STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

INTEREST RATE CHARGES

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote a statement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in which he assured us that he would cap interest rates at 12 per cent should he become the next Prime Minister. He said:

> You have to have more stability in the interest rates to build the kind of confidence necessary for people to take the bold step into new ventures that they have on the drafting board ready to go.

In light of that statement, I am very upset and anxious to know why the Minister of Agriculture, who is responsible for the Farm Credit Corporation, has allowed the interest rate charged by the Farm Credit Corporation to rise from 12.75 per cent in April, 1983, to 14 per cent on April 9 of this year. Why will the Minister not honour his word, and cap interest rates at 12 per cent?

Not only are the interest rates set at 14 per cent but the Farm Credit Corporation has seen fit to change the method it uses to commute loan payments. It is now calculating the compound interest semi-annually rather than annually, which once again robs more money from the already struggling farmers. For example, on a $100,000 mortgage with interest calculated annually, interest payments amount to $15,098. The same interest payment calculated semi-annually, as is being done by the Farm Credit Corporation, amounts to $15,526. The additional cost to the farmer calculated over a 20-year period is $8,500 in interest.

The Minister of Agriculture is condoning this sneaky, underhanded method of squeezing even more money from the already distressed farmers. This terrible treatment of farmers is coming from a man who claims to be such a great benefactor of the farming community. This is just another example of how the present federal Government has treated the farmers of Canada, and really shows us just how much the Minister of Agriculture cares about Canadian farmers.

POLITICAL PARTIES

SOLICITATION OF FUNDS BY PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, one of my constituents, in fact, one of my friends recently received a letter from the Progressive Conservative Party, inviting him to contribute at least $100 or more. In doing so, he would become a member of the "select" club of friends of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and enjoy special privileges. Those privileges, as indicated in the letter, would include: frequent meetings with the Leader, a limited number of members in the club. He would also have the privilege of having his name appear on a special list of donors.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Leader of the Official Opposition would care to inform the House, for the benefit of all Canadians, what exactly a special donors' list is. Perhaps he could also tell us whether this donors' list will be administered by the Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

RAILWAYS

TRANSPORTATION OF HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES—DANGER TO URBAN AREAS

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, the continuing derailments, and accidents on our roads, streets, highways and railways are a constant reminder of the dangers inherent in the transportation of dangerous substances. To underscore the concern shared by local governments, I call attention to a resolution presented by the Chilliwack, British Columbia, District Council to the Lower Mainland Municipal Association. That resolution reads as follows:

> Whereas the national railways are undertaking major track upgrading programs;
> And whereas existing mainlines often pass through urban areas with consequent risks associated with hazardous material transport, contributing to traffic problems at level crossings, and creating dust and noise nuisances;
> And whereas rail corridors in rural areas can diminish the above problems and reduce infrastructure costs borne by local governments;
> Therefore be it resolved that the Federation of Canadian Municipalities request the Government of Canada to provide incentives to encourage the national railways or other rail carriers to bypass urban areas where feasible, in conjunction with twin tracking and other upgrading programs, and where not feasible, for the railways to provide a greater share of the funding for grade separation.

In order that the objectives of this resolution as it affects the residents of the District of Chilliwack and other areas may be realized,, I urge that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) and the Minister of State for Social Development accede to a request to meet with representatives of the District of Chilliwack to hear their representations and render all possible assistance in resolving this problem.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

PUBLIC WEAL

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF NOTABLE CANADIANS—CALL FOR CONTINUOUS RECOGNITION

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in a very threatening situation at the Quebec National Assembly, the Sergeant-at-Arms, René Jalbert, approached the still armed assailant and in a four-hour dialogue persuaded the gunman to surrender. This feat of heroism on the part of the Quebec Sergeant-at-Arms merits not only the publicity that it now receives but should be carefully documented so that, in years to come, the story of his actions will be remembered.

Major Jalbert's heroism is an accomplishment which has been immediately recognized and applauded by all Canadians. However, Canadians should also recognize and remember the men and women who have gained national stature through their accomplishments in science, the humanities, and medical and industrial research. These individuals, when they receive any public notice, are usually given one-shot general media recognition, after which their accomplishments are buried in anonymity. This is due partly to modesty and restraint on the part of the individuals involved, and to the failure of the media to appreciate the true status and significance of the contributions these individuals make to our nation.

There is a need for Government and appropriate national and provincial professional and non-professional organizations to promote the accomplishments of deserving Canadians in their fields of expertise and to keep these celebrated names in the forefront of public attention in order to inspire and encourage young Canadians to excel in fields other than sports and rock music. In this manner, many outstanding scientists, courageous and brave military and rescue workers, and accomplished authors will, in due course, become better known nationally—

CANADA LABOUR CODE

WAGES OF THE HANDICAPPED—PROVISION IN AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, there are many important and useful changes in the Government's amendments to the Canada Labour Code which were tabled this week. Many of these improvements had been proposed by the New Democratic Party for months, and even for years.

One such change which we have been calling for is contained in Clause 2 of the Bill, and provides for the elimination of the rules which say that handicapped people may be paid less than the minimum wage. This was an attack both on the dignity of handicapped people and on their economic ability to survive and function as independent members of our society.

The New Democratic Party urges the Government to bring this legislation forward quickly so it may be passed. It will be a cruel joke on Canada's disabled if the Government has presented this Bill to the House for no other reason than electioneering, with no intention at all of passing the Bill. The Government is in a rush to pass legislation which will help banks. Over the next few weeks we will see if it is willing to do as much to help Canada's disabled.

DRUGS

MAGNITUDE OF ILLEGAL TRAFFICKING

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, reports from the RCMP estimate that Canadians consumed $9.4 billion worth of illicit drugs, mainly cannabis, heroin, and cocaine, in 1982. The RCMP states that these figures are probably low. If the indicated figures are nearly factual, illegal drugs would account for about 5 per cent of all consumer spending in Canada, or nearly 3 per cent of the Gross National Product for that year. The RCMP have indications that this percentage is rising.

What must be the horrendous cost in human suffering and damage to our society? How is the economy to sustain strains such as these? The continued growth in drug production, and the massive profits which illegal drug traffic generates, give a relative growth and assistance to organized crime to flourish in our country.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, we must continue to make every possible effort to curb and curtail this traffic, not only by enforcement of strict law, but by education of our youth. We must make it clear to all our citizens, and especially our youth, the damage which can befall their bodies, their systems, and the damage which the residue of these substances in their systems can cause to their progeny.

INDUSTRY

MANUFACTURE OF MINING EQUIPMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, Canada is without a doubt one of the leading mining nations of the world. Why, therefore, are we doing so poorly in the production of mining equipment? We are importing machinery for our own mines when we should be a leading exporter.

Unlike countries such as Finland and Sweden, we have failed to capitalize on domestic markets, failed to devote sufficient research and development effort to mining technology, and failed to seek out export opportunities. When the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt was Minister of State for Mines there was some sign of movement. Since she left that portfolio, however, nothing seems to have happened.

A few Canadian companies have proven that it is possible to be successful in this field. Let mining companies and equipment manufacturers put more effort into developing new and more efficient tools so that Canada can recapture its fair share of the domestic and world market for mining equipment.

EMPLOYMENT

GRANT GIVEN TO ITALIAN ALLIANCE OF TORONTO

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the matter of the grant to the Italian Alliance of Toronto. This was a grant of $583,000 given to them by the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

There was a political group formed in Toronto in 1983 of prominent Liberals who were seeking money to organize the Italian community for the Liberal Party. The same group of people formed a society. They received a grant for what they wanted, for a store front office, and so on. I raised complaints in the House of Commons. The Italian community raised complaints about this grant. The Minister said at the time that he did not know the politics of the people involved, in spite of the fact that he was chief political Minister for Toronto. So he was either corrupt or he was incompetent.

The Minister met with the Italian community. He was going to cut the grant to one-third. He said: "But you figure it out for yourself. You talk to Mr. Joseph Volpe. Mr. Volpe said, of course: "Don't cut the grant". We warned at the time that the group could be used for political purposes, or at the very least, it gave a bad smell to the affair. So what happens? We find now that 25 delegates have been delivered by Mr. Volpe to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

If this were the United States, Mr. Speaker, the Minister would be gone. We have a docile press in Canada, with a few exceptions, which is not really reporting this properly. We are seeing the sleezy Liberal Party whose candidate for the new Liberalism, the Gary Hart candidate, is buying 25 delegates with $583,000 of our money.

LIBERAL PARTY'S SOLICITATION OF FUNDS FROM JUDGES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, we know the Government has always felt it had a special relationship with judges. Witness the fact that their telephone directories are always conveniently handy. The latest is a letter from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), sent not only to a judge but to a judge at his court chambers. The letter says in part:

> I have enclosed a special letter from Liberal Party treasurer, Gordon Dryden—

That special letter is four pages of paranoia. It says in part:

> We must not let the politics of selfishness and fear leave us helpless in the years ahead—casting aside our concern for our neighbour, grabbing whatever we can for ourselves.

There is a P.S.:

> Remember your contribution to the Liberal Party entitles you to a tax credit of up to 75 per cent and the pride in knowing that you have come to the aid of Canada in her time of great need.

Mr. Speaker, I can understand the paranoia of the Liberal Party treasurer because it is difficult for them to raise money. I can understand their desire to raise money, but please, in the process, leave the judges alone.

[English]

FINANCE

INCREASE IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on mortgage interest rates for the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday a major Canadian bank announced its new rate for a five-year residential mortgage would be 14.5 per cent. Everyone in the real estate industry knows a rate higher than 14 per cent is a serious danger signal. Home owners cannot make the higher payments, those seeking homes cannot afford to build or buy, construction stops, and jobs are lost.

What is the Government's policy on mortgage interest rates? Has the Government turned its back on the four million Canadian families who must face higher mortgage payments? The Government promised interest rates would be made in Canada for Canadians. Will the Minister now admit that this is another broken promise?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite has expressed a concern that any of us would share if we saw evidence of a major increase in interest rates in Canada. We do not see that evidence. Indeed, if the Member were to consider yesterday's developments, he would recall that the bank rate declined yesterday. While fluctuations will occur, the bank rate is today at 11.63 per cent, whereas it was 11.72 per cent last week. That will bring benefits in terms of mortgage and other interest rates in the Canadian economy.

The Hon. Member also fails to recall that it is the Government's intention, as outlined in the February Budget, to introduce a mortgage rate protection plan. We intend to introduce the legislation shortly to implement that plan and, as I have indicated to the House on several occasions, it will be effective as of last March 1. The rates that will be insured will be those at which a mortgage was either taken out or renewed from March 1 forward.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Member opposite will probably be aware that it is the Government's intention to introduce a mortgage backed security plan which can, in our view, do a significant amount to reintroduce longer term mortgages into the Canadian mortgage market. We anticipate the mortgage backed security plan will enhance the possibilities of ten-year mortgages in Canada in the future.

● (1120)

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, it is evident the Minister is going to put out a forest fire with a bucket of water.

EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT IN CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): I am interested in the fact that the Minister does not seem to think a mortgage interest rate of 14.5 per cent is a serious problem. I would like to remind him of November 6, 1979, when the current Minister of Transport said that with a mortgage interest rate of 13.5 per cent 800,000 Canadian families could not afford a home. On November 6, 1979, the current President of the Treasury Board said that a mortgage interest rate of 13.5 per cent was taking us into unchartered economic waters and would lead to disaster.

There are 1.5 million people unemployed in Canada, Mr. Speaker. There are another one million people who are employed part-time in jobs below their levels of qualification. Yet the Government of Canada is spending public funds on construction projects in its Special Recovery Capital Program to the extent of $2 billion. With a mortgage interest rate of 14.5 per cent, jobs will be lost in the construction industry because people will not build houses with that kind of a rate.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please ask a question?

Mr. Crosby: How does he justify the policy of spending money on government construction, and stopping jobs in the housing industry?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member opposite should be aware that in fact housing starts averaged 162,000 units in 1983, which was almost a 30 per cent increase from the average in the previous year. In the first four months of this year housing starts averaged 140,000 units, which was a 6.3 per cent increase over the fourth quarter of 1983. I think the Hon. Member opposite would want to recognize that in fact domestic construction has been going forward at levels substantially above those of recent years.

With regard to the level of interest rates in Canada, and particularly mortgage interest rates, obviously none of us are happy with that situation. However, as discussions in the House over the past several weeks have indicated, interest rates in Canada are, to a substantial degree, a result of interest rate levels in the United States. The American interest rates have increased over the past two months as a result of very large increases in government borrowing to finance a structural deficit of unparallelled proportions in the United States, and due to demands from the private sector during a period of economic growth. Those two pressures have combined to drive up interest rates in the United States. Due to our large volume of trade and an open money market with the United States, those upward pressures on interest rates inevitably spill over into Canada.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister for the economic lecture, but I want to talk about people.

MORTGAGE RATE PROTECTION PLAN

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Home owners faced with a 3 per cent or 4 per cent increase in their mortgages will be faced with an additional monthly payment of $100 or more. Where are they going to get the money? The Government says it has a mortgage protection plan. It advertised it in the newspapers on April 10. One and one-half months later we still have not seen the Bill. For the benefit of all those Canadians facing higher mortgage payments, can the Minister tell us when we are going to see this protection plan? You have the ads. Where is the Bill?

An Hon. Member: Where's the beef?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where's the baloney?

An Hon. Member: Here it comes.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member opposite and his Party would no doubt endorse the general government policy of consulting with the private sector to the maximum degree possible on programs and policies which are going to have a significant impact on the private sector.

After we made the announcement in the Budget of the mortgage rate protection plan, we did two things. We undertook extensive consultations with consumers, companies financing mortgages, the construction industry, and a range of other entities interested in the mortgage market. At the same time we undertook to make the program, when it is introduced, retroactive to March 1, immediately following the Budget. Any Canadian who chooses to participate in the program will be able to do so from March 1 at the rate of mortgage interest which applied at the time when he or she either took out a new mortgage or renewed an older mortgage.

• (1125)

An Hon. Member: There's the baloney.

Mr. MacLaren: That is the situation. We shall have a program in place retroactively to March 1 as soon as we introduce the legislation, which I anticipate will be within the next few days.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY—PRICE OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the President of the Treasury Board, as he is ultimately responsible for all costs relative to government expenditures. As he knows, the Petrochemical Task Force Report came down three months ago and work is being done on it, but at a very slow pace. There are over 200,000 jobs at stake. There is a city in southwestern Ontario that is very concerned about the situation. Does the President of the Treasury Board endorse the policy to reduce the cost of natural gas and natural gas liquids to the Gulf Gate rate?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this Government is very interested in the well-being of the eastern petrochemical industry. This is demonstrated by such initiatives as the pipeline between Sarnia and Montreal, and a number of other initiatives. I can assure my hon. friend that we are giving very serious attention to the report. It has some very broad ramifications.

I must say that if the friends of the Conservatives, the provincial Governments of western Canada, and particularly Alberta, had not taken certain actions, some of the studies we are carrying out with respect to the task force report, in my view, would not have been necessary. I think my hon. friend ought to direct some of his questions to his own colleagues in western Canada as well as to ourselves.

With respect to a detailed response, I think he should address the question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who, I am sure, will be happy to respond as soon as we finish our consideration.

Mr. Fennell: It is fine to build pipelines, but if you put a product through that pipeline that is uneconomical as far as the petrochemical industry is concerned, it does not provide the benefit to create jobs.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, considering that $2 billion of exports are derived from the petrochemical industry and that there are $600,000 in rubber tire exports indirectly from this industry, will the Minister take a firm stand to reduce the cost of natural gas and natural gas liquids by at least 15 per cent, and preferably to the Gulf Gate rate?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows that questions of this sort should be addressed to the responsible Ministers. In this case it is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Nielsen: Where is he?

An Hon. Member: They are never here.

Mr. Gray: I think the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion also has a role.

Mr. Crosbie: Where is the responsible Minister?

Mr. Gray: My hon. friends ask where they are. Where are all the people sitting on your side? Where is your Leader, for example?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Down in Windsor.

Mr. Gray: In any event, I want to confirm to my hon. friend the great interest that the Government has in the well-being of the eastern petrochemical industry. In that regard we have the benefit of the very firm views of the Hon. Member for Sarnia. Many of the things my hon. friend is saying, which he has just learned of, have been put forward very effectively by the Hon. Member for Sarnia. With his interest and support I am confident that we will make the right decision in the best interest of the petrochemical industry and its workers.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STRAIT OF HORMUZ—BOMBING OF OIL TANKERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of International Trade. I am sure he must be aware, as we all are, of the events in the Strait of Hormuz and the potential threats to the oil supply to the western world. Would he inform the House whether he has been in touch with the Canadian embassies in the area, and can he give us any further information on the damage to the ships there? Has the Government been in touch with the Government of the United States concerning the strategic reserves of the United States in particular, and of Canada?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, of course the Hon. Member touches on a very serious threat to world peace, the escalation of the conflict between Iran and Iraq down in the Gulf with the interference with tankers in that area. It is true that attacks have occurred on ships in that region and that this could pose a threat to the shipment of oil from an area that provides in excess of one-quarter of the world's oil supply. Actually only about 3.5 per cent of Canada's oil supplies came from that area as of 1979, of which the percentage has been tending downward since that time with Canada's temporary self-sufficiency in oil. We do technically import some oil into Canada on the East Coast while we are able to do some exporting from the West Coast.

● (1130)

I see no short-term threat in relation to oil supplies as a consequence of the problem in the area. First, there are very substantial reserves around the world at the present time. There is, as the Hon. Member states, an international organizational agency that provides for a sharing scheme, of which this scheme can be triggered if a shortage occurs. That further protects our interest.

I want to say that we are concerned from the point of view of urging and supporting other nations in opposing the spreading of the conflict. We, of course, have an export embargo on arms and war supplies to both Iran and Iraq. We certainly join with other nations in doing everything to prevent the spread of the conflict.

FORECAST OF OIL SUPPLY SHORTAGES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, let me warn the Minister of International Trade, and bring to his attention the possibility of an oil crisis in Canada in the near future. Perhaps he will be interested to know that at the recent National Energy Board hearings—the Energy Board is to give a report on Canada's oil supply and self-sufficiency in a few weeks—Shell Canada maintained that the last year for Canada's self-sufficiency will be 1985, and that imports will be necessary after that until the year 2000. The reason is mainly that the Hibernia and the Beaufort Sea Supplies will not come on stream until 1997. That will leave us a shortfall, or an oil gap if you like, between 1985 and the 1990s of 600,000 barrels a day. What plans does the Government have to fill this oil gap in the event of a potential crisis for Canada?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to confirm the exact statistics which the Hon. Member presents, as being totally authentic. I do agree it is quite possible that there would be an interim period before new major oil supplies come on stream when Canada could be a net importer, but not to the same degree as we were a few years ago. The dependence on imported oil would be on a much smaller basis. In the meantime we are self-sufficient. I think our needs, if we do encounter the necessity of importing, can very well be managed from those sources with which, through Petro-Canada and through private oil companies, we have ongoing contractual relationships.

HIBERNIA OIL FIELD AND ALBERTA TAR SANDS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister for International Trade a further question with respect to this potential oil gap, which Shell Canada calls a real oil gap, in the near future.

The Minister must be aware that the two great areas for oil in Canada are Hibernia, and a place where we have Saudi Arabian type oil, namely the tar sands which are located in the western provinces.

I want to ask the Minister a question with respect to these two areas. First, concerning Hibernia. Could the Minister indicate to the House whether he feels we are in a position where we have put the political disputes behind us so we can get on with the development of Hibernia? Second, with respect to the tar sands, given that the Albertan economy is so down right now, would the Minister be prepared to recommend to the Cabinet that there be a national effort, a commitment now, to develop the enhanced oil recovery and the tar sands projects of Alberta?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member is taking me beyond the jurisdiction of the Department of External Affairs and into the field of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I will respond to the extent that it relates to the necessity for importation and to the extent it affects exports. There is no question but that Hibernia is a tremendous future source of hydrocarbons for the Canadian economy, and that the tar sands are a treasure trove for present and future generations in this country. But I do not think the Hon. Member should underestimate the potential for additional oil recovery in many areas—perhaps on a smaller basis in any one area, but in many areas of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I think he will find, with the passage of time, that we will have many sources of production in those provinces beyond those that already exist. Of course there is also the potential for increased gas production from the Member's own province.

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Mr. Regan: It is also interesting to contemplate the ways in which gas may be used as a substitute for oil in subsequent times.

Mr. Crosbie: Gas is being used now.

ESTIMATES

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTER OF ENERGY AT COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister for External Relations in his capacity as the Acting Prime Minister. It is appreciated that the President of the Treasury Board told us to ask questions of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The problem is that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, after setting May 24 as the day on which he would be before committee, is now refusing to appear before any of the estimates committee meetings prior to May 31 when Estimates must be reported to the House. Is there any way in which his senior colleague in the Cabinet can bring the Minister to fulfil his duties, for which he is being paid an extra $30,000 annually, and report to the committee?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the proposition. I do not know about it.

Mr. Crosbie: Why can you not accept it?

Mr. Pepin: I doubt very much whether the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources implied that he would refuse to go to committee. However, I will make absolutely sure of that as soon as I can.

EXAMINATION OF ESTIMATES

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, after checking with the clerk of the committee, the executive assistant to the Minister, and with David Zussman in the Minister's office—and although I warned them yesterday that I would be asking a question of this nature today and asked them to get back to me because I did not want to make it difficult at this time of the Liberal leadership Campaign—I find nobody can confirm that the Minister will be around to come to the committee to defend his Department's estimates. We are concerned about Petro-Canada, the Beaufort Sea discussions, and all the various areas of the national energy policy. Could the Minister make an effort and report back on Tuesday as to whether a date has been found on which the Minister could come and be examined?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, again I cannot accept the postulate, but I will discuss it with my colleague and make sure that he is available next week.

TRADE

SHOE IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. There has been extensive media coverage on the shoe quotas which are due to expire on November 30. I understand the Minister met with industry representatives last Monday and confirmed to them that the shoe quotas would be extended for another 18 to 24 months beyond November 30. Based on this information, many people engaged in the shoe business are making commercial decisions anticipating and announcement which the Minister has promised for next Tuesday. Will the Minister confirm that he will be announcing next Tuesday an extension of shoe quotas for an additional 18 to 24 months, or is it his intention to abolish the shoe quotas?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will make an announcement as soon as Cabinet finalizes its considerations with reference to the course that will be taken on the quantitative restrictions for shoes. That matter will be before Cabinet again on Tuesday morning. It is quite possible that the matter will be concluded at that time, but I cannot give the Hon. Member an absolute assurance. I am anxious to have a firm position at the earliest possible date so that shoe manufacturers, importers, retailers and others involved in the trade can make their plans accordingly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PARTICIPATION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT IN MONTREAL SEMINAR ON QUEBEC'S PLACE IN WORLD

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Relations. The Minister is aware that in Montreal, on May 29 and 30, the Government of Quebec will host a summit conference on Quebec in the World. Since this summit conference may be expected to focus as well on federal authority as it complements that of the Government of Quebec, could the Minister inform the House what the federal Government's intentions are about participating in this event and the conditions for that participation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that we have indeed been invited to participate in this event and also that we have agreed with the topics to be discussed, provided we can also agree on the conditions for federal participation. I think my hon. friend will agree with our proposal, which is that since the federal Government has most of the responsibility in this area, it cannot be treated as just another participant, like the co-operative movement, for instance.

Thus, we are trying to reach agreement with the Government of Quebec on having a position at least equal to theirs in this seminar or mini-summit. We are negotiating with the Government of Quebec about this problem. I wrote a letter to Mr. Landry this morning, to get us a little further down the road towards a consensus.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PERSUADE BANKS TO ROLL BACK MORTGAGE INTEREST INCREASES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. Despite a marginal drop in the central bank rate yesterday, the Toronto-Dominion Bank increased its one-year mortgage rate by one-half per cent. It has gone up by 2.5 per cent since January 1, from 10½ to 12¾ per cent. That means the average mortgage has increased by $40,000 over a 25-year period, which puts housing out of reach of ordinary people. Does the Minister intend to use his good offices to try to persuade the bank to roll back interest rates so that ordinary people can afford to buy housing?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, obviously it is in everybody's interest for us to have access to many markets and many sources of mortgage money, not only one, two, or three major institutions. I will be very much interested in knowing what the Hon. Member's Party intends to do when we bring in the mortgage protection plan. If, as I am informed, they intend to oppose it, I wonder what they offer those Canadians who, since March 1, have known that they could have access to an insurance plan which could go a long way to protect them against unexpected rises in interest rates.

REQUEST THAT INTEREST RATES BE SET AT REASONABLE LEVEL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister failed to answer my question. Perhaps I may ask a supplementary? As the Minister is aware, during the sixties Parliament set the mortgage rate at 6 per cent. Could the Minister inform the House whether he is prepared to do the same? In other words, is he prepared to introduce a Bill, setting the mortgage rate at a reasonable level for the average Canadian, since today, Canadians do not have the money to buy a home?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am not an expert on these matters, but it does seem to me that since we have access to a certain amount of money, by the savings of Canadians, and since these savings can be invested in either financial institutions or mortgages, the effect of the Hon. Member's proposal would be that the money available for residential mortgages would soon be exhausted. I would like to hear what the Hon. Member has to suggest as an alternative solution.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF UNDER-SECRETARY OF THE MINISTRY OF INFORMATION OF KUWAIT

Mr. Speaker: May I call to the attention of the House the presence in the gallery of His Excellency Sheikh Nasser Mohamed Al-Ahmed Al-Jaber Al-Sabah, the Under-Secretary of the Ministry of Information of Kuwait, as well as Chairman of the Petroleum Information Committee of the Arab Gulf States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

PROPOSED LEGISLATION DEALING WITH WEST COAST FISHING INDUSTRY

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Several weeks ago Senator Jack Austin made a speech in Vancouver in which he said that a West Coast fisheries Bill was imminent and that he expected it to be passed speedily by this House. That was several weeks ago. These rumours are not new. They have been going around for many weeks. Will a West Coast fisheries Bill be introduced during this session and, if so, when?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that my hon. friend has put that question to me. I am very optimistic that I will be able to table a Bill in the very near future. I am having last-minute consultations. If they are fruitful, I will be able to come forward with a policy that I hope the Hon. Member will be able to support. Next week I intend to have consultations with the Government of British Columbia to secure its support. After that, hopefully, the House will give the green light to this new policy.

TIMING OF IMPLEMENTATION

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, if this Bill does come before us, to what degree will its provisions be applicable during this season's venture, or will the provisions of the Bill not apply until sometime in the future, perhaps as long away as a year from now?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is unwise to start unravelling the whole Bill today before Hon. Members. However, I can say this to my hon. friend. My objective is to relieve the pressure caused by the over-capacity of the fleet as quickly as possible. If the negotiations going on at the moment are fruitful, and I have the support of the Hon. Member, I hope that within this calendar year we can resolve a great part of the problem of over-capacity. That is, of course, if I have the co-operation of all the different players.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RETAIL SALES PROJECT

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour, who is responsible for the Canada Post Corporation. Could the Minister inform the House what the situation is with respect to the Corporation's well-known plan to act as a middleman, or should I say promoter, for a company called Consumers Distributing? Does the Canada Post Corporation intend to extend this pilot project to the entire country? If it does, we are going to declare war on the Corporation. If it does not, does it intend to axe this project?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I believe the President of the Canada Post Corporation appeared yesterday before a Parliamentary Committee, where the matter was discussed and where the Corporation promised to submit a full report on this pilot project within the coming weeks.

I am also aware that the Canada Post Corporation intends to issue a press release within the next few days, if not hours, regarding this pilot project.

As for the agreement between the Canada Post Corporation and Consumers Distributing, I have been informed that both parties have agreed to terminate the project on June 29, 1984, in all post offices where the pilot project is being tested.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

STUDENT EXCHANGE PROGRAM

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. I draw to his attention a letter he received from the Programme D'Échange Étudiants du Canada, exchange programs in which all Members of Parliament have been involved at one time or another. We feel they are very worth while. They have been asking for seed money for some considerable time; I understand for a total of about 14 years. Will the Minister reconsider this request because money spent on this type of program is far more beneficial than putting together brochures with pictures of Liberal Members of Parliament and handing them out to their constituents on the South Shore?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has mentioned one of my Department's most important programs, which is aimed at increasing Canadians' knowledge of this country, and its various regions. The Student Exchange Program of Canada has been in existence for many years and has been very successful. We turn down nearly as many requests as we accept, owing to the tremendous popularity of this program. This group, which has received money in past years, will also be receiving offers of financing, depending on the financial resources made available to us by Parliament and on the number of applications we receive. I would therefore urge all young people who wish to participate in the program to file an application, because in doing so they will not only be helping us to help them know their country better, but they will also realize the diversity of Canadian culture and understand how Canada's cultural resources are a part of our Canadian identity.

THE CENSUS

COLLECTION OF DATA ON VISIBLE MINORITIES

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister who is covering for Statistics Canada. Recommendation 24 of the report Equality Now recommends that in the 1986 mini-census, and in the 1991 Census, Statistics Canada should include the requisite additional questions to elicit accurate information regarding visible minorities and that these questions should be accompanied by an appropriate explanation. I am wondering if we could have a response from the Minister to indicate what action is being taken on this particular recommendation contained in the Equality Now report, and if he could indicate what the current status is of the 1986 Census.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. I see that there is no one volunteering to answer the question, so I will take notice of it.

Mr. Speaker: In the circumstances it is difficult to have a supplementary question if the Minister is just taking notice of it. However, if the Hon. Member feels that he has a legitimate supplementary question, I will hear him.

DATA ON RELIGION

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may ask the Minister who is covering for Statistics Canada and is taking notice of my question to find out why the questions related to the religion module are being dropped, or are proposed to be dropped by Statistics Canada, when the recommendations contained in the Equality Now report recommended the recognition of all cultural groups. As well, our own Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the freedom of religion. I do not feel that this kind of action on the part of Statistics Canada can be justified.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to add a religious dimension to my inquiry.

PENITENTIARIES

ESCAPED CONVICT—THREAT TO TRIAL WITNESSES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General who will know that Wayne Boden was convicted partly on the basis of evidence provided by Calgarians. In return for giving evidence, the lives of those Calgarians were threatened. I would like the Minister to give us some indication of what steps his Department took to warn those witnesses that Wayne Boden was loose and what steps, if any, it took to provide them with extra protection while Wayne Boden was loose?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to look into the circumstances of the matter so that I could give the Hon. Member a fuller report. Of course Mr. Boden was released on an escorted temporary absence and it was the intention that he be under surveillance for the entire time that he was out of the prison. As Hon. Members know, unfortunately he escaped from custody and was at large in the Montreal area for a period of 36 hours. However, I will look into the circumstances to see if I can provide the Hon. Member with more details.

In the mean time I know that the Hon. Member will be interested to know, and to tell the concerned citizens of Calgary, that at twelve o'clock today I will be presenting a change in policy to the Correctional Service and to the National Parole Board, to provide greater control in circumstances where escorted temporary absences are granted, or may be granted, to offenders like Mr. Boden.

Mr. Speaker: Could the Hon. Member make his a short supplementary question? There are several other Hon. Members whom I am trying to recognize.

TEMPORARY ABSENCES—POLICY STATEMENT

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister make that statement in the House in a statement on Motions? Will the Minister give us some indication of what the Departmental policy is? Witnesses are frequently threatened, and prisoners do escape. When prisoners escape, what is departmental policy on warning those witnesses, and what is the departmental policy on providing them with some protection?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in the event of escapes it is the policy of the Correctional Service of Canada to warn police departments in areas to which there is reason to believe that the fugitives may go. It is then left to the police departments in those areas to take appropriate steps like those described by the Hon. Member.

INDUSTRY

LOSS OF UNITED STATES MILITARY ORDER TO PORT COLBORNE PLANT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Relations. The Minister will know that a directive has been issued by the American Government which states that, as of May 24, no defence contracts for forgings are to be let to Canadian companies. This ruling affects at least six companies in Canada, including Port Colborne Forgings which is in my riding, and could cause the loss of at least 25 jobs there. I wonder what the Minister has done about that matter.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the question of the participation of Canadian firms is one that has been brought to the attention of the Government, and representations have been made to the Americans on the subject. It was one of those situations in which the general ruling was not aimed at Canada but could affect Canada, and I am very hopeful that the matter will be remedied shortly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES SPACE STATION INITIATIVE—REQUEST FOR CANADIAN SUPPORT

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It is understood that the United States will be seeking support for its $10 billion space station initiative at the upcoming London Economic Summit. Of course, President Reagan has already invited Canada's participation in this project.

Will the Acting Prime Minister confirm that President Reagan has written to the Prime Minister in recent weeks requesting Canada's support at the London Economic Summit for this initiative, and will he indicate the nature of the Prime Minister's response to the President of the United States? Was his answer to the President yes, or no?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be unwise to comment on possible subjects that may be raised or may not be raised at the Summit meeting in London. Such meetings are usually preceded by an extensive discussion among the participants on what subjects should be debated. I assume that my hon. friend knows that it would be better for all of us to wait until the discussion takes place and not get involved in what subjects are to be discussed and what subjects will be accepted or eliminated.

IMMIGRATION

REFUSAL OF VISITORS' VISAS TO APPLICANTS DENIED LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Is the Minister prepared to change the practice of having visitors' visas automatically refused to applicants who have recently applied unsuccessfully for landed immigrant status by substituting the practice of having each application assessed individually on its merits?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to reflect on the suggestion that has been made to us by the Hon. Member.

PENITENTIARIES

ESCORTED TEMPORARY ABSENCES PROGRAM

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that posed by the Hon. Member for Calgary West, and is directed to the Solicitor General. From the Solicitor General's answer, am I to understand that the program for escorted temporary absences, which allows dangerous criminals like murderers and rapists to use their credit cards to buy beer at the local beer parlour during temporary absences, will continue?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, no dangerous offenders are released on escorted temporary absences for re-socialization purposes. They may be excused to go to hospital for an operation, or they may be excused under close escort on a humanitarian basis to attend a funeral or something of that nature. However, relating to the type of socialization absence that was granted in Mr. Boden's case, it was the opinion of the Correctional Service of Canada that Mr. Boden was no longer a dangerous offender. My concern about that was that I felt inadequate attention was paid to the risks to society, which are the concern of the Parole Board in deciding whether or not inmates are to be released. Therefore, one minute early, I am glad to inform the Hon. Member through you, Mr. Speaker, that the new policy will require that the input of the National Parole Board be obtained before offenders can—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has indicated that he will make a statement later. The Chair would like to recognize one or two other Members.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC SALMON STOCK—PREVENTION OF POACHING

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In the 1984 Atlantic Salmon Management Plan the Minister is asking both sports fishermen and commercial fishermen to make great sacrifices for the sake of rebuilding stocks. He is also aware that there is a tremendous enforcement problem with the salmon management program. Under this new program we can expect a rise in black market prices for salmon, which will be a great incentive for over-fishing and poaching. The situation could easily get out of control because the resources are not available for enforcement. What plans, if any, does the Minister have to improve the enforcement program this year? How can he assure the fishermen who abide by the rules of the new program that their sacrifices will not be offset by greater profits for poachers?

• (1200)

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member agrees that the situation is very serious and that the salmon river systems in New Brunswick as well as in Quebec and Nova Scotia are really well below their potential. That is why the salmon management plan which I have decided upon this year is one that is in accord with the Muir Report. That report has recommended draconian measures to save the resource. One of the segments of that plan is the release of over 80,000 kilos of salmon from the Atlantic area to the mainland. That should help.

The Hon. Member has referred to poaching, which is certainly a very serious problem. My opinion, as a Member of Parliament for an area which has salmon rivers, is that poaching is not only the responsibility of the state and the Department; it also is the responsibility of the community. People in those communities know who are the poachers. It is their duty as citizens to help our enforcement people. It is a futile exercise to add hundreds and hundreds of enforcement people. If the money is available, of course I will do that, but I think the best tool is the co-operation of the citizens, and 99 per cent of them are law abiding.

POSSIBLE IMPACT OF UNITED STATES OIL LEASE PROGRAM ON WEST COAST FISHERY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He will know that a note was delivered last week to the State Department in Washington regarding oil leasing lands off the coast of the Alaska Panhandle. I was wondering if the Minister was informed of that note prior to its presentation and, if not, why not. Did he make representations in order that the environmental and fisheries concerns of Canada would be taken into account in the formulation of that note? I would also like a copy of the note presented to the House.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend will have to take my word for it that decisions made by our Government are decisions that involve all Departments and which are supported by all of us. The Hon. Member may rest assured that the policy that was announced is the Government's official policy.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has gone beyond the hour which is normally permitted and has tried to recognize a number of Members with difficult supplementaries. The Hon. Member may ask a short supplementary.

ENVIRONMENTAL HEARINGS IN ALASKA

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I do have a short supplementary. I would like to know whether the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans made representations to the Department of the Interior, when it was holding environmental hearings in February of this year, so as to protect the fish that are spawned in Canada and go through Alaskan waters?

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HNATYSHYN—MOTION TO REFER "NEW CANADIAN AIR POLICY" TO TRANSPORT COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I will be very brief. I would like to refer to the motion which was presented by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) yesterday, which was moved by unanimous consent and, indeed, received the consent of the House. I acknowledge that there was unanimous consent and that the motion was in proper form; there is no difficulty in that respect. The advice I received from our representatives on the committee was that, in their wisdom, they decided that that would be the form in which the motion would be posed.

It was brought to my attention this morning that there is an unusual provision in this particular motion, and I would like to raise it with Your Honour. I think for a variety of reasons it compromises—and it could so compromise if it were a precedent—the activities of parliamentary committees. I refer Your Honour to the provision following paragraph 6 of the motion in which it states:

That the Committee have the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff as may be deemed necessary and after approval by the Clerk of the House of Commons—

Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge that is a novel proposition in terms of the method in which committees are able to have expert or technical assistance provided for the committees. I suggest, Your Honour, that this provision places the Clerk of the House of Commons—a distinguished and eminent person indeed—in a rather invidious position in that the Clerk may be faced with the prospect of having to overrule the recommendations of the committees.

The reason I raise the point at this time is that, having had a chance to consider this matter, I would hope that this would not be considered as a precedent in the future. As well, I would hope that we would give some thought with respect to placing officers of the House of Commons in a position whereby they may indeed be placed in the unfortunate situation of having to approve or disapprove the recommendations of a House of Commons committee. Committees should have a free and unfettered ability to carry on their affairs.

Mr. Speaker: If other Members are not prepared to respond, the Chair would like to make a few brief observations.

First, the Chair has noted the Clause and is giving careful consideration to the implications of it. The Chair may want to make a statement. However, it appears to the Chair that since the Clerk is under the direction of the Speaker of the House, this might be an instrument by which some over-all consistency in terms of rates of remuneration and scales by which people would be engaged by committees will be obtained, and some uniformity of practice in committees which might be in the interests of the House if it were introduced achieved. Certainly it is not the intention of the Chair, through the Clerk, to act in a dictatorial or difficult fashion, but it appears on first reflection that there might be some benefit to all Hon. Members of the House if some reasonable consistency of rates of remuneration and scales for people engaged for committee work might be considered. However, this is merely an observation at this point. The Chair may have more to say later.

MR. FRIESEN—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition forwarded to me by the Peace Petition Caravan Campaign with 41 signatures on it. Among other things, it asks that the Parliament of Canada act to refuse the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and to reject research, production, testing and transport of any nuclear weapons and delivery systems or components in Canada. They ask that Canada be declared a nuclear weapons free zone in accord with similar initiatives by other nations, and become actively involved in working for multilateral de-escalation of the arms race. They further ask that wasteful spending on the arms race be diverted to fund human needs so as to ensure prosperity through peace. Finally, they ask that the above-stated objectives be subject to ratification through a free vote in the Parliament of Canada.

MR. LEWYCKY—RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 265 petitioners from Manitoba, primarily from Dauphin. I would also like to note that there are signatures from Ste. Rose du Lac, Roblin, Sifton and Ashville. They now exercise their right to present a grievance and humbly sheweth that since abortion claims the lives of over 60,000 unborn babies annually in this country and living aborted babies have become a useful by-product for commercial use and medical experimentation, and because the undersigned believe that the unborn is truly a human being, they therefore ask the Government to pass legislation to recognize unborn babies, as well as the living survivors of abortion, to be truly living persons having the same rights as all citizens. In duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 152, 721, 785 and 786.

[Text]

CNR—BOARD OF DIRECTORS—LEGAL SERVICES

Question No. 152—Mr. Crosby:

1. What are the names of the members of the Board of Directors of the Canadian National Railways who reside in or represent Nova Scotia?

2. In the past five years, were (a) solicitors or lawyers from Halifax, Covert retained to represent or to provide legal services to CNR and, if so, what were their names?

3. (a) Was Mr. J.W.E. Mingo, Q.C., retained to represent or to provide legal services to CNR in the past five years (b) is Mr. Mingo a member of the Board of Directors of the (i) Port of Halifax Authority and, if so, who appointed him to that office (ii) CNR subsidiary or affiliate Halterm Limited and, if so, who nominated or recommended him for the appointment (c) is Mr. Mingo a solicitor for Halterm Limited and, if not, does the law firm of Stewart, MacKeen and Covert act as solicitors for Halterm Limited?

4. Does the Government consider that membership in the Port of Halifax Authority, together with a directorship of Halterm Limited, plus a solicitor-client relationship with CNR or its subsidiaries or affiliate companies either directly or through a law firm might result in the holder of those offices, as a solicitor, receiving inside and confidential information which could result in a conflict of interest?

5. Was Mr. Mingo the recipient of confidential and inside information about the Port of Halifax Authority, CNR or its subsidiaries and affiliates and Halterm Limited and their relationship with Dart Container Lines and does the government consider this is a conflict of interest with his duties as Chairman of the Halifax—Dartmouth Port Commission?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways, the Canada Ports Corporation and Transport Canada advise as follows:

1. Professor John Sears is a director of CN and resides in Nova Scotia.

2. (a) Yes. The firms of Cox, Downie; and McInnes, Cooper & Robertson. (b) No.

3. (a) No. (b) (i) Yes. The Minister of Transport. (ii) Mr. J.W.E. Mingo, Q.C., is a director of Halterm Limited, a company of which CN is a minority shareholder; however, he was not nominated by or on behalf of CN. (c) Since CN is a minority shareholder only, this question should more properly be addressed to Halterm Limited.

4. The Government does not consider that the posts held by Mr. Mingo place him in a conflict of interest position.

5. Canadian National, its subsidiaries and affiliates and the Canada Ports Corporation did not provide Mr. Mingo with confidential and inside information about their own affairs. It would be improper for CN, as a minority shareholder, to reply on behalf of Halterm Limited. See also answer to 4.

AGRICULTURE CANADA—LOCATION OF ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICES

Question No. 721—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

With reference to the answer to question No. 48, since February 2, 1984 was any decision made concerning the location to which the administrative offices of the Department of Agriculture, which are currently located in Saskatoon (that is the Prairie Regional Headquarters of the Research Branch, the Finance Directorate of the Finance and Administrative Branch, the Administration Directorate and Personnel) will be moved in Regina, Saskatchewan and, if so, will all or some of those offices be located in (a) Woodbine Place (b) the Derrick Building and, if so, what tendering procedure was followed in the selection of the building or buildings?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): No decision has been made concerning the location of Agriculture Canada administrative offices in Regina, Saskatchewan.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT POLICY BOARD

Question No. 785—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there an Industrial and Regional Development Policy Board and, if so, what (a) are its terms of reference (b) is the (i) name (ii) background or expertise (iii) term of appointment of each member (c) remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses (i) do the members receive (ii) did the members receive to date (d) other funding, if any, is provided by the Government?

2. During the fiscal year 1982-83, did the Board meet and, if so (a) how often (b) how often is it required to meet (c) what matters did it consider (d) what reports and/or recommendations were published?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): As of April 4, 1984, the reply for the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion is as follows:

1. Yes, as publicly announced on January 5, 1984.

(a) The Board will make recommendations to the Government regarding industrial policy objectives and priorities; improvements in the design and implementation of regional policies and programs; improvements in the coherence of regional, industrial and trade policies; and implications of the Government's other economic policies and priorities for regional industrial development. In addition, the Board will advise on the priorities for allocation of the department's resources and the department's agenda for policy research.

(b) As announced on January 5, 1984, Mrs. Shirley Carr, Executive Vice-President and Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian Labour Congress, and Mr. Paul Martin, President, Chief Executive Officer and Director of the CSL Group Inc. will be co-chairing the Board. The appointment of all Board Members and their terms of appointments have not as yet been finalized.

(c) Board Members would receive no remuneration but will be compensated for travel expenses.

(d) Nil.

2. No. However, it is suggested that a meeting could be held every two months.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CANADA'S SYSTEM OF NATIONAL ACCOUNTS

Question No. 786—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. 2. During the fiscal year 1982-83, did the Committee meet and, if so (a) how often (b) how often is it required to meet (c) what matters did it consider (d) what reports and/or recommendations were published?

Mr. Paul-André Massé (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

1. (a) Terms of Reference. Yes, there is an Advisory Committee on Canada's System of National Accounts. Its terms of reference are to advise and consult Statistics Canada on the concepts, methods, standards and results of the system.

(b) (i) and (ii) Committee Members. The members have been selected for their expertise and not as representatives of particular communities or interest groups. Current membership is as follows:

Chairperson: Dr. Ian Stewart, Senior Advisor in the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development will serve as Chairman for an initial three-year term. Dr. Stewart has extensive experience in federal government economic portfolios and was previously a deputy minister in the Departments of Finance and Energy, Mines and Resources.

The members have received nothing to date.

(d) No other direct funding is provided; however, certain secretariat costs, such as office supplies, stationery, et cetera, are covered by Statistics Canada.

2. As the Committee was formed on March 29, 1984 there was no activity for the fiscal year 1982-83. The Committee will meet twice a year.

COASTAL FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans) moved that Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is to increase the penalties in cases of violations of the Coastal Fisheries Protections Act. At the moment the penalties are very low, particularly for foreign vessels. This amendment is a non-contentious one and would give some incentive to the fleets, particularly the foreign fleets which have fishing allocations in our waters, to abide by the regulations of the Department.

I would even say that the regulations in the Bill as it now stands are stiffer, more so for Canadians than for foreigners. It is a very short Bill to amend the scale of penalties in order to encourage compliance with the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has, of course, explained that Bill C-4, a Bill to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, is a very simple Bill in substance in that it merely increases the penalties now provided for under the Act. However, the Minister must realize that the introduction of a Bill on coastal fisheries raises the whole question of the management of the coastal fisheries, not only in terms of the control of fish stocks and fishing, but in relation to the protection of that fish stock, both from foreign fishing fleets and from those who would fish in our coastal waters without proper licensing and permission.

I would like to review the situation in a more general way because it is of grave importance to the fishing community in the Maritime Provinces, particularly in the Province of Nova Scotia. I might say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that the fisheries critic for the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), is unavoidably absent from the House today. Had he been here, I am sure he would have had some cogent remarks to make, not only with respect to the specific provisions of Bill C-4 but generally with respect to the problems which have occurred in the coastal fishery. It is with his great interest over a long period of time in the Atlantic fisheries in mind that I rise as a Member of Parliament from Nova Scotia to record some of our concerns with respect to the Atlantic fisheries.

Let me deal first, Mr. Speaker, with Bill C-4 itself in the context of the Act which it amends. As we have indicated, we have no great objections to the Bill, and we recognize and realize that it will pass and be of some benefit in protecting the Atlantic fishery. However, we should not divorce this amendment from the whole context of the legislation which is involved. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I would raise for consideration—not so much with respect to this particular Bill but other legislation brought before the House—the whole problem of subordinate legislation. The Bill raises penalties from a level of $25,000, which is the current level, to $100,000 and in the case of some other of the offences which may be committed under the Act or the regulations, from $5,000 to $25,000. That is, the new minimum penalty will be $25,000.

One of my points, Mr. Speaker, is that the Bill provides for an offence under the regulations and a fine by way of penalty for such an offence. Those of us who are interested in legislative and regulatory reform have taken the position that all serious provisions, particularly penal provisions, should appear in the statute itself, that is, the Act passed by Parliament.

Subordinate legislation may be essential in some situations, but it is very difficult to face penalties which relate to provisions made in subordinate legislation, that is, legislation which is not brought before the Parliament of Canada but simply passed by the Privy Council which, of course, is the Cabinet. That is what Bill C-4 does, Mr. Speaker, among other things. It provides for an offence against the regulations.

In that context, it is important to look at the provision of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act which provides for the making of regulations. Section 4 of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act allows the Governor in Council to make regulations authorizing the issuance of licences and permits to foreign fishing vessels. It provides for regulations which relate to suspension and cancellation of those licences and permits, and it allows for authority to be given to enforce the provisions of the Act and for keeping goods and other equipment seized under the Act.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, what we are providing for here is that a person may be brought before the courts in Canada charged with an offence against a regulation and fined as much as $25,000. That offence is created by the Cabinet, by the Privy Council, and it never appears before Parliament. That kind of legislative provision may be justifiable in this situation, but it is not one which a person interested in the reform of the legislative process would condone.

However, Mr. Speaker, we are dealing here with a Bill, the paramount purpose of which is to protect a public resource, the Canadian coastal fishery. The persons who would take advantage of and attack that resource are, for the most part, non-Canadians. So I suppose it makes very little sense for me to stand here and defend the civil rights of non-Canadians who might be robbing a Canadian public resource, and I do not want to do that. However, I do want to point out that this is not the kind of legislation which is regarded by proper standards as good legislation.

Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, it is in the public interest to increase the penalties for offences related to the protection of the coastal fishery. We have had a recent example in the Province of New Brunswick where fishermen from the State of Maine, who apparently make a habit of fishing in Canadian coastal waters without permission, find that the value of the fish they catch during those invasions of Canadian waters is much greater than any fine which could be imposed against them. It is a situation where crime does pay. A fisherman, particularly one from an area near Canadian coastal waters like the State of Maine, can simply fish illegally in Canadian waters, sell the catch and, if apprehended, pay the fine out of the proceeds. To the extent this amendment corrects that situation it is most certainly desirable.

Of course, I hasten to point out that the fines here are maximum fines. That is to say, the court has the discretion to determine the amount of the fine and in the exercise of that discretion it may impose a much lower fine. That point should probably have a little more consideration by this House; that is, whether there should be minimum fines imposed under the Act. As it stands now, while the fine which can be imposed for fishing illegally in Canadian waters can reach $100,000, there is nothing to prevent a court of law from imposing a fine of $500 or $1,000. If the fisherman has caught a ton of halibut, he would not have any trouble paying a fine like that, to say the least.

Once again, as in all legislative matters, you have to create a balance of what is fair and reasonable in the circumstances, bearing in mind that we want to have good relations with other nations. I am not in a position to make a judgment as to whether this particular amendment concerning the maximum amount of a fine, bearing in mind it does not provide for a minimum, is the best solution. I can only say, as we must say with other legislation at times, let us pass it and see whether it resolves the problem. If it does not, then it may be necessary to seek other solutions. The invasion of Canadian coastal waters by foreign fishermen is a real problem and has been for a long time. If we serve notice to those who invade Canadian waters to fish that there are serious penalties, then that will be an effective deterrent and will stop the problem.

I would like to make a few remarks of a general nature with respect to the coastal fishery, bearing in mind that we have no quarrel with the Bill itself. There have been a fairly substantial number of cases arise under this Act. Over a period of three years, as I understand it, there has been something in the area of $250,000 in fines imposed and almost the same amount in forfeitures under the provisions of the Act. While it is not an immense item, it is certainly substantial. As a matter of interest, many of these cases have occurred on both coasts involving fishing off Newfoundland and Nova Scotia as well as off British Columbia.

With respect to the general problem of management and control of the Atlantic fishery, it might be worth while to review very briefly the developments which have occurred. Foreign fishing off the East Coast of Canada presented no real problem in the mid-1950s. At that time only Canadians, residents of the United States and a few western European countries utilized the Atlantic fish stock. However, there was a literal invasion on both coasts of foreign fishermen, particularly the Japanese and Russians, subsequent to this point. With their modern fishing equipment and processing facilities, they utilized an immense amount of the fish stock on both coasts. It almost destroyed the Atlantic fishery. I am led to believe it was very difficult for the Pacific coast fishery as well. That led to pressure which resulted in the imposition of the 200-mile commercial zone which then marked a new era for the Canadian fishery because that gave very substantial protection to the Canadian fish stock on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. It gave us the ability to create a proper system for management of that stock. However, Mr. Speaker, in the years that have gone by since the establishment of the 200-mile limit in the late 1970s, we continue to have grave difficulties in the Atlantic fishery.

According to statistics I have, the Atlantic fishery accounts for 14 per cent of the labour force in Newfoundland and a little over 7 per cent in Nova Scotia. It is a very substantial industry which none of the Maritime Provinces, particularly Nova Scotia, can afford to lose. Therefore, when we talk about fisheries protection on the Atlantic coast, we should have the same concerns as we do when we talk about protection of our central Canadian manufacturing industries. They are well protected by tariff and trade barriers and are allowed to be economically successful in Canada because of that protection. We do not have that kind of protection in the fishing industry so we really have to have this physical protection; that is to say, we have to be assured that there will be no unauthorized fishing in our coastal waters.

Let me review very briefly, Mr. Speaker, some of the problems which exist with respect to the management and utilization of the Atlantic fishery. Of course, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) knows very well that we have in the last year witnessed an attempt to restructure the Atlantic fishery and all the problems that went with that. There are two main problems in the Atlantic fishery: the determination and management of the fish stock; and the capacity we have to catch the fish at the appropriate time and process them.

One of the great difficulties I have, as do many, many people in Nova Scotia, some of whom are experts in the matter, is that there just does not seem to be enough valid information with respect to the kind and quality of the fish stock. This leads to great quarrelling. The Minister and his Department will impose restrictions upon fishermen with respect to the areas in which they can fish and the amount of fish they can catch. This is presumably in order to protect the stock, but it leaves those fishermen in a situation in which they cannot succeed economically. That is to say, they cannot catch enough fish at the right time of the year to get the benefit of a quick sale in the market. At the same time, the fishermen will tell you that there are abundant stocks and there is no need to restrict the areas in which they can fish or the species or quantities that they can catch. This bothers me, Mr. Speaker, because a non-expert is certainly in no position to make a judgment.

After the almost 10 years during which we have had the control and management of the 200-mile coastal zone, we still do not really know whether there is a sufficient supply of fish to support larger quotas, or any of those facts. The Minister and his predecessors have said many times that there are too many fishermen chasing too few fish. Many people in the fishing industry quarrel with that. They are out on the sea hauling in their nets full of fish. They reach the quota which they are allowed for that vessel for a certain period of time and they cannot fish any more. The fish are there but they cannot catch them.

As fishermen will tell you, the fish do not wait around. They are not like western cattle; they do not stay in the pen until you come out next week to catch them. They go swimming off to other places, hide behind rocks, and that sort of thing. The fish which you may have caught this week when you had filled your quota may not be there next week when you go out and start on a new quota.

There is a lot of silliness in the fishing industry. Hon. Members from Ottawa may laugh, but fishermen have had to forgo taking in a net full of fish because they had filled their quota. They let those fish go and the fish swim off, or, more likely, die in the water because of the oxidization or whatever it is that takes place when they come up from the depths.

Mr. Waddell: It sounds fishy to me.

Mr. Crosby: I would like to take this opportunity to ask the Minister of Fisheries to take the steps which are necessary to review once again what the Department is doing with respect to the biological aspect of the operation in determining what the quantity and quality of the fish stocks are in the Atlantic fishery. I would like him to provide information in a readable form so that fishermen can have access to this information and decide whether the information on which the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is basing its judgment is reliable and accords with their own experience.

Fishermen have told me that they could not get a permit to fish in a particular zone because there were not sufficient fish there to support the permits which had already been issued. They have told me that they passed through those zones many times and the fish were there in abundance. The fishermen who had permits to fish in those zones took their catches, returned to port, and the fish were still there. That is what I mean. They are not going to stay there waiting to be caught by Canadian fishermen who have permits issued by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. They do not know anything about the permits. That can be a lost resource. I think a lot more can be done in that area, Mr. Speaker.

With regard to protection of the coastal fishery, we see some ridiculous situations. I keep looking at my colleague from Red Deer in the Province of Alberta. If they ever managed the red meat industry in Canada the way the fisheries industry is managed by the federal Government, the whole industry would be down the drain. Everything would be put into a hamburger machine. You would not get top quality steak. There would be no such thing as sirloin. They would take all the cattle and turn them into McDonald's hamburgers. That is really what they are doing in the fishing industry today. There is talk of quality but there is nothing done. The fish are out there. They are caught today. They are let go. No one knows what is going on.

When our colleague in the other place, Mr. Kirby, was just a lowly citizen like the rest of us, he restructured the Atlantic fishery. However, paper will not restructure the Atlantic fishery. You cannot just write tomes of material; you must deal directly with the people involved, and those are the fishermen, the inshore fishermen and the independent fishermen as well as the large companies. You just cannot go to the large companies and say that the Government and the large fishing companies will take over the Atlantic fishery. That is not going to work; you must manage the industry in its totality. You must do it with a great deal of knowledge, common sense and judgment. You cannot just mash it all together and turn the fish into fishsticks for McDonald's. It is not that kind of industry.

There is quality in fish just as there is quality in western beef. No one knows better how to distinguish the qualities in the red meat industry than the western Canadian farmers. That is one of the problems. If the Department of Fisheries and Oceans would give the fishermen the facts, equipment and facilities to educate them in the way the western farmers and the cattle producers have educated themselves in their industry, the problem would be resolved. In the Atlantic fishery we want useful bureaucratic assistance. We want information, direct aid, equipment and facilities.

I could give you 100 examples, Mr. Speaker, of how the Department of Fisheries operates, but I will just give you two. As I say, western cattlemen would not put up with this kind of nonsense. The Department builds wharves in small craft harbours to accommodate local fishermen. They do not build these with a couple of carpenters and a few pieces of timber. You cannot build a wharf on the Atlantic coast in half a day. With the force of tides and so on, any wharf must be a very substantial structure. A new wharf for Indian Harbour or Peggy's Cove involves a $.5 million expenditure or even more. The small craft harbours branch of the Department of Fisheries builds these wharves. We call the Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) the queen of small craft harbours. There is more money spent on small craft harbours in the federal constituency of South West Nova than there has been on fences for beef cattle in western Canada. A good wharf in a harbour means everything to a fishing community. Those wharves are expensive. The Department of Fisheries builds a $1 million wharf, but does not put a light on it. Someone else must put the light on it. Some fishermen must make a deal with the Nova Scotia Power Corporation to put a light on that wharf and pay the monthly charge in order for that wharf to be used during dark hours. Anyone who lives in Nova Scotia will tell you that from about October to early May there are a lot of dark hours. I do not want to give anything away that would adversely affect the tourist industry, but there is not all that much daylight. If there is a $1 million wharf with no light on it, one cannot make very good use of that investment. However, that is our Department of Fisheries and Oceans; it is what you call pennywise and pound foolish. For the sake of $10 a month it makes a $1 million facility unusable for about 18 hours a day.

I can give another example of the nonsense in the fishing industry.

Mr. Evans: Please do not.

Mr. Crosby: The Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) is enjoying this. He will not believe this but he has to lay the blame with his Government. Let me tell him about the swordfishing industry.

Mr. Evans: I am just wondering what it has to do with the Bill.

Mr. Crosby: Sambro in the federal constituency of Halifax West is a beautiful place. People think of Peggy's Cove, but there are many coves and inlets on the coast of St. Margaret's Bay that may not be the equal of Peggy's Cove, but are very close to it. I am talking about places like Herring Cove and Sambro. They are beautiful. You can take wonderful pictures and show them to your friends. However, that is the tourist industry. I am talking about the fishing industry.

Sambro is a fishing community right on the Atlantic Ocean near the great Port of Halifax. Most of the fishermen were swordfishermen who had approximately 90 per cent of this one-time multimillion dollar swordfishing industry right in the village of Sambro. However, what happened was that someone, probably from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, obtained a piece of swordfish and decided there was mercury in swordfish. People asked what mercury was and did not know whether the fish was supposed to contain mercury.

To make a long story short, swordfishing was banned. The Government said that swordfish would not be allowed to be consumed in Canada. That was the end of the business for the swordfishermen. However, they hung in there because it was possible to sell the same swordfish that was not allowed into Canada to the United States. We all know that Americans are different and can eat a lot of mercury without getting sick while Canadians are weak and have to be careful!

Residents of the United States continued to utilize the swordfish. Although Canadians were the ones with the ability to catch the swordfish, the Americans wanted to buy the fish only from American fishermen. They would not buy Canadian fish when Canadians would not eat it, they would catch their own fish. Consequently Canadian fishermen caught the fish, sold it to the Americans who then brought it into the United States. The Government did not want that to happen so it passed a law saying that American fishermen had to catch the swordfish and could not bring the fish into Canada if they went to a Canadian port. This is what the Americans were doing. They simply sailed their boats to the Canadian ports to buy the swordfish and brought it back to the United States. In effect, they were running a transportation business instead of a fishing business. The Government stopped that procedure.

This problem has been solved and we can now catch and consume swordfish. However, the market has been destroyed in the meantime and people have forgotten about eating swordfish. Furthermore, they have the belief that something is wrong with swordfish. The industry is not flourishing as it once did. One only has to look at the swordfishing industry if one does not believe there is a connection between what happens on the coast in terms of the fishing industry and marketing of fish products and government policy that is administered by government officials.

Let me just add one sour note to that discussion. Some Nova Scotia fishermen who continued to try and survive in the swordfishing industry after being confronted with these regulations were in the position of violating American regulations that were similar to our Coastal Fisheries Protection Act. They were ultimately fined thousands of dollars and threatened with jail terms in the United States. That is the kind of crime we are talking about in this area. It was a crime to sell swordfish to another person. Who would have thought that people would go to jail in a western democracy for selling swordfish to another person by simply putting it on the market for consumption quite legally? That is an example of the sort of difficulties we experience in the fishing industry.

If there is any doubt that this legislation has a very practical application, members need only recall the tuna war on the West Coast. The argument concerned the pursuit of tuna. Tuna migrate from Japan right across the Pacific Rim. At some point Canadians had the idea that the fish that swam by was theirs and did not belong to the person who had chased it for 2,000 miles. This ultimately led to a fish war and to a downturn in the tuna industry.

St. Margaret's Bay in the federal constituency of Halifax West, which I am proud to represent in the Parliament of Canada, has something that westerners would not believe. There is a corral in the middle of that Bay in which there are tuna. Tuna are caught and put into that submarine corral as babies. When they are mature and healthy they are taken to the Halifax International Airport, loaded on a plane and shipped to Tokyo within 48 hours, where that tuna fish sell for $10 or $121 or more an ounce. That is an aspect of the fishing industry that people do not even realize. Those who think that the Atlantic fishery merely consists of people who jump into boats, throw out a net and return to port just do not understand the industry.

The future of the Atlantic fishery lies in quality production and international marketing. When it is possible to get up to $20 an ounce in Tokyo for a fish that was raised in St. Margaret's Bay, Nova Scotia, it makes for a rather interesting industry. In light of that, one might ask why not raise 2,000 tuna fish rather than 200? The answer is that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans will not permit it. The tuna may swim by but they cannot be taken.

Mr. Waddell: They want some for next year.

Mr. Crosby: That is a reasonable point. They want some to swim by next year. However, the fishermen are saying that they may or may not swim by next year. The Department of Fisheries and Oceans does not know the answer to that question and that is what annoys those fishermen. The Department tells the fishermen that they cannot catch any more than the allowable limit for this year in the interest of conservation and of ensuring that there will be some fish in the following year. The fishermen do not see tuna for another ten years, at which time they come back in abundance.

My point is that we need more information about these matters. The Department should not limit the tuna catch if it does not know what the results of that limitation will be, particularly if it means that that resource will be lost to the industry.

There are other problems affecting the coastal fishery. I have already spoken in Parliament about the Georges Bank problem. What will happen if the Government loses the Georges Bank case? It will not talk about it because it believes that it will not lose the case. I say again that the federal Government is gambling with Nova Scotia's chips in the International Court at The Hague. If it does not win that case it better have an alternative plan because there will be a problem when Government Members meet those fishermen on the south shore of Nova Scotia who are deprived of their ability to fish off Georges Bank.

Let me conclude my remarks about this area on a positive note. I know that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), agrees with me that our economic hope for the future lies in international trade. It is said that a $1 billion increase in international trade creates 17,000 jobs in Canada. If we could return to the share of international trade that we had in the mid-1970s, we could eliminate unemployment in Canada. The fishery is very much a part of this international trade because it is an exported product in its finished state.

I want to make one suggestion about this to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I suggest that free trade zones would be one method to provide greater access to international trade for the fishery. That is to say, areas where fishermen from all nations could come and process fish, which would really become a Canadian product with Canadian labour being utilized and then exported. This is a real possibility.

The Minister must know that the future of the fishing industry, the Atlantic fishery in particular, is dependent on the development of international markets and that development is dependent upon co-operation with foreign nations that are interested in the fishing industry. It will not be helped by taking foreigners off their boats and fining them in Canadian courts. That may be necessary to protect the industry and the fish stock, but co-operation is also required.

In conclusion, my advice to the Minister is to meet with officials of other nations that are interested in the fishery and ensure that we participate to a greater extent in international trade with respect to fish products. In that way we will not only benefit from the restructuring of the Atlantic fishery, but we will remove what must be the worst social problem this nation has faced in its history. I am speaking of the unemployment problem we face today, the 1.5 million Canadians who are officially unemployed along with the many more who have stopped looking for work, those who are employed part-time and those who have jobs below their qualifications.

We are not trying to save the fish, Mr. Speaker. We are trying to help Canadians. We will only do that if we use the fish stock to create a better economic condition for Canadians. Specifically that means employment for Canadians. The fishing resource can do that. All the industry needs is proper help, direction and assistance from the Government of Canada.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I do not purport to be an expert on fish. Some people might say I am the exact opposite. However, I would point out that my riding is one of the few landlocked ridings in the lower mainland of British Columbia, the only one that does not face on the ocean. We do have a lake, Trout Lake. You can sort of throw a stone across it and I hope this weekend to do some fishing there. However, I do have many fishermen in my riding, including the President of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union, Mr. Jack Nichol, who is a strong advocate for the fishermen's cause, and Bill Jarvie, a fisherman in my riding who comes to Ottawa many times.

The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) who just spoke used the old slogan about too many fishermen chasing too few fish. It is a bit of a cliché. It comes out of the West Coast Pearse Commission. A lot of fishermen on the West Coast would dispute that. I do not think the Hon. Member adopted it. If you look at that expression of too many fishermen chasing too few fish, you could apply some of the Prime Minister's Jesuit logic and say what you have to do is either one of two things. One is to decrease the number of fishermen which, of course, is what the Government would propose to do; or you could increase the number of fish.

That is why we support this Bill. It has one element, only a small element, to help increase the number of fish. The Bill, as I understand it, proposes to revise the penalties for the violation of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act. It will make it an offence to violate the regulations made under the Act and it will increase the penalties. This really applies to foreign countries that fish in our waters. I believe there are 15 of them which have fishing treaties with Canada. I understand that when foreign fishing fleets did violate the Act, the fines were too small to make much of a dent in their fishing practices. Perhaps boats could be seized in addition to the levying of fines. Perhaps there is an element of international law and particular difficulties of which I am not aware that would preclude doing that, or there may be other statutes that would allow it.

I shall speak only briefly on the Bill because I think the Bill should go through today. The Bill does increase the fines, and that is good. But perhaps the Department should also look at increasing enforcement. I used to be a Crown attorney. I know you can increase fines. Fines are some element of a deterrent but you have to catch the violators before you can fine them. It seems to me there has to be some particular enforcement provision.

I found a problem in the Minister's Vancouver office. People have visited me in my Vancouver office and told me there is a problem with staffing. The problem revolves around the large amount of contracting out which is done for some reason or another, and that disturbs some of the employees. It is more expensive in the long run to contract out. You can end up using personnel agencies and you have to pay them 20 per cent of the fee. Perhaps the Minister could take a look at that. Maybe he could save some money and have the staff feeling better if they were employed on permanent contracts rather than on the basis of contracting out. I am not familiar with all the internal workings of his Department; he is probably much more familiar with that than I am, but I wanted to tell the Minister, who is here in the House, that that matter came to my attention.

With respect to increasing the number of fish, we have to do more in that area. We have to talk about enhancement, in particular salmon enhancement on the West Coast. We have to talk about protecting the environment from competing uses. We have to talk about enforcing our fishing treaties and so on. This Bill deals with that matter.

I want to point out to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) and to the House that the environment critic for the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), has raised with the Minister the launching of an inquiry into the dumping of tailings into a northern British Columbia fjord by Amax of Canada Ltd. That is a measure which could be looked at to protect the environment.

I also draw to the Minister's attention the Kemano II project which Alcan proposes in British Columbia, the problem that will raise concerning the threat to salmon and the threat of diverting rivers in British Columbia.

There is another matter I draw to the Minister's attention which has been raised in this House a number of times by the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller), our fisheries critic. On February 3, 1984, he raised various matters with the Minister, including funding for habitat protection, increasing enforcement and for salmonid enhancement. He asked the Minister to make a real commitment to this renewable resource which can provide jobs forever and ever if looked after properly. Those were the words of our fishery critic.

In British Columbia we always face the problem of competing uses—forestry affecting the fish, oil and gas affecting the fish, and so on. This is something with which we have to come to terms. I hope the Minister will be an advocate of the fishery against these alternate uses when they are in conflict.

I want to conclude by reading a telegram which I think sums things up very well. It was sent by a Mr. Erik Larsen, the Mayor of the beautiful coastal community of Ucluelet on the West Coast of British Columbia. This is what we in the NDP feel our fisheries policy should be. The telegram was sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and reads:

> I have today sent telegrams to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans requesting them to review present and proposed policies regarding the fishing industry, with the industry and communities affected. Privatization of a resource, halting of the Salmonid Enhancement Program, mandatory instead of voluntary buy-back program, lack of control over depredation of the resource by other countries, and a proposed harvesting in terminal fisheries only spell economic disaster to Ucluelet and many coastal communities dependent on the fishing industry. Widespread unemployment and social upheaval will result. We urge you to take all steps possible to see that there is more consideration given these facts before new policies are allowed.

I close by saying the Minister should take that message to heart. This Bill is a beginning. We support it.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties. It has been agreed that after speakers from all three Parties we proceed to put the Bill into Committee of the Whole and then through third reading stage as well. Would it be possible at this time, Mr. Speaker, for you not to see the clock, to proceed to Committee of the Whole and finish the Bill before we break for the luncheon adjournment?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): This will require unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) is rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, that is quite acceptable to us if it is amendable to you. We would be prepared to give unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): First, we will require unanimous consent to amend the motion of the Minister that the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry and instead referred to the Committee of the Whole. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Second, we will require unanimous consent not to see the clock. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Mr. De Bané, seconded by Mr. Pepin, moved that Bill C-4, an Act to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, be now read a second time and, with unanimous consent, be referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE MAXIMUM AMOUNT OF ADVANCE

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations) moved, for the Minister of Transport, that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to read these notes on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) and to be associated once again with the advancement of the interests of farmers in Western Canada.

[English]

The Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act was introduced in 1957 as a way to provide—

Mr. Mazankowski: Under a Diefenbaker administration.

Mr. Pepin: Yes, under a Diefenbaker regime. I cannot do anything about dates.

The Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act was introduced in 1957 as a way to provide grain producers with much needed cash in the form of interest-free advances on Canadian Wheat Board initial payments when quota delivery opportunities are restricted and grain must be stored on the farm. During the first few months of each crop year, there is a large amount of grain ready for delivery to country elevators. Due to market conditions and particularly the need to ensure an orderly flow of grain throughout the year, the Wheat Board must restrict delivery opportunities at that time. Since cash requirements during harvesting are relatively high, producers have been provided by the advance payments program with a means of maintaining cash flow without having to resort to taking bank loans at commercial rates.

The program is very much a productive investment, as it gives producers confidence to continue production at satisfactory levels despite short-term negative markets and delivery considerations. This confidence, in turn, has positive implications for long-term export targets, price stability, the cost of other federal grain support programs, and for the prairie economy as a whole.

The amount of the advance is calculated on the basis of per acre quota rates and per tonne payment rates. The rates are set by the Governor in Council at the beginning of each crop year. There is also a maximum limit for any advance, currently set at $15,000 for an individual; $30,000 for a multi-farmer unit—corporation, partnership or co-operative—involving two participants; and $45,000 for a multi-farmer unit involving three or more participants. This procedure ensures that the advance is of a size capable of being retired by the end of the crop year, through deductions from producer receipts at delivery. The word "advance" is made clear. But it is not supposed to be a long-term payment. It is a short-term payment because the recovery must be within the same year. Thus the objective of providing short-term cash requirements is met.

Why are we here today? We are here because we would like to make three amendments to the Act.

Mr. Forrestall: That is a good reason.

Mr. Pepin: That is the obvious reason. If we were not to make changes, we would not be here. We would simply be implementing the law as it exists.

In order to be successful, programs such as this must evolve to meet the changing circumstances and the changing needs of those whom it serves. The proposed amendments would ensure the continued success of the advance payments program well into the future.

Since the last amendments to the maximum levels of advance payments in 1975—and that was due under a Liberal regime—there has been a clear trend to larger farm operations. I have three separate statistics to demonstrate that. One is the number of permit book holders. That number has dropped from 155,693 in 1975-76 to 143,588 in 1982-83. That is a decrease of 7.8 per cent.

Mr. Mazankowski: What is your source?

Mr. Pepin: I do not have a footnote, but I will find out.

The total acreage has risen from 108,043,460 acres in 1975-76 to 110,547,588 acres in 1982-83. That is an increase of 2.3 per cent. The average size of farms, in acres, has risen significantly. The average size in 1975-76 was 694 acres. The average size in 1982-83 was 770 acres. That represents an increase of 10.9 per cent. These are figures which my hon. friend from Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) will remember. They were mentioned, at least in conceptual form, in the debate on the western transportation system.

The average size of farm operations has increased and, therefore, larger producers are subject to correspondingly higher cash requirements and financial risk. If they have bigger operations, they obviously require more cash and their risk is higher. Therefore, the Government is proposing that the limits on payments be doubled to $30,000 for individual producers, from $15,000; to $60,000 for multi-farmer units with two participants; and to $90,000 for multi-farmer units with three or more participants. In addition, the maximum advance for drying damp or tough grain would be raised from $1,500 to $3,000, and the maximum advance for unthreshed grain would be raised from $7,500 to $15,000. That is in addition to the figures I have already indicated. That is the first change.

The second amendment is that since the Government recognizes that further adjustments to the maximum advance payment would be necessary from time to time—life being what it is—it is also proposing that future adjustments be made a part of an Appropriation Act of Parliament. In this way the Act would become more quickly responsive to the changing needs of producers, while at the same time Parliament would maintain control and scrutiny over adjustments. That is the second change.

The third change is that a further provision of Bill C-23 is the revocation of Subsection 7(3.2) of the Act, which excluded spouses from participation in the program. It was first introduced as a safeguard in the administration of the program. Considering the fact that more and more farm businesses are run these days by both husband and wife playing a direct and active role in the operations, the continued inclusion of this provision is frankly discriminatory. The Canadian Wheat Board no longer considers spousal participation an administrative difficulty.

Those are the three amendments that the Bill introduces. Virtually all major western grain producer organizations have urged such increases in the maximum limits on advance payments; therefore, they should be well received. Early passage of the Bill would permit the Wheat Board to implement the revised program on the specified effective date, which is August 1, the start of the new crop year.

Those are the three amendments. I am quite sure that my hon. friends on the other side of the House as well as Members on this side will be pleased with the amendments. If Hon. Members want to insist on passing the Bill through the three steps today, I think that would be welcomed by the rest of the population.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, first I must say that it is a pleasure to speak on behalf of our spokesman for the Canadian Wheat Board who is unavoidably out of Ottawa on this Friday. Had the Bill come into the House yesterday, he would have been here and he would have been prepared to take his responsibility seriously on this very important matter.

I do not intend to speak too long because I know my hon. colleague from Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) would like to speak on this Bill as he comes from a very large grain growing area in western Canada. Certainly he has had much to do with the well-being of the western grain producers, especially in relation to the so-called Crow debate.

I should tell the Hon. Minister of Transport—

Mr. Pepin: "Ex".

Mr. Towers: —that he does have a lot of friends in western Canada. Pardon me, he is no longer the Minister of Transport; he is Acting Prime Minister today, filling in for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy). However, if he had remained in that portfolio until the debate was completed, having finished as well as he started, we would have had a lot more happy farmers in western Canada than we have today. The farmers did not really realize exactly what the consequences would be of the Crow debate, and I would like to refer to some comments made by the agriculture critic of our Party.

The Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) said on May 3, 1984, and I quote:

> Western grain producers will have to pay an extra $25 million in freight costs which should be borne by the federal government, . . . This amount represents the cost of shipping higher volumes of grain than forecast from August 1, 1983 to December 31, 1983. However, as the new Crow legislation did not come into effect Until January 1st, 1984, the shipper should only have to pay additional costs for grain shipped during the last seven months of the current crop year. Instead, producers are paying for the bigger-than-expected volumes shipped before the new rate took effect—costs which should be borne by the federal government.
> The $25 million is part of the CTC calculation of the new rate for the upcoming 1984-1985 crop year, which includes the establishment of an interim adjustment based on the apportionment of costs between the producers and the federal government. For a year in which actual volume shipments exceed the forecast tonnage on which the rate calculation is based, the shippers pay less than they should. The CTC calculates the underpayment and adds it to the shippers' share for the next crop year.
> For 1983-1984, tonnage shipped is estimated to be 34.55 million tonnes, considerably greater than forecast. As a result, the CTC has calculated the underpayment to be $60.1 million, and has added this amount to the producers' share in determining the rate for 1984-1985. The new rate means that producers will pay 33 per cent more to ship their grain in the next crop year (from $5.76 to $7.70/tonne), while railway investment is decreasing by 25 per cent.
> The government should own up to its responsibility and not charge producers for additional costs incurred for the five months prior to the new rates coming into effect by ordering a $25 million reduction in the 1984-1985 freight rate to be paid by producers.

That statement is very relevant, Mr. Speaker, and consideration should be given to it by the Government. As I said, it would have been much better if the Acting Minister had retained his portfolio as Minister of Transport, had been able to initiate his former position on the Crown legislation, and if that $650 million which went into the railway's pocket had been put into the hands of the western producers, as was suggested by the Hon. Member for Vegreville. Unfortunately, that was not to be because we had to beef up the CPR so it would have room for the latest director to be appointed, who is now running for the leadership of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Who is that? What is his name?

Mr. Towers: I am asked who it is, and with your approval, Mr. Speaker, it is the Hon. John Turner who used to sit in this House of Commons.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And he is on the board of directors of the CPR? That is shameful!

Mr. Towers: I would like to bring to the attention of the House that however graciously the Acting Prime Minister has presented this Bill today on behalf of the Minister of Transport, all this Bill is doing is keeping up with the inflation factor from the year 1975, when, as he said, the Diefenbaker Government initiated this proposal. Of course, at that time you will remember, Sir, that grain stocks had built up somewhat and this was supposedly a quick cure for the situation which had developed at that time. However, we must realize that the present Bill just barely keeps up with inflation and does nothing for increased costs and the low selling price for grain. It certainly does nothing to lower the input costs, the cost factor which is associated with grain production. There is nothing whatsoever in this Bill for that. As the Minister said, it just puts short-term money into the hands of the producer. Everyone must understand that it is really not a gift to the producer at all. It is just a consequence of the build-up of grain so that there can be an orderly supply of grain for market for the 12-month period. It is certainly not a gift to the western producers at all.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), asked a question in the House on April 16, 1984. He requested the Government at that time to give consideration to making this an encompassing program which would cover the grain producers in Ontario and Quebec as well, and include corn and other grains which are grown for sale in Ontario and Quebec.

We intend to let this Bill pass today because we want its provisions in place by August 1. Grain prices went down considerably a year ago. Statistics Canada figures showed that a year ago number one wheat dropped about 12 cents a bushel, oats dropped about 23 cents a bushel and barley dropped about 39 cents a bushel. When you add to that loss, Mr. Speaker, the loss in the initial price which is going to be paid after August 1 of this year of another 7 per cent to 10 per cent, you can understand what is happening in the grain industry. You do not have to be a mathematician to figure that out. Grain prices are going down, yet costs are escalating.

We in our Party are of the opinion that there are many ways in which the Government could assist in the production of food. It is, after all, a vital industry. It makes such a tremendous contribution to our balance of payments, tradewise, on the world market. Perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had forgotten that fact when on December 13, 1968 he stated: "Why should I sell the Canadian farmers' wheat? You grew it; you sell it".

Mr. Pepin: You have the Canadian Wheat Board to do it.

Mr. Towers: He apparently did not understand the benefit which accrued to our Canadian economy by the production and sale of western grain. It has to be within the $8 billion bracket, Mr. Speaker, and that is considerable.

In view of that thinking, the western grain producer and agriculture generally seems to have suffered a lot at the hands of this Government. Taxes placed on farm fuels have escalated costs tremendously. It has been estimated by different farm groups, such as the Palliser Grain Growers, that the tax on diesel fuel and gasoline alone represents about 30 per cent of the actual energy cost in the maintenance of a farm. It works out to about $1 an acre. The taxes consist of the federal sales tax of 2.9 cents a litre on gasoline and diesel fuel, .7 cents for the Canadian ownership tax, and the PGRT amounts to about 4.6 cents a litre. You can understand, Mr. Speaker, why there is a tremendous cost input in the production of food, which the Government could alleviate if it so desired. We think it would be desirable to cut that tax because the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is always complaining in the House of Commons that we have to be careful that we do not export some subsidized agricultural product.

Let me impress upon this House, Mr. Speaker, that just because the Government takes away an input cost, it cannot be construed as a subsidy. It has to have a top loading factor involved. That is where you get into trouble with subsidies for foreign markets. We hope that our side of the House will form the Government after the next election, and we will then be able to implement some of these proposals which we believe are absolutely of fundamental importance if the agricultural community in Canada is going to maintain any stability at all.

In the first three months of this year bankruptcies in the farm community were 42 per cent higher than they were in the first three months of 1983, a tremendous escalation. I know all Members of Parliament are getting calls of desperation from different individuals in the farming community who got caught in a bind. Unfortunately there are a lot of good young farmers in this situation.

Ever since possibly 1945 the economy of Canada has been gradually growing. As it did so, the only mistake anyone could make was to not buy something. Whatever you bought, you could always turn it over and make money on it over the next year or so. Some of our future farmers have been caught in this way, so unless something is done it is just going to create a desperate situation for a lot of those farmers.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will say that we are prepared to pass this Bill as quickly as possible, but my colleague from Vegreville wants to make some comments for the benefit of the Members opposite.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-23 does a couple of fairly important things concerning cash advances on the Prairies. I will start by going over a little bit of history. One of the significant things about this Bill is that it, in the words of the Minister, eliminates discrimination against the farm spouse when it comes to giving a cash advance. I am very pleased to see that and I want to give credit to the person I think really deserves the credit, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). This thing really started back about 1980-81 when a farmer in the Mackenzie riding and another farmer in the Prince Albert riding complained to his Member of Parliament, Stan Hovdebo.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order!

Mr. Nystrom: At that time he wrote a letter to the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Hon. Senator from Assiniboia. That was in January, 1982. He received a reply on March 10 saying that he thought the provision was worth reviewing again and he undertook to re-examine the regulations in this regard when the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act is next opened up for amendment. The good Senator started to take a look at it after the matter was raised by my friend from Prince Albert.

After that he raised the question in the House. He directed questions to the Minister of State for External Relations (Mr. Pepin) who was then in charge of transportation. He shakes his head no. In any event, he raised the question in the House, saying that the Act as written discriminated against farm wives. At that time the cash advance was some $15,000. To explain to those people who might not know what a cash advance is, it means a farmer could get an advance on the grain stored in his bins. The maximum is $15,000. Under the old Act, which we are amending today, if there was a partnership that $15,000 could be doubled to $30,000. If there were three partners, it became $45,000. But that was not the case if your partner was your spouse. In 99 per cent of the cases the spouse, of course, is the wife because it is the man who is registered as the permit book holder. Despite the fact that the wife is a full-time farmer and equally responsible for the work on the farm, when she applied for a cash advance she was turned down. That was discimination against women, it was wrong, we all now think it was wrong, and it is just too bad we took so many years to correct it.

I wanted to give credit to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert for initiating this matter, for raising it in the House and writing to the Minister. He also went to the Human Rights Commission and launched a complaint in his campaign to make sure we had a change in the law. I have a report from Stan Hovdebo, MP for Prince Albert, dated February 1, 1981 concerning the fight against discrimination in this legislation. I also know from personal experience that he discussed this issue with the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. He talked about it with our local action committee in Saskatchewan. So it is a great pleasure for me to say a few words in testimony to the work that Hon. Member has done. Unfortunately he is not here today, he is back in his riding office in Prince Albert, but I had a chance to speak to him very briefly on that earlier this afternoon.

The other important point about the Bill before us today is the doubling of the cash advance from $15,000 to $30,000. Farmers have been calling for this, as we have on this side of the House, for several weeks. I am pleased it is in the Bill and it will be of some use to the prairie farmers.

I want to make the point that the solution to the problems being faced by ordinary farmers on the Prairies is not only advancing them more credit. We have to find a more lasting solution which will provide them with the means to stay on the farm and continue farming. I am very fearful that if we continue this kind of drift we will get larger and larger farms and eventually the day will come when we have just a few large corporate farms covering several townships of land. The small towns and communities will practically disappear and we will be like the State of Colorado which has very few farms, all basically run by large corporations, and the farm workers are paid a minimum wage, not unionized and exploited right down the line. With this, of course, comes the destruction of the fabric of rural life which we have known in this country ever since it was opened up in western Canada back around the turn of the century and even before.

I would like to suggest at this time, Mr. Speaker, that we do something immediately to stimulate the farm economy. We need an immediate injection of cash into the hands of farmers. I would like to suggest to the Minister and his officials that we should persuade the Cabinet to eliminate the federal gas tax on farm fuel. There are three or four different kinds of gas tax on farm fuel. There is the sales tax, the well-head charge, the Canadian ownership charge and so on. These taxes amount to around 30 cents for every gallon a farmer buys to plant his crops, cultivate his land and harvest the crops in the fall.

I believe we should be eliminating those federal fuel taxes. That would cost the federal treasury a couple of hundred million dollars. In effect, we would be giving the small and average farmer in the country an immediate stimulation of hundreds of dollars. In many cases it would be $1,000 or $2,000. This would go a long way toward keeping farmers on the land. Farmers are running a Canadian-owned business. This money would be kept right here at home. Farmers are great spenders. They will spend this money. They will buy more farm machinery which will help places like Brantford, Ontario. They will make more repairs and fix up their buildings. This will stimulate the economy right across the board. I cannot think of a better way of stimulating the economy and trying to make a dent in the unemployment rate in urban Canada than by stimulating the farm economy.

I come from Yorkton-Melville and if one eliminates the native population, according to the latest census data my riding has the lowest per capita income in Saskatchewan. Perhaps that is why the gas tax is more important to me than it is to most Members of the House. We have more small, marginal and average farmer than any other riding in Saskatchewan. In the Yorkton area there are still a lot of farmers on a half section, three-quarters or section of land who are having an extremely difficult time making ends meet. Many farmers are massively into debt and just cannot afford the high interest rates and high energy costs we are experiencing. A saving of an extra thousand dollars on farm fuel would help immensely to keep them on the land. I appeal to Members of the House not only to pass the legislation before us, but to do something substantial and significant for the ordinary farmers of the land.

Farm bankruptcies in my area have doubled in the last year or so. I believe the same is true in other areas as well. I do not know what is going to happen to some of those people. I have met with several farmers who have just lost their land or are in the process of losing their land. Some of these people are forty or fifty years old and have no other particular skill or trade that they can exercise. Some of them are younger, of course, but they do not have any technical skill or university training. They go into cities and look for jobs. Some of them are unemployed and some are on welfare. It creates a tremendous personal hardship and a tremendous social problem for society as a whole.

We give hundreds of millions of dollars to the oil companies each year in this Parliament through PIP grants, write-offs and all kinds of grants to the friends of the Liberal Party. Instead of doing that, why do we not give some money to the ordinary citizen of the country? Why do we not start priming the pump at the bottom with the ordinary farmer who will spend that money? He will stay on the land, stimulate the economy and create more jobs in Toronto and the rest of the country. That is a very important thing which we can and must do immediately.

I think we should pass the amendment to the Western Grain Stabilization Act as quickly as possible so that payments can be made immediately to western farmers. That should have been done months ago. There is no excuse for that to be left until the fall. If that Act had been passed, a lot more farmers would be in better condition today than those in the constituency of Yorkton-Melville. Those are some of the immediate things we can do, Mr. Speaker.

One more thing we should be doing with regard to the survival of farmers is to give them more long-term security and guarantees about the prices they will receive for their commodities. The time has come in this country for parity pricing for farm products. I have a Private Member's Bill in the House which I would like to have passed as soon as possible. It would provide parity pricing for farm products. In other words, it would guarantee farmers a price for their livestock and grains. Other Canadians often have this type of thing. Members of Parliament have a guaranteed salary. Unionized workers sign contracts. Lawyers and doctors have very powerful associations which work for them. The business community has powerful associations and lobbyists. They have guaranteed prices for their products and work. I make an appeal to the House for parity pricing for farm products so that farmers will have guaranteed prices for the commodities that they produce. That would keep a lot more people on the farms and we would have healthier rural communities.

We certainly support Bill C-23 which is before the House today. I am particularly interested in the part which ends discrimination against farm wives. Mr. Speaker, this is not the only way in which farm wives are discriminated against. Farm wives have had to endure a lot of discriminatory practices in past years. Farm wives do not have pensions and many of the other benefits which urban wives sometimes take for granted. I hope this will be only a beginning toward equality between the sexes on the farm.

I recommend quick passage of this Bill, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to see the end to discrimination and I am pleased to see the amount of cash advance go up. However, after this Bill is passed, let us do something really meaningful to help the farmers stay on the land, such as ending federal gas taxes on farm fuels.

Advance Payments

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate on the amendment to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. While I want to speak in absolute support of the Bill, it does afford one the opportunity to speak about the very serious problems which are affecting the agricultural sector, and particularly the grain sector, in western Canada.

At the outset I would like to say that it is a pleasure to see the former Minister of Transport in his place taking up the issues which affect the prairie grain industry and western Canadian farmers. I would like to echo the words of my colleague from Red Deer (Mr. Towers) who alluded to the fact that the former Minister of Transport did make a lot of friends in western Canada, not only in his former capacity as Minister of Trade and Commerce some years ago, but also throughout the course of his initiatives in grappling with the Western Grain Transportation Act. There is one thing that is almost universal as far as western farmers are concerned. That is that they always felt that they had the ear of the Minister and could trust him and that he was very frank and forthright. I think that is an excellent tribute to the Minister. We are very pleased that he is still involved, albeit sometimes on the periphery, but he is still here showing an active interest.

I would also like to acknowledge the fact which has been referred to earlier that this piece of legislation originated with a Conservative administration under the leadership of the former great Prime Minister, the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker. It is an excellent piece of legislation which has served the test of time and has been upgraded and updated from time to time. That is essentially what we are doing here today.

It is very interesting, Mr. Speaker, that this vehicle, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, is generally used when there is trouble or the imminence of trouble in the prairie farm economy. Since the year 1957, when this Act was first implemented, there has been some $2.3 billion advanced to the prairie farmers. One could wonder what would have happened if that mechanism had not been available. In going through the statistics that have been provided in the last annual Canadian Wheat Board Report, it is interesting to note the years in which it was used very heavily, the years of difficulty. For example, in the crop year 1968-69, almost $152 million was advanced. In the year 1969-70, almost $273 million was advanced. There was then about a ten-year period when the advances were less than $100 million. In 1978 it went up again to $150 million. In the last two crop years, 1981-82 and 1982-83, advance payments were up approximately $334 million and $309 million respectively. One can almost look at that statistical data and identify the years of difficulty in the prairie grain economy.

I believe the only criticism we can make about this piece of legislation is the fact that it has taken so long to come forward. Our Party has been advocating amendments to this Bill for quite some time. As a matter of fact, on June 23, 1982 our spokesman for the Canadian Wheat Board wrote a letter to the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board in the other place, requesting that he give serious consideration to the kind of amendments that we have before us right now. It is interesting to note that he stated at that time, speaking on behalf of the Conservative Party, that we would support that kind of initiative and also grant speedy passage.

The Senator from the other place responded on July 5, 1982, and said:

> I can affirm that I am in general agreement with suggestions that the ceiling on cash advances be increased, and that the matter is receiving active consideration.

Some active consideration! It is almost two years later and now the Bill is before the House. He went on to say:

> You have presented sound arguments in support of such an adjustment and there are also other practical considerations that will be brought to bear in arriving at a decision on the matter.

It has taken too long. We have been continually raising this issue on the floor of the House of Commons. The Hon. Member from Drumheller has been pushing for this. It is the subject matter of a Private Member's Bill, Bill C-218. Literally every day when we talk about the plight of the agricultural industry, particularly the western agricultural industry, we have been raising this issue.

Our Party came out with a ten-point agricultural program a year ago. Among other things, we called for the doubling of the cash advances. We recognized the difficulties in the agricultural sector throughout Canada. Our first point was to advocate some interest rate relief for farmers who were caught in that period of high interest rates and were unable to bail themselves out or arrange their affairs in such a way as to take advantage of the reduction in interest rates. We were asking for at least $100 million to provide some relief and amelioration from the impact of high interest rates.

We called for the establishment of an agri-bond. We called for Farm Finance Review Boards. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is correct in pointing out that literally every day there are farmers going bankrupt. Every weekend when we go home, we are faced with the prospect of a visit from farmers who are caught in a bind. There was a postponement of any action by the banks but now they are moving in and the crunch is coming. It has been very difficult. In many respects they have no one to turn to, so we were suggesting the establishment of a Farm Finance Review Board which would act as a negotiator or referee to help them out of their difficulties.

We talked about the reduction of fuel taxes. Again, we see a clear example of the hypocrisy of the NDP who talk out of both sides of their mouth. They were the great supporters of the Liberal National Energy Program and of the pricing arrangements. They bought it hook, line and sinker. Now they are saying that it is not very good for farmers. We have always advocated the removal of at least the sales tax on farm fuels. We also said a year ago that the initial grain prices should remain the same. We said that the Western Grain Stabilization Act should be modified so that it could trigger an immediate pay-out. At that time I believe there was between $750 million and $800 million available.

We called for a national income stabilization program for the red meat industry. We also asked for revisions to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act through which Revenue Canada again was taking advantage of its clout and intimidating acts to hurt those farmers who found that they had to gain employment outside of their farm operations in order to sustain their operations.

We also called for the dual labelling of farm chemicals and fertilizers because that is still a very sore point with the average farmer.

Our criticism is that the Government, as has been alluded to by both previous speakers, has not considered agriculture to be in the forefront as it deserves. While we talk about getting this country rolling again, we sometimes fail to take cognizance of an industry that is very important. Agriculture in Canada is a $19 billion annual megaproject. Statistics shows that approximately 55 per cent of that agricultural activity is generated in western Canada. In terms of exports, we export $10 billion worth of agricultural products. Since it is so dependent on exports, the agricultural industry is very vulnerable. It is very vulnerable to inside and outside forces. It must be competitive. Therefore, transportation breakdowns, markets, prices and quotas all have a major effect. There must be some provision to ensure that there is continual stability. That is the purpose of this Bill.

If we consider the agri-food industry in total, it accounts for approximately 18 per cent of the total labour force, albeit that maybe 4 per cent or 5 per cent represents actively engaged farmers. Furthermore, there are tremendous spin-offs. Again, the Member for Yorkton-Melville alluded to the fact that farmers spend approximately $2 billion a year on farm machinery and the purchase of parts. They spend about $1.3 billion on the purchase of energy and approximately $1.1 billion or $1.2 billion for fertilizer. These are big dollar items which cause tremendous reverberations throughout the economy.

It has been said that for every dollar generated in agriculture, another $4 is generated throughout the economy. This is a very important sector that is experiencing serious difficulty right now, notwithstanding the fact that it stood up very well during the recession. While the rest of the economy is recovering, agriculture is now feeling the full brunt. There was some postponement of debts and some debt consolidation, but the chickens are coming home to roost. Farmers need some consideration and help right now. That is why bankruptcies and other difficulties are occurring. I would say that there are at least two dozen farmers in my immediate area who are on the verge of going bankrupt. Not only young or inexperienced people are going bankrupt, it is occurring across the board. These people are caught in the squeeze of low commodity prices, high fuel prices, high fertilizer prices and high interest rates. It has been disastrous for them. Their net incomes have dropped by 30 per cent since 1978.

We know that with respect to grain it is necessary to be competitive in order to penetrate those markets. Our wheat prices today are at the level which was in place in 1973. The price of wheat has been reduced again this year. The initial price is $160 per tonne whereas it was $222 three years ago. The $160 per tonne translates to $4.35 per bushel.

It is suggested that the reduction in initial prices will result in some $250 million less in the western agricultural economy. As I said previously, the reality of the reduction in prices coupled with the huge input costs, such as interest, fertilizer and fuel, the price of which has doubled in four years, makes it so important for the Government to take cognizance of the fact that there should be some relief for the producers of food in this country. That is why we have advocated, at least as a minimum, the reduction of the 9 per cent sales tax on farm fuel. This would give farmers a little bit of hope and optimism. It would recognize that somebody is really considering their future and looking after their best interests. In The Financial Post for April 28, 1984, a headline reads, "The great farmland sell off underlines desperate plight of Western farmers". Even people in the financial community recognize the problem. Let me quote the following from the article which appeared in The Financial Post:

The classified pages of Canadian farm newspapers testify to a growing desperation in the Prairie countryside this spring.

Here is another example from this article:

After 25 years farming, Freeman finds himself sitting on a $400,000 mound of debt. Interest payments alone ate up 40 per cent of his $200,000 revenue last year, he says.

"If my creditors are willing to take write-offs of 50 cents on a dollar, then I can stay in business," says the 47 year old father of four. Otherwise he'll join the ranks of those forced from farming—a group agricultural officials say is no longer the exclusive preserve of bad managers.

I think that sums it up. Coupled with that we have this uncertainty in the additional impact of freight rates. I do not think there is any question about it. With all respect to the former Minister of Transport, I think the farmers have been taken to the cleaners on this western grain transportation Bill. Farmers have been sold a bill of goods. Freight rates are now rising much faster than projected. They were projected to rise by 58 per cent at the beginning of this crop year. That is certainly a lot more than was originally anticipated. The average is $7.70 a tonne. That is what the new rate is going to be. In some areas, however, that figure is $11, $12 and $13 a tonne, which has a tremendous impact. We know the safety net is not going to have any significant effect. We know the volume cap is really hurting here because of the increased sales. The farmer is picking up the full rate on anything over 31.5 million tonnes, and that is driving the rate up.

My good friend and colleague from Red Deer, when he quoted our agricultural critic, pointed out that the Government has a responsibility. The Government is asking the farmer to pay the full shot for the one year. Farmers should be paying only seven-twelfths, because the new regime did not go into effect until January. That is coupled with the aspect of the railways reneging on their investment, which was $16.5 billion, and is now $12.5 billion. Three hundred and seventy-five thousand jobs were to have been created but it is more like 155,000 jobs. What do we have now? I just received the Manitoba Co-operator. I see from it that there is another CTC hearing where the two national railways are seeking revisions to the cost of capital formula. If the railways get their way, it will add another $100 million to the freight bill.

I remember that when we were dealing with this Bill it was originally anticipated that there would be a 20.5 per cent return on capital investment. That was adjusted to 18 per cent. It seems that the railways are still not happy with that, so they have gone to the CTC. They want more. If they get their way, as this article points out, it will mean an additional $3 a tonne for freight rates, which will result in an additional $700 for the farmer. Coupled with all the difficulty we have, that is what is causing further apprehension and anxiety in the minds of the producers. They have no confidence in this group across the way, Mr. Speaker, because of the heavy influence of the railways on the activities and decision-making process of the Liberal Party.

We have Mr. Turner who is the leading leadership contender, still an active member of the board of directors of CPR. He is working very closely with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy). As a matter of fact, the Minister of Transport is his policy adviser and western chairman. I note from this paper that Mr. Argue is a staunch supporter of Mr. Turner. I notice the former Minister is a staunch supporter of Mr. Turner, and of course there is Mr. Jack Horner. They are all in this game together. Then you have Mr. Ian Sinclair, the former Chairman of the CPR. He has been appointed to the Senate as a Liberal. We have Mr. Horner, a former chairman of the CNR, administering and managing the Grain Transportation Agency. This does not give producers much confidence, Mr. Speaker. That is why they are so pessimistic about the future. This whole thing is balanced too heavily in favour of the railroads. This will have to change.

The producers of this country are in serious trouble. When you have a situation where other countries are increasing their support to the farmers while we are reducing our support, we are in trouble.

I just picked up The Citizen. In an article in it it says that the new government in Argentina is going all out. The new government in Argentina is cutting taxes on fertilizer and herbicides and is reducing transportation costs to rebuild the agricultural industry.

Mr. Pepin: Would you like their inflation?

Mr. Mazankowski: While other countries are providing more support for their producers, Canada is reneging on its commitments and reducing its support. We will regret that some day. I call upon this Minister and this Government not only to move this Bill ahead but to bring on the stabilization Bill and other measures which will help alleviate the difficulties that farmers face today.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties. I think that if you seek unanimous consent, you will find agreement that we should move Bill C-23 into Committee of the Whole and finish all stages of the Bill this afternoon before we move on to Bill C-5.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We can certainly move on to Committee of the Whole, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposal put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans). Is it agreed?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We will move to Committee of the Whole stage by stage.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Pepin, for Mr. Axworthy, seconded by Mr. Gray, moves: that Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent referred to a Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Accordingly the Bill stands referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent. The House went into committee thereon, Mr. Corbin in the chair.

[Translation]

The Chairman: The House is in Committee of the Whole to consider Bill C-23, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—Maximum

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to delay passage of this Bill. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council is quite right in saying we would like to pass this Bill through all stages today. But I want to take the opportunity at this time in Committee of the Whole on the first clause of the Bill to make a few observations. Then I want to put a question to the Minister for External Relations who is sitting in for the Minister of Transport.

First I want to associate myself with the remarks that have been made this afternoon by my colleagues and good friends from Red Deer and Vegreville—

Mr. Nystrom: And Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Indeed, Yorkton-Melville. I am going to deal with that in just a moment. But I simply want to say that the opportunity to discuss matters relating to agriculture in Canada, particularly respecting western agriculture are few and far between in this Parliament. That is why I feel moved now to address a few remarks and to associate myself with some of the thrusts put forward by my colleagues from Red Deer and Vegreville. I want to remind the Government that this Bill gives us the opportunity to reflect upon the very serious lack of policy which this Government has had and continues to have with respect to Western Canada.

I listened to my colleague from Vegreville who, in the administration of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead was Minister of Transport. I know from personal experience the outstanding contribution which the Hon. Member made at that time. I recall the sensitivity he showed to the hopes and aspirations of western Canadians. I think of the approach that was taken in terms of the administration of the Right Hon. Mr. Diefenbaker, a western Prime Minister. The Conservative Party has had a tradition of dealing with matters relating to western agricultural problems. They are keen and sensitive to those issues. As pointed out by the Minister in introducing this Bill today, it was Mr. Diefenbaker who introduced the concept of advances on farm-stored grain. His Government brought forward the legislation which we are now amending.

I say with all the sincerity that I have in my body and person that, after the next federal election, it is my hope that we in this country will again have a federal Government that shows sensitivity, that understands the problems of western farmers, and that will include such people as my colleagues from Vegreville and Red Deer. They will be able to speak on behalf of western farmers. They have an idea of what is going on there, not like the paucity of initiatives and policies that we get from this Government.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville speak in this debate. It reminded me of something that brings to light the changes in western Canada, particularly in the Province of Saskatchewan, which is the most significant and important grain-growing province in this country. My father ran in the federal riding of Yorkton on three occasions, and was not successful. He put up a good fight on behalf of the Conservative Party. At that time the constituency of Yorkton was represented by a Member of the CCF, Mr. G. H. Castelden.

We talk about the disappearance of the family farm in western Canada, Saskatchewan in particular. At the time my father was running on the federal political scene, there were 21 Members of Parliament in the House of Commons from Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan had more Members of Parliament than the Province of Alberta or the Province of British Columbia. At that time Saskatchewan had a higher population, in particular rural population. The family farm was the fabric of the province.

By virtue of the current legislation, we now have 14 seats. If there was a free-fall, Saskatchewan would only have 12 seats. Because of the legislation, we keep at least 14 seats. We can see the deterioration in terms of population, particularly rural population.

We have to look at what is happening in the agricultural sector. A very important economic sector is suffering greatly at this time. There are pressures of increased cost, increased interest rates and a static price for what they receive for their product. After imprecations and imploring by Members of this Party with respect to amending this Bill, we now have a Bill which, while welcome, merely increases the amount of money available for advances which can be made with respect to farm-stored grain. This is to be repaid by the farmers. It is a serious problem.

The Conservative Party has taken its responsibilities in Opposition and has forced the Government as best it can to bring forward legislation which will be of assistance to the western grain producer. It was by dint of our insistence and constant harassment of the Government that it is now coming forward with amendments to the western grain stabilization Bill.

When that Bill was first introduced in the House, we indicated some of the serious flaws and defects in it. We said the Bill was deficient inasmuch as it was not sensitive to what was happening in western Canada regarding western grain stabilization. Under that legislation, there would not be a substantial payment for a long time. This was because of the way in which the formula had been set out. We have now forced the Government to come forward with this legislation. It is committed to bringing it forward on Friday next. We are prepared to give that matter expeditious consideration, notwithstanding the very serious deficiencies and defects in it.

Let us look at the legislation now before us and some of the circumstances. My colleague from Vegreville referred to some of the problems faced by western grain producers at the present time, the prospect of bankruptcy for many producers and the other pressures they face. At this time when there are economic pressures on our farmers, including those in western Canada, freight rates will be increased by 33 per cent.

My colleague pointed out that a principal co-conspirator with respect to the Crowsnest Pass legislation, which was forced through this House by closure against the wishes of the western producer, was the Canadian Pacific Railway. The board of directors co-operated with this Government. They were the handmaiden in getting that legislation through. It is interesting to note that John Turner, now seeking leadership of the liberal Party was instrumental, as a member of the board of directors of CPR, in helping to write that legislation which is regarded with such distaste by every western producer. We now see the transformation taking place.

The Liberal Party is sending out siren calls to the western farmer and western Canadians generally about what it intends to do. The most interesting piece of hypocrisy that I have observed is the fact that the Minister of Transport is now supporting Mr. Turner and acting as his policy adviser in the leadership campaign.

Mr. Pepin: Relevance to the Bill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The relevance is that we talk about pressure on the farmers with respect to the cost of carrying on farm operations. We had a Bill foisted on us by this Government and on which closure was imposed. It involved a substantial increase in the cost of transportation for the farmer. It put pressure on western grain producers. What does the Minister of Transport advise Mr. Turner with respect to his statement on the Crowsnest Pass legislation? All of a sudden he advises him that the cap of 31 million tonnes is too low. Mr. Turner now says he will give serious consideration to increasing that level. Now he is making another promise at the behest of the Minister of Transport. Now he is going to give consideration to having a different safety net.

Mr. Mazankowski: He refused to entertain any changes.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: My colleague is right. We pressed on a number of occasions for precisely those changes in the legislation. They were rejected time after time. That is hypocrisy. The people of western Canada understand this kind of shenanigan. The western grain producers understand what is happening. They are not going to be taken in for one moment, Mr. Turner or no Mr. Turner.

While we appreciate that the Government has taken this initiative at long last, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vegreville, pointed out that in our ten-point agricultural policy, which was released on April 5, 1983, we urged the Government to double the advance payments. In his Private Member's Bill C-218, the Hon. Member for Bow River urged the repeal of the provision in this Bill which was discrimination against farm women. That Private Member's Bill contained the very provision that was not supported by the Government at that time but was the forerunner of the provision in this Bill which urges the repeal of subsection 7(3.2).

I would simply like to ask a question of the Minister whose Bill is before the House today for passage. In view of the fact that the Government has taken this particular initiative with respect to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, and I am sure the Minister has had notice of my question because the Hon. Member for Elgin raised this matter yesterday, I wonder if the Minister could tell us whether or not the Government is considering increasing the level of advances with respect to the Advance Payments For Crops Act, which covers grain which falls outside of the Wheat Board's authority and which covers other crops as well. Perhaps the Minister would have that information for me, or perhaps he will be able to get it for me.

Notice was given of our Party's interest in making sure that farmers outside of the Wheat Board's authority are also treated with some equity.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I apologize for not having the answer. It is because I was not given the notice. Perhaps my friend will pose a question on Monday or some other time and I will elucidate the answer to his question.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On Clause 2—

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, Clause 2 deals with paragraph 7.1(4) of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. This is the part which deals with payments in respect of tough grain. I have very little knowledge, Sir, of western agricultural affairs but I know that the Deputy Prime Minister, who used the term "tough grain" in his initial presentation today, has a great deal of such knowledge. I wonder if I might be permitted to ask him what tough grain is.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, I do indeed have a lot of experience. During the speech of my hon. friend from Vegreville, reference was made to these difficult grain years, with the year 1968-69 being one of those dandies. We had a lot of damp grain at that time as well as tough grain. Dealing with the relationship between tough and damp, I know when something is tough and damp and I know when something is damned tough. However, I would not be able to elucidate that on the floor of the House this afternoon. I will send a learned essay on the subject to my friend.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 3 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 3 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 4 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 4 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the Bill carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

RADIATION EMITTING DEVICES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Pierre De Bané (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-5, an act to amend the Radiation Emitting Devices Act, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, the mandate and powers vested in the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Bégin) cover all matters that relate to promoting and safeguarding the health of the Canadian people and lie within the jurisdiction of this Parliament.

Today, we are exposed to various forms of radiation emitted by an increasing number of industrial and consumer products. Information is released daily to the general public on the dangers of ionizing and non-ionizing radiation. However, many people do not fully realize that as far as exposure to ionizing radiation is concerned, the greatest danger stem from X-rays. Medical use of X-rays accounts for over 90 per cent of total exposure due to artificial sources.

On the other hand, X-rays form an essential part of modern medical practice. It is believed that half of all vital decisions concerning the health of patients are based on radiological procedures.

We must protect ourselves against ionizing and non-ionizing radiation because exposure to these types of radiation may have harmful effects which are apparent not only in exposed individuals but also in their descendants. In 1972, the federal Government introduced the Radiation Emitting Devices Act, thereby taking responsibility for regulating the safety of radiation emitting devices imported and sold in Canada. Since that time, the Department directed by my hon. colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has developed and implemented regulations for various types of devices, including TV sets, dental X-ray equipment, microwave ovens, X-ray devices for baggage inspection, equipment for ultrasound therapy, X-ray equipment for diagnostic purposes and X-ray equipment for therapeutic use.

After considerable experience in developing and implementing these regulations, the limitations of the legislation became clear. The present amendments are aimed at consolidating the legislation. They will make it possible to add to the Radiation Emitting Devices Act some important changes I shall mention later on.

[English]

First, there is the extension of the scope of the Act to cover all electro-magnetic and acoustic frequencies. This, for example, would permit the establishment of a standard for radio frequency heaters. Many of these devices have been found to emit radiation at levels well in excess of currently accepted international standards. Extending the scope of the Act to include all acoustic frequencies would permit an assessment of the health effects of high levels of infrasound which come from air conditioning, heating and ventilating systems, compressors and large diesel engines. The biological effects which have been attributed to infrasound include hearing loss, involuntary eye movements, nausea, slowed reactions and fatigue.

Second, there is the extension of control of devices for which standards have not been prescribed and which are defective or create a risk of injury to the health of the user. Under the present Act, new types of radiation-emitting devices for which standards have not been prescribed can be sold even though these devices may be hazardous or ineffective. For example, new applications for the use of lasers are being discovered. However, in view of advancing technology in this area, the establishment of adequate safeguards in the form of standards could require an appreciable period of time.

The third point is the extension of the control of devices for which standards are applicable at the time of sale, importation or lease. Under the existing Act, radiation emitting devices manufactured outside of Canada, prior to the establishment of prescribed standards, can continue to be imported and sold indefinitely, even though these devices are potentially hazardous to Canadian users. For example, the dental X-ray equipment, which was manufactured more than ten years ago and considered to be substandard, may continue to be sold or leased under the present Act unless it is amended.

The fourth point is the prohibition of false or misleading representations with respect to the design, construction, performance and safety of radiation emitting devices. The present Act contains no restrictions on false or misleading claims made by manufacturers or distributors.

Finally, there would be a provision for notification of devices which create a risk of injury to health, or do not meet the prescribed requirements. This provision will require a manufacturer or importer to notify the Minister of any device which, after sale or lease, the manufacturer or importer finds to be injurious to health, or fails to perform according to the indicated performance characteristics.

My dear colleagues can readily see that these amendments to the Radiation Emitting Devices Act are essential for the regulatory control of radiation emitting devices that are potentially hazardous to the Canadian user and are not now subject to the provisions of the present legislation. Parliament passed a Bill early in the 1970s to control radiation, but after 12 years of experience we have discovered that there are circumstances which that law does not cover and which should be under legislation. Therefore, this Bill is to ask for the support of the House to cover those other matters in order that the Department of National Health and Welfare will be able to protect the health of the Canadian people. In view of that, I would invite my colleagues to give speedy passage to this Bill.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the first place we should start on radiation emitting devices is right here in this House. I have never been in any one room where so many people are forced to wear glasses. I am sure it is indirectly having a negative effect on our health, and that it is caused by electronic products.

I am concerned with the broadness of this Bill. As the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is aware, the Bill was originally drafted on September 12, 1979, by a Consrevative Minister. It is a little bit shocking that the Government has taken so long to upgrade this Bill, because each day there are new devices being developed and there are new problems resulting from the new devices. I agree that the Bill requires speedy passage. But there are problems and weaknesses in the Bill which were not in the original amendment submitted by the Conservative Minister in 1979.

First, the Bill should be restricted to radiation emitting devices. It should not, through the back door, be covering other noise levels, which are provincial territory. I am worried that the Bill will include such things as chain-saws. If a chain-saw is muffled to too great an extent, it does not have the same effect. That problem can be solved by wearing ear mufflers. I hope that the Minister is not intending to include such things as chain-saws, jackhammers, diesel engines and scrapers. That is not the intent of the Bill.

Originally, the Act was passed principally to cover X-ray equipment. It has now gone beyond that. As the Minister mentioned, it now includes lasers and video screens. There is a lot of doubt and a lot of misunderstanding concerning video screens. There are so many new technological changes in the workplace resulting from electronic devices that I agree the Bill must be broad enough to protect people from the hazards of the new devices of which we are not aware. However, I would be very annoyed if the Bill were designed in such a way as to protect, through the back door, against certain industrial noises which come under provincial jurisdiction.

I think the Bill will be given speedy reading, but it is our request that it be sent to committee and that it be examined carefully, clause by clause. It is a very serious Bill and it is particularly serious in this age of new technology. I would suggest that the Bill should only apply to new devices which are developed in the future arising out of new technology. It should not apply to the basic tools of construction and of other industries as that could have a negative effect on those industries at a time when we cannot afford to stop people from working.

Hopefully, with time things will improve. As the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) pointed out, if the Bill is passed, it could have an effect on air conditioning and heating. I would like to point out to the Minister that perhaps we should deal, under this Bill, with some of the window air conditioners in the House of Commons. People cannot work when those air conditioning units are operating. However, I do not think that that is the intent of this Act. It was certainly not the original intent. The intent is to protect people. Cases have been made regarding video terminals. People have argued that they have had a negative effect on pregnancy. There has been no proof of that, but I think we must investigate what are the effects on people.

Personally, I use a computer. I find that it is very tiring on my eyes to use that computer for more than 45 minutes to one hour at a time. There must be some hidden effect of which we are not aware and which we must address. I also feel that there must be an effect on children and that they must be suffering from watching television. Perhaps that should be looked at. Specifically, we should only be looking at electronic devices. Those devices should be monitored and vetted. I agree that they should be labelled and totally checked by analysts, as provided for in the Bill. That is what the Bill should address. It should not address the complaints of some people who are not directly affected. It is the do-gooders who do not like the noise. If we stop the machines, the noise stops but the people will have to stop working, and we cannot afford that today. Therefore, I think it is important that we remove the concept of industrial noise and make this very specifically "noise resulting from new technology in electronics".

There is one other area in the Bill which could be broadened. Possibly stereo systems could be allowed to play only at a certain level. I feel that is an infringement on the rights of the Canadian public. However, I must admit, as an individual, that there are many times when I would be delighted if people were not allowed to turn the noise level of their stereos up so high. I have raised children, so I am very much aware of this problem. I worry about their ears. But I do not believe we can regulate, or should regulate, that noise level.

As I said earlier, we must be careful in this Bill that we do not infringe upon the provincial areas of occupational health, which fall under the Workmen's Compensation Boards in the various provinces across this country, or which fall under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Labour in the various provinces. I believe we have to be careful that we do not put ourselves in the position of going beyond our purpose.

With respect to the importation of radiation emitting devices, I believe the standards of those products are very important. There are many newly industrialized countries, NICs, which are producing these products with possibly lower standards than we require or are used to. We must ensure, when something is brought into Canada that it is not going to be a new danger to the people of this country. Radiation emitting devices are safe if proper safety standards are built in. But let us be very careful, before they are put on the consumer market or allowed to be sold in this country, that they are thoroughly tested so that ten years from now we do not find that we have problems in the health area because we had allowed these units in.

Labelling and packaging is very important. I notice some of the previous regulations call for signs. However, those signs do not really tell me enough. They do not give me the whole story. There must be warnings. For instance, I am not certain about microwave ovens. No one has satisfied me totally that there is not some radiation being emitted from them. I am concerned about children who are at home and have access to microwave ovens while their parents are at work. I am not satisfied that we have looked at all the ramifications with respect to the danger in the use of those units. I would like to have put in place some defence mechanism so that our health costs will not be affected in the future. If we make sure that there will not be illness resulting from these things, it will have a direct and positive effect on our health costs.

I agree with certain regulations in this Bill. I agree there are certain safety checks we must take. However, in this field, where there is a proliferation of new devices produced over the last few years, we must be very careful to have complete analyses done, and a section should be added to define an analyst as a person designated by the Minister as an analyst under the Act. I do not believe that is stated clearly enough. I believe it must be someone with expertise in the field. I do not feel we can generalize and appoint a friend or acquaintance who happens to be adequate. Perhaps we should work this out with the provinces. It could be that they already have these people in their safety associations.

I would like to talk about manufacturers for a moment. Unfortunately, we do not produce a large amount of electronic equipment in this country. It is predominantly imported. We lost that industry because we did not move as quickly as the Japanese. We must make certain of who the manufacturer is, what the regulations are in the country of manufacture, and that the same standards which are acceptable in the country of origin apply. As well, they should meet the same standards as in the United States, which had these standards in place before us.

I have a great deal more to say on this subject but I do want to see this Bill go through second reading today, and I understand there are two more speakers. However, I want to say that we must be careful that we deal directly with radiation emitting devices and do not broaden the Bill beyond its scope. This is a very specific field with which we must deal. We must not get mixed up with other things, because if we do it will water this Bill down.

Having said that, I thank the House for bearing with me in my few remarks and I look forward to having a further discussion on this subject when we get the Bill to committee.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this Bill amending the legislation which controls radiation emitting equipment is one which should be adopted whether in its present form or with any amendments. It is not a new idea. This is a Bill which has been updated from time to time as our legislation tries to catch up with new developments in industry.

I wish to speak about two specific points in the Bill and then add one generalization. The two points are, first, the matter of acoustics and, second, the matter of video screens. I wish to comment generally that the consideration which should be given when approaching this subject should be much wider and deeper.

With respect to acoustics, I am not opposed to having this Bill cover the subject of sound waves and excessive sound. I have worked in industry. I have also been an alderman in a downtown area of a large city. I know that in the modern world, loud noise is becoming a serious problem. I do not believe it was, perhaps, in my parent's or grandparent's time, but in our time it is, and it has to be controlled. The instruments for controlling loud noise are not yet well developed and must be worked on.

I believe this legislation, if properly used, does not have to have the bad results which the previous speaker fears. It could, but it does not have to. What is needed is to develop precise criteria, test equipment and techniques as they are brought into the market. Rather than waiting for 10, 20 or 30 years of complaints, we must make it politically necessary to do something in a hurry. It is the same with video screens, televisions or microwave ovens, which might have bad effects on genetics and on the reproductive prospects of our people. I may be biased in favour of children. I have ten grandchildren. I am concerned when I hear of the long-range and often unpredictable effects of radiation. I would like to see us provide the framework for controlling and, if necessary, restricting devices found to have harmful genetic effects. That is one of the amendments before us today. It does not necessarily automatically ban new equipment. It does suggest that we have to develop precise criteria for the use of new equipment for processes and we have to test them early, not after we have found a whole generation or two generations of genetic defects.

This brings me to a point I am very much concerned with. As I say, having worked in industry and having represented the residents of an extremely busy and intense downtown district for almost nine years, I find that we are always being told that we cannot hinder progress. It would hurt the economy if we stopped these new processes or restricted these new kinds of equipment. Let them go ahead and maybe they will not hurt anyone. Who knows? Let us wait another ten years or 50 years to see whether asbestos is going to hurt anyone. That was the attitude more than a generation ago when asbestos was known by those responsible to be harmful. Let us not apply the "miner's canary" technique to our children. A canary was carried down in the mine by the miner so that if it fell over, the miner knew he should get out of there because there was poison gas in the mine and it would get him soon after the canary. Our children are delicate. Let us not wait until they are harmed before we test and, where necessary, let us restrict and correct the equipment to be used.

That will cost money, Mr. Speaker. Whether it is the federal or provincial Government the ultimate reason given for neglecting these new health hazards is that they do not have enough inspectors or the inspectors do not have enough equipment. Mr. Speaker, if we are going to have and use the wonderful labour saving devices which modern science enables us to create, if we are going to have one person do the work of 100 through these new machines, then we have an opportunity to find useful work for the other 99. A few of them can economically be put to work testing the new substances, the thousands of new and poisonous chemicals in industry, the many new potential radiation hazards we have from new equipment. They can be tested. We can hire the technicians and the inspectors, and we can buy the equipment to do the testing.

I hope this Bill will provide a framework for doing that. It will still be up to governments to decide to spend the money to enforce this legislation in an intelligent way, and I hope that will be done. I hope that whatever discussions there may be in committee, they will not shut off that possibility but will, rather, open it up.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Government will undoubtedly be pleased to hear that I can confirm there is a disposition on this side to deal with this Bill by the appointed time and have it sent on its merry way to the proper committee.

Having read the Bill, I approve in general of the legislation. The principle of the Bill is to widen slightly the definition of radiation emitting devices, not in the way that the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) read it, because we do have difficulties with very broad interpretations. But if the principle is to widen it somewhat to deal with new types of equipment coming on the market, then we will be pleased to see this Bill go into committee for further study.

Reference has been made to radiation associated with products like microwave ovens and televisions. Television has been with us a long while and I believe the amount of radiation emitted from the average colour TV set has been reduced considerably over the last little while. But we still have something to worry about with children who spend a lot of time sitting very close to television sets.

There is a question about the harmful effects that cathode ray tubes from video screens might have, especially on pregnant female operators. I would imagine that this is why we have included in the amendments to this Bill the term "genetic injury", whereas previously we had confined ourselves to death and personal injury. I think there is considerably more research needed into the dangers associated with these types of radiation emitting devices. Certainly it will be difficult to determine the long-run genetic effects of low levels of radiation to which people might be subjected over an extended period of time. We might want to look at transferring some of these radiation emitting devices, not those of the X-ray or gamma-ray type, but those types that emit alpha particles and beta particles presently covered, I believe, under the Atomic Energy Control Act. These are becoming numerous because they are not only used in atomic energy production but are showing up quite frequently in many walks of industrial life. Given that, it might be more appropriate to deal with some types of alpha and beta radiation emitting devices under this Act rather than under the Act by which they are presently covered. I am thinking about bore hole logging devices used in the oil industry and new types of equipment coming on stream for in situ analysis in mines, a kind of instant assay equipment. That might be better dealt with under this legislation.

I just wanted to say that the regulations form an integral part of this Bill. Hopefully, they will be available for study in committee. I have looked at the search and seizure provisions of this Bill and they seem to be quite acceptable. The penalty clause of the present Act might be changed to bring it more into line with this inflationary period, as well as similar Acts of Parliament and statutes of provincial legislatures. In closing, I repeat that in principle we on this side are in favour of this Bill.

REGULATORY REFORM

SUGGESTED CONVENING OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL-TERRITORIAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should, as soon as possible, convene a federal-provincial-territorial conference on regulatory reform to begin the process of simplifying and streamlining the regulatory burden on the Canadian economy.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion is self-explanatory. It calls upon the Government to convene a federal-provincial-territorial conference to deal with the scaling down of the regulatory burden in the country. I think that such an initiative would be timely and very important. We all recognize the fact that our economy is undergoing a very major adjustment in terms of our survival. The reality of the 1980s is that in order for us to survive in the international marketplace we must be competitive. That means that we must establish the kind of environment which would be conducive to allowing the competitive spirit of enterprise, efficiency and innovation to flourish.

I would like to detail what is happening in Canada to some extent vis-à-vis our trading partners and competing countries with respect to the total economic picture. I guess we are really talking about the global picture. The objective is to reduce costs and cut out inefficiency and waste. Over the last 30 years we have built up a very heavy bureaucratic and regulated structure. All statistical data and studies will clearly reveal that this is imposing enormous costs, not only on individual Canadians, but on industry and its ability to compete. There is no question that it is hampering our efforts to be competitive.

A recent study by the European Management Forum ranked Canada eleventh out of 22 countries in terms of our competitive ability. It is interesting that it is in precisely the same position in terms of the regulatory burden. That becomes a very important component in the over-all assessment of the criteria which are taken into consideration.

The European Management Forum is an independent non-profit foundation based in Switzerland. It has been preparing international competitiveness comparisons for five years. Some 284 factors are taken into consideration. I would like to quote briefly from the report. It says:

As far as the statistical side goes, it's not very surprising that Canada has lost ground, as many numbers have been depressed by what was the worst recession of any industrial country.

It then goes on to identify some of the components which are considered. For example, in industrial efficacy, that is productivity, labour costs and profitability, Canada ranked fifteenth out of the 22 countries which were surveyed. In outward orientation, that is foreign trade and investments and attitudes, Canada ranked fourteenth out of the 22 countries surveyed. In innovative forward orientation, that is R and D and adaptability to future requirements, Canada ranked fifteenth out of 22 countries. I believe that all of those components are relative and pertinent to our ability to compete more effectively and to be more flexible and innovative. We do not stack up very well in those areas. A lot of it stems back to the regulatory burden which has been imposed year after year upon industry, both from within and outside of industry and particularly by Government.

Productivity growth is another interesting point to consider. During the period of 1977 to 1982, Canada registered an improvement of .3 per cent. Japan, on the other hand, showed a productivity growth rate of 27.6 per cent; Germany, 14.7 per cent; France, 22.3 per cent and the United States, 3.6 per cent. I cite those, Mr. Speaker, because those are countries with which we compete head to head.

The Economic Council of Canada made a report in 1981. Unfortunately, this report gathers dust. There have been a few initiatives taken, but very little of a constructive nature has emerged. The Economic Council of Canada did a rather detailed and in-depth study and analysis with respect to the amount of regulation in our country. It has estimated that close to 30 per cent of domestic product is subject to direct and significant regulation. Almost every sector that we can think about is regulated in some way, shape or form. The Council concluded that Canadians are over-regulated. The Economic Council of Canada is paid for by the taxpayers. It was set up to advise Government and Parliament on current issues of the day. It said that Canadians are over-regulated, resulting in waste, inefficiency and higher prices. It recommended that the economy be stripped of regulations and that incentives, rather than punishment, be used to respond to social concerns.

It is difficult to assess in accurate terms what the cost of the regulatory burden was. These statistics were taken some years ago so I suspect we could automatically increase them by a certain percentage factor. The Council said that between $35 million and $50 million was spent annually by Bell Canada, a cost which had to be passed on to the consumer as a result of over-regulation. The regulatory burden of Dow Chemical in 1978 amounted to some $20 million. The EEC stated that the licensing process in the trucking industry alone cost some $40 million annually. It also stated that there were indirect costs associated with restrictions and operating inefficiencies. There was a lot of deadheading. That is, a trucker was licensed to haul a load to a certain point but could not bring a load back. That reduces the operating efficiency by 50 per cent.

It has been stated in the study that some $1.5 billion will be spent in the eight-year period of the National Energy Program on supervising and regulating the oil industry. There is a well known statement that prior to the National Energy Program there was one bureaucrat for every three geologists in the oil industry. Now it is just the reverse. There are something like three bureaucrats for every geologist. It is said that just to operate the CTC, the NEP, the CRTC, the Atomic Energy Control Board and FIRA will cost in excess of $100 million.

We have noted something rather interesting during the process of deflation which occurred during the last two or three years. Unregulated prices responded more accurately to the realities in the marketplace than regulated prices. We found that during that period of deflation, the regulatory prices were going up much faster than the unregulated prices.

It is disturbing that the recommendations of the Economic Council have not been transformed into action. The report is only gathering dust. Some initiatives have been taken but there has been little in the way of action.

The Special Committee of the House on Regulatory Reform reported in December of 1980. There has been no significant response from the Government in that connection. The Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments issued its fourth report on regulatory procedures in July, 1980, but there has been no significant response in that connection.

At the same time, the Government is urging Canadians and industry to trim the fat, to be more productive, efficient, innovative, flexible and dynamic. It has been pointing a finger at industry but has not been leading the way or demonstrating by example. It is contradictory because the Government has demonstrated little leadership in terms of scaling down the burden of regulation which it imposes on the industry. I can cite numerous examples of that.

There are the initiatives of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) with respect to the airlines. I believe that that is clearly a step in the right direction, but the fact of the matter is that again a finger is being pointed at the industry to develop a more lean, efficient, productive and innovative industry, while the Government is not moving any distance at all toward untangling the regulatory burden that it has imposed upon the operation of the airport system.

We are fortunate that we now have some clear examples and experiences from other countries about the effects of regulatory reform, scaled down regulations or outright deregulation. We can certainly benefit from those experiences and take into consideration the progress or lack of progress in certain areas. Let us use the United States as an example.

It is stated that in the airline industry, long distance airline fares have decreased by 50 per cent in seven years. Again in the United States, trucking rates are down by 30 per cent in real terms since 1980. When I talked to a transportation expert from the United States one day I was told that the result of deregulating the trucking industry in the United States increased the capacity of the fleet by 50 per cent without adding a new vehicle. That is how badly the regulatory burden strangled the trucking industry. It just increased its available capacity by roughly 50 per cent.

Again in the United States, the cost of buying stock by small investors through discount brokers is 60 per cent of the commissions charged by the old line houses. Ten thousand new trucking operations were started and 14 new airlines were launched since 1978. The U.S. airline industry provided 19 per cent more output, that is in available seat miles, with one per cent more employees in 1982 as compared to 1978. Those are clear examples.

The reality of the 1980s is simply that we must be more competitive, productive and efficient. We must produce a quality product at an attractive price in order to penetrate the international marketplace. As Canadians, we must export to survive because 30 per cent of our Gross National Product is generated through exports.

Why do we need a federal-provincial-territorial conference? It is primarily because the regulatory burden is imposed not simply and only by the federal Government, it is imposed by provincial and municipal governments. There is considerable overlapping and duplication. There is extensive complexity in the regulations that are being imposed. In many cases they are an impediment and a detriment to the activity of a free-flowing enterprise system. Due to our split jurisdictional nature in this country, it is important that we wrestle with this problem on a federal-provincial basis.

During the last ten years in particular there has been a confrontational kind of approach taken by the federal Government, which has meant that there has not been a good relationship between the federal Government and the provinces. Consequently, the co-operative environment has clearly been tarnished very badly. As a result, not only do individual Canadians lose but business enterprises lose as well.

We have been tending to build up barriers and regulations which impede trade and commerce. I recall a study that was conducted by the Ontario Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce wherein it was stated, in an analysis of the burden of regulations and the obstacles and impediments to the free flow of interprovincial trade, that we have more barriers and obstacles in Canada than exist in the European Economic Community. That simply must stop. We must preserve the Canadian economic unit. We have to return to the realization that we are a federalist system and we must restore the political and economic partnership that is so important in this country. By reviving the spirit of co-operation and working together, a conference of this nature would clearly pave the way for the necessary deregulation in many areas. Currently, the trucking industry is faced with intense pressure from the deregulated environment of the United States. Trucking is an industry that is virtually controlled by provincial governments. There must be a means of developing a greater degree of uniformity and compatibility of the rules and regulations as they relate to the trucking industry from province to province.

There is also much confusion in the jurisdiction relating to labour codes and occupational health and safety. Many businesses do not comply simply because of the myriad of regulations being promulgated. We are preoccupied and hear much in the House today about the need for job creation. Sometimes we are counterproductive because, while we implore industry and everyone else to take action to create jobs, we frustrate that ability to create jobs as a result of the excessive regulatory burden. That is a clear example of how we are sometimes counterproductive in the House.

The federal-provincial conference of which I speak is only one of a series of initiatives that I believe should be undertaken. I suggest that it is a laudable objective and a very practical, commonsense approach. We can also consider other approaches, such as the suggestion made by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that a two-year moratorium be imposed on new regulations that do not contribute directly to economic growth. That proposal was made in 1982. As well, it seems to me that all regulations and regulatory agencies should be subject to a sunset provision and periodic review, so that when they are put in place they do not remain for years and years without compulsory review.

Once again, leadership can be shown through a commitment from all levels of government to reduce the regulatory burden. I believe that deregulation in this country is inevitable. I think most Canadians agree that in order for this country to grow and prosper we must become more competitive, aggressive and market-oriented. I believe that Canadians will no longer put up with interventionist type of policies that we have had during the last ten years, coupled with huge deficits and an over-regulated environment.

We believe, as I am sure many Members of the House do, that the experience in the United States with respect to deregulation of transportation, communications and finance and the various free trade initiatives that are under way, as reflected by the GATT tariff negotiations and the trend toward a more flexible and loose economic environment, are all signals that we should get on with the job. I believe that in this country our industries are strong enough to compete with the best of them in the international marketplace if they are freed up and allowed to function in a free-wheeling manner. I think our business people and our industries would welcome the kind of flexible, competitive environment of which I speak. I do not believe the Government should delay any longer. I do not think we have to import deregulation from the United States. We are a unique and sovereign country. We can develop our approach to deregulation in a unique Canadian way and in a thoughtful and orderly manner in consultation with other administrations and industry. It is a challenge that we all have. This is one step further in achieving and meeting that challenge. I commend it to the House for favourable consideration.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to discuss the subject of regulatory reform. It is a subject of great importance and has been treated as such by this Government. In saying that, I am obviously taking issue with my hon. friend from Vegreville.

At a time of economic difficulty, regulatory reform takes on an even greater significance than at other times. Because of this, the Government has followed a policy for several years now of promoting regulatory reform that will assure maximum efficiency and a minimum possible instrusion of regulations in the private sector.

The motion before us suggests that the federal Government should convene a federal-provincial-territorial conference on regulatory reform. That is in effect the substance of the motion. It recognizes the fact, therefore, that no single level of government can resolve the multitude of regulatory reform issued by itself. In fact, my hon. friend has already referred to that point, that it requires involvement not only of the federal government but of governments of other jurisdictions as well, for instance, provincial, municipal, and so on. Indeed, the impetus for regulatory reform in Canada emerged from a federal-provincial meeting of First Ministers in 1978. Ever since that time work on regulatory reform has been going on at all levels of Government.

I should mention, moreover, that a federal-provincial-territorial committee of officials was established in 1978 to monitor the outcome of the regulation reference undertaken at the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) request by the Economic Council of Canada.In other words, already in 1978 a committee was set up of federal, provincial and territorial bodies to monitor just this very problem.

I understand that that committee of officials has met occasionally, most recently in 1982. I understand also that the chairman of the committee, the co-ordinator of Treasury Board's office of regulatory reform, has been in recent contact with his provincial and territorial counterparts and colleagues for the very purpose of assessing their interest in a further meeting sometime in the next few months. In that respect, the motion is somewhat redundant since it proposes action that has already been initiated and which, subject to provincial and territorial wishes, will take place.

The motion is also a bit off-base in suggesting that work on simplifying and streamlining the regulatory burden on the Canadian economy has yet to begin. At least at the federal level, Mr. Speaker, the work began long ago and it is continuing at a strong pace, I suggest. It was in 1978 that the Economic Council undertook its major regulation reference at the request of federal and provincial governments. Its massive study resulted in a large quantity of valuable research and in 66 recommendations, which have acted as an important base and catalyst for ongoing work during the past three years both at the federal and provincial levels of government.

Hon. Members are no doubt fully aware, moreover, of the excellent work of the Special Committee of the House on Regulatory Reform, chaired by my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), whose riding is just to the north of my riding of Eglinton-Lawrence. He chaired that committee and its results are, I am sure, well known to every Member of the House and, I hope, to all Canadians.

The recommendations of these and other studies have provided a firm basis for the Government's regulatory reform work plan. The far reaching scope and impact of the recommendations and the ensuing work plan led the Government to establish a special office of regulatory reform in the Treasury Board with the specific mandate of promoting and co-ordinating the Government's regulatory reform program. Obviously it is no new idea.

Since the motion refers to "regulatory burden"—those are the words used in the text of the motion—I would like to draw particular attention to three major accomplishments of the federal regulatory reform program whose specific target was the simplification and streamlining of the regulatory process. To begin with, the Government introduced legislation repealing 124 pieces of redundant or unnecessary legislation. This was enacted in July, 1983 and proclaimed in force on December 1, 1983. While I would not claim that this legislation constituted an enormous step forward in terms of regulatory reform, I regard it, nevertheless, as an important move because of the principle it underlined, namely, that laws and regulations should be regularly reviewed and, wherever they are no longer absolutely necessary, should be removed. That is an important principle for all legislators to bear in mind.

We have continued our review of legislation and may wish to propose a Bill repealing a further substantial number of statutes later this year.

Of greater immediate impact on the private sector, Hon. Members will recall that they approved legislation simplifying and reducing records retention requirements imposed on the private sector with the passage of Bill C-119 in July, 1983. This legislation, which was also proclaimed in force in December, 1983 will result in an estimated $100 million of savings to the private sector per year. We are studying the potential for further reforms of this type which have the potential for additional substantial cost savings for the private sector, particularly for the small business community.

Speaking of simplifying and streamlining, Mr. Speaker, I am particularly proud of the program of regulatory agendas which the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) introduced on an experimental basis about a year ago. It is a program involving publication of upcoming regulatory initiatives by federal Departments and agencies. Initially, the program covered 14 Departments and agencies, but with the addition later this year of the Department of Finance, the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, and the Department of Insurance, the program will cover a total of 17 federal entities, thereby providing a kind of early warning mechanism to the private sector for virtually all the federal Government's regulatory intentions. This has two important effects. By putting the Government's regulatory cards on the table well in advance of the implementation of regulations, the agendas greatly simplify public information and involvement in the regulatory process at a time when it counts most, that is to say, before the regulation is in place. Moreover, the discipline of the regulatory agendas and the heightened opportunities for consultation they encourage has had, in my view, the effect of contributing to the streamlining of the regulatory process.

As an additional dimension of the regulatory agenda's project, the President of the Treasury Board recently announced the introduction of an electronic version of the agendas. This was a significant step taken by the federal Government. Electronic publishing clearly offers an exceptional means of making information on the Government's activities available to a much wider range of the Canadian public.

A growing number of households are purchasing microcomputers and, through the adaptation of Canada's world leading video technology, Telidon, software carrying the regulatory agendas is now available for use on most types of personal computers found in hundreds of thousands of homes and, I might underline, hundreds of thousands of offices throughout this country.

The electronic publishing of regulatory agendas is just the first step in a new mode of communication between government and the public, which offers enormous potential. I can see the day, for example, when every Member of Parliament will have a personal computer in his or her office, and will be able to tap into an information system that will provide up-to-the minute data on the latest status of legislation, regulations or other matters of special interest.

Clearly, there is enormous capacity for adapting new technology to the purposes of Government. I am proud that the Government's regulatory reform program has taken something of a lead in the world exploring these possibilities with its regulatory agendas program. Those of us who know the difficulties for small businesses in being able to know what is happening in the world with regard to competition, appreciate their need for information. Going into this field will make available through the electronic medium tapping in quickly and the ability to know not only what are the inhibitions, but what are the opportunities that will be provided to them as entrepreneurs.

I have emphasized the omnibus repeal and records retention legislation and the regulatory agendas program because of their immediate relevance to the motion. Unfortunately, time does not permit me to expand at great length on all the other areas of regulatory reform in which the Government has been active. However, Hon. Members are well aware of the major proposals relating to federal regulation in such areas as airlines, fisheries, occupational health and safety, broadcasting and telecommunications. Indeed, it is hard to think of any Department or agency of the federal Government that has not been addressing the issue of regulatory reform for the past few years.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) for the innovation and wisdom of the new Canadian airline policy which he announced last week. Although the media has tended to refer to the new policy as one of deregulation, it is more accurate to describe it as regulatory reform or, even more accurately, as liberalization.

This is not just a matter of semantics. It is important to recognize the difference between deregulation and regulatory reform. It is very important to understand that distinction. They are not synonymous. As I see it, deregulation is one type of regulatory reform. Indeed, it is the most extreme type of reform because it involves the abandonment of a previously regulated area. There has been reason sometimes, if not always, in the mind of the public to have areas regulated. An extreme course will rarely be the most desirable course of action.

In the United States, airline regulatory reform has indeed gone a long way, and the economic aspects of the industry are largely deregulated. However, there remain stringent regulations on air safety in the United States and these, if anything, have been made tougher than before economic deregulation was introduced. Therefore, regulatory reform can imply both a reduction and a strengthening of regulation.

We in the Government view regulatory reform in that way. Sometimes it should mean less regulation, sometimes it should mean more. We just heard discussion about the dangers of genetic damage to people's bodies in the work place. In other words, people sometimes try for more regulation in certain areas. However, it should always be consistent with the most efficient and effective way to achieve national objectives.

The reform proposed by the Minister of Transport in the case of our new air policy provides a distinctly Canadian blend, allowing for gradual and responsible progress to a more competitive and less regulated air industry, without throwing the baby out with the bath water. Treasury Board's office of regulatory reform has worked closely in the development of these regulatory reform proposals. I think they reflect just how serious our commitment to regulatory reform is.

In short, I am very proud of the record of this Government which has achieved and will continue to achieve major reform wherever it is needed to promote the economic and social development of this country.

I have many industries and businessmen in my riding. I understand the profound concern which they have expressed to ensure that regulations not be redundant or useless but meaningful. I support the steps the federal Government has been taking in the past and in the present. I trust it will continue in the future to press hard to make us effective, efficient and competitive in world markets and at the same time respond to the hundreds of letters I receive every month from people expressing their anxieties and concerns about the dangers in the work place or, in terms of the environment, of chemicals, activities and so on that might endanger them. We have to think of regulations in terms of those needs. We will continue our policy of regulation where absolutely necessary and deregulation wherever possible.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the comment of the previous speaker. He demonstrated a profound lack of knowledge of the whole field of regulation in this country, demonstrated that somebody else had written the speech for him and demonstrated that this Government keeps apologizing for not doing anything in the field of regulation and deregulation, except in a cosmetic way.

The Hon. Member mentioned with great pride that the Government had thrown out 132 sets of regulations and Bills and so forth, a very brilliant thing to do, obviously something of which they can be proud. If you looked at them closely, you would find that no longer do we have regulations governing the use and manufacture of buggy whips. That is what the Government did, not anything meaningful in terms of deregulation.

In 1981, at a cost of $3 million to the Canadian taxpayer, the Economic Council of Canada came out with two major studies dealing with reforming regulations. There were 66 major recommendations. I ask the members of the Liberal Government how many of those 66 recommendations have been implemented. Practically none.

I also bring to the attention of the Government that in December, 1980, the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform reported. That is an interesting committee. It indicates the sweet innocence of a new Member of Parliament at the time. I joined this House in 1979 and had the great privilege and pleasure of being appointed Vice-Chairman of the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform. I worked during the fall of 1979 and the fall of 1980 on our report, which was published in December, 1980, and contained 27 very strong and good recommendations. I would add that the Liberal Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), who chaired the committee, chaired it on a totally non-partisan basis. Seven of us worked very hard on the entire subject. The only problem was that the Government practically ignored the report. The major recommendations contained in the report, which might have caused some real reform in subsequent years, have not been implemented.

As an example of that, I note today that the Chairman of that committee, the Hon. Member for Willowdale, has been flitting in and out of the House but is not prepared to speak on this particular motion today. The reason he is not speaking on it is, I am sure, that he would have to agree with me when I say that, in terms of what the Government has done, we spent a useless six months.

Mr. Peterson: Nonsense.

Mr. Cook: I would hope that the Hon. Member would get to his feet and attempt to defend the lack of action on the part of the Government with regard to the whole question.

Mr. Peterson: Balderdash.

Mr. Cook: The Hon. Member has used the word "balderdash". The major recommendation contained in the report, which was agreed to by all seven members of the committee, was that there be a special committee set up by this House which could deal with the Departments and look at these regulations that were being proposed and at what had been done in the past. We recommended that this committee hold public hearings at which the Minister could be present to be embarrassed by the stupidity of his regulators. Was that done? Of course it was not done. The Government is not interested in deregulation. This Liberal Government is not interested in real reform. It likes things the way they are. It likes government by regulation and not by the House of Commons. It likes regulations passed by statutes so that the Minister has complete discretion over what the law of the land will be. That is the objection that we have to regulations.

I have heard the previous speaker say what a great thing it is that the airlines are being deregulated. Those recommendations have been around for years, and now all of a sudden we are getting to them. We could look at all kinds of regulations about which nothing has been done. We have a Cabinet of over 30 people. They are bragging about the fact that fewer than half of the Departments are now doing something about deregulation, or at least thinking about it in a persuasive way.

If you talk to any businessman in the country, Mr. Speaker, he is likely to tell you two or three things. One of them is that there are too many regulations, he has too many forms to fill out, and he cannot talk to the people who make the regulations. Recommendations to deal with that complaint are contained in a special committee report and in the Economic Council report, both of which are over four years old now. What have government Members done about this? They are not interested in listening to the people. They may be interested in listening to the people for the next six months now that there is an election pending, but certainly all the work that this innocent, sweet, little Member of Parliament did in terms of the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform was useless. That innocent Member of Parliament expected to see flow from that committee something worthwhile to Canada, something meaningful, something that would save money and something that would help business in the country get ahead.

Out of the recommendations contained within that report, which ones were adopted? The easy ones, the simple ones, the ones that did not rock the boat, the ones that did not embarrass anyone, and the ones that did not have full meaning in terms of the Canadian business community were the ones that were adopted. As far as I am concerned, the $150,000 that was spent on this Special Committee on Regulatory Reform was wasted. At least it did not cost the $10 million that the royal commission set up by the Government is costing. At least there were some useful things contained within its report.

Quite frankly, I think that if we were to give lie detector tests to the Cabinet Ministers of the country, the people who theoretically run the country, I bet we would find that fewer than five of them even read the report that was produced and that each of those five who did read the report shook their heads and said: "We are not going to have that kind of thing going on in my Department. It may embarrass me. My senior bureaucrats will not like it. We might actullay have to get rid of some regulations or change some things." They have not changed anything.

Anyone could look at the record of the Government over the last few years and see that there has been very little reform, and we are talking about reform today. In a few moments I would like to read from a speech I once made, because it makes sense today. I read that speech with some chagrin and a sense of déjà vu. I had the opportunity to speak to the Economic Council of Canada about the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform back in 1981. What I said then has equal application and equal meaning today because the Government did not do anything. Nothing has happened.

There are a few points I would like to make from that speech. Obviously I will not read it all. Quite frankly, I am afraid to read it all because it would probably make me cry to realize how ineffectual the Liberal Government has been and what little it has done in this matter. I simply had to bring this up today because it has been a sore spot with me for years. I can assure the Canadian public that if there is a change in Government, they will finally see some meaningful changes to the way regulations are made, the way they are implemented and the people who are consulted when they are made. Westerners will be consulted as well. In fact, our report pointed out that in many cases, small businessmen felt that the regulators were regulating for the benefit of the big companies and not for the benefit of the small companies. I have not seen any change to that situation over the years, and that is criminal as well.

An office of the co-ordinator of regulatory reform was set up, but it was only a persuasive body. How does one control a government using only persuasion? Quite frankly, one must hit this Liberal Government over the head. It is the old story of the donkey and the two-by-four. First one must get its attention, and that cannot be done persuasively. However, if we had a proper parliamentary committee, as recommended in the report, a committee that could call the Minister before it and says: "What is this stupid regulation that your Department is proposing," and have him defend his regulation, I think we would have fewer and better regulations than we do now.

Let me refer to the speech I gave in 1981. I would sincerely hope that every businessman who heard it then will remember it now, because they were prophetic words. At that time I said that everything was great but that we should take a look at what the Government would do. After I made my speech, I told those businessmen to watch the Government and see if all of its good words meant anything, see if it would pay any attention to the Economic Council of Canada, and see if it would pay any attention to the task force on regulatory reform. I told them that there was no question about the fact that the Government would do a few things and, to give it credit, it has done a few relatively unimportant and minor things. It has certainly not done anything that could embarrass the Government and it has certainly not done anything that would relieve the burden on the business community of the country. As I said in my speech of 1981:

> I mention this because I do not believe there will be real meaningful regulatory reform until Jeremy Bentham's pain and pleasure principle can be applied to bureaucrats.

Well, that principle has not come to the fore.

> The test will come this fall—

At that time, I meant the fall of 1981.

> —as to how really serious this Government is about cleaning up the regulatory mess. One of the task force recommendations was for a special committee on regulations composed of no more than ten members, dedicated to the work, and with an adequate staff to do the vital research. This committee should have the power to review any new or old regulation for that matter. It should have the power to summon witnesses and should have a mandate large enough to disallow improperly processed regulations and censure Departments for not having done their homework. It should be a committee that any businessman, labour organization, consumer association or any special interest group could put their case to and have the Department answer fully their concerns. There is no such mechanism in the Canadian Government at this time. There is no way except lobbying the Department to get a hearing and many times that is mere formality and courtesy.

The committee was never set up. It should have been. Unfortunately, it became clear in our research at that time that there was a mental set in some Departments according to which, if there was a problem, a regulation was made. Alternatives, costs and consultation did not necessarily receive the attention they deserved before implementation. It was true four years ago and it is true today. I went on to say:

> When so very much of the law we live under is subordinate law making by bureaucrats in the form of regulations such a committee of Parliament could play a vital role in protecting all of us from excess.

This Government would not agree with that. This Government would not do it for fear of embarrassment. I went on:

> There is a downside—

At least I was fair, and I point this out:

> There is the possibility of embarrassment for the Minister of the Crown concerned. But that spur is what is needed to ensure that subordinate lawmaking be really in the public interest.

I challenged the Government then and I challenge it now: Why does it not make Parliament more meaningful? I had such a hope, and in 1981 I said: "But you be the judge . . . when the Government brings in its proposals for reform of the committee system". I went on to say that it would give them a real insight into how serious the Government was about regulatory reform.

Anyone who was watching saw how serious the Government was. It was not very serious at all. I would hope that perhaps with a Bill such as this we could start the process. At least the matter would be brought back to the public's attention so that they would realize that they have a Government that does not give a damn about regulatory reform. Every businessman in the country is suffering from that neglect. It is costing them money and, in many cases, it is needless. I sincerely hope that those businessmen remember what this Government has done to them when they get to the ballot box.

My final point is that the Economic Council reports are first rate. The research had been done and the recommendations had been presented. There has been some small activity by the Government. But what was in that economic report and what was in the report of the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform was another couple of Glasco reports upon which the Government will not act because it simply might embarrass it.

I will close by saying simply: God help the poor Canadian businessman if he does not realize who is doing these terrible things to him. The Government does the work, but then it ignores it. A Progressive Conservative Government will not ignore it.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the two opposition speakers and the one government speaker on this particular question. First, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and acknowledge the job which he has done in raising this issue about regulatory reform and the burden of regulation which is on the private sector in Canada. I would also like to thank my colleague, the Hon.

Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille), who joined in the debate and who put some of the positive contributions of the Government into perspective.

I would like to return to the remarks of the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) who, as the Vice-Chairman of the Committee on Regulatory Reform, worked very diligently. He worked side by side with us to try to bring in a responsible and responsive report which would deal with the real problems of regulation. As he stated, that committee worked as a non-partisan group. It logged more hours than any other committee, it was done at less cost than any other committee, and the report was brought in on time. The committee consulted with Canadians from the public and private sector right across Canada.

I think the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby will acknowledge the tremendous debt we owe to our excellent research staff, to the clerk and to others who worked with us. It was a very worth-while experience because we learned how to work on a non-partisan basis very, very quickly. I detect from the Hon. Member's voice a great sense of pride in the accomplishments of the task force on regulatory reform. His frustration arises from the fact that all of the recommendations have not been implemented or have not received serious discussion in the House. I share a great deal of his frustration. But I think he has overstated the case about tenfold. He said that very few of the recommendations have been implemented.

Let us go back to some of the specific recommendations. There were two major thrusts which we were trying to bring forward. One was that if regulators had to consult with the regulated, with the private sector, before they introduced those regulations, we would have much more responsive regulations. We would then be taking into consideration the actual fall-out of what we are doing here in the towers of Ottawa, and the fall-out it would have on ordinary business people in Canada. That was a term called "consultation". I think that the task force accomplished a great deal in terms of bringing the word "consultation" to the fore.

The Hon. Member may not recall that four years ago the word "consultation', was not very much in evidence. It has now become the buzz-word used around Ottawa before anything is done. We have two stellar examples of this: the Budgets of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). He has adopted this type of consultative process which we opted for. But what have we done as a Government in terms of making the consultation easier? We have implemented—and it was one of the major recommendations in the committee's report—the recommendations to have a regulatory agenda and to announce what regulatory measures we are contemplating. That allows for an early-warning system to the private sector. They can come forward and consult with the government. That is an openness which encourages the consultative process better than anything else. The Hon. Member talked about—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member accept one small question?

Mr. Peterson: Yes.

Mr. Cook: My question is this: If he wishes to use the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) as an example of what has been accomplished through the brilliant work he, I, others and a first-rate staff did on that report, may I ask him to comment upon the consultation that took place with the Budget of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) which came out two years after we finished our work?

Mr. Peterson: I do not know where the Hon. Member gets his facts. As I recall, the Budget to which he is referring was presented to the House on November 12, 1981, and our report was tabled in the House on December 19, 1980. How he gets two years out of that, I do not know. This is the type of hyperbole we have seen in terms of the criticisms. If we are to work together constructively in this House to achieve meaningful measures, it will have to be done in an atmosphere of co-operation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 2(1), this House stands adjourned until Tuesday, May 22, 1984, at 11 a.m.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

The House resumed from Monday, May 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates; and on the amendment of Mr. Crosbie (p. 3688).

