By leave, now.

Mr. Gray moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take part in the debate on third reading of Bill C-24 and to speak briefly about a Bill which has been changed through amendments that were worked out through the efforts of members of all Parties. Because of this agreement, it is clear that this Bill will be adopted by the time the House adjourns tomorrow.

The Bill, as amended, speaks highly indeed of what can be the effectiveness of our parliamentary process, especially committee stage, and of a willingness on the part of the Government, the Official Opposition and other Hon. Members to consider carefully and respond to the views expressed about the Bill, including those of witnesses at the committee and key people such as the Auditor General, those in the business community, the arts community and other interested groups like the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants.

● (1940)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Government and the Opposition have worked together to make a practical and effective Bill, a Bill of which all Members may be proud. Our joint efforts in the course of this parliamentary process will result in the first major and successful update in more than thirty years of the legal framework that provides for control and accountability with respect to Crown corporations. That is no small achievement.

The purpose of Bill C-24 is to clarify the roles and responsibilities of the corporations' chief executive officers and boards of directors, of Ministers, the Government and Parliament, and to establish this updated legal framework for control and accountability of Crown corporations. Mr. Speaker, the Bill, including the amendments on which agreement was reached in committee, will provide that framework. I would now like to highlight very briefly the main amendments that were made.

[English]

There has been much discussion about the inclusion of the cultural corporations in the legislation in its original form. One of the major concerns expressed has been that from the point of view of the arts community, the legislation appeared to give too much authority over program priorities of the cultural corporations. Therefore, in response to these concerns, the Canada Council, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the National Arts Centre and the Canadian Film Development Corporation will not be covered by this Bill. It is the Government's intention to clarify its accountability framework for them and other cultural corporations, where necessary, through separate legislative measures.

In drafting this Bill, we intended that it would be binding on the Crown, and we obtained the view of the Department of Justice that this was the case. However, the Bill as amended will eliminate any uncertainty in this regard.

In view of the concern expressed about the special motion procedure for creating parent Crown corporations set forth in the original version of this Bill, the Bill as amended will provide that all parent Crown corporations would be created through Acts of Parliament, subject, of course, to the rules of the House. In this connection, it has been agreed that the Bill as amended would remove those provisions in certain pieces of existing legislation which allow a Minister to create Crown corporations, with the exception of the Atlantic Fisheries Restructuring Act and the Canada Ports Corporation Act, two Acts only recently adopted by Parliament. This change responds to a concern of the Auditor General.

It has always been the Government's contention through this Bill to have a strengthened role for the boards of directors of our Crown corporations and to set out clearly how they and the senior officers would be appointed and held accountable for the corporations' conduct of their affairs. In order to clarify this intention, the Bill as amended would provide that the Board of Directors would be appointed by the appropriate Minister with the approval of the Governor in Council. The chairman and the chief executive officer would be appointed by the Governor in Council, but only after the board of directors has been consulted by the appropriate Minister. Additionally, the Canada Post Corporation Act would be amended so that vice-presidents of that organization as well would be appointed by its board of directors.

The Bill as amended will provide that henceforth for all new parent Crown corporations, all officer appointments other than chairman and chief executive officers would be made by the board of directors. As well, the appropriate Minister, representing the sole shareholder, would be responsible for the appointment and removal of all non-officer directors, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. Furthermore, wording has been added to the Bill to specify sanctions for wilful neglect of duties by corporation officers.

Concerns were expressed about the role given to Ministers in the version of the Bill originally presented to this House. To respond to these concerns, a statement has been inserted in the Bill, the one that appears in the current Financial Administration Act that, "each crown corporation is ultimately accountable through the appropriate Minister to Parliament for the conduct of the affairs of the corporation." This amendment responds to another concern raised by the Auditor General.

Still another concern of the Auditor General was with respect to the criteria for the scheduling of the various Crown corporations. As a result, the Bill has been amended to provide that Crown corporations would be scheduled in Part II of Schedule C only if, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, they operate in a manner generally independent of operating appropriations and in a competitive commercial environment. A section will be added which will state that no corporation can be added to Part I or Part II unless, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, that corporation would not more appropriately be placed in Schedule B.

The Bill has been amended to respond to concerns expressed by the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. First, we have deleted from the Bill all provisions that would allow Treasury Board to authorize departures from the generally accepted accounting principles in the preparation of the financial statements of Crown corporations. Second, the auditor of a Crown corporation now would be granted qualified privilege similar to that provided by Section 166 of the Canada Business Corporations Act so that he or she would be protected from liability in respect of statements made fairly in the discharge of his or her duties. The auditor's report would be addressed to the appropriate Minister and it would include separate opinions on both financial and non-financial information.

In addition to the changes in the Bill that I have just highlighted, it has been changed by a number of other amendments of a technical nature which obviously the House would not expect me to describe in detail at this point in time.

To conclude, I would like to extend my thanks to all Members in the House who have participated in the debate on this Bill and in the development of amendments to turn it into what I believe Members of the House will agree is a very good piece of legislation. I would like to particularly extend my thanks to the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), chief spokesperson on Crown corporation policy for the Official Opposition. He has spoken out consistently and forcefully for an effective and workable Bill.

I want to recognize again the efforts of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), my Parliamentary Secretary. The agreement on the amendments to the Bill and the working out of an agreement for a short time frame for its passage is to a large part a result of the efforts of these two Members. It shows the kind of co-operative activity that can be found in this House when it is operating at its best.

I want to again recognize the co-operative spirit in which the Official Opposition and other Members of this House have approached the matters of amendments and of the allocation of time to enable the Bill to pass before the House adjourns tomorrow. This Bill will put in place for the benefit of all Canadians an effective new framework for the control and accountability of these important corporate instruments of public policy. I commend this Bill to this House for its support in the interest of good administration of our Crown corporations and the over-all public interest.

● (1950)

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his kind remarks. I rise to speak this evening on Bill C-24 as amended with mixed emotions. This will almost certainly be my last speech in the House of Commons before returning to private life. I must admit to a sense of satisfaction tinged with irony that my last speech will relate to this Crown corporations Bill.

I have spent a great deal of time and energy over the past year studying the subject of Crown corporations in my capacity of co-chairman of our Party task force on Crown corporations. I shared the chairmanship of that task force with Senator Bill Kelly and we spent the last nine months studying most of the aspects of Crown corporations and how our new Government should address the problem.

Indeed, it is a major problem with which we must deal. After all, we are today talking about over 300 Crown corporations with assets in the neighbourhood of $70 billion and liabilities in the neighbourhood of $80 billion. They cost the taxpayers somewhere between $5 billion and $10 billion a year. It is a major problem, one with which this Government and our previous Government lived for the last ten years. I suppose we have lived with the problem for longer than that, but the problem has grown and certainly the number of dollars involved has increased over the last ten years.

Some of my colleagues know that I have often been frustrated and disenchanted with the role of back-bench Member of Parliament, frustrated and disenchanted with the lack of impact a Member can have on the issues that come before this House, whether they be great or small. I have learned to appreciate the wisdom of a gentleman by the name of Walter Bagehot who wrote in 1867 that a Member of Parliament must sacrifice not only his time, his labour and his money to be a Member of Parliament, but perhaps the greatest sacrifice of all is the sacrifice of his mind. I am therefore pleased to note that my colleagues and I on this side of the House at least played a major role in the improvement of Bill C-24 from the state it was in when it was initially introduced. After long and arduous discussions and negotiations, we on this side of the House proposed roughly 100 amendments, many of which were accepted by the Government and now form a part of the Bill that is before us.

One of the major amendments we were able to have accepted was the removal of clauses that would have allowed the Government to continue to set up new Crown corporations with little or no control by Parliament. We were able to enhance and clarify the role of the individual Minister. We took a significant step forward in creating ministerial accountability. After all, ministerial accountability is one of the key factors in coming to grips with the accountability of Crown corporations. We were also able to increase the amount and quality of information provided to Parliament.

Another important amendment attained by the Conservative Party was the protection for the unique and historic independence of our cultural organizations. The Canada Council, the NAC, the CBC and the Canadian Film Development Corporation will no longer fall under the jurisdiction of the legislation amended by Bill C-24. Since 1979, the Progressive Conservative Party has supported the concept of a separate cultural agencies Act, an Act which would set cultural agencies entirely apart from other Crown corporations. In his statement agreeing to exempt the cultural corporations, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) has committed the Government to that concept.

I am gratified that we were able to have that impact on the Bill, and the impact of the many other amendments which were reflected in the legislation. I only regret that we did not have time to do more, and that we were not allowed to have the same impact on the majority of Bills that came before this House, including many of the Bills with which I have been associated since I have been a Member of this House of Commons. It is reassuring to know that every once in awhile, the House of Commons does in fact work.

Do not misunderstand me. This is an imperfect Bill. I suppose one could say that to find a perfect Bill in an imperfect world is beyond human capacity. Nevertheless, this is an imperfect Bill. It goes only part way toward addressing the serious problems that have bedevilled Crown corporations. The process by which the Bill was prepared certainly left a lot to be desired.

As we look back over the last decade, we see a host of scandals in which Crown corporations were involved. We have seen studies done ad nauseam about what to do with Crown corporations. There have been royal commissions, commissions of inquiry, white papers, blue papers and previous Bills all the way back to 1972. Yet I must condemn the Government for waiting for over ten years until the dying days of this Parliament, and very likely the dying days of this Government, to table this complex and very difficult Bill. After waiting for ten years, the Government asks for passage of the Bill in only two months.

In my short time in public life and, as a matter of fact, in my private life as well, I must say that I have never seen anything in such a state of shambles as this Bill was when it came before the committee after second reading. The final package of amendments reviewed by the committee was almost two inches thick. Right up until the last moment, the Government was bringing in housekeeping, technical and other amendments. The last minute changes were so extensive that I understood it would take three days to print the Bill. It is a miracle that it could be printed in three days.

In its haste to move the Bill forward, the Government apparently tried to intimidate Crown corporations into not airing publicly their problems with the Bill and not appearing before the Parliamentary Committee.

Mr. Beatty: Francis Fox gave the orders too.

Mr. Thomson: As I said, this is an imperfect Bill. It is a far cry from what we on this side think is necessary.

I am afraid to say that Bill C-24 will, I believe, cause a further bureaucratization of Crown corporations, something which I do not think is in the best interests of our attempt to bring Crown corporations under control. The Bill does not go far enough in so far as describing the role of the board of directors. I happen to believe that the board of directors has a very, very vital role to play in the control and management of Crown corporations. If they are not given anything to do, if they are not part of the chain of accountability, from the chief executive officer to the board of directors to the Minister, and if they are not allowed to function in a manner in which they can financially control that corporation, they will not be able to respect their position of responsibility.

• (2000)

However, improvements have been made. While many of those changes are worthwhile, the Bill still confuses and obscures ministerial responsibility for Crown corporations. It confuses what the Lambert Commission referred to as the vital chain of accountability to Parliament. I am afraid that this legislation ignores many of the issues which we think Crown corporation legislation should address.

One of the most vital issues which is not addressed in the legislation—and I hope that a future Progressive Conservative government will come to grips with it—is the appointment of a chief executive officer. As long as the chief executive officer's appointment process is retained as a Prime Ministerial prerogative, instead of being an appointment which is made by the board of directors, the chief executive officer will never be accountable to the board of directors and the board of directors will never be able to hold that chief executive officer accountable. When that chain of accountability is broken, we cannot expect to receive the measure of control which I believe is necessary to protect Canadian taxpayers.

As well, the complex and contentious subject of privileges and immunities which are enjoyed by Crown corporations has not been dealt with.

Another very serious problem which I feel most strongly about is the creation of a standing committee of this House—I would prefer it to be a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons—to deal specifically with the subject of Crown corporations. As I said earlier when introducing my remarks, the area of Crown corporations is a huge one within the federal Government's domain. The standing committees of this House simply do not have the time to deal with the review of mandates of Crown corporations on a continuing basis. Crown corporations must have a review of their annual reports, operating plans, capital budgets and corporate plans. It is an immense undertaking for Parliament to monitor Crown corporations. There simply is not enough time for the existing standing committees to do that. If this Parliament is going to offer a measure of control on behalf of Canadian taxpayers, I feel very strongly that a standing committee of the House should be created.

With all the deficiencies in the Bill which I have indicated, why have we decided to let the Bill go through? The decision was certainly not easy. Many of my colleagues are still less than enthusiastic about the passage of this legislation in its present form. In so far as I am concerned, I had a good many anguished moments in committee and have had anguished moments since that time. We will pass this Bill because we realize that it is impractical to expect anything better at this time from this Government. It is impractical to think that it could prepare alternative legislation within the time it has left.

Second, much of what is good about this Bill stems from many of the initiatives which my colleagues and myself have taken on this side of the House. We were reluctant to see all of our efforts go for nothing.

Third, we did not want to send to Crown corporations another message after all these years that the passage of any Crown corporation legislation by Parliament was not possible. We did not want to confirm the impression that Crown corporations can sit in isolation, immune from review by Parliament. Further, we did not want to send a message to future governments, whether they be Liberal or Conservative, that the passage of even a half-hearted Crown corporation Bill was politically impossible.

Finally, having rescued the cultural organizations from Bill C-24, we wanted to entrench their separate status before the Government had a chance to change its mind. Therefore, reluctantly and with many misgivings, we have decided to let Bill C-24 pass.

Most of the real problems which Crown corporations face will have to wait for the advent of a new government which will be free from the legacy of the past, willing to take a hard look at the problems and possible solutions, and with the political will to be a vigilant and intelligent shareholder. All the legislation in the world can be written about Crown corporations, but we will never be able to come to grips with the problems without political will. It requires the political will of the Prime Minister, and the Cabinet to control and manifest a regime of proper accountability. I look forward to that day. I only regret that we missed that golden opportunity in Bill C-24. I also regret that I will not be here to see it happen. In the meantime, Bill C-24, such as it is, will have to do.

I would like to extend my thanks to the clerk and the people who worked so hard in committee. I think that thanks should go as well to some of the bureaucrats for their efforts and the time which they spent in the preparation of this Bill. Those who think that all of our bureaucrats are "nine to fivers" are operating under a great misapprehension.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my intervention on this Bill will be very brief, because I think the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) said it all. I would like to begin by complimenting the Hon. Member for Calgary South and the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) who have by the process of negotiation come forth with a Bill which at least serves notice on Crown corporations that Parliament feels some responsibility for them and that in the future they will have to understand that their position is relative to Parliament's need for them. I feel we have gone on long enough with Crown corporations which have been given a mandate, have been organized and then have quickly forgotten their mandate and gone their own way to become organizations with their own ends in mind and with very little accountability to the Parliament of Canada.

• (2010)

I have really two points to make. First, the process which took place in this particular Bill needs to be looked at very closely by this Parliament. It is a process which we should try and emulate in many other Bills. We had put before us a bill which had been created by the bureaucrats, by the Minister, the Deputy Minister and had gone down through the system. It had behind it the prestige of the department and the people who had created it. Only the circumstance of this particular situation allowed us to take a look at this Bill in a way which made it possible for the opposition to have some kind of an input. If there had not been the leadership race, if there had not been the time limitation on the Government to get the Bill through, it may not have been the case that the ideas of the Opposition were accommodated.

I strongly believe that the process which was forced on the Government because of this Bill is the kind of process which would make the best use of parliamentarians, because it allowed this Parliament to recognize the quality and ability of all Hon. Members of Parliament to make a contribution to legislation instead of just government Members and the bureaucrats behind that Government. I believe it is very important that this kind of procedure be incorporated into the traditions of Parliament at some time in the future for the good of Canada.

Another point I want to make is that for years this Government and other Governments have tried to establish some kind of accountability for Crown corporations and have, to a great extent, failed. This Bill may have warts. I am not going to go through the shortcomings which we suggest are in this Bill. However, as I mentioned before, it will serve notice on Crown corporations that Hon. Members on all sides of this House are not going to let them go their own way in the future. By passing this Bill we are saying that from now on we want to be sure that the mandate which is given to a Crown corporation is adhered to. We want to be sure that the expenditures of money by Crown corporations are made at the behest of Parliament, not at the behest of a member of Cabinet or the Cabinet itself. This Bill does not do this entirely, but we are serving notice that this is the direction in which we want to go. I feel it is a very important Bill in that way. It does not go far enough, Mr. Speaker, but it does go in the right direction.

I have to agree entirely with the Hon. Member for Calgary South, that even if we put an absolutely perfect Bill in place—which this Bill is not—we would still require the political will of the Government of the day to have the kind of accountability from Crown corporations which this Parliament has indicated it wants. After almost five years on the Public Accounts Committee, I know that Hon. Members of this House, regardless from which Party they come, do want accountability of Crown corporations. The process we went through in getting at least a portion of that accountability is a valuable experience for this House which we would extend possibly to other Bills. I hope whichever Government is in power after the next election it will take a look at this Bill and see that there are still some things which are not the way they should be and change them, so that eventually those Crown corporations which are already in place, as well as future Crown corporations, will be instruments of public policy and will be controlled by the Parliament of Canada for the people of Canada.

Crown corporations have a role to play in the economy of Canada, but that role is only worthwhile if they are instruments of the Government and controlled by this Parliament. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I say to you that we will be supporting this Bill.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to speak at length tonight. I believe there was an understanding that we would have about 20 minutes on each side with only two speakers for the Official Opposition and the Government. I believe my Minister has taken up almost all of the time which would have been available to me.

I just want to say how pleased I am to see this Bill finally come out of committee and get to third reading tonight. I believe it is an important piece of legislation which will have far-reaching implications for the Crown corporations which daily affect the lives of Canadians. We only have to think about Petro-Canada, Air Canada, CNR or any of the other commercially competitive Crown corporations, as well as the many other corporations which serve the needs of Canadians on behalf of the Government of Canada, to realize that this Bill has very far-reaching effects.

I want to pay tribute, as did the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), to the kind of co-operation which existed between Hon. Members of the Opposition and the New Democratic Party, especially the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), and the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), because without that kind of co-operation in moving and dealing with amendments at committee stage, and agreeing to work long hours all of this week, we obviously could never have moved this Bill out of committee late this morning and into the House tonight. I believe we had over 100 speakers on second reading in the seven days of debate. Therefore, since March 16, when this Bill was introduced, it has been a long and tortuous period of time.

I also want to pay tribute to the Clerk of the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee who worked all through last night on the amendments to the Bill. I also understand that some 12 or 15 people on the task force from the Treasury Board have been working for over eight or nine months on this Bill, many of whom are in the gallery tonight. As well, the Department of Justice officials worked through the night last night on the amendments.

I believe this Bill, with the amendments we have added, really meets many of the ideas which the Government had in mind in its original introduction. There have been a lot of compromises and the President of the Treasury Board and the Government have accepted many amendments. I think in all cases we are agreed that we have strengthened the Bill and the role of Parliament, both in the creation of Crown corporations and in the supervision of budgets and so on. I just want to express my appreciation to all those who have made the passage of this Bill possible. I think it will really meet the needs of Canadians regarding these important institutions of the federal Government.

• (2020)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to say that I came here tonight not to bury the Bill but to praise it. That is a tremendous change from the second reading debate which was marked by a good deal of very deep and divergent feelings on both sides of the House. Frankly, I did not expect that I would have the opportunity to say that I believe we have a Bill which is vastly improved and which will improve considerably on the status quo for Canadians.

Going back to 1979 and the days of the Clark Government, I had the responsibility for drafting legislation which would serve as an omnibus Bill to bring control and accountability to Crown corporations. What was so striking to me at that time and remains so today is the tremendous range, power and cost of Crown corporations which extend into virtually every aspect of Canadian life. It was made apparent to me that these Crown corporations, many of which had served useful purposes at the time they were set up, and continue to do so, had in many instances moved well beyond the purposes intended by Parliament. In some instances Parliament and perhaps even the Government were not aware of even the existence of some Crown corporations. Certainly it became apparent that parliamentary and governmental controls were weak or non-existent in many instances. It was essential that legislation be put in place that would vastly improve the quality of the relationship between Crown corporations and the government and people of Canada.

I want to make reference to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson). As he said, what we heard tonight was his last speech as a Member of the House of Commons, unless through some measure which would be of great surprise to all of us we found ourselves back here in the fall. I had the pleasure of working with the Hon. Member and I can tell you that he is a tremendously diligent and hard working, conscientious and principled person. The House will be poorer for the fact he has decided not to stand for re-election. He has another quality, one of modesty. One of the things he did not do was to take credit for the fairly dramatic improvements which have taken place in this Bill as a direct result of his efforts and those of Members on this side under his leadership.

When the Hon. Member for Calgary South co-chaired the PC task force on Crown corporations with Senator Bill Kelly, they launched an energetic schedule which was designed to develop a set of principles which would be useful for a PC Government or the present government in trying to come to grips with the control and accountability of Crown corporations. As one who has seen the results of that task force, I can tell you that is one of the finest pieces of work ever to have been done by a group of parliamentarians, certainly in the 12 years in which I have been in Ottawa. The report speaks volumes about the conscientiousness of the Hon. Member.

However, what speaks equally well of his work are the dramatic improvements made in this Bill as a direct result of his leadership. The Hon. Member is a very modest man, but I think I can say this is a good day for Parliament because of the Hon. Member's leadership. We have been able to remove provisions from this Bill which would have allowed the Government to do an end run around Parliament. If the Bill as originally drafted had passed, we would likely never again have seen the Government come to Parliament with a special act to incorporate a new Crown corporation. There were easier measures which would have allowed them to put it through Parliament with virtually no study or debate. It is a victory for the taxpayers of Canada because we have had better controls placed on Crown corporations to ensure that their financial management is conducted in a more business-like, sane and rational manner. The changes improved upon both the original draft and upon the status quo. That, again, is a victory for the Hon. Member for Calgary South and for my colleagues.

It is a victory as well for the Progressive Conservative Party. Under the leadership of our colleague from Calgary South, we fought hard to have amendments made which would make this bill infinitely better than what it would have been if the Government had been able to force it through in its original state. I think the Hon. Member, as he prepares to leave the House of Commons, can take considerable satisfaction in his work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: He leaves us as well with a commitment. The position in which my Party finds itself tonight is that we have a Bill infinitely preferable to what it would have been if we had not fought this fight. No question about that. If the Government had all the time in the world and all the numbers to get its way, then the Bill would not have been what it is today. He has given us a much better Bill. He has also put us in a position where we have gone part of the way towards achieving the goals he set out as chairman of the PC task force on Crown corporations. There is more work to be done, as he pointed out. In many ways, the Bill is deficient. One of the things he did not mention would be the controls on subsidiary corporations. We should have had a better definition as well of the implications of agent of Her Majesty status and the immunities and privileges that Crown corporations claim on the marketplace.

Notwithstanding the fact the Bill is flawed, we have moved well along the way and we now have a vehicle in place where, if there is a PC Government following the next election, we can make the amendments to bring the Bill to the stage where it is consistent with what we have recommended to the Canadian people and Parliament. That will be a considerably less time consuming process for this Parliament and the people of Canada than it would have been had we had to reinvent the wheel. That in itself is to the credit of the Hon. Member and he can take considerable satisfaction from that. He will be able to see his efforts continuing long after he has left this place.

I am pleased by another amendment made to this Bill. Wearing my hat briefly as the joint chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, I know that my co-chairman, Senator John Godfrey, would also be pleased to see that the rights and position of that committee have been respected as a result of the amendments made to this Bill. That is positive. I am pleased as well that the traditional arm's length relationship between the Government and the cultural corporations, which is so essential if they are to preserve their integrity and if there is to be any confidence in the ability of the Canada Council to function free of government manipulation and interference, has been maintained. That is a significant victory. In addition, one of the great concerns Members on this side have had has been with the creation of the Canada Development Investment Corporation. If the new leader of the Liberal Party decides to dissolve the House after the swearing in on Saturday, we will have achieved a major victory in that the CDIC will not have be forced through Parliament. A new government will have to be seized with the issue of what to do with this massive holding company which has tremendous scope to interfere in virtually all aspects of commerce in Canada. From the vantage point of Members on this side of the House, that in itself is a very significant victory again.

This Bill has had provisions included in it that ensure that the passage of this Bill in no way means the Government will not have to worry about coming to Parliament with specific legislation if it hopes to have CDIC recognized and appropriations going directly to the parent corporation.

I do not want to go on at great length, because the Parliamentary Secretary indicated there was a disposition in the House to act quickly. I want to acknowledge the flexibility shown by the President of the Treasury Board, and I might also single out the Parliamentary Secretary himself. His genial good humour, even in times of considerable disagreement was very helpful in keeping lines of communication open and ensuring that this sort of agreement could be reached. I think he deserves credits for doing that.

• (2030)

I would also like to pay tribute to my colleague from Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). During the time he has served on the Public Accounts committee, and also during his time on this committee, he has demonstrated that he has a genuine desire to see proper controls placed on Crown corporations to ensure that the rights of the taxpayers of Canada and the rights of Parliament are protected and enhanced.

My colleagues have mentioned other people to whom thanks should go. I would like to mention a couple of them. One of them is Mr. Donald Gracey. I first met Mr. Gracey when I was sworn in as Minister of State for the Treasury Board in 1979. I inherited Mr. Gracey who was the Chairman of the Crown corporations task force. At that time he was a senior official in the Privy Council office. It was largely as a result of his efforts that Bill C-27 was drawn up so rapidly and was able to be presented to Parliament within a matter of days of the Government meeting the House for the first time. Mr. Gracey and many of the members of the Crown corporations task force have moved on to other areas and are not able to see the culmination of their efforts to date. It was those people, with their commitment dating back to over a decade in some cases, who laid the groundwork for any progress which has been made since. Mr. Gracey served both as a consultant to the P.C. Crown corporations task force and also as a consultant to Members on this side of the House as the Bill went before committee. He served us extremely well. We are tremendously grateful to the contributions he has made and tremendously proud to have been able to work with him.

There are others whom I cannot mention tonight. They know who they are. If it had not been for their efforts and their diligence over the years in wanting to see good legislation passed, and fighting against tremendous obstacles to have legislation brought forward which would give some element of control and accountability to ensure that the abuses, scandals and problems which we have seen over the course of the past 15 or 20 years come to an end, there would be no way that we could stand where we do today. Even though they cannot be publicly acknowledged, they have certainly laid a foundation which is essential.

A Progressive Conservative Government will honour their commitment. It will complete the work which has been begun. Their efforts will not be lost or dissipated as a result of having a measure which goes only three-quarters of the way. They deserve to see Parliament passing legislation which does the whole job. Taxpayers, and my colleague from Calgary South deserve to see the whole job being done.

I will not go on at any greater length. I simply want to say that I am pleased to be able to support the Bill at this stage. It is a significant achievement. I want to underscore my thanks to the Member for Calgary South for his leadership. On behalf of my colleagues and I, I would sincerely like to wish him well as he goes on to other pursuits. We have valued his counsel, leadership and friendship.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

* * * * * *

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unless there is unanimous consent to dispense with the normal time delay for report stage of Bill C-36; we would not be able to proceed at this time. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions and there is a disposition that we should move on at this time with report stage of Bill C-36 and move on to third reading expeditiously.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INTEREST ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Herb Gray (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Interest Act, as reported (without amendment) be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Gray (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, if this Bill were given its proper title, it would be called the Regulations Bill. By regulation the Government intends to allegedly correct some of the difficulties faced by people who have approached a lender for the purpose of prepaying a mortgage. If you examine the Bill in detail you will find in Clause 6:

Whenever the amount of principal money expressed to be secured by a mortgage on real property given after the coming into force of this section is greater than such amount as is prescribed by regulation,—

I think it is appropriate to ask why the Government has decided not to disclose exactly what the principle amount should be. It is also appropriate to make that same inquiry with respect to the provisions of Clause 7(1) as they presently appear in the Act. Under Clause 7(1), as amended, we find, among other things that:

—no interest is chargeable, payable or recoverable on the principal money unless the mortgage contains a statement in a form prescribed by regulation showing—

A number of things which are contained in the Act follow. I would have thought that we could have had a schedule attached to this Bill showing the prescribed form. I would also think that the information in Clause 7(1)(b) might well have been spelled out in the Bill itself. The Section would now read:

—no charge within such classes of charges prescribed by regulation for the purposes of this paragraph is chargeable, payable or recoverable unless the mortgage contains, in the form and manner prescribed by regulation—

We must remember that this Bill was allegedly designed to accomplish a very simple and specific purpose. The purpose was to permit mortgagors to prepay their mortgages, coming up with a figure which they could well understand since the majority of mortgagors are not solicitors but are average individuals in the country who, in large measure, desire to terminate the payments on mortgages secured on their own personal residences. Why is it, therefore, that we have these complicated, convoluted provisions which, I must confess, use every bit of imagination of anyone reading them to understand.

Let us continue on with provisions of the Bill. We find once again that Clause 7(3) on page 3 of the Bill states that paragraph 1(a) does not apply if the information referred to in subparagraphs 1(a)(i) and 1(a)(ii) was, prior to the execution of the mortgage, disclosed in a form, once again, prescribed by regulation.

● (2040)

Clause 7(4) provides that paragraph 1(b) does not apply with respect to any particular charge within such classes of charges as are prescribed by regulation for the purposes of that paragraph if, prior to the execution of the mortgage, the amount of that charge was disclosed in a form prescribed by regulation.

Then we come to what is surely the most troublesome clause of this Bill. Under what will be amended Clause 11.1 of the Bill, Section 10 and 11 do not apply in such circumstances as are prescribed by regulation.

What this Bill proposes to do is repeal, by regulation, a specific provision of a statute. I submit that that is a process which is not recognized by the law. Parliament enacted Sections 10 and 11 of the Interest Act. Parliament is now providing that those sections may be restricted or eliminated in such circumstances as regulations may require. The proper course for the House is to delete, amend or change sections of existing statutes and not delegate that right to the Governor in Council. That is exactly the process that the Government is undertaking now. It is delegating the right to pass laws and amend existing statutes to the Governor in Council. I submit that that process has no legal foundation. It is improper and beyond the scope of any authority granted to the Governor in Council.

I must say that in the event that we look at the provisions of Section 12.2 as they would be amended, a section which allegedly provides the relief that this Bill is supposed to provide to those people who wish to prepay their mortgages, we find spelled out exactly what the mortgagor must do in order to obtain a discharge. He must pay a number of amounts. The amounts spelled out in the Bill are "(a), the amount of principle money due at the time of the tendering of the payment or such lesser amount of principle money as is allowed by regulation". What are they talking about? When a draftsman prepares such a specific insert in a statute, what does the ordinary home owner calculate as being the principal amount of the mortgage that he must pay when he tenders a payment for the discharge of his mortgage? While he can determine exactly what is the principal amount due under the mortgage, what is this other lesser amount of principal money as is allowed by regulation?

He also must pay the interest on the principal amount. That is the normal, logical and sensible procedure that has taken place since mortgages were invented.

Now comes the crunch. The other amount he must pay is the prepayment charge provided by the regulations, calculated in the manner prescribed by regulation or any other agreed or prepaid charge if it is less than the prepayment charged provided for by the regulations. I do not know what that is and I want to say that neither will the home owner who tenders an amount for payment know what that means.

Obtaining a discharge of a mortgage is a very important facet in the lives of home owners. Let us take the case of someone providing a cheque to a mortgage. The process requires that the cheque must be certified because they will not take an ordinary cheque unless it happens to be with the lending institution on whom the cheque is drawn. If that cheque is $10 too little, that person is still obliged to pay the interest and the mortgagee can refuse to accept payment of that cheque. That individual can go to court and argue that he should have had that discharge because he tendered his payment. If the payment is not in the right amount, interest will run on the principal amount of that outstanding obligation. By the time that individual gets to court and the case is heard two years later, interest will be running on the amount that was not accepted as a proper payment to discharge a mortgage.

Surely some element of certainty must be available for the average citizen who tenders an amount to obtain a discharge of his mortgage. Will this Bill accomplish that purpose? Absolutely not! I do not know what amount that is and neither does the Government House Leader know what that amount would ever be.

Mr. Pinard: What about tabling in the courts?

Mr. Gamble: What we have done as a result of the amendment which will change Section 10 is provide for the elimination of the one thing that the citizen could look to, perhaps with some judicial assistance in connection with what a five-year mortgage is, which is knowing what three months interest by way of bonus discharge meant. That was easy to calculate. The principal amount was spelled out and one could get a computer print-out of the exact calculation. He could calculate the three months' interest bonus and tender that payment, together with the interest due up to the time of tendering. He was entitled to a discharge of his mortgage. He also had to pay a discharge fee which was required. Now he will never know what this amount is because it is a prepayment charge provided for by regulation.

This whole Bill is a fraud. It is pretending to remedy a recognized problem in society but does not do that. The prepayment charge provided for by regulation may be, if the Governor in Council decides, interest at the fixed rate under the mortgage until the end of the term. The House is asked to pass this Bill which leaves in the hands of the Governor in Council the right to determine what that amount is. There is no limitation placed upon the Government. I would be interested to hear the comments of the Government House Leader. It may indeed be the whole amount of interest until the end of the term because we do not know.

Even if the Government was to file the proposed regulations under this Bill with the House today, they could be changed tomorrow. That is the magic of regulations: they do not have to be brought before this place. Parliament will never again see them. The Government alone will decide what the amount is to be. We are asked to pass a Bill which is supposed to provide relief for Canadian home owners. This Bill does not provide that relief. It is an attempt to employ phraseology that is loose and inconclusive. It smokescreens the problems.

With the coming election, I know that Government members will be able to travel throughout the country and say that they have amended the Interest Act so that now there is a method for prepaying a mortgage. It may cost Canadians twice as much as it would have otherwise, but nobody knows. I want to say that this type of legislation which the Government has presented does not do justice to the House and to the duties and obligations imposed upon the members in this place.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand my colleague has completed his speech. My point of order concerns House business for tomorrow. We will be dealing with the following Bills in the order enumerated: Bill C-50, C-47, C-56, C-51, the Saltfish Bill, which does not have a number as yet—that Bill will be introduced tomorrow—Bill C-54, S-11 and C-53.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What is Bill C-53.

Mr. Pinard: I will talk to the Opposition House Leader about it afterward.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Before Saturday if possible.

Mr. Pinard: Except for Bill C-53, Mr. Speaker, we have had consultations and that is the package for tomorrow. For my hon. friend's information, Bill C-53 is the Mingan Archipelago. I am told consultations took place and it looks very good. There is a Bill, a miscellaneous statute, which has no number yet. Notice will be given tomorrow, the Bill will be introduced and passed without debate. I think that is enough. This is the list of some nine Bills. I hope they will get through before two o'clock in order to allow the Senate to deal with them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting list. I look forward to the debate tomorrow. The two o'clock estimated time of arrival at the end of that list is one which I hope one can achieve, but one gets carried away with some of those important pieces of legislation which the Government has brought forward when one has speeches welling from one's bosom, wanting to get the benefit of speaking on such Bills as the Archipelago Bill and so on. I have mentioned the Anomalies Bill to the Government House Leader. I do not anticipate any particular problem with that. I would like to give notice to the Government House Leader that possibly one of our Members has a few remarks to make on this Bill because it is a technical Bill. We will face that very substantial list tomorrow at the appropriate time and see what progress can be made.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is rising. Is the Hon. Member rising on the same point of order or is he rising for debate?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on debate.

INTEREST ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Mr. Gray, that Bill C-36, an Act to Amend the Interest Act, be now read a third time and do pass.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on Bill C-36. I listened with a considerable amount of interest to the previous speaker. I find myself agreeing with him to a large extent, which surprises me. But nevertheless the arguments he made were more than deserving.

In the last several days I have received a number of phone calls and letters from people asking me when Bill C-36 will pass, giving them a significant amount of interest relief on their mortgages. An impression has been created for some reason or other that Bill C-36 will provide lower interest rates and relief for mortgage holders, or people negotiating a new mortgage from high interest rates or, as we have seen in the last few days, the escalating interest rates. I have had to tell people that that is not the case, that this Act to amend the Interest Act has nothing to do with assisting them with their mortgages. It will not do anything to make life easier for people or enable them to afford a home mortgage during these difficult times. When you think of what it is going to do, I believe the Government has misled the people of Canada.

I recall on many occasions in the House when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) would stand in his place and say that as far as he was concerned a three-month penalty clause on a mortgage being renegotiated to take advantage of a low interest rate as the rates came down was more than appropriate. The Minister felt that that was quite all right, and if we were having any difficulties with lending institutions which were not co-operating that we should send our cases to him and he would take care of these matters. What his term "take care of it" meant was that "I will do nothing except send along your letter to the appropriate financial institution", and whatever the institution decides to do will be appropriate for the Minister of Finance and the Government of Canada. I am afraid that hundreds, perhaps thousands, of Canadians had their hopes lifted in the belief that the Minister of Finance was serious in what he said and that the Government of Canada was prepared to act, only to have those hopes dashed as a result of the phoney and quite inappropriate comments of the Minister.

In essence, what this Bill does is make it clear to people what it will cost them to prepay their loans. I am not certain how this will assist anybody or how it will make life easier for anybody who has a mortgage at 14 per cent or 15 per cent. Perhaps we might be lucky enough to have interest rates drop to 10 per cent or 11 per cent, and therefore be able to renegotiate a mortgage to take advantage of improved times. But this Bill does nothing for that situation.

This Bill misrepresents to the people of Canada what the Government is doing. The Government is attempting in this pre-election period to give the impression that we are amending the Interest Act to assist people who have home mortgages or who would like to take out a home mortgage. The Bill will do virtually nothing for the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who find themselves pressed up against the wall as a result of today's high interest rates. It will not bring any relief to any of those people. The Bill will not assist anybody in terms of being a home owner. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, the Bill is a bit of a sham.

I, for one, am looking forward to an election campaign when people in an assembly will say to a Liberal candidate: Surely, the Government has taken action to provide assistance from these high interest rates. As a matter of fact, people will say: I remember Bill C-36 being introduced and passed in the House of Commons. Then I will be able to pull this Bill out of my hip pocket and say to them: Here is the Act. It does absolutely nothing to assist you. It does absolutely nothing to bring relief to people suffering from high mortgage interest rates. The Bill does nothing to encourage people to take out a home mortgage today knowing that rates will likely escalate in the months ahead. The Bill is a sham. It is an attempt to mislead the people of Canada. It is an attempt to misinform Canadians and to give them a false sense of hope and security.

In order to allow other people time to make some comments, I will bring my remarks very quickly to a close. Let me say that we had the opportunity in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to see some very intensive gruelling questioning by a number of Members of various officials in an effort to find out how this Bill would benefit Canadians. After a considerable period of intensive questioning by various officials such as Mr. King, others, and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren), we found out nothing. What we found was that this Bill would not assist the average Canadian citizen in bringing any relief from high interest rates. What came out of the committee hearing, in an effort to prepare ourselves for today, was the fact that the Government introduce a Bill to try to respond to the criticisms being levied against it that high interest rates were causing concern to home owners and to potential home owners. This Bill was an attempt to deflect some of that criticism and to say: Yes, we have passed a Bill. It is called an Act to Amend the Interest Act. And the intention to bring some relief. It has done anything but that, Mr. Speaker. It has not brought any relief. It is a sham. I believe I should now call it nine o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A Motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

RAILWAYS—ALFALFA PRODUCTS FREIGHT RATES. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONDUCT INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, this adjournment debate concerns the question of railway freight rates for alfalfa products shipped by railway containers, specifically by Tirol Dehydrators of Tilley and Rolling Hills in southern Alberta. The reference is my question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) on May 29, 1984, as reported at page 4181. This is the second occasion on which I have brought the matter to the attention of the Minister of Transport.

I should like to give a brief review of the developments in this issue involving the shipment of dehydrated alfalfa cubes in containers to Japan. As a result of a favourable recommendation emerging from Bill C-155 last year, that is the Crow debate, alfalfa products were recognized as a specialty crop and became eligible for the new so-called Crow rate, effective January 1, 1984. Prior to this date all such alfalfa products paid full commercial freight rates for railway hopper cars, boxcars or containers. The Minister of Transport personally supported recognition of alfalfa as a specialty crop. Regardless of this new recognition, railways continued to charge commercial rates because the product was being moved in containers rather than in boxcars or hopper cars.

Following my first question last January, the Minister requested the CTC to instruct railways to use the authorized, lower new Crow rate for container shipments, and apparently the railways complied. However, in May the railways applied to the CTC for additional surcharges of $400 for 40-foot containers and $241 for 20-foot containers, retroactive to January 1, 1984. The CTC rejected these surcharges on May 23.

During June, this month, the railways persisted and informed Tirol that they intended to charge a lower $230 surcharge for containers effective August 1, 1984, when the new crop year begins. At this stage railways were still trying to increase their freight charges, even though they were told twice not to do so by the CTC.

Also this month the railway indicated that they will go to court, probably next October, for authority to charge demurrage fees on alfalfa and all other new specialty crops included in the Western Grain Transportation Act. We should note that original Crow crops did not have demurrage charges since they were protected by Order in Council. It would seem that the new specialty crops were never added to that Order in Council list. There is also an additional "positioning charge" now being imposed by the railways. If the shipping customer fails to pay the positioning charge of $253 and $127, for the two sizes of containers, a shortage of containers develops—one pays or goes short. The only positive development in this alfalfa saga is that satisfactory minimum tonnage limits have now been resolved for both west and east container movements.

In my question of May 29 to the Minister of Transport, I made the blunt statement that "The railways are obviously playing games here". The Minister concurred with my comments. Surely it is now appropriate for the CTC to rule that alfalfa products as a new specialty crop come under the authority of the Western Grain Transportation Act, not under the Railway Act. It seems so obvious that the railways are deliberately going out of their way to circumvent not only the details of the new Crow agreement but, perhaps more importantly, the spirit of this new commodity approach that had such positive and enthusiastic support during the Crow debate last year by all on the standing committee, especially by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy).

• (2105)

Tirol Dehydrators are presently in a serious quandary, resulting from an improper surcharge bill that totalled $336,000, and have found it prudent to drastically reduce their Japanese shipments from around 11,000 tonnes to about 500 tonnes per month, and the competition in the United States is picking up the difference. Tirol Dehydrators in southern Alberta are experienced and competent, with over eight years of trading with Japan. Their management team of Alex Chrumka and Ike Schroder deserve something much better than this railway runaround.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I am pleased with this opportunity to reply to the question put by the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave). I can inform the Hon. Member that the surcharge applied to containers in the rate schedule has not been approved by the Canadian Transport Commission. The railways are now submitting the appropriate schedule.

We must not forget that Section 51 of the Western Grain Transportation Act does allow for rates that differ from those applicable to movement of grain by box cars or hopper cars, but that any increase allowed under the section cannot be retroactive. Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, read Secton 51 of the Western Grain Transportation Act.

51. The Commission may, by order, prescribe the amount by which a rate applicable to a movement of grain by means of railway cars other than box cars, hopper cars or shipper supplied tank cars may differ from the level provided by section 43, but in no case shall that amount exceed the level that, in the opinion of the Commission, is necessary in order to reflect the difference in costs.

It is therefore up to the Canadian Transport Commission to justify any surcharge that is, or may be, applied pursuant to Secton 51 of the Act.

TRADE—TEXTILE AND CLOTHING IMPORTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT JOBS

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan) to explain and reconfirm his answer in the House that the Celanese plant in Coaticook is not modern enough and worse, that polyester imports do not come from countries where prices are lower than they are in Canada, and that we must develop modern and competitive plants, something Celanese failed to do in Coaticook, which has only eighty modern looms out of a total of 801. I am saying this because there is a tendency to put all the blame on the Government, and also because failing to counter often gratuitous charges would not only mean admitting the Government is wrong, but also discourage other textile workers and employers who have been, or will be, doing what must be done to maintain the textile sector, which can and must be kept as a viable and even a dynamic and stable industry. I therefore insist that we look at the facts, and if we do, we shall see that part of the responsibility lies with the industry. Personally, I believe we must preserve our textile industry, and I believe it can be done.

Mr. Speaker, it is therefore vital that the Minister establish exactly what the facts are, so that workers in Coaticook will be told the truth, and we must also provide reassurances for other textile manufacturers who are anxious to adjust to market requirements with plants that are modern and truly competitive. This is particularly important, because what is involved here is the political will of the Government of Canada and also the new decisions the Government will have to make to act in a manner consistent with the extended mandate of the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board.

The Government has already made it clear that the textile, clothing and footwear industries and the jobs they provide were very important, but also that adjustments were needed to guarantee a market and especially to provide guarantees within a normal national and international market situation, without undue and costly artificial intervention by the Government itself. The textile problem is a complex one, even textile workers realize this—but in Coaticook, they are no longer willing to stand up for an industry they kept going because of their sacrifices, because today, they realize that all their efforts have gone down the drain, now the company wants to reorganize or owing to strictly financial considerations such as maximum profits, which ignore the fact that people in a community depend on the industry for jobs. It makes matters even worse when we have workers like those in Coaticook who have reached maximum productivity, at a time when the company should have adjusted its technology to be truly competitive.

Mr. Speaker, I would, however, like to note the generosity of a number of Celanese executives, who wanted to offer workers some kind of compensation by giving them the plant building, which is certainly a considerable advantage for the Town of Coaticook which may, in turn, use the building to attract industry and so replace the jobs that were lost. Before turning over a new page, however, I want those workers who gave the best years of their lives to the Celanese plant in Coaticook, and younger workers who were already applying their skills in the plant to be fully and accurately informed about what is happening in their industry.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of these comments is not to point the finger of guilt at another party, it is to ensure that all parties concerned, especially the workers, have access to the same facts when accepting a decision that has become inevitable. These workers cannot be allowed to be the victims of such a decision. All responsible parties in Coaticook must be committed to providing alternative solutions, involving the co-operation and approval of the workers, in order to preserve their economic stability and to find new jobs as necessary.

To avoid giving workers the impression that they are just pawns in an industrial chess game, I think the solution to their problem lies in dialogue and understanding, and they are entitled to full information. To me, it is the only way to create the atmosphere of trust that is a prerequisite for finding a solution to the problem.

Can the Parliamentary Secretary, speaking for the Minister who knows the industry and its present and future requirements, inform the House what other reasons there were besides those given to justify closing the Celanese plant in Coaticook? In other words, to what extent is Celanese justified in putting the blame on imports alone, and should the company not admit that its reluctance to invest is now obliging it to reconsider its own priorities for achieving maximum profits, and thus to reorganize, restructure and even relocate, while turning an almost blind eye to the present and the past?

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Tessier) for his interest in this matter after Celanese Canada announced the closing of its Coaticook plant. The Minister and his officials share the concern of the Hon. Member about the economic impact and the consequences of that closedown. According to our information, the company took that decision with a view to consolidating its operations in Drummondville so as to cut costs, improve efficiency, use much more modern equipment, rationalize production and produce more, something which Celanese Canada feel will make the company more competitive.

When the company explained the reasons for closing, Mr. Speaker, they said that it was due to imports of similar products from developed countries, meaning the United States and Japan, not from Korea or Taiwan which are considered as underdeveloped countries. I hope that the expectations of the company will materialize so that it will be in a better competitive position against import products which come from trade partners, as I said a moment ago. I might add that the Government has an assistance program under which the employees which unfortunately have been laid off will be retrained in other fields of specialization.