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, if I recall correctly, I have already had approximately two minutes to deal with the motion of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

The House of Commons finds itself in something of a predicament today. The House has already voiced its opinion on the closure motion which was introduced by the Government, and debate has been curtailed on the matter. Today the Bill is to be given second reading and referred to the appropriate committee. However, the motion which we are presently debating is that the Bill be not now read a second time but that that occur some six months hence. What happens this afternoon when the vote is taken? There is a possibility that the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for St. John's West might be carried. Where will that put us if the House expresses its opinion in two conflicting ways? I would imagine, however, that that is unlikely to occur because the Government will undoubtedly use its majority to rush this matter through and to foist it on the Canadian public.

It is evident that the Bill is flawed. Members on this side have spoken at considerable length and have demonstrated the areas in which the Bill is flawed. For example, it does not prevent the proliferation of Crown corporations. In fact, if anything, it makes it easier for the Government to establish yet more Crown corporations.

There will be a time limit imposed on parliamentary debate when new Crown corporations are brought into being, unlike the debate on Petro-Canada and Canagrex, which went on for a considerable length of time because these were matters of great public importance. By and large, the public of Canada was of a contrary opinion to that of the Government and did not really want these things to happen. The Opposition was then able to do its job and debate these issues in earnest and at length. This will now no longer be possible. There will be a short time limit for debate on further Crown corporations, and that is, Sir, only if the Government does not want to go the Order in Council route, which it can do under this new legislation, or if it wants to create a new Crown corporation as a subsidiary of an existing one.

The legislation does not deal completely with the question of accountability. Most of the parliamentary review of the operation of Crown corporations will be, to all intents and purposes, after the fact. Although the Government is obliged to present to parliamentary committees its plans for the future, I would imagine that those plans would not be detailed and the Government would still engage in the same jiggery-pokery with Crown corporations as it did in the past. If it so wishes, it could instruct Crown corporations to do certain things—for example, Petro-Canada to take over Petrofina—and it can do that at the drop of a hat without bringing those plans before Parliament in advance for public scrutiny.

There is no real parliamentary surveillance of the operations or the plans of Crown corporations. There is no parliamentary surveillance which makes any kind of reasonable sense. Therefore, it is my intention to vote this evening in favour of the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for St. John's West which, if carried, would enable us to devote a further six months to the study of this important subject. It would give us time to go back to the public and to seek further expert input.

In all likelihood, in six months time we will have a new government if the election has been held by that time. In all likelihood it will be a Progressive Conservative Government, and our stand on Crown corporations has been made fully known. It was the Conservative Government under the leadership of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) which introduced in the first place in 1979 a much more comprehensive Bill to deal fully with the Crown corporation problem. Even if an election has not been held by that time, and even if the Liberal Party as an interim measure still forms the Government of the day, it would likely be a different Government with perhaps a slightly different outlook from that which it has today. Therefore, in all likelihood, even with that possibility, the legislation which it might wish to bring forward dealing with Crown corporations would be superior to that with which we are faced today.

The problem with the present Government is that it cannot really open the doors and let the sunshine in. Its closet, Sir, is clogged up with the skeletons of the past. It is not really possible for the present Government to open up the window on Crown corporations, because if it were to do that, it would bring to light all the ways in which it has manipulated Crown corporations in the past and all the secrets it wants to see remain hidden.

I would suspect that if there were this public scrutiny, the resultant legislation might wish to incorporate within itself the provision for privatization of Crown corporations. There is a growing trend toward privatization. More and more Canadians are realizing that there are many things which the private sector can do better than can the governmental sector. The problem is that there is no fixed set of rules for the privatization of Crown corporations. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) is to be complimented on his action in undertaking to privatize the Northern Canada Transportation Company. However, we do not know how he is going to do that. There are still some reservations on the part of members of the public, certainly members of the Opposition, as to whether he might give this to some of his political friends in some way or another. Therefore, any Crown corporation legislation should incorporate rules and guidelines for their privatization.

I want to say something about Bill C-25, the next Bill we will probably have to deal with. It will follow as a natural corollary to this Bill, and I think both C-24 and C-25 should be dealt with together over this six-month period advocated by the Hon. Member for St. John's West. If that were to take place, the whole question of Crown corporations could be dealt with in a much more businesslike way in order to achieve a much greater degree of parliamentary accountability than that proposed by the Government at the present time.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in the debate on Bill C-24 and on the motion by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) to put off consideration of this Bill for some period of time. The Hon. Member has made a very logical request of the House. This Bill must be given consideration as part of an over-all package forming the order of business which the Government puts before the House. Bill C-24 is only part of the Government's over-all policy towards Crown corporations. Bill C-25 relates to companies such as de Havilland and Canadair, the mixed enterprises, so to speak. There are some very major omissions in this particular Bill which we hope will be taken up in Bill C-25, but we will not know that for sure until we get it into committee. I believe it is important that we look at these two Bills side by side.

There is another factor as well, Mr. Speaker, that of the position of Crown corporations under the competition Bill which is before us but is not yet into committee. The position the Government takes as it relates to Crown corporations under that particular legislation is also an important part of the package. As you can see, there is a very clear logic behind the motion of the Hon. Member for St. John's West.

Over and above that, I want to say as strongly as I can that this closure motion on the part of the Government is wrong because the Bill, as it has been presented, does not address the problems of Crown corporations as they appear to us in this House or as they appear to Canadians on a regular basis when they read about them. People are aware of this subculture of government consisting of Crown corporations. Some 265,000 people work for Crown corporations with some $65 billion in assets under their control. However, if you ask any Canadian if they could tell you what we have in mind, if they believe the bureaucracy and government spending is out of control, that the Government has lost control of the enterprises it is responsible for, the first thing that will come to their mind invariably is that Crown corporations have been allowed to proliferate. There has been no degree of financial or operating control. That is the point the average Canadian focuses on, that we must get better control of Crown corporations.

This point has not been addressed nearly as extensively as we had hoped it would be in this particular piece of legislation. That is why closure is wrong here. That is why it is important for the Government to take this Bill back and address the key problems of accountability and lack of responsibility which have been apparent over the past few years and have resulted in billions of dollars being lost at a time when we have huge government deficits. In essence, Mr. Speaker, huge amounts of money are being stolen from the next generation by this generation.

There are too many gaps in the Bill. It is a flawed piece of legislation. That is why we say it should be taken back to the drawing board. It is inadequate to address the problem. We need something which is more realistic and more akin to the legislation which the Clark Government introduced in 1979.

I would like to discuss briefly some of the aspects of the Bill which do not address the problem. Let us look at the Bill itself. It is enabling legislation. It is a blank cheque. There are no regulations. I do not believe that we, as Members of Parliament, should be asked to consider this Bill until those regulations are in place because of the importance to the legislation and to the operations of government which those regulations represent.

In the summer of 1981 we were considering Bill C-48, the Canada Oil and Gas Act. At that time we asked for the regulations. There was a tremendous amount of ministerial discretion within that Bill. The Bill was riddled with opportunities for the Minister to apply his own thinking rather than the policy of Parliament. Time and again we have seen how that Minister and the subsequent Minister have distorted the intentions of Bill C-48, as set out at the committee stage, through their actions under the vast amount of ministerial discretion provided in that Bill. That is what is missing from our consideration and that is another reason why we should be postponing consideration of the Bill. Too much is left to the Minister's or to Cabinet's discretion and there is not enough opportunity for Parliament itself to put its stamp on the operations of these Crown corporations.

The role of the board of directors has been totally taken over by Cabinet. Normally the board of directors is asked to appoint the chief executive officer. That appointment is now made by the Cabinet. Normally the board of directors sets policies related to financing. That is now the role of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Normally the board of directors sets the policies on the operations of the Crown corporation. The problem here, Mr. Speaker, is that there is not a sufficient degree of direction provided for within the Bill to give the particular Ministers the direction which they should follow in providing direction to these Crown corporations.

I would like to speak on the subject of financing. The Minister of Finance is given a great deal of discretion with regard to the financing of Crown corporations. He decides whether a Crown corporation can raise $1 million or $100 million. On this side of the House we have asked the Government to provide us with an over-all limitation of government financing once a year. It is in place for the Government itself but not for the hidden government, the Crown corporations. Because of the freedoms and total authority that the Government has today, we believe it is important to have blanket authority over Crown corporations' direct borrowing and Crown corporations' guarantees, including guarantees of governments as well as guarantees under various programs. This Bill does not provide for that. This protection for which we have asked has not been provided by two consecutive Ministers of Finance.

Another aspect to this legislation is that we have seen over the years Crown corporations and their subsidiaries being created without any degree of parliamentary control. While this Bill proposes to give some control, it does not do so with respect to subsidiaries. The Government does not want Parliament to have that sort of control but wants to limit it to the Crown corporations themselves.

The limited role of Parliament to initiate a reasonable degree of debate and understanding for the creation of new Crown corporations has meant the total loss of control. Clause 155 of the Bill allows for only 30 days of committee time for the consideration of new corporations and only seven hours of parliamentary debate. Any Crown corporation that exists today, such as Air Canada, Petro-Canada, CBC, Canadair and de Havilland, could have been created with that type of control. In fact, that did not even take place with CDIC. The Government simply created that corporation by Order in Council and did not even consider putting it before Parliament. I believe that corporation has been in existence for over a year and a half and we will finally see passage of legislation in that respect. That is an example of the power of Parliament. We were not able to do anything about that particular corporation.

I have just touched on a number of issues. I know my colleagues will be dealing with other aspects of the Bill. The simple point is that this legislation should not go ahead. There are very logical reasons why it should be considered as a package with other Bills that are on the Order Paper. That is why we believe Members of Parliament should vote against this Bill and in favour of the motion by the Member for St. John's West.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words about Bill C-24. It is in the same spirit, although perhaps for some different reasons, that I want to echo the comments that were already made today. That is, it is important for Members of Parliament to oppose the legislation contained in Bill C-24.

I want to begin my comments by suggesting that I believe the Canadian economy is one that reflects the status of being a mixed economy. I believe Canadians generally appreciate the fact that there is a role for the private and public sector to play. I suspect that most countries of the world, particularly those that are progressive, reflect that type of mixed economy.

I think it is fair to say that Crown corporations are as Canadian as the beaver or the game of hockey. They have always been here and I suspect that they will continue to play a major role in the development of the Canadian economy of the future. I do not believe many serious economists would indicate anything to the contrary. We have seen the value of Crown corporations and we have seen Crown corporations that work extremely well. There have been Crown corporations that have been developing and leading the way in technological change. Research and development through to production, in a number of instances, have been led by Crown corporations both at the provincial and federal levels.

I have made those positive remarks about Crown corporations so that our position that we are not opposed to Bill C-24 because we are against the principle of Crown corporations is clearly understood. Quite the contrary, we believe there is an appropriate role for Crown corporations to play. However, we are particularly concerned about the lack of accountability in the present system and in the system as proposed in Bill C-24. When one looks at the root of many of the difficulties facing Canada today, accountability is part of that problem, whether it concerns the public sector or the private sector.

Let me talk for a moment about accountability with respect to the private sector. For the past four and a half years while I have been a Member of Parliament we have on many occasions passed legislation that gives incentives to corporations to do certain things. There have been all kinds of incentives. I suppose the most obvious one, the grandest one of them all and the one at which other countries might be laughing, is the PIP grant system. Here was an incentive, if you like, to oil companies operating in Canada to encourage them to explore in our frontier areas, offshore and in the far north.

My family comes from Norway. Off the coast of Norway today is the same kind of activity that we have. Oil companies explore for gas and oil in a similar milieu to what we find off our East Coast. Norway has a different system from what we have. Norway does not have PIP grants. Just by way of background, Mr. Speaker, our PIP grants provide up to 80 per cent financing by the taxpayers of Canada. As a matter of fact, Sir, if you take advantage of some of the other tax incentives you could have about 95 per cent of the total exploration and development costs of these wells paid by the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Friesen: Most of them dry.

Mr. Riis: As one my colleagues has indicated, most of them end up being dry. However, that is the name of the game. But 95 per cent of the cost of drilling a $200 million well is borne by the taxpayers of Canada. If oil or natural gas is found, then Canadian taxpayers, for that 95 per cent investment, receive 25 per cent of the action, so to speak. Think of it for a moment in terms of the concept of accountability. We put up 95 per cent of the cost of developing a new oil rig, and if the oil companies are successful we, the taxpayers, receive 25 per cent of the action.

I mentioned Norway, Mr. Speaker, because the Norwegians are in a similar situation. They have a different approach. They say to the oil companies: "Come and explore in our offshore areas". The oil companies ask: "How much are we going to get from you? What is the enticement? What kind of incentive or bribe do we get to develop the offshore?" The answer is none—zero. No money. The Norwegians will not invest any money in exploration, but the oil companies are welcome to explore. They do.

All of the major oil companies around the world involved in exploration are involved in drilling off the coast of Norway. If they find oil or natural gas, they take about 80 per cent for no investment at all but just for the privilege of having oil companies find oil, develop it, and they get 20 per cent of the total action. They are all in there, Mr. Speaker; they all think it is a fine deal—Mobil Oil, Shell, Imperial Oil and so on. Can you imagine what they must think in the board rooms when they talk about Canada providing 95 per cent of the investment capital for 25 per cent of the action on a successful development?

When it comes to accountability, Members of Parliament have a responsibility. I do not think PIP grants reflect much accountability when we ask small businessmen, men and women, to provide the taxes that are required to keep our economy going and to keep our society and its social programs in place, while we throw away billions of dollars to one particular group. That is not being very accountable to those who have elected us to represent their best interests and have asked us to collect taxes fairly and to invest the money wisely. It is a very sad comment on the accountability that we are seeing reflected here as Members of the House of Commons.

When we talk about accountability, we can talk about the accountability which must be improved as it touches the private sector, particularly through our taxation system and all of the incentives that we give to the corporate sector and to Crown corporations. Our concern within the New Democratic Party is that Bill C-24 does not provide the accountability required. As a step in the right direction, however, I want to say that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), who served on the agriculture committee, suggested when Canagrex was being debated that we needed to have a clause in the Canagrex Bill that provided the opportunity for the Auditor General to carry out a comprehensive audit on Canagrex whenever he deemed it to be appropriate.

That is the kind of accountability we would like to see in Bill C-24. We would like to see the Auditor General given the opportunity, as he or she sees fit, to carry out a comprehensive audit to ensure the taxpayers are getting a good return on their investment. We led the way on the Canagrex Bill to ensure that accountability was placed on that Crown corporation. It is the same type of accountability we would like to see now incorporated into Bill C-24.

We are concerned about the lack of a window into the subsidiaries of the Crown corporations, clearly absent from Bill C-24. We are also concerned about those Crown corporations that are non-commercial. I am thinking of the Canada Council, perhaps the CBC and the National Film Board. These are non-commercial ventures and Crown corporations. We are concerned that if they are to be incorporated somehow into the terms of reference of Bill C-24, that kind of government involvement in the Canada Council would be inappropriate for the cultural community of Canada. It would be inappropriate for the Government to be so closely involved with the cultural community and cultural developments of our nation.

We are opposed to Bill C-24 in its present form. We are especially concerned about the lack of accountability built into this Bill when it comes to Crown corporations.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat of a pleasure again to speak on this measure. Bill C-24 would institutionalize the proliferation of Crown corporations in Canada.

In beginning my remarks, I think it is important to have some historical perspective about Crown corporations. The Canadian experience has been that Crown corporations have played a very important role in our development. With the kind of geography we share in our land with something like 4,000 miles of border, six different time zones, a sparse population in many regions, and because of the different problems we have, Crown corporations have been created over the years. I think all of us would concede that without the construction of the CNR and the CPR as binding forces for our country, Canada could not have developed over the years as it has. Something like 50 years ago we had the formation of the CBC, the National Film Board, and some of the cultural agencies which helped to launch industries in Canada at a time when the private sector was not in a position to cover that great geographic expanse nor was the population large enough to provide the kind of marketplace necessary for it to function. Because of our historical experience, the concept of Crown corporations finds easy acceptance among the Canadian people. All of us would admit that Crown corporations have played a very formative and important role in the development of Canada.

Now we move to a new phase. One of the watersheds of the new phase was the year-end interview of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1975. Speaking to one of our newsmen, he said that the marketplace was just not functioning properly and, therefore, the Government would have to intervene and get more active in the marketplace.

I think many Canadians have concluded that many government programs have been designed to make certain that the market-place was not functioning properly and that it would not be able to function. Canadians have also concluded that many of the regulations which have been put in place and a number of the Crown corporations which have been instituted over the years were there for no other reason but to ensure that the marketplace would not and could not function properly; then the Government would have a reason to move in and to substantiate the remarks of the Prime Minister in December, 1975, when he said that the marketplace was not functioning properly.

I am not perpetuating simple, idle gossip. I would like to refer to the example of the insulation business. All of us understand that the insulation business, glass wool and rock-wool, is a fairly prosperous and thriving business in Canada. There are many good companies providing healthy competition in the marketplace. All of them are doing good work. Perhaps they need some supervision, but they are doing good work. However, several years ago Petro-Canada, that new national institute, began to proliferate and formed a new company called "Canertech". It is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Petro-Canada. It began its own life cycle and began to spawn its own companies. It purchased a substantial interest in a company known as Pacific Enercon, a company that was begun by an American, a Californian. It was a multi-million dollar business, but it was losing money and was apparently about to go bankrupt. That is just the kind of company Canertech was looking for, so it invested something like $4 million in this losing company. Then it began operations in the rock-wool insulation business but it is still losing money.

Now we have a situation where Pacific Enercon with tax dollars is injecting a new player into the marketplace. The insulation business was doing all right before, and now Pacific Enercon, with our tax dollars, can compete unfairly in the marketplace and ensure with our subsidies that it can create havoc for the other insulation companies. Government corporations have now entered into a new era. They are there to compete unfairly with healthy companies and with that competition try to ensure that healthy companies, which under normal circumstances would do all right, fail and then that segment of the marketplace is left for them.

Bill C-24 is no ordinary housekeeping Bill to tidy up interrelationships among Crown corporations. It is a Bill to ensure that unfair competition will be a permanent factor within the marketplace. This will come about as a result of several key measures in the Bill. The first is that Cabinet can issue directives to any parent Crown corporations. Clause 154 enables Cabinet to issue directives to Crown corporations and to alter the working arrangements within them. According to this clause directives can be issued and, while they are tabled in the House of Commons 15 days after the beginning of the next sitting, they do not have to be tabled if the Minister feels that it would be detrimental to the commercial interests of a Crown corporation. There we have the institutionalizing of unfair competition.

If the Government believes in Crown corporations, it should let them compete on a fair basis. If it is to be fair, it must be fair for all players. However, a provision in the Bill allows the Minister to withhold vital information on how a Crown corporation is functioning.

Second, Cabinet can review all parent Crown corporation by-laws with power to change those by-laws. Third, Clause 127 allows Crown corporations to indemnify their representatives against civil, criminal or administrative action. That is about as ominous a provision as there could be. In effect, it says that Crown corporations under these provisions will be able to do things which if not illegal are certainly unethical, and that if they are taken to court, tax dollars could be used to pay court costs so that they can defend themselves.

We have that kind of attitude already in the fact that Crown corporations are a law unto themselves. I wrote a letter to Canertech several months ago. I received this reply: "I am not in a position to discuss the company's current financial situation". Here we have a Crown corporation operating with tax dollars as though it is a private enterprise, but saying that it is not accountable to a Member of Parliament and will not divulge its financial information.

These are some matters which seriously infringe upon the rights of the market-place. I contend that they are designed to ensure that the market-place cannot function and the Government has an excuse to move in.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, certainly it should be evident to every Member of Parliament that there is a need for Crown corporations legislation to ensure some element of accountability and control over the number of Crown corporations we have today.

In recent days the Government released a booklet prepared by the Treasury Board of Canada Secretariat entitled Crown Corporations and Other Canadian Government Corporate Interests. It is dated March, 1984 and it is interesting in that the Government attempts to catalogue the number of Crown corporations in which it has an involvement, either through direct ownership or through joint ownership or other investment. The booklet lists the number of Crown corporations, which it defines as corporations wholly owned by the federal Government. We find that between December, 1982 and March, 1984 the number of corporations wholly owned by the Government of Canada increased from 186 to 195.

I would be prepared to bet that very few Members of the House of Commons could name the nine new Crown corporations if they were asked. Indeed, very few Member of Parliament or very few Canadians could list more than a couple of dozen of the 195 Crown corporations which are in existence at the present time.

In a situation where the Government allows Crown corporations to proliferate with virtually no control, where Members of Parliament are unaware of the existence of many of these Crown corporations, and where we have example after example of extremely poor management, cost overruns and cases where Crown corporations have to return to the public treasury to ask Canadian taxpayers to bail them out, there is something very seriously wrong. One need look no further than at the front page of the business section of today's edition of The Toronto Star where one will find the headline "Will Ottawa bail out ailing nuclear firm?" In part the article reads:

> Taxpayers may have to cough up millions to revive Candu reactor and its industry.

It refers to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, another federal Crown corporation which is set to lose literally hundreds of millions of dollars by the time it is through. There is no doubt as to the need for comprehensive legislation to deal with the whole issue of Crown corporations.

The issue before the House today, as the Government tries to cut off debate on this Crown corporations legislation, is whether the Bill does what it is supposed to do. Does it increase parliamentary control? Does it improve management? Does it allow boards of directors of Crown corporations to perform their function?

The answer to those questions is that the Bill does not do what it is alleged to do. For example, in the area of creation, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) leaves the impression with Members of Parliament and with the public that this Bill will plug Parliament back in and ensure that it is consulted before the creation of a Crown corporation. Of course, if a corporation were subsidiary, Parliament would have no role to play.

We will find in the future that there will likely never again be a special Act of incorporation such as there was for Petro-Canada, Air Canada or the CBC which allowed Parliament to debate the essence of a corporation and to set its structure and spell out its mandate. Instead, these companies will be incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act and there will be a limited debate in Parliament of seven hours in the House of Commons and seven hours in the Senate, with a brief committee study. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, that undermines Parliament's role rather than strengthens it.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, even that limited procedure for parliamentary control is a bit of a sham because the Government leaves the impression that there would at least be the element of control when creating new parent companies of Parliament being able to look at an Order in Council and debate it in the House for at least seven hours. In fact, there is nothing in this Bill that binds the Crown to that. In fact, the Bill does not change the status quo. A Cabinet Minister of the Government will be able to incorporate new Crown corporations and do so without one minute's parliamentary debate or parliamentary approval.

Dr. Ed Clark, the man in the Treasury Board secretariat who is responsible for Crown corporations policy, told the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants that the Department had in fact received a legal opinion from the Department of Justice which indicated that this Bill was binding on the Crown. In fact, that was totally false. The Government has received no such opinion. If indeed the Government claims that it has received such an opinion, let Dr. Clark or the President of the Treasury Board produce that opinion. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, since that time, Dr. Clark has communicated with the President of the Treasury Board and has denied that he ever made the statement that others witnessed him making, and has indeed confessed that there is no such opinion from the Department of Justice which indicates that this Bill is binding on the Crown.

If the President of the Treasury Board wishes to check the veracity of Dr. Clark's assertion that he in fact never made a comment claiming that there was such a legal opinion, let him ask other people who were at the meeting. They would be prepared to give their point of view and I think it would be a useful test of Dr. Clark's reliability.

Since that time, the Treasury Board has attempted to obtain legal opinions indicating that this would be binding on the Crown and it found that just the opposite was the case. In fact, that provision in this Bill is not binding on the Crown and even the limited procedures for parliamentary control do not apply over the incorporation of new Crown corporations. Business could continue to be done as usual. When we have that sort of sham, an attempt to subvert parliamentary control in the name of promoting parliamentary control, you can see, Mr. Speaker, why we oppose this Bill so strongly.

What about the function of management, Mr. Speaker? What we saw in the cases of Canadair and de Havilland were massive cost overruns, massive public subsidies and a complete failure on the part of the board of directors to do its work. One of the things the Government says it wants to do is beef up the role of boards of directors, yet it would do just the opposite. Cabinet would have the right to choose the chief executive officer and the auditor. Cabinet would even have the right not only to set their salaries but also to write by-laws for Crown corporations. What would be the function of boards of directors in the future other than to collect per diems and create a resting place for defeated Liberal candidates? Surely, Mr. Speaker, if we are serious about promoting parliamentary control and improved management of Crown corporations, then we are entitled to much better legislation than this.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, this Bill is about to be forced into committee. Government Members say that there has been enough parliamentary debate. Are they prepared to allow the public to appear in committee? The word that is being put out by the Treasury Board at the present time is that the Government intends, after it forces this Bill through the House, to prevent any outside witnesses from coming before the committee.

Members of this side of the House believe that the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Business Council on National Issues, the Consumers' Association of Canada and others not only have a right but perhaps a responsibility to appear before the committee and state their views. Yet what the Government wants is not only to gag Parliament but to gag the private sector as well and to prevent Canadians from presenting their points of view on this particular issue.

It looks like the Government is planning to spend one day in committee to discuss a Bill of this nature and scope. If anything ever pointed out how grievously flawed this Bill is and how little interest the Government has in allowing some parliamentary control over Crown corporations, it is the Government's attitude toward this Bill, the surreptitious nature of what it is trying to do behind the veil that it is putting in front of Parliament and its attempt to gag Parliament and block participation by the public in discussion of this Bill. Those things certainly indicate what the Government's attitude is toward control over Crown corporations.

At the end of this day, Mr. Speaker, when we are forced to vote on this Bill, Hon. Members on this side will oppose the Bill and will oppose it as strongly as we can. It is a bad Bill and a dangerous measure. The methods that have been used by the Government to force this Bill through the House and to prevent public and parliamentary debate on the legislation speak volumes about the Government's attitude. That should give every Canadian who believes that it is time to bring about some parliamentary control over Crown corporations and to ensure that the public's tax dollars are properly respected some cause for concern. At the end of this day, we will be voting to oppose this Bill and will be going to committee with the demand that private individuals and organizations from the private sector be permitted an opportunity to speak on this Bill, so that the Government will not simply be able to ram this Bill into law without proper scrutiny.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed feelings that I rise to speak to the subject matter of Bill C-24 today. The bad news, of course, is that I must speak under the circumstance of time allocation or, in not so diplomatic language, closure.

The Government is a past master at limiting debate on legislation it wants to push through the House no matter what the costs, or consequences to either the Canadian public or Parliament. I am given to understand that the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wants this Bill pushed through the House before he retires in June. That is the reason for time allocation, Mr. Speaker. I suppose that after 16 years of having Crown corporations multiplying like rabbits with many of them running amok without proper controls on their activities, the Prime Minister wishes to be noted in the history books as the one who sought to control the financial morass that he and his various Cabinets helped create.

It is with pleasure, however, that I rise to support the motion standing in the name of my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), which would provide that the Bill not be read a second time now but in six months hence; in effect, a six months' hoist. I support that recommendation for two very important reasons. The first is that the Bill as drafted is badly flawed. My colleagues from the Progressive Conservative Party have been pointing that out during the whole of second reading and there is no time for me to reiterate these concerns except to note that they are legitimate and very serious concerns that must be addressed by the Government before it tries to ram this legislation through the House.

Rising at this time, Mr. Speaker, also allows me to put clearly on the record my Party's views concerning the Canada Council and its relationship to Bill C-24. I have been supporting the six months' hoist of the present Bill because the Bill violates an important and long-standing principle which up until now all Parties in this House stood for and supported, the principle of having an arm's length relationship between the government of the day and its cultural agencies. This Bill violates that principle of independence from government, Mr. Speaker, by bringing the Canada Council under the authority of the Financial Administration Act. This is unprecedented and, in my opinion, insupportable.

The arm's length principle is based upon the belief that we should ensure that our cultural and artistic life be separate and distinct from our political life and that it should be free from political interference and control. The Massey Commission accepted this principle and recommended that the Canada Council be based upon the example of the Arts Council of Great Britain which has the state as patron but has an arm's length relationship with the government. The support and funding it receives is based upon artistic purposes and not political ones. This Bill blurs and distorts that principle.

It must be asked why it is necessary to introduce the Canada Council to a new structure for scrutiny and then spell out restrictions on interference. Clause 99(7) deals with this, Mr. Speaker. The question is why? I am sure we can all debate the reasons. The Canada Council itself understands the serious consequences of its being added to the FAA schedule and that is why it is speaking out so strongly against this Bill. It remembers only too well what happened in 1978 when the government of the day reduced the grant to the art bank by $800,000.

The then Secretary of State who is now the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) was outraged that the Canada Council should assert its independence of what he felt its priorities should be. The Canada Council was doing what it had the right and legislative provision to do. It was acting independently of the Government in the manner in which it was set up to act.

The Canada Council itself, in summarizing its concerns about Bill C-24, said this:

● (1200)

It is difficult to predict how the powers in the Bill would be used, but the following are controls which are possible under the provisions of the Bill:

Within the broad definition of the arts in the Canada Council Act, the government could determine which art forms the Council will and will not support.

The government could control the allocation of the Council's budget to particular disciplines, to theatre as opposed to visual arts, music as opposed to literature, et cetera. It could specify what types of artistic activity in each art form will be funded and in what amounts.

The Liberal Government has been treating the Canada Council in a way that we find unacceptable. The report of the Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee—the Applebaum-Hébert Committee—stated:

Public policy should facilitate self-expression, not control or organize it.

The Applebaum-Hébert report studied this issue and judged its importance to be so fundamental to its purpose that it set out as its first recommendation the unique and sensitive nature of the cultural agencies. The first recommendation read:

The status of federal cultural agencies should be defined in a new Cultural Agencies Act, in recognition of the fact that government activity in culture and the arts is subject to special considerations requiring a distinctive measure of autonomy. The provisions of this statute should prevail wherever they may conflict with those of the Financial Administration Act or the proposed Government Organization Act.

The Applebaum-Hébert report went on to state the opinion that, due to the sensitive functions of the cultural agencies, they should also be exempt from political direction in the form of ministerial directives of either a general or a specific nature.

It should be pointed out that the Liberal Government has rejected these ideas. It did not even consider how to deal with the cultural agencies except through the blanket legislation which was drafted to ensure accountability of Crown corporations such as de Havilland, Canadair, AECL and the Canada Sports Pool Corporation. The Government simply added the Canada Council to the list as if it was in the same category. It is not.

The Canada Council is presently accountable to Parliament. It provides detailed reports on how and why its funds are disbursed to the cultural and artistic community. Its representatives are available to come before committees of the House to give explanations for their judgments and expenditures and to defend them. Under Section 22 of the Canada Council Act, the Auditor General has the authority to audit the accounts and financial transactions of the Council. This Government is not interested in accountability. It is interested in politicizing the process of the distribution of cultural funds to a greater extent, in the same way as it has politicized the funds provided to assist those Canadians who are unemployed. The Government will politicize anything it can get its hands on. To give it the legislative approval to do so would be foolhardy and wrong. The arts community recognizes this and has voiced its disapproval.

If the Government is truly interested in not controlling the funds allocated to cultural agencies and the political abuse which is attached to that, then let it introduce a Cultural Agencies Act, as was recommended by Applebaum-Hébert, which will set out procedures and guidelines for these sensitive agencies. Let the Government recognize, in proper statute, the rights and independence of all the agencies so that they cannot be tampered with in the way this Bill enables the Government to do so.

At the very least, I hope the Government will seriously consider the advisability of amending the schedule to delete reference to the Canada Council. As it stands now, Bill C-24 is inappropriate for the Canada Council. It should be amended to ensure that the independence of the Council and the arm's length principle which is so fundamental to our democracy are not compromised or infringed upon. The Canada Council should not be covered by Bill C-24.

In conclusion, I would like to refer to a commentary which was given on CBC-FM radio by my friend, Sarah Jennings, in which she pointed out:

—the Tories are generally in support of the objectives of this Bill in terms of the larger issue, which is financial accountability for these federal Crown agencies.

She indicated that the Bill must come to grips with the cultural issue. She continued:

—they're trying to pull their cultural policy together, and honestly I don't think they've even addressed themselves to the issue.

As far as Bill C-24 and the Canada Council are concerned, we most certainly are addressing ourselves to this issue.

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to speak on Bill C-24 and on the suggested amendment by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), that it be hoisted for a six-month period.

Bill C-24 purports to be a Bill which will enhance the control of government and Parliament over Crown corporations. Certainly, that in itself is laudable, given the proliferation and the record of Crown corporations to date. It is obvious that control mechanisms are sorely needed. However, the legislation which has been presented to the House does not represent an improvement to an entirely offensive situation. What we have before us is a toothless piece of legislation which will do little to bring Crown corporations under parliamentary scrutiny and control.

Given the scandalous performance of Crown corporations, it is difficult to understand why this Government does not want to make Crown corporations accountable. It is obvious that they need assistance. The de Havilland and Canadair fiascos are typical examples of why Parliament should be able to scrutinize this whimsical abuse of the public purse. When the money of the people who elected us to serve them is given to well-paid executives in the form of bonuses, something has gone awry, especially when the bonuses are given to executives of a company which has suffered catastrophic losses—losses to the taxpayers of Canada.

There are other not so well-known examples of financial surrealism. In my Province of British Columbia, forestry is the largest economic activity. It generates more direct and indirect government revenue and employment than any other sector of that economy. The wealth comes from the forests of British Columbia, which are 95 per cent owned by British Columbians. At the present time, the forestry industry in British Columbia is in a mild recovery stage.

It is not with little dismay that we find the Export Development Corporation financing forest development projects in Mexico, Peru and Poland. These developments will compete with the forest product exports of British Columbia. At a time when the British Columbia forest industry is experiencing a fragile recovery, a Crown corporation gives it a competitive slap. The money used for development in Mexico, Peru and Poland is sorely needed by the Canadian forest industry to give it the competitive edge it needs in international markets.

The list of Crown corporation shortcomings is frightfully long. I refer to these examples in order to demonstrate the necessity of accountability. Supposedly, the Government which has brought forward Bill C-24 understands the need for ministerial responsibility, control of proliferation and accountability.

In a brochure entitled New Legislative Proposals for the Control and Accountability of Crown Corporations, the Government reveals that new measures are needed to strengthen the control and accountability of Crown corporations. How does the Government think this can be achieved? It can be achieved by clarifying the roles and responsibilities of Parliament, government, boards of directors and managers of Crown corporations. The Government then decides that by amending the Financial Administration Act it can strengthen the controls and accountability of Crown corporations. Thus we are presented with Bill C-24.

On March 15, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) said that Bill C-24 would "clarify the roles and responsibilities of Parliament". When we examine the nuts and bolts of the legislation we find that the role of Parlilament is indeed clarified. The role of Parliament is to be as insufficient as it always was. Parliament will have no control whatsoever over the creation of subsidies by Crown corporations. Naturally, this is exactly the area in which we have witnessed the greatest proliferation of Crown corporations.

Bill C-24 also allows a Minister to create a Crown corporation if he or she already has the power to do so through an existing Act of Parliament. There are several instances in which this can be done. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) could incorporate new parent Crown corporations through the existing Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act or through the existing Atomic Energy Control Act. The Minister would not even have to come near Parliament if he desired to establish a new Crown corporation.

We have as well the situation where a Minister might table a special Act in Parliament in order to incorporate a Crown corporation. What a startling occurrence this would be. Parliament would actually be consulted. However, review would be limited to 30 days in committee and seven hours of debate in the House. Closure of this nature, Mr. Speaker, is tantamount to criminal. What starts as a good idea ends up being a cruel joke. Is the Government seriously going to allow only seven hours of debate on matters of such import to the people of Canada? Obviously the Government intends to treat Parliament's role as it always has—as a charade.

Another area which the Government has not come to grips with is ministerial accountability. Bill C-24 gives authority to Cabinet or to the Treasury Board. Here we have groups of Ministers who are supposed to be accountable. We will not have accountability until an individual Minister is given responsibility. It is a fact that we will not have accountability while authority rests with groups rather than with individuals. If we need proof of this, all we have to do is look at Canadair or de Havilland. When the chips were down no one was accountable.

Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act, has many more flaws than those which I have touched upon. For instance, there is an insufficient role for the boards of directors. Essentially boards will be advisory councils without the hands-on authority which is needed in the leadership of Crown corporations. To make Crown corporations efficient there has to be an onus of responsibility placed on the board of directors. Responsibility has not been the forté of this Government and Bill C-24 certainly symbolizes that fact. This Bill is supposed to correct many of the shortcomings in the relationship between Parliament and Crown corporations, but it does not. It makes a mockery of what Parliament is supposed to be. We are not dealing with a matter which has many possible directions; we are dealing with a matter which has only the right direction. Bill C-24 demonstrates that again the Government is lost.

This Bill should be hoisted for six months so that a responsible government can introduce legislation which will give Canadians confidence in how the public purse is used.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I also want to join in the debate on Bill C-24. Quite frankly, I cannot think of another Bill which demonstrates more clearly the difference between a government which has been in power too long and a Party in opposition which wants to change that government. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, if we in the Opposition had been in power 20, 30 or 40 years, with a few brief "hiccups" in history when there was a change—and in the words of Mr. Pickersgill many years ago, the Tories are like the measles; everyone has to get them every so often, but when you have recovered, put the Liberals back in power—perhaps our criticisms of the serious implications of Bill C-24 would not be as strong.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, if anyone has a disease, it is the Government across the way, and it is a lot more serious than measles. It is called "Crown corporationitis". If there is one thing at all which is perhaps the hallmark of a government which has been in power too long, it is when it believes that Crown corporations which are not accountable to the Parliament of Canada are the way to run the country.

You have sat in that Chair, Mr. Speaker, as well as other chairs in this House, and graced them with your wisdom. You have seen, as I have, how this Government has delved into the pockets of the taxpayer without accountability as to why it did so. If you wanted to be objective, Mr. Speaker—and I do not want necessarily to be objective—on that one test alone, you would agree that Crown corporationitis is a disease which Canadians have to cut out and cast out whenever they have the chance.

It was not so long ago, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister of the day on wage and income policy said to the Canadian public: "You cannot go for the Tories because 'zap' your wages are frozen, there is a hole in your pocketbook and you are going to be out on the street". Well, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-24, together with the sad record of this Government and its Crown corporations, be it de Havilland, Canadair or Air Canada, with some of its problems of political appointees in top posts, is where the taxpayers are really getting zapped. There has been $1.4 billion spent by Canadair alone without any accountability to this Parliament. It has the largest single business defalcation and deficit spending in the history of Canada.

When we in this Party talk about Bill C-24—and quite frankly, the Government thinks we have talked a little too long on the implications of this Bill—in effect, Mr. Speaker, we are talking about a parallel government. That is what Bill C-24 is; it is a government of Crown corporations. In 1962 there were 28 Crown corporations responsible for approximately $8.4 billion. In 1984 the number had grown to over 300 Crown corporations of different types of class and category. I appreciate they are not directly owned; there are joint ventures. However, there are over 315 Crown corporations now responsible for $67 billion. Just in terms of the size of the employees involved, Mr. Speaker, when I say it is a "parallel government", they now total over 260,000 as compared to the Public Service in federal Government departments which has a total of 239,000 employees, separate and apart from the Armed Services where there are another 84,000.

Bill C-24, the Crown corporations Bill, is supposed to do so much in bringing Crown corporations within the realm of Parliament. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), addressed this subject in his speech. As well, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson), in his penetrating address made to this House, admittedly a few "moons" ago—but there has, Mr. Speaker, been other business which has engaged Parliament—analyzed the principles of this Bill. Any Hon. Member, be it on the Government side or the Opposition side, who read the speech made by the Hon. Member for Calgary South would not be in favour of having this Bill go forward without serious substantive amendments, and we have not had any indication from the Government that there are going to be any serious substantive amendments when we get into committee. That is why Hon. Members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, aided and abetted from time to time by Hon. Members to the left, are speaking out on this Bill, because it is like speaking on the whole government process.

I am not going to get into the details of the lack of accountability and the fact that the Government has not learned anything from the Lambert report or the reports of the Auditor General which say, among other things, that Crown corporations must be accountable. There is a cogent paragraph in the Auditor General's report of 1982 which I quote:

> It may be helpful in visualizing the scale of the problem to think of the whole group as an enormous iceberg floating lazily in the foggy Atlantic; silent, majestic, awesome. The public tends to see only the upper portions . . . the giants like CNR, Petro-Can, CBC . . . The great bulk of the iceberg below the surface is less spectacular, less likely to attract public interest, less likely to receive the attention of Parliament, yet costly to taxpayers.

As has been said here earlier this morning, Mr. Speaker, I defy almost any Hon. Member of Parliament to name 50 of the Crown corporations, let alone attempt to name the 315; and I will not even mention the Crown corporations which were created just this year, all by Cabinet fiat. Bill C-24, Mr. Speaker, which was supposed to introduce accountability to this parallel government, which spends more money and employs more people than the regular departments of government, does not introduce that accountability. It is a charade, a mockery of the word.

I am not going to go into all the arguments which have been made earlier. I just want to review one very specific matter in the limited time allotted to me because we are under closure and we know the guillotine will fall later this afternoon. If there was any reason why Members should participate vigorously in this debate, it is the perennial one, the one which applied under the old legislation and which is continued under Bill C-24. We as Members of Parliament do not know what the top executives of Crown corporations are paid as the supposed representatives of the people. We all know what a Member of Parliament gets paid. Goodness gracious, the third item on the CBC News the other day was that some Members of Parliament did not pay their bills in the parliamentary restaurant. You can go to a first, second, third or fourth class restaurant and use some type of credit card. They were blowing up tankers in the Strait of Hormuz, there were massacres somewhere else, and the third item of business on the CBC was that credit privileges were curtailed for Members of Parliament because they were too chintzy to pay or the Sergeant-at-Arms or the Speaker had lost control. I am not going to dignify that matter by debating it here and, in effect, insulting Members of Parliament, but I can tell you that while driving through my beautiful riding there were other items more important.

At least the public know that we get paid a certain amount and we get a certain allowance, but do I know what Michael Warren gets as President of Canada Post? Do I know what my illustrious friend, the chameleon of the political walk, the Hon.

Jack Horner as he was then called, retiree Chairman of the CN, do I know what he got? Do I know what Joel Bell gets as President of CDIC?

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, since you have given me the finger salute made famous by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in Salmon Arm, although you did it just to give me a warning, I would like to read into the record a report from the Ottawa Citizen dated November 21, 1983, referring to about 40 senior executives of Crown corporations and other cabinet appointees who can be paid a maximum of $227,900 a year. That is almost as much as the Prime Minister receives, almost four times as much as an MP. It says:

> The figure, released publicly for what appears to be the first time, is much higher than previously thought and surprised the chairman of the Commons public accounts committee, charged with monitoring government spending—

This was a 264-page report dated June 30 and tabled quietly in the House of Commons. It refers to "non-classified positions". I have named some of them, such as Joel Bell, President of CDIC, Claude Taylor, President of Air Canada, Bill Hopper, Chairman of Petro-Canada, Pierre Juneau, President of the CBC, and Michael Warren, President of Canada Post. There are many others. The article goes on:

> Others in the special category include CBC executive vice-president W. T. Armstrong, Canadian Egg Marketing Agency chairman Harold Crossman, Canada Museums Construction Corp. chairman Jean Sutherland Boggs and president Hector McIntyre.

All of these people can get between $63,000 and $227,900 a year when we thought they were in the $100,000 to $125,000 range. Yet not one of them has to answer a question when they appear before a Commons committee. Until we start getting into those basics, let alone the fundamentals of the Bill, then I say Members of Parliament should talk for many moons before this Bill passes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I think it will be just as well if I put on the record, in view of the remark of the last speaker, that the Chair is trying to be helpful to Members in indicating how much time remains in their speeches.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed unfortunate that we have to consume the valuable time of this House to debate a motion the Government has introduced to prevent further debate on a much more important item of business. That is, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-24, the Government's half-hearted and dim-witted attempt to deal with the problem which has caused irreparable damage to our country over at least the past decade. That problem arises from this Government's use of Crown corporations as an excuse for its inability to deal with the affairs of the day in an open and straightforward way in the forum of the House of Commons where all the people of Canada can be witness.

Look back to the time when VIA Rail was created, Mr. Speaker. This was done through a $1 vote in this House. It was an estimate provision and therefore we could not debate all of the elements of the proposed new passenger rail service. VIA Rail resulted from an amalgamation of equipment owned by CN and CP and other regional railways. It was to create a national passenger rail system and it has lost money every year since. This was not necessarily because VIA Rail was a bad idea, but because there was no opportunity for us to determine the extent to which VIA Rail would be free to raise money in the financial markets or the degree of public subsidy it could expect in the interest of providing services designated as a public convenience and necessity. Instead, the Government arbitrarily decided to create a passenger rail corporation without five minutes' worth of reference to the duly elected representatives of the people in this House of Commons. There was no undertaking to ensure that top level expertise would be placed on the board of that corporation, people with experience which would make them proficient in the management and conduct of this rail system.

When we look at the record of many of our other Crown corporations, Mr. Speaker, we see a similar kind of history. People have been brought in for political and other reasons as chairman of a board of directors. In the private sector a board of directors is a group of people who are accountable to their shareholders. But under the Liberals a board of directors is merely a place to retire worn-out Liberals who in many cases could never get themselves elected to any office, and some who were elected but defeated and had to have a place of rest. They were put in charge of pulling the levers of power of corporations managing millions of taxpayers' dollars without reference to this Parliament.

When do we have an opportunity to debate the necessity of an annual subsidy to the CBC or other major Crown corporations? For example, Canada Post receives a subsidy which may never ever be recovered. When do Members of Parliament have an opportunity to debate the distinction between Crown corporations which serves some national purpose, some political need, as opposed to those which are competing openly with the private sector with the benefit of government financial support and no accountability to Parliament or the laws which govern their private sector counterparts? Why is it that Crown corporations are immune from the obligation to pay property taxes, for example? Why is it that Crown corporations are immune from the requirement to pay income taxes, as do the companies with which they compete?

All of these questions, Mr. Speaker, ought to be thoroughly examined in the House of Commons. I, for one, find it reprehensible, as do my colleagues, that the Government would bring in a motion to suspend debate at the second reading stage with the expectation that the Government also intends to foreclose the appearance and presentation of different perspectives at the committee stage while limiting the amount of time that the standing committee will be allowed to review this Bill.

I would like to remind Hon. Members of 1980 when the Government introduced and passed the new Canada Post Corporation Act. This was an exceptional case where a new Crown corporation was created with a reasonable amount of debate in Parliament. However, in hindsight it is not even clear that the recommendations which came from the Opposition side, the amendments which were proposed and largely ignored by the Government, would have made any difference. The Government was eliminating the title of Postmaster General to avoid the need for a responsible Minister to stand in the House and take it on the nose for all of the problems that the Canadian people were and still are experiencing with the Canadian postal service. I know that the appointed President of the Canada Post Corporation has been doing his best to sort out the mess at Canada Post. I do not believe that he has been using Parliament, the members of a standing committee or the House of Commons to assist in rectifying this difficulty.

The seriousness of the problem is outlined in a recent newspaper article which compares the Canada Post Corporation with the United States postal service which operates as a branch of the Internal Revenue Service in the U.S. In order to get the Post Office out of the hair of the politicians, the Government created a Crown corporation. These are the consequences. The deficit for the 1983 fiscal year was still $440 million. Productivity was up somewhat, but the cost of mailing a letter was to remain at 32 cents at least for the coming year. That sounds reassuring until we compare that with the situation in the United States, where, with no public funding and a 20-cent postage stamp, the American post office recorded its second consecutive year in the black with a surplus of $616 million and a productivity level 44 per cent higher than its Canadian counterpart. The U.S. postal service pays wages which, when adjusted for the differential values of the Canadian and U.S. dollars, are still 10 per cent higher than wages paid to postal staff in Canada.

Our colleagues on the Government benches tend to believe that they and their political appointees can run business better than the private sector. Why is it, then, that in the U.S. the citizen pays 20 cents to mail a letter and in Canada we pay 32 cents and absorb a deficit of close to $.5 billion annually?

The reason really has to do with the fundamental questions which are before the House at this time. They ought to be debated at much greater length than we are presently being given the opportunity to do. It really has to do with the illusion of change which the Government is trying to create by bringing a number of Bills through Parliament in a hurry before it goes out with a final gasp to meet the Canadian people and argue that it deserves another chance. It is a ruse to put this Bill before the House at the present time and then to limit debate when the Government has had 10 years to deal with this question. It is merely trying to create an illusion in the eyes of the Canadian people. As the Government has done in every previous election it has won, through sleight-of-hand and some misrepresentation it has suggested to the Canadian people that everything will be better in the future if it is re-elected.

I think the Canadian people are much brighter this time as they contemplate the position in which they will place their x on the ballot in the next election. They are going to realize that it is the same tired old Government playing the same old tricks on the Canadian people as an excuse for its inability to bring expertise and proficiency into the management of our national affairs, to deal with the tremendous wastage and incompetence of the management structures of many of our Crown corporations, and to face the question of sunset comprehensive auditing and other matters in a more serious and responsible way. I trust the Government will hear these words and allow this debate to continue, rather than putting the garrotte on us once again as it has done so often in this present session of Parliament.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to participate again in the debate on Bill C-24, an Act which allegedly would make Crown corporations accountable to Parliament. However, in the true Liberal tradition, there are escape clauses which take the teeth out of the Bill. The Government would not even accede to a six-month hoist for a meaningful discussion period to enable meaningful amendments to be brought forward.

I admit that Parliament will get a say in the creation of new parent Crown corporations, but of course the Cabinet will regulate the proliferation of Crown subsidiaries. Rather, the Cabinet will be empowered to do so. However, past experience has shown that we can expect little in the way of restraint when it comes to new opportunities to intervene in the free marketplace with yet another arm of the octopus which has become known as the Trudeau Government. The result is bankrupt Crown corporations. That is really what they are; they are propped up by government financing. In reality they are Crown corpses. The Canada Development Investment Corporation is proof enough of that.

The Auditor General calls them sub-governments. In reality they are sub-governments, sub-human Crown corpses. With a federal election looming, we can expect many more subsidiaries to be created in order to provide refuge for Liberals who are running scared and looking for that refuge. In fact, the process is already under way.

The number of Crown corporations has increased from 307 in 1981 to 336 at the present time. While the number of parent corporations has decreased from 76 to 67, the number of subsidiaries has gone up from 110 to 128. Where is the accountability? Other corporate investments have also increased, from 94 in 1981 to 112 today. The CDIC now has 88,000 employees and has a finger in everything from aircraft production to farm machinery to office technology to energy. And most of these Crown corporations are not working properly. This Bill will do absolutely nothing to control the proliferation of the kind demonstrated by the CDIC.

Of course, this is consistent with the Liberal approach to governing. Where a problem exists, they throw taxpayers' money at it. Where a problem does not exist, they create one by setting up a Crown corporation and funnelling our money into it. We end up with the same negative results and some more Crown corpses. These government creations are not accountable to Parliament now, and they will not be if this Bill ever becomes law. We intend to see that it does not, at least not in its present form. Now we have closure looming over us which limits debate to seven hours. That is some accountability! Where is the accountability of Canadair, de Havilland and Canada Post? Again, Mr. Speaker, these are Crown corpses.

The need for true accountability to this institution, which is not provided by this Bill, has been mentioned repeatedly by my colleagues throughout this debate and it cannot be stressed enough. Nowhere is the need more evident than in another Bill which is currently before the House. Bill C-32, to establish a peace institute, is an attempt to create a further Crown corporation which will be under the control of Cabinet. Cabinet will have the power to appoint directors and members, to set their fees, to decide where the institute will be located and to dictate what kind of research shall be carried out. Parliament will not have a say in these decisions. Of course, this is all in the spirit of the true Liberal tradition.

Bill C-32 is not off to a good start. Clause 4(c) states that the institute's purpose is to "encourage public discussion of international peace and security issues". The most important debate should take place right here, yet the Government is anxious to push the Bill through. Why the rush? Let me pledge here and now my personal and my Party's total support to peace. Who in their right mind would oppose peace? However, what we do oppose is an attempt to increase Cabinet control over yet another Crown corporation. Both Bill C-24 and C-32 do exactly that.

How can we trust a Cabinet that includes the likes of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan)? In a recent interview with the "Trudeau Star" he said that "I am probably responsible for more free trade than anybody". This is the same Minister that brought us Canagrex, a Crown corporation that was set up to bring about state control of the agricultural industry and to buy and sell on the open market. It can be the owner of property, a right that is denied us in the Constitution. He added that he would like to see all the big Crown corporations run in the same way as Canagrex. Heaven help the farmers! Heaven help the rest of the economy, and with the latest Crown corporation, heaven help peace.

Let me illustrate for a moment the Liberal Government's commitment to accountability in Parliament. If ever a Member could rise in his place in righteous indignation, this is the time. Again the Government has stifled debate by the use of closure on something as important as Crown corporations. Billions of taxpayers' money has gone down the drain as a result of that lack of accountability.

From 1980 to the middle of last year, the Government has used or threatened closure and time allocation 22 times. This is totally in keeping with a government that rules by Order in Council, and as mentioned by one of my colleagues, rules by fiat. Between 1969 and 1982, the Prime Minister's Government passed 39,048 Orders in Council, an average of 3,245 a year. Some accountability! In the years 1977, 1978, 1980 and 1981, there were 15,002 Orders in Council passed, an average of 3,750 a year. The Bill before us today will uphold that tradition, the corroding of free speech.

With increased accountability to Parliament, we would perhaps see less of the types of activities pointed out last week by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga). According to documents in his possession, Mr. Hopper of Petro-Canada and James Scurr, a senior vice-president, purchased used furniture and appliances from the Crown corporation at bargain basement prices. With increased accountability we would not see executives who mismanage ailing aircraft companies receiving substantial bonuses while two million Canadians are looking for work. Do we even know how much they are paid? As pointed out by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), we have no idea how much they make, except too much. Nor would we have an individual who has never been able to get elected placed in charge of a multi-billion dollar empire of state-owned companies. He is the person whose name is synonymous with a pint-sized automobile.

According to an article in The Citizen on May 18, Elizabeth Charlebois, head of the International Development Research Centre, forged her documents and will not even be fired, just asked to let go. Now they will not divulge her salary, according to Mr. Head, another Trudeau protégé. They are concerned about whether she will receive her severance pay, not about what happened to Canada and what is happening to CDIC.

I have many more comments to make about the closure aspect of this Bill and about Crown corporations in general. However, let me say in conclusion that I urge all Members to defeat this closure motion and the Crown corporations Bill. Let us restore accountability to this institution.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I wish to spend a few moments talking about four or five Crown corporations. Historically, Crown corporations have contributed a great deal to Canada and will continue to do so in the future.

Let me deal with Air Canada first. When I was preparing to come to work this morning I was reminded of the seat sale which Air Canada had last fall. Its seat sale provided many low prices which gave some Canadians the opportunity to travel at less cost. However, this year it has a $19 billion deficit which will somehow have to be made up. Inevitably the responsibility for that deficit falls on the taxpayer. As one late Member of Parliament said, Mr. Speaker, there is only one taxpayer, you and I.

The current debt faced by Air Canada as a result of management programs that were made in direct competition with other private enterprise airlines is now the responsibility of the taxpayer. It now appears that those management decisions to provide low-cost air fares is very questionable in terms of the net effect on the numbers travelling on the airline and the effect on other competitors in the air passenger travel service.

The second corporation I would like to mention is Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada has had many significant achievements in the energy sector since it became a Crown corporation. I do not want to talk about the obvious difficulties it has experienced with respect to gas stations or about its acquisition, but about the purchasing power of the federal Government.

It is clear that there is an expansion and almost an explosion of activities in terms of purchasing power at the federal Government level. People on the streets of Canada today want access to the purchases made by the Government. For instance, all federal Government employees have a Petro-Canada credit card. This means that federal Government employees who have that Petro-Canada card do not use other gas stations. The Government is using its economic force to support a Crown corporation to the disadvantage of a whole section of Canadian private enterprise represented by other gas station owners. We are not only talking about oil companies but individual gas station owners. It is another example of how a Crown corporation can have a direct impact on the livelihood and opportunities of other Canadians.

The Farm Credit Corporation involves a unique situation. Obviously, the Farm Credit Corporation, which may provide up to 47 per cent of the long-term lending in agriculture in 1985, is an institution which has served a very important role in the Canadian agricultural economy. Currently, its interest rates are approximately 14.625 per cent to 15 per cent, depending on the length of the mortgage. The point I am making is not that there is a problem with the Farm Credit Corporation in itself or that the institution should not exist, but that there should be some responsibilities on the part of the Minister if the institution is offering to lend money at that rate. That responsibility does not seem to exist now.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is saying during the leadership campaign that there should be a cap of 12 per cent on interest rates. I do not disagree with him on that. I think the cap should be a hell of a lot lower than that. The Minister is saying that and he is supposed to be responsible for the Farm Credit Corporation, but he is hiding behind some kind of nebulous legislative difficulty in terms of not taking responsibility for what the agricultural lending rates really are. If you stop to think about it, Mr. Speaker, there is a gap in the accountability, the control, or something. It is either that or someone is not telling the truth.

Fourth is AECL. It has been very clear for a number of years that AECL is a Crown corporation that has had major problems. Initially AECL was asked to do something for which it was never designed: AECL was asked to market the Candu reactor. Apart from the very obvious difficulties we really have no sales right now that are doing us any good. There are two sales in process: one in Rumania and there is one potential sale in Turkey. The bottom line of these sales has yet to be seen. These sales will probably create more problems than they will solve. Quite simply, we do not need Rumanian tractors and shoes nor do we need a lot of the things which the contratrade agreements will give us. On the other hand, if we do end up selling a reactor to Turkey, it means we have lost the control of our technology, and I do not know where that leaves the future for all of the Candu industries that depend on sales of reactors.

AECL has had a lot of difficulties. It was directed to do something for which it was not necessarily organized or intended. AECL has terrific credibility. It has many good people who can do things technically, who can do and did do the research and development on the Candu system. We have known for several years, if not longer, that the Candu system is not at this stage being developed throughout the world in a way which means giving continued solid employment opportunities for engineers and others who are working at AECL. We have not had or been given any other direction to AECL. There has been no sensitivity to what opportunities might exist for AECL or in some way to divert the excellence in engineering expertise into something that would be productive for Canada.

I see you are indicating that I have perhaps two minutes left, Mr. Speaker.

There were several other examples, Canada Post being one of them, that I would like to have touched upon. Canada Post intends to use its offices for a merchandising option involving another private enterprise which would disadvantage other similar private enterprises throughout Canada.

All of these are examples which show us the impact that Crown corporations are having in business activities throughout Canada and on our lives. It is a growing problem. It is a problem without adequate control. It does not have by anyone's standards adequate accountability. There is not the direct responsibility needed to hold Crown corporations to political accountability when we get into the upcoming election campaign. We want a Bill to accomplish that, but we do not have embodied in this Bill adequate controls to establish that responsibility.

In addition to that we have a time limitation on our debate. At the very least I would ask the Government, as this Bill goes from the House under the limitation of debate motion, to allow an adequate opportunity in committee for interested public parties to participate so as to make sure their views are known, and so that additions and deletions can be made appropriately.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, it is just before the luncheon break but I did want to participate because I have such an interested group on the Government side who I am sure will listen with some interest to my speech. I hope Members on the other side will accept the advice that I give them because my remarks and advice are meant in the interests of making this place work.

I know we are not allowed to comment on the absence or presence of Members in the House itself, but I think it is appropriate for us to mention that on this last day of debate on second reading of Bill C-24, an Act which deals with Crown corporations, it is significant that not one Member of the Government has had the courage to stand in his or her place to defend the invocation of closure on a Bill of such importance and significance to the people of Canada. Members of the Government have been timorous. They sit in their seats. They have not participated in this debate at all because there is no answer to the allegation made against the Government. The Government has used ham-handed and unnecessary devices to thwart free and democratic debate on the floor of the House of Commons.

Why is it that the Liberals are not prepared to defend the action taken on this debate, Mr. Speaker? They know there is no answer to the millions of Canadians who wonder how it can happen that two corporations wasted $5 billion of taxpayers' money. Canadair and de Havilland, between the two of them, have caused the taxpayers to lose $5 billion. People want to know why Members of Parliament are not debating the issue of Crown corporation accountability. It is a serious and important current issue which should be debated on the floor of the House of Commons. The Liberals, while they are in the process of a leadership review, do not want the people of Canada reminded that where Crown corporations are concerned the Government has been derelict in its duty. They do not want Canadians to know that the proposals the Government is bringing forward will not solve the underlying problems we have in terms of accountability. That is the reason, Mr. Speaker. It is not a question that somehow the Government wants the business of the House to go on. Liberals are afraid politically to have this matter debated publicly. Liberals do not want us to deal with Crown corporations seriatim, saying: "Here are the problems that have arisen; here is the amount of money that has been lost to the Canadian taxpayer". The Liberals do not want to hear alternatives or suggestions from the Opposition. We have made real and substantive proposals with respect to improvement of the accountability of Crown corporations.

I simply want to tell you what this Bill is all about, Mr. Speaker. One section tells it all. The Liberals say this Bill deals with the whole concept of accountability. Let me tell you how far that accountability goes. In this legislation there is provision to prevent Members of Parliament from investigating and looking at reports on the activities of Crown corporations.

Let us take a look at Clause 2.2(3) of Bill C-24 proposed by this Government. It reads:

If a committee of a House of Parliament—

Whatever that is.

—to which an order is referred pursuant to subsection (2) produces a report on the order, no motion for concurrence in the report may be moved in that House.

That is contrary to basic and fundamental principles of democracy. The Liberals are intruding on the procedures of this House of Commons which would allow Members to debate reports coming from committee stage. This is unprecedented. It is unheard of. This has never been proposed in legislation in this country before. We have the Government invoking its own form of gag of Members of the House of Commons by legislation. The Government wants us to pass this Bill on the nod without further discussion.

I will be back after lunch, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

THE STANLEY CUP

TRIBUTE TO CHAMPION EDMONTON OILERS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish there were more government Members present, but in any event it is with national pride that I salute the new Stanley Cup champions, the Edmonton Oilers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert: I am sure that I speak for all Members of the House, as well as for all citizens of Canada, particularly Albertans and especially Edmontonians.

The Oilers, displaying a new breed of hockey stars—some would say superstars—and playing their own brand of fast, high-scoring hockey, won the National Hockey League schedule going away. In the finals the Oilers dethroned one of the great teams of professional hockey, the four-time consecutive Stanley Cup winners, the New York Islanders.

All of Canada won in this series. Players from all parts of Canada participated. Indeed, I doubt if any province of Canada was not well represented by players on both teams. We also saw several new stars from Finland, Sweden, Czechoslovakia and the United States add to a changing game.

In Edmonton they talk of dynasties. We all remember the Edmonton Eskimos, five-time Grey Cup champions who yielded that throne only last year. Now come the Oilers. For how many years? Five at least! I go back further to the years before 1946 when the Edmonton Commercial Grads reigned as undisputed world basketball champions for almost 25 years, including three Olympic titles.

On a personal note, Mr. Speaker, when I assumed your chair in 1962, Mark Messier, winner of the Conn Smythe Trophy, was the youngest little fellow in the family next door.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his allotted time has expired.

S.O. 21

SHORTAGE OF PHYSIOTHERAPISTS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, at a time when there is a surplus of university and community college graduates in various professions seeking employment, there is an acute and alarming shortage in one essential profession in the paramedical field, that is physiotherapy. The physiotherapist is one of the well-trained professionals who play a key role in rehabilitation. With good background training in understanding medicine, surgery and obstetrics, and working with the appropriate doctor, physiotherapists apply physical exercises and various physical aids particularly tailored for the individual in facilitating rapid recovery in the rehabilitation of the injured, sick, and diseased. Unfortunately a number of them have elected to work in physical fitness institutions, where I believe their skill is underutilized.

I am concerned that those in post-secondary education are slow in assessing the genuine need for the services of graduates in the field of medical rehabilitation and that they are making little effort to meet this need, especially when there is such a large group, numbering in the thousands, of well motivated, qualified students ready and waiting for appropriate training.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PLIGHT OF SOVIET DISSIDENT ANDREI SAKHAROV

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, on numerous occasions in the past Hon. Members of the House of Commons have voiced our concern about the plight of Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov. We have urged the Government of the Soviet Union to relent in its continuing persecution of Mr. Sakharov and his wife, Yelena Bonner. Their situation is now critical.

Andrei Sakharov, who has been banished to internal exile, is on a prolonged hunger strike in a desperate attempt to force Soviet officials to issue an exit visa for his wife so that she may travel abroad to obtain medical treatment unavailable to her in the Soviet Union.

As seldom before, the international community has rallied to condemn the harsh treatment being accorded these two human rights activists whose lives are now in danger. Members of Congress, Parliaments, Foreign Ministers and Heads of Governments are joining in the plea to free the Sakharovs. It is critical that the Government of Canada protest officially this ongoing violation of the Helsinki Final Act and of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights by the Soviet Union, and that we further call upon the Government of that country to release the Sakharovs and allow them to emigrate to the country of their choice.

PORNOGRAPHY

CALL FOR STIFFER PENALTIES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, recent initiatives in the United States to fight pornography are welcome here, first because any crackdown on pornography in the United States will be a crackdown here since the United States is the chief source of our pornography. Second, the initiatives are laudable because they go to the heart of the matter. Increasing fines to $100,000 possible maximum for a first offence and $200,000 for a subsequent offence will really help to take the profits out of this industry, and industry is what pornography is all about.

In Canada, by comparison, the fines are at a level of paltry hundreds of dollars in recent cases. We will never deal with pornography seriously until we have substantial fines and other monetary penalties such as loss of licence. Further, the American initiative is laudable for dealing with enforcement. Federal and state authorities are getting together to seek faster methods of getting offenders into court. That is not happening in Canada. We have two committees and one subcommittee dealing with the matter.

There are matters with which Parliament could deal, such as passing amendments to the Broadcasting Act and swift passage of amendments to the obscenity provisions of the Criminal Code. We should prepare for action when the Badgley Committee and the Fraser Committee report so that the provinces can swing into action as soon as we have those recommendations so that we will have serious enforcement against pornography.

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—ESSAY CONTEST

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, one of the winning essays used to choose Ontario youth delegates to the Liberal convention has come to our attention, and I want to share it with the House. It reads:

My parents, staunch Liberals, want me to be a delegate.

They say there will be many Liberal leadership conventions over the next few years but this will be the last opportunity, in my lifetime, to see a Liberal Prime Minister in person.

I support all of John Turner's positions on bilingualism.

His clarifications have been helpful, especially if I don't like his first position on an issue. His support for Bill 101 was courageous, while he was in Quebec.

● (1410)

I saw one of his investment films, once. I was lucky; I saw it on opening night. My friends went the next day and "Gone with the Wind" was playing instead.

My father works for Canadian Pacific, just like Mr. Turner and Senator "6 & 5".

Please thank Mr. Turner for setting up this independent essay contest to select youth delegates. This is democracy.

I was concerned when Mr. Apps and Mrs. Campagnolo threatened to clean up the Liberal Party. Now that you have fixed my delegate position, I know things haven't changed.

It is signed:

"Yours truly, James Coutts".

HEALTH

BAN SOUGHT ON ALUMINUM FOOD AND BEVERAGE CONTAINERS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, one of the most insidious killers of the elderly in Canada and elsewhere in the world is the degenerative Alzheimer's disease which attacks that part of the brain needed for memory and reason. In Canada there are more than 300,000 persons with this disease, the fourth ranked cause of death among seniors.

Alzheimer's disease is a sclerosis or hardening of the blood vessels leading to the brain. This prevents the flow of a sufficient amount of oxygen to the brain. One of the findings of an ongoing research program on Alzheimer's disease is the presence of high aluminum levels in the brains of those affected.

One common source of aluminum is found in aluminum food containers, aluminum cooking pots, and aluminum utensils. As this disease may take up to 20 years to develop, Mr. Speaker, one must give serious consideration to the use of aluminum in those areas as it could in fact be a causative agent in bringing on Alzheimer's disease.

Recent media reports in Ontario indicate that the go-ahead has been given to beverage and soft drink manufacturers for beverage containers made of aluminum to replace the traditional containers made of tin. I believe that this is a serious mistake and one that should be rectified. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I call upon the Government and the Department of National Health and Welfare to take action to stop the use of aluminum in the manufacture of food and beverage containers, food utensils, and cooking pots. Such action would drastically reduce the chances of developing this dreadful disease which is debilitating to so many Canadians.

DISARMAMENT

CONDEMNATION OF ARMS RACE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the women of Greenham Common, England, are to be congratulated. Their two and a half year vigil against the Cruise missile has greatly contributed to public awareness. They, as well as hundreds of thousands of men, women and children have created a peace movement that Governments and politicians cannot ignore.

In Canada every poll indicates that the arms race is a major issue. People everywhere are protesting against the insanity of both sides. For example, Mr. Speaker, if a Hiroshima-sized atomic bomb had been exploded on a city every day since the first one exploded some 39 years ago, we would only have used up approximately 1 per cent of our explosive power. What insanity! However, it continues.

The world will be spending close a trillion dollars on arms. No wonder we have high interest rates and dozens of countries are facing bankruptcy. Like a black hole, the arms race is sucking in scare-capital while pushing the world toward nuclear extinction.

Canada continues to contribute to the insanity. Despite the recent and welcome efforts of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), we continue to help develop and produce new instruments of mass destruction. We continue to test the Cruise missile and sign secret agreements to test other weapons systems.

What is our greatest hope for ending the insanity? It is the people, Mr. Speaker. It is ordinary men and women overcoming red-baiting, despair, cynicism, and their sense of hopelessness, to march in the streets, to sign petitions, and to let their Governments and politicians know that this madness must be stopped before it destroys us all.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—CALL FOR REVIEW OF AID POLICY

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, on March 17 the Hon. Member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) told the International Conference on Latin America that the Canadian Government, in its dealings with Nicaragua, is not "mesmerized by the bogy of a 'communist menace' supposedly knocking at our back door". The Hon. Member should take note of the observations of John Fryer, the socialist President of the National Union of Provincial Government Employees, who has just returned from Nicaragua. Mr. Fryer was there to attend a peace conference sponsored by the World Federation of Trade Unions, an organization made up mainly of union bodies with communist orientation.

A Sandinista government official told Mr. Fryer that "we are Marxist-Leninists and our aim is to create a Marxist-Leninist society". Mr. Fryer pointed out that Cuban influence is pervasive. He said that the Sandinistas are close to becoming a left-wing dictatorship with little interest in creating a pluralistic society. Although he himself is a socialist, he had to obtain permission from the Cubans to visit the dock area. Are the Cubans communists? Do fish swim?

Non-government unions are outlawed and harassed in Nicaragua in the same way as Solidarity is treated in Poland. Mr. Fryer recommends that Canadian labour should initiate aid projects to democratic unions. Even he is learning. I would suggest that Canadian government aid could be given on the same basis. I urge the Government to review its policy of extending aid to dictatorships that have no interest in human rights and democracy, and to draw that to the attention of the Hon. Member for Labelle.

Oral Questions

THE STANLEY CUP

CONGRATULATIONS EXPRESSED TO CHAMPION EDMONTON OILERS

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, starting at 5 p.m. there will be a grand parade in Edmonton today, and it will be in the very heart of my constituency. Also at 5 p.m. five Long Island ducks will be presented to the mayor at City Hall.

What is being celebrated is the advent of "Oiler" mania, the recognition that in a mere five years the Grand City of Edmonton has proven to all of North America that it is indeed the hockey capital of the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yurko: Those beloved "Oilers" in Edmonton, led by a lad named Gretzky, a coach named Sather, and an owner named Pocklington, and boosted and supported by half of the population of northern Alberta, proved that they are true champions. They made those "Islanders" eat crow rather than good Alberta beef. Every one of those great "Oiler" players is to be congratulated on their great victory.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FIVE-NATION PEACE INITIATIVE

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all Members of the House were pleased to hear the news regarding the five-nation peace initiative. My question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to ascertain if the Prime Minister was personally consulted on the formation of the five-nation peace initiative announced today and, if so, could he advise the House as to his views in regard to the success and the timeliness of such an initiative?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have been in consultation with the Parliamentarians for World Order who are to be commended for having initiated this and for having approached various leaders, including myself, to see if we could come up with a common statement. I very much approved of the initiative in that, in September and October of last fall, I myself was suggesting that political leaders everywhere should follow up on their responsibilities and take a position on the subject of world peace. I suggested that all leaders should press forward as these particular leaders have done, to awaken the consciousness of political leaders everywhere to the need for putting pressure not only on the two superpowers but also on the five nuclear powers, as I myself did for much of last fall and early winter.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has indicated that he was consulted, and I am delighted to hear that. May I ask the Prime Minister if he was invited on behalf of the Government to be a signatory to the agreement, inasmuch as the main thrust of what we read this morning appears to coincide with some of the ideas that he was articulating? If he was invited to be a signatory, what was his response and the response of the Government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, at some stage I think it was expected or hoped that I would be a signatory. However, in discussing and looking at the text, it should be obvious to the Leader of the Opposition that neither I, as the Leader of the Canadian Government, nor he, as the Leader of the Opposition, could subscribe to some of the requests contained within that statement.

Obviously, I am very much in agreement with the over-all thrust and intention of the statement, and so is the Government. However, dealing with some of its specifics, I am quite sure that unless the Leader of the Official Opposition is successful in persuading President Reagan, as the main force in NATO, to change some of his policies, it would be difficult to subscribe to it. The Leader of the Opposition will be seeing President Reagan and if he can get him to accept some of these propositions, maybe all Parties in the House could proceed to come closer to accepting some of the positions in the statement.

REQUEST FOR PRESENTATION OF RESOLUTION TO PARLIAMENT

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, consistent with the Prime Minister's articulated apprehensions regarding specific elements of the resolution, with which we are not in disagreement, has he given some thought to the wording of a resolution he could present to this House, which all Parties could support, and which would endorse the thrust of such an initiative without necessarily endorsing each and every aspect? I think I mentioned in one of my earlier interventions that the strength of such an initiative would be the all-Party endorsement of it. I know that Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition would be delighted to look at any documents the Prime Minister chose to bring forward which would enhance the support for any initiative which endeavours to build a more durable peace.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the Hon. Leader of the Opposition realizes that he is perhaps a little less than completely clear when he comments on the resolution that the Parliamentarians for World Order caused to be produced. I say that he could not subscribe to it in its present form, and he nodds his head in assent.

As to the question of a resolution of this House, Mr. Speaker, he will know, and it is well known publicly, that there has been a great deal of negotiation between the Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and myself, on the possibility of putting such a resolution before the House. He knows that his Party and mine agreed on such a resolution, but the idea of unanimity of this House behind such a resolution was certainly scorched when the Leader of the New Democratic Party, who I see is not in his seat—I know we will all be happy to hear his comments on it—tabled his own requirements for supporting that resolution, and those requirements contained some of the elements which would prevent the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party from subscribing not only to the Parliamentarians for World Order resolution but any resolution which, for instance, went squarely against the two-track decision of NATO at this time.

THE ECONOMY

AVERAGE FAMILY INCOME—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF PROPOSED SALES TAX INCREASE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. He will have noted that Stats-Can revealed on Friday that average family income in Canada declined 2 per cent in real terms in 1982 as compared to 1981. That is the first time since the survey began that real family income in Canada declined for two consecutive years.

The Minister may have noted that the average income of female single parent families, the most needy, was down 7 per cent from 1981 in real terms.

In view of this battering of Canadians, which continued in 1983, and which certainly impedes any recovery, would the Minister advise the House whether the Government will postpone or eliminate the 1 per cent increase in the sales tax planned for October 1? The sales tax is the most regressive of all federal taxes. Will the Government do away with that increase, and also with the changes in income tax which will result in $7.6 billion of income being taken from Canadians in the next three years? Are Canadians not being crucified enough with these losses in real income?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, all elements in our society have shared in the restrictions and restraints which have marked the recent economic recession and period of recovery. Family income is no exception. We have seen a rapid drop in inflation in Canada, which is reflected in the statistics which the Hon. Member has cited. What we have also seen is a reduction in the growth in wage increases in Canada. For example, in the fourth quarter of 1983 over 1982 there was an increase of 0.4 per cent, a minimal increase in real wages during that period. What does that mean? It means that Canada has become more productive. We are better able to compete internationally. That in turn is reflected in our record export performance over the past year and a half. We are seeing it happen. Inflation is coming down, Canada is becoming more productive, business is going forward, and jobs are being created.

The Hon. Member opposite also wants to bear in mind that we have seen that consumer demand has led recovery and contributed to a great improvement in the balance sheets of Canadian corporations. Investment will follow that improvement as the profitability of corporations increases. I think the Member opposite is wrong to take his normal gloom and doom attitude. In fact the situation in Canada today is very promising.

Mr. Crosbie: The Minister is saying that it is a good thing that real incomes of Canadian families have dropped, it is a good thing that the income of female single parent families went down 7 per cent, and that average wages declined last year. This is a good thing and he welcomes it!

PLIGHT OF PEOPLE BELOW POVERTY LINE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the Budget forecast that this year real wages will increase 0.0 per cent. In 1982, 3.9 million Canadians lived below the poverty line, an increase of 400,000. Is it the Government's philosophy that the increase in those who live below the poverty line is a good thing because it makes Canadians more competitive? Or will the Government consider those 400,000, and the other millions whose real incomes have gone down, and eliminate the sales tax increase in October and the income tax increases which are going to harm them even more?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite must know that it is our intention, in answer to his specific question, to proceed with the increase in the sales tax. He knows perfectly well that when we announced that increase in the April, 1983, Budget we did so in full expectation that economic recovery would be under way and that the taxpayer would now be able to sustain that slight increase. We did so because the Government of Canada needs the revenue. If the Government is to maintain its policies of support for those who can least afford a recession in Canada, for those provinces in need of transfer payments, the Government must raise the necessary revenue.

Now that the economic recovery is going forward, we are satisfied that the impact of 1 percentage point increase in the sales tax will not have the deleterious effects the Hon. Member opposite imagines. On the contrary, the evidence is everywhere at hand that the economy is able to sustain that slight increase in taxation and that there will be no harmful effects of the sort that the Hon. Member so often imagines in his dark thoughts.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FIVE-NATION PEACE INITIATIVE—ROLE OF GREECE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and is a supplement to that of the Leader of the Opposition. It concerns the new peace proposal announced simultaneously by countries such as Greece, Sweden, India, Mexico, and Tanzania. The Prime Minister, is saying that he was not part of this, referred to our NATO commitments. I would like to remind him that one of the signatories to this initiative is Greece, a NATO country. The Prime Minister just recently said in a speech that NATO is a democracy and we have the right to disagree with some of the over-all initiatives. I would like to ask him why he did not consider joining with Greece in a more dramatic attempt to try to break the log-jam and seek disarmament in the world.

• (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will remember that Prime Minister Papandreou had proposed a six-month freeze on the two-track decision. This was rejected unanimously by all the other NATO members. I think it is certainly within the right of the Prime Minister of Greece, and of his Government, still to hold the belief that somehow the freeze of the deployment would have been a solution to the deployment of the SS-20s by the Soviets. However, this was not my opinion, and it was not the opinion of the other leaders of NATO who spoke on the subject.

I am not here to judge the position of the Prime Minister of Greece, who is an eminent leader and one whom I personally respect. However, I am here to state the position of the Canadian Government that, having adhered to the NATO decision in December, 1979—and I remind the House that it was a decision taken by the then Tory Government—it is a decision which our Government has decided to accept and support. That is the position. Therefore, we cannot have the latitude of the Prime Minister of Greece and still be faithful allies of NATO.

ARMS RACE EXPENDITURES—SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF RESOURCES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. I am sure he has seen the four or five page initiative by the five countries. I wonder if he can tell the House whether or not he is willing to accept some of these points and add them to his own peace proposals, such as point 4 which talks about the transferring of resources from the arms race into economic and social developments, as well as the halting of all testing production and deployment of nuclear weapons and their delivery systems. Is he willing to add some of these points to his own initiative?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the first point, Mr. Speaker, about transferring resources to the Third World, that is a point which I urged very strongly on the leaders of the Third World themselves when we convened in New Delhi last November. It is a general idea which I have also supported at the United Nations. Therefore, I have no difficulty in adding that to any House resolution.

It is a little bit extraneous to the direct question of getting the two superpowers together but it is not something to which I would object. However, when the Hon. Member goes on to ask whether I would be prepared to support and include in a resolution the idea of a freeze of deployment, he himself should realize that at the present stage of the game that is contrary to the two-track decision. I must remind the Hon. Member that the Soviets certainly were not freezing deployment when, between 1977, more or less, and the present time, they continued deploying SS-20s.

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My final supplementary question on the Prime Minister's NATO ploy is this. Since Greece was part of the initiative, and since Denmark has said no to deployment in that country, and apparently Holland is now delaying a decision to deploy the missile there, I wonder whether or not the Prime Minister might reconsider the go ahead he has given to the Americans on the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada and finally say no to the United States, in a dramatic effort to try to break that nuclear log jam?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, saying no to the United States is relatively easy. What is more difficult, to my mind, is to say no to the spirit of the two-track decision which is something which we adhered to, it is something which we hoped would lead to creative discussions between the two super powers, and which we hoped would result in a limitation of the nuclear arms race and eventual de-escalation. It did not work out that way, Mr. Speaker, and no country regrets it more than Canada. However, I am not prepared, nor is the Hon. Member's Party prepared, as I understand it, at this time, to say no to NATO. That is the question he should be asking himself.

STATISTICS CANADA

SURVEY OF FAMILY FINANCES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services who is responsible for Statistics Canada. A survey which is presently being undertaken by Statistics Canada into the debts and assets of some 15,000 households across Canada is being protested by the Consumers' Association of Canada, and by others, as a gross invasion of privacy. Would the Minister tell the House what possible reason the Government has to want to know how much money a family has in the bank, what amount of cash it has on hand in the home, what outstanding charges it has against credit cards, and what loans it has with various chartered banks or other financial institutions? More important, Mr. Speaker, who is going to have access to this information?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the answer seems obvious, and I am surprised it did not occur to the Hon. Member, considering her experience. The reason a survey is being made of the debts and assets of a sample of Canadian households across Canada is that the data thus obtained will help us to make projections on the investment capacity of Canadians as private citizens and the repercussions that will have on the economy in general. It also helps us to gauge the debt levels or savings levels of Canadians, and I think this information is also very important to people in the private sector. However, the Hon. Member ought to know that at Statistics Canada, confidentiality is the rule. Any survey of this kind is a so-called selective survey whose results are tabulated generically, and no one and no provincial or federal departments have access to the individual data provided on the questionnaires. Only generic data are available and these are released for use by the public in the private sector, or for use by federal, provincial or municipal governments.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Minister mentions confidentiality with regard to Statistics Canada. We have already seen how confidentiality can be broken as in the case, for instance, of the Minister of Finance, who used rather questionable tactics when he used personal data in another time and circumstance, personal data which were available to him.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Right on.

CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION PROVIDED BY CITIZENS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): In this case I would like to ask the Minister, since lawyers, individuals, and a number of concerned Canadians have said that they feel that individuals who give that information are going to be able to be identified by their addresses and their birth dates, what assurance has any Canadian in the face of what has happened in the past, and in the face of the abuses by Revenue Canada, that this information will really be treated in a confidential way.

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what has got into the Hon. Member this afternoon, because at Statistics Canada, confidentiality has always been the rule for all its surveys, including the Census and specific surveys like this one. I could show the Hon. Member hundreds of requests for information which I receive under the Access to Information Act and prove to her how serious we are about the confidential aspect of data we collect from Canadians.

I must say that I am very keen on the confidentiality aspect, Mr. Speaker, because if there are individual citizens or groups of citizens, as the Hon. Member seems to be inferring, who are concerned about this survey and who believe it is possible to breach confidentiality through a postal code or address or whatever the Hon. Member seems to have said, I am willing to sit down with her and listen to these individuals or groups to try and take corrective action if necessary. However, I think this is just another tempest in a teapot being served up by the other side of the House.

PENITENTIARIES

SPRINGHILL, N.S.—ESCAPE OF INMATES—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that six inmates escaped from the Springhill medium security institution on Sunday, including one inmate who was serving a sentence for murder, and the fact that only one officer who carried the keys to the compound stood between those inmates and freedom, is the Minister giving consideration to initiating a public inquiry which will allow the general public an understanding of what is happening to security in penitentiaries? This does not just affect Springhill, but it certainly affects Springhill at this moment in time.

• (1440)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to begin my answer by informing the House that two of the six inmates who escaped over the weekend have been apprehended, including the individual with the heavy sentence for the serious offence to which the Hon. Member referred. The Inspector General was sent to Nova Scotia during the weekend to conduct an investigation into what happened. That investigation may well be satisfactory. I would be glad to share its results, in so far as I can, subject to security considerations with Members of the House when I receive them to see whether any type of public inquiry is necessary for any reason.

I will remind the Hon. Member that I am appearing before the Justice Committee on Estimates today. I would be very glad to discuss the security measures at Springhill and all S-4 institutions which, in my view, are adequate.

SERIES OF INCIDENTS

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, as of this moment, as far as I know, no photographs of the four escapees who are still at large have been released to the media. Therefore there is no way for the general public to have an understanding of where those inmates are or who they are. We have seen a series of major blunders endangering the general public. With these facts in mind, I ask the Minister to reconsider an in-house inquiry which really does nothing for the general public as far as letting them know whether they are being adequately protected against these inmates. One of the escaped inmates attempted to escape only two weeks ago from the same institution. At that time he was in a compound from which he escaped this time because of his failed escape attempt two weeks ago.

If the Minister wishes to have any credibility with the general public in the areas where those penitentiaries are located, he had better call a public inquiry quickly so that the general public will believe that there is some protection available.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think it might be better to have the results of the Inspector General's investigation before deciding whether any more general public inquiry is necessary. It might be worth reminding Members of the House that, after a long, cold, Canadian winter, statistics which show escapes from penetentiaries rise every year at this time. That is not in any way to defend or condone them. However, I think it might be reassuring to the House to know that the number of escapes which have occurred this year is lower than the average of the last three or four years. I will have a more precise figure for Hon. Members. A certain proportion of escapes occurs in spite of the very best efforts of the Correctional Service of Canada.

I am also glad to remind Members that in this case over the weekend the police departments of all municipalities with which these six escaped inmates had ever been associated were warned about the escape. I know that photographs of the individuals who escaped are available in police records.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Less bars, more sunlamps.

Mr. McDermid: That is reassuring.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

THE GLOBE AND MAIL—DISCONTINUANCE OF DISTRIBUTION TO KENORA-RAINY RIVER COMMUNITIES

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It concerns The Globe and Mail, which calls itself Canada's national paper. On April 27, 1984, The Globe and Mail ordered its distributor in Winnipeg to stop distributing The Globe and Mail to communities in the constituency of Kenora-Rainy River, particularly the communities of Sioux Lookout and Red Lake. They cut it off, not because people were unwilling to pay the price of 85 cents a paper, but because the many advertisements the paper carries had no relevance in Kenora-Rainy River.

I would like the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to take under advisement the possibility of a prosecution of The Globe and Mail for having ordered its distributor not to distribute its paper in a way which is common throughout the rest of the country, which order is totally discriminatory against communities in my constituency and other small communities throughout Canada.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the gravity of the situation, though many would not, coming from that part of the country where communities are remote and are not served by newspapers. This is a very important source of information. I can guarantee the Member that I will certainly look into the matter.

EMPLOYMENT

CANADA WORKS PROJECTS—REGULATIONS GOVERNING SAFETY OF WORKERS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In our present depressed economy, more and more Canadians have to depend on government job creation projects which pay very minimal wages. In addition to being paid low wages, workers on these projects often find that they are required to do heavy and dangerous work. They lack any adequate provision for raising safety concerns or for resolving grievances.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Manly: The Conservatives might think this is funny, Mr. Speaker, but I think it is very important. Would the Minister make changes to Canada Works regulations so that all projects employing five or more workers would be required to have joint management-worker safety committees, and also some process for handling grievances?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Manly: Something better than workers going to the boss with cap in hand is required.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is quite correct. This is a very serious question. I am appalled at the lighthearted reaction of the Conservative Members. I would like to assure the hon. gentleman that I will look into his recommendation very seriously. I cannot give him an absolute commitment at this point.

Mr. McDermid: You two-faced fibber.

Mr. Crosbie: You will be on one of those projects next week.

WORKING CONDITIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on the basis of the Minister's present knowledge could he indicate to the House what protection Canada Works employees have against unsafe working conditions or unjust dismissal? For example, are project officers required to take safety conditions into account before approving applications? Do they police these conditions after applications have been approved? If workers are fired because of a dispute with an employer over safety conditions, can we be assured that they will not be discriminated against for future employment on other Canada Works projects?

Mr. McDermid: You better produce, Roberts.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has posed a variety of questions. I will look into those and give him a full and complete report as to what the criteria are and what standards are applied.

Mr. Crosbie: You look into it.

PORNOGRAPHY

UNITED STATES LEGISLATIVE ACTION—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice my question is for the Solicitor General. Yesterday the United States passed into law some measures to deal with child pornography. Has the Minister received a copy of that legislation? Is the Government proposing any kind of parallel legislation in Canada which would deal with the child pornography issue in a similar way? How soon could we expect that kind of legislation, rather than having a commission travelling across the country to hear accounts that we already know are true?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will recall that my colleague, the Minister of Justice, did introduce very strong anti-child pornography legislation into the House. It was considered by the Justice Committee of the House and did not pass. There were a number of objections to it by a number of Members. I would remind him that there are at least two commissions under way now. One is a parliamentary committee which is examining the subject. One is the report of the Badgley Commission which is expected any time now. Third, there was a commission established by the Government to look into pornography and prostitution to recommend legislation or other measures to the House which may have a broader base of support than the child pornography legislation which was brought forward to the Justice Committee which I referred to a moment ago.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer my question.

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, is the Government planning any kind of parallel moves which would track the U.S. experience and put on our Order Paper legislation which would deal with child pornography in a similar way? Estimates are that 80 per cent of child pornography material is produced in the United States. If that legislation is successful there could well be a greater flow of that material into Canada and a greater establishment of that industry in Canada. Does the Government have any immediate plan of action to deal with that, rather than any further studies?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would be rather more inclined to agree with the Member for Broadview-Greenwood who, at two o'clock today, suggested that effective measures in the United States would be beneficial in Canada rather than being detrimental in Canada.

• (1450)

In any event, we do have copies of the American legislation received in the Ministry of the Solicitor General as well as in the offices of the Minister of Justice. I have not seen it yet myself. I do not think that we ought to bring legislation forward while the committees that I have described is hard at work, but I have said enough to indicate that it is a high priority of the Government and a high priority of this House, as shown by the work of the Justice Committee. When recommendations are made, I can assure him that the Government will give them serious and urgent attention.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REDUCE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. One of his campaign promises in trying to become Prime Minister is to cap interest rates at 12 per cent. In view of the fact that he is fully in charge of the Farm Credit Corporation for which the average rate is now 15 per cent, and in the interest of good faith, would he bring interest rates down to 12 per cent in the Farm Credit Corporation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in the interest of agriculture and in the interest of good faith, which I have a lot of, we will see after June 16.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PERSIAN GULF CRISIS—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is supplementary to the question asked earlier by the Leader of the Opposition, when the Prime Minister expressed some real concern about the relations between the two superpowers.

Given the very dangerous situation that exists in the Persian Gulf, the visit last Friday from a delegation from the Gulf States, and given this dangerous scene between the two superpowers, are we taking a role in cautioning the two superpowers to be very, very careful and not to move in any overt fashion into that very dangerous situation? What is the Government proposing to do?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correctly referring to the Persian Gulf as an example of the state of tension that is dangerous to today's preservation of peace. I believe in previous weeks he and others have talked about Central America. They are certainly two examples of the very dangerous state of relations between the superpowers. That is why I again welcome the initiative of the Parliamentarians for World Order, and support that initiative by very distinguished statesmen on several continents.

The position of the Canadian Government was stated by myself several months ago as regard to the need to reduce tension. We have, of course, made repeated statements about Central America concerning the need not to supply arms from either side to that area.

As regards the Persian Gulf, I do not know if specific representations have been made. At this stage representations would more likely be made to either Iran or Iraq which are at the heart of the war there. I know that my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, did visit the area not many weeks ago to express our concerns, but after the recent events I do not know if there are any repeated expressions of concern by Canada.

PLIGHT OF SOVIET DISSIDENT ANDREI SAKHAROV

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The tragic situation of Dr. Sakharov and his wife is well known around the world. Dr. Sakharov has been exiled from Moscow. His wife, who is very ill, had been refused permission to leave the Soviet Union to get the medical attention which she cannot get there. Dr. Sakharov and his wife are now involved in a hunger strike. It is feared by many people that it will end in the death of one or both of them.

Many world leaders, including President Mitterrand of France, have called publicly on the Soviet Union to permit Mrs. Sakharov to leave the Soviet Union for the medical attention she needs. Would the Prime Minister express publicly to the Soviet Union on behalf of the Government, Parliament, and the people of Canada, the wish that they would permit Mrs. Sakharov to leave the Soviet Union?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Government did express its concerns to the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa and pleaded for compassionate treatment in this particular case of Dr. Sakharov and his wife. We have repeatedly pointed out to the Soviet Union that the spirit of the Helsinki Final Act certainly should be conducive to the Soviets treating dissidents in a manner more respectful of human liberties.

PUBLIC APPEAL FOR COMPASSION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when the Parliamentary Committee on Soviet Jewry was holding hearings, Professor Cotler of McGill University, who is a leading spokesman on human rights issues, was somewhat critical of the Canadian Government because so much of what we do is in the form of quiet diplomacy. Will the Prime Minister consider making a public appeal directly to the Leader of the Soviet Union, Mr. Chernenko, on this issue?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no more public place than the House of Commons. I hereby make a public appeal to President Chernenko to consider compassion in his treatment of Soviet citizens.

STATISTICS CANADA

FAMILY FINANCE SURVEY—POSSIBILITY OF PROSECUTIONS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services and it is supplementary to the matter raised by the Member for Kingston and the Islands. The Minister will know that a 95-year old widow, a resident of Edmonton, was asked to fill out this Orwellian style survey not long ago. I wrote to him about it. Will he tell the House now whether people who decline to answer these objectionable questions will be prosecuted for doing so?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a few more details about the survey on the distribution of wealth in Canada. The data we have at the present time go back to 1977, and it is clear that if we want to develop economic or social policies for instance, if we want to prepare new income support policies for the aged or for other groups of Canadians who do not have enough money to get by on a day-to-day basis obviously we must have a survey of this kind. In fact, the purpose of this survey is to provide new statistical data, to update the ones we already have and, which go back to 1977, so that the Government can prepare social policies, income distribution policies, policies that will provide a better response to the needs of Canadians.

[English]

BASIS FOR SURVEY

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister. I hate to repeat the question, but it was quite simple. Do Canadian citizens who refuse to respond to this unconscionable intrusion of their privacy have to contend with the threat of prosecution by the Minister, or is this type of survey being conducted on a voluntary basis?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am very surprised that a Member of this House should ask me for permission to break the law!

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

ACCESS TO MEDICAL RECORDS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I will direct my question to the Solicitor General. The Minister will know that Bill C-9, the security Bill, is before committee and that concerns have been expressed regarding provisions in that Bill, specifically the demands for medical records, or information contained in medical records. The Canadian Medical Association just recently repeated its concern about the provisions in Bill C-9. Has he discussed any amendments to those Clauses with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and is he or she proposing any amendments to deal with that difficulty?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have not discussed amendments to that Clause with my colleague, but I have invited members of the committee to propose amendments. I have undertaken to give serious consideration to them.

In the case of access to medical records, I remind the Hon. Member that the McDonald Commission, after having studied national security, recommended that such access should be provided under a warrant procedure. That is precisely what this legislation recommends, implementing the report of the McDonald Commission in that regard. I would also inform the Hon. Member that I gave evidence before the committee the last day of an actual case that was solved by access to the medical records of a Canadian. It occurred during the early 1970s, but I gave details of it to the committee to show that access to the medical records under proper safeguards provided in this legislation—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Once every 20 years. Not bad.

Mr. Kaplan: —can be a valuable asset from the point of view of protecting our national security. I know a delicate balance has to be struck between effective national security and the protection of privacy and the civil liberties of Canadians. I have indicated that very strong safeguards are provided to ensure this right of access will not be abused but that it will be carefully controlled.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EJECTION OF LANDED IMMIGRANT TO UNITED STATES

Mr. John Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Prime Minister will know that a week ago a Canadian landed immigrant was taken by Vancouver police across the Canada-U.S. border in British Columbia, where he was then picked up by American police for matters which were pending in the United States. Can the Prime Minister indicate in this House what report the Government has on this incident, and to what degree there are communications between the Canadian Government and the United States Government with respect to it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I confess I have not heard of this incident, but I will take the Hon. Member's question as notice and refer it to the Minister.

ESTIMATES

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTER OF ENERGY AT COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On Friday the Minister for External Relations (Mr. Pepin) answered a question of mine, and indicated that he would get back with an answer today, as to whether or not the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) would be showing up before a committee. Is the Government prepared to answer that question?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has not raised a point of order. I suggest he raise the question again during Question Period tomorrow.

MS. McDONALD—FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY QUOTAS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition on behalf of a number of footwear workers in my constituency of Broadview-Greenwood who are concerned with the lapse of quotas which will occur in November if they are not extended. This will result in a loss of a large number of jobs.

Whereby the undersigned petitioners call upon Parliament to extend the footwear quotas and examine the problems facing the footwear industry to allow Canadian industry to become more competitive and thus salvage jobs and create new ones.

MR. McKINNON—PENALTIES FOR DRUNK DRIVING

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of several hundred residents of my constituency. The petitioners, residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that there is an urgent need to enact legislation against drinking and driving.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates; and on the amendment of Mr. Crosbie (p. 3688).

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I was saying before lunch how reprehensible this tactic of closure is at any time and that we in the Official Opposition feel very strongly when important issues such as accountability of Crown corporations are not debated on the floor of the House of Commons. We have two examples of Crown corporations, Canadair and de Havilland, which have spilled $5 billion of taxpayers' money. This matter is not being addressed fully on the floor of the House of Commons and it is a sorry day for democracy in Canada.

It is not as if we in the Opposition are without specific proposals concerning this legislation. Let me outline them to members of the Government who care to listen. They have not participated in this debate at all. They care not, nor are they able to defend the Government in its imposition of closure. They have been silent seals over there unable to speak because they know they are on the wrong side of this issue.

We have some specific recommendations to make. Our Party called upon a return to a system of effective and individual ministerial responsibility. The legislation before us, Bill C-24, gives authority to be exercised by Cabinet or by Treasury Board. There is no one Minister really responsible. This leads to situations such as Canadair where no Minister will step forward and take the blame for any fiasco that occurs.

My Party believes there should be a classification system for Crown corporations based on the extent of a corporation's reliance on government financing and its role in implementing public policy objectives. We believe there should be stringent measures to restrict new incorporations and the acquisition of Crown corporations and their subsidiaries. We believe that new Crown corporations should be created only by a special Act of Parliament.

The Government has responded that the Government does not need approval for the creation of a Crown corporation if it already has that power under an existing Act of Parliament. Under the Government's proposal, Parliament has no control whatsoever over the creation of subsidiaries to Crown corporations.

Under the provisions of this Bill, a Minister can table a special Bill to create a Crown corporation. Parliamentary review will be limited to 30 days in committee and seven hours of House debate. We have closure imposed today, Mr. Speaker, but in Bill C-24 we have built-in closure, the shutting down of free and democratic discussion on the floor of the House of Commons.

The Progressive Conservative Party says that there must be clarification of the role of the Auditor General and of his relationship with private sector auditors. Under this Bill Cabinet appoints the auditors for the corporation, not the board of directors.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling that I have two minutes remaining. I have many, many specific proposals that I want to put forward to Government Members so they can see how important issues are being thwarted by this closure motion on the part of the Government. We in the Progressive Conservative Party say that there must be an improved accounting procedure to bring accounting practices for Crown corporations into line with those used in the private sector.

We say there must be a clarification of the roles and responsibilities of the directors of Crown corporations. The Government's response under this legislation makes the board of directors a mere advisory panel. I will give you examples, Mr. Speaker. First, the Cabinet appoints the chief executive officer and the chairman of the board. These are political appointments. Second, in some cases, such as Canada Post and CMHC, the Cabinet can appoint not only the chief executive officer, chairman of the board, but also vice-presidents and other lesser management officials. The Cabinet, of course, appoints the auditor. The board of directors, under this proposal by the Government, are without power. They are simply ripe for political intervention and political patronage, the mainstream of the Liberal Party, which will be brought to an end after the next election. My Party feels that the accountability of Crown corporations is an important issue.

In the two minutes remaining I simply want to say that we resent very much the high-handed manner in which the Government has used the device of closure to close down debate on the floor of the House of Commons. It is a demonstration of its mala fide with respect to a very important issue for the average citizen of Canada as well as for the future well-being of our country.

In conclusion, we can ill afford Crown corporations putting us into a situation of losing more money than the combined budgets of the Provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with my illustrious House Leader, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and indicate the same reaction to this closure motion. Indeed, he indicated that it will affect every aspect of the Bill. In other words, the Government is gagging Parliament and preventing it from having the opportunity to debate in a useful manner some very necessary changes to the over-all system of Crown corporations in the country. Today they employ more people than the Public Service of Canada. They have run up horrendous debts, debts which are well beyond the comprehension of any Canadian businessman. There is no way any business in the private sector, including Dome Petroleum, could comprehend the magnitude of the debt. I am never sure whether or not Dome Petroleum is a Crown corporation. Certainly the way it lost money would indicate that there had been government involvement. It was about as competent in its operations as Canadair and de Havilland.

If Parliament is to have some control over the proliferation of Crown corporations and all other aspects of Crown corporations, such as the chairmen of boards of directors, we require more time to discuss and debate the issue, so that the general public is made aware of the horrendous mistakes of Crown corporations and they are eliminated once and for all. Also we have to assure the general public that there are qualifications other than being a Grit in order to become a director of a Crown corporation. This appears to be the first, last and only prerequisite for most Crown corporations which are in existence at the present time.

We as a nation cannot afford the luxury of Crown corporations being involved in areas where they have proven that they are incompetent, inefficient and costly from the point of view of taxpayers. How can we continue a bail-out proposition which not only results in horrendous deficit situations in Crown corporations but causes the responsible Minister in the other place to indicate that we will be faced with the same situation between now and 1990? The taxpayers of the country are not being given an opportunity to make a judgment on whether or not these companies should be allowed to continue for that period of time, yet they carry the bill. However, that is the situation.

There is every indication that we as a Party will be the government of the country before 1984 has come to an end. Perhaps it would be in our interests as a Party to continue with the rules of the "just society"—that is, just for the Grits—as far as appointments to directorships of Crown corporations are concerned. We are not asking for that. We are asking for more formalized rules now to assure taxpayers that what they have been putting up with will not continue ad infinitum. This is exactly what will happen unless we have a better Bill than the one before us now. In its present form Bill C-24 does not do anything for anyone.

The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) moved that the Bill be not now read a second time but that it be read six months hence. That amendment is absolutely correct. This Bill may just as well not pass Parliament at all because it does nothing for the taxpayers of the nation. It does not assure them that there will be any additional guarantee of protection of their tax dollars than already exists.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What do they have to hide?

Mr. Coates: They are trying to hide the minimal number of Grits left on those boards. They are trying to protect them so that they will have somebody supporting them come the next election. The numbers are becoming less and less. They are hoping for a cadre, even though it will be a small one, to follow them into the next general election.

If the situation in terms of Crown corporations is not rectified now, it will be different when we become the government of the country. We will impose some responsibility not only upon the big losers but upon Crown corporations which are involved in the business sector and are competing against individual taxpayers. Crown corporations have special incentives available to them. They do not have to make profits. They do not have to pay taxes. They do not have to do what individual free enterprisers have to do, yet they are in competition.

We require a system whereby we could phase out and put to bed many Crown corporations which are really useless money losers and interferers in the private sector, the driving force behind the production of new jobs and opportunities for Canadians. At this moment in time many Canadians have no hope. They have nothing more than LIP or some other programs conceived by the Government which gives only one guarantee to the individuals involved—that they will be part of the UIC syndrome for the rest of their natural lives. That is not good enough for Canadians.

Generally speaking, we require control over Crown corporations. Also we require some rules and regulations which guarantee Canadian taxpayers that there will no longer be the runaway deficit situations that existed in Canadair and de Havilland. Canadair was able to run up a $1.4 billion deficit in one year, and the deficit of de Havilland was half a billion dollars. It looked good in comparison with Canadair but it looked bad in comparison with any other situation in the country. It is very difficult to change the mind of government which has piled up one horrendous billion dollar deficit after another. At this stage in our history it is something like $30 billion and only one Liberal leadership candidate, the gentleman who is not now a Member of the House of Commons, is talking in airy-fairy terms about cutting the deficit by half without being able to give us any idea how that would be achieved. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that if that particular leadership candidate were to look at the Crown corporation situation in the country, he could very easily find a method to halve or even eliminate much of the deficit that the Canadian taxpayers is facing and that all Canadians will be facing in the years ahead. This could be done by putting some business sense back into the Government of Canada. This business sense certainly has not existed in the last decade and I am afraid that it has not existed for almost two decades.

The imposition of closure on this Bill just reinforces the fact that this legislation is not necessary and should not be allowed to be passed by Parliament at this point in time. I support the Hon. Member for St. John's West who proposed the amendment that we are debating now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain).

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on a point of order?

Mr. Foster: No, Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to be recognized.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, this is the second time that I have been given the privilege of rising in this House to speak against this Bill. Bill C-24, which is a Bill to amend the Financial Administration Act with respect to Crown corporations, is a legislative initiative taken in a subject area that is dominant in the minds of all Canadians and particularly in the minds of those involved in the economic scene.

What is really astonishing is that the Government opposite wants to invoke closure on a debate that is so important that it has ramifications on economic, social and numerous other aspects of the country. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has accused the people on this side of the House of delaying tactics. These are not delaying tactics, Mr. Speaker. We are carrying out our responsibility as we should against bad legislation.

Crown corporations have played a very large role in the economic, social and cultural development of Canada. In fact, in recent years the Liberal Government opposite has allowed the Crown corporation phenomenon to manifest itself into an economic monster that is uncontrolled in spending, is self-reproducing and is lacking any accountability to Parliament or to the people of Canada.

When most Canadians think of Crown corporations, they think of Air Canada, CBC and Petro-Canada. How many Canadians know the real extent of Crown corporation infestation into the private sector of our economy? The Crown corporations disease afflicts our economy like a horrible cancer. The Auditor General compared the proliferation of Crown corporations to an enormous iceberg floating lazily in the foggy Atlantic. I say that these corporations are like Titanics. They should be sinking but they are being propped up at the expense of Canadians.

How many Members opposite actually know how many Crown corporations exist? We have heard estimates of 400 or more, Mr. Speaker. How can it be that we must simply estimate the number of Crown corporations? Where is the control when we as parliamentarians do not even have an accurate count? We cannot get an accurate count, Mr. Speaker, and that is why we oppose Bill C-24 in its present state. The secretive, corrupt Government opposite wants to shroud this figure.

If Canadians really knew the extent of the proliferation of Crown corporations, they would be outraged. More significantly, if Canadians knew the real financial dilemma of the Crown corporation monster, there would be rioting in the streets. The Liberal Government opposite has mortgaged our nation's future and hidden the debt among the financial confusion-illusion of Crown corporations.

Bill C-24 does nothing to improve the situation. In fact, this Bill simply gives more decision-making power to the Government and more specifically to the Cabinet. This Bill is not as dangerous by what it clearly spells out as it is by what it does not clearly spell out. Every clause of the Bill which deals with substantive powers designates regulation-making authority to Cabinet. The Government does not want Parliament to see the powers that it has. It would rather hide these powers from the people.

In his opening remarks on Bill C-24, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) stated:

> This Bill gives huge regulation-making powers to the Government. As such, it is typical of this Government's excessive desire for secrecy and unbounded administrative discretion in running the affairs of government, insulated from any parliamentary or public scrutiny and control.

The desire to maintain the secrecy of incompetence is clearly defined by the Minister responsible for the CDIC, an appointment from the other place, the Minister of State for Social Development who denounced the exposure of a further loss by de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited of another $313 million by 1988. This situation is clearly defined in the May 14 issue of Maclean's magazine. Because of this exposure which has made it possible for Canadians to be told what they should know, the Minister is requesting an RCMP investigation into the affair. That is totally disgusting, Mr. Speaker. Here again, he is trying to conceal the real story from Canadians.

This clearly points out the corruption of the Government opposite. It wants to hide its mismanagement. It wants to increase the deficit and does not want to be accountable. It even saw fit to give $155,000 in bonuses to the incompetents who run some of these Crown corporations. The Government is deceiving Canadians today and stealing the future of young Canadians by creating a debt that will take generations to remove.

Government Members are the mismanagers of this century. They speak of technology. Yes, we do want new technology, Mr. Speaker, but at what expense? They are trying to compete in an area in which they are totally outclassed. Let us develop our new technologies in areas we know best, like agriculture and forestry. Let us develop technology where we have the edge and not where we are trailing. We would like to protect jobs, Mr. Speaker, but mismanagement by Government Members along with their inability to cope with the situation will lead to the loss of jobs.

I would like to speak briefly on something about which the Government has not shown that it knows very much, and that is accountability. Accountability is what Bill C-24 is purporting to bring to the Canadian scene. This Bill, however, is a continuation of the horror story of Crown corporation mismanagement. The Auditor General has pointed this out but the Government opposite simply ignores him.

Yes, we are losing credibility on the world scene because of the Government's gross mismanagement. Devalued dollars and high interest rates are all part of the Liberals' disastrous policies and programs. Bill C-24 in its present state is a continuation of those programs.

Under this legislation, the Cabinet will be given the power to appoint the chief executive officers of Crown corporations. Boards of directors will be transformed into some kind of powerless advisory boards. This is simply designed to allow the patronage treadmill, powered by the Liberal Party, to run on. The Liberal Government has used Crown corporations as havens for all of its flacks, hacks and hit-men. Bill C-24 does nothing to control these little piglets who are at the Liberal trough.

In closing, as the newest Member of this House and one who has just come out of the business world and has had to face high interest rates and knows what businesspeople are still facing, I would like to say that this Bill does nothing more than add to the dilemma. We must defeat this Bill at any cost.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the chance to say a few words in the debate this afternoon on Bill C-24. Second reading is usually a time to consider the general principles of a Bill. Prior to today's sitting, the House has spent 23.5 hours on the Bill, which represents approximately six sitting days; perhaps seven days if we count the debate on time allocation. By my count, over 100 speakers from both sides of the House have contributed to the debate. Yet, opposition Members argue that we should spend more and more time on this Bill. It would seem to me that we have gone beyond the stage of second reading and approval in principle. We must get the Bill into committee for detailed study. I hope we will be doing that very shortly, after the vote this afternoon. Surely endless and interminable debate at second reading when amendments cannot be made, with the exception of the amendment which we are debating now, the six-month hoist, is a useless exercise. We need to get into detailed study of this Bill at committee stage.

I heard the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan), as well as the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) ask how many Crown corporations are there. They suggested the Government will not reveal this. At this time I would like to point out to the House, and especially to Members opposite, that on May 8 the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) issued a booklet to every Member of Parliament and to the general public entitled, Crown Corporations and Other Canadian Government Corporate Interests. The booklet—and every Member should take the time to read it—reveals the name of each company, the address of its head office, the name of the parent company, or of the Minister through which it reports to Parliament, because some companies are entities which are similar to government departments. The booklet also provides the year in which the company was incorporated, its statutory authority, the fiscal year-end of the corporation, the name of its auditor and a description of its mandate. If Hon. Members would take the time to read this booklet—

Mr. Mazankowski: How many are there?

Mr. Foster: It is issued to every Member, including the Hon. Member opposite.

Mr. Mazankowski: I have it.

Mr. Foster: Well, all you have to do is look at page 3 and you will see that there are 67 parent corporations and 127 subsidiaries. As well, there are many mixed and joint ventures. If the Hon. Member who is interjecting took the time to think of large integrated companies such as PetroCan, Air Canada and CN, he would realize that it is much more practical for large commercial enterprises to have subsidiaries to oversee specific projects. PetroCan is involved in dozens and dozens of joint ventures in which there is federal Government investment, but it is often a minority position dealing with exploration and drilling for oil. Hon. Members who are concerned about this issue should carefully read the documents which they have in their offices.

Another issue which has often been raised by the Opposition is the question of the independence and the integrity of cultural corporations such as the CBC, the National Film Board, the Canadian Film Development Corporation and the Canada Council. The Bill clearly spells out that commercial corporations will not be subjected to government directives with regard to their programs, the people they finance or the people whom they assist in the arts. Yet, this is constantly raised as a big issue. When the Bill gets to committee stage, I think these Members should come to the committee, but first they should read the Bill and be sure in their own minds that in fact it does exempt those cultural organizations from directives and regulations.

We should stop and think what the Bill really does. It has been spelled out many times by Members from this side, that clearly it clarifies the role of government, of Parliament, of the Minister responsible for the individual Crown corporation, the role of the board of directors and the general management of Crown corporations. The schedules to the Bill set out a regime for the definition of Crown corporations. Schedule C, Part I, sets out the Crown corporations which require parliamentary appropriations and which are generally not in competition with the marketplace. Schedule C, Part II, sets out Crown corporations such as PetroCan, CN and Air Canada, in which most of the subsidiaries are found. That is logical and it is to be expected. They are not dependent on parliamentary appropriations. So, there is a logical regime for identifying the various classes of Crown corporations.

This Bill gives Parliament the role of authorizing the creation of a directly held Crown corporation—that is a parent Crown corporation—and to change existing mandates. In other words, if an existing Crown corporation wants to change its mandate and do things which are not now authorized by its Act of Parliament, it would have to come back to Parliament to make those changes. As well, Crown corporations which are to be disposed of, will have to be disposed of by an Act of Parliament. The Bill provides for parliamentary control of Crown corporations through appropriations. It provides two regimes for the establishment of Crown corporations. One is through the Canada Business Corporations Act. That Act would not only regulate the establishment of the corporation, but it would bring a resolution before the House which would outline what the powers and the prerogatives of that corporation would be. It provides for 30 days of study in committee and another seven hours of debate in the House. As well, Crown corporations could be established in the future by a special Act of Parliament, as were Petro-Can, Canagrex, and other Crown corporations which have been established in the last three or four years. The Bill gives Parliament direct control over the establishment of new parent Crown corporations.

One of the most important parts of the Bill is that Parliament would have a continuous flow of pertinent information laid before it. If Members opposite had read the Bill they would have realized this. The information would be a summary of the corporate plans, including the operating and capital budgets, annual reports, and directives to Crown corporations, which would be tabled every year. A consolidated report by the President of the Treasury Board outlining the operations of all Crown corporations would also be placed before Parliament. These reports would automatically be referred to the standing committees.

This Bill goes a long way in answering many of the complaints which have in the past been put before the House by the Opposition, by the Auditor General and by others. The President of the Treasury Board and myself, as his Parliamentary Secretary, have made it clear that we are anxious to move on to committee stage. We are anxious to hear recommendations and suggestions to strengthen and make the Bill more effective in controlling Crown corporations. I hope that we will be doing that after the vote later this afternoon.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member who preceded me in debate, and I hoped he would specifically document the number of Crown corporations which have been included in the booklet to which he referred. I believe it is quite apparent that things have got out of control when one looks at that document which was released.

It is amazing, Mr. Speaker, that whenever this Government brings in a piece of legislation which is controversial and inadequate, rather than dealing with those inadequacies and controversies it simply stonewalls, runs for cover and moves closure. There are obviously some defects and major deficiencies in this piece of legislation. I sat in the House last Friday, Mr. Speaker, and you were here when we passed four or five very significant pieces of legislation. They were debated and dealt with at all stages. The fact of the matter is that they were not controversial. This Bill is controversial because it is insufficient to meet the objectives which it purports to meet, namely, the strengthening of the control and accountability of Crown corporations. This Bill does not meet those objectives. With all the exemptions and regulations which are attached thereto, it is clearly ineffective in fulfilling those objectives.

I believe the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) when he spoke on this piece of legislation called this Bill completely insufficient and irresponsible. He went on to point out that while it covers the main Crown corporations and their subsidiaries, of which there are now 195, the legislation does not cover the 112 Crown corporations which are mixed joint enterprises and their subsidiaries. I repeat, this legislation does not cover 112 mixed enterprises and their subsidiaries. Also, with its regulations and exemptions there are enough loopholes in this legislation to drive a truck through. This Bill will not achieve the desired objectives we all want in this House.

This Bill clearly demonstrates a lack of will and desire on the part of the Government to deal effectively with Crown corporations. It wants this legislation confused. It wants a situation or environment where there can be manipulation and ballyhoo. That is really all part of this Government's whole claim to fame. With the loopholes included in this legislation, Mr. Speaker, I tell you that I cannot see any sizeable improvement in the control and accountability of Crown corporations. It has really missed the boat. I believe the current situation as it relates to Crown corporations in Canada was well outlined in a Globe and Mail article on May 7, 1983, written by Judy Steed, and I quote:

> By and large, most of the Crowns are poorly managed, drawing on Government money as if it's a bottomless pit, responsible to ministers who don't know what they're doing, with boards of directors stacked with patronage appointments.

I do not see anything in this Bill which would change my mind about that very accurate assessment of the way things are right now.

The Auditor General has pointed out that the proliferation of Crown corporations, their subsidiaries, the subsidiaries of those subsidiaries, the mixed enterprises and their subsidiaries, is really tantamount to a form of subgovernment with no effective parliamentary control.

In the press release issued by the President of the Treasury Board on March 15, he outlined basically the objectives. The first objective was that Parliament would be required to approve the creation, mandate and financing of a parent Crown corporation. I would like to deal with that, Mr. Speaker, because I believe this Government is not really serious in this regard.

VIA rail was enacted with a stroke of the pen by a $1 item in the Appropriations Act in 1977. Literally everyone in this country has said that VIA rail needs a legislative mandate. It needs a legislative framework. It needs to know what is its mandate. When we engaged in the task force on rail passenger service after the 20 per cent unilateral cutback, we recommended that VIA rail legislation be brought before this House of Commons forthwith. As a matter of fact, I will quote the third recommendation of the Senate which was engaged in a very extensive review of the operations of VIA rail as follows:

The Committee recommends that an enactment providing a clear and all encompassing legislative framework for VIA Rail Canada Inc., and in consequence for passenger rail service in this country is an essential requirement.

This has been going on since 1977, yet these recommendations have fallen on deaf ears. The report of the Standing Committee on Transportation which was presented to this House on April 17, 1984, had this to say:

From the point of view of the Committee, it is incomprehensible that seven years have elapsed since VIA came into existence without the Government's taking any legislative action to confer a statutory mandate upon it. The Committee believes that the absence of a mandate has jeopardized the functioning of VIA and this, combined with the financial planning difficulties resulting from Costing Order No. R-6313, makes very difficult future planning by VIA to achieve a viable passenger rail service.

No one in this country, Mr. Speaker, denies the fact that we need a good rail passenger system. However, everyone is crying for a legislative mandate which would allow VIA rail to function in a businesslike manner. This Government, however, refuses to give it this mandate. It comes on with a piece of legislation which really says, "From now on, trust us. We are going to incorporate the kind of legislation necessary so that we will be forced to legislate any Crown corporations which we want to bring into existence". I would give the Government full credit if it were to bring forward a new VIA rail act to this House of Commons. I know it has been drafted on many occasions, yet the Government refuses to do so.

I would like to deal just briefly with Petro-Canada. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, when we were debating Petro-Canada, whether they would have done so, because the raison d'être for creation of Petro-Canada International. I doubt very much whether they would have done so, because the raison d'être for Petro-Canada at the time of debate was quite different than what in fact has occurred in reality. Today, Mr. Speaker, there are some 75 subsidiaries and joint enterprises functioning under Petro-Canada. They multiply like rabbits. It is incredible.

I would like to deal just briefly with another very important concern I have, a concern I am sure is shared by Hon. Members opposite. It is with respect to the responsibility of a Minister in so far as the discharge of his mandate under legislation, and I refer here to the National Transportation Act, by which it is the responsibility of the Minister of Transport to ensure that we have a sound, effective and efficient transportation system in this country. On the other hand he has a mandate to see that Air Canada, in this case a Crown corporation, functions in a proper fashion, ensuring that the best interests of Air Canada are served.

We have a situation now, Mr. Speaker, with the policy of deregulation announced by the Minister of Transport where there is some very real potential for conflict. As a matter of fact, we now have the Minister suggesting that he is going to instruct Air Canada to refrain from competitive pricing and scheduling practices which are not also engaged in by privately owned carriers. I see that, Mr. Speaker, as a direct conflict to the policy objective which he has enunciated, that is, to provide consumers with a wider range of price-service options better adapted to their differing needs; to invigorate the industry; to promote national integration through increased domestic air travel; to improve the airline industries' efficiency and productivity and, of course, to bring down prices for the consumer.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that during the course of the committee hearings the potential conflict of the Minister, when he is carrying out the provisions of a broad act, such as the National Transportation Act, as compared to the responsibilities he must undertake in the discharge as the shareholder of a Crown corporation like Air Canada, will be examined and explored. I think this is an area that could cause some confusion. It certainly has the potential for conflict. The Standing Committee on Transport is now seized with the responsibility of dealing with this issue, and I would think it most important that this avenue be explored.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, when Bill C-24 was initially subjected to time limitation, I had an opportunity to make some comments of a very brief nature with respect to the Bill and my opposition to it. I welcome this opportunity to deal with the motion brought on by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) which has the effect, if passed, of delaying second reading of Bill C-24 for a sufficient period of time that, under normal circumstances, would permit this House to experience an election. That would naturally obviate the need for the passage of this legislation.

It should be clearly apparent to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House generally, that my colleagues and I have demonstrated our revulsion to this particular piece of legislation. I listened with some interest to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) who, as have some of his colleagues previously, commented that the debate on second reading was a useless exercise, and then proceeded to participate in the debate. If indeed speaking on second reading is useless, then I wonder why we bother with it at all? In the name of expediency I can well see this Liberal administration deciding that debate in itself is a waste of time and something to be discouraged and eliminated. After all, if we did not have to confront the public, if Members were whipped into shape so they all said the same thing, nothing could leak out to the public, and the media would not have an opportunity to deal with some of the problems confronting society and, in particular, this Government.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I reject out of hand any suggestion that speaking in this House is a useless exercise. In the event that there are other Liberal Members of Parliament who intend to speak further on this matter, they will hopefully reflect upon the logical conclusion that should be drawn from comments and urgings of that nature. The logical conclusion ought well to be that their services here may be eliminated if we do not have to speak at all. I know they say that we shall go into committee and that in committee we shall deal clause by clause with every provision of this Bill in an astute and reasonable fashion. It so happens, Mr. Speaker, that we have participated in that process, away from the television cameras mind you, and we know that what the Government does in this House with respect to time allocation or closure is done in Committee through a voting process rapidly undertaken with respect to each individual clause of the Bill. There is no point in trying to deceive anyone as to what ultimately will happen. The Government Members will have their instructions and do as they are told. The senior public servants have determined that this legislation is exactly what they want, and their minions will carry out their will.

The legislation grants to the Government, through order in council in particular, the control of Crown corporations, those marvellous instruments whereby this Liberal administration has been able to create sinecures for their great friends while robbing the treasury and reaching into the pockets of average Canadians. It is principally those two concerns that lead my colleagues and I to oppose this Bill so vigorously. I know the purpose of the Bill is spelled out as being to control Crown corporations. Clause 1 says that, but then it proceeds to grant the control of Crown corporations to Governor-in-Council. The Governor-in-Council shall do this and do that and Parliament shall do very little.

The last time I spoke on this Bill, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned that if it is looked at as establishing some form of accountability, one must ask: "Accountable to whom if not to Parliament? Accountable to the Governor-in-Council". Therein will lie the power of appointment and the fixing of salaries.

It is particularly interesting to note that the Government pamphlet on Crown corporations and other Government controlled corporate interests, published in March of 1984, lists a very significant number of features which apply to Crown corporations, except the salaries of the senior officers thereof. We are told that all of that information is secret and sacrosanct. It must be kept confidential. I ask why? Would it alarm the public to know what some of the senior officers of these Crown corporations, reaching into the public treasury and the pockets of Canadians, draw in salary for badly administering the affairs of the corporations themselves?

One great problem that surely cannot escape the attention of Liberal Members of this House is that there is no incentive to be productive or cut costs. There is no incentive to treat the assets of these corporations with the same attention and care that the individual directors would give to their own affairs. That is because there is no beneficial interest other than in the salaries which are paid to the senior bureaucrats, these quasi-bureaucrats appointed by Governor-in-Council to positions at salaries that could reach $227,900 a year. That, of course, is subject to bonus increases.

While we heard of the financial agonies suffered by Canadair and de Havilland, we also learned that certain officers of those aviation companies were drawing bonuses of over $115,000. What were they for, for producing losses? The answer, I suppose, by Government officials, is that in the event those bonuses were not paid those losses would have been greater. Very clearly, Mr. Speaker, when a Crown corporation competes with the private sector there is no stimulus or motivation to create the kind of profit we expect from the private sector. Those private sector profits generate the wealth which permits taxes to be imposed and services to be rendered by Government. These competing private sector Crown corporations, rather than contributing to the wealth and growth of this nation, are dragging it down. It is because of that, and the sinecure appointments, that we are most concerned about having real scrutiny and real accountability to this place, and that is absent from this Bill.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is not with great pleasure that I rise to speak for the second time on this Bill. The Liberal Party is indulging in a process of holding back some good legislation of which both sides of this House are in favour. In fact we are very much in favour of having a Bill to increase the Guaranteed Income Supplement for single old age pensioners come forward. However, I believe the Government now intends to allow that to drag over to the end of the session in case we have an election, at which time it will get sanctimonious as can be and pretend it was someone else's fault that we did not pass that Bill. We are very keen to pass it at any time.

This Bill is about Crown corporations. I have done some reading about the history of Crown corporations in Canada. One wonders why we are creating more and more Crown corporations year after year. I suspect it is because of the mindsets of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). They experience a certain amount of pleasurable anticipation whenever a company or corporation in the private sector gets into difficulty. They see it as a golden opportunity to take it over and run it as a Crown corporation. With all the gigantic intellect which they have, they feel they will be able to make it into a paying concern. Some of the front benchers of the Government act more like senior civil servants than they do like representatives of the people. These senior civil servant types sometimes think they would have become fabulously wealthy had they gone into the private sector rather than into the Government sector. Through Canadair, CNR and other corporations they attempt to prove this fact. So far they have had a remarkable lack of success.

The debate as to whether we should do something to stop the proliferation of Crown corporations has been going on for more than 10 years. The need to clarify the purposes for which these corporations are formed and the need to make them accountable is well recognized. However, these needs never seem to be promoted in the form of legislation. Our Party has moved a motion for six months' hoist of this Bill simply because it represents one more failure of the Government to address the real issues surrounding the Crown corporations which are wholly or partially owned by the Government of Canada.

I would like to quote a very distinguished former Member of this House, the Hon. Robert Stanfield. On March 26, 1973 the Liberals were introducing a Bill to establish the Canada Development Corporation. At the time Mr. Stanfield said:

The Canada Development Corporation was established, so far as I can see, without any strategy except the establishment of another investment company in Canada in which the Government would have some interest. It is meaningless in this sense, and for that reason I oppose it, Mr. Speaker. For that reason, I see little significance in it, despite the repetition of Ministers of the Crown that it is a vehicle to enable Canadians to invest in Canada. It might even be that some people will be hurt in the process.

He went on to say:

—the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) has taken the position that transfer of shares of Polymer Corporation to the Canada Development Corporation is just some kind of intergovernmental transaction. I am sorry the President of the Treasury Board is not here at the moment; but that, of course, was not an honest statement—

That is the fuzziness we run into whenever the Government brings in another Bill. It seems to feel it would be a terrible thing to be open about the purposes of a Bill and why it wants yet another Crown corporation. This Bill comes a little closer to clarity if one reads between the lines. It says that this is:

An Act to provide for the financial administration of the Government of Canada, the establishment and maintenance of the accounts of Canada and the control of Crown corporations.

That is a change made to the Financial Administration Act by this Bill. I think it is a confession by the Government that the Crown corporations are out of control, and this Act is supposed to bring them into control. It is the lack of disclosure which bothers us on this side as well as the lack of a clear definition of the role of Parliament. In fact, Parliament is almost invariably left out of this.

Parliament is supposed to review annual reports, summaries of corporate plans, budgets, and Government directives to Crown corporations. However, Parliament will not see the plans and budgets of these corporations in their entirety. Nor is there any time limit for the tabling of these documents by the responsible Minister. The Bill provides that complete audit reports must be prepared on a regular basis, but does not ensure that these will be made available to Parliament in their entirety.

When looking for what will be made available and what will not, we find that the new requirements for accountability are offset by other provisions to restrict the activities of auditors and examiners, ensuring that little, if any, controversial information would be released to Parliament. Each Crown corporation would have to establish an audit committee to oversee any audits or special examinations that are carried out. The audit committee would protect the interests of the board of directors. Of that we can be sure.

The Bill neglects a number of significant issues, including the privileges and immunities of Crown corporations with respect to other legislation such as the Combines Investigation Act. What will be the impact of the long promised competition legislation on the activities of the many Crown corporations which have complete or near monopolies in their markets? The Bill does not address the issue of placing public servants on the boards of Crown corporations, nor does it give Parliament any powers to oversee the appointment of the chief executive officers of these corporations. The power rests entirely with the Government in Council, the cabinet. We have seen lately what they are likely to do with a Crown corporation.

Tired hacks of the Liberal Party who have been defeated and driven out of this Chamber, or have retired of their own volition, have gone to what turns out to be far greener grounds. The former Minister of National Defence, Mr. Danson, was appointed to the board of directors of de Havilland. He has now received another plum, appointment as the Canadian Consul-General to Boston. His salary range is $60,870 to $71,550. Considering what the management of most Crown corporations get paid, he has taken a considerable cut in salary.

It is difficult to tell, Mr. Speaker, how the Government determines what shall be a Crown corporation. In reviewing Schedule I of this Bill, it is rather interesting to try to determine whether a Crown corporation should be a board. The National Energy Board is a regulatory body and not a Crown corporation. However, the Agricultural Stabilization Board is a Crown corporation, and the Atomic Energy Control Board is a Crown corporation, while the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission is a regulatory body. They are all controlled by the cabinet of the country. We feel that Parliament should have more say about them.

To give the House an idea of the different types of organizations within Crown corporations, I will refer to Schedule B of this Bill. I see reference to the Agricultural Stabilization Board. The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission is a Crown corporation. The Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety is a Crown corporation. Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is actually a corporation. The next one is an odd one; the Director of Soldier Settlement. I am not sure whether the Director is a Crown corporation or the Soldier Settlement Organization is a Crown corporation. The Veterans' Land Act is a corporation. The Economic Council of Canada is a Crown corporation. The National Museums of Canada is a Crown corporation. And last, but by no means least known, is Loto Canada Incorporated. It is a Crown corporation which came in with a very fuzzy charter. It is impossible to find out how it is going to operate, when and where, or whether it will be legal.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet (for Mr. Gray) that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates; and on the amendment of Mr. Crosbie (p. 3688).

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak again to this Bill, particularly with respect to the motion moved by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). The point that we are trying to make is that we are not satisfied with this Bill. If the Government were given six months it could possibly make some improvements and return with the legislation that is required to get control of Crown corporations. I suggest the Government should consider this proposal seriously as a result of the complaints it has heard about this Bill, even from some people in the better Crown corporations who have said that it is inadequate.

This Bill should be set aside for Government reconsideration. I believe this whole matter should be discussed in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs because we deal with many such issues in this committee. We have dealt with the problems of many Crown corporations. I would suggest that perhaps the committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is more aware of how Crown corporations can fail the citizens of this country. A six-month hoist would allow the Government to consider amendments that would strengthen the proposals in this Bill, and allow it to enact legislation that would keep these Crown corporations under control.

That lack of control is most evident in the recent example of de Havilland. de Havilland is having an extremely difficult time, yet during this period when it lost hundreds of millions of dollars the senior executives have received bonuses. I do not believe that any member of the House would consider that a sound move by the directors of de Havilland. It is absurd that a corporation which should be making money, but is losing money because of bad management, should pay its executive a bonus.

There should be measures within this Bill dealing with management of Crown corproations. We have reviewed many cases where it has been shown that there has been total incompetence by management as well as interference by civil servants. These civil servants are the associate deputy minister, an assistant deputy minister and the deputy minister. They become involved in the affairs of something about which they know nothing. They are civil servants who have never worked in the real world. This Bill should take that fact into account. It does not.

Let me suggest some other changes that are required in this legislation. Every Crown corporation should be subject to a comprehensive audit, an audit that cannot be modified by the Minister in charge of a corporation. A cabinet Minister, no matter what Party is in power, should not be permitted to change a comprehensive audit.

Unfortunately, this Bill does nothing to require subsidiaries of Crown corporations to be accountable to the House of Commons. Consequently, there will be a proliferation of new small Crown corporations. We will see mini Petro-Canada's, and mini de Havilland's breeding throughout the country, resulting in a total loss of control or understanding of these corporations.

I believe some of these Crown corporations could be run successfully. It would be ideal if they could be run properly and then sold to the public of this country as positive and strong investments. We have not addressed the structural problem of Crown corporations and their operations. We have not dealt with the fact that they are immune from any Combines investigation. I do not believe Crown corporations should be treated differently from those in the private sector; whatever is good for the goose is good for the gander.

This Bill should make it clear that there is no room for public servants on the board. The committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has discovered that this has created chaos in several instances. The Bill should allow for parliamentary scrutiny and total in depth review of the three to five-year programs and budgets of Crown corporations. These Crown corporations always come before Parliament after they have lost hundreds of millions of dollars. We are never forewarned about the dangers into which these corporations may be falling.

The CDIC was created by the Government but never approved by the House. The legislation respecting that corporation is sitting on the Order Paper today as Bill C-25. Parliament was never consulted or given an opportunity to consider this Crown corporation in the House or in committee. We only learned of CDIC when we were advised at a hearing into Canadair and de Havilland that it would be representing those two companies. Furthermore, the officers of CDIC had no knowledge of what had transpired in those corporations. Yet the Government was there to bail out those companies.

One change in particular that is required in this legislation concerns the 30-day restriction on a committee to debate any new Crown corporation. I sit on committees and know that 30 days can be divided in many ways. It could be an hour and a half a day for two days a week. Is that 30 days considered on a calendar basis or is it 30 sitting days of at least four and a half or six hours a day?

Furthermore, how can the Government introduce closure on any new Crown corporation legislation by stating that there will be no more than seven hours of debate? If we were to consider an extreme situation, such as at Christmas, a committee could sit for an hour and a half for five days to make up seven and a half hours of debate in committee. We could then be told that we must restrain debate to seven hours in the House of Commons.

Not only are there weaknesses in this Bill, it contains flagrant violations of the rights of Canadians. We must not accept this Bill but address the changes to it that are required. We have moved this motion for a six-month hoist so that we may give it some input and let the Government know what will be satisfactory to Canadians.

I would like to suggest that we create on a permanent basis a joint Senate-House committee strictly for Crown corporations. When you realize that there are 400 or 500 Crown corporations to deal with, that means a lot of time. We should be presented with three to five-year working programs. We should be presented with an annual budget before the year starts. Final audited statements should be presented subsequently. As a result we would have an opportunity to grasp whether the corporation should be sold, whether it should have new management, be wound up, or whatever. But we do not have enough information to make a judgment, spending only a few days in committee.

I understand that my allocated time has expired. I would like to thank the House for allowing me to speak for a few minutes. I think it is very important to defeat this Bill on second reading because it is not productive. There are too many imperfections in it which must be changed.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to speak for the second time on this Bill. We are now debating a motion to grant leave of the House to study this Bill for an additional six months before putting it into effect. That makes sense to our Party. What we are doing is initiating a very great change in the methodology of setting up Crown corporations. More important, we are deciding how those corporations will be made responsible to Canada's shareholders through the House of Commons and Parliament.

I think we realize, in this corner at least, that to only a small degree what we are doing is changing the rules for establishing a corporation. A number of years ago, shortly after I arrived here, we changed the methodology for establishing corporations in the public sector.

As I understand the history of corporations and the involvement of the Crown, at one time it was the Crown—I am talking now of 400 or 500 years ago—which granted leave to a group of individuals to establish a corporation. It provided those individuals with some basic rights and privileges. They were privileges then and they are now. I will spend a little time during remarks dealing with some of the privileges.

One of the first Crown corporations of importance in Canada was the Hudson's Bay Company. It was granted a charter by the King of England which the Hudson's Bay Company gave the right and the privilege to trade in goods and furs in a very vast territory, part of what is now Canada and a little of what became part of the United States. That was a very great privilege, Mr. Speaker. Subsequent corporations also had very great privileges not afforded ordinary citizens and unincorporated small business. For one thing, corporations live forever. They never have to pay estate taxes or come to an end when an accounting has to be made. Consequently, when taxes are deferred in a corporate sense because there is no end to a corporation; the taxes can be continually deferred and are in essence never paid. When it comes to raising funds, corporations have the advantage. Under our tax laws they can raise money through publicly traded shares. There is an opportunity to participate in the Indexed Security Investment Plan, ISIP, which has the effect of lowering the cost of that money to the corporation and grants a consequent advantage as well to the investor. These are advantages which individuals attempting to run a business do not have. As well, corporations in the private sector have lower tax rates. Privileges granted are varied and many.

It was only a few years ago, within my memory, that to start a private corporation one required the assent of the Crown, through this House and through the Senate; later, it became one or the other. No longer is that assent required. Private corporations can be established without coming to one of the Houses of Parliament.

I suppose in fairness we can say that there appears to be some attempt by Government to make that same route available for the establishment of a Crown corporation. There appears to be some movement in this Bill to spend less time going to the House of Commons or the Senate to establish a Crown corporation. We will not argue a great deal about that since the principles and the practice has changed for the other corporations in our economy. Perhaps it is time to allow the same rights and privileges to Crown corporations. We do see some problems, however, when it comes to control of these Crown corporations.

In theory, private corporations are controlled by the shareholders who meet occasionally to select directors, then direct the business of the corporation, usually through the chief executive officer who is responsible to the board of directors, who in turn are supposedly responsible to the shareholders. With Crown corporations that chain of command is much more fuzzy. I think most of the speeches in the last several days on this Bill have brought that out. Members have pointed out rightly that it is very difficult sometimes for the shareholders in Crown corporations to get information, and that the appointment of the chief executive officer in most instances is by the cabinet rather than by the appointed board of directors. These practices create the potential for some problems. Therefore, we think it is worthwhile for this House to spend some time in committee attempting to work out the apparent problems, and to try to make the rules very similar for both kinds of corporations.

In passing, I think I would be remiss if I did not point out that the publicly traded corporations also have problems with regard to shareholder information. I am sure the shareholders of Dome Petroleum did not know how much trouble Dome was in until after the fact, just as this House acting on behalf of the Canadian shareholders did not know how much trouble Canadair and de Havilland were in until after the fact. It works both ways, Mr. Speaker.

When we study the Bill for the next six months, as I hope we will be able to, I hope those facts will be remembered and considered when methodologies are being worked out for Crown corporations.

It has been mentioned a number of times that the functions we require Crown corporations to perform vary sometimes. Crown corporations are set up to augment our cultural diversity. We have the Canada Council, for instance. We have been attempting to increase the Canadian content of our theatre and performing arts. We have established a movie industry through the National Film Board. We have the CBC. Originally, these corporations were set up, not to make a profit or to perform a commercial service but to be an extension of the cultural life of this country and to augment that cultural heritage.

We do have a number of Crown corporations which are clearly set up to provide an economic service. Those do an excellent job, particularly when they are performing services that we all must use. A Crown corporation has the economic advantage of being able to supply that service without the requirement of charging enough for the service to generate a profit for the shareholders.

The shareholders of Crown corporations, namely the people of Canada, are quite in agreement. They will simply accept good services from Crown corporations; they are not interested in generating great profits. In fact they are attempting to have the services performed at cost, since all of us use the services of those corporations.

It is suitable to study the Bill for an additional six months so that the method of reporting to the House can be clarified and better understood, not only by Members of the House but by members of the public. The role of naming an auditor, which usually rests with shareholders, should be clarified. Members of Parliament have at their disposal the Auditor General of Canada. It has not been made clear in this legislation that the Auditor General can be utilized as our auditor, whether he will be called in or whether he has the option of moving in and conducting comprehensive audits of corporations. This should be made clear to Members of the House and to the public so that we understand what will be the role of Crown corporations in the future.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, we are reminded on the first page of Bill C-24 that this is an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

I should like to begin by saying that the arrogance of this Government in dealing with national business is boundless. In applying closure to the debate on Bill C-24 it continues to exhibit, even in its death throes, a complete absence of any appreciation for the rights of Canadians to understand fully the purpose of legislation through the ordinary process of unhampered discussion in the House. At a time when the Government's credibility is practically zero, it seems strange that its Members continue to maintain the attitude, "Well, the Government knows best". This stance has been the Government's hallmark throughout past years.

I believe there is a place for Crown corporations in Canada. This is particularly true when the private sector is either unable or unwilling to co-operate in the implementation of programs to fulfil legitimate government policy. Under such circumstances it is preferable that government enter the field as a competitor rather than in a monopoly position. It appears that the present Government has completely lost the capacity to inspire Canadians to invest in worthwhile investments that would move the nation forward confidently and voluntarily. It pushes forward in a bull-headed and brutal fashion to force through programs which are often misguided and harmful to the economy. Then of course it can draw upon the taxpayers' purse to meet its financial obligations. In my view the role of Government is to administer the affairs of the country in accordance with the will of the people. This is not the course that is being followed by the present Government.

As I think back to the time when I first heard about the details of the measure before us, it appeared that the Government was responding to the demand for some fundamental changes to the way in which it was dealing with the issue of Crown corporations. A closer appraisal of the proposed amendments in Bill C-24, however, showed that the changes at best were illusory. Over the past several years, successive Auditors General have severely reprimanded the Government for neglecting its responsibility by allowing Crown corporations free rein in the conduct of their business, to the extent that they now constitute a sub-government. As I have stated, any seeming improvement through the provisions of Bill C-24 is only a mirage.

Much has been said about the proliferation of Crown corporations. As I listened to the broadcast when the Bill was first introduced and the proposed amendments were outlined, I heard reference that in the future the creation of Crown corporations would require parliamentary approval by means of a special Act. At that time I said to my wife, who was listening to the program as well, that it appeared the Government was finally listening to the criticisms of the Opposition in the House and was now prepared to make some significant changes. However, I was wrong. It appears that parliamentary approval applies only to parent corporations, not to subsidiaries. It has been through these subsidiaries that the greatest proliferation has taken place. Therefore, it seems to me that the Government has side-stepped the opportunity and the responsibility to call a halt to the multiplicity of organizations that are set up, many of which compete against private industry in various sectors of the economy.

There is a fear that Bill C-24 could be interpreted to indicate that Ministers of the Crown may not be bound by its prohibition on the creation of parent corporations. As has been pointed out, Section 16 of the Interpretation Act indicates that no statute binds the Crown unless the statute specifically states that it is applicable to the Crown. It seems there is no clause in this Bill which expressly does this.

There are a great many serious weaknesses in the Bill before us. These have been pointed out in very clear terms. For instance, under the terms of Bill C-24, the so-called board of directors would be little more than an advisory agency, while the Cabinet would direct the affairs of the corporation by, as indicated by the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) in his address on the Bill, appointing the auditor, approving by-laws and even making by-laws for the board, setting dividend policy and directing the board on the conduct of the corporation's business and affairs.

On different occasions my Leader has set out a very clear statement of policy in regard to Crown corporations. I regret there is not time to place them all on the record today. However, they have been propounded, explained and stated in various parts of the country. The basic principles as outlined by my Leader would do much to improve the situation as far as Crown corporations are concerned. They would bring to the people a sense of confidence, knowing that under these policies and under these principles Crown corporations, which have been a law unto themselves and have drawn so heavily upon the purses of the people, will finally be responsible and accountable, not just to the Government but to the House of Commons.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I spoke in the debate earlier and I shall now speak to this amendment.

We have had eight full days of debate on Bill C-24, with 28 hours of debate during those eight days. We have heard from approximately 120 speakers on this particular Bill. We now find that the opposition still wants to put up more and more speakers to delay consideration of this Bill in committee.

Many of the issues raised by the opposition are issues that are rightfully dealt with by a Standing Committee where witnesses can be called, where the Bill can be scrutinized clause by clause and where individual issues can be dealt with in depth. However, the opposition refuses to let the Bill go to committee; rather, opposition Members wish to put up speaker after speaker.

Unfortunately, I must indicate that most of those speakers do not have a clue as to what they are talking about. In many cases, opposition Members have had speeches drafted for them by others and they have parroted those words verbatim. Those speeches have been full of mistakes and errors.

Not 15 minutes ago, we heard the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) say that there are now 400 to 500 Crown corporations and that the number is growing by the day. About two weeks ago on May 8, Mr. Speaker, every Member of Parliament received a document entitled Crown Corporations and Other Canadian Government Corporate Interests. That document lists them all, Mr. Speaker. It lists parent corporations, subsidiaries, joint ventures and all of the corporate interests and Crown corporations of the Government of Canada.

This is the fact of the matter, Mr. Speaker. The number of parent Crown corporations, the kind of corporations of which Hon. Members opposite are so deathly afraid, does not add up to 400 to 500, 300 to 400 or 100 to 200. In fact, there are 67 such Crown corporations, Mr. Speaker. There are not 400 to 500 subsidiaries of parent Crown corporations. There are in fact 128 of them. The total number of parent corporations and wholly owned subsidiaries is 195, not 400 to 500; not some unknown number. The number is known and it is listed right here. Every Member of Parliament has had this document for over two weeks. The problem is that opposition Members do not take the time to read the documents they receive that are relevant to the debate that is going on in the House of Commons.

Let us talk about the numbers of subsidiary corporations of which the Crown owns less than 100 per cent; in other words, Crown corporations in which the Crown participates with some other agency or entity in the ownership. These corporations must be dealt with in a different fashion from wholly owned Crown corporations, must be dealt with in a somewhat more confidential manner as far as reporting goes because private interests as well as public interests are involved. That makes sense, Mr. Speaker, and the Bill provides for that. There are 30 such corporations of which the Crown owns more than 50 per cent and less than 100 per cent.

As well, Mr. Speaker, there are associate corporations. For example, Petro-Canada may enter into a joint venture with another corporation to develop an offshore well. In these cases, the Crown owns less than 50 per cent of the corporation and is a minority shareholder. There are 64 such corporations. There are 18 joint and mixed enterprises, Mr. Speaker. There are 195 Crown corporations in the sense most people know of them owned entirely by the Crown. There are an additional 112 other interests that the Crown owns through its Crown corporations or by other means, along with businesses, enterprises or other forms of agencies in Canada.

It is time that we come to a decision on this Bill at second reading stage. My gosh, we are not talking about third reading stage and we are not talking about making the Bill law. We are talking about passing in principle the notion that Crown corporations should be under greater control and should be more accountable. We are sending this Bill to committee so that we can look at its individual provisions. It is long since past the time for this House to come to a decision on Bill C-24.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. It being 4:45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Order made Wednesday, May 16, 1984, to interrupt proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the Bill now before the House.

Therefore, the first question is on the following motion: Mr. Gray, seconded by Mrs. Bégin, moves that Bill C-24, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

[English]

And on the amendment of Mr. Crosbie (St. John's West), seconded by Mr. McMillan,—That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-24, An Act to amend the Financial Administration Act in relation to Crown corporations and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

[Translation]

The question is on the amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Crosbie) (St. John's West) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, in order to save the time of the House, there may be a disposition to have the numbers counted on this last vote in the reverse order as though a vote were taken, even though there are only eight NDP Members in the House at the present time.

An Hon. Member: Ten. He cannot count.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, as is always the case, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) cannot count. That seems to be a fatal flaw among Tory House leaders. AIRPORTS

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF OTTAWA INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

The House resumed debate, from Friday, January 27, 1984, on the motion of Mr. Isabelle that Bill C-207, an Act respecting the International Airport at Ottawa, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mrs. Côté).

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not disagree with the proposal before the House to change the name of Ottawa International Airport to National Capital International Airport, although it may seem rather strange to have the terms national and international together in the same name.

I do not disagree, because the name reflects my concept of the region. In fact, even if Ottawa is legally and in fact the capital of our country, we must remember that the people, whether they live in Ottawa, Nepean, Gloucester, Aylmer, Hull or Gatineau, all feel part of the capital. This feeling has been strengthened further in recent years as a result of the presence of the National Capital Commission and the wide usage of the term: National Capital Region.

I am sure that is the basis for the Bill being proposed by my hon. friend, the Member for Hull. I wish to congratulate him for giving such eloquent expression to his ideas, and he is certainly a great Canadian for doing so.

I am sure that many people in the riding of Hull, as in other ridings and municipalities in the region, agree with the Hon. Member and support the Bill he is defending in the House today. I therefore cannot disagree. However, neither can I agree. Let me explain.

I cannot disagree, for all the reasons I have just mentioned, which reflect that sense of belonging to this beautiful region that is the site of our Parliament.

However, this feeling is an emotional one which, although entirely laudable, may blind us to the practical implications of a gesture that, on the face of it, has no negative consequences. However, there are negative consequences, serious enough to prevent me, as a Member of this House, from supporting officially—as I indeed do morally or perhaps I should say emotionally—the proposal being made by the Member for Hull.

According to well established policy, the name of an airport must include the name of the principal geographical entity in the region. That is true in the case of Ottawa International Airport. If we look at the population of the various municipalities that belong to the National Capital Region, Ottawa has nearly 300,000 people, compared with some 85,000 in Nepean, 75,000 in Gatineau, 73,000 in Gloucester, 53,000 in Hull, 27,000 in Aylmer, 20,000 in Kanata and 19,000 in Vanier. It is clear that Ottawa is the principal entity in the region, not only geographically but also demographically. According to the policy of the federal Department of Transport, it is entirely logical to keep the name Ottawa in the name of the region's main airport.

Some people might think it makes sense to include the name of Gloucester in the name of the airport, since the major part of the airport is located in Gloucester, with only part of the airport being on Ottawa territory. Perhaps I could give the Member for Hull an example that is closer to home. The CEGEP de l'Outaouais was known for a long time as the CEGEP de Hull, although it is located within the municipal limits of the Town of Aylmer. However, it has never been known as the CEGEP d'Aylmer. Therefore, we cannot say Ottawa-Gloucester International Airport, or vice versa. Similarly, there can be no Ottawa-Nepean airport, even if Nepean is the second largest municipality in the region in terms of population.

In any case, changing the present name of Ottawa International Airport would lead to a host of similar requests, which, if approved, would make things totally confusing for the travelling public, especially for international flights. For instance, we could rename Dorval Airport as Metropolitan Airport, which would be inaccurate, in any case. And what about Aéroport de la vielle capitale instead of Aéroport de Québec? I could go on, but I am sure that my hon. friends on the this side of the House, and perhaps even some on the opposite side, have enough imagination to find similar examples.

My hon. friends opposite will probably jump at the opportunity to argue, according to their own peculiar premises, that we might as well change the name of the airport in Ottawa since that is what we just did with Toronto International Airport. Perhaps I may point out that Toronto International Airport is still known by that name, except that we have added the name of the Hon. Lester B. Pearson, a great Canadian and winner of the Nobel Peace Prize. Thus, the new name of the airport in Toronto respects the letter and intent of Transport Canada's policy.

It not only respects our domestic policy but also international standards according to which the name of international airports must refer to the name of the principal geographic entity served by the airport concerned.

In terms of aviation safety, for over twenty years the International Civil Aviation Organization has been examining the designation of airports. The standard set by the ICAO and observed by all member States, including Canada, prescribes—I am not using the same terms—that the name of an international airport must include the name of the localities served and the name of the airport. On that basis, we could possibly rename Ottawa Airport as Ottawa National Capital Airport. However, this is a tautology if there ever was one, and it adds nothing for Canadians who already know that Ottawa is their national capital. Nor does it give anything more to the Quebec residents of the Ottawa region—ably represented by the Hon. Member for Hull—since the name Ottawa is still there. If I may guess about the motivations of the Hon. Member for Hull, I would say that he wants the word Ottawa taken out of the name of the airport and call it the airport of the region as a whole. However, because of the policies of Transport Canada and the international agreements, the word Ottawa has to stay.

I would also mention financial reasons which prevent me from supporting the commendable Bill of my colleague from Hull. Indeed, expenses for new signs at the Ottawa airport and for advertising the new name are not justified, if only because the aim of the Hon. Member for Hull, which is to eliminate the word Ottawa, would not even be reached. Besides, I hardly think that national unity, of which my colleague from Hull is such a strong advocate, would stand to gain from the change he has in mind. I would even suggest that the change might raise a controversy among Quebec residents of the Ottawa region since the Gatineau airport serves the same region as well.

I would not want my colleagues in the Official Opposition—I was going to say permanent—make comparisons with the new name of the Toronto airport and the expenses incurred as a result of that change. I think that the memory of Lester B. Pearson and the ideals he defended all his life deserved to be recalled to all Canadians by naming after him the Toronto International Airport, Canada's largest. The expenditures involved in the case of Toronto can thus be historically justified.

Since I am on the subject of expenditures, I might remind Hon. Members that under an upgrading and expansion program, the Ottawa airport will have a larger passenger terminal as well as redesigned access roads and parking lots. The work should be completed in 1987.

The Ottawa airport has become a source of inconvenience to regular users and people visiting the National Capital Region. Passengers are fully aware of those problems: during peak hours, there are very frustrating bottlenecks and delays, so there is no need to make matters worse by changing the name.

The proposed improvements reflect the region's new tourist facilities such as hotels and the convention centre. Along with the Rideau Centre development, which plays a catalytic role in the local economy, the airport project will help attract investors and support the diversification of Ottawa's economy.

In 1981, roughly two million passengers used the Ottawa airport and, according to forecasts made by Transport Canada in August 1982, the airport will have to accommodate 2.7 million travelers in 1991. Those people will not see any advantage in using the National Capital airport rather than the Ottawa International Airport.

I do not know whether the Hon. Member for Hull has discussed his project with his colleagues from Western Quebec or the authorities of the Gatineau airport. But I am convinced that the objections to this proposal could be numerous and vigorous. I do not know why we should agree to a name change which, while doing nothing useful as such, could be harmful to another airport in which so much money and efforts have been invested.

On this point, I would like to remind the House that normally, to make such a change, the opinion of the community whose image could be affected has to be polled. To my knowledge, there has not been any such consultation.