BILINGUALISM—EDUCATION OF IMMIGRANT CHILDREN. (B) NATIVE INDIAN CHILDREN—ACCESS TO ABORIGINAL LANGUAGE EDUCATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I addressed two questions to the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal). I pointed out that in a number of our larger cities, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Toronto to mention a few, there are a substantial number of students who just are not making it. They have not got the background and the command of the official languages which permit them to keep up with their classes and to get the education which they need if they are to succeed as adults in our society.

Who are these students? They are immigrant children, children who come from families who have come to Canada from countries where they speak neither English nor French, and the language which is spoken at home is a language which is not used in our schools or in our society as a whole, or, they are Native children. Native people have been moving into our cities in very large numbers.

The immigrant children are here because the federal Government encouraged immigration from the countries from which they came. Native children are in our cities because Native people have been leaving the reserves in very large numbers. Both of these groups of children are finding it very difficult to succeed in obtaining the education which they need.

Country-wide testing is done. There is a test which is called the Canadian Basic Skills Test. It was recently applied in Winnipeg. It was found that in the core area of Winnipeg—and it is true in other cities, I am sure—the schools which are largely populated by immigrant and Native children had test scores which were disastrously low. They were as low as 5 per cent or 10 per cent on a scale of 100 per cent. The average pass mark is 50 per cent.

By the time these children reach Grade 6, many of them are only reading at a Grade 3 or Grade 4 level. The result is that they fall further and further behind as more pressure is put on them in the higher grades. Many of them leave school. In fact, it is very clear that a high percentage of these students never finish high school.

We are in a period of time when society demands that young people entering the job market need to know a great deal more than ever before. They must have a firm foundation, not just in language, but in mathematics and in some of the sciences. These young people are doomed to failure. They are the immediate losers, but society as a whole will be the loser for generations to come because these young people who are not receiving adequate education simply cannot succeed.

The Minister answered my questions by saying that the federal Government was already involved in helping to finance the education of these people by a program known as English as a second language. The program is working. In the City of Winnipeg, 1,100 immigrant children and 1,500 Native children are participating in that program.

The Minister is wrong if he thinks that all that is needed is help through the program for English as a second language. A great deal more is needed if those young people are to be brought up to the standards which society demands. There is a need for more teachers' aids and special work books which relate to immigrant and native children and their cultural backgrounds. The hours need to be longer so that these children can be helped to make up the difference in their shortcomings and their backgrounds. We need teachers who are trained to meet the multicultural challenge. The parents need to be helped to learn the language and to learn more about our history, particularly the mothers who do not go out to work, many of whom will never learn either the English or French language. What is required is a tremendous effort on the part of the local school district. But, Mr. Speaker, they do not have the financial ability to meet the requirements, and neither do the provinces.

What I am urging the Minister and the Government to do is to face up to their responsibilities. I know that the constitutional responsibility for education rests with the provinces. However, the children I talk about are there because the federal Government encouraged them to be there. I say that the federal Government should accept its moral responsibility and help to finance the educational programs which are needed to help these young people fit into our society and become full citizens, able to take their places as they should.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), when he mentions the requirements of children whose language spoken at home is neither English or French, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) has already made arrangements with his provincial colleagues to renegotiate the federal-provincial agreement on the citizenship and language instruction agreement, as well as the language text book agreement. The impetus for renegotiation of the agreements has come from the Treasury Board, which expressed concern over the "open-ended" nature of the agreement; from the provinces, who reviewed these agreements in 1980 with a view to renegotiating the needs of these particular children; and from the community, which following an immigrant women's conference in Toronto in 1981 gave a report which is reflected in these recommendations.

At present there is a departmental discussion paper drafted and there are consultations under way with CEIC, the Ministry of State for Social Development, the Treasury Board Secretariat and the federal-provincial relations office. Following the completion of consultations with the central agencies and other federal departments, a memorandum will be sent to Cabinet to be drafted for ministerial attention within the next two months. A major decision will then be taken to consider the approach and timing for negotiation of these agreements.

When we speak of the native children, the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) tries to address the needs of native children not addressed by the DIAND. The recommendations presented to the Secretary of State were that native children must be assured of instruction in their native language, customs and heritage, as well as in the official language of their parent's choice. This is being done by improving training opportunities for teachers of native languages; furthering development of native language curriculum; developing of written materials in the field of native languages for use in schools and communities; and strengthening of cultural identity through improved ability to communicate in native languages. Provincial and territorial departments of education and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development must be required to support and provide adequate funding for innovative educational programs such as survival schools and other alternate schools.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

YUGOSLAVIA—SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN CONSULATE IN ZAGREB

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, earlier this month the 27th Annual Croatian Day celebrations took place in Vancouver. These celebrations mark the long and honourable history of Canadians of Croatian heritage, who number in the tens of thousands. Many Croatians settled on the West Coast more than a century ago and played an important part in the building of British Columbia. Canada owes much to these people, yet the federal Government continues to ignore its obligations to an issue of concern to 80 per cent of the Yugoslavs in Canada who are of Croatian origin.

One major problem results from the lack of adequate Canadian consular services in Yugoslavia. Members of the Canadian Croatian community have long requested that a Canadian Government consular office be established at Zagreb in Croatia, Yugoslavia. This seems only fair, given that the Yugoslav Government maintains three consular offices in Canada, one in Montreal, one in Toronto, and one in Vancouver, as well as an embassy in Ottawa.

Additionally, a Canadian Consulate in Zagreb is a reasonable request when one considers that the only office of our Government in Yugoslavia is in Belgrade, several hundred miles from where Croatians live. Many Croatians must therefore travel a great distance to the Serbian capital of Yugoslavia in order to process passports, visas, and immigration documents, or to consult with the Canadian Government on business matters. Surely if the Yugoslav Government deems it important to operate—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time, unfortunately, has expired.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, one of the real tragedies of this Parliament has been its failure to address the very serious unemployment problem in the country. Most Members and most Canadians know that there are fewer Canadians working today than there were four and a half years ago at the time of the last election, even though our population has increased since then. What they are less likely to know and understand is that, in the midst of this unemployment tragedy, the Government has also chosen to cut the training opportunities for Canadians by some 20 per cent. That runs counter to what more progressive and successful nations have been doing.

We hope to see an early election so that more Canadians can be put to work and so that more Canadians can have training opportunities, thus giving more Canadians hope for the future. All that Canadians need to do is turf the Liberals out of office and put the Progressive Conservative Party in office. If they do that, jobs will come.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in many publications and media reports, well meaning but poorly informed writers and journalists have been unjustly critical of the financial input of Canada to NATO. In 1978, at a key meeting of the Alliance, a decision was reached to increase defence spending in real terms by 3 per cent annually.

A table compiled by The Sunday Times of London, and recently published in The Toronto Star, showed the amount each member of NATO contributed in 1983 as compared with the previous year's spending. In summary, the Europeans as a group never reached the 3 per cent benchmark. Belgium and Denmark actually decreased their contributions to NATO in the past year. Canada has increased its spending by 5 per cent.

In response to all of the doubting Thomases who have been critical of Canada's NATO defence spending, Canada in fact is in second place among all NATO members. Only the annual increase of the United States continues to stand ahead of Canada's substantial annual increase in NATO spending.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FAREWELL MESSAGE FROM MEMBER FOR SASKATOON EAST

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, there are rumours that there could be a summer election. If that is true, this will be my last time in the House of Commons, and I would like to say a few words of farewell to you, Mr. Speaker, and to my colleagues. I had fully intended to run in the next election and had been nominated on January 28 in my constituency. However, on February 21 I received a message from the Vatican which indicated that under the new code of Canon Law it is no longer possible for me, as a Catholic priest, to continue in active political life. Because I had made a very firm commitment that I was a priest first, and that I would be a priest before, during, and after my political activities, I resigned my nomination on March 1.

I would like to say that it has been a very good, beneficial, and happy experience for me in this House. I appreciate and thank all Members of the House of Commons who have become my friends. I feel that I have been able to state positions clearly which are important concerning international peace and development. I trust that those particular things will be carried on by my colleagues and, in particular, I hope that the person whom I have nominated to represent my constituency, Rev. Colin Clay, who is an Anglican priest, will continue what I have started and will be able to have the same good experiences which I have had in this House.

To one and all, my sincere thanks. It has been a great experience.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

THREAT TO STEEL INDUSTRY POSED BY POSSIBLE UNITED STATES QUOTAS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the past three years have been difficult ones for the steel industry in North America, both in Canada and in the United States. In steel producing cities we have seen tens of thousands of steelworkers laid off, many of whom will never return to their jobs. This has been a very serious problem at Algoma Steel, in Sault Ste Marie.

The reduced demand for steel in the United States market, due to the recession and the dumping of cheap imports by countries in South America and Asia, has caused the United States Congress and administration to take legislative action to impose quotas on steel imports in Congress, and to hold hearings of the International Trade Commission.

Canada has always been a fair trading partner with the United States in steel products. Our steel industry, markets, and source of raw materials span across the international boundary. Canada should be exempt from any quotas imposed by the United States Government. These quotas, if applied to Canada, could result in the loss of as many as 2,000 jobs, many of them in Sault Ste Marie.

The future Prime Minister, who will be sworn in tomorrow, is very aware of this problem as he recently visited Sault Ste Marie and consulted with steel company officials. I would urge him, in the early days of the new administration, to speak with President Reagan in order to ensure that no action will be taken by the United States Government to harm the vital Canadian steel industry further.

THE SENATE

REFORM COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, media reports indicate that the nation should brace itself for a new round of Senate appointments. Will these new appointments be based on the enrichment of the Senate? Will they be based on the merits of the appointees and the contributions they have made to their communities and Canadian society? No, this is Canada. We base Senate appointments on one element, political expediency. If the person who is appointed has any abilities, that is a coincidence, and it more often appears in the case of appointments made of political enemies of the Government rather than of political friends.

What has happened to Senate reform? A joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons studied the problems of the Senate and tried to make recommendations which would lead to the advancement of that body. Those recommendations have been ignored. The most important recommendation was that the Senators should have term appointments. The second most important recommendation was that appointments should reflect the society of Canada. All of this has been ignored in the name of political expediency. Government takes whatever action it chooses. If there is a favoured public servant who has no place to go, he or she is appointed to the Senate. If there is a politician who has stayed too long in office, he is appointed to the Senate.

If we are to have Senate reform it must start now with the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and continue with the new Prime Minister. We cannot have a Chamber that does not reflect Canadian society.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

TRIBUTE TO GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR QUEBEC NORTH SHORE

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, since today is probably the last day of this session, I wish to thank the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for the tremendous work he has done for the designated towns of Schefferville, Gagnon, Fermont, Sept-Iles and Port-Cartier, in accommodating workers seeking employment outside the North Shore region.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Government for all the work done on the harbour of Sept-Îles and the various infrastructures that have been put in place on the middle and lower North Shore over the last three years.

Speaking on behalf of North Shore workers laid off by the local mining industry, and on behalf of the metal workers union, I would like to thank the Government of Canada at this point for helping to alleviate the lay-off situation and making it possible for individuals to make a living in other parts of the country.

THE ADMINISTRATION

COMPOSITION OF FORTHCOMING CABINET

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, we are not getting a new Prime Minister tomorrow, and we are not getting a new Cabinet. We are getting another Prime Minister, and what is left of an old, worn out Government. The Cabinet that will be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General, really means an endorsement of policies which have disunited Canada, which have aroused separatism in every part of our Dominion, that continue the increased freight rates imposed on the western grain growers, that retain the exorbitant and unfair taxation contained in the national energy policy, that give CPR—is Mr. Turner still a director?—not only the benefit of increased freight rates but also the whole shortfall amounting to millions of dollars, indeed a guaranteed annual income for the railways.

It will be an endorsement of the high interest rates which have resulted in hundreds of our people losing their homes, and farms, and businesses. It will continue the confrontation with the provinces and the abuses under the Official Languages Act, and trigger withdrawal of investment money and the flight from our country of thousands of investment dollars. The 1.5 million unemployed, many of whom are without work because of the policies of the Ministers of this temporary Government, are left without hope.

It is the same old gang with a leader from Bay Street, the same old body with another head. Indeed, it is a sinking ship from which many are fleeing. What Canada needs is a brand new Progressive Conservative Government with a brand new leader, Mr. Brian Mulroney!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—DENIAL OF VISAS TO REUNITE FAMILIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, three people, two men and a woman, are conducting a hunger strike outside the Polish consulate in Toronto. They are endangering their health, and certainly risking their lives. Why are they involved in this very dangerous situation? Because the Polish Government has refused to permit their families permission to leave Poland to join them, in violation of the Helsinki agreement with regard to reunification of families. I am certain that all Members of Parliament will join with the New Democratic Members of Parliament in urging the Government of Poland to live up to its obligations under the Helsinki convention, and permit the families concerned to leave Poland on humanitarian grounds.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

IMPACT OF INTEREST RATES ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the banks increased their prime lending rate to 13 per cent. This came at a time when the Canadian Council on Social Development was finding that one in four families in our country were living below the poverty line. This confirmed earlier findings by Statistics Canada in February that 46 per cent of the unemployed were forced to live at or below the poverty line. Given the fact that there are fewer people working full time in Canada today than when we came here four and a half years ago, I think the House and the country have a right to know from the Minister what rate of interest rates he will tolerate to condemn thousands and thousands more Canadians to unemployment and poverty?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to remind my hon. friend that one of the latest pieces of legislation passed by this Parliament, at the urging of this Government, has been a measure to come to the aid of elderly single people, 75 per cent of whom were women, who still lived below the poverty level. Thanks to the measure which this Government has passed, there will be no single senior citizen in the future who will be living below the poverty level in this country. This is something which this Government has done, and this is a policy which we have pursued.

In the last 16 years, under the leadership of the current Prime Minister, we have been able to reduce very significantly the percentage of Canadians living at the poverty level. We have cut that percentage by more than half. That has been brought about because of the steps which have been taken by the Liberal Government during that particular period.

I want to point out to my friend that the social assistance programs are under provincial responsibility, although the federal Government pays 50 per cent of whatever the provinces decide to pay. Surely he knows that the level of social assistance is the responsibility of provincial Governments, under the Constitution. They determine the level of those payments. Once more, we are providing 50 per cent of those payments.

• (1120)

As far as interest rates are concerned, the Hon. Member knows that the policy of the Government is to follow the lowest possible interest rate policy. We are now in a situation where we have the same prime rate as in the United States, and we kept those rates below the U.S. level, thanks to our policies, for as long as we could. We will continue that policy of the lowest possible rates, taking into account the reality of our economic environment internationally.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my concern is that unemployment in Canada continues to increase while it is continuously on the decline in the U.S. A StatsCan survey shows that in February 46 per cent of the unemployed were forced to live at or below the poverty line. Unemployment is going up, which means the ratio of poor people is also increasing. Surely the Minister and the Government have to bear the burden of responsibility for this. Surely he has an obligation to tell the House, and the poor, and the unemployed, how much more they are expected to tolerate.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I remind my friend that employment has been rising during the last several months in this country. We have created more jobs, not less. The economy is growing and jobs are being created.

Mr. Broadbent: The economy is not growing.

Mr. Lalonde: As to the unemployed, the Hon. Member knows that we have set up a number of direct job-creation and recovery programs. A number of steps have been taken to increase the money for training and retraining of workers and unemployed. We are spending billions of dollars in that area, more than at any time in our history. There could be a few other things done. For instance, I am still hoping against hope that the Conservatives will support the income tax amendments before the House at the present time which would help small business considerably, as well as farmers and medium-sized businesses.

Mr. Kempling: Where is the Bill?

Mr. Lalonde: We cannot get the agreement of the Tories to pass the Bill.

Mr. McDermid: You have not tabled the Bill.

Mr. Lalonde: This is one area where the Conservatives could co-operate and help the unemployed, instead of arguing amongst themselves and being unable to agree on what should be done.

IMPACT OF INTEREST RATES ON CONSTRUCTION OF HOUSES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that there are fewer Canadians working full time today than when this Parliament first met four and a half years ago. The economic indicators show that Canada could be heading back into recession. For the last quarter construction is down, and housing starts are down. The Minister knows, or should know, that for every one percentage point increase in interest rates there is a drop of 10,000 housing starts. That means 25,000 jobs are lost. We know increased interest rates mean higher mortgage rates, which will mean lower housing starts. Surely the Minister can tell the House to what level he will tolerate these high interest rates going before he moves in to protect Canadians from another recession.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is taking the typical Conservative pessimistic and negative line that the economy is going into a recession. That is not a view shared by any serious analyst in this country. The economy is growing, and is expected to grow significantly this year. Even if the economy were to grow at the rate of 4.4 per cent, which is the projection on the basis of the growth in the first quarter, that would still be the best rate of increase since 1967. Inflation today is lower than it has been since 1972.

We are not in a recession and we are not heading into a recession unless, I suppose, we were to follow the Conservative prescriptions, and unless the Conservatives form a Government. That obviously would be a real recession for the country in many respects.

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION

SIZE OF FINANCIAL LOSSES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday Cabinet confirmed additional funds for the sports pool. Will the Minister confirm that the figures presented to the Cabinet indicated that the pool has lost in the order of $20 million to date? Will he give the House a guarantee that, whatever happens in the negotiations with the provinces, no more public money will be put into the sinkhole of the sports pool and that the House of Commons can expect that the sports pool will be closed before the House resumes sitting in the fall?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I can say that we will follow what Parliament has said in passing a law about the sports pool. My hon. friend should be concerned about efforts made to subvert a decision of this Parliament to set up this particular operation, the objectives of which are to fund the Olympics and other worthy causes. That is what my hon. friend should be concerned about.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government ought to be very grateful that there are provinces which are prepared to assist in funding the Olympics.

REQUEST THAT FUNDING OF CORPORATION BE HALTED

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): We embark on a new era tomorrow. It appears that the Liberals are proposing to hold off closing the sports pool until the new Prime Minister is sworn in tomorrow so that he can take the credit. Why will the President of the Treasury Board, who, it appears, will continue in a position of authority over public money, not tell the House of Commons today that $20 million so far, and potentially $50 million by the time we return in the fall, is a terrible waste of public money and should be stopped right now?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend thinks that supporting the Calgary Olympics is a waste of money, that is his opinion. If my hon. friend thinks that helping medical research and sports is a waste of money, that is his opinion. However, I do not think that opinion is shared by Canadians. I will make sure that his representation, for whatever it is worth, and it is not much, is brought to the attention of the future Prime Minister.

THE ECONOMY

FAMILIES LIVING BELOW POVERTY LEVEL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It is with regard to the alarming report that came down yesterday which indicated that 26 per cent of Canadian families live in poverty and 100,000 of those families live on an income of $5,000 or less. Just a minute ago the Minister tried to suggest that the responsibility for this rests entirely with the social programs of the provinces. What nonsense.

Two years ago his Government brought in a Budget which reduced by 20 per cent the tax rate on all those earning more than $130,000 a year. Last year he himself brought in a Budget which increased federal sales taxes which impinge most directly on the poor. Could he explain to the people of Canada, and most specifically to the poor, why his Government continues to do most for those who need it least, and least for those who need it most? Is this the new Liberalism?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been very selective in his comments on the effects of Government policies and budgets. I informed him that a few weeks ago, for instance, Parliament passed legislation under which the Government agreed to increase by $50 its monthly payments to the elderly who live alone. This will bring all Canadians 65 years old or over above the poverty line. It is an exceptional achievement, which compares very favourably with what has been done by other countries, because practically, we shall have eliminated poverty among the aged in Canada.

The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that in recent years, the percentage of Canadian families living in poverty in Canada has been reduced by more than half. This was possible thanks to a host of measures initiated and promoted by the Government of Canada and adopted by Parliament. I may remind him once again that the levels of payments for families living in poverty or on welfare are determined by the provincial governments, and the federal Government pays 50 per cent of whatever the provincial governments are prepared to give. The Hon. Member may have a centralist view of Canada's political structure. However, we live under a federal system, which means certain areas are the responsibility of the Government and the Parliament of Canada, and others fall under provincial jurisdiction, and we are trying to work together with the provinces, with all parties discharging their share of the responsibility. However, if the Hon. Member considers the economic situation in recent years, he will realize that this Government and the Liberal Party of Canada have done a great deal to help those who are most in need in this country, and that is our policy.

● (1130)

REQUEST FOR INCOME TAX REFORM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the facts are as follows. With the policies the Liberals have brought us, the majority of Canada's elderly will continue to remain at a certain poverty level. That is a fact. Unfortunately, the Minister failed to answer the question about our tax system here in Canada. It is the most unjust tax system in the world! It is the most unjust system of any democratic society.

[English]

Since he has tried to suggest, by talking about the slight amount they have done for a part of the elderly poor, that that is all they have to do, why does he not bring in some tax reform so that upper income Canadians will pay their share? He could do a lot more, not only for the elderly poor but for the rest of the poor in the country, if his colleagues in the Cabinet and the rest of upper income Canadians paid their share of taxes. Why does he not do that?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's statements are absolutely unfounded. Let him compare Canada's tax system with systems in most other industrialized countries and he will realize that our tax system is very fair, in comparison.

I would urge the Hon. Member to do his homework, and if he does not want to do his homework, he should get a better research service. He will find that the information he is getting is not accurate and does not reflect the real situation.

Once again, what the Hon. Member is saying with respect to the aged is totally inaccurate. Thanks to the measures we have taken, the elderly in Canada now have the assurance that they will be protected against poverty. There is no longer any reason why Canadians over 65 and living alone should be living below the poverty line, and that is thanks to the latest measures adopted by this Parliament.

As far as tax reform is concerned, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that we tabled a broad range of budget measures designed to stimulate the economy, create jobs and provide for a fair distribution of the tax burden in this country. More specifically, we now have before Parliament a major piece of legislation which concerns an amendment to the Income Tax Act, legislation which the Opposition is reluctant to adopt. I suggest we start by adopting the reform proposals that are actually before the House before talking about reforms next week or in two years' time.

FUNDING ALLOCATED TO SOCIAL HOUSING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly understand why John Turner has kept the Minister in the Cabinet. If the Minister would take the time to read them, I would like to send him a number of comparative studies of tax systems in countries in western Europe. I wish he would read them. He will hear more about that in the days ahead.

Since the Minister refuses to do anything about our unfair tax system, will he understand that the major cost burden for the poor, apart from food, which is very important, is housing? Would he explain why the important part of the housing program, namely, social housing in general, and the co-operative housing sector in particular, has not been increased by the Government but decreased in terms of its budgetary allocation? Why does the Government not announce today, on this last sitting of the House before the summer, and perhaps before an election, a major increase in funds allocated for social housing which could meet a human need and also provide jobs that are badly needed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member looks at one single program in the housing area. I invite him to look at the entire spectrum of our housing measures.

Mr. Broadbent: The housing that affects the poor. That is what I asked.

Mr. Lalonde: He will find that the Minister responsible for housing has taken steps to ensure that those who really are in need are getting help and support. It is not as much as we would like to do. Obviously we would like to be able to do more and we will try to do more but, contrary to the NDP, we realize that there is only so much money available.

Mr. Broadbent: Why did you give it all to the rich, then? Why did you give it to the rich?

Mr. Lalonde: That is typical of the Hon. Member. He prefers to shout than listen. I listened politely to his question—

Ms. Jewett: It is high time you listened.

Mr. Lalonde: —but politeness is a little bit too much to ask of him. He is so concerned about his own rhetoric that he cannot sit down for a few seconds to listen to what is being said.

I invite him again to look at the total package of measures in the area of housing. He will find that the Government has put a high priority on providing support for those in need in the area of housing.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNED JAPANESE CANADIANS—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TENDER FORMAL APOLOGY

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in this, the Prime Minister's last day—

An Hon. Member: Where have you been?

Mr. Mulroney: I was in your riding saying goodbye for you. It won't be long now.