I would also like to remind the Members of this House of the background of the airport whose name the Hon. Member for Hull proposes to have changed. During the twenties, there was an attempt to lay out an airfield where the Ottawa airport is now located to be used by airplanes. This endeavour had mixed success, at least until the Spirit of St. Louis, piloted by none other than Charles Lindbergh, landed at the airfield in 1927. Following this, the Ottawa Flying Club was created in 1928 and the Upland Realty Corporation rented the airfield for pilot training. Then, in 1936, Laurentian Air Services purchased the airport on a contract basis and sold it to the Department of Transport. It was at that time that the name of the Ottawa Airport came to be used.

From the early days of aviation and until the Second World War, the custom was to name airfields after famous civil or military pilots. For instance, the Toronto International Airport was called Bishop Field, the Winnipeg International Airport, Stevenson Field, and the Calgary International Airport, McCall Field. This practice spread throughout the country except for Ottawa. To my knowledge, the Ottawa Airport was never known after any person; it was always called the Ottawa Airport.

After the Second World War and with the immense growth in popularity of aviation, it became the practice to designate the airports by the name of the major city, community or region they served, especially in the case of major airports. I would like to underline that this practice was not the result of a whim or pure fantasy, but was based on logic. We found it very important if not essential for airplane operators and pilots to know immediately where they were from the name of the airport for the purposes of navigation and communications.

Any confusion must therefore be avoided in order not to affect air security. By giving a busy airport a name different from that of the community where it is located, we would be increasing the volume of communications needed between pilots and controllers. Of course, this would add to the hazards of confusion, especially when sophisticated names are shortened or abbreviated after a certain time. In short, Mr. Speaker, it is wiser to include the name of its true location of the airport.

Finally, and at the risk of repeating myself, I am sure that the intentions of the Hon. Member for Hull in proposing this Bill are good. He is undoubtedly trying, as any good Member would do, to obtain an identification appropriate for his constituency. Or perhaps he is trying in this way to support the efforts of our party to maintain and strengthen national unity. In fact, the Hon. Member has proposed this name change so often that it is reasonable to believe that he may be the first Member of our party to be so concerned about national unity!

I sincerely believe that the position of the Government should be to postpone passage of this Bill until such a time as the necessary studies and consultations have been completed. If such studies and consultations were to support the proposal of the Hon. Member for Hull, I would be most happy to join him in voting for his proposal, which he will certainly present to this House again.

Nothing would have given me more pleasure than granting this support to the Hon. Member for Hull today, but as I said earlier in my comments, I must not let my emotions get the better of my reason and allow a change which, while being desirable under certain aspects, would also involve certain hazards. Let me make myself clear. If it can be shown that the proposed change is desirable and would benefit the region, the airport and the nation, I shall be glad to go with it. Unfortunately, this is not yet the case and I hope that the Hon. Member for Hull, and all those who support him, will understand my position.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mrs. Côté) accept one brief question as a matter of information? I listened carefully to her speech and I do not know if it was the translation being interrupted briefly, but I missed one comment in her speech. Would she give me that one point as a matter of information?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Standing Orders do not provide for questioning members at this time. But, of course, if the House grants its unanimous consent, this could be feasible. Is there unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary went on at some length in her speech about the renaming of the Toronto International Airport. I thought she began to say what the costs were. If she did give a figure, may I have that figure? If she did not, then I will proceed.

[Translation]

Mrs. Côté: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question, I did not mention costs, but I said that the change had certainly resulted in justifiable costs in view of the historic importance of the change.

[English]

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, before I deal directly with the Bill, I want to make a couple of points. First, I was intrigued and would be interested in knowing during some point in the debate this afternoon how this Bill has come before us a second time when there are bills by other members which are on the list but have not yet been dealt with. I took the trouble to read through the last debate on this Bill which was on January 27. I was intrigued to see that there was a reference made to a December 15, 1983, presentation of the Bill. This leads me to believe that this is the third time, not the second, it has been dealt with. I know that there are a number of members' names that have been drawn for the Private Members' list and their bills have not been dealt with yet.

The second point I want to make concerns the comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mrs. Côté). I listened to her information in some detail. I would be interested to know why she did not refer to the Ottawa Airport as Uplands Airport, as it was known for many years. I still speak to a number of people who refer to that airport as Uplands.

I also have a third point. With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I recall very clearly a few months ago when you castigated a member on this side of the House who had been in the House but for a very short time, having come here as a result of a byelection. I recall you stopped him three times as he read his text. I noticed that throughout the Parliamentary Secretary read her text intact. She has been here a good deal longer and should have the expertise. She was not stopped once. I find that passing strange, Sir.

● (1740)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair is ready to answer the two questions raised by the Hon. Member. The first concerns his surprise at the House considering for the second time Bill C-207 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle). Hon. Members are called by table officers before a Bill is brought to the House. They are asked whether they are ready to proceed. I am informed that the Hon. Member for Hull was the only member ready to proceed.

With regard to the second question, namely, the reading of a speech by the Parliamentary Secretary, I refer the Hon. Member to citation 310 found in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition on page 102. This citation gives certain exceptions, namely, Members who speak on behalf of a Minister. Obviously the Parliamentary Secretary was reading a speech prepared by the department and, therefore, should be allowed to read the text.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the first question, to which you have now related, raised by the Hon. Member about the way in which private members' business is selected. It was generally understood, I think, by the committee that looked into this matter and decided on the new methodology we adopted when we adopted the new Standing Orders six, nine, or twelve months ago, that as a general rule the committee believed an individual Member who had spoken on a Bill or had his Bill considered prior would not be called again until all other Members had been covered. The way the Standing Orders are written that understanding is not interpreted in that same way. As a result, the Privy Council Office which asks the Members who are ready has to follow the Standing Orders. The Standing Orders now say that one must go through the list again and again rather than restricting the list only to those who have not had an opportunity to present a Bill.

It is the view on this side of the House that if the committee or some group could be reconstituted to look at that question, to clarify the rules, and to put them back to the way in which I personally believe the committee meant them to be, we would certainly be prepared to participate in that kind of an exercise.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you might want to think of your colleague in the chair, the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), who was involved in the committee on that particular aspect of Private Members' Business, and the suggestion of convening a committee composed of representatives from all sides of the House to look at that question. Other Members have raised the issue with me in the past.

Mr. Ellis: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleague for his explanation. I certainly agree that the committee's intention was as he has expressed it, and not in the way we are now proceeding.

Let me then deal with the Bill. I read with some interest the interventions that were made on Friday, January 27. I do not intend to quote from them verbatim. Perhaps I will be subject to censure if I get off the track a little bit. The Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) was at that time, I believe, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. He made the point that he did not think that the name of the airport should be changed unless it was changed to the Pierre Elliott Trudeau Airport. The Hon. Member said this was the first airport seen by most people coming to the area. I have news for that Member. Some people may recall a monologue done by Mr. Bill Cosby, a comedian from the United States, who was here a few years ago. The first ten minutes of his monologue had to do with getting in and out of the capital of Canada. The point he made was that you cannot get there from here and you cannot get here from there.

Mr. Friesen: That is why it should be called the Pierre Elliott Trudeau Airport.

Mr. Ellis: It was one of the funniest monologues I have ever heard. Frankly what he said was true. I do not know of any major place from which you may travel directly to Ottawa. You have to go somewhere else first and then come to Ottawa. Ottawa is not a very well scheduled airport. Then, of course, it is not much of an airport when you get here. It is one of five that were designed exactly the same. The federal Government has a habit when it finds a plan or design that is particularly inadequate to copy it. The design of this airport can be found in five different cities in Canada. You can walk through Halifax Airport, Newfoundland, and others, all designed from the same set of blueprints. You have that awful feeling of déja vu. Sure enough, the airport is another copy.

As to the name of the airport, I find I am unable to support the change advocated by my good friend and colleague from Hull. I know his intentions are the very best, but I could spend the rest of the time this evening in Private Members' Hour just mentioning airports I know that do not exist in the community for which they are named. Toronto International Airport is located in Mississauga. Edmonton Airport is located south of Edmonton some 25 miles. That situation is not only true of Canada, it is to be found overseas as well. I am thinking of Bonn, Germany. You fly to Frankfurt International Airport and then go by car to Bonn. It is not very far. It is not any farther than from Edmonton Airport to downtown Edmonton. Vancouver Airport is another. It is located in Richmond. What about London? There are a number of other cities with this same situation.

By naming the airport Ottawa-Hull, or as the revised Bill reads, the National Capital Airport, will not help a whole lot. If you are flying to Ottawa from anywhere in Canada, indeed from anywhere in North America or from somewhere across the world, you buy a ticket that takes you to Ottawa. You trust the airline to take you to airport closest to Ottawa. I venture to say that while my good friend's home is not well known throughout North America, it is well known in Canada. If someone from Texas, Florida, or California decides he or she wants to get to Hull, the individual goes to a travel agent. The person will get tickets that will take him or her to Ottawa. The people who know where Hull is buy the ticket and they get there. The changing of the name of Toronto International Airport to the Lester B. Pearson International Airport will not change the ticketing people get. Tickets will still say "YYW". Bagagage goes by that designation. It seems to me it is a horrible expense for what it does because people will still be going to Toronto International Airport.

I would suggest something to my colleague that he might find of interest. Not too long ago at the military portion of the Ottawa International Airport a new sign was put on the Air Movements Unit Building. It is an extremely attractive sign.

The letters are at least two feet high and are raised from the building. It is nicely illuminated at night. It is on a very attractive background. It reads, "The Nation's Capital", and it has the equivalent in French.

It seems to me that if a visitor purchased a ticket to Ottawa or Hull and upon arriving at the Ottawa International Airport saw an attractive sign reading "Nation's Capital" and equivalent in French, he or she would have some idea about this area of the country. If visitors could deplane here and not be required to walk through a boarded-in mine tunnel, such as is the case now, the situation would be improved. There could be some indication of the beauties of Ottawa and its attractions. There could be some indication that indeed it is the nation's capital, and some pride in that fact, rather than the rough framework through which passengers have had to walk during the past few years. That would give more impetus to what the Hon. Member for Hull wants.

Upon landing at the military portion of the airport, there are no inside walkways. People have to walk across approximately 100 yards through rain or snow, but the sign to which I referred earlier is attractive. If we could do that, it seems to me that we would enhance the nation's capital. Also we would enhance its airport and could show visitors the benefits and beauties awaiting them in this area. We could spell out in many ways how attractive the region is and, of course, we could accommodate my friend by including the area which the NCC has designated as the National Capital Region. We could spell out the beauties, not only the tulips in Ottawa but the various attractions in Hull. This would be the proper way to show that indeed this is the nation's capital.

To try and designate it as such will not change anything. If ticket agents anywhere in the world are asked the cost of travelling to the nation's capital, they would probably have no reply. However, if they are told that passengers want to travel to Ottawa, the situation is different. When passengers arrive in Ottawa it should be spelled out in large letters, for all to see, that indeed it is the nation's capital.

I commiserate with the Hon. Member. I understand what he is trying to do. I understand his home town loyalty and the effect of this Bill upon his constituents. However I could not support it and agree with it—"a rose by any other name would smell as sweet".

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak at this time on Bill C-207. Down deep in my mind I wonder what is its purpose. However, first I should like to indicate that the Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) is a very respected Member of the House and a great supporter of his community. With that in mind, I understand his interest in having the name of the Ottawa International Airport changed to the National Capital Regional Airport, or some such name. We must all promote our own communities.

In terms of this Bill my mind goes back to what happened in the case of the Toronto International Airport. It was first known as the Malton International Airport. Then its name was changed to the Toronto International Airport, and now it is the Lester B. Pearson Airport. This has resulted in nothing but massive confusion. Regardless of how great a Canadian for whom the airport was named, people in that area do not relate to such names. However, they all relate to the Toronto International Airport. They did not relate to the name of Malton because at that time in our history airport traffic was not what it is today. They have become accustomed to calling it the Toronto International Airport.

I cannot see any purpose being served in changing the name of the Ottawa International Airport, especially if I remember the history of the Toronto International Airport. If we talk to people visiting from anywhere outside or inside Canada they do not understand us when we refer to the Lester B. Pearson Airport in Toronto. The situation in Ottawa would be compounded if the name of its airport were changed.

Governments have added too much to disorientation in terms of the history of Canada, the early pioneers and the original purposes of naming towns, airports, cities or whatever. History will not treat us very kindly as we go down the road. This has been a government of change. I suppose this is just another one of its suggestions. It changed the flag. That has been accepted now, but it took years. Perhaps it has not been accepted by everyone. It changed Dominion Day to Canada Day. Now it is trying to project its wishes upon places, institutions and locations.

I certainly know that in the area of the Province of Ontario from which I come the name Lester B. Pearson Airport will never be accepted. It adds to the confusion within the community and its people. I cannot see the necessity for encouraging further change such as that suggested in Bill C-207. I honestly believe that the Hon. Member's intentions are all well and good for his community. From what I heard in this debate, I am very convinced of that fact.

I heard the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mrs. Côté) indicate that she could not support the Bill. I thought she would have supported it, but perhaps she was expressing the wishes of her Minister. We have to be realistic about this and forget about our local fancies. We should speak more internationally of our country and forget about trying to christen an airport with a name which means nothing to the people living in the community around it. Name changes could take place for every international airport in the country. I do not know where it would end.

This is a good point at which to retain the name of Ottawa International Airport. It is up to Hon. Members, regardless of their Party, to be proud of the national capital. It is a great region. We are all very proud of the National Capital Region. I take great pleasure in showing it to many people, especially American tourists. They remark on how clean the City of Ottawa is, as well as on its beauty. We can all expound its virtues. Certainly the Hon. Member's side of the river is very picturesque. I enjoy going over there. The City of Hull has improved over the years. It has many fine buildings which can be seen from both sides of the river.

There are other significant contributions that could be made to enhance the Gatineau and other areas of the community, but we do not have to destroy the traditional name which has probably accompanied the airport for some time. I am not only referring to this part of our great country. We must remember that we have a tradition of names and history. Regardless of whether it is Newfoundland, the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario or whatever it may be, we should think—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time allowed for the consideration of Private Members' Business has come to an end.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under S.O. 45 deemed to have been moved.

STATUS OF WOMEN—NATIVE WOMEN'S RIGHTS. (B) WOMEN'S ATTENDANCE AT EDMONTON CONFERENCE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity to follow up on a question asked of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about the timing of legislation to end inequality for native women, or repeal of Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act and the reinstatement of native women and their children who lost their status.

I am very concerned about the complacency with which the Prime Minister regarded the question. He said that if by chance we could not pass the legislation, the Charter of Rights would still hold. I wonder about the chance to which he is referring. Does he know something we do not know? Will the Conservatives hold back the legislation? It is very clear that members of the NDP want this legislation passed. We would give it priority and we would agree that it be passed quickly.

When we look at the timing, we can see that many years have been spent discussing this matter. The Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada recommended in 1970 that Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act be repealed. There was agitation throughout the 1960s on this matter, and the discrimination itself goes back to the latter part of the last century.

After the Royal Commission report some cases went to court. Unfortunately, the Supreme Court of Canada, with its lack of wisdom, lack of justice and lack of charity, decided in 1972 that there was no inequality for women and that the Bill of Rights did not hold in the case of Laval and Bedard. Thus, since 1972 it has been imperative to have legislation to change this inequality for women, as the courts would not change it.

In 1975 consultation with Indian groups began in earnest. Some progress was made in the latter part of the decade. Conservative members who were in government in 1979 said that they would leave the question with the Bands for six months so that the Bands might come up with a proposal, and that if the Bands did not come up with a proposal they would legislate unilaterally. Unfortunately for native women at least, the Conservative Government fell before that legislation was introduced. It is this kind of timing that worries people now. We are coming to the end of a Session and there could be an election before we reconvene after the summer. People are worried that we are again getting close but the legislation will not be brought in and passed.

In 1980, with a Liberal Government back in power, the Sandra Lovelace case was taken to the United Nations for violation of our international commitments to equality. Canada was condemned for this violation. In response, the Government indicated that it would bring in legislation. Many statements have been made to the effect that negotiated consensus would be desirable, but that if there was no such consensus there would be unilateral action. Still we wait year after year. Years have passed while these consultations have continued, and for some people the time will never be right. I do not think that is an excuse for our lack of action.

This discrimination came from a society in which all Canadian women were treated as non-citizens. Women did not have the right to vote and all Canadian women lost their citizenship on marriage to non-Canadians. That is the same kind of situation that now holds true for native women. However, with the strength of the women's movement and with women having the vote in Canada that situation was eventually challenged and Canadian women received the right to hold citizenship. Native women still do not have the same rights of citizenship and we are still fighting for that.

Native women tell us that being treated as second-class citizens makes it difficult for them. They become second-class citizens in terms of housing, welfare and jobs. Because native cultures respect the law, having a lower status in law means having a lower status in practicality.

Equality for women is a matter of justice. We should not seek to negotiate a consensus on this issue. It is not surprising, after a century of abuse and discrimination against women, that Band leaders generally do not recognize native women as their equals. As Parliamentarians, we are the cause of this problem, because we have passed legislation depriving native women of their status. As Parliamentarians, therefore, we must correct this injustice by repealing the discriminating provisions in the Indian Act and by taking strong positive action.

We should not wait for a consensus. We should not try to excuse our inaction by raising the issue of the Bands' democracy, for as long as native women are not reinstated in their status, there could be no democracy.

It is imperative that native women should be immediately reinstated to their full Indian status, that they may work toward the development of democracy within the Bands. Without the participation of native women, this so-called democracy is an illusion.

• (1805)

[English]

Of course there will be problems. We have to admit that there will be problems with respect to re-integrating women, but I think those problems have been exaggerated. Many of the women are presently living on reserves. It is not a question of bringing in new people, they are there now. In Yukon and the Northwest Territories there are no reserves. It is a question of women living in their communities, and having a vote. If it is a community council, such as in Old Crow, for example, they have it already. But they are living at the edge of the community; they are not being fully integrated into it. They are there now. Very often they speak the language and they are committed to native culture. They would be valuable members of their bands and of their councils. Many of the problems that native people have with environmental pollution, land claims, and the very high over-representation of native people in our jails and prisons, are the problems which should be addressed. Failure to solve this question of equality indicates that people are not working on the problem. It is important for native men and women to work together to solve these and other problems.

[Translation]

Mr. René Gingras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) raised the question of the equality of Indian women under the Canadian Charter of Rights, and amendments to the Indian Act.

Hon. Members will recall the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) answered that the Charter would prevail over the Indian Act. It would therefore simply be a matter of waiting for Section 15(1) of the Charter to come into force, which in effect would supersede certain sections of the Act, such as Section 12(1)(b), which is at variance with the Constitution.

However, some discriminatory sections in the Act that are involved in the amendment process lay down the criteria for entitlement to Indian status. After April 17, 1985, Indian women will no longer lose their status under Section 12(1)(b). However, the sections of the Act dealing with the registration of children will have to be amended to provide for the registration of children of Indian women as well as of Indian men. Therefore, although equality is guaranteed to all women under Section 15(1) and Section 28 of the Canadian Charter of Rights, it is imperative that the Indian Act be amended as soon as possible.

As the Prime Minister has also pointed out, the reinstatement of Indians raises problems. Hopefully, these problems will soon be resolved.

In answer to the other question put by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, I would like to point out that 16 members of the Native Women's Association of Canada attended the Conference of the Assembly of First Nations over the weekend, which provided $10,000 to ensure the participation of the Association of Native Women. The Native Citizen's Directorate of the Secretary of State is ready to meet with the Executive Council of the Native Women's Association of Canada to discuss further funding requirements.

EMPLOYMENT (A) BRITISH COLUMBIA STATISTICS. (B) RAILWAY UPGRADING—BENEFITS FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, about a year ago this House passed a Bill that was supposed to create new employment opportunities for Canada, and particularly for the West. That Bill was the Crow legislation. The Government, during the course of the debate, promised enormous industrial benefits that would accrue to Canada as a result of that particular legislation. I recall estimates that as many as 400,000 jobs would be created if the House passed the Bill. A year has now passed. While the West is not impatient with the so-called results of the Bill, we are concerned with respect to the benefits that that legislation was supposed to create for Canada and that the West will get its fair share of those benefits.

We want to see some signal that the Government is going to pay proper attention to British Columbia, in particular—and that is my concern—when it sets out the parameters of the advantages which that Bill is supposed to provide for the west. That is why I asked the Minister some ten days ago how the Government was going to handle it specifically. I quote part of my question which is found in Hansard on May 11, 1984 at page 3639:

> The Government promised that as a result of the Crow legislation there would be thousands of jobs created across Canada and literally millions, if not billions of dollars invested. Presumably those jobs would accrue to the areas which would be affected by the Crow legislation.

I then went on to ask the Minister how western Canada, particularly British Columbia, was going to benefit.

I am concerned, Sir, but not in a confrontational way. I really was not badgering the Minister. I simply wanted some information, because there seems to be a paucity of information since that legislation was passed. I understand there have been seminars conducted in Alberta. I believe there may have even been a seminar conducted in Vancouver, British Columbia. Nevertheless, there seems to be a real paucity of information going out to the companies which would supposedly benefit most from that particular legislation.

I am concerned, Sir, that not only subsidiaries of CPR, and companies which have a linkage with the Canadian National Railways, have the benefit of this legislation, because there are scores of small companies throughout British Columbia which are totally independent and which could benefit from this legislation. You will agree, Sir, that the small businesses are what create most of the employment. Since British Columbia and Alberta have the highest increases in unemployment in Canada since the recession hit, we are particularly concerned that if there is a promise for employment that there be a delivery system for that promise.

In this context, I think of all the cement companies which could be making railway ties or all the conduits. There are all kinds of ancillary benefits which ought to be coming to western Canada.

It took me somewhat by surprise, when I asked the Minister about this ten days ago in the House, that the first example he brought to my attention was in Sydney, Nova Scotia, and I quote from page 3639 of Hansard:

I take into account the contract recently let by the CNR for new steel rails to Sysco in Sydney.

I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to that at all. If there is any area of the country which needs employment, and that kind of a contract, it is Sydney, Nova Scotia. They do need that kind of work. What bothers me is not that it received the contract, but that when I posed the question to the Minister in the House he could not quickly or spontaneously think of an example where the west, and particularly British Columbia, was going to get any contracts, or had any contracts assigned to them as a result of the Crow legislation. Therefore, I am here expanding on my concern, not because I am badgering the Government, but with the hope that in the minutes which the Parliamentary Secretary has to answer my question she will be able to give me some specific information as to how companies in the Fraser Valley and throughout British Columbia can get access to those jobs which are supposed to be coming to our part of the country. How do we go about bidding for these jobs?

Second, I understand that there is a considerable pool of money set aside by the responsible department for the granting of moneys to companies who are at present not in a position to deliver the volume or, indeed, even the product which the railways will be looking for. With access to that grant money, there would be expansion possibilities for some of the smaller companies, and perhaps enough diversification would be possible within some of these companies so that they could provide some of the product which the railways will be needing in the several years ahead when this expansion is proceeded with as promised by the Government.

I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to tell me in very clear terms how the Government is going to provide information to the companies so that they can bid on all of these contracts? Can she assure me that the bidding will be fair, and that the small companies will receive just as much access to those jobs and contracts as the large companies?

Finally, to what extent are the small companies going to get access to the grants in order that they might expand and have access to the contract possibilities available to the large companies? I am looking for that kind of answer. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will be very fulsome in her reply.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), I would like to comment particularly on the employment situation in British Columbia.

Data from Statistics Canada show that the deseasonalized employment figure for British Columbia increased 5,000 or 0.4 per cent, between March and April, to 1,186,000. This is the first increase after three months of decline. The total increase for the country as a whole was 27,000 in April. The Minister is confident that business activity and employment in the province will go on recovering, thanks in particular to the resolution of current labour problems. Returning to the specific question of the changes to grain transportation in Western Canada and jobs that should accrue in the area, the Hon. Member referred to seminars held in various parts of Canada. True, some seminars were held on the matter of supply in the major Western cities. Because of discussions there, more companies now are included on the CNR and CPR lists of qualified bidders.

You will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that I do not wish to give the list today; it is a fact, however, the Minister met with representatives of the Builders' Association of British Columbia and he later wrote CNR and CPR to invite them, along with their main contractors, to a seminar on supply in Kamloops on June 5 and 6, 1984. There will probably be more such seminars elsewhere in Western Canada.

Further, the Minister publicly stated at the Calgary seminar on railway equipment and facility renewal, to which the Hon. Member alluded, that Section 29(3) of the Act is very much in his mind. Under that Section, railways are required as far as possible to use goods and services from the area where they have capital investments. The Minister expects the CNR and CPR to change their purchasing policies and make sure especially that they award their building contracts to regional or local firms and obtain the supplies they need within the area where they are doing this upgrading work.

We also know that the Minister is working very closely with his colleague the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) to set up the Western Transportation Industrial Development Program, in an effort to increase, develop and diversify the opportunities for the railways to purchase their supplies in Western Canada. Consultations in this regard are going on now with both the CNR and CPR. The results of these and other efforts should become more evident as soon as the railways start awarding contracts for this year and many years to come. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) and his colleagues are striving to ensure that all Western provinces derive greater benefits from the work being done in their area. But the corporations which would like to be considered as suppliers to the railways, would also have to establish their expertise and reliability, as well as their ability to compete.

FISHERIES—ATLANTIC SALMON STOCK—PREVENTION OF POACHING

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to continue with a question I posed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) concerning the enforcement of the Atlantic salmon management plan which the Minister announced a short time ago in this House. The concern I am expressing is related to the management and enforcement of the plan throughout the regions it affects. I want to refer specifically to the New Brunswick region.

• (1820)

As you may know, Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the management plan does include a substantial curtailment of the salmon activities with reference to both commercial and recreational fishery within the Province of New Brunswick. Both of those fisheries are extremely supportive of any efforts on the part of the Government to manage the fishery in a responsible way. However, the fact of the matter is that there has been little or no funding made available to increase the enforcement of the salmon management plan. This is indeed of tremendous concern.

In the Atlantic region, Mr. Speaker, and particularly in New Brunswick and other areas, a large portion of the income of many individuals is dependent upon the salmon management from both the commercial and recreational fishery. It is extremely critical that these people are assured that the sacrifices which they are being asked to make by the Department of Fisheries and the Minister responsible for Fisheries will not be for nought. Indeed, the black market in salmon has flourished in Atlantic Canada for a good number of years because of declining stocks of salmonoid. This has been of tremendous concern to conservationists and the Department of Fisheries over the last number of months certainly, just by virtue of the program which the Minister has come out with.

I was extremely disappointed that the Minister did not suggest that there should be additional funding in the reinforcement areas of the law with reference to management of the program. As I mentioned before, salmon has always been a product which has been a boon to the black market in our region. We would like to see that these people are managed handsomely.

The people who live along many rivers in New Brunswick are affected very much by the Minister's announcement. Among these rivers are the Hammond, the Restigouche, the Miramichi, the Upsalquitch, the Nupisiquit, the Dungarvan, the Cannes, the Nauwigewauk, the Belisle, the Kennebecasis, the Washademoak, the Salmon and, of course, that king river, the Saint John River. There are many outfitters who are extremely concerned by the decision that has been brought down. There are many commercial fishermen who are concerned about the loss of livelihood they are going to experience because this decision has been taken. There are scores of sports fishermen who are extremely concerned about the restrictions that are being forced upon them by the Government. It is not that they are not prepared to co-operate in a conservation program. It is also certainly not that I am not prepared to co-operate; nor is it that the Government is not prepared to co-operate. We recognize that salmon is an endangered species which should be protected.

However, all elements of society, including the commercial, sports, and native fishermen should be conscientious enough to participate in a meaningful and willing way in the conservation program. The native fishermen take a tremendous amount of fish and have been entitled to them since confederation. I think it is incumbent upon the Government to ensure that enforcement does become a very meaningful part of the program and that the sacrifices which these other people are being asked to make on behalf of the conservation program as put forth by the Government will not be solely for the exploitation or benefit of the black market which does exist in the salmon fishery.

When we talk about the salmon fishery in New Brunswick; the Atlantic area, and in Newfoundland where it is extremely substantial to the living of thousands of fishermen, we talk of an issue about which we should be terribly conscientious as legislators. We should ensure that the sacrifices we are being asked to make as Atlantic Canadians will not be thwarted by an illicit, illegitimate market that could develop. Certainly, the only way to monitor that situation and ensure that that does not take place is for the Government to recognize its responsibility for funding, to ensure that the program is adequately monitored and policed so that those who care to take the chance of violation are brought to the forefront of the law.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, I want to say, first of all, that protecting the salmon is a very difficult and expensive task, since there are thousands of miles of distant waterways where salmon is easy to fish, and also because this is a very vulnerable fish. I shall refer, if I may, to the findings of the Task Force chaired by Dr. Barry Muir. Its report has been submitted to the Assistant Deputy Minister, Mr. Scott Parsons, and has been distributed to all members of the Advisory Committee on Atlantic Salmon and was made available to the parties concerned, Members of Parliament and members of the press. The report stressed two undeniable facts: first, that stocks of Atlantic salmon, as my hon. friend mentioned earlier, are declining seriously, and second, that draconian measures must be taken immediately if we are to ensure the stable survival of this species. The 1984 Atlantic Salmon Management Plan, announced on April 6 of this year, was prepared as part of the requirement for serious conservation measures.

The plan was designed to focus on conservation of a particularly important species. The female salmon produces many eggs, and must therefore be protected. To achieve this goal, the commercial fishing season for salmon in all zones will be delayed and shortened. Furthermore, sports fishermen will be allowed to keep grilse only. This measure will also help to reduce the number of salmon intercepted while going up waterways on the West Coast of Newfoundland and inland waterways.

In addition to these crucial aspects, the plan will deal with all other facets of the salmon fisheries, including enhancing stocks, negotiating with native peoples, accidental salmon catches, extending the marking system, federal-provincial co-operation, revising policies on the issuing of licences and fishing operations west of Greenland. The Department hopes that it will be able to solve the problem by enforcing all these protective measures. Departmental officers responsible for these measures are now examining a new plan and reviewing legislative and regulatory requirements for implementing the plan.

Mr. Speaker, the Department has no intention of expanding its overall capacity for enforcement of legislation regulations. However, its officers have been ordered to emphasize salmon in their plan for enforcement of legislation and regulations. Now that enforcement has proved encouraging and successful with respect to other major fisheries, resources will be assigned so as to focus operations on salmon conservation. It is recognized that the effects of restrictions on salmon fishing could very well be nil, if poaching is allowed to continue without appropriate corrective action.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.30 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—CANDIDACY OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is on the record as stating he would cap interest rates at 12 per cent. I presume this means if he is elected Liberal leader and, automatically, Prime Minister, his statement can be interpreted to mean that John Turner will not under any circumstances be his Minister of Finance.

Mr. Turner, during his tenure as Finance Minister, invented deficit spending and since he has become a leadership candidate has done everything in his power to elevate the word "contradiction" to the status of campaign policy. If Mr. Turner could roll back interest rates as well as he rolls back his many slips of the tongue, the country would be well served. In the meantime I have a slogan I want to suggest to the Minister of Agriculture: "When you are Number 7, you have to try harder".

HOUSING

ORIGIN OF CERTAIN PROGRAMS—REQUEST THAT QUEBEC GOVERNMENT PROVIDE TRUE INFORMATION TO CITIZENS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the people of the province of Quebec regularly ask us about the connection between the federal Government's RRAP Program and LOGINOVE, administered by the province of Quebec.

In the minds of many Quebecers and among municipal authorities there is some confusion about the two programs. This is not surprising, since in its advertising, the Société d'habitation du Québec, which administers LOGINOVE, gives the impression that the two programs are related. I have here an example taken from a brochure about the LOGINOVE program. It says: "LOGINOVE is restricted to the territory of specific urban centres, considering the restrictions set by the CMHC on its own urban RRAP program".

Mr. Speaker, the LOGINOVE and RRAP programs are entirely independent of one another. No federal-provincial agreement has been signed for these grants. The Government of Quebec cannot relate its decision to offer LOGINOVE to the federal Government's decision to designate certain areas for the urban RRAP program. I would therefore ask the conveyors of rhetoric in the Quebec Government to be honest and inform their fellow Quebecers properly.

ELEANOR ROOSEVELT CENTENNIAL AWARD

TRIBUTE TO CANADIAN RECIPIENT

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, may I bring to the attention of this House that Mrs. Mildred Bronfman Lande, a member of the Order of Canada and a distinguished Canadian, will today, in Montreal, be the first Canadian recipient of the Eleanor Roosevelt Centennial Award from the State of Israel Bonds of Canada for her exemplary work for, and lifelong dedication to, humanitarian, cultural, and philanthropic causes.

I am sure that all Members of this House will join with me in extending our best wishes to Mrs. Lande and to the Canadian Jewish community on the occasion of this prestigious award.

OLYMPIC GAMES

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE TO RESTORE OLYMPIC IDEALS

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, every day the list of countries that will not be participating in the Olympic Games in Los Angeles is getting longer, and coming from a riding where many young people are involved in sports, I would like to ask the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mr. Olivier) and the federal Government to make urgent representations to the effect that in future, the Olympic Games should have a permanent location. Perhaps we could go back to the first Olympic Games and designate Athens. We must get politics out of the Olympics, so that young people who have been working for years, in accordance with the Olympic ideals, for the day on which they will compete with one another, will no longer be the hostages of politics or ideology.

Mr. Speaker, if sports are to remain part of the key to international understanding, we cannot afford to set up these ideological and political barriers every four years and we must keep young people who are anxious to compete with their peers from being the hostages of their political leaders. Mr. Speaker, it is very important for Canada to lead the way in this field and prevent countries from making the Olympic Games a matter of prestige and expensive buildings and facilities for the country concerned, because what young people want is to meet with their peers every four years and compete with each other in accordance with the Olympic ideal.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DECISION TO ELIMINATE CABOOSES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the CNR has officially embarked on a program to operate its trains without a caboose at the rear. It is pleading economic pressures and technological improvements. It contends that the introduction of hot box detectors, dragging equipment detectors, and other technological improvements, now negate the necessity for a man in a caboose. This is simply not so.

Trains are now longer; over two miles is not unusual, and a mile and a half is very common. They travel faster, 50 to 65 miles per hour, and they carry more dangerous commodities than ever before. Coupled with this, there are fewer operating, inspection, and maintenance forces than there have ever been. This naturally means less and less attention is being given to rolling stock, and fewer people are inspecting either standing or running trains.

Cities, towns, and communities are more in jeopardy than they have ever been, and now the CNR wants to remove the man at the rear of the train, the key person who keeps a constant watch over the train while it is in motion. If this is allowed to happen, Mississauga will have been only a rehearsal for what is to come. I call on all Members of Parliament, and members of the public, to pay attention to this issue and not let it be decided on a technical basis. It is a political issue and it ought to be treated as such.

HARDY CUP CANADIAN INTERMEDIATE "A" CHAMPIONSHIP—CONGRATULATIONS TO VICTORIOUS CHARLOTTETOWN ISLANDERS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the Commons my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), proudly congratulated the Edmonton Oilers as the new Stanley Cup champions. Unquestionably the Oilers have brought great credit to Edmonton and the West, indeed to all of Canada, by their win over the New York Islanders.

However, I wish to draw to your attention, Sir, and to the attention of the House, that the Charlottetown Islanders have performed a similar feat for that city, for Prince Edward Island, and for the Atlantic Provinces, by winning the Hardy Cup Canadian Intermediate "A" Championship. They did so by beating the Moose Jaw Generals four games to one in the best of seven finals.

I know all Members of the House join me in congratulating Captain Wilfred MacDonald, Coach Errol Thompson, all other members of the Charlottetown Islanders, and everyone else associated with the team, on this major national sports triumph. As the Member of Parliament for the team's riding, I take particular pride in their victory.

FINANCE

ONTARIO TAX INCENTIVE SCHEME FOR HOUSING SENIOR CITIZENS IN HOME ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, Canadian senior citizens cannot enjoy their golden age unless they have housing facilities suitable to their needs. Substantial improvements have been made across Canada in senior citizen housing and homes for special care, but there is much more that can be done.

While special housing may be the answer in some cases, most senior citizens would be happier in their own homes or sharing homes with members of their family. In this context we should applaud the measures taken by the Government of Ontario. In its recent Budget, Ontario provided tax incentives to home owners who make renovations to keep elderly relatives living at home. Similar tax incentives are provided to elderly home owners themselves who renovate rather than move to special housing for seniors.

Our social concern can be measured, in Canada, by the way we treat our senior citizens and those who cannot cope without help. Keeping elderly Canadians in a home environment recognizes that senior citizens are an important element in each Canadian community. By encouraging Canadian families to care for their own, the Ontario Government has shown leadership which the federal Government and other provinces would be wise to follow.

REACTION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS TO EMPLOYMENT QUESTIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Members of the Tory Party laughed when I asked about workers' safety on Canada Works projects.

Mr. Thacker: You're a liar.

Mr. Manly: What was so funny? Did the Tories laugh at the large number of people who have to take jobs at low wages? Did they laugh at the suggestion that these workers were entitled to some form of safety committee and grievance procedure?

Mr. Blenkarn: No; at you.

Mr. Manly: Maybe these same Tory Members could go out and visit some of the crews on Canada Works projects. They could find out how funny it is to try to maintain a home and support a family on these low wages. They could joke about safety conditions, with workers doing heavy manual labour and working with power equipment outdoors in all kinds of weather.

The Tories called the Minister of Employment and Immigration two-faced when he promised to look into the question. Whether he was two-faced on this, only time will tell. But at least he had enough political sensitivity to realize that this was an important question. The Conservatives are completely insensitive to the needs of working people in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Manly: Safety in the work place is not a laughing matter, and Canadians can do without the Tory sense of humour.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RETENTION OF CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM, N.B.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, some two and a half years ago a government decision was made with regard to CFB Chatham which seemed at the time to be a staggering blow to the town of Chatham and the riding of Northumberland-Miramichi. However, at the time the Government also said it would make every effort to compensate for that loss, and to replace it. Yesterday the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) went to Chatham and announced that what was about to become a dead military base would in fact be given new life and would have a long-term future.

While the Tories and NDP in New Brunswick were playing politics with the issue, many people here in Ottawa, and officials in the region, were working hard to solve the problem. It has been solved, and I want to express gratitude on my behalf and on behalf of all of my constituents for the decision the Government made with regard to Chatham which will give it a long-term future with 1,400 employees.

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON INDUSTRY AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Minister of Economic Development, who is hovering in the background.

Mr. Wilson: Hobbling in the background.

An Hon. Member: Here is the Prime Minister.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday in Toronto the Minister of State for Economic Development criticized the Industrial and Regional Development Program, for which he is partly responsible as chairman of the Cabinet Committee for Economic Development, when he said:

> I get the feeling it's just not working.
> I believe it has a tendency to build on economic weaknesses rather than on economic strengths.

This is the same Minister who said a few weeks ago, and I quote:

> ● (1415)
> Instead of propping up run-down trucking firms, bankrupt computer companies and over-staffed government Departments, we should be investing more money in our people.

Surely we have arrived at a point in time when enough is enough, Mr. Speaker. Cabinet solidarity and that convention notwithstanding, how can the Prime Minister condone the continuous presence in the Cabinet of a Minister who would criticize the very program for which he is responsible?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I will reply to that question if I may. I wish the Hon. Member would have a look at my speech, provided he promises not to use any of the ideas set forth therein, as Members opposite have in the past. The fact is that during this leadership convention a number of us have been travelling coast to coast, meeting with people. Of course I do that in the course of my responsibilities in any event.

With regard to the particular program which I discussed last night, in the small and medium-sized business sectors there have been many questions raised with me which I feel must be addressed. I am inclined to the view that in that small and medium-sized business sector there is a better approach. I am not suggesting that there is not room for grants, as the report said. That is why I invite the Hon. Member to look at the text. However, there are many businessmen in the country who feel that this type of program may be overcentralized and too bureaucratic. We on this side of the House have a tradition of always trying to self improve in our programs, policies, and other areas. That is exactly what I am saying. I suggest that a little self improvement may be a good idea for that side of the House as well.

CABINET SOLIDARITY—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. That legislation is less than a year old. If there is a better approach, why does the Government not bring it in? Why does this Minister not bring it in, or else do the honourable thing and resign?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: The Minister of Justice is calling for the firing of the Governor of the Bank of Canada. The Minister of Employment and Immigration is calling for the firing of 30,000 civil servants. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is refusing to appear before a committee to defend his own Estimates. Surely, Mr. Speaker, there comes a point in time when the Leader of the Government must exercise some discipline so that all of these programs will not be totally undermined by his own Ministers, and so that the confidence of the people of Canada who have to depend upon these programs for a living will not be totally eroded.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for years Members on the other side have been accusing me of arrogance. I am showing a little tolerance and the arrogance is all on the other side.

EXAMINATION OF ESTIMATES OF DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, surely the Prime Minister will agree that these kinds of statements can only undermine confidence in economic expansion, as well as undermine the confidence of the people in the Altantic provinces and other areas who depend upon these programs for a living. Surely that is the effect of what the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development is saying.

If the Prime Minister does not intend to ask for the resignation of the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development, does he intend to follow his advice and change the legislation? Also, does he intend to issue instructions to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to appear before a committee of the House and defend his Estimates?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking me a series of questions. With regard to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I have asked that either he or the Minister of State attempt to find a date upon which the committee would be able to question him on his Estimates. I have not received the answer. I made the request yesterday.

With regard to the suggestion of the Hon. Member that in some way my Ministers are undermining confidence in the future of the economy, I do not see how that follows from a Minister saying that if he became Prime Minister he would try to improve again on our programs. It is the job of a Prime Minister and the Cabinet to try to make the programs ever better. That is certainly what we attempted to do some years ago when we switched from the pure system of tax incentives to grants so that they would be identifiable to the taxpayer.

It seems rather strange, and I am sure it does to people who follow the proceedings in the House, to hear the accusation from the Hon. Member that in some way we are undermining the confidence of the business community in the future of this country. That surely is the stock-in-trade of the Opposition. Every day of the week they stand up and say how terrible things are and how they will get worse. Members on this side are saying that if things are bad we will make them better. They on the other side can be relied upon to make them worse.

THE ECONOMY

PROJECTED RATE OF GROWTH

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. It is further to the comments on the weakness in the economy made by my colleague.

I want to welcome the Minister back to the real world of the Canadian economy because, while he was away in Paris, there have been a number of economists who cut back their expectations of the rate of growth in the economy, some by substantial amounts. John Grant of Wood Gundy, and Aron Gampel of Pitfield are two such economists. If this is realized, it will result in a significant increase in unemployment by the end of the year.

Does the Minister still stand by his expectations for growth in the economy that he set out in the February Budget and, if so, why is he doing so in the face of the combined intelligence of these economists? If not, what is his new projection for the rate of growth in the economy for this year?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his words of welcome and to report to him that I was not only at the meeting of the OECD but also at a meeting of the Commonwealth Finance Ministers and at the Group of Ten Ministers where indeed we had an opportunity to exchange views on the present economic situation world-wide.

The Hon. Member refers to some forecasts by some economists. Obviously he will get various projections from various economists from week to week. I refer him to an excellent article in the Wall Street Journal, I believe, talking about the collective wisdom of economists. I will send him a copy. I think he will be very interested in reading it.

I came out with a number of forecasts in the February 15 Budget. The practice in the Department is to re-examine those forecasts by mid year, roughly, which is the beginning of the summer or in the course of the summer, so as to use them for the re-examination of the projections for the economy and the consideration of priorities and planning in the Cabinet later on in the course of the year. As far as I am concerned, I have no other forecasts to put forward than those contained in the February Budget. However, we will proceed to the normal re-examination of the evolution of the economy later on this year.

Mr. Wilson: I detect a change in tone from the way the Minister previously defended the projections in that Budget. I think he has seen the writing on the wall.

IMPACT OF INTEREST RATES ON HOUSE BUILDING INDUSTRY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring another projection to the attention of the Minister, that of William Dickson, President of the Canadian Real Estate Association, who is projecting that housing starts this year will drop from his previous projection of 170,000 to 135,000. That means that there will be approximately 100,000 fewer jobs in that sector of the economy. What is the Minister doing to offset the impact of high interest rates, because it is clearly high interest rates that have caused this drop in housing starts? I hope that he will not tell us again that his hands are tied because of the increase in the deficit from $10 billion to $30 billion and that there is nothing he can do about it. If he is going to say that, he should be blaming his predecessor, the Prime Minister, and the rest of the Government for getting us into the mess we are in today.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can read whatever he wishes into what I said. What I said was quite simple. Every year we proceed to a re-examination of forecasts contained in the Budget, by mid year. This is what we will do again this year.

As far as the forecasted decline in housing is concerned, again I want to tell the Hon. Member that, contrary to what he said, the decline that took place in the early part of this year was not the result of higher interest rates, because indeed that decline began before the rise in interest rates. What one can expect is that the new measures we will be introducing, I hope in a very short time, concerning mortgage interest rate protection in particular, and the new provisions amending the Interest Act, will have a beneficial effect upon the housing industry generally.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He will know that the United States twelve months' inflation rate is almost double from its low in July, and all the financial analysts are now suggesting that that means interest rates in the United States are bound to be increasing in the months ahead by 2 percentage points and maybe by up to 4 percentage points. The Minister of Finance has indicated on a number of occasions that he plans to track American interest rates, that he simply plans to follow the American rate upwards. Knowing the very fragile state of the Canadian economy, Mr. Speaker, knowing the pressures under which small business people, home owners, farmers, and fishermen, find themselves, is the Minister of Finance ready to say today that he is prepared to take action independent of Paul Volcker and not track United States interest rates in the weeks and months ahead?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the increase in inflation in the United States of one-half of one per cent. I hope he will be encouraged by reminding himself that for April our own inflation went up by only 0.2 per cent.

Mr. Stevens: Still higher over-all than the U.S.

Mr. Lalonde: I would hope that the Canadian record will be significantly better than the United States record in terms of the inflation rate for 1984. That will be quite helpful in terms of our ability to maintain our interest rates at a lower level than the United States. As the Hon. Member knows, the situation is not that we are only tracking the U.S. rates. He will remember, for instance, that sometime in 1982 our prime rate was as much as 3 percentage points higher than the United States' prime rate. At the present time our prime rate is half a point less than that of the United States. We have achieved this because we have been able to bring our inflation down; increase our productivity, reduce our unit labour costs, and attain a very good rate of growth.

I think if we continue collectively to ensure that our economy will continue to grow, keeping our costs down, we will be able to keep our interest rates generally—the prime rate and other bank rates—at lower levels than those in the United States, or very close to those in the United States. I have never said that we have no independence of choice. We have some autonomy. But one has to look at the real situation, however, and to realize that we cannot just close out the world around us, ignore the United States situation, and think that we can have a totally independent interest rate policy.

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF TAX ON CAPITAL OUTFLOWS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister speaks about autonomy, and the Prime Minister indicates a willingness to make things better, a willingness to take some independent action.

The Minister of Finance knows full well that the weeks and months ahead will see an increase in United States interest rates, based on the best information available to us today. Businessmen, home owners and farmers are watching very closely because they feel that if our future performance is anything like our past performance it means that we will simply follow American rates upward.

The Minister of Finance has indicated that we cannot take real independent action because money will flow out of the country. Is the Minister of Finance prepared to give some consideration to lowering interest rates and to give some consideration to the implementation of a speculators' tax on large sums of money that people might move out of the country in order to take advantage of an interest rate? What is his view on a speculators' tax as one method to counter the argument against tracking American rates?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Hon. Member that speculating on what might happen does not necessarily mean it is going to happen. The Hon. Member is referring to projections on increases in interest rates in the United States in 1984. It is possible, but it is certainly not a foregone conclusion that it will happen. I would therefore urge the Hon. Member to keep his sense of perspective and not automatically assume there will be an increase of, for instance, two percentage points in interest rates in the United States, as he said.

He also mentioned creating a special tax on movements of capital to the United States. This point has been raised by fellow Members of the Hon. Member's party here in the House, and I said at the time that this did not seem to be a realistic solution. However, if the Hon. Member has specific proposals to make and he feels it would be feasible to implement this kind of tax, I shall consider all this within the framework of a future budget.

At the present time, however, I must say that the Hon. Member's proposal does not seem very realistic and it is not one I am prepared to consider.

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, let us talk about the present, if the Minister is not prepared to speculate on action that he might take. In the United States this morning, Baystate Funding, a savings and loan company in Massachusetts, is offering mortgages at 9.75 per cent, and the First Interstate Bank in California is also offering mortgages at 9.75 per cent. The same thing is being played out throughout the United States.

Considering that our prime rates are approximately the same, and that the inflation rate in Canada is approximately the same as that in the United States, why is there a 3 per cent differential between what banks, savings and loan companies in the United States are charging for mortgages, and what banks like the Royal Bank of Canada are charging? Why is there a 3 per cent differential?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): The Hon. Member will admit that there are some significant differences between the tax systems in the United States and in Canada. If I am not mistaken, perhaps, the Hon. Member will recall that in the U.S., there is a tax on capital gains accruing from the sale of one's own home. Canadians, however, do not pay a capital gains tax when they sell their home. That is one example of the differences between the tax systems in our two countries.

AGRICULTURE

IMPORTATION OF BEEF FROM IRELAND

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the amount of Irish beef which has been coming into Canada since the first of the year. The Minister will know that Ireland is now the largest single supplier of beef to this country. He will also know that some of this beef has been landed in Canada at as much as 30 cents per pound under our market price. If the level of those kinds of imports into our country continues, by August or September our quotas will be filled. This kind of thing hurts producers and processors in this country. For instance, Burns Meats in Brandon has just announced that it will close in August. This also jeopardizes the trade which we have with our traditional trading partners. Would the Minister bring us up to date on what he or his Department is prepared to do to address this very serious situation?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we met with representatives of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association on the Beef Import Advisory Committee just this past week. They made certain recommendations to the Ministry of Agriculture, to myself, and some of the officials in my Department.

The Hon. Member is saying that he wants import controls and that he wants them imposed. I am not against that. He knows that I am very much in favour of that. The beef is not coming to Canada by itself; it is being brought here by a corporate citizen of Canada who is buying it and putting it on the market here because it is cheaper. If he wants that kind of control, let him say so.

We have put a countervailing duty on hams coming in from Europe, from the same area. We know it is heavily subsidized, but when I talk about those kinds of things and when I talk about supply and management—and in essence that is what they are saying at the present time—they disagree with me.

Mr. Gamble: What are you doing today?

Mr. Whelan: If we had that kind of plan, as we have for some other products, we would not have to worry about beef coming from any place in the world into Canada.

Mr. Mayer: The Minister totally misrepresents what I asked him. I did not say anything about cutting off imports. I was concerned about the price at which it was coming into the country. The reason it is coming in is that the European Economic Community subsidizes it to the tune of about 50 cents per pound. We cannot compete with that. If the Minister continues to allow this, it will cause major problems in the meat industry.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared, through his Department, to take this on as a personal initiative? There are provisions under one section of GATT whereby he can, through his Department, initiate investigations to see whether in fact there is hurt in the industry. This will speed up the process so that we do not have to go through the 90-day to 180-day wait to bring on a countervailing duty. If he is prepared to do something within his Department, if he is prepared to instruct his officials to act now, we could do something about beef which is coming into the country at low prices. We are not as concerned about the quantity as we are about the price.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be worried about the quantity because there has been an 800 per cent increase over what there was last year for the same period. If he wants to make a comparison with the great free-trading nation to the south of us, he will learn that it only allows 5,000 tonnes of that kind of beef into the United States for 246 million people in a total year.

Mr. Dick: What about you?

Mr. Whelan: If the Hon. Member wants import controls, let him say so. If he wants to go through the system of surcharges and countervailing duties, he should know that we are supporting Canadian cattlemen in that regard, but it is time consuming. They come back on us for compensation under that kind of a ruling. It is a hurly-burly, free-trading world out there. Is he saying that he wants controls on that? Is that what he is saying on behalf of his Party over there? Does he want to stop those imports? In essence, I think that is what he is saying, and I do not disagree with him on that.

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State who, yesterday, expressed his grave concern about the quality and value of post-secondary education in Canada. The Minister has received in recent weeks requests for tripartite consultations on post-secondary education support, from the major components of the educational community in Canada, from the Canadian Association of University Teachers and the Canadian Federation of Students, as well as recommendations in the Page-Symons report issued by the Association of Universities and Colleges.

Will the Minister act now to end the Government's confrontational approach and initiate public consultations, which are being called for, on the need for accountability for federal government post-secondary educational funding?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is speaking from the two corners of his mouth at the same time. On one hand we have appointed Mr. Al Johnson to consult with the various post-secondary educational institutions in Canada. As a matter of fact, at my own request, Mr. Johnson is meeting with representatives of the Official Opposition, with representatives of the New Democratic Party, and with representatives of various associations of teachers and educational institutions in Canada.

On the other hand, as a result of the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, we have unanimously accepted an amendment to Bill C-12, investing the Secretary of State with the responsibility to report annually to the House on the negotiations with the Council of Ministers of Education on national objectives in post-secondary education.

What does the Hon. Member want? He wants more consultation. We have already had consultation. I said to him in committee yesterday that Mr. Johnson would be reporting to the Government and that the Government would table his reports on policy alternatives to end the stalemate which we have had with the provinces.

Essentially the provinces did not want to pass on the money which Parliament voted last year. This is not due to the priorities of the federal Government. It is due to the priorities of the provinces which have not made post-secondary education the first priority to be served in our country.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State who outlined once again the unilateral approach of the Government. The $500 per day activities of Mr. Johnson will once again bring a solution to the Government without consultation with the provinces or educational institutions.

Is the Secretary of State fundamentally agreeing with the proposals of Mr. Turner for unilateral federal action in order to bring the provinces and the institutions into line?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not know what the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands has been doing in the last month. Due to her own initiative, she brought in an amendment to Bill C-12 which called upon me to negotiate with the Council of Ministers of Education. We have accepted it, with the support of the New Democratic Party. If the unilateral gesture of Parliament is the unilateral gesture of the Government, I do not know exactly what the Hon. Member has in mind.

Mr. McLean: That was our initiative, not the Government's initiative.

Mr. Joyal: I have said to him repeatedly that following the consultation a report will be tabled in Parliament. There will be ample consultation with all the intervenors. The Hon. Member should get his act together and come back with positive suggestions.

AGRICULTURE

FARM FUEL TAXES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Of course he is aware that farm prices have been falling on many fronts, that costs are up, and that bankruptcies are up. Also, on the weekend he called for a general tax cut to stimulate the economy. Since he believes in a tax cut, is he ready to recommend to his Cabinet colleagues a cut in federal gasoline taxes on farm fuels, which amount to around 30 cents a gallon? Will he take that recommendation to Cabinet in order to help the farmers and to stimulate the economy of the country in general?

• (1440)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to one of my views I have expressed, one of the planks in my platform.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: That's not a plank, that's a two by four.

Mr. Whelan: I say to him that I have also made my views known with regard to taxes on fuel used in the production of food. I am sure he is aware of that. We are having ongoing discussions on this.

REQUEST FOR TAX REPEAL LEGISLATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the best known politician in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: I noticed the Prime Minister next to him a few minutes ago talking about a transfer of power, but he had better wait a few weeks.

Because of the urgency of the question and the urgency of the situation that farmers across the country now face, will the Minister take to Cabinet a proposal that, before the end of June, the Government will bring in a Bill to end gasoline taxes, which amount to around 30 cents a gallon on farm fuel? In fact I will make him a deal. If he does that for the farmers, I will lobby any Liberal delegate I can find in my riding for him in his leadership campaign.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Hon. Member that I have already talked to all the Liberal delegates in his riding. They tell me I should not make any commitment to him because he will not be here after the next election.

My concern about making food production profitable for the producers, and reasonably priced for the consumers, still stands. Anything that I can do to make sure that that comes about will be done.

PUBLIC WORKS

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS, CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.—TERMS OF HEADQUARTERS LEASE PURCHASE CONTRACT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. The Minister signed a lease purchase contract with a Toronto developer, Rampart Enterprises, for the DVA headquarters building in Charlottetown. The Government spent some $7 million on the building and then turned it over to Rampart, which spent some $16 million. The lease runs for 35 years and requires the Government to pay $2.2 million per year in rent, for a total of $78 million over the term of the contract. Will the Minister admit that this is overly generous to Rampart Enterprises?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it would be totally irresponsible to try to give that sort of judgment without knowing the amount of space, the management conditions of the contract, and so on. Obviously the Hon. Member does not expect me to carry that kind of information in my head.

Mr. McKinnon: If the Minister signs these contracts, I would expect him to know something about them.

MAINTENANCE COSTS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister confirm that, unlike most landlord/tenant leases, in this case the tenant, which is the Government, will pay all maintenance, heating, tax and other costs, which come to over $1 million a year and which will run the rent for this $22 million building up to over $100 million during the term of the lease?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is using every inflated arithmetical figure he can find. Obviously we cannot discuss this sort of issue without having all the figures in front of us. If the Hon. member wants me to appear before the committee and discuss this contract, I will do so.

COMMUNICATIONS

ACCESS TO UNITED STATES TELEVISION SIGNALS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. In view of a Goldfarb Consultants poll commissioned by the Liberal Government in July, 1983, which reveals that four out of five Canadians want unrestricted access to U.S. television stations, I want to ask the Minister two things. First, why had the Government hidden the results of last year's poll until Canadian Press revealed them in the media just yesterday? I received my copy in my seat in the House about five minutes ago. Second, what specific question did Goldfarb put to 1,600 Canadians to elicit the most interesting response that 80 per cent of Canadians want unfettered access to U.S. signals?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, as he has a copy of the Goldfarb report, courtesy of the Minister of Communications—

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Signed by his own hand.

Mr. Fox: —I would indicate that Canadian Press was obviously more diligent than Members of the Opposition. They used the Access to Information Act which I brought before this House, and which was adopted by the House two years ago, to obtain a copy of the report. As far as the Hon. Member's question is concerned, he will find the questionnaire on page 11 of the book, compiled by Mr. Goldfarb. I hasten to point out that one result that was not published by Canadian Press, which is also most interesting, is that 78 per cent of Canadians support the development of a strong Canadian artistic community.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I am glad to know that Canadians also recognize the need to protect and preserve a distinctive Canadian identity and a viable Canadian broadcasting industry.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications will know of the hostility of folks, particularly in many of Canada's smaller and more remote communities, when they are denied or cut off from American signals. Did the Minister commission this poll with a view to changing government policy on access to American signals? If so how is he going to come up with a policy which will ensure fair and equitable distribution of both Canadian and American signals and preserve the Canadian broadcasting system?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. gentleman has been watching the development of the Canadian broadcasting policy, he knows that that is what has been done for the past few years. Through the CRTC we have licensed a group of Canadian businessmen and entrepreneurs to deliver to all villages, towns, and areas of this country, a complete package of four U.S. signals, the four main networks, along with four Canadian signals. We feel that what Canadians are looking for is not only access to U.S. signals but access to Canadians signals, to let them know what is going on in this country.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MILITARY ACCIDENTS—RELEASE OF INQUIRY TRANSCRIPTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In the latter part of April the Minister appeared on the television program The Journal with respect to an issue that I have raised in this House before, the release of board of inquiry transcripts to designated next-of-kin in the case of military accidents. In response to a question from Barbara Frum on that program, the Minister indicated with regard to designated next-of-kin in a couple of other accidents which had been brought to his attention, that there had been a policy change, that these transcripts were now available and all the parents in this case had to do was get in touch with him the next morning and this information would be forthcoming. As of this weekend, neither of two sets of parents who got in touch with him the next morning has received the transcripts.

I was in touch with one of them this morning, Anne McKinnon of Alberta. As of today she has not yet received an answer to a telephone call she placed to the Minister's office that morning. The Minister had the nerve to go on national television and give the impression that there has been a policy change and that he would look after everything. I want to know when he is going to look after everything.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the Hon. Member ask his question?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did in fact indicate that there was a major policy change. That change is being implemented. The Hon. Member did not provide me, as he did on other occasions, with previous notice of his intention to raise the question so that I could provide details relating to the representations he has made, or the representations made by the individual he has identified. I will look into the matter he has brought to my attention and report to him.

Mr. Blaikie: When there is a policy change you don't expect to have to give the Minister notice. We want to know why he has not acted.

NAMES OF INQUEST WITNESSES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister. He knows that an inquest has been called into the accident that resulted in the deaths of Privates Krosney and Laurendeau. I believe it is to take place on June 22 in Moosomin, Saskatchewan. At this point they are not able to get the names in the transcript. We have the testimony that was given, but not the names. Will the Minister extend his ministerial discretion, which he has made a big deal of, to releasing the names of those who gave testimony in those transcripts so that that inquest can have the benefit of knowing everything there is to know about what happened that day?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the names were not provided because of the limitation under the Access to Information Act. That information was not to be made available because of the considerations of privacy. That having been said, Mr. Speaker, there is, indeed, a request which has been made relating to a coroner's inquest which was to be conducted by the provincial authorities. We have offered every cooperation in that respect. I have not received any requests from the coroner relating to the identification of particular individuals within the transcript.

Mr. Blaikie: You can't even get the transcript, never mind the names.

TOURISM

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for tourism. As predicted, the tourism deficit rose again in the first three months of this year over last year. In fact it is expected to reach a staggering $3 billion by the end of this year. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the industry is in trouble and is suffering. Deficits are rising. This all contributes to unemployment. When industry spokesmen voiced their concerns, as they should, the Minister's answer was: "If the tourism industry gets more bitchy or complaining, it will be hard to persuade the Cabinet to continue this current level of funding". Can the Minister justify making such a stupid and unproductive statement? Or is this his way to blackmail the industry and keep it quiet when it is in trouble? What is the answer?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, that particular statement, which I think was taken out of context, had to do with some complaints about the price of gasoline in this country and the effect of that on tourism. The simple fact of the matter is that the price of gasoline in this country results from an agreement which we have with the oil producing provinces. We fought long and hard to get the best deal we could for the Canadian consumer, and we got that deal.

I do not believe it is reasonable to think that that agreement is going to be ripped up because of its impact on tourism. I might point out that the first three months, January, February and March, in any year, are always the most difficult months for us because of the weather, and the Hon. Member knows that full well.

PROVISION OF FUNDS TO ONTARIO

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, that is a cop-out if I ever heard one. An election was fought on 18 cents a gallon, and you are the ones who raised the price of gasoline. Everyone knows that in Canada. We also know that in the tourism industry the problem is over-taxation, purely and simply, particularly on gasoline and alcohol. If the Minister had any clout at all in cabinet, he would have that tax lowered or knocked off completely.

There is a subagreement between Ottawa and the Province of Ontario which has been sitting on the desk of the other Minister since 1980. It was for $100 million, since reduced to $60 million. Can the Minister use some kind of clout and get that money to the province so it can spend it properly and increase tourism in this country? Some 85 per cent of tourism comes into this country by car. Will the Minister get that agreement signed and get that $60 million to the Province of Ontario which represents one-third of our tourism market?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first point of the Hon. Member on the price of gasoline, I would tell him that I saw my good friend, the Hon. Member for Rosedale, on City TV on Sunday night and heard him state that the position of the Conservative Party was still to move toward world prices for oil in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Mazankowski: They are above world prices now.

Mr. Smith: That is not the position of this side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: I seem to have touched a raw nerve, Mr. Speaker. With regard to an agreement with Ontario, yes, we have worked toward one, and we hope to have one before long.

Mr. Jelinek: When?

Mr. Smith: The delay has not been on our part.

PENITENTIARIES

RELEASE OF CONVICTED MURDER-RAPIST ON DAY LEAVE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It is with respect to Wayne Boden who recently escaped while on day leave. He was free for 36 hours, then was apprehended and again placed in jail. Boden raped, and then murdered four women by strangulation. Less than a year ago a psychiatric assessment said that he could murder again.

My question deals with a letter sent to me in 1976 from the former Solicitor General, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, wherein he stated that because of the viciousness of Boden's crimes he would not be released without Cabinet approval. In view of that commitment, and the psychiatric assessment, why was Boden out on day leave?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have answered the question in general. However, I was unaware of the letter. I will take the Member's question as notice and look into it.

FORMER MINISTER'S LETTER

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is going to look into it, I will ask him to look into this as well. Can he advise me if the letter, or the thrust of the letter, sent to me by the former Solicitor General, together with the psychiatric report, is in Boden's file at the prison? If so, what authority at the prison level could have overridden the requirement for Cabinet approval?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, again I will take notice of the supplementary question and report back to the Hon. Member as soon as I can.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OIL DRILLING IN LANCASTER SOUND—GOVERNMENT POLICY INQUIRY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Is it, or is it not, the policy of the Government of Canada to allow for oil and gas drilling in Lancaster Sound?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this question should be addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—

Mr. Dick: Where is he?

Mr. Caccia: —as to what the policy is for drilling in Lancaster Sound. He is the Minister responsible, and it seems to me the question should be addressed to him, or to the Minister who answers for him today in the House.

MINISTER'S ADVICE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, what advice has the Minister of the Environment given to the Minister who will make the effective decision? I believe it is not the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but rather the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. What advice has the Minister of the Environment given to this Minister?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would refer the Hon. Member to clippings in the press which have appeared in the past two weeks. I am sure he is very aware of them, otherwise he would not be asking this question. I did write to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development indicating that Lancaster Sound, because of its biological richness, is one which ought to be left aside in terms of oil drilling. That letter has been made available or leaked to the press.

ENERGY

TAR SANDS DEVELOPMENT—POSSIBLE JAPANESE PARTICIPATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the problems in the Middle East and the Gulf States, and the fact that Japan gets most of its oil from that region, I wonder whether the Government had made any arrangements, or thought of making any arrangements, with Japan, to develop tar sands' potential in western Canada on the basis that the Japanese would be given, on financing such plants, access to oil recovered in payment of its advances? The Minister will realize that that will go a long way toward solving a great deal of unemployment which exists in this country.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind my hon. friend that Canada was self-sufficient in oil last year. As a matter of fact, we were net exporters of oil to the United States. We were aiming for self-sufficiency by 1980, and we achieved it in 1983. I believe the energy policies of this Government were quite effective in reaching that goal. I hope my friend will applaud such a development.

As far as the arrangements concerning the development of the tar sands are concerned, again I remind my friend that a number of steps were taken regarding the development of the tar sands last year. As far as enhanced oil recovery is concerned, projects have taken place at Cold Lake and Wolf Lake, to mention only two, and there are discussions going on at the present time with the Government of Saskatchewan and the Government of Alberta concerning additional projects in that regard. There is no shortage of financing for good projects at the present time, and these discussions are going on.

If there are Japanese interested in the development of the Canadian tar sands, obviously the Government would be ready and willing to sit down with them and talk. However, we have to bear in mind our first priority, which is Canadian self-sufficiency, and we are not going to approve long-term commitments of exports of oil to other countries without first making sure that Canadians are going to be protected. We have to bear in mind that our first priority is Canadian self-sufficiency. We will not approve long-term commitments for exports of oil to other countries without first making sure that Canadians will be protected.

SUGGESTED OFFER OF SECURITY OF SUPPLY TO JAPAN

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is confusing me. First of all, he said that we are self-sufficient, and then he said that we are not self-sufficient. We do not really know. However, because he has said that we are self-sufficient, will he make an arrangement with the Japanese to give them some security of supply in consideration for their immediately opening up a tar sand plant that will provide jobs in Ontario, Alberta and the rest of the country? Canada has 1.5 million people out of work. When will the Government start using the energy potential of the country to put people back to work?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I again invite my hon. friend to look a little bit further than his nose. We were self-sufficient last year, and we want to ensure that we will be self-sufficient in oil in the future. Therefore, we will take steps to ensure that Canada will be well protected in the future in terms of oil supply.

As far as his question with respect to supposed Japanese interest is concerned, I have already answered it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of House business. Perhaps the Government House Leader might be able to advise the House whether or not the Government will be able to fulfil its commitment of last Friday and tell the House whether the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will in fact be appearing before the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Questions relating to House business are permitted on Thursday. The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton is aware of the usual practice of the House.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I understand that that is the usual practice of the House in order to get a weekly schedule. However, supplementary questions are frequently asked during the week, and this is a committee—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West rising?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the point of order that I would like to raise at this time is that if committees are not able to function, that is a matter of order within the House and it would come under the jurisdiction of the House. A commitment was made by the Acting Prime Minister acknowledging that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources should, in fact, appear before committee on his estimates. The Acting Prime Minister said that he would report back to the House in order that the committee could function. I think my hon. colleague who asked the question wanted to know whether or not there has been any report back with respect to the matter. I believe it is a matter of order for the House as it relates to the functioning of committees.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that his point would have been a perfectly proper question to ask the Minister during Question Period. The practice has been to entertain questions relating to House business on Thursdays. I think the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West and the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton can restrain themselves until tomorrow. At that time, the usual questions relating to—

Mr. Dick: No, that is when the committee meets.

Mr. Speaker: Committees must resolve their problems regarding witnesses, who appears and who does not appear. It is not the practice of the House of Commons to order or instruct witnesses. That is a matter for the committee to resolve.

Mr. Dick: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that Question Period will not be until two o'clock and the committee—if it is going to meet with the Minister—will be meeting before that time.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is well aware that it is not the normal business to settle procedures before committees on the floor of the House of Commons. These are matters for the committees to resolve. Questions relating to the business of the House are entertained regularly on Thursdays. That is the practice of the House.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I do not for a moment question Your Honour's ruling. However, that ruling does present the House with a terrible dilemma. As you know, under the rules all estimates are deemed to have been reported back to the House as of midnight, the end of May. If the Minister refuses to appear before the committee to defend his estimates—and he cannot be subpoenaed to appear before a committee—those estimates are deemed to have been reported back. That means the House has been denied the right to examine the estimates, which is the very essence of supply. In other words, Parliament is being denied one of its most important functions. I would ask Your Honour with respect: How do we get around that dilemma?

Mr. Speaker: The difficulty the Chair faces in recognizing the point made by the Hon. Member for St. John's East is that the Chair can hardly be aware of what is taking place in a committee without a report from the committee. The practice of what takes place before a committee is a matter of the committee's business. If and when a report is received from the committee—and presumably that report would be debated—there would be an opportunity for Hon. Members to express their views.

In all fairness, the Hon. Member for St. John's East has made a valid point and I always listen to him, but what does he expect the Chair to do under these circumstances? It is very difficult for the Chair to instruct a Minister, or to interfere with regard to the conduct of a committee's affairs. If the comittee reports and there is a matter arising out of the committee's report of which the Chair can take notice, the Chair will do the appropriate thing. However, there is no report from the committee. The committee has its terms of reference. Therefore, under the circumstances there is nothing which appears to the Chair that can be done at this time.

The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton has been recognized three times. This will be the last time.

Mr. Dick: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do believe it is incumbent upon you perhaps to listen before making any final judgment in this matter.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Dick: I have recognized in the 12 years in which I have been in the House that, because of changing circumstances from time to time, House business has been discussed other than on Thursdays. Yesterday when I attempted to raise this matter, Mr. Speaker, you suggested that it be brought to the House as a question. Unfortunately, it was not possible today for you to see me when I rose to put a question—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect, the Chair was given a list of eight names from the Whip of the Hon. Member's Party, and there were certain difficulties.

Mr. Dick: I know that there were a number of other people recognized. However, it is an important matter because the committee is sitting tomorrow before Question Period. It is a simple matter of an undertaking by the Government which appears on page 3865 of Hansard, given by the Acting Prime Minister. I would expect as a matter of course in dealing with House business, that a straightforward reply could be given very easily.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has heard the Hon. Member now for the fourth time.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to try and answer his question tomorrow.

PETITION

MR. BLAIKIE—ACCESS TO HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition by several hundred residents of northern Ontario who note that approximately 1,000 residents in the riding of Thunder Bay-Atikokan must travel each year to Toronto and Winnipeg to receive medical treatment which is unavailable in northern Ontario. That represents an increase of 50 per cent to Toronto and an increase of 98 per cent to Winnipeg from 1976 to 1982. They also note that many of these residents must pay for the visits themselves or rely on charity. They note that the Canada Health Act calls for reasonable access to health services without undue financial barriers.

Therefore they call on Parliament to uphold the principles of the Canada Health Act and assure reasonable access to health services without undue financial barriers for the residents of northern Ontario.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-242, an Act to stabilize the representation in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, this Bill will dispense with the necessity of readjustment of constituency boundaries based on the 1981 census. Given that, in my opinion and that of many others, there is no need to enlarge the number of MPs, this Bill will spare the public from further confusion and expense on this account during the 1980s.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with representatives of each of the Parties on House business. I believe the Government House Leader may well be prepared to alter the sequence of the Bills to be considered this afternoon. I was wondering if the House Leader has some proposals in that regard with respect to the business of today.

Mr. Pinard: My hon. colleague is right, Sir. The changes have been made known to himself, the NDP House Leader and the Table. If he wants me to repeat them, we will be dealing with Bills C-11, C-8, C-7, C-16 and C-24.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Bill C-14.

Mr. Pinard: As you wish. That is all right.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the Day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CURRENCY AND EXCHANGE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Blenkarn: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there has been an agreement that Bill C-11 could proceed through Committee of the Whole rather than be referred to the Standing Committee. Perhaps the reference could be altered in accordance with that agreement.

Mr. Pinard: That is correct, Sir. I may outline generally the understanding we had among House Leaders on each of the Bills. On C-11 the understanding is that there is one speaker per Party and that the Bill will be passed through all stages here in this House. Therefore, the consequential amendment of the motion will be taken into account.

In so far as Bill C-7 and Bill C-8 are concerned, they will come next and the understanding is that they will be sent to a Standing Committee as opposed to Committee of the Whole. There will be one speaker per Party on Bill C-8, and I understand that debate on Bill C-7 was held a few weeks ago on a Wednesday afternoon. In so far as Bill C-16 is concerned, we will see when we reach that Bill.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Currency and Exchange Act, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Beatty: I rise on a point of Order, Mr. Speaker. I apologize to the House for interrupting at this point. Have you called Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers? If not, was it your intention to call them today?

Mr. Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary requested that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers stand. I called the item and there was no objection taken at that point. With all due respect to the Hon. Member, the Chair called the item and it was carried.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I may have missed it but I did not hear you call Orders of the Day. We were on House business and it seems to me that we are still in Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Clearly the Chair did call Orders of the Day. I am sure the Hansard record will show that point without any question.

The Hon. Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) has the floor.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, the Bill we have before us, Bill C-11 to amend the Currency and Exchange Act, deals primarily with the accounting procedures used by the Exchange Fund Account to value Canada's gold reserves and to record gains on gold transactions. Additionally, it seeks to broaden somewhat the provisions under which the Minister of Finance can engage in gold transactions, clarifies and modernizes the wording of the Act, and changes its title to the "Currency Act".

The amendments proposed are of a housekeeping nature, occasioned by developments subsequent to the abandonment of an official price for gold by the International Monetary Fund in 1978. In his audits of the Exchange Fund Account beginning in 1979, the Auditor General has expressed the opinion that the policy of continuing to value the Exchange Fund Account's gold holdings at the former official price rather than at market value is not in strict conformity with the Act. Valuing the Exchange Fund Account's gold at the market price, however, has a number of drawbacks, the principal one being that it could lead to large fluctuations in the reported level of our international reserves which are unrepresentative of actual changes in those reserves. The amendments would provide for a continuation of present practice as well as for flexibility in changing the basis for valuing Canada's gold reserves, subject to the provision that the value not exceed the market price, should future circumstances warrant such a change.

The amendments would sanction explicitly the current practice of recording gains on the sale of gold as valuation gains and paying them to the Consolidated Revenue Fund over a three-year period, paralleling the treatment of valuation gains resulting from exchange rate changes. This treatment is consistent with the amendments to the Currency and Exchange Act of 1977, which distinguished between net investment income and valuation gains or losses and provided for transfers to the Consolidated Revenue Fund based on the different character of these two categories. It has the effect of smoothing year-to-year transfers to the Consolidated Revenue Fund due to abnormal and irregular movements. I should like to remark that the aforesaid changes relating to accounting practices will not affect the actual transactions of the Exchange Fund Account in any way. The Auditor General has indicated that the proposed amendments overcome the concerns expressed in his recent audits of the Exchange Fund Account.

The payment of income by the Exchange Fund Account to the Consolidated Revenue Fund is effectively only a bookkeeping entry; no cash is transferred. Income from foreign currency assets is retained by the Exchange Fund Account. The Canadian dollar equivalent which is paid to the Consolidated Revenue Fund is financed by an increase in Canadian dollar advances to the Exchange Fund Account by the Consolidated Revenue Fund, so that there is no net change in cash holdings.

It is proposed to widen the provisions under which the Minister of Finance may deal in gold loans and similar transactions in order to increase the potential income of the Exchange Fund Account. It is also proposed to modernize the wording of Section 14, repeal the obsolete provisions of Section 16, and to change the Act's title to the "Currency Act", since the additional wording serves no purpose.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my presentation on this matter will be equally brief. It was rather astounding to hear an admission by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) this afternoon that, with respect to the Currency and Exchange Act, the Government has been acting illegally for some time. One immediately asks oneself why the government did not bring in amendments to the Act before this. Why did the Government wait until this late stage in the game, some time after this matter had been brought to its attention by the Auditor General, before it presented Parliament with amendments which would allow it to operate legally? The Government is certainly not operating legally at the present time, as the Auditor General of Canada has determined.

Let us take a closer look at the Bill, Sir. First, the Government wants to drop the title, the Currency and Exchange Act, which has a historic ring to it. I do not know why it wants to change it to "An Act respecting Currency". They still use the term "the Exchange Fund" in the proposed amendments. I guess it does not really matter whether we call it the Currency Act or the Currency and Exchange Act, but I would like a further explanation on that score.

The second change in terminology, that to change the name of the "Exchange Fund" to the "Exchange Fund Account", does make sense because that is really all it is. It is not something kept strictly apart from other funds that the Government holds. It is really an accounting mechanism whereby funds which are retained in a central fund are allocated to one account or another.

I have some reservations with respect to the authority which the Minister seeks to deal in gold. The Minister always could buy, sell and lend gold. However, he had to do it himself or through his servants. This Bill would enlarge upon that so that the Minister of Finance could deal through an agent. One might ask oneself who this agent is to be. What friend of the Liberal Party is this agent likely to be? Why do we need agents to deal in gold when the Minister of Finance does not need agents to deal with securities held by the Exchange Fund? Why do we need special agents to deal in gold? Why have the words "otherwise deal in" been added? The Minister could buy, sell or lend gold before. What does it really mean when it says that he is now able to "otherwise deal in" gold? Are we to start undertaking highly speculative operations with respect to gold? I would hope not. I think enough speculation has gone on already.

Let us take another look at the clause to which I am referring, Sir. All of these things can be done "as the Minister thinks fit". Extremely wide discretion is to be granted by a Minister of the Crown. There are apparently no regulations as to how this agent is to operate or what "otherwise deal in" means. It is all left up to the Minister. He can issue whatever directions he wants. Once we have passed this Bill, the matter will be removed from any further parliamentary control.

There is the question of valuation of gold contained in the Exchange Fund Account. To a certain extent I buy the argument presented by the Minister of State for Finance that, because the price of gold has fluctuated rather widely as of late, we may need a value to put on gold other than the current market value at the date of valuation of the account. The way this matter is approached in these amendments is that the value is to be determined by the Minister at his discretion. He can put any value on that gold that he wants, so long as that value is below the current market price. I am sure you would agree that this could give rise to some very creative—to use a word which is frequently used by members of the accounting profession—approaches to the presentation of the books of account for the Exchange Fund. If they see themselves in pretty bad shape and do not want to give that impression to the general public, they can always value the gold contained in that account at a much higher figure than the year preceding. Therefore, they can give the misleading impression that they are conducting the affairs of the Exchange Fund Account in a proper and business-like manner when in fact they are not. The fund may be sinking in value and because they put another value on the gold contained therein they give a false impression. There are certain things to be concerned with in this Bill. It is largely a housekeeping matter, but there are elements of concern contained therein.

I would also like to state that I am not fully satisfied with the way the Government of Canada has been disposing of some of the gold contained in the account for some time. Although they have not gone above board yet, I am always scared that they might adopt the same approach that President Nixon had to the GSA stockpiles in the United States. He used those stockpiles, which are supposed to be for a strategic purpose, for the objective of obtaining ready cash. He was running out of money and did not want to increase taxes. He sold off the stockpiles to get ready cash. I would not like to see the Government of Canada use our gold reserves in that manner.

When all is said and done, gold is the real money. When paper currencies and paper securities of one kind or another are no longer of value, gold will always have an inherent value. If at all possible, a nation should keep to itself a certain adequate reserve of gold. In my opinion, it is not out of line to suggest that one ounce per citizen might be a reasonable amount of gold for the nation to hold. I would hope that Canadian gold reserves would not go much below the 20 million ounce level.

In concluding my presentation on the Bill to amend the Currency and Exchange Act, I would like to make two further points, Mr. Speaker. Although this does not strictly relate to the Bill we are discussing today, I would like to give my opinion on the issue of a $1 coin. In order to buy a package of cigarettes from a vending machine, one must have about 10 quarters, maybe more in Newfoundland. It would be a lot easier if a $1 coin could be issued. I am sure the people who operate vending machines would find that attractive after a while, although it would entail some expense to change the machines. It would certainly be to the advantage of heavy smokers like myself.

The last point is that on one or two occasions in the House I have raised the issue of plastic bank notes. I understand that at the present time linen bank notes are to be discontinued and be replaced with cotton bank notes. I do not know what the advantage of one of those over the other is. I know that we grow flax, but we do not grow cotton in Canada.

It is now possible to make plastic bank notes. I have before me a bank note issued by the Government of the Isle of Man. I know I am not allowed to bring exhibits into the House but you can consider this as being a speech note, although it is a bank note. These plastic notes are much more durable than paper bank notes. They can get wet without being ruined. Their life expectancy is said to be about five years rather than a few months. They are virtually indestructible. Even at a temperature of 40 degrees below zero they do not become brittle. Apparently they would be good for Canadian climatic conditions.

An Hon. Member: Can you light a cigar with it?

Mr. Nickerson: The one thing that you cannot do with it is light a cigar.

At some point I would like a response from the Government of Canada indicating it will at least look into the possibility of issuing plastic bank notes and whether, in its opinion, it may or may not be a good idea.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise today to say a few words regarding Bill C-11, an Act to amend the Currency and Exchange Act. I listened very carefully to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) as he explained the housekeeping amendments which, by and large, provide the general thrust of the Bill. Consequently, I do not necessarily want to go over the same ground. However, I would like to make a couple of comments and identify some concerns that I have regarding the nature of Bill C-11.

The question has already been raised about the need for a change of title. I suppose that it is hardly worth spending much time debating the appropriateness of the new title, "An Act respecting Currency". However, it does point out the value of the Auditor General's report. The Auditor General's report recently noted that the current Act, if strictly interpreted, would mean that for accounting purposes the Government would have to value its gold reserves at the market rate and not use the currently accepted practice. Valuation of the gold reserves at the market rate tends to lead to an overvaluing of the Exchange Fund Account since if we sold the gold on the world market, the price we would get would be less than the current rate. It certainly makes a good deal of sense to follow the Auditor General's advice in this respect in terms of the value Canadians will receive.

Another change broadens the ability of the Minister of Finance to engage in gold transactions. As indicated by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), the Minister of Finance could always sell, buy or lend gold. Now he is able to use special agents to carry on this particular function in his place. One must ask what it is that encourages this particular change and what problems have existed in the past. What does it mean in terms of the possibility of the Minister involving himself in patronage practices of one kind or another? However, recognizing that as years go by different types of gold transactions between countries develop, this Bill authorizes the Minister to engage in such transactions, now using appointed agents if he feels that is appropriate.

The other major change involves treating gains received from gold sales as accounting gains rather than as current income to be included in the Consolidated Revenue Fund. This is obviously an important change and one that needs to be implemented. My general concern is that there are a number of references in the Bill that would provide more discretion to be used by the Minister of Finance. When one considers that an increasing number of Bills that we debate give more discretion to the responsible Minister, it is a trend that I believe needs to be examined. While a particular Minister of Finance may fulfil his responsibilities with honour and integrity, upon reflection one does not always have that same level of confidence with respect to other individuals. Therefore, I believe that putting more discretion in the hands of Ministers opens the entire matter up to more interpretation and builds, in a sense, vagaries into the system.

However, in order not to prolong this discussion unnecessarily, we will be supporting the housekeeping amendments that essentially make up Bill C-11. We will do our best to pass this Bill with considerable haste to enable us to get on with other more appropriate and important debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On Bill C-8 as well as on Bill C-7, which will follow, we have agreed that both of these Bills will be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and not to the Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent for the proposal made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Agreed and so ordered.

SPECIAL IMPORT MEASURES ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-8, an Act respecting the imposition of anti-dumping and countervailing duties, to amend the Currency and Exchange Act, the Customs Tariff and the Export and Import Permits Act and to repeal the Anti-dumping Act, be now read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-8 implements the legislative changes set out in the Notice of Ways and Means Motion that I tabled in the House in December. It provides for the imposition of anti-dumping and countervailing duties, it amends the Currency and Exchange Act, the Customs Tariff and the Export and Import Permits Act, and it repeals the current Anti-dumping Act. It also proposes a few consequential amendments of a technical nature to other Acts.

The Bill is the product of a lengthy consultative process that began with the publication by the then Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) of a discussion paper entitled Proposals on Import Policy in 1980. The proposals were referred to the Standing Committee on Finance for study which established a sub-committee on import policy to examine the proposals. The sub-committee held public hearings and presented its report in 1982. It accepted most of the 1980 proposals and made recommendations to deal with other issues raised during its work. Additional comments were subsequently received from the public after the issuance of the sub-committee report. The Bill now before us reflects the original proposals, the sub-committee report and the representations from the public.

Before going into details, I should like to recall the purpose of the legislative changes proposed. They are designed to ensure that the Government has the necessary authority to take greater advantage of our rights under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, GATT, and of the agreements on non-tariff measures negotiated during the Tokyo Round of multilateral trade negotiations which was concluded in 1979, in particular the agreements on anti-dumping and countervailing duties. They are particularly aimed at ensuring that Canada is equipped to deal effectively with injurious import competition and other trade problems. They will ensure that Canada's procedures are as effective as those of our main trading partners who have already adopted similar legislation.

In order to achieve these objectives, the Bill proposes changes in legislation relating to the imposition of anti-dumping and countervailing duties, to emergency safeguard action on imports and to the taking of trade measures to protect our trade interests.

The proposed Special Import Measures Act replaces the current anti-dumping and countervailing duty legislation and contains most of the legislative changes proposed in the Bill. Following this, a brief review of its provisions, I shall address other related amendments to the Customs Tariff and Export and Import Permits Act. The amendments to the Currency and Exchange Act are minor; they simply provide a firmer basis for the regulation-making authority regarding the conversion of foreign currencies to equivalent values in Canadian dollars.

The Special Import Measures Act provides for the imposition of anti-dumping duties when Canadian producers are injured by goods imported at prices lower than in the exporting country itself. It also provides for the imposition of countervailing duties on injurious imports of goods subsidized by foreign governments. It sets out the procedures to be followed in both cases.

Under the current regime, the Department of National Revenue is responsible for investigating dumping and subsidization where they are of the opinion that the alleged dumping or subsidization is causing injury to Canadian producers. The Anti-dumping Tribunal, which will be renamed the Canadian Import Tribunal under the proposed Act, conducts the formal inquiry into the alleged injury. I should stress here that Canada's international obligations under the GATT require that anti-dumping or countervailing duties be imposed only where it has been determined that there is a direct link between the dumped or subsidized imports and the material injury to Canadian producers.

The proposed Act would bring the following main changes to the current anti-dumping and countervailing duty legislation. First, the Act would provide for parallel procedures in anti-dumping and countervailing duty cases. While there are similarities in current procedures there are also important differences that the Act would eliminate. Under the new legislation, the degree of ministerial discretion at various stages in the countervail proceedings will be reduced, thereby making the system more automatic as in the case of anti-dumping. Moreover, the new legislation will permit the investigation of countervail cases where the Canadian industry has only a small share of the domestic market or where subsidized imports are retarding the establishment of a domestic industry, as is currently the case for dumping. These and other changes I shall describe to the countervail system should make it a more responsive instrument of trade policy and increase public confidence in it.

Second, under current procedures there are no specific time limits in law for the conduct of dumping or subsidy investigations. This has led to criticisms that our procedures are too slow to be effective and created uncertainty for all parties in proceedings. The Act would provide strict time limits for the conduct of investigations into dumping or subsidization. The limits would reduce the time between the submission of a complaint by Canadian producers and the decision whether to impose provisional duties from the present six to ten months to four months in the future in most cases.

There is currently no specific legal authority for the acceptance of undertakings from exporters or their governments to eliminate the dumping or the subsidy. This procedure is permitted under the international agreements on anti-dumping and countervail. It is essentially intended to eliminate the injury caused by dumped or subsidized goods more quickly than possible with a full-scale investigation and inquiry. Hence, it reduces the burden both in time and expense on all interested parties.

The Act allows for the acceptance of undertakings. I wish to stress here that undertakings would be voluntarily offered by exporters of foreign governments. Before accepting an undertaking, all interested parties, including the complainant, would be consulted. They would be free for up to 30 days after the undertaking has been accepted to request that the normal procedures be resumed.

Third, the sub-committee on import policy recommended further study of the problems of the capital goods sector. The Government has decided that it was important to address these problems now. The Act and the draft regulations made public in December contain provisions which would deal with many of the specific problems that have been raised by this industry, including those relating to the measurement of concessional export financing for the calculation of normal value and export price in dumping cases. The Act would also allow for appeals to the tribunal of any decisions made by Revenue Canada regarding the identity of the importer, an issue of considerable importance to the industry.

Fourth, at the same time as the Government wants to make Canada's anti-dumping and countervail system more effective in dealing with the injurious dumped or subsidized imports, it also wants to ensure that the system is fair and equitable. In this regard the Act will allow for the public interest to be taken specifically into account. Consumers and users, among others, will be permitted to present their views to the tribunal, which in turn may recommend application of less than the full amount of the anti-dumping or countervailing duties if in its opinion a full assessment would not be in the public interest.

The Act would also allow Revenue Canada's initial injury determinations to be challenged in an appeal to the tribunal in the same way as the legislation now permits a complainant to appeal a decision by Revenue Canada not to initiate an investigation on the basis of lack of evidence of injury.

Moreover, the Act would provide for sunset clauses. Undertakings and findings by the tribunal would lapse after a specified period of time unless a review by it leads to a determination that there is still a need for the measures. Similar sunset provisions are proposed regarding measures taken in emergency safeguard situations to deal with injurious imports which are not necessarily dumped or subsidized. This will ensure that any measure of protection against injurious imports is periodically reviewed to assess its need.

Fourth, the Act provides for greater public disclosure and better access to information in the case of investigations by Revenue Canada, while protecting information which must legitimately remain confidential. This should enhance public confidence in the import regime and is in keeping with our international commitments.

I should like to turn to the second part of the Bill dealing with other amendments which relate essentially to the Customs Tariff and Export and Import Permits Act. They are designed to provide the Government with more flexibility and a wider range of measures to deal with emergency import situations. They will also provide the Government with more flexibility to enforce Canada's rights under international trade agreements and to respond to acts by other governments which adversely affect Canadian trade interests.

Currently, actions to deal with emergency import situations may take the form of a quota under the Export and Import Permits Act or of a surtax under the Customs Tariff. Because surtaxes cannot now be imposed beyond 180 days without parliamentary approval, this measure has been generally used to deal with short-term, price-related problems. However, there may be times when surtax would provide a more effective remedy than quotas to deal with longer-term problems. This Bill would amend the Customs Tariff to allow for the application of surtax actions beyond 180 days where an injury finding has been made by an independent tribunal. Where there is no such finding, parliamentary approval for the extension would continue to be required. Moreover, any surtax action could be revoked by Parliament at any time. The Bill would also amend the Customs Tariff to permit the application of surtax after a specified volume of imports has been reached.

The Export and Import Permits Act would be amended to allow the collection of information with respect to goods in order to ascertain whether the importation of such goods is causing injury to Canadian production. Such monitoring is impossible under the current Act. The Bill would amend the Customs Tariff to provide the Government with broader scope to respond to the acts of other governments adversely affecting trade in Canadian goods and services and to enforce Canada's rights under a trade agreement.

There is one more amendment to the Customs Tariff which I should like to bring to the attention of the House. The Bill proposes new provisions which would provide specific authority to take measures in the form of a surcharge on imports for balance of payments purposes. The GATT allows countries to restrict imports to deal with general balance of payments problems. While with flexible exchange rates this provision may have less relevance than in the past, the Government wants to ensure that it is legally entitled to exercise all its GATT rights should the occasion demand.

As I have already indicated earlier, this Bill is the result of a lengthy consultative process which permitted all interested parties to present their views. Its provisions reflect a serious attempt by the Government to take those often divergent views into account.

The legislative changes contained in the Bill are needed soon in order to equip Canada with speedy and effective import policy instruments which are at the same time fair and equitable to deal with injurious imports and other trade problems. Accordingly, I welcome the work of the standing committee with regard to this Bill. I further welcome the agreement among all Parties in the House to give speedy approval to this legislation.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, in June last year a sub-committee of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, with the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) and the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) working together, produced a report which was accepted by the standing committee and placed with the House. It was from that report that Bill C-8 was drafted. To a large extent it almost completely adopted the recommendations of the sub-committee.

The Bill is long past due. Today in the House the issue of Irish beef was raised. The question is one of subsidy on imports. Until now it is my understanding that countervailing duties and anti-dumping provisions really only applied where goods were being sold in the Canadian market at less than the price offered in the foreign market. That is often the case because there are massive domestic subsidies on products in the markets from which they come. Therefore we wind up with Italian canned tomatoes and Spanish canned tomatoes being brought into Canada at a price less than the cost of the tomatoes themselves as a result of the subsidies on agricultural products in Europe.

Recently the Chinese had a price for paint brushes and a price for hog bristles. One could either buy a paint brush complete with hog bristles or just the hog bristles. If one wanted to buy only the hog bristles, the price was somewhat higher than it was if the hog bristles were made into a paint brush. That kind of trade is not fair trade. Something must be done—and in that particular case it was done—to ensure that Canadian industry is not unduly and unfairly damaged. In that particular case the countervail was as much as 500 per cent. It is evident that work has been taking place. Of course, the problem is that the present system is somewhat cumbersome or somewhat slow. It requires a great deal of money in terms of lawyers' fees, briefs and so on. It is hoped that the new Act will expedite some of the necessary action which must be taken.

We live in a world where a number of countries are striving to grab hard currency at any price. They do not care whether or not they are fair in trade. They will sell products from state-owned corporations at any price just to obtain hard currency. Therefore, we have to be on our toes and ensure that actions of that nature do not destroy our own domestic manufacturers and producers. This Bill is the kind of Bill we need to do that.

The ways of the world are becoming very sophisticated. Sometimes a subsidy is not directed to a product. It may be a subsidy in terms of transportation or in terms of the creation of a factory itself. The numbers of subsidies and the ways foreign countries organize their promotion in an unfair fashion are as unlimited as the imaginings of man. It is hoped that this particular Bill, getting at subsidies of every nature given to those who export to Canada which unfairly affect the price of goods in Canada, will be used to provide our own producers with an element of fairness. I do not think any of us see this as a new tariff Bill. We want free trade but not unfair trade. This is an important measure to ensure that we have fair trade.

It is in that light that I am happy this Party is recommending that the Bill go to the standing committee for further study and detailed analysis. A number of Canadian manufacturers have had difficulty with the Anti-dumping Tribunal in the past, a number of importers and a number of processors. They may want to have their case presented to the committee. In our view, the Bill is an improvement over the present legislation and should receive the support of this House.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to determine whether it is Bill C-7 that is now before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Bill now before the House is Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff. We are on a new Bill. I remind the House that an agreement was reached earlier between the Parties and this Bill will proceed to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs instead of going to a Committee of the Whole. Is there unanimous consent for such a proposal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Debate.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I understand from consulting the Clerk at the Table that on May 2, in addressing some remarks to Bill C-7, I had utilized most of the time available to me. In the two or three minutes remaining, if I am correct in the information I obtained, I would like to point out that Bill C-7 raises two major issues. The first is the administration of the new level of exemptions by Revenue Canada. The second is specific concerns that relate to the export trade.

By way of concluding my remarks on Bill C-7, which I commenced on May 2, I would like to say this. I hope and expect that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) will instruct his officers that in administering the new laws, with the double exemptions on goods brought into Canada by persons returning from foreign travel, they will exercise good judgment and not lead innocent citizens of Canada into a trap with respect to goods they bring back from their travels abroad. We have seen in this House of Commons and elsewhere that activities by officers of Revenue Canada have caused a certain amount of grief among Canadian taxpayers. We would not want this extended to the activities of the Customs and Excise Branch of the Department with respect to goods brought into Canada by Canadians who are travelling abroad. I again raise that caution and request that the Minister of National Revenue exercise care on behalf of Canadians.

With respect to export trade, which is part and parcel of this Bill because it contains provisions affecting the importation of goods from Third World countries, I again remind the House that the economic future of Canada is in great part dependent upon its substantive expansion of international trade.

It has been said by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that Canada should get back to its early 1970 share of international trade when we enjoyed approximately 5 per cent of all international trade. That would create in Canada 1.4 million jobs. By expanding our role in international trade, we would create jobs within Canada that would virtually eliminate the officially unemployed in Canada. That is not put forward as a solution but rather as a goal at which Government can aim in attempting to resolve the most important economic problem in Canada, namely unemployment. A great part of that solution is to expand our participation in international trade.

It has also been said that $1 billion in terms of international trade and exports will create, at 1984 levels, 17,000 jobs in Canada. If we make that the aim and goal of our economic policies in Canada, we can look forward to virtual elimination of unemployment in Canada over a period of time. Both of those matters and thoughts should be kept in mind in relation to Bill C-7.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): At this point in our proceedings a ten-minute period is provided for questions and comments. Are there questions of the Hon. Member? Debate. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE OFFSHORE APPLICATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair would like to be guided by the House. It was mentioned previously that some form of agreement might have been reached or that we would deal with it when we reach it, as stated earlier by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). Are there any special instructions from Members of the House of Commons?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to say that there have been some discussions with the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) with respect to what we consider to be a small but very important, indeed an extremely important, amendment to the schedule with respect to the application of the Act to fishing vessels, to include all fishing vessels in the schedule. I believe there is widespread support in all Parties with respect to an amendment to the schedule. I know the Minister of State for Finance has been canvassing this matter within his Department in terms of the policy which might be appropriate.

It would certainly be helpful if the Minister of State for Finance could address the question as to whether we could move to an amendment as suggested to him. I am sure he would find there would be unanimous consent with respect to whatever technicalities are required, whether it be by way of proceeding to a Ways and Means Motion, if that were necessary, or whatever authority is required to have the amendment made to the legislation.

It is this kind of co-operation for which we in the Official Opposition are well known. The House Leader will understand that we are trying to make Parliament work, as usual. If the Minister of State for Finance is prepared to consider this very constructive suggestion made by members of my Party with respect to an amendment, he will find that it will certainly facilitate the passage of this important legislation.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the offer by the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition to allow Parliament to work better in the future than in the recent past. I thank him for his co-operation.

It is true that there was a clear understanding that if we were to agree to the kind of amendment referred to by the Hon. Member, we could dispose of the Bill through all stages with one speaker per Party. It was not clear, if we were not to agree to the amendment, that there would not be one or two more speakers from the Official Opposition. For the time being I would prefer to let the Minister responsible deliver his speech on second reading. We would then have a better indication of what he intends to do. It is his decision. He may have good reason to agree or disagree. I therefore suggest that we start debate on second reading stage and then we will see what happens.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the position put forward by the House Leader for the Conservative Party is the wish of the entire House. Certainly I think it would be informative to the House to know where we are and how we are to prepare for this. It may be possible for the Minister to make a statement on the acceptability of the amendment. By putting the amendment forward we were led to believe—and it was confirmed by the Government House Leader—that the Bill could in fact be placed in danger. The largest part of the economy of shipbuilding in Canada will relate to offshore oil exploration among other things, so this is an extremely dangerous area. I wonder if the Minister might give an indication to the House whether he would be prepared to accept this very worth-while amendment and let us know prior to entering the debate whether we are preparing to pass the Bill through all stages—which we would very much like to do this afternoon—or whether procedural gamesmanship will put this very important piece of legislation beyond the reach of the House. We would like to see the Bill passed this afternoon with the amendment.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two clarifications with respect to the last intervention made by the Hon. Member. First, I would suggest that he speak with his House Leader. There was never any firm agreement that we would agree to the amendment. Therefore, there was a possibility that we would pass the Bill through all stages this afternoon, maybe with a few more speakers, and without the amendment. That was a possibility. There was no firm agreement to bring in the amendment. I was not able to give that commitment.

Second, he is seeking a statement by the Minister. That is exactly what I just indicated the Minister would do when he started debate on second reading.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-16, an Act to apply the customs and excise jurisdiction of Canada to the continental shelf of Canada and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will address the question which the House Leader for the Official Opposition raised, but first I should like to deal with the substance of the Bill itself. It is legislation which will fill a vacuum in Canadian law and will have significant positive effects on the ability of Canadian manufacturers to compete on fair and equitable terms in supplying goods used in the exploration and development of Canada's offshore petroleum reserves.

As a result of the Notice of Ways and Means Motions originally tabled in June of last year and subsequently re-tabled in December, Bill C-16 has been in effect on a provisional basis since June 30, 1983. Bill C-16 implements the customs and tariff aspects of the offshore policies announced by the Government in January, 1983.

More specifically, the Bill extends Canada's customs and excise legislation beyond the 12-mile territorial limit to the outer edge of the continental shelf, or to a distance of 200 miles from shore, whichever is farther. Second, it eliminates the tariff preference on Commonwealth-built ships engaged in coasting and the preferences on other vessels and floating structures from both Commonwealth and developing countries. Third, it reduces to 20 per cent the 25 per cent rate of duty on vessels and floating structures used for petroleum drilling. Fourth, it clarifies the dutiable status of other vessels and floating structures.

Most of the exploration offshore has taken place beyond the 12-mile territorial limit. Until the provisional implementation of Bill C-16, it was not subject to Canada's customs and excise laws. With the increase in the level of resource activity on the continental shelf, Canadian manufacturers expressed concern about serious problems that they were facing in attempting to supply goods because of predatory pricing by foreign competitors.

Under international law, Canada has sovereignty over resource activities on its shelf, so it was decided to extend to these activities the same customs and excise rules and procedures under which domestic and foreign companies have to operate within the 12-mile limit.

Bill C-16 means that foreign goods used beyond the 12-mile limit are now subject to regular customs duties and excise taxes. It also means that legislation providing for anti-dumping and countervailing duties can be applied where imports are causing injury to Canadian production. The extension of the customs and excise regime covers only goods used in resource activities and not goods used in other activities such as fishing.

The economic impact of extending the customs and excise regime was carefully studied before we decided to introduce this legislation. It was recognized that the application of duties would increase the cost of goods used in the offshore and would have an effect on the cost of exploration. The cost impact, however, will be lessened because of Petroleum Incentive Program grants and tax savings and should have a minimal impact on the level of exploration. Other factors such as petroleum prices, the supply and demand for offshore equipment, and interest rates will have more effect on rates of return and exploration activity.

The new measures will have a substantial beneficial effect on the ability of Canadian industry to compete in supplying goods to the offshore. It is estimated that the level of offshore activity will require capital expenditures of approximately $10 billion over the next ten years. Without the extension of the customs and excise regime, Canadian shipbuilders and other manufacturers would be hard pressed to capture many of the contracts for these goods. With the customs jurisdiction extension, it is estimated that about $3 billion worth of installations and vessels will be built in Canada without the need for government subsidies. This action should also have some import substitution effect with respect to other goods required in the offshore.

There will be little, if any, net effect on the revenues and expenditures of the Government. While there will be additional revenue from duties and taxes, this will be more than offset by the expenditures relating to increased PIP grants and corporate tax savings. Those expenditures in turn will be offset by the termination of the 9 per cent production subsidy under the shipbuilding industry assistance program. The elimination of that subsidy was one of the measures announced as part of the new shipbuilding policy in January of last year.

One aspect of the new coasting trade policy announced by the then Minister of Transport on January 6, 1983 is the elimination of the preferences on Commonwealth vessels engaged in Canada's coasting trade. With the abrogation of the British Commonwealth Merchant Agreement and the phasing-out of tariff preferences on British goods, it was considered that the unrestricted entry of British vessels into our coasting trade was both outdated and anomalous. Bill C-16, therefore, accordingly amends the Customs Tariff and the Canada Shipping Act to eliminate the tariff preference on Commonwealth vessels used in coasting.

Further, in view of the termination of the production subsidy under the shipbuilding industry assistance program, it was decided that if the tariff rate on vessels was to be effective, the preferences accorded under the general preferential tariff should also be withdrawn. As a result of these amendments, all vessels and floating structures, except those used in drilling for petroleum, are dutiable at a uniform rate of 25 per cent regardless of country of origin.

The coasting trade policy announcement also indicated that there would be a continuation of the practice of allowing temporary entries of foreign vessels when no suitable Canadian vessels are available. It is the current practice to collect duty on one-one hundred and twentieth of the value of these vessels for each month engaged in coasting. It is intended to continue this practice by Order in Council pursuant to a new provision in the Customs Tariff. The new Order in Council will also provide for full duty exemptions on vessels temporarily used to move goods between west and east coasts or between Canadian ports via a foreign port, and certain cruise vessels, again if no suitable Canadian vessels are available.

It has been suggested that the partial duty payments on vessels temporarily engaged in coasting provides Canadian shipbuilders with insufficient tariff protection and should be increased. We have studied these proposals carefully and concluded that the current level of duty payments is equitable and reasonable. Foreign vessels are permitted to engage in coasting activity only when no suitable Canadian vessels are available. In view of this, the only real effect of increasing duty payments on these vessels would be higher costs for the shipping industry. In other words, Canadian shipbuilders would not seem to benefit to any extent from such action. There may, however, be scope for tightening up the criteria used to determine whether or not suitable Canadian vessels are available for particular activities, and this is being examined.

It has been suggested that vessels and floating structures used in the offshore should be dutiable at a 10 per cent rate, the same rate applied to most equipment used in petroleum exploration on land. The 10 per cent rate is based on recommendations made by the Tariff Board in a report in the 1960s. It is perfectly clear that the 10 per cent rate was meant to apply to equipment used on land and not to vessels and floating equipment. Despite this, it has come to our attention that some vessels and floating structures have entered Canada at the 10 per cent rate. Therefore, the Bill includes tariff amendments to prevent any recurrence of this, and to remove any doubts about the proper dutiable status of these goods.

Notwithstanding these amendments, in recognition of the high cost of exploration in the offshore it was decided that the 25 per cent rate on vessels and structures used in drilling should be reduced to 20 per cent. The lower rate should not have any significant effect on the ability of Canada's shipbuilders to compete, but will help offset some of the higher costs that petroleum companies face as a consequence of the new offshore measures.

A great deal of thought was given to the manner in which this legislation should be introduced so as to lessen the initial impact on users of foreign equipment, while at the same time providing them with an incentive to buy Canadian goods in the future. With this in mind Bill C-16 provides duty and tax exemptions or "grandfather rights" for goods on site in the new jurisdiction on June 30, 1983, the effective date of this legislation.

It also provides exemptions for goods ordered before the Government announced its new offshore policies in January of 1983. The exemptions for foreign-owned goods are limited, in most instances, to the duration of the leases under which they are operating on the shelf. Similar grandfather rights have been introduced in connection with the elimination of the tariff preferences on Commonwealth ships engaged in coastal trading.

Since the announcement of the new offshore measures, we have received a number of inquiries and comments from our trading partners. In essence, they are concerned that the measures introduce new elements of protectionism. When we reviewed the desirability of extending customs and excise jurisdiction, careful consideration was given to the international implications of such action. Let me assure the House that we view the extension of the customs and excise regime as fully consistent with international law. Indeed, similar action has already been taken by the United States.

The related tariff amendments aimed at rectifying current and potential anomalies in the dutiable status of vessels and floating structures are purely technical with no substantive implications for our obligations under the GATT. We have nevertheless notified the GATT of the action taken.

In conclusion, I would like to state that the Government has received strong support for this initiative from various sectors of the Canadian economy, such as the shipbuilders, as well as from several Hon. Members on both sides of the House. As was to be expected, we also received a number of representations from importers and users of vessels and other equipment urging modification or cancellation of the new policies, or at least a delay in their implementation. We are not ready to do this. The extension of the custom and excise regime is, in our view, necessary if Canada is to exercise economic sovereignty in matters affecting resource development on its continental shelf and to provide its business community with an environment in which it can compete on a fair and equitable basis. This legislation is a reasonable compromise between the necessity of keeping offshore resource exploration costs down and the desirability of having Canadian manufacturers participate to the greatest possible extent in supplying goods to the offshore exploration. The generous grandfather rights reduce the initial impact of the measures.

I should now like to turn for a moment, Mr. Speaker, to the question raised by the House Leader of the Official Opposition and by the representative of the New Democratic Party with regard to Schedule B of the Bill now before us. Hon. Members will recognize that the purpose of the Bill is to ensure that Canadian shipbuilders and other marine suppliers have a fair and equitable opportunity to supply the petroleum exploration within our 200-mile limit. In providing this legislation, however, the occasion was taken in the schedule to the Bill to reorder, as it were, or to place in one schedule the various tariff rates which affect all types of ships, including fishing vessels exceeding 30.5 metres in length. Fishing vessels under 30.5 metres in length have incurred a duty since the 1950s but, equally, vessels over 30 metres in length have entered Canada free under the general preferential tariff.

The Bill now before us does not change in any way the regime pertaining to fishing vessels. Vessels under 30 metres will continue to incur a duty; those over 30 metres will continue to enter duty free. This is a policy which has been pursued by governments on both sides of the House since the 1950s. However, the placing of all of the tariff items pertaining to vessels under one schedule has drawn the attention of some Hon. Members of the House to the fact that fishing vessels measuring 30 metres or longer do enter duty free. It has been the contention of certain Hon. Members that the occasion should now be taken to impose a tariff on all such vessels comparable to the tariff now incurred by fishing vessels of under 30 metres. We have had one or two representations recently from shipbuilding interests—I might say very few—to consider such a change.

But we have equally had some representations from some fishing interests opposing such a change. We have also had in mind that if we were to change the tariff, that is to say impose a tariff on fishing vessels measuring over 30 metres, our trading partners could interpret this as a form of protectionism which could in turn cause some difficulties for Canada in its general trade relations.

Mr. Skelly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Minister just made an error which is so important he might want to correct it. It was not one or two shipbuilding interests, it was representatives from the Shipbuilding and Ship Repair Association which represents all shipbuilders in Canada. I wonder if he might wish to correct that.

Mr. MacLaren: I have noted the comments of the Hon. Member opposite. We have not only received such a representation but, as I indicated, we have received one or two representations from individual shipbuilding interests as well. I ask the Hon. Member to recognize that equally we have had indications from some fishing interests, an industry which has been passing through a very difficult time recently, I hardly need remind the House, that we should not impose any such increase in duties. Equally we have kept in mind the recommendations of the Kirby Commission which would have the Government eliminate all duties on fishing vessels, whether above or below 30 metres in length.

Be that as it may, the situation seemed to us one that warranted rapid but careful consideration of the interests involved, whether they be the shipbuilding industry on one side or the fishing industry on the other side. With that in mind, the Government in past weeks has undertaken an extensive survey of the opinion in the fishing industry and shipbuilding industries as well as in, for example, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and relevant provincial Governments, about their views on the possibility of imposing a duty on fishing vessels over 30 metres in length so as to prevent any loss of production or employment at Canadian shipyards and in allied industries.

We have undertaken such a quick survey, Mr. Speaker. The adoption of the Bill this afternoon will in no way change the present tariff status of fishing vessels entering Canada which are over 30 metres in length. What we would propose to do is analyse the results of our survey in consultation with the private sector and then we will be in a better position to decide how best to act. That can be done through a Ways and Means motion at any time. I would hope that Members opposite would agree that the prudent and well advised way to proceed this afternoon is to adopt the Bill as we had discussed in previous informal contacts and then proceed separately with regard to tariffs on fishing vessels in light of the survey and consultations that the Government is currently undertaking.

Mr. Blenkarn: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that the Minister is not required to answer questions at this stage of debate. However, in view of the fact that there are relatively few people who are likely to take part in the debate, I was wondering if he would consent to answer questions. The Minister has certainly not exhausted any reasonable length of time in his presentation of the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. Our Standing Orders do not call for questions and comments in the first round of speakers. If unanimous consent is asked for, I will inquire of the House if there is unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Debate.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, in responding to the remarks of the Minister on Bill C-16, let me indicate our disappointment that he would not accept questions. That would allow us to bear down on the areas of difficulty which Bill C-16 presents. It might allow us to resolve any differences of opinion which might exist. I think the will of the House is to support Bill C-16 as being not only essential for the development of the Canadian offshore and shipbuilding industries but, indeed, long overdue as evidenced by the fact that the effective date of the Bill is June 30, 1983. If we had the opportunity of questioning the Minister, it might accelerate the process of passing the Bill. However, I am left with little alternative but to review on behalf of the Official Opposition our views with respect to Bill C-16, although we support the provisions of the Bill in substance.

The Bill in effect extends the territory of Canada to include the Continental Shelf as defined in Clause 2. That is basically the 200-mile zone that now exists off the coasts of Canada, brought about by international agreement. In the future, commencing with the effective date of this Bill, which as I have indicated is June 30, 1983, the territory of Canada for customs and excise purposes will extend to the limit of that 200-mile zone. That measure is overdue and quite necessary in the circumstances.

In the result, Mr. Speaker, the Bill relates to two very important areas. I do not think any of us will quarrel with the specific measures designed to implement this extension of jurisdiction in the application of the customs and excise laws of Canada. However, as I have indicated, we do want to consider the two main elements involved in this process. Those are the effect on the Canadian shipbuilding industry, and the offshore industry which has been so active in the past few years off the coasts of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and which shows every sign of being a substantial economic force in the future if we take the right steps to manage and encourage this industry and those who are involved or might be involved in it in the future. Therefore, I want to deal with those two areas of shipbuilding and offshore development as they are affected by Bill C-16 and the measures that will be imposed once the Bill is enacted.

With respect to the Canadian shipbuilding industry, I heard the Minister indicate that there would be benefits of $10 billion over the next 10 years as a result of the measures taken in Bill C-16. It is a little difficult to understand what the Minister means by this allegation, because for the last few years the value of the shipbuilding industry in Canada has approached $1 billion. In fact, in 1982, the value of shipbuilding in Canada was $1.1 billion. It dropped substantially in 1983 to a value of $739 million. Expressing that in terms of tonnage, Mr. Speaker, there were approximately 18,900 tonnes of new orders in 1983. Looking at that in terms of employment, that meant that approximately 14,000 persons were employed in Canadian shipyards in 1983.

I think we must consider that as a major factor in relation to these kinds of economic provisions. We have said time and again in the House of Commons that the major economic problem in Canada is unemployment and that it should be the goal and aim of any measures taken by the Government to reduce the amount of unemployment in Canada. It is in that context that I want to make my remarks concerning the provisions of Bill C-16 as they relate to the Canadian shipbuilding industry. We are trying to reduce unemployment in Canada and create more jobs and more job opportunities.

It is no exaggeration to say that acceleration and enhancement of the Canadian shipbuilding industry would result in thousands more jobs for Canadians. It is no exaggeration to say that the 20,000 now employed in the Canadian shipbuilding industry, which was reduced to 14,000 in 1983, could be dramatically increased by substantial increases in the amount of ship construction in Canada. How are we going to do that, Mr. Speaker? I will refer to the remarks made by the Minister in his address.

The Minister said that as a result of measures such as those included in Bill C-16 it would be unnecessary to subsidize the Canadian shipbuilding industry. I want to challenge that remark by the Minister. Looking world-wide at shipbuilding, and particularly at countries such as Poland, not to mention South Korea and other Third World nations which are becoming heavily involved in shipbuilding, one notices some very dramatic factors which affect Canada's shipbuilding industry and thereby affect Canadians. The major factor is simply the amount of government subsidization provided for shipbuilding in the countries I have mentioned.

A few years ago there were many difficulties at the Gdansk shipyards in Poland. The workers were on strike, and so on. We recognized then that the shipbuilding activity in Gdansk, Poland, was a type of unemployment project. There was no need at that point in time for the ships which were being constructed in the shipyards. Because of the world-wide economic downturn, there was no need for increased activity in ship construction. Yet the Gdansk shipyards were turning out large vessel after large vessel. It was really a kind of unemployment insurance.

If Canada had to compete in that kind of environment with a nation like Poland, which was prepared to spend millions of dollars subsidizing the construction of vessels for the world merchant marine trade, the industry would require very substantial assistance. I do not see how that is going to change a lot because of the enactment of Bill C-16. The amount of government subsidization applied to shipbuilding activities in countries such as Poland and South Korea is enormous. It is a much larger proportion than 20 per cent of the value of the construction. It would amount to millions of dollars. In fact, if we applied a large portion of our expenditures on unemployment insurance, which exceed $10 billion annually, to the shipbuilding industry, it is doubtful whether we could compete with nations like South Korea and Poland in ship construction.

The point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that the provisions protective of Canadian shipbuilding in relation to the vessels and other marine equipment referred to in Bill C-16 are absolutely essential. However, even when enacted, they will not breathe new life into the Canadian shipbuilding industry. With respect to shipbuilding in Canada, we must carefully analyse the international situation. We must determine exactly what is occurring in the nations with which Canada must compete with respect to vessel construction. We must determine, as a matter of government policy, whether the Government is willing to meet the kind of subsidization which is being provided in those competing nations. As I said, I have particularly in mind places like Poland and South Korea.

Japan and other shipbuilding nations are in competition too, but it is not clear what kind and character of subsidization they have. The Japanese would have us believe that their shipyards are more efficient, their workers are more productive and that there is no direct subsidization. In South Korea I do not think there is any pretence that their ability to produce vessels at much lower total costs than nations like Canada is not related to some very specific financial subsidization of the yards, in addition to whatever effective work measures and productive measures they have introduced.

As I understand it, the Canadian shipbuilding industry does not take the position that it is less productive or that its workers are less efficient than those in foreign shipyards. I think it is a fair statement on behalf of the Canadian shipbuilding industry, and particularly on behalf of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repair Association, that Canadian shipbuilders can compete internationally if the rules of the game are the same. That is to say, if there is no subsidization in terms of financial assistance which can take the form of low interest loans, direct dollar payments or whatever, Canada can compete. However, if there is subsidization, Canadian shipyards must have the same kind and character of subsidization in order to compete. It is as simple as that.

As the Minister and all Members know, one form of protection from competition is tariff barriers. That is what the Government has resorted to in Bill C-16. No Canadian wants tariff barriers unless they are essential. We would all like to compete in a free market worldwide, but that is not possible. We must take the realities of international trade and our ability to compete in international trade into consideration. That is why we endorse tariff protection as an ad hoc essential measure. Once we admit that we need that kind of protection in an industry such as shipbuilding, we must consider the exact kind of protection which is provided.

There is no way that a Member of the Official Opposition who does not have the facts and figures which are available to the Government and Government officers can make a judgement as to whether the specific numbers presented in Bill C-16 are appropriate in the circumstances. We must accept the Minister's judgment that a rate of 20 per cent is sufficient protection. Time will tell whether the Minister is correct. However, we can examine the object of the tariff, that is to say the application to vessels and other marine equipment. That is where we quarrel with the exemption of the tariff with respect to vessels over 100 feet. The Minister prefers 30.5 metres.

Our quarrel is that the historic reason for this exemption of fishing vessels over 100 feet has been lost. I believe this is accurate in that the exemption came into existence at a time when the Canadian fishing industry had to compete with foreign fleets in the deep sea or so-called offshore fishery. At that time Canadian ships would not only have to compete for catch, but for the processing and eventual marketing of the fish that were caught with nations like Portugal and iron curtain countries like Russia.

Therefore this measure was implemented under the appropriate legislation to allow for that kind of competitive situation, and in recognition of the disadvantage to Canadian fishermen if they had to pay a higher amount for their vessels.

However, in 1984 we have a 200-mile zone, as Bill C-16 makes clear. Canadian fishermen are not competing directly with foreign fishermen, at least in the sense that Canada has the right to eliminate foreign nations from fishing the 200-mile zone. If it allows such fishing, it is done so under permit and licence from the Government of Canada. Therefore it can be fairly said that this kind of special protection is not required for international competitive reasons.

Having said that, I have in effect made the case for the Canadian shipbuilding industry which wants to have the advantage of competing for future fishing vessel construction. I can assure the House that future fishing vessel construction would be mainly for vessels in excess of 100 feet. Of course, it would be vital for the Canadian shipbuilding industry to have the opportunity to participate in what may be a very substantial construction program.

Having made the case for the Canadian shipbuilding industry, I want to respond to my own case on behalf of the fishing industry. I know that the Fisheries Council of Canada has grave reservations about the elimination of that exemption. I can say that all Members of the House, Government and Opposition, are between the proverbial rock and the hard place. We do not know whether to side with the Canadian shipbuilding industry and remove the exemption for fishing vessels over 100 feet, or to side with the fishing industry and keep the exemption.

I offer the Minister a base for making the decision. That decision is Canadian jobs. We want more jobs and if they can be provided by the shipbuilding industry on the basis of the elimination of this exemption, then that is the way it should go. If it can be provided by the Canadian fishing industry by way of taking advantage of the continuance of this exemption for fishing vessels over 100 feet, then that should be done.

On behalf of my colleagues, I say to the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repair Association, who made one representation, and to the Fisheries Council of Canada who made the opposite representation, that we want to decide in the direction that will provide more jobs for Canadians and eliminate a portion of the unemployment faced by the 1.5 million Canadians now unemployed, not to mention another million who are employed at jobs below their qualifications of those employed part time. While we would like to see this exemption removed with a view to creating more jobs in the shipbuilding industry, we recognize that if it would be to the grave disadvantage of the Canadian fishing industry in terms of job creation in that industry, we understand the basis for the decision.

I will leave the Minister with one thought on that aspect of the matter. It is anticipated that as a result of the restructuring of the Atlantic fishing industry there could be tremendous momentum in the fishing industry over the next years, or decade. This might result in very substantial construction of fishing vessels in the range of over 100 feet. Therefore we want to look very carefully at the projection of that situation, because we could be talking about millions and millions of dollars in fishing vessel construction. If the level of fishing vessel construction was the same as the past few years, perhaps it would not be such a grave problem. But anticipating a substantial increase in the need for fishing vessels means that we would want to look at that situation very carefully.

Having dealt with the problems as they relate to Canada's shipbuilding industry in relation to Bill C-16, I want to talk about the offshore industry, particularly as it relates to the Province of Nova Scotia, and also to the Province of Newfoundland. Both provinces now enjoy substantial activities in their offshore areas resulting from the energy exploration taking place off Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. In the case of Newfoundland, there is the potential of developing the oil reserves in the Hibernia field. In the case of Nova Scotia it is the gas reserves off Sable Island and Venture.

Let me indicate the basis for offshore energy development being vital to the future of Nova Scotia. This is an industry that is worth $1 billion a year at almost current rates. Furthermore, there has been a projection in terms of the value of the offshore industry in relation to Nova Scotia. In 1982, the amount spent on offshore activity was $220 million. That is money that is alleged to float back into the economy. In 1983 the amount increased to $579.4 million. According to the Canadian Oil and Gas Administration, Nova Scotia consequently enjoyed that level of expenditure of offshore activity in 1983. When one considers the formula that $1 million in expenditures provides 30 to 40 jobs, depending on the level of that employment, we are considering a very substantial number of jobs for Nova Scotia. In that respect it is said that the offshore activity pumped approximately $101 million directly into Nova Scotia in terms of supply and service there and produced 1,400 jobs for Nova Scotians.

I do not know how these figures are derived and I only put them on the record to indicate how substantial this industry might be for Nova Scotia.

According to a May 8, 1984, report in the Chronicle Herald, the value of agreements under the legislation administered by the Canadian Oil and Gas Administration would result in exploration activity in total value of $702 million off the coast of Nova Scotia. It is easy to see why offshore exploration is the hope for the future in Nova Scotia.

I want to give two specific examples of how the offshore activity affects an area like Nova Scotia. The first example is a small company called M & M Manufacturing Company Limited in Fall River in the constituency of Halifax West. It is in business, and succeeding in business as a result of the offshore activity. The President of that company, Melvin Mattie says that business is great. He employs people in that small community near Fall River and estimated that his revenues last year would be $1.5 million, increasing to $2 million in the following year. That is an example of a small business that was created and has been successfully operated on the basis of the offshore industry. That is how jobs are created for Nova Scotians in relation to offshore development.

A great issue in Nova Scotia today is the position taken by the various Liberal candidates with respect to the Petroleum Incentives Program. The notion exists that some leadership candidates are not in favour of the Petroleum Incentives Program. Of course, those candidates who are not in favour of this program will receive very few votes in Nova Scotia. What the Government will do in the future with the Petroleum Incentives Program is a matter of real concern. Let me point out that the amounts involved in the government's Petroleum Incentives Program are immense. We are talking about an expenditure of $4.7 billion over the life of the program. The Government must ensure that these massive amounts of money are converted into real benefits for Nova Scotians and all Canadians. That is why I again refer to the importance of Bill C-16 which hopefully will ensure that the vessels and other equipment used in the offshore industry will be Canadian made.

In that respect I want to point out and underline that we are quite late with this kind of measure. I was amazed when the Minister on introducing this Bill referred to the fact that in some areas there are no suitable Canadian vessels. I can tell the Minister why there are no suitable Canadian vessels. There are vessels that serve oil rigs around the world which have been in existence for a number of years. There is no equivalent industry in Canada. Not having an offshore industry in Canada we did not have the rigs and the service vessels.

If we are going to allow Canadians to participate in this aspect of the offshore oil industry, namely, the construction of rigs and service vessels, Mr. Speaker, then we have to provide some lead time. We cannot take the position that there are no existing vessels and rigs, so we will allow foreign vessels and rigs to be brought into the 200-mile zone to service the Canadian oil industry. We have to stop it now. We have to say "no more foreign vessels". That will allow Canadian shipyards to go to work to construct the vessels and rigs required. Then we will have Canadian vessels.

If I do not make myself clear, let me express it as a self-fulfilling prophecy. If we create an industry where there was no industry, such as the offshore oil industry, we cannot expect to have all the articles of that industry in place. If we make the statement that we do not have and we will not have the equipment, then that prophecy will be fulfilled, Mr. Speaker. In other words, if we do not take steps to allow Canada to gain entry into the industry, it will never happen.

In that connection, I want to underline the work done by the Minister of Development in Nova Scotia, the Hon. Roland J. Thornhill, who has taken a very close look at Nova Scotia's participation in the offshore oil industry, particularly in terms of Nova Scotia benefits. It may be of interest to Members of the House to know that under the terms of the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement, resource companies negotiating exploration and development licences with the federal and provincial governments must submit a benefits plan.

The benefits plan defines the exploration or development activity in terms of the expenditures expected to result from programs, the employment to be created, and the potential socio-economic implications. Employment and expenditures are translated into Canadian and Nova Scotia content commitments based on industry and government experience.

By way of this action taken by the Minister of Development in Nova Scotia in co-operation with the federal authorities we can receive assurance that Nova Scotians and Canadians are going to benefit from these operations. But the way they will benefit most is by keeping the activity in Canada. The way we will benefit most in Nova Scotia from the off-shore energy industry is by building the vessels and the rigs that are used in that industry, and by supplying the services that are required for it. We will only do that if we get the head start I was talking about and if we start the ball rolling right now by agreeing that Canada has to be given the opportunity to get her foot in the door by way of constructing vessels, oil rigs and other equipment used in the offshore industry. During the period when Canada has to get its foot in the door the industries involved need some protection. This has already taken place to a limited degree.

The Saint John shipyards has already constructed an oil rig, Beau Dril III, which is now in operation off the coast of Nova Scotia as I understand it, although it sat in Halifax Harbour for several months receiving some final work. There is no doubt about the ability of the Nova Scotia, the New Brunswick and the Newfoundland shipyards to construct the kind of service vessels used in the offshore industry. If we bring in these protections, Mr. Speaker, and we are serious about it and really want to get Canada into this industry by protective measures and the required assistance, then we can participate in a real way.

To give you one example of the difficulties that occur, the amount and value of work that flows out of Canada in the offshore industry is not always realized. All of the statistical material that relates to offshore development is done outside of Canada as far as I know. It is a multimillion dollar item. We have to be on guard to make sure that Canadians get the maximum benefit from our shipbuilding industry and from our offshore energy industry. It may not be important in Ottawa Centre, Mr. Speaker. The Member from that riding comes into the House pooh-poohing this kind of thing. But if we are here talking about Canadian manufacturing in Central Canada, or if we are here talking about the automobile industry, the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) would be up from his seat saying "We have to have protection. You cannot buy American-made cars. You have to buy your cars made in Oakville, Ontario." We are used to that. But when we start talking about shipbuilding in the Maritimes and we talk about the offshore energy industry then everybody goes silent. It is a situation of "we do not want to talk about that. Let those fellows fight their own way. This should be a free world economy. We should let oil rigs flow in and out from Denmark, Norway, any place you want. Bring them in. Set them up and send the information to Atlanta, Georgia, for processing at a cost of millions and millions of dollars and millions of Canadian jobs." And the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre does not care. But the people of Canada care. They care about Canadian jobs because every unemployed Canadian represents dollars out of the pockets of Canadians. But if the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre does not know that, he better start realizing it. I understand. I live in Ottawa Centre and I see the conditions there. They are perfect, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Evans: Thanks.

Mr. Crosby: The unemployment rate must be down to zero, because Ottawa benefits from all of Canada. Regions such as Nova Scotia and Newfoundland want to share in those benefits. The only way they will share in the benefits is by getting some advantage from offshore exploration, and some advantage from shipbuilding. In order to gain that advantage they need some protection, help and assistance from Government. Let me say to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren): Give us the protection. Give us what you have given other parts of Canada and we will get the job done.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, It looks as though this Bill, which has been a long time coming, will now come to fruition, but only after a lot of cautious and dangerous positions taken in the House. The Bill is worth supporting. It is unfortunate that the Government was unable to accept the amendment which I think this whole House wanted to see passed. It is worth nothing what kind of a gift the Minister is interested in giving to certain interests.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans estimated in 1982 that $5 billion would be needed over the next decade to upgrade the East Coast trawler fleet. Unless that loophole for 100 foot fishing vessels is plugged the Canadian shipbuilders will lose out on an enormous amount of money. The Minister's statement that the Government will be able to pick up this particular amendment down the road is complete foolishness. I believe that by the time he finishes his consultation we will be on to the next federal election and there will be another Parliament. Hopefully sometime off in the future, before the opportunities have all gone, there will be a chance to plug that loophole.

It is extremely unfortunate that the Liberal government was unable to accept the recommendations of the Opposition Parties to pass that legislation, and is now quite prepared to kiss $5 billion for Canadian economic development and employment goodbye. That is a tragedy. But that has been the history of shipbuilding in Canada since the Second World War. For whatever reason the Liberal Government decided to torpedo that industry, leaving it alone and not provide it with any meaningful support.

Policy statements by a variety of Ministers of Liberal Governments indicated that they felt Canada's best interests lay in having the Japanese, Koreans and Europeans supplying cheap ships. It was thought that this was providing economic opportunities for Canadians when in fact an industry was being handed away. It was an industry in which Canada had developed tremendous expertise. It could have provided tremendous employment opportunities and economic benefits, as well as an opportunity to develop technology in an industry in which we could have been a world-class leader.

It was even more tragic when the Government lost an opportunity for Canada to have a presence in offshore development. Canada probably has one of the largest coastlines in the world. It is dependent upon marine transportation, both coastal and international. It was deprived of future resource development in oil and gas, mineral exploration and deep seabed operations. It was similar to the case of the old Avro Arrow and the development of the first jetliner. The Government was prepared to give away the shipbuilding industry in the same manner as it gave away the aviation industry. It has ignored the shipbuilding industry for decades.

It is interesting that the Bill before us was developed somewhere in relation to the Canada Oil and Gas Act when it was apparent that Canada would lose an enormous amount of employment and economic development in this particular field. The Government showed no initiative in bringing forward the Bill. A tremendous amount of energy was expended, to the credit of the new Minister. Certainly his colleagues cannot be given the same credit because they resisted bringing it forward. They wrung their hands and moaned and groaned. They suggested that our trading partners would somehow retaliate or that our big bad neighbour next door would somehow retaliate. A classic lack of guts has characterized this Government. However, it is refreshing in the dying weeks of this Parliament to see this Bill before us. It is very close to receiving the support of the Houe.

I do not want to dwell much longer on the Bill, except to say that it is only a step forward. The potential for Canada in marine industrial development is very great. We believe shipbuilding industries across the country will benefit, and that tens of thousands of Canadians will return to work as a result of this legislation. Also an opportunity will be provided for Canada to become a world-class leader in the shipbuilding industry. We must remember that ocean industry groups behind the shipbuilding industry also have a chance to flourish.

The Government of Canada must not only look seriously at providing this 200-mile custom limit, it must assist the industry which it held back for so long. There is an opportunity for Canada to develop shipyards and ocean industry groups which have the potential for tremendous technological advancement in this field. The Government should look seriously at providing incentive financing. Through the Export Development Corporation it could provide financing to foreign purchasers at extremely low rates of interest. Such long-term loans could be very beneficial to the countries which purchase Canadian ships. It should also provide that type of concessionary financing to Canadian owners and developers of marine platforms and ships. Such financing is extremely important in order to get the industry rolling again, an industry which the Government has shackled for so long.

When the Government took office in July 1980 it decided that assistance under the Canadian Shipbuilding Assistance Program would be cut from 20 per cent to 9 per cent. At present it talks about removing the assistance entirely. Now, when there is an opportunity for the industry to blossom and grow, it is talking about removing the incentives. The custom boundary extension is passive. It is a constructive act, but it is passive. It should contain some aggression to ensure that financing provided for the construction of vessels for foreign owners in Canada is provided for Canadians who want to have ships built in Canada. That would provide the industry with a tremendous shot in the arm.

This is only a starting point. A more active situation is the Petroleum Incentive Program. It will pay 80 per cent of the cost of doing business to oil companies participating in exploration in the Canada Lands. When an oil company wishes to import a leased rig which was built in another country, not only is the cost of leasing covered, the cost of duty is covered under the Petroleum Incentive Program. The Minister must convince his colleagues that PIP should apply only to rigs built in Canada. If a Canadian firm wants to have a rig built here and lease it to an oil company to become involved in offshore exploration, that rig should be covered by the Petroleum Incentive Program. However, if it wishes to purchase a rig from any other country to use in these waters, it should not be covered by that program. It is an enormous flaw in the existing situation which the Government should move quickly to rectify. It is absolutely irrational to provide a taxpayer subsidy at the 80 per cent level to pay leasing and duty costs of an imported marine platform to conduct exploration in Canada.

There is another area in which we have an advantage. The next step has to be one of providing Canada with a Canadian merchant fleet. There is tremendous opportunity in providing Canada with Canadian-built ships and insisting that they be crewed by Canadians. Again the Government appears to be providing lip service in its dying days. Rather than becoming active and aggressively pursuing this tremendous opportunity, the Government sat on its hands throughout its term of office and said that nothing could be done. It followed consistently its policy that Canadians could not build ships and therefore it was necessary to have foreign countries build them cheaper and better. The Government said that Canadians could not operate ships, although Canada has a maritime tradition which extends back to the time of Jacques Cartier. The Government makes no move to bring home the Canadian Pacific Fleet, to repatriate it. Canadian Pacific Ships is at liberty to carry Canadian cargoes all over the world with no benefit to Canadians. It has its ships built in foreign countries. It means its vessels with foreign crews. Its vessels are registered in Bermuda, London and Singapore. The benefits of its trading accrue everywhere else in the world but Canada.

The particular piece of legislation before us today should have been coupled with a marine industrial strategy which ensure a Canadian merchant fleet carrying Canadian goods in Canadian-built ships, crewed by Canadians and with the benefits accruing to Canada. I am sure Hon. Members on my right would support such an activity.

Outfits like Federal Commerce and Navigation need to be tuned up by the Government. They need to have a more responsive attitude toward the country in which it does business. Canadian Pacific Ships has to develop a responsible attitude toward this country as well. It should display good corporate citizenship. The same applies to Papachristadias. There is a litany of disasters in the marine industry which the Government has tolerated.

It is long past the time that we brought this together into a comprehensive marine industrial strategy which would see Canadians derive the benefits of shipbuilding. This would build world-class industries and leaders in technology. This should be done with the support, not with the opposition, of the Government. Behind that shipbuilding effort we would develop an ocean industries group. It would supply engines and other components for those ships, and marine platforms. It would also provide navigation systems. That group is worthy of support. In its early stages there should be subsidization, if you will, to get it rolling. Once rolling and competing on a world-class basis, there could be low interest rate loans, long-term loans, with specific areas of subsidization for enhancement. But we should get rolling on that.

The other area where something has to be done is very clear. We have to get involved in a Canadian merchant fleet. There is no point sending wheat abroad in Russian vessels or in vessels of Canadian companies that are registered in other countries. I recognize that the Government at this very late date has brought together another advisory committee on developing a Canadian merchant fleet. It is complete nonsense that, task force after task force developing the line that we should be following, studying the subject to death, in order to go out on the hustings in Eastern and Western Canada, in the Province of Quebec, along the St. Lawrence River and important areas along the Great Lakes where Canadian shipbuilding is done, where Canadian ships are operating, the Government is going to say: "Look at what we have done. After five years we have developed a policy or a program to take one more of hundreds and hundreds of looks at what we have had. See what we are doing to provide a Canadian merchant fleet".

Two things have to happen. This Government, even in the time available, could put in place Transport Canada policies that would enhance Canadian registered ships. Without coming to Parliament, they could do something constructive to enhance the manufacture of Canadian ships, Canadian-operated ships, and ensure that Canadian crews are on those ships. There are dredges in the Arctic carrying foreign crews in Canadian waters.

A complaint was made recently to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), a man travelling this country saying that he wants to be the leader of his Party, which would like to remain in Government, that he signed an order to allow foreign crews on a Canadian ship. That was done just the other day. It is simply not acceptable. We know what has to go into place to develop a Canadian marine industrial strategy. That strategy within Transport Canada, within Customs and Excise, within the taxation policy areas, can be effectively carried out.

Before us today is a fairly constructive move. It is a passive move. It is not a move by a Government that is showing aggressiveness or clear concern for an industry that for years has been neglected. Nevertheless, it is one small move. There must be many more following. With that I will conclude my remarks. I hope this Bill passes quickly.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the good faith of the Government was indicated when the Minister refused to answer questions with respect to his consultations with the fishing industry concerning the removal of the exemption of 100-foot shipping vessels. The answer is that the Government wants to continue allowing foreign shipyards to bring ships into Canada and exploit the resources of Canada to the detriment of Atlantic Canada and the ship workers of Canada. This must stop.

If you read the Schedule, you find that it exempts ships and other vessels exceeding 30.5 metres registered length for use in commercial fishing industry. The item is tariff 44002-1. It says British preferential tariff free, most favoured nation tariff free, Saudi Arabia tariff 25 per cent, General preferential tariff free. It is only vessels used in commercial fishing.

A vessel is brought in, used for a day in commercial fishing, it is into Canada for free and that's it. This loophole represents a hole in this Bill so wide you could drive the whole—I was going to say the army through with all its tanks, but we have not got that many. It is a hole in the Bill that must be corrected or this Bill will be virtually meaningless.

Some years ago we declared a 200-mile limit. We extended the boundaries of Canada 200 miles out to sea so that we would be able to exploit the commercial resources of the continental shelf. What does this Government do? Up until now it leaves the 200-mile area totally free for anybody and his brother to exploit. It is supposed to monitor the number of fish taken off the Altantic Coast. It does not do that very well. It should do everything to ensure that the jobs in shipbuilding, manufacturing, resource exploitation, equipment, food, supplies, are in Canada, and that all that is used in resource exploitation on this extended limit of Canada is purchased from Canadian manufacturers, Canadian suppliers, or impose tariffs.

This Bill is supposed to do that, but what does it do? As far as drilling rigs are concerned, the ones that are presently under lease, they are okay. As far as coasting vessels are concerned, the ones presently operating, they are okay. They do not have to pay tariffs. Only the new ones might have to pay tariffs, but they will probably come in as fishing vessels for use in commercial fishing. They will be used for commercial fishing for a day. Then they can do the coasting trade and not be subject to any tariff.

This is the hoax we are being asked to support and the Minister refuses to answer questions. I ask why? He knows we will get to him. He knows we will ask the questions that will embarrass him. Therefore he hides under the rules. What kind of Government would hide under the rules and pretend that it is doing something for the shipbuilding industry in this country?

The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons), who has the Marystown yard in his riding, knows what will happen to him. He has been pestering the Minister to do something about it. It is not just members on this side who think that this exemption should go. Members from all over Atlantic Canada thinks this exemption should go.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair has allowed a certain leniency this afternoon by permitting Members to go into what should be discussed at committee stage, that is referring to specific clauses. Because it felt that an agreement might be reached, if the Government agreed to make an amendment, this was done. I cannot allow the Hon. Member to base his whole speech on this particular clause. It is jumping the gun. We will deal with this in committee stage, if we ever reach that stage.

Mr. Blenkarn: On the point you have raised, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that this is a Bill that in pith and substance is imposing a tariff on vessels being brought into Canada, and the Canadian limit for the purpose of determining the importation is the continental shelf or the 200-mile limit. That is what we are talking about. This Bill is to levy a tariff on ships and other things now being brought into the 200-mile extraterritorial part of Canada and do not now any duty. The Bill extends the limit so that those goods are subject to duty. That is the purpose of the Bill. The trouble is, the Bill does not do that. The Bill is supposed to do that. It is only proper at second reading to point that out. It was always my feeling that at second reading we were entitled to debate the nature of the Bill. That is the purpose of second reading debate. That is where the problem is—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. I do not know whether the Hon. Member is reflecting on a ruling made by the Chair or failing to see that the Bill contains much more than the simple Schedule to which he is referring. Other Members have been able to speak about the principle of the Bill. The Chair has been lenient in allowing the Hon. Member to refer to the Schedule from time to time, but he should not make an entire speech on it. That can be done at committee stage.

Mr. Blenkarn: With all due respect to the Chair, I would suggest that I am not now referring to the Schedule. I have referred to it. I am really talking about the principle clause in the Bill, which is Clause 3. That Clause imposes a tariff. Then, the Bill goes on to exempt certain parts of the tariff. I am talking about the pith and substance of the Bill. With respect to the Chair, that is what I intend to continue to talk about.

We are looking for some recognition for those provinces which have very little in the way of natural resources. Their people are entitled to the benefits of the resources in the 200-mile limit. The Premier of Newfoundland has expressed his concern with respect to the right to control the oil and petroleum resources in the 200-mile limit. He has also expressed concern with respect to the fishing resources. One of the advantages of having the 200-mile limit is the number of jobs that can be created for Canadians. The purpose of the Bill is to ensure that the goods, the drilling platforms, the drill bits and all types of machinery and equipment which are used in fishing or in oil exploration bear duty and are organized in such a fashion as to ensure that Canadians—particularly those from Atlantic Canada—get the jobs that those resources will provide.

Prior to the 200-mile limit declaration, certain things were exempt. Obviously a person drilling at sea was not drilling in Canada, and therefore he could bring in his drill ships, rigs and supplies from anywhere in the world. They were not subject to duty because they were being used in a non-duty area. The same applied to fishing vessels and fishing gear, indeed, to everything used beyond the normal three-mile limit. They were in international waters and they were not subject to duty. Therefore, the jobs which would come from manufacturing, supplying, and servicing were not subject to Canadian taxes and were not ensuring that Canadians received the protection that Canadians elsewhere, in other businesses and in other parts of Canada, received. The concept of the Bill is to extend that limit and to extend Canada's borders for customs purposes 200 miles out to sea.

We have focused on the fishing vessel exemption. We have said that it is a very major exemption. Indeed, with that exemption the whole purpose of the Bill is damaged—destroyed. But more importantly, it affects the whole substance of what we are trying to accomplish by ensuring that those who come from Atlantic Canada get all of the benefit there is for them in that 200-mile resource area. For example, equipment that is presently on lease or that is presently servicing the area and which is owned by foreigners is exempted. Those are exemptions which take away the jobs and the benefits that Atlantic Canadians should have.

All along we have been taking away what we should have. My friend from the New Democratic Party mentioned a merchant marine policy. We could have our own Canadian merchant marine if we were prepared to operate a merchant marine that was based on international tax levels instead of Canadian domestic tax levels, and on international labour standards instead of domestic labour standards. After all, if ships are to travel the world they must operate under international standards to be competitive. We could have a merchant marine, but everything that we do in Ottawa seems to be directed from a central Canadian concept that does not bear any relation to the benefits that should accrue to Atlantic Canada, to Pacific Canada and to northern Canada. By the extension of the 200-mile limit in this Bill, we in a sense promise Atlantic Canadians the resource benefits, the job benefits, the manufacturing benefits and the supply and service benefits that that extension of Canada's boundaries should give them. To the extent that this Bill does not do that, the Government should be castigated. In a sense, the Government has promised something that it seems to have no intention of delivering.

We do not seem to have developed any shipping or shipbuilding policy. We had a 20 per cent subsidy for shipyards which has been reduced to 9 per cent. It will soon be phased out completely. If we were to substitute that subsidy arrangement with a tariff arrangement that covered all ships that took advantage of the 200-mile limit, and if we had a tax situation or a tariff that protected our shipbuilding industry so that our industry at least would have a captive or home market for our coastal ship requirements, then perhaps we could justify the removal of that 9 per cent subsidy. We are not only going to let the subsidy die, but we are going to allow a good portion of the ships that should be subject to tariff come in tariff-free. That is a derogation of responsibility.

The problem is that the Bill is presented in such a way that it really looks as if Atlantic Canadians are getting something. Do not look too closely at the fine print, though, because what it says it gives in Clause 3 is taken away in the Schedules. It is that kind of deceit, to put it that way, Sir, which I suppose prompted the Minister to refuse to answer questions. He knew that if we really started asking questions, the real pith and substance of what was happening would come out. The Government would be exposed for what it is; the Bill would be exposed for what it is.

The Bill is better than nothing, Sir, I suppose, but not much better. I am very disappointed that the Government did not come forward, recognizing the kind of Bill it had, to make sure that the jobs which are supposed to come to Atlantic Canada from the 200-mile limit would in fact come to it, that the 200-mile limit would not be just a promise in the air. It should make sure that the fish resources in the 200-mile limit come to Canadians and are sold by Canadians as processed fish; that the oil and petrochemical resources now discovered all come through Canadian hands. This will not happen because of this Bill, and that disappoints me. Therefore, again I ask the Minister and the Government why do they not come clean? Why do they not really tell us how far they will go to assist perhaps one of the most depressed parts of our country, the part of our country where unemployment is by far the highest? The only way we are ever going to reduce the human misery, the tragedy, the unemployment and poverty upon poverty which exists in parts of Atlantic Canada, particularly, is by enabling the people there to have resources which they can exploit and so earn a living and have a decent standard of existence. We could do that, but this Bill does not do it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions on the remarks of the Hon. Member?

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely important piece of legislation and we note there are 17 minutes left in which to get it through second reading, through committee stage and finish it all this afternoon. I just wonder whether, as spokesperson for the Conservative Party on this Bill, the previous speaker could stand up and enlighten this House as to whether his Party intends to let this particular Bill go through all stages today, or whether it is going to sandbag it?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I could say that that is not a permitted question under the rules, but I will not. I believe it is only fair that the Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party, so much in bed with the Liberal Party these days, should have an answer to that question.

Mr. Althouse: Look at our voting record.

Mr. Blenkarn: Yes, we can look at that Party's voting record and we could look at its arrangements today. I am told that there are Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party looking for Liberal nominations. They get along with the Liberals famously. Obviously, the Hon. Member is prepared to give away this legislation. He wants to have another notch in his record, showing that once again he has come to heel to the Liberal Party. Are we going to do what the Hon. Member asks? Well, that is not up to me, Sir. There are other Hon. Members of this House of Commons who want to make contributions. We have already passed three pieces of legislation this afternoon.

Mr. Althouse: Is that enough?

Mr. Blenkarn: If this legislation did something for Canadians we could probably go through it quickly. However, the Minister and the Government do not even answer questions on the matter. I am surprised that the Hon. Member would even ask such a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any other questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to finally have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-16, an Act to apply the customs and excise jurisdiction of Canada to the continental shelf of Canada and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof.

This Bill is long overdue, Mr. Speaker, or legislation like it. Unfortunately, as pointed out by the previous speaker, we are extremely disappointed that for some reason or other this Government has decided that it is going to single out people in the business of building fishing vessels of over 100 feet for particular persecution. This Government has determined that it is going to single out particularly those men and women who are normally employed in that section of the shipbuilding industry for isolation and persecution as well. We believe it is extremely unfair, Mr. Speaker, and we plead with the Government to reconsider its seemingly intransigent position on this matter and, indeed, give the issue some very deep consideration. We plead with the Government to show some compassion for those people to whom a livelihood is just as important as it is for those people who might be involved in the construction of new vessels used in exploration work, new passenger vessels, and virtually all other shipping material for use in Canada within the 200-mile limit.

The ways and means motion which was presented to this House last June 29 was indeed one which was heralded with a great deal of enthusiasm by our Party, as it was by the New Democratic Party. We had pressured the Government before that time to get on with the long awaited legislation which it had been talking about approving and bringing forth to this House for some number of months—indeed probably in the vicinity of two years, perhaps two and a half years. Until last June 29 we and the industry had not seen anything of it. Of course, in the meantime we have been pressing the Government to introduce the legislation so we could peruse it and have the opportunity of assessing its impact on the shipbuilding industry in this country.

I personally welcome a good number of the areas with which the Bill deals. I believe it is indeed good news for the shipping industry that this Government finally has become aware of the plight it has been experiencing over the last number of years. One of the problems we have with this legislation at this late date is that the shipbuilding industry has plummeted to such depths of despair that a good many of the qualified workmen, who for years found work in that particular sector, have now left the area and have taken up other means of making a living. For instance, in 1982, there were over 9,000 people in this nation employed in the shipbuilding industry and, indeed, this year that work force has dropped to less than 2,000 men. The ship yard in Saint John, New Brunswick, one of the finest facilities you will find anywhere in the world, let alone in Canada, steadily employed upwards of 1,500 to 2,000 people. In 1978 it employed 2,089 people. In 1981 that number had dropped to 1,627, and, indeed, in January of this past year, the work force at the Saint John yard had dropped to a shameful low of 40 men. I doubt today if there are 40 men still working at that shipyard. I realize that the shipyard at Saint John has received the contract for construction of the six frigates, and a substantial amount of that work is being subcontracted to yards in other parts of the country. However, this contract will contribute handsomely to the welfare of that yard and employees in that region.

I have become very concerned, Mr. Speaker, about the Government's intentions concerning the shipbuilding industry in Canada. As can be pointed out by anyone who has had the time to peruse Hansard, the Government's record has not been enviable at all. Members on this side have repeatedly asked questions of the various Ministers responsible for shipbuilding policy over the years, of whom there have been several, and all of whom promised to introduce the legislation. With the exception of the present Minister, none of them have produced. In response to these questions we have never received any satisfaction whatsoever. I am informed that questions have been asked as to the status of the frigate program at the Saint John yard. They have asked which shipyard will the first frigate be started in? What is the schedule for construction of the second and third ships? Will all the work normally connected with the construction of a ship be undertaken in the yard itself, or is the contract written in such a way that the work can be subcontracted out? These extremely important questions have been left unanswered. They are being asked by the workers directly affected, particularly those in the Saint John yard.

I ask the Government to be considerate and to be concerned about the plight of those workers, Mr. Speaker. It is a very frightening experience to not have the assurance of work that you thought you had a few short months ago. I think these people deserve answers to these questions which so directly affect them, and I urge the Government to address itself to these questions. If the Bill is allowed to pass with the additions and recommendations we have made, it will be a long over-due step forward, and I look forward to some positive response from the Government in that regard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Mr. MacLaren, seconded by Mr. Pinard, moved that Bill C-16, an Act to apply the customs and excise jurisdiction of Canada to the continental shelf of Canada and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Guilbault in the Chair.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-16, an Act to apply the customs and excise jurisdiction over Canada to the continental shelf of Canada, and to amend certain acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof.

Clauses 2 to 13 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 14—

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, Clause 14 refers to the schedule in the Bill. Therefore, I move:

That the Customs and Excise Offshore Application Act be amended in the Schedule on page 12 as follows:

That the tariff item 44002-1 be deleted.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Chair is ready to entertain the amendment.

Mr. MacLaren: A point of order, Mr. Chairman. If I understand the amendment correctly, it would have the effect of placing a charge on the public purse. Therefore, I would assume that under Beauchesne, Articles 523, 516 and 519, the amendment is not in order.

• (1800)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The amendment, which I have in my hand, reads that the tariff item be deleted. In deleting the tariff item, we do not impose a tax. As a matter of fact, we would even remove a tax. I do not know if the Minister understood the amendment properly. This would remove the tariff item completely. In other words, the 25 per cent general tariff would also be dropped. We would lower the taxes, not increase them. The amendment is in order as far as the Chair is concerned.

Mr. MacLaren: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Minister on a point of order.

Mr. MacLaren: As I understand the amendment as it was read, we would be removing, under the British preferential tariff, the free access; under most favoured nation, free access; and under general preferential tariff, free access. If we remove "free" from each of those three categories then it necessarily follows that the general tariff of 25 per cent pertains. Therefore, there is a charge in the sense that we would be imposing on importers of those vessels the general tariff as opposed to the free entry under the other three categories.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Chair is taking the question under advisement for a minute.

The Chair has no problem accepting the substance of the amendment, that is, the deletion of a tariff item. The Chair realizes that the Member is doing it by amending Clause 14. There is a procedural problem involved there. I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member that he could move the same amendment in substance when we reach the Schedule which is just a couple of items down the line.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I would perhaps agree with you. I only moved it now because if you look at page 12 of the Schedule it says "Schedule" and then "(Section 14)". Therefore, I felt it might be appropriate to make the amendment now. However, if it is your ruling that it be made when we come to the Schedule, I would certainly be prepared to have the matter stood down until that point. The reason I moved it now is because of the reference to the Section in the Schedule.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The first thing we have to do at this time is to realize that the clock has passed six o'clock. Therefore, this committee should rise.

Mr. Skelly: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River on a point of order.

Mr. Skelly: I wonder whether with unanimous consent of the Members in the House we could extend the time of sitting until such time as this Bill is completely through the House, considering the good faith expressed by all Parties that we want to see this in place.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent to proceed as the Hon. Member just suggested?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Pinard: Some one on the Conservative Party side said no, Mr. Chairman. However, we would agree that time be extended until someone calls it six o'clock.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We can agree with that proposition. Until someone calls it six o'clock, on our part we will continue to consider this matter.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: We are back on Clause 14. I would just remind the Hon. Member for Mississauga South that Clause 14 which we are now considering would strike out tariff items of a previous Act which we are amending. Therefore he does not have to propose the amendment he wishes at this time. The amendment would be in order only when we reach the Schedule, and we are getting there. First, I will ask, shall Clause 14 carry?

• (1805)

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 14 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 15 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 15 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the Schedule carry?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, you have in your hand an amendment to delete tariff item 44002-1 in the Schedule to the Bill found on page 12. I so move that amendment.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Chair considers the amendment to be allowable.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Let my try again. If this amendment were to be adopted, it would have the effect of abolishing tariff category 44002-1. In other words, under the British Preferential Tariff, we would remove the free entry under most favoured nations. We would supposedly remove the 25 per cent general tariff, and we would remove the free entry under the general preferential tariff. However, if we were to do that, then the general tariff category applies, in which case 25 per cent would apply in all four categories. By abolishing 44002-1 we would in effect replace that category with 44000-1, which is a 25 per cent tariff in each of four categories.

I would submit to you that according to Beauchesne 523, 519 and 516, the Opposition cannot amend the Bill in such a way as to place a charge on the public purse.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: This is certainly a complicated situation. If other members have contributions, the Chair will hear them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have a very short contribution to make.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Chair has ruled, but since then Hon. Members have been commenting on the so-called ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I agree that Your Honour should be as lenient as possible, but I do not know how many times, when we attempt to have a full fledged discussion with respect to procedural matters the Chair says that we cannot question the ruling of the Chair.

I clearly heard you say, Mr. Chairman, that this is an acceptable amendment. That is my brief intervention. I accept you at your word, if that has been your ruling. I appreciate the eminent argument put forward by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) but it is too late.

Mr. Pinard: You have ruled on an amendment.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Are Hon. Members still questioning the ruling? If they do, the Chair will question its own ruling.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, when you ruled, you ruled on an amendment that was moved to Clause 14. You never ruled on the amendment that is proposed to the Schedule now. It is a brand new amendment. It is not an amendment on which you have ruled. Therefore, there is no ruling on this amendment. There is an objection that is awaiting your decision.

We have explained why the amendment to the Schedule is not admissible. It is up to you to make a decision, but certainly, with respect, you have never ruled on the amendment to the Schedule that has just been put.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, in my view you ruled on that amendment twice. I think we should respect the Chair.

The Government has many more members in the House than the Opposition. The Government can vote to make sure that this tariff exemption on vessels over 100 feet stays where it is. The Government can make sure that fishing vessels of over 30.5 metres are treated in accordance with this tariff item if it wants to. I think it is a matter of voting on this amendment. We can see where the Government stands on the issue. The Government has the opportunity to vote this way or it can let the amendment go through. There is no question about it. Most of the Members involved from Atlantic Canada who belong to the Government Party want this changed. The New Democratic Party—

● (1810)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The words of the Hon. Member are not of very great use to the Chair in trying to determine whether or not this is allowable.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Chairman, at the time the amendment was received by the Chair the Chairman indicated that the amendment would not be acceptable under Clause 14, but it would be acceptable and received under the Schedule. Was that not a ruling of the Chair, that that amendment was acceptable under the Schedule? The Chair would find nothing wrong with it, I believe was the wording. What we do have is a ruling that if the Hon. Member placed this amendment before the Chair, that it would be the acceptable thing to do; that it would be appropriate and acceptable to the Chair. That was the nature of the words of the Chairman. That was the ruling of the House.

Second, the amendment does receive the popular support of the House. Many of the Members here are in favour of this kind of benefit. I wonder whether the Chair should not accept it, given the Chair's first ruling, and given the sense of the House which the Chair would feel if he were to allow it to proceed.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I would be glad to have your guidance. Is it in accordance with our rules that an Opposition amendment can increase a tariff?

Mr. Blenkarn: It decreases it.

Mr. Evans: No, it does not.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: That has not been raised so far. The problem we have is, first, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River is right. When I disallowed the amendment on Clause 14 I said it would be allowable under the Schedule. Therefore, the amendment is allowed as far as I am concerned.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Evans: Mr. Chairman, I think if I recall correctly, you said the amendment—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair has made a final ruling. We are going to proceed with the business in committee now. Is there any debate on the amendment?

Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment please say Yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Amendment (Mr. Blenkarn) negatived: Yeas, 18; Nays, 24.

Schedule agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

An Hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There was a House order that the House would sit until we called it six o'clock. As yet no one has called it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. The Chair heard a Member calling it six o'clock, with all due respect.

It being after six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.18 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—YOUTH EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Hon. John Wise (Elgin) moved:

That this House condemns the continuing failure of the Government's policies to restore even pre-recession levels of employment opportunities for young people at a time when hundreds of thousands of young Canadians are about to join the labour force from our schools and universities and Canada's unemployment rate for young adults remains the highest of any western industrial nation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to lead off debate on an extremely important matter facing all governments, whether they be municipal, provincial or the federal Liberal Government we have in office at the present time. I am sure everyone would agree that one of the most critical challenges facing Canadian society, our business and industrial labour leaders, politicians at all levels, is that of youth unemployment. I am sure everyone would agree as well that how this challenge is met will shape the character of Canadian society for decades to come. Because of this challenge, and because of the deep concern we have for the fact that the present Liberal Government has not been able to deal adequately with the problem of youth unemployment, my colleagues and I have utilized one of those rare occasions we have today to put this motion before the House.

I think it would be interesting to examine and compare the record of this Government and that of the last Conservative Government in 1979-80. During that nine-month period in which we were in office we created jobs at the rate of 7,000 per month, for a total of some 60,000 jobs. In the 49 months since the election of this particular government, we find that it did not create jobs, that in fact the number of young people employed decreased by nearly 300,000. During the nine months we were in office we created jobs at the rate of some 7,000 a month, and during the period of time this Government has been in office it has decreased the number of jobs by 7,000 per month.

Official statistics indicate that at the present time we have some 525,000 to 550,000 young Canadians out of work. Indeed, if we examine some of the statements by the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette), who unfortunately is not in the House, and neither is the present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts)—I hope their schedules will permit them to join us before the—

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Cabinet is meeting this morning, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please.

Mr. McGrath: Have you been blackballed, J.J.?

Mr. Crosby: They kicked him out for leaking that document.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Hon. Members also know that it is not in order to reflect on the presence or otherwise of Members in the House.

Mr. Deans: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I personally apologize to the Hon. Member who has the floor. I would not have risen, but Cabinet or not, the House of Commons sits on Thursday mornings.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, if we—

• (1110)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) is presently on a speaking engagement in Montreal. She is travelling back and will be here this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It is not orderly to reflect on the presence of Members in the House of Commons, nor is it useful for the House proceedings to determine where Members are across the country.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I hope that exchange will not be taken off my time.

If we examine some of the statements which are being made across the country, and they are few and far between, by the Minister of State for Youth, we will find that she has actually admitted to the fact that the true number of unemployed young adults in the country is close to 700,000 rather than 550,000. There are about 1.2 million young Canadians in colleges and universities in the country. Within the next 10 days those young Canadians will be leaving schools, universities and other institutions of learning. A conservative estimate would be that approximately 50 per cent of those people will be joining the summer workforce. We could add 600,000 to that 700,000 and, if we did a bit of mathematical calculation, we would find that the actual number of young people who are out of work across the country is in the neighbourhood of 1.4 million Canadians.

During its 16 years in office the Liberal Government has been the architect of the unemployment crisis facing Canada and Canadians today. In 1968 when the Government first took office, total unemployment was approximately 358,000. Last year, in 1983, total unemployment had risen to 1.448 million Canadians. In 1968 one out of every 22 working people was out of a job. Last year that ratio rose to one out of every eight workers. In 1968 the unemployment rate was 4.5 per cent. In 1983 it rose to 11.9 per cent. In 1968 UIC benefits totalled some $438 million. In 1983 those benefits grew to $10.2 billion. During this 16-year period total unemployment in Canada increased by approximately 400 per cent.

As bad as the figures of total unemployment are, the youth unemployment situation in the country is even worse. In 1968 the unemployment rate for youth was 7.7 per cent, or 3.2 per cent higher than the total unemployment rate. In 1983 the youth unemployment rate rose to 19.9 per cent, or 8 per cent higher than the total unemployment rate last year. These are staggering increases. However, neither the total unemployment rate nor the youth unemployment rate should be accepted in a modern industrial economy. Youth comprise about 25 per cent of the Canadian workforce and about 37 per cent of its unemployed. When the hidden unemployed, those who have given up looking for jobs because there is no work available, are included in the unemployment totals, youth unemployment then comprises over 40 per cent of those who are unemployed.

These are stark numbers. In more human terms, continuing levels of high youth unemployment could alter the fabric of Canadian society. The longer a young person unsuccessfully looks for work, the more a sense of hopelessness sets in. As the months go by, young unemployed people start losing faith in themselves, their friends and their families and begin to question the worth of society.

I am sure everyone would acknowledge that it will take more than money to solve the youth unemployment problem. It will take attitudinal as well as structural changes. Governments and society face a major task in handling and coping with this problem.

The youth population of Canada indeed has been declining recently. In January of 1984, there were some 4.371 million Canadians aged 15 to 24. That was some 80,000 fewer than in the same month of last year and 182,000 fewer than in January of 1981. The number is expected to drop by an additional 90,000.

I am also sure that everyone would acknowledge the fact that as the Canadian economy expands, obviously more jobs are created. The youth unemployment rate should decline more rapidly and an improved economy will ultimately provide a solution to the youth unemployment rate.

However, waiting does not address the deep problems being faced by young people in this country today. The federal Government should and could be taking certain actions in various areas to alleviate these problems. The Government should make greater use of the tax system through utilization of unemployment tax credits to encourage youth employment.

Since the Government has already announced that it will be using its purchasing power to encourage the hiring of women and the handicapped, we are of the firm opinion that this same policy should be extended to Canada's youth. The hiring of young people will not be very beneficial if it only leads to lay-offs of older personnel. Therefore consultation must take place among industry, business and labour to ensure that the worker displacement problem does not happen.

Greater emphasis should be placed on training and retraining programs in order to meet the present and future skill needs of the workplace. Task forces have studied and white papers, books, reports and reams of paper have been written about the unemployment needs of the 1980s and 1990s. However, governments, universities, industry and labour must work together in order to ensure a fulfilment of these needs. Greater use ought to be made of the career access program and the apprenticeship programs. As an example of what the future holds if nothing is done now, the National Advisory Panel on Skill Development Leave has pointed out that 35 per cent of Canada's working women, especially in the clerical, banking services and telephone sectors, could be unemployed by the 1990s because of advancement in technology alone.

Consideration should be given to the use of unemployment insurance funds as a development tool as well as a maintenance fashion. This would allow for more creative use of the unemployment insurance system. Too many young Canadians graduate from training programs or educational institutions and cannot find work. It is not because their skills are not in demand but because they cannot make contact with the employer who needs them. In the current fiscal year some 50 per cent of the graduates of classroom training courses are still out of work three months after graduation. In addition, the Ontario Government has shown that community college graduates have an unemployment rate of some 23 per cent as compared with an Ontario youth unemployment rate of some 14.7 per cent. I understand that one of the areas of major unemployment has been the computer-related field. With the ever-increasing use of computers, I find this to be an incredible statistic.

Clearly, therefore, as job-creation agencies, Canada Manpower centres across this country have not been performing adequately. These centres ought to be computerized so that the unemployed as well as the potential employers know what is available to them across the country. The longer it takes to get a job, the more discontented a person becomes with the Canada Manpower centres. As Members, we have all certainly experienced the difficulties with those centres almost on a daily basis. There ought to be better provision of counselling services at these centres throughout the country. The unemployed should not be treated as mere statistics.

More consultation is needed with the provinces as far as educational funding is concerned. We acknowledge the fact that the British North America Act gave overlapping responsibility and jurisdiction for education between the federal and provincial governments. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has stated that the federal Government's traditional role of being responsible for upgrading educational skills indeed should be rethought. Too often, unfortunately, the federal Government's rethinking has evolved into federal Government dictating—dictating how and where money would be spent. That does not solve the problem but co-operation and consultation with the provinces will certainly help. A federal-provincial conference on educational funding should be called at the earliest possible moment.

In several parts of this country young people face a future of almost permanent unemployment. Wage subsidies and employment tax credits will be of little value in these economically depressed regions. In such regions there ought to be programs of community-based entrepreneurial development which will assist individuals and groups wishing to start new businesses to raise money, to cut through the red tape, to identify markets and to train workers.

These ten proposals, Mr. Speaker, will help to alleviate the problem of youth unemployment. Just as importantly, they will help to ensure the future skill needs of the country. These proposals would not necessarily, though I admit a couple of them would, entail the expenditure of more money. Rather they would entail a reallocation of present funds.

I recognize that my time has almost expired, but let me conclude by quoting the Hon. Member for Central Nova, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney):

> No amount of make-work projects and Government schemes—no gimmicks—can substitute for sustained economic growth based on lower interest rates, technological innovation, and increased trade. These are the means to growth. These are the means to full employment. These are the means which will assure young Canadians the opportunities they deserve.

Let me conclude by repeating one of my opening sentences: How this challenge is met will shape the character of Canadian society for decades to come.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): At this time in our proceedings a ten-minute period is provided for questions or comments relating to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise). Are there any questions?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, my question for the Member is related to the quotation of his Leader who talked about the importance of lower interest rates. It is somewhat like talking about the importance of motherhood. Is the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) suggesting that the Conservative Party has changed its position on interest rate policy, that the Conservative Party will put in exchange controls or some other measure to lower interest rates? What is it that the Hon. Member suggests the Conservatives will do differently to lower interest rates and provide more jobs for young people?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member's question. I am sure he must feel somewhat uneasy in view of the fact that the main thrust of the motion today is based on youth unemployment. I would have expected him to have placed that subject in very high priority and utilized the opportunity left open to him to direct a question with reference to the subject of youth unemployment. He has chosen not to do so. He has chosen to raise another broader issue on the Canadian economy, more specifically on interest rate policy as far as this Party is concerned. That would take much time to be able to respond adequately.

If the Hon. Member would take the time to check Hansard, he would find we are so concerned about that subject that our Party selected it as a topic on a recent Opposition day. I would recommend to the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) that he check and read Hansard for that particular day. It will certainly enlighten him very much.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair would like to follow up on the point raised by the Hon. Member for Elgin. Questions asked of a Member who has just delivered a speech must be related to that speech.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I believe the question was directly related. I related it to his last remarks and the quotation in the Hon. Member's speech. He quoted his Leader who was downgrading the importance of specific government initiatives to deal with youth unemployment. He called them gimmicks and said that the real method of dealing with youth unemployment was to reduce interest rates. That is the relationship. I think the Hon. Member should read his own speech; then he will see the relevance of the question put to him.

• (1125)

Aside from that, the importance of interest rates is a relevant point. When interest rates go down, economic growth increases and we have more employment in general in the Canadian economy. Of course, it provides more opportunity for jobs. I agree with the Hon. Member in those remarks.

The reason I am putting a question to the Hon. Member is that I do not believe his Party has any different policies with respect to interest rates than the present Government. For them to say that they have a low interest rate policy is misleading.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should take the time to listen to some of the statements which are being made, not only by his caucus colleagues but by a Cabinet Minister of his Government. He must have some second thoughts about the interest rate policy which his Government has been following. The Minister suggested that if he were elected leader of the Party, he would fire the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Certainly there is a very direct relationship between interest rates and what is happening in the general economy; I have admitted that. There is no question about that. No one would deny it. Indeed, the people who suffer most seriously as a result of the high interest rate policy of the Government are small businessmen. They are the employers of some 70 per cent of all the labour force in the country. These enterprises are the ones that would provide job opportunities and would take advantage of the employment tax credit and the career access program.

We put questions to the Minister of Employment and Immigration during examination of his estimates. We cautioned him that these programs would not be fully utilized because the state of the general economy still remained at a very low ebb. That results from high interest rates. The Hon. Member should be listening to what people in the industrial and financial communities have been saying, that there is a lack of confidence based upon the record of the Government. Many expenditures are being placed on hold, and some have been on hold for two years now. If we talk with businessmen or people who come to Canada looking for investment opportunities, they tell us in no uncertain terms that they will not participate in any massive investment until such time as an election is called and this Government is tossed out of office.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hate to intrude at this point in time, particularly in relation to the well known ruling with respect to reflecting upon the presence or absence of Members in the House. There is a well established convention in the House of Commons with respect to allotted days that we have at least one member of the Cabinet present in the Chamber. There is not one member of the administration in the House in response to this allotted day, which is contrary to the conventions of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I can go even further by stating that Citation 316(c) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition is clear. It is not orderly to reflect upon the presence or absence of Members of the House of Commons. The Hon. Member has made his point. I only hope that Members will stop harping on this during the day.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) at the beginning of his speech spoke about the jobs created in the seven-month period when the Conservatives were in office. It would be instructive for the House to be given some further information about that period of time. Most business leaders and economists understand that results follow an action.

I was not a Member of the House of Commons at that time. Can he tell the House what specific actions were taken by that government to cause the creation of extra jobs, or was he simply referring to some of the proposals that were presented some seven months later, after these jobs had already been created in the Budget which was rejected both by the House and by the country?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I am simply reciting the record and the facts. Indeed, I am giving the benefit of the doubt. I am actually reciting Government statistics and facts. A number of things were done during that ten-month period. The very brief time that I have available to me would not allow an adequate explanation of what we were able to achieve during that very brief period of government. I regret very much the Hon. Member was not here. He certainly would have enjoyed a very favourable period in the House.

Let me tie that in with the importance of small business and medium-sized business in the country. At that time we as a Cabinet were extremely worried because interest rates were pushing 12 per cent. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) stood on this side of the House and said that if they went beyond 12 per cent, if he had occupied a government position at that time he would have the honour to resign.

There was a great deal more business activity going on during that period because there was more confidence in the economy. Small business people were investing in the economy. Interest rates were at 12 per cent. During the 49-month period, in fact a 24-month period taking it to the summer and fall of 1981, the Hon. Member will know what happened. Because of the policies of this Government, interest rates took off. Interest rates rose from the earlier level of 12 per cent and 13 per cent to as high as 21, 22 and 23 per cent. That makes an impossible situation for small business. Consequently, money did not come into the country in view of the lack of confidence shown and our own domestic capital fled the country. Obviously inactivity began in the small business sector and the farming sector as well. Job opportunities since then were simply not available.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to be frivolous and I do not want to delay the House, but I believe this is important. It has to do with the point of order raised by my colleague from Saskatoon West. Is it Your Honour's ruling that it is in fact not an established convention of this House that a Minister be present at all times?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. Is the Hon. Member coming to the point of reflecting on the presence or absence—

Mr. McGrath: You have not heard me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I am just trying to stop a Member from reflecting on the presence or absence of another Member in this House. If the Hon. Member is rising to do something else, I will listen to him.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I am rising to do something else. I will not name any Member. Consequently that will satisfy your citation from Beauchesne. It is an established convention of this House, given the fact that the Government is responsible for the management of the House, that there shall be at least one and usually two Ministers present at all times. Because of your ruling, a Minister came in. As a consequence of your ruling, which I felt was not in the context of the point of order of my colleague, the Minister got up and left the Chamber. It is important because I would not want that to be on the record as a precedent.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, you cited Beauchesne's Citation 316(c):

Besides the prohibitions contained in S.O. 35, it has been sanctioned by usage that a Member, while speaking, must not:

(c) refer to the presence or absence of specific Members;—

I would ask if you would reflect upon the meaning of "specific". It is clearly appropriate in the House of Commons, as a result of normal usage, to refer to the absence of Members, provided one does not specify exactly which Member is absent. I would like you, not necessarily to rule at the moment, but to consider that it is appropriate for a Member to rise in the House of Commons or during the course of a speech to draw to your attention the fact that there is no one from the Cabinet present. That does not refer to a specific Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The first point the Chair would like to make is that the original point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Elgin was directed at the Minister responsible for youth, which was quite specific. Second, Citation 316(c) reads:

—refer to the presence or absence of specific Members;—

This leads to some interpretation. It does not say "specific Member" but "specific Members". It was the interpretation of the Chair that the Cabinet is certainly of a plural nature. In any event, the point has certainly been made three, four or five times, regardless of the rules. I suggest we continue the debate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an intervention on the point of order. This has been an interesting exchange. Under our rules, we are now involved in an allotted day which is very much a matter of supply. It is a matter of the members of the administration defending the spending of their departments.

The motion before us is a condemnatory motion relating to the Government's lack of policy with regard to youth unemployment. Accordingly, it becomes an important ingredient in terms of that whole process to determine whether the Government has any member of its administration present in the House to answer. The same point was raised and an undertaking was given by the Government with respect to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) not being available to discuss estimates before the committee. The Government understood the gravity of that allegation and gave an undertaking to see what could be done so that that Minister would be before the commitee.

We are now sitting in the House of Commons and having a discussion on the floor of the House of Commons with respect to supply. Without casting reflections on any individual Members or the reason they are not here, it strikes me that the convention of the House is always that the administration, the Cabinet, the executive, are here on the floor of the House of Commons prepared to answer questions and defend the Government's position vis-à-vis the motion on the floor. That is the crux of what we are doing here today. We are not reflecting on the absence per se.

We say that the Government cares so little about this topic that it cannot even spare a couple of Ministers to be on the floor of the House of Commons to defend its position on youth unemployment, and I think that is shameful.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair would only remark that while the Hon. Member was labouring his point, the Chair was able to see that Cabinet is now represented in the House of Commons. If we could get back to the debate, it would be appreciated. The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, are we on debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): We are on debate. The time allowed for questions and comments has now expired. We are back on debate on the motion. The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I gather that you were about to recognize the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody for debate. While I would not want in any way to impede him in his desire to make a speech, the normal practice has not been to recognize two members of one Party, one after the other. In debate on Opposition days, it has frequently been that the two Opposition Parties express their point of view and then the Government responds. I would suggest that although it is quite legitimate to recognize the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody now, it might be better to recognize him later in the debate.

• (1140)

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to support that same point. My reason is that I am sitting over on this side and I was assuming that you were recognizing the member of the NDP at this time, Mr. Speaker. However, I would also like to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair realizes that a member of each Party is supposed to speak on the first round. With all due respect, perhaps the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody would yield the floor to the representative of the New Democratic Party. Would that be agreeable?

Mr. St. Germain: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) and I appreciate his courtesy. I would like to take a few moments to discuss the topic that is before us this morning. I believe it is a very complex topic. There is no doubt in my mind that it is one of the most important problems confronting Canadians at this time.

The question of providing adequate employment is a question that bedevils everyone in politics. I think it would be unfair to suggest that there is one simple solution that will automatically resolve the problem. I do not pretend for one moment to think that from the moment whichever of the political Parties comes to power, there would automatically be a job for everyone. I say "a job for everyone" advisedly because I do believe that unless, as a matter of principle, political Parties in Canada and perhaps in other parts of the world intend to ensure that every Canadian available for work is given the opportunity to work, then no amount of patchwork programming will resolve the problem.

There is a shortage of jobs in Canada. However, there is no shortage of work. If one were to look across the country, one would see that there are any number of tasks which need to be done. The question then becomes whether it is a matter of the policy of this Government to choose not to have that work undertaken and completed or whether it is that because of financial constraints, the Government feels that it is better to put the available capital into other things than the completion of that work. I think we must address that question.

When looking at the over-all picture, it is hard to imagine that within the traditional sense of the word "employment" we will suddenly be able to create a sufficient number of jobs for everyone who is presently unemployed as well as for everyone who is entering the workforce for the first time. We all know that the technological change that is taking place is by its very nature designed to reduce the participation of individuals in the workplace. The technological change, the computerization and the robotics that have become so much a part of the workplace in Canada will, out of necessity and by its very design and intent, eliminate jobs that were of a traditional nature.

In the 1950s and the 1960s, I can remember young people entering the workforce from the high schools and universities as there were no community colleges in Ontario at that time. They looked forward to entering into the traditional forms of employment, the forms of employment that their fathers had had before them and perhaps even their grandfathers. People in Hamilton looked to the Steel Company of Canada, Dominion Foundries and Steel, the International Harvester Company, Protor and Gamble and perhaps to the auto industry outside Hamilton for employment. In those days there was even the Studebaker Company but that has gone by the boards now. People in Hamilton looked to those companies and to others for employment. Over the years, as a result of technological change, those employers have, in my judgment wrongly in some cases, reduced the necessity for human effort in the workplace.

I believe we will be faced with a terrible dilemma. How can we create those traditional kinds of jobs? I frankly think that the answer is that we cannot. We will not be able to keep pace technologically and in terms of our productive and competitive capacity if we insist on having things which were once done by hand and foot continue to be done by hand and foot in Canada while they are being done by machines and technology elsewhere. Therefore, I think we are being confronted with a serious problem. We will not be able to keep the same numbers of people working in the steel companies any more. We will not be able to keep the same numbers of people working in the automobile manufacturing plants any more. We will not be able to keep the same numbers of people making bottles, cans and all of the other things that they once made any more. What, then, are we going to do, Mr. Speaker?

If technology has changed the workplace in such a way as to make traditional jobs fewer, then we must look at non-traditional employment. We must also look to ways of making it possible for people to enter non-traditional fields while at the same time not over-burdening the cost factors in the world economy.

There are those who think that all we need do is get more people to buy more things and everyone will automatically be put back to work. That is not so. We in Canada are operating now at something like 70 per cent of the productive capacity of the technology that is currently available. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that even if people were prepared to buy more, the machinery that is already in place is capable of producing more with a very limited increase in manpower. That will not be the solution to the problem.

What is the real problem, Mr. Speaker? As I see it, the real problem is somewhat different. Why do people need jobs? Aside from all of the benefits of going to work and being part of the social structure of the workplace, the main reason people work is to receive income. That is why people keep working long after they should retire, that is why people work overtime and that is why people take jobs that, even by their own admission, are back-breaking or mind-bending jobs that provide very little in the way of self-fulfillment. They do that because they need an income.

We in Canada will have to take a look at ways of opening up job opportunities where young people enter the workforce. That may require that we make some serious decisions about such things as hours of work and the length of the work week. It may require that we look at the question of whether or not the pension programs currently available in Canada, private and public, are adequate enough to allow people to move out of the workforce at a time when the kind of work that they have been accustomed to doing is becoming more and more difficult for them to do. Either they must move on to a different kind of lighter or less strenuous work, without a loss of income which would cause all kinds of difficulties meeting financial commitments, or they must fall within a structure that we may create which will enable people to retire at an earlier age. This would open up many of the traditional jobs that are currently being held.

In the 1940s, the 1950s and the 1960s, we moved from a 60-hour work week to a 48-hour work week to a 40-hour work week. I frankly believe that we must again take a serious look at whether or not we have reached a point in time when a further reduction in the work week would perhaps make sense, given our productive capacity and our ability to consume.

The next thing I think we must do is take a look at how one qualifies for benefits in the event that one is available for work but there is no work available. When that young person leaves his or her educational facility and goes out into the workplace, even if he or she attends every single interview available, registers with Manpower and sends a resumé to every potential employer in the area, that young person will still find that there are just not enough jobs. And we are saying to these young persons that because they have never worked before, they are not eligible for any income. Not only can we not produce enough jobs for them, but if they are unfortunate enough to have just completed school and therefore are without any work record and have not contributed to any insurance program, they are not eligible for any income either. That does not make much sense to me.

I believe, therefore, we must do some very dramatic rethinking about the prerequisites and requirements for people who are out of work, with no prospects of work. I believe we could begin by telling these young persons that if they are available for work, regardless of their age, and if, after having gone through all the various and many registration requirements, there is still no work available for them, then they are eligible for unemployment payments because they are unemployed. The fact that they did not work before is immaterial; they are still unemployed.

If a young person is available to enter the workforce, and the workforce has not grown enough so that there is a position available for them, that does not mean that they have to stop eating or stop paying their rent. It does not mean that they do not need any income. So it seems to me that we must begin by making a fundamental decision about income before we make any decision about employment. We have to make that decision now, and that decision must be that people who are available for work and for whom no work is available must be eligible for some kind of unemployment payments. We must start there.

Then, second, you say to the young people coming out of our educational institutions that if there is no work in the traditional sense, they will be eligible to draw certain payments. But they will also be encouraged to embark upon co-operative programs, self-employment programs within their community and in other communities. We must encourage those young persons to create the kind of jobs which are currently not being created.

I visited a high school the other day and put to the students something which I recognize in the long term is not going to work but in the short term is a good idea. There are any number of young people just about to leave their high schools for the summer. They will be looking for temporary summer employment. They used to get hired by the very companies I mentioned earlier, but these companies are not hiring now. They have already laid off employees and have no room for any young people. I suggested to these students that they are going to have to go out and seek work on their own.

One of the drawbacks they have is that they have no income to enable them to go out and do that. However, I suggested to them that there are things they could do. They could, for example, conduct a survey of all the agricultural communities surrounding the City of Hamilton. They could work in teams and go to each of the farmers and see whether or not there is work which the farmer requires and for which the farmer is prepared to pay. I told them they should do that to start with. And I feel that we should be prepared, as a national program, to provide some income directly to these young people in the form of employment income in order to enable them to go out and undertake that search for work. There is a lot of work which needs to be done but the trouble is that these students do not have any income to get them from where they are to where the work is. Second, they have no way of making contact with those individuals who might be willing to hire them. I am talking now about temporary employment.

I also suggested to these young persons that perhaps they could take two or three small jobs and make them into one job. Perhaps they can go out and discuss with prospective employers the possibility of working for them one day a week, or even less. If they find three or four employers willing to hire them on that basis, that would enable them to get into the workforce and to gain experience. These suggestions are all short term but they do address one of the problems which confront, I believe, a large number of young people who will now be entering the workforce in a temporary way.

However, that is not going to solve our problem, Mr. Speaker. It is just a short-term solution. It will not do very much for the long-term difficulties. As far as I can see from looking at the future of employment in Canada, we must establish that everyone in Canada has a right to a job, given the fact that we require of people in our society that they do have a job. Our whole society was built on the basis of people working, and unless we are prepared, as a matter of principle, to ensure that everyone has the right to a job, they will never spend the time and effort seeking out the kinds of employment necessary to meet the demand. We must place an onus of responsibility upon ourselves and upon the Government.

I believe that all across this country there is work of varying kinds which requires doing and for which there are people available, but it is not being done. Two or three years ago we suggested, for example, that there was a need for an additional 100,000 housing units to be built yearly over the course of the following three to four years in order to meet the demand. If we had done that, we would have created 280,000 jobs annually. If we had done that we would have taken the pressure off the other employment areas which are being filled and we would have opened up an opportunity for some people to get back to work or to enter the workforce for the first time. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that at the same time we were saying that we suggested there ought to be an immediate move to complete the east-west pipeline in Canada in order that we would create not only energy self-sufficiency but tens of thousands of jobs for people in the construction industry and the manufacturing industry. Had we done that, we would have reduced the number of people unemployed and opened up other job opportunities for those now entering the workforce.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that we said there had to be a complete revitalization, in fact, of the transportation system of Canada. We had to complete not only the railroad transportation system but the port facilities, inland and on the coasts. If we had done that, the tens of thousands of jobs which would have been created would have taken the preassure off the other employment areas and opened up jobs for young people entering the workforce. That would have been a helpful way to begin to solve that particular aspect of the problem.

We suggested that it was time we took a look at placing a requirement for the manufacturing in Canada of significant components of those products, such as automobiles and other products which are now being imported into Canada. We are not saying we should not import or export, but there must be a requirement to manufacture in Canada some of the parts we use in Canada. If the Government had followed that kind of direction, a significant number of jobs would have been created which would have made it possible for young people to enter the workforce.

I am sure the Hon. Member who spoke before me will appreciate that if we had begun to take advantage of the vast agricultural component of our country and had placed a greater emphasis on support for the farmer in his or her attempts to replace the obsolete farm machinery with new machinery in order to be competitive in world terms, we would have created jobs in the farm machinery manufacturing sector. There are a whole series of job-creation projects, both public and private, which could have been and still can be undertaken and which would have opened up 400, 500 or 1,000 jobs for Canadians presently unemployed or entering the workforce for the first time.

We have to restructure our apprenticeship training program, Mr. Speaker. It is absolutely essential that we make it a prerequisite for employers to take on apprentices and train young people in new techniques. Therefore we must begin developing apprenticeship training programs that will allow young people to learn the skills necessary to make them a valuable part of a productive society.

We have to undertake now to look at the need to face up, I think is the right word, to the problem of high interest rates which have bedevilled the Canadian economy. As the Hon. Member who spoke previously has said, and I am sure the Liberals will agree, we are the only people in the House of Commons who consistently demanded from the Government a lower interest rate policy. We have even gone so far as to say that we would be prepared to undertake whatever steps are necessary to achieve that policy.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, there are any number of ways that new jobs can be created. There are any number of ways that we can bring young people into the workforce both temporarily and permanently. There are new ways which have to be looked at of reducing the work week and the work life of people while guaranteeing a decent income. Therefore, I want to move an amendment to the motion, seconded by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That the motion be amended by deleting the period after the word "nation" and adding the following thereafter:

"—and in particular the Government's adoption of the United States interest rate and monetarist policies, thereby reducing employment opportunities for young Canadians."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair would rule that this amendment is in order. The debate from now on will be on the motion and the amendment. We still have a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Mountain (Mr. Deans) for giving a speech that was not just a blind litany of mindless criticism. He obviously put some thought into it and gave some alternatives. He went through about four different suggestions for dealing with the problem of youth unemployment, and unemployment in general. He talked about work sharing. I agree that that is an important aspect of dealing with the problem. The Government already provides mechanisms by which work sharing can take place. In my own community there are 64 different companies who use work sharing.

He also talked about having young people and others create projects in their communities to meet the various demands of Canadian society which have not been met by the private or public sector as yet. The Government has programs for doing exactly that, such as the Summer Canada program and the Canada community development projects.

The Hon. Member talked about the importance or major capital projects and how they can provide employment. Housing, transportation and farm machinery are the three examples he gave.

Mr. Deans: You lost one.

Mr. Lang: In the last several Budgets the Government has provided various incentives to stimulate the housing industry. As to transportation, the Crow rate was amended to provide a massive injection of capital for the revamping and modernization of our railway system. Numerous funds have been supplied for upgrading ports. Concerning farm machinery, we all remember that the Government provided assistance to Massey-Ferguson.

Mr. Deans: That is not what I am talking about.

Mr. Lang: Although I agree with many of the suggestions the Hon. Member has made, I guess the point is, how far do you go with increased funding in these areas, and is a limitation imposed by the deficit?

The Hon. Member talked about the apprenticeship training program. I think that is an extremely important area but there seem to be some obstacles to obtaining the co-operative effort needed between business, labour and government to attain an apprenticeship program which will deal with the problems in as effective a manner as we would like. I would ask the Hon. Member whether it is his position that unions should be more receptive to apprenticeship programs, because one of the obstacles is presented by the union movement itself.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to see how different conclusions can be drawn from different things. The best apprenticeship programs in this country are offered through trade unions, Mr. Speaker. The construction industry runs its own apprenticeship programs. The apprentices who come out of those programs are of the highest quality. They are as good as any apprentices anywhere in the world, and better than many. There is no reluctance on the part of the trade union movement to be involved in apprenticeship programs. The difficulty has always been that employers found it easier to go offshore and hire skilled labourers and tradesmen rather than take the time to put in place apprenticeship programs to meet their needs for the future. There is very little evidence to show that the trade unions in any way inhibited the development of apprenticeship programs.

Leaving that aside for the moment and referring to the Massey-Ferguson bail-out, I put it to the Hon. Member that that is exactly the wrong way to go about establishing and maintaining a viable farm machinery industry. What was required was that farmers have more income in their hands in order that they could afford to purchase machinery. If the farmers could not buy the machinery it did not make any sense to keep the plant going. The changes to the Crow rate took money out of farmers' hands. That was our argument all along. You cannot change the Crow rate and demand farmers pay out more of their available income for freight costs and then expect that they will also have money available to purchase new machinery. That was why we argued against the changes to the Crow rate.

I submit to the Hon. Member that the funding of the development of the transportation system based on changes to the Crow rate, not totally but substantially, worked counter to the efforts of the majority of people to create employment. It worked counter to the efforts we were putting forward to try and stimulate the manufacturing sector. Although the Government had the germ of an idea, it went about it the wrong way.

I will make one final point which I think is the most important point. One of the main reasons that there was a fall-off in job creation in the country, albeit influenced by international events, was quite clearly the very high interest rates. The Member asked whether I am prepared to see the money spent to undertake these major works projects. The answer is yes, I am prepared to see the money spent. With regard to housing, if we built the 100,000 housing units and created the 280,000 jobs, every single penny that was invested would come back either in the form of mortgages or rents. In addition, 280,000 people who were previously unemployed would be working and paying taxes. The companies which make all the component parts, be it shingles or taps, would be manufacturing and paying taxes.

I suggest that investing in that industry or in the pipeline, which would be of the same benefit in the long run, or in many of the other projects that we suggested, is the way to get people back to work and paying taxes. It will increase confidence and reduce the debt load of the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain). The Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) on a point of order.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I thought it had been indicated that we were going to hear from a member of each Party on the first round.

Mr. Deans: It is a question.

Mr. de Corneille: Is this still the question period?

Mr. Deans: It is a question.

Mr. St. Germain: It is a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): We are still in the question period. I do not see what the Chair has done wrong in recognizing an Hon. Member who wishes to pose a question. The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made the statement that we cannot create jobs. Why do people need a job?

Mr. Deans: To get an income.

Mr. St. Germain: To get an income. This is exactly what he said.

Mr. Deans: That is right.

Mr. St. Germain: He suggests a shorter work week. I agree with him that we are going to have to share. In the fifties, sixties and seventies we did shorten the work week. How can the Hon. Member recommend this at this particular point in time when he knows that every small business, from which sector I came just nine months ago, is on the verge of bankruptcy? That sector is the creator of jobs.

The Hon. Member made an excellent speech but he gave no indication of how we are going to bolster the engine of growth which is small business. He claims that we must shorten the work week. I ask in all sincerity how we are going to stimulate growth so that these small businesses can afford it. I agree that some of the larger businesses can afford it, but how can small business afford it?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I will first say that there is no conflict in saying that you cannot create jobs and at the same time talking about looking at the work which needs to be done and doing it. In the process people become employed. I think the Member would recognize that there is no conflict between those two.

With regard to the work week, the argument being put forward by a significant number of people about the inadvisability of moving toward a shorter work week is the same argument that was put forward by basically the same people when the work week was shortened before. Although that argument has a certain appeal, it turns out in the long run not to have any real substance. If we are able to stimulate economic activity by doing a variety of things, as I suggest we will, if we are able to reduce the cost by stabilizing the interest rates and if we are able to stimulate activity in small businesses by virtue of the capital works projects, then the small business entrepreneur will be in a position to accept a move toward a shorter work week. As a result there will be more people in the consumer marketplace, more people buying his product and more people active in society. That will be to his long-term benefit.

I do not think anyone is suggesting that a shortening of the work week would happen overnight. We must move systematically to reduce it in a gradual way, recognizing that there can be some detrimental effects, but also recognizing that the economy can be stimulated because there is new capital flowing to those small businesses.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the Hon. Member's assertion that there is no resistance at all by the union movement to the apprenticeship program. He made the point, and I agree with it, that in the past business has tended to import skilled labour because it was cheaper to do so. However, government has put up obstacles to this by requiring that any new jobs must be posted across Canada for a full month before an immigrant can take that job. I also agree that business, labour and government all have a role to play in ensuring that a good apprenticeship program comes in and in dealing with the problem in other ways.

I do not think we can whitewash and say that the trade union movement is receptive to the apprenticeship program. They have legitimate concerns that this may be a method of reducing income and cutting costs in the workplace. I think that has to be legitimately addressed. We must set aside some of our natural biases, depending upon our Parties, to address that particular problem. I would like to hear the Hon. Member's ideas on this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has one minute to respond.

Mr. Deans: I recognize the time is passing quickly, Mr. Speaker. Nothing the Member has said would lead me to believe that there has been resistance on the part of trade unions to the implementation of an accredited apprenticeship training program in Canada. There was resistance by trade unions to the thrust which would result in people being hired at lower wages to do the work already being done by others who would then be unemployed. Great Britain, Sweden, France and Japan have been able to establish apprenticeship programs which allowed young people to enter the workforce and be trained properly in the way in which the work was to be done without impeding or in any way detrimentally affecting the employment opportunities for those workers presently working. I do not see why that cannot happen in Canada. You will find no resistance on the part of the trade union movement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The time has come to resume debate on the amendment. The Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to delay this debate because it is an important topic. My recollection, Mr. Speaker, was that you recognized the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) who then, out of the graciousness for which he is well known in the House, deferred to the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). It seems to me that under the circumstances, having been recognized, the logical person to be recognized to carry on the debate should be the Member for Mission-Port Moody. You had asked him, Sir, if he would be prepared to defer to the Member for Hamilton Mountain. I will not make any further comment except to say that, in all sense of fairness, he has been waiting and was prepared to proceed. I think it is only equitable that he now proceed with his speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Earlier the Chair humbly recognized that it had made a mistake in not passing from the Progressive Conservative Party to the New Democratic Party since we are in an initial round today. To do what the Hon. Member is suggesting would simply compound the mistake by depriving the other Party from having a speaker in the initial round. The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, youth unemployment is not, as some members of the Opposition claim, a problem that can be solved easily or quickly. The public and the Opposition know that there is no quick fix. Nor is it, on the other hand, as some propose, a temporary aberration that can be blamed on the arrival of the baby boom generation. Rapid growth in the population has certainly had its effect, as has the recent recession, but of more significance I suggest is the way we do business in this country, the way our educational system works and the way we counsel and guide our young people as they prepare to enter the workforce.

Our young people in Canada represent the best trained and best educated generation of our history. Yet it is a cruel irony that many of them are still on the outside looking in, unable to find a job. It is no secret that many young people who are out of work are now coming to the conclusion that their skills and their education are of no use.

The youth of Canada are ready and able to take their rightful place in society and we, as a Government and as concerned adults, must see that they do. Technology is rapidly carrying us to the 21st century, but because of the rapidity of this change, all too often our skills and management techniques are still those of the 20th century. Exciting new jobs are being created that demand workers with specialized training. Our competitiveness in international markets and ultimately our standard of living depend on our ability to fill these jobs with qualified people.

We live in the age of the technician. If we do not train people for the types of jobs available in the labour market, if we persist in producing workers without the right skills, then the unemployment rate will remain high with jobs just going begging. The young people today recognize these facts and are expressing their concerns eloquently and admirably. Certainly we respect and should encourage the pressure that should always be placed upon government to seek every avenue to try to provide opportunities for young people.

The young people tell us that we must concentrate on the development of skills and human resources for all segments of the youth population. We must generate meaningful activities in the areas of education, training and voluntary services for all those with depressed employment prospects. We must promote a sense of excellence and innovation and encourage young people to identify with these goals of society so that their considerable talents will improve. The public should not be misled that we can do this overnight.

This Government has already taken huge steps to respond to these concerns. Through our Youth Opportunity Fund, we will invest more than $1.3 billion in this fiscal year alone in training, job creation and employment services for young people. That is a significant amount of money.

The Youth Opportunity Fund is a comprehensive and overall global approach to a very complex problem. Through this fund, programs and services are made available for all youth groups, including the early high school leaver who has little or no educational skill that would provide him with a job in the workforce at the present time, students searching for summer work experience and all other young people looking for an entry into the world of work.

Today I would like to focus my remarks, which of course are limited by time, on the national training program and how the Government, through that program, is helping young people develop the skills that will enable them to be truly productive members of Canada's workforce. When the National Training Act was proclaimed in 1982, it allowed us to bring our training system up to date and to prepare Canadians for full participation in this technological era. With it, we have been able to develop policies and programs that compare favourably with those of other countries. The program is designed to help those who need to update their present skills, learn new ones or to be in a better position to find permanent employment.

The national training program is working at its full capacity to give Canadians the skills that they will need to find rewarding jobs. In point of fact, the Government has in place an enlightened program and policy that provides for the training and retraining needs of all its human resources. This Government is at the forefront of activity to develop the talents of all Canadians, but extends a helping hand to those who need it the most. While there is concern for all, undeniably, young people—especially those with little education and skills and those whose education has not prepared them for the realities of the workplace—are prime beneficiaries.

Perhaps at this point I should mention the extent of our financial assistance for training. This fiscal year we will be spending more than a billion dollars to help Canadians upgrade their present skills or to learn new ones. More than half of the total training budget is directed toward the purpose of courses in both public and private learning institutions for individual Canadians. This will provide training opportunities for some 220,000 men and women, nearly half of whom will be young people.

Besides this institutional training, we have in place the industrial training component, projected to train some 61,000 Canadians during this fiscal year. More than 26,000 of them will be young people. Industrial training is highly important as it involves the co-operation and partnership of the private sector where trainees learn a trade under general industrial training or a skill of national importance under the critical skills training stream. The Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) alluded to that program and its importance a few moments ago.

This emphasis on training and retraining in high skill occupations is in fact in effect. It is an important aspect of the national training program. As a result, there has been a sharp increase in the number of trainees in occupations of national importance. In fact, in terms of trainee starts, the number has nearly doubled in less than two years. Occupations are designated as being of national importance when they have traditionally been in short supply or foreseen as being needed in tomorrow's high technology world for which appropriate training action can be taken to prevent or alleviate the shortage.

Another way in which the Government is helping to meet the challenge of change quickly is through what is known as the Skills Growth Fund. This fund, which was established through the National Training Act, assists public institutions as well as non-profit organizations to establish, expand or modernize training facilities. Since this Skill Growth Fund got under way less than two years ago, a total of 247 projects have been approved with a value of more than $165 million. Every province and territory has had projects approved. Both the public and private sectors have benefited. The figures show that public institutions such as community colleges have had 205 projects approved and a total funding of $148 million.

Just two weeks ago, the Government added another $30 million to the Skills Growth Fund for 1984-85. This money, coming as it does from the Youth Opportunity Fund, has been specifically designated to improve training opportunities and facilities for young people. Surely Hon. Members will agree that this is evidence of the Government's concrete action to help young people.

Let me cite a few examples to show how the Skills Growth Fund works to improve training opportunities. A youth job corps program in Toronto is using its $261,000 allocation for employment preparation. The Nova Scotia Nautical Institute in Port Hawkesbury is using its $3.2 million contribution to provide much needed maritime training to more than 300 trainees annually. The Youth Business Learning and Development Centre in Winnipeg has received $107,000 to provide training and clerical assistance to people with special needs. The focus of this project is clerical upgrading, including word processing. The training is computer-based and this innovative approach has already shown to be effective with the project's young clientele. On the West Coast, at the British Columbia Institute of Technology, the Skills Growth Fund has made possible a new robotics program and the Pacific Vocational Institute is using the fund for a high-tech training centre.

I cite these examples, Mr. Speaker, to illustrate, since large amounts of money can boggle the mind and leave one with a lack of understanding and perception, how the Government is effectively working to ensure we have highly trained Canadians ready to meet the high-skill needs of our future economy. By citing the different places, I have endeavoured to show that this effort is being made across the whole nation, and is trying to provide meaningful opportunities for people to take on jobs in all parts of Canada.

I might add at this point that the operation of the Skills Growth Fund is an excellent example of how this Government co-operates with the provinces as well as with businesses, as we have indicated, in the private sector, and various other organizations, both charitable and community minded, in pursuit of a national goal. It is a comprehensive program involving all phases of community life, public, private and charitable.

A key element in preparing young people to enter the labour market is being able to predict which skills and professions will be in greatest demand in the next few years so that the education and training provided corresponds to the real needs of our economy. To do this effectively, we need to know what the needs will be and where. With this in mind, and in very close collaboration with other governments, labour and business, we have developed the Canadian Occupational Projection System, or COPS. The system has been designed to collect, process and disseminate information on the future supply of, and demand for, workers on a professional basis.

The goal, then, is to plan Canada's human resources better, and especially its young human resources. It is to plan, where there are people with little or no skills, for retraining, or for those who wish to have and need skills in those industries requiring people with special skills, and, of course, the professions. It is a totally comprehensive approach to the entire subject of human resources and employment. It is not a patchwork type of thing, here, there or the other place. It is a total approach to a total problem which has huge and important dimensions to it in the future.

I could go on about the efforts of the Government to train our young people for the world of work, but I am glad that I have had this opportunity to talk about one aspect of it to show that dismissing the work of the Government in a few simple words is most unfair, most ineffective and inaccurate.

I could go on about the efforts of the Government. Just two weeks ago, for example, we announced the establishment of a new youth training option. With $30 million of Youth Opportunity Fund money, this option will offer young people a new form of training lasting up to a year. It is being designed to provide participants with both theoretical training and structured on-the-job training and experience. When it becomes operational around Labour Day, it will truly provide young people with yet one more option for learning. I know that all Members here share this Government's concern for our young people. Obviously this subject would not have been called on this Opposition Day if it were not a shared concern. I think it is important, therefore, for the whole picture to be given.

Our youth are standing on the threshold of greatness in the Canada of the future. We all have a stake in what happens to our young people. With the programs this Government has put in place and is putting in place, we are ensuring they acquire the knowledge, the skills and the experience that will equip them for the way ahead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments relating to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) mentioned that the starts under the national training program doubled in two years. I believe the national training program came into force in 1982. If you start from nothing, doubling does not mean anything. If you have one and double it, you only need one more. But if you have 1,000 and double it, it would be 2,000. Could the Hon. Member give me the figures he has which show the doubling?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the release here from which I cited my figures, but I think to observe that when you start from nothing and you double it you have nothing is a cavalier approach to what I thought was a rather comprehensive description of a very serious and comprehensive program. It is a program which has a great deal of taxpayers' money invested in it and a great deal of thought has been given to it by Canada's civil servants as well as this Government to make it an effective training program for our people. To minimize its scope, to disregard it or to be a cavalier about it is really not the point here. I hope that is not what is intended.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, who is minimizing it? I am simply asking for the facts.

Mr. Beatty: He says he does not know.

Mr. Taylor: I am asking what is the figure. Is the conscience of the Hon. Member bothering him? I simply asked for the figure. What was the figure that was doubled? How many starts are being made this year? How many were made in 1982 and 1983? That is all I want to know. I am not minimizing the program, Mr. Speaker, I just want to know the facts. Is there no answer from the Hon. Member?

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, it is amazing that we did not get an answer to the question posed by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). However, we know it is not necessary to answer if the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence feels he does not want to answer.

During his speech he said that there can be no quick fix. I do not think we are having even a slow fix to the problems we are experiencing in this country today. What we are having is an attempt at patching up. What we need are new initiatives as espoused by our spokesperson this morning, the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise). Our Party does espouse job training, as indicated in the speech delivered by the Hon. Member for Elgin.

We feel job training and job retraining is important, but what we need are brand-new initiatives, which we are not getting. Job training and retraining are not just good enough if there are no jobs for young people to go to. That is the area in which this Government is deficient. That is the area about which this Government is failing to do anything. This Government has literally failed in job training and retraining. Even if that were sufficient in itself, there are simply not the jobs for young people to go into because this Government lacks the determination, the political will and is deficient in the area of philosophy of getting jobs for the young people today.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments the Hon. Member has made about his concern about the effectiveness of the programs. By commenting on that, I think he should then provide some examples of where these programs are not reaching out or not meeting people's requirements. What I have been trying to do is to specialize in a certain specific area and provide facts and programs so that Hon. Members and the public may know the wide range of programs being made available to enable people to take on jobs. It is not only a matter of making jobs available but of making Canadians able to work in the jobs that are available or that down the line will become available. It is not possible, and I am glad it has been reiterated, to have a quick fix.

I believe the facts I have presented to the House concerning the programs in place and being funded at the present time will have to speak for themselves. I tried to show the comprehensive nature of them. I hope they will be effective. I know that in some cases in my riding in the City of Toronto they are effective.

We can talk about creating positions, but we also have to talk about the fact that many new jobs have been created. When we talk about figures and statistics, very often we become depressed or concerned about the fact that there is a large reservoir of unemployed. However, it is important that we are creating jobs at a record rate in Canada as compared with other countries in the western world. When we look at that fact and at the training programs available to Canadians, they comprise a policy. I hope the Government will never give up its efforts or feel satisfied with anything less than total employment.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille), but first I will refer to an article which appeared in my local newspaper. I received it just today. It indicates that the job situation in the Fraser Valley of British Columbia is devastating. This report was the result of the work of a task force established by the Fraser Valley College. In part the article reads:

College principal Dr. Barry Moore said "I found the report just devastating."

Also it pointed out that somewhere between 9,000 and 15,000 youths between the ages of 15 and 24 years are unemployed in the Fraser Valley region. According to the article, Dr. Moore stated:

It's just further indication of a major kind of new era we're going into, where 20 to 25 per cent of the people are not able to find jobs.

That's the prospect. I think we're facing a major, major shift in our society.

The Hon. Member referred to several programs which were put in place by the Government. What percentage of the amounts requested under the provisions of the various programs has actually been allocated to date?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to answer that question because I do not have the most recent facts. The Hon. Member should direct that question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) or to the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) in Question Period.

However, I can point out that there are certainly programs in place in my riding. I have cited in my comments certain examples of programs across the country in order to point out that it is a real thing, not merely figures at which one could look and merely say: "Oh, the Government is throwing money at it". On the contrary, the Government is establishing carefully thought out programs in collaboration and consultation with the provinces and with the Public Service to work with institutions such as our universities and community colleges. The total picture involves many organizations throughout the country.

On May 14 there was an announcement by the Minister of Employment and Immigration that 300 projects were being undertaken with Imperial Oil which have just been enlarged. By increasing its fund base, Imperial Oil has been able to add to the program. I refer the Hon. Member to that press release as an example of the specific way in which we deal with the private sector. I am sorry I cannot give him the present statistic as to what is the exact percentage.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Since there are no further questions or comments, the House will now proceed to debate.

[English]

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on a subject which I wish did not exist in the magnitude it does; as a matter of fact, I wish it was totally non-existent. Youth unemployment is the most terrifying blight which has reared its head in Canada since the depression of the 1930s. It is a serious social problem. If it is not corrected immediately, it will have lasting effects for generations to come.

Most young Canadians find themselves in a dead-end situation, actually on a dead-end street, due to high levels of unemployment. Parents and students have worked hard and sacrificed to obtain education. With unemployment being so high and the prospects so negative, they are asking why they should obtain a degree or training. This is understandable; I have an unemployed youth in my own home who is trained and educated.

As of April there were 1,235,000 young people attending school full time. Over the next few months, if past experience is any guide, approximately 650,000 young people will attempt to enter the labour force, further magnifying and amplifying the problem. We are entering a new era, one that is totally different from what Canadians have had to face before. Rapidly changing technology, different labour laws and the development of a new philosophical working program surround us.

These changes require a great deal of planning, something which the Government opposite has totally neglected. Also they will require a great deal of understanding and a closer working relationship with our fellow Canadians. With this in mind, it is that much more important for them to have a functional education.

Why are we debating a non-confidence motion today regarding the Government's inability to cope with youth unemployment? The reasons are numerous. I should like to point some of them out in the House today. According to the Government, the current youth unemployment problem is based upon structural problems in the economy. The Liberals have said that we will never again see full employment. It is unadulterated hogwash that we will never see full or even close to full employment again. The structural economic problems to which the Liberals refer point to the mismanagement of the Liberal Government. Its structure for the last 16 years has caused these problems. Growth and jobs will come with good, sound management.

I would like to indicate how ludicrous is the approach of the Government to these problems. It claims that youth unemployment will disappear because the number of youths is declining. What will really happen is that youth unemployment will merely change category in Statistics Canada reports, but the problems will remain. Just the word "youth" will be removed. Yes, in two years or three years youth unemployment will decrease, but the problems will remain given the same administration.

Let me talk a little bit about the social stigma that unemployment brings to a community. The effects are not nice to talk about but it is time we started to recognize them. When people lose their jobs, or cannot get jobs, they lose their dignity. It is not only the families that suffers but entire communities. The riding of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) is directly south of mine. Reports are that we have up to 47 per cent unemployment in my riding. I have raised this matter in the House. Hopefully the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) will look at that area. That is an indication of the severity of the problem, as so aptly pointed out by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East.

Once someone is unemployed for a long period of time, studies show that it is harder to train and employ such an individual. In Ontario, 20 per cent of those who are hard to employ eventually end up representing 50 per cent of the welfare costs.

Let me get down to the real social problems, problems I have seen as a peace officer in this country. Suicides among those between 15 to 24 have quadrupled since the 1940s. Of 4,000 suicides reported in 1981, 1,300 were teenagers. For each one carried out, there were 100 to 150 attempts. Alcohol consumption by those 13 to 20 years old sharply increased for both boys and girls. Frustrated by a society that appears to offer no future, no hope for the unemployed, they become depressed, despondent and eventually become addicted to drugs. That is the only alternative they see in the bleak window of life that has been caused by mismanagement. The only way out of this dilemma is to change the scene so that our youth can once again look to the future optimistically. They must be allowed to dream and hope must be restored. This can be done only by creating a country where they can develop job skills in trades or professions and become productive participants in this great country.

How did the Liberals attempt to deal with these problems? They first tried make-work programs that included no training. There was the Canada Works program. It was an attempt to delay the inevitable by taking tax dollars and throwing them in every direction. Now what do we hear from the Minister of Employment and Immigration? We should change our approach and start training with U.I. benefits. At last he is starting to listen to what we on this side of the House have been telling him. We must act now. We have a generation adrift.

The Government has been recycling people through its glorified welfare system, from UI to Canada Works. It is a vicious circle that does not go anywhere. I think the Government recognizes this. I went to look at some of the statistics with regard to these programs. In March, 1984 youth unemployment was just over 525,000, as pointed out by the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), a rate of 18.2 per cent. As the Hon. Member for Elgin pointed out, who knows the real figure? It could be as high as 1.4 million youth unemployed.

In 1983 the unemployment rate in Canada for young adults, those aged 20 to 24, was 18.5 per cent. This compared to 18.2 per cent in the United Kingdom, 14.6 per cent in Australia, 14.6 per cent in the United States, 7 per cent in Sweden and 4.1 per cent in Japan. Canada had the highest unemployment rate for young adults of any major western industrialized nation last year. The current rate is 17.1 per cent for both sexes, 19.6 per cent for young adult males.

The Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence said that the Government had created jobs. With all due respect, they were short-term jobs. With all the respect in the world, there was no other way to go. I could see that with the policies it had. We spend about $3.2 million per day trying to reduce unemployment through these programs.

Youth form 25 per cent of the workforce and about 30 per cent of the unemployed. We know that we are in trouble, real trouble. The pre-depression figures—and I use the word "depression"—for June, 1981 show youth unemployment at 12.2 per cent, representing approximately 398,000 unemployed youth. At that time unemployment in the United States for youth was about the same as what it is now. We have surpassed that.

These costly, non-productive programs have jeopardized our economy and placed unreal pressure on small business, the real engine of growth and the only solution to job creation. These programs have led to high taxation. They have bled the country and business by not allowing for hiring and the expansion of youth training and actual youth employment. Excessive taxation, a lack of incentive for investment and no reward for risk by the Government has led to the horror story we see today.

There are solutions. The first one I would like to talk about is co-op education. I have visited Douglas College in my riding and Douglas College in the riding of New Westminster-Coquitlam. What is continually pointed out is the lack of understanding by the federal Government in dealing with the other two levels, the educators and the province.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) demanded an amendment to Bill C-12, urging the federal Government to negotiate with provincial education ministers and provincial educators, as agreed to by the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal). That was raised in the House yesterday. All of this has taken so much time that we are now in the midst of a crisis and the Government is trying to adjust. We have been saying this for the last nine months that I have been here.

The Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence talked about training. You can train everybody in the world to the highest degree, but if they have no job to go to and there is not a sound basis for an economy in which small business can develop, such training is useless.

We have pointed out a solution time after time in this House with regard to youth employment, namely our resources. Youth are adaptable to reforestation employment and physical work. The long-term effects of farming our forests instead of mining them would be beneficial in years to come as well as solving the problem at the present time.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but it is now one o'clock. He will be able to continue his remarks this afternoon, when the House resumes the debate.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

DEFINITION OF FULL-TIME AND PART-TIME EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, while following up on a complaint from a constituent last week, I was reminded of the holes in the Unemployment Insurance Act through which a truck could be driven. It seems that the interpretation and the definition of full-time versus part-time employment differs in the Act depending on where the book is opened.

In the case of my constituent, the UIC had completely cut off his benefits because he had taken a part-time job. Fortunately, the national office of the UIC overruled the regional office in Barrie and gave him back his benefits retroactive to the cut-off date.

I feel that there are many people being victimized by the system in this way, most of whom would not think to contact their Member of Parliament to work on their behalf. I maintain that when a UIC recipient suspects that the system is not serving his or her best interests, that person should exercise his or her rights by contacting Ottawa. Meanwhile, it is the duty of the House to realign the Unemployment Insurance Act before the rights of others are completely undermined.

My constituent is happy with the action which has now been taken. What can we do about the thousands of people who are not happy?

HUMAN RIGHTS

PLIGHT OF ANDREI SAKHAROV AND SPOUSE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, the civilized world is aghast at the pitiless persecution of both Andrei Sakharov and his wife, Yelena Bonner. The treatment of the Sakharovs is an indication of the Soviet Union's contempt for human rights. Despite signing the Helsinki Final Act in 1975, which specifically confirms the right of the individual to know and act upon his rights and duties in the field of human rights, the Soviet Government has once again shown how few rights and how little dignity the individual is allowed against the brutal and overwhelming power of the state.

Sakharov, who in 1975 won the Nobel Peace Prize and was labeled the spokesman for the conscience of mankind, has been on a hunger strike since May 2. His reason for going on a hunger strike is very simple. His wife is badly in need of an operation, and the Soviet authorities will not allow her to leave the Soviet Union. What type of inhumane system would not grant this simple request?

In light of the treatment of the Sakharovs it becomes easier to understand the actions of a Government that could coldbloodedly bring about the downing of Korean airliner 007, causing the deaths, of its 269 passengers, including 10 Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

USE OF FOREIGN MAIL SERVICE BY CANADIAN RESIDENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it is with some regret that I bring to the attention of the House the effects some free enterprisers have upon the costs of Canada's postal service. I have with me today a letter mailed to a Vancouver hospital from Post Office No. 179 in Tijuana, Mexico. The letter carries a 10 peso stamp and a 9 peso stamp. At today's rate of 132 pesos to the dollar, this makes the stamps worth about 15 cents Canadian, less than one half the cost of mailing a letter in Canada to a Canadian destination.

The return addesss on the envelope, which has been carefully concealed by the 9 peso stamp, is Williams and Wilkins, Baltimore, Maryland. The return address inside the envelope is Williams and Wilkins, Box 7220, Ancaster, Ontario. However, on contacting the manager of the Ancaster Post Office today, I learned that there is no Williams and Wilkins in Ancaster, Ontario. That there is no such company in Ancaster was confirmed by Bell Canada. The box, however, is registered to a Mr. John V. Basmajian of 106 Forsyth, in Hamilton, Ontario.

This is an abuse of the postal service of Canada and of other countries, Mr. Speaker. I urge all Canadians who are receiving mail bearing stamps from outside Canada but a return address from inside Canada, to forward the envelopes to Canada's Postmaster, the Hon. André Ouellet, at the House of Commons. By stopping this kind of abuse, we could have a less expensive postal system in Canada.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—ALLEGATION CONCERNING MEMBER OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, Liberal leadership candidates have been speculating out loud lately about their future Cabinet-making plans. I am reminded of a quip the late Mr. Diefenbaker once made about shuffling a deck of deuces.

Yesterday the Energy Minister alleged that a Saskatchewan NDP Member is considering crossing the floor to join the Liberals. That is the very first time I have heard of a rat swimming toward a sinking ship.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Towers: I wonder how much anguish this revelation will cause in the NDP caucus. Perhaps it will cause none. His colleagues may be happy that he is finally finding a home and a haven in socialist heaven.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—CANDIDACY OF HON. JOHN TURNER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Mr. "Turnaround-Turnabout-Turnover-Turner" certainly knows how to look after himself. He is a director of Bechtel Canada, Massey-Ferguson, and MacMillan Bloedel, to mention a few from which he is putting into his pockets a few thousand dollars every year. He has been reappointed as a director of the CPR, the company to which the Liberals gave a guaranteed annual income at the expense of western farmers. Considering the payments the CPR is making to Turner, it is no wonder that freight rates went up.

If that is not enough to make every ordinary Canadian ill, hear this! As a director of the largest liquor company in the world, Seagram's, poor John receives only $15,000 per year just for his good looks, plus $500 for travelling expenses for every meeting he attends. With a smile on his face, the Chairman of Seagram's told reporters that "from a Seagram point of view it is not a bad thing to have a future Prime Minister on our board". Seagram's will then have a pipeline right into the Prime Minister's office. Seagram's knows what happened to the CPR when it had a pipeline into Liberal offices.

Mr. Turner will not resign his positions. Oh, no, the CPR can go right on extracting the lifeblood from the prairie farmers with higher and higher freight rates. Seagram's can go on increasing liquor prices so that it may continue to buy the favours of the next Prime Minister of Canada. Mr. Turner's answer is that he must look after his security. What about the security of the Canadian people, Mr. Speaker?

REJECTION OF LIBERAL PARTY'S WOOING BY NDP MEMBER

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, instead of reading the Regina manifesto, which is the basis of the NDP constitution, this morning, as I usually do, I made the mistake of listening to the CBC world report. You can imagine my shock when I heard a story to the effect that I was planning to join the Liberal Party. So that there can be no confusion, I would like the House to know exactly what my contacts with the Liberal Party have been.

• (1410)

Earlier this year I was approached by a group of people, including some former Conservatives, who asked me if I would consider running as a Liberal in the next federal election. My answer was no. Nevertheless those who approached me in Saskatchewan then arranged for the president of the federal Liberal Party to call me. Once again my answer was no. They also asked the federal Energy Minister to approach me. Once again my answer was no.

For the enlightenment of the Liberals, and anyone else who cares, I am a New Democrat now, and I am proud to say I will continue to be a New Democrat. I did not initiate any approach to the Liberal Party, and never will. However, the Liberals should not be discouraged from trying in Saskatchewan. Just last month two prominent Conservative executive members and a Conservative MLA announced they were joining the Liberal Party.

AGRICULTURE

APPEAL FOR IMPOSITION OF COUNTERVAILING DUTY ON BEEF IMPORTS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, cattle production is no longer the healthy, going concern it once was in Canada, and the Government has a duty to help the industry get back on its feet. Cattle producers' share of the consumer dollar is shrinking, farm bankruptcies are increasing, and there have been numerous meat packing plant closures in recent years. Last week Burns Meats of Brandon, Manitoba, became another casualty in a badly ailing industry.

While some factors in the livestock industry are difficult to control, there are steps which the Government could and should take. For example, Canada must offset the trade advantage now enjoyed by subsidized Irish and Danish beef exports into this country. One cannot overstate the potentially devastating impact of these imports on the Canadian cattle industry. In addition, Canada's good trading relationship with the United States is being threatened by the sudden invasion of Canadian beef into its market, beef we can no longer sell domestically. The solution is to introduce a countervailing duty on subsidized Irish and Danish beef imports. Until this occurs, Canada should impose an interim surtax.

Yesterday in this House the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was asked whether he would support these measures. He chose to sidestep both the issue and his ministerial duties by offering absolutely no hint of how, or even if, he intends to take some kind of action. I appeal to the Government to introduce appropriate measures now, before the damage done to Canada's once thriving beef industry is irreversible.

FINANCE

STATEMENT BY QUEBEC'S MINISTER OF FINANCE ON TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Mr. René Gingras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to say a few words about the system of equalization payments in Canada.

When a senior citizen comes to my office to talk about a guaranteed income supplement that was cut off because last year his income increased, he usually leaves my office quite satisfied with the explanation he receives. However, when I hear a Quebec Minister of Finance like Jacques Parizeau, supposedly an economist, explain the system of equalization payments in Canada, I am absolutely flabbergasted. Just what is his understanding of the system? Is he an economist or is he terribly inconsistent? He asks for and accepts assistance when Quebec is in trouble and refuses to help the other provinces when Quebec's situation improves. His own figures prove that he has benefited quite considerably through equalization in recent years. And now he refuses to admit that the federal Government and the seventy-four Members from Quebec have anything to do with the improved situation in Quebec. As usual, in line with his separatist philosophy, he takes the credit for positive developments and blames us when things go wrong.

Mr. Speaker, this is definitely a no-win situation for us, and I have therefore decided to let Quebec voters draw their own conclusions at the next elections. My constituents are well aware what my Government has done during the recession in Abitibi, compared to which the Parti Québécois's contribution was peanuts. They will realize—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary, but his time has expired.

[English]

With respect to the interjection at the beginning concerning whether or not Parliamentary Secretaries can make Standing Order 21 declarations the rules are quite clear, yes. Questions are another matter, but under Standing Order 21 Madam Speaker Sauvé was most explicit that this should be permitted.

POOLS

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—ALLEGATIONS CONCERNING STAFFING APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. In this morning's edition of La Presse, the Canada Sports Pool Corporation was described as a veritable nest of patronage reserved for members and friends of the Liberal Party of Canada. The article went on to give names and appointments in support of this allegation.

Given that, above all others, any national organization devoted to support Olympics, medical research, and amateur sport, should be free of such allegations, I want to give the Minister the first opportunity to deny categorically the allegations contained in that article. I ask him if he is in a position now to give the House, and the country, that categorical denial?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Members of this House that the newspaper article in question, which says that friends of the Party in power were appointed to the Canada Sports Pool Corporation, does contain a modicum of truth,, but there are also some statements that are entirely wrong. Certainly, there were people who belonged to the Liberal Party, but there are also individuals who belong to the Progressive Conservative Party, and I cannot deny that either. What I can say is that belonging to a political party is not, and never will be, a requirement for appointment. In this area, the Canada Sports Pool Corporation was led by a concern for competence and success. The basic requirement as to select individuals who had been successful with Loto Canada, before the Progressive Conservative Government decided to abolish the Corporation and hand over $500 million to the provinces, and that is strictly what happened.

[English]

Mr. Jarvis: We in this Party look for competence and success also. But if there are any profits flowing from this sports pool, our concern is that they are not skimmed off by the sticky fingers of a bunch of Grit hacks. That is our concern.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPOINTMENT OF FORMER ASSISTANTS TO MINISTERS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): I wonder if the Minister could explain, Mr. Speaker, if it is by design or by coincidence that the ex-president of his riding association has received an appointment; that one organizer and one former assistant to the Minister of Finance received an appointment, and that a former Minister's assistant received an appointment in Manitoba. Are we to believe that that is sheer coincidence, or is it not, frankly, sheer design on behalf of the Liberal Party?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, as I said before, belonging to a political party is not a requirement for appointment to the Canada Sports Pool Corporation. However, if intelligent individuals have decided to support a political party, this is a free country, and if they decide to do so, they can. Now, if my hon. friend opposite wants me to publish the names of people on the other side who have asked me to try and support certain appointments, I am willing to do so, and I should be quite happy to reveal the names of those hon. friends opposite.

[English]

QUALIFICATIONS FOR APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): In that case, Mr. Speaker, if nothing else but in the interests of fairness to Liberals everywhere, I wonder if the Minister could make public the qualifications for appointment. For example, is a 72-hour Liberal qualified, or must he or she have been a long-term member? If he or she is a donor, for how many years and for how much? The simple question is this: what are the qualifications for these Liberals before they receive the Minister's permission to jump into the porkbarrel and wallow around at the taxpayers' expense?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, once again, the Progressive Conservative Party did not spend enough time on its homework.

Let me give an example. Notices were published across the country. In fact, the Opposition Critic mentioned that jobs were available with the Canada Sports Pool Corporation. There were 1,200 job applications across the country. We are still examining these applications and interviewing prospective candidates.

Membership in the Liberal Party, Progressive Conservative Party or the New Democratic Party is not a requirement. However, if there happen to be intelligent individuals in the Canada Sports Pool Corporation who support the Liberal Party, all I can say to them is: thank you! They are just smarter than the rest. They know we want to do something for amateur sports. They know we want to make the Pool a success. In fact, we want to try and make up for the complete mess the Progressive Conservative Party made when it signed the agreement in 1979 and gave everything to the provinces, leaving nothing for amateur sports in Canada, for the Calgary Olympics, the Canada Games, the Panamerican Games or the Commonwealth Games! That was the policy of the Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Bosley: And, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals will never bring in wage and price controls either.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT LIST—REFERENCE TO LOTO CANADA EXPERIENCE

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question to the same Minister is very simple and is in two parts. Will the Minister file with this House a complete list of all those who have been hired?

Secondly, since the Minister says people have been hired because of their Loto Canada experience, will he tell this House which of the following is the truth—one, that the Sports Pool is not a lottery, in which case using the defence of lottery experience is just a sham and cover-up for hiring Liberal organizers, or, that the Sports Pool is a lottery and that experience is useful, in which case the Minister has broken his agreement with the provinces?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): First of all, Mr. Speaker, anyone who has worked for Loto Canada has gained an experience which can be useful in sports pools since he is expected to contact retailers and corner store owners to ask them whether they are interested in supporting a worthwhile endeavour from coast to coast. We do have previous experience and we recall that the provinces asked us to sign that agreement because there were profits to be made. You decided to let the provinces take over the whole operation, which is a fair indication that Loto Canada employees were doing a good job and running a profitable business. And if the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation thought that anyone who had worked for Loto Canada had good credentials, I said: Indeed, Sir, that is true!

[English]

Mr. Bosley: Some day, Mr. Speaker, the Minister is going to have to admit that the Government of Canada made a great deal more money out of that agreement than it is going to make out of the way this Government is running the proposal.

RATIONALE FOR CREATION OF SPORTS POOL

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister is quite simple. The Minister knows full well that the experience with sports pools has not been good and that the probable financial success of this particular corporation is in some doubt, in the minds of many people. Given the evidence produced by the press, will the Minister now finally admit that the real reason behind creating the Sports Pool was not the Olympics, was not medical research, and was not amateur sport, but was in fact an opportunity created by the Government to put back on the public payroll, at big salaries and huge expense, Liberals who were put out of work when Loto Canada was killed?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, it is inconceivable that Members opposite have yet to understand that we need money to help amateur sports in Canada. Since we are talking about money, people have had enough of taxes, and the only way to find a new source of revenue was to set up the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation, and that is why we created it. The Progressive Conservatives are free to speak against amateur sports and raise objections against the fact that we want to help Calgary. But we are in favour of that, we are in favour of promoting medical research and we want to do everything we can to support amateur sports. If they are against that, so be it!

PENSIONS

CLOSURE OF CCM PLANT—LOSS OF EMPLOYEES' PENSION BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is not about lotteries, although what I am going to ask the Minister of Finance about is rapidly turning into a bit of a game of chance. Recognizing that Canadians contributing to pension plans are entitled to expect that their hard-earned contributions will entitle them to a reasonable return when they retire, will the Minister take a look at some recent cases, such as Prestolite in 1978, and the most recent being CCM, which left 450 workers without any pension benefits, and determine how it can be that the federal Government, through the Enterprise Development Program, bailed out the Royal Bank, CCM's major creditor, to the tune of $8 million, while every single one of its 450 employees lost their pension benefits because CCM closed down?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is certainly aware that a Parliamentary committee has carried out a complete review of the various pension schemes and tabled its report. Based on this report, I proposed in my last budget a number of improvements to the Canada Pension Plan. I hope Parliament will support my recommendations and proposals. I should like to remind the Hon. Member, however, that over 80 per cent of corporate pension funds in Canada come under provincial jurisdiction. If he considers the cases which he has referred to, I think he will realize that these particular pension funds were regulated by the government of Ontario, and that the regulation and control of the pension funds in question were a provincial responsibility.

Now, this remains a serious problem which should be under constant review by both the federal and provincial levels of government.

As to the assistance provided under the Enterprise Development Program, it was meant to maintain jobs in an industry faced with major difficulties and not to salvage a particular bank.

[English]

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO PROTECT WORKERS' PENSIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I put it to the Minister that the problem does not require further study. It is clear that employees who have contributed over the years to company pension plans in Canada face the risk, in fact the probability, that during economically depressed times such as we have been having, their pension plans will disappear with their jobs. Will the Minister bring forward legislative proposals to alter the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans to ensure that the pension contributions of employees, whether private or public, will be protected in the same way as the Royal Bank investment was protected in the case of CCM?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member will have to do a little bit of study himself after having said the problem does not need study. In his first question he asked me whether I would study the matter, and then in his second question he said it does not need study. He should at least be consistent from one question to the other.

The Hon. Member suggests that we should amend the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans to achieve the purpose he mentions. He knows, or should know, that it is not by amending the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans that you can achieve that purpose. Contributions under the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans are fully protected, by the Quebec Government in the case of the Quebec Pension Plan, and by the Canadian Government in the case of the CPP. What the Hon. Member is worried about is private pension plans, and this is outside of the ambit of the Quebec and Canada Pension Plans. As I mentioned before, over 80 per cent of the pension plans in the private sector are under the control of the provinces. The question of the specific cases he has referred to should be addressed in particular to the Governments of the provinces concerned.

PROTECTION OF PRIVATE PENSION PLANS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as you know, I did not ask the Minister to study it further; I asked him to investigate that specific instance. More important, I know that the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans do not cover it, otherwise I would not have asked for changes in the law to cover it.

Will the Minister recognize the need for protection of private pension plans into which people have been paying all their lives? Will he recognize that there are significant numbers of workers in Canada who are now over the age of 55, who cannot find employment or get unemployment insurance because they have run out of benefits, and who do not qualify for assistance, and they cannot even get their pension money? Will the Government move to negotiate changes in the pension arrangements in order to protect the pension investments of Canadian workers?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is asking whether the federal Government will discuss this particular issue with the provinces and see whether they can take steps in their own area of jurisdiction to ensure better protection under pension plans, of course we will do it. We have been doing it in the past, and we will continue to do it.

However, as far as imposing any particular legislation on the provinces in that regard is concerned, the Hon. Member knows that this cannot be done and should not be done.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

SIZE OF CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Last November 18 in reply to a question from myself here in the House, the Minister stated, as reported on page 28979 of Hansard, that "Canada needs to take a back seat to no one in terms of its NATO contribution." At approximately the same time the Minister was presenting to his Cabinet colleagues a document that stated, among other things, and I quote:

> If a major international crisis were to occur, the Canadian Forces could not make a credible contribution to deterrence.

The fundamental purpose of NATO is deterrence. By the Minister's own words in this Cabinet document, we contribute nothing to deterrences. For the sake of his own credibility, would the Minister at least admit to the House that he was in error last November and that in fact Canada is not contributing significantly, or even modestly, to NATO deterrences?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the statement I made in November was valid in November. The statement I made then is still valid today. If the hon. gentleman were honest, Mr. Speaker, he would recognize that he had made allegations of like kind on a number of occasions in committee. I responded at that time. If he reviews the transcripts of the committee hearings he will see that I maintained the strength of Canada's contribution to NATO. I maintained, as well, the competence of that contribution.

The hon. gentleman knows that he made allegations which he claims were supposedly contained in a leaked document. He knows that I have refused to comment on any leaked document. He knows furthermore, Mr. Speaker, that if there were such a document, being a Cabinet document, it could not be subject to comment.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, one wonders how the Government expects to receive any respect at all from Canadians or our NATO allies, with that kind of attitude.

REQUEST FOR POLICY CHANGE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Cabinet document describes the sad condition of all three services, but in particular the Navy. It points out, as other people have done, that by the end of this decade we will have 12 serviceable ships in the Navy for a country with a coastline 100,000 kilometres long. As the Minister has pointed out in that Cabinet document, the Navy cannot live up to its defence commitments.

I will quote from the public record of what the Minister stated before the Senate. He said:

> Currently approved funding levels fall some billions of dollars from the levels that would be necessary over the next 15 years to completely modernize the maritime force at the currently authorized levels.

In other words, this public statement by the Minister confirms what the Minister said in his Cabinet document, namely, that it is a facade to pretend that our maritime forces are living up to NATO commitments.

If the Minister is not going to commit, to use his own words, the billions of dollars the Navy requires, will he at least have the integrity to admit that we shall have to change our defence policies and rely even more on the Americans to protect our coastline because we are incapable of doing it ourselves?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker the hon. gentleman recognizes that last July I signed a contract to obtain six new frigates. The hon. gentleman knows as well that at the same time I announced the TRUMP, the Tribal Class Update Modernization Program. The hon. gentleman knows that those two programs were advanced in recognition that we needed to update our capital equipment in terms of the Maritime Command. There is no great mystery in that, Mr. Speaker. That is all part of the Government's attempt since 1974-75 to increase our investment dramatically in capital equipment.

The hon. gentleman will recall that in 1974-75 the Government spent $2.5 billion in defence expenditures. At that time the percentage given to capital equipment was roughly 8 per cent. This year I will be spending $8.7 billion. That is more than a $6 billion increase in 10 years in defence expenditures, Mr. Speaker. This year I will be spending over 26 per cent, as compared to 8 per cent in 1974-75, on capital equipment. That is a tremendous increase, Mr. Speaker. It is money well spent. We will continue to increase our spending in this area. In 1986-87 I will be spending $11.1 billion, Mr. Speaker, in order to provide the best equipment for the best Armed Forces there are within NATO.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: You will not be around.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York-Peel. Does the Hon. Minister of National Defence rise to be recognized?

Mr. Blais: I rise to complete my reply, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It appeared that the Hon. Minister had given a fairly lengthy reply. The Hon. Member for York Peel.

RATE OF GROWTH IN DEFENCE EXPENDITURES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of National Defence. Would the Minister simply assure the House that the Government has indeed approved the maintenance of a 3 per cent annual real growth in expenditures for defence for this fiscal year and for the fiscal years 1986 and 1987?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. gentleman asked me that question. As you will recall, in 1979-80 when the hon. gentleman was President of the Treasury Board he was referred to as "Sinc the Slasher". Those were the days when we did not meet the 3 per cent net increase which the hon. gentleman mentions. In effect there was a net decrease in defence expenditures during the time when that hon. gentleman was responsible for the direct Treasury, Mr. Speaker.

As far as the Government is concerned, we are maintaining our 3 per cent increase. As I advised the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence this week, I have accepted to submit to my colleagues a force goal for NATO of a net increase of 4 per cent in real expenditures for the military.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of National Defence. I would like him to answer the question that I put. Would he indicate to the House whether the Government has definitively committed to a 3 per cent real growth expenditure increase not only for this fiscal year, but for the fiscal years 1986 and 1987? In short, can he assure the House that the Government has agreed to fund fully its commitment to NATO and our defence commitments generally at a 3 per cent real growth rate for the years to which I have referred?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I was in Brussels last week.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes or no?

Mr. Blais: The Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka was with me at the time I made this statement. I indicated that Canada's undertaking to meet the 3 per cent real growth commitment is a real one, and one which I propose to honour.

Mr. Stevens: Is it approved?

Mr. Blais: I suggest again, Mr. Speaker, that the proof of the Government's performance lies in how we have done in the past. Over the past five years, except for the time when the hon. gentleman was in government, our real rate of increase was 3.5 per cent in terms of defence expenditures.

Oral Questions

BROADCASTING

CONTROL OF ABUSIVE PROGRAMMING

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Pornography is an increasing concern to Canadians. At the moment the Subcommittee on Communications and Culture is studying sexual abuse in broadcasting. Is the Minister contemplating any action on Bill C-20, which is an Act to amend the Broadcasting Act, to address what is a very great concern to many Canadians?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, this is indeed an issue which we take very seriously. I have followed very closely the proceedings of the Special Committee on Communications and Culture which has heard a number of witnesses on this issue. I have also had the opportunity to discuss it at length with the Minister of State responsible for the Status of Women, and with my Cabinet colleagues. We have indeed decided to introduce an amendment to Bill C-20 to deal with the problem of abusive programming, particularly as it relates to women.

I think that this amendment will indeed make explicit the Government's commitment to the principle that all Canadians have the right to programming which respects the dignity and equality of individuals and groups. I would very much hope that we would have the co-operation of the Opposition to see to it that this amendment to Bill C-20, along with Bill C-20 as a whole, is adopted by the House as soon as possible.

HOUSING

ALLOCATION OF GOVERNMENT FUNDS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for housing. As the Minister knows, his Government allotted $1.8 billion in 1983 to subsidize housing in Canada. Of that, $372.5 million went to non profit housing, including co-ops, and $393.4 million to publicly owned housing, which is about 41 per cent of the total. The other 59 per cent went to private profit builders and renovators.

Considering that private profit builders serve the more affluent people in Canada and that subsidies to them encourage inflation of housing costs, why did the Government give nearly three-fifths of the total subsidy to the affluent, and a little over two-fifths to the needy?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, while not accepting the Hon. Member's convoluted arithmetic, I would tell him that this Government, in social housing terms, has done a great deal. In fact, if the Hon. Member bothers to look at the annual expenditure, he will realize that this Government does more than all of the provinces put together.

The Hon. Member also confuses different types of housing which constitute social housing. That is why, if he attends meetings like the one held in Toronto the other night, he may be tempted to confuse co-op housing and social housing. The reality is that the problem of co-operative housing concerns the percentage of those who are assisted and who benefit from the program. In fact the Hon. Member should know that the queue of those waiting for social housing, including singles, ex-psychiatric patients, and battered women, is growing longer. It is to these groups that I have tried to give some attention in the past couple of years.

Mr. Heap: If the Hon. Minister had accepted the invitation that he was extended to meet with 700 people on Tuesday, he could have presented that point directly and tried to make it credible. In fact, he dodges the arithmetic that he talks about.

FUNDING FOR CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has reduced the total social housing budget for this year by 10 per cent, to 22,500 allocations, but he has cut co-op housing by 45 per cent, to 3,339 allocations. Since his own CMHC report admitted last year that the capital costs of co-op housing are not significantly different from the capital costs of private profit housing, will he tell us why he has so savagely cut the allocations for co-op housing, and will he announce now where he will place the 7,653 allocations that he has not yet announced this far into 1984?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know from answers in the House that in fact, for a number of years, we had been given more than the normal allocation in social housing units in order to create some economic activity. It was understood all along by those who bothered to find out that, at one point, we would come back to the 22,500 level, where we are this year.

As for the reduction in one type of social housing, co-op housing, again I say to the Hon. Member that, as we face the problems of homeless singles, the problem of ex-psychiatric patients who have nowhere to go, and as we face the problems of rural and native housing, housing those who are the worst housed people in our country, we had to do some reallocation, and that is what I have done.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DEPARTMENT'S ECONOMIC INTELLIGENCE NETWORK

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It concerns the economic intelligence network of his Department, which appears to have been set up by someone who has seen too many B movies and felt it was necessary to have a group of gum shoes within the tax Department. In view of the fact that his chief of audit, Mr. Robertson, said that the group was killed because he found it frightening in its perception, why was the group ever established in the first place? Was it established with the knowledge of the then Minister? Precisely what was the nature of the information which the group hoped to get from External Affairs, the RCMP, FIRA, Statistics Canada, Energy, Mines and Resources, and from informers?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member was perfectly right in stressing the fact that this group was never operational and that, after the concept was developed, the departmental authorities decided that it did not meet its objectives. I am in complete agreement with this decision.

The idea was to have a special group appointed to collect information on larger companies, which information could be used to further clarify certain income tax returns. As was indicated by the Hon. Member, when this concept was developed, it was not considered to be compatible with the objectives of the Department and it was felt that it would not be proper to implement such a system in view of the nature and the function of the Department. In other words, this system was never put into effect and has never been operational.

[English]

APPROVAL FOR CREATION OF NETWORK

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, was the previous Minister aware of this group? Did he approve of the creation of this group within his Department? Second, would the Minister tell the House whether any files were developed, such as files on individuals or specific taxpayers and, if so, what has been done with those files?

Finally, will the Minister give the House the unequivocal assurance that this group has not simply been buried within his Department and reconstituted within another branch of his Department?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on the first question about whether or not my predecessor had given his approval, I shall have to check first. In the second place, I would like to assure the Hon. Member that this system is not operational in any form whatsoever in the Department and that we have no intention of using it in any way.

STATISTICS CANADA

SECURITY OF INFORMATION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Has the Department of Supply and Services, through Statistics Canada, ever provided any information for the Department of Revenue?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): As I stated in a press release at noon, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest it is quite irresponsible to imply even indirectly that Statistics Canada does not maintain full confidentiality with respect to data collected from Canadians. Statistics Canada has now been in existence for 65 years and that has always been the basic principle underlying all its operations. Under no circumstance has any Statistics Canada employee given information to any spy ring whatever, as reported in the article. Indeed, any employee who would release that kind of information would be subject to legal action under the law.

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—ACCEPTANCE OF DIRECTORSHIPS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In the course of his discussions with the Liberal leadership candidates about campaign guidelines, was the issue of the acceptance or renewing of directorships on prominent boards of directors of Canadian companies ever raised and discussed? If so, were there guidelines established? I ask this in light of the fact that one of the candidates, since the campaign started, has accepted the renewal of his appointment to the board of directors of CPR, and just yesterday it was reported that the same candidate, Mr. Turner, accepted re-election to the board of directors of Seagram's, which prompted the Chairman of Seagram's to state: "From a Seagram standpoint it would not be a bad thing to have a future Prime Minister on our board". Would the Prime Minister indicate whether that was discussed during his discussions with the candidates?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to the question is no, Mr. Speaker. However, I would volunteer that statements by third parties have nothing to do with what the leadership candidates and myself have said to each other.

Mr. Mazankowski: Will the Prime Minister not agree, as I am sure most people would, that the statement made by the Chairman of Seagram's implies an expectation of favouritism? Does the Prime Minister not think statements like that and candidates reaccepting appointments to boards really serve to tarnish the image and, indeed, the credibility of people in public life?

CPR DIRECTORSHIP

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister how can the farmers of Canada have any hope, confidence, and trust in this administration when the Minister of Transport is so closely aligned to one of the leadership candidates, Mr. Turner, who is on the board of directors of CPR? Furthermore this situation is compounded by the fact that the former chairman of the CPR is serving in the Senate, and the former chairman of the CNR is serving as the Grain Transport Agency Administrator. How can farmers expect to get a fair deal from this regime?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is free to do what I would not want to do, that is, to take sides in favour of one, or against one of the federal leadership candidates. I do not believe he has a delegate's vote. I take it that his enjoinder to people on this side is hidden support for the Minister of Agriculture, which I am sure the Minister of Agriculture will acknowledge.

METRIC CONVERSION

ENFORCEMENT OF REGULATIONS—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. She was asked on November 2 if she would enforce metric regulations after Judge William Ross said it was legal to use imperial measurement. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said:

—the law prevails and we will not be able to enforce any of those regulations in the Province of Ontario.

She later amended this statement to include all of Canada.

Why does the Minister propose to ignore the law now and, according to her recent press release, pass an Order in Council in July, after Parliament recesses in June, which would make mandatory the use of metric weigh scales?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is manufacturing statements that are not included in the press release. I recommend he buy himself a new pair of glasses and read the press release again. The press release states very clearly that we have gazetted our intention, as provided to us by an Act of Parliament, to regulate metric and imperial advertising. We are, indeed, extending regulations that were in effect up until the end of this year. This extension of regulations has been done because of the many, many requests that were put forward by such umbrella organizations as the Consumers' Association of Canada and the Retail Council. In fact there were 242 member organizations at a metric forum that requested we put regulations in effect that would call for both metric and imperial advertising; advertising only. It does not refer to any use of metric scales.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs might be able to convince some of those pea-brained dinosaurs in the Liberal Cabinet that it is not a new Order in Council, but I would suggest that the Minister read her own press release that says the amended regulations will be published shortly in The Canada Gazette and would become effective early in July. I say to the Minister: Pay attention to your own press releases.

SALARIES OF METRIC COMMISSION EXECUTIVES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Under the freedom of information legislation I have obtained a government document from Consumer and Corporate Affairs which indicates that $270,000 will be spent on Metric Commission executive salaries in 1984-85 representing a reduction of less than half a person year. The total salary costs for the Metric Commission in its phased-out year will exceed $1,663,000. The Minister better face up to the people of Canada. Is she going to phase out the Metric Commission, and is she going to pass Orders in Council against the decision of the Judge in the Ontario courts?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are going to phase out the Metric Commission, as was the original plan laid out some time ago. The reason for the phasing out is that the work is done. Canada is now very close to being totally metric.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Erola: And the metric forum to which the Hon. Member was invited, and in which he participated, indicated that there is overwhelming support for metric, that the children of our country are now fully familiar with the metric system. It is only the dinosaurs on the other side of the House who still cannot count.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

BEEF IMPORTS FROM COMMON MARKET COUNTRIES

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. I believe he is behind the curtain.

Mr. Darling: He is hiding.

Mr. Hargrave: My question deals with the matter of subsidized Common Market beef imports. The Minister should be aware that these beef imports have already depressed our Canadian cow markets right across the country, by $5 per cwt. They have upset our normal trade patterns with the United States. The Minister should also be aware that our total beef imports for this new calendar year are up by 40 per cent, and those coming specifically from the Republic of Ireland are up by 306 per cent. In view of the fact that the Common Market has over 600,000 metric tonnes of surplus stocks of beef in storage, how can the Minister justify this extreme situation wherein Canada has certainly become the dumping ground for the Common Market's expensive mistakes with its overly rich subsidies?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member outlines a situation that is factually quite accurate. There has been a vast increase in the shipment, from Ireland in particular, of beef into the Canadian market. As I believe I indicated to the Hon. Member, or to some other Member in the House on a previous date, to guard against the situation of dumping, if the Hon. Member is suggesting—to use that word—that pricewise this meat is being dumped, as well may be the case, then there is provision in Canadian law for the people who are being affected to take action by way of making a dumping complaint, which triggers an investigation that can result and will result, if the facts are there, in restrictions being placed on that unfair competition to Canadian producers.

The Government has provided these laws to give that sort of protection to Canadians who produce, in this case, meat. But it is they who are being affected and they must initiate an action in order for a remedy to be provided in this regard.

In relation to what the Hon. Member says about the European Community's agricultural practices, there is no question but that the practices they are following are, in effect, subsidizing many of their agricultural exports, are wasteful, costly to their own taxpayers, and have a very disturbing impact upon world trade.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, let me say to the Minister that the cattle producers of Canada are very much aware of these regulations and particularly of how long it takes to get action. The Government, as recently as last week, did indicate some support for the recommendations of the beef import advisory committee. It is a situation almost as serious, right now, as in 1975-76 when we had unrestricted access to our markets by off-shore imports. That is how serious it is right now, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister for International Trade. Is it possible that the Government's reluctance to act now, or earlier since it has known about this since February 16, relates to the current Liberal leadership campaign to be followed by the election, of course, and the well know Liberal policy approach of a cheap food policy in Canada?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I want to say it has absolutely no relationship to anything of that type. The Hon. Member has to realize that, rightly or wrongly, the law provides a certain trigger for the investigation to take place. That is the same law that was in existence when the Clark Government was in office, and it is in existence now. It is a very sensible provision, and it is one which many countries have to deal with in these sorts of situations. Producers should take advantage of that provision. Certainly we are anxious to provide all appropriate protection against unfair overseas competition such as dumping. If the Hon. Member has time later this afternoon, he should drop down to my office and we can talk to the officials in the Department to see whether there is anything else we can do.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BRAINWASHING OF CANADIANS IN CIA FUNDED EXPERIMENTS—UNITED STATES POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the brainwashing of a number of Canadian citizens in Montreal, funded by the CIA of the United States. In a letter to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North written on May 10, the Minister described this act as a breach of sovereignty. Also he indicated that the Government of the United States had orally expressed its apology. Unfortunately, a spokesperson for the United States denies that what the Minister said is the case.

Considering that the public revelation of such regrets or an apology is an important means for these Canadians to obtain justice in the U.S. courts, will the Minister tell the House what official of the U.S. State Department, or of the CIA, made the apology?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the expression of apology or regrets made by the representatives of the United States, or a representative of the United States, took place some years ago. There was an exchange of correspondence by one of my predecessors, the present High Commissioner to the United Kingdom, in which I believe he conveyed to a Member of Parliament the fact that a representative of the United States had expressed regret at this incident in Montreal.

There are other corroborative evidences within the Department by individuals still serving in the Department who recall this particular incident. There is no doubt in my mind that at that time there was an expression of regrets or an apology by the Government of the United States or a representative of the State Department.

Recently that has been denied or reinterpreted by a representative of the United States Embassy in Ottawa. Quite apart from that particular point—and it is an important one—the officials of my Department are under standing instructions to continue to press vigorously the case of those Canadians who, we believe, suffered an injustice in the experimental psychiatry which took place at the Allan Memorial Institute in Montreal.

OFFICIAL REPORT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The attention of the Chair has been drawn to an unparliamentary remark which appears on page 3953 of Hansard. The remark is attributed to the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker). If it is correctly attributed, perhaps he would like to withdraw the unparliamentary remark.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to Hansard of May 23, in which I am reported as having called the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) a liar. I said: "You're a liar". What I should have said is that he was not telling the truth. In view of the fact that the Hon. Member is a man of the cloth, his remarks so enraged me that I said: "You're a liar". I withdraw that remark.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, would the Government House Leader outline for us the proposed business of the House of Commons for next week?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will be dealing with second reading of Bill C-33. On Monday, we will start debating second reading stage of Bill C-25, respecting CDIC. On Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, we will start debating a Bill that will be introduced tomorrow, notice of which has been given on page X of the Order Paper. It is an Act to amend the National Housing Act. This Bill is interrelated to our mortgage protection plan. There is another Bill which is interrelated to the same plan and it will also be introduced tomorrow. It is intituled: "An Act to amend the Interest Act". These two Bills are interrelated to our mortgage interest protection plan. The first one to be dealt with on Tuesday will be the one amending the National Housing Act. Those two Bills will be introduced tomorrow and will be debated on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

Finally, next Thursday will be another Opposition Day. Therefore I designate next Thursday as an Opposition Day. This is all subject to change, as usual.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would have normally raised the question I am about to ask at the House Leaders' meeting, but because of the way the business was called, we did not have one today. Is the Government House Leader in a position to tell us what is the Government's intention with regard to Bill C-34?

Last week I raised a question about making provision for fast passage of the Bill. I offered to have the Bill go through second reading with one speaker from this Party, and I hoped to hear from the Conservatives that they too would be prepared to agree to a similar arrangement. I know the Minister of Labour has written to both the Leader of the Official Opposition and to the Leader of the New Democratic Party indicating that he would be willing to have the Bill pass through all stages expeditiously, meaning before the end of June, before the House rises, if we could agree to one speaker per Party at second reading and refer the Bill to committee.

Could the Government House Leader schedule in the next couple of weeks Bill C-34, the changes to the Canada Labour Code, in order that we might be able to have it passed into law before the summer recess?

Mr. Pinard: My hon. colleague will understand that it will be much easier for me to answer his question once the Leader of the Official Opposition replies to the letter sent to him by the Minister responsible for the legislation.

If the Minister has offered to debate the Bill and send it to committee with one speaker per Party, there is no question that the Government will support him. We will be ready to call this Bill within the reasonable delay mentioned, provided we have the agreement of the two Opposition Parties. It is somewhat early because the letter was sent only at the beginning of this week, but we do not know as yet what is the position of the Official Opposition. If there is an understanding among the Parties, certainly we will make it possible for one speaker per Party to be heard within the delay mentioned by the Hon. Member, provided that we have an answer within the next few days.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, this is all very interesting. I gather from the remarks of the Government House Leader that from now on I will negotiate House business with the Minister of Labour. I want to tell the Minister of Labour that as soon as I have an opportunity of seeing his letter, which was addressed to my Leader, I will get back to him and talk about what we will do in the next few weeks in terms of House business.

Mr. Deans: I hope the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition will not go away and stamp his foot in the corner. I want to make it clear that from the point of view of this Party, although the Bill is not all we would have wanted to see, it is better than what pertains at the moment. We are prepared to do what must be done in order to see it become law before the House rises for the summer.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Government House Leader concerning Bill C-19. Is it the Government's intention to bring in for debate at second reading the whole Bill, will it withdraw the Bill and bring in those parts for which there is agreement for speedy passage, or what?

Mr. Pinard: Perhaps the Hon. Member would see fit to raise the matter with her House Leader. We have already discussed it in a House Leaders' meeting. I intend to discuss it even further, if need be.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I again ask about Question No. 368 which has been on various Order Papers for over three years. I have not yet received a reply. It is inconceivable that the Department of National Defence does not know how much it has increased its expenditures year by year over several years, as asked in the question. I would like an answer so that we can stop the misleading statements, such as the one we heard today from the Minister of National Defence about the expenditures of National Defence over the last few years.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, it seems that the Hon. Member is proceeding right here and now to say that the Minister of National Defence was misleading the House during Question Period. The Minister responded to a question, perhaps not over the entire time period the Hon. Member is concerned about, but certainly over the time period for the last five years, indicating today that the increase in spending had been 3.5 per cent. If that is not an adequate time period, we will try to get that answer for the Hon. Member. However, the Minister made that statement today. The statement has to be presumed to be correct, as the Standing Orders imply. That should satisfy to a great extent the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about question No. 11. I have raised this matter a number of times. We are having extreme difficulty with Mr. Michael Warren of Canada Post with regard to obtaining information on the operations of Canada Post. I could make no headway with him in committee.

Will the Parliamentary Secretary inquire why I cannot get an answer to question No. 11 which was placed on the Order Paper over a year ago? It is in connection with the salary range of all 26 vice-presidents and regional directors. A year is far too long to answer a question like that. I would like him to find this out for us because Mr. Warren will be back in committee and this information will be very helpful.

I have raised this question also a number of times and perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary can explain what is causing the delay in answering question No. 13, which was originally placed on the Order Paper on November 18, 1981. It is with regard to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. It is only necessary to mention the question number in order to get the reply from the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. McKenzie: Also question No. 2 asking why the Minister has two private parking stalls at the international airport. There is also the question which I placed on the Order Paper in October last year, question No. 5, a Public Works identity question.

The next one is extremely important to Manitoba. I would appreciate it if the Parliamentary Secretary would check into question No. 6 with regard to Secretary of State grants to multicultural groups in Manitoba. We want to find out who is receiving this funding. Is it just certain select groups?

A very important question was placed on the Order Paper in November last year, question No. 1 with regard to promotional practices in the Department of National Defence. There is considerable confusion. I would appreciate receiving an answer in a reasonable period of time.

I have raised some of these questions half a dozen times or more. We never get any kind of an answer as to what is causing the delay. I would like the commitment that the Parliamentary Secretary will come back with some kind of an answer, say next week, as to what is causing the delay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It is quite clear that there is no obligation on the part of the Government to reply. The Hon. Member can raise his points. He should mention only the question numbers and not elaborate too much on the questions themselves.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that I am not in a position to make any commitment on behalf of Ministers. The questions are submitted to the Ministers and the Departments. The Ministers make every effort to get the replies as they are able. I can but ask that the process be examined and that they speed up the process if possible. I will do that, but I certainly cannot make a commitment on behalf of the Minister to answer a question which, as you have said, Mr. Speaker, there is no obligation to answer in the first place.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary for a second. When I was first elected to this Chamber, before questions were answered we would get notification that our question would be answered. We also received the answers at our desks here in the House of Commons. That system has changed recently. Answers now come to our office some 24 hours later. I wonder whether or not the Parliamentary Secretary, when he does answer a question, could see that we receive the answers in the House as well as receiving notification that the question is about to be answered.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. That is a procedural matter and the Chair will look into it.

The questions as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—YOUTH EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise:

That this House condemns the continuing failure of the Government's policies to restore even pre-recession levels of employment opportunities for young people at a time when hundreds of thousands of young Canadians are about to join the labour force from our schools and universities and Canada's unemployment rate for young adults remains the highest of any Western industrial nation.

And of the amendment of Mr. Deans:

That the motion be amended by deleting the period after the word "nation" and adding the following thereafter:

"—and in particular the Government's adoption of the United States interest rate and monetarist policies, thereby reducing employment opportunities for young Canadians."

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, in continuing the debate on the motion of non-confidence in the Government opposite for its policies dealing with youth unemployment, I have only five minutes left to me and much material to cover.

I will first address the situation of the Ministry of State for Youth. I am glad to see that the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) has arrived in the House. Such a Ministry would be an excellent idea if it were allowed to function as a Ministry of State. The Minister's mandate was to raise the public's awareness of the concerns of youth. With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, one only needs to look around to see that the concern of youth a thousand times over is unemployment.

As well, the Minister has been placed among three other Ministers, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia). The Ministry of State for Youth has no authority and appears to be merely a task force for advising those other Ministers. As far as I can see, the only real jobs that the Minister of State for Youth has created to date are the ones in her own Ministry. Jobs have been created for more bureaucrats.

We need action, Mr. Speaker, not smoke and mirrors. Today we are addressing the subject of the killers of youth employment, which are high interest rates, lack of recognition for research and development by the Government opposite, the devalued dollar, poor management and the buying of elections at the taxpayers' expense. I would like to deal with some of the economic reasons for the lack of youth employment.

Investor confidence in the country has been totally destroyed. That is the reason we have the unemployment rate that we have today. An estimated $50 billion Canadians have left this country in the last six years. Taxation offers no incentive to reinvest. That taxation is created by irresponsible spending by the Government. That is why we opposed Bill C-24 so aggressively, Mr. Speaker. That Bill contained no provision for accountability and that is taking away from the unemployed youth of the country. There are no rewards for risk. Dealing with regional disparity, the special employment initiatives program is a clear-cut example of that.

By their own admission, Liberal Members have pursued social programs and neglected the engine that pulls them. They have neglected the engine of free enterprise, the engine of growth and the engine of small business. FIRA was an overreaction which drove every foreign dollar out of the country. What has been done about that? Liberal Members are now trying to make amendments which would resolve the situation that they have created. That situation is another cause of the massive unemployment in the country. The implementation of the National Energy Program in western Canada was an overreaction. Jobs were lost by the thousands. Liberal Members are now trying to make amends. It goes on and on, Mr. Speaker.

Dealing with Crown corporations, $2 billion has been put into Canadair and de Havilland. In 1982, that money would have saved every small business that went bankrupt and that would have meant jobs for youth in the country. Again, high interest rates and the deficit are the real killers. What are we going to do about them, Mr. Speaker?

The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) has indicated what we will do about research and development. He said:

> We're going to:
> 1. Double the collective Canadian contribution to this indispensable sector during our first term in office;
> 2. Set priorities and develop a co-ordinated approach to government-sponsored research;
> 3. Improve the linkage between government labs, universities and the private sector, with special emphasis on small business;
> 4. Encourage the production of new technologies and ideas by Canadian industries;
> 5. Facilitate the introduction and adaptation of innovative technology developed abroad; and
> 6. Encourage the diffusion of modern technology and know-how across the country.
> Why?
> Because according to the National Research Council, a 1 per cent increase in R and D expenditure (as a percentage of GNP) means creating 800,000 new jobs.

It is a question of good, sound management, Mr. Speaker. I realize that my time is running out. Therefore, when dealing with an issue as important as this one, I would like to finish on a positive note. We must learn to share with our young people and train our young people. Most of all, we must allow them to have a chance to excel and be prepared to take over where we leave off. Young people today are no different than they were 30 years ago. The only difference is that we must now plan for their future so as to allow them a brighter future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): A ten-minute period is now provided in order to question the Hon. Member about his remarks. Are there any questions? Debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, during a recent trip across Canada, at meetings with young people, youth organizations, unions and management, I realized how serious the problem was, and I must say this shed an often tragic light on the tremendous difficulties facing Canadian youth, because improved business conditions have not yet had a significant impact on unemployment.

I agree with the Opposition that a situation like this is intolerable. However, I cannot agree with the Opposition motion that refers to the "continuing failure of the Government" to restore pre-recession levels of employment opportunities for young people. I do not agree, because the present Government, through a host of measures and programs and by providing financial assistance, has tried to improve prospects for our young people, and in fact, the last Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) earmarked $150 million for this purpose.

Just a few days ago, I announced the allocation of $131.5 million taken from this amount, which is part of the Youth Opportunity Fund created last December to improve co-ordination of federal expenditures for youth. The amount included $30 million more for Summer Canada, bringing the total amount up to $200 million, which should help create more than 81,000 jobs for our young people this summer.

Similarly, Canada Employment Centers for students, which at a cost of $13.6 million provide thousands of young people with jobs and which last year found employment for 333,257 young people, should be increasing that number this year, as a result of the general business recovery and with the co-operation of businessmen and even private citizens across Canada, because no matter how small the job or the employer, they will all be considered because every job counts for these young people.

We have also just added $20 million to the Career Access Program, and there again, I would urge employers not only to give young people practical assistance in entering the labour market but also to take advantage themselves of the financial benefits, and I am referring to the wage subsidy to which they are entitled while training workers to their specifications. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, this program offers a far more practical approach than the tax rebates suggested by the Opposition, which in any case would not be immediately payable. There are many other programs for young people, programs initiated in co-operation with other federal Departments, including National Defence, Fisheries and Oceans, Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Environment, Secretary of State and other Government agencies.

There are also federal programs such as Canada Works which largely benefit young people. Over all, in 1983-84 the federal Government spent $478.3 million on job creation for 169,400 young people. In 1984-85, the Government will be spending $618.6 million for the benefit of some 185,600 young people.

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that the federal Government's training programs also largely benefit young people. For 1984-85, total funding exceeds $1.226 million and out of 281,000 participants, 132,100 will be young people. I might also mention that an increasing number of women is taking part in these training and job creation programs, but those who know me also know that I am not satisfied with these results and that I will continue to make every possible effort to improve the record.

Mr. Speaker, although I could provide many other details on federal programs designed to help young people, I am sure subsequent speakers will do so, in any case, and I therefore prefer to expand on other aspects of the problems that concern us all.

First of all, we must realize that for too many young people, getting a job continues to be extremely difficult. The disruption of the world's production apparatus and its repercussions on the Canadian economy have created a very difficult situation for all socio-economic partners. There is no general solution to the problems experienced by workers seeking jobs or by those who want to get ahead and are trying to find a job more in line with their career aspirations and their way of life.

Like their elders, young people see a job not only as a source of income but also as a way to independence and personal development.

At this very moment, more than 20 per cent of young Canadians between 15 and 19 years of age, and nearly 18 per cent of those between 20 and 24, are seeking employment. Again, these figures are of grave concern to governments, the private sector and even more so to young people themselves.

Young Canadian men and women are, for the most part, aware of the main obstacles created by these new labour market conditions. They know that their skills do not always meet the requirements of a rapidly evolving workplace. They also know that many of the obstacles to employment in the eighties are due to structural problems. However, in addition to criticizing, young people are also making some very valid suggestions. We have a lot to learn from the young, and we must have confidence in them. In my many meetings with young people, especially since my appointment as Minister of State for Youth, I have realized more clearly that their interests tend to coincide with those of the country as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, generally, the problems mentioned by young people with respect to their situation are well known. Nevertheless, the way in which they describe these problems and the solutions they propose are, if we take the time to listen and to understand, a great source of inspiration. That can only be the case if we invite them to take part in the discussions held prior to major decisions.

Mr. Hawkes: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) on a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I thought we had a rule against all Hon. Members, even Ministers, reading a speech, that the purpose of the chamber was to speak from the heart and from the head with knowledge, and not simply read something which someone else wrote.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The question of reading speeches is a bit more complicated than a mere ban on reading prepared text. Beauchesne devotes three different citations to this subject. Citation 309 sets out the general rule that a prepared text should not be read in the House. Citation 310 specifies a number of exceptions, one of which is Ministers of the Crown. Therefore, the Hon. Minister is quite in order in reading from a text.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, I also write and read with my heart, and the Hon. Member could listen also with his heart.

[Translation]

Young people want to establish their identity as full-fledged members of society. They want more responsibility for choices that concern them specifically and for those that affect society as a whole. They are also prepared to face the consequences of their decisions.

Mr. Speaker, they also have many complaints about the educational system. They say that schools are dehumanizing. They complain about the lack of proper career guidance and course packages that lack flexibility. Young people also want to be given more latitude in their choice of educational institutions, especially those going to university. Many of them feel their schooling does not prepare them fully to join the labour force. On the other hand, most of them are against an overly selective specialization which undermines the basic thrust of education by gearing it exclusively to the requirements of a labour force planned by Governments and the private sector.

In that respect, young Canadians blame employers for failing to provide adequate on-the-job training. That is especially true of the most underprivileged among those who have quit school too early, many of whom unfortunately become drop-outs.

Young people also complain about the lack of information on programs designed to help them and, in that respect, my colleague might give me a hand. A good many feel that those programs do not meet their expectations and they would like to see better coordination in the various programs or Government services, the private sector and youth-oriented agencies.

Young people are also asking for more worker mobility at the national and international levels. They want the kind of work which will help them improve their skill and knowledge. In that sense, they hope that the International Year of Youth in 1985 will give them an exceptional opportunity to participate fully in the review of their personal problems and in the decision-making process that concerns them.

Youth-oriented agencies are also advocating an over-all policy. Those agencies have pointed out that young people feel alienated from the consumer society and that they feel the need for commitments towards social institutions. We have been reminded as well that a good many well motivated and ambitious youths drop out because the future looks very bleak. Even though the search for employment and a guaranteed income are among their priorities, the agencies think that we must take more notice of the young people who are struggling to find a place under the sun and come to grips with their own worries about international political issues. Governments are urged to make every effort to help the most underprivileged youths. Since educational institutions and employers alone cannot solve their many problems, the most underprivileged youths, particularly native Canadians, need special services and more counselling.

Mr. Speaker, spokesmen for employers generally feel that the current economic situation is a barrier between youths and the labour market, and that the situation is not made any better because they lack the skills or training required to be hired. Employers emphasize that low productivity is now one of the most serious problems of the industrial community. In an effort to boost productivity and compete on international markets, most industries now stress high technology, which in its initial stages often leads to lay-offs. Whenever there is an opening, an employer will give priority to a worker who has been laid off, and that does not make it any easier for young people in search of employment.

Employers believe that the key to the problem is related to how people are prepared for the labour market. According to them, young people need better training. They also recommend that school authorities provide a great deal more information on the requirements of the labour market and possible careers.

Businesses also need more specific information on the programs which make it easier to hire and train young people. For instance, it is suggested that the governments set up a consultation network involving employer organizations and school boards to determine the qualifications that are mostly in demand and facilitate the planning of human resources.

The business community is aware that unless the youth employment situation improves, society as a whole will suffer in a short time. However, businessmen are convinced that young people will make few gains on the labour market before there is a general economic recovery. Businessmen ask that the governments be very careful in passing legislation relating to the labour market. The private sector would like the state to interfere less often or, if this is not possible, to show more adaptability to the needs in certain sectors of the industry and certain areas of the country.

As a general rule, finally, employer representatives have agreed to reconsider the issue of how working time should be organized. If we decide on a policy of redistributing working time, they believe that emphasis should be placed on extending the schooling and training period. They suggest in this regard that tax incentives be provided to encourage workers to continue their training or to accept working time arrangements which would bring about a more equitable distribution of the time spent working.

Employers also admit that the situation is not easy for the governments and they recommend that emphasis be put on programs such as Career Access and international exchange programs. These programs and the support given to new businesses enhance our competitiveness and therefore the performance of the Canadian economy.

From the point of view of organized labour, Mr. Speaker, there is a dilemma where the offer and the supply of jobs are concerned. Union leaders wonder whether they must help young people enter the labour market or else protect the workers who are fighting against possible lay-offs as a result of the coming of new technologies. They note that there is now a problem of adults being pitted against young people in the workplace, especially in industries which choose to hire students or apprentices rather than unionized workers. Like management, the unions believe that a general recovery of the economy will bring a solution to the employment problem of young people. For the time being, union priority is to protect active workers threatened by upheavals on the labour market. Union representatives believe that an industrial strategy centered on heavy industry and housing should result in the creation of a large number of jobs. In their opinion, the redistribution of wealth requires the promotion of early retirement, part-time work and work sharing or self-improvement leave without the participants being penalized by a decrease in their standard of living.

Union leaders also believe generally that we should improve on the work-study alternation programs and the wage subsidization programs which help the students to complete their training without accumulating debts.

The unions favour certain measures to promote the purchase of Canadian products and protect our markets against any excessive foreign competition. They recommend that co-operative endeavours be favoured rather than profit-sharing systems.

Mr. Speaker, it would take too long to list all the suggestions originating from all quarters, as well as the problems encountered by particular groups such as women, natives and handicapped people.

The sorry plight in which our young people now find themselves was not an overnight occurrence, therefore we should not expect these conditions to improve in just one year. However, it gives us, their elders, the opportunity to ask ourselves definite questions about the kind of society we want to live in as well as to question the set of values we believe in. Young people are asking themselves these same questions in a very mature fashion and wonder often if they should base their expectations and lifestyles on the way of life we are offering them.

Mr. Speaker, we should strive to change our approach and involve young people in our decision-making process. As Minister of State for Youth, I feel that one of my main duties is to contribute to a change of attitude toward youth unemployment.

The year 1985 having been designated as the International Youth Year will certainly provide us with the opportunity to challenge our young people into taking part in the debate on our collective evolution. Funds made available for the International Youth Year will be granted as much as possible to local, regional or national youth organizations which are eager to set up activities by and for young people. On the other hand I intend to help the most talented of our young people develop their leadership qualities, initiate projects and take actions that could benefit all our young people. International Youth Year should be a time when our young people between the age of 15 and 19, including our drop-outs, unemployed and academically disadvantaged, should get together, become aware of their identity, learn to act collectively and find their place within society.

Mr. Speaker, I often feel that the struggle waged by a number of youth organizations in an effort to claim their rightful place in our society is similar in many respects to that carried on by the women in search of their identity and recognition of their rights. We should deal responsibly with the pressure these groups are exerting on our institutions; otherwise, our society as a whole will suffer.

The International Youth Year gives us an exceptional opportunity to involve young people fully in the examination of problems of immediate concern to them, while at the same time providing a forum for a broader exchange of ideas at the international level. It is in this context that I intend to discharge my responsibility toward the International Youth Year. As with the other activities in which I am involved as Minister responsible for youth, I shall proceed by making a special effort to meet and listen to young people. It will be my duty to ensure that the efforts of the Canadian Government on behalf of young people yield tangible results, primarily for them but also for society as a whole.

During the fiscal year just ended the Canadian Government wanted to set the tone for the great debate on the place of young people in Canadian society. We have not hesitated to change the Government's priorities in order to make the problem of youth unemployment one of the main concerns in Canada. Federal Government programs and services have therefore been adjusted and in some cases changed completely to enable young people to derive the greatest possible benefit from them.

The appointment of a Minister of State for Youth is above all, I think, a sign of confidence in young people and a recognition of their interests which are in keeping with national interests and those that are defended internationally by the United Nations. The International Youth Year will provide us with an unprecedented opportunity for promoting international co-operation and understanding in the interests of young people.

[Translation]

It will also be my responsibility to ensure that the emphasis be placed on the most needy among the young and I am committed, as Minister of State for Youth, to ensure that all our young people privileged, and underprivileged have a full share in our Canadian society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): A 10-minute period is now provided for questions to the Minister or comments on her speech.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I understood most of the Minister's speech, but I want to ask her a question in her capacity as Minister of State for Youth responsible for one of the Government's most important programs designed to address the problem of youth unemployment, the Career Access Program, which we support.

My question is prompted by a press release issued yesterday, May 23, by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts). I will not read the press release but it announces under the Minister's name that Imperial Oil Limited, which we all know to be a multinational company operating in all parts of Canada, will provide 100 jobs through the Career Access job creation program to recent post-secondary graduates and young inexperienced persons. It goes on to state that placements will take place across Canada from Newfoundland to British Columbia and the Northwest Territories. It will benefit 68 university graduates, 9 technicians and 11 graduates of CGEP, not to mention some from a couple of community colleges. One hundred people, Mr. Speaker, from a major multinational company, which represents about one two hundredth of one per cent of the latest unemployment figures for youth. That means there are still 536,900 young people unemployed. This indicates to me that the program is not going well. If the private sector, especially the small business sector, is going to be the principal motor in getting this program operative, and we see a big company like Imperial Oil providing only 100 places, then I have grave doubts about the success of this program to address the serious problem of youth unemployment.

[Translation]

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to take this opportunity to commend the management of Esso Imperial, for helping us give our young people that vital extra training that will allow them to enter the labour maket and get job experience. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that for 1984-1985, a quarter of a billion, that is $250.6 million, will be provided for the Career Access Program.

[English]

That is 85,000 jobs and he was talking about 100. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that there are over half a million small businesses in this country and if they would just take one unemployed youth under Career Access they would all be employed. My goal is to place them in any corporation willing to give them the essential training they need to be in the workplace, a career-related kind of training. I compliment those who are willing to help us complement their formal education in school.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, we want the Minister to succeed. We support the Career Access Program. We also recognize, as I am sure she does, that youth unemployment is probably the most serious social problem in the country today. Our concern is that because of high interest rates the small business sector is not able to take advantage of this program because of its 50-50 aspect. If they cannot take advantage of it because of high interest rates, and large multi-nationals like Imperial Oil can only provide 100 jobs, that raises grave doubts about whether this program will succeed unless the Government can get its monetary policy under control. That is the concern I want to express to the Minister.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind my hon. colleague that we just added $20 million to the Career Access Program. If the program was not successful and if the business community was not responding well, I have some doubt whether my hon. colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) would add money. As the Hon. Member knows, as the Minister of State (Youth) I am not responsible for the application of that measure. That is within the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The program is working well.

I recognize that sometimes small businesses do not have access to this program. However, other programs are available as well. On-the-job training programs and other programs exist. This particular one is for well trained students graduating from colleges and universities throughout the country who are having problems obtaining their first jobs and getting the experience related to their education. It is especially for that kind of student. They are not the less privileged ones in the country. They are those who have a fine education but have a difficulty.

I would also like to remind my hon. colleague that the oil industry is not the most job creative. It is in the small and medium-sized businesses that we are looking for jobs for our young people. The recovery is showing some progress. I am sure that in the coming months small businesses will have access. Actually, the program is going well.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I have a question and perhaps one short supplementary question. The Minister has suggested that part of the cause of youth unemployment has been in the area of education. By implication she has indicated that the provinces have not done an adequate job in education. Which provinces have failed in providing appropriate education? In her view, has any province provided adequate education in light of the present conditions of our times?

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this question. As former chairperson of a schoolboard for six years I know quite well what kind of training we are providing in schools in Quebec. I am not placing any blame on any institution in the country. I think there is an over-all responsibility throughout the country in management, business and the education sector to ensure that training is available and that we are filling that gap. I will not put the blame on the curriculum. We have the best educated generation of young people in our country in all our history. It is not education per se that we have to put the blame on.

I am trying to ensure that the unions are talking to the education system as well as the education system talking to management. I think that a concerted approach to youth unemployment is the only solution. It is not by blaming each other, other governments or other socio-economic partners that we will solve the problem of youth unemployment. They are part of our society. We are part of the solution as well as part of the problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson).

Mr. Malone: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the statement of the Minister. She was saying that we should not be allocating blame. Of course, we all know that the blame rests primarily with the present Government because it failed to recognize the trend which brought us to the point we are today with a drastic unemployment problem among the young as well as older people.

In a question this morning I made reference to a report made by the Fraser Valley College. It set up a task force to investigate the very serious problem there. Dr. Barry Moore, the President of the College, found the report devastating. The second recommendation of the committee was for the establishment of a student placement and job search office at the college in co-operation with the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission.

To what extent are our Manpower offices authorized to respond to community initiatives such as this in their efforts to meet the challenge of youth unemployment?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Minister of State (Youth) (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) for a brief answer to the question.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Yes briefly, Mr. Speaker, I must say that currently in Canada, hundreds of Student Employment Centres already exist on our campuses. I cannot be specific as to that campus, but I know that if there is any possibility of expanding the program that is already in place, certainly my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), will do it.

As for blaming the Canadian Government, I would remind the Hon. Member that there are eight Conservative provincial governments, one separatist government and a further Creditist one, and I did not blame the lack of youth employment on those governments. What is needed in my view is a co-operative action, friendly efforts from all parties concerned, whether management, labour, education institutions, youth groups or provincial governments. Blaming others will not solve the problem faced by our young people. They are counting on much more positive responses.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Debate.

[English]

Mr. St. Germain: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain).

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, we get such little opportunity to ask questions on such an important issue, is there a possibility that we could extend the question period for at least one more question to the hon. Minister? I would like to ask her a question, and I am seeking permission of the House, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody to ask an additional question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Agreed. The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, the Minister mentioned that there was no solution to youth employment, the biggest issue facing this country today. She mentioned lack of productivity and training. I believe she possibly advocated protectionism in her speech. As a Minister of the Government, would the Minister please tell the House what if any suggestions she is making to stimulate the economy? She has said that the only way to solve the youth unemployment situation is through small and medium-sized business. Does the Minister have a suggestion? Would she tell the House what it is so that we can start establishing confidence in the country?

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should address a special clientele, those who have the most difficulty finding a job. They take more than 20 weeks to find a job. This includes about 250,000 young people in our country. These are unskilled, drop-out students in our country. Of the last $130 million which I announced, $30 million will be devoted to develop a special scheme to ensure that they get training on the job. I do not think the education system is the perfect formula for them. I think the private sector can help us in training them. Experiments have been conducted in other countries and I do not think I have time to name all of them, but the British scheme is one which we can look at very carefully.

I am willing, Mr. Speaker, to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for $250 million, or $1 billion for those 250,000 who need it, but before I do that, I want to test the formula and make sure that the private sector understands that we are working with them to develop the formula. I hope that by the time of the next Budget speech the Minister of Finance will be convinced that we have the right formula. In that way these unemployed people will have the possibility to get not only training, but jobs.

Mr. St. Germain: We do not want grants, we want a return of confidence.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, the only way to describe the last three-quarters of an hour is bizarre. In her response to the question by the Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), the Minister stated that she has been concerned about young people who have been unemployed for 20 weeks or longer. She describes them as the drop-outs and is incorporating a special amount of money in her budget to help that population. She says that she hopes to have better answers eventually, when and if Parliament is still sitting and when and if there will be a Minister of Finance to present a budget.

The Minister has been part of this Parliament for over four years. Ministers she has supported have cut out funding for functionally illiterate members of the workforce. It was well over two years ago when the Liberal Party, the Cabinet and the Minister decided to give no special funding for the drop-outs when they become adults. Canadians can only become confused when they see different parts of the Government acting separately. They have trouble finding where reality lies.

On May 23, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) issued an astounding press release to the National Press Gallery. In this release, the Government of Canada brags that it is providing a wage subsidy to Imperial Oil to employ approximately 100 young people. No member of the Chamber believes that the young people of this country do not need assistance in finding initial job experience and exposure to the workforce to gain a sense of their future. However, this is an attempt by a Minister of the Crown, who is charged with the public responsibility of administering billions of dollars of public expenditures, to create the impression that the Government played an important role in Imperial Oil's decision.

Let us examine whether the proposal outlined in this press release could be important. The press release states that these young people will be paid up to $15 an hour and that they will be employed for 52 weeks. It also states that the maximum subsidy can be $3 an hour. This means that for a maximum subsidy, Imperial Oil gets 20 per cent, or $3 of this $15 an hour. In reality, the subsidy can only last for 26 weeks. Therefore, if the job lasts for 52 weeks, Imperial Oil is contributing 90 per cent of that direct wage while the Government subsidizes 10 per cent.

We know that Imperial Oil is profitable and pays a corporate tax at a rate of 50 per cent. Since the subsidy must come into income, that 50 per cent tax reduces that 10 per cent to 5 per cent. Those are the direct wage costs in the case of a maximum subsidy. This does not include ancillary costs like the use of the personnel department and the issuance of cheques.

It is absurd to believe that Imperial Oil would make the corporate decision to hire an extra 100 young people based on what is a maximum 5 per cent subsidy only on direct costs. The Government is proving its absurdity by issuing such a press release and telling Canadians that this is a major announcement about what it is doing in the country to support youth. It is absolutely incredible. The Government is saying that it is the champion of youth because 100 young people, with a 5 per cent maximum subsidy, have been employed by Imperial Oil. A government which would so rapidly take us toward the theatre of the absurd is incomprehensible.

When the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) was appointed, I attempted to ask why that Minister had never been to a meeting of the committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. Why did the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) not appoint someone who had been studying youth problems? Why did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) or the Minister of Employment and Immigration not take advantage of the parliamentary task force report which was given to them in 1981 after 14 months of hard work, after listening to the youth of this country describe what needed to be done? That task force provided over 200 recommendations for changes in government policy.

It is now 1984 and we see the Minister standing in the House, reading a prepared text and telling us that she is busy studying the problem. She says that she is busy listening to the young people. In the meantime, Imperial Oil will hire an extra 100 young people. Eventually, at some indefinite date, perhaps the fall or 1985, she will make some recommendations to the Minister of Finance and if he is listening and finds room, we will then get a change in policy and the young people in this country will be happy.

The Government would make the young people of this country much happier if it would call an election. Canada's youth have no confidence in the Government, middle aged Canadians have no confidence in the Government and senior citizens have no confidence. Such a climate does not allow for progress or jobs. There is no feeling of the hope, energy or aspiration that once characterized this country.

How did we fall from the second highest standard of living in the world to fourteenth? Our standard of living is still falling. I remember 1976 when Members of Parliament from Alberta warned that jobs would disappear if there was interference in the oil industry. Today I hear the Minister of Youth say in the House that there is not much of a job multiplier effect in the oil industry. The transfer of funds from the western sedimentary basin to Canada Lands has reduced the job content of those amounts four to five times. In other words, the amount spent on Canada Lands to produce one job could have produced five or six jobs if it was spent on the western sedimentary basin. In turn, that would create jobs in Ontario and Quebec. Furthermore, such an expenditure would produce oil and gas and reduce the need to send our hard earned money to Saudi Arabia, Mexico, Iraq and Iran to create jobs there. If the entire purpose of the oil industry is to have Canadian jobs, then Canadians can believe the Minister when she says that this is a sector with no job creation potential because the Liberals' understanding of that sector has made it so. It has created a sector with job loss but very little job creation potential.

I come from a city, Mr. Speaker, that led this country in economic growth two years ago. Young people from Quebec, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and Ontario were coming to my riding and to my city in droves to get a career opportunity, to get a job, to get a start in life. They could be starting apprentices, they could be university graduates, young people from right across the spectrum. But if you walk downtown in Calgary today you will find that 25 per cent of the office space is vacant. The biggest building in town, a red brick one, was built by Petro-Canada. It is basically empty. Forty per cent of its space is not occupied. Taxpayers are paying the rent for a building across the street which is completely empty as a result of Petro-Canada.

Jobs are created by economic growth. Canadians are willing to invest their money, their talent, their energy into the creation of that growth and into the creation of those jobs. It is only Government, specifically this federal Government, which has created an economic catastrophe. Bankruptcies, job loss and the lack of an economic growth engine are the results of policies brought into this Chamber by the Government. To avoid those kinds of mistakes, all this Government had to do was to listen to people who knew more than did the Government, who believed in all parts of Canada not just some narrow piece. The Government should have listened to those who really believed and understood. If each and every part of our nation is allowed to flower and develop we would have something greater than the sum of the parts because we have something more magnificent than the sum of the parts.

When we stand in this Chamber today and talk about youth unemployment, we are talking about the future. We are talking about a Government that has robbed a big part of a generation of its potential future. The economic malaise is not hurting people in my age group—some yes, but on average it is not hurting people in my age group in the way it hurts those in my children's age group. They are the ones having to develop a different lifestyle, one that accommodates the notion that they might never have the same kind of income opportunity or the same kind of job opportunity their parents had.

This nation was founded by people who told their children that their opportunities would be greater than their own. It turned out to be true. For most of us who serve in this Chamber that has been true. The opportunity system that we enjoyed as adults and as young people was greater than the opportunity system our parents enjoyed.

But, Mr. Speaker, things are now going the other way, and they do not have to. There is no nation on this earth that has greater per capita potential or greater resources for capital. Ours is a magnificent country with magnificent potential. We can provide the highest standard of living in the world for our people. But we must have public policy that allows it to happen and encourages it to happen and makes it possible for it to happen. What we cannot have in public policy is an ever and ever smaller group of decision makers, further and further removed from reality, making an increasing number of decisions. That is what socialism is all about.

In the four years I have been in this Chamber, almost every piece of legislation brought forward by this Government has created some small group of people appointed in private, paid in private, to make in private decisions that affect the lives of Canadians. In that kind of atmosphere, Mr. Speaker, I have seen investment capital leave this country, skilled human beings with talent energy and drive leave this country to make some other nations in this world a little richer than they might have been. I have seen very few people from other countries—relatively few—bringing their dollars, their talents, and their energy to this country to make this nation a little richer and a little better.

What is required is an about face in public policy. That will flow from the opportunity that Canadians will have to exercise their democratic right. If one really believes in the essence of the motion before this Chamber today, Mr. Speaker, it could put it into action by simply calling an election and letting Canadians decide whether the potential of this country has been well shepherded by this present Government, or whether it is time for a change. I for one say to the young people of this country that their future depends on change. The more rapidly we get it, the more complete it is, the more opportunity system there will be for our youth. Failure to change means continuation of the path on which we are currently treading. That is not good enough, Sir.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us in this House share the same concerns about our unemployment problems. We have a special feeling for the many problems caused our youth in not being able to find the kind of employment they want, and want now. I do not think anyone on either side of the House has all the answers, or has a corner on the market of sympathy for our young people, or an understanding of their future. We should be going at this problem with a concerted effort, trying to encourage all sectors of the economy, all levels of Government, and all people to admit we have problem. We have addressed it in a number of ways. But let us find new ways together to solve the problem.

I believe in many respects an honest effort is being made. I believe the Government I support has taken initiatives and a very strong lead in this area. I would like to dwell on these measures in a moment. I cannot resist this opportunity to remind everyone of another part of the equation of the unemployment of youth in this country, namely, the inherent strength and resiliency of Canadian youth to accept the fact that, like many of us, these are difficult times. Maybe they too will do, and are doing their part in helping to get over this horrendous problem and this desperate feeling people have in not being able to find a job.

I feel in a personal way, as I am sure every Member of this House does, the concern and the troubles that youth have. The Hon. Member who just spoke said it is all because of the policies of this Government. If we follow that sort of logic through to its conclusion, then we do not need as many school teachers now because we do not have as many children in the classroom as we once had. I guess some deliberate governmental interference brought that about, and I am being facetious when I say that.

One sector of the economy in which many youth expected automatically to find careers was the field of teaching. Now they have learned—and I have a son-in-law and a daughter in exactly the same position—that they cannot necessarily follow their careers at the time they want, in the place they would like and at the rate of pay they think they should receive. Therefore they have to look at the available options. The youth of the country in so many ways are examining their options. For example, if they realize that they cannot obtain teaching positions in Thunder Bay, for whatever reason, they know they have to look elsewhere. This is what happened in the case I mentioned. People graduating from an engineering school find that they cannot practise that career at this particular point in time, so they examine the options.

Before dealing with some of the positive measures that have been taken by the Government, let me say that I believe we have all learned a hard lesson through difficult times. Times have changed and situations have changed. We have to find new ways of going about conducting our affairs as Canadians. Canadians today are no different than they were during the days of the great depression when they had to go through all kinds of gyrations just to find a meal. I think Canadians are strong. I think our youth is strong.

As a government we have an obligation to create a climate in which our youth find opportunities as a result of hard work. We require policies which will provide a major expansion of jobs and an opportunity for the private sector to flourish. We require a better understanding between various levels of government—federal, provincial and municipal. Sometimes we as politicians become so involved in the problems of running our own House we forget we have colleagues in other Houses. That works up and down the ladder. We have to find better ways of accomplishing that.

In response to our caucus meetings in Quebec and in Newfoundland the Government created the Ministry of State for Youth. We heard from that Minister just a while ago. The Opposition wants to make light of that decision. It is a positive sign that the Government recognizes that the problem has grown. In fact, we have many Ministers looking after the problem of trying to create employment opportunities in the country. We now know that we will have to do even more on behalf of our youth; our future. The Government has created a strong voice in Cabinet to take initiatives, to help create jobs for youth, to help co-ordinate the efforts of other Ministers who are in positions to create jobs in our economy and to ensure that they take into account the plight of our youth.

In a moment I will be speaking about large sums of money. Unfortunately, sometimes in our dialogue in the House it is almost as though we could make the problem of unemployment go away, whether it be the youth sector or another sector, just by identifying it and providing money. It is not that simple. One would think that $1.38 billion would eradicate the problem. It will do a great deal, but it will not cure all the problems of the unemployed youth. That is what we are trying to do in the creation of the Youth Opportunity Fund announced last December, followed up by initiatives in the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). We are trying to use the funds of the people of Canada through programs such as the Youth Opportunity Fund to provide more opportunities for youth to work directly in enterprises sponsored by government and to assist the private sector, by indicating that we recognize that it makes the same investment in the youth of the nation as the Government and that we should do it together.

As I said, we created the Youth Opportunity Fund last year. Recently $131.5 million was added to that fund, to be used for a mix of new and existing youth employment programs. The Government is criticized for mixing and matching programs, for announcing what has already been announced and so on. The Government is trying to review all programs to ensure that the ones in place work efficiently, to add appropriate measures to make existing programs more effective, and to help create new initiatives.

I suppose when one is in the Opposition it is somewhat like sitting around a coffee table or a bridge table and solving in one hour of discussion in very simplistic terms all the problems of Canada. The Opposition urges the Government to do something concrete, to come up with a master plan. I am sure our Cabinet Ministers, or whatever Cabinet Ministers happen to be in power, are looking to do exactly that, to come up with a genuine idea which in a very simplistic way will cure all the problems of the country. Unfortunately that is not the way life works. We require a variety of ideas. We have to bring them together to maximize the efforts of Canadians to create more jobs. However, I recognize the particular subject we are discussing today is that of youth, so in a sense I will return to where I began.

Despite the fact that the Government has done many things, such as the ones I have already outlined, it has also implemented the Career Access Program which will give some 78,000 young people an opportunity to obtain on-the-job experience. We have some 455 student employment offices across the country which will put some 333,000 young people into jobs. Despite all these facts, we require an attitude which from time to time transcends parochial interests and partisan politics. We must recognize that we all have a responsibility to maintain that which will provide jobs for young people, middle-aged people and older people—the confidence Canadians essentially have in this country. It is there but it becomes eroded when we hear nothing but doom and gloom, when we paint a daily picture in the House that the world is coming to an end tomorrow.

I would not expect opposition Members to say that we are doing a great job, but I expect a few more positive suggestions as to how we can alleviate the problems of the young unemployed people of Canada. Hon. Members opposite certainly do their best in their individual ridings to acknowledge job-creation programs, such as the Canada Summer Works Program, student employment programs and on-thje-job training programs, because they know they work. I would hope that they would join publicly, as they do privately and as they do in their own ridings in many instances, in saying we have problems, we have places to go, there are programs, yes, and if they were in power they would do them better. They are there, let's make them work. They should recognize that that is overstating the case. They are not joining in from time to time in a positive way, not recognizing they are unconsciously creating a feeling of gloom, a feeling of depression within the country. I do not lay all the blame for that thinking on the Opposition. However, they might want to consider that employing young people in satisfying jobs is the prime goal of all Canadians. We all have a job to do. We in this House have opportunities to speak to employers.

I read a statement the other day to the effect that if every employer in Canada would hire just one person, we would not have a problem. The Opposition might join with us in the larger battle of solving the problem of youth unemployment in this country. They can help us carry the message. We should try and convince Canadian employers that it is in their interest, as well as in the interest of young people, to make a concerted effort to train them, to utilize their talents and young minds, giving them the opportunity to grow.

I come back to the Ministry of State for Youth. The Member previously made light of this. It is interesting to note that the province in which I reside has recently mirrored our action. The Minister there is not called a Minister of State in charge of youth employment, but a commissioner for youth. Statistically it looks like Ontario is really on the go. Even in a wealthy province, which has a lot going for it and a good future, despite all the new jobs created—and we are creating new jobs all the time but creating more people to fill those jobs—we still have a specific and special problem with regard to youth unemployment. The Party in power in the Province of Ontario is not a Party to which I belong. It believes it must help solve a relatively new phenomenon in Canadian society and North American society. The problem is not peculiar to Canada. We have to do something extra special to prevent the degrading situation that exists when so many young people are unemployed.

I could recite the statistics relating to the dollars we are utilizing to create employment for our young people. We have the Skills Growth Program. Universities are being upgraded. Colleges have new equipment to train students better. This has not just occurred since we have had a Minister of State for Youth. We have recognized the problem. Those programs began a few years ago. We know that more has to be done.

I again make the exhortation to Canadians to recognize that it is absolutely essential that we find jobs for our young people. It is essential that we are honest with our young people. Young people are the most honest people that I know. They understand when we say to them: "You have to be prepared to broaden your scope and thinking. You must recognize that if you are trained in this, you may have to try something else for a little while because from point "A" to point "B" may not be a straight line. You may have to make a small detour, but you will get there." Patience, faith, hard work and diligence, all of these so-called old-fashioned qualities that we seem to think have gone are still there. We have to remind young people that they have a part. They are playing that part. They are willing to do that. The different levels of government have to co-operate. After all, the money comes from the same common pot.

The private sector must continue to tell us what we can do to make the job of running an enterprise more profitable so that it can expand and create jobs. We must ask the private sector to join with us in targeting in on youth unemployment. I am a perennial optimist. I know that in our heart of hearts that is the way we feel about things in this country. Canadians, as always, look at diffiult problems and find solutions together.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that I think all Members are in agreement with the comments of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) with respect to our desire to create new employment and new employment activity for young Canadians. We have a complete consensus in that aim and goal. Where we come into difficulty and dispute is in the methods and means by which we attempt to achieve the goal.

The Member indicated the efforts made by the Government of Canada with respect to the establishment of some 480 student employment centres across Canada. Their hope is to achieve employment for some 333,000 students and young Canadians. That is a laudable goal. We wish the Government could go further and faster.

There are some problems in those employment centres. We saw evidence and reports of that in the press yesterday and again this morning. This morning I heard an interview with an officer of the Department of Employment and Immigration, one Brian Fuhr. He was being questioned about activities at the student employment centres. I was shocked to hear in the course of that interview, presented by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on a local Ottawa station, that the officers of the Department of Employment and Immigration in these employment centres will not post the jobs for which federal funding has been provided. They will not tell the students what jobs are available. In the student employment centre in Ottawa there are 600 federally-funded jobs available. The officers of the Department will not tell the students what those jobs are so that they can make application for them.

At the same time, it was disclosed that the applicants for these available jobs are selected from the filing system. That particular office is two or three weeks behind in placing names in the filing system so that they could be selected for application for the jobs available.

Does the Hon. Member think this is the proper and fair way to conduct a student employment or summer employment program in which there is brief time available to apply for the job, where the employment period is short, to be caught up in that kind of bureaucracy, not being able to see what jobs are there, make direct application to the employer, and not have to go through some bureaucratic maze in order to have an opportunity to be employed for these very important summer months?

Mr. Masters: Mr. Speaker, I consider that an excellent question. I would not argue against the problems of bureaucracy and, why all of us keep coming back, wanting to do more through the private sector. The thinking in that instance might be that there is another process to be followed with regard to Government funded jobs so that there is a more equal opportunity for more people to have access to them.

I will just take a moment to respond to the Hon. Member. To respond to the Hon. Member, I would remind him that the debates are being monitored and I am sure that that is one area which should certainly be reviewed in a way that will possibly cut down on what I agree is a bureaucratic process which keeps the job seekers away from the job opportunities for a longer period of time than necessary. I believe that that is what the Hon. Member has said.

I have spoken of parochialism and I do not wish to be guilty of it myself, but it is also interesting to note that in my constituency, at least one of the local radio stations and perhaps more are co-operating with the Student Employment Centre by advertising to have jobs registered with the group as well as job opportunities. That program seems to be working very well and there has been a very strong response to it from the business community which has recognized the necessity for the program and has recognized that it does help businessmen find the employees that are required for their enterprises.

Returning to the Hon. Member's question, I think that that is a sign that there really is the room and the necessity for dialogue. I think the Hon. Member has made a good point and I would hope that the situation would be thoroughly examined.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I will content myself with the hope that the Hon. Member will use his good offices to pass this message on to the autorities responsible so that they may rectify this serious complaint. I noticed that the Minister is present in the House of Commons and she as well may take this into consideration.

The excuse given for not posting these government-funded jobs was that there were restrictions with respect to them. The first restriction was that the applicant had to live within the federal constituency for which the job was intended and the second was that there might be special restrictions. I do not think that that is any reason for not posting the jobs. I know that in my own area, there is no such requirement of residency in a special federal constituency. Some people are perhaps a little suspicious that there may be something going on behind the scenes by way of pointing certain people in certain directions in order to obtain this employment. If the jobs were posted for everyone to see, we would be more assured of fairness.

I would like to make one further comment and ask another question of the Hon. Member with respect to a remark he made during the course of his speech. He said that we all want to maximize the efforts of Canadians to create more employment. I think that is a goal which we all desire devoutly. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that independent agencies like the Conference Board of Canada as well as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) have said in their economic predictions for the future that unemployment will continue at its current high rates for the next year or two and even longer. There is no indication that the economy will improve to the extent that we can reduce the unemployment rate to a figure less than 10 per cent or 11 per cent.

At the same time as this was being said, the Hon. Member's colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), said in a speech which he made in the Province of British Columbia recently that full employment is possible and that if he became the leader of the Party, he would reduce unemployment dramatically over the next five years and reduce it back to its previous levels of 3 per cent or 4 per cent. Because the Hon. Member has access to information that is not available to Members of the Opposition, I would like to ask him if he knows how the Minister of Justice will reduce the unemployment rate in Canada if he becomes the leader of the Party.

Surely the Minister does not need to wait until he is the leader of the Party to implement a plan he may have to eliminate unemployment in Canada or reduce it to the level of 2 per cent or 3 per cent from its current level of 11 per cent. Surely he should share that plan not only with his colleagues in the Liberal Party but with his colleagues in Parliament. Let us get to work on the war on unemployment.

The Minister of Justice said in his speech that he did not accept the forecast of a 10 per cent unemployment rate for years to come and that he knows how to reduce that figure so that the unemployment rate between 1985 and 1988 will on average be less than the 9 per cent predicted by the current Minister of Finance. Perhaps the Hon. Member would share his thoughts with us and tell us how his colleague, the Minister of Justice, will reduce the unemployment rate to below the levels predicted by his other colleague, the Minister of Finance.

Perhaps the Hon. Member may simply say that there is no such plan, that we are stuck with the unemployment rates that were predicted by the Minister of Finance and that there is nothing that can be done about it. If that is the attitude of the Government with respect to unemployment and if the Government does not agree with the Minister of Justice who says that we can wage a war on unemployment and reduce it very dramatically, then I think the Government should quit and let someone else take over who will try to reduce unemployment.

Mr. Masters: Mr. Speaker, I believe that my time is almost up. I did mention that I am an optimist. All of us must realize when looking at projections that they are only projections and will remain projections unless something else happens. I can recall a time, Mr. Speaker, when I was a sales manager and I predicted in a very—pardon the expression—conservative manner a 10 per cent growth in sales. I found that the growth in sales went to 30 per cent and yet every economic barometer from the beginning of the year on which I based what I thought might be an optimistic prediction indicated that it was gloom and doom time and that we would not do well. These barometers were from early January. By December, because of all of the things that went on in the economy in general, those predictions did not hold true.

I am not sure what my hon. colleague has in mind when he speaks of totally reducing unemployment. I think it is a goal for which we will all continue to strive but I would remind the House that projections are merely that. They are a form of looking into a crystal ball after having been given the best information at a given point in time. We sometimes do not meet the expectations of projections and we sometimes far surpass them. As an optimist, I think we will surpass them in this instance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert) Order, please.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—YOUTH EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise:

That this House condemns the continuing failure of the Government's policies to restore even pre-recession levels of employment opportunities for young people at a time when hundreds of thousands of young Canadians are about to join the labour force from our schools and universities and Canada's unemployment rate for young adults remains the highest of any Western industrial nation.

And the amendment of Mr. Deans:

That the motion be amended by deleting the period after the word "nation" and adding the following thereafter:

"—and in particular the Government's adoption of the United States interest rate and monetarist policies, thereby reducing employment opportunities for young Canadians.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), for having brought before the House for debate today an issue which the Government is always loathe to raise for debate, to bring into the House or to have examined. Indeed, when the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters), addressed this issue in response to an Opposition Day motion, he glossed it over, if I may say, as if there were no real crisis in the country with regard to youth unemployment. What the Hon. Member does not seem to realize is that one out of every five young persons in this country is unemployed today. That is a national disgrace, sir, in a country like Canada.

The number one issue in this country today is unemployment. The number one issue under this Government a year ago was unemployment. If the Liberal Government were to be in office a year from now the number one issue would still be unemployment. That is the reason why the Canadian people will not accept this kind of government any longer.

Hon. Members who have spoken previously in this debate have said that Canada's employment rate as compared to the other ten western industrialized countries ranks eighth. That is where we stand in comparison to our counterpart countries in the industrialized world. However, when it comes to where we stand as compared to those countries with regard to youth employment, we rank last. Again, I say that that is a tragedy which the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon does not seem to recognize.

To put the statistics on the record again, Mr. Speaker, the rate of unemployment in Canada for those between the ages of 20 and 24 was 18.5 per cent last year. In the United Kingdom, that rate of unemployment was 18.2 per cent, in Australia it was 14.6 per cent, in the United States it was 14.5 per cent, in Sweden it was 7 per cent and in Japan it was an incredibly low 4.1 per cent. That is 4.1 per cent in Japan and 18.5 per cent in Canada.

Even if we were to look at the latest figures available to us for the young people in this category, we would find that in the United States the present rate of unemployment for young people is 12.2 per cent and in Canada the present rate is 17.1 per cent. That is a difference of five percentage points between Canada and the United States.

I suppose one can say that it is easy to rattle off a lot of statistics. They are really a group of words just bunched together. However, what you have to do is stop and analyse what those statistics mean in human terms. That is when one sees that they mean hundreds of thousands of young Canadians between the ages of 18 and 25 who are unable to get jobs and whose lives are being scarred by a set of circumstances which they did not create. That is what one hears when one talks to young people, when one talks to the one young person out of the five who is unable to get a job in this country.

Often when we hear this tragedy discussed we hear it discussed in terms of the economic costs of unemployment, how much it costs us in employment insurance, in dollar terms. But how seldom do we hear this tragedy discussed in terms of the social costs to the country, and the greatest social cost to this country today is in the 500,000 young people who are out of work, the almost two million people in total who are without jobs in Canada today. We are not only losing their creativity and productivity, their ability to help develop this country, but these young people are also being condemned to a loss of dignity, a loss of self-worth and a loss of the very thing which each of us had on coming into the workforce. We had a feeling that we could do something to contribute to this country, a feeling that Canada needed us. But the young people of today are being condemned to a feeling that somehow or other they are not needed, that there is nothing they can contribute, and that is what brings about the loss of self-worth.

What is worst of all is that these young people are being forced by circumstances which they did not create to now assume the burden of paying for those errors. They are being forced to pay for the mistakes made by the present Liberal Government, particularly in the last four years.

When I mention mistakes, I look back to the economic plans, misguided Budgets and inappropriate policies brought forward by this Government in the last four years, certainly with the 1981 Budget in such sectors as the energy sector. What did those policies do? They caused widespread unemployment right across the country. There are the mistakes not only of introducing these policies, but the mistakes which the Government has made in administering the programs which it says are going to help out.

The Special Employment Initiatives Program, for example; how was that administered? It was administered by padding up Liberal ridings, treating the unemployed in this country, especially the youth unemployed, as if somehow or other a double standard should exist, that if they lived in a riding other than those held by a Liberal Member of Parliament they should not be considered as unemployed.

There has been a mistake made by the Government in not aggressively developing new and comprehensive training and counselling programs which could really prepare our young people for the changing and highly competitive world of new technologies.

I know that those comments may in some sense sound partisan. I believe they are true, but let me go beyond the comments and quote from some of the studies which are being done to show what is really happening to young people in our country today. I will quote from a recent report, Sir, of the Canadian Mental Health Association, entitled "Unemployment: Its Impact on Body and Soul". Chapter 6 in that study is headed, "Are youth the silent victims?" I would like to just quote from page 35 of that study, which says:

> It is cruel irony that while our social institutions promote the importance of economic independence as a measure of maturity, our economic policies have created a situation in which youth are hard-pressed to find employment. They thus remain, by social definition, immature and dependent. This "dependency" can take the form of reliance on parents, on the state, on drugs. Regardless of its form, it is counter-productive to blame young people for their predicament when it is policies and structures that have created the context in which growth is stifled.

That, Sir, is not said by a body which is given to partisan statements. That is said by the Canadian Mental Health Association which has studied the impact of unemployment on young people. When it makes that statement it uses such words as "dependency, reliance, predicament". If I were to emphasize those words, Sir, I would say that they bring home, far more than statistics, what is really happening to people under the age of 25. Those words put the human, tragic face upon numbers and unemployment rates and the seasonally adjusted totals which we hear every time Statistics Canada releases its report on the labour force.

Let there be no mistake, Sir, the figures did not grow so alarmingly, nor remain high, because our young people are unwilling to work. That is not the case. It is not because they do not want to go to work. It is because they cannot find a job, any job at all, and the social consequences are alarming, particularly among those looking for their first jobs rather than continuing on in post-secondary education.

The study I quoted from, which was produced by the Canadian Mental Health Association, points out that unemployed youth are likely to feel bored, with nothing to do, no money to do it with, no clear goals and no sense of purpose. Second, they are likely to flounder in their search for a sense of personal identity; third, to have lower self-esteem than their peers who are employed or in school; fourth, to feel humiliated, and blame themselves for not staying in school or trying harder; fifth, to feel angry at, and resentful of, themselves and their parents, teachers, employers, governments and other institutions; and, finally, to be disillusioned with themselves and their society.

It is interesting to see some of the headlines which appear in the newspapers which collaborate these statements. I have one here which reads, "Jobless Youth: Hope the Major Casualty". And another reads, "Youth Revolt Feared Unless Jobs Available". This is what is happening to young people, and it is documented and clear if the Government would only take a look at what is happening. These are the feelings of young men and women supposedly, Sir, in the prime of their lives. In days past they would normally have been planning their futures. They would have been thinking about getting married, dreaming of being promoted in their jobs, or planning on buying a home or a car. That is the sort of thing they can no longer envisage. They cannot think about it. Instead, at the age of 20 or 21 they are prepared to give up. They have already been looking for a year or two years and they see no real future for themselves. No job, no money and a rapidly diminishing self-respect is the legacy that the Liberal Government has given to these young people.

Let us not be deceived, Sir, into thinking that these symptoms are restricted solely to those who go straight from high school into the labour force. Although statistics show that young people who receive no post-secondary education are less likely to find a job, schooling itself is no longer a guarantee of entry in the labour force. When I was looking at these statistics, Sir, one thing came very clearly to mind. They showed that 73 per cent of those young people who were unemployed have only a high school education or less. That points out the need for a clear remedial and fundamental skill development training. That is what is really needed by these young people. Not just for education's sake, but to give them the skills to enrol in training. Give them the fundamental education so that they can get enrolled in training programs. But what did the Government do two years ago? It cut off funding for literacy and basic training programs.