In this, the Prime Minister's last day in the House of Commons, on behalf of my colleagues I want to wish him good health and happy days in his retirement years ahead.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: On this, his final day, would the Prime Minister grasp the moment to right an historic wrong that has been inflicted on Canadians of Japanese origin? Will the Prime Minister, on this special day, take the time to convey, either on behalf of the Government or on behalf of the Parliament of Canada, a formal apology to Canadian citizens whose rights were so trampled upon in the war years? I think it would be a gesture that would sit well with all Canadians who believe so fundamentally in the sanctity of minority rights.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Leader of the Opposition for his good wishes. I will remember this place with no nostalgia but some kindness, and certainly I have been honoured to serve the people of Canada as best I could in this place for some years. I am very proud of it.

With respect to the matter that he raises, I put it to the Leader of the Opposition that he might want to associate himself with the response of the Government to the recommendations of the Task Force on Visible Minorities when we did express regrets at what had happened to the Canadians of Japanese ancestry on the occasion of the Second World War, and when we announced the setting up of a fund in order to promote racial equality in Canada.

If the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party want to go that far, I think it would be a progressive step, and an encouraging one.

I am not sure what more the Hon. Leader of the Opposition would have in mind when he talks about redressing an historic wrong. There is no way in which we can relive the history of that period. In that sense, we cannot redress what was done. We can express regret collectively, as we have done.

If the Hon. Leader of the Opposition intends going further and indemnifying individual Canadians with sums of money, I think he should make it clear. I know that there is a fair amount of confusion in that. I would have respect for him if he suggested that, and made some provision for the many millions of dollars that would be involved, but the sum of money is not the main question. The main question is how many other historic wrongs have to be righted.

Even today we know that there are people living in Manitoba who have been deprived of their constitutional right since 1890, and who are deprived of a very real freedom of expression in that province. It is not of the same material order as the deprivation that the Japanese Canadians suffered after the war, but I think a deprivation of the spirit of a freedom is also worth some redress. Yet this Government has never suggested that they be given money. We have just suggested that we right the wrong which has been perpetrated in these recent months by a Conservative Government in Manitoba. I know that the Leader of the Opposition shares the regret that we on this side have for that. I just hope that his fellow Tories, if they are so anxious to right wrongs in the case of Japanese Canadians, will think of these wrongs and will do something to right them.

● (1140)

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Prime Minister's sense of partisanship will remain with him to the end. I hate to have to remind him with regard to the Franco Manitobans that it was a Liberal Government that removed the rights of French Canadians in Manitoba.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Laurier did not do a thing.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT APOLOGIZE

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Prime Minister on this his last day. We are talking about a specific problem, and there is a world of difference between a regret and a formal apology. Canadians of Japanese origin had their rights trampled upon. The reputation of this country was besmirched. All I am asking the Prime Minister today is to acknowledge the fact that this country, this Government, this Parliament, was wrong, and to convey our deep and genuine apologies to the Japanese Canadians, and in so doing tell all visible minorities in this country that this kind of heinous action will never again take place in Canada and, if it does, that we will have the nerve and the courage to stand up and apologize for it and deal with it honourably.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is all I am asking the Prime Minister. I am not trying to cast aspersions or blame. There is enough blame in our history to go around for all of us, Mr. Speaker. I am pointing out to the Prime Minister on his last day that there is a specific problem, and I am asking him if he will rise to the occasion and convey, on behalf of the Government of Canada, a genuine apology to Canadian citizens who were so badly done by. This does not preclude action in other areas in the future.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the emotion with which the Leader of the Opposition speaks. I respect that. He feels deeply indignant about what happened to the Japanese Canadians some 40 years ago. I share that indignation. I have expressed it on other occasions. It seems to me he is making much of a semantic difference between an apology and a regret. As for me I am always prepared, with some effort, to apologize for my actions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I do not see how I can apologize for some historic event to which we or these people in this House were not a party. We can regret that it happened. But why mount to great heights of rhetoric in order to say that an apology is much better than an expression of regret? This I cannot too well understand. All I am asking the Leader of the Opposition is why only regret this particular aspect of our history? He mentions the Liberal Government of 1890. Why doesn't his Party, as a Party, apologize for those events too, to the French Canadians? Why don't they do that? Why does the Leader of the Opposition not use the same amount of rhetoric for this? Why does he not apologize for what happened to Riel? Why does he not apologize for what happened during the Second World War to mothers and fathers of people sitting in this House who went to concentration camps? I know some of them, Mr. Speaker. They were not Japanese Canadians. They were Canadians of Italian or German origin, or some old French Canadians who went to jail, who went to concentration camps during the Second World War. Why do we not apologize to them?

I do not follow the Leader of the Opposition who talks about my political partisanship. Why suddenly only the Japanese, Mr. Speaker? Why suddenly only the Japanese Canadians? Is it because there are votes in it?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Come on.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, come on. Is it because there are no votes in Manitoba for his Party? Is it because there are no votes in all the other groups? Some of these other groups—

An Hon. Member: You are sad.

Mr. Trudeau: You are sad over there, my friend.

Mr. Dick: You are sick.

Mr. Trudeau: And you are sick if you are trying to take one wrong out of Canadian history and make great speeches about it and say that we—excuse me, Mr. Speaker, through you—say that we are going to deal with this particular problem because there is a particular pressure group now. We could mount pressure groups across this country on many areas where there have been historic wrongs. I do not think it is the purpose of a Government to right the past. It cannot re-write history. It is our purpose to be just in our time, and that is what we have done by bringing in the Charter of Rights.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

ATLANTIC PROVINCES AND ECONOMIC DISPARITY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, it does not give me a great deal of pride to follow such sophistry from the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McMillan: My question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Will the Minister confirm that there has been no significant progress in reducing economic disparity between the Atlantic Provinces and the rest of Canada since the mid-1970s? If so, to what does he attribute that failure?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): No, Mr. Speaker, I would not confirm that at all.

ASSESSMENT OF REGIONAL DISPARITIES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development? Is the Minister aware of a confidential federal Government document which I have in my hand, prepared by his own Department, entitled "Regional Disparities: A Statistical Overview"? This document concedes the fact that economic performance:

—has slowed considerably in all regions since the mid-1970s.

And the document goes on to state that the gradual reduction in disparities between the Atlantic Provinces and the rest of Canada:

—has come to a halt since 1975.

Does the Minister reject that assessment by his own Department and by the Government of which he is a part?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we have had this debate at some length in the House just a few weeks ago when we threw statistics back and forth across this Chamber. The point is that the Government had a dedication to correcting regional disparities. That was the purpose of DREE. DREE has been an outstanding success in Atlantic Canada. These successes have been built upon, and that commitment to regional development is ever present and has been moved forward aggressively by this Government.

U.S.S.R.—TREATMENT OF PERSONS RECEIVING GIFT PARCELS FROM ABROAD

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. For many years Canadians with ties to the Baltic States and the Ukraine have been able to send gift parcels to relatives in the Soviet occupied territories. However, recent changes to the U.S.S.R. Criminal Code render a person who receives help by way of parcels from abroad liable to conviction and imprisonment for "anti-soviet agitation and propaganda". Can the Minister say what steps have been taken to persuade the U.S.S.R. to reconsider this step which appears to breach the Helsinki Final Act?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on this particular point I can only say that at the current meeting, for example, which is taking place at Stockholm, the Canadian representatives and others are continuing to press the Soviet Union and the Eastern Bloc countries to live up to the Helsinki Accord and to recognize the necessity of the greatest possible communication and interchange among the peoples of the world, particularly between the Soviet Bloc and other countries.

I am thankful to the Hon. Member for raising this particular point with respect to gifts and parcels which friends and relatives may want to exchange. I will be pleased to have officials of the Department raise the point with Soviet representatives as soon as possible.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

FAMILIES LIVING IN POVERTY—PRIME MINISTER'S ADVICE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns poverty in Canada. The Canadian Council on Social Development reports that 2.3 million Canadians are poor. Many of these people are very poor, lining up at food banks in order to survive. A whole generation of children, young people and youth, are seriously at risk.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister a very sincere question, not a partisan one. In his last day in the House, what message would he leave for all political Parties that we should be doing together to try to decrease poverty in Canada and to try to guarantee an adequate level of income for all Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would not intend to be a valedictorian today. However, the best advice I could give to the people of this country, to continue to help solving these problems, would be to vote Liberal in the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: He is just as bad as the Minister of Finance was earlier. They do not care about poverty.

Mr. Speaker: It is very difficult, within the confines of Question Period, for such a question to be answered. The Chair has to observe certain limits on time. The Hon. Member should bear in mind, in asking a question, whether it will be possible to answer it within the traditional confines of Question Period.

PLIGHT OF SINGLE FEMALE PARENTS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. The Canadian Council on Social Development report also documented the feminization of poverty. The Minister knows that many women would be able to survive alone, but because they have children to support on their own, with very low wages or welfare, they just cannot make it. Would the Minister recommend, therefore, an increase in family allowances to assist low income mothers particularly? Would she also advocate a change in the welfare system to provide continuing social assistance for children while low income parents work?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is always looking for simple solutions to very deep problems.

Ms. Mitchell: Give me another solution now.

Mrs. Erola: The problem of women is much greater than the suggestions which she put forward. We have to fight for a complete change in the way women are paid, in the way they are treated in the workforce—

Ms. Mitchell: What about women on welfare?

Mrs. Erola: —and the way they are treated in their senior years. This is one of the reasons the Government just increased the GIS payment by $50. Those most affected are the poorest of the poor, the elderly women.

Mr. Broadbent: That's right; make it complex so that nothing is done.

Mrs. Erola: I wish she would support the programs that we are putting forward.

INCOME TAX ACT

IDENTIFICATION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He made reference yesterday and today to an income tax bill which would make certain changes and bring in some simplified tax reporting procedures. Would the Minister indicate the number by which the particular Bill can be identified?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Ways and Means Motion has been tabled. It is available. It has fundamentally the same text as the Bill. A copy of the Bill has been given to the critic of the Opposition and to the critic of the NDP for them to examine. There was an understanding that if we could get agreement to pass the Bill quickly, it would be immediately introduced on the basis of the Ways and Means Motion before the House and we would proceed with one speaker on each side.

The Opposition has had the Bill for several days. The Hon. Member knows the problem is that the Conservatives are divided. They cannot even agree on what stand they should take on anything. The Leader of the Opposition and his finance critic have contradicted each other on what stand they should take on the value of the dollar, and on interest rates. They have contradicted each other on universality. They have contradicted each other on every other subject. As on everything else, the Conservatives cannot make up their minds whether they are coming or going. I can tell them that they are going.

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, the prime rate has risen to 13 per cent. The dollar is at 75 cents, with no bottom in sight. The Minister is talking about a Bill which has not been introduced into the House of Commons for debate. It is not on the Order Paper. Could he tell us whether this elusive tax Bill is one of the 11 Bills which will be brought forward today in the House of Commons for debate?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the House Leader is here. He will be available to meet right after Question Period with the House Leaders of the opposition Parties. If they are ready to pass this Bill today, I am sure that our House Leader would be very happy to do it.

Some Hon. Members: Where is the Bill?

Mr. Lalonde: The fact is that the Conservatives cannot get together and agree on a strategy or policy to pass this Bill. The fact is that they are not ready to pass a measure which will be of great help to small and medium-sized businesses.

Mr. Kempling: There is no Bill.

Mr. Lalonde: They are unable to agree on passing a Bill which will help farmers. They are unable to agree on passing amendments to the Income Tax Act which would help all Canadians. I can tell them that if they do not pass the Bill I will be there to remind the Canadian public whose fault it is that that Bill is not passed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN COAST GUARD

SINKING OF CHARTERED YACHT—RESCUE OF CREW AND PASSENGERS

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Could the Minister confirm that a private complaint had been filed with the Marine Safety Division of the U.S. Coast Guard on the day before the sinking of the Royal Princess, from which the 20 passengers, fortunately, were rescued by Canadian as well as by American helicopters?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am thankful the Hon. Member brought this particular event to the attention of the House. As the Hon. Member has indicated, it was a most remarkable and successful search and rescue operation. It saved the lives of 20 human beings at considerable risk to the lives and safety of the crews of four helicopters—two from the Canadian Forces and two from the United States Coast Guard. Again that is a manifestation of the high level of co-operation between Canada and the United States in search and rescue.

I am not in a position to advise or to confirm the information which she advanced to the House. However, I would say that it gives us the occasion, especially at the beginning of the holidays, to identify the importance of search and rescue in Canada from coast to coast, and to ask all Hon. Members in the House to communicate to their constituents the information, which is essential for people on holiday to know, relating to search and rescue, its infrastructure, and where they can contact search and rescue operations in their own regions.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Malpeque.

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, I was about to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, but he has just ducked out the door for a second. I will have to defer for the moment.

MARINE TRANSPORT

QUALITY OF DRINKING WATER ON GREAT LAKE CARRIERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I do not intend to intrude myself or this Chamber into the ongoing labour dispute on the Great Lakes. However, one of the serious problems seems to be the method by which lake carriers take on drinking and other fresh water. Could the Minister advise the House whether or not the practice of taking on untreated, raw lake water from the middle of the Lakes, for human consumption, is permissible under transport regulations?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the regulations require that any potable water be of a safe nature. The means by which it is extracted or treated are what have to be tested. It does not matter where the source is as long as it is proper, fresh and usable water. As the Hon. Member said, it is a matter under some dispute as part of the negotiations. I think the role we could play is not to intervene in the negotiations, but to ensure that the standards applied are properly adhered to. It would be my responsibility. I will take the Hon. Member's question as representation and will undertake to examine the situation carefully to ensure that those standards are in fact lived up to, so that there will not be a problem in relation to the safety of drinking water.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, my question would have been directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He has been in and out of the Chamber, and I cannot find him now.

POOLS

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—FUNDING OF CALGARY WINTER OLYMPICS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the President of the Treasury Board I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. The people of Calgary are very concerned about funding for the Olympics. The sports pool is losing money at the rate of $10 million per month. How can the sports pool provide money for the Calgary Olympics when it is losing money? How can you lose money and have a profit at the same time? The mathematics of it escapes me. I would really like the Minister to explain that to us.

● (1200)

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance pointed out yesterday, when asked about this same subject, that it has been the pattern for operations of this kind, including provincial lottery operations, to take a number of months, or perhaps longer, to reach a profitable position. The precedent in this case indicates that there is a period of time before an entity like this can be in a profit-making position. This point was made quite effectively yesterday by the Minister of Finance.

REQUEST THAT TICKETS BE PRINTED IN CANADA

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister table any studies that would prove that? In addition, will he make a commitment to have the lottery tickets printed in Canada instead of the United States so that some jobs may be created here in printing, forestry, and so on? Why are we spending $10 million, which will be lost money, to create jobs in the United States rather than in Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will draw my hon. friend's representation to the attention of the responsible Minister. I am glad to see his belated conversion to the worthy cause of Canadian nationalism.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CONVENTION—PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

All Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: My question is directed to the Prime Minister. I trust he will forgive me if I repeat an issue that I discussed with him personally a few days ago. I referred to the fact that at the Liberal Convention which was held here on June 14, 15 and 16, I felt that the most important speech at that gathering was made by the present Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles: I even went so far as to suggest at one point that he read a book of mine about 23 years ago. At any rate, in his speech the Prime Minister declared that the Liberals had been concerned about old age pensions, medicare, unemployment, and economic conditions. He further stated that the Liberals have always been concerned about peace rather than war, in particular the late Prime Minister Pearson. However, we are aware that a few days ago a peace award was announced for the present Prime Minister.

He also made the point that it should be a concern for all people in this country that they have equality of their rights, regardless of race, colour, or religion.

Although the Prime Minister is leaving, I hope he will continue to use all the efforts he can with regard to his Party and the other Parties, as well as with all Canadians, so that it will be a major concern of this place to deal with those problems which the Prime Minister spoke of on June 14.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for remembering what I said two weeks ago and for remembering what he said to me 23 years ago. I assure him that I have always respected his sense of dedication to Canada and the means that he used in order to further the Canadian common weal.

I must say that this House has been very supportive of the peace initiative. All Parties have joined in a very difficult negotiation, and a very successful one, in ensuring that the Peace Institute would be created by this Parliament. I am particularly grateful to the committee chairman, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, who ensured the difficult negotiations which permitted the passage in committee and, of course, to my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs who, with the Hon. Member for Yukon and the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam, was able to give life to this Institute. I am sure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North Centre will, like me, in our respective retirements wish all those who will be involved in the Institute and in the pursuit of peace, which is so dear and so close to Canadian ideals, well, and watch with approval their work in that line.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S RECORD ON SOCIAL MEASURES

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the Prime Minister for the comments that he has made. I express the hope that he will make the point to the members of his Party and to other Parties that the organization that is strongest in pressing for pensions, health care and other matters, the one that has done the most and the one that mostly deserves support, is the Party of the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Be a statesman.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to agree one hundred per cent with the final statement of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre. I sincerely hope that they will always be sitting there to the left of the Liberal Party, prodding the Liberal Government on to do more and more good things for Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of three, presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, June 28, 1984, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The two petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and one of the petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that messages have been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed the following Bills without amendment: Bill C-32, an Act to establish the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security; Bill C-33, an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act; Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Financial Administration Act; Bill C-43, an Act respecting the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement on Offshore Oil and Gas Resource Management and Revenue Sharing and to make related and consequential amendments.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with relation to the House business for today. I want to report to my colleagues that following consultations with the House Leaders, we will be dealing with a certain number of Bills today. At the end of the sitting last night, I enumerated the order in which we thought at that time the Bills would be debated. We had further consultations this morning.

The following order will be followed for debating the Bills today, as agreed among the House Leaders. The first item of business will be Bill C-50, followed by Bills C-51, C-54, C-53, S-11, C-47, the Saltfish Bill that will be introduced in a few moments, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Bill that will be introduced by consent in due time, and Bill C-56.

[Translation]

Of course, since these are non-controversial measures, there is still room, provided we have the co-operation of Hon. Members, for other Bills we are prepared to introduce, if necessary, on income tax or other measures. In any case, according to the Standing Orders of the House, we must finish Government business by four o'clock this afternoon.

I believe that as soon as we have finished Government Orders, we have unanimous consent for suspending the sitting of the House to allow the Senate to consider and finish consideration of these bills and then proceed with Royal Assent—

• (1210)

[English]

Therefore, I would ask that the motion be seconded by the Hon. Member from Edmonton—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Saskatoon. It is in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, that is where he is going in a few minutes.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Unlike you, I will be back.

Mr. Pinard: I would like the Hon. Member to second the following motion, following our understanding:

That at the end of debate on Government business today and no later than 4 p.m. this day, the House shall suspend its sitting until the call of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. President of the Privy Council to introduce the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DEANS—SUGGESTED COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN HOUSE EMPLOYEES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have another matter that I would like to raise on a point of order. I recognize that what I am about to ask would require unanimous consent and I raise it with that in mind. Perhaps, Sir, you would seek the unanimous consent of the House in order that a motion could be put. If unanimous consent was forthcoming, I would be prepared to move or for that matter to support anyone else who wished to move a motion to the effect that the employees of the House of Commons who worked all night in the sitting of the House of Commons which commenced on Wednesday, June 20, 1984, be paid an additional sum for the additional services they rendered to the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to make two comments. First, the normal method of payment by the House does take into account the fact that there are occasional periods of overtime. Second, it is a matter that the Chair would prefer to have referred to the Management and Members' Services Committee and a recommendation to the Chair could be made through that channel.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we of course never question your decisions. This one is one of the wisest decisions you have made.

MR. FRASER—DEREGULATION OF COMMERCIAL AIRLINES

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions to present and I will not be overly long. The first petition is from members of the Canadian Airline Flight Attendants Association and deals with the establishment of air fare structures without undue restriction by the Canadian Transport Commission. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to oppose plans to deregulate Canada's commercial airline service. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. FRASER—WHOLESALING OF FISH

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is from the undersigned residents of the Riding of Vancouver South. They call upon the House regarding the matter of a certain lease granted by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) to operate a private fish selling facility at False Creek Government Marina. They call upon this House as follows: your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to give commercial fishermen the right to sell their fish directly to the public with no middle-man. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Petitions

MR. FRASER—TAXATION OF DISTILLED SPIRITS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, the third petition is again signed by residents of the City of Vancouver. That petition shows their concern with respect to federal excise duty and sales tax on distilled spirits and calls for the following: wherefore the undersigned your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to revise the federal excise duty and sales tax so as to lower the rate of taxation of distilled spirits. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. FRASER—POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, the next petition is from students of Vancouver Community College-Langara which is in the federal Riding of Vancouver South. These petitioners are seriously concerned over the decline in opportunities for those seeking post-secondary education in British Columbia. These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to raise the issue of student accessibility in the Province of British Columbia, that Parliament demand a full account of the federal transfer funds that are meant to be spent on education and that all Members of Parliament work to guarantee that all Canadians have an inalienable right to seek the finest education available in all areas of their jurisdiction. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. FRASER—VIA RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, the next petition is again from residents of the City of Vancouver and it deals with the area of transportation and the pledge to renew VIA Rail passenger service. Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reinstate VIA Rail passenger service between the Cities of Edmonton, Jasper and Vancouver. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. FRASER—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, the last petition is from residents of the federal riding of Vancouver South who submit this petition because of their very grave concern with respect to the threat to the survival of humanity posed by the existence of nuclear weapons and the continuing arms race. Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation preventing the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada in all areas of your jurisdiction. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. MILLER—PROTECTION OF COASTAL COMMUNITIES

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the residents of Yellow Point on Vancouver Island and other British Columbia citizens interested in marine environment. In addressing their petition to several Ministers, both in Ottawa and in Victoria, and to the House of Commons, they express their concern about the inadequate protection provided to coastal communities and to the environment from bulk carriers of coal, oil, chemicals and other commodities carried along Canada's coast.

By citing a specific case which occurred on February 5, 1984, the residents demonstrate the virtual impossibility of obtaining a conviction for pollution and call for an inquiry to find practical, enforceable means of protecting the fragile and recreationally valuable waters and shores of Vancouver Island and the Gulf Islands from the risk of further damage by bulk carriers.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO ESTABLISH SEPARATE SEAT FOR LABRADOR

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-259, an Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Bill which I am presenting to the House is to create a separate seat for Labrador. Labrador is a distinct geographic entity with clearly defined boundaries. It stands historically, culturally, socially, logistically and politically apart from the rest of its own province. I am asking the House to consider that since Labrador has special geographic consideration it should be allowed the same dispensation that has been allowed to Prince Edward Island, Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DICK—PROPOSED INTRODUCTION OF INCOME TAX BILL

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have just gone past the point of Introduction of Bills. I was anticipating that the Government House Leader might have introduced a Bill which has been discussed in the last few days. I was wondering if the income tax Bill would be tabled in the House in order that Hon. Members would know what is in the legislation.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, not at this exact moment. The Hon. Member knows quite well that it is always possible, with unanimous consent, to revert to the tabling of Bills or documents.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM CIVIL AND COMMERCIAL JUDGMENTS CONVENTION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-51, an Act to implement a convention between Canada and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland providing for the reciprocal recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. By consent, we would like this Bill to be sent to a Committee of the Whole in order that it can be passed through the House today.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I am rising to indicate that there is agreement in so far as this Party is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, the motion is amended as follows: "Mr. MacGuigan, seconded by Mr. Pinard, moves that Bill C-51, an Act to implement a convention between Canada and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland providing for the reciprocal recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole".

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate to put on the record the purpose of this Bill, not to delay proceedings but in order to provide a written statement as to its purpose.

The Convention between Canada and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland providing for the reciprocal recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters was signed in Ottawa on April 24, 1984. This Convention codifies the existing principles for recognition of judgments in Canada and the United Kingdom and also simplifies the procedures in this area. The Bill extends the application of the Convention to judgments rendered by the Federal Court.