However, that is for the young people who have a high school education or less. Look at the others who have gone on and put in years of study and preparation, young people who are graduating from university and community colleges and can find no work to go to. No wonder they begin to ask themselves why they bothered to do it in the first place. Why did they bother juggling part-time jobs during the school year and search for and work hard at summer jobs so that they could get enough money to pay for their education? Why did they bother to go so heavily into debt to graduate and then find that they have no means of paying back those loans? That is what the young people of today are asking; to do all that and then find there are no jobs. No wonder they are disillusioned, no wonder they are giving up on the system.

This leads us to other problems and social burdens that unemployment brings about. Just recently there was a study done which shows the linkage between youth unemployment and crime. This comes to light in a book entitled Economic Opportunity and Crime. It says that in the case of crimes of violence we can demonstrate a fairly strong relationship between these offences and deteriorating economic conditions mainly reflected by unemployment. We have hypothesized that assaults will increase as a result of frustration of unemployment. I do not need to turn to economic or academic studies to bear this out, Mr. Speaker. I just want to read from a letter written by a widow who is in dire financial straits. She said that her son left home. He was away only one month. He tried hard, he could not find a job and welfare would not help him, so he stole food just so he could live. As a result the boy was put in a correctional centre for what he did, and he was not the only young boy who was there because of that.

Earlier this week in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs I asked whether or not we were undertaking in depth studies in Canada to show the correlation between unemployment, particularly youth unemployment, and the social costs that will be with us long after new jobs are created. As yet there has been almost nothing done in this field in Canada, but we need those studies in the same way that we need this Government and this Parliament to address the problem. Not from the point of view, Mr. Speaker, of trying to patch up the problems, not to look for band-aid solutions, but to begin a different kind of approach, one that will see us investing in human resources inthe way we have invested in natural resources in the past.

We have nto had in this country a commitment by the Liberal Government that the development of the human potential in this country is as important and as critical as is the development of equipment or plant or natural resources. That attitude has to be turned around, Sir. Our greatest resource in this country is our people. We have to give the same kind of capital investment to the development of our people as has been done with the other sectors of our economy in the past. That, Sir, is what this Party is committed to. The studies we have done have shown that this is the only way to turn around this situation of youth employment.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. At the beginning of her remarks she was very unkind to the Liberal Government. She also mentioned the number of young people who will be seeking employment this summer so that they can return to university and trade schools and so on. I would like to know if, in areas of high unemployment and where there is practically no industry, she supports the Government's summer student employment programs and, generally speaking, whether she supports direct government job creation in those areas I mentioned?

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member comes from Newfoundland. He certainly should know something about high unemployment in this country and the tragedy that this Government has not even recognized the problems of Newfoundland in any way, shape or form. He should be up there demanding that the Cabinet Ministers in his Government do something about turning around their attitude toward Newfoundland. It has been a disgrace and he should know it. I want to tell him that for a long time the intensive development of long-term jobs will be most critical. Certainly the summer programs have been supported, but what do they do for the 500,000 young people who will not have access to them? There are many in his riding of Gander-Twillingate who will not be beneficiaries of that program. What, may I ask, is he prepared to say on their behalf, because the Government is saying nothing for them.

• (1710)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Before giving the Hon. Member the floor, I should comment that questions are directed to the person who has made a speech. The person who has made a speech should not be directing comments or questions to the questioner. The Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, of course there was a reason I asked the question. The Hon. Member who just spoke was part of the Government in 1979 and the first part of 1980. One of the most disgusting things that the Government did at that time, in which the Hon. Member was a key player, was to lay down the law and say that there would be no direct job-creation programs from the federal Government. It said that perhaps the private sector should create the jobs. That is precisely why I asked the question, Mr. Speaker. That will be a key question in the next federal election. That is a key question in areas of high unemployment where private enterprise does not exist to any great degree at all.

If the Hon. Member is saying that she supports the Summer Student Employment Program and wants more money to go into it and other direct job creation programs, then she is at variance with her Party. That is why I ask the question. Would the Hon. Member reconsider her answer in view of what happened when the Conservative Party took power?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, when the Conservative Party was in power the unemployment rate in the country was a lot lower than it is at the present time. He must bear the blame, along with everyone in that Party, for what has happened in the last four years. It is the policies of that Government that have driven the unemployment rate to the extreme height it is at today.

Of course the Hon. Member was not here earlier today when the various points as to what steps would be undertaken were spelled out. However, his constituents will know what they are. I would like him to know, Mr. Speaker, that the people in his riding are going to be asking him what he has done in the last four years to bring down the unemployment rate in Gander-Twillingate and the many other parts of Atlantic Canada which have suffered more than any other part of the country because of the policies of the Liberal Government.

Mr. Pinard: There are Tory Governments in those provinces.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there any other questions or comments? Another supplementary question, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has still not answered the question. It is a key question. It is an important question of Government policy. It is an important question of Opposition policy. It is an important question that the Hon. Member is going to have to answer now or when the campaign is on, as will every person running for the Progressive Conservative Party. She still has not answered the question.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand the Member reiterating a question which I have answered two or three times. I realize it takes a little longer to get through to him. I have known that over the years, as have others. However, since he has asked about areas such as his part of the country, I will repeat what was said by the Hon. Member for Elgin earlier this morning.

In several parts of Canada young people face a future of almost permanent unemployment. Wage subsidies and employment tax credits will be of little value in these economically depressed regions. In such regions there ought to be programs of community based entrepreneurial development which would assist individuals and groups wishing to start new businesses to raise money, to cut through red tape, to identify markets, and to train workers. That is what has not been happening and that is what must happen so that people can get permanent jobs.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I did not have any intention of posing a question to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). However, in view of the exchange which has taken place, I would like to direct a question to her. Has she had an opportunity to examine the record? I know she is an extremely busy Member. Can she recall that during the nine months when we were in Government we created some 60,000 jobs? That was a creation of 7,000 jobs a month. Would she agree that if we examine the record for the 49 months since this Government was re-elected to office we will see that during that period of time they have lost a total of 300,000 jobs? In the nine months we were in power we created jobs at a rate of 7,000 per month. In the 49 months since this Government has been in office they have lost jobs at a rate of 7,000 a month.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): A short response from the Member for Kingston and the Islands.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good and valid point which should be made. I hope the Member for Gander-Twillingate takes very strong cognizance of these important figures. In the last four years we have seen a major setback to the labour force of the country. We have still not recovered to the point where those in the employment force are at the level they were at in 1981. That is a tragedy. Those people are unemployed and the young people are still the hardest hit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The period for questions and comments has ended. For continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons).

Hon. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to come to the defence of my good friend and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). He has been in the House for 10 years. They have been 10 vigorous years for him. He has fought like a Trojan and the happy result can be seen throughout Gander-Twillingate. I think it is unfortunate that there should be a suggestion that he has been less than an absolutely thoroughly good Member during that period, particularly in the last few months when he, as have all of us around the country, has had to deal with some difficult issues relating to the employment figures.

I thought I saw one of the more touching scenes in this House a few minutes ago when the very magnanimous and gentlemanly Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) came to the rescue of the lady from Kingston and the Islands.

Miss MacDonald: Member for Kingston and the Islands. Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) on a point of order.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am in this House under the same set of circumstances as any other Member here. It has been very difficult for me, as a Member of Parliament, to listen to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of the country refuse to accord me the same title as any other Member of this Parliament day after day and year after year. Sir, I protest that I am entitled to be addressed as a Member of Parliament. It is on that basis that I was sworn into this Parliament. I insist that that is how we should all be addressed.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am sure that the hon. lady would not want us not to respect past practice. Very often it has been accepted in the House that we call a colleague the hon. gentleman from a certain riding. I am pretty sure that the hon. lady is not suggesting that we should not call her a lady. I respect her very much. There is nothing wrong and nothing contrary to parliamentary practice in calling an Hon. Member either an hon. gentleman, if I am addressing Mr. Dick, for example, or an hon. lady, if I am addressing my good colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

● (1720)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I did not personally sense any intention to show any lack of respect. It might simplify matters if Hon. Members could restrict themselves to the use of the terminology "Hon. Member".

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, as always, an excellent ruling. I hope the Opposition will keep that in mind when they sometimes refer to Ministers during Question Period as other than Minister.

The point raised by the lady from Kingston and the Islands—

Miss MacDonald: He just ruled.

Mr. Simmons: The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands. You interpret me correctly, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I intended no disrespect. I used it in the same vein that she had, moments earlier, when referring to the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate as the gentleman from Gander Twillingate. It is quite common practice. It is far from me to suggest that she is not a lady.

I thought it was touching that the gentleman, the Hon. Member for Elgin came to her rescue so magnificently a few moments ago. At that point she needed rescue because she was impuning the performance of a Trojan in this House, the Member for Gander-Twillingate.

I happen to agree with the Member for Elgin thoroughly when he says that the Tories, during their nine months in office, created 40,000 jobs. I believe, and let the record show that, that they did create 40,000 jobs. Nobody would deny them that. Nobody on this side of the House would deny them that because we know that the reason the programs were in place to create those jobs was that a Liberal government had preceded that Tory government for the preceding 16 years, from 1963 to 1979. Despite the fact that they wiped out every fisheries project in Atlantic Canada during their nine months in office, and despite their stated policy to do away with job creation programs, they were unable to wipe out all the jobs. Therefore, 40,000 jobs were created as a heritage, a leftover from a Liberal government. They were jobs that they could not destroy despite their most destructive efforts.

The gentleman from Elgin is absolutely right, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands—

Miss MacDonald: You are learning.

Mr. Simmons: I agree with the lady from Kingston and the Islands when she says that the attitude of some politicians toward Newfoundland and Labrador is absolutely despicable. She is absolutely right. Again, I remind you and her, Mr. Speaker, that among those politicians who manifest such attitudes are the two gentlemen from Newfoundland who are in the Tory Cabinet and who had such a despicable attitude toward Newfoundland that they were party to wiping out every single fisheries project in all of Newfoundland and Labrador. All of them had been approved, had gone through the Cabinet process during the Liberal years, had gone through the parliamentary process and were on track until the two gentlemen from St. John's got a hold of them. They put them off track very fast. She is right, that is despicable.

Speaking of other politicians, watching the performance these days of the Premier of Newfoundland, a man I know very well, makes one a little unhappy about what some politicians will dare to do. The economy of Newfoundland is not on track to the degree it could be if we had an agreement on the offshore. The reason there is not an agreement on the offshore has nothing to do with a lack of willingness on the part of the Government of Canada. It has nothing to do with a lack of willingness or desire on the part of the Newfoundland community at large. It has very little to do with any lack of willingness in the Government of Newfoundland as a whole. It does concern the attitude of the Premier of the province who fights not to win, but who fights to fight. His objective is to fight some more today and some more tomorrow. Until that attitude changes, I agree with the Member for Kingston and the Islands that we will continually have to lament the approach of some politicians who would put base, partisan politics before the good of the people of Newfoundland and Labrador. I thank her for raising that particular issue because it is an important issue to the gentleman from Gander-Twillingate, and an important one to me.

I also agree with her that the Tories were in power at a time when the unemployment rate was decidedly lower than it is today. Is she suggesting that because a government of whatever political stripe took office that somehow the unemployment rate suddenly shot downwards? Is that what she wants us to believe? The truth is that that unemployment rate was low at that particular time because of 16 years of Liberal government that had preceded it.

She cannot have it both ways. She cannot on one hand blame the Government totally for the current unemployment rate and at the same time deny it credit for the low unemployment rate which existed when her government took office in June of 1979. It is no accident that she finds herself telling the truth about this subject as well. Of course the unemployment rate was low. She should also expand beyond that and tell the House and the country why the unemployment rate was low. It was low because she and her colleagues inherited an economy that had been managed well in the preceding 16 years by Liberal regimes, first under Mr. Pearson and subsequently under the current Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

I am grateful to Members opposite who participated in this debate today because they have given the people of Canada a warning. It is a warning of what the people of Canada can expect. The motion before us clearly shows us the haze and fog in which the Opposition continues to wander aimlessly day in and day out. It is looking for something with which to tempt what they clearly must see as an unwitting public that is unencumbered by any consideration of the facts. The Opposition critics rise to show the Canadian people how they are prepared to run the country. However, despite the fond hopes of the Opposition, the Canadian public is not that gullible. They know truth from fantasy. They know what is happening and they know that this Government has been a world leader in promoting the cause of youth.

It is interesting to note that while the national Tory Party spends its time trying to imagine what it would be like to be in power, its provincial counterpart in Ontario is wisely following Liberal initiatives. I am referring to the recent announcement by the Ontario Government of the appointment of Mr. Ken Dryden to the position of Youth Commissioner. It occurs to me that now that the hockey season is over the Opposition might want to consider asking Mr. Peter Pocklington if they could borrow Wayne Gretzky. He, at least, would give them some effective opposition. But the decision to appoint someone to focus the concerns of youth, as the Government of Ontario has done, is once again just following a good Liberal lead.

In December last year this Government announced its intention to focus on the concerns of youth by appointing the country's very first Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette). Since that time this Government has worked toward involving young people in planning their own future.

Let us look just a little more closely at the motion before this House. In its wish to deceive, the Opposition has tried to paint a picture of Canada as the worst performer of any western industrial nation. The Opposition says that Canada's unemployment rate for young adults remains the highest of any western industrial nation. That is what the Opposition says, Mr. Speaker. But that is simply not true, as Hon. Members opposite would know if they only took the time to examine the figures.

According to a recently published forecast prepared by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development during 1984 youth unemployment rates in Spain, France, the United Kingdom, and Italy were markedly higher than in Canada. In relative terms, Canada has not experienced the highest percentage increase in youth unemployment either. In comparing 1979 actual rates to 1984 forecast rates, Canada's youth unemployment rates will have increased by 42.3 per cent over the five year period. Obviously we on this side are not satisfied with that figure. We are working hard to reduce it, with, I might add, some very encouraging results to which I shall refer in a few moments.

The Opposition is fond of saying, as we see in this motion today, that Government policies are to blame for unemployment in Canada. So let us look at the performance of some other countries, Mr. Speaker, and see how well they have performed over the same period.

The average increase in youth unemployment rates over the same five-year period from 1979 to 1984 for the seven countries surveyed by the OECD, which include the United States, Japan, West Germany, France, the United Kingdom, Italy and Canada, is 53.7 per cent, or 11.5 per cent higher than for Canada alone. Taken individually, our 42.3 per cent is significantly lower than the United Kingdom's 96.6 per cent. That is right; Canada has had a 42.3 per cent increase, and the United Kingdom, under a Tory Government, of course has had a 96.6 per cent increase. And what about West Germany? It had an increase of 291 per cent in youth unemployment in five years.

In fact, the OECD predicts that Canada and the U.S. will be the only countries whose youth unemployment rates will decline during 1984. Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the Government's policies in this area are not nearly as inadequate as Hon. Members opposite would have us believe.

There is no doubt that the past few years have been a difficult time both here and abroad. The recent recession left governments everywhere with little room to manoeuvre. Increases in the cost of money, couple with the entry into the eligible workforce of the baby boom generation meant that already fragile economies were stretched to the breaking point. In addition, our society is undergoing a profound change, largely as a result of new technology. It is only natural that when our society is changing so rapidly there should be a period of uncertainty during which traditional qualifications are unable to keep pace with technical innovations. But here again, through the Government's national training program, we are working at top speed to provide the young people of this country with the skills they will need to meet the rapidly changing demands of the Canadian labour market.

When these events are placed in the context of the proportion of young people in the workforce, the challenge that has been met successfully by the Government of Canada is truly remarkable. Most industrialized nations have seen a decline in youth as a percentage of the total workforce over the past few years. In absolute terms, however, Canada's decline, at 25 per cent in 1982, ranked third highest behind Austrlia and Portugal.

If time permitted I would have gone on and showed again that our performance in Canada fares much better than in the other industrialized countries. But just let me say that the difference here, and on that side of the House, is that our heart is in doing something for the youth unemployed.

Miss MacDonald: Creating it.

Mr. Simmons: The heart of the Opposition is in painting the worst possible picture. The Opposition's heart is in destroying morale. Ours is in lifting it, by providing programs, initiatives, through private enterprise and by reaching out so that the thousands and tens of thousands of youth across this country, who are relatively in better shape than their counterparts in countries I have mentioned, may find jobs. On this side we are not going to quit until we continue to address the problem adequately. We have addressed it fairly adequately but we have not yet done enough. But we are not going to stop, Mr. Speaker, because we have a few naysayers on that side who want doom and gloom. We believe in our youth and that is why we put our money where our mouth is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten minute period for questions or comments.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) said that he puts his money where his mouth is. I want to know how much money he has.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to answer that question. I want to draw attention to the concluding remarks I made which are now reinforced by the question and the questioner. While we believe that serious things need to be done on a continuing basis to provide more jobs for youth, the Hon. Member's approach to the problem is to prove that if he is not witty, he is at least half-witty.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, in the first part of the Hon. Member's speech he referred to what the benefit of an agreement on the offshore of Newfoundland would be to the employment picture in Newfoundland. Can the Hon. Member explain to this House why the Government of Newfoundland was unwilling to accept the revenue sharing offer made to the Government of Newfoundland by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) in the same terms which the Government of Nova Scotia was quite ready and willing to accept? Could he tell us what benefit that would have in terms of jobs to Newfoundland?

Mr. Simmons: I thank my friend from Miramichi for his question. He is right, of course. There was an offer made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). He calls to mind the distinction I made in my speech between the Government of Newfoundland as a whole and the Leader of that Government, Mr. Peckford. It is well known because it was documented on the national news that day.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Mr. Marshall went before national television cameras to say they were pleased with the outcome of the meeting, that they essentially had an agreement and that they just wanted to take it back to their respective governments. Within a few hours the Premier of Newfoundland was on the radio basically saying, "Not so fast, we don't have an agreement yet". He was scared to death that they might have an agreement. They almost had it, to the credit of Mr. Marshall and the Minister of Energy. They were so near that they went public with their accord; they announced it on national television.

I just want to correct my good friend, the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne), in one respect. He said that it was a deal somewhat like the one offered to Nova Scotia. He is wrong, only in the sense that it was a deal considerably better than the one offered to Nova Scotia. I mean no offence to Nova Scotians, but we in Newfoundland have learned that if we bargain long and hard enough we will get an even better deal than the other fellows, and that is the deal which the Minister of Energy offered Mr. Marshall.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, in his opening comments the Hon. Member perceived what was happening when I asked questions of the Hon. Member who spoke prior to him. When the Progressive Conservative Party was in office, it stated as its policy that there would be no direct job-creation programs from the federal Government, that that was the business of private enterprise, and that it would try to help out private enterprise.

I believe the Government of Canada should not only maintain but increase the amount of money going into the Summer Student Employment Program. In doing away with all direct job-creation programs, the Conservatives would see that program go down the drain. There would be no student jobs under it if they were in office again.

Would the Hon. Member explain to the House briefly the importance of that program which the Conservatives do not like and would not have in existence if they were in power? Would he explain to the House the types of accomplishments and the types of people who would work under that program? Could he indicate to the House whether or not they would have summer jobs if this federal Government program did not exist?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate focused very well on yet another reason; whatever our loyalty to this Party of which we are a part, we have a greater loyalty to the youth of Canada. We have to get out there and do our utmost to ensure that the crowd which would rob them of the few available jobs never get into office. He says it so well that he fires me up even more to get out there and ensure that the people of Canada understand what is a pig in a poke when they are asked to vote Tory.

Concerning his question about the Summer Canada Program, I cannot think of any better job-creation program in existence. When I travel through my riding, I see them helping the aged. I see them repairing roads in small communities which have no vehicular traffic. I see them out with shovels and wheelbarrows. I see them improving slipways and wharves. I see them doing things which add to the improvement of communities. I see them learning good job skills. I see them earning money so that they can attend university, return to high school or participate in funding the family budget, as meagre as it may be in some of those communities. I believe in that particular program. I shudder when I think of a day that it might be wiped out because of the rhetoric of some people about private enterprise who have no feeling in their guts about the youth of their country who desperately need that money and more of it.

Mr. Crosby: Question.

Mr. Manly: I have a question for the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I have used my discretion and decided that we cannot have questions or comments in the remaining 30 seconds.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the debate today the New Democratic Party had one speaker. I would have appreciated at least the last 60 seconds in order to place a few comments on the record.

An Hon. Member: Put the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I intend to put the question. May I just tell the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) that if there had been time remaining, he was the next speaker on the list. There was no time remaining. In fact, there were three more minutes, if time had not expired, for questions and comments.

[Translation]

Order. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House, under the provisions of Standing Order 62(9).

Therefore, the question is on the following:

[English]

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Deans) which was negatived on the following division:

FISHERIES

CRAB FISHING LICENCES SOUGHT FOR PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FISHERMEN

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to bring to the attention of the House the problem faced by Prince Edward Island fishermen in obtaining crab licences. The crab fishery was established off the coast of Prince Edward Island in the early 1970s, but over the years Island fishermen lost their right to hold licences for crab. The P.E.I. fishermen and the provincial Department of Fisheries have tried, in vain, to obtain crab licences from the federal Department of Fisheries.

One month ago the Department of Fisheries on Prince Edward Island sent a telex to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans asking whether Prince Edward Island could receive inshore licences for Zone 7 off the coast of eastern P.E.I. should it be closed to the offshore crab fishery. They have not received a reply from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, nor have they received an acknowledgement of their telex.

On May 15 the federal Government announced its management plan for the offshore crab fishery in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Under this plan it did close Zone 7 to the offshore crab fishery. P.E.I. fishermen are hoping that they will now be able to obtain inshore crab licences. It is certainly the right of Island fishermen to have the opportunity to fish crab, as the crab fishery was established on Prince Edward Island.

I urge the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to realize the frustrations the Island fishermen feel, as fishermen from other provinces fish crab within eyesight of the shores of P.E.I., have good catches, land them on P.E.I. docks, load them onto their trucks, and transport them to other provinces for processing. Mr. Speaker, I insist that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans award crab licences to Prince Edward Island fishermen.

THE MAGNA CARTA

REFLECTIONS PROMPTED BY HAMILTON EXHIBITION

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the occasion of the first display in Canada, at McMaster University art gallery in Hamilton, of one of the four handwritten copies of the Magna Carta, and the only one with King John's seal, provokes some thoughtful reflections. It was in 1215, almost 770 years ago, that King John signed the document that granted the King's subjects certain liberties, and which restrained the powers of the King himself within well defined limits.

The passage of the Magna Carta was a watershed event in the recognition of human rights. It originated at a time when the land was ruled by a feudal aristocracy. This document has become the most important single document in the development of constitutional and legal freedoms, not only in Britain but in many countries of the Commonwealth, and in the United States.

This great Charter of English liberties, granted under threat of civil war, is a symbol and a battle cry opposing oppression. Each successive generation has, in it, a protection of its own civil liberties. For this reason I would like to express the great honour which all Hamiltonians feel in being entrusted with this historic document for a period of two weeks.

PENITENTIARIES

INMATES' PRIVILEGES—OPPOSITION TO EXTENSION OF ELECTORAL FRANCHISE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, there is a move afoot by the bleeding hearts to amend the Canada Elections Act to permit prisoners in federal correctional institutions to vote.

Right now prisoners have a better life than hundreds of Canadians who are paying taxes. They have better food than those living on welfare, and even more choice than the workers in the below poverty jobs.

They have special trailers for conjugal visits of wives and even common-law wives, and now there is a rumour this will be extended to girl friends.

They have free medical and dental care, and access to guidance counsellors. They enjoy the best of pool tables, gymnasiums, and sports equipment. Scores of taxpayers do not enjoy such facilities and services. However, the bleeding hearts want more privileges, including the vote. If this keeps up, the old concept of punishment will disappear entirely.

• (1110)

No one wants to go back to bread and water diets, or to breaking rocks, and everyone wants to encourage rehabilitation. However, reform does not come from catering to those who break the law but rather from a desire within the individual to live within the law.

Can you picture prisoners who broke the Elections Act, or who are in for treason, or rape and murder, making demands on the candidates? Would candidates in ridings with an institution population that could sway the vote have to go from cell to cell making promises?

The bleeding hearts had better give this matter much more consideration. After all, our correctional institutions must be places of punishment and not houses of pleasure.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CLOSURE OF SCHOOLS ON MANITOBA RESERVES

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, on May 1 some 2,500 students were kept out of schools on four Manitoba reserves to protest the very sorry state of affairs at those schools. Over 600 of those students have yet to return.

Whether or not one agrees with the tactics, there is no denying that, when compared to provincial schools, reserve schools are seriously underfunded. Unfortunately, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) has not been giving this issue serious attention despite his nice sounding platitudes.

At the beginning of May the Minister agreed that their complaint was valid and promised to do something about it. He urged the chiefs to be patient and said that he would take their case to Cabinet as soon as possible. Three weeks passed, with no action.

Last Monday in Winnipeg, at a meeting with the four chiefs involved, the Minister gave his word to the chiefs that the submission for funding would go to Treasury Board on Tuesday. As of this morning that submission was still on the Minister's desk awaiting his approval before it could go to Treasury Board.

Indian students cannot wait for the Minister to squeeze their concerns into his leadership campaign schedule. If he cannot find the time to address these concerns he should resign and turn the Ministry over to someone with both the time and inclination to give Indian concerns the urgent attention they need.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

ABILITY TO HONOUR CANADIAN COMMITMENT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, some months ago a Cabinet document prepared by the Department of National Defence came into my possession. This document clearly indicated that, given the state of the equipment available to Canada's Armed Forces and the funding levels projected by the Government, it would soon be, if it is not already, impossible for Canada to fulfill the stated defence policy objectives of the Government including, of course, our obligations under NATO.

It is an unflattering comment on the media in Canada that, when this document was released some weeks ago in Calgary, it attracted very little media attention, but when it was released in Washington, D.C., last Wednesday, it immediately became a matter of significant media attention in Canada. That, however, is an aside to my main point.

Questions based on this Cabinet document were put in the House yesterday by myself and my colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). It was quite evident that the thrust of our concern was that the Government was not honouring our commitment to NATO. One such commitment, for example, is our obligation to provide 20 warships to NATO, ten within 48 hours' notice. The Minister's own document indicates that we will have a 12-ship navy by 1990 and therefore would be unable to fulfill that NATO obligation.

It is hypocrisy to claim that we are fulfilling our obligation when we are not. Hypocrisy is the worst of all alternatives.

Canada is extremely well served by our Armed Forces whose excellence is proven each year through competitions with our NATO Allies. However, in this modern era it is essential that we provide these Forces with the necessary capital equipment to enable them to do the job that needs to be done. I repeat that we are committed to NATO. We are proud of the quality of the Canadian Armed Forces. We are disappointed and angry at the Government's failure to provide our Armed Services personnel with the equipment necessary for them to do the jobs asked of them.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

IMPACT OF BEEF IMPORTS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, on May 16 the federal Government was asked to impose a temporary surtax on imported European beef and to consider a countervailing duty on this heavily subsidized product in order to protect Canadian farmers and meat workers in plants across the country.

The documentation is clear, and it is beyond dispute that the subsidized imports are doing material damage to the beef industry. Yet the Government is laying unreasonable obstacles in the path of the Canadian beef industry. For example, the manner in which Revenue Canada officials seek to employ the GATT Agreement is retarding expeditious action. Provisions under the Agreement require the beef industry to prove that an export subsidy exists, and they must establish that there is injury to the industry. But the Government is not willing to help collect data on which to base a claim for countervailing duty. The Government is making this industry jump through unreasonable hoops to prove their case, when it is so evident that there is damage being done.

Why does the Government not introduce the appropriate countervailing duty immediately? If we were the Government we would not be dallying and twiddling our thumbs. We would be doing something about our once thriving beef industry in order that it can compete with the European Community.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

THREATENED CLOSURE OF SASKATOON OFFICE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the people of Saskatoon are very much afraid that the National Film Board office which has been there for the last 25 years or more is in danger of being closed this fall. The National Film Board has given excellent service to the city of Saskatoon as well as to all parts of northern Saskatchewan that are served from that city, including about 500,000 people. This office also serves the University of Saskatchewan, the school boards and senior citizens. A particular program has now been introduced by the National Film Board to help new Canadians become assimilated, to learn the language, and to find out about the country of Canada. It has had excellent success.

• (1115)

About a year ago the same fear arose that the office would close. At that time thousands of Saskatoon citizens by petitions, by letters, and by whatever means a citizen can use, appealed to the Minister to continue the centre. Fortunately the request was accepted and the office was given a one-year extension, but again the same fear is present. Therefore I am asking, in the name of the people of our region of Saskatoon and northern Saskatchewan, that the Minister seriously look at this again and that any extension not be limited but that there be a permanent commitment to have a National Film Board library in Saskatoon.

ORAL QUESTIONS

[English]

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION

ISSUANCE OF ADVERTISING CONTRACTS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for whichever Minister is speaking for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport in the House today.

[Translation]

Today, the newspaper La Presse reported that the Canada Sports Pool Corporation gave advertising contracts to two agencies with very close links to the Liberal Party. MacLaren Advertising in Toronto was awarded the English contract and Planicom PNMD in Montreal or, more specifically, Mr. Jean Prévost, Vice-President of the Liberal Party, was awarded the French contract.

Mr. Speaker, lest we forget, Mr. Prévost is an old friend of the Minister of Finance and is also in charge of campaign advertising for John Turner, who said he was against the sports pool.

Are we supposed to believe this is another coincidence? Is the Government finally going to admit that the Canada Sports Pool Corporation is a hot bed of patronage?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to take the Hon. Member's questions as notice and submit them to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. However, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we can accept the Hon. Member's suggestion that we are not hiring competent people. Of course, it is competence that attracts orders in the private sector, and in the circumstances, I do not think politics has anything to do with it.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TABLE LIST OF APPOINTMENTS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister who just replied, or for the Prime Minister if he cares to get involved in this important matter. The Government keeps defending its appointments on the basis of competency. May I ask the Government therefore whether it is aware that Mr. John Serres, who has been appointed regional general manager for New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, was fired by the Atlantic Lottery Corporation for reasons of incompetency—the same gentleman the federal Government has now hired?

I also ask the Government to answer the question we asked yesterday. Will the Government table the entire list of everybody who has been employed to date by the Corporation so that we can see just how deeply this patronage goes.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, again I will be happy to draw my hon. friend's question to the attention of the Minister who, I am sure, will give it serious consideration.

Mr. Nielsen: What have you to hide?

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I can see that patronage questions do not interest the opposite benches very much.

Mr. Nielsen: They should.

Mr. Bosley: They are so used to them.

REQUEST THAT EMPLOYMENT CONTRACTS BE TABLED

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question, and perhaps I could ask the Prime Minister again whether he would like to get involved. I ask the Government not only to table the list of the appointments that have been made, but also to table immediately the contracts that have been made with those who have been hired, and for this reason, Mr. Speaker. We note that Miss Bastien and Mr. Larsen, who worked in the Prime Minister's office, have been taken on by this Corporation and that their contracts, for some reason, contain severance clauses that would grant them two years' severance pay should somebody in future decide to change the arrangements. These are supposed to be temporary jobs, as we were told yesterday. I think the House is entitled to a full explanation and a full disclosure of the appointments and the contracts. What, in goodness name, does the Government have to hide on this one?

● (1120)

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, again I will be very happy to draw my hon. friend's questions to the attention of the Minister. However, I would be interested in having it confirmed that when the present Leader of the Opposition was campaigning for the leadership of his party he said publicly—and I think it was reported in the press—words to the effect that, if he became Prime Minister, only Conservatives would be appointed to anything and everything, and that Liberals would be considered only after every living, breathing Conservative had been taken care of. I think my recollection is correct. If that is the case, my hon. friend should look at his Party's circumstances and at its own plans, instead of reflecting upon a program which has been approved by the Parliament of Canada and is aimed at supporting important institutions like the Olympics in Calgary.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REPORT CRITICIZING DEPARTMENT'S POWERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. A report has been handed down by the Canadian Bar Association in conjunction with the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. It is a slashing indictment of the operations of Revenue Canada. Among other things the committee, in reporting, pointed out that many of the powers now being exercised by Revenue Canada are in contravention of the provisions of the Charter of Rights.

Will the Prime Minister exercise some direction in terms of Revenue Canada and its relationship with the average Canadian? Will he give instructions to his Minister so that there will be an immediate reduction of the Department's reliance on search and seizure techniques, on fishing expeditions, to bring about a procedural fairness with respect to its activities and interrelationship with the average citizen which the people of Canada should be entitled to expect?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the Hon. Member that in my Budget of February 15 of this year, I proposed a number of amendments to the Income Tax Act and the Excise Act, amendments that were aimed at ensuring that all provisions of the Act would, in all cases, be in accordance with the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I would urge my hon. friend to read them carefully, and he will realize that many of these measures are the result of consultations I had personally with the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. We have been, and are, working together very closely, to ensure that the legal provisions concerning taxation in every way respect the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Minister of Finance will understand that the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants share the same view as the majority of Canadians with respect to the Minister's Budget, that it is simply not sufficient nor adequate in the least instance to deal with the outrageous way in which Revenue Canada has been treating the citizens of Canada.

DEPARTMENT'S INTERNAL ORGANIZATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister not exercise some direction and instruct his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, who apparently has no control over his Department, to take steps to alleviate the situation to which I referred with respect to search and seizure and fishing expeditions, and particularly to change the situation in Revenue Canada were its assessment people are being interchanged with the appeals branch? There is a relationship of friendship where in the public gets no fairness or equity in the appeals system within the Department. These are things which the Minister could do now. Let us see what he can do to make things better for the country before he leaves politics.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if there is a fishing expedition, it is the one we have just seen, and I would say that it is a pretty poor fishing expedition at that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have only got you on the hook. What do you expect?

Mr. Lalonde: Contrary to what the Hon. Member has said, I challenge him. He has not met recently with the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants jointly. I bet him that he has not met with them. I have met with them.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Look at our task force.

Mr. Lalonde: I am sorry he has made a statement about their views. I have met with them repeatedly, before and since the Budget. They have endorsed fully the measures contained in the Budget aimed at reforming income tax and excise tax.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Are you calling those people liars?

Mr. Trudeau: Are you? You're the liar.

Mr. Lalonde: They have endorsed the proposals that were contained in the Budget, so my friend had better acquaint himself with the facts before standing in the House and making such statements.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED CLOSURE OF MONTREAL PETROCHEMICAL PLANT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It deals with the proposed closure of the Petromont petrochemical plant, the loss of approximately 235 jobs in that plant, and the threatening of the downstream jobs, which comes to a total of about 750 jobs in the City of Montreal. This situation appears to have come about because the Government refuses to get involved in incentive pricing for petroleum and natural gas, and refuses to provide adequate assistance to those companies to revamp their plants and assist them with liquid natural gas. Will the Prime Minister, as one of the representatives from that area, indicate his willingness to inquire into this matter and see whether his Government might be prepared to save those jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been examining this issue very carefully over the last several months. The Minister of Regional and Industrial Expansion has received the report of the special task force on this subject. I recently discussed this issue extensively with the Quebec Minister of Finance. Both the Quebec Government and the federal Government are in contact to see what steps will be required in that regard. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is also involved. I assure my hon. friend that the Government is very much on top of this issue. We are working with the Province of Quebec to see what steps would be reasonable and satisfactory at the present time.

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is well known throughout the affected area that the Government task force report is such that the recommendations are going to put the industry under in that area. There is substantial concern in the Sarnia area that Polysar and, in particular, Petrosar, will be in serious difficulty if the Government is not prepared to get involved in incentive pricing.

The task force recommendations are such in terms of financing the conversion to gas liquids that we will probably see that company with continuing losses, cutting back its production, and creating a very difficult situation.

Is the Minister stating to this House that the Government does not have a game plan at this point to save the jobs at Petromont, the roughly 700 jobs affected there, and the 2,000 jobs in the combination of Petrosar and Polysar? Is the Minister stating that at this time the Government does not have an effective mechanism to assist a very viable petrochemical industry in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Of course not, Mr. Speaker. The best evidence is that some steps have already been taken, or at least have been discussed with the Province of Alberta. The Minister of Energy recently said that there were discussions with the Government of Alberta concerning the possibility of a special incentive price for additional sales of natural gas in Canada. A number of other steps are being examined and considered. We are indeed concerned about the future of the industry both in Sarnia and the Montreal area. We have been meeting with the spokesmen for those industries, repeatedly. As I indicated, I have had discussions with the Minister of Finance of Quebec. I believe that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has also had discussions with the Government of Ontario on this issue.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE REQUIRED

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the question did not deal with Alberta. It did not deal with the Government's rather disjointed incentive program. We are talking about Eastern Canada, the Province of Quebec, and the City of Montreal. We are talking about thousands of jobs, hundreds of millions of dollars in exports, and service to a very large domestic market in Ontario, the eastern-based petrochemical industries, those in danger of going down the drain. It is unfortunate that the Minister has sidestepped this very important situation. The other point is that the Government's task force is letting them sink as well. The Minister knows that.

Is the Government prepared to have this very important industry go down the drain? This is because it is not prepared to give adequate financial assistance to convert to liquid gas components, and it is not prepared to give incentive pricing on the very small percentage of petroleum products it uses.

• (1130)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is extremely misinformed, to say the least. He claims that the Government task force is letting the industry go under. Perhaps I might remind him that the task force included representatives from the industry. In fact, in discussions I have had with representatives of various industries, I have never heard any complaints about the recommendations in the report prepared by the task force.

Perhaps my hon. friend should first find out what the petrochemical industry's attitude really is to the task force report. As I pointed out, we have already taken a number of measures. The Hon. Member is asking whether we are very interested in this sector. I would remind him that as recently as last year, the Government of Quebec and the Government of Canada set aside $50 million for Pétromont. That is a lot of money, considering the fact that it is being spent on only one of many companies that are experiencing a number of problems at the present time.

The Canadian Government has demonstrated its interest in this sector, and we have already taken a number of measures. However, as in other areas, the Hon. Member should realize that there is a limit to the amount of public money that can be allocated to a given sector.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

IMPENDING INTEREST RATE INCREASES

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Farmers are reeling from negative indicators this year, including the one mentioned earlier today regarding subsidized beef from the European Community, lower initial prices for prairie grains, and high taxes, including those on farm fuels. Now the Farm Credit Corporation is saying that it will raise its interest rates again in the very near future. Can the Minister state whether or not he is prepared to intervene regarding these extraordinarily high increases in interest rates to 14.5 per cent and 15.5 per cent respectively by a Corporation that is intended to be the farmers' lender of last resort? Can he tell the House why the Government is trying to milk every cent from the farmers' pockets this year?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first, if there has been an increase in fuel taxes, my friend would have to address that question to the Government of his own province. There has been no increase at all in the federal taxes on farm fuels. As a matter of fact, as the Hon. Member knows, we reduced the tax on natural gas to zero last year, thus cutting down the taxes paid by the Canadian consumer by $800 million. My friend should know that that is what we have done.

As far as the Farm Credit Corporation is concerned, the Hon. Member also knows that the Corporation knew a significant loss last year. The Farm Credit Corporation is supposed at least to break even, and it did not succeed in doing so last year. It may not succeed in doing so this year either. However, the mandate of the Farm Credit Corporation is to try to help the farmers obtain loans by offering them the best possible prices that can be obtained on the market. However, the Farm Credit Corporation must lend money on the basis of the price it pays for the money it borrows, with a very small additional margin to pay for its operating costs. That is helping the farmers, not hurting them.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, there is also a significant loss created when farmers are forced off their farms.

FARMERS' ABILITY TO REPAY LOANS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, last year the accounts of the Farm Credit Corporation were in arrears to the tune of 11 per cent, and those arrears are expected to be well over 12 per cent this year. Considering the world commodity price indicators, can the Minister state whether any farmer will have the capacity to pay back the loans that he will be faced with for five years to 20 years, at interest rates of 14.5 per cent to 15.5 per cent? Given these indicators, can the Minister offer these farmers any hope as they face these kinds of escalating interest rates in the near future?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated repeatedly here in the House, throughout the country, and abroad, that we are very concerned about the increase in interest rates that is taking place in the international markets these days. The Hon. Member knows about our interdependence with the United States in particular, concerning interest rates.

If the Hon. Member has any doubts about the Farm Credit Corporation, the farmers do not seem to share his doubts since the loans made by the Farm Credit Corporation over the past two years have gone from something like $500 million a year to over $800 million a year. Farmers recognize that the Farm Credit Corporation is an institution that is at their service, and they are ready and willing to make use of it because they find that it is in their best interest to do so.

ENERGY

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND ENERGY COSTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that electrical costs in Prince Edward Island are the highest in the country. In fact its electrical costs are twice those of even the neighbouring Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

Last week the Minister of Energy stated that he opposed any federal subsidy to Prince Edward Island to deal with the problem because he was opposed to energy subsidies in principle. Could the Minister of Finance tell the House whether the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was speaking for the Government of Canada, or whether he was merely speaking as a Liberal leadership candidate? What is the Government's policy on this important issue?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Government in that regard has been made very clear and is well known. One of the reasons why the cost of energy, and particularly electrical energy, is so high in Prince Edward Island is because of the decision made by a Conservative provincial Government of that province to refuse the electricity that was offered by New Brunswick from its Lepreau nuclear plant because it was afraid of getting nuclear electricity out of its light bulbs.

At that time the then Premier of Prince Edward Island campaigned on the basis that he would never accept nuclear generated electricity from New Brunswick. The net result is that the province ended up buying more expensive fuel generated electricity from New Brunswick. That is one of the reasons why the price of electricity in Prince Edward Island today is higher than it should be. It was the decision of the Conservative provincial Government of that province that led to that situation.

If the Hon. Member would like to know what we are doing for Prince Edward Island, I would remind him that the federal Government, through joint agreements under regional expansion programs, is providing subsidies or help to the Province of Prince Edward Island to the tune of $1,200 per capita. That amount is several times higher by far than the amount provided to any other province. We have been doing this consistently over the years. I would invite my hon. friend to look at the portion of the provincial Budget that comes from the federal Government. He will then realize how much support we are giving to the people of Prince Edward Island.

IMPACT OF NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the irate Minister of Finance. If the federal Government is opposed in principle to any direct energy subsidies to Prince Edward Island except those subsidies relating to the nuclear industry, why is the National Energy Program replete with energy subsidies for other purposes unrelated to nuclear energy, as far as Prince Edward Island is concerned, and as far as any other province is concerned.

For example, the National Energy Program is keeping natural gas prices at 65 per cent of the price of oil, and is subsidizing the extension of natural gas pipelines. Is the Government now proposing to dismantle the National Energy Program in respect to the subsidies I have just mentioned, or does the federal Government have one standard for the rest of Canada and a completely different standard for Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not irate. I think the Hon. Member is getting funnier and funnier, and more and more irresponsible.

I must remind the Hon. Member that, under the National Energy Program, there are special programs for Prince Edward Island dealing with conservation of energy. For the people of that province, we made special arrangements for programs in that province, as well as in one or two other maritime provinces, that were not made available anywhere else in Canada. The Hon. Member should know that. If he does not know that, I invite him to look up the facts. He will find that in the area of energy we have taken special steps in his particular province because we knew that it would not have access to natural gas as easily as some other provinces would. We have taken steps in that regard so that we might take special care of Prince Edward Island.

I might also remind the Hon. Member again that, if he looked at the federal contribution under the regional economic expansion programs, he would see that no other province in the country has received as much per capita as the Province of Prince Edward Island. I am not talking about a difference of $2 or $3, or even a difference of $20 or $30. I am talking about a difference of hundreds of dollars per capita. We are paying more to P.E.I. than to any other province. My friend should get the facts straight.

SOCIAL WELFARE

YOUNG PEOPLE'S OCCUPATION OF MONTREAL SOCIAL WELFARE OFFICE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister, since the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not in the House.

In Canada, the unemployment rate among young people is twice as high as for the population in general. At this very moment, a group of young people is occupying the Welfare Office in Montreal. I see the Minister is in the House. As I was saying—

[English]

The Minister may need the translation.

An Hon. Member: It's pretty good Spanish.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Waddell: At this very moment, a group of young people is occupying the Welfare Office in Montreal. Does the Minister intend to meet this group in order to discuss the role of the federal Government and to help these people?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member, who made a special effort to put the question in French for Quebec listeners, will appreciate my answer.

We do not make a habit of intervening in areas that fall under provincial jurisdiction, especially when a demonstration has just started. Quebecers know perfectly well that although we reimburse 50 cents for every dollar spent on welfare and social services, including local community service centres, the province still decides how much is spent and on which programs. We intervene only to reimburse. That is why people have to go through officials channels to approach us, otherwise we would be meddling in provincial matters.

[English]

NATIONAL WELFARE STANDARD SUGGESTED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Minister must be aware that in Quebec you have single unemployable people under 30 on welfare who get about $150 a month, whereas if you are over 30 you get about $400. This is happening in Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and so on. Has the Minister vetted the question of whether this is constitutional, especially after the anti-discrimination parts of the Constitution come into effect next year? In addition, would she agree with me that perhaps we have to look at a national standard which can be applied across the country? We cannot really discriminate against young people like this, especially when they are twice as likely to be unemployed as older people.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is not aware of the situation in Quebec and of what is being done under the Canada Assistance Plan for young people in Quebec. For the Government of Canada, I have approved and put my signature on a pilot project, under the welfare program, for young people on welfare. The project is supposed to help them in a number of areas and in a very specific way. While the basic rule is that the project is not compulsory, they are given an opportunity to receive additional benefits as they upgrade their training and apprenticeship and if they work in various industries or community services.

Therefore, we are very involved. Let us say that whenever a province has a good idea, we help bring it to fruition.

The second part of the Hon. Member's question refers to the level of welfare payments.

[English]

The answer to that is, yes, I wish there were national standards discussed and decided by the whole country. Every province has welfare benefits below the poverty line. I think it is crystal clear, and we have said it often. We have made the public as aware as we can of that most unfortunate fact. But, again, I cannot negate the Constitution. It is there to help Canada function, has served us very well, and it is the provinces which must decide on the rates, and then we give them back 50 cents on the dollar.

STATUS OF WOMEN

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP IN UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. Next year there will be a world conference to celebrate the end of the United Nations decade for women. Can the Minister tell us if Canada is participating in this conference and what we are doing to prepare for it?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre has brought up this matter today. I am very pleased to say that on May 23, in New York, at the spring session of the Economic and Social Council, Canada was re-elected to the United Nations Status of Women Commission. I might add that we were the only incumbent nation to be re-elected. It is especially important we remain on the Commission because we are deep into preparations for the 1985 Conference in Nairobi. This, of course, ensures that we will have a very real part to play in the Nairobi Conference.

ENERGY

REMOVAL OF ONTARIO RADIOACTIVE WASTE

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for whatever Minister is responding for the Minister of Energy. On November 3, 1983, the Minister of Energy, on behalf of the Government of Canada, put his signature to a contract with the Government of Ontario for the temporary removal and storage of low level radioactive waste from the Malvern subdivision in Scarborough to an area in Scarborough on Reesor Road, close to the border of York North.

Clause I of that contract indicates that the federal Government assumes responsibility, to use the words of the contract, to remove and permanently dispose of the Malvern waste. Having regard to that clause, why did the federal Government participate in the removal, and temporary storage in what amounts to a large plastic bag, of low level radioactive waste on a two acre site close to the border of York North?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire as to the exact facts resulting from this particular agreement with the Government of Ontario. If I remember well, there were extensive discussions at that time between all the parties concerned, the municipality, the Government of Ontario and the federal Government. The joint conclusion was that the best site to dispose of the products was the site that was chosen. I will inquire of the Minister of Energy when he returns but, as far as I can recall, the facts of the case are that the decision was taken after extensive consultations with all concerned, and there was a joint agreement that this would be the best solution at the present time.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR PERMANENT STORAGE

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that it was decided to do what is being done. The fact of the matter is that in two places in this contract the Government of Canada acknowledges that it has responsibility for the permanent storage of this radioactive waste. Having regard to the acknowledgement of that responsibility, why does the federal Government not assume that responsibility and store this radioactive waste in a permanent location, rather than in a temporary storage site in a plastic container?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I remember that at that time a site had been found for permanent disposal and there had been very strong lobbying activities by Conservatives in the area. Also, the Leader of the Opposition at that time was involved in that discussion and intervened to prevent a permanent site being found and used for that particular purpose. Because of the agitation by Conservatives in that area in particular, it was concluded, between the Government of Ontario and the Government of Canada, that the best site was the one that was finally chosen. The Hon. Member might ask his friend, the former Leader of the Opposition, to inform him as to what exactly his role was at that time.

AIRPORTS

OTTAWA AIRPORT—USE OF AREA FOR GENERAL AIRCRAFT PARKING

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to whomever is responding for the Minister of Transport. At the Ottawa airport there is an area on the tarmac just west of the Department of Transport hangar that has traditionally been used for general aircraft parking, dropping off passengers, and staying for perhaps two or three hours. We are told now, Mr. Speaker, that that area is much too important for general aircraft and that people who work for the Department of Transport will be allowed to use it for parking. That gives us some idea of how important general aircraft are in the mind of the Government.

• (1150)

I see my good friend, the former Minister of Transport making notes. I assume he is going to answer. Will whoever is answering look into the matter and give me an answer as to whether we could not reasonably use that area for general aircraft?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I consider that to be the most important thing I have to do today. I assure my hon. friend that he will have his answer, either at four o'clock today or nine o'clock sharp on Monday morning.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed the most important thing the Minister will have to do. I look forward to the answer.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PLIGHT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA FORESTRY WORKERS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. The Labour Adjustment Benefits Program for laid-off older workers has only designated industries in central and eastern Canada, except for a very narrow designation for forestry workers in Port Alberni, a designation which ignores the well-known mobility of forest workers.

The entire forest industry in British Columbia is going through a very difficult transition stage at the present time. Many long-term workers who have little or no hope of ever finding permanent employment again, are being laid off. Would the Minister designate the entire British Columbia forest industry for benefits under the program?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of criteria for designating, one consideration being the availability of alternative employment in the area itself or an adjacent area. I realize that the industry referred to by the Hon. Member is going through a very difficult time. The Cabinet Committee that will be considering designations of other regions or industries will certainly take the Hon. Member's representation into account but will also have to consider all the factors that come into play when deciding whether a region or industry is to be designated.

[English]

EARLY RETIREMENT BENEFITS PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. The Minister should be aware that the long-term outlook, or at least the medium-term outlook, for British Columbia and Alberta is not good. The forest industry is going through a very difficult time. In the Cowichan valley alone over 1,000 jobs have been lost. Of 540 jobs that have disappeared from the Chemainus Mill, over 186 were of workers 54 years of age or older.

What plans does the Minister have to ensure that workers in western Canada, and in British Columbia in particular, will not be discriminated against under the terms of the program, but rather will be able to take advantage of a program that is meant for Canadians in all parts of Canada?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the Labour Adjustment Program is one program which is applicable all across Canada. It is not a plan that should discriminate against some regions. I want to assure the Hon. Member that this program is a national program and will be used all across Canada, and in particular in British Columbia.

With regard to further designation, I want to assure the Hon. Member that this is a last resort initiative by the Government. Clearly, putting people on pre-retirement is not the ultimate goal of the Government. The Government is more interested in creating good, stable, and permanent jobs. It is only when there is no other alternative that we resort to this last initiative, that is, to allow the labour adjustment benefits to permit someone to leave the labour market at an earlier age.

Through consultations with the Department of Manpower and Immigration we are seeking other alternatives for the workers of British Columbia. I think it is more important to create jobs than to put people on retirement.

FISHERIES

RELATIONS BETWEEN QUEBEC MINISTER AND FISHERMEN

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

I have met with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans a number of times to find out whether it would be possible to settle the dispute between Mr. Garon and the fishermen on the middle and lower North Shore. Last year, the Minister announced that about $10 million would be invested. However, Quebec has always refused to provide land where the fishermen could build their salting sheds or ice machines, on the middle and lower North Shore. I wish to ask the Minister whether he has finally succeeded in finding a way to help the fishermen directly, without affecting the fishing season which will soon be open, and also, when the Department of Fisheries and Oceans intends to get in touch directly with the fishermen to confirm the method to be used, so that the fishermen can at least be satisfied with what this Government is doing and we can then let the province of Quebec do what it likes about the fisheries in Quebec.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that was one of the big disappointments last year, after the federal Government had made funds available to our fishermen on the Quebec North Shore so that they could salt their own fish. The funds were approved by Cabinet, and we then asked the fishermen to find suitable sites to build these facilities. Up to now, despite pressure from the fishermen, the Government of Quebec has refused to provide land to build these facilities, which will belong to the fishermen. Because of the Quebec Government's stubborn attitude, all I can do is give the money directly to the fishermen, provided of course they can become owners of the land. We can only hope the Government of Quebec will realize it would be petty to take it out on the fishermen by refusing to give them a piece of land where they could build these facilities.

ESTIMATES

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF ENERGY ATTEND COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of External Relations. Last Friday when he was the Acting Prime Minister he undertook that his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, would be available this week for committees. That is reported at page 3865 of Hansard. As he knows, the Minister never was available for committees, in spite of our many efforts, and has not carried out his duties to defend his Estimates prior to May 31. Can the Minister explain why his undertaking was not lived up to?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I also read Hansard when I happen not to be present, and I saw that the Prime Minister did answer the question. He did take the subject up with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. My information is that the Minister of State for Mines made himself available to meet the committee.

FISHERIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES WEST COAST TREATY TALKS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. A week ago Members of the House from all Parties, including myself and the Members for Kenora-Rainy River, Skeena and Caribou-Chilcotin, met with four American Senators to discuss the breakdown of talks on the West Coast fishing treaty. It has been reported to the Minister that the consensus at that meeting was that the Senators from Alaska and Washington, and the Members of Parliament, felt that it would be to the advantage of both countries to get the talks started again, and that Canada should appoint a special official, as the Americans have done, to facilitate those negotiations. Can the Minister report to the House what action he is prepared to take?

• (1200)

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I was very happy with the report made to me by this delegation that represented all Parties in the House. I have met with the Hon. Member and other Members. I have already had a meeting with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and Deputy Prime Minister. We will certainly appoint a representative also, and hopefully the representatives of Alaska will remove their opposition and allow the treaty that has been negotiated by our two countries to be ratified as quickly as possible by our two Governments.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

COAL DEVELOPMENT PROJECT REJECTION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question would normally be directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but I am sure someone will answer for them. It concerns the rejection by FIRA of an application by Petro-Canada to enter into a joint venture agreement with a Japanese firm to develop its northeast coal deposits. I find this situation incredible, particularly in light of the fact that $3 billion of public money, including significant amounts of federal money, have been spent on infrastructure to deliver this coal to world markets. Why has FIRA taken this position, and is the Cabinet prepared to intervene and overturn this decision?

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the question and make sure that the Hon. Member receives an answer in the very near future.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HNATYSHYN—UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MR. TRUDEAU

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time with respect to some words uttered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who is now conferring with a member of the NDP. I will not question what they are discussing but it may be that the Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) was unjustly maligned and it was the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

The fact of the matter is that it is a very serious point of order in terms of the order of the House. During the course of Question Period—I would like to have the opportunity of checking the "blues", as I am sure you will, Mr. Speaker—I heard the Prime Minister referring to me as a liar. I think that word is unparliamentary. I know that the Prime Minister, who is the Prime Minister of Canada, would not want to have such ungentlemanly words attributed to him in the course of deliberations on the floor of the House of Commons.

I have had to take him to task on other occasions with respect to blasphemy on the floor of the House. He has done the proper thing on those occasions and withdrawn categorically those words. I hope that if in fact there was any such language the Prime Minister would stand in his place and demonstrate the fact that he appreciates this institution and is a person who understands the importance of Parliament and will withdraw those unparliamentary words.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as on previous occasions, I let my heart speak out in this place when perhaps I should not have. I heard the Hon. Member distinctly shout to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) words to the effect that he was saying that accountants and lawyers were liars. I think that is a very unparliamentary statement on the part of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was telling the truth.

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member says that it is the truth.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Whereas he was accusing them of untruths.

Mr. Trudeau: And the Hon. Member was saying that he was accusing them of being liars. That is very unparliamentary, to ascribe intentions to the Minister of Finance. I believe if you look at the rules, Mr. Speaker—obviously I do not have to tell you to look at the rules, Sir, because you know them so well—it is unparliamentary for any Member to impute motives to another Member.

As a good example to the Hon. Member, I will withdraw the use of the term "liar" as applied to him. I would like to make it conditional on his righting his own unparliamentary conduct when he imputed motives to the Minister of Finance. My withdrawal is conditional, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I can clearly say that, as far as anybody on this side of the House is concerned, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has no discernible motives.

I simply say that that is not sufficient. I say that it is unparliamentary language. The Prime Minister has an obligation to this institution, and if it is going to be conditional, I do not think that that is a proper position for the Prime Minister to take.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair did not hear the exchange. The Chair will have to examine the record of Hansard and will rule on the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) after having examined the "blues".

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and responsibility to present a petition on behalf of the citizens of my riding of Fraser Valley West. The nature of this petition is to express concern at the number of delays in court proceedings in which children are involved.

In view of the trauma of children as victims of conflict and the additional trauma of long and drawn out court proceedings that could further this trauma, the purpose of the petition is to ask the federal Government to ensure that court proceedings commence within six months of the date of criminal charges being laid and that these proceedings should be completed within a six-month maximum period thereafter.

BEAUFORT SEA COMMUNITY ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Question No. 631—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there a Beaufort Sea Community Advisory Committee and, if so, what (a) are its terms of reference (b) is the (i) name (ii) background or expertise (iii) term of appointment of each member (c) remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses (i) do the members receive (ii) did the members receive to date (d) other funding, if any, is provided by the Government?

2. During the fiscal year 1982-83, did the Committee meet and, if so (a) how often (b) how often is it required to meet (c) what matters did it consider (d) what reports and/or recommendations were published?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The Beaufort Sea Community Advisory Committee was organized in 1976 by Dome Petroleum Limited in order to provide an effective communication link between the industry operator and the affected communities. The communities of Aklavik, Inuvik, Tuktoyaktuk, Paulatuk, Holman, Sacks Harbour, each named two members to the committee. The members of the committee were northerners of wide experience within their communities and knowledgeable about local concerns. During its effective life 1976-1983, the committee was supported by the Dome Petroleum/Canadian Marine group and no government funds were provided for remuneration or travel. The funding provided by the company enabled the group to visit other countries and to investigate industry practices in Alaska, the North Sea, and other areas in order that the Beaufort Sea operations could be better assessed. The committee operated as an independent body setting its own meetings and agendas.

In the fall of 1983, the Beaufort Sea Community Advisory Committee disbanded as other more broadly-based initiatives such as the Development Impact Zone Societies sponsored by the Government of the Northwest Territories seemed to limit the effectiveness of the committee.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-33, an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, last Friday I had the great privilege, honour and pleasure of piloting amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act through this House, and I want to thank Members who were kind enough at the time to give the Government second and third readings on a single day.

I am afraid Members will not be as generous today. I do not blame them. The Bill I am about to introduce is a rather complex one. I can easily understand that Members will want to debate it for some time, for a few hours or a few days, in committee. The Bill I am introducing is Bill C-33, an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

I speak on behalf of three Ministers. I have become their Boy Friday! I speak on behalf of the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board who has primary responsibility for the stabilization policy; for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) whose Department administers the program; and for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) who presented this Bill to the House.

Mr. Gustafson: And you who are reading it.

Mr. Ouellet: And myself who will listen to it.

Mr. Pepin: I thank my distinguished audience for being present.

As Members are well aware, the Government in its Throne Speech indicated that:

> Amendments will be introduced to the Western Grain Stabilization Act to make it more responsive to the needs of producers.

That is, the grain producers. As we will see, the major amendment proposed in Bill C-33, amendments which benefit from the experience gained since 1976, which is the date of birth of this Act, will accomplish this objective. The purpose of my speech is to try and demonstrate that.

[Translation]

The effect of the amendments in Bill C-33 will be:

First, to incorporate an additional payment trigger mechanism based on net cash flow per unit of eligible marketings—all this will get a little clearer as we go along—to make the program more sensitive to price and cost variations during periods of increasing marketing volumes;

Second, to change the measurement of receipts under the program from a calendar year to a crop year basis, that is, instead of being from January 1 to December 31, it would be from August 1 to July 31 of the following year;

Third, to make spouses eligible for multiple participant status under the Act if they meet the other requirements prescribed for joint holders of permit books. All this will become quite clear as we go along.

Fourth, to give participants, once every ten years, the option of leaving the program. Those are the four amendments I gave in French.

[English]

Understandably there has been increasing concern in recent years on the part of prairie grain producers as to whether the Western Grain Stabilization Program was doing the job it was intended to do. For example, I am told the Program was a major item for discussion at farm meetings throughout the Prairies over the past several months. Many producers indicated that they were dissatisfied with the level of support provided by the program. The Government remains committed to the view that the main federal program protecting the incomes of prairie grain farmers is this one, namely, the Western Grain Stabilization Program. It is clear from the very high rate of producer participation—77 per cent, if my memory serves me well—that they too are committed to the program. If one can judge the acceptance of a program by the participation into it, this is one. As we will see in a moment, it is a voluntary participation.

Mr. Gustafson: They all want out.

Mr. Pepin: If that is so, we can stop now and that will make our job rather easier. But it is not so. I do not agree with the comment of the Hon. Member. If 77 per cent of farmers belong to a voluntary program, it must have a great degree of acceptance.

Mr. Gustafson: They are locked in.

Mr. Pepin: We will see shortly that they will be unlocked.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: The basic concept of the program, the "net cash flow concept"—and more on that later—is sound. However, the changing character of the grains industry has made it necessary to improve the pay-out mechanism in order that the program will provide assistance for prairie grain producers in time of real need.

The business or professional life of the western grain farmer is not an easy one. He, more than almost anyone else in the country, is dependent upon factors outside his control. First, he is dependent on weather conditions. Too little or too much rain, or rain at the wrong time of the year, can be devastating, as I learned in 1969.

Second, the western grain farmer is dependent on world markets for his volumes and for his prices. This is a factor over which he has no control and which reacts primarily to the size of harvests around the world.

Third, the western grain farmer faces constantly high input costs for seed, fertilizer and machinery which he, unlike most people, cannot pass on to his customers.

Finally, the western grain farmer depends on the grain companies, the railways, the dock workers, and the Wheat Board to market and move his product, and problems at any stage of that process can seriously affect his income. He lives dangerously and that is recognized even if he is not the only one; we all live dangerously, but some live more dangerously than others.

Mr. Gustafson: Something like the Liberal Government.

Mr. Pepin: My hon. friend is not in a kind mood today, Mr. Speaker. I have presented the House with some extremely favourable Bills the last two Fridays. My friend should at least be complimentary, gentle and sweet when he gets Bills of this kind, and he should reserve his bilious nature for other circumstances. Be that as it may, the farmers need all the help they can reasonably get. The protection offered by the Western Grain Stabilization Act is very significant to them and on that I am sure we all agree.

• (1220)

The net cash flow concept of stabilization, the concept to which I have already referred, stabilizes the difference between over-all cash receipts from the sale of western grain and over-all related costs of producing it. It was developed in the early 1970s in recognition that prairie grain producers, because of their dependence upon the export market, were subject to very volatile prices and volume changes as well as to cost increases in their production inputs. That concept was considered a major advance from previously proposed programs which would have provided only price support, as is the case in other agricultural stabilization programs. I look at some of my friends on the other side because I know they understand all that extremely well, as well as I do, which is very, very well.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: It is true. I understand these things very, very well. I paid the price to learn because I was, as everyone knows, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce responsible for the Wheat Board in the late 1960s.

An Hon. Member: You forgot it when you were Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pepin: And I got it double-barrelled when I was Minister of Transport.

An Hon. Member: And then they fired you.

Mr. Pepin: Then they sent me to greener pastures.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: We do that to the best horses!

In the early 1970s, export volumes had fallen off from the levels reached in the mid-1960s and farmers were faced with large grain stocks. Because of the difficulty in sales, price support alone would not have helped producers at that time. They could not obtain their price on goods which had not been sold. This was the situation in those dreadful years which I remember so well. Price support only helps if they can sell their product. It does not help when sales are weak. The Hon. Otto Lang, a distinguished gentleman if I know one—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: —recognized this problem and was determined to find a way to help producers through the bad times and try to reduce the historic boom-bust cycle of prairie farmers' incomes.

The existing Western Grain Stabilization Program, after extensive debate and consultation, came into effect on April 1, 1976. The other day when I said that the advance payment came into effect on a certain date, the Official Opposition, also called the Royal Opposition by the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier), was keen to remind me that this had been done during the Diefenbaker years. I am just "tit-for-tatting" when I say that this was done under a Liberal regime by my friend, Mr. Otto Lang.

The original Bill came into effect on April 1, 1976. I repeat that the principal objective of the program was to protect grain producers in the so-called Canadian Wheat Board area against unexpected declines in net returns due to short-term price fluctuations, reduced marketings and increased production costs. These are the three factors most often at work in these changes.

I should like to remind the House, because it could be useful for later reference, about the main features of the existing program. The amendments will be clear if the public—that crowd up there and down here—knows what the Bill is at this moment. Obviously the amendments are to the present Bill, and I will refer to its main features.

First, the program covers seven major grains and oilseeds grown in the Canadian Wheat Board area, the seven being wheat, barley, oats, rye, flaxseed, canola and mustard seed.

Second, the program runs on the calendar year—from January 1 to December 31. That is the way it runs now; we will see in a moment how that will be changed.

Third, stabilization payments are made to farmers for any calendar year in which the total cash flow—the basic concept—of all grain producers in the Wheat Board area is less than the average cash flow in the previous five years. That is the basis of it all at this point. It is a global concept. We will make a change to that, as the House will see in a moment.

Fourth, participation is voluntary for producers. They may opt out of the program during the first three years after opting in. For the first three years, if producers do not like it, they can get out. If a producer has not opted out during those three years, however, he remains a full participant permanently.

Mr. Malone: They will not.

Mr. Pepin: Yes, sir.

Mr. Malone: They will not stay.

Mr. Pepin: Fifth, since January 1, 1984, participating producers pay a levy of 1.5 per cent of their grain sales proceeds into the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, up to a maximum of $900. Previously the levy rate was 2 per cent. I just want to add that producers have contributed up to March, 1984, $365 million to the fund.

Sixth, the federal Government now contributes 3.5 per cent of grain sales proceeds of participants to the fund. So participants, 1.5 per cent; the Government, 3.5 per cent. Prior to January 1, 1984 that contribution was 4 per cent of grain sales proceeds. Between 1976 and the end of March, 1984 the federal Government contributed about $720 million to the fund. I see Hon. Members opposite making notes. I compliment them on their sense of responsibility.

Mr. Neil: They are all farmers.

Mr. Pepin: The federal Government pays interest on the balance left, after pay-outs, in the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. Between 1976 and the end of March, 1984 the Government paid about $244 million in interest into the fund. Hon. Members will notice the relatively generous federal contribution to this fund.

Mr. Hovdebo: Nine per cent.

Mr. Pepin: I am talking hundreds of millions, not chicken feed.

The Western Grain Stabilization Program paid out substantial amounts in 1977 and 1978. Together they amounted to $365 million. This was primarily because the average value per tonne of sales had fallen in those years from considerably higher levels in 1974, 1975 and 1976. However, grain prices recovered after 1978 and the incomes of grain producers improved. For example, in 1981 gross grain receipts to the prairie grain sector were a record $6.2 billion, with an average value per tonne of sales of $209 on total marketings of 29.6 million tonnes. In those circumstances there was no pay-out from the fund.

Now I should like to deal with the present more dramatic situation. It will justify the amendments about which I will speak. From 1981 to 1983, the average value of the seven grains covered by the program dropped by 20 per cent to $168 per tonne. Hon. Members will recall that in 1981 it was $209 per tonne. On the other hand, the volume of marketings by prairie grain farmers increased by 24 per cent to 36.7 million tonnes in 1983. We see a drop in price and a very great increase in volume. The very desirable increase in marketings of grain, which by the way is evidence of the commendable job which the Canadian Wheat Board and the grain industry in general are doing in selling and moving prairie grain, has had the effect of masking the negative impact of lower prices and of limiting the responsiveness of the Western Grain Stabilization Program to price declines. The fact that we have had a large increase in our exports has been masking or preventing a greater sensitivity of the program.

Similarly, the strong increase in volume helped offset the impact on net cash flow of increases in cost of production experienced in recent years. Consequently, although total receipts and, therefore, total cash flow have been at a high level in the past three years because of the record volume, farmers are nevertheless feeling some financial difficulty because of lower prices and higher costs.

Let me say it again slightly differently. Because the prairie grain sector is receiving more money due to increases in volume of sales, the total net cash flow has not dropped below the previous five-year average and there is, therefore, no justification under the Bill as it is for a pay-out, although there are serious problems in the grain sector due to price declines and cost of production increases. Clear? I was expecting applause, and that is why I paused. The conclusion is that the existing Western Grain Stabilization Program is not as sensitive to the financial situation of farmers as it should be. That is the reason for these changes I announce to-day.

The Government is cognizant of that difficult financial situation and the financial position of many grain producers is being squeezed, as we know, in that money left over after cash costs are met has declined over the last decade both in terms of purchasing power and as a proportion of the total receipts. One indicator of that is the number of farm bankruptcies, which have been increasing. I have all the numbers but I will not include them in my text.

Outstanding farm debt has also increased considerably in recent years. Total farm credit outstanding now exceeds $20 billion, 50 per cent of that in the west. As the Canadian Federation of Agriculture workshop on farm credit in the spring of 1983 noted, it is generally agreed that some 10 to 15 per cent of farmers were "in financial difficulty because of farm debt".

As no stabilization pay-out for the calendar year ending December 31, 1983 would be triggered under the existing program, it was therefore clear to the Government that amendments were required to make the program more responsive to the farmers' financial situation. The Government assessed very carefully the factors that seemed to be limiting the effectiveness and responsiveness of the program.

The major factor limiting the program's responsiveness has been the increasing volume of grain marketing in relation to the changes in selling prices and production costs. Even though prices had declined for two years in a row and are at relatively low levels compared to 1980-81 levels, a pay-out under the Western Grain Stabilization Act was not triggered for 1983. That situation is going to continue unless changes are made. The grain industry has generally accepted an export target of 36 million tonnes of grains and oilseeds by 1990. We have already reached total grain exports of 29.5 million tonnes in 1982-83, and in the current crop year exports are running slightly ahead of last year. This phenomenon of high volume is most probably, God willing, here to stay. Therefore we have to adjust the stabilization program to this new reality. This implies that grain marketings will continue to increase gradually and this trend in volume of marketings will continue to reduce the sensitivity of the program to price declines and to cost increases.

In light of these changing circumstances, adjustments to the plan are now needed. This is the reason for the major amendment which is being proposed to the program, that is, the incorporation of an additional payment trigger mechanism based on net cash flow per tonne of eligible marketings to make the program more sensitive to price and cost variations during periods of increasing marketing volumes. I say "additional" because the existing payment trigger mechanism based on aggregate net cash flow, taking into account changes in prices, costs and volumes, will be retained as it could still be needed to provide income protection should volumes stabilize or decline. We will have a double mechanism, each adjusted to different circumstances.

There are three other changes being proposed in the program at this time. A second factor which has limited the ability of the Western Grain Stabilization Program to respond quickly is the fact that the Program operated and still operates on a calendar year basis. Under the existing Program, it is not possible to finalize pay-outs until October, ten months after the end of the stabilization year on December 31, since costs are obtained by survey made in June/July, after farmers have completed their previous year's accounts for tax purposes, and more time is required for computation of aggregate costs. Changing to a crop year will have the advantage of reducing the lag between the time when a farmer markets his crop and the time when calculation of whether there will be a stabilization pay-out for a year can be completed and a pay-out issued, if warranted.

Additionally, measurement of gross receipts on a crop-year basis would provide a closer relationship of receipts generated by the sale of a crop to the costs of producing that crop. With the amendment to change measurement of receipts to a crop year, it is expected that stabilization payments would be made within three to four months, that is October/November, after the end of the stabilization year on July 31, as opposed to ten months as has been the case up until now. Presumably computers make some of these improvements possible.

Mr. Gustafson: Also an election.

Mr. Pepin: Possibly a combination of the two.

The third change is necessary because producers have expressed concern that they are, as we just heard from a distinguished Member of the Opposition, locked into the program if they do not withdraw during the first three years. Indeed, although participation in the program is voluntary initially, it becomes compulsory after three years and this feature has limited producers' flexibility to decide whether the program was still meeting their individual needs. The Government has responded to many requests by proposing an amendments that will permit some additional flexibility of participation. Producers will be given an option on the tenth anniversary of the Program—1976, consequently 1986—and each tenth year thereafter.

As a fourth amendment, the Government is also proposing to remove the restriction which prohibited participation by spouses if they were both members of a corporation, partnership or farm co-operative. This change will make the Western Grain Stabilization Program compatible with proposed amendments to other legislation currently before Parliament, one of them last week, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. The net effect of this change will be an increased ability of producers to participate and some increase in producer and Government contributions to the Program. This change recognizes the importance of the family farm and the role played by both partners in a farm family.

It is clear that the Government is responding in a major way to changes in the grain industry and particularly in the financial situation of prairie grain producers. Without the proposed amendments to the program which are contained in Bill C-33, there would be no pay-out under the Western Grain Stabilization Act during 1984 for calendar year 1983. It is expected that a pay-out would have been triggered for the 1984 calendar year but it could be paid only in 1985 under the existing Western Grain Stabilization Act.

The Government has assessed other options for change which have been proposed and none of those other options increased the short-term responsiveness of the program while at the same time representing a significant long-term improvement to the Western Grain Stabilization Program. We must combine the short-term advantage with the long-term advantage. Some of the propositions that have been made offer short-term gains without longer term gains. This Bill purports to introduce a fine combination of the two. The proposed amendment to the additional pay-out triggering mechanism in Bill C-33 will result in total pay-outs over a several years period in an amount that would about double the pay-outs under the existing program over the same period, yet the Western Grain Stabilization Fund will remain actuarially sound with the proposed changes.

The Government has assessed the proposal put forth by the Standing Committee on Agriculture which is to use a three-year average of net cash flow as the support level. The Committee studied the inclusion of additional costs and particularly the costs of interest on machinery. In my notes there follow two or three pages dealing with this subject. I will not impose those pages on my hon. friends who are listening so gently and kindly because this subject would be easier to study with a map and with charts than to express in words.

Those two questions in particular are very, very complex. In both cases a great deal of calculating was done to determine the plan which would be most beneficial to producers. It is our belief that the plan being presented in the Bill is the best one for producers over the short and longer terms. However, I am sure Hon. Members will want to raise some questions regarding some of the other options which have been proposed and I hope that they will do so at committee stage.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, let me clear up some of the confusion unfortunately caused by some Hon. Members of the House regarding the amount of money that producers have received from the Western Grain Stabilization Program relative to the amount of money they have contributed by way of levies. Total pay-outs to producers since the inception of the program have been $368 million, although as of today the fund reached $900 million because of government contributions plus interest, as I already indicated. The total levies paid to producers from 1976 until the end of the first quarter of 1984 have totalled about $365 million. A pay-out of $300 million for 1983-84 under the proposed amendments would mean that producers will be about $300 million ahead in terms of pay-outs relative to levies since the start of the program in 1976. While the fund will still have over $600 million in it, and I hope Hon. Members followed all of those numbers which were quite simple—

Mr. Neil: You did not talk about interest on their money.

Mr. Pepin: Yes, the interest is included. I remember referring to an amount of $224 million. Let me emphasize, as I have said before, that interest is being paid on the producers' levies and on the Government's contributions.

I have an additional announcement to make. My friends are waiting for that one, Mr. Speaker. The Government recognizes the serious cash shortage currently faced by farmers. There is no doubt that the approximately $300 million will be welcomed by producers when it is paid. I have already indicated that under the new system it would be paid some time at the end of fall and perhaps in November. However, we have no doubt that the pay-out will occur, and while several factors like space available, quotas, etc., will affect the ultimate size of that pay-out, we want to get money into the producers' hands as soon as possible. Therefore, at report stage the Minister of Transport will present an amendment providing for an interim payment prior to July 31.

Mr. Neil: Does that mean an early election?

Mr. Pepin: No one knows when the election will take place.

Mr. Malone: You want to bet?

Mr. Pepin: If my hon. friend knows when the election will be, I would gladly receive his confidential information. However, it would be a one-way street because I could not tell him when the election will take place.

Mr. Malone: Right after the pay-out.

Mr. Pepin: There are so many factors involved. Therefore, the Minister of Transport will bring in this amendment at report stage. This will be a one-time provision intended to deal with the fact that no payment has occurred for a number of years and to recognize the producers' immediate need for cash. While I cannot tell Hon. Members the exact amount today, it is anticipated that approximately one-half of the total pay-out will be made this summer.

There it is, Mr. Speaker. The changes which the Government is proposing to the Western Grain Stabilization Act through this Bill will, in my view, make a sound contribution to the efficiency and sensitivity of the program, qualities which were lost to some extent because of changing circumstances. I explained those changing circumstances to my hon. friends in great depth and I am sure they are already quite well aware of those circumstances.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I was pleased to see the Hon. Minister, who is the former Minister of Transport, speaking so passionately on behalf of the farmers and also on behalf of the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, who cannot be in this place. We did notice the absence of western Members on that side of the House. In fact, I suppose we did notice the absence of Members in general. In addition, the Minister said that he was speaking for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who is obviously out campaigning for the leadership of the Liberal Party. The expressions in the Minister's speech were well made.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. It has been mentioned by the Chair previously that no reference should be made to the presence or absence of Hon. Members. The Chair let the general comment go but I would caution of the Hon. Member not to refer to the specific absence or presence of any Member in the House of Commons.

Mr. Bosley: Or general to those who are specifically absent.

Mr. Gustafson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was referring generally to the three Ministers who are not here who are responsible for this Bill and I was complimenting the former Minister of Transport because he has always occupied a sort of soft spot in the hearts of many farmers. This is particularly so, Mr. Speaker, regarding the Minister's work related to transportation. It is too bad that we cannot say the same thing for the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy), who is not here to introduce this Bill and in fact is out campaigning for the hon. person from Bay Street who was just recently appointed director of the CPR and Seagram's. The farmers have a great deal of concern about whether, should he become the Prime Minister of Canada, he would fight for the best interests of western farmers or not. There is certainly a great deal of concern about that.

• (1250)

Bill C-33 has been of great concern to the Conservative Party. I am pleased to see that the Minister introduced today an interim payment, because the farmers certainly need the money. We called for that and I believe this Bill would not have been brought to the House if it were not for the Conservative Party.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Gustafson: I believe the Liberal Party has been playing politics with this Bill and in fact playing politics with the money which belongs to the farmers. Had it not been for the strong representation of western Members who are farmers, who understand the program and what it has not done, this Bill would not be before the House. We had drafted an amendment to provide for an interim payment. We are grateful for the interim payment. However, we do not like the fact that the Government is playing politics with farmers' money.

As early as last summer, the Conservative Party called for an interim payment and for a western grain stabilization payment for farmers. We have been doing that for over a year. The record will show that on September 16, I called for it in this House. On October 5 the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) called for it in the House. Again on October 7 we called for the western grain stabilization payment. On October 25, 1983 we again called for it. On November 17 the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who knows farming well, called for it. Yet it was not forthcoming. On December 8 the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), who is the agricultural representative for this Party, called for it. The Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) called for it on April 17. On April 18 again the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette called for it. The Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) has called for it, the Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) has called for it, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) has called for it, and the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has called for it. The list goes on and on. The Conservative Party has been calling for it for over a year. But the Government has played politics with it.

I would like to read part of a news release which appeared in The Assiniboia Times. Last summer I said to the reporter: "Watch the Liberals; they will play politics with the farmers' money". He wrote an article on May 2, 1984. I did not request him to write it. It reads:

> I can remember very clearly at about this time last year when Conservative M.P. for Assiniboia Len Gustafson told me there would be "a flood of money" from the stabilization fund just before the next federal election. At that time, his words sounded extremely partisan. Although I never dismissed his prediction as just more politicking for his constituents, I did, however, feel that the federal Liberals would be a little more inventive or subtle in how they gave the farmers back their own money before an election.

That is exactly what has happened. When the program was designed in 1976 to meet the cash flow problems that farmers were facing, it was not designed to be a program for political propaganda. It was not designed to be a program to put the farmers' money into an account that the Government could use for the benefit of its political expendiency. It was meant to help meet the cash flow problems of farmers.

What was this program all about? In 1976 the Hon. Otto Lang introduced the program and said that it was to meet the cash flow problem of farmers. Let us look at the history of what has happened in the farming community and how western Canada has suffered neglect under this Government because of its failure to move. I have heard it said by senior Members who sit on this side that they did not believe the program would work at the time it was introduced. The Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, who we remember so well for his contributions to Canada, said: "If there were two cow pies in the pasture, the Hon. Otto Lang would step in both of them". I would like to say that grain stabilization has been one of them. There is no question about it: the program has not worked and I will show you, Mr. Speaker, how it has not worked.

Farmers have paid into the program since 1979. Members on this side, many of whom are farmers and permit-holders, understand the program well. Farmers initially paid $500 per year. Then it was increased to $900 per year. Then it was increased to $1200 per year. But since 1979, there has not been a payment to farmers. If a farmer began paying into the program in 1979, by now he would have paid the maximum of $5,700 and he has not received any return. The accumulated interest on that $5,700 amounts to over $8,000 of the farmer's own money. Do not let any Member or Minister on the Government side stand in his place and tell the farmers how much money the Government is paying to them. The Government is not returning the money which belongs to the farmers. Again and again the Minister of Agriculture stands in his place and indicates how much money the Government is putting into the program.

Due to the time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that we extend the sitting through the lunch hour because of the serious nature of this debate. We have a good deal more to say with respect to the Bill. It is important that it be passed quickly so that farmers can get their money. Therefore I move:

> That in accordance with Standing Order 8(4) (a) this House extend the sitting through the lunch hour for the purpose of considering second reading stage of Bill C-33.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Assiniboia has moved the motion, seconded by the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), that the sitting continue through the lunch hour for the purpose of considering second reading stage of Bill C-33. In accordance with the Standing Orders, it requires that 25 Members rise in their place to object to the motion. Are there any Members who object to the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There are no Members rising; therefore, I deem the motion to be carried.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) on a point of order.

• (1300)

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment, on this occasion, that the Government is most willing to co-operate. That is why no one on this side of the House rose to object.

We hope that for other legislation, we shall occasionally have the support and co-operation of the Opposition parties.

The Minister responsible for the Bill has an appointment at one o'clock, but I shall remain in the House to listen to the speeches of our hon. friends.

[English]

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I am flattered that the Minister is going to remain in the House and hear about the importance of this Bill to farmers.

I was saying earlier that we wanted to give quick passage to this Bill. I read a list of Members who called for quick passage. In addition to that, our leader, the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney), rose in the House on April 4 last and asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) if he would give immediate passage to the Bill so that farmers could have their money in their hands for spring seeding. We all know the history and the Prime Minister did exactly what he has been doing for farmers for a number of years. An example of that is 1968, when he told the farmers to sell their own wheat. It is clear that the Liberal Government continues to treat farmers across Canada as second-class citizens. I will back up that statement with many examples of farmers being put on the back burner.

Following the request made by our Leader, the then Opposition House Leader, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), sent a letter to the Government House Leader saying that we were willing to pass the Bill immediately. The Government has been playing politics with this Bill for well over a year, when the farmers could have had the money in their pockets. I want to put that on the record so that the farmers are aware of how they have been treated.

Earlier I was speaking about the amount of money farmers have paid in. The maximum for each farmer is $5,700, which with interest would add up to over $8,000. This is their money and they need it. The Minister talked—about farmers opting out. He mentioned the fact that it was a major topic of discussion on the Prairies. It was, Mr. Speaker, because farmers need the cash now. They should have had it in their pockets before seeding and they were refused. Farmers have faced very serious economic problems. The Minister of Agriculture and his Government have failed to address the problem of interest rates. It is no great service to the farmers to charge them 1 per cent more than they can get from the banks. They talk about priorities. Is that a priority consideration for agriculture? We need a government which will give some consideration to agriculture. We need to call an election to change this Government and give some priority to agriculture. That will stimulate the economy to the extent it needs to be and could be stimulated.

I referred to opting out, Mr. Speaker. A farmer who opts out does so without the return of his contribution. The situation which has existed in this program comes about because of three major factors. Volumes have increased significantly. How did that come about? Because our farmers have been very productive. If you go back into the history of agriculture in North America, you find that in 1905 the farmers made up 95 per cent of the population of Canada. They produced to the best of their ability. Then, because of technological developments and automation, and particularly because of the productive nature of farmers, we have been able, with 4½ per cent of the population, to produce enough food to feed Canada, and the world if it was distributed properly. I am proud to stand in this place and be counted as one of those productive people, but I am sorry to have to tell you that we have seen this Government neglect that kind of productivity. Farmers contribute some $8 billion to this country's balance of payments, money which could be used to stimulate the economy.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what would happen if a Conservative Government were elected in this country, a Government with some understanding of agriculture, a Government with some representation in agriculture, a Government with a Leader like ours who would make agriculture a priority? If I had the time I would like to extend that line of thought into other industries such as forestry, mining and manufacturing, fisheries and so on. We have had examples of the Government paying out billions of dollars to subsidize certain areas of the economy, yet it does not give priority to agriculture. The Budget indicates that. It was a $100 billion Budget, Mr. Speaker, and how much of that is going to agriculture? Some 1.2 per cent, or roughly $1.2 billion. Agriculture is on the bottom of the ladder and it should be at the top.

This Western Grain Stabilization Act is an example of how the Government has dealt with this very serious matter. It failed to use the program. Now the Minister says that the Government is addressing the problems, and we are thankful for that. But why is this happening now? It is because there is to be an election. It should have been done two or three years ago. Grain prices dropped two and a half years ago, costs went way up, fuel costs doubled for farmers but this Government did not move. Our Leader, the Hon. Member for Central Nova, who I believe is going to be the next Prime Minister of this country, stood in his place and asked the Government to remove the 9 per cent sales tax. Did the Government remove it? No, it did not. Today we had an outstanding example of how the Government treats us. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stood in his place and, although I would not think knowingly, possibly misled the Canadian people about the price of fuel.

Fuel is crossing the 49th parallel in my own riding at the port of entry of Regway for 78 cents a gallon. You will remember the 18-cent tax. There is no provincial tax in Saskatchewan or Alberta on farm fuel. I sat on the energy comittee when the Minister led that committee and brought in a dreadful national energy policy which hid away several aspects.

When we were defeated on the 18 cents tax we went home to fight an election. In the little town of Macoun fuel cost 98 cents a gallon. Today it is close to $1.90 a gallon. The Minister tells the Canadian people that he does not know where this money is coming from when fuel is crossing the border at 78 cents a gallon. It is coming right out of the co-operative refineries at Regina and as many as 15 truckloads a day are crossing the border.

I would like to have the record set straight as to how farmers and the rest of the people of Canada are being dealt with by the Government. We have had Liberal promise after Liberal promise. In the area of agriculture the Liberal Government has given us this kind of promise again and again. I fought in two elections in the Assiniboia riding. Long before I got actively involved in running for office the Liberals promised that they were going to remove the capital gains tax. They do a little here and a little there but it never comes about for farmers.

There was a clear indication by the Government that there was to be $16 billion spent on the development and upgrading of transportation. What are we getting? In my riding we just received a letter saying that another rail line will be abandoned from Big Beaver to Coronach. We hear reports that people working on the railroads are being laid off. The amount of money which was to be spent from 1976 to 1992 has been cut back by the Government from $16 billion to $12 billion. The Government continues to promise the people that it is going to double-track and rebuild.

You will hear all kinds of these promises in the next few months, Mr. Speaker. They will be making promises about the capital gains tax. I ask the people of Canada and the Members of the House to reconsider and to think about the 18-cent tax on fuel when they hear some of the promises that will be made. It is clear that promises which deal with agriculture or farmers are never meant to be kept. All one has to do is look at the slate of leadership candidates and the direction they have taken. How can a leader of the country fight for the best interests of farmers when his directives come from a different area and a different perspective?

I do not want to take a great deal more time, Mr. Speaker, because there are other western Members who would like very much to speak on this Bill to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act. However, one most important area is left out of this Bill. We agree with this Bill and certainly want quick passage of it. We are happy that the farmers will get some money, even if it is at the expense of playing politics. However, the area which is left out is the level of payment. For months we have been asking for a retroactive payment to be made to farmers. That would increase the level of payment.

Yesterday I had farmers from Alberta and Saskatchewan in my office. They told me that they are going through bankruptcies. They told me that they are facing the most severe financial cash flow problems that have been faced in the Prairies in their lifetimes. It is reminiscent of the 1930s when farmers lost their farms through bankruptcies. They lost their farms because they could not meet their financial obligations. A program was put in place to address this problem and we failed to use it when it was needed most. That is serious neglect on the part of the Government. The level of payment should be increased significantly. The money is there and the Government has been using it.

If the Government makes a pay-out on the basis it says it will, it will be returning only a portion of what the farmers have paid in. That will include no major government contribution whatsoever. There should be a government contribution to that fund at this time. The Minister of Agriculture stands in his place and says that it is $2 for $1. That is another Liberal promise. The farmers' money is barely being returned. On paper it indicates that the Government should pay $2 for every $1 contributed by the farmers. That is not so, Mr. Speaker. That is not happening.

In concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I ask what the alternative is to this kind of handling of a program which could have been a good program if the Government had put the priority where it should be. Quite clearly, Mr. Speaker, there is only one alternative. We have a tired Government on our hands. Someone indicated to me that giving the Liberal Party a new leader is not the solution. He said that you can paint and repaint an old car, but unless you change the motor and the transmission and clean up the situation, nothing is going to change. I am suggesting that in the best interests of agriculture, those concerned about grain and farmers across the country, the country needs a Progressive Conservative Government with representation in agriculture and a leader who is sensitive to the needs of the farmers and the economic development of the country. Then you will see a Canada that will be built with the help of the farmers in the best interests of all Canadians.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak on the western grain stabilization Bill today. I am pleased also that the Minister, who is absent at the moment, did suggest an amendment which may make it possible to have an immediate pay-out under the western stabilization plan.

However, I want to deal with the purpose of the Western Grain Stabilization Act, what it does and does not do. I would like to begin by comparing the rigidity of the Western Grain Stabilization Act to the much more flexible Agricultural Stabilization Act. I can do this by citing three examples of how the flexible Agricultural Stabilization Act has enabled farmer to receive help when they needed it much more quickly than provided for by the Western Grain Stabilization Act, which has not given a pay-out for the last five years.

On December 21, 1981 there was a payment under the Agricultural Stabilization Act of $66.8 million for eight commodities. With respect to winter wheat in Ontario, which comes under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, a change was made to that Act within a few weeks because of the vomitoxin emergency. As a result of that vomitoxin situation, the payments were increased from the 90 per cent which the Act allows to 100 per cent in a very short time. We are unable to get a pay-out at all in the case of western stabilization plan, let alone a significant increase.

My second example relates to a period during the late months of 1982 when there was an announcement under the Agricultural Stabilization Plan that there would be no payment for corn during that particular year. However, on Febraury 1, 1982 that decision was changed with the announcement that there would be a payment of $4.48 per tonne for corn. The reason given for that change was that the Stabilization Board received new statistics from Statistics Canada and the recalculation allowed a new payment. This example shows the flexibility of this stabilization plan compared to the Western Grain Stabilization Plan, which has no flexibility at all and no mechanism through which a minister or a government can make a payment at any time.

The third example of the flexibility of the Agricultural Stabilization Plan concerns the payment to apple growers in eastern Canada last year who suffered frost damage. Frost damage on grains in particular areas of western Canada is a common and almost yearly occurrence. However, we have never been able to convince any government that it constitutes a disaster for which a payment should be made.

One would think that when the Government decided to amend this Act, it would do so on a broad basis. In fact, the Government has its own report on this which, for the record, is the Canada Grains Council Report: A Strategy for Expanding Grain Production in Western Canada. It was published in Winnipeg in April, 1983. This government agency report deals with grain generally. However, Chapter IV deals with the income stability of grain farmers. That chapter points out a number of very interesting facts. For instance, financial instability is characteristic of agriculture. This fact has been recognized for many years by most people who work in agriculture. This report suggests that solutions should be found to this financial instability since it constantly destabilizes the agricultural industry as a whole and its production sector in particular.

It also points out that this financial instability is detrimental to the latecomers in agriculture who have the least equity in their operation because they cannot tolerate a drop in their cash flow in order to pay bills that are immediately due. I was pleased that the Minister recognized the fact that those who have high debt loads in agriculture are faced with a situation which prevents them from having a viable operation. The Western Grain Stabilization Act was established to counter the variation in cash flow to some extent. Obviously, any business will be unstable if it cannot predict its cash flow.

I must commend the Canada Grains Council for this report. It shows that there is a need for a means of providing income stability as far as farmers are concerned. At least some agencies of the Government recognize this need. In light of this recognition, the Canada Grains Council reviewed the Western Grain Stabilization Act and suggested changes to it. It suggested a number of reasons why this Act is inadequate. Let me put some of those reasons on the record. I repeat that this is a government agency document.

The first shortcoming pointed out of the Western Grain Stabilization Act is that it is not producer-specific. The individual financial situation of a particular farmer cannot be affected by the total Western Grain Stabilization Program. Therefore, the new farmer or one who has accrued a lot of debt in order to begin operations cannot be targeted as a receiver of funds under the Western Grain Stabilization Program. However, one would think that this particular group would be a target for this program. It is this group which is most in need of the money and a stable cash flow, but that is not recognized in the Act that is before us. It is not being addressed by the amendments that are being put before the House today.

Second, it is not region-specific. A poor financial or market condition can affect one area of the production region with which we are concerned but not affect another. For example, a couple of years ago the whole area of southern Manitoba did not have a crop at all because of floods from heavy spring rains. Although those producers needed a stabilization payment that year, they did not receive it because the remainder of the region, Saskatchewan and Alberta, had a bumper crop with high quality wheat and high prices. Therefore, since the production of the other two prairie provinces was balanced against Manitoba, it prevented a pay-out. Consequently Manitoba farmers at that time did not get a pay-out when they needed it. We do not have the regional coverage. This is not in the new Bill nor in the amendments.

I know every farmer who hears this debate can tell us about a particular area that is affected. For instance, the Peace River country of British Columbia and northern Alberta quite often gets caught in a situation of not having a crop when the rest of the Prairies has. In the last couple of years Hudson Bay, in the northeast part of Saskatchewan, has had three successive crop failures. This area should have received some help from the stabilization plant but could not because of the structure of the plan.

The third shortcoming which this document points out is that the Bill is not grain-specific. There are many farmers in the west who are very specialized. They produce flax, canola, or one particular grain. If the bottom falls out of the flax market, then all flax producers get a very small return. If the weather is bad in a particular year, the flax crop is affected and the same thing happens. There is no provision in this Bill or in the amendments which would allow those farmers to collect under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. This shortcoming was recognized by the Canada Grains Council.

Fourth, the program only operates with respect to cash income. It makes no provision for the appropriateness of actual returns, the operator's labour, management, or fixed investment. Producers who face restricted delivery opportunities may benefit from the stabilization payment, but this will relate to the small, inadequate volume of deliveries. In other words, there are many other factors that will stop the stabilization payment. But the fact that a farmer is unable to pay some of the input costs is not really affected by the stabilization plan.

Fifth, the maximum coverage available under the plan limits its usefulness to medium and large-scale grain producers. If you are a small operator, the chances are even, if there is a pay-out under the Western Grain Stabilization Plan, that it will not pay a small operator proportionately as much as the large operator. One of the factors we should be looking at in all stabilization plans is to keep as many farmers on the land as possible. All three Parties in this House espouse a position of support for the family farm. The family farm is a farm where the people within the family are involved in production. Quite often it is a very small farm, but because of the structure of the Western Stabilization Plan, the small farm will not get a proportional payment even if a payment is made relative to what the small farm paid in. There is a maximum payment into the plan. If you are a large farmer you can pay only so much in, but that large farmer can get money out in greater proportion. If you sell over $60,000 worth of product, the chances are you will get twice as much out as what you paid in than the fellow who paid in less than $60,000. That is a figure I have taken from the report of the Canada Grains Council.

I am not going to spend much more time on this issue, but I do want to put on the record some factors which were brought before the Government by an agency of the Government which were not taken into consideration when the amendments were made to this Bill.

There are two more shortcomings to the Western Grain Stabilization Act on which the Grains Council commented. Sixth, since the pay-out from this program is after the fact, the farmer does not get the money when he really needs it. The Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) took up this factor and other Members have taken it up over the last few months in our discussion about western grain stabilization. When the farmer needs money the most, it is not available to him. He has to prove that he needs the money before he can get it. Quite often it is obvious that during a particularly productive period he is going to get it and he should be able to get it. This situation is not going to be helped a great deal. It is helped a little by the change from the calendar year to the crop year, but not as much as it could be. Even the suggestion made by the Minister that the Government this year will put in a once only interim payment proposition does not significantly affect the idea that the money should be paid as quickly as possible to the farmer in those years when he needs money. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the Grains Council has done a very thorough job.

Seventh, the way the current program is constructed, pay-outs are based on producer contributions under the program. Again, a small farmer will not get back what he needs at the time of a crop failure or a bad market, whereas the larger farmer might get the return.

Those are positions the Government had available to it when it drafted these amendments, but the Government ignored them. None of the deficiencies which were articulated by the Grains Council were taken into consideration when the Government drafted the amendments before us today. It would seem that a government responsible for the planning and the viability of a total industry like agriculture, especially when dealing with the part of it which earns probably 70 per cent of our foreign exchange, would be sure, having identified the shortcomings, to take those shortcomings and make them part of the restructuring of the Bill.

It is not as if the agricultural community does not know what is going on. I have here a telegram from the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. At the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool's 1983 annual meeting a resolution was passed. Before I read it into the record, let me digress for a moment. In the agricultural community we have known that the Western Grain Stabilization Plan has not been working and does not work. We have known that for a good number of years. In 1981 approaches were made to suggest that perhaps we should look at the grain stabilization triggering mechanism. Payments were made in 1977 and 1978. In 1979 we experienced the lowest operating margin ever. In that year there was no triggering of the payments. We knew a year after the last payment that the mechanism in the Act did not work. We have brought that to the attention of the Government many times.

However, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool indicated the following:

> That the federal Government undertake serious examination and review of the Western Grain Stabilization Plan which would consider the following: indexing previous year's income and expenses, indexing for changed volumes of grain sold, inclusion of depreciation and all interest expenses, pay-out on a regional basis, provision for an opting out clause, reducing the averaging period from five years to three years, changing the year-end of the plan from calendar to crop year, and allowing producers to pay a levy on farm fed grain. Such examination to consider the actuarial soundness of the plan and its responsiveness to producers' needs.

That was passed at the 1983 annual meeting of the Pool. The proposed amendments take into consideration a number of these proposals; however, the Wheat Pool went on to indicate:

> The proposed amendments while a step in the right direction fall short of meeting our organization's policy objectives, particularly with respect to the inclusion of depreciation and all interest expenses and allowing producers to pay a levy on farm feed grain. We would urge serious consideration of these provisions in the comprehensive review of grain stabilization policy for the prairie region.
> The board of directors also stress that upon early passage of legislation there is a need for an immediate interim payment to provide critically needed cash flow to producers.

This communication was signed by J. O. Wright, Corporate Secretary, Saskatchewan Wheat Pool.

Farm organizations have a very clear understanding of the need for income security and how it would be possible. It cannot be accomplished by price controls; it has to be done in a method which is relative to costs of operation. Before resuming my seat, I want to spend a few minutes dealing with the suggestions of the New Democratic Party as part of the whole process of stabilization for farmers, especially grain growers and particularly in terms of the Bill with which we are dealing today.

The premise upon which the agricultural industry operates is that over a long period of time average returns from the market should be sufficient to cover the cost of operations. In some years they make a little more money; in others they make a little less. However, on average they should receive a sufficient return from the market to pay their operating costs and to make a living. That is the basis of the whole idea of income stabilization.

Since we are confined to the grain area of farming in this particular Bill, we suggest that a number of the recommendations of the Canada Grains Council which have been put before the Government should be included in the Bill at this time while it is open and before us. I am sure Hon. Members of the Official Opposition would go along with the idea of bringing in a number of other amendments which could be discussed during the committee process.

The Minister suggested that he was willing to bring in an amendment concerning the interim payment at report stage. This bothers me somewhat because I would rather see it introduced at the committee stage, which has been the case with other Bills. There seems to be a certain amount of blackmail in that procedure. If it is brought in at committee stage, we can discuss it and improve upon it. However, the Minister has indicated that it will be brought in at report stage and that we should get the Bill out of committee and into report stage. I abhor that kind of blackmail. We should try to convince the Minister to bring in all his amendments as quickly as possible so that we can deal with them in committee.

We in the NDP suggest that some regionalization must be established because it is very important to the viability of the grain producing area of the west. I gave a good example of the Hudson Bay area of Saskatchewan which has experienced three consecutive crop failures. If we look at the Western Producer, we find a couple of hundred advertisements for the sale of land in that particular area. As well, many farmers are ready to rent their land at rock-bottom prices. The crop failures for three years have almost eliminated farmers who were dependent upon cash flow. they have no cash flow and they are being eliminated by that fact. They could have been saved by a regional payment from the stabilization plan.

Also we feel that the triggering mechanism should be looked at, not on the basis of whether it will pay out $250 million right now or as quickly as possible, but upon the basis of what is best for farmers over a long period of time. Instead of sitting in a back room calculating what formula will pay out $250 million this year, we should be looking in committee stage at the formula and asking whether it will be effective from now on. We should ask whether it will have the same impact or effect we want it to have over the next few years.

We would also suggest some sort of averaging factor. The idea of moving from five years to three years is an improvement, but it still leaves the basis of the payments of income up to the volume of sales. There should be an averaging factor which would allow for the cost of production. Of course, that varies each year as well. We must take into consideration what happens to a particular farmer in a particular area.

Another averaging factor could be used in the case of crop failure in an area for more than one year. There should be a recognition of the fact that the need for stabilization payments in that event is greater.

I have tried to suggest that there is a need for more flexibility, that we need to take a look at the shortcomings of the plan and improve upon them now rather than trying to improve them next year or the year after. We should do the best we can now.

• (1350)

If you look back at the debates in 1978, Mr. Speaker, you find that at that time both Opposition Parties put before the Government very good suggestions which, had they been accepted at that time, would not have us in the situation we are today. We would not need this Bill. We are improving the Act, but not as much as we could.

I put before the House the NDP position on what we think should be the over-all approach to income stabilization for the grain farmer in Canada. I have one further point I want to make because the Minister made so much of it when speaking today. He suggested that the return to the farmer has been the amount of money he has put in. In 1977-78, the farmers were paid $368 million. It must be recognized that the deal that was made was that that $368 million was to be made up of $123 million from the farmer and $246 million from the Government. That was the deal when we passed the Bill in 1976. You have to start then and look at the $900 million that is now there and recognize that one-third of that money is the farmers'. It is there either because the farmers put it in directly or because the money was there and collected interest; but one-third of the money is farmers' money. Any suggestion that we are getting more back from the $900 million than what was put in by the farmers is wrong.

I hope that what I have been able to do is put before the Government the kind of approach we should be putting before it and which the Government should be taking to change the whole idea of income security for agriculture. Agriculture is our most important industry. If we do not keep the farmers viable, we will suffer for it, as will the rest of the world.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to say how pleased I am that the Minister for External Relations (Mr. Pepin) is piloting this Bill through the House. I believe the Minister has more credibility among the farming population in western Canada than any other member of the Cabinet. I am pleased that he is here today and is participating because he has an understanding. He gained that understanding when he was involved in the Crow Bill. Unfortunately there was a change of Ministers during the process of the Crow Bill because he had a feeling for the farmers. He was sympathetic. I think he still has that same feeling for the western farm producers.

Last night I re-read in Hansard the speech of the then Minister of Justice, the Hon. Otto Lang, when he spoke at second reading on the original western grain stabilization Bill on April 28, 1975. I wish to quote briefly from his remarks in that debate. At page 5272 of Hansard he said:

> We recognized that the income of the farmer was our fundamental objective in dealing with the problem in the grain industry.

At page 5273 he said:

> As the pattern of past income levels has shown, these amounts will be paid out to the prairie farmer in such a way that he will receive the money he needs in the years he needs it most.

I would emphasize the last phrase "in the years he needs it most". He further said:

> In this bill we have introduced the protection of the prairie region grain farmers on the basis of net cash flow. Net cash flow is the cash remaining when the gross receipts for grain have had substracted from them the cash costs of producing grain in that year. This means that the plan will be sensitive to changes in the cost of production as well as changes in receipts where based on volume.

Finally, at page 5274 he said:

> We have in this program, and in the others to which I referred earlier, added forms of assistance to those farmers, to help assure them that their incomes may be adequate. We have done this as part of the Government's over-all policy of attempting to make sure that farm incomes are adequate. We want to ensure that the farmer obtains a reasonable return for his labour in agriculture from two sources, from the marketplace, and from the Treasury where required, because we are convinced that our agricultural production is important at home and abroad.

To summarize what the Minister said, this Bill is based on income being the fundamental objective, pay-out in the years when it was needed most, and that the farmer would receive a reasonable return for his labour.

This program has been in place for some nine years. It has not served the purpose for which it was set up. Despite the pay-out in 1978-79, producers, and I think the majority of them, have been unhappy. As I talked to the producers in my constituency, I would say that the vast majority of them, if given the opportunity, would opt out.

Why are the producers unhappy? I would suggest it is because this Act has not served the purpose for which it was designed. At the present time grain producers in western Canada are in very serious trouble. Grain prices are depressed, have been for two or three years, and there is no relief in sight. Input costs, whether it is for interest, farm fuel, fertilizer or farm machinery, have increased to such an extent that the farmer has little, if any, money in his pocket.

No payment has been triggered under this Act since 1979. The argument made by the Government, and by the two Ministers who presumably are responsible for this Bill, is that the formula in the Act has been such that it would not trigger a payment. There is no question about that. That is correct, because there is a formula that is used and the formula has not triggered a payment. The Government and the Minister responsible have known this for several years.

We on this side of the House have been telling the Minister and the Government, week after week, month after month, year after year, that changes have to be made in the formula. But our pleas have fallen on deaf ears. The Government was too busy spending its time developing legislation to get rid of the Crow rate, increasing further the input costs of the farmers. Government Members were busy dealing with the national energy policy that caused massive increases in the price of farm fuel and fertilizer. Of course, Mr. Speaker, few if any Members on the Government side understand or appreciate prairie agriculture.

I suppose that in the back of the minds of the Cabinet Ministers was the following: "We do not have any seats from the Prairies, they have not voted for us; therefore we will punish those people on the Prairies. We will not change the Act". Over the last two or three years many of my constituents have asked me when I thought that a payment would be made under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. I answered them by saying: "You tell me when there will be an election and I will tell you when there will be a payment," and that is precisely what has happened. An election is in the offing and the Government has said to itself: "We have dealt badly with those people in western Canada over the years but if we put some money in their pockets now, they might forget what we have done in the past and suddenly vote for us". That, Mr. Speaker, will not happen. They cannot pull the wool over the eyes of the western grain producers.

The Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) recited at length the questions that have been put to the Minister over the past couple of years regarding changes to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. It was interesting to hear that recital because, despite the pressure that was put on Government Members, it was not until the Speech from the Throne which was given on December 7, 1983 that the Government made any mention of making any amendments to the Bill. What the Speech from the Throne said was this, and I shall read briefly:

> The maximum for advance payments for grain will be increased. Amendments will be introduced to the Western Grain Stabilization Act to make it more responsive to the needs of the producers.

That was merely a teaser, Mr. Speaker. Nothing happened. Amendments to the Act were mentioned in the Speech from the Throne but the election was not quite close enough. Members on this side of the House continued to prod the Government. We got another teaser on April 25 of this year when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of State for the Wheat Board from the other place held a joint press conference in Winnipeg. They said that they were going to bring in amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act to do certain things, one of which was to ensure that there would be a payment to the prairie farmers this year.

Mr. Schellenberger: We asked them to bring on the Bill but where was the Bill?

Mr. Neil: As my hon. friend said, we asked them to bring on the Bill. They said they had those amendments so the Bill must have been ready. We did not see the Bill at that time and it was not until May 11 that we finally saw first reading of the Bill, and it is not until today, May 25, that we are seeing second reading. In the meantime the Government said: "We have a lot of other Bills that we want passed and we want those Bills passed without debate. If you will not pass those Bills without debate, we will not deal with the Western Grain Stabilization Act." That is an absolute blackmail of the farmers and producers of western Canada. Therefore, we agreed to limited debate because we were concerned for the western grain producers who needed the money.

I will not read from the press release put out in Winnipeg by the two Ministers as I have intended because the Hon. Minister who introduced the Bill has indicated that it is now the Government's intention to make an interim payment shortly after July 31. That is something for which we on this side of the House have been asking for months, because the farmer needs the money now. We welcome the statement of the Minister that a payment will be made.

While looking at the press release to which I referred and listening to the Minister who introduced the Bill, it was interesting to note that the Government is talking about a payment totalling approximately $300 million or, as is indicated on page 3 of the press release, a payment of more than $5,000 to a participating producer who has contributed the maximum levies in the past three years. However, it was also said that there would be an average amount paid of about $2,500.

There is almost $1 billion in the fund, Mr. Speaker. The maximum contribution of the producers over the past number of years has amounted to $1,200 a year. As the Hon. Member for Assiniboia pointed out, if a producer took the contributions of $1,200 a year that he has made to the fund since the last pay-out in 1979, added them all together and worked out the bank interest, the producer would find that if he had put that money into a bank account, he would now have close to $8,000. What is the Government proposing? It is proposing a pay-out of approximately $5,000. The producer is not even receving back what he himself contributed.

It is a little unusual that this is so because the program under the Western Grain Stabilization Act is one of the few that is contributory. The producer contributes to the fund. Most programs are paid for by the Government only. For example, the Agricultural Stabilization Act which refers to products other than those handled by the Wheat Board has a very simple formula for payment out. There is no contribution to that fund by the producer; the payments come from the Treasury. The Agricultural Stabilization Act results in an annual pay-out to the dairy, fruit and vegetable industries in eastern Canada of over $350 million. There are no contributions to the fund by the producers.

The farmer in western Canada is happy to contribute to a plan if that plan is one which will pay him money at a time when he needs it. He needs that money now because he is putting in his crop and he has expenses for fuel, fertilizer, seed and repairs. We cannot expect the merchants in the small towns to finance the producers when they put in their crops because the small businessmen who supply fuel and fertilizer to the producers are just as strapped as the farmers. Those businessmen must borrow money from the bank at interest rates of 15 per cent, 16 per cent or maybe even 20 per cent.

As I have said, the pay-out is needed now. While I am pleased to hear the Minister say that there will be a pay-out by around the end of July, I feel that that is a little bit late for the producer and the small businessman. We on this side of the House asked that that payment be made, as did all of the farm organizations and farm leaders across the country. Although we welcome this amendment, it is unfortunate that the payment was not made a month ago.

When the Bill was originally brought in by the Hon. Otto Lang, he said that it was a Bill which would trigger a payment early in the spring before the producer put in his crop. That did not happen. I could give you the reasons why that did not happen; however, my time is running out.

We on this side of the House support the Bill, but we may have one or two amendments which we would like to put forward. The whole question of stabilization should be examined. It should be discussed co-operatively with the farm organizations and the producers. The producers want and need a stabilization program. I would suggest that they do not want hand-outs. They would prefer a program which is actuarially sound. Unless such a program is developed, I can visualize that by 1986, with the opting out provisions, many of the farmers today who are participants in the plan will opt out. There will be very few farmers left in the plan.

However, there is one bright light in the future—an election is imminent. This, I suggest, will result in a change of government. It will be a government which will be sensitive to the needs and problems of the agricultural community. It will be a government that will co-operate with producers and farm organizations and will develop a program that will effectively deal with the serious problems in agriculture.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for question and comments. Are Members rising to put questions? If not, for continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers).

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, one of the first things which I would like to say is that I appreciate the efforts of the Minister for External Relations (Mr. Pepin) who has sat in this House for the second Friday in a row attempting to pass Bills through the House which will be of some assistance to prairie grain producers. When the Minister mentioned that he was standing in for the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board as well as for the Minister responsible for Agriculture, I am glad that he did not say that he was standing in for a responsible Minister, because neither one of them is responsible to prairie farmers. They have proven beyond reasonable doubt that this Government, with its succession of Ministers who have represented western agriculture, has not fulfilled the commission which is required.

We appreciate the Minister for External Relations and the efforts that he has gone to in attempting to assist western grain growers. He said earlier that he understands their problems and I believe he does. Certainly he did an excellent job during the Crow debate until he was derailed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) from his position. He told us at that time that he would have gone with the consensus in western Canada if a consensus could have been worked out. If the Prime Minister had left the Minister for External Relations in his position as Minister of Transport in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, a consensus could have been reached. He would have gone out to western Canada and spoken to the various groups that were deeply involved in that process. The producers, while they may have different ideas as to how the system should work, are all very, very intelligent people. They know what is required and they also recognize that their fellow being has to survive in an economic environment that will be of benefit to all concerned. I think it has been one of the greatest disasters, as far as the Liberal Government is concerned, in having the Minister taken—as I said "derailed"—from that position.

The Government then brought in the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy). What did he do? He made promises. He promised western farmers, Members in the House and members of the committee that there would be $16 billion going to western Canada to provide a facility that would be of benefit to all western Canadians—in fact, to all of Canada. Any of the income which is derived from the use of that rail is usually as a result of export products that help defray our deficit balance of trade payments. Outside of lumber, the grain industry is one of the major components that assists Canada in establishing a favourable balance of trade on the world market.

The Minister said that western Canada would get $16 billion and 375,000 jobs. He is now saying that western Canada will only receive $12 billion. That represents a 25 per cent cut. There is a consensus among some people in western Canada who feel that if that figure is being allocated as a result of a lesser cost factor in what has to be done, they could accept that. But they cannot accept the fact that the job allocation will be cut from 375,000 jobs to 155,000 jobs. That is a misleading statement on the part of the Minister of Transport.

The Minister for External Relations played a fair and honest role. He was recognized for his honesty in western Canada. But the present Minister of Transport, in misleading western Canadians as he has, will never be trusted. That is probably one of the reasons he will not return to the House of Commons. The same thing will happen to him that happened to the Hon. Otto Lang. He made promises in western Canada which were not fulfilled and he is not in the House of Commons today. You cannot promise something to western Canadians and then not fulfil that promise. If you do that, you create your own demise.

It is unfortunate that western Canadians are caught in the dilemma of receiving a payment once every five years. We must have an election in order to get a payment. There was a payment in 1979 just prior to the election, but in all the intervening years when the situation gradually became worse and worse as the months went by, was there any suggestion of a pay-out? No, not once. Even the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) told us that the earliest a payment could be made without breaking the law was in October. What do we hear today? The Minister of Transport, of all people, will bring in an amendment and have a pay-out by the end of July. That means—

Mr. Gustafson: —an August election.

Mr. Towers: As my colleague from Assiniboia says, it means an August election.

• (1420)

Who is the Minister of Transport? He is the western organizer for the Hon. John Turner. If there is anything that western Canada detests, it is the manipulation of a system by politicians. It is detestable that they would even think of doing that because they are playing with the well-being of their fellow westerners. It is not acceptable and they will discover the consequences.

We told the Minister of Transport, the Hon. Otto Lang, when he brought this Bill in, that it would not work. But he would not listen. Now, eight years later, other members of the governing Party have decided that it cannot and will not work. They are taking action to correct some of the problems we tried to tell the Minister and the Government about at the time the Bill was proposed eight years ago. It is terribly frustrating to take eight years to correct a problem. When you can recognize it in the making. It is totally frustrating and makes all of us on this side of the House awfully angry.

Today I made some glowing comments about the Minister of State for External Relations. I meant them, but he is misleading the House somewhat when he says that after this year there will be $600 million still left in the fund. What the Minister has forgotten to consider are the payments that producers are now making and will continue to make this crop year, with the result that the fund will grow by approximately $150 million. Instead of having a fund of $600 million at the end of the year, it will be $750 million. My colleagues have pointed out that the money that the Government is paying out is farmers' own money. Big deal! The farmers are just getting back what they have paid in.

Let me impress upon this House one fact that seems to have been missed by a considerable number of Members. The Government is trying to make a big thing about having paid interest on the money in this fund. But are the farmers not entitled to a return on their investment? Certainly the return does not measure up to what the farmers could have made had they invested that money in their own way. On top of that, we must not overlook the fact that a lot of this money had to be replaced through borrowing. The Government spent the money and I was flabbergasted when I found out this money was going to find its way into the general revenues of the Government. The Government has spent it and now it has to be requisitioned through the estimates in order to pay it back. Had the money been invested at the high rates of interest we have recently experienced, then the fund would be greater. Instead the money was put into the general revenues of the Government and in return the farmers have received federal Government interest rates. You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that during these past several years farmers have been paying up to 20 per cent and 22 per cent interest on their money. In turn they were probably getting about 10 per cent or 11 per cent from the Government. It is not a very fair way of treating farmers.

Another thing I would remind you of, Mr. Speaker, is that when the Minister of Transport brought this Bill in, the Government was obligated to put in $2 for every $1 that the producer put in. But what happened? The Government did not put the money in. It was just a paper figure. The Minister once more broke faith with the western Canadian producers. Well, you can only do that for so long. No matter what you do now, you are not going ever to redeem yourself in the eyes of the western Canadian farmer. They will not accept it. Therefore, Government Members should understand why there are not going to be any Liberal Members from western Canada after the next election. Regardless of the promises John Turner makes, regardless of what will happen, the voters will not be dissuaded from what they are about to do. They are just not interested, especially now with this $650 million going into the coffers of the railroad. That is just a great gift for the railroad.

Mr. Pepin: It is not a gift; it moves grain.

Mr. Towers: A great thing for the latest director appointed to Canadian Pacific. Just a great gift. The shares of CP went up and why wouldn't they? How many shares do directors have given to them because of this gift? The Canadian taxpayer picks up the tab as well as the western grain producer. The producers are losing on both ends. Not only is it costing them more to move grain—

Mr. Pepin: Because of volume.

Mr. Towers: —a 50 per cent increase by August 1 in the price of moving grain, but at the same time the price of grain is coming down. I realize the Minister for External Relations, however great a guy he is, when he listens to some of his colleagues does get some wrong figures. It was not a personal criticism of him when I said that some of those figures were misleading.

Mr. Pepin: Which ones?

Mr. Towers: You were not here when I mentioned that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I must insist that remarks be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I apologize because I do not want to insult either you or the Minister. He is too nice a guy. Nevertheless, it is going to be about $750 million at the end of the year. I mentioned this earlier and the Minister was not around to hear it; that is why I reiterated that statement.

The real problem, Mr. Speaker, is that the federal Government is trying to take too much out of the system, especially as far as western agriculture is concerned. Consider that about 69 cents on every gallon of fuel the western farmer uses in the production of grain goes right into federal coffers. If the Government were to cut that tax, then I could understand it being well received in western Canada. They would love that.

• (1430)

Why can we not cut our cost of production in Canada? That is one area in which no other country, including the United States, can criticize us. The fact is that we are cutting our cost of production and it can never be construed as a subsidy. We have tried to tell the Government of ways and means to correct the economic problems of western Canadians, especially the grain producers. If no one is listening, nothing will happen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There will follow a 10 minute period for questions or comments. If there are no questions, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) continuing debate.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I very much enjoy following the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) in this debate. It is a difficult thing to do because he is so precise that he almost steals all of one's thunder. I do not want to repeat the excellent messages that he and my colleagues from Moose Jaw and Assiniboia have given the House.

I would like to begin by saying that we offered the Government the opportunity to have this Bill passed quickly. We even offered to pass a number of Budget Bills very quickly in order to have this Bill passed. Of course, the Bill was not ready. We caught them off guard. It took from April until the middle of May to produce the Bill. The press conference in Winnipeg was really a bit of a façade. However, both of the individuals at the press conference were considering running for the leadership and they needed a bit of visibility in the Prairies. Therefore, I can understand the timing of the press conference.

When we offered to pass this Bill quickly the Government decided that perhaps it was not such a bad idea to have one day of debate at second reading stage and then go to committee. That seemed odd at the time. I could not understand that, Mr. Speaker. Today, however, it becomes clear. It is because of the pressure that the farm groups in western Canada, supported by the Members of the Progressive Party, were putting on the Government to come forward with an interim payment which is so essential at this time. The western grain stabilization pool is really the only pool of capital that western farmers can draw upon, and they desperately need the money now to pay their costs. Today the Minister stood in his place and said that they have now seen the light and are producing the amendments. Of course the only time an amendment can be passed, Mr. Speaker, is at committee or report stage. Therefore we are now going to see the amendment brought forward to offer the Canadian farmer an interim payment from this fund. There is no argument about that. We accept that and are happy that our logic, lobbying and pressure have been successful. The only thing I lament is that they did not accept that pressure sooner. The crops are being put in the ground now. The farm retail operators who sell fertilizer and fuel would appreciate those funds now rather than at the end of July. Farmers are going to have to pay interest on that money until this payment is received by them.

The changes to the Act will allow it to perform much better. When the situation changed regarding the volumes of grain that we were shipping, we were very pleased. When the inflation rate increased much more rapidly than we had anticipated in 1975 and 1976, it became obvious to us that the Bill which was passed by the House at that time was not performing according to the basis upon which it was passed. It was meant to stabilize the cash flow of the Prairie economy. When the cash flow decreased stabilization payments were to be made in order to allow the Prairie economy to perform more adequately. That happened. It began in 1981 with rapid inflation and high costs of production as a result and world prices of commodities stabilizing and decreasing. It continued through 1982 and 1983 and into this year.

Yet, because of the complex formula which was put in place to trigger this Bill, stabilization payments were not being made. Farmers were asking their Members of Parliament why they were not receiving payments when they had contributed to this fund with the good faith that it would assist them when financial difficulties were being experienced in the Prairies. We told them why. We also told them that it could only be changed through legislation. It was the law of the land that the formula which was in place in the Bill in 1976 was still in place. It had to be followed until it was changed by the House of Commons. Until today we could not persuade the Government to bring forward this Bill. That is why we had meetings on the Prairies. That is why we exerted pressure in the House to have the Bill brought forward.

I looked back at the speeches that were made in 1976, and I even found one that I had made at that time. I enjoyed reading them. I also noted the points that were made by the Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) and the Member for Red Deer. They have both already spoken on this Bill. At that time they were looking into the future as they do so well. They were seeing that these difficulties were possible. They were concerned about them. They said that maybe we should amend this Bill to make it closer to a kind of insurance stabilization Act so that the whole Prairies would not be affected. If there was a drought in southern Saskatchewan and the rest of the Prairies had a bumper crop, they wanted the Act to be applied. That seemed like a reasonable suggestion. They asked that the Committee travel to learn the experiences of farmers. That was accepted. They also asked that the legislation be placed under the control of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). That has never been accepted. It seems that the growing of wheat and the sale of that wheat is being placed in the hands of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy). That is why we had the interesting Crow legislation brought into the House by the Minister of Transport.

What happens now that the grain farmers recognize the complexities of this Bill? They are recognizing that the cost of transportation of grain will be a great addition to their cost of production this year. The one thing which Prairie farmers knew was a constant in the production of grain was the cost of transportation. It remained the same. They could count on that. Today that constant has been removed. As of this August the cost of moving grain on the Prairies will be 58 per cent higher than last August. Yet when the Minister of Transport pushed this Bill through the House he said that we have a safety net. He said that we would protect the Prairie farmers from large increases in freight costs. It is 10 per cent of the cost of transportation. In small print it was suggested that that was the average of six grains, and it was based on the volume of the shipment of those grains. It is now evident that as freight rates increase 58 per cent for the price of moving the grains that do not bring as much money as canola, for example, they can pay 58 per cent more than last year and the safety net does not even come into effect. That is a lot of protection for the farmers of western Canada.

As I said at the beginning of my speech, the pressure is on Members of all Parties in the House to pass this Bill. The reason is that as farmers scramble to find cash to stay alive in the difficult economic times, the only pool of money available to them is that money which they have contributed to the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. When they look to another source, the indicators are not very good.

We talked about farm fuels as one of those negative indicators, as noted by the Hon. Member for Red Deer. There is an increase of some 50 cents to 68 cents per gallon in the cost of farm fuels that is taken by the federal Government. We have called for the removal of that for well over two years to assist farmers and to put a positive indicator before them instead of a negative one. That would assist in the production of grains which brings so much capital to this country.

Today in Question Period I pointed out that the Farm Credit Corporation is again increasing the interest rates for loans to farmers. That increase is at least one per cent to 1.5 per cent above what farmers can obtain from chartered banks. The Farm Credit Corporation is supposed to be the lending institution to which farmers can go as a last resort to obtain loans to continue farming or expand their operations. Again, this is another negative indicator from the Government.

Members of the House have introduced Private Members' Bills in an attempt to alleviate the situation, by promoting the removal of the sales tax on farm fuels and the use of agri-bonds to help in lowering interest rates for farmers. These attempts were stalled in committee by the Government because it is not prepared to deal with these issues. It is finally starting to move ahead slowly, but the Finance committee is smothered with budget bills.

In western Canada Wheat Board sells the farmers' grain and is responsible, with the assistance of the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board, for establishing the initial price which farmers will receive when they deliver their grain to the elevator. There is no encouragement from the federal Government here.

The Minister does not say that the Government will support the farmer this time by not lowering the initial price below what it was last year because the cost of production has gone up. He will not say that the federal treasury will stand behind the Wheat Board if necessary because grain prices do not increase in the international market. Again, there is nothing from the federal Government. In fact, there was a lowering of initial prices to the farmers. Many farmers are beginning to wonder how they can continue to produce as they continue to get negative indicators from the international community and their own national government.

In addition to all of this, there is an increase in the freight rate which they must pay to get their commodity to the market. This increase which they must pay to the railways, because there are very few options, will increase by 35 per cent to August 1, and 58 per cent after that all in this one year. The Government will allow the addition of $25 million to that freight bill as the cost of shipping higher volumes of grain than forecast from August 1, 1983, to December 1, 1983. This cost will not be borne by the Government—the Bill was not even passed until the end of the year—but will be added to the freight rate costs.

Furthermore, the railroads have made a submission to the Canadian Transportation Commission asking for revisions to the cost of capital formula. They were offered $100 million as the cost of capital for moving grain. Now that the Bill is passed and they have the $651 million in their possession, they are going before the Transport Commission asking to boost that cost of capital to $250 million. I hope the CTC does not allow that because, if it does, that will add an additional cost to the transporting of grain of $3 a metric tonne.

I recently read an interview with Mr. Lawless of the CNR which appeared in the Western Producer. I could hardly believe what I read. He was lamenting the fact that there were no incentives to the railroad to improve service to the farmers. He said that this money just meets their cost of production and that there is no incentive to change the system at the ports to put a looping in the tracks so that cars could continuously unload, or to install unit trains which would assist farmers in the Prairies. He said that there was no incentive to do that. The complaint was that the railways must load the grain from all of these prairie elevators and that there is no money there to somehow assist supporting the tracks to those Prairie elevators.

As I read that interview, it seemed that the President of the CNR was saying that after the Crow Bill was passed, giving the railroads the costs for moving grain, there was still no incentive to increase their efficiency in moving the farmers' grain. I want to say to him that if $300 million is not sufficient to provide the efficiencies that are needed on the Prairies and to keep the costs to the farmers down, then I do not know what is.

I am only sorry that the Minister who is bringing this Bill to the House today, who was the Minister of Transport at that time, was not allowed to remain in that portfolio. I am convinced that western farmers would have received a better deal if he had been allowed to stay. I am convinced that he understood what the commissioner who was appointed at that time was saying about what was needed on the Prairies to move grain. I am convinced that he would have fought, with our support, for at least a partial payment to the producers to keep the railroads efficient. I am convinced that the Agricultural Stabilization Fund of $204 million, which he put in that Bill, would have been in place now to assist farmers with the extra transportation costs.

He was being very kind today when he said that they put the good animals out to greener pastures. I had hoped that the Government would keep him on and let him pilot this Bill through, because I think we would have had a better deal. However, we have a Minister from Western Canada, and what do we have? There is a great deal for the railroads; and we can see why because we know who he is supporting.

I want to conclude by saying that we are prepared to do everything possible to pass this Bill. We want to allow the Government to make the interim payment which we indicated was essential. The amendments to this Bill will receive our quick scrutiny in committee. We hope that this Bill will pass and allow western farmers some money to put their crops in the ground; that nature will assist those farmers and world prices will not be depressed so that they can look to a bright future. They are the basis upon which the western economy grows.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten minute period for questions or comments. Continuing debate. The Hon. Member for the Battlefords-Meadow Lake.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments for the record on second reading of Bill C-33, an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act. It is with some interest that I noticed the introduction of the debate today by the Minister for External Relations (Mr. Pepin) who was Minister of Transport when the abolition of the statutory Crow rate took place. I must say that in the Minsiter's speech today he portrayed a great deal of understanding about the plight of the western Canadian grain farmers and the desperate situation in which some of them find themselves today. I only wish he had shown that kind of understanding and empathy for the western Canadian grain farmer when he pushed the abolition of the statutory Crow rate through the House of Commons, one of the last few subsidies our grain farmers had.

Beyond that, it is even more surprising to me that many speeches delivered by Conservative Members have criticized the Liberal Government for allowing the Crow rate to be dismantled. I remind them that if we had had the adequate support we called for from all Opposition Members of the House I do not think the Liberals would have been able to put through Bill C-155 which changed the statutory Crow rate and which has put farmers in an ever worsening economic situation in western Canada.

The Western Grain Stabilization plan was introduced in 1976. At that time the New Democratic Party, from their speeches I have looked at, warned that there were several factors which would not allow the plan to meet farmers' expectations, mainly because the formula was based on market price rather than cost of production. It included the entire Prairie area. It also used the calendar year rather than the crop year, and it ignored the greater grain volumes on gross incomes. The plan failed to make a pay-out when needed. That is basically the bottom line.

Many farmers in my area were quite enthusiastic about the Western Grain Stabilization Plan when it was first introduced. As the Minister of the day said, it would be designed so that if there were a bad crop year, payments would be made in the spring to assist farmers with spring operations, seeding and the associated higher costs at that time of the year. For almost five years there have been no pay-outs made under the Act, even when large numbers of farmers have been in dire straits.

Economic conditions are not looking that good for Western farmers. This is the same for people right across Canada, but I am more familiar with the situation of grain farmers in areas like The Battlefords-Meadow Lake. Part of the reason is that the cost of grain production has gone up dramatically. Just take a look at fuel costs, interest rates, machinery prices, fertilizer costs and chemical costs, Mr. Speaker. Then there is the cost of harvesting. All of these costs have gone up astronomically over the past number of years, while at the same time the average price of all grains over the past few years has gone down continually. On many occasions farmers are caught in a situation whre they do not get back even their cost of production because of the economics of grain farming. That does not take into account the possibility of not having rain at the proper time, a too early frost, or too wet a spring. These are the difficult situations faced by grain farmers.

Because many places have been producing more, many parts of the Prairies have felt that the Western Grain Stabilization fund should have triggered a pay-out. Their net income has not increased; in fact it is dropping. But because of increased production,—more sales I suppose is a more accurate way of putting it—a payment under this program has not been triggered and that is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker. Farmers are being penalized under this program for their efficiency in growing greater volumes of grain. They see their work is not being rewarded because they do not get the economic return they deserve.

In the four or five years during which there has been no payment from the fund, the fund has continued to increase. Every farmer that is registered, and that is about 75 per cent of the grain producers in western Canada, pays a percentage of all grain sales into the fund. That payment used to be, I believe, 2 per cent. For the last year it has been 1.5 per cent. For every dollar generated by this checkoff the Government has a responsibility under the present Western Grain Stabilization Act of putting $2 of public revenue into the fund. Farmers have contributed a little over $300 million. This means the Government has put in over $600 million, and there is now a net amount in the fund of between $900 million and $1 billion. That is a lot of money, Mr. Speaker. Farmers have a hard time understanding, now that they are in bad economic straits, why they cannot get money out of the program.

We are very happy in the New Democratic Party to see this Bill in the House to change the Western Grain Stabilization Act. We think the Bill has some pitfalls. We feel there should be some further action taken now that the Bill is before the House. Our intention is to see the Bill move rapidly into committee where we can make amendments in addition to those which the Government has already indicated it is willing to accept to change the Bill. I believe there is one further amendment which the Minister spoke of when he introduced the Bill this morning.

Farmers do not just need the money now; they needed that money a couple of months ago. Opposition members pushed the Government very hard to bring in the Bill. I do not know whether the Bill was not drafted, or whether there was not enough room on the Order Paper, but farmers needed that money before, not sometime in the future.

Mr. Pepin: Everything is either too early or too late. It is never right.

Mr. Anguish: Nevertheless we are happy to see the Bill in the House now. We want to see an immediate payment go out to the western Canadian grain farmers. There are some amendments we feel should be made to this Bill. I hope they will receive the support of the Official Opposition as well as the support of the Government. First, we would like to see payments retroactive to 1983. Second, we would like to see an interim pay-out for the 1983 crop year. I think the Minister said in his introduction this morning that the Government had in mind an amendment for the 1983-84 year. I hope that comes to pass. Third, we would like to see some recognition of the regional discrepancies within the Western Grain Stabilization plan. We have been calling for recognition of crop discrepancies as well as regional discrepancies. Finally, there should be some recognition of the net incomes of farmers in the pay-out under the Western Grain Stabilization Program. We feel, as we felt back in 1976 when the plan was introduced, that there should be a tie-in with the cost of production. There should be recognition of the fact that the cost of production is a major factor in any stabilization program. Also we are recommending that there be immediate pay-out guarantees.

• (1500)

Hopefully we will get the Bill through the House today and into committee, and hopefully there will be some debate in good faith on the amendments to which we would like to obtain the agreement of the Government and the Official Opposition. If we cannot accomplish that, so be it. I think we have put forth the true feelings of grain farmers in western Canada. If the other Parties will not go for it, at least we in the NDP know that we have made adequate representations on behalf of western grain farmers.

In the Bill the time period over which averages are taken has been reduced from five years to three years. This is something for which Hon. Members, such as the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), have pushed many times during debates in the House of Commons. They have pushed for changes to the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

Some three months ago the New Democratic Party released a policy paper on agriculture which contained what we consider to be alternate proposals for grain income stabilization. We agree with the Canada Grains Council that a plan amalgamated with crop insurance should be tailored to individual needs, sensitive to individual income fluctuations and to regional discrepancies. That is the best way to proceed. We still feel that is the best way after much discussion within our own caucus and with farming people across the country. Unfortunately the Government does not agree. I hope it will give consideration to some of the amendments we will put forth in committee and that we have speedy passage of this Bill.

In terms of an income insurance plan, we would like it to be actuarially sound, voluntary and attractive. It should be attractive so that all farmers, whether big or small, involved in co-operative or partnership farming, or whatever, become involved and see it as a benefit. If we opened up the Western Grain Stabilization Program and allowed people to leave it, I am sure there would be a mass exodus, unless some of the changes we have recommended in the House of Commons today and in previous debates are implemented. Although I recognize that the changes of the Government are an improvement, they are certainly not tailored to the needs of western Canadian grain farmers. There would be an exodus of people from that plan unless it is tailored to meet their needs.

Another feature of the program could be participation by producers, the federal and provincial Governments. The income insurance plan would be as integrated as possible with the existing crop insurance program to avoid duplication in the recordkeeping and administrative services necessary to carry out an adequate program of this magnitude, especially in terms of its impact upon the western economy and upon the Canadian economy in general.

The federal contribution would be in the form of reduced premiums that people would have to pay for the program. The provincial contribution would be primarily to expand the crop insurance administrative capability to meet the requirements of an income insurance plan. It would generate a greater volume of work for those who administer the plan at the present time. I would like to see the federal Government talking with the provincial governments about crop insurance programs to see if they would be willing to take on a greater responsibility to meet the needs of farmers within their respective provinces.

Finally, we recommend that farmers be able to insure for both volumes shipped and market price. A variety of insured price levels would be offered with appropriate premium levels to reflect the wide variation in production costs.

Those are a few examples of what we in the New Democratic Party think should be in place as an alternative to the Western Grain Stabilization Program. In fact, we would be very happy if Hon. Members of the Government and of the Official Opposition would at least debate and consider in committee the value of our suggestions, and our policy on agriculture as it pertains to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. If these suggestions were accepted, we would have a program much better tailored to the needs of western Canadian grain farmers than what we have had in the past.

In closing, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate today. I hope government Members will take note of our suggestions, given as constructive criticism to improve the program and meet the needs of a sector of the economy about which we are very concerned. Hopefully Bill C-33 will move out of the House and into committee at the end of the debate today. Then we can look at some of the changes and, hopefully, give it speedy passage, so that farmers who need money to continue their operations will receive it as soon as is viably possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments relating to the Hon. Member's remarks? Debate.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I must say at the outset that the Bill before us is both important and serious. However, the chance of giving a false impression with respect to it is dangerous. It is easy to conscience people who are following this debate on television, or will be reading it in Hansard or perhaps Members of the House of Commons, that we are debating a Bill which is aimed primarily or solely at western Canada. Although the primary emphasis of the Western Grain Stabilization Program is to feed money back to Canadian farm producers on the Prairies, this Bill will have an impact upon all Canadians—food consumers as well as industrialists who purchase western Canadian products. It must be seen in the light of its importance as a national Bill.

Bill C-33 gives too little too late; it is too pompous and too political. It is too little because it is less than the investment of farmers in the stabilization plan. It is too late because it comes considerably after the period of sowing crops, when cash flow was needed prior to seeding. It is too pompous because the Government stood on its pedestal and released a nine-page press release to the nation. It is too political because it comes on the eve of an election.

With nearly $1 billion in the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, farmers do not even get back their own money. They have contributed almost one-third of the investment in the fund today, but what will be given back to them will be in the neighbourhood of only $300 million.

Today different people have referred to the Minister as the Minister for External Relations or as the Minister for external affairs. I hope the Minister knows the difference between affairs and relations.

Mr. Pepin: It is more of the same.

• (1510)

Mr. Malone: I say to the Minister in all seriousness that it would have been better had the farmer taken his money and invested it elsewhere, even in bank savings. Had the farmers taken that amount of money they could have accumulated since 1979 somewhere in the neighbourhood of $8,000, had they invested it other than in the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. On the basis of that investment, they are being short-changed by this Government. This Government would try to convince farmers that if they pulled their teeth without anaesthetic it would be good for them. This Bill is like building a three-wire fence to keep birds out. It does not offer the farmers the protection they believed they were buying in 1976.

It is important to talk about the philosophy of the Western Grain Stabilization Plan and the reason such stabilization is necessary today. Canadians know that farm producers have existed in this country since the very first person arrived on the North American continent. What is significantly different in the last half of this country's existence are the changes in the economic dynamics of agriculture, such that farmers today can no longer afford to have a crop loss.

As a Member of Parliament who was born and raised on a farm, and had some experience with the great depression years, I find it interesting that at that time, as in all previous times in history of the world up until the recent past, depressed times do not drive people off farms. In fact, the depression drove people to the farms. The pictures of people riding the boxcars in the thirties do not show people flooding to the cities. Those were city dwellers riding the boxcars back to the farm. On the farm their brother, uncle or some other relative had a cow, a chicken and a pig. Bessie gave milk, the chicken gave eggs, and the pig provided pork. They had a vegetable garden. Once the farmland was paid for, you could not starve them off it.

The nature of agriculture has significantly changed. We are into specialized industries, single commodity production. Input costs have risen so dramatically that agriculture today simply cannot afford a crop failure. We are still in the same cycle of boom and bust. We should not interfere with that cycle. It is the natural market forces at work. The farmers expected that the Western Grain Stabilization Plan would be a system of equalization so that in boom years they could put money aside and in the bust years they could draw upon that account and have some stability in their industry.

What do we have in 1983 and 1984? We have the absolute epitome of bust. What do we get from this Government? We get a year of delay in bringing about a system of payment. The Government has the cock-eyed notion that somehow the formula could not be changed sooner, even though it knew it had the support of the Opposition Parties. It would have been a simple one-day procedure to make that change. Instead, they bring it out on election eve for political gain. What a sinister fact to put before western grain farmers. As I said before, this is not just a farm issue. There is not a single person in this country who does not eat daily. Farming today is not a lifestyle. These are business people in the business of food production.

We need to readdress the whole concept of agriculture. Looking at the world facts, there is no industry as important as farming. Four-fifths of the world population suffers from malnutrition, 70 million per year suffer permanent and irreversible brain damage from lack of protein and 40,000 children a day die of starvation. That was 40,000 children yesterday, 40,000 today and 40,000 tomorrow.

Against that background, there is not one nation in the world that gives top priority to agriculture. In this country, as in many other countries, ranking along the lowest priorities are agriculture, fisheries and forestry. This world will one day wake up to the fact that it is not the industrial centres that make this country tick.

I know why we are in this kind of situation. Most farmers in Canada know why this is the case. In Canada there are more Members of Parliament from Montreal and Toronto than there are from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Northwest Territories, Yukon and British Columbia, excepting the Fraser Valley and City of Vancouver, combined. The people in two cities have more voting power as to how this country is run than those in 70 per cent of our land mass. They are nice people in Montreal and Toronto. You, Mr. Speaker, might be from that area.

Mr. Cosgrove: Your leader comes from there.

Mr. Malone: My Leader does come from there, but he is advantaged. One-third of his caucus comes from the Prairies and represent western farming. There are 21 Members of Parliament from Alberta. The Liberal Party of Canada has 21 Members in eight provinces and two territories. The balance are from Quebec and Ontario.

The Member says that my Leader comes from Montreal. However, he has the influence of Prairie people who feed people in Montreal and Toronto. He has respect for the Western Grain Stabilization Plan. That is why he stood in this House of Commons to raise the issue with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). It became a national issue. It was only then that we got action on the Western Grain Stabilization Plan. The Hon. Member says that is right. My Leader has a sensitivity for the issue. Now it is being resolved, unfortunately a year and a half too late.

Farmers all across this country, not just in the west, are receiving commodity prices equal to those of 1973, but their input costs have increased since that time by 150 per cent. Agriculture Canada tells us that by 1988, just four years from now, they will go up another 110 per cent. What a devastating set of conditions. My friends to my far left, the NDP, would not allow any labour group to fall so far behind. However, the food producers who feed this whole country—and we should bear in mind there are only two sources of food, soil and water—have fallen behind with input costs increasing 150 per cent, and another 110 per cent projected by 1988, with virtually every commodity price falling. That is the devastating background upon which this Government rests its case for agriculture.

There should be no interim payment. An interim payment is indicated for July. There should not be one. Full payment should have been made many months ago. Rather than an interim payment in July the whole payment should be made. All one need do is look at the accounts of the Farm Credit Corporation which show that farm bankruptcies are up well over 100 per cent from those of just a year ago when farm bankruptcies had greatly increased over the year preceding that. Those figures do not at all take into account those farmers who, out of pride, managed to get out of the farming business before they had to register for bankruptcy. They, Sir, comprise the larger number of persons. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the agricultural industry must be seen for what it is.

Canadair has received $3 billion and de Havilland has received $270 million. If that kind of money were given to the agricultural industry it would yield returns to the nation of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $9 billion to $10 billion. The multiplier factor in relation to agricultural dollars is 3.5, because we know for sure that farmers do not keep their money, they spend it. As soon as a farmer is finished buying his machinery, he buys a refrigerator. That is the reason this is an issue which affects all of Canada.

When a farmer buys a combine, a tractor or any farm implement, it is in all likelihood made in central Canada. If a farmer decides to buy a new car, and it is a Canadian car, it is in all likelihood made in central Canada. If he buys a new refrigerator for his wife's kitchen, it is in all likelihood made in central Canada. The agricultural dollar has the greatest multiplier effect of any dollar in any industry in the entire country. That dollar use will multiply 3.5 times. If some of the money that was spent for the protection of de Havilland and Canadair had been given to the farmers, I submit that this country would be better off.

Lest I be misinterpreted, I am not saying that those industries to which I have referred are not industries that ought to be supported. That is not the case I am laying before you, Mr. Speaker. The case I am laying before you, Mr. Speaker, is that we cannot justify such enormous support for industrial sectors while blindly eating food every day in the belief that we will forever more have cheap food on our tables, unless we as a nation give greater support to the agricultural industry. That support may take the form of higher prices or, alternatively, of lower input costs.

Farmers today require the ability to manage without having decade-old cash receipts along with input costs that are increasing by 150 per cent. I beg this nation to recognize that there is no country in the world, not even the United States of America, that enjoys less costly food than Canada. We spend less of our disposable income on food than any other nation in the world. The last time I studied that question, and I concede at the outset that that was a year or two ago, I found that Canadians were then spending 18 per cent of their disposable income on food. I do know that Canadians spend less of their average take-home pay on food than Americans. That simply will not continue to be the case, and urban people will have to face the fact that they will have to pay more unless they recognize the agriculture is an industry and the farmer is a businessman who is in the business of food production.

The farmers paid into the Western Grain Stabilization Plan in order to even off boom and bust years. After procrastinating, and being prodded by the Opposition Parties for a year and a half, the Government has finally come through in its dying hour, just before Parliament is about to prorogue for an election, giving the farmers less than they invested, without giving back any of what the Government had contracted to give them. I tell you, Sir, that record is despicable. It is despicable to treat agriculture in such a devastating way.

The truth of the matter is that urban people as well as farmers need to know that the bill before us is one that affects all Canadians. Based upon that, Sir, I as a western Canadian find it both humorous and sad that every single candidate in the Liberal leadership race has shown up in western Canada saying that they will put a new face on western issues. They have all said: "We are out here to tell you that we will take into consideration your aspirations, your wants and your needs." We have heard that before, Mr. Speaker. We heard that during the 1968 leadership convention.

Whenever there is a Liberal leadership race, the candidates run all over every acre of our land telling us that we are wonderful people and that they need us. They do not need to tell us that, Sir. We know that they need us because they eat food every day and they need food products. However, we hate to be treated in the manner in which we are being treated. The farmers are paying into a fund which has accumulated nearly $1 billion while the Government procrastinates through years and years of bust. Then finally in the dying hours of the Government, right before the election, farmers are told that they will receive a portion of their money back. If anyone thinks for one moment that a farmer will walk over to a Liberal leadership candidate, kiss his ring and say: "Thank you, Sir, you have saved my farm," he is wrong, because that farmer has a tool out in his barnyard with three times that will express very well exactly what he thinks of such Liberal leadership candidates. Those candidates will become a part of the legacy of the great Otto Lang. I notice that there is a picture of Otto Lang's skull at the entrance to the Parliamentary Restaurant. There is a picture of all of the Liberals in western Canada there as well. There are pictures of them in the museum which is in the riding of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). They are called the dinosaur species and they are dinosaurs; not because they have cruel hearts but because the country has paid attention to the affairs of urban Canada without concern for the regions and without the realization that food is an industry the same as manufacturing is an industry. Those dinosaurs believed that food would always be there and that food would always be cheap.

The Western Grain Stabilization Plan must be made more sensitive on a continuing basis. It must make its pay-out now because the need for it is now. There is no reason for the delay. I see that you are signalling that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. The issue is certainly not dead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member who sits right beside me, although he is a member of the other Party.

Mr. Malone: Thank goodness.

Mr. Pepin: So close yet so far.

Mr. Waddell: I would like to say on the record that it is not true that I have had discussions about joining the Conservative Party. I know that the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has been leaking this news all over the country, but it is not true.

The Hon. Member who last spoke is a thoughtful and philosophical Member in spite of the fact that he is a member of the Conservative Party. It used to be that 40 per cent, 50 per cent or even 60 per cent of the people in the workforce were farmers. Now, after the great industrial revolution and continued technological change, I believe that 3 per cent, 2 per cent or even 1 per cent of the people are employed on the farms.

Mr. Pepin: Five per cent.

Mr. Waddell: It is 5 per cent. A small percentage of the workers are working on the farm. The Hon. Member was complaining as I sometimes do about the influence of these bad easterners over here with all of their power who put it to the poor western farmers. I would like to ask the Hon. Member how he sees the western farmers having more power or even adequate power to take care of their own interests when they seem to comprise a declining percentage of the workforce in Canada.

• (1530)

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I only got as far as page 2 of my notes, and I had about 12 pages I wanted to present. It is very simple. What we need is an elected Senate with equal representation from every province in the country. I am not saying that the Senate should have absolute legal power over the House of Commons. I recognize the principle of one person one vote. But the truth of the matter is that it is equally wrong today to have a situation in which Toronto and Montreal can out-vote 70 per cent of Canada's land mass.

If we had a magical chain-saw and could cut Toronto out and throw it away, the hinterland resources are such that within a decade we would build a new Toronto. If we cut the hinterland out—with its forestry, mineral rock, agricultural lands and fresh water—and threw it away, Toronto would be dead within a year. We need to bring into balance and perspective the management that takes place in our nation between the fewer people in the resource-based areas and those who utilize the resources of the urban centres. An urban person does nothing except help manage resources. That is what the banks, the insurance companies and all the rest of the institutions are there for. It all relates back in some way or other to the resource base. If that was not there, the urban centres would not be there.

The prejudice and bias against farmers is there because of provincial governments. They will charge urban people $5, $6, or $7 for a private telephone line, while farmers who have to buy $100,000 combines have to share their telephone lines with four of their neighbours. This is evident in the postal system. Urban people can go out in their pyjamas on Sunday morning, reach around the corner and get their newspaper and letters. They can do that any day of the week. Farmers have the privilege of renting a postal box for $10 a year. This pertains to in communications and other areas.

I would simply say to my hon. friend from Vancouver-Kingsway that this country needs an elected Senate so that we can start to do as the American people do; to talk about "us" and "we" instead of being Canadians talking about "I" and "them". I would submit that there is more difference between a person from Texas and a person from Boston than there is between one from Toronto and one from Edmonton. Yet, the divisions of our country exist there because we have never brought the regions into balance. In answer to my hon. friend's question, we must bring some regional balance into the political system.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I must take this occasion to rise on a question of privilege as I have been accused of being from Toronto by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). I must point out that there are farmers in my constituency.

Second, I must ask whether the Hon. Member was speaking with tongue in cheek when he said there were no cities in western Canada and no people in cities in western Canada, or that the people who are in cities are nothings. Doe he mean that the people who live in Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg, and Saskatoon are nothings? Surely he has speaking with tongue in cheek when he said that.

Finally, did the Hon. Member seriously put forth the proposotion that those Ministers who have represented western Canada—Minister Olson, Minister Argue and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who is recognized for his reputation as being sensitive to farming interests—are not sensitive to western needs?

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, if I had suggested that the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Crosgrove) was a Torontonian, I truly apologize to him. I did not mean in any way to do that to him.

On the other hand, with respect to the suggestion that I said that people in cities were nothings, I do not know if I said that. I cannot remember saying that. I will read Hansard. If I did say that, that was certainly not my intention. Every human being everywhere is important, is an important resource of the country. All people are somebodies. That is what we want to have in this country; people who are somebodies.

With respect to the Ministers the Hon. Member claims are great Ministers, who are protecting western Canada—and he singled out as one example the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan)—he asked if I might have been submitting that thought tongue in cheek. If I was trying to suggest that the Minister of Agriculture was indeed protecting western Canada, my tongue would have been right through my cheek and half a dozen other cheeks. He is the person who wants market supply management for our beef industry. Even good old NDP Manitoba voted 80 per cent against that concept. I could tell the House about all the protection that has been provided to western Canada, but my time is used up and I cannot go on with this speech any longer. I will tell you flat out, Mr. Speaker, they would not stand a chance, with the philosophies they have about agriculture, of getting elected anywhere in any constituency west of the Manitoba-Ontario border by a group of farmers. Not a single one of them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): On debate, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief in order to give Members opposite a chance to speak on this Bill. I would like to say a few words, however, as I was a member of the agriculture committee in the mid-seventies and travelled throughout western Canada.

I think that this Bill, which has been agreed to by all Parties, is indeed a good Bill. The amendments to the Bill are attempting to enforce what the original Bill intended. I think that is a fair statement. I will not go through all of the positive features of the Bill, although perhaps I should. Members opposite have not addressed their remarks entirely to the Bill, but have stayed somewhat to the intent of the Government in introducing the Bill. I agree with Members opposite that it should not take such a long time to bring in a Bill such as this. The previous speaker said that it should only take a day. Certainly, it should not take two months as one opposition Member suggested. If it took four months, it would be outrageous. If it took six months it would be more than outrageous. It should certainly not take eight months. But I am wondering what happened when the Conservative Party was in power for eight months. Why was something not done then if it could have been done in one day? That is point number one; to even out this argument about timing. No matter what is brought in by the Government—even if it is good legislation—the Opposition say there is something politically bad about it, and speeches are delivered in the House which take away from the general thrust and intent of the legislation.

There were three or four Members opposite who referred to other costs that primary producers have. Primary producers are the most important people in this country today. They are the people who keep the country alive and on a sound footing—the fishermen, farmers, people who work in the forests and people who work in the mines. But, whenever the subject is brought up it becomes entirely political.

For example, when Members discussed the costs to Canadians, one Member said that the people of Canada were led astray with the 18-cent increase in the price of gasoline that the Opposition wanted to bring in and, of course, the dollar that they claimed the Liberals brought in. As a matter of record, the only difference between both major Parties in this country is that the Liberal Party was preaching 75 percent world prices and the Progressive Conservative Party was preaching 100 per cent. That is the only difference. For someone to say that such and such a person pays an extra 50 cents or 60 cents, directly or indirectly, in fuel taxes is not the question. The question is the total amount of money they pay for oil and gas in this country. I agree that the present taxes on oil and gas for primary producers should be eliminated. That is both provincial and federal taxes, and they vary from province to province.

• (1540)

At the same time let us recognize that it would be very strange to hear a Member from western Canada say that we should have lower oil and gas prices right across Canada. Go speak to the Premier of Alberta and ask him whether he agrees with that. For that matter, go to the Premier of my province, the poorest province in Canada, and ask him if he agrees with that. Every time the price of oil and gas rises $1, equalization payments from the federal Government shoot up $100 million. Therefore, when you talk about prices being paid by Canadians for oil and gas, it should be looked at in its totality and the Canadian people should not be mislead.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What Bill are we talking about, Mr. Speaker? There should be relevancy on both sides, not just this side.

Mr. Baker: The other argument is that the timing is wrong. They say that the Liberal Government is bringing it in just prior to a federal election. There is not a farmer in western Canada, Mr. Speaker, who would say no, do not bring it in because there is an election coming up. He does not care if there is an election or not. What he wants is this Bill brought into the House. I could go on about that but I will not.

Another point of condemnation of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) and members opposite seemed to be somewhat irate, was that the Minister is bringing in an amendment at committee stage to give the farmers a payment now. As I said, I do not know as much as I should know about farmers in this country, but on checking I understand that the Minister is not only bringing in this amendment, he is also attempting to have these payments made the first week in June, not the last of July as was mentioned in the Chamber. The Minister is bringing in this amendment, which Members opposite as well as farmers wanted and asked for, and he should be praised by Members opposite for doing so. Whether or not there is an election is totally immaterial. It will be absolutely ludicrous to follow that line of reasoning because, if you did, you would not bring in any good legislation at all prior to an anticipated election.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Wait until I make my fish speech, then you will be really impressed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Are you kidding? It is not worthy of questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Debate. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the only comment I have about the remarks of the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) is that they are just a year and a half late. It took a year and a half for them to get it into their heads that the farmer needed money. Look how many farmers went bankrupt in 1983. They could have been on the land today had the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Government listened to the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) and our leader. They begged and entreated the Government to do something to save the farms of the West. But the Government took a year and a half to do it. Sometimes I think we should do a little more research on birds so that we could cross a homing pigeon with a woodpecker. We could use them here to send a message over to them and it could be pounded into their heads. They would not have to take a year and a half to do something while 400 farmers are going bankrupt.