The main reason for concluding this Convention was the imminent accession by the United Kingdom to a European Convention on the enforcement of judgments. The European Convention provides for the enforcement of judgments of other European states, including some which would not otherwise have been recognized by the United Kingdom courts because they were based on challengeable, frequently qualified as exorbitant bases of jurisdiction.

The European Convention, however, contains a provision which enables the United Kingdom to declare that it will not recognize or enforce any judgment based on exorbitant grounds of jurisdiction given against a party that is domiciled or habitually resident in a specified non-European state. I refer the House to Article 9 of the proposed Canada-United Kingdom Convention whereby the United Kingdom undertakes to make such a declaration.

Before Canada can ratify this Convention, both federal and provincial legislation must be adopted. Almost all of the provinces have undertaken to adopt the necessary legislation. I can advise the House that this has already been done in Ontario and Nova Scotia. Article 12 of the proposed Convention enables Canada to ratify and expand the application of the Convention to specific provinces, not necessarily all provinces.

Since it is expected that the European Convention will come into force in January, 1985, it is very important that the Bill be granted speedy passage to ensure that Canadian assets in the United Kingdom will be protected against claims and judgments which, but for the European Convention, would not be recognized in the United Kingdom.

• (1230)

I might just add in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, since this is probably the last occasion on which I will be speaking in this House, that I have enjoyed very much my 16 years here. I have enjoyed them not only because of the contact I have had with my colleagues in my own Party, but because of the warm, friendly and co-operative relations I have had with Hon. Members of the two other Parties. I would like to thank them for their co-operation and to say that I will keep a very close and friendly eye on proceedings in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has, I believe, succinctly stated the purpose of this legislation. It would be untoward of me to expand upon his remarks except to say that those who have worked for a long time to bring about this Convention have no doubt put their minds to most of the complex issues which are contained within it. It is our responsibility, I believe, under those circumstances, to pass this legislation which ratifies and approves the arrangement between our country and the United Kingdom. Therefore, we consent and approve the passage of this Bill.

I would like to just take a moment to respond to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and to say to him, on behalf of our Party, that we have enjoyed working with him in this place. Our many personal relations with him have been useful. I hope he feels the same way, and I feel he does. We wish him well and Godspeed in whatever endeavours he is called upon to engage on behalf of the law and on behalf of our country.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I will take even less time than the critic for the Official Opposition. I want to begin by saying to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) that I, like all Hon. Members of the House, listened with interest to news reports which would indicate that the Minister's pursuit of justice will continue, if not in the House of Commons, in another equally important capacity. I believe it is both appropriate and in the best interests of Canada that that goal should be pursued. I want, therefore, to wish the Minister well in what I understand will be a very challenging and, I anticipate, very interesting vocation beyond politics.

I would also like to say with respect to Bill C-51, which is self-explanatory and, therefore, easy to support, that we will likewise provide the necessary support in order that this piece of legislation, together with yet another piece of legislation to follow at some later time, can be passed into law in the best interests, I believe, of those persons who will be affected by it.

This legislation has interesting and far-reaching effects and although it is not perhaps one of the highlighted Bills of this session of Parliament, I know that Canadians and British subjects, who may have felt offended by the lack of such legislation, will now feel that their needs have been met. With that in mind, we will do whatever we must in order to see that the legislation passes through the various stages.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to enter into this debate for the sole purpose of expressing to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) my best wishes for his future endeavours. I have served in my Party as the justice spokesperson, and also as chairman of our Justice and Legal Affairs Committee, for some years. A good part of that time was when the present Minister of Justice had those responsibilities.

The Minister has, indeed, had a distinguished academic career. He has served in the House of Commons, which is an honourable profession. I look forward to his contribution to our country from the bench, I understand. In view of the fact he has appointed a lot of his friends there, he will at least be among friends. He will have more friends there than he had at the Liberal convention, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity, in the context of this Bill, which is the last piece of legislation which the Minister will introduce and sponsor in the House, to extend to him my best personal wishes for every success in the future.

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John C. Munro (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Ellis: I did not catch the number clearly. If it was Bill C-54, I intended to speak on it briefly. I assumed the Minister would want to speak first and I was looking for him to stand or for a Minister to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is Bill C-54 but the Chair has a problem because we have moved to the stage now where I am to take the Chair in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We will speak on third reading and speak a little longer.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Corbin in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Gray moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Gray moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the amendments this Bill is making to the Public Service Superannuation Act are required to confirm the past and future super annuation status of employees of Members of Parliament, many of whom have been participating in the PSSA without clear legislative authority for a number of years. This became apparent only very recently when legal opinions were provided by the Department of Justice and the law branches of the House of Commons and the Senate. In addition to the constituency and Ottawa staff of MPs, the amendments apply to employees of Speakers of both Houses, Government Leaders of both Houses, Leaders of the Opposition in both Houses, staff of the official residences and other similar employees.

The proposed Bill deems the employees of Members of Parliament to be employed in the Senate or House of Commons, whichever is appropriate, for purposes of participation in the PSSA. The Bill also provides that other categories of employees engaged in parliamentary business, paid out of monies appropriated by Parliament for use by the Senate or the House of Commons, can be brought under the Act by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Speaker of the House or the Senate. This regulation-making power can be used for employees such as House of Commons research staff who are in effect working for political Parties but who have been participating in the PSSA In the past and whose coverage we are asking Parliament to ratify.

The Bill provides that coverage will be extended to all present and future employees of Members of Parliament and other categories named by regulation from the date the Bill comes into force. In so far as the past is concerned, employees and retired employees who actually made contributions to the superannuation account will have their coverage and benefits ratified. Existing employees who did not actually contribute prior to the coming into force of the amendment will be given a one-year period to elect to count their prior service and pay for it on the basis of their salaries during the periods in question. This places them on an equivalent basis to those who made contributions in the past.

In conclusion, these amendments are urgently needed to remedy a past legislative oversight which has only recently become apparent, and to protect the promised benefits of the employees in question. There are other outstanding pension issues, but I want to confirm that I have begun consultations with my advisory committee on the Public Service Superannuation Act on the reform of Public Service pension plans and I hope that before too long there will be some conclusions to be brought forward in that regard. In the meantime, there is an urgent situation which I ask the House to remedy through passage of this Bill.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, we indeed will give speedy passage to Bill C-54. However, I want to spend a few moments talking about it and some of the other things mentioned by the Minister.

When I first realized that some Members' staff had been told they would not receive the pension benefits they understood they should receive under the Public Service Superannuation Act, I was horrified and brought it to the Minister's attention in committee. I was glad to hear him say that there were negotiations going on and two things would happen. One, that the Bill would be brought forward and, two, that the people in question would be dealt with as though the Bill had been in place.

That is only fair; after all, all of us in this House rely so very heavily on our staff. Some of the things we ask them to do by way of long hours and overtime pay deserve to be paid for somewhere along the way, and these benefits that they have paid for are surely a very small way of doing that. It is fair to say that Mr. Speaker and his predecessor, Madam Sauvé, have spent a great deal of time putting in place the benefits that some of us felt for a long time were due our staff. Through their direction to the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, this and a number of other items are finally coming to pass.

Members know that they will receive in the next few days a comprehensive change in policy with regard to staff benefits and salaries. Finally, we will by August 4 be in a position to pay some of our senior staff a remuneration that comes somewhere close to the work they perform. In the past, there have had to be of necessity all kinds of funny little deals to help us keep top level staff. We will now have, as a result of the letter dated yesterday from the Speaker's office, a long list of changes that will allow us not only to pay them better but also to provide more benefits. To have had this held up would have been unthinkable.

• (1250)

Before I sit down I would like to pay some credit to some of the people who have been directly responsible under Speaker Francis and Speaker Sauvé for the implementation of these various changes. I appreciate that in this particular case it was the staff of the Treasury Board who were responsible for these changes, but other changes having to do with salaries have been put in place by the Administrator, Mr. Arthur Silverman, and some of his senior staff. I think it is a credit to the two Speakers that they have had the courage of their convictions to have in place a new administration which, granted, has not always been popular. At least it has had the work of the Members of Parliament in mind at all times and has put in place for the Members' staffs benefits that are relative to their workloads.

We hear repeated rumours that there may be an election this summer. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you would not want either to qualify or deny that suggestion, even if you could, which I doubt you can. If indeed there is an election this summer, the Speaker's chair will, of course, by vacant. I would like to put on record a word of credit to the current holder of the Chair and his predecessor for those things which they have put in place for our staffs over the past years. In doing so, I pay credit to his staff, the administration of the House of Commons.

I cannot add an awful lot to the Bill. We will see this Bill receive third reading and, I assume, Royal Assent later today. We look forward to having these benefits in place for our staffs.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to add something to what was said by the Member who preceded me. It never ceases to amaze me how things can slip by for such long periods of time without anyone ever noticing them. I am pleased to see that this has been caught and that those who may well have suffered are going to be taken care of by the legislation and the retroactive feature.

However, this is not all that needs to be done, not by a long shot. Within the operation of the House of Commons as it affects Members' staffs, there is a great deal of work which must be done quickly. I know that I would have the concurrence of the Conservative spokesman in saying that there was some legislation proposed to the House of Commons not so long ago which would have afforded Members' staffs the opportunity to transfer into the Public Service if, as and when they found it necessary to do so as a result of the Member having been defeated. On behalf of my colleagues I had hoped that that legislation would have been forthcoming today too.

For far too long the staff of Members have been treated as second-class citizens in terms of the way in which they have provided for as a result of decisions made, not by the Management and Members' Services Committee, but by the Commissioners of Internal Economy. The Commissioners of Internal Economy do not seem to appreciate the important function of the staffs of Members of Parliament, the increased responsibility that Members' staffs have had to assume and the additional workload which has resulted naturally from the greater degree of public exposure of Parliament and Members and the considerably more complex nature of the work that we do. Members' staffs have been asked to assume responsibilities which I dare say, and I hope I am not offending anyone, would have been unthought of ten or fifteen years ago.

Keeping that in mind, it is important that we address the legitimate requests and matters that affect the day to day operations of Members' offices and the way in which staffs are remunerated and given the opportunity to have a sense of permanency. My good friend and colleague made reference to the issue of now being able to pay Members' staffs at a level higher than we had been allowed to up until now. Unfortunately, we do not have the money to do it. That poses a problem for us. Raising the allowable level but not raising the amounts available for the Members to enable them to pay people at the upper levels is an issue which must be addressed. It strikes me as more than passing strange that we see that kind of proposal come forward from the Commissioners of Internal Economy.

I do wonder at the new direction which has been offered through the Management and Members' Services Committee, but often at the behest of the Commissioners. I am concerned that we are, on the one hand, affording an opportunity for a greater level of benefit or, in the case of this legislation, reinforcing or putting into law that which we always believed was the law in any event. While we are doing that, on the other side of the coin we are reducing the benefits that Members' staffs are to be entitled to. I believe there must be an opportunity for a review of that before it goes too far.

In keeping with that I would like to suggest that matters such as this are in fact properly before the Commissioners of Internal Economy. However, the make-up of the board of commissioners is wrong. While it is clearly the responsibility of the Commissioners of Internal Economy to pass judgments on matters such as this, it is well past time that the Opposition should be represented on the board of the Commissioners of Internal Economy. There must be representation there from other than the Cabinet. The matters which are dealt with by that board, such as this matter, affect every single Member of the House of Commons. They are not only matters of Government policy. They are matters of policy of the House of Commons and if they are to be dealt with fairly and properly, ordinary Members of Parliament must be represented and must make direct representations when the matters are being discussed. That is the case in Ontario. During my time in the legislature of the Province of Ontario, I sat on the board of internal economy. We were able to come to agreement without embarrassing the Government, but also without denying members and their staffs adequate and proper compensation and representation.

Having said those things, Mr. Speaker, perhaps straying ever so slightly from the pith and substance of this legislation, I think that this step, though necessary, is a very tiny step. I think I have the support of all Members in saying that it is time we got together to solve the problems which affect our staff.

• (1300)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

MINGAN ARCHIPELAGO NATIONAL PARK ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Minister of the Environment) moved that Bill C-53, an Act to establish a National Park on the Mingan Archipelago, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take up too much time. I may have only one or two comments to make with respect to this legislation. This Bill and many other items of legislation we have attempted to deal with expeditiously. Basically, I want to say that if the Minister who is responsible for this legislation does not find it convenient or does not have the time to appear here to guide this legislation through, it makes it difficult for us to deal with these matters in a manner which is befitting the importance of the legislation. While the Bill to establish a national park on the Mingan Archipelago is a very thin Bill, it is an important Bill. I am just sorry that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia) who is responsible for Parks Canada is not here. I would have hoped that he would be here to sponsor his own legislation.

Of course, we are prepared to allow the Bill to go through all stages. It demonstrates again that we are co-operative in terms of putting legislation through and that we attempt to assist the Government in its legislative agenda in many ways.

I simply rise to say that, in supporting this Bill, I am sorry the Minister of the Environment is not here to conduct this legislation on his own. I would hope that during the course of the afternoon the Ministers responsible for other bills that are coming forward will be here to deal with them and will be able to answer questions in the event that such questions are forthcoming in the Committee of the Whole.

Having said that, I will resume my seat and hope that in the last moments of this trimester the message that has been given has been received.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I have two things to say on the subject. First, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia) is returning to Ottawa from Europe where he attended the acid rain meetings. This was well known by my colleagues in the Opposition.

I was informed that an agreement had been reached to let this Bill go through all stages without debate, but obviously it was not a firm agreement. If the Hon. Member does not want the Bill to go through without the Minister present, then the Bill will not go through because the Minister will not be back on time. However, his Parliamentary Secretary is here. He is an excellent Parliamentary Secretary who is prepared to speak. We were not putting up any speakers because we thought we had an agreement not to speak on this Bill. But the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is here and is prepared to speak on the second reading motion on the Bill.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there is a general understanding that we introduce no speakers but I want to say, as pointed out by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), that it is impossible for the Minister to be here. To show that the work goes on even when our Ministers must be in other countries, we are introducing this Bill in good faith for the Mingan Band. With your kind permission, I will just say a few words of introduction.

[Translation]

The purpose of the Bill I am presenting today, for consideration and approval by the House, is to set aside land for the Mingan Achipelago National Park, which will be the thirtieth in a network of national parks extending from coast to coast. There are national parks in each province and in both territories. We are proud of this system, which is the best in the world, and it gives me great pleasure to present this Bill and to ask the House to join me in setting aside one of the most beautiful spots in this country for the enjoyment of all Canadians.

National parks were created so that Canadians would always have access to places that reflect the natural splendor and serenity of this vast country of ours. These parks have been set aside for the benefit, education and enjoyment of Canadians. Each national park protects representative examples of fauna, flora and also natural areas of outstanding scenic interest. They contain the natural heritage of all Canadians.

The national parks system covers thirty-nine natural regions across Canada. At the present time, only two of the eleven regions in Quebec are part of the system. There are a number of regions missing, one of these being the eastern part of the St. Lawrence lowlands which includes the Mingan Archipelago.

The Mingan Archipelago consists of twenty-five islands spread out over a distance of approximately fifty miles along the North Shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, from Ile aux Perroquets in the west, to Ile Sainte Geneviève in the east. The proposal to reserve the Archipelago for a national park would be a worthy prelude to the festivities planned for the national parks centennial in 1985.

Fossil deposits, flower-pot formations, rare plants and colonies of sea birds in the Archipelago have for many years attracted the attention of naturalists, conservationists and tourists. By reserving the territory of the Archipelago for a national park, it will be possible to safeguard these natural resources. There will also be a positive impact on the economy of the North Shore, where the unemployment rate is over 20 per cent. Expenditures earmarked for salaries of Parks Canada employees and for park operations will act as an immediate stimulus to the regional economy. Within ten years or so, the Archipelago will be able to receive about 30,000 visitors annually, compared to a total of 12,000 last year, and the local population will benefit from what is spent by park visitors. Finally, payment of grants in lieu of taxes for the lands acquired in order to create a national park will further enhance the economic benefits.

Why would Parks Canada want to reserve the lands of the Mingan Archipelago for a national park, instead of just creating a park? The Mingan Archipelago lies within a territory that is the subject of land claims by the Attikamek-Montagnais Council. The Mingan Band has already agreed in principle to this Bill. Establishing a park reserve guarantees that creation of the national park cannot be definitive until native land claims have been settled. Any right, title or interest of native peoples included in a claim will be recognized within the limits of the national park. Visitors will therefore be able to visit the Archipelago, and go hiking and camping and on guided tours, depending on the fragility of the environment.

The Mingan Archipelago will be the thirtieth national park and a new and very substantial asset to a national parks system that already has an international reputation. In concluding, I again wish to thank the Opposition parties for agreeing to limit debate to one speaker per Party.

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join the Parliamentary Secretary in thanking the Department of the Environment, and the two Ministers who were responsible for Environment Canada and Parks Canada, for the tremendous work they have done to make one of the major natural resources of the North Shore, namely, its coastal region, into a national park. Mr. Speaker, I also wish to thank Parks Canada officials for their exceptional achievement in creating this park. At this stage, I think the park is a major step for the North Shore towards economic diversification.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I would like to thank the chiefs of the Mingan Band for their contribution and their support for reserving the lands for this park. Throughout the process, we intend to take into consideration native rights and traditions that must be respected. We have promised them that nothing will be done without their permission, so that native traditions will indeed be respected. Mr. Speaker, this is a red-letter day for the North Shore, and since today is the last day of this session, I also wish to thank the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who visited Natashquan on May 4, 1982, and flew over the Mingan islands. It was then that we thought of creating this national park, a place where Canadians could find knowledge and repose and enjoy the splendors of this part of Canada and Eastern Quebec.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, may I add a few comments to those already made regarding Bill C-53 which will see the creation of a new national park. It is our understanding that this park is ready to go and the Government has financing for it. It will provide valuable jobs in an area where unemployment is regrettably very high.

In terms of the philosophy and concept of the park, it is very clear that we have areas right across Canada that are represented by national parks. One year from now we will be having the 100th anniversary of our national parks system. It will be good to have Mingan National Park included at this time so it can be part of the celebrations and be included in the representation we have of national parks across Canada.

There are other areas in Canada, such as South Moresby and the Bruce Peninsula, that can be similarly considered in their own way to represent for the people living in those areas the national parks system. We are happy to co-operate with the Minister on this Bill. We regret the Bill was brought forward at such a late date and under such constrained circumstances, which means it cannot receive the full consideration that I believe a Bill like this should have. Be that as it may, we are co-operating and are happy to see it go forward.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe we are now ready to move on to Bill S-11. If you ask for unanimous consent, I am certain you will find that there is consent for us to move through all stages in the House rather than sending the Bill to a standing committee. In other words, we will proceed to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to proceed with Bill S-11. I do not want to presume on the House; I would think the Parliamentary Secretary would move that the matter be referred to the Committee on the Whole at the appropriate time in the debate and we will give our consent at that time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to the proposal put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that messages have been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following Bills without amendment: Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof; Bill C-252, an Act to grant access to records of the Special Committee on the Defence of Canada Regulations.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill S-11, an Act to implement Conventions between Canada and the Republic of Tunisia, Canada and the People's Republic of Bangladesh, Canada and the United Republic of Cameroon and Canada and the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka, an agreement between Canada and Kenya and conventions between Canada and the Arab Republic of Egypt, Canada and the Republic of the Ivory Coast and Canada and Sweden for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax, be now read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As was obviously appropriate the last time I did it, I would ask that you seek unanimous consent that the Bill be not referred to the Standing Committee but referred to the Committee of the Whole so that we can proceed with all stages of the Bill in the House today.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to proceed to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the Bill be referred to Committee of the Whole?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? There has been some confusion. The Chair did not formally put the question to the House. I recognize the Minister of State for Finance on debate at second reading.

• (1320)

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. The terms of the tax conventions embodied in Bill S-11 are similar, at least in broad outline, to those in Bill S-14, the Bill concerning a tax convention with the United States which was adopted in the House a few days ago.

The eight tax conventions covered by Bill S-11 follow the general pattern of similar tax conventions approved by Parliament in the past. The convention with Sweden, when in force, will replace the existing agreements signed in 1951. I might add that when these eight conventions are ratified, the number of Canadian tax treaties in force with other countries, will increase from 32 to 39.

Mr. Deans: How can you add 8 to 32 and arrive at 39?

Mr. MacLaren: I am sorry, I meant to say seven. The conventions follow the normal practices with regard to such treaties between sovereign nations. They cover such matters as capital gains and non-discrimination. Provision is made in several of the conventions for the taxation of foreign teachers in Canada. The pensions paid to residents are included in this Bill. The standard provision for double taxation relief is also incorporated in each of the tax conventions under consideration.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief in my remarks on Bill S-11. As we know, it was passed in the Senate on May 24 after having had reasonable examination in the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. It is some 175 pages in length and it is about as exciting as watching paint dry. However, it is one of those things which have to be done.

Mr. Lumley: We do not want to hear about what you do in your spare time.

Mr. Kempling: It covers a whole series of taxation matters between Canada and Tunisia, Bangladesh, Cameroon, Sri Lanka, Kenya, Egypt, the Ivory Coast and Sweden. It will allow for commercial and personal financial matters to proceed in an orderly manner without double taxation. Of course, it deals with matters of taxation on income and capital.

For example, it defines fiscal domicile where a person has a residence in both countries, to be determined by a set of rules which have been established as a result of negotiations between our Government and the governments of the contracting countries. Also there is a provision to determine permanent establishments. That is the term used where a business is carried on in two countries. Also it defines place of management, branch, office, factory, workshop, mine, quarry, et cetera. We now have ground rules by which to determine all these matters.

As well it deals with matters pertaining to shipping and air transport, matters relating to profits, dividends, capital gains, interest income, royalties, directors' fees, compensation to artists and athletes, teachers' salaries, students' income where they attend school and work in one of the contracting countries, as well as miscellaneous income. Of course, it will assist in the orderly commercial arrangements between Canada and those other countries.

As the Minister indicated, we now have agreements of this nature with 39 different countries. It helps us in our commercial relations with those countries to know that we have a taxation regime which can be defined by both sides and will allow standard, normal business practice to carry on between the contracting countries.

That is about all I have to say. I understand there is a disposition to have the Bill considered in Committee of the Whole today.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I found interesting the analogy of the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) in terms of the excitement of reading this particular legislation. I have never been in the position of watching paint dry, unlike my colleague. I suspect he is right; I cannot verify it.

As the Hon. Member said, the legislation has gone through the Senate. As is my normal practice, I sat and read assiduously through all the Senate committee proceedings to ensure that the matters had been dealt with properly and that its deliberations were in fact in keeping with the kinds of things we would have done here. It may well be that we have finally found a use for the Senate. Perhaps this is an appropriate use to which the Senate can be put on matters such as this, as important as they are but less political in nature.

In any event, like the Official Opposition we will facilitate the passage of these seven agreements reached between our Government and the governments of those foreign jurisdictions.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister referred rather briefly in his comments to the non-discrimination clauses of the conventions, copies of which are part and parcel of the Bill. Indeed they mirror the non-discrimination clauses in Bill S-14 which the House has already passed. I wonder whether the House is fully aware of the fact that the Income Tax Act, as it currently stands, establishes a small business deduction based upon discrimination. One ground for the discrimination is not whether corporations are only small but whether they are Canadian controlled.

Since these conventions are substantially the same, I should like to examine for the purposes of demonstration paragraph 3 of Article VI of the convention with Tunisia. It is interesting to note that the taxation on a permanent establishment which an enterprise of a contracting state has in the other contracting state shall not be less favourably levied in that other state than the taxation levied on enterprises in the other state carrying on the same activities.

When we intend to amend the Income Tax Act, it would be so nice for the Income Tax Act to be amended in the House instead of its being amended as a consequence of a Bill originally introduced in the Senate being given speedy passage in this House. I pause to note that despite the fact the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) was urged to bring in the Bill amending the Income Tax Act, which should have followed his Budget of February 15, he has not done so.

This series of treaties will in effect overrule any provisions of the local law. We amend the provisions of the Income Tax Act by passing this statute which will be interpreted by the courts as having primacy over the provisions of the income tax legislation.

I wonder whether the Minister of Finance, in projecting his revenues from those corporations carrying on business in Canada with a small business deduction limit which may be the same as Canadian-controlled corporations, whereas the shareholders of those corporations are foreign, is relying upon the receipt of income from those corporations in excess of the amounts he will receive once this Bill is passed.

• (1330)

Too little regard has been paid in the dying moments of this session and possibly the dying moments of this Parliament to the implications that these tax conventions will have upon revenue. It is quite permissible if you seek to lower taxation in Canada for both Canadian controlled and non-Canadian controlled corporations to do so as long as you recognize what you are doing. My great fear is that this Government, through its negotiators, has prepared some conventions which will have the effect of tying the hands of whatever Minister of Finance we have in Canada because we have eliminated the possibility of continuing the special small business deduction which is allowable to Canadian controlled private corporations.

I would like to remark for a moment upon the exchange of information program that this Government, in the event that this Bill passes, may be obliged to undertake. In looking at the first convention, the one with Tunisia to which reference has been made, the provision for the exchange of information is not as extensive as that contained in Bill S-14 and the attached tax convention between Canada and the United States. It is, nevertheless, a remarkable departure from the way in which tax conventions hitherto have functioned.

I am particularly concerned about the potential of providing information to foreign tax authorities and, accordingly, to the governments of foreign states with respect to the business activities of Canadian corporations and in particular trade secrets of Canadian corporations which may be made available to foreign jurisdictions. In the case of Bill S-14, we not only provide for depositions that would be taken in Canada for the benefit of a foreign country, we also provide for the collection of taxes imposed by a foreign jurisdiction. I submit that step is a remarkable departure from the way in which current tax conventions have operated. It would have been nice had the Minister, when he explained the provisions of some of these Bills, specifically noted the remarkable departure that we have been confronted with as a consequence of the changes in the tax conventions. He has not done that, save and except to make some reference to the non-discrimination clauses which, as I said, have a detrimental effect upon the way in which our current Income Tax Act functions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Herbert in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: In view of the fact that there are a large number of clauses, the Chair would ask whether the committee gives its consent to the Chair calling Clauses 2 to 27 inclusive?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

On Clauses 2 to 27—

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, I indicated in the brief remarks I made with respect to the Bill that I did not know whether the Minister was cognizant of the implications of what he referred to as the non-discrimination effect of this legislation. Would the Minister comment on that?

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Chairman, under the conventions, discrimination on the basis of nationality is prohibited, thereby ensuring nationals of a country equal treatment with nationals of the other country is the same circumstances. However, that does not prevent a country from providing fiscal incentives; for example, a small business deduction on the basis of the residence of the taxpayer. I would only add that the convention with the Ivory Coast does not contain an article of non-discrimination and consequently the rules of the domestic legislation will there apply.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, it may well be that we will ultimately determine the difference between the Minister and myself when we have a variety of tax cases in front of us, which I suspect will ultimately go to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine whether the Minister is correct or I am correct. Reference has already been made to paragraph 3 of Article 23. It is very clear that the taxation on a permanent establishment which an enterprise of a contracting state has in the other contracting state shall not be less favourably levied in that other state than the taxation levied on the enterprise in that other state carrying on the same activities.

The Minister suggested that what the small business deduction amounts to is a special incentive. Of course, it is not a special incentive; it is a provision of general application that will apply to all corporations provided they meet the financial requirements entitling them to that deduction. It is very clear that the measure of taxation imposed against anyone is an end product of an amount calculated by determining what one's taxable income is and what is the rate of tax applied against that taxable income.

What this clause and all non-discrimination clauses will do when applied specifically to permanent establishments is make it obligatory for the Government to allow all foreign corporations, which in fact meet the financial guidelines of our Income Tax Act, to be entitled to the same small business deduction, because that deduction is available in the event that you meet certain standards. One of the standards happens to be whether you are Canadian controlled; another is whether you have met certain fiscal requirements. If foreign-controlled corporations meet those fiscal requirements, I submit we are discriminating against those foreign corporations, thereby breaching the provisions of the convention Canada is to enter into.

The Minister knows the effect of a court judgment where there is a clash or a conflict between convention provisions and the provisions of the Income Tax Act; the convention provisions apply.

INDIAN ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING BIRTH OF CHILDREN

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-47, an Act to amend the Indian Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on the Indian Act, Indian Affairs and Northern Development, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Shields: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It has been drawn to the attention of the Chair that at this time the Bill is not debatable. The Hon. Member will have to wait for third reading.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Shields: No.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could we have a copy of the Bill as reprinted with the amendments that were carried last night in the committee so that we will know what we are dealing with?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It is my understanding that the Bill should have been made available since I have a copy of it in my hands.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I have a copy of the Bill in its original form but not as amended. I think today we are dealing with the Bill as it was amended in the Standing Committee last evening.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I denied unanimous consent to proceed with this Bill at this time. I represent the riding of Athabasca in northeastern Alberta and among my constituents are quite a number of Treaty Indian people. It is my duty and indeed it is my obligation to speak on their behalf. There is not one member of the bands or chiefs—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. There will be an opportunity to speak on third reading. At third reading stage, whatever point of view the Hon. Member may have may be expressed at that time. However, I do not think it is a proper point of order at this stage. We have come to a certain stage of the Bill and we are discussing another point of order which has been raised by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). I think we should deal with that matter first.

I have in my hands the report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I believe that that report has been made available to the Members of the House. The Bill has not been reprinted because of the physical difficulties involved in having it reprinted and in the hands of the Members of the House at this particular time. However, the understanding of the Chair is that all of the information necessary for debate, if it is the wish of the Members to continue with the debate, is in the hands of the Members.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the reason I asked for the reprinted Bill and the reason I did not deny unanimous consent to proceed was that I wanted to propose some amendments at report stage. I wish to propose two amendments to the Bill in order to improve it. I do not know how I can propose amendments to clauses, pages and lines without knowing to which clauses, pages and lines to refer. It is extremely irregular—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Perhaps the Hon. Member will take his seat. The procedure we have followed by unanimous consent is that we have passed report stage and we are now at third reading of the Bill. I am also advised that it is not essential that the Bill be reprinted in order for Members to deal with third reading or report stage. Since no amendments were proposed and since report stage was passed, we are now dealing with third reading. Third reading, of course, is debatable.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. Under ordinary circumstances when a report comes from a committee, the Bill is printed in its revised form. Members can look at it and can propose further amendments to it at report stage. Members draft their amendments to correspond to the reprinted Bill. What you are telling us now is that we must deal with the Bill as it was printed at first reading along with the written report of the committee without having that written report incorporated into the Bill. I find that very irregular. I simply put that on record. I am amazed. I did not realize we had moved from report stage to third reading stage so quickly. If that is the case, I would like to make some remarks on third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The point is well taken by the Chair. However, inasmuch as it required unanimous consent for the House to proceed in the fashion which it has and inasmuch as it is not essential that the Bill be reprinted because it is for the committee to request that the Bill be reprinted and the affairs of the committee are in the hands of Members at this time, the Chair would find some difficulty in saying that the information is not available to the Members. It was up to the Members if they wished to refuse unanimous consent to proceed with report stage. We are now at third reading stage, which is debatable.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is all part and parcel of the difficulties that we have envisaged with the hurry-scurry of trying to finish up. I sympathize very much with the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). I would suggest that should similar occasions arise in the future, the Speaker should make it his or her duty to point out to the House that, as a result presumably of the arrangement made this time between the House Leaders to telescope the 48-hour period following the tabling of a report of a committee with regard to legislation, the 24-hour period during which Members could propose amendments had been eliminated. The Chair should clearly point out that now is the time to bring forward amendments, if any. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that not all Members of the House are cognizant of the fine footwork which goes on or the intricacies of the rules of the House. We have a situation now in which the Hon. Member Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East has been caught unawares. I do not think it is good enough for anyone in this House to tell any Member—and particularly for the Chair to tell a Member—"Tough luck, but you should have known that as a result of the moves which have been made, your rights as a Member to propose an amendment have been lost". I make that statement with the benefit of a fair amount of experience on this side. It is a basic rule of the Chair to protect the rights of all Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair appreciates the comments of the Hon. Member, but it should be abundantly apparent to him, as he has had experience in the chair, that it is not the responsibility of the Chair to ensure that there has been adequate communication between the various House Leaders who have had discussions and the Members of their respective Parties.

All the Chair can do is to put to the House the fact that it requires unanimous consent. When the House has given its unanimous consent, that effectively means that every Member of the House is assumed to have adequate knowledge to allow him to give unanimous consent. It is up to the individual. Certainly, from the personal experience of the present occupant of the chair, if one is in any doubt, one refuses unanimous consent until the matter has been settled. In the present case, unanimous consent was given. We are now at report stage, which, of course, is debatable.

I can only suggest that at this stage—

Some Hon. Members: Third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Excuse me. We are at third reading, which is debatable. If Members wish to rise, they can debate the Bill. When, the House reaches the end of third reading, the Bill will be voted upon.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know how we were supposed to be able to know what was in the report of the committee. I did not hear you call report stage. When I heard you call third reading, I distinctly heard at least two noes. Consequently, I want to know, why did we overrun report stage?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair should clarify the point. There were noes when the Chair asked whether we were going to carry or whether we were not going to carry third reading. At that stage the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) said "no". I assumed that he wanted to debate third reading. However, we had already arrived at third reading.

Mr. Shields: No, we had not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I am sorry, but the Chair is ruling that the House had arrived by unanimous consent at third reading.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I suggest we check the "blues". I do not think we had reached third reading when we heard a "no". I distinctly heard a "no."

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, when unanimous consent was sought for third reading, I denied unanimous consent. I stood, but you ignored my "no". You informed me that I could discuss it at third reading in debate. Mr. Speaker, I denied unanimous consent to proceed to third reading debate on this Bill. I was explaining the reasons I had denied unanimous consent—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair will clarify the situation again. We have arrived at third reading, after report stage—

Mr. Taylor: When did we have report stage?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair called report stage. The Chair asked for unanimous consent and the Chair received unanimous consent. The Chair arrived at third reading. To call third reading, the Chair does not require the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Lambert: Oh yes it does.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If the point is being contested, I wish the Hon. Member would rise and make his point of order.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I will agree that you did call the report stage and that there was nothing said at that time. However, to have the report stage adopted—which it was—and to move to third reading, the Chair required the unanimous consent of the House because the report enclosed amendments. When there are amendments put, there is a requirement—if one is going to go into third reading—to have the unanimous consent of the House to move to third reading. Otherwise, third reading is deferred until the next sitting of the House. That is particularly important in legislation, not just taxable legislation which comes from the Committee of the Whole, as I heard suggested to you. I emphasize that it is a basic requirement—if there are amendments made in committee, in Committee of the Whole, or at the report stage—that there be unanimous consent to proceed to third reading after adoption of report stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Once again, I thank the Hon. Member for his comments. However, I would refer him to Standing Order 79(14) which reads:

When a bill has been reported from a standing or special committee, and no amendment has been proposed thereto at the report stage—

It goes on to say, "and in the case of a bill reported from a Committee of the Whole", which is not applicable. Therefore, when no amendment has been proposed at the report stage, a motion that the Bill be read a third time and passed may be made at the same sitting. Thus, it is not necessary to have unanimous consent to move into third reading immediately following report stage. Since there were no amendments made at report stage, we are automatically in third reading. I maintain the position that we are in third reading and I am calling for debate on third reading.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we check the "blues". I denied unanimous consent at the report stage. I denied unanimous consent when you wanted to proceed to third reading. I denied unanimous consent every time you sought unanimous consent on this Bill—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. The Chair in all honesty must say that it certainly does not deny what the Hon. Member is contending. However, the Chair did not hear any such noes. The Chair has proceeded in the normal fashion and we are now in third reading debate on this Bill.

I will recognize the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), and I hope that it is a new point of order.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I distinctly heard a "no". I suggest we check the "blues".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I am sorry. The Chair has made a decision. The decision stands. The Chair's decision is that we are now in third reading of this Bill.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It must be a new point of order.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members in this House must give unanimous consent when it comes to the report stage. You called for unanimous consent and I yelled, "no". I was told to wait until third reading—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. That is a repetition. The Hon. Member is contending that he said "no", and I agree with that. It is when I put the question on third reading that I distinctly heard a loud "no". At that point I assumed that the Hon. Member wanted to debate third reading. We are now in third reading debate. For debate on third reading, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I was going to propose two amendments at the report stage, but unfortunately I believe the rules require some improvement, because I feel that my rights have been denied in not being able to make those amendments. In any case, I will state what I intended to do now at third reading. While I completely support those parts of this Bill which would abolish discrimination against Indian women, and I have supported the abolition of Section 12(1)(b) and others for many years, I do not hold the same position with respect to some of the other clauses in the Bill, in particular, those clauses which deal with the reinstatement of those persons who lost their status in past years. I firmly believe there has to be reinstatement provisions. We have to reinstate those people who have lost their status. However, the clauses in this Bill for reinstatement are extremely inadequate and many witnesses before the standing committee which met in the last couple of days gave evidence of that.

Once again, by passing sections of the law on such sensitive measures which affect Indian people, we are acting like a colonial institution. We are a white man's Parliament, for the most part, imposing our views on Indian people in a very paternalistic way. I would like to point out those parts of the Bill which are inadequate and which have been highlighted by the Assembly of First Nations and by the Native Women's Association of Canada.

First, the Bill does not permit the reinstatement of all Indian citizens who were previously denied registration. Because reinstatement is arbitrarily cut off at half of the second generation, the Bill perpetuates the very discrimination which it is supposed to terminate. I was going to propose an amendment which would have allowed the reinstatement of more people, basically a great many more people who had lost their status but who were still able to trace their lines to certain Indian bands. That is the first area in which the Bill is inadequate and one area I wanted to amend.

Second, the Bill does not recognize Indian control of their citizenship as was set out just yesterday in Bill C-52. This right must be in any statute purporting to deal with Indian status. I myself, along with other Hon. Members of this House, have sat for a year and a half on the Indian self-government committee in which we proposed that there be a bilateral relationship between the Canadian Government and the Indian nations in this country. We also proposed that Indian nations should have the right to determine their own citizenship.

Third, under the proposed Section 18.1 of the Indian Act, as the Bill was amended last night, preferred treatment is given to non-Indians over reinstated Indians as regards the right to reside on reserves. I was going to propose an amendment to take care of that. Here we have a situation where non-Indians, because of this Bill, will have preferred status with respect to living on reserves, over reinstated Indians. Women who have lost their status, will get it back, but will not have the same rights as non-Indians who, in the future, will marry Indians. My second amendment would have corrected that situation.

Fourth, the Bill does not give bands special by-law power to control the flow of non-Indian residents onto the reserve. That relates to the point I have just made.

Fifth, under the proposed subsection 64(2), reinstated persons will be heavily penalized, since interest is included in limiting per capita shares they will receive and the Government is not obliged to repay bands any amounts which had been paid out earlier.

I fully support the end of discrimination with respect to Indian women. I have held that position for a long time. I would like to see those parts of the Bill passed immediately, but I feel it is extremely unfortunate that we are going to pass a Bill which will contain sections which continue discrimination against the very people we are going to reinstate. It is too bad we did not have more time to work on those reinstatement provisions to make them better, and I regret that fact.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I believe we should indicate that the procedural mish-mash which we have just seen in the House is typical of the entire handling of this Bill. It should have been possible on a day like this when we are finally getting rid of Section 12(1)(b) to feel good about doing something positive for Indian people. Instead, that feeling has been turned to dust and ashes in the mouth of every Hon. Member who sat on that committee. Bill C-47, an Act to amend the Indian Act, and to remove discrimination, also does other things to Indian people, with which we are not at all happy. It is not possible for any Hon. Member in this House, nor for the Minister for that matter, to rise and make any kind of a self-congratulatory speech that at long last we are ending this injustice, because we cannot congratulate ourselves on what is happening. We all know the history of Section 12(1)(b) and the way in which it has become in the Indian Act a symbol of sexism, racism and assimilation.

It is a symbol of sexism because through it a woman derives her status from her husband. The emphasis throughout the Indian Act is on the male line. It is racist in its implication that Indians are somehow lower on the scale of humanity and that by marrying a non-Indian, an Indian woman is supposed somehow to have risen on the scale of humanity and thus no longer to have Indian status. And, of course, just the opposite was true for a non-Indian woman who married an Indian male so that this non-Indian woman acquired Indian status. This racist assumption runs through the entire Indian Act.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Section 12(1)(b) is typical and symbolic of the assimilationist aspects of the entire Indian Act because, like other sections of that Act, it was designed to reduce the number of status Indian people. One of the forerunners of the present Indian Act was entitled "An Act for the gradual enfranchisement of the Indians", and it is interesting that in 1920, when the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, Duncan Campbell Scott, was testifying at a special committee of the House of Commons, he said, and I quote:

> I want to get rid of the Indian problem. I do not think as a matter of fact, that this country ought to continuously protect a class of people who are able to stand alone. That is my whole point. I do not want to pass into the citizens' class people who are paupers. This is not the intention of the Bill. But after one hundred years, after being in close contact with civilization it is enervating to the individual or to a band to continue in that state of tutelage, when he or they are able to take their position as British citizens or Canadian citizens, to support themselves, and stand alone. That has been the whole purpose of Indian education and advancement since the earliest times. One of the very earliest enactments was to provide for the enfranchisement of the Indian. So it is written in our law that the Indian was eventually to become enfranchised.
> —our object is to continue until there is not a single Indian in Canada that has not been absorbed into the body politic and there is no Indian question, and no Indian Department, that is the whole object of this Bill.

That was said in 1920, Mr. Speaker. Section 12(1)(b), by denying Indian status to Indian women who married non-Indians, was just one aspect of that assimilationist policy. Section 12(1)(b) has split Indian communities and Indian families. We heard testimony countless times, not only during the hearings which we held with regard to Bill C-47 but also in the subcommittee and the special committee on Indian self-government. We heard testimony from a great many Indian leaders that they wanted to end this division. They wanted their sisters and their daughters back in the community. Section 12(1)(b) and the other sexist sections on the Indian Act were an imposition on the Indian people by the Government, the non-Indian Government. It was not an Indian designed proposal at all.

It is important to recognize that Section 12(1)(b) and others have hurt Indian women in at least three basic ways. Most obvious, it resulted in a loss of status for those Indian women who married non-Indians. Secondly, an important number of Indian women gave up a relationship that would have led to marriage because they did not want to lose their status. As they were growing up, it was emphasized to them that if they married a non-Indian they would lose that special and very important status. That is regrettable. There is a third group of Indian women who did not wish to give up a relationship or their status and so they entered into a common-law relationship, had children, but they would very likely have wished to have had their marriage regularized in some way. This section has penalized Indian women and their communities in countless ways, and at long last it is being repealed. This is something desired by all parties and the majority of Indian people.

However, we cannot be self-congratulatory because of the way we are dealing with this Bill. This end of discrimination was supposed to have been a major commitment on the part of this Government and the previous Government, yet we had to wait four years until the very last month of this Parliament. The Bill was tabled only two weeks ago and we only had three or four days to deal with it in committee. This, in spite of repeated requests to table the Bill early so that there would be adequate time to study it, hear from Indian people and make sure it was as acceptable as possible to the Indian people. The committee had to deal with it in a very rushed atmosphere, which did not do justice to the Act. I think most members of the committee question whether we are really doing justice to the Indian people.

There was limited time for testimony from Indian people and even less time for dealing with our amendments. In effect, we had time for one shot at acceptable amendments. When they came back and we wanted to make further changes it was too late. It is that kind of rushed atmosphere that we are dealing with here this afternoon. The committee was put in an impossible position by the Government. Either we had to leave Section 12(1)(b) on the books, which would deny justice to Indian women, or we had to accept the implicit assumption of this Bill that Indians somehow could not be trusted to do justice to their own people. We are in a situation where non-Indians, all of us here, are making decisions for Indian people and their communities.

The Trudeau years began with the promise of participatory democracy and are ending with this kind of fiasco. I cannot help but contrast the promise of participatory democracy with last night's committee meeting. After the members of the committee had made what was not an easy decision for anyone, there was a request from some of the Indian leaders to make a final statement. Leaders from the Assembly of First Nations and the Native Women's Association of Canada spoke to the committee and acknowledged our hard work. But they indicated that the Bill itself was completely unsatisfactory. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) indicated some of the ways in which they found this Bill unsatisfactory. I moved an amendment that would have given bands control over residency rights from the reserve for non-Indian spouses, but this was denied.

In 1947, when proposals were made to change the Indian Act, Indian speakers from across Canada representing the Alberta Indian Association, bands from Ontario and the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia all made presentations suggesting that they were the people who should be looking after their own membership. They knew the needs of their people and they wanted to be able to design membership requirements that would meet the needs of their people. That Government, in its wisdom or lack of it, decided that Indian people should not be trusted with looking after their own membership. It then brought in even more bureaucratic changes to the membership sections, including the notorious double-mother clause. Indian people have continued to suffer because non-Indian people have been making legislation for them. Clause 16(b) of Bill C-52, tabled this past week, recognizes the power of the Indian Government to legislate on applications for membership. Unfortunately, that Bill was tabled too late for any legislative action this year. Again we wonder why it took so long to table it. But the question the Indian people ask is, if they have the power in Bill C-52 to look after their own membership, why is that same power not in Bill C-47? That is a good question and I do not have an answer.

One of the difficulties committee members found in trying to draft amendments was that Department of Justice officials who were there helping us draft the amendments kept saying that whatever we were proposing was contrary to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We had hoped the Charter would have expanded the role of self-determination and autonomy for all people in Canada rather than hemming in the aboriginal peoples as it seems to do. But this kind of attitude on the part of the officials—and perhaps they are accurately reflecting the Charter of Rights and Freedoms—underlines the need for constitutional entrenchment of the aboriginal right to self-government. This was recommended by the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government.

The New Democratic Party gives its consent to the passage of this Bill, but it is a reluctant consent. The elimination of Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act should have been a cause for rejoicing, but because of the way this Bill has been handled that rejoicing has been turned to ashes in our mouths. We hope that the review process will take a long and detailed look at some of the provisions of this Bill and that a future government will be able to deal with them in a more sensitive frame of mind and over a more extended period of time.

Mr. Taylor: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Hon. Minister would tell us what these amendments are going to do. Those who were on the committee know all that, but the rest of us have had no access to this at all. Surely we should at least be entitled to know what the amendments are going to do as it might make a difference.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It is of course up to the Minister to decide whether he will speak or when he will speak.

For continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to take part in a historic debate in this Parliament. Canadian women, especially native women, have worked very hard for this day to come. It is regrettable that Parliament did not have adequate time to make a proper study. The committee was pushed. It is not precisely the Bill that we would have liked. Native women are not happy with it. The Assembly of First Nations is not happy with it. The National Action Committee is not happy with it. We would all have liked something a little different from what we have before us. Nonetheless, this is a historic day. A historic injustice to native Canadian women is going to be corrected. That is something to celebrate.

● (1420)

I want to pay tribute to the many native women who have struggled to achieve equality for themselves and their sisters. I think of women like Lavell and Bedard who took cases to the Supreme Court of Canada and were denied justice and equality by the Supreme Court of Canada under the old Bill of Rights. I think of women like Sandra Lovelace who took her case to the United Nations and brought international attention to the disgraceful discrimination which is currently in Section 12(1)(b) of the current Indian Act. I think of the women who have worked for rights for Indian women and for the Native Women's Association of Canada and the various other Canadian women's groups which have supported them. I think very especially of Mary Two-Axe Early who struggled a long time ago. She went before the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. Year after year she has lobbied the Government. She is here in the galleries today. We really must pay tribute to her for the patience, courage and nobility of her struggle. She is a splendid person. She exemplifies what is so important in native Canadian women.