This Government has stacked the cards against western Canada for years.

Mr. Pepin: Come on.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, you have. I will give you a couple of instances. The farmers know it. You are not going to fool anyone out there. At least I do not think you are going to fool very many, if any, by giving them a payment of their own money just before the election.

Mr. Pepin: We are not trying to do that at all.

Mr. Taylor: That is exactly what you have in mind. If there was not an election coming we would have to wait another year and another 400 farmers could go bankrupt. That is how much the Government cares about western Canada. We get the dirty end of the stick all the time. For years we have had the dirty end of the stick.

In this Bill the Minister says we are now going to let them opt out. I thought we had freedom of choice in this country. That is what the Charter says. Now the Government is going to give us permission to opt out every ten years. What is more, there is no provision to pay the money back when the farmer opts out. The Government is going to keep his money. Talk about Moscow! This Government is worse than Moscow. At least over there you know you are not going to get it back, but here you expect the Government to be democratic and pay it back when you opt out. What nonsense. How naive do you think farmers in western Canada are? They have paid $5,000 to $8,000 into this fund and they are just going to drop out and leave it in the pockets of the federal Government to spend in extravagant ways? Our farmers are not naive. They are well educated people and when they want to opt out they want their money back, every red cent of it, and the interest it earned. If this Government has any morality at all—

Mr. Pepin: Louder.

Mr. Taylor: —any morality at all—

Mr. Pepin: Louder!

Mr. Taylor: The Minister says they have not. I believe that, but if there is any morality at all they will make an amendment and pay back the farmer the money the Government has taken from him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: If you pay something and you do not get the goods, the money is refunded. But here the Government has a new idea. It will keep the money. Let them opt out but they will not get their money back. It is getting worse and worse, Mr. Speaker. Talk about stacking the cards against the people of the West! The Government did it in the capital cost allowance. Look at what the budgets have done to western Canada.

Not only has the capital cost allowance provision put thousands of people out of work, it has forced farmers to keep their old antiquated equipment. One dealer alone had to cancel seven combines because the Government said it will not let the farmer have his capital cost allowance in the first year because be buys the machine in August. Who in the world is going to buy a combine in January when you do not use it until August or November? That is how the Government looks on western Canada. I wish some of the unemployed and some of the farm machinery companies in the East would wake up and know what is going on. This Government is responsible for a great number of them being unemployed through its policies, and the capital cost allowance is only one.

Talk about western Canada getting the dirty end of the stick. Look at the capital gains tax. The only pension a farmer has is his farm. Then the Government brings in the capital gains tax and taxes the farmer on half of the gain. He will no longer be able to go and buy a home in the city. If they could do that additional housing would be required. People would have to build houses and that would create employment.

We wonder why there are two million unemployed in the country. It is because of Government policy. How many people has the Government put out of work in these two instances alone? The capital gains tax is the only pension that farmers have. We make them stay on the farm when they would like to sell the farm. We even tax them on the inflated value of the farm. Of course the Government made a change for bond holders. The bond holder does not have to pay capital gains tax on the inflated value of his bonds. However, the poor farmer who lives in western Canada has to pay on the inflated value of his farm. That is money he has never had. This is another case,

Mr. Speaker, in which we are getting the dirty end of the stick. There are many such cases we could deal with today.

At the end of his speech today the Minister gave us a wonderful message. He said he is going to do what Progressive Conservative Members and the Leader of our Party have been asking him to do from the beginning. He is going to pay out the money so that it can be used for spring seeding. The money was needed for spring seeding. Some farmers have not seeded yet because they have run out of credit at the banks. They have no more land to put up for another loan. They are either getting their friends to seed it or are not seeding at all. In May he says he is going to make an interim payment before the end of July. Do Hon. Members on that side of the House realize that crops have to be seeded in May if they are going to be harvested before the frost in the fall? You cannot wait until the first of August to plant your crops because you will then have the money to do it. That is absolute nonsense.

They are not even going to bring this change in at committee. They are going to blackball the committee and bring it in at report stage so that it cannot be debated. There will be no people there to say what they think about it. That is a wonderful, smart idea. I wonder who stayed up all night to dream that up. Mr. Speaker? There is no reason why that change should not be made in committee where it can be debated so that we can get the payment as fast as possible, rather than after a tremendous delay.

The calendar year is going to help, Mr. Speaker, but it is not going to make a great deal of difference in the triggering of pay-outs. It is going to make some difference and we thank you for that little crumb.

Why were the other things we suggested not brought in, such as the cost of machinery and production? Why is every cost of production not considered rather than only the ones set out in the Act? Some of the biggest costs of production, such as inflation and interests, are not included. They say they are going to change the Act by using the calendar year. That is another crumb. This money belongs to the farmers, Mr. Speaker. They are not getting back even the amount they paid in. Do not try to kid the troops. We know what is going on. One-third of the total amount of $900 billion belongs to the farmers.

Mr. Pepin: Indeed, one-third. You said it.

Mr. Taylor: Their interest is in that too. The total payment in 1978 was only $369 million. In those days the Government did have some honour. It said that $123 million came out of the farmers' pockets and they gave it back. The Government said it contributed $246 million and it would not give that amount back. The total was $369 million and they told the farmers that they were going to get $123 million plus the Government's share, including the interest they earned. Once it is put into that fund it is no longer government money. It belongs to the Western Grain Stabilization Fund which belongs to the farmers of western Canada. Do not try to kid the troops and tell us we are getting back more than we put into the fund. If you say that in western Canada you will be driven out of the hall and tarred and feathered. The farmers will just not go for that kind of nonsense. Now the Government says the farmers may get $350 million out of the $900 million—almost $1 billion. That is not even one-third of the total amount, and we may not even get that.

It is no wonder that only one of a mast number of farmers who came to a meeting in Strathmore a few weeks ago would not opt out. The rest of the farmers wanted to opt out immediately, but they want their money back. They are not going to make a gift of their money to the Government. They should be getting their money back.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I will say that if the Government does not have the morality to pay money back to a farmer when he opts out, then we have left democracy behind us and are at the bottom of the garbage pail. It is no wonder that the whole group of farmers at Strathmore wanted out. Now the Government is going to be very nice. It will let them out in 1986 but will not return their money. I hope that some of the reasonable minds on that side of the House will awaken and pay back the money when a farmer opts out, or change the Act so that it will do what it is supposed to do, stabilize the incomes of western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on debate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am looking at the clock and I see that only a very short period of time remains. I have had informal discussions with the Government House Leader. We had hoped to hear from a few speakers today, and we intend to have this Bill pass second reading today. I was wondering whether there could be a disposition to not see four o'clock, which would give me a few minutes to make a few concluding comments on behalf of my Party with respect to this particular legislation. If that were acceptable to everyone in the House, I would like to say a few words since this affects my district very seriously.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would agree to that provided that the House will adjourn at five o'clock in any case. Consequently, that will shorten the Private Member's Hour by the time required by the Hon. Member. If the private Member whose motion is to be discussed today is in agreement, that is fine. However, the decision would depend on that Member.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On behalf of the NDP I can say that we are prepared to agree. We trust that the Hon. Member will not be open-ended. We know he is loquacious and feels strongly about this matter. However, I hope he could finish in 10 minutes at the outside.

Mr. Pinard: It is very clear that it will only be matter of about 10 minutes. Provided the Hon. Member does not impute motives to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), we are in agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. As good as this agreement seems to be, I will have to ask for unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for the proposal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Agreed. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. On Friday afternoon there is a sense of camaraderie and co-operation in this place which should possibly be observed more often. However, after I conclude my remarks that feeling of camaraderie may well leave the Chamber.

I would simply like to conclude by saying how disappointed we in this Party are that once again, with regard to legislation which deals with western Canada and the western producers in particular, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) has failed in his responsibility to be present in order to guide this legislation through the House. As the one elected Cabinet Minister representing western Canada, we had hoped that he would show some interest in western Canadian producers by at least staying in Ottawa and attending here.

• (1600)

Mr. Pepin: What is wrong with me?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We appreciate the fact that the Minister of State for External Relations (Mr. Pepin) has taken the opportunity of guiding us through. However, I suggest that when the Minister of Transport refuses to appear when we are discussing the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act amendments on this Friday, we in western Canada must wonder where his interests and duties lie.

I want to point out that in terms of this legislation, as pointed out by my colleagues, western Canadian producers are in a very serious financial position. There is a crisis in agriculture in western Canada. Production costs have risen dramatically. We have the prospect of increases in the cost of implements, fertilizers, pesticides and herbicides. There has been a steady increase over the course of the year in the cost of these important commodities for the western producer. At the same time we have seen prices for the seven grains that are covered under this particular Act drop some 20 per cent between 1981 and 1983.

Furthermore, the Government has introduced other legislation affecting the West with respect to the Crowsnest Pass rates. As far as western grain producers are concerned at the present time, from August 1 last year there has been an increase of 58 per cent in rates up to August 1, 1984. The railways are now applying to the Canadian Transportation Commission for a recalculation of the cost of capital in terms of the rates they charge to the western grain producer. If they are successful it will mean approximately another 30 per cent increase in terms of grain transportation costs to the farmer. Under present prospects, there is the possible situation where the amount of grain that will be delivered for export will probably exceed the cap levels shown in the Crowsnest Pass legislation by 1.5 million tonnes. All of this excess grain will travel at the full freight rate.

One can ask what are the Liberal Party's motives in terms of this legislation? They only brought it in because the Leader of our Party (Mr. Mulroney), the Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), the Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), the Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) and other members of our Party forced the Government to take action. It would not have taken action had it not been for the persistent efforts on the part of the Progressive Conservative Party, bringing pressure to bear that the Government could not resist. Even the Minister of Transport, who does not have the political sagacity to be in the House when western issues are raised for which he is responsible, could not resist the pressure.

Where is the Minister? I suppose that he is out, in terms of his responsibility, trying to justify the imposition of these increased rates for the transportation of grain to export points. I can say that the western Canadian farmers understand the great imposition—

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to indicate to the Hon. Member that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) is in western Canada today because of a previous engagement. He was unable to change that engagement. The Hon. Member should not reflect on the activities and responsibilities of the Minister of Transport.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair would just like to say that it is difficult to rule on such a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I can understand your difficulty. We have difficulty with that Government every day of the year. I simply want to make a point that the Minister of Transport is probably out in western Canada trying to scrape up votes for his candidate, Mr. John Turner, who has is own advice to western Canadians when he tries to woo them for the Liberal Party. He has his campaign manager, the Minister of Transport, who tells us that he will not increase the maximum level of grain under which the calculations are made on the Crowsnest Pass legislation. He tells us that he will not lower the safety net.

He is the campaign manager of John Turner who is promising everything. He says, "If I am Prime Minister, everything that the Minister of Transport has done I will rectify. I do not care how crazy the Minister of Transport has been in the past, I will rectify it because this man knows not of which he does." That is what Mr. Turner is saying about his campaign manager. If I were you I would get him back from western Canada, because he will have to answer for.

Mr. Ouellet: You are getting nervous.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is no nervousness because we know in western Canada that any candidate the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) supports has serious difficulty with respect to credibility. If I had the Minister of Labour supporting me in any political contest I would be trembling in my boots. I would be concerned because this leadership candidate for the Liberal Party, who I understand now has the support of a majority of the present Cabinet and who is trying to distance himself from the policies of the current administration, will have a hard time explaining why he has the majority of the current Cabinet on his side. I suggest that is the kind of inconsistency that people across Canada will understand.

I am very interested that this Bill has received such attention, and I wish to say in conclusion that I wondered why the Government was insisting that we give it quick disposition. The Progressive Conservative Party indicated that it did not like the Bill, and specified its objections to it. We want an immediate payment, and to have it retroactive. We thought that the level was not sufficient. However, we said that we are prepared to do everything to pass this legislation, imperfect as it is, in the course of one day. We would even agree that it not go to committee. My colleague, the Member for Assiniboia, consulted with the heads of various farm organizations across western Canada who said that they did not necessarily want to appear before the committee.

Therefore, I had to ask why the Government was anxious to have this matter go before committee? Now it comes out that it wants to bring it before committee because it realizes how vulnerable the Government is to the demands that have been made by our Party with respect to the whole question of interim payment. It wants to introduce an amendment which it says requires a royal address. It now wants to make amendments to its own legislation which it announced with such fanfare on April 25 of this year.

The Government had the member from the other place who is responsible for the Wheat Board, sitting, cheek by jowl, with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). Their picture was spread across the entire page of every newspaper because of the width of the people involved. I realize now that we are getting involved in a pre-election scenario. What the Liberal Party has in mind is not the interests of western farmers, but putting themselves in a posture of having the farmers' own money released to them at a pre-election time. I can say with some knowledge of the way western Canadians think in terms of political activity, that this age-old Liberal ruse will not work. This is not a question of beneficence from above, it is a question of equity. This is the farmers' money which they are entitled to get back. They made an investment and all they are asking now is to get some fair treatment from the Government.

I appreciate the fact that we have been able to force the Government to make this move and bring forth this legislation. Even with its defects, we will allow this matter to go through second reading, under the protest that there are some deficiencies in it. We will make our position known during the course of the committee hearings.

I can tell the Minister of State for External Relations that, although I appreciate very much his interest and that he stayed here during the course of this afternoon, the Minister of Transport has much to answer to western Canadian producers for taking no interest in legislation in his name. He is never here to pilot measures through, or to address them in Parliament. He will discover the consequences for his inactivity in the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Questions or comments?

Is the House ready for the question?

NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed, from Tuesday, January 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Anguish, that Bill C-203, an Act to declare Canada a Nuclear Weapons Free Zone, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly happy to rise today to speak in favour of Bill C-203, an Act to declare Canada a Nuclear Weapons Free Zone, not only because I fully support both the principle and the letter of the Bill before us, but also because my constituency of Kootenay-West has had on a number of occasions over the past year and a half the highest percentage totals on disarmament referenda within Canada, one of those votes for disarmament being as high as 99.7 per cent in one of our component electoral districts. Also, some half dozen cities and villages within Kootenay West's boundaries have declared themselves as nuclear free zones either by resolution or by by-law. I am also particularly pleased to speak on this Bill because it is authored by my colleague, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) from the Province of Saskatchewan. In addition, we share many strong common feelings on the Bill before us and on many other matters. It may be folksy to recollect, but my mother used to toboggan the hill down the coulee into his grandmother's backyard in Saskatchewan, and thus there is a personal connection, though not a direct one, that makes me happy to share this moment with him and to share his feelings and support for this proposition.

On previous occasions when Bills of a similar nature, whether presented by my colleague or by other Members of my Party, the NDP, numerous Members from other Parties have expressed particular misgivings about certain sections, most often because they stated that it would impinge on certain civilian uses of nuclear energy or medical uses of nuclear energy. I want to assure my colleagues that, having read this Bill, all pains have been taken to ensure that those kinds of misgivings may not legitimately be expressed with any degree of legitimacy upon the Bill before us. When Members of the Conservative Party or the Liberal Party rise to speak, for a change they will have to address the substance and the principle rather than finding nitpicking excuses, which I would not suggest is what they would do, but some people in this country from time to time are wont to do.

The Bill before us is short enough, and I intend to read it into the record, if the Speaker will consent. I will not read the penalty provisions because I do not think they are particularly germane to the matter under debate. Let me now read the Bill into the record.

1. This Act may be cited as the Nuclear Weapons Free Zone Act.

2. The sovereign nation of Canada, including the territorial coastal waters, inland bodies of water and airspace over which Canada has jurisdiction, is hereby declared to be a nuclear weapons free zone.

3. (1) No person, corporation, government agency or association of any nature whatsoever shall develop, test, manufacture, import, transport or store any nuclear weapon, nuclear weapons system, nuclear weapons support system, or any components therefor, within Canada, its territorial coastal waters, its inland bodies of water or its airspace over which Canada has jurisdiction for any reason whatsoever, including the defence of Canada or any ally thereof.

The rest of the Bill gets into the penalty provisions and I will not read them at this time.

I think the intent of the Bill is crystal clear. The wording is crystal clear. There is no room for fudging and there is no room for misunderstanding. I hope the debate will have the same degree of clarity as does the Bill.

One of the impacts which such legislation, if it were to become law, would have, would be the cessation not only of the testing of the cruise missile within Canada but also preventing the manufacture of the guidance system or portions of it within Canada as well. In thinking about that subject, I cannot help but digress a little to think of the many times that Members of the Government, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) and the former Minister of National Defence have, in this House and elsewhere across this land, consistently gone on and on to say that we are testing the cruise missile in Canada because it is a commitment to NATO. They have said that on innumerable occasions and in innumerable ways. That is false. They know that assertion to be false because one or two of them have said on public occasions, I am not sure whether or not in this House, when cross-examined by reporters from the media, that the impression given by those statements was false. I think one can reach no other conclusion other than they have known what they have said. They have since said it repeatedly both in this Chamber and across the land, on television, on radio, at public meetings, and at seminars. It is regrettable that they have never admitted the facts. They know it to be true.

The basic reason we are testing the Cruise missile in Canada, other than for some kind of loyalty oath in a broad sense to the incumbent President of the United States, whatever that happens to be worth, and we all have our own feelings on that, is because this country wants a larger share of defence production in Canada. We are in it for the money. Tommy Douglas used to say—and it is one of the truest things the hon. gentleman ever said—that "Whenever they say it's not the money, it's the principle of the thing, you can always be sure it's the money". That is what cruise testing in Canada is about. Liberal Members know it, Conservative Members know it, and we know it. It is encumbent upon us if we want to disagree to have the intestinal fortitude to tell the public what the debate is about. If we think risking our credibility as a peace-seeking nation with fairly clean credentials is worth a few jobs and a few bucks that will accrue, particularly to Litton Industries, but perhaps to other companies as well, in defence sharing agreements with the United States and perhaps with some of our European allies, then that is a debate we can properly have. Let us debate the issue for what it is. Let us get the issue clear.

I found it galling, to come to more recent events, to watch the Minister of National Defence at a meeting of NATO ministers in Europe just a week ago, particularly considering some of the debate and circumstances which have come to light in this House in the last few days about Canada's willingness or ability to honour its own commitments whether or not we agree with them. He had the unmitigated gall to attend a NATO Ministers' meeting in Europe and blame one of our NATO allies, the Netherlands, for "betraying the NATO Alliance", because it has not yet agreed and it is still undecided,—it has not yet agreed to station U.S. Pershing and U.S. Cruise missiles on its soil. Talk about the pot calling the kettle black!

As I said, we may or may not agree on certain commitments that we have, but I think any Canadian who is a person of honour would say that if we have made a firm commitment, at least we ought to do our best to keep it. It ill behooves anyone who pretends or wants to be called honourable to pursue the kind of shameful course which the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) pursued in Europe just last week.

They must be killing themselves laughing over there. The Russians will think that they have conquered Europe, and that everybody will be dead, they will have been laughing so hard. It really makes us wonder where their heads are at over there, in the government, not to mention their sense of honour.

The House of Representatives of the United States has gone on record favouring a nuclear freeze as a first step. Are they anti-American? The Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence love to cast inuendoes over here from time to time suggesting that we are anti-American. Is the U.S. House of Representatives anti-American? No. That is always the answer of someone who has a weak case. All they can do is cast those kinds of insults across the way. It does not hold water any more because the world is slowing growing up and Canadians are growing up to the reality that they should rather not listen to what politicians say, when it is on the record here, on television, on the radio and in the newspapers, for them to see what politicians do.

The previous votes of politicians which have taken place in this House of Commons on the issues of a nuclear freeze, a disarmament referendum and on the testing of Cruise missiles in Canada are on the record. The record shows that 98 per cent of Liberal and Conservative Members have continuously said: "ready-aye-ready", to go along with whatever President Reagan, in his wildest flights of fancy, decides to call upon us to do out of some sheer blind loyalty. Sometimes he comes down to earth, but he has some really wierd flights at times too. And, I am not anti-American because I agree with the majority of the Members of the House of Representatives to the South of us.

I agree with many other institutions and organizations throughout the United States which know that in a world like ours we must be able to guarantee a future to our children and our children's children, so that they can decide for themselves what options they will take, whether to live or die, or whether to have a planet left in which to live.

It is beyond the kind of petty politics we have seen here. The Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of National Defence and the former Minister of National Defence have lied to this House and they have lied to this nation continuously. They have deliberately misled this House. They have deliberately misled the Canadian people. They have been called "liars" by my colleagues both inside and outside the House of Commons, but they have not yet had the guts to stand up and admit it.

Let us debate the real issues. Let us debate whether or not risking our credibility and risking our lives is worth the few bucks and the few jobs which Litton Industries will provide. Let us debate that, because that is the issue. Let us make it clear to the Canadian people that the Cruise missile, which is being tested in Canada, with its kind of guidance system, is not for NATO use. It is not the same Cruise missile which will be deployed in Europe. It has nothing to do with it. Basically it is the same weapon, but its guidance system and the purposes for which it is intended are entirely different. The missile and guidance system which we are building and testing in Canada are to be used directly—and it is being tested along a track which includes part of its testing field in the constituency of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish)—so that an air-launched Cruise missile can fly from the Arctic Ocean and follow the tundra track to the industrial heartland of the Soviet Union. That guidance system or that kind of terrain has nothing to do with the method by which Cruise missiles currently being deployed in Europe are to be used or tested. It is a different weapon. We have been receiving false and phoney arguments. The Government does not want the public to know that the Prime Minister has lied, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has lied, that the Minister of National Defence has lied and that the former Minister of National Defence has lied in this House, and people who lie are liars.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair presumes that the Hon. Member has gone slightly beyond his thoughts by implying that Members of the House have lied. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to reword what he just said.

Mr. Kristiansen: I regret, on this occasion the evidence is so absolutely overwhelming and has been repeated so often that under no conditions, absolutely no condition, will I withdraw that allegation.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair has no choice but to ask the Hon. Member to withdraw. To call a Member a liar is definitely an unparliamentary expression. For the second time the Chair would like to ask the Hon. Member to withdraw the offensive word.

Mr. Kristiansen: With all respect to yourself, and your office, Sir, there is no way I could honourably do so, and I regret to say that.

Mr. Waddell: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Would the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) please resume his seat? I think the Chair will first deal with the question before us.

Mr. Waddell: I have a point of order. Perhaps I could help the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I do not think the Chair needs any advice. The difficulty before us is that an Hon. Member has used unparliamentary language and must withdraw. For the third time the Chair will ask the Hon. Member to withdraw.

Mr. Kristiansen: Excuse me, Sir, I will have to ask you to repeat the question as my colleague and I were having a discussion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I believe the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that if he does not withdraw the offensive expression, the Chair will have no choice but to name him.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I am quite aware of that, but I do not think there is any way I could honourably do other than what I have done or say other than what I have said. I could change the words, but they would have exactly the same meaning. Whether it is deliberately misled or lied, the meaning is exactly the same; they are equally unparliamentary. However, the conduct of the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and both the past and present Minister of National Defence gives me no other alternative but so to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Then the Chair will name Mr. Kristiansen.

Mr. Kristiansen: Does it matter which door I go out?

And Mr. Kristiansen having withdrawn:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): On debate, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway cannot rise again in this debate; he has already spoken.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Were you indicating that I have already participated in the debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Perhaps the Hon. Member does not realize that we have resumed debate from a previous debate. At least according to the list provided to me, the Hon. Member has participated in the debate.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you.

● (1630)

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is of considerable value to us as Members of Parliament and to the public of Canada that this issue be debated in the House of Commons, albeit, at a late hour on Friday afternoon. The whole question of disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, is of concern to all Members of Parliament as it is to all Canadians. No one wants war, let alone a nuclear war. I do not think there is one Member of this House who would take a differing view.

A considerable amount of thought has been given to this matter both by elected Members and within the bureaucracy, particularly the Department of External Affairs. When you are part and parcel of the operation of Parliament, you recognize that. Somebody who is not at home here, somebody from the outisde, so to speak, does not understand the amount of thought given to these matters and the amount of expertise that resides amongst the elected and non-elected people within Government in its widest sense. It is not readily apparent.

One of our jobs as Members of Parliament is to engage in public debate on these issues so that the people of Canada become aware of the various points of argument and can make up their own minds in these issues and possibly give us some direction. There has, however, been some reluctance, particularly on the Government side, to bring these matters forward. There is a very good reason for this.

First, there are no real specific solutions at this time. The NDP like to think they have specific solutions with instruments such as Private Member's Bill C-203, with which we are dealing this afternoon. However, any careful reflection will show that it is full of holes and rather doomed to failure when looking at a long-term solution to the problem of the arms race.

The Government is unable to put forward to this House specific matters for debate and resolution. It would feel rather foolish bringing something forward of a non-specific nature and, therefore, does not do that. If those who take a rational view of arms control matters take the long view and recognize the amount of hard work that would have to go into any solution, the negotiations that would take place on a continuing basis, they would feel that in the meantime something like to two-track approach as an option would have to be pursued in order to maintain Canada and NATO defence capabilities. These people are sometimes reluctant to engage in discussions on the peace issue because they might be accused of being against peace. Of course, none of us are.

Therefore, it is good on a Friday afternoon to have an opportunity to talk on these matters and try to come up with some potential solution. That is where we are at now. We are in the idea formulation stage rather than bringing forward specific formulae that will enable us, all people in the world, and not just Canada, to come to real solutions.

As I said before, the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) at first blush seems in principle quite reasonable. Certainly he has his heart in the right place. However, when you examine it in detail, you find that it is rather naive and simplistic. It is the facile approach to the issue; kind of a quick-fix solution. In an earlier debate on a related subject, I went at some length into the "Outlawry of War" movement that was prevalent in North America and Europe in the 1920s and in the 1930s. That was another simplistic approach where every nation of the world would sign a treaty not to engage in war. Once they all had signed a solemn pledge, war would be outlawed. There would be no such thing. Of course, we know that that approach failed despite the sincere wishes of many people who thought that would be the solution. We should not make that mistake today. We should work harder to find real and lasting solutions.

What is the present policy of the Government of Canada on the issue of nuclear weapons in Canada? I listened carefully to no less an authority than our Prime Minister (Mr.Trudeau). If I interpret him correctly, it is his wish and early intention that there should not be nuclear weapons on Canadian soil. He does not want to do this because of legislation such as that before us, but rather by administrative choice in keeping with the wishes of the people of Canada. We are told that the nuclear weapons presently here will be removed as conventional arms are built up in Canada so that we are able to defend ourselves and keep our NATO commitment by conventional means rather than by nuclear means. This statement is supported by a responsible Opposition in this House.

In keeping with the latter point, we on this side have criticized the Government for some time for the deplorable state of our conventional military equipment. If we do not have sufficient conventional material, we become reliant on nuclear weapons. That is not a good state of affairs. Therefore, I hope that the armed forces of Canada can be properly equipped to counter any hostilities with conventional rather than nuclear weapons.

I do not know whether I should call this an NDP proposal. As far as I know, it reflects not only the individual's private thinking, but also the thinking of the Party he has the honour to represent in this House. If we adopt this proposal, what would be the result? I suspect that a couple of things would happen. First, it would bring about a false sense of security: We do not have nuclear weapons in this country, everybody is working to get rid of them all over the world and therefore we no longer have to worry about the situation. That is an argument that I cannot buy. All you have to do is look not at a map, because maps are usually arranged in an east-west direction laterally, but at a globe to see that Canada is strategically placed mid-way between the two super powers, the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. If there is a nuclear warhead-equipped rocket earmarked for the Port of Seattle, you can bet your life there is also one earmarked for the Port of Vancouver. Therefore, if we were to adopt this proposal, the sense of security it might engender would, in my opinion, be entirely false.

Another result of the proposal would be a reliance by Canada almost exclusively for its defence on the United States of America. We need only look back to the Second World War and the illustration of how Great Britain took over Iceland at that time. Iceland was neutral, doing nobody any harm, but it was in a strategic location. Because of the hostilities of the time, the British felt they should set up a military establishment in Iceland. Before that, I do not know whether Iceland had been independent or whether it had been a part of Denmark. However, that is what happened. In all probability, that would occur in Canada if we left ourselves naked and unable to contribute to our defence. In the case of hostilities, I am sure that the Americans would take the same attitude toward Canada as Great Britain took toward Iceland in the last war. I think it is better to retain our options in case hostilities should ever arise, and I think that this could be done within the NATO framework.

You must remember, Mr. Speaker, that NATO is probably one of the first successful peace organizations in the world. That might not become apparent until one really looks into the matter. NATO was established with the maintenance of peace at heart, and it has been relatively successful. Since its establishment, there has been no major Atlantic conflict. It operates by bringing about peace through deterrence. In the final analysis, deterrence might not be the best way of establishing a lasting peace. However, it is probably better to have peace for several decades in this manner than not to have peace at all. I would encourage Members of the House to be supportive of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

I would suspect that Bill C-203 would be contrary to our treaty obligations regarding both NATO and NORAD. It deals with things like overflights of Canada by our allies and the testing and manufacture of equipment within Canada. We must remember that this Bill deals not only with nuclear weapons themselves, but with any support systems or components therefor. The Bill could conceivably apply to the manufacture in Canada of a half-ton truck if that half-ton truck were ever to be used for the transportation of a nuclear bomb. Perhaps a better example of this would be the aircraft guidance systems. We in Canada are pretty good at making those systems. These of course can be used for both nuclear and non-nuclear weapons systems, and at the same time can have many civil uses.

Another thing I would like to bring to the attention of the House is that in all probability this Bill would prohibit the civil use of nuclear explosives. Although it has not been used to any great extent to the present time, I am sure that nuclear explosives could likely be used in the future for the moving of earth and rock, the construction of canals and for certain mining applications. I understand that the gas-buggy project in the United States was fairly successful in enhancing the permeability of gas-bearing strata and could be used for increased gas supplies.

The dangers associated with radiation from underground use of nuclear explosives is not that great. I understand that with rocks with a fair silica content most of the ensuing radiation is contained in the glass which is created by the fusion of the silica, so there is no great danger of radiation involved. Canadas is one of the countries in the world where, because of large-scale projects which often take place in remote areas, the civil use of nuclear explosives might be of considerable advantage. I would not want to see that possibility jeopardized by the passage of this Bill.

When it comes to establishing nuclear free zones, there is one area of the world in which this might have some advantage at the present time, but only in a limited sense. It might be a practical suggestion for the countries in the Iron Curtain belt in Europe, where the NATO and Warsaw Pact powers are arranged against one another, to be declared a nuclear free zone for tactical nuclear weapons. Of course, strategic weapons with greater range would still be a hazard, but that might be a small step toward the stabilization of that area.

I would like to speak briefly on the second point dealt with in the Bill, which is the idea of a world referendum to be held under the auspices of the United Nations.

I see, Sir, that not one member of the New Democratic Party is here. They tend to be interested in these matters, but they simply do not stick around even when we are dealing with their Bills. It shows you, Mr. Speaker, what real interest members of the New Democratic Party take in these issues.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There are members of the Party who are very interested, and if the Hon. Member only wants to make political gain out of something of such a serious nature I suggest that he let other Members who are more interested in this pressing concept which has been approved by the Interparliamentary Union speak on the issue.

I would also point out that there is one other member of the Hon. Member's Party present in the House. There are three Liberal Members present in the House. It is symptomatic of the institution, and I do not think that the Hon. Member should try to make a mockery out of an issue as important as this one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) has made his point. He is right in that it is not allowable to make reference to the presence or absence of Hon. Members in the House.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I see the that Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake made his point, and then immediately walked out of the House again. It just shows you the interest—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. Not only is the Hon. Member wrong, because the Member to which he is referring is sitting in the House, but he is again referring to the presence or absence of a Member in the House. May I ask him to stick to the rules?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, he just came back and you know that full well. He is running in and out like a scared rabbit.

Is the referendum which is mentioned in the Bill meant to be a referendum in the true sense of the word, something that is usually taken to be binding, or is it meant to be a plebiscite, something which is usually construed as being an expression of public opinion? If this polling were to be conducted by the United Nations it could really only be a plebiscite, because the United Nations does not have the authority to order sovereign nations to give up arms or weaponry. If it is a plebiscite, what is its real use? We already know what public opinion is. Surely no one is in favour of a nuclear war. It is something everyone wants to avoid. If that is the case, such a plebiscite would be of extremely limited value. I really do not see what it would prove.

Perhaps members of the NDP are suggesting through this Bill that each country that is a participant in the United Nations should conduct some kind of binding referendum. I think it is the height of wishful thinking to assume that Warsaw Pact countries would take very much notice of a referendum of that nature, even if they allowed such a referendum to take place. If those countries pretended to take any notice of such a referendum, I am sure they would not allow its verification by inspectors from other nations.

There are a great many more things to say about this Bill, Sir, but because, among other things, of the amount of time the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake has taken away from me with his partisan comings and goings, there does not remain time for me to do so. It is an important subject, Sir, and one which we must address carefully. We must be prepared to work hard and diligently for a considerable period of time on this question. Quick-fix answers like those proposed by members of the New Democratic Party will simply not work.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Debate.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I will only speak for a few minutes. I believe strongly that the motion is supportable and that we should have a nuclear free zone, but I do not think it will happen. I am not sure why we are devoting so much time to this particular problem because, even if we did agreed to it, it would not really change anything in terms of the kind of world in which we live.

I was a member of the NDP years ago. I left basically because I felt that in a political movement of any kind there is a thing called the idea. One gets an idea, one deals with it, and then speaks on it. The other point, which is far more important, is that one must do something to make the idea work. One of the difficulties that I have when I get into a debate on this subject with the NDP is that they have been in opposition for so long, and have been away from the possibility of power for so long, that they really do not understand how to change something or how to do something which is effective.

There is no question in my mind that we are in the most dangerous period in the history of mankind. The International Institute of Strategic Studies in London, England, which is a very conservative organization, made a statement in the last ten days which indicated that we are in nearly as dangerous a situation as we were during the Cuban crisis. There is a very grave danger that a war will occur. If we passed this motion today, it would not change anything. We are up against two superpowers who are not going to move. On our side, that is President Reagan and the administration of the United States. In my opinion, the situation is very, very dangerous in the sense that they are not going to put forward arms control measures that will be workable. The Arms Control Association in the United States,—which includes generals, admirals and people such as Paul Warnke—produced a paper in the last ten days listing five or six reasons why it is certain that the United States Government does not want arms control at this particular time. There is a whole background of information of this kind.

Motions put forward such as the one the NDP has put forward for no first use, no testing of the Cruise and so on are admirable, but as soon as they are placed before the Government of the United States the answer is no. As Canadians, how can we be effective in trying to lower the tensions that exist if we keep bringing forward motions which do not have any chance of being effective?

The six powers which have formed the Four Continent Group put forward a motion this week. It is a motion which I support very strongly. However, it was not out on the street for 20 minutes before it was turned down by the Reagan Administration.

It is absolutely essential that we find some way of bringing the Reagan Administration and the Soviet Government—and there is no question that the Soviet group is extremely difficult—together so that they will not make war with each other. The tensions at this stage in the game are beyond any question. We have to worry about the dangers of a war starting from a spark in the Middle East, for examples. I am suggesting one possibility: That we as a Government, with the support of the whole House, adopt a motion that includes the ten points which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has put forward. These ten points are ideas which the Prime Minister gleaned from talking to different countries, including the superpowers and the other three nuclear powers. They involve areas where there is a commonality and where there are common beliefs. We cannot negotiate using techniques which have been used before between the two superpowers. We must start with the common assumptions, which are important assumptions. Assumptions which indicate that we do not want to have insecure or destabilizing weapons. Assumptions, for examples that one side is not going to try and destroy the economy of the other side. These are the things which we must do.

Any motion or statement, however pure and great, will be rejected out of hand by one or the other of the superpowers. They are not going to do anything at this particular point. Therefore, I think the debate today should not be on this particular motion, no matter how well the motion is presented and how desirable it is, but on how we can break the impasse between the two superpowers. I suggest the way that can be done is by starting with the common ground created by the Prime Minister and working toward negotiation which can proceed in a realistic way.

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I do not often rise in the House to speak, because there are not many issues which are pertinent to Arctic people. However, this issue is pertinent because of the testing of the Cruise missile in the Northwest Territories. That is almost directly related to the motion put forward in Bill C-203.

Because of the time limitations, I would like to refer to two resolutions which were passed by the Inuit Circumpolar Conference in 1983 in Frobisher Bay, and previously in 1981 in Greenland. The resolutions deal with nuclear free zones in the Arctic, which is parallel to the motion put forward in Bill C-203.

The first resolution was passed in Greenland by Inuit from around the world. They included members from Alaska, Greenland, Denmark and Canada. Hopefully in the future members from the Soviet Union will participate.

The conference passed a resolution in 1981 which indicated that, whereas radioactive materials are a known hazard to human life and the environment; whereas the Arctic and sub-Arctic regions and particularly fragile ecosystems and environments vital to Inuit subsistence; whereas there are deposits of uranium, thorium, lithium and other materials related to the nuclear industry in the Inuit homeland contemplated for exportation by various southern economic interests; whereas radioactive fall out from nuclear devices more seriously affects the Arctic and sub-Arctic regions than other areas of the world; therefore, be it resolved that the Inuit Circumpolar Conference call upon the Governments of Canada, the United States and Denmark to halt present exploitation for an exportation of uranium, thorium and lithium and other materials related to the nuclear industry in the Inuit homeland; prevent disposal of radioactive waste and materials in the Inuit homeland and prevent testing of nuclear devices in the Inuit homeland.

I would like to refer to the second resolution which was passed in 1983 in Frobisher Bay, but time does not allow me to do so.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue) moved that Bill C-25, An Act respecting the Canada Development Corporation, Canada Development Investment Corporation and certain other corporations, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion? The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières).

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today, in the House, to propose the second reading of Bill C-25, an Act respecting the Canada Development Corporation, Canada Development Investment Corporation and certain other corporations.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill has basically two objectives.

First, this legislation will enable the Government to meet a commitment made in May 1982 regarding its assets in the Canada Development Corporation, the CDC. At the present time, the CDC is a corporation created by an Act of Parliament, but by adopting this bill, Parliament will authorize the CDC to pursue its activities in accordance with the Canada Business Corporations Act. The CDC's name will be changed to reflect the fact that the Government will no longer have a sustained interest in the corporation. I should point out that the arrangements approved by the Government and the CDC were made two years ago and that they have received the wholehearted approval of private sector shareholders within the CDC.

The changes announced in the Bill are necessary so that the CDC can be managed as a private corporation under the Canada Business Corporations Act, and also to enable the Government to divest itself of its shares in the CDC.

Second, the purpose of this Bill is to establish the Canada Development Investment Corporation, the CDIC, as a corporation created under an Act of Parliament. The House will recall the CDIC was established in accordance with the Canada Business Corporations Act and is being managed according to the provisions of several Orders in Council. These orders impose restrictions and guidelines similar to those imposed by special legislation, and it is desirable to have these provisions confirmed by Parliament.

The CDIC has already proved that Government made a wise decision in creating the Corporation. The Bill will give the CIDC the legal status of a Crown corporation and a clear and limited mandate from Parliament.

• (1110)

[English]

Before turning to the provisions of the Bill itself, I would like to outline the current and continuing responsibilities of CDIC. CDIC has four basic functions.

Mr. Malone: Take over. Take over. Take over. Take over.

Mr. Bussières: First, CDIC is a vehicle for the sound commercial management of various assets and enterprises that have been acquired earlier by the Government of Canada for public policy reasons. The Government has found that there are some cases where, contrary to what is expected, its commercial assets have not been operated in a commercial manner. The controlling shareholder of any company should take a keen interest in that company's activities. In cases where the Government is the controlling shareholder, it needs a vehicle that can provide for that active presence on a continuing and effective basis.

CDIC is intended to be that vehicle in order to achieve commercial performance by these companies and to act as a mechanism for public accountability. This does not absolve the boards of these companies from their responsibilities. The boards of CDIC's underlying companies have an important role to play. We expect the boards of directors of these companies to supervise vigorously the business activities of their respective enterprises.

Mr. Stevens: That will be a first.

Mr. Bussières: The board and management of CDIC works with the boards and managements of its subsidiaries to help provide a commercial operating environment through the developing and monitoring of performance standards. In this way, CDIC brings a shareholder's perspective to complement the operating perspectives of the subsidiaries; experience has already demonstrated the utility of this approach.

• (1115)

The second function of CDIC is to privatize. This is an important part of its over-all mandate, and CDIC will be judged in part by its progress in divesting to the private sector assets which the Government no longer needs to own for policy reasons. In its divestment activities, CDIC is to ensure that sales are made according to commercial standards, so that the public realizes a fair return from assets which are sold. CDIC has made initial assessments of the prospects for commercial sale of certain of the assets, including consideration of market conditions and timing factors.

[Translation]

The CDIC's third role consists in acquiring new investments from the Government. There is no contradiction here with the corporation's second role. Experience has shown that the private sector will provide other opportunities for the Government to invest, in accordance with the public interest.

Such opportunities were offered recently with respect to the fisheries industry in Eastern Canada. Having decided to invest in fish processing plants in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and Quebec, the Government is now transferring its shares in those companies to the CDIC. It will be up to the latter to communicate the views of shareholders to those administering the shares on behalf of the Government, and to find private sector buyers when commercial opportunities arise.

[English]

CDIC's fourth role is to provide commercial advice to the Government when the Government calls for such advice. Industry and government have different roles in Canada, but it is important to ensure that they do not drift into isolation from each other. The Government hopes CDIC, because of its activities in and work with industry, can help to create a better understanding between government and industry of one another's objectives and procedures.

Government plays many roles in the economy. It establishes fiscal and monetary policies. It regulates some industries. It provides tax incentives. It provides various forms of financial assistance to industry and, in some cases, government invests directly and takes equity in return. It is in these cases where CDIC will play a role, cases where the Government is a direct investor and needs a vehicle to manage its shareholding wisely.

CDIC has established its credentials as the vehicle to bring about commercial quality expertise and practices where they are called for in government investments. Its efforts have produced detailed accountability to Parliament, more constraints on Canadair and de Havilland, and timely disclosure of important developments. CDIC is a pragmatic response to the need for a better means of managing government investments, as well as to the need for a vehicle with a public mandate, including the divestment of government investments when there is no longer a public policy reason to hold those investments.

• (1120)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there are people who are afraid that the CDIC will have wide-ranging powers to make its own investments. That is absolutely false. In accordance with provisions to be found in this Bill, the CDIC has no authority to take control of existing companies or to set up new subsidiaries.

The CDIC is a tool created by the Government to manage investments. However, Government and Parliament will decide what those investments will be. In a few moments I shall indicate the various provisions of the Bill that relate to such decisions.

The Bill has seven main parts. The first three clauses of the first part are the introduction and include definitions and provisions dealing with the event of inconsistencies between this bill and the Financial Administration Act.

Clauses 4 to 8 contain provisions concerning the Canada Development Corporation. These provisions authorize the Government to divest itself of its assets, which represent 48.2 per cent of the shares of the CDIC. The Board of Directors of the CDC believes that the present business climate as well as the market situation are not favourable for immediate privatization of these shares. We feel that the public has a right to expect a reasonable return on its investment, and as soon as the time is ripe, we want to be ready to proceed with privatization, with the authorization of Parliament.

[English]

Bill C-25 will bring CDC under the Canada Business Corporations Act as soon as the Bill is passed and proclaimed. This will end the provision for a minimum 10 per cent government shareholding. In other words, even if there were buyers for our CDC shares at the present time, we would not be able to sell them without this legislation. In order to improve the marketability of the CDC shares, the restrictions on the number that any individual investor may hold are also being eliminated, though in this case in two stages. At the present time, non-government voting shareholders are limited to a holding of 3 per cent. This limitation will be permitted to be set at 10 per cent for all non-government shareholdings. This limitation will be removed altogether after a transitional period of three years. This transitional step is designed to allow CDC shareholders protection from unexpected changes in control without their approval. I should also note that the shareholders of CDC have approved these transitional arrangements.

[Translation]

The next part of the Bill, clauses 9 to 24, deals with the activities of the CDIC. These clauses are the actual basis of the CDIC. While the CDC's status as a corporation created under an Act of Parliament is being changed to that of a corporation formed in accordance with the Canada Business Corporations Act, the reverse is true of the CDIC, which was created under the Canada Business Corporations Act and will now become a corporation formed under an Act of Parliament.

Clause 11 is the key clause of the Bill. It specifies the four roles of the CDIC which I mentioned at the beginning of my speech:

(1) To manage assets in a commercial manner;

(2) To privatize assets;

(3) To acquire new investments from the Government;

(4) To advise the Government on matters pertaining to business and industrial issues.

The powers of the CDIC are not as wide-ranging as these objectives might lead us to believe. In fact, the corporation must conform to strict standards for public disclosure and accountability, and must always obtain Parliament's approval before investing in a new business.

When Hon. Members examine Bill C-25, they will see a number of provisions requiring CDIC to obtain the authorization of the responsible Minister, the corporation's Board of Directors, the Minister of Finance, Cabinet, Treasury Board and finally, in other circumstances, the authorization of this Parliament.

• (1125)

[English]

The Bill provides for a board of 20 directors and introduces staggered terms so that in any one year the terms of no more than one-half of the directors expire.

Normally the Bill directs the board and management of CDIC to operate in a commercial manner, but should government decide that some specific course of action is in the public interest, it will be able, under the CDIC Bill, to issue a directive. This directive will be made public, indicating the activity government wants CDIC to undertake and taking appropriate policy responsibility for that instruction. The directive must be given with board consultation. The directors then have a duty to ensure that the directive is implemented in a prompt and efficient manner.

The fourth segment of the Bill is found in Clauses 25 to 41 inclusive. This portion of Bill C-25 covers the financial provisions relating to CDIC and its wholly-owned subsidiaries. Clause 26 sets out CDIC's authority to borrow money and puts a limit of $3 billion on the over-all borrowings and loan guarantees for CDIC and its subsidiaries. The long-term debt of Canadair, de Havilland and Eldorado, a total of $1.9 billion at the end of 1983, is included in this amount. Before CDIC can exercise an unused portion of this debt authorization, it must first obtain the approval of the Minister of Finance as set out in Clause 27. In addition, each year CDIC will be required to indicate its intended borrowings in its corporate plan which requires the approval of Cabinet.

The Bill, in Clause 28, also authorizes the Government to provide up to $1 billion of equity capital to CDIC. This funding will be activated in the context of the corporate plans and capital budgets of CDIC and its operating subsidiaries, summaries of which will be made available to Parliament. Another clause of the Bill allows the Minister of Finance, with Cabinet approval, to require CDIC or a wholly-owned subsidiary to pay surplus funds into the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

[Translation]

The financial record of the CDIC and its investment activities will be carefully scrutinized by Parliament and the Government.

In accordance with Clause 30 of the bill, the CDIC shall submit annually to Cabinet a plan encompassing all the businesses and activities, including investments, of the company and its wholly-owned subsidiaries. The CDIC and its wholly-owned subsidiaries shall conduct their activities in accordance with this plan.

Furthermore, Clause 31 provides that the CDIC shall submit annually a capital budget to Treasury Board, for its own investments and those of its wholly-owned subsidiaries. The CDIC and its wholly-owned subsidiaries shall not incur, or make a commitment to incur, a capital expenditure in any financial year before the budget has been approved, unless the expenditure or commitment is part of a business activity that has already been initiated.

We shall table summaries of these plans in Parliament. This provision appears in Clause 33 and will prove very useful to Parliament when evaluating and scrutinizing the activities of the CDIC and its subsidiaries.

• (1130)

[English]

Clauses 34, 35 and 36 restrict CDIC or its wholly-owned subsidiaries from acquiring and operating businesses or setting up new companies without meeting certain tests. In cases of a corporate reorganization, for example, where it might be necessary to set up a new corporation, Cabinet must approve the transaction. More important transactions involving entering a new business would require the approval of Parliament.

I wish to stress this latter point. Some have suggested that CDIC is being cast loose to invest in ventures and companies as it chooses. That is not the case. Before CDIC can enter into any new activity, it must receive the approval of both Cabinet and Parliament. Clause 36 sets out the mechanics for obtaining parliamentary approval. As the Bill states in Clause 35, CDIC will not be able to acquire control of an operating business without the approval of Parliament unless the business is complementary to an existing business of CDIC, in which case the approval of Cabinet is sufficient. The exemption from parliamentary approval would not apply where the acquisition would involve substantially all the holdings of another corporation directly owned by the Crown. Cabinet approval is required for CDIC to dispose of any securities transferred to it by the Government or any voting shares.

[Translation]

The fifth part of the Bill consists of clause 42, which concerns CDIC's subsidiaries: Canadair Limited, The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Ltd., Eldorado Nuclear Limited, Teleglobe Canada and, in the near future, Pêcheries Cartier Inc. and Fishery Products International Ltd., and subsidiaries of those corporations. The clause deals with the relationship between the CDIC and its subsidiaries, and the aim to change the status of those subsidiaries to private sector corporations. The clause also guarantees that through the CDIC, these companies shall be accountable to Government and finally to Parliament.

The sixth part of the Bill covers clauses 43 to 46 which deal with general provisions for disclosure and specific accounting requirements. Clause 43 obliges the CDIC and its wholly-owned subsidiaries to conform with the requirements for disclosure of information that apply to corporations whose securities are offered for sale to the public in Canada. Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members are aware, the CDIC has been following this policy for some time by publishing quarterly and annual financial statements for itself and its subsidiaries. This form of full and rapid disclosure of the general productivity of the companies is important for Parliament and also for the general public. It also acts as an incentive for those directing the companies to perform satisfactorily, since the results of their performance are published within a relatively short time.

[English]

Clause 45 will transfer the Government's shares in CDC to CDIC. This will replace the requirement in the existing CDC Act—which is being repealed by this Bill—that the Government's shares be registered in the name of the Minister of Finance.

The final segment of Bill C-25 deals with Teleglobe Canada. Clause 47 transfers Teleglobe Canada to CDIC and clarifies the shareholder-subsidiary relationship between CDIC and Teleglobe. The final two clauses of the Bill contain the necessary amendments to the Teleglobe Canada Act. Because of the unique policy role of Teleglobe and its strategic importance to Canadian telecommunications policy, parliamentary approval will have to be obtained for any future sale of Teleglobe.

Members will see that this is an important piece of legislation. It is designed to deal in a realistic, sensible fashion with an issue that concerns all—the sound management of government investments in commercially-oriented companies and the sale of those investments when the commercial opportunity arises. In cases such as Canadair and de Havilland, it is the investment itself—that is to say, the decision to maintain these companies—which is the public policy choice. But the day to day operations of those companies must be based on commercial principles. The policy decision is that they exist, but they can only exist in the long term if they become commercially viable. They can only become so by following commercial routes.

[Translation]

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, they shall continue to be accountable to Parliament. They shall do so through the CDIC, which will publish quarterly financial statements and annually submit investment budget summaries and general plans for the CDIC and its subsidiaries, all of which underlines the Government's commitment to ensure that Parliament knows what is going on and that responsibility areas are clearly defined.

The financial statements and summaries of investment budgets and general plans of the CDIC will be available as reference documents to the committees of Parliament concerned, which may summon the Minister responsible for the CDIC and senior administrators of the CDIC and its subsidiaries, to ask for clarification. This means that in addition to conforming to the principle of full and rapid disclosure of financial results, general plans and investment budgets, the CDIC and its subsidiaries will be at the disposal of Parliament.

[English]

Experience has shown that government needs an effective vehicle for the management and subsequent sale of commercial-type assets it has acquired at one time or another. There is a need for a clear and on-going shareholder presence to ensure adherence to commercial standards. CDIC, I believe, can be that vehicle. Indeed, it is already performing these responsibilities in a business like manner under the supervision of a board of directors made up of eminent Canadians.

[Translation]

Hon. Members may not agree with certain investments made by the Government, but I think the House will agree that all our political parties, both on the federal and on the provincial scene, have traditionally accepted the principle that in special circumstances, Government intervention is needed to protect the national interest or even to protect regional interests. It is unlikely that this approach will be abandoned in future, at a time when our economy is going through a difficult stage towards recovery and renewal.

In the present economic situation, the CDIC can play a major role in ensuring that these investments are administered as efficiently as possible, that they are privatized as soon as a commercially attractive opportunity arises, and that these activities are carried out in accordance with strict requirements for accountability and public disclosure of any information requested by Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-25 meets these objectives and meets this requirement, and I hope we can count on the co-operation of all the Members of this House for approval of the Bill before the House adjourns for the summer.

• (1140)

[English]

Mr. Waddell: I rise on a point of order. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I should know this, but perhaps you could tell me if there are questions and comments after the first round?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There is no provision for a question period following the speeches of the first three lead-off speakers.

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, here we go again with the sticky hands of government. Here is another piece of legislation to demonstrate the sticky hands of the Liberal Government. If there was ever a case where we were letting the foxes in with the chickens, this has to be it. Can you imagine letting Senator Austin, Maurice Strong and Joel Bell run footloose and fancy free with $4 billion worth of public assets? I suppose we could entitle this piece of legislation "the interventionists". That would be an appropriate title for the Bill.

If the Government has a problem, rather than dealing with the problem, rather than exercising any political will, the Government simply creates a new Crown corporation. That is the solution to all problems in so far as the Liberal Government is concerned. If we have a problem, let us not deal with it. Let us not exercise any political will. Let us create a new Crown corporation. And this is the granddaddy of them all; $4 billion for a brand, spanking-new CDIC. It is the solution to Canadair, de Havilland, Eldorado, Teleglobe and Massey-Ferguson. I could go on talking for a week about the Government's Bill to continue the Canada Development Investment Corporation or, as it is often referred to, the CDIC, and its deficiencies.

I really do not know where to begin because there is so much I would like to say on this Bill and on CDIC generally. However, I have decided to limit my talk today to four points. The first point is with respect to the origins of CDIC; second is the CDIC's proposed mandate; third is the serious defects which we have identified in Bill C-25; and fourth, the relationship between Bill C-25, which is before us today, and Bill C-24, the Government's Crown corporation Bill, on which we have just concluded second reading debate under government closure.

CDIC was incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act in May of 1982, but the roots of CDIC reach back much farther, back to the failure of the Canada Development Corporation. And let us not confuse the Canada Development Investment Corporation with the Canada Development Corporation. The creation of CDIC represented an admission of defeat by the Government. It represented the culmination of a decade-long struggle between the Government on the one hand and CDC management and the business community on the other. The Government wanted to play both sides of the street with CDC. It said it wanted a commercial operation with control residing with the private shareholders. However, when the occasion arose, the Government tried to use the CDC to bail out companies. It did not have any respect for the private investor. It was prepared to put private shareholders' money at risk in order to pursue its own political purposes. When the CDC resisted the pressure of the Government, the Government cast around looking for another vehicle of intervention. The result was the CDIC.

However, it was not quite that simple. I would like to go through some of the steps which the Government followed in setting up the CDIC to demonstrate two things: first, that the Government really had no strategy for the CDIC. The Government's explanation of the need for the CDIC is really an ex post facto justification for a series of haphazard, accidental actions. Second, some of its actions were and remain today legally questionable.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the CDIC was incorporated on May 26, 1982. It was incorporated by Robert James Hamilton, a Toronto lawyer. The sole shareholder of the company was Mr. A. H. Hampson—Tony Hampson—the President and Chief Executive Officer of the CDIC. On September 15, 1982 Tony Hampson gave his shares in the CDIC to the federal Government. The grateful Government accepted the shares and, voilà, we have one more Crown corporation! On the same date, the Government made CDIC an agent of Her Majesty by Order in Council under the Government companies operation Act. This means that the CDIC was given a wide range of privileges and immunities not available to private sector corporations, such as immunity from the federal Government's own Combines Investigation Act, and if allowed to borrow money it does so with the full faith and credit of Her Majesty.

Let us stop right here for a moment, Mr. Speaker, and review what has happened. We have a brand-new corporation here, an agent of Her Majesty, and Parliament has not even been consulted. We have a new corporation. We have given it an agent of Her Majesty's status, made it immune to the Government's own Combines Investigation Act, and Parliament has not even been consulted. Why was Parliament not consulted in the creation of this corporation? Why the deviousness? Why not bring the whole thing into the light of day and ask Parliament to review the new corporation in the same way as Parliament reviewed the Petro-Canada Act in 1972 to 1975, or the new Air Canada Act in 1977? Why the secrecy? Why not put it out on the table and let us have a public debate on the creation of CDIC? Why do we create the CDIC without parliamentary approval and the approval of this Chamber? What is the Government trying to hide?

It does not stop there, Mr. Speaker. In September of 1982 the shares of Eldorado Nuclear Limited were transferred to the CDIC, again by Order in Council. However, we will contend, Mr. Speaker, that the Government acted illegally in doing so. We contend that under one Act of Parliament, Appropriation Act, No. 4, 1980-1981, and possibly a second Act of Parliament, Section 10 of the Atomic Energy Control Act, CDIC was precluded from holding the shares of Eldorado. The issued and oustanding shares could only have been held by the Ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources. The shares were illegally transferred by this Government by Order in Council to this new corporation, CDIC. In doing so, the Government acted in total contempt of this Parliament and the people of Canada. Legally, the Government acted improperly and in total disregard of one and possibly two Acts of this House. Clause 42(2) of Bill C-25 is designed to set part of this right but, of course, it does this retroactively.

And it did not stop there; oh, no! The Government was not finished yet. CDIC needed cash for working capital but had no revenues. The Government began to consider its options.

Could it charge a management fee to the subsidiaries? Maybe. Could it force one of the corporations to declare a dividend to CDIC? Yes. The Government decided that Teleglobe had lots of cash so it would force Teleglobe to supply the money. However, there was a problem in that Teleglobe does not have a share structure, so there were no shares for CDIC to hold. Under the Teleglobe Canada Act dividends were payable directly to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. That put the kibosh on that.

• (1150)

The Government could borrow the money only if Parliament approved and it did not want to subject the CDIC to a debate in Parliament at that time. A debate on the creation of CDIC in Parliament would almost be democratic, would it not? Rather, the Government resorted to a seldom used clause, Section 72 of the Financial Administration Act, to give CDIC a 12-month loan of $500,000. In the 30 years since 1952, Section 72 of the Financial Administration Act has been used only twice.

The amount of $500,000 was not enough to satisfy the appetite of CDIC. It would not even pay the salaries and they required more money. Therefore, the Government performed a complex share conversion with Eldorado which magically netted the CDIC $10 million. There were two problems. The shares owned by Her Majesty could not be sold or transferred without Her Majesty's Governor in Council permission. Yet we can find no evidence of any permission being given. More importantly, the cash from the transaction should have gone to the Consolidated Revenue Fund rather than into CDIC. However, the money finally ended up in CDIC. In our view, this is totally contrary to the Financial Administration Act.

Why is Bill C-25 before the House now, almost two years after its creation? Has the Government all of a sudden recognized the error of its ways and repented? No. CDIC needs a lot more money and cannot get it until its status is changed. The Government had to bring this legislation forward at this time in order to fund CDIC. There was no alternative to bringing the legislation forward so that CDIC can borrow up to $3 billion and raise equity of $1 billion.

Why should the House look favourably upon Bill C-25 when the Government has ignored and avoided Parliament for two years while the CDIC was set up, financed and operating? Second, the Government has ignored, twisted or subverted Acts of Parliament. Third, the Government only comes to Parliament now in desperation when it has no other choice. For the reasons I have cited, Mr. Speaker, C-25 offends me deeply. I feel as though I am being asked to be an accessory after the fact to legitimize the Government's very questionable past dealings.

I will now turn to CDIC's proposed mandate. In his opening remarks the Minister made much of the fact that CDIC was an instrument to privatize certain corporations. It has had two years to come to grips with the problem. I have not seen one single corporation privatized or even close to it. The Government says it needs to wait until the appropriate time to sell these corporations. There will never be an appropriate time to sell these corporations because they are not saleable. They are all dogs except for Teleglobe. Teleglobe is the only viable corporation among them.

Mr. Whelan: We privatized grain elevators in Alberta and the Alberta Government bought them.

Mr. Thomson: I beg your pardon? Perhaps the Minister will have his chance to let us have the benefit of his great wisdom on this Bill.

Mr. Taylor: He talks better sitting down.

An Hon. Member: He just gave it.

Mr. Thomson: The problem is not the question of privatization, Mr. Speaker. All the Government really wants to do is create more and more Crown corporations. That is what CDIC is designed to do. Under Clause 11 of Bill C-25, the CDIC is to hold and manage assets, to effect divestitures and to make investments. In so doing, it has all the legal powers of an actual person. That is a very wide mandate, Mr. Speaker. I would characterize it as a blank cheque to do anything.

What does the Government intend for CDIC? That depends upon whether you listen to the Chairman, the President, or Senator Jack Austin. They all have a different story to tell about what they think CDIC should do. From his speech to students at York University, it would appear that the Chairman of CDIC, Mr. Maurice Strong, sees the CDIC as an instrument of massive intervention into the economy. His blithe assumption that only the Government can respond to new economic challenges through ever greater involvement in the economy is amazing. Why do we have a private sector? If his view is that only the Government can respond, then why have we 1.5 million people out of work in the country today? Did the Government solve that problem? The problem is government intervention. Government intervention is directly and solely accountable for the 1.5 million people unemployed today.

From other statements and speeches of Mr. Strong we learned that he envisages CDIC as a merchant banker, a holding company and, in his words, a much needed mechanism to buy into strategically important corporate bail-out cases. Publicly the Minister responsible tends to emphasize the management and divestiture aspects of CDIC.

Mr. Joel Bell, the President of the company, sees a wide mandate for the company which includes international joint ventures that would give CDIC access to foreign technology and markets. That sounds wonderful. These gentlemen are very clever at crafting the words. They craft the words to mislead public opinion. It sounds great to say that CDIC is going to have access to foreign technology and markets.

In an article in The Globe and Mail Mr. Bell played down the divestiture aspect of CDIC's mandate. He said that divestiture talk was premature and that, in any event, the CDIC may want to retain a stake in the companies for a considerable period of time. Which one of these stories can we believe? The mandate is so broad that the Government is free to do anything it wants. All three of these fellows are free to do whatever they want at any particular point in time.

I obtained a copy of the articles of incorporation of the CDIC in the hope that they would give me a clue as to what it intended to do. I thought that the incorporators might be a little more forthcoming, effusive and informative in the articles than they are in the Bill itself. I thought that the articles would be the true test of the incorporators' intent. What I found was that under the clause entitled "Restrictions on Business the Corporation may Carry on", the incorporators typed in one word. That word is "none". There are no restrictions at all. This corporation can do whatever it wants, regardless of the words that are written in the Bill.

• (1200)

Today Eldorado and Teleglobe; tomorrow Maislin; the next day Power, Argus Corporation or a shoe factory in Argentina. Who knows?

Even more instructive was the Order in Council attached to the articles of incorporation. I assume that this represents Cabinet's real view of the mandate of the corporation. Allow me to quote from the "Objects" part of the Order in Council. It reads:

(A) To assist in the creation or development of businesses, resources, properties and industries of Canada;

(B) To expand, widen and develop opportunities for Canadians to participate in the economic development of Canada through the application of their skills and capital in any activities carried on by the corporation.

(C) To invest in the shares or securities of any corporation owning property or carrying on business related to the economic interests of Canada:

(D) To invest in ventures or enterprises, including the acquisition of property, likely to benefit Canada: and,

(E) To carry out all activities in the best interests of Canada, operating in a commercial manner.

That is like something sent from heaven. Those objects allow it to do anything it wants. This comes from an Order in Council, yet there is no mention of divestiture or privatization. It does not mention anything about operating these companies in a good commercial manner like the Minister said it would. It only says "to acquire". Make no mistake that CDIC is an instrument of acquisition. It is supposed to be acquisition in the best interest of the people of Canada, but it is another $3 billion down the tube or perhaps more. That is only a start.

It is fascinating to realize that divesting is not even mentioned once in those objectives. However, "assist" is mentioned twice, "invest" is mentioned twice and to "expand, widen and develop" is mentioned once. There is no mention of the word "divest".

What has government ownership really accomplished for us in Canada today? Are we better off for it? Are we better off for more government intervention? Are we better off for more and more central planning? Do you really believe, Mr.Speaker, that politicians or governments can create jobs through government ownership? We see only more bureaucracy and more deficit. We on this side of the House do not believe that the ills of the world are solved by more government intervention. Even if we did, the current personalities associated with the CDIC have not demonstrated any particular gift for management that I am aware of. The evidence cries out for less government intervention, not more. Bill C-25, the CDIC and the current cast of characters at the CDIC are all going the wrong way.

I spoke earlier of the Government's failure with the Canada Development Corporation. One of the reasons for that failure was the broad and vague mandate given to the corporation under Section 6 of the Canada Development Corporation Act. Apparently having learned nothing from that experience, the Government is asking us to repeat the same folly through Bill C-25.

My colleagues and I in the Progressive Conservative Party believe that one of the solutions to the Crown corporation problem is a more clear and precise definition of the mandates and objectives of Crown corporations. Bill C-25 violates that very basic and fundamental principle.

The first principle in coming to grips with Crown corporations is disclosure. The Government has made much of the standards of public disclosure that the CDIC will have to submit. If the business plans and financial statements submitted thus far by the CDIC are an example of these new high standards of public disclosure, we want no part of it. If the Government will continue simply to wipe out important portions of the plans and budgets, as Bill C-25 would let it do, we want no part of it. Parliament and the people of Canada have a right to know. The public's right to know would be seriously eroded under Bill C-25.

Let me refer to Clause 41(4) of the Bill. It reads:

Sections 24 to 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act do not apply—

—in respect of directives and certain orders made under C-25. What are Sections 24 to 26? Section 24 provides access for the public to such statutory instruments. Section 25 allows the public, for a fee, to copy and take away copies of these orders and directives. Section 26 provides for permanent reference of these directives and orders to the appropriate standing committee of the House of Commons or Senate.

In one contemptuous swoop, the Government wipes out a large portion of Parliament's and the public's ability to know where the taxpayers' money is being spent by CDIC. Yet the Government has the temerity to say that CDIC will be subject to a new and rigorous regime of public disclosure. What unmitigated gall! What contempt for the intelligence of Members of Parliament! The Government's only concern is money, money, money.

According to Clause 26 of Bill C-25, the CDIC would be able to borrow up to $3 billion. That is roughly one-tenth of the Government's yearly deficit. It is $3 billion that the CDIC could raise as a direct charge against the Consolidated Revenue Fund and with no need for any further approval whatsoever from Parliament. It boggles the mind.

As if that were not enough, Bill C-25 would allow the Government to raise that debt ceiling to infinity by a $1 item in the Appropriations Act. I point out that this provision is a clever but transparent way to circumvent the Speaker's ruling of June 12, 1981 on matters such as this.

The Minister responsible for the CDIC issued a press release that makes much of the control Parliament is to have over any future acquisitions by CDIC. But where in Bill C-25 is that control provided for? Clause 34 provides for control by the Cabinet by secret Order in Council, but I see no control by Parliament. It is simply not there. The Government has conveniently forgotten it.

My final point refers to the relationship between Bill C-25 which is before us today and Bill C-24, the Government's Crown corporations bill, tabled on March 15. When the Government presented Bill C-24, there was much fanfare about how it would resolve the problems of control, direction and accountability of Crown corporations. This was to have been the solution to the problem. After nearly 14 years of study, Bill C-24 had finally found a solution.

If Bill C-24 is so great and will do everything the Government says that it is supposed to do, why does it not apply to the CDIC? The CDIC is a Crown corporation, is it not? If it is good enough for Air Canada, for the CNR or Petro-Canada, if Bill C-24 is good enough to put them under a regime of accountability, why is it not good enough for the CDIC?

According to Bill C-24, the chief executive officers of Crown corporations would be appointed by Cabinet. Under bill C-25, the chief executive officer of CDIC would be appointed by the board of directors.

Under bill C-24, the chairman of Crown corporations would be appointed by Cabinet. Under Bill C-25, the chairman of the CDIC would be elected by the board of directors. Bill C-24, in Clause 98, says that it is to apply in the event of any inconsistency between it and other acts of Parliament. In the case of CDIC, which applies? Which route is the Government asking Parliament to approve?

• (1210)

Second, Bill C-24 was supposed to be the framework for all Crown corporations. Yet there are at least half a dozen provisions within Bill C-25 that would exempt the CDIC, or allow the Cabinet to exempt the CDIC, from Bill C-24. Bill C-24 and Bill C-25 were drafted at about the same time, probably drafted by the same person, reviewed and approved by Cabinet at the same time and brought before the House at roughly the same time. Why the differences? Why the inconsistencies? Has the Government not made up its mind?

Is the Government trying to play both sides of the street? Have the Minister and CDIC management made a special deal with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)? What is going on here? How can the Government expect Parliament to treat these two Bills seriously when it is obvious that the Government does not know which way it is going? Since Cabinet solidarity on the Crown corporation issue is so obviously fragmented, one of the Ministers, either the one responsible for Bill C-24 or the one responsible for Bill C-25, should resign because they differ substantially as to the regime that should exist.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that we on this side have no confidence or expectation that the CDIC will be anything other than another unmitigated disaster. Contrary to the recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee on Canadair, the CDIC will downgrade the boards and managements of the individual corporations. The chief executive officers will be treated as divisional vice-presidents. Does the Government think this will foster accountability? Hardly, Mr. Speaker.

The CDIC is defended on the grounds that it will resolve the problems these "commercial" corporations have had in dealing with Government. Has anyone stopped to ask why the Government need be involved in commercial enterprises? The CDIC is supposed to make up for a range of structural deficiencies in the Government. Why do we not fix those structural deficiencies rather than creating another bureaucratic layer? Why do we not cure the disease rather than the symptoms?

One day the 19 member board at CDIC—yes, 19 members, Mr. Speaker—that 19-member collection of Liberal financiers, door knockers and campaigners, will oversee issues and events relating to international telecommunications; the next day it will be uranium mining and refining; the next day the airframe industry; the next the fishing industry; the next the farm implements business; and on and on. You cannot expect anything more than another series of disasters à la Canadair and de Havilland. By putting this Bill before the people of Canada, we are asking for more intervention and more throwing good money after bad.

When I addressed the House on Bill C-24 I found the proper place for the Government to put that piece of legislation. If the bin is not too cramped with other useless pieces of bogus Bills, the Government can add Bill C-25 to the pile. And so, Mr. Speaker, we intend to resist this Bill with all of the strength and energy we can summon.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, when I was listening to the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thomson) I was thinking about Sir John A. Macdonald. I am a great admirer of Sir John. I was born in Scotland and like Sir John came to Canada at age five and became a barrister. But there the comparisons end. He, of course, was a Conservative and I am a New Democrat.

Mr. Stevens: You are a socialist.

Mr. Waddell: If Sir John had heard the speech given by the Hon. Member for Calgary South, I think he would spin in his grave. I think Sir John and that kind of Conservative realizes that there is a mixed economy in Canada and there is a kind of a role between government and business in its own peculiar Canadian way. I agree with some of the criticisms made by the Hon. Member for Calgary South about this Bill, but for him government is like a disease. It seems to me there is a much more positive way of approaching the criticism of this Bill which would serve the public good in the end much better than this kind of negative and quite reactionary approach.

Mr. Stevens: There is the old alliance of the NDP and Liberals.

Mr. Waddell: I want to make a few remarks from the NDP view point on this Bill.

Mr. Stevens: You mean from the socialist point of view.

Mr. Waddell: I keep hearing the Conservatives yelling out "socialist". They are like children. It is as though they have no thoughts. They are afraid. Sure, I am socialist, a social democrat—whatever you want to call it. That is why they are falling so rapidly in the public opinion polls these days. What about dealing with policy and with ideas?

Mr. Stevens: How are you doing in the polls?

Mr. Waddell: They should stop dealing like children with meaningless slogans.

Let me deal with the CDIC. The CDIC is the Government's new, giant holding company. It oversees about $10 billion of Crown commercial assets including Canadair, de Havilland and the other companies, Mr. Speaker, that you have heard of. It is true what we are debating today is really a fait accompli. Basically CDIC was created in the same way its chief Minister, Senator Jack Austin, was created—that is, without the authority of Parliament. Maybe I should make some apologies to his mother. I suppose she had a role. CDIC was created some time ago. Senator Austin himself is an affable, hard-working man. He is from Vancouver. He once stood for Parliament in Vancouver-Kingsway, which is my riding. Needless to day, he was defeated.

Cabinet created CDIC two years ago. This Bill is to legitimize its birth. If Senator Austin wants to legitimize himself and become answerable for this Bill to the House of Commons, I suggest he run against me in Vancouver-Kingsway in the upcoming election. I think he will probably be fairly easy to beat. He will be as easy to beat as my old friend, Jerry Yanover, who is in hospital today and who is probably watching this on television, is at shuffleboard.

CDIC is no ordinary Crown corporation, Mr. Speaker. It has potential ramifications for the economy. In a sense I think the Hon. Member for Calgary South was hinting, and I agree with him about this, that the Government is really speaking from both sides of its mouth concerning this corporation. On the one side the Government is saying privatize, and then the other the Government is saying let us expand into more Crown corporations; at least, the Bill opens up the way for that. The Minister did not make it clear in his speech. He simply said that there is no contradiction. But the fact is that the Liberals have mismanaged Crown corporations. Canadair and de Havilland are two good examples. That is why we have this Bill to try and clean them up. Second, the Government is being inconsistent in its future role with respect to what Crown corporations should do.

I want to try and analyze why the Government is acting this way. It seems to me that you have to look at what the Government is trying to do in this Bill. It talks about accountability. The President of CDIC, Mr. Joel Bell, wrote a letter to me on May 9, 1984. Let me read part of it into the record:

> We made certain commitments at the outset which I hope you will agree we have lived up to. As you know, we were faced with difficult situations at several companies for which we were made responsible. Our approach has been to carry out a thorough review of the troubled companies, identify the problems and actions needed and provide full reports on them, including quarterly financial reports. We have made regular disclosure of our performance and this report is part of our effort to provide accountability to Parliament and the public. The report outlines the corrective actions we have taken to date and points to our plans for the future.

There is Mr. Bell talking about taking over troubled companies, the problems they have had and the mismanagement they have had to deal with, and he is suggesting in his letter to me and to other Members of Parliament that what he proposes to do is to have accountability. That is what we have to focus on in this Bill.

I want to say something about the people involved, which is a point the Hon. Member from Calgary South mentioned. Usually one does not talk about people. Public servants are public servants. We assume that they are competent and non-partisan. The people who are involved in CDIC are rather interesting. As a matter of fact, they are the cream of the movers and shakers of the "Trudeau" bureaucratic era.

• (1220)

The Chairman of the CDIC is Maurice Strong. He is the ultimate businessman/bureaucrat in Canada. He was the head of the Power Corporation, then the head of CIDA and also first Chairman of Petro-Canada. Indeed, Petro-Canada was partly Maurice Strong's idea and partly Jack Austin's idea, who was then Deputy Minister of Energy. In fact, it was partly our idea in pressing for it in the minority Parliament from 1972 to 1974 in the House of Commons. The President of Petro-Canada was Bill Hopper, another immensely competent public servant. Who was his assistant? It was Joel Bell. It is all tied in; it all links in. The Hon. Member for Calgary South was right.

On March 30 of this year, Greg Weston, a journalist for The Citizen, wrote an article about how it all fits in. He wrote:

> There must be days when Senator Jack Austin muses to himself that with friends like Pierre Trudeau, who needs a parliamentary democracy?

I suppose Mr. Bell and Mr. Strong feel the same way. Indeed, CDIC is a vehicle steered by the elite. They are unelected and unanswerable. They are a clique of super-bureaucrats and Liberal outsiders.

Mr. Malone: Just like socialists.

Mr. Waddell: They are not like socialists. They are quite different. Modern socialism is different from that.

We must remember that by Cabinet order CDIC was incorporated as a private company. Then it was sold to the Government for $1 the same day. By Cabinet order, the shares of the Government in the old Canada Development Corporation went to the CDIC. By Cabinet order, CDIC received a $500,000 interest-free loan. By further Cabinet orders, CDIC was given control over Canadair, de Havilland, Eldorado Nuclear and the Government's stake in Massey-Ferguson.

I should like to refer to an article written by Michael Valpy who is now in Africa. He used to write the Ottawa column for The Globe and Mail. In 1983, when I do not think many people were watching or reading in great detail columns such as this one, Mr. Valpy, to his credit, wrote in detail about what was happening with the CDIC. The Hon. Member for Calgary South and others will agree with me. Michael Valpy was saying that what was happening with the CDIC Bill was one of the most important steps taken by the Government of Canada because it had long-term implications.

As I suggested, CDIC was fundamentally set up by a Cabinet order. What is the matter with that? There is nothing illegal about it, that is true. However, we have to look at the manner in which it is being governed, in which it is being set up and so on. It is really a watchdog for other Crown corporations. Actually, it is more than that. It is a giant holding company to control and bail out other Crown corporations. It is our role in Parliament to ask who will be the watchdog of the watchdog. It is supposed to be us. Therefore we should focus upon the accountability of this giant corporation.

Once we pass this Bill we will give Cabinet authority to give basically $4 billion of spending and borrowing power to CDIC. As the last speaker pointed out, that is a huge chunk of money, a big percentage of the Government's budget and deficit. As the Minister said, it is true that under this Bill corporate plans and capital budgets for CDIC and its subsidiaries must be presented to Parliament. However, they can be amended at any time by Cabinet. Also, as the Minister said and as the Bill indicates, it is true that Members of Parliament will receive quarterly reports. I have one such report in my hand. I believe it is one of the first reports from CDIC. These reports simply let us know every three months how much money has already been spent by the corporation.

Canadair came to Parliament three times in the past 18 months to ask for $750 million. In each case almost all the money had already been spent or was already committed. I am drawing some patterns or some similarities here. We receive reports after the money has practically been spent or committed.

We are told that we will have full and timely disclosure. I have heard that said by Senator Austin, indirectly by the Minister today and in the briefing for this particular Bill. However, if material is commercially detrimental to CDIC or its subsidiaries, we will not receive it. I am not saying that that is a bad principle. Certainly some of the information Crown corporations need to keep private cannot be made public. That may have to happen, but we must weigh it when we walk about the whole area of accountability.

I should like to quote from a consultants' report which was presented to Parliament. If we are to say that such a consultants' report cannot be released because it may hurt the company commercially, we are deprived of information. The report concerned Canadair in 1982, at which time we were debating whether we should give it another $200 million. The consultants' report, which we did not see, read in part:

> The successful public relations program recently used to camouflage the $200 million of additional subsidy to Canadair makes it appropriate for this report to state bluntly the current realities:
> There is no chance for recovering the investment in the Challenger (jet program).
>
> The aircraft adds little of significance to the repertoire of Canadian manufacturing or technological capabilities.
>
> Rather than a triumph, the Challenger is simply another executive jet the world could do without.

The report concluded:

> In short, selling executive toys at $11 million each is not a business government should be in.

The Conservatives, to their credit, obtained that report through the Access to Information Act 13 months later, after we in Parliament had approved an additional $440 million for Canadair. I am not saying that Canadair is a bad program. I am not saying that I agree with the consultants' report. I am not saying that Parliament should not have given that money. However, what I am saying is that there is a problem in the sense of keeping such information private under the guise of its being commercially detrimental to the company. Then we in Parliament may not be able to examine the affairs of these companies, there may not be any real accountability at all, and mistakes can be made.

We have to look at how these companies are audited and at the role of the Auditor General. I would like to give two examples of why we need accountability. The first is de Havilland, the aircraft company in Toronto which makes Dash-7s and Dash-8s. On May 3, 1984, after talking with some workers in the de Havilland shop in Toronto, I found that in 1981 there were 3,500 employees on the shop floor and 1,900 management employees. In 1984 there are 1,300 floor employees and 1,400 management employees. The union felt there was a kind of slush fund for management retirees and nothing for the workers except layoffs. I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about this. We were trying to find out if the Government was going to give more money, as it said, to de Havilland. We did not necessarily object to that, but at the same time more jobs were going to be lost in de Havilland, and we did object to that. This is what accountability is about.

I have another example in Canadair of Montreal. A government task force report in 1981 showed that the company's liabilities would have to increase from $150 million to $1.2 billion. Then there was an addendum to their report, that the GE engine they purchased was misrepresented by management. What was expected to be a $24 million increase in the cost of purchasing the GE engine turned out to be a $24 million a year increase. Thus the total exposure of the company was in excess of $1.3 billion.

Then in 1982 the task force was asked to determine if Canadair would exceed the $1.38 billion, as it was then, before the end of 1983. The task force report, hand-delivered to the Cabinet, said a breach would occur because the company's projections were overly optimistic. In fact, they were unachievable. World demand had dropped so that new orders were non-existent. The task force also said that this did not include interest on loan guarantees which might escalate the cost to as much as $2.3 billion.

Without going into all of it, there is a long history of the Commons committee basically being misled by Canadair management and by the Government in not being open with us. We in the Opposition are not fools. We understand that Senator Austin and Joel Bell and Maurice Strong have a big job to do to clean up the mismanagement of these corporations. It probably was not a pleasant job. Canadians are sympathetic, I think. We would like to see de Havilland and Canadair work. When I make my criticisms here and in committee, I am trying to do so in a positive way so that we will have accountability. It is pretty obvious why we need accountability. Senator Austin will not be responsible to the House of Commons. We will not be able to get up and ask him questions daily because he is in the Senate. Without deprecating in any way the Opposition in the Senate, let me say I do not think it is as strong as it is in the House of Commons, to put it mildly. We need a balance between efficiency and accountability in the CIDC.

There are other matters concerning this Bill that we want to raise in committee, Mr. Speaker. For example, the Bill gives broad powers to hold and manage assets, effect divestitures of assets and make investments, and provide advice on matters pertaining to business and industrial issues in Canada. That is pretty broad and just what exactly does it mean? We want to find out in committee, and I put the Minister on notice.

The Bill says that the CDIC's investments and divestments will be subject to Cabinet approval, not Parliament's, although authorized Cabinet directives will have to be tabled in Parliament within 15 days, I believe. We would have to look at that provision. The legislation also says the CDIC must follow in principle the same disclosure rules that govern publicly-traded private companies. I think this may go a little beyond publicly-traded companies in terms of disclosure. But we have to ask ourselves if that is enough for government corporation taking over some failures which have cost the taxpayers a large amount of money. There have been allegations of mismanagement and the Canadian people have lost some faith in the Government.

We in the NDP are in favour of Crown corporations, Mr. Speaker. They are part of Canadian life. There is a mixed economy in Canada and we feel Crown corporations have worked very well for people in the past. It is nonsense just to stand up, as many Conservatives do, and rail against Crown corporations. That does not provide the answers. I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is here. I was talking to his brother Ed. He was telling me a little about the experience of Crown corporations in Saskatchewan, from a critical point of view.

Our problem in the NDP is that the federal Liberal Government is starting to give Crown corporations a bad name. We have had Crown corporations in Canada for good reasons. We are a large country geographically and a small country in population. We were at one time very dependent on Britain and we are now very dependent on the United States. To develop our independence as a nation we have had to use Crown corporations and mix government and private enterprise. But we have to give Crown corporations a clear mandate. That is the key. We have to define what we want them to do. We have to see how the corporation is performing its mandate. In the case of CDIC, we have to ask if the right management is in place. If not, we have to have the ability to change the management. We have to have an on-going review of the Crown corporations, their mandate and performance. It seems to me that would make sense. We cannot look at them solely in terms of financial factors, although in certain Crown corporations that may be the only way to look at them. There may be social factors involved. For example, in order to keep an aircraft industry with all its high technology and job ramifications, we may have to lose money on a Crown corporation. It is nonsense to say that we are going to sell Canadair and de Havilland. Who is going to buy them? We should not go around bailing out companies, wiping out their debt and then selling them off to the private sector. That is not the way to operate. Obviously, we really need a Crown corporation strategy.

How are we to obtain this scrutiny and accountability as I have defined it, Mr. Speaker? We will need a standing committee of this House on Crown corporations. It will have to be a bit of a breakthrough. It will have to be like an American Senate committee in that it will have good staff, some real power and a little more relaxed party discipline. There would be automatic referral to the committee. We have to look at the mandate of Crown corporations as I have defined it. We have to look at ways which will provide public accountability and scrutiny. I see this happening through a completely revamped committee. As I said, there are Hon. Members of the House who have much more experience than I in committees and I invite those Hon. Members to take this idea up and advance it before the House in this debate.

I think we must go so far as to have some of the directors of the Crown corporation approved by that committee. We cannot continue to have a small, elite group of people on those boards, as has been so frequent under the Prime Minister's Government. On the other hand, we cannot continue to have party hacks and patronage appointments on those boards because we will not have Crown corporations that are run properly. The boards of directors will not be opened up to consumers, to native people, to women and to all groups of society that have not been represented on boards of Crown corporations in the past and should have been.

We must think about worker participation in Crown corporations. We must think of Crown corporations as being on the leading edge of the new ways of making Canadian workers feel less alienated than they feel now. I have strayed a bit from the CDIC but those are the kinds of things we should look at in the future.

Finally, the Government has disappointed me. The Hon. Member for Calgary South will agree that the Government really has no firm objective for CDIC. Did Government Members create the CDIC to privatize or to vastly expand the role of government in the economy? Perhaps they are juggling and really do not know what they are doing. If they are juggling, I hope they find out what they are doing pretty quickly because there are some vast sums of money involved.

I would like to see the CDIC used for economic planning for Canada. I would like to see it plan for a full employment strategy so that by the year 1990 we could have full employment in Canada. In 1960 President Kennedy said: "We Americans are going to put a man on the moon by the end of the decade". And they did. I think that our goal must be full employment. We can define the meaning of full employment and we can define a strategy to have full employment. We may have to use Crown corporations and particularly the CDIC in a creative way in order to move toward that goal. That issue is not discussed in this Bill and the Bill seems to have no such purpose.

The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) will be surprised when I say this, but I think that in a sense this Bill seems to be coming from a little old-time socialism. The bill calls for a little bit of centralization and is a bit elitist. New socialism is built from the ground up, is decentralized and is opened up to the public. When Members yell at us about socialism, they should know what they are talking about.

Mr. Andre: When did we say we were against socialism?

Mr. Waddell: You will, my friend.

In conclusion, I shall return to the problem as I see it. I notice that the American Ambassador to Canada was quoted in today's Citizen as follows:

> Saying the only practical choices for Canada's prime minister after the next election are Brian Mulroney, John Turner or Jean Chrétien, Robinson said all three understand business and defence well enough to swing Canadian policies more into line with the Reagan administration's thinking.

Perhaps in the future we will have complete privatization, deregulation and a Bill Bennett type of economics in the federal Government.

Mr. Blenkarn: Good stuff.

Mr. Waddell: My friend on the Conservative side has said that that is good stuff. That is not the way we see it. We in the NDP feel that we could use this Bill in a positive way so that we may have a Crown corporation that will put good management into Canadair and de Havilland and we may use Canadian technology. Those aircraft companies have proud histories and we are proud of what they have done in the past. They have good workers. To the extent that Messrs. Bell, Strong and Austin would make the management of those companies better, we are all for it. However, to the extent that a small elite would still manage these companies away from the public eye—and being in the public eye would mean better management in the long run—we are against it. We propose to make amendments to the Bill in committee.

In this country, Mr. Speaker, we have seen an absence of debate on the role of the public sector and on the role of Crown corporations. We have heard a lot of rhetoric. I am sometimes as guilty as anyone of rhetoric on that subject. However, today I have tried to make some concrete proposals regarding what we in the NDP see as being the role of Crown corporations. We will advance those proposals during the committee's study of this Bill.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was intrigued by my friend's comments regarding the new socialism as being socialism from the ground up, decentralization and so on. I would appreciate it if he could send me some written material on that subject. Perhaps there is still hope for him if he is talking about the value of decentralization. If he would stop to think about it enough, he would find that in fact the main reason why the private sector, the market place and capitalism, if you will, is so efficient and effective is because it is the most decentralized decision-making body possible. It is precisely the fact of its decentralized decision-making that makes it so effective and efficient. If the socialists or the members of the New Democratic Party are talking about this as being the new socialism, so be it. I believe they are really talking about the free market and the capitalist system.

The Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party indicated that members of his Party like Crown corporations. I suppose that that is not exactly news to this House. I think the socialists, whether they are members of the NDP or the Liberal Party, like Crown corporations. He spoke about how wonderful Crown corporations have been. I would be a lot more convinced of that, Mr. Speaker, and it would be a lot more helpful to the quality of debate, if those Members would be capable of pointing out even one single Crown corporation out of the somewhere between 200 to 450 Crown corporations that exist that is operating in the commercial area and compares favourably to an equivalent private sector corporation. If there was one such Crown corporation out of 200 or even one out of 450, just one which would compare favourably to equivalent corporations in the private sector, then perhaps there might be some justification for the statement that Crown corporations are good things.

I would also suggest to my friends in the New Democratic Party that they ought to pay a little bit of attention to what one of the officers of this House, the Auditor General, has been saying about Crown corporations as well as what his predecessors have said. Every time there is an audit of Crown corporations, we are treated to a great long list of abuses, mismanagements and waste of money. We are told that a catastrophic situation has been created which has spilled literally billions of taxpayers' dollars down the drain.

One wonders how many billions of dollars must be lost and how often the Auditor General must make these observations to us before we finally come to the logical realization that the manner in which this Government at least has been using Crown corporations to operate in areas where it is incompetent has been extremely costly to the country. It has been costly in taxpayers' dollars, costly in jobs and costly in so many other ways that are difficult to measure.

It is not hard to understand why there are so many Crown corporations in the country. To a government of socialist bent, whether it be Liberal or NDP, Crown corporations are wonderful devices for getting around the obstacle of having to deal with our political system. They are great political devices. They are great things for governments to get involved in because they have all kinds of potential benefits to a government which is not worried about the country but worried primarily about its longevity in office. They carry few of the risks which are associated with direct government action.

I would like to cite a few examples. Crown corporations with their boards of directors, contracts for advertising and supplying paperwork as well as other business activities, are wonderful vehicles for government patronage. They provide wonderful ways in which to reward poll captains, zone commanders and campaign managers. Therefore, the existence of 400 Crown corporations is not viewed with alarm; it is viewed as a wonderful thing. With 20 directors per Crown corporation, it means that 8,000 loyal Liberals could be appointed to positions. Of course, I am not mentioning the possibility of other forms of patronage, such as obtaining contracts with Crown corporations for the benefit of friends of the Government Party.

Crown corporations also are good vehicles of manipulation for political advantage. Eldorado Nuclear is one example. Approximately four years ago Eldorado Nuclear wanted to add a new uranium refinery. The most economical place to construct the refinery was next door to the existing refinery which was in Port Hope, Ontario. However, there are very few Liberal votes in Port Hope as it is in a Conservative riding. That was the most economical location for Eldorado Nuclear to construct the new refinery. Constructing it anywhere else would have reduced the profitability of the refinery by $150 million to $200 million. That would have been the extra cost. Of course, the money did not come directly from the Consolidated Revenue Fund so it is not a real cost as far as the Minister of Finance was concerned. The then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde)—decided that there would be more political value in moving that refinery to a Liberal riding rather than constructing it in a Conservative riding. That was the decision which was made: it was moved to a Liberal riding. So we can understand why the Minister looks kindly on Crown corporations such as Eldorado Nuclear; it is a wonderful way for him to make a gift to Liberals without it appearing as a cost in the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

I remember vividly in the middle of the 1979 election campaign Petro-Canada announcing, based on one single hole, that it had discovered enough natural gas to cure Canada's energy problems for the next hundred years. It had discovered one hole! It had discovered enough gas to cure Canada's energy problems! That happened in the middle of an election. If Petro-Canada had been a private trading corporation with shares in the stock exchange and had made that kind of statement based on one single hole, the officers of the corporation would have been charged for issuing false information and for attempting to influence the price of the stock. However, being a Crown corporation it was not subject to the normal laws that the rest of us and other companies have to deal with.

From time to time Crown corporations do things which apparently are meritorious. When that happens, it is a tremendous opportunity for Ministers to take credit. I remember, for example, when Canadair produced its first Challenger jet. It was going to turn the world of corporate executive jets on its ear. It was the most marvellous piece of technology imaginable. They would sell hundreds of them. It was produced by a wonderful Crown corporation. It was difficult to watch a television broadcast or open a newspaper or magazine without seeing a picture of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien)—the leadership candidate who was then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce responsible for Canadair—posing beside a jet. He told us what a wonderful Crown corporation Canadair was and what it would do for Canadian technology. He said it was absolutely marvellous. There was the man from Shawinigan smiling away and strutting around saying: "You reactionary Tories can you not see that here is proof positive of how wonderful Crown corporations are?" However, when the horror of the Challenger jet became known and it was realized that, far from turning the world of executive jets on its ear, no one wanted it and, in fact, the Challenger had cost Canadians $1.5 billion with no chance of recouping that money, there was not a Minister of the Crown who could be found that would admit to having heard of the Challenger or of Canadair.

Ministerial responsibility; what is that? They said that they were not responsible because it was a Crown corporation; the board of directors was responsible. But the board of directors was reappointed anyway. What happens to ministerial responsibility under those circumstances? Nothing. What did they do? They hired three flacks—Austin, Strong and Bell—and asked them to figure a way out of the situation. They said "Please, help us", and those fellows came up with this particular vehicle the Canadian Development Investment Corporation. CDIC is a solution to nothing. CDIC is an invitation to spill many, many more hundreds of millions, if not billions, of taxpayers' dollars. Frankly, there is no way in the world that this Party will be a party to that kind of activity. There is no justification whatsoever for what is being attempted.

My colleague from Calgary South quite accurately, and in detail that cannot be improved upon, described the four reasons for which any responsible parliamentarian—and I emphasize the word "responsible", thereby giving the Liberals an out—must be offended by this legislation and must oppose it with all the means which are at his disposal.

Let us consider for a moment the three principles which are involved and the three individuals who are key to the CDIC—Joel Bell, Maurice Strong and Jack Austin. Joel Bell, the former vice-president of Petro-Canada, was the guy who assured us in the early days that Petro-Canada had no intention of getting into the business of running service stations. We know what happened to that promise. A leadership candidate for the Liberal Party has said that it was one of the stupidest things Petro-Canada could have done. I agree whole-heartedly with him. Maurice Strong was the fellow who helped Petro-Canada buy Petrofina. He is the guy who picked up a great, fat fee for that. I guess he must have spent that money as he is back on the government take.

Or course, Jack Austin is the man who negotiated the uranium cartel and then arranged not to be charged for his participation in that illegal act. With those three fellows in charge, there is no reason in the world that any right-thinking person should co-operate with any of their plans.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

SOCIAL SCIENCES AND HUMANITIES RESEARCH COUNCIL

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): In February of this year the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) announced that this year's budget of the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council would be increased by $4.8 million. What he did not say was that the Government was cutting out a $5.9 million supplementary allocation for Canadian studies which had been part of the Council's budget for 1983-1984. The result is that the Council will have to operate with $1.1 million less this year than last. Only the Liberal Government could try to make less sound like more.

The academic community throughout the country has reacted angrily to this attempt at creative accounting, calling for the immediate reinstatement of these funds, and for good reason. Our society is currently undergoing tremendous change due to technological Advances and the changing role of women. It is essential that there be sufficient financial support for the study of how these changes will affect both individuals and Canadian society as a whole. The Government could not have chosen a worse time to reduce its commitment to the social sciences and humanities.

Rather than paying bonuses to executives of Crown corporations like de Havilland, the Government should be funding research in these vital areas. I would urge the Minister to restore the original level of funding to the SSHRC.

PETRO-CANADA

WITHDRAWAL OF MINIMUM PRICING ARRANGEMENTS WITH INDEPENDENT SERVICE STATION OPERATORS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, there has been much controversy lately in the area of price fixing in the petroleum business. I refer especially to the April court decision which found Imperial Oil Limited guilty of unfair dealings with independent retailers of gasoline in its efforts to keep the price of gasoline artificially high.

A constituent of mine has been informed by Petro-Canada that he no longer qualifies for what is known as a minimum margin should the price fall below a pre-set level as a result of gas wars. The constituent concerned is an independent operator in my riding, who purchases his gasoline from Petro-Canada. However, those outlets which are associated directly with Petro-Canada, and which display the emblem of that company, for some reason seem to be entitled to a minimum spread of 2 cents per litre regardless of how low the price falls in a gas war.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, does this seem fair? A huge company which is funded by the taxpayers of Canada appears to be muscling out small, independent operators, with discriminatory policies such as these. This is a sure sign of creeping socialism and state control of all endeavours. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), pointed this out to the House on Friday, April 6, of this year, and the practice continues. It is certainly time that action be taken to curb this undesirable policy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CRITICISM OF STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR TO CANADA

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the U.S. ambassador to Canada, Mr. Paul Robinson, has done it again. He does not seem to appreciate that his role is not that of announcing the policy of Canadian Governments, now or in the future. He indicates, and in this case he is right, that there will be no difference between a Liberal or a Conservative administration. He is astute enough to recognize that. However, he went on to say that any government is going to welcome foreign investment here in a way which has not been seen since 1980. He follows that up, in talking about defence spending, with the statement; "If Turner comes in it will improve even more, and if Mulroney comes in it will improve even more than that".

I believe Mr. Robinson would be well advised to inform his Government privately, in whatever way he wishes, about what Canada is doing, in his opinion. I believe he should inform our Government privately, in whatever way he wishes, of the intentions and hopes of the U.S. Government. However, it is not his role to announce the policies of Canada's Government regardless of its stripe. Perhaps it would be more useful for everyone involved if Mr. Robinson were recalled.

TRADE

CALL FOR INCREASED LOBBYING EFFORTS IN WASHINGTON

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, last year the centre for Canadian Studies at Johns Hopkins University released a major study warning that Canada must increase its lobbying in Washington to protect critical interests affected by the U.S. Congress. I heard these same warnings during a recent trip to Washington to discuss free trade issues. Canada still spends less than most countries on lobbying. Canadian lobbyists spent $7 million in 1981, compared with $22.6 million by the British, $18.5 million by the West Germans, $15.2 million by the Japanese, and $11.9 million by the Israelis.

Because we are the Americans' largest trading partner we stand to lose the most from protectionist American legislation aimed at other countries. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), noted the most recent example of that when he pointed out that a new U.S. directive will prohibit defence contracts to be let to companies outside the U.S., affecting Canadian companies which rely on those contracts. American tariffs on specialty steel, aimed at other countries, are hurting Canada. A U.S. ban on asbestos product imports will cut off the market for one-third of our asbestos exports.

We need to promote our interests more aggressively in Washington. The Japanese are everywhere in evidence. The Chinese threaten to cut off wheat imports in order to have American legislation changed. Canadian lobbyists are like school children on the international scene. When will the Minister realize the importance of protecting our critical interests when they are threatened by the U.S. Congress?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONDEMNATION OF STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR TO CANADA

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have been angered many time by the U.S. Ambassador, Paul Robinson. I have refrained to this point from speaking out. However, I feel this weekend was the straw which broke the camel's back. I speak also on behalf of a good many of my constituents who are very angry at this kind of outburst. Mr. Robinson is very much opposed to FIRA, which was designed to make sure that foreign investment was good for Canadians. He is opposed to the National Energy Program, PetroCan, and all these things which have been good for Canada.

In 1978, 65 per cent of the oil and gas industry was foreign owned. Today it is 44 per cent. This is the kind of thing which is happening, and he is opposed to that.

Recently he wrote a long article on defence which was published in The Globe and Mail, which showed the strength of the Soviets but did not indicate anything which the Americans had. It gave the impression that there was a very large window of vulnerability, when his own Scowcroft Commission, the most important commission on the subject in the last several years in the United States, indicated that there was no window of vulnerability.

• (1410)

I suggest that this latest step, moving into the leadership in the Liberal Party and into Canadian policy and the Canadian election, is unwarranted. If it were done in other countries, the ambassador would be asked to leave. I condemn it on behalf of my—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

RENT REDUCTION FOR CERTAIN EMPLOYEES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Santa Claus will be in Ottawa this year in May, that is, for specially favoured employees of the National Capital Commission. While scores of people are having a difficult time paying the rent on their homes, and while the Department of Public Works is reducing the amount of money for the poor, for example, on co-operative housing where 72 per cent of the money provided is utilized for families with incomes of less than $10,000, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) is permitting the NCC to provide a 25 per cent reduction in rent for similar private housing. But this special treatment is only for favoured employees. The NCC has refused to release the names of the employees. However, there is good reason to believe that these favoured employees are in high financial brackets.

Giving a present is a splendid thing when the cost comes out of the pocket of the giver. However, the Government is again playing Santa Claus with the people's money. I wager that the recipients of this gift will be members or special friends of the Liberal Party, people who can well afford to pay the conventional rents. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I used the word Santa Claus; Santa would be ashamed to be a party to a deal to help only the rich.

Oral Questions

BILINGUALISM

CONDEMNATION OF PROTESTERS IN VICTORIA, B.C.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the linguistic intolerance shown by a small group of protesters yesterday in Victoria is not typical of British Columbians. These people have no real concept of western Canada. Linguistic equality is a policy supported by all political Parties in the House of Commons and by all fair-minded Canadians, east or west, who have studied the issue. Western Canadians reject, have rejected, and will reject the Liberal Party, not because of bilingualism but because of economic mismanagement and pork barrel politics.

Some 1.5 million Canadians are unemployed, and the Liberals have no plans to help. The Liberals continue to follow high interest rates in the United States regardless of their harmful effects on Canadian home builders, home buyers, and small business people. The Labour Adjustment Benefits Program has been designed with a bias toward central and eastern Canada. Money for special employment initiatives was distributed on a partisan basis. British Columbia received only $60 per unemployed person while Quebec received $206, and the Maritimes received $227.

The people of western Canada are more than willing to recognize linguistic equality. However, we will never accept the present economic injustice which is the present policy of the Liberal Government.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER CANADA PROGRAM—DELAY IN STUDENT HIRING PROCEDURES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns the unwarranted delays in getting young people hired for jobs under the Summer Canada Projects. We have learned that prospective employers have to wait weeks before being provided with a list of names of students to be interviewed. This can mean the postponement, or even the cancellation, of some of these very worth-while projects. That means that students lose out on jobs.

What is the Government doing to cut through this bureaucratic red tape in Canada Employment Centres so that students can be placed in the available jobs more quickly than they are at present?

[Translation]

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I think that the problem raised by my colleague comes up every year. In fact, delays are normal. There are always delays between the time when projects are accepted and the time when students are hired. Under a new procedure which has been established, as soon as the agreement is signed with the sponsor of a project, he can go to a bank and borrow the money to pay the staff hired. There are no undue delays this year in the implementation of the program, and students will have 81,000 jobs this year, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that just because this happens every year it is okay that the delay continues. That is not the way we look at it, nor is it the way that students look at it.

OTTAWA AREA PROJECTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): This past weekend we learned that a number of projects in the Ottawa area were placed in jeopardy because of the bureaucratic foul-ups in the Canada Employment Centres. The Minister understands the difficulty. In order for the projects to get under way the students must be hired and trained. If they are not even interviewed, the projects cannot begin.

These are projects which are funded under the Summer Canada Program, which is a government program. It is administered by the Canada Employment Centres. Can the Minister tell us in how many areas other than Ottawa this foul-up is taking place? Will the Government move quickly to straighten out the mess and get the students into the jobs they so desperately need?

[Translation]

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): As I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, there are no undue delays in the hiring of youths. That is true. Young people will have jobs lasting about 12 weeks on average. To avoid any discrimination under this system, we do not begin hiring during the examinations in universities, CEGEPs or colleges so that all youths, be they at the secondary or university level, can be eligible for those summer work projects.

As far as I know, all the information concerning those projects is available and everything is ready, except that we will begin to hire young people in the next few weeks because secondary level students are still in school, Mr. Speaker. In my opinion, it is important that all young people have equal access to those summer job projects.

[English]

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Minister simply does not realize that students have a very short time during the summer to earn enough money to get back to school in the autumn. They have already lost a month of that very short time period.

PREPARATION OF PROGRAM

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Youth unemployment is over 18 per cent. There are 560,000 students coming onto the labour force this summer. Why did the Government not work the bugs out of the system with regard to the Summer Canada Program before it got under way so that students would not be put into the intolerable position of being denied the jobs they should have?

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I regret to repeat myself. I would like to point out to my colleague that the 12-week jobs will start on time and also finish on time at the end of summer before the students go back to school. We have been asked for an extension due to the visit of the Pope. We are considering that. However, I would like to assure my hon. colleague that the number of weeks and the number of jobs will be there. This summer $200 million will be spent on our students. All students who apply will be treated equally this summer.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL TASK FORCE REPORT—COST OF OIL AND NATURAL GAS FEED STOCK

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of both the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is with regard to the petrochemical industry and the importance of that industry in the provision of jobs in the manufacturing sector. The Petrochemical Task Force report has recommended that the cost to the industry of the oil or natural gas feed stock, which is about 50 to 75 per cent of the cost, be reduced to make the industry more competitive internationally and therefore more capable of providing jobs downstream.

Does the Prime Minister agree with the Task Force report that the petrochemical industry, in a resource rich country like Canada, should have a cost advantage on the feedstock, and that this advantage should not be offset by the heavy load of front end taxation on either the natural gas or crude oil inputs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a question like that coming from a member of a Party which has been arguing for international prices, seems a bit bizarre. Since the introduction of the national energy policy we have had a policy of having prices fixed in Canada. This was beneficial, not only to the consumer but also to the petrochemical industry. That has been our policy. It continues to apply. It has been somewhat modified in recent years. As a matter of fact, I believe in his Budget before last, the Minister of Finance, in conjunction with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, reduced the taxation to certain areas of the petrochemical industry, and we are taking the present circumstances into account.

Once again, it is interesting to see the Hon. Member apparently support a two-price policy, being a lower price in Canada for Canadians. The difference is that we wanted it for Canadian consumers. The Hon. Member seems to want it only for the industry.

Mr. Wilson: Again the Prime Minister is distorting a question that I put to him. We have not said that we support a pricing policy which includes taxes that makes an industry uncompetitive. That is the position taken by the Task Force.

EFFECT OF FEED STOCK PRICE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Does the Government accept in principle the fact that that high level of front end taxation—not the wellhead price but the high level of front end taxation—should render an industry uncompetitive internationally, particularly an industry which has built its facilities to serve a world-wide market? I would remind the Prime Minister that the price that this industry pays on its feed stock inputs is higher than that which the competing industry in the United States pays in the U.S. market in total?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to repeat my answer, the Hon. Member will know from the recent Budget of the Minister of Finance, to which I referred, that we do not want to make the industry uncompetitive. That is why we have reduced some of the front end taxation. That is why some of the provinces have reduced some of the front end taxation.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

ACCESS TO CHILDREN'S DAYCARE SYSTEM—REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I preface it by saying to the Prime Minister that a new and irreversible fact has appeared in Canadian history. It is that a majority of women with preschool children are now working outside the home. Regrettably, some 85 per cent of children who have the need are denied access to daycare.

Would the Prime Minister agree that now is the time for Canada to recognize that daycare, like education and medicare ought to be established as a universal right for all children in Canada? If so, would he agree to the establishment of a parliamentary commission of inquiry whose responsibility it would be to study the situation and bring back to Parliament a series of proposals that would lead to the implementation of this very important principle?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a very important question. The Government has addressed it within the bounds of its constitutional rights in the past, not by supporting daycare directly but by providing funds which could be used for daycare. The Hon. Member compares the situation to that of medicare and post-secondary education. Of course he is correct in suggesting that both of these areas, like daycare, are within provincial jurisdiction. We do hope that the provinces, as in the case of medicare and post-secondary education, will be more concerned with this very real problem.

As far as setting up a task force or parliamentary inquiry into it is concerned, we have been discussing this matter in Cabinet and we decided that it would be wiser to wait for the Badgley Report, which I believe is due in early July. That could serve as a basis for the further examination of this subject.

Mr. Broadbent: My party strongly endorses the idea of having a task force that would act on the assumption that the principle of having the federal Government participate in the establishment of the universal principle of daycare will be recognized.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INITIATE FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL TALKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister does not agree with the establishment of a parliamentary inquiry, does he agree with the principle and, if so, does he not think it would be appropriate for the federal Government to act as it did to get medicare established in this country, initiating talks with provinces, making a specific proposal to establish the principle on a universal basis, and also offering a cost sharing formula, such as 50-50 cost sharing, so that the average, ordinary working family, particularly working women, will have real access to daycare?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these are interesting ideas. They are some form of repetition, as I said earlier, of our experience with medicare and post-secondary education. However, I recall that some 15 or 18 years ago the installation of this procedure led to a great deal of confrontation with the provinces which lasted to the early and middle 1970s.

I just want to point out to the Hon. Member that my successors, and the Leader of the Opposition, do not believe in confrontation. I do not think this will be a course which will be easily paved because the provinces are not anxious to have the federal Government interfere in their areas of jurisdiction and tell them what should be done with their 50-cent dollars. It is something which I am happy to leave to my successors. I am sure that the Hon. Member will be there with his Party, at least part of his Party, to goad them on. I wish him well.

PROPOSAL TO PROVIDE JOINT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, before the Prime Minister goes to his self chosen happy hunting grounds, if he believes in the principle of medicare and knows that there can be differences without necessarily having conflict or antagonism with the provinces—although he and I know that some conflict in these matters tends to be inevitable—instead of coasting for the next six weeks, why does he not use the occasion to commit his Government to the principle of universal daycare now? Why does he not commit the Government to initiate action on that?

More specifically, would he consider the proposal that was presented to all three Parties today by the Canadian Daycare Advocacy Association that the federal Government give the reasonable sum of $5 a day for every approved child care space, to be matched by the provinces? In short, will the Prime Minister take some concrete action now so that we can get the principle of universal daycare established in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my view there are several things wrong with the suggestion—it was more of a suggestion than a question by the Hon. Member. First, as I said, this Government did take initiatives in the past. Notably, we have asked the Badgley Committee to report to us. The report is forthcoming very soon. It would seem to me that before engaging the Government and Parliament in an area which although it is very important is also very expensive, and would be very expensive for the federal Government, it would make sense to look at that report to see what it recommends, and also to use it to try to advance public thinking in this matter, particularly to awaken the provinces to their responsibility and area of jurisdiction.

The Hon. Member had to concede that such things do lead to confrontation. I do not think that he is seriously suggesting that in the next two weeks, one of which will be spent in Europe and at the Summit in London, I could get the provinces to accept the principle as he is asking me to do.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

REJECTION OF COAL DEVELOPMENT PROPOSAL

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Recently the Foreign Investment Review Agency rejected a proposal that was submitted to it by Petro-Canada and Sumisho Coal Canada, a Japanese subsidiary of Sumitomo, for the development of Petro-Canada's holdings in Northeast Coal. This proposal has the potential of creating 700 permanent jobs and a massive construction program.

● (1430)

Could the Prime Minister, since this proposal was before Cabinet, tell the House what it was about this proposal—was it the location or what it was—that the Government could not see fit to permit this application to go ahead, particularly since the Government has a billion dollar public investment and infrastructure in the port, railways and so on that are underutilized?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry, not having had notice of the question, I did not have time to look up this particular file. I certainly am assured in my own mind that the reason we rejected it is that it did not bring sufficient benefit to Canada. That is the test under which all foreign investment is looked at and screened. We are accepting over 90 per cent to 95 per cent of all applications for investment or extension of present investment and, therefore, if this one was not accepted it was undoubtedly because it did not bring sufficient benefit to Canada and to Canadians.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Prime Minister for not giving him personal notice. I raised the question last week. I would have thought that someone would have briefed someone on the other side. It is a critical issue. In western Canada we feel it is probably another attempt by Government to slow down the development of resource ventures in that part of the country. The Japanese are no strangers to the rules of FIRA and this Government. This application was not unique in any way.

Will the Prime Minister undertake to look into this file and see whether this company and Petro-Canada, the Government's own Crown corporation, could not be asked to reapply and get this project on the way, particularly since we have such massive public investment, as I said earlier, that is underutilized, and since this project has such a potential for the creation of new employment, and permanent employment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the explanation by the Hon. Member of the refusal is preposterous in looking at his own words. He recognizes that the federal Government has put hundreds of millions of dollars into the development of this project, and obviously it is not our purpose not to want investment in that area. The Hon. Member should realize that we do not welcome investment at any cost. If Canadians are not going to get any benefit out of it, then we will not support the investment. I will make sure that the Minister is notified of the Hon. Member's question and looks into this particular case.

CABINET DECISION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. Since the Prime Minister has not familiarized himself with the file concerning the rejection of the Sumitomo application, which has been described by British Columbia's Minister of Industry as stupid and shortsighted, and since there is a criterion of 50 per cent ownership in FIRA decisions, and since that was met, indeed, PetroCan held, I believe, 88 per cent of the shares, how can the Minister justify the approval of a decison by Cabinet to block the initial Japanese participation of $10 million, in view of the quite disastrous unemployment situation in British Columbia?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware, as was pointed out by the Prime Minister, that the Foreign Investment Review Agency has been approving somewhere between 92 per cent and 95 per cent of the applications for new investment and acquisitions in this country. Canada is the host country of more foreign investment than any other country on earth. Indeed, it is easier to carry out a worth-while investment in Canada than in almost any other country of which I can think.

I point out to the Hon. Member opposite that he cannot, nor can I, as a Canadian citizen, own a broadcasting station in the United States, any part of coastal shipping, become involved in the uranium industry, or in a variety of other restricted areas.

Mr. Blenkarn: How about a coal mine?

Mr. Regan: I suggest to him that any question on a specific turndown by FIRA, as it is presently being operated, is one for which there is a very, very good reason. I also point out to the Hon. Member that he is fully aware of the fact that it is the Minister responsible for DRIE who carries the responsibility for FIRA and would be able to give a detailed answer in relation to this question.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, that would be amusing if it were not so tragic. The Prime Minister at least had the grace to admit that he did not read the file.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister is responsible in that Government, or should be, for international trade.

LIMIT ON JAPANESE PARTICIPATION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question for the Minister, Mr. Speaker. We want to know why Cabinet insisted upon Sumitomo limiting its investment participation only to the mine at Monkman. Is the Government against development of other mines in British Columbia or, for that matter, anywhere else in Canada? It certainly appears to be so in the Yukon.

In view of the fact that the project is now on hold, and that the Japanese and other investors have been treated to another example of this Government's ideological interventionism, how can the Minister expect foreign investors to have any confidence or any faith whatsoever in this Government?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that the Hon. Member paid no attention to my initial answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: No one else would either.

Mr. Regan: I have to say to him that while my prime responsibility is the sale of Canadian goods and services in the various parts of the world, and while we are doing very well in that regard, as I hope the Hon. Member will admit, I obviously have the same interest as other members of the Cabinet and all Members of the House in seeing worth-while investments that will bring about improvement of conditions in this country.

Mr. Nielsen: Have you read the file, Gerry?

Mr. Regan: I am concerned about the fact that the Hon. Member would come here and, without having made inquiries as to the reason for the turndown, pose the questions, not to the Minister of Industry—

Mr. Dick: Where is he?

Mr. Regan: —but to other Ministers. I am concerned. The Hon. Member mentions the Yukon. I also believe, with him, that there are investment opportunities and trade opportunities there, but the Hon. Member has not once come to me to talk about trade opportunities in the Yukon. I would welcome him doing so. Instead of just trying to say things because he is an opposition Member, I would welcome him, recognizing that we are all here to work together to make Canadian jobs—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: —and I invite him to do something constructive.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BANKS AND BANKING

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF UPPER LIMIT ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister no doubt is aware that on the weekend all six of the Liberal leadership candidates made impassioned speeches against the banks.

An Hon. Member: All six?

Mr. Deans: In fact, in the words of the Minister of Energy, the banks are fat, not hurting, and are very sanctimonious. Recognizing that the farmers, the small-business people and the home owners are suffering as a result of the policies of the self-same banks, will the Prime Minister move to establish an upper limit on interest rates that can be charged by the banks for loans to those groups in particular, in order to ease the burden on them and to ensure that the banks act in the best ineresets of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the NDP seems intent on me doing a lot more things before I leave the leadership of the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: We have been waiting 16 years.

Mr. Epp: With your records, don't touch anything.

Mr. Trudeau: I am happy to realize, Mr. Speaker, that there is one area of big business on which I have not been tough, namely, the banks. If I have been neglectful in that area, I am happy that my successors are undertaking to step in with some short, strong action.

Mr. Nielsen: Save us from that.

Mr. Trudeau: At this stage I think the question is rhetorical. The Hon. Member wants to draw it to the attention of the House. He does not seriously think that in the six days of this week before I leave for Europe I will be able to change the Bank Act in the way he suggests. But we have other legislation that we would like to change, Mr. Speaker. I wish the Hon. Member would co-operate with the House Leader on some of that progressive business.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I assumed the Prime Minister is still in charge until after his successor is chosen.

Mr. Nielsen: Obviously that is not the case.

● (1440)

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, just last week the Government introduced legislation, the mortgage protection plan, the result of which will be that banks will be allowed to continue to charge the high interest rates which they have been charging over the course of the last four years. All leaders of all major institutions dealing with mortgages, from The Canadian Real Estate Association to the Consumers' Association of Canada, and Frank Clayton, the housing economist, say that the proposed program will do nothing more than secure high interest rates in Canada. In the next six days, or between now and the end of June, will the Prime Minister take over the leadership of the Liberal Party once again and bring forward proper legislation which deals in an adequate manner with the usury of banks which has driven people out of their homes, off their farms, and out of their businesses?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the second question we now see that the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party is not really begging me to stay on as Leader.

Mr. Deans: No, I just want you to do your job.

Mr. Trudeau: What he is doing is laying the groundwork for his Party not supporting the legislation which we have introduced in order to help mortgagees.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: We will see, Mr. Speaker, if tomorrow they will support that legislation alleviating the burden on mortgagees.

Mr. Deans: It does not.

Mr. Trudeau: I deduce from the Hon. Member that they will not, in which case we will see.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PRESIDENT'S CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. Why is it that Michael Warren, President of Canada Post Corporation, cannot answer his mail?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I feel confident that the Hon. Member will be getting his mail very soon and find answers to the letters to the president of the corporation.

[English]

PROMISE OF REPLIES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): It is not my personal mail to which I make reference. I was asking the question on behalf of a large number of constituents who complain that they write to the President of Canada Post Corporation and receive a reply from a staff person indicating that a letter will be coming personally from the President of the Corporation. In light of the fact that these letters never show up, will the Minister undertake, as Postmaster General, to inform the President of Canada Post Corporation that it is damaging to the Corporation when the person at the top simply refuses to answer his mail? Surely he is a symbol of the entire Canadian postal system. The Minister ought to be able to do something to give Canadians a little more pride in their Post Office.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have the impression that the Hon. Member is dramatizing the situation, but I will convey his remarks to the President of the Canada Post Corporation.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PLIGHT OF SOVIET DISSIDENT, ANDREI SAKHAROV, AND SPOUSE

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Of course he is aware of the desperate and unhappy circumstance faced by Andrei Sakharov and his wife, Yelena Bonner, in the Soviet Union. The Minister will also be aware of the unprecedented intervention by the Nobel Peace Prize Committee which, in a letter to the Soviet President, put the prestige of that Committee behind a request that Sakharov and Bonner be freed.

Would the Minister demonstrate the deep-felt concern of Canadians by approaching all Governments, signatories to the CSCE Helsinki Accord, with the objective of producing a joint appeal to Moscow on behalf of Dr. Sakharov and his wife, an appeal aimed at achieving an end to their ordeal?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Prime Minister indicated—I think last week—to the House the concern which the Canadian Government has consistently expressed to Soviet authorities with respect to the Sakharov case.

The Hon. Member has made a specific suggestion with respect to action which might be taken by members of the CSCE. I am not quite sure whether all members of the organization, or all those who have participated in the discussions, including the Soviet Union, would join in any such appeal. In fact I am quite doubtful whether that would happen. I shall be going tomorrow to the NATO meeting in Washington. It may be a good occasion to sound out with my colleagues there, the Foreign Ministers of NATO countries, on whether action along those lines, or different action, might be undertaken.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

COMINCO APPLICATION FOR LOAN TO MODERNIZE SMELTER AT TRAIL, B.C.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance, regarding a grant requested by Cominco in Trail, B.C., for an industrial development loan to modernize its facilities. The Minister was made aware of this request some two weeks ago. Could he report to the House on whether this request has been granted?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I recall the query of an Hon. Member opposite to that effect. I have drawn it to the attention of the responsible Minister, and I am sure that a response will be forthcoming.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of State for Finance be more disposed to look at this question if the candidate from Canadian Pacific,

Mr. Turner, happened to be the Leader of his Party? Is that the reason he is waiting to make the announcement that Cominco will be receiving industrial grants? Is he waiting for the candidate from Canadian Pacific to become the Leader of his Party?

An Hon. Member: Don't answer that.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CRASH OF U.S. MILITARY AIRCRAFT IN CENTRAL AMERICA—USE OF CANADIAN IDENTIFICATION LETTERS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In recent days Canadians have learned, again from foreign sources, this time the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration, that the DC-3 which crashed near the Costa Rican/Nicaraguan border on March 24 was painted with the Canadian call letters "CF-ETE". As the Minister knows, this DC-3 was owned by the U.S. military and was engaged in running guns to anti-Sandinista guerrillas. Has the Minister asked the United States for an explanation about the illegal use by the U.S. military of Canadian call letters on a gun-running aircraft in Central America?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not done that.

AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we have just learned that the Canadian call letters were being illegally used by the U.S. military, and the Minister says he has made no inquiries about it. May I ask him why he has made no inquiries about this illegal use of Canadian call letters? Since he is always saying that we have a sufficient presence in Central America in our embassy in Costa Rica, why did we not know about this right after the plane crashed on March 24?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is getting more ridiculous all the time, suggesting that the Canadian Government should have a facility to determine what happens on the border of Costa Rica. What does she want us to do, to send in some troops and join the Americans?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Manly: Answer the question.

Ms. Jewett: You had better leave government, Allan.

Mr. Broadbent: The Senate is just down the hall.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER CANADA PROGRAM—DELAY IN PROCESSING APPLICATIONS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It follows on questions asked by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands of the Minister of State for Youth. It has come to our attention that some of the applications under the youth program of the Summer Works Program, having been made at the field office level, are being delayed or held up because the signature of the Minister of Employment and Immigration is needed. Could the Prime Minister check and make sure those applications are signed forthwith, and that aspirations for the Liberal leadership are not holding back jobs that young Canadians need?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I heard the answers given earlier by the Minister of State for Youth. I do not find that anything has to be added to that. I would not contemplate even checking into a Minister holding up jobs, as he says, in order to further his leadership ambitions. This is a preposterous suggestion.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE INQUIRIES

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, it is not preposterous. Before the approved applications can be funded they need the signature of the appropriate Minister. As long as those applications do not have that signature, there is no funding, and students, who have a limited time to earn the money they need to go to school next fall, simply lose those weeks and cannot recover them. On that basis I would like the Prime Minister to reconsider his answer and check.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Hon. Member if he is challenging the statement of the Minister. She said specifically why some of the demands were not being processed. She gave the answer twice, once in French and once in English. It had nothing to do with the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

REJECTION OF CANADA-JAPAN COAL DEVELOPMENT PROJECT APPLICATION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for international trade. Members of the House who were present at a Canada-

Japan trade council meeting at lunch today were told that between $100 billion and $200 billion would be needed to develop self-sufficiency in Canada's energy projects by the end of the decade. Will the Minister tell the House if the inference to be drawn from FIRA's refusal is that Canada is not interested in investment in energy projects by Japan, our second largest trading partner? Will he tell us, if he can, precisely why FIRA turned down this most worth-while project which would have provided desperately needed jobs in British Columbia?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, like other Hon. Members, continues to seek answers concerning FIRA's policies from a Minister who does not have the primary responsibility for FIRA. I point out to him that Japan has in the past several years made investments in the energy field in Canada which have been approved by FIRA and which, indeed, are very worthwhile in the creation of employment in British Columbia and western Canada. I refer, of course, to the mining of coal in particular, in which they are participating. Japanese investment is welcome in many sectors and is being sought very strenuously in the automobile sector by my colleague, the Minister responsible for DRIE, at the present time. We hope the Japanese will be realistic enough to recognize the importance of making significant investment in that industry. We believe they are a very valuable trading partner, and we look forward indeed to having ever closer economic relations with them.

With reference to the particulars of the file that the Hon. Member has mentioned, I suggest it is only appropriate for the Minister responsible for DRIE to comment thereon.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary. Other Hon. Members want to direct questions.

REASON FOR REJECTION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, will the Acting Minister responsible for DRIE tell the House today why FIRA turned down that particular application?

An Hon. Member: They don't have anybody over there.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL TO FINANCE UNIVERSAL DAYCARE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. Does the Minister endorse the recommendations of the Canadian Day Care Advocacy Association for federal financing of universal daycare? Has she advocated this plan with provincial Ministers?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no, I have not advocated this plan with provincial Ministers. But I can confirm to the Hon. Member that I will be meeting with provincial Ministers tomorrow at a federal-provincial conference in Niagara-on-the Lake, hosted this year for the very first time by one of the provincial Ministers, the Minister responsible in the Province of Ontario. This item is on the agenda and will be discussed by the Ministers.

FINANCE

TAXATION OF ALCOHOL AND TOBACCO PRODUCTS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. For months the Ministry has been deflecting criticism of the ad valorem taxation of alcohol and tobacco products, indicating that it would wait for the task force report. Now that three weeks have passed, can the Minister tell the House which of the recommendations it will be adopting?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Member opposite will have seen the recent report, which was unanimous in some respects. There was a dissent on the part of one member with regard to certain elements in the report. As the Minister of Finance indicated in a press release at the time he received the report, it is his intention to review the recommendations and make an announcement concerning taxation of alcohol and tobacco in due course.

METHOD OF IMPOSITION

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister assure the industry that when September rolls around the tax will not be imposed in an unfair way, that is, ad valorem on the CPI?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there will be announcements in due course.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

HOUSING PROJECT ON TSAWWASSEN RESERVE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—LEGALITY OF LEASE

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, if he can take time out from his lobbying. Lawyers for the federal Department of Justice have claimed that the Minister of Indian Affairs acted without authority when he signed papers relating to a 100-lot housing development planned for the Tsawwassen Indian Reserve in Delta, British Columbia. Needless to say, this revelation has left the Band's corporation in the horrendous position of having hundreds of thousands of dollars of liabilities incurred for servicing the land and being unable to sell the lots. Does the Minister agree that his colleague acted illegally in signing the master lease which would have allowed development of these properties, and by making undertakings on behalf of the Crown? Will he act to expedite this matter so that the Indian people can get this project under way, and get the jobs and income they need?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has put some of the facts right but, as usual, he has put the context wrong. In fact there is a problem of a lack of jurisdiction. It is not to be attributable, as he suggests, to my hon. colleague. My Department is indeed co-operating with all parties concerned to try to get this straightened out as quickly as possible.

REQUEST FOR SPEEDY EXAMINATION

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, the lease in question which the Minister signed, apparently incorrectly, is identical to several hundred similar leases which have been signed for other native development projects. The principle here has to do with the supremacy of the Crown over the rights of third parties and municipal governments to require adherence to municipal building code inspection requirements, taxation provisions, and other matters relating to zoning. Will the Minister examine this whole matter and act quickly in order to eliminate inconvenience, and facilitate the creator of hundreds or thousands of jobs which might be possible if this matter is cleared up immediately?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I believe any solution arrived at will enable the broader problem to be taken care of, not just the one in this case.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Since 1980 the Minister has suggested and promised a number of measures which might help Canadian agriculture. He will be aware that Farm Credit Corporation rates are between 14 per cent and 15 per cent for long-term financing. Does the Minister have any specific measures to bring before the House so that we may pass them before the end of June?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if I understood the last part of the Member's question. To bring in amendments to the Act before the House adjourns? If that is what he is expecting, I doubt it very much.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question deals specifically with the high interest rates paid by farmers dealing with the FCC, and the now lapsed measures to assist farmers who were in severe difficulty. The Minister has indicated several times that he is looking at this and he intended to do something in order to provide relief for those farmers who cannot afford to pay interest rates of up to 16¾ per cent, which they had to deal with previously.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do hope we are able to do something about that in the very near future.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HNATYSHYN—UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MR. TRUDEAU

Right Hon. P. E Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Over the weekend I had occasion to read page 4047 of Hansard. I withdrew the accusation of liar which I addressed to the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) conditionally. I was hoping that over the weekend we would all reflect on these conditions. I have returned to page 4041 of Hansard and I see that after a statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West is recorded as saying:

> Are you calling those people liars?

I then interjected by saying:

> Are you? You're the liar.

These are clearly unparliamentary words, Mr. Speaker, and I want to withdraw them unconditionally.

I do hope that the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West will re-read the exchange as recorded on page 4047 where he said that he told the truth when he shouted to the Minister of Finance that the Minister was saying accountants and lawyers were liars. I then accused the Hon. Member on a point of order by saying that this was imputing motives. In fairness, Mr. Speaker, I suppose it was probably not imputing motives but it was putting offensive words, words like "telling a lie to the Minister of Finance", on the record. Therefore, I would hope that the conditionality of my withdrawal which is now withdrawn will lead the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West to say a few words in comment.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I am overwhelmed by the unequivocal retraction on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and I think that it is only parliamentary. Taking his lead, if there was any motivation that I imputed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that was unparliamentary, I would like to say that, in the spirit of this House, I unequivocally withdraw any imputation.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING APPEALS FROM DECISIONS OF TRIBUNAL

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-243, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, if my Bill, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act, were to be adopted by the House, it would provide an appeal from decisions of a human rights tribunal or any review tribunal constituted under the Act on the merits of the individual case. As the Act now reads, orders or decisions of a tribunal may be filed as orders or decisions of the Federal Court for purposes of enforcement. However, this does not extend jurisdiction to the Federal Court to confirm, dismiss or vary such orders or decisions.

The Human Rights Commission is taking up to four years to deal with complaints and Canadian citizens are having to go to the United Nations to appeal because they cannot receive positive action here in Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, once again I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question with regard to a starred question that I placed on the Order Paper on April 10, being question No. 792. What I merely wanted to know was whether Mr. P. T. Zarry of the Advertising Management Group, Cabinet Committee, is receiving $1,500 a day or $2,000 a day. I have information to the effect that he received an increase of $500 a day as of January 1.

This question is a starred question, Mr. Speaker, and there is no reason on earth for it to take this length of time to receive an answer to a simple question like that. I would like to have some kind of explanation regarding the starred question procedure. Has the starred question procedure now been changed? Will starred questions now be sitting on the Order Paper for years and years or will steps be taken to have them answered in a reasonable period of time?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I can only refer the Hon. Member to the numerous occasions on which we have dealt with the starred question issue. A starred question only means that the answer will be read in the House but gives no precedence as to timing. I will as always consult with the Minister and see if we cannot get an answer to the Hon. Member at the earliest possible opportunity.

It would appear to me as if the Hon. Member has an answer to his question. If that is the case, then it would seem that under Standing Orders, if the information is publicly available, and the Hon. Member has just made it publicly available, it is no longer appropriate for the House.

• (1510)

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I would like it confirmed officially whether Mr. Zarry is receiving $1,500 a day or $2,000 a day. If I knew it was $2,000 a day, I would not have to put a starred question on the Order Paper. I would like it confirmed by the Government exactly what this man is being paid.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-25, an Act respecting the Canada Development Corporation, Canada Development Investment Corporation and certain other corporations, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before the lunch hour, the address which was given by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mr. Thompson), in kicking off second reading debate on this Bill covered the salient reasons for which any reasonable person would strenuously object to this legislation and help defeat it. I do not want to go over all of the ground covered by my colleague, but I would like to elaborate on one point which has been of interest to me in the past.

The provisions of this Bill give CDIC a mandate to permit it to carry up to $3 billion worth of debt as an agent of Her Majesty. That debt is precisely the same as a direct debt of the Government. In other words, the taxpayers of Canada are obligated for that debt. The Bill also provides $1 billion in equity. As my colleague pointed out, it seems like an excessive amount of both debt and equity for a company which is supposedly being created for the purpose of privatizing certain Crown corporations. That is the statement which Senator Austin, among others, has made, but given the history of statements and actions by this Government and the diversity of the two, we would be fools to take it at face value.

Of more concern to me is the provision which would allow the Government to raise the debt and equity ceilings by a $1 item in the estimates. For a number of years this Government has adopted the practice of legislating through the estimates, legislating through the Appropriations Act. In fact, VIA Rail, which is another monstrous Crown corporation, was created by a $1 vote under the Appropriations Act. The Appropriations Act over the years has been full of examples of improper legislating by $1 items. That approach has been objected to strenuously by myself and many other Members of the House for a number of years. I would invite Members to recall the words of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux, Mr. Speaker Jerome and Madam Speaker Sauvé who pointed out the impropriety of that approach. They pointed out how wrong it is and what an offence it is to our parliamentary traditions to legislate through the Appropriations Act. It is an absolute offence to 800 years of parliamentary history to attempt to legislate in this way. Three years ago, Madam Speaker Sauvé ruled that that process had to stop. After many warnings from successive Speakers—warnings unheeded by that contemptuous bunch opposite—Madam Speaker finally ruled that it was improper to legislate in that fashion.

What do we have before us now from the Government in Bill C-25? We have a move to make that activity legal. It is utter contempt for parliamentary traditions and for the proper way of doing things. It is utter and complete contempt. Coming from Jack Austin, that is not surprising. He is contemptuous of everything in this place. However, we would fail completely in our responsibilities and we would be ignoring the traditions and values of parliamentary democracy if we did not fight at least that provision with every ounce of strength we have.

I call upon responsible Members wherever they are to take a good look at what the Government is trying to do, and to think a little bit about parliamentary traditions and their responsibility to future generations who will look to this Parliament to retain our democratic system. We must ensure that Jack Austin, Ed Clark and the rest of those folks who find Parliament a pain in the backside are not allowed to get away with this. We must ensure that this terrible Bill goes to the trashcan, where it deserves to go.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. If there are no Members wanting to put questions, for continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, it is very important that Bill C-25 be debated now because as long as there are Liberals around, this Bill may never be debated properly again. What we are really talking about is the Crown corporations' Crown corporation. This is the big daddy. The Government has run into trouble with Crown corporations left and right for a number of years. What was the answer? The answer was to create a Crown corporation to look after Crown corporations. To create a Crown corporation to manage all others is simply to put down another layer, another veil of secrecy, and to wallpaper one more time away from public scrutiny the actual facts of how the Crown corporations and their fiscal responsibilities are managed. The Government believes that somehow another layer of paint will keep the people from knowing why these Crown corporations are, as the Auditor General, Kenneth Dye, and a succession of Auditors General have told us, becoming a sub-level of government and are one of the major areas of expenditure and debt to which there is no accessibility in the accounts.

By putting in place another agency that will come between government and corporations, we do two things. First, we layer in a way in which information becomes more difficult to obtain; and second, we restrict the capacity of Ministers to be responsible for the various agencies and Crown corporations. So we are faced with this debate to create the Canada Development Investment Corporation.

If the Liberals remain in power, we are not likely to debate this matter again because, as the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) has just mentioned, any increase in expenditures could be accomplished through the estimates and $1 votes. Legal or otherwise, past Speakers have said that that would take us down the road of avoiding Parliament and public comment by putting in place an agency that, rightly or wrongly, is set free to tap public funds but is never accountable to the public for the money it is spending. That is despicable in terms of democracy. Parliament was established in the first place to put controls on the King's purse. It comes back to the fundamental reason for which we are here, and that is dollar accountability.

This Government is operating a string of catastrophes in Crown corporations. It is obviously looking for a mechanism by which it can hide the disasters which it has created. If the Bill is passed, the results will be disadvantageous for Canadians. I would like to point out some of the reasons for which I believe this umbrella agency which will look after all agencies of government is not in the best interests of Canadians.

The number of Crown corporations is not necessarily going to decrease. In response to a question I placed on the Order Paper, we learned that there were in excess of 350 Crown corporations. There are newspaper articles which estimate that there are somewhere in the neighbourhood of more than 400 Crown corporations wholly or partially owned by the federal Government. The Auditors General have underscored that Crown corporations are a sub-level of government which we are unable to tap into and for which there is no accountability or responsibility. Mr. Speaker, that is one of the most serious defects in the Bill. Even if some Minister might say that that is the Government's intended position, I suggest to you, Sir, that unless it is specifically stated that the objective of the umbrella agency is to decrease the numbers of Crown corporations, that that is its purpose and its goal, then on the basis of lack of clarity this Bill must be amended.

Another flaw I find in the Bill is that there is no provision for a sunset law with respect to any of the Crown corporations, or even the master corporation itself, and there should in fact be a sunset law which will bring these corporations before committees of Parliament or Parliament itself. We have a list of money losers such as de Havilland, Canadair, Petro-Canada, Teleglobe, CN and CBC; some 350 corporations. Surely we should not just be giving birth to all these corporations and never once ask the question whether the people of Canada have the right to decide if the corporation should continue to exist.

There may have been at some point in the social and economic culture of a nation a need for a corporation to be started by government. I recognize that from time to time there will be the coming together of conditions which will cause, in the nation's interest, such a corporation to be struck. But surely that does not mean that once it is struck, it should exist ad infinitum without question, simply collecting more and more of the taxpayer's money.

I watch CBC's The Journal on television at night. I enjoy the CBC news and I feel The Journal portion of it is good. However, Mr. Speaker, I personally would have to question whether it is worth $1 million a week. That is an enormous expenditure for 40 minutes of television every night. If there is not some kind of sunset provision in Bill C-25 which will automatically bring the corporation before committees of Parliament for review, then it seems to me it fails on one of the very basic and fundamental questions of Crown corporations themselves. In that respect, I submit that this piece of legislation must either be amended or should not pass. This corporation, which is presently far too removed from Parliament, will add another layer of government and, Sir, that is my third point. If there is any outcry among the Canadian people, it is an outcry that governments must become more open rather than more closed.

As the Auditor General tells us, there is a sub-layer of government which exists in the form of Crown corporations. Surely, adding another bureaucracy between Parliament and these corporations—this super corporation as a management group—is not bringing government closer but is simply hiding and shielding it, putting it in a more removed form than ever. We as parliamentarians are not going to be able to be in a position to bring to task and analyse each of those corporations. We are now going to have to go through a super mother corporation and, boy, the Government will be able to bamboozle Parliament one more time, giving us a mix of numbers and figures which point in different directions in such a way that the people of Canada will end up simply paying more and more without any hope of bringing under control the spending of their tax dollars.

Parliament is losing its control of the public purse. That is extremely important because the role of this institution itself is to be able to control expenditure of the taxpayers' money. What this Bill does is set aside the rights of parliamentarians and the institution of Parliament itself to be able to analyse the individual budgets and fiscal accounts of any one corporation. It denies Parliament access to these corporations.

My wish would have been to have made every Crown corporation subject to an appearance at the call of any special standing committee of this House whose obligation would be to call corporations before it, without reference to the Minister, and to ask that corporation to justify its existence. If we, as Members of Parliament, through the committee structure, and without having a ministerial reference necessary, could point to any Crown corporation and say we want it to show up in front of us in the committee room for whatever period of time is necessary, then put it through a drilling documentation of its fiscal accounts, I believe Canadians by and large would be better served.

I asked the question, Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago about the justification of the CBC's news program, The Journal. It might be that after close examination the Government could justify that expenditure. However, I can tell you quite frankly that the vast majority of Canadians, if they were simply asked if they want to spend $1 million a week for a 40-minute television program, would answer, obviously, no. We should have that opportunity to bring Crown corporations which are using the taxpayers' money before Parliament, the people's representatives, and put that very basic and fundamental question. Not to be able to do that, Sir, is simply another indication of Parliament losing its power and control.

The CDIC was established in secrecy. It has operated since 1982 and it remains immune from Parliament. It is so immune that it is even immune to the Combines Investigation Act. Yet, Sir, that agency which was established two years ago is just now coming before Parliament for authority to exist. The truth of the matter is that it exists today with a most suspicious character. I submit that we have every reason to doubt and question a corporation which came into being out of such secrecy when, in fact, these Crown corporations ought to be completely open.

The Auditor General tells us all, tells Canadians everywhere, to be worried and concerned about the sub-level of government which exists in the Crown corporation structure. The Government's answer to that is to take people like Joel Bell, Maurice Strong and the good Senator from Vancouver and put them at the head of the head Crown corporation. On the very face of it, it seems to me that Canadians everywhere would be annoyed, disgusted and disappointed at such an agency. This hidden layer of Government simply becomes hidden by another layer.

• (1530)

In his speech, the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said that he did not know whether CDIC is to expand intervention in the Canadian economy or to privatize the present Crown corporation. I submit, that if you cannot see what the intentions of this new corporation are, you would not be able to read the letter E on an eye chart. It is obvious what the new corporation is for. It is not there for the purpose of decentralizing or privatizing. It is there to get control of the economy and to expand.

As one reads through the objectives of the CDIC, one sees numerous references to expansion and acquiring. There are numerous references which would imply that this corporation is to encourage growth of Crown corporations. Nowhere within those objectives is found the word "divest". There is no indication that we will somehow be able to rid ourselves of some Crown corporations. There is not a single hint that at some time some Crown corporation may have lived its useful life and should be set aside. It says only that we should acquire more and more.

In spelling out the mandate for this new super corporation, the dangerous word "none" was typed under the title "Restrictions". No restrictions were to apply to this new super corporation. The Government creates a Frankenstein, and then will not tell him where to play or what time he should go to bed. It is a case of creating, with the people's money, an agency so strong and powerful that in and of its own initiatives it can acquire and project new corporate structures under the name of Government. That is a dangerous concept. All Canadians should recognize that this ought not to be passed into law.

The country and Government need more openness rather than another layer of underbrush and fog. CDIC has been operating for two years, without the approval of Parliament, in conflict with the existing federal laws. Coming into this great new agency now are Maurice Strong, Joel Bell and Jack Austing. Maurice Strong is the man who bought Petrofina for twice the value of its shares. He is going to be running this corporation. Joel Bell is the person who said that Petro-Canada would not acquire a single service anywhere in Canada. He is coming in as part of the management of this new agency. Jack Austin associates himself with the uranium cartel. Those are the people who will run this new corporation. The Government tries to make us believe that the purpose of this corporation is to privatize.

When Joel Bell says that, I believe him just as much as when he says that Petro-Canada will not acquire a single service station. If this agency is to privatize Crown corporations, let us see that specified in the objectives. With the words "acquire" and "obtain", and without the objective of divesting, the Bill remains dangerous and should be either amended or rejected.

Sending Maurice Strong, Joel Bell and Jack Austin to privatize Crown corporations is like sending a tomcat to guard mice. It just will not happen. Why should the people of Canada believe that these persons, with the records which I have just indicated, are in any way interested in the private sector?

I have many more comments which I would like to make, Mr. Speaker. I got through about one-half of my notes.I see you are indicating my time is up. If that is the case, in conclusion I would say that—

Mr. Deans: Ask for consent to continue.

Mr. Malone: My good friend is asking if I would ask for consent to continue. Perhaps I would just ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you would seek that consent. If given, I will continue.

Mr. Deans: Absolutely.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If a Member requests permission to continue beyond the 20 minute limit, it requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Evans: How much time?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is there a time limit?

Mr. Deans: No, it is a fascinating speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to continue his speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fleming: What do you mean it is a fascinating speech? He has said the same thing over 11 times so far.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There is consent. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I will not abuse the privilege given to me.

Mr. Deans: You said you were only halfway through. I am expecting 20 more minutes.

Mr. Malone: You will certainly get enough detail here to be able to give a good 20 minute speech. Why should we grant favourable approval to an agency which has subverted Parliament, intends to operate in secrecy and defies the laws of our land? The persons who I have already pointed out are to become the managers of CDIC. They bought Petro-Canada from a Belgian oil company at double its value. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) claims that the land is strong. It is not strong like moose. It is strong like skunk. There is great concern with respect to—

Mr. Deans: This is deteriorating.

Mr. Malone: You think you should not have given me unanimous consent. Well you think about that just a bit more.

Mr. Deans: This is deteriorating something awful since we gave you unanimous consent.

Mr. Malone: People wonder what the principles are by which this company will be managed. What objectives are CDIC to assume? If one checks under the restrictions of the corporation, one finds that there is to be no restriction whatsoever on this company. It is typed right in that there is to be no restriction. That comes back to the fundamental principle of a Crown corporation. No Crown corporation should be set up as an instrument of Government without it first being specified that it is there to meet the objectives of a Government policy. That policy ought to be spelled out very clearly. There should never be the establishment of a company for which the restrictions are labelled as "none", yet that is precisely the situation with regard to CDIC. The restrictions to its management are none. Even though my friend opposite chastises me while he is giving me extended time, I make no apologies for repeating that. It is so serious that it deserves to be repeated.

Mr. Deans: Repeat it again.

Mr. Malone: To repeat it again, indeed, the restrictions on this corporation are none.

Mr. Deans: None at all?

Mr. Malone: That, Sir, is more important than the four letters it takes to spell it. Every Crown corporation should be set up with specific stated objectives. Once the objectives are met, an analysis should be made with regard to the continued existence of the corporation.

• (1540)

The Government is willing to create this monster corporation, but is unwilling to publicly disclose the nature of its restrictions as it should. The corporation has a mandate to grow, expand and increase but does not have the specific objective to divest, shrink or decrease.

There are currently some 350,000 Crown corporations, and some suggest there are in excess of 400 Crown corporations when one takes into account wholly and partially owned corporations. That figure in itself is a very important reason to bring these Crown corporations under constant scrutiny.

Bill C-25 is a guarantee of more bureaucracy, intervention and centralized planning which consequently removes the agencies themselves from the touch of the people. In fact, it strangles and destroys the initiatives of individuals. It gives the corporation the ability to acquire without any obligation to divest. Divesting must be part of its objectives if those objectives are to privatize. If it is the intention of this corporation to divest, then it must be so stated.

I want to make it clear the Crown corporations are not automatically wrong. Obviously there are social and economic conditions that require the establishment of Crown corporations from time to time. However, no Crown corporation should be established and allowed to continue without challenge. This Bill does not provide a legitimate mechanism for challenging the existence and continued expenditures for each or all of those Crown corporations.

Mr. Deans: You mean there are no conditions?

Mr. Malone: There are no conditions. There are none. In opening this debate today, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) implied that the corporation will work within the public view. That is false in the extreme. The corporation is established so that it can always make an end run around Parliament. It becomes a shield between Parliament and the existing Crown corporations. While there is a legitimate concern being voiced for the inspection of Crown corporations, the mechanism being put before us is not workable.

I suggest that the most effective way to make Crown corporations accountable is to establish a special parliamentary committee with the authority to call Crown corporations without ministerial reference, to issue subpoenas to hear sworn evidence and to take the necessary time to conduct a full and legitimate analysis of their books. Perhaps this could be done in co-operation with the Auditor General's staff, such as is done in a United States Congressional or Senate committee. This parliamentary committee could scrutinize Crown corporations much more effectively than an obscure new Crown corporation whose job it is to manage all other corporations but really does not permit us to begin to review them at all.

According to Bill C-25, the CDIC can acquire up to $4 billion. Furthermore, it can get any other amount of money the Government ascribes to it on the basis of a dollar vote. Currently, it can run up to one-tenth of our annual deficit through the Crown corporation structure, without having the dollar vote.

Let us put into perspective what the Government is doing with $4 billion of the taxpayers' money. That amount in one dollar bills could be laid end to end two and one-half times from Vancouver to Halifax. The CDIC is being given that amount to strutinize and manage all other Crown corporations. It is simply an attempt to hide a sublayer of government through Crown corporations, as has been pointed out by these auditors general, and the latest Auditor General, Kenneth Dye, in particular.

In conclusion, I am pleased to hear the Government talk about the need to privatize Crown corporations. However, I am not being at all fooled by their camouflage because the fact is that the structure and the personnel it has put into place means that Canada will have an acceleration of Crown owned companies that will encroach upon the free marketplace and the right of people to purchase. It will indebt our citizens ever deeper. In the final analysis, this is not a agency for protection but an agency to veil and hide the true facts from Parliament, and consequently the Canadian people. I hope that Members of Parliament from all Parties will return to the basic principles that we are trying to establish and reject this Bill as it presently exists.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments. Debate.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in this debate on Bill C-25 because I believe it gives us an excellent opportunity to set out the reason why our country is in such terrible shape. While I am not one who glorys in gloom and doom, neither will I put my head in the sand and ignore the conditions that exist in this country.

Our country was built on the principle of free enterprise. Many people went into business on their own, sometimes with little more than the shirts on their backs. They had very little money but it was their own and they believed in what they were doing. They worked hard and prospered. When thousands of people did this, it made the country great.

We have strayed far from that free enterprise principle. Today it is difficult for an individual to invest his money because he must receive approval from numerous boards and agencies, which only leads to discouragement. It is no wonder that there are two million people unemployed today. If Canadians were permitted to invest their money, run their own business and assume responsibility for their own mistakes or successes without government interference, we would not have these conditions today. A prime reason for so much unemployment is simply that the Government is trying to run our affairs.

I have given some examples of this before, but I wish to repeat them because they are so evident. For example, the capital cost allowance was an excellent innovation. It was established in recognition of the fact that equipment, such as machinery, wears out. Because it wears out on its own, there should be enough money to eventually replace that machine. So we introduced the capital cost allowance provision which is a sound principle. It is accepted universally in free enterprise countries.

• (1550)

What did this Government do with regard to capital cost allowance? It introduced another principle. It said the machine does not wear out the first part of the year, so the Government will not allow any capital cost allowance in the first year. That disallowance, and it may seem very small, was the means of throwing hundreds of people out of work, particularly in Eastern Canada because that is where farm machinery and other equipment is manufactured. I see the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) just shaking his head—at least I hear him shaking his head. But I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, he should look at the facts.

Mr. Evans: You should look at the facts.

Mr. Taylor: There is one agency in my constituency that cancelled an order for seven combines. That is just one agency. The order for the seven combines was cancelled because the farmers said after that provision came through "we will stick with our own. We will make our old combines do, or we will rent out the work." As a result, seven combines that would have been manufactured in Eastern Canada were not manufactured. Multiply that kind of cancellation from scores of dealers across the country and you begin to see why Government policy has been so influential in causing unemployment.

In this Bill we have an aggravation of Government policy. We have another corporation that is supposed to solve the problems of Canada. I have not yet seen a corporation that solved the problems of Canada, and I do not expect to see one. If we could forget a lot of these corporations, go back to the simple principles of free enterprise and create a climate where people will invest their own money, take responsibility for losing it, and of course, have the chance to make a profit without the Government grabbing most of it, then we would see things altogether differently here in Canada.

Risk is fine. In a free enterprise system you know there is a risk of losing or making money. But you survey the situation and come to the conclusion whether you can make a success. If you succeed, you make a few dollars. You have a profit. You risk the money you have, and you work in order to achieve that end. That is simply free enterprise. But we do not like that anymore. Perhaps it is too simple. You hear people say profit is a bad word. You cannot make a dollar anymore without feeling guilty, or that the Government will grab too much of it if you do make a dollar. Consequently we are killing the goose of free enterprise that has laid the golden eggs for so many years and has kept the country going. We are substituting the goose for corporations which do not invest their own money, but invest the people's money. That is the big difference. Corporations will do anything with the peoples' money. They do not have to take the responsibility if they lose thousands of dollars. They simply go back to the Government trough and get more money. It is almost as simple as that.

Canadians are getting well informed about Crown corporations. They have seen examples where thousands of dollars are being used up wastefully by corportions with no accountability for that waste. That is really why this Bill is before us today. CDIC needs money again.

It is very strange, but the Government did not come to Parliament when the CDIC was formed. The Government avoided Parliament for two years while the CDIC was set up, financed and operated. But now CDIC needs more money. The Government ignored Parliament until now when CDIC has run out of ways of getting money without coming to Parliament.

What does the Government say the objective of this organization is? What is it supposed to do? What is its purpose? To put it bluntly, it is to establish the Canada Development Investment Corporation and to clarify its status. That part is necessary. It is to empower and prepare the Canada Development Corporation for privatization. Isn't that wonderful, Mr. Speaker. It is to prepare the Canada Development Corporation for privatization. If that is the objective, I would like to know where in the Bill that is going to be done. It looks to me as though the Government is getting further and further away from privatization and wanting more and more Crown corporations to run the business of this country.

When this Bill was first introduced on May 25, 1983, under Bill C-158, it set out certain items. The new Bill, Bill C-25 incorporated some changes to Bill C-158 as well as putting in some additions. It is to make CDIC conform with the general framework proposed for all Crown corporations under Bill C-24.

Maybe that is not that bad. If we are going to have Crown corporations, maybe there should be some basic premise to which they all conform. It is stated that this is supposed to be the objective. The Government wants a commercial operation with the control residing with the private shareholders. That is standard except at the first chance the Government will use the CDIC to bail out the companies in order to pursue the Government's own political objectives. In other words, the Government overrides the shareholders.

There are a number of things I hope to deal with in the time allotted to me this afternoon that shows while the objective is to make the corporations conform to some of the basic premises in Bill C-24, it is not doing that at all. With the increased power of the Cabinet the Government can set the remuneration of the CDIC directors, chairman, and president. Let us look at Clause 19 in Bill C-25. It reads:

> The company may employ such officers, agents and employees as are necessary for the purposes of the company and, except as provided in subsection (2), the officers, agents and employees shall be deemed not be employed in the public service of Canada.

They will not be civil servants. That is fine. Right after we find power in the next clause. The next clause gives the Cabinet power to override that clause under the conditions set out. We find that all the way through the Bill. Principles are set out and then there are powers to override. We found that also in Bill C-24. In fact, that is far too evident in Bill C-24.

Then we come to another clause. This morning the Minister said the Government will present all of the facts to Parliament and report to Parliament. He quoted Clause 36. He said there will be accountability because the Government will submit this whole thing to the Parliament of Canada. If the whole budget of CDIC were brought here and we had an open debate and questions either in Committee of the Whole or a committee set up by the House, I could see some rhyme or reason to what the Government is saying. But when I looked at the Bill immediately after the Minister said that, that is not what clause 36 does at all.

• (1600)

Clause 36 reads:

> The Minister may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, cause a motion for the authorization of an acquisition referred to in Section 35 to be moved in both Houses of Parliament.

He may, he does not have to; it is up to him. When it comes to budgets, the Bill gives authority to the Minister to bring in a summary. He does not have to bring in the entire budget at all. He may bring in a summary which he approves. He has to approve it before it can be brought before the Parliament of Canada. We are not entrusted with the entire budget. We will only be entrusted with a summary approved by the Minister. He can leave out what he wants and include what he wants. That is a pretty amateurish way of running business. Certainly it is another black eye for the people of Canada and for the Parliament of Canada.

The Minister is making an awful lot of to-do about Clause 33 and disclosures as to what the corporation is doing. Clause 33 reads:

The Minister shall cause a copy of every summary he approves—

Is that not interesting? He will not bring in an income account or expenditures account. We will not see them any more than we do right now. Under law he will be able to bring in a copy of every summary he approves, and only the summary he approves is what Parliament will see. That is terrible legislation. The House should not pass legislation which gives the Minister an opportunity to fool the people of Canada, and that is exactly what it is doing.

Surely Canadians are entitled to know what is happening to their dollars. It is their money. Under the free enterprise system, when people invest money they know what happens to it. If a company is formed, the shareholders know what happens. They approve policy and they receive an expense and income accounting of every dollar spent. They can chastize the directors or managers if they find that things are not going right. However, in this case the shareholders of Canada or the people of Canada will not have that opportunity. They will simply receive a copy of every summary the Minister approves. If he does not approve any, nothing will come. He can leave out what he wants under Clauses 31 and 32.

Why is the whole capital budget not brought before the House of Commons for discussion, not just the part the Minister wants to bring before us? Talk about disclosure! In this Bill disclosure is just a nice word which means nothing. It does not do anything. Of course this is not surprising when we have a man like Senator Austin running the show in CDC and CDIC. The man was never able to get elected. Every time he tried, the people said: "Nothing doing, we are not trusting him in Parliament". I see Mr. Speaker indicating that I only have two minutes remaining; I have barely started. The people have said that they would not trust Senator Austin in Parliament and have refused to send him here. Therefore, what did he do? He became involved in a Party which appointed him a Senator. He kowtowed and was put in charge of this corporation. He has never run a successful business in his life, and he is not running one now. Look at the mess he made of Canadair. Even its own president said that the corporation did not need 22 vice-presidents.

What kind of a business are they running? No wonder Canadians are becoming tired of government. They think there is no possible hope of having a government which will run the country in accordance with the thinking of the people. Reflecting the thinking of the people is free enterprise. That Government over there would be pretty smart if it threw out these corporations and returned to the basic principles of free enterprise which built this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a 10-minute period for questions or comments. As there is no one wanting to put any questions, for continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick).

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a short intervention relating to Bill C-25. The present Government has made much of this Bill and its companion piece of legislation, Bill C-24. The Government would have us accept this as a signal that it is trying to get a grip on Crown corporations and the multiple embarrassments which have been springing from them. In their rhetoric and fanfare, the Liberals would have us believe that there has been a miraculous transformation in the policy of their Party and in the thinking of the Government on this issue.

This Government would have the people of Canada, who have been sickened by weekly headlines relating to Crown corporations, believe that it has learned its lesson and is trying desperately to make amends for its past errors. The Government would have Canadian taxpayers swallow at face value its deathbed repentance. However, with the least amount of scrutiny, one can see that this transformation is nothing but mere lip service. The Government is paying lip service to the goals of greater accountability, greater control and greater direction of Crown corporations. It has no intention of fulfilling those goals.

Sown in this Bill C-25 are not the seeds of accountability and divestiture, but the seeds of more government intervention, the seeds of more government ownership, the seeds of more politicizing of what should be purely market decisions, the seeds of more heavy-handed intrusions for exclusively political reasons and, worst of all, the seeds of more deficit, a much larger deficit. This Bill to continue CDIC must be examined in conjunction with its predecessor in the last Parliament, Bill C-158, and with its companion piece of legislation in this Parliament, Bill C-24—the Government's alleged solution to its past disastrous policies on the growth of commercial Crown corporations.

The present Liberal Government indicates that the mandate of CDIC is to hold and manage assets. What a fine job it has been doing with Canadair and de Havilland! Also, the Liberal Government says that the mandate of CDIC is to effect divestitures. It has not divested anything yet. It has talked about divesting itself of Northern Transportation. A proposal was put in 1979 by an organization to buy that company when it was a going concern, but after the National Energy Program, there is nothing for it to carry up the Mackenzie Valley. It does not have the clientele it once had or carry the freight it once did. They are not going to be able to sell it for the same price they could have sold it for then.

The Government says the CDIC's mandate is also to make investments in a commercial manner as a federal agent. That is the intent. The Government wants to intervene some more. Then, for public consumption, the Government tacks on something else. It wants to accent divestiture. The CDIC now manages Canadair, de Havilland Aircraft, Eldorado Nuclear and Teleglobe Canada as wholly-owned subsidiaries, and manages the 48 per cent voting stock, 85 per cent of the actual shares of the Canada Development Corporation. Essentially this Bill is designed to regularize the incorporation of CDIC retroactively, making legal the illegal transfer of shares of Eldorado Nuclear and the CDC and granting responsibility for Teleglobe Canada to CDIC. The earlier transfer of those shares contravene both the intent of Parliament and the then existing legislation. The CDIC was set up illegally by this Government, which would now have us grant after the fact approval to this earlier illegal action.

The Minister responsible for this Bill has made much of it as a tool of management and divestiture, and downplays its role as a tool of investment. In other words, he downplays the fact that this Government wants to intervene more in commercial activity. Yet, on the other hand, both the chairman, Maurice Strong and the president, Joel Bell, of CDIC have publicly taken the complete opposite tack. They do not talk about divestiture; they have not mentioned it yet. Those two officials proudly enforce the view that the Government alone can respond to new economic challenges. They endorse the view that the appropriate response to those challenges is greater and more direct Government involvement.

Under Bill C-25, the CDIC gets a wide mandate, excessively wide in the view of this Party. I want to go on record as saying the Progressive Conservative Party is not against Crown corporations per se. We agree there is a role for Crown corporations. This Party was associated with the setting up of a number of Crown corporations many decades ago. In a country so wide and diversified as Canada and with so little population, sometimes there is the necessity for a Crown corporation to play a role. But it is the last choice. We would prefer the public sector pick up and do the work through companies listed on stock exchanges and so on.

The articles of incorporation of CDIC do not list any restrictions on the business it may carry on. When we look at the illegal Order in Council which set up this corporation, we find it speaks of investing, assisting, expanding, widening and carrying out all activities in the best interests of Canada operating in a commercial manner. All activities. It does not mention divesting. We can only assume, therefore, that the Minister and the Cabinet, in talking about divestiture, are trying to pull a little ploy for public consumption while they hide their real intent. Make no mistake about it; both the present Government and present management of CDIC view the role of CDIC as that of economic intrusion under an exceedingly vague mandate. It is vague precisely so it can be used to serve essentially political goals and write blank cheques; so it can be used to duplicate all the past disasters of Crown corporations, meddling in what should be strictly commercial matters. Yet the Government would have us believe at the same time that Bill C-24, the companion legislation, will clear-up some of these problems. There is no clear, precise definition of the mandate or the objectives of CDIC anywhere. We know from past experience with this Government what that state of affairs leads to. It leads to disaster.

The Government has taken hold of a new catch-phrase, that of accountability. We on the Opposition side of the House, for the time being, have been talking about accountability for almost ten years. For us it is not some mere catch-phrase. For us it is not designed as part of a public relations scam. For the Progressive Conservative Party, accountability is a commitment. What does Bill C-25 tell us about the depth of the Government's commitment? Under Clause 41, CDIC will be pointedly free or exempt from Section 24 to 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act with respect to any directives or orders made under Bill C-25. In other words, CDIC will be exempt from the provisions for public access to such statutory instruments. Why? The Government is trying to hide things again. The public can neither copy nor take away copies of such orders and directives. There is no permanent reference of such directives and orders to any of the standing committees of Parliament, whereas in the case of all other statutes, regulations and directives, they are all referred to the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. In other words, Mr. Speaker, they have excluded CDIC from some fairly heavy and what could be onerous provisions but which are important for a company playing around with our tax dollars. So much for accountability. So much for public responsibility.

We are told that Bill C-24 is designed to enhance the control, direction and accountability of Crown corporations. We are told it is going to be the grand solution, the framework on which the future of public corporations will be made to adhere, and the framework which will clear up all that has gone wrong in the past. It is of such value to the interests of greater control, direction and accountability that in Bill C-25, introduced at precisely the same time as Bill C-24, we find that on at least six occasions the CDIC is either exempt from the application of Bill C-24 or the Cabinet is pointedly authorized to allow such exemptions. We need look no further than Bill C-25 to see the illusion of the present Government's commitment to accountability.

Last year, Bill C-158, the predecessor to Bill C-25 which we are discussing today, provided that Parliament would have seen the complete capital budgets of the CDIC after approval by Cabinet. One year later, this regime has decided that only summaries of corporate plans and capital budgets of the CDIC will be tabled. The Bill has been watered down already.

Under this Bill, Parliamentary approval will be required for CDIC to acquire new wholly-owned subsidiaries but, in the same breath, Cabinet is given an override on that requirement. Clause 41 waives the requirement to table before Parliament any information that the Minister feels would be detrimental to the commercial interests of either CDIC or any of its wholly-owned subsidiaries. These are major loopholes.

Let us not ignore the fact that under this Bill, CDIC has a $3 billion debt limit which includes the borrowings of subsidiary corporations. The CDIC is allowed to raise $3 billion in the form of debt and it will never have to come back to Parliament to ask for permission to do so. Some accountability that is. Aggregate payments of up to $1 billion from the Consolidated Revenue Fund can be authorized by Cabinet.

Some accountability that is. Parliamentary appropriations would only be required for payments in excess of $1 billion.

The Minister has attempted to sell this Bill and the CDIC as an instrument of divestiture. When we see a debt ceiling of $3 billion and an equity ceiling of $1 billion, we cannot believe for a moment that this is the true thrust of government policy. As if the ceilings were not high enough, and in fact we believe that they are already too high, the Government has carefully allowed in Bill C-25 for the ability to raise both the debt and equity ceilings through the simple expedient of a $1 item in the Appropriations Act. That is what Liberal Members call accountability.

It is apparent to those of us on this side of the House that the deficiencies of Bill C-25 are such that the CDIC can only become an instrument for more disasters and for what almost amounts to less accountability and management. We are told that the CDIC will resolve most of the problems which commercial Crown corporations have had when dealing with the Government and that it will make up for structural deficiencies. I would not want to count on that. As usual with this regime, the answer to every problem is to create a new layer of Government and a new layer of bureaucracy which by one more step protects diversions from public accountability and Parliamentary scrutiny.

We believe that the Liberal regime only pays lip service to divestiture. This Bill proves that. We know precisely what we will get if this Bill is passed. We will get more government involvement in commercial enterprise with minimal accountability. We will get more public investment in commercial ventures based on political motivations and not on economic ones. We will get more debt and more disasters. We will waste more money and we will have more misallocations of scarce resources. Unfortunately, worst of all, we will have more headlines to sicken the average Canadian taxpayer. Where, they will ask, was Parliament when this scheme was concocted?

In conclusion, I would like to say that at least we on this side of the House are here for this debate. We would like to try to alert the public to this latest government scam. We are prepared to fight this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a 10-minute period for questions or comments.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to Clause 41 of the Bill in which certain items considered as regulations or statutory instruments are not made available to the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. I feel very keenly about that kind of thing because I happen to be a member of that committee and have been for quite a number of years. As a matter of fact, under the short rule of the former Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, I was the co-chairman of that committee. I have a great deal of interest in what it does.

I do think that the Hon. Member should appreciate that it would not be in the best interests of this corporation for a committee of the House of Commons to be looking into the commercial nature of the various so-called regulations or instruments that should be provided but rather that the corporation should be placed in the same position as that of any other commercial corporation in the country. I wonder if the Hon. Member would care to comment on that.

Federal corporations or Crown corporations that are dealing with the public in the same manner as private corporations should be treated in the same way. Guidelines, instructions, documentation and regulations of private companies are not available to be scrutinized by the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, nor should those of Crown corporations and public companies.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, the one big difference which the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) appears not to have taken into consideration is that the officers and directors of a private company are spending their own money. In the case of a public company, they are spending the taxpayers' money. That is the big difference between the two and that is why we must have a disclosure of what they are doing.

In the United States, such companies disclose almost everything. Here they try to keep everything secret. Even Subclause (2) of this Bill provides for tabling at a later time.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, partly as a point of clarification, I would like to mention to the Hon. Member that there are shares in these corporations as well. Surely all shareholders should be treated the same. It is the shareholders' money. Whether it happens to be so-called government money or private money, it is still the shareholders' money. The federal corporations need to be accountable to their shareholders the same as private corporations need to be accountable to their shareholders.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the companies which are specifically referred to in the initial part here like Canadair, de Havilland Corporation, Eldorado Nuclear and Teleglobe are 100 per cent owned by the Canadian Government. The Government is the only shareholder at this stage. Granted, only 85 per cent of the shares of the Canada Development Corporation are owned by the Government, but the Government has 48 per cent of the voting stock at the present time. The Hon. Member will notice that the majority of these companies are wholly-owned companies.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have one further objection to make. Of course, these shares are held by the Crown corporations, but the suggestion in the Bill is that they could be sold off at the appropriate time. Whenever that may be is probably a question of when those shares would receive the greatest return for the public sector upon their sale. Certainly it is in the interests of all Canadians to see that these corporations are successful and receive a piece of the action if at all possible. The Bill specifically provides for a sale of shares to the public.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, it is obvious that the Hon. Member did not hear my entire speech. If he would like to read it in tomorrow's Hansard, he would find that I spent a good deal of time talking about divestiture. The fact is that the Bill talks about planning for divestiture and says nothing whatsoever about actually divesting anything. Knowing the make-up of the people who will control this organization—Mr. Bell, Maurice Stong and Senator Austin—they will keep on hauling stuff in on their plate. I have never seen them give away anything or sell anything. I gave as an example the one company which the Government had suggested it was prepared to sell, and that was Northern Transportation. It takes freight down the Mackenzie Valley and it has other ancilliary types of business. I know personally that an offer was made to buy that company back in 1979-80. The Government has never acted on that offer. Since the National Energy Program, freight is no longer being transported to that area and the company is not worth very much. The Government is now willing to sell it. I do not think the Government will maximize its dollars as it could have back in 1979-80.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT CORPORATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bussières that Bill C-25, an Act respecting the Canada Development Corporation, Canada Development Investment Corporation and certain other corporations, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-25. This Bill, in conjunction with the amendments to the Financial Administration Act—Bill C-24—represents a new departure for the Government in its management and divestment of Crown corporations and other investments.

In recent decades, government has gradually acquired investments in companies of various kinds. The Canada Development Investment Corporation, as a special Act corporation, has the mission to manage government-owned assets that operate in the commercial sector. That is important to remember. It is the commercial sector which we are talking about. Crown corporations should be run according to commercial principles. That is a very, very important aspect. These investments have been made for pragmatic reasons.

Some Hon. Members: For what reasons?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Well, maybe some of the reasons are because of Opposition proposals. In any event, they are pragmatic reasons.

It is in the public interest that these companies operate on a sound commercial footing so that they can be returned to the private sector when the commercial opportunity arises. I am sure members of the Opposition would appreciate that this portends only good for Canada and for the corporations.

There is a history in this country of government investment in the economy. Governments in Canada, whether federal or provincial, Liberal, Progressive Conservative, New Democratic or Social Credit, have invested in companies when they saw a clear and pragmatic public policy need to do so. I could mention a number of examples: Panarctic Oils Ltd., Syncrude, and Petro-Canada. There are dozens of such companies—wholly government-owned and partly government-owned—from coast to coast. The Ontario Government has invested in Suncor. The Alberta Government has the Alberta Energy Corporation and it has invested in Pacific Western Airlines. The Nova Scotia Government has Sydney Steel.

It is a fact of public life in Canada that governments become investors in the economy and that they they become shareholders in companies. They do so for a variety of reasons which are of a pragmatic nature. But once governments are shareholders, they must manage their shareholdings. It only makes good commercial common sense.

What lessons can be learned from the private sector in such cases? On the positive side, we learn the importance of major shareholder presence in a company, making its weight felt keenly. It is an investment to protect and, in most cases, it does so. On the negative side, we learn the lessons offered when this does not happen. For example, in the case of Massey-Ferguson, the key shareholder stepped back from its responsibility as the major shareholder. We all know the outcome.

When anyone—a person, a private company or a government—is the key shareholder in a company, he must make his presence felt as a shareholder. That is fundamental. That is perhaps the major benefit which we can derive from CDIC. CDIC is a vehicle through which the Government can manage its commercial investments. It is designed to be a holding company in the best traditions of private sector holding companies; constantly reviewing the activities of its subsidiaries, developing and articulating the views of the shareholder, making sure that management knows what the shareholder expects and replacing management when performance is inadequate.

CDIC is doing that job and doing it well. The progress made by Canadair over the past year is one example of CDIC's value to government and to the country. We could imagine how much worse it would have been if we had not taken it over. Let me remind the House of what has happened with Canadair Ltd. since CDIC took over responsibility for that company.

What kind of problems did CDIC find? I will list them: First, a failure by management realistically to identify and address the business problems of Canadair. Second, inadequate disclosure by management of corporate information to Parliament, government and the board to allow for meaningful awareness and resolution of corporate difficulties. Third, the over-aggressive use of an accounting method that failed to reveal the full extent of the company's true financial difficulties. Fourth, a Challenger production rate in excess of market demand, with consequent excessive and costly inventory build-up. Fifth, outstanding delivery commitments of Challenger aircraft at prices less than the cost of parts and labour. That is a horror story. Sixth, marketing projections which were excessively optimistic and which were not subject to critical review. Seventh, a Middle East distributor agreement that was not in Canadair's best interests. Eighth, a corporate structure that lacked clear lines of accountability. Ninth, a level of production and managerial employees whose numbers were excessive in relation to the production and sales rates which the company could reasonably expect to achieve in the foreseeable future. Finally, tenth, a board of directors that did not adequately participate in the key decisions of the company. There are probably many more. We could almost go on ad infinitum with a company of this nature.

What did CDIC do about these problems? The most recent step was a complete re-organization of Canadair Inc., which is the U.S. marketing division of Canadair Ltd. Canadair Inc. has been cut in size and cost, but it will be more sales effective. Two new executives have been appointed to run Canadair Inc. They are key people who came from Gulfstream Aerospace Corporation, which is one of Canadair's main competitors. But, that is only the latest of many steps.

I would like to list some of the other steps which CDIC has taken to put Canadair on a sound footing. First, personnel changes have been made to strengthen the management group. The President of the company was replaced and four senior officers have departed. Second, there is a commitment to full and timely disclosure which includes an audited annual report and unaudited quarterly reports. Parliament has been provided with audited financial reports for 1982 and 1983, along with extensive financial data for ealier years. Those reports, together with the accompanying notes and commentaries, were designed to meet the reporting and disclosure roles applicable to companies whose securities are traded on Canadian stock exchanges. Third is the adoption of conservative accounting practices. Canadair used an overly-aggressive form of program accounting in recording certain costs and revenues for the purposes of Canadair's audited financial statements for 1981 and for prior years. Canadair's 1982 and 1983 audited statements were, therefore, prepared on the basis of a conservative, more traditional form of program accounting. In CDIC's opinion, those financial statements presented a more realistic view of Canadair's assets and liabilities.

Fourth, the strengthening of financial controls through the reinstatement of the office and function of internal auditor. The function had been eliminated in 1982. Fifth, the establishment of a lower Challenger production rate. In February, 1983, Canadair was producing Challengers at the rate of 30 aircraft per year. CDIC and Canadair's management concurred in reducing that rate to 24 aircraft per year. In July 1983, the Challenger production rate was again reduced, to 16 Challengers per year. In December 1983, steps were taken to permit production of 19 Challengers in 1984. The foregoing changes in production rate were made as a result of CDIC's assessment of the probable rate of Challenger sales in 1983 and 1984. To date, that assessment appears to be valid. By December 31, 1983, Canadair had delivered all but one of the Challengers built in 1983. No Challenger sales were lost in 1983 by reason of the unavailability of aircraft. The production rate reductions resulted in cash savings to Canadair in 1983 of $37 million and will result in further cash savings of $141 million in 1984. I am sure that is most heartening for Members of the Opposition. Of course, it is heartening for Members of Government as well.

Sixth, the enforcement of sound sales practices. All new Challenger orders are being signed at a price which recovers all costs, except interest on past debts and which, on the basis of 15 deliveries a year, results in a profit before interest for the program. With the recent capital restructuring of the company, Canadair's debt burden will be removed and the Challenger, at 15 sales per year at current prices, will yield a profit.

Seventh, changes in forecasting and marketing. Canadair has adopted a more realistic sales forecasting approach. It has also adopted a conservative method of counting new orders. I am sure Hon. Members opposite will appreciate that it is a "conservative" method. It lists only firm orders, and to be considered firm, an order must first be legally enforceable by Canadair. Also, it must be with a customer who has a clear ability to pay for the plane, and it must be with a customer who has not indicated any desire not to take the plane. In addition, Canadair has employed two major outside groups to provide a view of market prospects for the Challenger. On the basis of that view and other analyses, CDIC and Canadair have concluded that with a prudently conservative view of market shares, the Challenger program can generate a profit, including overhead but excluding interest on past debt. That is progress.

Eighth, the modification of Canadair's Middle East distributorship. Canadair has concluded a new representative and distributor agreement with TAG Aeronautics (Saudi Arabia) Ltd., and has settled an arbitration claim made by TAG through the International Chamber of Commerce. The two companies will be co-operating closely to realize Challenger sales opportunities in the Middle East.

Ninth, changes in management and management structure. After making a careful assessment of Canadair's management structure, CDIC concluded that significant changes were required. The structural changes which have been made were designed to produce a management team organized along functional lines. Authority and responsibility have been reallocated in accordance with the new structure and the management team is now functioning satisfactorily. The number of vice-presidents has been reduced from 22 to 12. I am sure you will appreciate that that is progress as well.

Tenth, the implementation of cost reductions. Significant reductions have been made in corporate overhead and operating costs. The savings to Canadair, once severance costs have been absorbed, will be $27.5 million a year.

Nothing I have said should come as news to this House. Indeed, the Minister responsible for CDIC spelled it all out in a report to Parliament on Canadair in March. The lessons were not easy ones; but we have learned them. More important, we now have in Canada a well diversified company turning out good products—products of which all Canadians can be proud—and going out into the world to sell them. Canadair's costs are under control, its orientation is more commercial, its lines of accountability are clearer. It is positioned for profitability and it is identifying new strategic opportunities for the future. What more can I say? CDIC has effectively carried out its mandate to bring commercial attitudes, businesslike management and a strategic mentality to Canadair. Over the coming year Canadair, as a result of CDIC's efforts, will become one of the exciting instances of dynamic corporate turnaround, we all hope.

Mr. Nickerson: Even you do not believe that.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Well, we can hope for it, can we not? If you lose hope, what do you have left?

The same process is under way at de Havilland. Obviously, CDIC has more to do there. We know that. We do not need to be told. The Government believes that there is a good opportunity to have in Canada a commercially viable aircraft industry. That is a decision we had to make. Do we want an aircraft industry or not? Diefenbaker in his time decided we did not want one. We have decided at this time that we do. We will have to wait and see what happens in the future. The lesson to be learned from this experience of the last two years is that turnarounds of the sort which is underway at Canadair do not just happen on their own. The turnaround at Canadair happened because the Government had in CDIC an instrument it could use to manage its investment in Canadair.

Quite simply, the Government needs an instrument like CDIC to manage its investments when it becomes a shareholder. The critics of CDIC cannot wish away these shareholding situations by attacking the vehicle through which the Government is managing its investments. Last Fall, this House passed Bill C-170, the Atlantic Fisheries Restructuring Act. Again, this was a situation in which the Government found itself as a shareholder in three companies involved in the catching, processing and marketing of fish, companies whose operations are vital to the well-being of the entire fishing industry and of the economies of the five eastern provinces. Hon. Members know the story behind that investment and I will not go over that old ground.

However, once the Government found itself, for pragmatic reasons, with new shareholdings, there was quite obviously a continuing need to manage those investments. Those companies, or their predecessors, had all lost money in recent years, but all of them must become internationally competitive because the major markets for Canadian fish are broad. They must operate on a commercial basis and the Government's investment must be well managed.

The Government could not ask the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) to do that job; he is the regulator of the resource and its harvesting. This time the Government had a vehicle available to manage those investments; CDIC. We need CDIC to take charge of such cases and to return them to the private sector when it is commercially feasible to do so. That makes sense to me, and it should make sense to Hon. Members opposite. We do not want to see the Government losing more money than it has already.

CDIC has proven its usefulness in the case of Canadair. It is applying the same analytic and problem solving ability to de Havilland and it will do the same in the fishing industry. Hon. Members know that any Government will find itself with investments in industry. They know that these investments need sound management. They know that there must be an instrument available to Government to provide that management. CDIC is that instrument, and I am confident that its creation represents a major step forward in dealing with the issue of managing government investments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) whether he believes all that he said in his speech, including the portion dealing with Canadair. Does he really and truly believe that?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is Chronicles III in the Bible which talks about faith, hope and charity. I believe it has now been changed in the modern version to faith, hope and love. I have faith, I have love of my country, and I have hope. If the Hon. Member has as much hope as I have for this and will work as hard to make it work, it will be successful.

● (1650)

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I do not think any Members of the House would disagree. We all have faith and hope, and, to a greater or lesser degree, I think we all have some charity. I asked the Member whether he believes all that he said, including all that he said about Canadair in his speech.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my friend reminds me of a doubting Thomas, if I may refer to the good book again. I personally am a believer. When I cease to be a believer, I will not be here.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member misunderstood the question. We were simply giving him the opportunity to disassociate himself personally from some of the things which were contained in his speech as compared to associating himself, quite naturally, in terms of his parliamentary responsibility. If he wishes to take the opportunity to disassociate himself personally from some of the contents of his speech, I will give him the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, let me say this. If the positive points which I made in my speech do not come to fruition, I will certainly be taking exception to it and will agree with the Hon. Member.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify something with regard to the Hon. Member's speech. The Conservative Party makes a great deal about divesting itself of Crown corporations. The Government has indicated that part of the rationale behind CDIC is that at some stage it will divest itself of Crown corporations. With regard to the fishing industry, that was made fairly clear by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) in the Bill.

At what stage do we divest ourselves of these Crown corporations? At what point do we feel that we have had an adequate return on the taxpayers' investment in those corporations? Are we going to divest them as soon as they become profitable and become a source of interest in the private sector? Or, are we going to demand that for all that public investment there is going to be an adequate return to pay the taxpayer for saving those industries and saving the jobs which we have had to save in the fishing industry and returning the $138 million, if it is under the Fisheries Bill, to the Canadian purse? At what point do we divest ourselves and what return do we expect for the Canadian public?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member's altruistic motives. I am sure it is altruistic motives that are contained in the Bill, and the reasons for providing them. I do not think that as yet we have decided upon the policies as to when we would divest ourselves of the assets. Surely it is going to have to be actuarially sound. There would probably not be too many people interested in acquiring the business unless it was making a profit. I see nothing wrong with making a profit, whether by the Government or private enterprise.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the point I was trying to make was whether we write off all the investment that the Canadian public has made in that industry at the point that it becomes profitable and the private sector is interested in buying it, or do we demand that we make some profit to return to the taxpayer who bailed out an industry that was badly managed by private enterprise?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I would venture to say that quite a number of items would have to be considered before that decision could be made. Obviously, we do not want to continue losing money in a losing venture. If we spent a lot of money, we would like to have a recovery for the people of Canada who invested their money in the enterprise through Government. One must make a judgment based on the facts at a particular time. Whether we are making or losing money at the time is a decision which would have to be made at that particular time. To say anything other than that would be purely speculative at this point in time.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) in much of his speech dealt with Canadair and the bad shape it is in. Is he aware that the Government of Canada forced General Dynamics to sell what is Canadair to the Government of Canada because the Government of Canada wanted to get into a different type of manufacturing of airplanes than General Dynamics wanted to get into? At the time General Dynamics did not want to sell and, as a matter of fact, still has a working relationship with Canadair.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I can neither confirm nor deny the allegations which are made by the Hon. Member. That is something which could be looked into. I am sure the Department would be only too glad to provide him with the facts.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member was talking about Massey-Ferguson and referring to majority shareholders, was he aware that at the time that the largest shareholder owned only 17 per cent of Massey-Ferguson, it offered to invest more money if the Government wished to participate at the time? The Government refused to participate at the time and the only way they could get the Government to participate was if they themselves bowed out. They did not bow out by selling their shares. The largest shareholder at that time got out by giving its shares to the employee pension fund, thus making it possible for the Government to come in.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I really do not know what question the Hon. Member is posing. It seems to me that you certainly do not need to have a very large portion of a company in order to have control of it. I would think that if the major shareholder had 17 per cent of the company, it obviously had control of it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, before beginning my debate on Bill C-25, I should thank the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) for 20 minutes of humorous interlude. I found it very entertaining. It was not particularly enlightening, but certainly very entertaining. Reading out a speech of that particular ilk displayed a loyalty on his part to the Liberal Party that was way beyond the call of duty.

I recall, however, being invited by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to a film show a few years ago. The Minister had all his directors and people from Canadair there. He was saying what a good thing Canadair was going to be. He was saying what a good job he had been doing getting these Canadair Challenger jets going. To use a biblical phrase, as the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore was doing, today we see the Government acting like Pontius Pilate. He was washing his hands of the whole affair. He said that the Government had nothing to do with it. He said the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was not to blame, that it was the fault of the management of Canadair. That is what we heard today after the fact. You cannot have it both ways.

This afternoon we are dealing with the brainchild of that famous Senator from the other place, one Senator Jack Austin. I know he has laboured over this Bill for some time. It attempts to legitimize—

I see you waving at me, Mr. Speaker. I only had two minutes, and it was not enough. However, I look forward to going into this in considerable detail at the next opportunity.

INCOME TAX ACT

EXEMPTION FOR SMALL FARM HOLDINGS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, January 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wenman:

That, in the opinion of this House, the retention of productive and potentially productive small holdings in agricultural production is of value and, that the government should consider the advisability of repealing Section 31 of the Income Tax Act which threatens the retention of such productivity lifestyle and land use.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in closing debate on the motion, I want to express my appreciation to all Hon. Members from all sides of the House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. The Chair realizes that the hon. gentleman has already spoken on the motion.

Mr. Wenman: That is right, Mr. Speaker. Now that you have recognized me, I am closing debate on the Bill so that we can proceed to have a vote of general agreement of the House of Commons on this matter. You have recognized me, and I would like to continue my speech and continue holding the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Usually, as a matter of practice, the Chair asks if any other member wants to speak before someone closes the debate. However—

Mr. Wenman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that all Parties have given their concurrence in their speeches in the House of Commons, which could be checked by yourself, if you want to look at the record, and that in fact I was commended for bringing this proposal forward, I feel that the positions have been made and it is important that we should act now. By acting, we will state in voting for this motion, as all political Parties will do, the concern that the small farmers have in fact had.

We have heard suggestions during debate that the limit of farm loss deductibility be raised from $5,000 to $20,000 or $30,000 annually. Of course, this is only a half measure. The problem is more than disagreement over tax law. The problem is the attitude of the Government that small agricultural land holdings are not valuable and somehow do not make their own kind of significant contribution to agricultural productivity and the environment.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Clearly there are members on this side of the House who want to contribute to the debate. To have recognized the original proponent of the motion at this stage is clearly out of order. I understand that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain), is about to speak on this matter, as are other members. Surely you must recognize him before putting any question. I suggest that it is clearly out of order to have the original member who proposed the motion speak at this stage.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I clearly heard you call the order of the day. I was in the House and no one from the government side rose to speak. I can absolutely assure the House of that. I hope that Hon. Members opposite, particularly the Minister, will accept my word that no one from the government benches rose to speak.

You recognized the Hon. Member in whose name the motion stands. As I understand the Standing Orders, once having recognized legitimately the member in whose name the Bill stands, because no other member was standing, I think it is quite clear that on the completion of his remarks the debate is closed. If there is to be a division, which I do not expect in this matter in view of the previous interventions, then the debate automatically closes on the cessation of the remarks of the member who now has the floor.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) may be making a valid point. However, notwithstanding that case, it frequently occurs that members are otherwise occupied. For instance, there was some confusion before five o'clock when the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) stood up at the wrong moment and the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) then finished the debate. There was some confusion.

However, when there is an element of confusion in the House, one always defers to the continuity of the debate for those members who have not spoken. That is how we operate traditionally in the House. I would submit that you have no other recourse but to recognize my hon. friend from Niagara Falls who is most willing to take part in the debate.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, the point of order I wish to make is that we are now in Private Members' hour. In Private Members' hour it is very important that the will of a private member not only be allowed to be heard in this place, but be brought to a vote, continued or brought to another committee. Perhaps it can be brought to completion so that these ideas of people that come through Private Members' are heard.

By calling this motion a second time, the House of Commons clearly intended that we should have further debate and perhaps conclusion in this area. Therefore, I insist that I maintain my place in debate, as recognized procedurally and correctly in procedure by yourself and other members, by the fact that there was no one standing. I insist that I conclude my speech in concluding the debate and that we have an agreement on this measure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. The Chair believes that it has enough information from various members from all sides of the House. First, the Chair did not recognize originally that the Hon. Member had spoken. I was just brought the list and I see his name on the list as having spoken.

This being said, I will read Standing Order 41(2):

> A reply shall be allowed to a Member who has moved a substantive motion, but not to the mover of an amendment, the previous question or an instruction to a committee.

Standing Order 41(3) reads:

> In all cases the Speaker shall inform the House that the reply of the mover of the original motion closes the debate.

In other words, the floor is always offered to others who want to speak before someone closes the debate. With all due respect to the hon. gentleman, I would ask if someone else wants to speak—

Mr. Wenman: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Will the hon. gentleman resume his seat for a moment. To correct its own mistake in not having seen the list before the Hon. Member rose, the Chair proposes to ask other Hon. Members if they want the floor. If not, the hon. gentleman can speak right away.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, you did not err in any way, shape or form. I did not err in my response. I opened my debate with the words "in closing debate". Furthermore, there was no one speaking and I insist on my place on the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I believe that the hon. gentleman is now trying to comment on a ruling. Debate. The Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain).

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the effect of the motion by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) is that the Government should consider the advisability of repealing Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. Admittedly, this is a controversial section. There are two sides to the argument about whether there should be an amendment repealing Section 31 of the Act. This section, which is commonly referred to as the hobby farmer section, limits the expenditures which certain farmers can deduct in a year for income tax purposes.

The danger of simply advocating the removal of this section from the Act is that it may interfere with the integrity of the Act if it is removed. As well, it deals with tax expenditures that are sometimes known as loopholes. There is a difference of opinion even among farmers and certainly among others as to whether or not the provision has reason to stand at least in a limited way.

● (1710)

Consideration has been given to section 31, but there are two arguments. The one put forward by my learned and hon. friend is one side of the argument only. The other side allows someone who is really not a farmer to reduce substantially his income, if the section were removed, and gives protection against an unnecessarily high tax expenditure from income from other sources being used.

I admit there is room for a discussion or refinement of the section, refinement being where there is strictly an opportunity taken by someone to overcome what would otherwise be taxable income by using expenditures of great dimension against other income. If that were allowed to be taken advantage of by everyone, what would be the end result? What is the policy angle involved? If it is a policy angle to attempt to let the taxpayer go from a mere employee at General Motors to buy a farm and to slide into farming using tax expenditures, for all intents and purposes really government grants, is that what our Government, whatever Government it may be, wants to do? If that is what you want to do, maybe we should say it, Mr. Speaker. If what we want to do is permit someone just to take advantage of the Tax Act, to get reductions in his actual tax payable by going into a non bona fide operation where there is little or no hope for income but lots of expectation of losses, and if losses were not curtailed, it would be a loophole or a tax expenditure which would have serious consequences on the integrity of the whole Act. I am not at all sure that the Hon. Member is correct if he were to say, or to suggest to us at least by implication, that all farmers would be happy by a mere deletion of Section 31. I will go with the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) a certain distance. I will go the distance that the matter which he has brought before the House this afternoon is timely. It is my understanding that the basic question is being considered by the Department. I can say there is no firm decision that there should be a step to remove the section completely and to remove any safeguards. The expenditure from what is in fact and in substance merely for a hobby farmer would be to remove any tax payable from his normal income, regardless of how much that income was and how much tax there would be thereon, but I am prepared to go part of the way to agree that Section 31 is controversial.

I think there is need for a refinement, perhaps for a small farmer who is merely working off the land to supplement his income until his farm becomes profitable or at least so it can sustain the operation. That might be quite in order. I am sure if one were to study the section and to study the implications with great care and go into the question with Departmental officials, one would find there have been improper advantages taken of the Section over the years. That is my understanding. In a genuine case where a person has in fact and in substance a genuine farming operation, which admittedly may be losing money, that individual may be forced temporarily to remove himself from being a full-time farmer and take some income elsewhere. If he wants to use some of that income where it is limited to $5,000 in order to limit the tax payable on his secondary income, it may be perfectly all right, but to do what the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West says, which is to let him go whole hog and remove all his income from taxability, may be to place on the shoulders of the other taxpayers an unfair tax burden.

I for one would be hesitant to do that. I am a farmer's son and, like many of us in the House who are second generation farmers, we are hesitant to do anything that would hurt the farmers. We are always anxious to do something helpful, but one must look at the fairness of what we are trying to do.

There are in society, and farmers are no exception although it seldom happens in the farming community, some people who take advantage of any section or any tax expenditure no matter how carefully the section is drawn to turn a legitimate tax expenditure or legitimate loophole to their advantage. Thank goodness there are a very limited number of such people in our society.

If we were to say this afternoon, that we should remove Section 31 altogether and not limit the expenditure from the so-called hobby farm as against regular income, I would have to be against the motion. I know there are legitimate cases. I accept the fact that the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West is putting forward his motion on the basis of legitimate cases, but there is room for honest men to disagree on how the matter should be approached.

The way this motion approaches the problem leaves a lot to be desired. But if you approach it by amending Section 31 either by changing the amount of the $5,000 expenditure or by putting in certain safeguards and spelling them out, that might work. Probably one of the problems with Section 31 is the interpretation it has received by the department and its officials, including the feeling and the position of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) which he put forward in his Budget of February 15, 1984. We must also consider the decisions made on tax cases concerning this matter. I think the Section is drawn in such a way that there is a serious difference of opinion about it and that has to be removed. That perhaps is true, but to say that is not to say we should support removal of the Section without due consideration as to its statutory history.

We must look at the ramifications. How has this section affected genuine farmers? By that I mean not the hobby farmer but the genuine farmer who is in a tight situation trying to make a farm produce taxable income and in doing so, trying to survive and at the same time fight very hard with another job off the land to make the total operation—the farming operation and what he does elsewhere—at least profitable.

I am prepared to discuss the basic question with the Hon. Member. However, I have reservations about removing Section 31 and letting the chips fall where they may. It is probably true to say that the problem is as much one of interpretation of the statute as it is whether or not the statute was properly drawn and reflected what legislators intended when they passed it. We would have to go back and study the intention of the legislators and what has happened under the section. For example, how many cases have there been, have decisions been going one way or vice versa, what is the position of the tax Department, or how difficult is it for the Department to make this section work when dealing with farmers.

As I said before, we know as farmers' sons how difficult it is for them to make a go at any time. The last few years have been particularly difficult, and no doubt 1984 will also be. We tend to do what the Hon. member for Fraser Valley West has done. With the best of motives, we try to lean over backwards to help farmers. He is particularly dealing with small farmers. I understand and agree with him in that respect, but how can we remove Section 31 and let the consequences fall where they may?

The motion of the Hon. Member would affect the integrity of the Act itself. It would not bring harmony to the farming community. Many farmers are not in favour of the use of farmlands for hobby purposes. They are not in favour of promoting hobby farming in that manner, especially full-time farmers who are profitable and have to pick up the slack. It is not a black and white situation like the Hon. Member would like us to believe. I do not think that will solve the problem and make farmers happy. Certainly small hobby farmers will be happy if we take away Section 31 and they are allowed to use as many expenses as they can dream up on their hobby farm operations against their secondary income. However, the farming community in general will not be happy. Certainly those who have an interest in the integrity of the Income Tax Act and trying to make it work will not be happy.

While the matter is worthy of debate, the simple solution of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West is inadequate.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a few comments on the motion of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). I am interested in it because some people in my riding have expressed concern about the way in which the Income Tax operates in this particular respect. I mentioned this matter in the House before in a statement pursuant to Standing Order 21. I called attention in particular to the unfairness of the way in which retroactivity was applied in some of these cases.

However, I rise to participate in the debate this afternoon more from my concern about what I think is a false impression on the part of the Hon. Member. He would like to give the impression that he is for policies to promote "the retention of productive and potentially productive small holdings in agricultural production" and that he regards it as something valuable. I regard it as something valuable, but I would like to deal with some of the ways in which the Hon. Member and the Party he represents advocate a set of policites which go in the opposite direction to valuing "the retention of productive and potentially productive small holdings".

What is the position of the Progressive Conservative Party with regard to the development and growth of agribusiness? What is its position in terms of the way in which more and more farms in western Canada are becoming larger, with small farms disappearing as a result of the ability of the larger ones to buy them out and as a result of the vertical integration in the agricultural sector? I have never heard any Conservatives, nor for that matter Liberals, speak against that kind of economic phenomenon which has every bit as much to do with the disappearance of small productive and potentially productive holdings.

I have never heard Conservatives object to the way in which many people from outside Canada have been able to buy up large tracts of land, driving up the price of land in Canada and making it impossible for small farmers to carry on or for people who want to become small farmers or start new farming operations. When we try to do something about that, the same people who now say they are for small farmers rise in the name of free enterprise and values in the marketplace to say that we cannot stop it because it is free enterprise. Their first priority is not productive and potentially productive small holdings. Their real priority is free enterprise. If small farms stand in the way of that, they can go the way of the dinosaur, as far as the Progressive Conservative Party is concerned. Let us not kind ourselves about that.

I have never heard the Hon. Member nor his Party ask for something to be done about land speculation or about the way in which potentially valuable land is raised in price and often used for the wrong reason because someone got hold of it first and did what they wanted to do. I have never heard Conservatives object to that, because above and beyond the value of land and the responsibility to use it well, they hold the value of free enterprise and the marketplace. Let us not be kidded about that this afternoon by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West.

The only people we can take seriously when it comes to land use are those who are willing to say that it is our responsibility to be good stewards of the land, a responsibility which goes beyond any attachment we may have to any particular economic system or economic values. That is what the Progressive Conservative Party is not prepared to do. It exalts the kinds of land use which at the moment are destroying the eco-system of this planet. That is the kind of development to which it looks forward for the future of Canada and our planet. That kind of private, uncontrolled, profit-motivated free enterprise development is using up the last remaining stands of the Amazon forest. The other day the Duke of Edinburgh, His Royal Highness Prince Philip, called attention to this particular problem. If we do not do something about the way in which our economic system is using up land—

Mr. Evans: Order.

Mr. Wenman: What does that have to do with the motion?

Mr. Blaikie: I think it is completely relevant because the Hon. Member prefaced his remarks by commenting upon land use in particular. If we do not address these kinds of questions, we will never address the problem of land use as it should be addressed.

Members of the Progressive Conservative Party have risen and waxed self-righteous about land use. They do not really care about land use. They care about money use. To hear any Progressive Conservative get up and talk about land use and responsibility for the land is just so much hypocrisy. What they really care about is money. When the day comes that they are willing to put their concern about land above and beyond the concern for profit, then we will be able to take them seriously when it comes to land use.

● (1730)

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I must begin by expressing my disappointment at the extreme divergence from the topic which the Hon. Member who just spoke indulged in.

Mr. Blaikie: It is not a divergence at all; it is to the point.

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, Section 31 and Brazil have nothing whatsoever in common. Section 31 is making it exceedingly difficult, impossible in many cases, for young farmers who are attempting to acquire small holdings and make them productive. I know some of those young farmers. If they succeed they will become very productive farmers in the future, but at the moment they cannot support themselves by their agricultural earnings alone. As a result, they are compelled to seek employment off the land. Very often both the farmer and his wife are compelled to seek employment off the land.

These young people are working exceedingly hard. It is not unusual for them to have a regular job which requires them to put in 40 hours and then have to work another 40 and 50 hours on the farm. I think specifically of a member of my own family who drives from Regina to his holding in eastern Saskatchewan. That young man is very anxious to become a full-time farmer, and he will as soon as economic conditions permit. In the meantime he faces a handicap which, not solely but in part, is due to the policies of this Government. He is faced first of all with a shortage of capital. He is also faced with high interest rates which have unfortunately been increasing. He is faced with a decline in the revenue he receives for his product.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the price of grain has dropped some 6 per cent this year. This young man is receiving the same price for his produce as was received in 1971 and 1972, but his costs of production are now 250 per cent greater than they were. He is trying to make ends meet but, naturally, he is incurring losses. Unfortunately, Section 31 denies him the opportunity to apply all of those losses against his general income. The result is that Section 31 is making it even more difficult for him to become a full-time farmer.

The young man of whom I speak, and there are many others like him, is not and will never be in the class of a so-called hobby farmer. We on this side of the House do not carry any particular torch for hobby farmers. There are ample provisions within the Income Tax Act, so I am informed, to govern so-called hobby farmers without reference to Section 31. Our concerns are for those young and struggling Canadians who seek to become self-supporting and productive farmers, those who will become the next generation. They are the unfortunate ones who are not in a position to inherit farm land and equipment from others. They are simply trying to do what our forefathers did two and three generations ago. It was easy at one time for a young man without capital, by virtue of his labour, to go out and become over a period of time a self-supporting farmer. But land value at it is today, and with the cost of operation being what it is today, it is impossible for a man to become a full-time farmer unless he has, first of all, an immense amount of capital available to him. Those who do not have those assets must, of necessity, take employment and try to farm at the same time.

Section 31 works to the detriment of such young people. If it is permitted to continue to function in the way it is now, we will make it virtually impossible for such young people to become full-time productive farmers. If we do that, the economy of Canada will be the loser. We who play the role of Government will also be the loser because we will lose the revenue these young people will eventually bring to us. I commend the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) for bringing this issue to the attention of the House. As you know, Mr. Speaker, this Bill is being debated for a second time. We had ample opportunity the first time to discuss the merits of the legislation. That is why I very much support the Hon. Member and encourage Members opposite to permit the Bill to be brought to a vote.

We have an opportunity to indicate where we stand on this legislation. We have an opportunity to express our disapproval of Section 31 which is strangling young Canadians. This is a particularly onerous condition because of the high unemployment which exists across the land. The people of whom I speak already have a job. However, they do not wish to remain in that job, they wish to be farmers. If we permit them to vacate their salaried positions and become full-time farmers, we will free up another position for those 1.5 million unemployed Canadians. In doing this, are we not only helping farmers and the agricultural economy as a whole, but we are helping the unemployed of Canada. Therefore, I say to the Members opposite that they have an opportunity to take a bold step forward. They have had a chance to speak; if they will just permit this Bill to be brought to a vote, then we can do something to further the condition of the young farmer, an opportunity which I think we should take.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I find it very strange that the Hon. Member who just spoke talks of the fear we might talk out this Bill. What they have been doing up until five o'clock was trying to talk out the Bill we have before the House. I find it even more amusing to see how the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) wanted to rush his Bill through without even giving us a chance to take part in the debate. I find it amusing because on so many occasions the same Member, as well as other Members of his Party, have accused the Government of rushing legislation through when it is sometimes before the House for days, weeks and months. Today they want the Bill through without any debate. I find it very, very strange.

I am sure the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West has very good intentions to present a Bill to find ways and means to pay less tax on income. This is quite typical of Members opposite. It is a wonder that they have not included in the motion all sections of the Income Tax Act which deal with collecting taxes. However, they cannot have it both ways. You cannot talk of reducing deficits and not collecting taxes and lowering the Government's revenues.

Individuals engaged in farming activity are placed in one of three categories under the Income Tax Act for the purposes of determining the extent to which farming losses may be deducted from other sources of income. Full-time farmers for whom farming may reasonably be expected to provide the bulk of income, or the centre of work routine, are unrestricted in their eligibility to deduct losses fully. At the other extreme is the person who engages in minimal farming or peripheral activity and who has no reasonable expectation of a profit. Any farming losses sustained by such individuals are not deductible. This is because the activity is a personal endeavour and is a hobby and not a business. This hobby criterion applies to all activities and not only to farming.

Individuals in the third category do not look to farming or to farming and some subordinate source of income for their livelihood, but carry on a farming business as a sideline. Such secondary farmers are restricted under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act which imposes a $5,000 annual limit on the deduction of farm losses against other income.

However, all farmers including those farmers who have a restricted farm loss, can carry losses back for three years and forward for ten years so that these losses can be deducted from farm income earned over this period. These more generous carry-over provisions were introduced in the April, 1983 Budget. Previously, farm losses could be carried back only one year and forward only five years. Hence, the restricted farm losses of such farmers are not lost if in fact the farming operation is profitable over this period.

The purpose of Section 31 is to set up a flexible boundary between the person who carries on farming activities for personal enjoyment and the genuine farmer. This boundary is essential to restrict access to the very generous incentive provisions available to farmers, particularly the ability to use cash accounting methods. Repealing Section 31 would make it administratively more difficult for Revenue Canada to distinguish between genuine farmers and those engaging in farming as a leisure activity.

Section 31 has been a controversial provision of the Act and has attracted a great deal of criticism. Arguments have been made that there is a feeling in the agricultural community that the restricted farm loss rules are discriminatory since they do not exist for other forms of business. Most typically, it is argued that Section 31 limits access to farming since it restricts the extent to which losses sustained in the early stages may be written off against other income and hence impedes the transition from part-time to full-time farming. It is also commonly argued that Section 31 imposes a hardship on bona fide farmers who temporarily take off-farm work during periods of poor farming conditions and who occasionally find themselves restricted by the provision.

Because of the controversy surrounding Section 31, the ramifications of the existence of the provision have been subject to extensive analysis in the Department of Finance. Although the arguments put forth are of concern, extensive research indicates that it is by no means obvious that reapeal of the Section or an increase in the annual limit would remedy existing problems.

Mr. Wenman: It would help.

Mr. Ethier: It would not remedy the existing problems. In fact, such actions might create major problems within the legitimate farming sector. Data indicate that the vast majority of individuals restricted by the provision have very low gross farm sales, typically less than $5,000 annually, and high average off-farm income. Furthermore, a large percentage of those who would be affected by the provision habitually report farming losses year after year.

The U.S. experience, as well as available data for Canada, suggests that removal or extension of the limits would make farming even more attractive to individuals whose main interest in farming was primarily the speculative and tax write-off possibilities available. In fact, a large portion of the agricultural sector in the U.S. has argued vociferously for tightening up of liberal loss write-off provisions already in existence there.

It has been argued by many agricultural economists in the U.S. that the existing situation has forced up the price of agricultural land, thus making expansion and entry difficult and has reduced product prices. It is also argued that rates of return in farming have been lowered by the influx of speculative capital to the point where legitimate farmers find it difficult to make a living.

In summary, there is need for the restricted farm loss provision. Farmers receive generous incentives, most particularly the ability to use the cash accounting method for tax purposes. It is important to restrict these provisions to full-time farmers and to prevent non-farmers from gaining unintended access to these incentives. Such access is undesirable as it adversely affects the economic conditions facing the genuine farmer.

The Government is very concerned to see that the restricted farm loss provision does not apply to genuine farmers. This provision is being reviewed to seek ways to prevent such genuine farmers from ever being affected by the restricted farm loss rules. At the same time, the Government is anxious to ensure that the generous tax incentives available to the agricultural community are properly targeted at those for whom they were intended.

I do not think that passage of this Bill is in the best interests of the taxpayers of the country. It is not in the best interests of the farming community of the country and I cannot support the Bill in its simple form.

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on the motion of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) with great consideration and understanding. I know the problems that Section 31 of the Income Tax Act has created for a large segment of Canadians who made the extra effort by trying to establish businesses in the farming sector.

The motion proposes that we consider the advisability of repealing Section 31. Here again, the Hon. Member has clearly shown a responsible role by saying that we should consider its repeal. I think that this clearly points out that we on this side of the House are not trying to provide an avenue for those who are wealthy to escape paying taxes. We are merely trying to give those who want to enter into the farming community a chance.

In the area in which I live, which is part of the Fraser Valley in British Columbia, the price of land is very high. It is very demanding financially to enter into those kinds of enterprises. There is no other way to do so unless one is born with a silver spoon in one's mouth. Most of the people who want to enter into the farming community are born in poverty like most of the rest of us are.

On my own farm, there was a young man who was driving a chicken-catching truck who wanted to enter into the dairy business. He would never have been able to enter into that business had some form of reasonable taxation not taken effect. With Section 31 remaining a part of the Act, this man is really going to struggle.

The Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Clark) mentioned the matter of jobs. If one man is taken off the job and goes to a farm, a job opening is created. The lack of jobs is the biggest issue facing Canadians today. There are no jobs, whether it be for the young, the old, or anyone.

• (1750)

In the Budget speech, the Government promised to reconsider Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. What has the Government done? It has done absolutely nothing. Here it is saying that it is the protector of the minority—the small businessman and what have you. But, who does it worry about? It worries about the big businessman. The most unbelievable presentation that I have heard in the House was given by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie). He did not even speak to the Bill. He did not consider the small guy. I do not know what he considered. He was speaking about the Amazon and Brazil.

This is an important issue. The context of entering into the farming community today has totally changed from what it was in prior years. Elderly people who must retire can no longer hand their farms over to their children. The children must purchase the farms so that the elderly can maintain a reasonable standard of living. In most cases, those young Canadians must go out and perform work other than the work which they perform on their farms. It has been proven time after time that the only way to do it is to hold down a job and farm x number of hours each day as well.

I believe that the Government has a responsibility to Canadians, and to small entrepreneurs who are trying to break into the farming industry. Without seriously considering the Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West, we will achieve nothing.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker. I have no concern about speaking this Bill out. However, I would not feel that way if the motion called for changes which would make it possible for small farmers and part-time farmers to get a better break and make it possible for them to survive. However, that is not what the Bill proposes. The Bill proposes that Section 31 of the Income Tax Act be repealed. That leaves it wide open for anyone to purchase a farm or a piece of property in order to obtain a great tax write-off. They do not really have to be concerned about farming at all.

One thing that bothers me about this Bill is that it has been characteristic of the Tory Party in the debates in the last several months to always be worried about the person who is not paying taxes. They should be looked after nicely and we should treat them well! I can truthfully say that in the last three or four months, there has been a great deal of concern in my community by the people who are earning wages and whose taxes are being paid at source that they will be forced to pay more and more taxes if more and more ways are found in which other people do not have to pay taxes. Therefore, I think that the deletion of Section 31 is one way to create a situation in which some people could beat the game and other people would have to pay more.

Taxes are a zero sum game. If there are segments of our society which are not paying their fair share, then those whose income comes from wages and who pay their taxes at source will have to pay more. I think the people in my constituency of Thunder Bay-Atikokan and the community in between are getting a little annoyed about the idea that there is this great inequity in the taxation system. This Bill is one way to create that inequity.

What are we going to do? The Tories are talking about the terrible deficit and how they want to reduce that deficit. What do they do? They say: "Let us make it possible for anybody to buy a farm, do what he wants with it and write his losses off". They do this without any compunction at all. They are not interested in farming. One of the consequences of this kind of measure—and there is evidence in the United States to suggest that this is true—is that it will increase the value of farmland, and it will put it in the hands of people who are only interested in using that land for a tax write-off. They are not interested in the kind of food production we need. This is the kind of thing which is happening.

I realize that there is a problem. However, Section 31 is there to solve that problem. If the Tories had submitted an amendment or some suggestions as to how we might solve the problem of the person who has to work 35 hours to 40 hours a week to get his farm going and who wants to be a farmer, who needs help, and who really has some legitimate grievances, then I would suggest that an amendment be made to Section 31. They should deal with that particular problem—

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that it would be appropriate as a matter of order for you to inform the House, as you did by recognizing me as a speaker, thereby taking my rightful place from me on the floor of the House, that if in fact the Member of the Liberal Party continues to speak he will effectively kill this measure which will help the small farmer of Canada. Mr. Speaker, will you inform the Member that he will do that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae).

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the last manoeuvre at all. I am trying to suggest that if there was an honest attempt on the part of the Opposition to seriously come to grips with the problem of the small farmer who is trying to get a start, who wants to spend the rest of his life on a farm, and who wants to pass it on to his son or daughter, that that kind of suggestion would receive support from this side. We are trying to do that very thing.

That is not what this particular motion proposes. It proposes to repeal Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. Repeal, as far as I am concerned, means to take it right out of the Act. That means that anyone could use the purchase of a farm as a loss against income. It means that someone else will have an opportunity to get away with beating the tax system and have an added tax expenditure. That particular person will not pay his fair share. My constituents who work at Great Lakes Paper or Canada Car, in the riding of Thunder Bay-Atikokan and across this land, will have to pay more.

There was a Budget a couple of years ago—which may have had some flaws—which the Opposition Party ran into the ground. The whole point of that Budget was to bring more equity into the tax system to ensure that every Canadian would pay a fair share, and there would not be people with incomes of $200,000 or $300,000 a year paying no tax at all.

If the Party opposite comes into power—and I hope that they do not—in the next six months, we will have changes. That is what it has been about for the last six months: tearing the tax Department down. We will have changes which will mean that all kinds of Canadians will not be paying taxes. The working man, the guy who earns a wage, is the guy who will have to pay more.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

METRIC CONVERSION—ENFORCEMENT OF REGULATIONS—MINISTER'S STATEMENT. (B) SALARIES OF METRIC COMMISSION EXECUTIVES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I refer back to some questions and answers which took place in the House of Commons on May 24. I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) to explain her recent news release communique which clearly states that because of pressures brought to bear on the Government of Canada by various organizations such as the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Retail Council of Canada and other industry representatives, it was made very clear to her that she was going to have to reintroduce certain regulations affecting the implementation of metric in Canada. It was my concern that there was a recent court decision in the Province of Ontario which clearly exonerated retailers in that Province against charges that they were using Imperial against the law.

It was the decision of Judge William Ross that both Mr. Halpert and Mr. Christiansen should be permitted in the Province of Ontario to continue the use of Imperial and metric, or either measurement in their retail establishments. I wanted to know how the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs could reintroduce regulations making it illegal to use Imperial measurement in any form, in any retail establishment in the Province of Ontario, when she, as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, back on November 2, on page 28620 of Hansard said, and I quote:

> At the moment, of course, the law prevails and we will not be able to enforce any of those regulations in the Province of Ontario.

The Minister later extended that to include all of Canada. I asked how then could the Minister, in her communique on May 14, reintroduce amending regulations under the Weights and Measures Act which would make certain forms of measurement illegal in Canada? Her answer to me, I believe, corrects the problem, that is that she is not talking about the use of Imperial weigh scales. To use her exact words which are found in Hansard of May 24, 1984, at page 4010, I quote:

> In fact there were 242 member organizations at a metric forum that requested we put regulations in effect that would call for both metric and imperial advertising;—

She goes on to say, and this is the key:

> —advertising only. It does not refer to any use of metric scales.

That clearly means now that the Minister has decided that Imperial scales are now legal in retail grocery establishments. That means that it will not be against the law to weight in pounds with the use of Imperial weigh scales, or use metric weigh scales. The only regulation which the Minister is bringing into place, to use her own words, are regulations affecting advertising. Under the new regulations both metric and Imperial are to be used in advertising. This is further explained in an article in the Toronto Sun on May 25, 1984, which states, and I quote:

Erola said yesterday Domm was "manufacturing statements" about the new regulations. She claimed there would not be new orders-in-council outlawing the use of Imperial weigh scales.

This means very clearly that the grocers, not only in the Province of Ontario but in all other provinces and territories, have won a great victory. They now have the use of Imperial weigh scales, to use the words of the Minister, in their stores. The only requirement is that they use both metric and Imperial in their advertising. I personally see nothing wrong with that. In fact, I am sure our Party in opposition could endorse very easily the use of both metric and Imperial in advertising until we become more familiar with metric, if that is the route we are to take. What we in the Opposition are objecting to is the mandatory use of metric weigh scales with prosecutions to follow if Imperial continues to be used. That clearly is not the position of the Minister.

What we have now in Canada with respect to metric and Imperial measurements is a clear case where one can use yards, as they are doing across Canada in the advertising of floor covering, and one can use metres if one wishes. That is perfectly permissible in all of Canada. There have been no prosecutions in three years. We now have that extended to the grocery sector where one can use Imperial weigh scales, to use the words of the Minister, and one can use metric weigh scales or you can use either or both. However, they would like you to use metric and Imperial in advertising groceries.

• (1805)

That leaves only the case of gas stations to be resolved. Until those cases are resolved through the appeal court in Ontario, which will be sometime in the fall, it is permissible in Canada to use gallons or litres in the advertising, sale and display of petroleum products at retail establishments. We have voluntary metric in Canada today. We have the right to use Imperial weigh scales or metric weigh scales. We have the right to sell by the yard or the metre. We have the right to sell by gallons or litres. To use the words of the Minister of November 2, 1983, there will be no prosecutions in Canada until we clear away the appeal case. It is safe to put on record that Imperial measurement is now legal in Canada. You can use Imperial weigh scales if you wish. We would just ask that you advertise in both metric and Imperial.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Louis Leduc (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, last week, the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) claimed it was the Minister's intention to ignore the law with respect to Judge Ross's ruling in the Halpert-Christiansen case (Hansard, p. 4010, May 24, 1984). As the Hon. Member is no doubt aware, this court case was concerned only with the regulations for the sale of gas and diesel fuel in metric units. On May 14, 1984, the Minister announced, following many requests from industry and consumer groups, that she had decided to allow the retail sector to indicate prices for goods weighed in both metric and imperial units. In recent months, consumers had trouble comparing market prices, since retailers were not taking a uniform approach. The change in the regulations allows the use of imperial units for the purpose of advertising prices. All food prices must include a reference to metric units, and it is up to the retailer to decide whether he wishes to include imperial units as well, provided that most of the space is given to metric units. The word "scales" is not mentioned, and the Minister made it clear that the change in the regulations applies only to the use of both units simultaneously when indicating prices and in advertising. This decision takes into account the views put forward by the Consumers' Association of Canada and the Retail Council of Canada. Since the Hon. Member attended the conference on the metric system held here in Ottawa, he must have heard more than 200 organizations and private individuals say it was absolutely necessary to make metric conversion a success.

As far as phasing out the Metric Commission is concerned, the decision was made in May 1983, after lengthy consultations with many representatives from various industries, associations and individuals associated with the conversion program. It is a fact that as a result of the work done by the Commission, the provinces, industry and consumers, the program's various phases have practically been completed. There is nothing secret or mysterious about the plan to phase out the Commission. Information on the subject is available from the Commission itself.

I would like to point out that the amounts set aside in the budget for the salaries of the Commission's seven members do not total more than $156,000, well below the figure of $270,000 mentioned by the Hon. Member for Peterborough in the House last week. Perhaps he would like to create a benevolent fund to help these unfortunates.

FINANCE—FUEL TAX PAID BY FARMERS AND FISHERMEN—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, on May 9, I rose to ask a question of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) regarding the Government's blind determination to continue charging the farmers and fishermen of our country an extra 9 per cent for the cost of fuel in the production of food. I should point out that in addition to that 9 per cent they have to pay a 1.5 cent per gallon excise tax which is refundable, but simply adds an extra burden to the fishermen and farmers. It is an extra burden of paperwork of which they must keep track. It simply adds to the bureaucracy of our land in computing taxes.

Furthermore, I was just informed that the 9 per cent tax will go up another 1 per cent in the fall. As I said to the Minister of Finance at the time, that total amount of at least $200 million from the farmers and fishermen is a direct profit to the Government and a direct cost to the farmers and fishermen. Those costs must be passed on the consumer if these fishermen and farmers are to stay in business.

The answer I received to that question was a polite homily from the Minister of Finance, telling me that taxes are always necessary. He lectured me on the deficit of our country and that somehow the Government must cover the cost of that deficit. That was small comfort to the consumers who must pay that $200 million that the Government nets from that direct tax on the cost of production.

There is a choice in some industries of passing on that tax. For example, with respect to the plastics industry, which would have to pay that 9 per cent and soon 10 per cent tax because it is a petrochemical industry, the consumer will ultimately have a choice of whether he wants to buy a product. He does not have to buy the extrusions, molded plastics or throw away toys which that manufacturer is trying to sell to the consumer. There is a choice about whether a consumer wants to pay that tax. However, the consumer must pay the additional cost on the food because there is no choice.

The Consumer Price Index, which came out last week on May 22, indicates that it now costs $93 or $94 for the essentials of food for a family of four in this land. It was approximately $9 less a year ago. The Consumer Price Index keeps going up. The secret is that as much as the Consumer Price Index goes up, it is always going up less than the cost of food production. That means that the fishermen and farmers are in a cost price squeeze. They cannot pass on all the additional cost of production to the consumer because the price index does not go up that high, and they simply cannot afford to pay it. This means there must be some give somewhere.

I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that the fishermen and farmers in our country have to be the most efficient producers in all of the land. The multiplier of their efficiency has to be greater than any other in the country, yet the government is asking them to do more. It wants them to increase production, to become more efficient with a better means of production but not to charge the consumer.

If a fisherman uses 100 gallons of gas or diesel fuel to go to the fishing grounds, it will mean an extra $18 just to get there. If that fisherman uses 1,000 gallons of fuel in the fishing season, it means another $180 in the cost of production just for that one fisherman. Something must give and it certainly will not be the Government.

We only have to let our minds go back four years when the Government ran large ads during the election campaign. The present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) was putting out large ads to "vote Liberal and the price of gas will stay down". That is hogwash. The Government has a short memory about that. It sent on the cost of fuels not only to the farmers and fishermen, but to all those who use that fuel, including senior citizens and low-income groups.

• (1815)

I would remind you, Sir, that when it comes to the cost of food produced in Canada, the products of the grain farmers and the fishermen are the staples for the low-income families of our land. Wheat, oats and fish are staples. This Government is asking the low-income people to carry the additional cost now 9 per cent, soon to be 10 per cent, on fuel. That is an injustice that Canadians will not tolerate.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) has raised again an issue which was debated before this House on February 17, 1984, specifically that the federal government provide a further subsidy for Canadian farmers and fishermen by eliminating the 9 per cent federal sales tax on motor fuels used in their activities.

I wish to point out that the federal Government has had this fuel tax in existence for many years. In fact, in the autumn of 1978 it was 12 per cent. Later that year the tax was reduced to 9 per cent. Further, I would like to put this matter into perspective. The estimated cost of farm fuels in relation to total farm input costs across Canada is 8 per cent of the total. What we are talking about is a 9 per cent tax on 8 per cent of total input costs.

The Hon. Member referred to the 1.5 cent per litre refundable excise tax. To eliminate this for one sector of the economy would require identifying the fuel to prevent abuses by other vehicles or for other activities. I hope the Hon. Member is not suggesting that we add colouring to the fuel such as the Ontario Government did a few years ago that subsequently caused the farmers to have clogged fuel filters, ruined injectors, and ruined motors. Of course, the Ontario Government disclaimed any responsibility for this, although it did change to a different type of fuel colouring.

I do appreciate the Hon. Member's desire to reduce the share of the tax burden borne by farmers by eliminating the sales tax on farm fuels. Nevertheless, the tax only represents a small portion of the price of fuel. It is less than 3 cents in the case of a litre of diesel fuel which sells for about 35 cents a litre to farmers. Thus, on an individual basis, the relief the Hon. Member seeks would not be substantial.

Furthermore, all other users of motive fuels, including trucking companies, railways, air carriers, municipalities, mining and logging companies and individuals are not entitled to a tax concession on their fuels. It would be difficult to grant relief for farm fuels without also granting comparable relief for others who could argue that they too are equally deserving. Clearly such an exemption would significantly increase the deficit.

Adjournment Debate

IMMIGRATION—RECRUITMENT OF FOREIGN EXECUTIVES BY BANK OF MONTREAL. (B) PERMISSION GRANTED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) why his Department had approved the entry into Canada of about two dozen senior executives from outside of Canada for the Bank of Montreal and why he had also given authorization for the further recruitment of another 25 or 30 more people by the Bank of Montreal.

I pointed out to the Minister that no other bank was doing this, that this was being done at a time when we have a large number of Canadians who have graduated and taken post-graduate courses in economics, finance, in such fields as chartered accountancy and so on.

● (1820)

I pointed out further that no other employer was able to do that. Any other employer who wanted to bring in someone from outside Canada had to demonstrate to officials of the Department of Employment and Immigration that they had tried to recruit someone inside Canada and that neither they nor the Department were able to find a Canadian to do the job.

There were Canadians who could have done the work for which the Bank of Montreal recruited offshore. The Chairman of the Bank of Montreal, Mr. Mulholland, has been in Canada since 1969. He is still not a Canadian citizen. I assume it is Mr. Mulholland who has made the decision to recruit so many non-Canadians for senior positions within the Bank of Montreal.

Among the influential appointments made by the Bank of Montreal of non-Canadians are: Mr. Farstad, Vice-President in charge of credit at Toronto who came from Citibank in the United States; Mr. Allen C. Marple, Senior Vice-President and Division Executive in Toronto, from the Chase Manhattan Bank; Mrs. Elizabeth Wright, Vice-President and District Executive in Toronto from Chemical Bank; and Mr. Michael Cully who came from Citibank to be Senior Vice-President in charge of Corporate Planning in Toronto.

These influential appointments included: the senior officer responsible for the bank's corporate and government business globally, the senior officer of the international banking group, the senior trade finance officer responsible for promoting Canada's exports, the senior merchant banking officer, the senior petroleum industry officer, the senior planning officer and the senior loan syndication officer.

This policy of the Bank of Montreal means for Canada that a disproportionate number of key policy-making positions are involved, the result of which is a distinctly non-Canadian interpretation of the bank's responsibilities in Canada. The number of U.S. officers in senior positions in the Bank of Montreal exceed that of the other four major banks combined, all of which appear to manage their business with more success. I will deal with that later. Notwithstanding the bank's argument with immigration authorities that international post-ings are a two-way street, Greenwich Research Associates, a leading U.S. survey firm, reported that the bank "predominantly employs U.S. nationals in the United States, unlike the other Canadian banks".

More disturbing in the long run is the bank's recruitment policy. Each year a number of post-graduates are recruited for accelerated preparation for senior management. Again there is a heavy bias toward the United States. Extensive recruitement presentations are made at the better United States campuses, while a number of Canadian universities, such as the University of Saskatchewan, do not qualify. Harvard, Stanford, Wharton and several other universities in the United States receive official delegations of recruiters, but Canadian universities do not. Over a third of the jobs in the top tier of the bank's recruitment program go to United States recruits, while any number of young Canadians are not even given the opportunity to hear what is available.

The result is that morale in the bank has declined to a very great extent. One would expect that because of its recruitment policy the Bank of Montreal is more successful than other Canadian banks. Nothing could be further from the truth. In 1983, of the five major Canadian banks, the Bank of Montreal made the lowest profit. The Royal Bank had profits of $480 million; Toronto-Dominion $325 million; Bank of Nova Scotia, $347 million; Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, $314 million; and the Bank of Montreal, a mere $282 million. This is the bank which in 1982 paid no taxes and in fact received a tax credit of $22.4 million. This is the bank which in 1983 paid a tax rate equivalent to that of small businesses, a tax rate of 25 per cent.

● (1825)

The Minister should apply to the Bank of Montreal the same standards he applies to other employers who wish to recruit people from outside of Canada. He should make the Bank of Montreal prove that the vacant positions for which it wishes to recruit people cannot be filled by Canadians. We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in recent years to support post-secondary education. We have turned out more Ph.D's in economics, finance, accounting and every other field having to do with banking than ever before, and I simply cannot and will not believe the contention of the banks that they could not find Canadians to do the work, which contention has been, I believe, very casually and literally accepted by the Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) is probably aware, generally speaking, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission does authorizes Canadian employers to recruit foreign workers only under the following conditions: first, their admission does not prejudice employment and career opportunities for Canadians and other authorized residents; second, no qualified Canadians are available or want the jobs; and, third, the employer accepts, if deemed appropriate by the Commission, to have foreign workers train Canadians.

These criteria are valid for small and large businesses alike and each employer must prove compliance in order to be authorized to hire one or more foreign workers. The application made in 1982 by the Bank of Montreal was accepted in principle under this policy. In fact, only 26 persons were admitted to Canada even though approval in principle was granted for 42.

The Bank spent $8.5 million in 1981 to train Canadians, emphasizing the chances for promotion and self-improvement of its own workers. In Canada, they hired a very large number of new employees, first on campuses, through the CEC's and the other college and university employment services, and also elsewhere by advertising in the media to attract qualified applicants, and through the National Employment Bank and 18 private employment offices. In spite of all its efforts, the Bank was unable to find and hire Canadians with the required qualifications and international banking knowledge for certain management and analysis positions.

Contrary to what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North has stated, the Bank of Montreal was not favoured in this specific instance. In fact, a number of other similar applications were approved, similar in the sense that the jobs involved are very specialized and require unusual experience and expertise. Approval of such application promotes the planning of human resources by the industry, which operation stabilizes in return the employment sector and creates career opportunities for Canadians.

With respect to the hiring method used by the other banks or other employers in the same situation, it depends on the needs of each one. Some employers prefer to decentralize their international activities. On the other hand, the Bank of Montreal seems to have decided on centralizing its national and international operations in Toronto, and this requires the presence in Canada of experts in international banking operations, as well as specialists in banking systems and advanced techniques, and international economists with a detailed knowledge of certain areas of the globe. Their presence contributes to the transfer of technical knowledge and provides for a greater number of opportunities for Canadians, both here and abroad.

As I have just explained in answer to the question raised by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, the Bank of Montreal was not given more privileges than other institutions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.30 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works) moved that Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referrred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members are aware, the Government's housing policies serve all Canadians, whether they are home owners, tenants, members of housing co-operatives, et cetera, or whether they live in urban or rural areas. Federal programs are aimed at providing for the needs of people in all circumstances, be they women raising families on their own, the elderly, the handicapped, or people who cannot provide for themselves within the market system and need help. All these housing needs are of continuing concern. Before too long there will be opportunities to discuss some measures to deal with these problems.

The legislation before us today, Bill C-37, would give effect to the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan which was announced by my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in his Budget address. Since the program was put forward on Budget night, there has been a fair amount of discussion about it in the news media. Hon. Members, as well as the general public, are somewhat familiar with its contents. They are essentially the same as those announced by the Minister of Finance.

The premium would be in the order of 1.5 per cent for the first $70,000 of the mortgage debt or the face value of the mortgage if it is less than $70,000. Claims will be paid to compensate for some of the additional costs related to an increase in mortgage interest rates at the time of renewal. There is no payment for the first two percentage points of increase. That is what I would call the deductible. After that, the program will pick up 75 per cent of the increase up to an additional ten percentage points.

The protection period corresponds to the basic term of the mortgage. A five-year mortgage can be insured against increases occurring during the five years following renewal. Since interest rates can be changed during the first five years of such a mortgage and the protection covers the next five, the borrower is, in effect, protected for ten years. There will be opportunities, of course, at committee stage of the Bill to discuss detailed provisions. We will be happy to provide Hon. Members with explanations they may require.

I would like to speak for a few minutes today about some of the principles involved in this legislation. I would like to make clear at the outset that this is not a subsidy program. The Mortgage Rate Protection Plan operates on the principle of user-pay. In other words, the premium charged is intended to cover any claims which are likely to be made against the program and the cost of operating the business. The Government stands behind the program's obligations, but it is not expected to put any drain on public funds.

In that regard it is different from the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan which was introduced for quite a different purpose some years ago. The Mortgage Renewal Plan was designed to give temporary help to Canadian households that found, when they came to renew their mortgage, that they would have to make monthly payments amounting to more than 30 per cent of their incomes. In those circumstances home owners received a straight federal contribution of up to $3,000 to bring their payments down to a manageable level. Although the vast majority of Canadian home owners coped with rising interest rates without any help from the Government, some 21,000 households did receive help under the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan and for them it was a timely and effective assistance.

The new program, the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan, is a new and unique kind of assistance. It helps home owners to help themselves by making provision ahead of time to reduce the impact on the family budget if interest rates should rise more than two percentage points above the original rate of the mortgage. Another principle which should be recognized, Mr. Speaker, is that the program is not intended to compensate home owners for the full amount of every increase in their mortgage interest rate. That is why the home owner is expected to absorb the first two percentage points of increase and one-quarter of the remaining additional cost up to 10 per cent.

There is one other important feature which I would like to draw to the attention of Hon. Members. I want to emphasize that the provisions of this plan will be retroactive to March 1, 1984, as indicated by the Minister of Finance in his Budget Speech. This means, in effect, that regardless when the Bill is enacted into law, anyone who entered into a mortgage or renewed a mortgage after March 1 is eligible to take part in the program. If, for example, a home owner took out or renewed a mortgage on April 15, he or she may apply for coverage under the program as soon as it becomes law. Any claim will be based on the market mortgage rate prevailing on the day of that application, in this case April 15, the day the mortgage was entered into.

The Mortgage Rate Protection Plan is a protection against unaffordable losses. Some of the experiences which home owners have undergone in recent years with high and volatile interest rates have created a good deal of anxiety and shaken confidence in home ownership as a secure investment. The plan is designed to relieve that anxiety and to restore confidence in the housing market.

• (1120)

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention one other feature of the Bill which relates to mortgage and home owners' security. As the Minister of Finance mentioned on Budget night, there is widespread feeling that longer-term mortgages, mortgages to be renewed, say, every ten years instead of every five years or less, would contribute to the stability and growth of the building industry and alleviate people's worries about sudden disastrous changes in interest rates. One way of encouraging longer-term mortgages, the Minister of Finance suggested, would be a system of mortgage-backed securities. The Bill now before us facilitates the introduction of such a system by private enterprise. My colleague, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren), will speak on this aspect of the legislation before us.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think the vast majority of Canadians share my view that if the economy is given careful direction, we can be optimistic about our chances in the long term. However, it is no use pretending we live in a vacuum. Canadians cannot be insulated from the economic developments and realities in other countries and in the rest of the world. Since it is impossible to guarantee interest rates, we are offering a system that, if it performs as we expect it to do, will help us to survive or at least to keep our losses to a minimum.

[English]

One other purpose of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, is to serve people who find themselves in a very different position, people in the rural and outlying parts of the country who are in urgent need of safe and healthy shelter. For these people, the amendments which this Bill contains will strengthen the helping hand of the federal Government and allow us to act more quickly and effectively to help rural and native people achieve the cherished goal of so many Canadians, a home of their own. Furthermore, it will allow us for the first time to bring this urgently needed help to all qualified Canadians regardless of the province in which they happen to live.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that Canadians have some of the best housing in the world, there are still more than 600,000 homes in this country which are substandard. People are living in overcrowded conditions. Some are living in homes that are in a poor state of repair and for which they pay too much money. I am sure most Members of this House will agree this is unacceptable.

The Rural and Native Housing Program was implemented in 1974 and is intended for communities of less than 2,500 people. Forgivable loans are awarded for the purpose of rehabilitating homes and making them adequate from a health and safety point of view, and special loans are arranged for urgent repairs, especially before the onset of winter.

[English]

But the main emphasis has been on helping people to acquire their own homes by subsidizing mortgage payments and taxes and making a small allowance for utility costs.

• (1125)

The rehabilitation and repair services are funded solely by the federal Government. The Home ownership assistance and the small amount of rental assistance provided must, by the present law, be cost-shared with the provinces according to the terms of the National Housing Act.

While the program is intended to help all low-income people living in the designated areas, people of native ancestry—Métis, non-status Indians and Indians who live off the reserve—are unquestionably the most in need. They are among the worst housed people in Canada. Lack of decent housing is spoiling their health, shortening their lives and hampering their efforts to educate themselves. I can say, however, that the situation is not without hope. Approximately 150,000 homes have been acquired or rehabilitated under the Rural and Native Housing Program since it began ten years ago. I expect an additional 22,000 homes will be provided under that program during the current year.

Some improvements can be introduced within the terms of the legislation already approved by Parliament, but some very important changes can be effected only by the passage of the amendments to the Bill now before the House.

Perhaps the most important change is the amendment dealing with provincial participation. The Act now requires that assistance for home ownership under the program can be provided only on a federal-provincial cost-shared basis. This requirement has proven to be a serious drawback. I am inviting Hon. Members now to rectify the situation. Provincial participation in home owner assistance has been, I am sorry to say, somewhat haphazard. Prince Edward Island has not participated in this aspect of the program since 1977; New Brunswick withdrew from the program in 1983; British Columbia withdrew in 1984; and Quebec has never participated, although, to be fair, I recognize that the Government of the Province of Quebec has done a fair amount of work in the area addressed by this part of the Bill.

According to the 1981 census, more than 40 per cent of the rural households in need are in the four non-participating provinces. Even those provinces which are participating have specified terms and conditions under which they would not provide certain kinds of assistance to certain groups of clients.

In some cases, even with the best will in the world some provinces could ill afford their share of the cost.

Whatever reasons the provinces may have had for declining to participate, or for participating in a limited way, their decisions have made it impossible to achieve the original objectives of the Rural and Native Housing Program. I have given some importance to that part of the Bill because, although less dramatic than the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan, for a population which suffers the most from its present housing conditions, that part of the legislation is important.

Most of the provisions of the Bill before us regarding the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan and the mortgage-backed securities have been known for some time. They have been evaluated and publicly approved by organizations representing builders, investors, et cetera. The provisions of the Rural and Native Housing Program are also well known and I think respected by all Hon. Members who have an interest in social housing legislation.

The most significant aspect of the Bill is to make its provisions, for the first time in history, available to all Canadians. In the circumstances, I have no hesitation, in commending this Bill to the House for consideration. Hopefully, there will be a disposition to send it to committee where it can be fully discussed and given reasonably rapid passage.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I must say I have a special interest in the legislation presented in the House this morning by the responsible Minister.

First of all, I should emphasize that on this side of the House, my Party, which formed the Government in 1979, made a very specific proposal at the time to cope with the problems and dangers we were expecting even then. It is with regret that I must say in the House today that this Government prevented us from offering a guarantee, a homeownership plan, when we introduced a bill that would provide a tax credit to help homeowners, who as a result of the present Government's refusal to co-operate, experienced far more serious difficulties in subsequent months and years.

Mr. Speaker, I might add that the Progressive Conservative Party has also been concerned about improving the situation in the construction industry and giving thousands of Canadians a chance to own their own homes, and we expressed that concern in the proposal we made at the time. We have maintained our interest in these problems today, Mr. Speaker, and quite properly so, because we all know how much Canadians have suffered and the problems experienced by the construction industry, and the House is also aware that for millions of Canadians, the accompanying insecurity became almost unbearable at a given point.

I think the Minister will understand from our questions and our attitude in the House that we are very much interested in this Bill and that with him, we are very anxious to find ways to help more Canadians become homeowners. Home ownership is a concept that we value highly. Security in this vital sector of our economy is also very important, as well as stability, something I think we all want in order to create and maintain employment, for the sake of all Canadians.

I listened carefully to the proposals made by the Minister in this legislation, which is referred to as Bill C-37. I realize that the Government probably has very little room to manoeuvre regarding the amount of assistance it can offer homeowners, and the reason is quite simple: this Government, especially in the last ten years, has put this country deep into debt through its unbridled spending, so it is not surprising it cannot do more, as I believe the Minister remarked earlier. I know he would like to do more for all Canadians with his legislation on housing. However, we too are aware of the state of the Government's finances, and considering the doubts expressed by many sectors of our economy and the Government's uncontrolled spending and rising deficits, clearly the Government does not have much room left. The Minister said himself the government was not offering a subsidy. Thus, new homeowners or homeowners whose mortgage is coming up for renewal will, and the Minister made this quite clear, have to pay the cost of the program. The Mortgage Rate Protection Program tabled by the Government in the House this morning for the benefit of Canadians who are about to buy a home or who will have to renew their mortgage, is a form of insurance that will have to be paid for by the homeowners themselves.

I must add that the fact this Government waited so long before introducing its program . . . I wonder why it did not do so a year ago or two years ago, when it would have been far more beneficial, and the Minister realizes this, I am sure, for all homeowners in Canada. We would now be able to say that home ownership is available to all Canadians.

You know, Mr. Speaker, others often tell us: the right of ownership, the right of ownership! Of course, Canadians have the right of ownership, but can they afford to buy a house? That is why I would rather use the word "accessibility", meaning access to home ownership. However, access to home ownership means something only to the extent that Canadians can have affordable interest rates. It must be said as well—and I think the Government is aware of this, even though its Bill is long overdue—that it is important, necessary and even essential to have housing legislation. That possibility might have interesting effects depending on mortgage rates, and it is clear that home ownership can be achieved if interest rates are affordable, for housing is a key issue in Canada, particularly because of our winters. It is just as important as a policy for the survival of agriculture. Any Government which is accountable to the society it represents must bring forward what I would call very special measures in those two sectors. Since we are on the subject of housing, it has become quite clear that the Government can no longer evade the issue, and I regret that we had to wait so long for this piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I deplore this situation particularly because I think that, hardly six months ago, this Bill would have cushioned the impact of interest rates which are now climbing. The Minister did remind us that anyone who has renewed a mortgage since March 1 will be covered under this act. That is a good thing in itself, but the fact remains that anyone contemplating the possibility of buying a house in the next few months will be penalized to a certain extent because interest rates have been going up in the past two months and chances are this trend will continue. This Bill does offer some protection, but we are talking today in terms of 14 per cent, plus the 2 per cent operating margin set by the Government. So right now we are looking at minimum rates of 16 or 16.5 per cent, plus the contribution to the insurance program, since any such program obviously calls for premiums. But what the Government is doing is forcing Canadians to pay their insurance premiums without actually guaranteeing that interest rates will not be much higher than they are now, and that must be kept in mind if we are really intent on avoiding using the word "accessibility" as a mere catchword.

Still, Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House will give serious consideration to the Minister's Bill because, as I said, we know it is important and timely to offer Canadians as much protection as we can. The Government could have done just that a year ago, but it did not. Did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) or the Minister responsible then expect rising interest rates? I do not think so, but the truth of the matter is that this legislation is being introduced much too late and that Canadians will not get all the protection and assistance they need because the Government should have made its move a year ago. As I have already said, Mr. Speaker, four years ago, my party made a very interesting suggestion to help homeowners. Our proposal was rejected and nothing has been done ever since, except for the Bill introduced today. The Government is finally introducing a program to provide special assistance for homeowners; as a matter of principle, the Bill cannot be condemned because it provides special assistance to a certain group of people. Once again, Mr. Speaker, what worries me is that this assistance will not be enough to bring about a recovery in the building industry and to provide not just access to homeownership, but also the security which is essential for homeowners and stability in what we call the building or housing sector, which is vitally important to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister said earlier that, if the economy is managed carefully, interesting results will be obtained. The Minister himself is confirming that, if the Government had managed the economy carefully these last few years, it would now have more to offer homeowners. Because this same Government is to blame for not having managed the economy carefully, the Minister now has to introduce a Bill which will not have the results we would have wished or would have had, had the economy been carefully managed by the Government or, at the very least, had the same legislation been introduced 12 months ago. Access to home ownership would have been actually provided to Canadians at the same time as the security which Canadians need and the stability of the vitally important building industry.

The Minister said that this Bill also provides for the issue of mortgage-backed securities, for which subscriptions would increase the supply of long-term mortgage capital. Financial institutions with a mortgage fund could use this system to guarantee the subscribed securities. Of course, all opportunities must be explored to find money to finance those who need mortgages to buy a house.

The Minister also referred to the provisions of the Bill which deal with the Rural and Native Housing Program. Naturally, I have some reservations as concerns the provision which seems to exclude any financial participation of the Provinces, except wherever there is an agreement. The Minister has obviously deemed it appropriate simply to exclude the Provinces and let the Federal Government alone decide to help certain people. As for the principle involved—principles are always well and good, Mr. Speaker. In principle, the Minister is saying that all Canadians, wherever they live, are entitled to Federal Government assistance and subsidies. There is no doubt about that and we do not question this entitlement. However, we believe that, in a federal system, the National Housing Act should reflect the position and the needs of the Provinces and that the latter should have some input in what the Act provides. Of course, the Minister may be right in saying that certain Provinces are more or less interested in the type of grant that the Government is willing to provide. However, I take this opportunity to say that I would still like, and that my party will probably need, to know the real reasons why the Provinces have refused to participate. Perhaps they do not intend to participate financially and have no objection to the Federal Government implementing this legislation. We would still like to know the reaction of the Provinces. Are the non-participating Provinces not objecting to the Federal Government using this legislation to subsidize non-profit organizations directly or to provide them with assistance for home renovations? If the Provinces do not object, fine! However, I believe that it is important for the Provinces to tell us their views on the matter. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, we would be most eager on this side of the House to see the Provinces participate in the national major decision-making process in view of the relevancy of this very significant piece of legislation. We should ask the Provinces for their view on what they need, and to what extent they are willing, in co-operation with the Federal Government, to help rural centres and categories of people which, according to the Minister, are faced with housing and housing quality problems. This is quite commendable. The Minister has indicated to the House that there are in Canada some 600,000 houses in bad repair. I do not question his figures, Mr. Speaker, but I think we should encourage housing up-grading policies. It is all very nice to talk about new housing, but Hon. Members are aware that rehabilitating and repairing some of these houses which are really worth it could often cost a lot less. There is no doubt that we are clearly in favour of a very special type of assistance for these particular areas. However, Mr. Speaker, we insist that we should ask the Provinces what they think and find out whether they could come to a consensus, which would be in keeping with our current political system. As a National Housing Act most directly affects the social climate, we have no other choice but to urge all provincial administrations to go along with this legislation which at any rate should bring about interesting results for the Canadian people.

Over the past few years, Mr. Speaker, the housing situation has been seriously impeded by two serious factors, namely, high costs and shortages. They have been the results of high interest rates and unemployment, as well as economic uncertainties. It is a known fact that when new housing units fall short of the demand, shortages occur.

Current population figures in Canada indicate that 210,000 housing units per year with be needed during the first part of this decade. However, residential building has been clearly below requirements in recent years—159,000 units were built in 1980; 178,000 in 1981; 126,000 in 1982; probably 163,000 in 1983 and almost the same number is forecast for 1984. This leaves us with a shortage 200,000 units.

Due to cost increases, it is no longer profitable to build new apartment buildings. In Ontario, to pay for a new building financed at current rates, the landlord would have to ask $800 per month.

The Canadian Association of Housing and Renewal fears that in spite of increased assistance for the construction of rental accommodation provided in the last budget, the rent which the builder would have to charge to meet expenditures would be too high to remain a viable concern.

Economists generally believe that the desirable vacancy rate for rental housing is 3 per cent. Data on housing requirements were given in a 1981 review made by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The term "a housing unit" applies to every kind of housing whether they are apartment buildings, detached or semi-detached houses, etc.

Data on vacancy rates deal with apartment buildings with 6 units or more in the private sector. The survey on vacancy rates by CMHC is made in April and October. The figures for April 1983 will be available at the end of May 1984.

High interest rates on mortages had an impact on the price of housing in Canada. During the fourth quarter of 1983, the average sale price of a house in Canada was $76,800. If we look at a 10 per cent down payment plus property taxes of $1,200—while bearing in mind that total payments for principal, interest and taxes should not exceed 30 per cent of gross income—Canadians now need a family income of $36,200 to pay the average price for a home in Canada. In Toronto, Mr. Speaker, people need a family income of $46,000 to be able to afford the average price of $100,300, a home that in Vancouver would cost $114,000 and thus require a family income of $52,000.

Mortgage rates have dropped considerably since the fall of 1981, but this is cold comfort for people who were forced to sell their homes or are paying mortgage rates as high as 22 per cent. In fact, since the beginning of March, mortgage rates have increased 0.75 per cent.

The information on prices was provided by the Canadian Real Estate Association. The income figures are based on a twenty-year mortgage at 13.75 per cent. Figures for other locations are available on request.

Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to describe the kind of situation we are in at the present time and the hardship this represents for the Canadian people.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the Government's proposal can certainly not be rejected out of hand. I have the impression, however, that the sooner this Bill is referred to the Standing Committee, the better, so that the Committee can make a thorough study of this legislation. In considering the Government's proposal, in committee, we shall be in a position to hear relevant comments from the construction industry, the homeowners association, and probably, I hope, from the provinces. During discussion of the Bill in committee, we shall perhaps be able to produce amendments to improve the legislation and increase the likelihood that the Government's objectives, which in this case are ours as well, will be achieved. In fact, they must be achieved, and this has been obvious for some time.

Mr. Speaker, in the circumstances, I can assure the Government that we do not intend to waste Parliament's time irresponsibly, in considering the Bill now before the House. On the other hand, we shall probably expect a great deal more relevance from comments we shall hear in committee. Mr. Speaker, we shall insist that the parties concerned in the construction industry and in the business world ... We shall try, very objectively, together with the Minister and the Government, to examine the possibility of improving the proposals before the House today, in order to increase availability, security and stability in this area, for the benefit of all Canadians.

In the circumstances, the Minister will realize that many of my colleagues would like to comment as well and express the views and needs of their constituents. We must allow my colleagues a minimum of time to comment on this proposal. Generally speaking, I realize that the Government is trying to provide mortgage rate protection for all Canadians. However, Mr. Speaker, once again, it does not provide a response to the vital needs of Canadians.

I also realize that this Government, having put this country deep into debt, in a totally irresponsible fashion, has hardly any room to manoeuvre. This is really too bad, because if the country had had better government, we would now be able to do more to give Canadians a chance to own their own homes. As a result of its mismanagement, the Government has sunk the country so deep into debt that it simply has no room left to operate constructively when it has to deal with such basic and vital issues as home ownership. Members on this side of the House can certainly not be held responsible for that. But given the current context, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I will try in committee to call in credible witnesses who might be able to make to the Minister and ourselves more relevant and more challenging suggestions likely to make it easier for us to reach our objective, Mr. Speaker, which is to offer more assistance to Canadians whose ambition is to become homeowners. As a corollary, we know how important it is to enable more Canadians to own their home, because a Canadian homeowner usually has a more positive approach. In fact, he becomes a better citizen since he has a direct interest in his home, his municipality and his province simply because he owns something. There is a very significant social connotation with respect to the family, of course and a Canadian who owns his home has a different outlook on life. For all those reasons, including our Canadian climate and the economic impact, we will indeed be receptive to any housing legislation that provides assistance and implements a policy designed to meet the needs of Canadians.

Unfortunately, it is a little bit late to come up with the solution sought by Canadians. The Government has introduced a Bill which will offer some kind of protection but, as I said, it is not what Canadians have been asking for. I doubt that this Bill will have any impact on the recovery of the house construction sector. This legislation will probably only protract a problem which is already too serious, Mr. Speaker, but it will not succeed in rectifying the situation that we wanted to rectify as recently as four or five years ago; if people had listened to us then, they would at least have had a solution to meet the needs of the time and this solution could have been amended and improved. This would have helped avoid the problems thousands of Canadians have had to face and the difficulties they are still having.

The Minister introduced this Bill today. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we shall examine it with all the objectivity we arecapable of and must have to promote home ownership for Canadians. As for consideration in committee within a relatively short time and then in Committee of the Whole, I am quite prepared to have a very interesting and serious debate. I think that consideration at the committee level will probably have to take longer than expected in view of the importance of the issue and of our desire to listen to those who could help the Government do more to meet our objectives, which are to help Canadians and make homeownership more readily accessible, as well as provide the stability and security needed in the housing industry.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I say once again to the Minister that we view this Bill positively. We shall ask for further amendments at the committee stage. We shall insist on knowing the position of the Provinces as concerns the financial assistance the Minister wants to provide for native and rural housing and we sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that we shall succeed, in a very positive climate, in developing and approving amendments which would make this legislation even more helpful and encouraging for all Canadians who are trying not only to buy homes, but also to keep the one they have already bought. With this, Mr. Speaker, I leave the floor to other Members who will certainly show as much interest in this matter as I did myself and as the Minister did this morning, and we hope that, thanks to our work at the committee level, the Canadian public will hear proposals that are even more interesting and encouraging than the one we heard this morning.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party will be opposing this Bill for a number of reasons. We oppose it mainly because we believe that fundamentally it provides a rationalization for higher interest rates by giving borrowers the illusion that they have some kind of protection when in fact their best protection—long term, stable mortgage rates—has been taken away. It has been taken away over a period of time as a result of the Government's actions. I will review what the Government has done in that respect later.

This Bill also provides the context within which public criticism of the banks for its high interest rates might be muted through the illusion of providing protection.

This Bill represents an admission by the Government of helplessness. It is an admission that it does not have the political or moral will, the economic knowledge or a combination of those factors, to have an independent interest rate policy and a lower interest rate policy in this country. Instead of getting to the heart of the matter, the Government has chosen through this Bill to get into the protection racket as far as mortgages are concerned. It is not challenging Canadians to work with their Government to develop a low-interest rate policy and an independent interest rate policy.

What is provided in this mortgage rate protection plan, or MRPP as it will be known by acronym? For a fee a home buyer will be able to purchase mortgage insurance to cover some of the increase in monthly payments if interest rates rise very quickly. On the surface this sounds as though the Government has finally come around to recognizing the problem faced by mortgage holders some three years ago. Thousands were losing their homes or giving them up voluntarily at that time because mortgage payments were increasing from $200 to $400 monthly.

If we look more closely at the Bill, Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that this will be very expensive insurance. Premiums will be 1.5 per cent of the mortgage value to be paid when the mortgage is taken out or amortized over the term of the mortgage. We are looking at $1,050 on a $70,000 mortgage, or $11 a month. The insurance will be 2 per cent deductible. This means that if mortgage rates go up 6 per cent between the time the mortgage is taken out and the date of renewal, the insurance will not cover the increases resulting from the first 2 per cent increase. The insurance will cover only three-quarters of the increase in monthly payments over 2 per cent. Therefore, if the rate went up by 6 per cent, the coverage you would receive would be only 3 per cent of the increase, or 50 per cent of your costs. You really only get a significant benefit from this plan, and even then a questionable one, if mortgage rates rise dramatically.

It is appropriate to ask the Minister, how far does the Government expect interest rates to rise? Do we have in this Bill an admission that the Government accepts forecasts by some economists that interest rates will continue to rise and that we are going to go through another period like the one we went through a couple of years ago? Is that the implicit assumption buried between the lines of this Bill? If that is the assumption of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, then Canadians ought to be very worried indeed because they have here an admission of defeat on the part of the Government. This insurance will cover only 25 per cent of increased costs if interest rates rise by 3 per cent, 45 per cent of increased costs if mortgage rates rise by 5 per cent, and 60 per cent of increased costs if mortgage rates rise by 10 per cent. This calculation does not include the cost of the premium. With a conventional five-year mortgage at 12.5 per cent, which would be hard to get now, the total MRPP benefit over five years is calculated at $2,280 assuming, say, a $70,000 mortgage. If you subtract the $1,050 premium, the saving has actually been only $1,230. Over the second five years of your mortgage, you will have paid an additional $6,780 in interest payments. This is the case if interest rates rise a mere 3 per cent.

If the Government were to require banks and other lenders to offer long-term mortgages for certain social needs such as housing, the home buyer would have real stability in his or her mortgage costs and would save over $10,000 over that same five-year period, rather than the $1,230 which he would save under the context of the plan which the Minister is introducing today. Governments could offer home buyers ten times the saving on mortgage payments if it were willing to put some conditions on the lenders.

An indication of the way the Government has tip-toed carefully around the concerns and privileges of the bankers and other mortgage lenders is the Government's assumption that the net cost of the program will be zero. Thus, neither the Government which sets interest rates in the first place, or allows somebody else to set them but is nevertheless involved in the setting of interest rates, nor the banks which make huge profits from high interest rates while pushing thousands of Canadians out of their homes, as they did just a few years ago, will be asked to contribute to providing better security in the future. The plan is expected to be self-financing, as the Minister mentioned a few minutes ago. Who will pay the cost? The consumer will pay the full cost.

We are talking about home ownership, Mr. Speaker, and the value Canadians place on the ability to buy their own homes and live in them in security and with a reliable future. This is important to people in my riding, as I am sure it is important to people in the ridings of all Members of Parliament. I come from a suburdan riding located at the northeast corner of Winnipeg, an area which is still growing. New houses are being built. Many families are taking on home ownership for the first time. They are vitally concerned about this issue. In areas of my riding such as Lakeside Meadows, All Seasons Estates, the east end of Transcona and all through North Kildonan, we see people building homes and becoming concerned about interest rates. They are concerned more than ever before because they know, thanks to the experience of a few years ago, that things can get as bad as some people in the past have said they can get. Up until 1982 people did not believe that you could actually have interest rates that were as criminally high as they eventually got in Canada. Having been through that experience, people once bitten are twice shy. They now believe interest rates can go through the roof. Even as we get all this talk about rising interest rates, I am sure that is having an effect on housing construction in the area I represent. Up until now it has seen a bit of revival in certain areas of the riding.

What we want in the final analysis is an affordable mix of housing options, home options, for Canadians. This will mean more attention being paid to co-op housing, for instance. This is opposite to the direction in which the Minister is moving. There are cutbacks in social housing and cutbacks in unit allocations for co-op housing. Regrettably, we do not see the Minister moving on the co-op front. Other members of my caucus, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) and others who have concerned themselves about co-op housing will have more to say about that later on.

We need affordable rental accommodation. We have not seen any measures by this Government which went to the heart of that matter. We have seen lots of fancy programs like MURBs and things like that which even the financial community itself admits were not programs that reached the goals for which they were designed.

Finally, we need programs to encourage home ownership. I would say this is the option preferred by most people in my riding, and for this reason I shall pay more attention to this than I will to other areas, such as co-op housing. Home ownership is the preferable option for the people in the riding of Winnipeg-Birds Hill, as indeed it is for me and members of my family who live in the riding.

A home is usually the only major investment a family makes over the course of a lifetime. Most of the families in Winnipeg-Birds Hill are not worrying about the stock market or other various forms of investment. Their first worry is home ownership. I sometimes feel that I am in a strange world here when I listen to other Members of Parliament talking about various forms of investment, this tax law and that tax law. Most of the people I know are people whose only major investment is their home. They are not familiar with, nor do they have any desire to be familiar with, nor can they afford to be familiar with, the intricacies of investments on the stock market, or anywhere else for that matter. The investment they make over the course of a lifetime is in their home. It is certainly the most important investment they will ever make, even if it is not the only one. That investment should be a reliable and secure one. It should not be a gamble. Yet that is exactly what home ownership has been reduced to as a result of the policies followed by the Government since the mid-sixties when it began to change the structure of mortgage financing and mortgage policy in the country.

I have heard many older constituents, say those of my parents' generation, remark upon a strange irony which is working itself out in the riding of Winnipeg-Birds Hill as well as in other areas of the country. Many of the people who reached maturity in the early to late forties had a deprived or difficult childhood economically because of the dirty thirties. After the Second World War they moved into a world in which, unlike their childhood, they found relatively full employment, long-term, stable mortgage interest rates, and an economic security of which they and their parents could only have dreamed prior to that time. This is the generation which understandably often reminded their children of what it was like in the dirty thirties.

The irony about which I speak is that the children of that generation had the benefit of post-war economic security in their childhood. Their parents knew what their mortgage payments would be until doomsday. Their fathers had secure jobs. There was predictability and reliability. There may not have been affluence or luxury, but there was economic security. These children who grew up in an atmosphere of economic security are now being subjected to economic insecurity in adulthood as a result of the policies of the Government and the changes which have occurred with respect to mortgage financing.

I often hear parents remark, in a way that strikes me as ironic, about the difficulty faced by their children in terms of home ownership, when they have long since paid off their homes because they had 25-year mortgages at 6 per cent. Many of them are now retired and in perspective, compared with the circumstances of their children, they are in pretty good shape. Their children cannot ever expect to pay off their homes. Their children do not know what the interest rate will be from one year to the next. And they have a government which is committed to allowing unpredictability and confusion to continue.

What is the history of mortgage policy in Canada? In 1967 the Liberals freed the bank rate for mortgages which had been set at 6 per cent. In 1969, on the advice of Liberal Cabinet Minister Paul Hellyer, who since then has been a Tory, something else and is now reported to be seeking a Liberal nomination once again, the 6.5 per cent ceiling on National Housing Act mortgages was released and permitted to be established by market forces. I am sure the Conservatives liked it, as they like anything having to do with market forces. Again in 1969, on Mr. Hellyer's advice, the five-year rollover was introduced, allowing renegotiation of the interest rate on the mortgage every five years. Prior to this the interest rate on a mortgage was fixed for the entire amortization period, generally 25 years.

In 1973 Bill C-135, the Residential Mortgage Financing Act, was passed by the Liberal Government with Conservative support. The guiding principle of the Bill was to enhance the attractiveness of mortgage investment. Its effect was that by generating an increase in mortgage funds at the unrestricted interest rates, builders and land speculators were encouraged to concentrate on high-priced houses where profit margins were greater and to destroy the moderate and low-income housing market.

In 1974 the Liberals introduced AHOP, another wonderfully successful Liberal program! It was designed to give moderate and low-income people with high earning potential a chance to become involved in home ownership by providing moderately-priced dwellings at a subsidized interest rate. This was an attempt to help make housing affordable, but it was a horrible failure. It is now referred to as "AFLOP" due to the number of defaults on AHOP units. Half the units in some AHOP areas have been vacated due to quit claims or defaults. This is happening right in my own riding. Many people have come to me with this experience. The Government is currently undercutting the remaining AHOP home owners by selling units which it has recovered for up to $10,000 less than the original selling price. The assumptions on which the program was based were incorrect and some types of houses were overbuilt because of this scheme. Interest rates were allowed to climb. AHOP mortgages were not protected from huge increases when the five-year term was up, and incomes did not rise substantially in relation to other costs. AHOP home owners were given no protection against the vagaries of the marketplace.

In 1978 the Liberal Government introduced the concept of a graduated payment mortgage, insured but not offered by CMHC. The GPM has all the worst features of the AHOP scheme in that initial payments do not cover the cost of borrowing, so that by year six of the loan the borrower owes more on the principal than he did when he first took the mortgage out. There is no equity gained until year 11. In effect, people are renting for 10 years. Now they are having great difficulty with mortgage renewals at rates about 5 per cent higher than what they have been paying. When that occurred the Minister responsible for housing, the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Cosgrove), talked about expanding the use of the GPM rather than providing assistance for people in need of help.

In 1979 the Liberals continued to disentangle CMHC from the housing market by withdrawing altogether their direct lending as well as cutting back substantially on assistance to middle-class and low-income housing. From that point on the role of the Government in the financing of housing was to be restricted to that of a mortgage insurer.

By 1979 we had housing firmly in the hands of the private sector and housing costs had risen dramatically. The Economic Council of Canada estimates that over the seventies as a whole dwelling prices increased about 130 per cent, outpacing the Consumer Price Index which increased by 86 per cent. The whole area of financing has become confused, cluttered and almost unintelligible for the layman.

What was the result of placing this kind of trust in the marketplace back in the early and mid-sixties? Since 1967 mortgage rates have steadily increased, with only minor drops of short duration. In 1969 the Minister responsible for housing said: "I think the Canadian taxpayers would get cheaper money if there were not a fixed ceiling at the present time". When the Minister said that, interest rates were 9 per cent. We have not seen 9 per cent interest rates since.

● (1220)

The AHOP Program which was designed to get lower-income families into home ownership turned out to be a failure, particularly in certain areas due to government economic policy. The graduated payment mortgage, which is basically the same as AHOP in that you can postpone payments, has been difficult for people to afford and has not been too popular because lenders consider it a risky venture.

Lengthening the amortization period has not been much of an advantage to the borrower either. It vastly increases the take of the lender. In many renewals this is becoming almost standard practice. The selling point is that monthly payments will be slightly lower. Let us look at the results. If a borrower took out a $50,000 mortgage at 11.5 per cent amortized over 25 years in 1976, the payments would have been $508.24 per month. Five years later the mortgage must be renewed. The balance remaining on the mortgage is $47,660. The mortgage is reduced by less than $3,000 after making $30,500 in payments. That is what I call criminal. I have never been able to understand how that can be legal, but that seems to be the way the world is. That is why I want to change it.

To renew the mortgage the home owner takes out a new mortgage of $47,660 at 21 per cent. He would now normally have a 20-year amortization period. To make the payment more affordable, he may be offered a longer term which would reduce his monthly payments by about $10. In this case the extra five years will cost the home owner another $48,000 net and will keep him on the hook for further renewals and unpredictable rates.

It is quite clear that bankers are doing the public no favours at all by making these options available to home owners. The Government is doing the public no favours by allowing those kinds of practices to continue. The Government is co-operating with the Official Opposition as it did when we were reviewing the Bank Act. The NDP moved amendment after amendment attempting to bring the banks into line to make them act in the interest of home owners, farmers, small businesses and others in Canada who are affected by interest rates and other policies of the banks. Time after time the Conservatives and Liberals voted together against the amendments suggested by the New Democratic Party with regard to the Bank Act.

We see this kind of cosiness again in the softness of the criticism levelled against this Bill by the Progressive Conservative Opposition. This Bill does not challenge the domination of the housing sector by banking decisions. It does not challenge the power and influence of the banks in Canada. That is why the Conservatives are not that disturbed by it. They prefer their own mortgage deductibility plan which they introduced in 1979. They will have occasion to say why they think that plan was better. Actually, that plan probably is preferable to what we are being offered by the Government here. At least with that plan consumers would have some direct benefit instead of paying the entire amount themselves. In fairness, I can understand why they may prefer their own plan to the Government's plan. Our criticisms of the Conservative plan still stand.

However, speaking objectively, what the Government has brought in cannot be construed as a benefit to the consumer in any way except, by analogy, the benefit which accrues to someone who is asked to pay protection money so that his business will not go under. If that is a benefit, the Minister is to be complimented for being the Al Capone of the housing market with regard to this Bill. The Government is not only trying to keep its hand in the lottery business; it has now entered into another form of illicit trade, the protection racket. What will the Government find its way into next? We leave that to the Liberals' imagination.

The current interest rate debate is really a debate about social and economic values. It is about who is going to carry the burden for what in the country. It is no secret that the Progressive Conservative Party would be doing exactly the same thing with regard to the relationship between the Canadian and American interest rates. The Progressive Conservative Party supports even more integration of the Canadian economy with the American economy. I hope members of the Conservative Party will not get up and pretend that they would do anything different with regard to interest rates in the country. They do not have the political or ideological capacity to do anything about it. The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has as much as admitted that on a number of occasions. I am sure his frankness gets him into trouble with some of his colleagues. At least he had the decency to admit on a number of occasions that the Conservatives would likely not be doing anything fundamentally different. We saw that when they were in government in 1979.

We need to return to the concept of usury. Usury was regarded as a sin according to pre-capitalist social and economic ethics. We must consider whether we should continue to admire the people who exercise this kind of power over our economy and our lives by owning the money and selling it to us at these exorbitant rates. That is our value system presently. We admire the banks. We admire that kind of power and wealth. Should we continue to admire that kind of wealth? Should we continue to allow that kind of power and influence, wielded in a way which is not accountable to the common good and the public interest, nor for the effects that the decisions made in these so-called high places have on the lives of ordinary Canadians? The New Democratic Party feels that it is time we did something about that kind of power. We should find a way—and it is there—to subordinate the economy to the human ideal of fairness and to the well-being of humanity. After all, Mr. Speaker, the economy was made for man, not man for the economy.

I just learned this morning that the word "mortgage" means "pledge unto death" in Latin. I took Latin only in grade nine so I cannot remember whether that is correct or not; but that is what I am told. However, at current interest rates and under current circumstances, that is exactly what a mortgage in Canada is: it is a pledge unto death. A person's life will be at the mercy of the banks until the day he dies. He will never really own his home. It need not be so, Mr. Speaker.

The usurers should not be able to have their way in the world. All we need is the political and moral will to stand up to what I regard as organized theft by which people's very lives are owned by the banks. This kind of thing cannot be right, Mr. Speaker. I do not care what kind of moral gymnastics one goes through, Mr. Speaker; this kind of thing cannot be right.

We must rediscover the outrage that people once felt about this kind of thing. I think we have become too complacent about it. We have come to accept it as being like bad weather that goes on and on. It is not like the weather. It is a result of human decisions and it can be changed as a result of human decisions. It can be changed as a result of collective human and political decisions to do something about the way in which interest rates are set in the country and the way in which money is organized. In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, it is not simply a technical question; it is a debate about values and about who will bear what burdens in our society.

The issue is too important to be left to the economists. In fact, almost any issue I can think of is too important to be left to the economists because economists are a dime a dozen. One can find an economist who will advance almost any particular view that one would like to have advanced because economists do not practise the kind of science that people think they do, Mr. Speaker. The art of thinking about the economy is, in the final analysis, a moral exercise and not a technical exercise because one must begin with certain assumptions about what constitutes the good of society and about what kind of goals we are moving toward when asking how to organize the economy.

In my view, we in this corner of the House are trying to get people to think about how the economy is not the result of neutral or mechanical market forces but the result of decisions made by human beings, decisions that could be made otherwise and decisions that are based on certain philosophical premises and assumptions about the nature of things. The sooner we can start thinking about the economy in that way, the sooner we will be able to devise an economy both nationally and internationally that meets the needs of the human race instead of meeting the needs of the bottom lines of the international corporate elite. If today's debate regarding a subject which affects so many Canadians so very directly can be an occasion for asking those wider kinds of questions, then I think it will be very useful. I hope that I have made some contribution to that this morning.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I join in this debate with a great deal of interest because after four and a half years of inaction on the part of the Liberal Party, I must say that it is refreshing to see some action being taken by the Government.

The House will know that during the early 1980s the Government instituted a deliberate policy to keep bank interest rates as high as possible. This naturally caused mortgage interest rates to climb to the intolerable level of 14 per cent, 16 per cent, 18 per cent, 20 per cent and even 22 per cent. As a result, families lost their homes through foreclosures or power of sale proceedings, and in a period of rising unemployment and wage and salary cutbacks people found that mortgage payments ate up an increasing proportion of their take-home pay. Real estate values fell as home owners were forced to sell and mortgage terms were reduced from the standard five-year to three-year, two-year, one-year and even six-month terms.

The Liberal Party's high interest rate policy created chaos in the housing sector and fear and panic in the minds of Canadian home owners. We in the Progressive Conservative Party continually called for measures which would create stability in the housing sector for the industry and for the home owner. The Liberal Party turned its back on the Canadian home owner and the industry.

Finally, faced with the harsh reality of public opinion and demand, the Government relented and in the February Budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) promised certain measures to assist the Canadian home owner. We in the Progressive Conservative Party take pride in finally having forced the Liberal Party to listen to the ordinary people rather than to the banks and other financial institutions.

I would like to express my shock in learning that the New Democratic Party does not care about the Canadian home owner. Members of the NDP are rejecting this legislation out of hand. We cannot understand why members of the NDP have abandoned the Canadian home owner. This legislation is far from perfect but as we are Members of Parliament, I would suggest to my colleague in the New Democratic Party that we owe the people of Canada an effort to improve the legislation rather than rejecting it out of hand and railing against the banks.

In the Budget to which I referred, the Government promised three things for which we had been calling. First, it promised protection for the Canadian home owner against rampaging interest rates. We called for measures to allow Canadians to discharge their mortgage prior to the expiration date at a charge which was fair to both the mortgagor and the mortgagee. We referred in various speeches to the concern about short-term mortgages. In the Budget such measures were announced. However, we continued to call for the legislation.

I point out to the Government, the people of Canada and my friend from the New Democratic Party that during the course of the debate over bringing the legislation in, we pointed out to the Government a very serious error in its legislation and that was that the original provisions stated very clearly that the interest to be protected would be the market interest rate prevailing for the relevant mortgage term at the time the mortgage protection was taken out. That is the provision as it was originally stated in the Budget Papers. However, since March 1 mortgage interest rates have risen 1.5 per cent because of the Liberal Party's failure to control the rates and, as a result, Canadian home owners would have been prejudiced by the Government's delay in bringing in the legislation.

After we questioned the Minister of Finance in this regard, the Government backed down and announced that it would protect home owners at the interest rate at which they renewed or took out their mortgage after March 1 rather than the interest rate at the time their applications were finally approved. That is what I am talking about when I suggest to my colleague from the NDP that it is our job to improve legislation rather than simply reject it out of hand. The Government has now produced Bill C-36 which amends the Interest Act and Bill C-37 which appears to contain amendments to the native housing provisions of the National Housing Act, legislation which begins to put in place a plan to have mortgage-backed securities and legislation for interest rate protection.

In the time available to me, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal strictly with the mortgage interest rate protection part of Bill C-37, and when I close I would like to make some reference to the amendments to the Interest Act as they relate to an over-all safety net which will protect the Canadian home owner. In preparing my remarks, I was fortunate enough to have the input and co-operation of real estate lawyers in Orillia and Midland and of the Orillia Real Estate Board. I went to the people who would be handling the legislation at the street level. At the present time I am trying to meet with the real estate board in Midland and Penetanguishene to get their input.

I understand from documents which have come to my attention that the Government has gone to the financial institutions for their input and advice. I would suggest that the Progressive Conservative Party is interested in the people who will be dealing with the Bill, and the people who should be protected, not the banks and the financial institutions. I would like to pay tribute in my remarks to the input which I have received from the people in the riding which I represent.

I think that the Government is proceeding with uncharacteristic haste in this matter. This Bill received first reading on Friday and we are now engaged in second reading debate on Tuesday. If we allow for the weekend and printing time, it is unfortunate that the Government has rushed into second reading debate without giving other interested parties an opportunity to review the Bill. I would like to review what the Government said it would do in February and compare that with the concerns of my constituents and Bill C-37.

First, we feel it is necessary that the Government clearly and unequivocally establish the difference between a base rate and a mortgage reference rate. I would suggest that CMHC should set the rates because there is a difference between the rate in Toronto and the rate in Vancouver as opposed to the rate in Orillia and the rate in Midland. In my area there is a difference between the rate in town and out of town. I think it is important that the Government think about how these rates will be set on a monthly basis so that everyone will know exactly what they are dealing with. My colleagues in the legal profession were concerned. They felt that CMHC should establish this rate with objectivity and have the interests of the Canadian home owner at heart rather than the interests of the Canadian banking institutions.

I would like to bring Section 34.81 to the attention of the Government. The wording makes reference to the rate at which a home owner obtains a mortgage if it is higher than the rate at which a home owner originally borrowed the money. I think this provision is open to loose interpretation and abuse. If a mortgagor were to renew a mortgage with a third party who wished to abuse the system, it is possible under that wording that the mortgage could be renewed at an inflated rate. The question would then become whether the mortgagor was taking undue advantage of the renewal provisions in the Bill because the Government failed to tighten it up. If the Government would consider that, it might better relate what the pay-out will be to the CMHC rate. In other words, if the rate at which a person originally borrowed was 12 per cent and they renew at a CMHC rate of 16 per cent, I would peg it to the 16 per cent, not a mortgage to a third party at 20 per cent. I think there should be some protection provided, or some tightening up, so that the Government is protected against unfair abuse.

The next matter which I would like to bring to the attention of the Government is the concern expressed by my colleagues that the original proposal and the present Bill seem to state that the premium for the insurance is the same whether it is a one-year, two-year, three-year, four-year or five-year renewal, rather than being prorated. It was suggested to me that there should be some difference between the premium paid for a one-year term and that of a three-year or five-year term. In other words, the premium should be prorated. It may be intentional to encourage long-term mortgage renewals, or it may be an oversight which penalizes the person who, for one reason or another, renews his mortgage for a shorter term. I would ask the Government to take a look at that.

I would now like to turn to the section which deals with eligible properties. In the original proposal only the principal residence of a home owner would be covered. That included single and semi-detached homes, condominium units and mobile homes. In the case of duplexes and other jointly-held buildings, the qualifying mortgage would be apportioned to the unit being occupied by the owner. In Simcoe North there are a great many properties which qualify as duplexes—and I would suspect this is common across Canada—in which the owners occupy one half and rent the other half.

In addition, in Orillia and in my constituency of Simcoe North there are a great many properties which fluctuate between being a principal residence and a recreational residence. Many of my constituents retire from metropolitan areas, move to a recreational residence and make that their permanent residence. I would like to put a question to the Government: What happens to the owner of the duplex—if it is mortgaged as a duplex in which he is residing—when he moves out and sells it to a person who rents out both sides? Does the mortgage interest protection lapse because there is no owner occupancy, or does it extend for the term of the renewal? It might not be something which should be put into the Bill, but it should be dealt with by a regulation.

The next question I have is this. What happens when a person in a principal residence in a recreational area such as mine renews his mortgage, buys insurance protection and then sells to a person from out of town who uses it as a recreational property? Does the mortgage insurance lapse because the property has gone from being a principal rsidence to a recreational property? I am pointing these matters out because it is a question which real estate agents, lawyers, vendors and purchasers will be asking when they exchange properties.

I would like to refer to this matter directly. For practical and administrative purposes, the majority of the people I talked to felt that the payments under the plan should be between CMHC and the mortgagee. I realize that the person who is being protected is the mortgagor who owns the property, but from an administrative standpoint it would be easier for CMHC to deal with the institutions or the mortgages rather than having a third party involved—the owner. That would make it much easier, when a transfer of the property is made, to pin down where the payments are going and to have them immediately benefit the right people. I would suggest to the Government as well that that is a matter which should be dealt with, whether it be by regulation or by way of law.

I would like to pose a question about vendor take-back mortgages which were excluded from the Bill. I have been asked why they have been ignored in this legislation. My colleague from the NDP made reference to the fact that a home is often the major asset of a person. In a lot of ways it is the asset which is sold upon retirement. As a feature of that, the owners take back a mortgage. They take back that mortgage because they will receive regular payments on it and, as well, they can charge interest. Thus the question arises: Why are vendor take-back mortgages excluded? The purchaser of a vendor take-back mortgage will often find that they have a problem when they attempt to renew. In other words, if we are to protect them when they mortgage with an institution, why not protect them when they deal with the vendor on a vendor take-back mortgage? There may be a very legitimate reason for excluding that situation, but I would ask the Government to consider it.

The next question which arose from my discussions with real estate agents and lawyers was this. The Government does not seem to address itself to default. What would happen when the owner of a property which is mortgage protected under this plan defaults on his or her mortgage payments? If it is a technical default, which perhaps everyone has been guilty of at one time or another, of not paying taxes on time, would that eliminate the protection or would the protection survive that default?

Secondly, does the protection expire upon power of sale proceedings or mortgage foreclosures taking place? The question I have been asked is, where does the protection stand in case of default by an owner, either a technical default or an actual default where there is a power of sale or foreclosure proceeding? I cannot determine from my reading of this Bill last evening exactly how the measure stands on that.

The next concern which was expressed by real estate agents was that lending institutions would require the purchasers to take out this protection on a mandatory basis in order to protect the lending institutions rather than individuals. This would be an additional hardship which would discourage people from buying homes and the protection, because of the front-end mortgage premium. The real estate agents I have discussed this with feel that a mandatory provision—I do not suggest it is in this Bill and perhaps we should make sure it does not get in there anywhere—would decrease competition in the financial marketplace.

I suggested earlier, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to deal with the Interest Act, although it is another Bill, because when I talked to the real estate agents in Orillia they told me that as far as they were concerned those Interest Act provisions are of better benefit to the Canadian home owner than this insurance plan. Quite frankly, they feel that in times of rising interest rates this insurance will not be attractive. In times of low-interest rates, it will be attractive. However, where they felt the abuses were taking place were in the pay-out of the mortgages which, during the Liberal high interest rate period, were offered at 18 per cent, 20 per cent and 22 per cent. The Government's intent, as I read the Budget—and I have not had a chance to review Bill C-36—was that there should be a fair and equitable pay-out of mortgages, fair to the mortgagor and also fair to the mortgagee, on the basis that there are matched funds. But it was suggested to me that the Interest Act legislation will provide a better protection for the Canadian home owner than the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would say that it has to be obvious to the Government that our Party has not had an opportunity to discuss the Bill fully and to take a position as to whether or not we support it. However, I can assure the House and the Canadian people that the Progressive Conservative Party has been in the forefront in calling for stability in mortgage interest rates and a fair deal for the Canadian home owner. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that our discussions in caucus and our debate in this House will be based upon that principle.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Our rules now provide for a ten-minute period for questions or comments on the Hon. Member's speech.

[English]

Are there any questions?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have just a comment on what the previous speaker had to say very early on in his remarks. I believe it really goes without saying, but I would like to say it anyway, that it is completely unfair for anyone to suggest that the New Democratic Party, or for that matter anyone here in the House, does not care about the Canadian home owner. We may have disagreements with our Progressive Conservative colleagues and with the Government about how best that care ought to be exercised and what the real effect of certain policies will be. However, I believe it is certainly unfair and unwarranted to rise and suggest that we in this corner do not care about the Canadian home owner, although we have some very serious policy disagreements with the Hon. Member and his Party about how home ownership in this country ought to be fostered and increased and with respect to what other housing policies ought to be followed by the Government. We also share some of that Party's criticisms of the Government. I feel it is completely unfair to suggest—and I just want to put him on the record—that we in the New Democratic Party do not care about Canadian home owners. We obviously do, we always have, and we always will.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I listened intently to my colleague's remarks and I could discern from them no real effort to improve the Bill or to come to the defence of the Canadian home owner. I heard a lot about co-op housing, that kind of thing, but I did not hear any real effort to improve the Bill and that is why I was called upon to make that comment. It was from the heart.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that when a Bill gets into committee, members of the committee from all Parties will make an attempt to improve the Bill. We are debating the principle of the Bill and I spoke about what principles our Party upholds when it comes to a housing policy. I feel the suggestion that the approach of the Progressive Conservative Party is somehow to be exalted is unwarranted. It is trying to give the impression that its approach to this Bill will be non-political, and that it has only the interests of the Canadian home owner at heart when those Hon. Members go into committee.

I know the Hon. Member is going to rise and say that I have summarized his Party's position exactly. However, I do not believe that to be the case, Mr. Speaker. As is often the case in this House, one can reject a Bill, indicating that one is going to oppose it and then in committee try in every way to make the Bill—if it is going to be passed by an arrogant Government over opposition to it—as good as it possibly can be. Some Bills, quite frankly, are beyond redemption. We will have to see when we get into the study of this Bill whether or not it belongs in that category and just what kind of amendments we may or may not move. That remains to be seen once we get into committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any other questions? Debate.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I see that the greater part of my presentation will have to be given this afternoon.

However, in preface I want to bring to the attention of the House something which impressed me with respect to the whole housing question and public policy in the housing field. One of the first times I had anything to do with housing policy was when I attended a meeting in Yellowknife around 1965 or 1966. In attendance was the Hon. Jack Pickersgill, who is not a member of the Party which I support. Sometimes we on this side of the House have some rather nasty things to say about him. However, he was there at the head of this meeting listening to presentations on the subject of housing from many of the people who have now become my constituents. The people were coming forward and saying: "I live in a two-room house; I would like a four-room house". Or: "I would like to live in much better circumstances than I do at present".

To all of these inquiries and suggestions, most of which would entail the expenditure of public funds, Jack Pickersgill invariably said: "But you cannot afford it; your income is only so much. You cannot afford the type of housing which you would like. Is it proper that the rest of Canadians should make it possible for you to have the type of housing that you want? Because we all want the best kind of housing".

Therefore, in my presentation this afternoon I will keep in the back of my mind that housing, like everything else, has to be paid for; and to what extent should the individual be responsible for paying for his own housing, and where does the Government fit in? I look forward to debating this issue shortly after three o'clock, Sir.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

HUMAN RIGHTS

RESOLUTION OF DIFFERENCES BETWEEN TURKISH GOVERNMENT AND ARMENIAN COMMUNITIES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, will Members of this House and, through them, the Canadian people, apply their minds today to one of history's tragedies and remember the suffering inflicted on the Armenian people between 1915 and 1918? Over one million men, women, and children were slaughtered in an act of genocide which must take its place with events like the Jewish holocaust and the Ukrainian famine. Some people wish this problem would just go away so that mankind's collective guilt may be lessened, but the Armenian slaughter is an act of history and we cannot wipe the slate clean for the Armenian descendants by pretending it never happened.

Just as we in Canada have on our conscience our treatment of our fellow Japanese Canadians, so the Turkish authorities of the day and their successors, along with the major powers by their sin of omission after World War I, and mankind generally, have the Armenian massacre on their consciences. Justice demands an admission of guilt and then an expression of regret, contrition, and penitence by all concerned. Active steps are then needed to give effect to the resolution passed unanimously by this House on February 25, 1982, that the outstanding differences in problems between the Turkish government and the Armenian communities in Canada and throughout the world be resolved in a peaceful manner. I might also add, in a just manner.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE—HOUSE OF COMMONS RESOLUTION

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, last evening Members of Parliament were guests at a reception hosted by Canada's Armenian community. This reception served a number of purposes. Yesterday, May 28, was the 66th anniversary of the independence of the Republic of Armenia, which subsequently fell on December 2, 1920, to the combined invasion of communist and Turkish forces. It provided an opportunity to reflect on the genocide of 1915, when the Turkish government slaughtered 1.5 million Armenians. This was the first genocide of our century, yet, while documented and accepted as fact throughout the international community, it has not been acknowledged by subsequent Turkish governments. Lastly, it enabled us as parliamentarians to pay tribute to the great contributions made to our nation by the more than 50,000 Canadians of Armenian ancestry.

Such occasions as last evening serve to rekindle friendships, and re-emphasize the need for a peaceful resolution of the Armenian question, based on the spirit of the unanimous resolution of this House passed on February 25, 1982.

POOLS

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—FIRST WEEK'S OPERATION

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, no less than four Ministers of Fitness and Amateur Sport have had high-minded but false praise for the Sports Pool. Each Minister spoke of the great benefits the Sports Pool lottery would bring to fitness and amateur sport, the Calgary Olympics, arts and culture, and even medical research. Well, the reality is much different from the rhetoric. Eleven months after the passage of the legislation, following one week of sales, Sports Pool officials report that they do not have the foggiest idea how many tickets were sold, who is selling them, or where they can be purchased. However, they do know that no one won the jackpot.

Canadian taxpayers are on the hook to the Sports Pool to the tune of over $30 million. For that amount the taxpayers should expect something better than shrugs from Sports Pool officials. The beneficiaries of the Sports Pool were also expecting a good deal more. Instead of seeing cold, hard cash, they are seeing a patronage-ridden common betting operation tainting the image of all associated with it. Friends of the Government may not strike out with the Sports Pool, but it is clearly a wash-out for beneficiaries and taxpayers alike.

AIR TRANSPORT

FUTURE OF NORDAIR

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Very shortly the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) will have to make a decision concerning the Nordair resale, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the fact that Nordair was born in Quebec, that it has expertise in the air transportation business and that it operates in the Manicouagan riding through the Montreal-Fort Chimo flight, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Minister of Transport should examine and weigh very carefully the various offers that have been made so far. As a matter of fact, I feel that Innocan has made a most interesting offer for the purchase of Nordair; besides, this firm wants to keep its head office in Montreal and is currently managed by Quebecers; therefore I think that all these historical and economic factors should be closely weighed.

Moreover, I think that in the context of this resale, we should look into a possible merger with Quebecair, or at least an agreement whereby both airlines could work together to the benefit of the people of both Ontario and Quebec, since these two airlines are operating in both provinces.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CALL FOR EFFORTS TO SETTLE BRANTFORD STRIKE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, in my constituency of Brant a strike has been going on for over six months at Hussman Store Equipment Limited. The union has not been on strike for over 31 years. In that time there have been only three cases of arbitration. All the workers wanted was a continuation of the existing contract, plus COLA. The company countered with about 25 concessions which were totally unacceptable to the workers.

The reason I raise this in this Chamber is because the company is owned by Illinois Central, I believe, of the United States, and has been causing a great deal of anti-American feeling not only among the trade union movement in Brantford, but among the populace as a whole. In fact even the newspaper is sympathizing with the strikers. The union believes that the company is out to break the union, and the negotiator from the United States, Mr. Hawley, certainly has indicated that is possibly the direction in which they are going.

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) to get together and try to persuade the company to come back to the bargaining table so that these workers, who have not been on strike for 31 years, can get back to the negotiating table, get the strike settled, and get back to work.

FINANCE

DISPUTE OVER STATISTICS BETWEEN QUEBEC AUTHORITIES AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the old saying: "Plus ça change, plus c'est pareil" fits the Quebec Minister of Finance, Mr. Jacques Parizeau, like a glove. When he brought down his Budget last week, Mr. Parizeau said once again that if there were any problems, it was all the federal Government's fault, because federal transfer payments were being cut by $100 million, which would destabilize Quebec's economy.

Mr. Speaker, I have before me a document published by the Minister of Finance of Canada, the Hon. Marc Lalonde, in which he says that on the contrary, federal transfer payments to the province of Quebec will amount to nearly $5.9 billion during the current fiscal year, which means an increase of more than $220 million over payments for 1983-84.

On the weekend and the days following Mr. Parizeau's Budget Speech, people were saying: Another squabble about figures started by the people in power in Quebec City, by those people in the Parti Québécois who are always saying the same old thing, and basically, blaming the other guy.

Mr. Speaker, I think Quebecers have had enough of these statements. The Department of Finance and the Minister of Finance of Canada set the record straight in a speech the Minister made not long ago. I should like to say to Quebecers that once again, some people are trying to start a war of figures, which is not justified because in fact some increases are involved. I would urge Quebecers to be discerning and see where the truth lies, and that is what they will do and that is what they are doing . . .

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

MEDICAL CARE

HAZARDS POSED BY MALFUNCTIONING MEDICAL DEVICES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it was shocking to read in the media that almost 800 Canadian heart patients learned that their pacemakers are ten times more likely to fail than expected. Along with this, Canadian doctors and patients learned of defects in about 400 artificial heart valves.

What is equally astounding is that more than 10,000 new medical devices that flood the Canadian market every year get no pre-market screening. The only requirement for 95 per cent of devices used in Canada is that manufacturers be able to provide data on the safety and effectiveness of a product should the Government ask for it.

It is a situation that often sees health officials asking for data after someone has either been killed, seriously injured, or there has been a fatal malfunction of the medical device. Worse still, most hazards and misleading claims involving the devices still go unreported and therefore unresolved.

I find this a shocking state of affairs, to say the least. The constant worry alone by those whose very lives depend on these devices, not knowing when some malfunction may speedily and unexpectedly snuff out their lives, must be indeed a daily fearsome and traumatic experience. Therefore I appeal to the Government to take whatever action is necessary to resolve this enormous problem and to make certain that all medical devices can be used with dependability and safety.

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—BRITISH COLUMBIA APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, a major league baseball team would mean $85 million of stimulus to British Columbia's economy. Yet the federal Government jeopardized B.C.'s chances for a major league baseball franchise by promoting and pursuing its questionable sports pool.

Major league baseball has deep, well founded concerns about gambling. So should the Canadian Government, but instead it continues to gamble with B.C.'s prospects for a major league baseball franchise.

Its actions raise deep questions about what the Government's priorities are. Its priority does not seem to be sport. It does not seem to be economic stimulus for B.C. which is sorely needed. Rather, its priorities seem to be a regressive tax and Liberal patronage, jobs funded by those least able to pay.

In British Columbia the Sports Pool Corporation hired Lauris Talmey, President of the Liberals' National Women's Commission, as its general manager; Bev Hendrickson, executive assistant to Senator Jack Austin, as its B.C. manager of administration, and Ian Howard, whose company handles the marketing and promotion for the B.C. Sports Pool, was the Liberal Party's public relations director.

Betting in the Sports Pool is a poor investment, as the laws of probability and statistics clearly demonstrate, for everyone but the Liberals who get the jobs. Instead of creating jobs and real hope for Canadians, it only provides another chance for the gritty piglets to eat at the Liberal trough.

VIA RAIL

CALL FOR RESTORATION OF SERVICE BETWEEN EDMONTON AND VANCOUVER

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, many western Canadians and western municipalities have appealed to the Minister of Transport to put VIA Rail back on track between Edmonton and Vancouver. This passenger service, which is part of the transcontinental railway system, should never have been reduced in 1981. It must be restored and modernized so that increasing numbers of tourists will join western Canadians to enjoy this practical mode of transportation through the glorious, scenic splendour of the Canadian Rockies and Jasper National Park. Full passenger rail service must be restored in time for Expo '86.

A modernized VIA Rail passenger service from Edmonton to Vancouver will demonstrate the many values of this practical and enjoyable mode of transportation. Trains save more energy, have fewer environmental impacts, are safer and more reliable than other modes of transportation. There is no jet lag and no flat tires. There are both economic and social benefits in creating jobs and serving communities.

Western Canadians deserve the same opportunity for train travel as those who use VIA Rail in the Golden Horseshoe. Restoration of western services is a national responsibility and must be a priority of the Minister of Transport. Canadians are tired of past subsidies to CN and CP and their lack of accountability. The history of CP rip-offs is a national disgrace.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

HEALTH CARE

ADMISSION OF CANADIAN MEDICAL SPECIALISTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the threat of Canadian physicians emigrating to the United States was ever present during the deliberations on the Canada Health Act on the grounds that many physicians would move away from a medical system which they felt curbed their independence and impeded their ability to practise their art under optimum conditions. It is too early to judge the extent of this resettlement. It appears that it is small in number to date.

But there is some evidence already that some prominent Canadian medical specialists, many of whom have gained international reputations by innovating new techniques, have left, or are planning to leave Canada. For these internationally recognized leaders, the United States Department of Immigration makes special provisions, granting them a blanket certification, and admits them under a subcategory of third preference. The number of these Canadian physicians moving to the United States is not great, but the loss to the development of state of the art medicine in Canada is quite considerable. These specialists have been stimulating teachers and have provided an exceptional quality of medical care.

The problem is a serious one. It must be addressed by a committee of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, by representatives of the Department of National Health and Welfare, and by the Canadian Medical Association, in order to stem the brain drain of medical excellence from this country.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PERSIAN GULF—IRAQ-IRAN WAR—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. With the increasingly troublesome situation in the Persian Gulf, would the Prime Minister indicate if the Government is prepared to make a statement to the House concerning this situation, and could he outline if the Government plans to take any specific action to try to resolve this terrible, alarming conflict? We know that there was support for the United Nations Resolution 540 last October on behalf of the people of Canada, but is anything new being contemplated to try to resolve this situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the situation in the Gulf is one which is certainly very serious and to which the Government has been giving constant attention. There is no statement planned at this time.

The Hon. Member and the House will know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is meeting with his NATO counterparts now, as indeed we will be meeting in ten days in London at the Economic Summit. The Gulf situation will be discussed at both places. However, I know of no statement contemplated by the Minister at this time.

CONSULTATIONS WITH CANADA

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Would the Prime Minister indicate if we, as a Government, have been consulted by the United States, Great Britain, France or any other country that may have an interest in that area and, if so, what has been the nature of those consultations? Have we, for example, been invited to participate in any ongoing negotiations with the hope that a settlement could be reached?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it would depend on what the Hon. Member has in mind as consultations. It is a matter on which I have consulted in the various meetings I have had with heads of government, particularly when I was in the Persian Gulf a few months ago. Therefore, it is a matter on which there have been consultations.

I know of no formal request made at this time of the Canadian Government, nor have we made any formal request of the United States or any of the countries in the area.

Mr. Stevens: Of course, I am referring to the consultations that may have occurred since the escalation of the conflict, the damaging of various ships, and the killing of so many people.

INTERNATIONAL CONCERN

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, when answering the question about consultations, would the Prime Minister also indicate if any arrangements have been made to remove the 50 Canadian workers who are in Iraq, and possibly our Embassy staff, in the event that Iran carries out its threat of a massive attack on Iraq early in June?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to want to detach consultations about current events from earlier consultations. The war between Iran and Iraq is one which has been the object of attention by most nations for the past couple of years. We discussed it at great length during my visit to the area. I know that the Secretary of State discussed it at great length during his visit to the area.

I do not think that the current events are different, except maybe slightly in degree, from events which have worried the world and the people in the area for the past two years. We are continuing to consult and continuing to seek solutions to this problem.

I will be quite frank with the Hon. Member. We have no solutions. I have seen no solutions either in the minds of Governments in the area. They are faced with a war which everyone deplores and which no one seems to have the power to stop.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

VANCOUVER TELEVISION STATION'S APPLICATION TO RELOCATE TRANSMISSION TOWER

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications, who is absent. There are only 14 Ministers in the House, and only two of them are leadership candidates.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Friesen: Only two are interested in a British Columbia problem since only two leadership candidates are here. My question concerns a television station in Vancouver, and I will direct it to the Prime Minister.

Television station CKVU is planning, or is making application to relocate its transmission tower, thereby having the effect of dislocating channel 10, the community channel, as well as PBS channel 9, thereby putting PBS on either an impaired or a mid-band channel. Since the newspaper unions were on strike until last week, the public has been totally unaware of this application and, therefore, has been unable to prepare interventions. The closing date for the application is tomorrow. Can the Prime Minister direct the CRTC to postpone hearings in order to preserve some semblance of fairness and give the public a chance to prepare interventions with respect to that application?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is well aware that, first, the CRTC operates within its own guidelines as set down by Parliament. I would have hoped the Hon. Member, being a conscientious representative of that area of the country, would have made his own representations to the CRTC. It is not up to the Government of the day to make a specific response or to ask a specific question, as the Hon. Member is suggesting.

IMPACT ON PUBLIC BROADCASTING SERVICE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, as CKVU is trying to negotiate a sale of that station, and since PBS is one of the most popular stations because from 40 per cent to 70 per cent of its subscribers along the border are Canadians, I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary why the public who want to watch PBS have to turn to an impaired or a mid-band channel in order to enhance the sale of CKVU for a higher profit.

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we have no evidence that what the Hon. Member is suggesting is correct. On the one hand, I am surprised the Hon. Member is promoting the programming of PBS, an American channel, which is well recognized and received by many areas of the country. On the other hand, I would have hoped that the Hon. Member would be promoting Canadian content, Canadian programming, and the facilities of Canadian television stations.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

EFFECT OF NEW POLICY ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Communications. The Prime Minister knows that I have been here quite a long time, and I very seldom complain. But I want to say to the Prime Minister that when the Minister of Communications makes an important statement on film policy and changes in film policy, outside the House when Parliament is meeting, and he is not here to answer questions, there is something wrong.

The Minister of Communications has announced changes in policies which will mean the virtual destruction of the National Film Board as we have known it. The Film Board over 45 years has built an international reputation in explaining to Canadians and to the rest of the world what Canada is all about and what Canada has to offer. The Minister is proposing in his new policy to gut the Film Board. He wants the Film Board to contract out film-making work, to contract out all federal department sponsored production, and to contract out technical services. These were the recommendations of the Appelbaum-Hébert Committee. Representatives of the industry, artists and educators appeared before the standing committee. They advised against this policy. The standing committee advised against it. Why has the Minister rejected the views of the standing committee, listened to the private sector, and is proceeding with a plan to gut the National Film Board?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): First, may I say it is quite correct that the Minister of Communications today has unveiled a national film and video policy which will not only enhance the entire Canadian film industry but will also enhance the operations of the National Film Board. The Hon. Member knows full well, as a very dedicated member of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, that the recommendations made in this national film policy are the basis really of all the recommendations which the standing committee made in reply to the Appelbaum-Hébert report.

I do not know why the Hon. Member is saying that we are destroying the National Film Board. Quite the contrary, Mr. Speaker. The National Film Board will see no lay-offs; funds will be reallocated within the Film Board itself to enhance further not only the work it is doing but also to provide training and research for new film producers, writers, and actors.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CHANGE IN PRODUCTION POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, if the Film Board is not to get more money, and that is what the Parliamentary Secretary says, if the money is to be reallocated toward training and research, obviously there will be less money for actual production.

The Minister said that a stronger Canadian presence on our cinema and television screens is what he wants, yet he ignores the strength of the Film Board's track record and he will depend upon the private sector. We know that the private sector, if it is going to produce to make money, and that is why it is in business, will have to angle its productions toward the American market. That means there will be fewer Canadian oriented and more American oriented productions. How can you do that and maintain the strength of the National Film Board?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, one of the major aspects of the National Film Board, the current Board, is Studio D, which is mainly responsible for the productions of programs involving women's issues. Studio D has a tremendous track record. As a matter of fact, it has won a number of Academy Awards. Studio D in the past has hired independent producers and writers to promote and facilitate the various issues and ideas it wanted to produce across Canada. There is nothing new in this area. We just want to expend this operation further to give the private sector, the independent producer, the film maker, the writer and the actor more access to funds and to the availability of the film expertise of the National Film Board.

PROPOSAL TO CREATE CROWN CORPORATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr Speaker, the Minister has said he would like the National Film Board transformed into a Crown corporation. This is in line with the Bill C-24 proposal to make the Canada Council a Crown corporation. This will undoubtedly increase the bureaucratization of the Film Board and, increase its sensitivity to political influence. How will this help the National Film Board to produce better films or better fulfil its cultural ojbectives?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): It will make it more accountable, Mr. Speaker.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

HAND SORTING OF MAIL

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. As we know, Mr. Warren and the Canada Post people are running around like chickens with their heads cut off, trying to get the mail delivered. As an example, I would like to ask the Minister to check out the following. Effective last week all coded mail for New Westminster, Surrey, Delta, Port Coquitlam, and White Rock must be sent to those respective post offices for hand sorting. Previously that mail went to Vancouver to be put through the coding machines. Will the Minister inquire why Canada Post is not using the coding machines? After all, they cost the Canadian taxpayers millions of dollars.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE RESULTS OF INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister responsible for Canada Post. There have been a number of investigations into the Canada Post operation. The Security Investigation Branch had an inquiry into the computer assisted learning program, and the RCMP have been investigating the Canada Post Corporation. Will the Minister obtain the documents on these two inquiries and table them in the House so we can actually find out what is going on within Canada Post?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, last week or the week before that, the Hon. Member asked a number of questions when the President of the Canada Post Corporation appeared before the Parliamentary Committee. At that time, many of the allegations made by the Hon. Member were found to be entirely baseless. I do not think it is appropriate for the Hon. Member to use oral question period to ask questions that could have been answered perfectly well by the President when he testified before the Parliamentary Committee.

Considering the lack of truth in the Hon. Member's previous allegations, I am inclined to believe, if the Hon. Member would put his comments today in the same class, that his attempts to dig up examples of alleged mismanagement on the part of the Canada Post Corporation were not particularly successful.

DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMIC AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT— CANCELLATION OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has been trying to meet with the Minister for several weeks since the Estimates were brought before it. Indeed, the Minister has returned to the House today. He was scheduled to appear before the committee at five o'clock this afternoon to defend his Estimates for the first time since they were brought down over two months ago.

As these Estimates are to be reported back to the House automatically on Thursday if the Minister does not appear before the committee, would he tell us why the committee meeting for five o'clock today has been cancelled? Apparently, according to reliable sources, the meeting has been cancelled because "no Liberal Members could make it", even though that hour was set to suit the Minister's convenience.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I apologize, but twice I have been here on days when I understood that there would be a committee hearing. In both instances they were cancelled. I suppose one has to ask the chairman or vice-chairman of the committee, but it certainly has nothing to do with my availability. Obviously I would be quite happy to appear to defend the Estimates.

Mr. Siddon: The Minister knows that many important matters relating to economic and regional development agreements, the Special Recovery Capital Projects and other programs should be discussed with the committee prior to Thursday.

SCHEDULING OF LIBERAL PARTY FUNCTION

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister confirm, as we have been advised by reliable sources, that this evening at five o'clock there is a special event taking place called "Trudeau's Final Dinner"? Indeed, on checking with the Liberal Whip, there is a caucus party at that hour. That is the reason Liberal Members are unable to appear with the Minister before the committee today.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member was not reading from an invitation, but again I do not know. I am here—

Mr. Siddon: Then let us have the committee meeting at five o'clock.

Mr. Johnston: —and I think the committee work on the Estimates is important. The Hon. Member knows that I have always been co-operative in terms of appearing before the committee at any time.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

STORAGE OF NUCLEAR WASTE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. I am sure he is aware that last week Mr. Donnelly, President of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, stated that Canada has some interest in storing international nuclear waste from other countries. In light of the fact that not one ounce of the over 100 million tonnes of radioactive waste in Canada is properly permanently stored, would the Minister advise what is the Government's policy now on the storage of international nuclear waste in Canada? Would he table in the House any plans he or Atomic Energy of Canada has regarding the storage of waste anywhere in Canada?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that we have conducted extensive studies on this matter over past years. Substantial sums of money have been made available in terms of research for the storage of nuclear waste. There is a process in place which needs to be triggered before any decision is made in this respect. Therefore, the matter is well under control in terms of research and of procedure.

Mr. Fulton: I hope the Minister did not confirm that his Department and the Government have plans to bring nuclear waste from other countries into Canada for storage. It seems that was his answer.

NUCLEAR REACTOR SITES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister advise us whether the Government shares the views of Mr. Donnelly, and it seems of the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River, on the lucrative nature of radioactive waste storage for other countries? I am sure the residents of Prince George will be interested to know more about that. Would the Minister also indicate whether or not it is government policy to finance and construct nuclear reactors along Canada's border for the export of power into the United States? Would he confirm those points?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely ludicrous on the Hon. Member's part to suggest that my Department has the intention of bringing in any radioactive waste material. As far as his allegation of arranging, organizing or making plans for sites along the border is concerned, I should like him to substantiate his claims before even investigating them.

POOLS

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR LIST OF DISTRIBUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. It is quite obvious that the guidelines for selecting distributors or administrators for the new Canada Sports Pool Corporation are that if two candidates are equally qualified and one has links with the Liberal Party, the latter should be given the distributorship or position.

My question is as follows: Is the Minister prepared to publish today a list of the people working for the Corporation or who have obtained a distributorship? Could the Minister inform the House or the Canadian people whether it is true that Marie-André Bastien, Vice-President of the Corporation, has been guaranteed two years' severance pay?

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating my hon. friend opposite on his excellent command of French. I think my hon. friend's premises are false. Unfortunately, he has not had time to hear what I said on the subject, but I said very clearly last week that being a Liberal, a Progressive Conservative or a member of the NDP was not one of the job qualifications. In fact, I hope it will never be used as indication that a person is competent or has sales experience with respect to sports pools or lotteries. In fact, that is a criterion! Previous experience in a similar environment is another. So much for the first part of the Hon. Member's question.

As for the second part, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the distributors have yet to be selected. The President of the Canada Sports Pool Corporation informed me last week that no distributors had been selected and that the people who were selling tickets were doing so under contract, with the proviso that they would withdraw as soon as distributors were appointed. That should answer your question. No one has been appointed distributor. As for Mrs. Marie-Andrée Bastien, she was appointed by order in council, and that is public information you can check.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE LIST OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, if that is true, why not publish a list of the people working for the Corporation and who have been given a distributorship? With the list, perhaps the Minister might care to sell me a Sports Pool ticket, and we could then see whether there is a government in the free world that is more incompetent and more inclined to patronage than the Minister's.

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, speaking of patronage, perhaps I should quote what the Hon. Member's leader said a while ago. In New Brunswick he said publicly that if he were Prime Minister, he would wait fifteen years and then if there was only one Progressive Conservative left, he would appoint a Liberal. That is patronage. That is real patronage. And I am not about to get involved in that sort of thing, Mr. Speaker. All I have to say to my hon. friend opposite is: Do we have to publish names of all the people who work for Air Canada? Or the names of all the people who work for Canada Post? I do not intend to publish a list, and besides, I am told there are as many Progressive Conservatives in the Sports Pool as there are anywhere else. Except in the last election, when unfortunately, there were more Liberals than Progressive Conservatives.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

DESIGNATION OF PORT COLBORNE

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. According to a recent issue of a newspaper in my riding, the Mayor of Port Colborne told City Council that it has a preferred position in the region's special tier one designation for attracting industries to the peninsula. Could the Minister tell me what that special designation is within the region's special tier one?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member could give me a copy of the article. I have never seen the article or heard anything about the discussion. I will get back to him with a proper answer.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to supply the Minister with a copy of the newspaper.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, the Mayor has said that within tier one a special designation was given only to the City of Port Colborne. It did not include the other 11 municipalities in the region of Niagara. I am merely asking for clarification on that point.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the IRDP program is based on census areas. An area is to be treated as a whole. No one part of a census area is to be treated differently from any other part of the census area.

ESTIMATES

DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMIC AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE MEETING BE RESCHEDULED

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. It is supplementary to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta. The Minister stated that he would agree to go to the Committee meeting at five o'clock this afternoon. This is very important. Otherwise these estimates will be passed without any committee hearings. Will the Minister commit himself in the House at this time to get together with the chairman and re-schedule that meeting for five o'clock this afternoon?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I had not thought it was my responsibility to manage the committee schedule. I have said that I would be available. I am here. Apparently the meeting has been cancelled. That is the only knowledge I have of it. I am happy to try to comply, but I have taken it off my schedule, as a result.

CORPS OF COMMISSIONAIRES

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Uniformed commissionaires who are primarily veterans have served the federal Government for a long period of time. Is there a deliberate policy now to phase them out of use at federal institutions within the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I know of no such policy.

LAYOFFS AT TORONTO AND MISSISSAUGA

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister personally look into the situation? All of the commissionaires at the postal operations Gateway in Mississauga have been let go. At Toronto International Airport 40 of them have been laid off and they are hiring other security forces to replace them. More layoffs are expected very shortly. These veterans rely on this income to survive because they have very low pensions. Would he personally look into the situation to assure that they are not being laid off and replaced by others?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to look into the matter.

Oral Questions

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

WORKERS' CO-OPERATIVES—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Economic Development. The task force report on co-operative development strategy for Canada was received today. In the last number of years the Government has poured a lot of money into industrial development in many areas and then turned the industries over to the private sector. A few years later, after skimming off the cream, those industries often closed down their operations. This leaves the workers unemployed again.

The Government has indicated some tentative support for workers' co-ops which give the employees a vested interest in keeping such plants in operation. Will the Minister address the model of workers' co-ops in industrial development and job creation and give the workers the support necessary, rather than passing that money on to the corporate sector?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I have always been a big supporter of the co-operative movement. I think it has many exciting dimensions and is one of the greatest forms of free enterprise. I am delighted to hear the NDP supporting it so vigorously. I intend to make some statements about the co-operative movement in the course of my campaign.

HOUSING CO-OPERATIVES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, since we have that unequivocal support by the Minister, would he support the idea of establishing an infrastructure and support structure for workers' co-ops which would allow those co-ops to develop? That kind of structure was in place for co-op housing and has been undermined by the Government in the last few months. Would the Minister re-establish that kind of support for housing, and also establish support for other groups of co-op development, particularly for worker co-op development as recommended in the co-op task force report?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the opportunity of reading the co-op task force report. I certainly shall do so. I am told that the efforts of the federal Government in the housing sector have certainly not been reduced at all. It remains a priority. I have just discussed the matter with my colleague, and he would deny adamantly the suggestion that that is being done.

In terms of the co-operative movement per se I would be very interested in considering any structures which the Hon. Member may care to propose. Having wider ownership through the co-operative movement, or through shareholdings directly, and the kinds of incentives that were provided in the last Budget of the Minister of Finance, are all excellent. I would like to look at any proposals the Hon. Member would care to make to me.

RAILWAYS

ALFALFA PRODUCTS FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It relates to another chapter in what I could call the alfalfa products freight rate issue in southern Alberta. I hope the Minister recalls my question of last January regarding this matter. At that time he responded very positively that alfalfa products were indeed entitled to the new freight rate schedule.