It is due to the quality of people like this that we can rejoice at having this Bill passed today. It means that with their courage, determination, intelligence and commitment to their bands and to their people, native women will be part of the struggle of native people for justice and for a fair part in Canadian society. Women who until now have had to struggle for their rights within their communities can now unite with their communities to work for a better place in Canadian society.

We have the pleasure of being part of a Parliament that is correcting a historic injustice. This is not perfect legislation, but a terrible problem is going to be solved. We can all be very proud that on this last day of Parliament we will leave knowing that we have done good work in changing this historic wrong in Canadian society.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I spoke briefly last night at the end of the committee meeting. At that time I had the feeling inside that I had betrayed my best friend. If this Act had not passed, I guess I would have had the same feeling. As my friend from St. John's West would say, we were caught between a rock and a hard place, all because of an Act that is known as an Act respecting Indians, the Indian Act, which is probably the worst piece of legislation on the books in the House of Commons.

I am not going to belabour the point, but I want to express my extreme displeasure at this Bill coming in so late. We on the committee felt like hostages. I think that I can speak for all those who were on the committee. We worked extremely hard in a non partisan way to try to come to a suitable conclusion with Bill C-47. Every single witness who appeared before that committee, including our friend Dr. Mary Two-Axe Early, was not happy with this Bill. The Native Women's Association, the Assembly, the Alberta Association of Indians, and the Coalition of Indians were all there. None of them liked it. Indian Rights for Indian Women were representing the feelings of the National Action Committee and they were not happy with it. Even the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, who appeared before the committee, was not entirely happy with the Bill. The amendments which she would have liked to have added to the Bill could not get through Cabinet.

We had to try to amend this Bill to make it as workable as possible. I am not happy with it. I do not like it. However, as a kid, you have to hold your nose, close your eyes, and take that damn medicine your mother rams down your throat. There are very legitimate concerns being expressed. That is why I insisted that an amendment be introduced last night, that is the new Clause 13 of the Bill. It says that this Parliament will investigate through a committee the very serious ramifications of what we are doing with the bands.

I asked the Minister responsible for the Status of Women whether she considered this to be an Indian issue under the whole scope of Indian issues, or whether it was entirely a women's issue. She said it was a women's issue. Indian Rights for Indian Women said it was an Indian issue. The Native Women's Association said it was an Indian issue. Yet they most genuinely want their status returned. I understand that. I also understand the self-determination that the Indian people want. They were once a proud people and they want that pride restored. I understand that. I am hopeful that in the next Parliament we will be able, in a very reasonable length of time, to come up with workable solutions which will respect that request.

We are supporting the Bill, but we are not happy with it. I want to assure the Indian people that when this Parliament comes back that clause which we put in will be activated and we will have a proper study. We have not had a proper study. We will have a proper study of the ramifications. We will get the facts, figures, and information which is necessary to make a reasoned decision on how this Act can best be implemented.

I would like to thank everyone who has worked with me on this Bill in the committee. I have met many new people. I have enjoyed their advice, their constructive criticism and their support. I can assure them once again that this Bill will not destroy their way of life. We will work to make sure that it preserves the Indian culture and the right of Indians to self-determination. We are exercising paternalism of the worst kind. The Indian people agree that this offensive clause in the Indian Act must be done away with.

For some reason I am not happy today. My hon. colleague from Broadview-Greenwood tells me that this is a historic and momentous occasion. Somehow I do not feel that way. However, the Bill is going through. We will hold our nose and swallow the medicine and see it go through.

• (1430)

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, the Indian Act was imposed on the Indian people of this country 100 years ago. It was legislation that was passed in this very Parliament that imposed a law on the Indian people across the country.

Today is a historic day if this Bill passes through the House because once again this House is passing legislation and imposing it on Indian people across the country. When in God's name will this paternalism stop?

I have talked to constituents of mine in northwestern Alberta as well as the band members. I have yet to find one registered treaty Indian—I wish the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) would listen. I was kind enough to listen to what she had to say. Maybe she should listen to what others are saying. That is unparliamentary but I will do the same to you. There is not one treaty Indian of whom I know in this country who denies that the Indian Act discriminates against women. There is not one chief, one band councillor or one member of any band in my riding who has told me that he does not want that clause removed or the discrimination clauses removed. They all want it removed because it is blatant discrimination against Indian women. That injustice was imposed by this House of Commons on the Indian women of this nation.

What are we about to do now? Think about it for a minute. We are not just eliminating the discrimination clauses of the Indian Act; we are now imposing on the very people whom we say should be given self-government and should be allowed to make their own decisions, and the very people to whom we say we should not be paternalistic, a piece of legislation that retroactively reinstates to the band lists members who were discriminated against as a result of the old Act.

Do Hon. Members realize what this will do to many of the bands across the country? We are talking almost about genocide. We are talking about cultural genocide. Rights are being restored to women who lost them either because the husband became enfranchised and took the wife and children with him or because they married non Indians. But they were following the law. It was not the Indian bands which made the law; it was the Government.

We are doing exactly the same thing again. People are being put back on the band list. One of them, who was referred to in the House by the Member for Broadview-Greenwood, is an American citizen who is demanding treaty status on a Canadian reserve. Think about that for a minute.

Do Hon. Members know the implications? A problem which we have recognized in the House, the passing of the Indian Act years ago that discriminated against Indian women, is being thrown back to the Indians. Instead of the House having the courage to remove the discrimination clause from the Act, it reinstated these women and children to the band lists. The House does not have the courage to compensate the women although it is the House of Commons itself that created the problem. It is giving the problem back to the Indians and telling them to solve it.

There was no discussion about how they will be compensated. In fact, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) who is pushing this Bill through told the committee that he could not give guarantees to the bands that the Government of Canada will be able to compensate them for any monetary losses that they might experience as a result of these women and children coming back. When the Department is asked how many people will be returning to the bands, the Minister does not know. But the Department says it has received many assurances that people do not want to move back to the reserves.

Let me say that there are a number of reserves in my riding and a number of reserves in Alberta and Saskatchewan to which people will move back. Even if they do not move back, since they are on the band lists they are entitled to funds that are received from oil and gas revenues. There are bands which are working with this depleting resource and beginning to build an economic base and pull their people out of the quagmire into which we pushed them. They are doing this on their own with their own funds. It is true that the Parliament is now passing a very historic document. It will push those same band members down into the quagmire again. I know the one band right now whose population will increase or whose band membership will increase three times over. It happens to be a band that has wealth in the ground and that receives oil and gas royalties.

Surely there is a fundamental injustice, bordering on immorality, when the House passes a piece of legislation and, in the style of Pontius Pilate, it washes its hands of the situation and throws it into the lap of the bands to solve.

I would like Hon. Members to come to my riding and visit some of the reserves, including the poorer ones. I can think of one reserve now, the Janvier band. Half of the people are treaty Indians and the other half of the population of the Janvier area is classified as Métis. They are related. They have been enfranchised. Some of them married off the reserve, knowing what they did. The current band membership still cannot provide adequate housing on the reserves. If this Bill goes through, that band will have to cope with twice the population. Again they will face poverty because the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Government of Canada cannot guarantee that they will provide the funds necessary to keep the band merely at a subsistence level.

It shocks me absolutely to think that when the Indian people petitioned the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Members of Parliament to remove the discriminatory clauses in the Indian Act we do not do just that. Why do we say that we know best, that we in central Canada, in the House of Commons, know best. The Government says that it will reinstate all the women who lost their rights and that cut-off date will be sometime in the 1950s. If they lost their rights before the 1950s, there will not be reinstated, and if they lost them after that time, they will be reinstated. How do you think that will stand up to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms? If the Government is to allow resinstatement retroactively to the 1950s, it had better do so back to the time when the Indian Act first came into force. How many people will come forward then?

The sad fact is that this very question about removing the discriminatory clauses has been discussed in the House and in the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the past four years. It makes me question why the Minister brought this Bill in, got unanimous consent to take it to the committee for study, in three days had the amendments moved, brought them back and rushed them through the House in order to have the Bill passed in the House of Commons. It is political. The Minister knows that it is political. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mrs. Erola) knows that it is political because she had stated in the House that if the Bill is not passed she will resign her seat. I do not think she would do so.

There is a fundamental injustice being done to the Indian people. This will go down as a very sad day, tantamount to the sadness that we should look upon the day the Indian Act was just passed, forever putting Indian people in a paternalistic situation. They cannot do anything without the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development saying: "Yes, you can do it". This at one time forced Indians to stay on the reserves. They could not even leave the reserve without a pass from the Indian agent. The Minister of Indian Affairs is saying to the Indian people: "We want you to govern yourselves. We want you to take part in society, so we are going to introduce a self-government or an Indian government Bill", as he did. But then the Government brings in a Bill like this that negates everything the Minister said two days ago on the Indian self-government Bill.

I would like to commend the Minister for introducing that Bill but I cannot commend him for introducing this one. We are doing something fundamentally wrong. Why will the House of Commons not take the responsibility that is rightfully and morally ours? Why can we not grapple with the situation, and come to a conclusion? We have no right to force membership in those Indian bands. We have no right to do that. They did not create the law that discriminated against the women; we did so in this House of Commons. We do not have the right to force band membership on the bands across the country when out of the other side of our mouths we say: "We want you to have Indian self-government."

I agree it was a terrible situation when women were discriminated against. How do you compensate them? I do not know. We are intelligent people in this House. We should be able to come to a solution. How do you compensate the women who decided 40 years ago not to get married, but would live common law against their religion because they did not want to lose their Indian status? Let me ask the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), how do you compensate a woman who says: "I am not going to get married. I will live common law even though it is against my religion and against everything I stand for because I do not want to lose my Indian status and I do not want my children to lose it"?

I have attended weddings and I have seen Indian people in their sixties finally getting married because their children had grown up and established that they were treaty Indians. My God, what have we done to those people? And we are doing it again today. I cannot for the life of me fathom why we would force this Bill on the Indian people of this nation. We say continually that we want them to be citizens of this country and take full part in it. But, dammit, we are not allowing them to do this when we force the bands to take God knows how many people back into the reserves. You are killing the Indian people with this legislation, just as you killed them in spirit and in drive when you brought in the first Indian Act which said, "We in this House of Commons and we in this Government are going to look after you. Do not worry".

I say to the Minister: Come to my riding and see what has happened to the young children in some of the reserves because of their dependence on welfare, their lack of health and the fact that they cannot make a decision without having to come to Ottawa to the Minister of Indian Affairs. It sickens me to think that intelligent people in this House of Commons have passed that legislation the way it is. We should be removing the discrimination clauses. There is no doubt about that. The Indian people want that; they have been asking for it. But we have to take it that other step further, that one more step that says: "Well, we really know everything that is good for you people. We are going to reinstate all these women and children and put them on your band list." We will put them on a general list first and we will put them on the band list at the same time because we cannot create two types of Indians.

Let me say to the Minister, today, mark my words, you are destroying the self-reliance, the resourcefulness and the development of Indians who have pulled themselves out of the quagmire by their bootstraps, out of the continual welfare system, and you are imposing on them again something as terrible as the Indian Act.

I implore Members in this House of Commons to talk. I implore the NDP members and my colleagues on this side to talk on this Bill until four o'clock this afternoon and let it die. Give it some thought. Give it some understanding. Let the Indian people sit down and tell you so you can understand what is happening. Why are we going through this Bill in 48 hours? The Minister brings in amendments to the Indian Act that include reinstatement. Why? We did that before through Bill C-169. Do you remember that, Mr. Speaker? Do you remember what happened with Bill C-169? Every one of us looked like a fools because we passed the Bill which infringed on freedom of speech—

Mr. Cullen: Nonsense.

Mr. Shields: The Hon. Member may say "nonsense". Let him say "nonsense" about this Bill. I would like to hear what the Hon. Member has to say about Bill C-147. Does he understand what he is doing, Mr. Speaker, through you, to the Indian people of this country? We did it once with the Indian Act. For God's sake let us not do it again. Let us get some sense in this Bill, even if it comes at the last minute. Amend the Bill now. The Minister can withdraw the Bill and bring it back. He could remove the discrimination clauses. Everybody wants that. I say to him not to impose on the Indian people in those bands retroactive reinstatement. For once let us speak with a straight tongue and tell them: "Look, you people, you can govern yourselves. We will compensate if there is compensation to be made". Or we could say: "We will guarantee that those moneys will be paid into the band funds if there is a drain on them". We could do all sorts of things.

I do hope Members will stand in this House and speak on this Bill. I do hope they will stand and make their presence felt in this House. It will be a travesty if we allow this Bill to pass. We will regret it. We will be looking back in 20 years, nay, in ten years, and we will be saying what fools we were.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). I know of the sincerity, compassion and conviction with which he spoke. Everyone in the House could detect that. I hope he does not have to tell the House that he spoke with the same compassion and vigour in his own caucus when the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) was there. I hope he tried to convince her of the sentiments which he feels so deeply. I want to read—

• (1450)

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to answer that question. I have met with the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald)—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. A point of order is not permission to answer a question.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I was not asking a question. I was expressing a hope. I thought the Hon. Member might launch into another speech. However, I should like to point out to him what the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) said recently. She said:

> The issue we must address, first and foremost, is equality—the equality of women and men everywhere in Canada. For years, individuals and organizations, national and international, have pointed to the discriminatory clauses of the Indian Act—

Then she went on to say:

> Today we have a chance to correct the wrongs perpetrated against Indian women by an Act of the Canadian Parliament for over 100 years. To do so must surely mean that Indian women—all Indian women—must have the same rights, privileges and responsibilities as those now enjoyed by Indian men—

I hope the Hon. Member for Athabasca remains here to hear my comments. She continued:

> —including the right to full membership within their band and residency on their reserve for those who have lost their status, should they so desire it.

Then she went on to say:

> It is not enough merely to remove the discriminatory clauses of the Indian Act. Full reinstatement to their bands must be a complementary move unless thousands of women and their children are to be left in a state of limbo.

That is not much choice for the bands to determine their own membership. So much for this type of position.

I do not doubt the sincerity of the Hon. Member for Athabasca. Who could? That is the conundrum in which all of us in the House find ourselves. This is why there is unanimous consent to proceed today.

There are those who say, like the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, that we must guarantee them membership, that we must reinstate those who have lost their status and that nothing less will do. We have people who feel strongly about this in the New Democratic Party, as indeed we do on this side of the House. Of course we have others who deal on an ongoing basis with Indian people. They are the ones who have heard the fears of Indian people week in and week out, month in and month out, about our tackling this particular problem. They tried to resolve the internal conflict within their own consciences. They tried to resolve the political conflict within their Parties as to the urgency of the situation. That is where the conflict is. Then I think they tried to paper it over, quite frankly, with some rather fragile arguments such as: "We regret that we are being forced to do this and are being rushed".

We have talked a lot about this matter. We set up a special standing committee of the House of Commons to look into the matter. It heard many witnesses and made a report. By the way, on that committee were representatives of the native people. That parliamentary report was made under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Burghardt). It was an all-Party committee which made a series of recommendations. If the Government had departed substantially from the terms of the Bill, we would have been accused of irresponsibility because we would have fractured the unanimous and bipartisan atmosphere in which the report was created. There was all-Party support for the report. We brought in recommendations which were almost dead-on the ones contained in the report of the parliamentary committee.

Now we are being told how unfortunate it is to rush the matter through the House. If we had come in with something substantially different from the parliamentary report, I know what we would have heard on the floor of the House. One does not require a vivid imagination to know what Hon. Members would have said. They would have reminded us that the parliamentary committee studied the matter, that it heard witnesses and made recommendations. They would have called us an arrogant government and have indicated that we departed substantially from the all-Party report. They would have asked: "What right do you have to do that? What arrogance! Don't you care?"

To accuse the Government of parternalism in a situation such as this against such a background is shameful. Surely people who argue that should be ashamed when they know the origins and that it was an all-Party report.

Mr. McDermid: I am not ashamed at all.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am not talking about my official critic. I am talking about those people who expound with deep sentiment what they feel about this issue within their own Party. They know that there are people within their own Party advocating a Bill which is even stronger than this one.

The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood said that all the organizations were against it. That is right, they are against it but they are against it for different reasons.

Mr. McDermid: That is right.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I agree with my official critic. However, some Hon. Members disagree with him because they do not think the Bill is strong enough. They think that we should be unequivocally forcing them to take up band membership and residency immediately, without any discussion with the bands respecting the rate of flow of people on to the reserve or anything else.

An Hon. Member: That is not right.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Well, I just quoted the statement of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands. Of course there are others who think that there should not be any time limit within which the bands must act and take their non-status people back into the bands, as well as their non-Indian spouses and children. I think the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) was one who advocated this. Let me say to these people that I have a legal view which casts considerable doubt on that suggestion. If that were the case and we left it to the bands to determine band membership, indeed it could be struck down by the Charter. If we gave the bands the power to decide band memberships, we can be sure—and this is true—that people would be treated differently from one band to another. Of course they would be. There are 600 or more bands in the country. Since they would be treated in many cases differently from one band to another, and since they would all have lost their membership for the same reason—and all these women lost their membership for that reason—it would be contrary to Section 15 of the Charter.

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East wanted to remove the two-year provision. We would have had to strike it down because we have a legal opinion which casts considerable doubt on its validity, based upon the fact that it would be contrary to Section 15 of the Charter.

Perhaps that information will be helpful to Hon. Members. Perhaps I would have been tempted, as others would have been tempted, to extend the deadline or remove it.

Mr. McDermid: That is the only thing that stopped you.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That is right, it is that legal opinion which stopped it. However, those who advocate it here as if it could be done ignore the fundamental reality that it would be contrary to the Charter.

This is the last day on which I will be Minister of this Department. I have had a very enriching experience for over four years dealing with the aboriginal peoples of the country. I have worked, along with my own colleagues in Government, to achieve some notable breakthroughs. Now I am on the floor of the House on a Bill about which I know native peoples will be unhappy. I have had a tremendous association with those native peoples, one which I will remember until the day I die. I do not know how we could meet this situation in a much more constructive way than we have attempted to do. I think their unhappiness is inevitable and justified. I am not entirely sure any government could have turned that unhappiness around. The minute it would try to correct this situation, it would be confounded with dilemmas which are almost unresolvable. In the first place, it did not create the problem, we created it, as the Hon. Member for Athabasca said, when we incorporated that section in the Indian Act. It was offensive and created this discrimination in the first place. At last we are coming to grips with correcting it.

How do we correct such a thing when a blatant injustice has been done to thousands and thousands of people? It is not the fault of the Indian people, but we have to look to them to correct it. We tried our best. The committee tried its best. I congratulate most sincerely everyone on the committee, members of all Parties. Some of them came up to me the day before yesterday and indicated that they thought they had a compromise. They indicated that if I could get my colleagues in Cabinet to approve these amendments and to agree to the essential elements of this compromise, they thought they had all-Party agreement to proceed. Despite all the unhappiness of the organizations, unhappiness for very different reasons, they were prepared to grab the mettle, show some courage in a troublesome situation and have all-Party support. I think most of the Members will agree with this. I came back with what I think the committee felt was pretty well an endorsation by Cabinet of all the elements of the package which were in that compromise except one. That was the one where we said that we could not go back for reinstatement past the people who lost their status plus one generation. We could not go beyond that. It would double the number of those qualified from 70,000 to about 140,000.

● (1500)

We heard what the Hon. Member for Athabasca said about the potential of 70,000 Indians coming back on the reserves. How would Members like it if we had a further amendment to reinstate up to 14,000 Indians? Talk about the devastation that might have been created for some bands in the country! Of course we could not go for that. For that reason, to say nothing about the horrendous expense of people coming back on the reserves who have virtually no connection whatosever with the Indian reserves or their culture, and despite what the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East says, to open up the floodgates to that extent, would, frankly, be a little unreal.

I am prepared to make a challenge. I do not think anyone believes it is likely to happen, but I challenge the Official Opposition, should it become the government, to increase the potential number of returning Indians from 70,000 to 140,000 people by taking the reinstatements back to the grandchildren of those who lost their status. Implicit in that is the deluge of people who could potentially come back to the reserves, to say nothing about the hundreds of millions dollars more which the Official Oppostion should be prepared to put up front in a separate fund to assist all those Indians who come back. I hope Members opposite will put their muscle where their mouth is today in the House. Let us see whether they will do it. I do not think they will. From private discussions I have had with many of them, I do not think all Members in the Official Opposition think like that.

My colleagues on the committee and I are trying to give some type of assurance. We want to give some type of comfort rather than stimulate the concern and worry that is already there. Let us try to inject some calm in the situation. The reading I have of the amendments that we are making to this Bill do this. I will speak very slowly, because it is a fundamental type of assurance for which some Members in the Official Opposition were looking. I am talking about reinstated people.

Reinstated people will become band members as a matter of right after two years. Part of being a band member is the right to access to reserves. We could not change this without creating two classes of band members. I emphasize this for all the chiefs across the country and all the Indian people who are troubled by this, but bands will have the power to provide for the orderly settlement of reinstated persons. This means that bands can make rules on such things as the zoning of land, the use of land and buildings, the timing and procedures for returning to reserves. In this way they will be able to manage the return to reserves in a way which makes sense in each one of their communities, depending on their different circumstances. Reinstated Indians will also have the right to have their non-Indian spouses or children live with them on reserves, but these families will also be subject to by-laws regulating settlement. Also, any rights beyond that of residency would be decided by the band. It seems clear that the federal Government has a duty to restore the rights it took away. This Bill does that.

When I refer to the rights which the federal Government gave away, the Parliament of Canada gave them away when it passed the Indian Act. It also gives bands, in conjunction with existing powers under the Indian Act, power to manage effectively the settlement of reinstated persons on reserve. I would like to point out that as far as Bill C-52 is concerned, when Parliament approves it, bands will have the right to obtain much broader powers than they now have under the Indian Act to manage their own communities. They can regulate that power of movement back on the reserves because of zoning powers and all other powers such as building codes and so on. That is absolutely essential if there is not to be chaos on the reserves. There can be that space-plan treatment.

Let me point out one more area to which the critic for the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), made reference. There is provision in the Bill now to which every Member, including the Hon. Member for Athabasca, who is concerned about the implications which this Bill may have and some of the dislocations that it may cause on reserves because of the impact it might have in increasing the deplorable poverty which exists already on reserves, should pay attention. The Bill provides for a parliamentary committee to review the reinstatement provisions within 18 months. By that time we will know with reasonable accuracy how many people want to be reinstated and to what bands. If there is a problem, Parliament can take the necessary legislative action at that time, before the reinstated people are put back on the band list. It is a two-year period. You have that essential guarantee of the parliamentary review.

Mr. McDermid: Where did it come from?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I give the Hon. Member full credit. He asks where it came from. He brought up the idea, we checked it out, found that it could be done, so we put it in there. That shows what can be achieved when all Parties get together and try to find a solution. As I say, it is now in there. The only credit the Government takes is that it had the wisdom to adopt a useful and constructive suggestion. There is nothing wrong with that. It is in here and it gives that type of assurance. Let us take some relief from that.

As far as my successor is concerned, and certainly as far as many of my colleagues are concerned, if we form a government the next time, I will be around, although not as a Member of Parliament, to insist to the maximum of my influence that the Government I will insist that the Government take a hard look in 18 months and see if some of the implications of the disastrous situation referred to by the Hon. Member for Athabasca will occur. If there are not adequate safeguards to take care of that, action will have to be taken before the two-year period is up.

In conclusion, I want to refer to something of fundamental importance. This was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Athabasca. What about the money? How deplorable it would be if we removed this injustice only to create more injustice by raising expectations for these people who lost their status if, when they came back on the reserve, there were absolutely no financial resources to look after them. It would be a mockery. The money that has been established to treat this situation is identified in a special fund separate from Indian Affairs estimates. As the experience comes to us of people moving back to the reserves, that identifiable fund can be tapped based on need, whether it is for infrastructure, community services, land, or whatever. If those numbers coming back on the reserves meet a band that is totally incapable of treating them with adequate resources and the band comes to this special fund and is denied the money necessary to treat those people right, that will be identified immediately because of the accessibility of that fund. Parliament can be the watchdog starting next month, starting next year or starting when the new Parliament convenes. It can be the watchdog to see that there is fairness in terms of access to that fund. Noticeable amounts of money have already been put into that fund in order to ensure that after the first application, there will be money there to give those people the necessary resources. That is another essential guarantee.

● (1510)

Let me say one last thing with regard to the timing of this Bill. There has been some criticism indicating that we could have brought this Bill in earlier. There has been an absolute deluge of legislation coming from my Department in the last three, four or five weeks. We saw a chance to get legislation approved, whether it be legislation on the COPE final agreement and on the Cree-Naskapi Act or whether it be—

Mr. McDermid: And you have had great co-operation from the Opposition.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, we have had great co-operation. We brought in the Bill for Indian self-government. Governments have been confounded when trying to come up with such a Bill over the decades. We finally put one through the House just the other day as a result of almost constant work on the part of the Department. There were many other legislative fronts on which we could not move all at once.

The committee and the Indian people wanted to look at the anti-discrimination clause of the Bill in the context of the Indian self-government Bill that was tabled in this House. They had a right to see that connection, so within a matter of days we brought the discrimination Bill and the Indian self-government Bill out at the same time. I do not think that it would have been right in terms of that undertaking to give serious consideration to the discrimination Bill without having brought out the Indian self-government Bill.

I would like to conclude by saying to all my colleagues here that I realize how troublesome this issue is. However, we have tried to meet some of the basic concerns that have been raised through built-in guarantees for review should blatant injustices or tragic dislocations occur during the next two years. Let us hope that by carrying on in the spirit of that same bipartisan co-operativeness with the Indian people we can prevent the suffering that could otherwise occur. If we carry on the spirit of goodwill, I am sure we can do that.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not think the Hon. Minister meant to misrepresent my position in his remarks but when I proposed on several occasions that bands have the right to control their own memberships, I always did so within the terms of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and within the terms of the International Covenant signed by Canada, and that is the same way it is done in Bill C-52.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would classify that as being a bona fide point of order, which I will accept.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister if he has given any thought to my proposal that the Bill be split into two parts, allowing for the removal of the discrimination clauses. As the Minister knows, there is not one treaty Indian in the country who does not want the discrimination clauses removed because they are a reflection of something very terrible which happened to Indian women because of the Indian Act.

Coupled with that, does the Minister not believe that we are, in essence, passing over the problem by asking the bands to take on to their general lists and band lists the people who were unfairly treated because of the Indian Act? Does he not feel that it is the responsibility of the House of Commons to right the wrong that was done through the Indian Act and not the responsibility of the Indian people who live by the law that was imposed upon them by this House?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we took that into consideration, as did all political Parties which were involved in this. We found out that it would not work. For one thing, I believe we all have supporters within our political Parties who would feel that that would simply not do the trick. I have already read a statement made by the Hon. Member from Kingston. I believe that many Hon. Members feel the same way. They feel that we simply had to insist not only on full band membership but on the reinstatement of those people who lost their status.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I have another short question for the Minister. The Minister will recognize that in the Act presently proposed, the cut-off date for reinstatement will be back around 1950. What legal advice does the Minister have about how that will be affected when it will be challenged by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms? If someone was enfranchised prior to 1950, is that person not no less Indian than the people enfranchised after 1950? How are we going to cope with that when a case is made under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the cut-off date is not 1950. I think the Hon. Member is quite incorrect to say that. What the Bill does say is that people as well as their children who lost their status would qualify for reinstatement. The legal opinion is that there is nothing offensive in that as far as the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is concerned.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief comment to make. First, I would like to wish the Minister well in his new career. I have appreciated working with him over the past few years, at times with a bit of conflict, but I do wish him well.

The Minister said that the Bill followed fairly closely the recommendations of the subcommittee on discrimination against Indian women. I would like to point out that at least with regard to the question of residency of non-Indian spouses, the subcommittee recommended that Indian bands be asked to design procedures that would relate to that. This Bill simply gives a blanket right to non-Indian spouses and does not involve the bands in any decision-making process in that respect at all.

Second, with regard to the all-Party compromise that we reached in the last couple of days, I would simply like to remind the Minister of the chronology of it. Two nights ago, we reached a kind of a meeting of minds in the committee and we made some suggestions to the drafters of the Bill who then worked through the night. In the morning, they presented the Minister with a set of draft amendments which the Minister took to Cabinet. After they were approved, then we as members of the committee saw those amendments. We had no way of knowing whether or not they followed our recommendations completely until after they had been approved by Cabinet and there was no possibility of further change. It is this kind of last minute procedure that I feel is very much at fault which is the reason for some of the flaws that continue to be contained in the Bill. It is for that reason that we regret the late introduction of this Bill.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, during my remarks, I got so wrapped up in Bill C-47 that it completely slipped my mind that this was the last day that the Minister will be the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He has been a Member of the House for 22 years, I believe. In the last couple of days, members of the press have been asking me to assess him. The Minister assessed me in the House a few weeks ago—

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): But I took that back.

Mr. McDermid: However, he apologized. I must admit that. I said to the press, and I will say today, that there is probably not a harder working Minister in the House.

Mr. Whelan: Oh yes, there is.

Mr. McDermid: And that includes you, Whelan. Sorry, Mr. Speaker.

He is a Minister who, I believe, had the concerns of the aboriginal peoples deep in his heart and he worked extremely hard for all of them. I wish him Godspeed in whatever the future holds for him. Rumours have it that he will find one of those nice appointments that come along from time to time. However, I do wish him good luck.

I know the quandary the Minister has faced when dealing with this Bill because we have all faced it. I do not think the Minister is happy with the Bill. I know that he is defending it because as the Minister he must do that. But, deep down in his heart I know that he is not happy with the Bill. When we assume the responsibilities to govern this great country of Canada, we will be prepared to make the legislation work in a way that is not unfair to the Indian people of this country.

• (1520)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there further questions or comments? On debate, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in the very few minutes which have been allotted to me I want to make several points. I would first like to say that this is another example of the sloppy way in which this Government brings in legislation. The Government brings one good principle into every Bill in order to get two or three bad principles passed. We have seen examples of this all through the session. An example of that is the enfranchisement of Indian Women, the good principle. Every one supports that. But, then the Government injects itself into the membership of the reserves. I will confine my remarks to the membership of the reserves.

In my view, the Government has no right to tell people who can be on the Sarcee Reserve, the Blackfoot Reserve or the Stony Reserve—which are in my constituency—any more than it has the right to tell other Canadians that they have to live in Alberta or Saskatchewan. It is the right of Canadians to choose for themselves.

The Bill solves one problem, but it creates several others. One of the worst problems appears in Clause 109(1) of the Bill. That Clause gives the Minister and the Governor in Council the right to say who is enfranchised. It reads:

> On the report of the Minister that an Indian has applied for enfranchisement and that in the opinion of the Minister the Indian
> (a) is of the full age of twenty-one years,
> (b) is capable of assuming the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, and
> (c) when enfranchised, will be capable of supporting himself and his dependants,
> the Governor in Council may by order declare that the Indian is enfranchised.

That is going too far in telling people what is good for them. That is a serious objection I have concerning the membership matter. This legislation is in conflict with Bill C-52. Under that Bill the band council determines who will be on the reserves, and properly so. There are two pieces of legislation before the House at the same time which are in conflict.

Further, the legislation is a betrayal of Treaty No. 7. Treaty No. 7 was signed by the Government of Canada and the Indians in my area. It gave sovereignty to the tribes to decide who was going to live on the reserves. But the Government is injecting itself again and will take the power upon itself to determine what Indians will live on the reserves. That is completely contrary to the law which is in existence. I think this legislation could be challenged as a betrayal of Treaty No. 7. Again, we see the Government acting with haste. The Government has wasted time on various pieces of legislation. It could have brought this piece of legislation forward two years ago had it wanted to. The betrayal of Treaty No. 7 is very serious.

A further point which I would like to make is that the legislation affects all Canadians. It will require millions and millions of dollars to look after the people on the reserves. That money will come from the taxpayers of Canada. All Canadians should be concerned about this legislation.

All of the people on the reserves in my constituency are opposed to this Bill, and it would seem that all Indian people are opposed to it, yet we are imposing it on them. I only support the Bill because it removes discrimination against Indian women. The clause which makes me feel a little better is the one that provides for a review which will take place shortly after a new government is elected. The review will correct the things we are imposing on the Indians. I hope that will materialize.

I received a telegram from Chief Clifford Big Plume, who is a good friend of mine and an excellent Canadian citizen. He is the Chief of the Sarcee Reserve in my constituency. The telegram reads:

> The Sarcee Nation does not accept that the Government of Canada has any legal or moral right to abrogate to itself the authority to determine membership in the Sarcee Band. For too many years Sarcees have allowed the federal Government to add to our membership those names the Government has decided should be included and to exclude those names the Government decided to exclude.

Sometimes I believe we are in Moscow when I witness the things that this Government does. The telegram continues:

> No where in Treaty No. 7 signed between the Government of Canada and Sarcee in 1877 did we the Sarcee Nation surrender our sovereign right to determine our own membership.
>
> To rectify wrongs the Government of Canada believes it has committed against some Indian people, it is the right of the Government of Canada to enumerate these people and compensate them. It is not the right of the Government of Canada to legislate that the Sarcee Nation shall compensate anyone by admitting them to band membership. Sarcee shall determine who are Sarcees.
> If the Government of Canada unilaterally amends that Indian Act by passing Bill C-47 without regard to our sovereign right to jurisdiction over our membership and land, we will fight such legislation.

Chief Clifford Big Plume said it better than I could say it. He approves removal of the discrimination. But, the Government then has to inject itself into the membership of each tribe in this nation. That is completely wrong.

Again, we must vote on two principles: one principle which is good and another principle which is bad. The only hope I have is that a government will be elected which will deal with—

Mr. Burghardt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. After listening to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) I would like to make one comment. If he continues to use his allotted time, in effect Bill C-47 will be talked out and killed. I want the Canadian public to know that, and especially the women of this nation. The Indian people—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: It is not I who is wasting time, Mr. Speaker. I am through. The Minister took a full 20 minutes—

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): You asked me to explain the Bill!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. colleague a question because I know that he spends a great deal of time in his riding talking to individual constituents. As well, I know that he has had a number of meetings with the bands on the reserves in his riding. Has it ever been his experience to find anyone—a treaty Indian, a member of the band, a member of the band council, or a chief—who disagreed with the Indian Act, as it was written, in that it discriminated against women? Was he ever told that those clauses should be removed?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have not had an individual Canadian of Indian extraction say that to me. However, in a meeting with the Blackfoot Band Council about two years ago, they said they approved that type of legislation, but that they were not ready for it. They wanted some time to make arrangements. They indicated that they could not have several scores of people suddenly arrive on the reserve when there were already 27 people living in one house. They wanted to correct the situation on the reserve before further hardships were placed on them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any further questions or comments? On debate, the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble).

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, I am driven to speak on Bill C-47, a Bill to amend the Indian Act, because of comments made in this House by Members from all sides and all Parties. It is obvious that this House is embarking on a plan which has been recognized as imperfect in the dying hours before the summer recess and possibly the end of this Parliament. We are passing a piece of legislation which has as its primary purpose—and I believe this is clear—the removal of discrimination against Indian women. When Indian women married outside the Indian community they and their offspring lost their rights to Indian status. Of course, it so happened that the same consequences did not befall an Indian man who married someone who was not Indian, and it did not befall his offspring.

• (1530)

The problem with the Bill is that it goes further than remedying the ill. The remedy would have taken the form of an amendment which would have precluded the disenfranchisement of Indian women. The Bill endeavours to rectify historical misjudgments, and mistakes which have been made by previous Parliaments in connection with this issue. The form of rectification was to be a reinstatement of women who had been disenfranchised, together with the reinstatement to full franchise entitlement of their children.

That second aspect of the Bill is the part which has created the difficulty, because the people affected, namely, the Indian bands, have taken very substantial issue with it on two understandable grounds. Some Indian bands are reasonably wealthy, particularly those in Alberta which happen to derive revenue from oil and gas leases on the reserves. It, therefore, becomes attractive for people who might otherwise never have claimed Indian status to make that claim, both for themselves and for their children. There is a financial advantage in so doing.

There are other circumstances where Indian bands are certainly less well off. As a matter of fact, the financial circumstances which prevail in these bands have caused very serious deprivation. Why people would choose to return to those circumstances one may well feel is beyond comprehension. However, there are people, in fact, who are in worse financial circumstances living away from the bands and the reserve land. Accordingly, it may be advantageous for them to move back even though the circumstances into which they move are not the best. Whether we are talking about wealthy bands or impoverished bands, there is an obligation either to share some of the wealth or add to the poverty.

It is to the addition of the poverty particularly that Hon. Members who have spoken in this House, and for whom I have the highest regard, have directed their attention. I am speaking, of course, of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) and the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). I am inclined to be moved by arguments of Hon. Members of this place who have firsthand knowledge of the problem which we are endeavouring to solve. I am very concerned when well meaning Hon. Members of Parliament say, I have a solution for your problem although I and my constituents do not suffer from it. Those Hon. Members have come here today to speak, raising their voices in opposition and drawing the attention of the House to the problems which they recognize will transpire.

I believe we must recognize that we have approached the second aspect of this double-barrelled alleged solution hoping for perfection but realizing we have not achieved it. We might well have suggested that the bands elect to disenfranchise male members of the band who married outside the Indian community and in that way the disenfranchisement would have been complete. In that way the bands themselves would not have been burdened with the colossal cost of attending to the needs of some 70,000 persons who are about to return to the lands where the financial situation of the bands, to say the very least, is not the best.

I am troubled, quite frankly, by the whole concept of the Indian Act, not only by these amendments. We in Parliament have treated a whole section of Canadian society as though this was the year 1884 and not 1984. How in the name of heaven, Mr. Speaker, could this House pass Clause 12 of this Bill? Clause 12 (109)(1) reads as follows:

> On the report of the Minister that an Indian has applied for enfranchisement and that in the opinion of the Minister the Indian
> (a) is of the full age of twenty-one years,
> (b) is capable of assuming the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, and
> (c) when enfranchised, will be capable of supporting himself and his dependents
> the Governor in Council may by order declare that the Indian is enfranchised.

What kind of a paternalistic interference in the affairs of Canadian citizens is this? I do not know how many of us who have not dealt specifically with this problem, who have not served on the committee and are not acquainted with the problems—and a lot of us are not—could sit here and pass a clause which deals with Canadian citizens as though they are second, third or fourth-class Canadian citizens as though we are adults and they are children. That is exactly the problem which confronts us and which finds itself imbedded in the very statute with which we deal today.

I am not happy with the Act and, like the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), I wish there was something better. I fear that what this House is doing in its mad haste to pass legislation at the last moment is less than what we wish. I have not been in this House too long but, quite frankly, I recognize that in dealing with the Indian Act in 1984, it will be 10 or 15 years before it comes back for re-examination. What we pass here today with all of its warts and imperfections is going to hamstring the Indian people. It is going to create financial burden, hardship and unhappiness. I believe that Hon. Members of the House should recognize exactly what they are doing before they proceed to pass this Bill into law.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? Is there further debate?

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following Bills without amendment: Bill C-51, an Act to implement a convention between Canada and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland providing for the reciprocal recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters; Bill C-53, an Act to establish a National Park on the Mingan Archipelago; and Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council on a point of order.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I think you will find there might be agreement to move directly to the introduction of the Miscellaneous Statutory Amendments Act at this point.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, we will deal with that Bill, and I gather with Bill C-56 as the next item of business. As to this Bill, it will be introduced and passed in all stages without debate.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that this Bill amending a variety of different statutes can be passed in less than 30 seconds. We agree to that. However, I understood that the Saltfish Bill was being called next. Am I wrong in that regard?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, there was some discussion on saltfish. At this point we would like to call the Miscellaneous Statutory Amendments Bill for introduction. Consent must be had at this point just to get this Bill taken care of.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I understood there was consent to allow me to make a 60-second speech on this Bill on second reading.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, what comes after that 60 second speech? Not Bill C-57, I take it, which is the saltfish Act?

Mr. McGrath: One step at a time.

Miss Campbell: I just want some clarification. The Order Paper shows Bill C-57, the Saltfish Act. We are now being asked to proceed to the Miscellaneous Statutes Bill. What comes next?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that the Government would call the order as it saw fit, if there was agreement. I believe there is agreement among the House leaders to call the Miscellaneous Statutory Amendments Act now and follow that with Bill C-56, and then with the other legislation on the Order Paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposal put forward by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

STATUTES OF CANADA

MEASURE TO CORRECT—ANOMALIES, INCONSISTENCIES, ARCHAISMS AND ERRORS

Hon. D. M. Collenette (for the Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-58, an Act to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms and errors, and to deal with other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Statutes of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time?

Some Hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By unanimous consent, now.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Collenette, seconded by Mr. Whelan, moved that Bill C-58, an Act to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms and errors, and to deal with other matters of an uncontroversial nature in the Statutes of Canada be now read a second time and by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank both the Government and the opposition House leaders for the opportunity to make a few brief remarks. Clause 54 of this Bill amends the constitution of the Northwest Territories and therefore deserves not to go unrecognized. Section 11(2) of the Northwest Territories Act is to be repealed. This has been done with all-Party consent at the request of the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories, made by way of a unanimously supported resolution in September, 1983. This Section is an archaism which dates back to the time when the capital of the Northwest Territories was in Ottawa. It was moved to Yellowknife in 1968, and this section, which required that one session of the legislature each year be held outside of the capital, is now redundant.

On a future occasion Section 11(5) also ought to be repealed. This Section presently specifies that a majority constitues a quorum of the legislature. The Legislative Assembly has unanimously requested, and in my opinion ought to have, the right to set its own quorum as is the case in every provincial legislature in Canada. Clause 54 also changes the word "Eskimo" to the word "Inuit" wherever it occurs in the Northwest Territories Act. This is done in keeping with modern preferences. The people of the North will be pleased with this small step toward their constitutional future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went went into Committee thereon. Mr. Corbin in the chair.

The Chairman: Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, you can call all the Clauses. We are prepared to consent to all clauses in the Bill and the schedule.

Mr. Deans: We also agree, keeping in mind that we want to deal with the tobacco farmers' Bill today before four o'clock.

Mr. Evans: Certainly with the agreement of the Government you can proceed that way because we, too, want to take care of the needs of the tobacco farmers.

Clauses 5 to 79 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING AGENCIES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-56, an Act to amend the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions and we would ask you to seek unanimous consent that the Bill not be sent to the Standing Committee, but rather to a Committee of the Whole, and proceeded with at all stages prior to four o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposal. Is that agreed?

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, I want to be absolutely clear. Does what the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said imply that it will go through third reading as well, or will there be a request for unanimous consent for third reading?

Mr. Evans: No, there will not be.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think we should take this stage by stage. I would suggest that we agree that the matter go to Committee of the Whole and we can deal with the merits of the Bill and try to make progress.

Mr. Hargrave: Is that absolutely understood, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Then we will come back and ask for any other unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is in the hands of the House. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Evans: In that case, Mr. Speaker, to facilitate the passage or movement of the Bill, I would simply ask for unanimous consent that the Bill not be sent to the standing committee, but rather be referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed to?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Corbin in the Chair.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There are five minutes to go. I think that we would want to have this matter proceed with so that we can bring it to its conclusion. I would seek unanimous consent of the House that we not see the clock at four o'clock, but proceed until we deal with the different stages of this legislation. In that way we can in fact have somebody say something. We have amendments to propose. The mere act of putting in amendments will take up the time. I am sure that all Members of the House would be agreeable to not seeing the clock at four o'clock in order that we can get this Bill dealt with.

The Chairman: Before recognizing the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, let the Chairman indicate to the House that that poses a difficulty. The committee is not empowered to not see the clock or to extend time. That can only be done with the Speaker in the Chair.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would then ask for unanimous consent that the Chairman of Committees rise and report progress, at which time I will ask for the unanimous consent of the House to revert to Committee of the Whole once we have passed a motion which I propose to bring that we not see the clock at four o'clock.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a terribly unconventional procedure which is being asked for. It violates the straight agreement which was put when the House order was passed this morning, that the House will rise at four o'clock to give the Senate the opportunity to deal with the Bills and give Royal Assent to these Bills today as the House is adjourning today. The Opposition has known that all along. There has been plenty of time to deal with these Bills.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, come on John.

Mr. Evans: The House Leader has indicated clearly that at four o'clock no unanimous consent will be given.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I was aware of discussions that had taken place with regard to not extending beyond four o'clock. However, let us not be foolish about this. This is an important Bill. It deals with matters of vital concern. We in this Party have made every effort to accommodate the Government and, I might say, the Official Opposition, in trying to get the business through the House that would enable us to deal with this legislation today. I could see as the day unfolded that we were going to be faced with this dilemma. I therefore appeal to the Government, recognizing the importance of this, albeit with an understanding that it had been made clear to us that we would not sit beyond four, to reconsider its position and allow us to complete this legislation.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, we have time right now. If we get down to business this Bill can be passed. I suggest that we do that. There is no consent to go beyond four o'clock. That was made clear and absolute at the outset today when the House order was passed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I know of at least one amendment. I spoke to the Minister of Agriculture and he is prepared to accept it.

Mr. Evans: Sit down and let us get with it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just putting that motion and having it accepted would take more than the remaining time. Let us proceed and go past four o'clock. I ask the Government to proceed past four o'clock.

The Chairman: The Hon. President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Pinard: The request made by the Hon. Member is reasonable. I support fully my Parliamentary Secretary who is blaming the Tories for their attitude in the last minutes which is jeopardizing the passage of this legislation. Despite this attitude and the risk they have taken, we will make it possible for the Bill to be passed through all stages because it is important. We will agree that the House order be amended to allow 15 more minutes and we will sit until 4:15. If at 4:15 the Bill is passed, fine. If the Bill is not passed at 4:15, the House will rise.

• (1600)

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask for clarification what exactly we will be giving unanimous consent for? Are we giving consent to sit until 4:15 for other Bills to be passed, or only so this particular Bill can go through all stages? I am not prepared to not see the clock beyond four o'clock if we are to consider other Bills like Bill C-57.

Mr. Pinard: We will not be sitting. If the Hon. Member wants to stay after 4:15 that is fine.

Miss Campbell: That is not the question. Is this the only Bill that will be called from now until 4:15?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: The Hon. Member is very swift indeed.

[English]

The Chairman: The question is the following:

Shall I rise and report progress?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I think unanimous consent has now been given to not see the clock until such time as any Member deems to see it as four o'clock. I would ask therefore for unanimous consent to not see the clock until a Member decides to see it as four o'clock.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader has been magnanimous in this case. He said that at 4:15 the House will rise. He said that the House order can be amended to 4:15, and we will agree to that. Now we are getting this craziness from the House Leader of the Official Opposition. The Government has indicated that we will give unanimous consent to not see the clock until 4:15 in order to deal with this Bill. That is what unanimous consent is being asked for.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, we are wasting time. If the Parliamentary Secretary or the Government House Leader want to see call, it four o'clock at 4:15 they simply have to raise their hands. I will not accuse them of wanting to go to the washroom.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being four o'clock p.m., pursuant to Order made earlier this day, the sitting is suspended to the call of the Chair.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 4.04 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 4.44 p.m.