The Minister should now be aware that the railways, specially the CPR, are charging Tirol Dehydraters of Tilley, Alberta, an extra $400 per container. They are attempting to make this surcharge retroactive to the first of the year. Would the Minister indicate how the railways can ignore the direct instructions which the Minister personally gave to the CTC western division and the railways on this alfalfa freight rate issue?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been looking into the second round of complaints which came forward on that particular issue. The railways are claiming that the containers are not railway property, but in fact belong to the marine company which has the actual outright ownership of the containers. They say that it therefore does not fall under the rules of the Western Grain Transportation Act, but rather under the Railway Act and they therefore do not have to apply for new tariffs. However, the Canadian Transport Commission does have the authority to rule that in fact the container tariff can be ruled on under the WGTA. The CTC has not yet ruled on that particular complaint. I expect that it should be able to do so. Therefore, it would have the discretion to determine to whom the containers belong. If it rules that the containers are an asset of the railways, it would come under the jurisdiction of the Western Grain Transportation Act. At this point in time that is up to the CTC to decide.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONDUCT INVESTIGATION

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. I would like to thank him for the substance of his comments. The Minister should be aware that during the adjournment debate on this matter last January 23, the Parliamentary Secretary on duty on that particular occasion speaking on behalf of the Government made this statement:

● (1450)

Alfalfa or any other eligible crop is entitled to move at the statutory rate, whether it moves in containers or by other more traditional means.

Tirol Dehydraters, in a recent letter to the CTC which was copied to the Minister, and I am sure the Minister did receive that copy, had this to say:

> We spent 10 years developing the market to Japan. If we have to pay anything over and above the new W.G.T.A. rate, we may as well cut back our production and lay off staff because we won't stay in business very long.

The railways are obviously playing games here, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister please look into this matter once again?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I concur with the Hon. Member's sentiments. I think the railways are finding ways to get around the rules. However, in this case there is no doubt that the claim that containers are in fact subject to the railways' own discretion under the provision of the Railway Act is something we are looking at in terms of its legality. I have had legal officials in my own Department examining that, but at the same time the Canadian Transport Commission quite clearly has the authority to rule on the matter by declaring that the containers fall under the provisions of the Western Grain Transportation Act. I will immediately pass on the concerns of the Hon. Member to the Chairman of the CTC so that the CTC will come down with the ruling which, of course, we would both hope would be a favourable one.

FISHERIES

DISPLACEMENT OF FISHERMEN FROM VANCOUVER WHARF

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who told the House more than two weeks ago that, within a day or two, he would tell us what arrangements he had made for the 60 fishermen who were displaced from a fishermen's wharf in Vancouver when the Minister issued a private, individual, an exclusive lease for a wharf that the fishermen usually use. I am aware that the Minister may have issued this lease in good faith and that he may have been misled regarding the nature of the support for the lease. However, my question is quite central to the issue of conflict of interest. How can the Minister justify issuing an exclusive lease to a member of one of his own advisory councils, particularly when the advisory council itself never dealt with the issue in any sort of forum?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has said, we do have a Minister's Advisory Council on the Pacific Coast, which is composed of about 18 people who are actively involved in one aspect or another of the fishing industry. It is precisely because they are active in the fishing industry in one way or another that they are members of that advisory council.

Regarding the particular case referred to by the Hon. Member, the reason why I approved that proposal was because many people, organizations and, if my memory serves me correctly, even the City of Vancouver, supported that project which, as the Hon. Member knows, was designed to help the fishermen sell fresh fish on the market. As well, we have taken measures to ensure that all fishermen will have proper berthing facilities in one way or another.

LEASING OF WHARF

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the same Minister. The Minister's answer has shown that he still fails to understand that he issued the licence for the lease on the basis of support which was not there. He issued it on the basis of a misleading petition which was signed in good faith by people like the head of the union and representatives of the vessel owners' association and the gill-handlers' groups, et cetera, none of whom knew that the result would be the issuance of a licence to a member of the Minister's Advisory Council and the displacement of 60 commercial fishermen. Since these fishermen will now be issued summonses by the Minister's own Department in violation of an agreement to find other facilities, will the Minister order his Department to cease and desist in the issuance of the summons until he and his advisory council can review this issue? Why does he not call for the resignation from his advisory council of the man who is benefiting from having access to the Minister?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would agree with me that we cannot condone vandalism and illegal vessel tie-ups at a float. I am sure the Hon. Member would agree that the law of this land applies to everyone and that under no circumstances can vandalism be condoned.

Miss Carney: What vandalism?

Mr. De Bané: Second, I cannot agree with the Hon. Member when she is insulting the intelligence of all those who signed that petition who, as she said, were union leaders and representatives of fishing organizations. I cannot believe that the City of Vancouver and the other organizations to which the Hon. Member referred supported that request, while today the Hon. Member is saying that they did not know what they were signing. I would never be tempted to have such little consideration for the intelligence of our people.

MEDICARE

PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY—DEFINITION OF A RESIDENT OF ALBERTA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Health and Welfare and deals with the indication by the Government of Alberta that it may try to get around the universality requirements of the Canada Health Act by changing the definition of a resident of Alberta. I was wondering if the Minister had any views on this latest run-around of the Canada Health Act by the Government of Alberta, and whether or not she has any contingency plans, either by amendment or regulation, to address this issue should the Government of Alberta proceed in this way?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Member's impatience to see the Canada Health Act fully implemented and respected. However, in the case to which he is referring, it is not a runaround by the Government of Alberta. Rather, it is a document from officials which has been leaked, and the Alberta Minister of Health has denied it. I must go by his word. In theory, if a province were to try to bypass the law of Canada by declaring residents of a province to be non-residents, it would be an obvious case against the Canada Health Act. My officials are monitoring the situation daily.

PROPOSED NATIONAL HEALTH COUNCIL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might also ask the Minister a question with respect to the implementation of the Canada Health Act. Perhaps she could bring the House up to date on her plans for a national health conference out of which might come a national health council as recommended by the Canadian Nurses' Association and other groups. How are those plans proceeding? Can we expect that that kind of event is being organized and will happen shortly, so that we can get on with the debate about the future of medicare?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes, we are working on it, but the top priority for my Department and myself in which we are investing most of our efforts and energies is the drafting of the regulations and the consultations with the provinces about the regulations under the Canada Health Act. Today I sent draft regulations to the provinces. That is my first priority. A small group of people within the Department has already started working on the next step, which is a national health conference. As soon as the work on the regulations is done we will invest all of our time and energy in this very important project.

Does the Government plan to extend the use of direct funds transfer?

● (1500)

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the pilot projects have not been completed. They are carried out on a very limited basis in a way which is voluntary for the public servants involved. We have not made a decision to extend these projects across the Public Service. A decision will not be made until the pilot projects have been completed and the results have been thoroughly evaluated.

FINANCE

ALCOHOL AND TOBACCO TAXES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, who is presently getting a Sports Pool tip on what to buy.

My question is not related to the Sports Pool. It is related to the task force report on alcohol and tobacco tax indexation. In early May the Minister stated in a press release that he would make a decision on the task force report after the Ontario and Quebec provincial Budgets were brought down. Now that both of those Budgets have been tabled—without any increases in alcohol taxation and only a minor increase in tobacco taxation in Quebec—can the Minister honour the commitment which he made in his process release? Can he tell the House and the industry what recommendations of the task force report he is prepared to consider or he is prepared to agree with?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that I will study the task force report. As the Hon. Member said, there was a tax increase on cigarettes in the Budget of the Province of Quebec. I am also considering the implications of that tax and will make my decision public in due time.

REQUEST THAT TAXES NOT BE INDEXED

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, it is because of this type of delay that the tourism industry is suffering so badly. I wish the Minister would act. He promised a decision after the Budgets were tabled. Those Budgets have now been tabled. May I ask the Minister if he could at least assure the tourism industry that the present unfair and unproductive ad valorem tax will not be indexed to the CPI, in order to give the industry some breathing room this year?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps one of the best ways the Hon. Member might make himself useful to the tourist industry would be to stop being ridiculous by making the kind of allegations we have just heard.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. LeBlanc that Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is always necessary to get the right balance when it comes to matters of government intervention in the housing market. If one looks back over the last 20 years one will find that two things have happened, one as a direct result of the other. First of all, we can see that those people at the lower end of the market are probably better served today than they were 20 or 30 years ago. Those people who would normally have found themselves living in very poor circumstances, in shacks and what have you, have now, by and large, a reasonable standard of housing. But we have paid for this, because whatever one does in the realm of public policy there is always a cause and effect relationship.

On the other side of the equation we have lost a certain amount of individuality. We have become more dependent upon the state at various levels of government, whether it be federal through CMHC, provincial or at the local level and, of course, we have paid for this in increased taxation. It is always a problem as to where we draw the right balance when the Government becomes involved in the affairs of Canadians.

My approach to Bill C-37 this afternoon will be non-partisan. I would like to address the three main points in the bill which is before us today. The first issue with which I would like to deal is the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan which was promised earlier this year in the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). In my opinion, this is a reasonable approach to take on the question of fluctuating mortgage interest rates. The only problem with it, Sir, is that it is brought in now instead of when it was really needed a year or two years ago. That was the time when people were experiencing a very rapid increase in mortgage interest rates. That was the time, Sir, when householders were leaving the keys to their domicile on the kitchen table and abandoning what equity they had in their house, walking out the door and leaving their house to the tender mercies of the mortgagee. That was when this provision was really needed. However, knowing the Liberal Government and its interest rate policies, I suspect that if it is allowed to continue in office we might very well have a repetition of those extremely high interest rates. Therefore, it is wise of us to address this matter today.

There are a couple of principles which I believe should be built into the scheme. First, the scheme should be voluntary. People should not be forced to pay the premiums. It should be their choice whether or not they want to insure their mortgage. At a time when interest rates are already high and the likelihood is that they will decline rather than increase, I see no real advantage to the mortgagor assuming this extra premium payment in order to insure his mortgage. Also, in my opinion, the scheme should be self-financing. I do not feel that it should put a further burden on the public treasury. With any insurance scheme, unless you get into some kind of re-insurance deal, there is always some risk. However, as far as possible this insurance scheme should be actuarially sound, as should any good insurance scheme.

When I read through Bill C-37, I find it a little hard to understand some of the details because, as is the case with so much of our financial legislation, it is couched in rather difficult terminology. There are a few items on which I would like further information and I will undoubtedly get this at the committee stage. My first question is how one computes the premium for face value of mortgages in excess of some $70,000? It is rather unclear how one goes about doing that. How is the premium to be paid? Is it to be paid as a lump sum when a mortgage is taken out? Or is it to be paid in monthly instalments?

The method of payment of the premium is something which gives me a little cause for concern. How will the payments be made out of the insurance fund if someone has paid the premium, the interest rates go up and he is eligible to collect back? Will a separate cheque be issued each month to the mortgagor? Is that the way it is going to operate? Will the payments be made to the mortagee rather than to the mortgagor so that the mortgagor pays the standard amount every month, apart from the deductible? Is that the way it is to operate? These are things which will have to be examined in further detail when we get to the committee stage. At the same time I would like to look at the various application forms and everything else which appears to be so necessary when we get into schemes of this nature.

Something else which is dealt with in Bill C-37 is the mortgage-backed securities. I have advocated this for some time as well as other Hon. Members on this side of the House. We believe it is an interesting concept. If one looks at the United States experience with its "Ginny Maes," I believe one will find that this has worked to the advantage of the housing market there. I am pleased that the Government is beginning to see the possibilities of fostering a greater availability of mortgage funds through this mechanism. I suspect that if the system is successful, it could attract substantial amounts of individual savings into the mortgage market. At the present time there are no vehicles in existence which allow the savings, especially in small amounts, of individual Canadians to be put into that mortgage market. By using as intermediary a financial institution, which is envisaged under Bill C-37, we could encourage that. It would be an attractive means of getting more money into this area of the economy.

I have some questions as well as to how the government guarantee might work. I had hoped that before I gave my presentation I could have heard from the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) who, we were given to understand, would speak on this issue and provide us with some of the details. Undoubtedly when he does speak, he will answer some of the questions which have arisen in my mind. How exactly will the guarantee system work? Is it contemplated that institutions issuing mortgage-backed securities will pay a fee into some kind of central fund which is used for insurance purposes? I suspect that that might be the most likely way of doing it.

If there is to be a central fund which can be used to defray expenses in respect of those institutions which do not make a go of it themselves, how is this fund to be administered? It is obvious that the Government will have to have a large say in the control of this fund. But surely the institutions who put up the money would want some say in the administration thereof so their premiums, for want of a better word, can be kept to a minimum. I would not want to see that fund, as it builds up, used for government purposes. Their government would pay 4 per cent interest the way it does with the Canada Pension Plan funds.

● (1520)

A question that arises, Mr. Speaker, is, if the issuer of the mortgage-backed securities goes bankrupt or finds itself in grave financial difficulties, how will the Government exercise its guarantee to the small investor in the securities? Will the monthly return of principal and interest be made in a continuing manner, or will the Government want to keep to itself the option to pay out on a lump sum basis? I can see where that might be of advantage to the Government or the administrators of what might be called the insurance fund, if that is indeed the way the Government wishes to go about this program. Again, it would be necessary to hear the advice of those who wish to appear before the committee.

The third issue dealt with in this Bill is that of enhancement of the Rural and Native Housing Program. If I might summarize the provisions, the first is an increase in the funds available for these purposes. I do not know if this is included in the Bill, but it is certainly referred to in the Minister's press releases that went out with the Bill. The second point is the removal of the provincial contribution requirement. That could have good and bad points about it. The third is an initiative to allow subsidization of utility and fuel costs in remote northern areas.

I now have some comments on the Rural and Native Housing Program changes contemplated by Bill C-37. I do not pretend to know much about the situation as it exists in the provinces, so I will speak mainly of my practical experience in the Northwest Territories. It seems to me that the delivery of the services, whether they be health, education or, as in this case, housing, or any type of service, can better be done by the lowest level of government involved. They are the ones who are the most sensitive to local needs and conditions. When housing services are delivered to the public, my experience has generally been that the territorial government has done a better job of it than the federal Government. In the Territories this is done through the instrument of territorial government called the Northwest Territories Housing Corporation.

Despite difficulties it has had in the past, this corporation has on balance done a pretty good job. It is constantly looked at by members of the legislature, and I understand another study is going on of this corporation. But it is a sign of the interest the legislators take in matters of housing and in design of programs, which by and large are delivered in an effective manner.

If the federal Government is to get involved in housing programs of this nature, then it is probably better that it be through block funding rather than the actual delivery of services. I know that is very difficult to accept, especially by Members on the Government side, because you do not get the political credit and they are always anxious to receive that credit. If you just transfer funds in block from the federal Government to a territory or provincial government, you do not get that credit, but they like to think that they do if they deal with individuals.

As to housing in remote rural areas, I think one of the things that we should focus on is not so much the individual housing itself but the provision of proper municipal services such as water, sewers and paved roads. In much of southern Canada things are taken for granted, but in my area of the country there are very many residences that do not have sewers or running water.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc), in his presentation this morning when this Bill first came up for discussion, talked of the need to improve health standards through improving housing standards. One way you do that is to have proper running water and sewers. It does not matter how fancy a house you have, you still have problems unless you can hook up to a proper sewage network. So perhaps a better role for the Government in these circumstances would be to help in the financing of these municipal-type services which, in the north in particular, in permafrost areas, are extremely expensive. It can cost eight to ten times more to lay a mile or kilometre of sewer there than it would in southern Canada. Perhaps public funds are better spent in this area rather than trying to do something for every single individual.

In the Northwest Territories, again under the surveillance of the territorial government, the SSHAG, commonly referred to as SSHAG housing projects, have been fairly successful. My predecessor from the Territories, a gentleman by the name of Wally Firth, advocated this type of program for some time. One of the very few things he spoke on in this House was his advocacy of building houses out of local materials using local labour. As a result of his representations and those of many more people, this program came into being and has been reasonably successful. The idea is that you get a grant of maybe $15,000 to $20,000 and build a house out of local materials such as logs using your own labour. That is the theory. Sometimes in practice the amount of government funds which have gone into these things has been way in excess of the amount stipulated.

These are some of the things I wanted to talk about. There was a lot more, but there is not enough time, so I will give you the benefit of my other observations in the future, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): A ten-minute period is now provided for questions or comments related to the remarks of the hon. gentleman. Are there any questions? Debate.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Minister for giving us this opportunity to discuss housing generally under this Bill. Housing is a very important part of our life. I would not say everyone, but most Canadians cherish the hope that they will some day own their own home. Because of the economic conditions which have existed over the past few years, many have come to the conclusion that they will never be able to own their own home, so they want to get security through the next best way, that of renting a home.

● (1530)

On the other hand, there are people who do not want the responsibility of owning a home, paying the taxes, cutting the grass and shovelling the snow. That is their privilege. A former colleague in the Alberta Cabinet said that he got to the point where he just did not want to be bothered with owning a home. He would much rather have someone else cutting the grass and shovelling the snow. He was quite happy, during the last part of his life, to live in rented accommodation. There is a place for both ownership and rentals.

I want to focus my remarks today on the various means by which the Government should make available the opportunity for Canadians to either own or rent homes with some security. I will do so from a broad point of view.

First, I would like to deal with one or two points raised by the Hon. Minister about the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan. When I read this Bill last night and heard the Minister speak this morning, I questioned why the Government is getting involved in this program. It is an insurance scheme. Did the Government contact the insurance industry in Canada to determine if it was prepared to develop an insurance policy that would provide some protection? If not, I suggest the Government has missed one of its responsibilities. We have a very viable insurance industry in this country which I believe would be quite capable of devising a plan that would give protection from interest rates if it thought there would be enough money for it to operate successfully.

Although the regulations have not yet been published, it appears that the premiums for this plan are very high. They may or may not be reasonable in contrast to the estimated cost or potential cost of the program. However, the fact that it may cost $1,050 as a maximum premium on a $70,000 mortgage will in itself prevent many people from buying this protection since they will have used all of their money to buy the home. Second, I do not see any indication in the Bill about whether this premium has a duration of six months, as many insurance policies are now, or for a year or, as the Minister stated this morning, if the coverage would be for ten years, at five years with a five-year renewal.

If this premium is to be semi-annual, I do not foresee anyone except the very rich buying this particular policy. A few more may be able to afford it if it is an annual premium, but certainly we should be trying to help those who are least able to help themselves. I question whether those families can afford $1,050 to buy the protection.

Let us use the example of hail insurance on a crop. A farmer depends on that crop for his income after a year of work. There are some farmers who have other income and do not insure the crop because they can absorb a loss for one or even two years. They will take a chance by not insuring against hail or frost in a particular year and consequently save that premium, which is a substantial amount of money, if there is no hail or frost. Others cannot afford to buy the insurance because their cash flow is almost nothing and they are therefore forced to take a chance. It will be the same situation with regard to this insurance scheme.

Those who are hardest hit with rate increases on their mortgages will be the ones who are unable to take the protection. That is one of my objections to this Bill.

I would also like to see the regulations since this is only the bones of the Bill. I want to see what the figure will be once all of the regulations are contained in the Bill. It will make a difference as to whether these regulations are sensible and designed to help the poor and middle class or will simply be a gesture that will not help people who really need it.

I want to see the rest of this proposal before it decide to support it or whether my constituents, whom I have the honour to represent, will be able to afford it or if it will help those who need it. With respect to the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan, the Minister said that this is protection against "unaffordable losses", in his words. Of course, the Bill does not protect against unaffordable losses when the interest rises because there is no protection whatsoever when it goes beyond ten points. Therefore, it is not really protecting against the unaffordable losses, only against some losses.

I would like to spend a few minutes speaking about the next item which is a very important part of the Bill. That is the section on the Rural and Native Housing program. It is called the RNHP. Certainly this program was designed to help those who need it the most. Apparently, it has not been working very well because a number of provinces withdrew from it and the Province of Quebec did not participate at all; that province could not see any advantage to the program. Prince Edward Island went into the program, but withdrew in 1979 because it did not find that the program worked satisfactorily. New Brunswick withdrew in 1983 and British Columbia withdrew in 1984. The Minister did not give us any reasons why these provinces withdrew, and I have not checked but we must assume that the provinces did not believe it was working to the advantage of their people. I think we generally agree that provincial governments should be working for the benefit of their people. Apparently, these three provinces did not like the plan and consequently withdrew. The Minister said that 21,000 people received help, but did not specify over what period. However, 21,000 is a reasonable number of people to have received help under this program.

I believe there is a need for this type of legislation. For example, there is a single parent in my riding who has three children. She is doing her best to raise her family properly. She asked me if there was a program that could help her because her house needs shingling and new doors. The winters are rather cold in Alberta. The temperatures sometimes go down to 40 and 50 degrees below zero with a wind chill of 70 below when the wind is blowing. That may not last for many days, but that temperature on one day could freeze someone if there is not the proper protection. This lady is worried about how she is going to meet the costs of renovating, rehabilitating her home. I hope this program will help this person and people like her. There are quite a few people in these circumstances.

RRAP is of assistance. RNHP, according to the Minister this morning, should be another avenue of assistance for the very needy and single parents, particularly women, who have to work and keep their families. They have a tough job making ends meet. Day in and day out they worry whether their health can stand it. They do not make enough to rehabilitate their homes. When they have the advantage of owning a home, it is far better than having to pay rent. If they can get assistance to rehabilitate their houses so they can live in them for a few more years, it is an advantage. Perhaps a roof needs attention. Maybe shingling has to be done. Perhaps they need to put a furnace in the basement to distribute heat throughout their homes to keep warm. They may need proper windows or storm doors. Plastering may be needed. These are things I would like to see included in the Rural and Native Housing Program.

There are people in Canada, and we can find them in every constituency, who have a tough time. In some cases it may be partly their own fault, but largely it is through no fault of their own. People are left with children and burdens. They do their utmost to pay their own way, but some cannot make it. These are the people we all want to help. The single parent who I mentioned is an example. I hope this program can help to shingle her roof or to fix up her house so that she and her children will not be cold every time the wind blows or every time there is a storm.

As the Minister said this morning, this Bill is also for the native people. I cited a case two years ago concerning people on one of my reservations. I have three reservations in my riding of Bow River. In this case 22 people were forced to live in a house that was built for a family of five or six at the most. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, 22 people living in a house. It is not healthy, hygienic, or sound. In a country like Canada, it is neither sensible nor reasonable. Our Indian and native people should not be subjected to that type of thing.

I hope the Government will present a program that will help our native people to rehabilitate their homes. There should be other programs giving our native people and Indian people incentives to build homes in which they can raise their families. Indian women like a nice home just as much as white women do. Indian women like their children to be warm and properly looked after, just as any other mother does. Indian women cry when their children are cold and hungry. They bleed when a needle pricks them. They are human beings. Many people forget that our Indian people are human beings. I once told a chap that a son of a certain Indian had passed away. He shrugged his shoulders and said "so what". He was the son of a native person and that was the biggest loss he ever had. Anything we can do to provide our Indian people with an incentive for them to have homes and to help them rehabilitate their homes so they can have proper living conditions will make this country greater. This is desperately needed and I agree with the Minister on that point.

We should try to help people to own their own homes. Some people have given up hope that they will ever be able to buy homes. With the prices today many people in their 20s, 30s, and 40s have given up hope of ever being able to buy a home. When you talk about $79,000 or $110,000, you might as well say a million dollars because the amount is meaningless to people who are working day by day and living on pay cheques from week to week. They have never been able to earn high salaries. They would like to have a home. They decide to do the next best thing, which is to rent a home. It gives them a little security.

There are programs available. I want to deal with only one. I am very interested in the co-operative program. I believe the co-op program is a free enterprise program. When the men of Rochdale started the first co-operative, they did not say "we will cut prices". They said that they would charge the regular prices and profits made would go to the people involved. That is free enterprise as far as those people are concerned. It may not be free enterprise for others outside the co-op, but people can secure rental housing, run their own affairs and have security. I want to commend the department for help it has given so far on co-operative housing.

I was very disappointed with the answer given by the Minister the other day when he said that he was cutting back on that program. That program is helping hundreds of people. It is hurting the free enterprise system. Houses are put up for tender. Every dollar given to that program creates homes. When the homes are built, there is no longer a worry to the Government. People run their own affairs. People have some security because their rents are set. If the utilities, the taxes or the interest rate on the mortgage goes up, they know what they have to do, and they run their affairs accordingly. They are all managers of the business. They increase their rents. There is no blame put on the Government. If the rent, the fuel costs, or the mortgage rate goes up, they realize they have to pay a little more. It gives people the freedom to run their own affairs. They do not come to the Government wanting a hand-out. They pay their rents and they run their own affairs.

There is a co-operative in my constituency. This co-operative has some very poor, some not-so-poor, some middle class and a few who are well off in it. As a matter of fact, 72 per cent of the people earn less than $10,000 a year. Eighty per cent earn less than $20,000 a year. The other 20 per cent earn over $20,000. These people have no social stigma at all. No matter what they earn, they all live in the same place. They are members of the same co-operative. They run their business. This is an avenue I would like to see the Minister look at again. It does a tremendous service. Every dollar put into that program goes into building another house. Many of the programs of subsidies and rentals build no new homes.

I see Mr. Speaker indicating that my time is almost up. Obviously I will not be able to deal with the other rental and subsidy programs, all of which have their place. I like programs which enable people to help themselves and to run their own affairs. I think there are few other matters more important than housing; housing and food are the basic requirements of our people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments relating to the Hon. Member's remarks? Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe the Government would act so foolishly by bringing forward legislation such as this. In the course of the last three years or four years the Government, with the assistance of Governor Bouey and following the lead of the United States, has allowed interest rates to rise to a point where the majority of Canadian families are afraid to purchase homes. As young people look out their apartment windows—and if they are looking out apartment windows in places like Ottawa, they are paying far too much for them—they think of a day when they might have been able to purchase a home of their own. Families always believed that homes were important and that some day they would not only put a down payment on a home, but finally pay it off. They believed that would provide them not only with an investment for the future but with a place within which to live as long as they wanted. The actions of the Government since 1980 have resulted in that becoming much more of an unreality and much less of a reality than it had been previously.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), in speaking to the Bill this morning, set out chronologically the way in which the Government has pursued its policy going back as far as 1967. I will not go over it verbatim, but starting in 1967 the Government made the first of a number of terrible errors in terms of mortgage interest rates. I know, Mr. Speaker, you are not quite old enough to have actually been involved in it, but I am sure you will remember the day when people could assume mortgages with fixed interest rates over a reasonable length of time. They were reasonably secure that they would be able to pay them off. It was not a fluctuating interest rate; it was a fixed-term mortgage. People paid a certain sum from the date of purchase until it was paid off. Starting in 1967, the Government eroded that system to the point, if we look back only two years, where young families and not so young families were faced with mortgage interest rates of 20 per cent and 21 per cent. I want to make it quite clear that the proposed solution does not address the fundamental problem.

The Bill guarantees that interest rates will rise. It makes it possible for financial institutions to allow interest rates for mortgage purposes to increase year over year, claiming that in fact the burden is not being carried by the families involved, that they could have purchased insurance and, therefore, if they did not, it is their own fault. The Bill requires that interest rates rise by 3.5 per cent from their present position, whatever it may be for individual mortgages of individual families all across the country. Interest rates have to rise by 3.5 per cent before any benefit accrues to individual families. In essence, this means that interest rates in the case of one-year mortgages, which are approximately 12 per cent, can rise to 15.5 per cent before a single benefit accrues to the individual paying the mortgage.

In the case of five-year mortgages, with interest rates at 14 per cent, the interest rate can rise to 17.5 per cent or nearly 18 per cent before any family would benefit one iota from the particular plan. In fact, interest rates can fluctuate substantially without a single person being able to take advantage of the program. People must put their money up front, 1.5 per cent of the outstanding mortgage. They may be able to pay it by attaching it to the mortgage, in which event they are paying not only the 1.5 per cent, but the interest on the 1.5 per cent over the amortization period. The facts are clear. Interest rates will not be held to an acceptable level for Canadian families as a result of this piece of legislation.

It is fraudulent to say to people that somehow or other this legislation will solve or go even part way to solving the terrible dilemma which confronted so many of them between the years 1980 and 1984. I cannot help but feel that somehow or other the Government has missed the point.

Who is responsible for interest rates going up? If we are to believe the Government, the fault lies with the United States Treasury Board. If we are to believe the Government, it was the fault of the U.S. administration that people in Canada were forced to abandon their homes as a result of mortgage interest rates rising to a point where they could not afford to make their payments. If that be the case, there is something terribly wrong with the relationship between our financial institutions and U.S. financial institutions. More important, there is something wrong with a government which allows the kind of relationship to develop in Canada vis-à-vis the United States that permits something as crucial as mortgages for housing to be determined in another country.

I see the Government House Leader and the Minister responsible for housing present in the Chamber. I put to them that we have to confront interest rates. We do not need fancy schemes. We have to find ways to hold down interest rates for the purpose of assuring that families in Canada will be able to purchase homes of their own at prices they can afford. If we are to encourage the maintenance and further development of what has always been not only the dream of Canadian families but the reality of Canadian families, that is the ability to buy their own homes, we must establish instruments to ensure that people who work in Canada can afford the cost of their homes and their mortgages. This legislation does not do that.

Mortgage interest rates can be set in Canada. Instruments can be found to provide the necessary capital from all investment capital currently made available through all financial institutions, to guarantee a sufficient pool of mortgage money so that Canadians will be able to purchase homes and pay for them.

That was the first commitment we required from the Government. The first commitment was that it would address the fundamental problem, and the fundamental problem was that we could not allow mortgage interest rates to fluctuate in the same way as interest rates for all manner of other less important things.

● (1600)

Mortgage interest rates must be treated differently from interest rates on loans for the purpose of purchasing luxury commodities. Mortgage interest rates must be considered an integral part of the Canadian lifestyle. They must be addressed by the Government and its agencies in such a way as to ensure that Canadian families of average income are able to continue to purchase homes and to pay for them. That is the commitment we asked of the Government. That is what we suggested to the Government ought to be done. That is what we have been arguing for all along. It is difficult, but everything is difficult.

It is essential, however, that we separate money to be made available for mortgages from money to be made available for all other kinds of investments. That is the crux of all of this. You would not have to sell insurance against Government incompetence if you set up a program to guarantee that there will be mortgage money available. You do not have to insure yourself against increases which are both unacceptable and undesirable if you have established the principle that out of all the available capital in the country which is currently being used for investment purposes, a significant proportion must be made available for the purpose of providing mortgages for the building of Canada's future. You start from there and make the determination that that is going to happen. Having done that, you begin to address the serious question of how to ensure that there will be decent and affordable housing in all parts of the country at prices which are within the capacity of Canadians to afford.

When I began my speech, I said that this is fraudulent. It really is. This is not only my opinion. You may expect me to rail against the Government for its incompetence and stupidity. The views which I express are views that are being expressed by others. Mr. Claude Roots, the Vice-President of the Canadian Real Estate Association, when referring to this piece of legislation said: "It almost concedes that we have to look forward to a period of higher interest rates." He is a man who deals in the business. He says that this legislation will, in itself, result in higher interest rates.

Andrew Cohen of the Consumers' Association of Canada said that he would not recommend the plan for everybody. The reason he would not recommend it for everyone is that the vast majority of people will never be able to take advantage of it. More importantly, they will find themselves continuing to pay ever-increasing rates of interest to those who loan the money.

Frank Clayton is well known for his expertise in housing. He is a housing economist. He studies the field and provides excellent background material which is used by almost anyone with any interest in the housing business. He says that the plan will be of little help to present home owners. It will be virtually useless to someone taking out a one-year mortgage since the premium cost is the same regardless.

These are people who work in the field. It is not a matter of me speaking against it for political reasons. I recognize the political risks. People will be told by the Government in a variety of different ways during the course of an election campaign that we spoke against something called protection for mortgagees. We speak against it because it is wrong. It will do exactly the opposite of what is required to be done. By itself it will encourage interest rates to rise. Because of the cost and the fact that there is a 2 per cent allowable interest rate increase, chances are that interest rates can and will rise by 3.5 per cent with impunity. On a 12 per cent mortgage an increase of 3.5 per cent is in excess of a 25 per cent increase. Mortgage interest rates will be able to rise 3.5 per cent before any single home owner will be able to benefit one iota from this. This is happening in the time of six and five.

The reason we are opposed to this is because it creates a sense in the public that something is being done which will be beneficial when in fact it will be detrimental. How far do you go in selling insurance against government incompetence? Is the next step to sell insurance against the Government's mishandling of the financial affairs of the country so that there will be insurance against tax increases? It is ludicrous. Our opposition to this Bill goes right to the core of the question of housing. Affordable housing is a necessity. It cannot be treated in any other way. You may be able to get by without a number of other commodities, but in Canada you cannot get by without a place to live.

In Canada we must begin to debate how to provide that affordable housing. It is not done by conceding that already high interest rates can continue to rise. It is not done by conceding that insuring people against inevitable increases will solve the problem. I feel aggravated by the fact that the Government has done this. There can be no support for this kind of a program.

I could have seen marginal merit had the program kicked in immediately, if the insurance had been against any increases. Deficient in principle as this approach is, in order to make it marginally beneficial, there cannot be a 2 per cent allowable increase. The program must kick in right away or you will find yourself with increases of 3.5 per cent, or even higher. Every single person who has been sucked into buying this will find themselves receiving absolutely no benefit.

I see you are signalling that I do not have any more time, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry about that because there is so much to be said about this. I will close my remarks by saying, through you, to the Minister of Housing (Mr. LeBlanc) that this will not work. It will create false expectations. It will work to the detriment of the housing industry. Of itself it will encourage higher interest rates. It will place a penalty on people who can ill afford it. It will add to the mortgage to be carried by the majority of people when in fact the Minister knows that the level of mortgage indebtedness is now at a serious level. It will do nothing to solve the current problem of people who are locked into mortgages that they cannot afford.

I am surprised that the Minister brought this forward. I thought he had more commitment than this. I want you to know, Sir, that we do not intend to support this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Burlington on a question.

• (1610)

Mr. Kempling: No, Mr. Speaker, I have a comment.

Mr. Hovdebo: I have a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kempling: Go ahead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) if he could give us some insight into what effect this Bill will have on the securing of affordable housing for those people in the lower income groups who should be getting housing because they need it. Will this particular Bill make housing more widely available across the board?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, my colleague, of course, has asked one of the most crucial questions. He has asked if this Bill will do anything to improve the housing stock for the lower-income groups and, of course, the answer is quite clearly no, it will not. It will not add to the number of houses being built nor will it make one single family eligible to purchase a home that was not eligible previously.

In order to qualify for the assumption of a mortgage today, one must commit approximately 30 per cent of one's income. The same will be equally true after this Bill has been passed. Those people who do not qualify for mortgages today because of the interest rates which are currently in effect will continue to be unable to qualify for mortgages. The Bill will do absolutely nothing to increase the number of housing units available in the country.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague a question. In his remarks, he made it quite clear that this Bill will indeed encourage mortgage interest rates to rise rather than control interest rates, which is what most people who are purchasing a home would certainly want. Looking back at the history of the housing policy in the country, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he feels that the Government should return to the policies that were in place quite a number of years ago.

Perhaps the Hon. Member remembers the years in which it was the practice to have long-term mortgages and set rates of interests which allowed people to plan for the future of their families, to pay off their mortgages and eventually own their own homes in the earlier part of their lifetimes. I wonder if the Hon. Member feels that it is possible to return to that kind of a policy and what suggestions he might have for the Government in that regard.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I believe that I am speaking on behalf of the entire Party, but I certainly believe that to begin with, mortgage financing must be treated quite differently from any other kind of financing. That is not unusual, and I say to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) who is looking at me quizzically, that it is not unusual to treat certain kinds of financing differently from others. He knows that as well as I do. For example, we in Canada have made money available to certain fields of endeavour at a variety of different interest rates with different structures and different time periods of repayment. The Government has pursued that as a matter of practice and as a matter of principle. I suggest to the Hon. Member that that is necessary in this case.

We must look at the benefits of putting money into housing and weigh them against those of putting money into other things. When money is put into housing, the risk of loss is considerably reduced. When money is put into housing, the asset or the house itself is always in existence. It is not an asset that one can put under one's arm and take away. Therefore, the risk to the collateral is much less for homes than it is for a number of other purchases which might be made.

I believe that you can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, as can others, that there is a greater risk involved in financing certain luxury items that can be purchased at interest rates that are in some instances lower than the interest rates that are now being charged for mortgages. I begin by recognizing that in the field of mortgage recovery, the actual loss ratio is very small. The overwhelming majority of mortgage holders continue to make their mortgage payments. More important than that, even those who default on their mortgage payments cannot take the asset with them and, therefore, the asset is available for resale.

We must recognize that every penny invested in housing is returnable in a number of different ways and is perhaps returnable even far in excess of the actual dollar value itself. The money is returned first through the mortgage payments themselves, plus whatever the interest is or the money is returned through rents, depending on whether the home is a rental accommodation or a purchased accommodation. The money is returned through taxes that are paid at the municipal level on the appreciated value of the property as a result of an apartment or single-family dwelling having been built. The money is returned in the form of income taxes that are charged against those who build the accommodation.

Workers who are presently unemployed could be building these accommodations and would be paying perhaps 30 per cent or 35 per cent of their income back in taxes to the federal and provincial Governments. The money is returned through corporate taxes, paid by the corporations, which enter into the business of building the homes that we require. The money is returned through the sales taxes that are applicable, where they are applicable, on materials that go into the building of the homes. When money is invested in a home, an overwhelming benefit is derived. Not only is every penny returned that is put into building a house, but there are tremendous spin-off effects as well.

That is one of the reasons why we argue with the Govenrment that it must address the problem of affordable accommodation in a way far different from the way it is presently being addressed. For example, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) knows that there have been dramatic cutbacks in funding for co-operative housing at a time when we need more housing. We will deal with that issue on another day in another way.

I would say to my colleague yes, we must establish that pool of finance that will enable us to meet the social need that can be met by the production of homes at an affordable price. If all of the other benefits to which I have referred are taken into account, housing is probably the single greatest economic motivator available to us. I do not have to tell you this, Mr. Speaker, because I know that you are an expert in the field, but for every one job that is created on-site when building a home, almost three jobs are created for the people who must make the various component parts that go into that home.

When a publicly financed, privately financed or a combined publicly and privately financed pool is established in such a way as to open up the field so that more people can afford to buy homes, thus holding interest rates down, then you can see that the evidence is abundant to show that we benefit in many ways. My colleague's question pertains directly to the subject before us and I think she is absolutely correct in saying that we must do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) has time for a short question.

Mr. Hovdebo: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is a very short question. The Government would not have put this Bill forward if no one were to benefit from it. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain could indicate to us who will really benefit from the passing of this Bill?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will answer the question in lieu of making a 40-minute speech on the matter. I think that my colleague is probably aware and I think that most would agree that it is only the financial institutions that will benefit from this Bill. The financial institutions will be able to increase mortgage interest rates by 3.5 per cent and the—

Mr. Evans: Oh, Ian!

Mr. Deans: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), disagrees. They will be able to increase mortgage interest rates by 3.5 per cent and every single penny of that increase will be charged back to the home owner. That is the problem.

Mr. Evans: You think they will raise interest rates right out of thin air?

Mr. Deans: I do not blame my colleague for asking if I think that they will raise interest rates out of thin air. I think that financial institutions fail to distinguish between their obligation to provide affordable capital for absolutely essential works and their right within the free market system to expand additional capital on other than necessary works.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Resuming debate.

• (1620)

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, to say that I am disappointed by this Bill would be an understatement. I had hoped that we would have had something more substantial than what is before us today.

The only way we are going to have competitive interest rates in the mortgage field is by having real competition in the mortgage field. That is the only way we are going to do it. In order to do that, we must have a good supply of money from a variety of sources; not necessarily just from banks and trust companies. We must have more sources for mortgage funds.

In looking at the minutes of the hearings which were conducted by the Finance Committee in 1968, I discovered that the Canadian Bankers' Association appeared before the committee. I was not a Member at that time, however, I read the minutes of the hearings which were held from 1978 to 1981. It was through the Bank Act Amendment of 1968 that banks were allowed into the mortgage field. Representatives of the Canadian Bankers' Association said that if they were allowed into the mortgage field, mortgage rates would drop. They indicated that there would be increased competition because of the amount of money that would be available to place in the mortgage field.

However, the rates did not drop. The rates increased. I am not saying that they should not have increased, but they did increase. The drop which we were supposed to see did not happen. When the Canadian Bankers' Association came before the Finance Committee for the next revision to the Bank Act, I made a point of asking the Chairman of the association why the rates had not dropped as the association had said they would in 1968. The Canadian Bankers' Association had left the committee, the House and the country with the impression that by allowing the banks into the mortgage field, the amount of money available for mortgages would vastly increase. Therefore, according to the supply and demand theory, mortgage rates would drop. If that had happened, the consumer would have benefited, the mortgagee would have benefited, housing would have benefited and the appliance industries and the spin-off of that tremendous, invigorating industry would have gone to the people of the country.

I asked the Chairman of the Canadian Bankers' Association why the rates had not dropped. His reply was interesting. He said: "If we had reduced the rates, we would have been accused of forcing the trust companies out of business." That was his reply. It is on the record of the Finance Committee meetings. He said that the banks would have been accused of lowering the rates and putting the trust companies in jeopardy because of their actions. His answer bothered me. It was not very satisfactory, but he was not about to give us something else.

I recall not too many months ago rising in this House time and time again to ask questions of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Minister responsible for housing, who is in the House today, and the Minister of Finance about mortgage rates. I especially recall the 1981-82 period when mortgage rates were rising very rapidly and the subsequent actions of some of the trust companies. I was concerned that some of the trust companies—in fact, the larger ones were the major culprits—seemed to be able to circumvent the laws of the country and get away with it. I was concerned about the 750,000 Canadians who were trapped into high interest rate mortgages.

I heard various Ministers tell us to wait. They would bring in some relief. Legislation would be brought in to sort out the problem. That is what I was looking for. I remember the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs telling the House that if we would be patient, legislation would be forthcoming. The Minister responsible for housing expressed similar views. He was concerned, and I appreciate that. The Minister of Finance stated that the rates were high enough and that he would speak to the banks and the trust companies to see what he could do about getting them down. Well, we know that in that 1981-82 period interest rates rose to 21.4 per cent. I think that is the highest official record which we have. There may have been a few rates which were higher than that, but the listing which the Bank of Canada provides indicates that 21.4 per cent was the maximum rate. There were, however, interest rates at 20 per cent, 19 per cent, 18 per cent, 17 per cent and so forth.

Thousands of letters came to my office. I was amazed as I had never experienced it as a Member. Obviously, my questions on interest rates had hit a responsive chord across the country. I received letters from every province in Canada. People told me about their mortgage problems and asked whether we could not do something about them. They indicated that they were trapped into high mortgage rates. The rates were dropping, but they could not renegotiate their mortgages. They were also concerned about the interest differential penalty which they would have to pay in order to renegotiate their mortgage.

I began to think back about what had been done in the House during that period. I recall that in late 1974 and early 1975 legislation was before the House which was passed by House and by the Senate. However, I do not believe it was ever put into operation. That legislation would have established mortgage investment corporations and a mortgage bank.

Mr. Ellis: That is right.

Mr. Kempling: As my colleague said, "That is right". He remembers this, as we all do.

At that time pension funds were in financial jeopardy because the yield on the securities in which they traditionally invested was dropping. The idea was that we would put together mortgage investment corporations. Those corporations would invest in residential mortgages and would sell the mortgage portfolios to pension funds. If the pension fund wanted to cash in that portfolio and put the money into something else, it would come to Ottawa and go to the mortgage bank where it would negotiate. The mortgage portfolio then would be turned into the mortgage bank in Ottawa, the pension fund would get the money and go on with whatever other investment it had in mind. That mortgage portfolio would then be recirculated through the mortgage investment corporations and placed with another pension fund or another institution. That was the theory. It was not original. It had been done in the United States for years. The Bill was one of the best drafted pieces of legislation which I have seen. Witnesses from the United States, who had similar legislation, looked at our legislation. Those witnesses liked some of our features and informed us that they would amend their legislation to make it equal to ours. It was that good in their minds.

We waited with a good deal of anticipation to see the results. It passed the House and it passed the Senate. We rose regularly and asked the then Minister of Finance, who happened to be John Turner, when the legislation would go forward. His reply was that the Government could not find a suitable person to head the mortgage bank. I do not want to be political, but even in those days I am sure that there were a few defeated Liberals around who could have been put in charge of a federal mortgage bank. Mr. Turner used that excuse for a number of months. Then, as we all know and as history has recorded, he departed the hallowed halls of the House of Commons and went to other climes. Then we asked his successor, Donald Macdonald, who now heads a royal commission, what was happening to the legislation.

He waffled on it several times but finally he said, "Well, we have discussed this matter with the financial institutions and they have convinced us that this sort of legislation is not required". Can you imagine that, Mr. Speaker? A Bill was passed by the House of Commons, it went through debate and into committee, back into debate, then to the Senate, was passed by the Senate, and was all set to go, then the financial institutions told the then Minister of Finance it was not necessary, and the whole thing was dropped. The tragedy is that that Bill had in it a "truth in lending" section which I thought might have been in Bill C-37 and in the subsequent parallel Bill on amendments to the Interest Act. That legislation had it all there and I wonder now if we had just gone ahead with it, whether we would be in the mess we are in today.

I took some interest in that Bill. I recall going to the Library of Parliament and it was not even on the computer. I have one of the few copies of the Bill, I am sure. In fact, I drafted a Private Members' Bill of my own by lifting sections out of that Bill because it was such a good piece of legislation. If we had only gone ahead with it, we would not need this legislation today.

I believe the difficulties that many mortgagees faced in 1981-1982 would not have had to be faced. We would not have had this terrible argument about interest differential charges and all the nonsense surrounding that. We would not have the trust companies spouting such terrible rhetoric as, "You see, we have some money out there and we only have it in a GIC for a year or for five years and that is the money we are going to give you on a three-year or five-year mortgage". That is nonsense. Anyone who knows anything about GICs and how they are invested knows that that is just nonsense. However, that excuse is still being used today. I talked to a banker the other day and he gave me the same story.

Therefore, when I say to the Minister that I am disappointed in this Bill in the way it has been presented, I am serious. We are going to pass it on into committee, I am sure, and I hope that we can make some changes to it in committee which will give it at least a bit of life. However, I am terribly disappointed that it is not going to do what I thought was the intent of the Minister and his colleagues, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). It just does not address the problems with which many people are still faced. I am still receiving letters from people who are trapped in five-year mortgages with interest rates at 17.5 per cent or 19.5 per cent which they cannot get out of.

I talked to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister of Finance at various times about this. I was particularly incensed at some of the verbiage in the mortgage renewal contracts. I do not see anything in Bill C-37 or Bill C-36 which is going to stop similar verbiage from being put into new mortgage renewal contracts. I was incensed that these institutions would put in their mortgage renewal contracts clauses which made the granting of mortgages conditional upon the mortgagees waiving rights which had been established for them by the Parliament of Canada and by the legislatures of at least two provinces in this country. It cut me to the quick to think that a corporate body could insert a clause into a renewal contract for a mortgage which says, "You waive your rights under Section so and so of such and such an Act", or that they could change the dating of a contract and thereby wipe aside a judgment of the Supreme Court of British Columbia.

I am at a loss for words to describe what I think of that. It is beyond credibility that these institutions would do that. I took the two particular clauses in the mortgage renewal agreements to people who I thought were very learned counsel, who practised in the high court, and asked their views on it. Their view was that it would not stand up in court. That is fine, but it is no consolation to a person who has signed the mortgage renewal agreement. It is no consolation whatsoever.

As late as a couple of weeks ago, the Superintendent of Insurance was before a committee of this House and I asked him about this. He agreed with me that these clauses should not be in there, but they were in there. The legal opinion he had received from his authorities was that those clauses, if they went to court, would not stand up. What a terrible thing to put a mortgagee through. If someone goes into the investment community and asks what is the best thing to invest in, he is told, "If you own a home, pay off your mortgage. You cannot have a better investment", and here we are allowing corporate bodies, trust companies, banks and others, to put these kinds of clauses in contracts and we do nothing about it.

We are allowing corporate bodies to take an Act of Parliament and just brush it aside. They can take an Act of the provinces and just brush it aside. They can take a judgment of the Supreme Court of British Columbia and brush it aside. This Parliament, the Government, the Ministers and the officials who are charged with that responsibility, do nothing whatsoever about it. They say it is too bad. They say it will not stand up in court. However, that is no consolation to the person who takes the mortgage. That is my point. We have failed the Canadian home owner. Some of the trust companies, I must say some of the smaller ones, have recanted. A couple of the larger institutions, when pressed to the wall with court action, recanted and allowed mortgages to be rewritten at a lower rate of interest in payment of penalties as prescribed in our legislation.

However, this legislation falls far short of what I thought it was going to do. I cannot really see anyone going out on the basis of this legislation and buying a five-year mortgage. I just cannot believe that they are going to do that. There are some other features in this legislation which we are going to get into in committee and I will tell the Minister now that he had better be well primed and briefed, as I know he usually is. I am sure he will have his officials there. There are going to be some pretty hard questions put to the Minister at that time because I am not at all convinced that this legislation is really going to do that much. It will generate a good deal of publicity if people do not read beyond headlines such as, "Government introduces a mortgage protection plan". It sounds great until you read the fine details, and when you do, you find it is really not going to help that many people.

I will conclude by saying that I believe our intention is to let this legislation pass on to committee at the appropriate time in the hope that at that point we can convince the Minister that some changes should be made in the legislation which will give a break and a benefit to the mortgagee and not just give the mortgagor more and more protection.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I was reading something here for a moment when the Hon. Member was speaking and mentioned a Bill that he was quite taken with. I believe it was in the Thirty-first Parliament?

Mr. Kempling: The Thirtieth Parliament.

Mr. Evans: In 1976? Was that the Bill of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs called, "The Borrowers and Depositors Protection Act"?

• (1640)

Mr. Kempling: I do not believe it was called that.

Mr. Evans: C-69?

Mr. Kempling: No.

Mr. Evans: Did it come from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

Mr. Kempling: I believe it was a finance Bill. But at any rate, Mr. Speaker, I will give the Hon. Member a copy of it if he wishes. I have not looked at it for probably a couple of years now, but it was a good Bill. It was one of the best Bills ever introduced in this House.

Mr. Evans: What did it deal with specifically?

Mr. Kempling: Well, first it dealt with truth in lending and it dealt with the establishment of the mortgage investment corporations and a mortgage bank. I will be very pleased to supply the Hon. Member with a copy. It should be introduced and brought through instead of this Bill. It is not in the Library of Parliament, I know that, but I will get you a copy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): No more questions or comments?

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. LeBlanc that Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

National Housing Act

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague from Burlington, I intend to put a few comments on the record regarding this legislation. We have been looking forward to this Bill since last February when it was first announced. I had the privilege of taking part in a seminar on housing sponsored by the Guaranty Trust Company in Belleville some six or seven weeks ago. The item most frequently discussed was interest rates. I should digress briefly, Mr. Speaker, to tell you that at that seminar there were municipal, provincial and federal politicians. There were civil servants from the Ontario and federal housing bodies. There were lenders, in this particular case Guaranty Trust, and there were contractors involved. It was a very interesting seminar and the morning passed very quickly.

Those people who were there, to a man, were interested in knowing what the impact of this particular piece of legislation would be. It had been promised in February and here we were in late April and we had not seen the Bill yet. Now we have it before us and I am sorry to say that it raises probably more questions than it answers. There are some very real problems with this legislation. I think it is fair to say, as my colleague has said, that while we will express our concerns to the Minister, nonetheless he best look to his laurels when it comes to committee because there is going to be some very careful questioning at that time.

Some of the questions which come to mind have to do with potential costs of this program. We are given to believe that the program should be self financing, but it seems to me that assumes home owners will always buy mortgage insurance. I have to think that that is a fallacy. I would think that anyone who did not take out mortgage insurance today would be very foolish. All of us have watched in the past two or three weeks as interest rates have gone up and the value of the Canadian dollar has gone down. I would think any modestly careful person today would take out some form of coverage or any form of coverage available to protect them from the possibility of having to renew at a higher rate.

However, if, as we suspect may happen, interest rates and therefore mortgage rates peak either over this summer or into next year and start coming down again as they did recently, I would doubt that person would take the chance of buying that coverage. After all, if I were in the position of buying a new home and I were faced with a 15 per cent, 16 per cent or 17 per cent mortgage rate, and I had to buy then in order to get the location and the kind of home I wanted, I would gamble on a very short mortgage on the assumption that rates would come down and I could renew at a lower rate.

I have not had a chance to study the Bill as carefully as I would like. I looked particularly at the Minister's remarks in his press release dated May 25, which is only a few days ago. The second page says home owners who took out mortgages or renewed mortgages after the date—now, Mr. Speaker, I fully understand that someone renewing a mortgage would be able to obtain the benefit and, indeed, if I understand the legislation properly, those who renew. In other words, if I have a mortgage today at 12 per cent and I am forced to renew at 17 per cent, then I do gain some considerable advantage. But I am a little curious as to how someone entering the market for the first time today benefits today by the coverage. He or she benefits when it come up for renewal, but obviously they do not benefit as a first-time buyer. I have some difficulty with that statement in the press release put out by the Minister's office. I am not entirely sure where it is going to go.

In any event, back to where I was, the cost of the program could escalate rather severely because if people, as I have said, were to take out the insurance on the way up, they would surely not take out the insurance on the way down. They would gamble on the short term. When they renew at the lower level, they would then take out the insurance. Surely there is a potential for the escalation of the cost of this program. That is not to say that I or my Party will oppose the program, but there is a potential for an escalation in costs that does concern us.

Furthermore, there is the question of the premium rate being the same regardless of the term of renewal. There has been some suggestion that this will help the lenders provide more long term money and would encourage the mortgage holders to go for a longer term. It is not always a good idea.

Let us suppose I was renewing a mortgage today and the mortgage interest rate was 15 per cent, which it almost is today. I would have to look at the cost of insuring and take into consideration that it must go to 17 per cent before I qualify at all. If it goes beyond 17 per cent, I will be compensated for three-quarters of the extra. If it goes to 18 per cent, I am compensated for three-quarters of one per cent. If it goes to 19 per cent I am compensated to 1½ per cent or three-quarters of 2 per cent. Given those considerations, perhaps I should take out a short term mortgage and gamble that the rate will come down a year from now. That is not an unreasonable gamble, considering the recent cyclical mood of mortgages. Therefore, I must ask why the rate is the same for a one-year mortgage as it is for a five-year mortgage. That is the problem that I see.

I am also concerned about the regulations. This Bill, more than most that we have seen recently, leaves everything to the regulations. I believe that we should have some of those regulations before we go to committee. I appreciate that this is a cry that is heard from the Opposition on a regular basis, but we should have some of those regulations before committee and certainly when we get to committee. Since there is a question about the cost of the insurance and whether it will be worth the gamble, we could determine that ahead of time if we could see all of the regulations. I handed my colleague my mortgage interest book so he could do some calculations on this, but he has been unable to tell me if a savings could be appreciated by the mortgagor. It is very difficult to know whether there is a savings without having the regulations available.

Some industry analysts have suggested that it might be better to reduce the size of the mortgage. Has a program been devised to study the regulations? The Minister can correct me if I am wrong, but I believe it is still possible to get a one-year mortgage at approximately 13¼ per cent. Can such a program be used in such a case to determine where it becomes worth the gamble for someone to put the cost of a mortgage insurance out of his pocket for a year in the gamble that the interest rates will come down? At what level does it become worth someone's while to put the money out for insurance coverage? Where does it become worth while for the Government in this insurance program, when someone whose mortgage is at 12 per cent must renew his mortgage at 17 per cent or 18 per cent, to say to the lender that if it has to subsidize this mortgage for the next three or five years, it will pay so much in subsidization? While the home owner must pay some, the Government will pay a substantial amount of money and obviously more than it took in as insurance. What is the level at which the Government can pay off a portion of the capital to bring the payment down to the level at which the borrower is paying the same, but the lender is not reaping a horrendous profit as a result of those high interest rates?

We must be careful in this instance because it became very obvious in the seminar of which I spoke a moment ago that the mortgage companies will say that they would much prefer a market with constant rates over a long period of time because when rates fall dramatically, those companies and their depositors run risks and tend to not make much money in that instance.

It is difficult to do these calculations on short notice and, indeed, it may take a computer program to properly determine whether there is a point when the federal Government should reduce the principle of a mortgage rather than make payments to a lender over a number of years. However, I suspect that there may well be a point when it will be worth while.

Finally, I want to spend a moment outlining some issues this Bill does not address. The Minister will recall that not long ago the federal Government backed out of support to municipalities for the installation of sewers and other programs. It was his department that was involved at that time. I believe this is an area where the federal Government might well have stayed involved and continued its contribution to municipalities. Normally, I would rather see these functions carried out by the provinces but this is an area of which I, as the Mayor of Belleville, took advantage.

The second most serious complaint that the builders at this seminar spoke of was the cost of servicing. In Belleville it costs approximately $5,000 more per lot, partially because of rock and partly due to stringent imposition by the local bureaucracy, to service than in other similar communities. When those federal Government programs were in place, it kept the cost of those lots down and we were much better off. I see, Mr. Speaker, you are rising. And that the clock has reached five o'clock. Please be careful, Mr. Minister, when this bill comes to committee because there will be a lot of people looking to ask many questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I regret having to interrupt the Hon. Member. He has two minutes more remaining at the next sitting of the House.

NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT

ADVISABILITY OF DECLARING CANADA A NUCLEAR ARMS FREE ZONE

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In listening to motion No. 106 on the Order Paper, "that, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone", to my recollection a similar motion was dealt with last week in the House by general agreement of Members. The motion as I read it is similar in substance and intent to that dealt with last week. Perhaps the Speaker cannot rule on this immediately, but I am pretty sure, Sir, that you were in the chair at the time. Does it meet with the rules of the Chamber that we can deal with the motion again?

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I think if the Hon. Member reads Hansard for the day in question last week, he will find the question debated was a private member's bill and not a private member's motion.

Mr. Baker: The reason I pointed this out and regardless of what the hon. gentleman says, Mr. Speaker, both are motions and the rule applies to motions. A bill is a motion, a resolution is a motion. This is dealt with in Erskine May and in Beauchesne under motions. The point of order I raised deals with the sections on motions. Could Your Honour, who was in the chair at the time, rule on the question now?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair has been looking into this matter in the last while. Our records indicate that the motion referred to by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) could be one of two Bills that have been debated in the House, namely Bill C-204, which was defeated, and Bill C-203 which is essentially the same as the Bill which was debated.

The Chair at this point is in some difficulty inasmuch as one can now express some reserve as to whether Bill C-203 should have been debated in view of the fact that Bill C-204 had already been defeated. However, that brings up the problem we have at the start of a session when Bills are put on the Order Paper and by our system it is possible for Members to be putting similar bills on the Order Paper at the same time.

The motion which is before the House today is essentially of the same substance as the Bill. The Chair would like a little more time to look into this matter, just a few more minutes, and it proposes to allow the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) to complete his remarks on the motion before the House. We will then render a decision on the point of order that has been raised.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone and that it should consider the advisability of prohibiting the deployment, testing, construction and transportation of nuclear weapons and associated equipment through and within Canada and that it should consider the advisability of prohibiting the export of goods and materials for use in the construction and deployment of nuclear arms; and

That, the Government should consider the advisability of encouraging cities, provinces and states throughout the world to undertake similar action.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion is indeed similar to the measures proposed in the private members bills introduced by my colleagues, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) and the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant). All three measures would prohibit the deployment of nuclear weapons in Canada. They would also prevent the transit of nuclear weapons through Canadian territory and waters. They would make it unlawful to develop, test, or produce nuclear weapons or components of nuclear weapon systems in Canada or the export of same.

My motion is somewhat different from the other two measures proposed by my colleagues, but nonetheless equally important. My motion calls upon the Government of Canada to take a leadership role in encouraging others throughout the world to follow the example set by this House of Commons if this motion is adopted.

I do not think I overstate the case when I say that the arms race has brought us face to face with our own annihilation. There are now some 50,000 warheads in the arsenals of the two superpowers alone. Some may think it trite to make reference to the maxim that you do not put a smoking gun on stage unless you intend it to be used, but I think that maxim sums up for us the dilemma we have forced upon ourselves in the rush to augment national security by threatening the security of another nation with nuclear weapons.

Until recently the theory that governed the strategic thinking of the superpowers has been that of deterrence, that it would be suicide for the other side to launch an attack so long as we retained a credible threat of a retaliatory strike. However, with the advance in nuclear weapons technology and changing attitudes in the White House and the Kremlin, the theory of deterrence is beginning to unravel. The weapons being developed today can be launched from thousands of miles away and still hit their target with almost pinpoint accuracy. Their value is not so much as retaliatory second strike weapons but as counterforce, first strike weapons; weapons that can take out the nuclear missiles of the other side before they can be launched. Pentagon strategists are shunning mutually assured deterrence in favour of Nuclear Utilization Theories, NUTS.

The act of declaring Canada a nuclear weapons free zone would be one of complying with the oft-repeated call of the United Nations for the establishment of such zones. Regardless of what some Members may think of the United Nations, it would be foolishness to dismiss U.N. recommendations for nuclear weapons free zones throughout our planet. The first nuclear weapons free zone was established in the Antarctic in 1961. The treaty for the prohibition of nuclear weapons in Latin America was concluded in 1967.

Here are two areas of the globe where through negotiations and agreement we have been able to prevent nuclear weapons and the threat of their use from casting a shadow. Since then, serious proposals for the creation of nuclear weapons free zones have been advanced for Africa and for the Balkans, for the Middle East, the Mediterranean and for Central Europe, for South Asia, the South Pacific and for the Nordic countries of Europe. We, in Canada, have a unique opportunity to add another large region of the globe to the area now free from the threat of nuclear weapons, without the complicated negotiations to include other countries in the nuclear weapons free zone.

I want to quote from the Final Document of the 1978 United Nations Special Session on Disarmament. It reads:

● (1710)

The establishment of nuclear weapons free zones on the basis of arrangements freely arrived at among states in the region concerned constitutes an important disarmament initiative. The process of establishing such zones should be encouraged with the ultimate objective of achieving a world free of nuclear weapons.

We as Canadians can and must do a great deal to influence the political climate in a way which encourages disarmament agreements. We can and must do a great deal to put political and technical constraints on the nuclear strategies of both the U.S.S.R. and the United States. I am confident that creating a nuclear weapons free zone in Canada would do both.

Recently I read that Emergency Planning Canada wants to spend some $40 million on a network of 650 nuclear fallout shelters. In my view, planning for these kinds of civil defence measures is perpetrating a cruel hoax on the Canadian public. One comment which caught my attention was that our emergency planners think this network of shelters will do the trick, because they assume Canadian territory they would not be the target of a Soviet nuclear strike.

Our emergency planners better think again. How can they possibly assume when we in Canada develop, test and produce nuclear weapons components and when NORAD is providing targeting information to nuclear-armed aircraft, that Canadian territory would not be targeted? What logic would spare Canadian territory when nuclear-armed Trident submarines pass back and forth through the Strait of Juan de Fuca en route to their base at Bangor, Washington? When we have three Loran C stations in Canada providing navigational data to pinpoint the accuracy of U.S. submarine-launched nuclear weapons, and when Canadian patrol aircraft provide precise targeting data for American hunter/killer submarines to attack Soviet nuclear weapon submarines, it is foolish and naive to think Canada would be spared in a superpower nuclear exchange. The major threat to our national security comes from the potential of a nuclear war between the two superpowers. It is only in our own self-interest to do everything possible to prevent that from happening.

Many Canadians have been convinced by the Government that Canada in the last 15 years has steered a non-nuclear course. Many Canadians have come to see the arms race as something perpetrated by the superpowers. However, how many of them know about Canada's role in the arms race? How many of them know that our Department of Energy, Mines and Resources gathers gravitational data in the Arctic which is used to improve the accuracy and the counterforce capability of U.S. ballistic missiles? How many of them know about the anti-submarine warfare training and the torpedo training for U.S. nuclear submarines at Nanoose Bay, Vancouver Island? How many Canadians are aware that nuclear capable British Vulcan bombers do low-level flight training at Goose Bay, Labrador? How many Canadians know that we still store U.S. air to air nuclear-tipped missiles here and, if called upon, we would launch them from Canadian Forces Voodoo interceptors? Not too many Canadians, I should think.

While it is true that Canada has never developed nuclear weapons on its own, its nuclear free course is a bit of sham. We are tied into the United States nuclear weapons program militarily and industrially through a myriad of bilateral agreements between the two countries. Under the terms of defence production sharing arrangements, Canadian companies have gained access to the lucrative American weapons market. Many companies trying to win production subcontracts on American weapons systems are given financial asisstance through the federal Government's Defence Industry Productivity Program. It should come as no surprise that neither Canadian arms contractors nor Canadian government officials have made a distinction between nuclear and conventional weapons production. The $166 million federal aid budget is equally available to companies bidding on nuclear and/or conventional weapons contracts.

In addition, Litton Systems was granted $49 million to secure the production contract for the Tercom guidance system of the Cruise missile. Boeing of Canada now has an application before the federal Government to sweeten its bid on a production subcontract for the MX missile re-entry system. Boeing and Bristol Aerospace, both Winnipeg companies, have been doing developmental work with an eye toward production contracts on the MX missile for the last year.

Over the years the Government has given money to Canadian Vickers to produce parts for American nuclear submarines, to Hawker Siddeley to produce the launcher for the Lance nuclear missile, and to Heede International to build loading equipment for Trident and Poseidon nuclear weapon submarines. We would be better off without these contracts. If the concern of the Government is jobs, let me say that American studies on industrial conversion show that we could create twice as many jobs by investing in health care and education than by investing in weapons production.

Canada has not kept its hands clean of the arms race. The unwillingness of successive governments to begin even to strike an independent strategic policy has allowed us to drift into complicity in the nuclear weapons program of the United States. Declaring Canada a nuclear weapons free zone would not require us to end the long friendship between the two countries. I have no doubt that the friendship would endure. After all, what kind of friendship is it that could not endure our decision to take a strategic policy which promised to help reduce the threat of nuclear destruction?

Declaring Canada a nuclear weapons free zone would only be consistent with the Government's rhetoric about our non-nuclear role in the world. It would be an act consistent with the efforts of the United Nations to establish such zones in the world. It would enhance our reputation internationally as a country willing to take action in its advocacy of peace. By declaring Canada a nuclear weapons free zone, we would be taking concrete steps toward reducing the nuclear threat which hangs over the heads of all Canadians, which hangs over the heads of all people of the world.

There is another dimension to the nuclear arms race with which I should like to deal because in my view it goes to the heart of our concern. I am referring to our ability to achieve global peace while we fail to recognize adequately the existence of widespread social and economic injustice in the world. The U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency recently reported that we will spend a total of some $1 trillion in 1985 in the global arms race. We could make a significant step in the direction of achieving global peace if we were to direct some of those moneys, if not all, toward eradicating the sources of that economic and social injustice to which I have just referred.

The United Nations has estimated that one half of the Third World countries have no safe drinking water supplies, yet we have the means available to provide clean water within 10 years if we had the political and moral will to do so. We could do the same for the hundreds of thousands who are dying of hunger throughout the world. We have the technology and the expertise to achieve it.

It is estimated that some 130 million children are denied access to any kind of education and that 800 million adults are considered illiterate throughout the world. If we used some of the armament expenditures, we could provide the schools and teacher training which would alleviate that sorry condition. In addition, we know that air and water pollution is responsible for the increase in deaths from such diseases as cancer, asthma and heart disease. We could implement a global cleanup of our environment. We have the technology which would put a stop to our environment being used as one of the biggest sewage disposal systems the world has ever seen.

● (1720)

In addition, the World Health Organization estimates that some ten children die each minute of measles, diptheria and tuberculosis. Only 10 per cent of the Third World's population of 18 million people are immunized against disease. In addition to that, some 50 million young people enter the workforce each year. Because there are no jobs, they face prolonged periods of unemployment.

If we believe that Third World problems are totally disassociated from our problems in Canada, perhaps we should consider spending some of the billions of dollars we set aside for death and destruction to solve some of our social problems. It is a known fact that three out of every five single women over the age of 65 in our country are living in abject poverty. More often than not, our native population is living in conditions which should not be ignored by any civilized society. Ten per cent of all Canadians are disabled or handicapped. In that group the unemployment rate is between 70 per cent and 90 per cent. Some 11 per cent of our total workforce is unemployed and 18 per cent of our young people are out of work.

Those facts surely tell us that our priorities are all screwed up. Why do we find it necessary to spend $1 million a minute on arms to kill, maim and destroy when we could better spend those resources for socially useful purposes? It was only several months ago in Private Members' hour in the House that we were discussing cancer, the dreaded disease which nearly every Canadian has been touched by in one way or another. If we were to take a sizeale chunk of the money we spend to destroy the human race and property and put it into cancer research, the people I have spoken to in that field feel that in all probability we could come up with successful treatment of that disease which touches every family in the world.

For all those reasons I hope that the House will agree to this motion and refer it to committee where witnesses can be heard and it can be examined in more detail than we will have time for in the House. I urge Members to support this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair would like to comment further on the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). The Chair proposes to read from Erskine May's Twentieth Edition a paragraph which is found on page 379 under the general heading "Rules governing subject-matter of motions". Under the heading "Matters already decided during the same session" one reads:

> A motion or an amendment which is the same, in substance, as a question which has been decided in the affirmative or negative during the current session may not be brought forward again during that session.

Whether this rule would apply as between a motion and a bill is a difficult matter to decide, but it is unlikely that substantially the same question could be raised by a motion and a bill as a whole. A motion can do no more than affirm in general terms the desirability of legislation while a bill is likely to contain qualifying provisions and conditions, sufficient to differentiate its subject-matter from that of a motion. In any case a bill and a motion have different purposes. The question has been raised, but so far no case for the application of the rule has been made out.

The Chair has looked at the motion and at the two Bills to which reference was made. As the Chair has said, Bill C-204, which was presented to the House by the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant), was defeated. Bill C-203, which on the surface appears to be essentially the same but has a few changes in paragraphs, was presented by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish). Inasmuch as the motion which is before the House contains the key words "in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of", and under those circumstances it is just an expression of opinion of the House, the Chair has no difficulty in allowing debate to continue on the motion.

However, the Chair will take this opportunity to suggest that it will be looking closely at the similarity of the two Bills, Bill C-204 which was defeated, and Bill C-203 which has been brought forward already for debate in this session. The Chair will consider whether there can be resumption of debate on Bill C-203 at the appropriate time. Therefore, for continuing debate on the motion, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae).

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I find myself rising for the second time in three days to debate essentially the same motion. I respect the ruling of the Chair on this. I find the motion supportable and support the intent of the motion, but I worry about why we are debating a Bill three times which really will do nothing to prevent the holocaust which I think is going to occur if we do not bring the super powers together to stop the warring which is going on.

I do not think that our being pure is going to influence either of the super powers in the direction in which they must go. In response to a question asked of the very distinguished Rear Admiral Carroll at a gathering in Toronto in March, he said that the armaments, the computerization of arms, the speed and so on would make a nuclear war very probable in about six to eight years. We all know there is no possibility that human life could continue in any normal fashion after such a war. The social values which we all appreciate would cease to exist under these circumstances. It seems that a hardness has developed between the two super powers at this point which could very well continue, depending upon what happens in the American election. I have no qualms about talking about American internal politics because the Ambassador from that country has no qualms about talking about how we run our operation.

I believe that unless there is a change in the scene in the United States, this hardening will become much worse. I would be much happier if I heard Members of the NDP talking about this very serious problem rather than seeing the answer as our being pure.

• (1730)

The problem possibly stems from the attitude of Hon. Members on the other side. Because they essentially have not held power or been close to power for the last 20 years, they find it hard to deal with reality. When we have to deal with our relationship with NATO, when we have to deal with the Government of the United States and the Government of the Soviet Union and when we have to try and move those Governments, the problem becomes very different.

Let me give you an idea of that. Let us suppose that tomorrow, a motion is put before the House to support the ten points common ground that were listed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Suppose that motion contains some additional points calling for no first use and no testing of the Cruise. Those are things that I support. However, if we along with the other countries presented such a motion to the two super powers, something which I think should be done, then the same thing would happen as happened to the motion of the four-continent group, a motion into which I have been very proud to have had some input. Within 20 minutes, the U.S. Government would reject the entire thing. How would that do anything in terms of closing the gap between the two super powers?

Mr. Young: What do you suggest?

Mr. McRae: If we do not close the gap, then the war occurs. We are pure, we are not doing anything wrong, but how are we closing that gap? It seems to me that we would then invalidate anything that could happen because the two super powers would not speak to us.

I would like to begin to understand the dimensions of this issue. I simply do not believe that in this world, Canada will be able to change anything. One might think that we could change things by bringing the two super powers together. In those ten points of common ground to which I have referred many times, there are areas about which both sides can agree and there are more to those areas than what appears on the surface. Then, with the right negotiating techniques, we may be able to change things.

I would remind Hon. Members on both sides of the House that the issue we are dealing with today will be a very large issue in the elections in both the United States and Canada. Both countries will be holding elections during almost the same period of time. If there is a change in the U.S. Government after the November election, then we will be faced with a new situation and we will have a chance to develop these things. I believe that that is what will happen. However, I am opposed to trying to inject ourselves into a situation in which we would hope for some successful negotiations between the two super powers in such a way that we would automatically and without any question be rejected. I do not think that that will achieve anything positive. In fact, I think it may achieve the very opposite.

Let us talk about what is happening now. I would like to talk about this hardness that exists. There is a group called the Arms Control Association in the United States which has a very distinguished board of directors. That board includes people like Admiral Gayler, the former Commander in Chief for the Pacific of the United States Navy; Gerard Smith, a former arms-control director for the U.S. Government; Paul Warnke, a former arms-control director for the Carter U.S. Government; Robert McNamara, a former Secretary of Defence; and others. These people recently commissioned a study and a report which indicated that the Reagan Government has basically destroyed arms control negotiations. It indicated that such arms-control measures as the START talks and SALT I and SALT II will be destroyed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The resolution of the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) deals with establishing nuclear free zone in Canada and with Canadian non-participation in the testing, construction, deployment and transportation of nuclear weapons. The Hon. Member has yet to address himself to the contents of the resolution and I am wondering if the chair would be prepared to caution the Hon. Member to speak to what Canada can do and not to what former American Ministers of Defence can do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I will accept the point raised by the Hon. Member if he is attempting to suggest that the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) is not speaking to the motion. However, the Chair finds that the subject matter is sufficiently broad. The remarks of the Hon. Member are in order.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might explain to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) that I am trying to deal with the questions of where we must go and of what is fundamental. I support what Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party are trying to do. However, I think that the issue is not fundamental. We have spent four days discussing this particular issue when there are far more fundamental issues dealing with the arms control business at stake.

One thing that has bothered me for a long time is that I have never been able to accept the idea that I can come to the House, stand up and be pure and say that I want this and that without having one iota of consideration for how I will make the change that I want. If I believe in something, then I must fight to make a change. If I am standing back being pure, taking absolutely no notice of what is going on around me and not doing my best to change things, then I do not think that I am doing my job.

I feel that we are facing the most dangerous situation that one could imagine on this earth and I do not think that this motion will change it. I think that there are far more serious things we must address, and that is what I am trying to say. I am trying to break down the issue and I am trying to show that there are far more important things that we can do. If we do some of the things which we all want to do, we might very well wreck our chances of doing something more important. That is what I am trying to explain to the House. I think it is very relevant to the motion before us.

I would like to return to this serious issue. A two-track decision was made through negotiations on behalf of NATO countries and Warsaw Pact countries by the two super powers. The two super powers came to no solution and the Arms Control Association has indicated that one of the prime reasons for that was that the Government of the United States presented a series of ideas that sounded great to the uninitiated public and made the government look like it was really going after arms control and really making big concessions when to those who understand the issue and have spent years dealing with the issue, the ideas were totally meaningless. These kinds of ideas go on and on. These are the kinds of things that happen, and so we are faced with a situation that is far different from the one with which we thought we were faced, so those talks broke down.

The same thing happened with the START talks. The President of the United States promoted the idea that the U.S. and the Soviet Union should come to an agreement to get rid of most of their land-based ICBMs. That sounded like a reasonable proposition. He said: "We will get rid of ours, you get rid of yours". However, the President admitted to a group of Congressmen in October that he did not know that the Soviet missiles were four-to-one land based and the American missiles were four-to-one sea based. By asking the Soviets to back down on all of their land based missiles he perhaps, as he said to some Congressmen, sounded one sided. Those are the kinds of negotiations that were going on at the START talks. I condemn people in our Government for refusing to push hard to have the START talks and the INF talks together. There were all kinds of quid pro quos in there if one got away from the simple notion of dealing only with talks on intermediate missiles. These are the serious things which have been going on.

When the President of the United States initiates an idea about star wars and states that missiles can be prevented from entering the United States when he knows perfectly well that there is an anti-ballistic missile agreement which will be broken if the star wars program goes ahead, he and this very important group of tough Americans—not soft non-Soviets or anything of that nature—are undermining world peace in a very serious way.

These are the issues. It is not a Canadian problem. I do not think that we as Canadians are going to create a war. Peace is an international problem. I get very worried when I hear that if we as Canadians remain pure and stay within ourselves and do not worry about the rest of the world we are doing our share. That is what is happening in the peace movement. We are becoming less and less concerned about what is happening out there.

If I were looking for a nuclear free zone to create, it would be in central Europe. It is absolutely essential that we reach very shortly that situation so that we will not have Pershing II missiles, SS-20s, SS-21s and SS-22s sitting on the border across from each other, four to six minutes from the other side. That is where a nuclear free zone is so important. The very essence of the problem will be the accidental use of a Pershing missile; not so much the accidental use of the missile, but the assumption that it is being used because of a computer breakdown or a time shortage. These are the vital issues which we should be dealing with.

It would be nice to say—and I have fought as hard as anyone to have this happen—that we will not build these weapons in Canada. The fact is that the danger will come from outside and we will have to be a part of it. I have mentioned some of the things which the distinguished group of Canadians who are involved with the Arms Control Association have been worried about. If I were an American today, and I was—

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member would permit a question as he is a Canadian and not an American. We are not interested in what he would say if he were an American. Would he permit a question?

Mr. McRae: I will do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Ordinarily there is no provision for questions. However, if there is unanimous consent, the Member has two minutes remaining in the time allotted to him. Does the House give its consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McRae: If I have only two minutes, Mr. Speaker, I think that I can get along without the question. I have a very serious point that I want to ensure the House understands.

If I were an American today and was centre to centre-right in my leanings, which I am not, I would be very, very concerned about the policy that the Reagan Government is taking in the United States. I do not think that the United States stands taller than it did before. I think that it stands weaker. It stands weaker because it has created far, far more dangers: the deployment of the Pershing II, the flight trajectory, and the threat of four to six minutes. These kinds of things are the tensions which create a war. There are far more SS-20s than there were before. There is a very large build-up in the Sea of Japan, the Kuril Islands and the surrounding areas of Soviet Typhoon submarines. Each submarine has 80 warheads. That kind of build-up is there.

There is a breakdown in the NATO alliance which is very serious, certainly at the political level. There is great concern among people in NATO about whether the alliance will continue in the way it has. I am speaking from the point of view of an American who would be of the middle to middle-right persuasion. We have a Lebanese situation which is frightfully dangerous and ridiculous. As well, there is the Grenada scene and the situation in Central America.

The most important issue is not whether we declare ourselves a nuclear free zone and test the Cruise, it is what will happen in the United States in the next six months. Anything we can do to help that situation, I am in favour of that. But, I will not count on us getting involved in something which will discredit Canada or create a situation in which we are turned down again. We cannot afford that situation. Although I agree with the Hon. Member, I am worried about other things which his Party does not seem to be worried about.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired. Is the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Benjamin: No, Mr. Speaker, for debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): For continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon).

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to cut out the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), but having been faced with the choice a few moments ago between having to listen to his question or listening to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae), it was a difficult choice to make.

I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) for producing the motion which is before the House today. I thought that he spoke very well on the subject. He has obviously done a lot of research and has presented a case which has some merit. There is quite a debate raging across the country at this time on the subject. I think that it deserves the time of the House. It is one in which people have opinions which are not diametrically opposed, but opinions which are at some variance from each other. A person would have to be a maniac not to be in favour of nuclear disarmament with the number of nuclear weapons in the world. Anything that can bring those weapons under control and disarm them is acceptable.

The Conservative policy for years has been that we would vote in favour of any measure for nuclear disarmament that would lead to a mutual, balanced and verifiable disarmament.

The resolution before us in part reads:

—the government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone—

I am grateful that the Hon. Member did not make the mistake that is frequently made which is to leave out "arms" and just ask for a nuclear free zone. That would no doubt upset Ontario Hydro considerably.

I think it would be in order to ask how Canada became a nuclear arms zone with nuclear arms. This is particularly important considering the sanctimonious protestations made by the NDP against the use of nuclear arms. If one reads Hansard of February 4 and 5, 1963, one will find out why Canada has nuclear arms. Those were in the days of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, who was then Prime Minister. Debate raged in that Cabinet. There are still least two Members of our Party who were in that Cabinet and who could provide the information if it were not for the Privy Council oath. However, it is obvious from the Hansard of the day a serious debate had taken place in Canada during that time as to whether Canada should accept nuclear arms. The Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, who was the Leader of the Opposition at the time, had a miraculous conversion. I believe that his speech was given in Scarborough, Ontario, which will be familiar to the mover of the resolution.

• (1750)

One night Mr. Pearson decided, after some 20 years of being opposed to nuclear weapons, even winning a Nobel prize for his peace activities, to suddenly be converted to nuclear weaponry for Canadians and the Canadian Forces within Canada. Then followed two days of very strong debate on the resolution which was introduced on February 4, 1963. Hon. Members interested in this subject would find it a fascinating two days of debate. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan reminded me of some of the speakers whose speeches appeared in Hansard at that time. Mr. Pearson, who I believe was really quite sincerely dedicated to peace, was trying to explain why he was going to vote out the Diefenbaker Government which was insisting on not accepting nuclear weapons in Canada, namely the warheads for the Bomarc missile of that day. The debate went on with Mr. Pearson being rather devious about the motion and he was severely criticized by the Government side of the House for not being more specific about his motion. It was a supply motion. It was interesting to read the contributions made by Mr. David Lewis and Tommy Douglas who spoke for the NDP in that debate indicating that while they also greatly loved peace, they were going to vote for the Party which was going to bring nuclear arms to Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: He never said that!

Mr. McKinnon: So the only Party in the House which was opposed to nuclear arms in Canada was the Conservatives, and the New Democratic Party joined with the Liberals to vote it out of office, knowing full well that Mr. Pearson was going to bring in the nuclear warheads for the Bomarc missile. The Government was defeated in a subsequent election. The Liberals formed the next Government and allowed nuclear warheads into Canada, and they are still here today.

Mr. Benjamin: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am sure my good friend, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) would not want to mislead the House or misconstrue the record knowingly or unknowingly. I am sure he would want to include in his remarks that that was a vote of non-confidence in the Government which, he will agree, any opposition party would vote for. It was not a vote in support of nuclear weapons for Canada as advocated by Mr. Pearson. Would the Hon. Member be prepared to complete the record?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. That is not a point of order. It is just a point of debate.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, of course it is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Regina West has not read the debate, obviously, and forgets completely that the New Democratic Party, being an opposition party, for 19 successive times in a row in 1973 and 1974 did not vote the Government out of office when it had the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Benjamin: We did so!

Mr. McKinnon: So he is just talking a lot of nonsense to support an unsupportable case.

Mr. Benjamin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. That is clearly incorrect. It is not true. It was in 1974 we voted the Liberals out of office.

Mr. Young: We did it again in 1979.

Mr. Benjamin: The Tories!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Regina West may have a difference of opinion. It is not a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of accuracy—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Victoria.

Mr. Benjamin: —it was the NDP who voted the Liberals out of office in 1974.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please.

Mr. Benjamin: I was here even if he was not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Victoria.

Mr. McKinnon: There is always a smidgen of truth in what the hon. gentleman from Regina West says. His Party supported the Conservatives after failing to support us in 19 successive votes of non-confidence in the Liberal Government. After voting with the Government 19 times, they eventually saw the light and voted with us in 1974, at long last, having missed all those other chances. It is always interesting to hear these inane comments and unknowledgeable questions from the Hon. Member for Regina West, but time is precious to those of us who have something to say, and I would like to press on. The last paragraph of the resolution reads:

> That, the Government should consider the advisability of encouraging cities, provinces and states throughout the world to undertake similar action.

Presumably that is a nuclear arms free zone action. However, I failed to notice in his remarks any reference to the Warsaw Pact countries which are states of the world. I wonder whether he intended to encourage them to undertake similar action and just how he intends to encourage them to do so. Mr. James Stark, the head of Dismantle, gave evidence on the referendum in front of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence in, I believe, 1982. I would like to read an excerpt from the committee report:

Nuclear Disarmament

MR. MCKINNON: I have just a couple of questions. Mr. Stark, if I understood you correctly when you were answering Mr. Wenman, you said the Warsaw Pact nations all assured you they would support your motion at the United Nations and would conduct a referendum within their countries. Did I understand you correctly?

MR. STARK: Yes.

MR. MCKINNON: What level was the Russian who told you they would conduct a referendum in their country?

MR. STARK: In new York I met with two representatives; the ambassador and one other. In Canada, I have discussed this with Ambassador Alexander Yakovlev at the Soviet Embassy and with the ambassadors of other Warsaw Pact nations. We had a representative of the Soviet Union at our conference last November on a panel with an American who said—stressing that they do not need a referendum in their country. He said publicly that they would support it in the UN and conduct it in their country. As I mentioned earlier, it would be a very inefficient, in fact, misleading initiative unless we were sure the Soviet nations would also participate. Frankly, we would have folded up the organization, Operation Dismantle, in 1979 had we not had an indication that the Soviets would participate.

Everyone knows that the Soviets did not participate and are not going to participate. The final proof of that might be a news item in The Globe and Mail dated May 23, and I quote:

Soviet dissident jailed for circulating petition

A member of an unofficial Moscow peace group has been jailed for 15 days for collecting 300 signatures on a petition calling for improved U.S.-Soviet relations, dissident sources said yesterday. Alexander Rubchenko, a 24-year-old artist, was sentenced Monday on charges of hooliganism. He was one of four members of the "Group of Trust" picked up on Friday. The others were released after police warned them they will be ordered to live away from Moscow if they petition people again. One member of the group said they will continue collecting signatures.

Therefore, this is going to be a one-sided effort if it ever did come to pass that we would declare ourselves to be a nuclear free zone, and convince other states to do likewise. So that I do not get accused of talking out this Bill, I will draw my remarks to a conclusion before six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the time is about ended for this debate. However, I would like to go on record as saying that I support in principle what the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) has been trying to say. Unfortunately, the Bill is substantially the same as the Bill we had last week, namely, Bill C-204. However, there are a couple of differences in the Bill and I suppose you might say that Bill C-203 does in effect improve Bill C-204. In any event, I believe the topic we are discussing, that is, the motion for a world referendum—

The Acting Speaker (Mr., Herbert): Order, please. I sincerely regret to interrupt the Hon. Member—

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CRIMINAL CODE—PRESENTATION OF OBSCENITY AMENDMENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on April 18 I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) to consider taking out of the Criminal Code amendments in Bill C-19 the clauses on obscenity and bring them into the House for swift passage. I raised this because we know that obscenity is getting worse, pornography is growing, it is getting more violent and the police are saying that they are helpless to do anything about it. We have had examples in Toronto of stores selling video tapes, including very violent ones, to children. I do not want to get into the argument as to whether "snuff" movies, which have been reported to be sold, are real or not. Certainly we know that the violence is bad enough.

However, the Minister was very complacent. He said there are many parts of the Criminal Code which are of the utmost urgency. We need all of that Bill, not just parts of it. Well, there are other parts of Bill C-19 I would like to see passed as well. But certainly one of the most important must be the obscenity section. I remind the House that the Minister has had an entire year. He brought in draft legislation to this effect last June, yet we have not actually had any debate on the Bill. He is not moving ahead on this specific and very important part, nor is he moving ahead on the other parts of Bill C-19.

[Translation]

I am wondering whether the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. MacGuigan) is more interested in publicity for his Liberal Party leadership campaign than in concrete improvements or in amendments to the Criminal Code.

Two committees and one subcommittee are now considering that issue, but the Bill in question, Bill C-19, remains on the Order Paper and has not come up for debate. The Bill was given first reading in January, but since then the Government has not even set a single day aside for debate. In the meantime, pornography problems are growing worse. Yesterday, a representative of the Réseau d'action et d'information pour les femmes tabled before the subcommittee a brief describing his attempts to file a complaint against pornographic magazines in Quebec, and I had an opportunity to examine magazines depicting very violent scenes.

The police in Quebec have refused to act on those complaints because of loopholes in the existing legislation. It is quite obvious that legislative amendments have become necessary. Those examples include pictures of naked and tied up women with a knife or a razor close to them. According to the present legislation, that is not obscene because no men are seen in the picture. In another example, a woman is shown fully dressed, but on her hands and knees and held on a leash like a dog. That is degradation, of course, but it is not obscene!

The debate on pornography has recently taken a very constructive turn, in my opinion. In its brief to the subcommittee, a delegation of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women has called for legal protection on grounds of the right to equality or non discrimination. Those women have told us that it is a human right to be represented as a human being, and that it would be a breach of that right to be shown as a dog or a vile being without self-respect who agrees to be tortured or enjoys vulgarities. I would suggest that the links between pornographic and real violence are strong enough to justify legislative amendments, particularly more severe sanctions. According to that line of reasoning, there is no need to establish such links to justify stronger legislation. The right to equality, human rights, call for that kind of protection.

● (1805)

[English]

The obscenity provisions brought forward in this legislation, which we have not debated, do go in the right direction and deal with degradation, and we need them, but I believe there is one thing that is wrong with the Minister's proposal. It would seem to be a loophole on account of the expectation that all provinces have censorship laws. This is a provision to require the permission of the Attorney General to prosecute when a film or video cassette has gone through a provincial classification censorship board.

However, not all provinces have censorship. The Province of Manitoba does not. It only has classification. Quebec, in effect, does not censor films or cassettes. This would impede prosecution for films or cassettes which could be extremely pornographic. I do not think that is a step in the right direction.

To conclude, I would ask the Minister again to move quickly on this issue. The problems are important. If he is really serious about dealing with violent pornography, we do not want more press conferences or promises, we want to get legislation in the House and have it passed.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in response to the intervention of the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), I just want to point out that the subject matter of Bill C-19, the omnibus Criminal Code amendments Bill, is before the House Leaders at this time. They will be deciding if there can be an agreement between them about how to deal with this Bill. I would not want to prejudice those negotiations at this time by any remarks I might make.

Adjournment Debate

TRADE—BEEF IMPORTS FROM COMMON MARKET COUNTRIES. (B) GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond in the adjournment debate this evening with respect to my question to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan) which I posed last May 24, which appears at page 4010 of Hansard. At that time, the matter concerned beef imports into Canada from the European Common Market.

I want to take a moment to thank the Minister for International Trade, even though he is not in the House, for what I would call his careful answer on this subject at that time. I would point out as well that he was previously briefed several weeks ago by myself during a meeting of the External Affairs Committee when the Minister was a witness and I was on the committee.

I will give the Minister credit for a much better response last week in the House than the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) provided on this same beef import issue when it was raised just one day earlier, on May 23, by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer). On that occasion the Minister of Agriculture deliberately avoided the beef import issue and instead gave us all a sermon on the benefits of marketing boards with supply management powers for our Canadian beef cattle industry. That subject was not the issue at all.

My personal concern about this matter is that we in Canada are the only country in the world with an established and significant beef cattle industry of our own that imposes no meaningful restraints on subsidized foreign beef exports. Our only practical limitation on this matter is our global beef quota of 145.1 million pounds under our Beef Import Act plus the companion Guaranteed Minimum Access, generally known as the GMA under the GATT Agreement.

Canada's total beef cattle industry is presently very upset and angry over the dramatic increase in European Common Market exports to Canada from countries such as the Irish Republic, Denmark, Holland, West Germany and possibly others. Such imported beef is presently entering Canada with export subsidies of 50 cents per pound or higher. That is in Canadian currency, paid for by the exporting country within the Common Market. We are understandably concerned about that huge stockpile of over 600,000 tonnes presently in storage in the common market.

I was particularly pleased with the Minister's response to my supplementary question when he extended a personal invitation in this House for me to visit with him in his office to discuss this issue later that same day. I was pleased to accept that invitation. I am sure the ensuing session was well worth while to both of us. As a result of that excellent private meeting, I would seriously suggest that the Minister for International Trade has received some inaccurate background information from his advisory staff on two items.

First, the Minister seems to feel that while our total beef imports may have changed as to their country of origin, the general total level of imports had not increased and was not excessive. This is certainly not the case. Our traditional imports from Australia and New Zealand have dropped somewhat, it is true, but this drop off has been replaced with huge amounts from the Common Market, all with export subsidies.

The second item that needs comment and correction is that the Minister seems to have been advised that Canada's global import quota of 145.1 million pounds will not be filled during the 1984 calendar year. Therefore, there should be no serious reason for our Canadian concerns. This is certainly not the case. The Canadian Cattlemen's Association has monitored these imports from all countries very carefully. The Association does this year by year. It is a very good source of information on this type of statistic. The Canadian Cattlemen's Association has always done this as a service for Canada's beef cattle producers and the total industry.

The CCA's considered opinion is that our global quota could be filled as early as August or September of this year, after which we can expect our live cow prices to drop rather sharply as a result of being forced onto the United States market in larger and larger numbers at that time of year. It is important to note that I think the Minister has the best of intentions. That was obvious to me when we had our private conversation. I think, however, he has not been properly advised, at least along those two lines. Admittedly it is difficult to keep on top of the pounds of imported beef coming into Canada. But this can be done. The Canadian Cattlemen's Association over the years has done a superb job of monitoring the numbers. Most of the figures come from the Government of Canada, from Statistics Canada. It is a matter of the Minister taking the time to assess the total situation and get a variety of expert opinions. That is available.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) does make some very telling points. It is accurate to state that imports of beef into Canada have increased greatly when measured on a year over year basis. The information I have indicates that imports from all sources during the first four months of this year were 45.2 million pounds compared with 36.7 million pounds during the same months last year.

The Government shares the Canadian Cattlemen's concern about the rapid increase of subsidized beef imports into Canada from the European community. Since the beginning of the year, officials of the Department of External Affairs, in consultation with those from other Departments, have been monitoring and evaluating the situation closely in view of the potential destabilizing effect such imports could have on Canadian markets and trade patterns.

● (1815)

Strong representations have been made to the European Economic Community, urging it to cease the undercutting of the Canadian market. Canadian representatives to the GATT have also raised the issue. Although Canada has not received a formal response, I am informed that on May 12, 1984, the European Community reduced its export refund by 6.6 per cent. This is welcome, but the European Economic Community needs to do more. Canadian officials shall be raising this issue again with the European Economic Community next week on June 7 and June 8 in the regular review of Canada-European Economic Community problems.

Moreover, I believe that the Canadian Cattlemen's Association is preparing a submission requesting the application of countervailing duties on imports of Irish beef products. This submission will provide the Government the opportunity to evaluate if the industry is suffering injury due to these imports. Should this prove to be the case, appropriate action, consistent with Canadian law and our GATT obligations, will be taken.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—MACDONALD COMMISSION'S APPROACH TO CHALLENGE OF TECHNOLOGY. (B) GOVERNMENT INVESTMENT IN RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to elaborate upon the questions which I asked on April 17 in the House of the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston), as reported at page 3136 of Hansard. At that time I was disturbed by the interim report of the Macdonald Commission which failed to recognize the importance of the new technologies that are now transforming global economies from one end of the planet to another. This represents a significant challenge to Canada. I must clarify that I am talking about the challenge to use technology to increase the wealth and income to be extracted from our traditional strong suits—our resource-based industries and our manufacturing enterprises. I am not just talking about high technology or micro-electronics in a narrow sense, but the equalization process which is under way in the world and the transformation of the economies of all nations this challenge is presenting.

I expressed my concern about the report of the Macdonald Commission entitled "Challenges and Choices" which left the impression that Canada perhaps had a choice as to whether or not it should increase its commitment to technological advancement, as if we could stand idly by and watch these rapid transformations occurring throughout the world and not become involved by way of a major change or shift in the priorities of our nation and of the federal Government, particularly.

The approach taken by the Macdonald Commission, in not coming up with specific proposals or a categorical position on the issue, not only flies in the face of the facts as they reveal themselves around the world but seems contrary to the submission of the Minister of State for Science and Technology to the Macdonald Commission last October, wherein he included a call for a major increase in Canada's commitment to research and development. At that time he stated that the Government's target would be 1.5 per cent of Gross National Product being invested in research and development by 1985.

On April 17, I sought the Minister's assurance that he stood by his earlier commitment and asked whether he was happy with the ambivalent approach of the Macdonald Commission to technology. What I received back was worse than ambivalence. Specifically I asked the Minister:

—does he still support his submission to the Commission where he said that Canada must raise its commitment to research and development in a major way—

He said, and I repeat, "that Canada must raise its commitment to research and development in a major way." His contradictory answer to the question was: "clearly I stand behind the submission I made to the Macdonald Commission." He went on to indicate:

—the Government's commitment to research and development has been consistent . . . and has not decreased—

Is his statement that Canada's commitment to science and technology has not decreased the same as his earlier one that Canada should raise in a major way its national investment in research and development?

The Minister's answer shows that the Government has had no serious intention of increasing its expenditure on and encouragement of research and development, despite its long-standing pledge, going back several years, to raise this investment to 1.5 per cent of GNP by 1985. Indeed, if we go back to 1968 at about the time the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office, Canada was spending 1.5 per cent of its GNP on research and development. In the intervening decade or more, our investment in research declined in a rather drastic way.

● (1820)

This tendency has continued as confirmed by Statistics Canada's annual science bulletin which was issued just a few weeks prior to the Macdonald report. The Stats Can report released a couple of months ago said that Canada's investment in research and development had dropped from 1.29 per cent of GNP to 1.28 per cent in 1983 and will drop further to 1.24 per cent in the present financial year. This means that the Government has failed miserably in its attempt—if there has been any attempt at all—to meet its modest goal of spending 1.5 per cent of GNP on research by 1985. The amount of 1.5 per cent of GNP equates to about $6 billion. That is less than one-third of what we pay in this country merely to service our national debt. It is an investment which absolutely must be made by the nation.

The Minister did not dispute the fact that statistically our commitment to research had declined. In fact, he confirmed it with his attempt at excuse-making. Specifically I asked the Minister, "Does the Mnister have an explanation as to why in the two years he has been Minister of State for Science and Technology Canada's investment in research and development has dropped—?"

The Minister gave two strangely incongruous reasons for this decline. First he said, "That is one of the outcomes of any recession", implying that national incomes had dropped and therefore we spent less. In the same answer he said that this occurred because of the economic growth during the period. To my naive way of thinking, those two statements appear to be totally contradictory.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Rolland Dion (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise in the House this evening to answer the question put by the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) concerning the federal Government's commitments to research and technology.

I am pleased with this opportunity to address the House this evening regarding the federal Government's support for research and development and technological growth in Canada. I have no reason to doubt the seriousness of this Government's commitment to increasing research and development, and I can give an example to prove it.

Since the Government set its objectives for research and development spending, gross national expenditures in those areas have increased substantially. In 1979, gross expenditures for research and development represented 1.02 per cent of GNP. The latest figures provided by Statistics Canada show that in 1982, gross expenditures in those areas accounted for 1.29 per cent of GNP and it is expected this will be 1.28 per cent for 1983.

The ratio of these gross expenditures to GNP for the last two years is not as high as expected, mainly because Statistics Canada's previous assessments of GNP were very conservative. Our present economic growth is far more dynamic than was forecast, and consequently, if we express research and development as a percentage of today's expanding economy, it has not expanded to the same extent. Furthermore, some R and D expenditures planned for 1983 did not take place, especially in the sector where spending by the oil and natural gas industry has dropped compared with previous forecasts.

Mr. Speaker, I could say more on the subject, but since I have only three minutes, I shall simply add that as far as technological development is concerned, I can assure you that the Government's commitment to investing in research and development is both substantial and sustained, and those must be my last words since my time has expired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.26 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WORLD MILITARY EXPENDITURES—SUGGESTED ONE-YEAR FREEZE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the 1985 estimate for world military spending is $1 trillion. A thoughtful news feature in The Toronto Star, dated May 16, quoted Canada's former ambassador to the United Nations and NATO, George Ignatieff, as saying: "It is terrible, absolutely mindless spending".

That same trillion dollars, if submitted to an international pool, would change the face of the planet. It could feed 650 million people threatened with starvation. It could help more than 100 Third World countries attain self-sufficiency. It could start a global clean-up of deadly pollutants, and put most contagious diseases under control.

The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization claims that only 10 per cent to 15 per cent of the trillion dollars could end world hunger. Could a freeze on military spending around the world for one year become the first project for the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security?

Approximately 40,000 children die each day from hunger and disease and, for every one who dies, six others live on without food in ill health.

I realize the solution I propose is highly idealistic but no greater than cramming men into machines and blasting them into outer space.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

LEVEL OF CANADIAN SUPPORT

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, this week the 16 Foreign Ministers of the NATO countries meet for the Alliance's thirty-fifth anniversary meeting. "Peace and freedom through deterrence" has been NATO's strategy since 1949, and it has been a successful one. This strategy has worked as a deterrent to Soviet aggression since 1949 because NATO members have remained firm in their resolve, despite the best efforts of the peace movement, that pledging a no first use of nuclear weapons would encourage Moscow to launch a conventional attack on western Europe.

At the Atlantic Treaty Association conference last year NATO Secretary General, Joseph Luns, made the following observation:

> It has always been an imbalance in weaponry and manpower, coupled with a desire to impose one's will on others by force, which has led nations to consider it worth the risk of beginning a war . . . The safest way to preserve peace is to ensure as close a balance as possible between the arsenals on each side.

That is the principle which must guide the Alliance in the future as we seek fair and verifiable agreements with the Soviet Union.

As Canadians we must live up to the goals to which we are committed. Estimates of defence expenditures as a percentage of Gross Domestic Product for 1983 place us at the bottom of all NATO partners with 2.1 per cent, just ahead of Luxembourg. Our NATO partners deserve and expect more from us in the future.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGATIONS MADE BY QUEBEC MINISTER OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, last week I heard on the news that the Quebec Minister of the Environment was very proud of the fact that the provincial government was going to proceed with a program to renovate the copper smelter facility at Noranda. Surprisingly, the Minister announced the policy only a few days after the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of the Government of Canada had released a report on non-ferrous metals and smelters across Canada. For over two years, the Quebec Minister has failed to show any concern about the acid rain issue. Now that the Government of Canada has released an excellent and well-researched report, describing the policies and technologies that must be introduced to fight acid rain and upgrade existing technology in non-ferrous smelters, it is rather surprising to see the provincial government wake up all of a sudden and ask for federal assistance, especially since it was at the Federal-Provincial Conference, boycotted by the Quebec Minister of Energy and Resources, that the federal Minister asked for implementation of such policies.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the only province that was politically hostile and refused to offer any co-operation at the ministerial level with respect to preparing for and organizing the conference, was unfortunately, my home province, the province of Quebec. I think it is unfortunate, because for the benefit of all Canadians, the Government—

BANK ACT

ROYAL BANK'S CAR BUY-BACK PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to recall the attention of the House to the issue of the Royal Bank's car buy-back loan program, an issue which was previously raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), on May 11.

Automobile dealers in my riding have expressed to me what I think should be a concern of all of us in the House, that the Royal Bank may be flouting the will of Parliament by implementing what could well be argued is the leasing of vehicles, an idea which the House rejected when we last debated the Bank Act. It was the clear intent of the House at that time that banks not be allowed to get into the business of leasing vehicles. The Royal Bank's buy-back plan, for all practical purposes, is a form of closed-end leasing under a different name.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) indicated to my colleague on May 11 that the Royal Bank plan was under review and that, when the review was completed, he would be able to give an answer. I call upon him to come forward soon and indicate whether the Government intends to let the Royal Bank get away with this or whether it intends to do something about it.

THE CONSTITUTION

UNDERLYING PRINCIPLES—PLEA FOR PROCLAMATION OF DAY OF PRAYER

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the very first paragraph in the Constitution Act, 1981, which is Canada's Constitution, states: "Whereas Canada is founded upon the principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law."

Just how would the Supreme Court interpret and uphold these principles? So I dare ask this Parliament, which passed this Constitution Act, what are these principles? Where are they transcribed? How is this nation, Canada, which is founded upon these principles, to know these principles? Are these principles taught in our schools, in our homes, in our churches, or in our institutions?

On November 23, 1983, I suggested in this assembly that this Parliament proclaim a Day of Prayer in Canada in early 1984, a day on which each of us might dwell upon these principles, a day on which we might all pray for world peace and brotherhood, a day on which each of us, after his or her own manner, can quietly recognize the supremacy of God.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

TRANSFER PAYMENTS TO QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I made a statement under the provisions of Standing Order 21 about fiscal transfer payments to the province of Quebec.

Today I noticed, and my hon. friend for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel) will corroborate me on this, an article in the newspaper La Presse which reported some comments made by the Member for Argenteuil in the National Assembly, Mr. Claude Ryan, who gave some very telling figures. I want to congratulate him and thank him for what he said to the PQ counterparts in Quebec, namely, that if the provinces have the means "to provide plans for free health insurance, hospital insurance, and school and university tuition programs, it is because federal transfer payments made these plans possible. We could not have done this alone. We must realize that! And when we are talking about the pros and cons of the federal system, these are points that must be conceded." Mr. Ryan also commented that between 1974 and 1984, transfer payments received by Quebec from Ottawa increased by 346 per cent. During the same period, Quebec's own tax revenues increased by only 240 per cent. Federal transfer payments represented the following percentages of the federal Budget: 4 per cent in 1937, rising to 8 per cent in 1960 and 20 per cent in 1983. Those are the advantages of Canadian federalism and that is the kind of thing Quebecers should be told, to encourage them to remain in Confederation and continue to be a part of Canada. The province of Quebec must continue to be a part of this country!

AGRICULTURE

FINANCIAL AID PROMISED TO UPA BY CERTAIN LIBERAL MEMBERS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Over a month ago, Mr. Speaker, Quebec UPA spokesmen and certain Government Members met with the Minister of Agriculture to seek financial assistance as a result of the drought experienced last summer by farmers in many Quebec ridings. Following that meeting, the Minister of Agriculture said that he would be prepared to compensate those farmers, provided his provincial counterpart made an official request. On April 16 last, the Quebec Minister of Agriculture submitted an official request for federal Government assistance. In response, the federal Minister of Agriculture simply said that the request was worthless since his Quebec colleague did not make a cost-sharing proposal.

That, Mr. Speaker, is an unbelievably stupid joke on the part of certain Government Members who had promised financial aid to the Quebec UPA. Given the condition laid down by the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker, it was a stupid joke in the circumstances, and I urge the Minister and his Quebec colleagues to elicit an affirmative response from the federal Government, with generous aid, as was done for other regions of the country two or three years ago, and for the same reasons, Mr. Speaker.

That is why I insist and ask Members opposite to stop being such hypocrites when the basic needs of Quebec farmers are involved.

[English]

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN OF CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION—REQUEST FOR NEW POLICIES

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The National Chairman of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association said yesterday that the recovery had turned "generally flat". According to Mr. German, the manufacturing sector had recovered only about 40 per cent of the 300,000 jobs that were lost during the recession. He said that the recovery is still "very hesitant, very uneven and very fragile". Does the Minister agree with the assessment made by the Chairman of the CMA? If so, will he be unveiling any new policies designed to meet this problem, particularly for the 550,000 young people who are out of work and who, it would appear, will be out of work for an extended period of time? Will the Minister be unveiling any new policies in light of this statement?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to welcome the Leader of the Opposition back to the House after a long absence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I suspect that he found that the more he travelled within Canada, the worse his Party was doing, so he decided to try his luck in the House. I welcome him back and we will see how it will all end up.

I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that there has been a significant recovery in Canada. As a matter of fact, in the first quarter of 1984 the economy recovered all that which had been lost during the recession. We have succeeded in overcoming our position of 1981 before the recession. Unfortunately, we have not yet recovered all of the jobs that were lost, and this is something we are addressing consistently. That problem was addressed in the last Budget of February 15 and is being addressed through the numerous programs that are being implemented by the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

The recovery has been going on. The growth of the Gross National Product in the first quarter of 1984 was in the range of 1 per cent, which is what I had foreseen in the Budget, and I see no reason to believe that we will not continue to see significant growth during 1984.

HOUSING STARTS—REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO ASSIST CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows, housing starts are the alarm bell of the economy, and housing starts were down by 37,000 April to April this year as compared to last year. This has resulted in approximately 100,000 lost jobs. In light of this, what economic measures is the Minister planning to introduce to assist the construction industry so that it may climb out of the very serious doldrums into which it has been placed by the policies of the Government, including its high interest rate policies? Will he outline some specific programs today?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to remind the Hon. Member that, in his absence, we have discussed the interest rate policy extensively and it has been demonstrated that the Government does not have a high interest rate policy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: On the contrary, we have had a consistent policy of keeping the lowest possible interest rates in this country. This can be shown by looking at Canadian interest rates as compared to those of the United States. Even today the prime interest rates in Canada are half a point below those in the United States. Average mortgage rates, on a consistent basis, are lower in this country than in the United States. The Hon. Member should realize that we have indeed pursued a policy of having the lowest possible interest rate.

Regarding housing starts, it is true that they have not grown as fast as they did last April. However, the Hon. Member will recognize that in the first quarter of this year the increase in housing starts was about 6.3 per cent over that of the last quarter of 1983. He will also recall that in the first part of 1984 we were engaged in a program of very active stimulation through grants for housing construction, which was terminated in April. There was a very strong demand for housing then because the program of subsidizing the purchase of homes was to conclude at the end of April or early May. That resulted in an artificial increase in the construction rate at that particular time. We foresee that during the course of this year we will see further increases in the rate of housing starts.

INQUIRY WHETHER NEW BUDGET BEING PREPARED

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): The current economic analysis by Statistics Canada shows that of the ten leading economic indicators by which one can objectively judge the performance of the Government, six of them are in a state of sharp decline. Since it is becoming clear by any objective standard that the Minister, and his budgetary statements, have clearly misjudged the ailments, and the remedies which should be brought to the economic problems, can the Minister inform the House whether he has instructed his Department to prepare a standby budget, or one which can be brought forward quickly after a new Liberal leader is selected? In other words, it is generally acknowledged that the economic measures have failed. In an attempt to save his own job, does the Minister already have on standby his own Budget to be brought in when the next Liberal leader orders him to do so? Can he tell us that now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): First of all, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition should not only have referred to the next Liberal leader but also to the next Prime Minister after the leadership convention, and after the election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Pro tem!

Mr. Lalonde: I repeat, after the election also. As far as measures are concerned, I would invite the Leader of the Opposition to convince his Party, and the opposition generally, at least to support the measures which are before this House, which will help the consumers, the housebuilding industry, and the citizens who want to purchase homes.

There is now before this House a Bill providing for mortgage interest rate protection. There is, as well, a Bill amending the Interest Act, which will help home buyers to receive more security and safety in terms of their mortgages. This Bill is before the House now. It will ensure significant protection to Canadian citizens, and I would hope that the Opposition would give it speedy consideration and passage. This is one measure which is right before the House today which is going to be of significant benefit to Canadians. It is supported by all the parties involved in the construction and housing industry, and the Opposition is still dragging its feet.

CREATION OF JOBS—COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Minister of Finance that if he is so confident about who is going to be the next Prime Minister, I hope he will tell the next Leader of his Party to call an election, because we are ready for one right here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre has the floor.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see that there are a number of Hon. Members in the back row across the way who are waving goodbye to you. They are not expecting to be back here after the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I want to point out to the Minister of Finance that Statistics Canada shows that in the past nine months in Canada only 99,000 jobs were created, or approximately .9 per cent. In the United States a comparable figure shows 3,177,000 jobs were created, or 3.1 per cent. That is more than three times a better performance in the United States. Can the Minister give any explanation for this far better performance in the United States other than the series of bad economic decisions taken by his predecessor and by himself since 1980?

• (1425)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all I cannot understand the suicidal bent of the Hon. Member. I am sorry that he is so eager to leave politics, together with his Leader, but I will certainly transmit to our new Leader and new Prime Minister the request of the Hon. Member, and I hope he will give it favourable consideration.

As to the question, I invite the Hon. Member to look, not only on a selective basis in selective periods, at the job creation record of this Government over the years, and the last few years in particular. Look at it ever since 1968, for example. He will find that since 1968 this Government has created proportionately 40 per cent more jobs than in the United States. That is the record this Government has behind it.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I should remind the Minister that I am looking forward to a long and successful career in politics. I am not looking for a job over in Europe right now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

IMPACT OF INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister commented about not having a high interest rate policy. The fact of the matter is interest rates are higher today than they have been for a long period of time.

Mr. Deans: You are in favour of high interest rates, you hypocrite.

Mr. Wilson: Housing start rates in February were 153,000, in March they were 131,000, and in April they were 126,000. Consumer spending is also expected to be affected badly by interest rates.

Mr. Deans: Tell the truth, Wilson.

Mr. Wilson: In what sectors of the economy is the Minister looking for new jobs to be created? Can you hear my question?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: In what areas of the economy is the Minister looking for new jobs to be created? Or is it in fact true that he has ordered his staff to start preparing a new budget in the Department right now so it will be ready for the next Prime Minister?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): As far as the job in Europe is concerned, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not need to worry. No one is going to put his name forward.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: They did not offer you one either.

Mr. Lalonde: My concern for him is what he will do when he has neither a job in Europe nor here after the next election.

As far as the question is concerned, I have indicated that we are trying to create jobs in all areas of the economy, both by direct government support through the national recovery program, the Special recovery projects, the billions of dollars that the Department of Manpower and Immigration is spending in the form of training and direct job creation, and also through the billions of dollars of tax incentives we have provided for the private sector generally. These incentives are available to the private sector to make use of, and we have indicated that we have put forward programs of special interest and advantage to small business. Small and medium business is and will continue to be the main job creator in this country. We are behind it in that effort. I am convinced that with the co-operation we have succeeded in achieving between labour, management, and Governments, we are going to be able to create the required jobs.

Oral Questions

SOCIAL SCIENCES AND HUMANITIES RESEARCH COUNCIL

SIZE OF BUDGET ALLOTTED BY GOVERNMENT

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications and concerns the federal Government's funding of the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. He will of course know that in 1983-84 the total budget of the SSHRC was $60.048 million, and in the fiscal year 1984-85 the total budget has dropped to $58.869 million. This is due to the failure of the Government to renew the allocation of money for research in areas of national importance. The SSHRC has suffered an actual reduction in its total budget.

● (1430)

In the meeting of the social development committee, which I believe is taking place today or tomorrow, will the Minister take the side of the granting council and the SSHRC for a change, and urge upon his fellow Ministers a continuation of the special funding which was allocated for matters of national significance? Will he urge that upon his fellow Ministers?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have always taken the side of the granting council. If there was a special budget of $5.9 million a year over three years which was given to the SSHRC three years ago, it was in good part because of my intervention with my Cabinet colleagues and, of course, because of their endorsement of the very high importance that the Government gives to the development of the humanities and research and social sciences in general in Canada. The Council has received for this year an appropriation equivalent to inflation. It has also received an increase of $2 million a year into its base budget.

Ms. Jewett: That is not true.

Mr. Fox: If the Hon. Member is interested in listening to the answer, I will give it. I have also indicated quite clearly that the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council is preparing a five-year plan which will be going before my Cabinet colleagues. At that point we will be in a position to examine the requirements of the SSHRC over the years to come. I have not said that the $2 million was the only increase they would be receiving.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, that is extremely deceptive. There was no increase of $2 million. The total budget of the SSHRC, as I have said, was reduced by $1,179,000. The total budget was reduced.

Mr. Fox: Not true.

Ms. Jewett: The Minister is deceiving us when he says it was increased by $2 million.

Mr. Fox: Not true.

Ms. Jewett: I also want to remind him that it was not $5.9 million. It was $11.5 million over three years.

Oral Questions

COUNCIL'S REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has both of those figures wrong, will he realize that the request of the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council is for at least an additional $5.8 million for this fiscal year? Is he going to support that request in the social development committee and Cabinet?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should have a look at the balance sheet. There was a program established three years ago, which was temporary in nature, to give an amount of funds to researchers in Canada to do studies on matters which we consider to be national objectives and which the SSHRC and the community in general agreed were of importance to the country. That program came to an end. That was not an amount which was in the base budget of the SSHRC. If the Hon. Member wants to go through the figures she should have a look at what is the base budgeting of the SSHRC. The Hon. Member will see that the SSHRC has not only received increases for inflation, but has received an increase of $2 million in the base of the SSHRC. We have gone on to say that the SSHRC is in the process of providing us with a five-year plan. Obviously, if that five-year plan makes sense, and having seen it I know it makes sense, I would hope that we would be in a position to obtain more funding for the important area which is represented by the SSHRC.

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is quibbling. I was talking about the total budget rather than the base budget. That is what I was talking about, and that is what he keeps avoiding. He is therefore undermining the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council.

MUSEUMS AND ART GALLERIES

CANADA MUSEUMS CONSTRUCTION CORPORATION—PRIVATE FUNDING CAMPAIGN

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, since I am discussing matters of a funding nature with the Minister, who is also responsible for the Canada Museums Construction Corporation, will he explain to the House why he has authorized that Corporation to raise $24 million in private funding when all three Parties in the House agreed only the other day that the new Peace Research Institute should not seek out private funding but should be supported by government funding? Why is he allowing the Museums Construction Corporation to seek $24 million in private funding, which is robbing all the smaller museums in Canada of money from the private sector?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we have indicated a very strong and clear commitment by the Government to the arts in Canada. We have made sufficient funds available to the Museums Construction Corporation to build two museums in the national capital area. The National Museum of Man is to be built on the Hull side, and the National Gallery is to be built in Ottawa.

The amount of $190 million has been allocated. While that amount is sufficient to build those museums, if we want those museums to have an outward appearance that Canadians from coast to coast would be proud of, we feel it would be interesting to obtain additional funds from the private sector. This would allow Canadians from coast to coast to participate in the building of each museum and to feel that it is not only a museum given to them by public funds, but also a museum which they have participated in building themselves.

Ms. Jewett: Inconsistent.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

INTEREST RATE CHARGES—REFERENCE TO PROJECTED INCREASE

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Both The Globe and Mail and The Western Producer have quoted Farm Credit Corporation officials as saying that their lending rate will likely increase by 1 per cent in mid June, even though their lending rate is already at the unacceptable level of 14 per cent to 15 per cent.

In light of the near record number of farm bankruptcies which have already occurred, and in view of the fact that the Bank of Canada rate has declined slightly in the past two weeks, will the Minister reassure Canadian farmers that there will be no increase in the Farm Credit Corporation's lending rate in June? In fact, will he reassure Canadian farmers that there will be no further increase throughout the balance of this calendar year?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should not necessarily expect the situation to grow worse, and everything he has heard is nothing more than speculative guesses which are now being conveyed by certain media. He knows that the lending rates of the FCC are geared to the interest rates it has to pay to borrow. If, as the Hon. Member indicates, the interest rates—particularly those of the Bank of Canada—seem to be declining, he ought to be encouraged by this trend and assume that interest rates will remain stable. However, I will do as he does and wait to see how interest rates will perform, and he will have to see what happens before year's end.

[English]

Mr. Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister had gone one step further and made the promise I sought. If he had done that, he would have given Canadian farmers the reassurance they need at this point in time.

CORPORATION'S LOSSES

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons that Farm Credit Corporation lending rates are so high is that the Farm Credit Corporation is expected to recover the losses which have already occurred on FCC loans, at least in part as a result of the Government's failed policies. Why does the Minister expect future borrowers to pay for the losses which have already been incurred by others who have preceded them?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is a strange question, to say the least. The Hon. Member knows that the corporation has to recover its losses and, obviously, if it incurs deficits as a result of unexpected interest rate increases and its inability to recover as much in loan repayments as it has to pay for its borrowings in the first place, then it has to make the necessary adjustments to balance the books. That is not shrewdness but mere wisdom.

[English]

CHANGE IN METHOD OF COMPUTING INTEREST

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. The Farm Credit Corporation has changed its method of computing interest on farm loans. On loans that farmers had opted to repay annually the interest used to be compounded annually. It is now being compounded semi-annually. Why has the Government changed its method of computing the interest rate for farmers? Why has the Government seized on an opportunity to squeeze more money out of farmers by using a very sneaky and underhanded method?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall enquire from the Farm Credit Corporation what procedure they have implemented, and I shall report to the Hon. Member. However, if the Farm Credit Corporation is doing as bad as the Opposition claims it does, could the Hon. Member explain to me how its total loans could have increased from $500 million to $800 million in less than two years. Unlike the Opposition, Canadian farmers are satisfied with the services provided by the Farm Credit Corporation.

[English]

COST TO FARMERS

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, for the Minister's information, the Government has changed the method. On a loan of $100,000 with interest compounded annually, payments used to be $15,098. On the same loan with the interest compounded semi-annually the payment is $15,526.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gass: That is an additional $8,566 over 20 years which the farmer has to pay. How can the Minister justify such shameful, deceitful treatment of farmers?

• (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already replied to this question when I said that I would enquire from the Farm Credit Corporation. But again, the Hon. Member should know that the money the Corporation is lending had to be borrowed on the marketplace. Therefore, before lending to farmers and producers, it must make sure that it will receive sufficient funds from its borrowers to cover at least what it has to pay to borrow on the marketplace. I suggest again that this is somewhat elementary. The Hon. Member is aware that the Farm Credit Corporation must strive to be self-financing. As a matter of fact, because of the problems encountered by farmers over the past year, the Corporation is now faced with a major deficit. We have taken this reality into account. But the Farm Credit Corporation is anxious to re-establish its financial standing, as is required by law.

CO-OPERATIVES

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION ON WORKERS' CO-OPERATIVES

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the Government's position on the key worker co-op recommendations in the Government's financed report by the National Task Force on Co-operative Development, filed with the Government yesterday. As the Prime Minister will recall, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development had obvious difficulty answering the question from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert, in the House yesterday, in determining whether he was answering as a Liberal leadership candidate or answering as a Minister.

Will the Prime Minister and the Government accept the following key recommendation of the Co-op Task Force, namely, that the federal Government should endorse worker co-operatives as a priority vehicle for employment generation? It should also make funding assistance available to the co-operative movement for the staff work of the steering committee, or for regional development assistance agencies, and for the creation of a pool of start-up funds or start-up guarantees for individual employee owned co-operatives. Will the Prime Minister give an indication of the Government's response to that key recommendation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter is up for government consideration. I will take the Hon. Member's question as a representation.

Oral Questions

CONSULTATION WITH CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development indicated as a leadership candidate that he accepted the key thrust of the report. I would hope that the Prime Minister and the Government after some deliberation—it is a government financed report—would also give a positive answer.

Concerning that matter, recommendation 12 of the task force report states that a steering committee should be set up with representatives of the established co-operative movement and emerging worker co-operatives. I am sure the Prime Minister would agree that one of the things we must do is maximize consent to and minimize dissent from the concept, if we want to go ahead. To that degree, would the Prime Minister assure the House in any such development that representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress Joint Committee on Labour and Co-ops would also be included in such consultations so that we can, as I said, maximize consent to and minimize dissent from what is a very positive recommendation from a long awaited task force report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a leadership candidate's position. I take it that he is making representations to one of the candidates because one of them will become Prime Minister. I, myself, have only until midnight tonight to become a leadership candidate. I believe the entries are closed after that, so I will take notice of the question of the Hon. Member.

SOCIAL SECURITY

ALLEGATIONS MADE BY QUEBEC MINISTER

Mr. Raymond Savard (Verdun-Saint Paul): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Today I was reading a statement made by Minister Camille Laurin, in which he said that he would like to withdraw from all federal old age security programs.

I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare how she reacts to such a statement.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think Dr. Laurin should rather concentrate on the problems of his hospitals, especially the one in Dolbeau, instead of trying to wreck the old age pension system which works quite well and to the satisfaction of Quebec senior citizens.

If Dr. Laurin and the Quebec Government want to hand out supplementary benefits immediately to people between 60 and 64, for instance, there is nothing to prevent them from doing so. However, I do not see why they would want to get rid of something which has very well served Quebecers and will soon do even better since it will provide an additional $50 for single recipients within the next few weeks.

[English]

INCLUSION OF WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION PAYMENTS IN DETERMINING ELIGIBILITY FOR GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On January 31, 1984, I asked the Minister a question regarding the effects of Bill C-139 on recipients of the guaranteed income supplement, to which she gave an answer which might have been logical and rational for an altogether different question. I will try again. Is the Minister aware that Bill C-139, in Clause 26, requires old age pensioners to declare workmen's compensation pensions in their declaration of income for the calculation of eligibility for a guaranteed income supplement, and does she approve of this attack on senior citizens who are recipients of GIS?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I must say, and maybe the Prime Minister will not like to hear this, but personally I would love to have no deductions made to pensions for seniors. But that is not very fair. Let me take the trouble to go one step further in the reasoning. I know that workers who get a private disability benefit when they are retired must declare that benefit. They have always had to declare it because it is an added source of income. Seniors who also get income from another source, like the workmen's compensation, unfortunately, but in terms of fairness, must declare it. I may regret this, but it makes sense in terms of simple justice.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare knows that people have to declare that type of income. She should also recognize the fact that workmen's compensation payments should not be considered as earned income, as investment income, or as income from a contributory pension plan. These payments are compensation for an injury that permanently impairs a person's ability to earn income.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Halliday: In view of the fact that this change adversely affects about 25,000 seniors by removing all or part of their GIS entitlements, will the Minister tell the House what representation she has made to the Minister of Finance to protect these pensioners from this severe erosion of their income, and why has she failed to convince him?

An Hon. Member: He is hard-hearted.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but if the opposition Members could stop shouting I would be able to answer the Hon. Member. I repeat, although it may not be a popular stand that I am taking, I have to advise the Hon. Member that those seniors with incomes from different sources having to do with disability must declare these incomes. I do not know why the Hon. Member wants to single out one group who receive disability benefits against another group who receives disability benefits. The Hon. Member's Leader cannot at the same time cut the deficit and keep adding, adding, and adding to the tax system. He must make up his mind and give me the list of what deductions he wants to see given to seniors.

Mr. Mazankowski: What about your Leader?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Check with John Turner.

THE ECONOMY

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS—DIRECT FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, the latest entry in the leadership race. As Statistics Canada reports at page 130 of its publication Balance of International Payments Fourth Quarter 1983, between 1971 and 1983 direct investment in Canada from abroad decreased from $925 million in 1971 to $200 million in 1983. During the same period direct investment by Canadians in other countries increased from $230 million in 1971 to $2.575 billion in 1983. Would the Prime Minister advise the House what he and his Government plan to do to try to correct this disastrous trend which has cost Canadians hundreds of thousands of jobs in the intervening 12 years?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is assuming that only foreign direct investment will create jobs in Canada. That is obviously a ridiculous assessment and assumption. Investment by Canadians creates jobs in Canada. Loans by foreigners to Canada, to Canadian corporations, also create jobs. Just looking at the figure of direct investment in terms of proportions is not a good way of assessing the reality. The absolute figure of foreign investment in Canada over the last 10 years has multiplied some five or sixfold in absolute figures, up to some $72 billion now, which is three times higher than it was 10 years ago. Perhaps the Hon. Member would want to do a little more work on this. We have time. I have not yet declared for the leadership. I have some more hours to make up my mind.

Mr. Hees: I think that last sentence is the best news the country has had in quite some time.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION—DECLINE IN FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would he not agree that direct investment by Canadians and those from abroad adds greatly to the number of jobs being made available to Canadians in this country and that if these figures had been reversed—that is, if direct investment by Canadians had increased to the same degree which it has increased overseas, and if direct investment in Canada by those overseas had increased by the same amount it decreased in this country—then we would have had hundreds of thousands of additional jobs? If he does not understand that, I would be very glad to bring the figures, which I have here in my hand, over to him and explain them to him, because I know he is a slow learner.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I certainly am a slow learner when it comes to absorbing the retrograde ideas of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Hees: Now, get it right.

Mr. Trudeau: He seems to think that it is an evil thing that the percentage of foreign control of the Canadian economic environment has gone down. It is something toward which this Government has been working, and we are proud of it.

Mr. Hees: That is not what we are talking about at all.

Mr. Trudeau: I have the figures here. Between 1970 and 1980, foreign control of mining, oil and gas has gone down from 60 per cent to 45 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: That is because foreigners have stopped investing in Canada. That is what I was just telling you.

Mr. Trudeau: I know. The Hon. Member is shouting a repetition of his own question.

Mr. Hees: That is the only way I can get it across to you.

Mr. Trudeau: If he is asking me questions, I presume he wants an answer.

Mr. Hees: I am trying to get an answer.

Mr. Trudeau: If he prefers to hear himself shouting, then he can do that in the hallway, and he will have a great audience out there.

In manufacturing, the percentage of foreign control in those 10 years has gone down from 52 per cent to 47 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In agriculture, from 13 per cent to 4 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In construction, from 16 per cent to 10 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In utilities, from 8 per cent to 4 per cent. No wonder the Americans do not like me; we are getting control over our own economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In wholesale trade, from 27 per cent to 24 per cent. In construction, from 16 per cent to 10 per cent. In retail trade, from 22 per cent to 13 per cent. In services, from 22 per cent to 14 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I would think that a proud Canadian, as the Hon. Member pretends to be, would be delighted that we are asserting greater control over our domestic economic environment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: The figures you have produced were brought about simply because foreigners have greatly reduced their investments in Canada—investments which produced jobs.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member resume his seat?

FORESTRY

INDIAN FORESTRY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. All Canadians concerned with Canada's economic future must be appalled by the Minister's failure to reach adequate forestry agreements with the major forest-producing provinces. Most of the money promised for forestry will be diverted to other purposes, while the crisis in our forests continues to grow.

Considering that the Assembly of First Nations has worked very closely with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Canadian Forest Service to develop an Indian Forestry Development Program, will the Minister now support the program by making available to it some of the forestry money which he was unable to give away to the provinces?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, concerning the second part of the Hon. Member's question, we are in the process of negotiating an agreement in conjunction with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As to the allegation of the Hon. Member, I wonder where he has been in recent weeks. We have negotiated and brought to a conclusion, in co-operation with the provinces, renewed forestry agreements. The Hon. Member is very wrong in his premise.

Mr. Manly: Either the Minister did not hear me properly or he has a sadly mistaken notion of what is adequate. I said "adequate forestry agreements". If he thinks he has an adequate forestry agreement with the Province of British Columbia, he had better look again. The Liberals hope that they will make some kind of a comeback in western Canada. How will they do that with an $11 million forestry agreement? The Government has promised to move toward—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member ask his supplementary question?

IMPORTANCE TO ECONOMIC BASE FOR INDIANS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister recognize the importance of the forestry sector in the development of an adequate economic base for Indian people? Does he recognize that this is a very important component in any movement toward an Indian First Nations Government, to which his Government is supposed to be committed, and to which—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has asked his supplementary question.

Hon. Chas L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, of course I recognize the importance of protecting and reinforcing the forestry sector across the nation. In the same breath I have to remind the Hon. Member that, when we engage in the process of renewing agreements, we do it in close co-operation and consultation with the provinces. I wish the Hon. Member were sufficiently informed to know that, as far as the B.C. Canada forestry agreement is concerned, we did it for the amount which the Government of British Columbia requested.

TRADE

UNITED STATES BAN ON METAL FORGINGS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. He will remember that about a week or 10 days ago I raised a question in the House regarding the export of defence material to the United States. What information can the Minister give the House today regarding his efforts to persuade the United States to rescind its unilateral action against Canada, relating to the importation of forgings from Canada for United States defence?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the matter raised by the Hon. Member was brought to the attention of the Government by a number of sources. Representations were made to the appropriate American authorities, in particular to the Department of Defence which had taken this action, apparently primarily as a security measure. Our representations have been well received by the United States.

● (1500)

Our assessment of the impact on Canadian business indicates that it is a much smaller impact than originally thought. Nevertheless, it is not just the question of dollars; the principle is a very important one. We are very confident that the Americans, who are undertaking to examine the situation, will remedy the injustice that would have been done to Canadian manufacturers.

IMPACT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, it may seem like a small amount of business to which the Minister refers, but I would remind him that it affects six plants across Canada, one of which is in my riding, and could directly affect 25 jobs there.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Hon. Member that if I gave him the impression that I felt that the jobs that could be affected were unimportant, I certainly did not want to give that impression at all. If any Canadian jobs are going to be adversely affected as a consequence of an unfair protectionist action by any other country, then I will fight that in every way possible.

INCOME TAX ACT

REVIEW OF SECTION 31

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. Could he tell us if he has appointed the review group that he mentioned in his February 15 Budget, to review Section 31 of the Income Tax Act?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yes, this review group has started its work. It is composed of officials who have already started meeting with representatives of the various organizations. I would be very pleased to provide the Hon. Member with the names of the officials concerned.

FORESTRY

SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for forestry. Can he give the House, particularly the Members from New Brunswick, an indication of when the forestry subagreement with New Brunswick will be signed and implemented?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the subagreement is in its final stages, and it is my hope that it will be signed very soon.

PETITIONS

MR. GREENAWAY—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 610 citizens of the Cariboo-Chilcotin constituency in British Columbia in support of the following United Nations statement:

The increase in nuclear weapons, far from strengthening international security, on the contrary, weakens it. Enduring peace cannot be built on the accumulation of weaponry.

The nature of the petition is to demand that Parliament take action to cease the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada. The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition you will find it in order and that you will refer it to the appropriate committee at the earliest possible time.

MR. JELINEK—ESTABLISHMENT OF POSTAL SERVICE

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of constituents in the Town of Milton, Ontario, in my constituency of Halton. I do this only after I have contacted the Minister responsible for Canada Post and the President of the Crown corporation, as far as mail service is concerned.

The petition in brief reads: "We, the residents of Randall Crescent and Pearen Avenue, do hereby formally request your aid in establishing postal service in our area. All necessary criteria for door-to-door delivery were met in August of 1983. Therefore, we see no reason for further delay".

I hope that the House and the Minister will take note of this matter and take the appropriate action.

MR. SKELLY—SPORTS FISHERY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from hundreds of residents of the Bella Coola Valley who signed the petition urging that the House of Commons act to curtail the sports fishing on the Bella Coola River system because of the severe deterioration of the spring stocks. The petition points out that they have also had a 100 per cent closure of the commercial fishery on spring stocks and it is the hope of a broad group, representing all sectors of the residents of the Bella Coola valley, that the Government will act to make the burden of conservation fair by spreading the burden from the commercial fishery to the sports fishery.

4. Do any Crown agencies or corporations have an employee savings plan and, if so, which agencies or corporations?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed as follows: 1. Yes.

(b) The employees contributed 2, 3, 4 or 5 per cent of their salary. After five years of continuous employment, the employees had the option to increase their contribution to 10 per cent in multiples of 1 per cent.

The employer matched two-thirds of the employees' contributions. After five years, the employer matched one-third of the employees' contributions over 5 per cent.

(c) The employees received employer contributions as follows:

Years of participation in plan	Percentage of employer's contributions less than five	—
more than five	100 per cent

2. Yes. (a) Following completion of six months of continuous service, all regular full-time employees were eligible to join the plan.

"NO NET LOSS" CONCEPT OF TRADE-OFF IN FISH HABITAT

Question No. 742—Mr. Manly:

1. Was the 'no net loss' concept of trade-offs in fish habitat adopted as official policy by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and, if so, on what date?

2. Is the 'no net loss' policy applied to the Cowichan Estuary in British Columbia and, if so (a) what public participation was permitted in the decision-making process (b) did Doman Industries Limited receive increased right to store logs and, if so, were any studies carried out to ensure that there was a fair trade between the estuarine area in which the storage takes place and the area which the company dedicated to habitat?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. The "no net loss" concept is under serious consideration, but it has not been adopted officially. The Department's goal in the Cowichan Estuary on Vancouver Island has been to restore fish habitat to the greatest extent possible. Therefore, the no net loss concept would not apply to situations like this.

2. No.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, on December 20, 1983 I placed on the Order Paper questions Nos. 302 to 317 inclusive regarding the Northern Transportation Company Limited. MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions for the production of papers stand?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that last week I attempted to catch your eye on this point. For some time now I have had a notice of motion for the production of papers on the Order Paper dealing with public opinion surveys which were commissioned by the Government since the last election. At the present time it stands in my name as motion No. 1, on December 7, 1983.

However, a similar motion has sat on the Order Paper now for, I believe, well over a year. To date no action at all has been taken by the Government on this notice of motion for the production of papers. Indeed, you will probably recall that there was a column in the Ottawa Citizen some weeks ago by Mr. Frank Howard, in which he indicated that the Government was using my notice of motion for the production of papers as a means of blocking the release of public opinion surveys under the freedom of information legislation. It was saying that somehow it would be a contempt of Parliament to release these surveys which I have asked to be released under notices of motions for the production of papers.

Mr. Howard now tells me that some of those polls have in fact been released but the House of Commons has yet to have any action taken on this notice of motion for the production of papers. It appears that the Government has no intention whatsoever of acting on it and indeed could resurrect this particular artifice as a menas of blocking the release of public opinion surveys to others outside the House of Commons. Consequently, I would like to ask that my motion No. 1 be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: There appears to be a request by the Hon. Member for his motion to be transferred. Under the Standing Orders he has that right and therefore it is transferred for debate.

Shall the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers stand?

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I also have on the Order paper for production of papers motions Nos. 7, 8, 9 and 10, put on the Order Paper on February 13, 1984, and they are with regard to NTCL as well. I request that the Parliamentary Secretary tell me when they will be answered.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I will look into those matters for the Hon. Member as well.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining motions for the production of papers stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. LeBlanc that Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the debate on Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act. I am pleased that the Minister is present here today because I have a number of points to make of which he should be aware regarding matters which are causing some concern to my constituents, to those in the housing industry and to those in the finance industry of the country. I think those issues must be addressed by the Government in the committee.

We know that the Act basically does three things. It provides for mortgage rate insurance, it provides for mortgage-backed securities and it provides for moving the Rural and Native Housing Program into the exclusive domain of the federal Government. As I go through my review of the Bill in the House today, I will deal with those matters one at a time.

I would like to begin by dealing with the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan. In committee we will be asking for the background papers for this Mortgage Rate Protection Plan because we have had no access to the background studies which have been done on those proposals. There are many questions which must be answered. Will the program be a money-maker? How was the amount deductible arrived at? How was the fee to be charged arrived at? What were the figures that were used to design the plan itself and to come to a fee of 1.5 per cent on a maximum mortgage of $70,000 which means a fee of $1,050? How was the deductible of 2 per cent arrived at?

I have some thoughts of my own regarding that 2 per cent deductible since I am by nature suspicious of plans that are brought forward by this Government. Perhaps now is a good time to comment on that deductible. I have reviewed the record of five-year mortgages from 1951 to 1984. It is interesting to note that from 1951 to 1955 there was an increase of less than 2 per cent in mortgage interest rates. From 1955 to 1960 there was an increase of less than 2 per cent. There was an increase of less than 2 per cent between 1960 and 1965. From 1965 to 1970 there was an increase of exactly 3 per cent and anyone who had such insurance at that time would not have been helped very much. From 1970 to 1975 the increase was less than 2 per cent. From 1975 to 1979 the increase was less than 2 per cent.

The only period of time such an insurance plan would have taken effect was when the present Government was in power and we saw mortgage interest rates skyrocket from 13 per cent right up to 21.5 per cent between December, 1980 and September, 1981. At that time such a scheme would have made some difference. However, if someone had taken out a mortgage at 17 per cent in December, 1981 and by July, 1982 the rate had gone up to 19 per cent again, the mortgage insurance scheme would not have come into effect during that period of time. Mortgage rates then dropped rather dramatically and went down to 12.5 per cent. They are now up to approximately 14.75 per cent. Again an insurance scheme would not come into play.

I now think I understand where the Government got the deductible figure of 2 per cent. The record over the last 34 years shows that there has never been a large enough increase in mortgage interest rates for an insurance scheme to take effect except for the brief period of time when the Liberals forced mortgage interest rates up to about 21.5 per cent. At that time every Member of the House heard very sad stories from people who had lost their homes because of those exorbitantly high interest rates. The best shot the federal Government can make in trying to alleviate the problem is this mortgage insurance protection plan.

I have some concerns that I would like to discuss. Perhaps I could make some positive suggestions to the Minister who is present in the House. I appreciate the fact that he is present and is listening to this debate. First, the maximum mortgage amount to be insured by the Government is $70,000. This limit causes concern in some areas of the country. It causes particular concern in large metropolitan areas like the area of Brampton. It does not pertain as much to the Georgetown portion of my riding but it does cause some concern for Brampton, the Mississauga area, Toronto, perhaps Vancouver and possibly even Ottawa as well. In those areas the maximum of $70,000 is not high enough. That may be the first problem with which we are faced.

It might be worth while for the Minister to take a look at the situation to see if there could not be regional limits which differentiate between areas much like those for the NHA insurance. That insurance scheme applies differently in different areas of the country. That is something that might be looked at because I am not sure that the maximum of $70,000 is realistic in some areas of the country today considering the sizes of mortgages that are being assumed.

Another thing that concerns me about that limit is that it is being included in the legislation. That means that that maximum limit remains in the legislation and if we wanted it changed we would have to return to the House to amend the Act. This Bill mentions regulations in 22 places. Heaven knows, that frightens me enough, yet I am here suggesting another regulation. I may be accused of speaking out of both sides of my mouth, but I would like to indicate to the Minister that it may be worth while to take a look at that maximum being in the regulations in order that it can be adjusted from time to time. As he knows, real estate appreciates. It is the one hedge against inflation which people in this country have. I would ask the Government to take that under advisement.

The next matter I would like to speak about is the protection fee. The protection fee of 1.5 per cent is identical whether you take out a one-year mortgage, a three-year mortgage or a five-year mortgage. There is no variation. The best deal, therefore, for anyone who takes out this insurance is a five-year mortgage. It only makes sense. That will cause terrific problems within the financing community. Let us take, for example, a 1.5 per cent increased rate on a one-year mortgage. If a person renews their mortgage for one year and they buy the insurance plan, for them to break even on the insurance plan, the mortgage rate will have to rise 5 per cent in one year. If that person takes out a three-year mortgage and buys the insurance plan, the mortgage rate will have to rise 4 per cent in the three-year period for that person to break even. However, the mortgage rate would only have to increase 3 per cent over a five-year period for that person to break even.

I fiddled with those figures last night. They are approximate, but generally speaking those are the figures. Therefore, the best deal is to renew a mortgage for five years and buy mortgage insurance. The problem is, if there is not a fee which differs from the rate and the length of time for which a person renews his mortgage, tremendous pressure is placed on GICs. Horrendous pressure is placed on the mortgage companies. The upward pressure on GICs for five-year terms will be severe.

As the Minister knows, financial institutions attempt to balance their mortgage loans with their term investment. If it is a five-year mortgage, the mortgage companies attempt to place that up against a five-year GIC. I am concerned about this and I think it is something which the Government should look into. It might look at a rate which varies for a one-year, three-year and five-year mortgage, to avoid upward pressure on one of the financial segments; the GICs. If there is upward pressure on five-year GICs, then the rates will increase. There is no question that the rates will go up. If the rates go up, it follows that mortgage rates will go up. I think that is something the Minister and his Department should look into. It concerns me that all of a sudden there will be great interest in five-year mortgages and, therefore, the upward pressure on GICs will be out of control. The resultant increase would be reflected in mortgage rates. That is another concern. We do not want to see those rates go any higher. Even though there will be a mortgage insurance plan to cover that increase, we do not want to see them go any higher.

Another concern is that if there is a tremendous demand on the five-year GIC, that would crowd out the five-year bond market. There would be an emphasis on where that money would be invested. I hope the Minister will take these concerns into consideration.

I am concerned as well that the Bill places restrictions on the eligibility of mortgages. There are three groups of people the Bill does not cover. The first group is those people who took out mortgages before March 1, 1984. If we look at mortgage rates before March 1, 1984, we see that they were approximately 12.5 per cent. Today those rates have risen to 14.25 per cent or 14.5 per cent. The people who took mortgages out before March 1 are the people who are genuinely interested in the plan because they have already seen the rate rise 2 per cent. Those people are not protected and will not be protected. That is a segment of the population which will not be able to participate in this plan for a considerable length of time.

There is a second group which will not be protected under the plan. If a person purchases a home—it may be his first home—which is not a new home but a resale, and if there is a mortgage on the home which is not insured, that person cannot insure the new mortgage which he will be assuming on the home. Therefore, the purchaser of that home cannot take advantage of the plan if there is an existing mortgage as well, if the vendor does not have insurance coverage, then the purchaser cannot get it by taking over an existing mortgage. As the Minister knows, that happens all the time in the used house market. I think these concerns must be addressed.

There is a third group which would not be covered by this plan. If a person bought a home and the vendor took back the first mortgage, then the purchaser could not buy insurance on the mortgage which the vendor would take back. That person would be excluded. The only way that that person might be able to buy a home is if the vendor wanted to make an investment in the mortgage and took back the first mortgage. However, the purchaser would not be allowed to opt into the insurance plan. Those are three areas which require consideration.

Another area which is covered by the Bill is the mortgage-backed securities. This provision is designed, of course, hopefully to provide longer-term mortgages for home owners. Traditionally, we consider interest rates that are provided over and above any investment for five years are usually 1 per cent to 1.5 per cent higher. If it is a ten-year investment, it would probably be 1 per cent to 1.5 per cent higher. Therefore, if we get into longer-term mortgages, that will increase mortgage rates. I would recommend to a person buying a home that they not get into a ten-year mortgage situation, but that is not my decision. However, those people will be paying a much higher interest rate than they would pay if they had a five-year mortgage.

I would like to refer to another Bill which is not before the House at the moment, Bill C-36. The prepayment penalty situation would be horrendously expensive for anyone who had less than a ten-year mortgage. They would be paying a much larger penalty than others on a prepayment penalty. That would present a problem. As the Minister knows, a vehicle being used in the United States can be traded on the open market. I understand that a Bill was passed in the House in 1976 or 1977 which was called the Mortgage Exchange Corporation. All that Bill needs is proclamation. That Bill would allow those mortgage-backed securities to be traded on the open market. I do not know the disposition of that Bill right now; however, the Minister might be able to enlighten the House on that situation.

• (1530)

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who is also in the House, promised in his Budget that the federal Government would investigate the economic and financial impact of this legislation on the housing market, mortgage rates and on competing ten-year financial instruments. I ask now if in fact that investigation has taken place, and if so, I would hope that that study is produced so that we could, while we are in committee investigating this particular Bill, be very responsible in our approach to it. We will then have the information which I believe is needed for us to make a balanced decision on this particular proposal which is contained within the Bill.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the federal Government will be taking over the entire responsibility in the area of Indian housing. We are extremely concerned about Indian housing. The testimony which was given to us in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates within the last month or so indicated that the funding which is available now is barely keeping up with maintaining and bringing up to standard the homes which are already in existence, not to mention new homes for new family formations, and certainly not considering the demand which may come for housing on reserves if other matters are considered in this House.

I am pleased, however, to see that the limit on the total amount to be spent has been increased. I am pleased that the Government has taken that over. Some of my provincial friends may not be too pleased about it, especially in the rural end of the Act as opposed to the Indian people end of the Act, but I am personally pleased that the federal Government has taken that responsibility over completely. I feel in that manner we might be able to make decisions much more quickly. We would be able to establish a housing plan or program without having to depend on the policies and decisions of provincial governments. When it comes to Indian housing, I believe that is going to be very important. Therefore, I congratulate the Minister on that initiative.

I will close my remarks by saying that if this is the best the Government can do, I suppose we will have to put up with it—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I am afraid I have to ask the Hon. Member to complete his remarks. His time has expired.

Mr. McDermid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I appreciate the reminder.

I would hope that the Minister will take my concerns, as well as the other concerns which will be expressed by Hon. Members of my Party, and address them when the Bill gets to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a period of up to ten minutes for questions and/or comments. If there are no questions, we will continue debate.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act which introduces a mortgage interest rate protection program and encourages the introduction of longer-term mortgages. These proposals were contained in my February Budget and were included in the Budget in response to two important concerns. First was the need to increase security and certainty for home owners in view of the wide fluctuations in mortgage interest rates which were experienced in the last few years. The second concern was to create conditions which will permit the private sector to develop a longer-term mortgage market in Canada. I must say that in my pre-Budget consultations with the housing industry, which recognizes the importance of developing greater confidence and stability in home ownership, I found that these concerns were very widely shared indeed.

The Bill before the House is the result of extensive post-Budget consultations with mortgage lenders, housing associations, the Consumer's Association of Canada and other interested parties. In these sessions the implications of the program and the various administrative and technical issues associated with the program were thoroughly discussed. This consultative process has led to a Bill which should receive wide support from the public, and I was happy to hear the general reaction of the previous speaker in that regard.

While some concern had been expressed that consultations would lead to a delay in implementing the Bill in good time, it appears that we have been able to meet that timetable quite effectively. I would hope that all Parties will support the legislation so that Canadian home owners will be able to obtain this protection without further delay.

[Translation]

Both the Mortgage Rate Protection Program and mortgage-backed Securities will make home ownership easier and safer, by taking away much of the uncertainty caused by fluctuating interest rates.

[English]

As Hon. Members know, these initiatives are linked to amendments to the Interest Act which have also been introduced in the House. This legislation will strengthen borrowers' rights and increase the flexibility of the mortgage market. In effect, we believe it will allow the reintroduction into the market of mortgages for a longer period than five years, which have practically disappeared from the market for a long time. The value of the housing initiatives in the Budget and particularly the mortgage interest rate protection program has been widely recognized. The head of the Canadian Institute of Public Real Estate Companies has said that the mortgage plan, and I quote:

—will lead the way in other countries in developing stability in the mortgage market.

Mr. Logan Tait of the Canadian Real Estate Association said that the mortgage interest rate plan, and I quote:

—will definitely help to bring stability back into the marketplace.

Mr. John Sandusky, President of HUDAC, now the Canadian Home Builders' Association, said that the Government had, and I quote:

—responded very favourably to our concerns.

On May 29, Mr. Sandusky sent a telegram to a number of Members of the House, including myself, which reads as follows:

The 5,000 member-firms of the Canadian Homebuilders' Association formerly HUDAC urge quick passage to second reading of housing legislation re: Mortgage Rate Plan, Mortgage-backed Securities, and Interest Act amendments.

It is signed John Sandusky, President of Canadian Homebuilders Association.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, housing has always been one of the Canadian Government's main priorities, and over the last three years, the Government has introduced a number of measures designed to help homeowners.

The Canada Mortgage Renewal Program was set up towards the end of 1981, and upgraded the following year, to help home owners in financial difficulty when they had to renew their mortgages. Homeowners faced with increases in mortgage costs representing more than 30 per cent of their income became eligible for non-taxable grants of up to $3,000. More than 20,000 Canadians in financial difficulty were helped by this plan.

In 1982, the Canadian Home-ownership Stimulation Plan was established, providing $3,000 grants to buyers of newly-built homes. This program has helped more than 260,000 Canadians buying a home for the first time.

In 1983, this Government made it possible for Canadians who bought new homes between April 19, 1983 and March 1, 1985, which is next year, to claim a special tax deduction of up to $10,000, to be contributed to a Registered Home ownership Savings Plan. I may remind the House that this program is still in effect and that Canadians may now make use of the program if they intend to purchase a newly-built home. The program has considerable tax advantages, and I would urge Canadians who have not already done so to find out about the program and see whether they should not consider purchasing a new home before the program expires on March 1, 1985. I may also remind the House that this Government has made grants available to home owners for the purpose of home renovation. This is another dimension of the housing sector we have had a tendency to neglect in the past and which fortunately has been given increasing attention in the programs of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In 1983 alone, more than 47,000 housing units were renovated with CMHC grants, representing a total of $179 million.

Finally, the federal Government has consulted with the major lending institutions and urged them to respond favourably to the requirements of Canadian individuals who take out mortgages and are faced with problems caused by volatile interest rates.

[English]

In this legislation the Government is providing a more fundamental and durable response to the problem of uncertainty in mortgage interest rates. The Mortgage Rate Protection Plan, which has been outlined by my colleague, the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has received an enthusiastic response from housing market participants. I believe it will give Canadians who choose to participate a reasonable assurance that large, unexpected increases in interest rates will not lead to serious financial difficulties. This is particularly important for first-time home buyers. Because of the relatively short terms of mortgages available, these buyers must consider whether they can afford the monthly carrying costs on their homes in the future if interest rates increase sharply when they have to renew their mortgages.

Existing home owners will, of course, also benefit. Mortgage rate uncertainty forces many of them to re-evaluate their saving and spending decisions against the possibility that interest rates would be higher on their renewal dates. The Mortgage Rate Protection Plan will offer both of these groups more security in planning for the future. This increased security for home owners will have a positive influence on the home building industry, on the economy and on the well-being of Canadian society generally.

Members should be aware that the program is not intended to protect home owners against all fluctuations in mortgage rates. Instead, for those individuals who choose to participate, it should be viewed as a safety net that will offer security against severe financial disruption. The Government is prepared to share the risks and the costs with the home owner. Thus the protection will cover three-quarters of any cost increase on a mortgage renewal resulting from an increase in mortgage interest rates greater than 2 per cent, to a maximum of ten percentage points. The fee for the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan has been set at the lowest possible level, 1.5 per cent of the mortgage amount to be protected. For a mortgage of $70,000, for instance, this amounts to a maximum premium of $1,050. The benefits provided upon payment of this fee have been extended as far as is consistent with ensuring the plan remains fiscally responsible. Every effort has been made to enable home owners who want to use the program to do so by offering them the options of paying the fee up front or adding it to the principal amount and amortizing it over the term of the mortgage. This is how, for instance, it has been indicated that you can buy your protection for as low as something between $11 and $12 a month on a $70,000 mortgage. The latter method will allow a person, therefore, to obtain protection for a very small monthly charge.

Entry into the program is voluntary. No one is forced to join the program. Some have argued that the cost is too high for the benefits available. Maybe some will share that view, but home owners who are concerned about the possible impact of rising mortgage rates—and we have seen this happen already since the last Budget—can decide whether this plan meets their own circumstances. Judging by the response to the Budget proposals, there appears to be substantial interest on the part of the public in general in the program. In fact, more than 14,500 Canadians have written to my Department to ask for more information about the housing proposals contained in the February Budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as announced in the Budget, one effect of the Bill will be retroactive to March 1, 1984. For instance, someone who took out a 5-year mortgage at 12.5 per cent on March 1 can purchase coverage against mortgage increases, and that coverage will be based on the rate mentioned, provided that applications under the program, plus the fee, are sent to CMHC within 45 days after the Bill is passed. Since mortgage rates have increased from 2 to 2.25 per cent since March 1, the retroactive effect of the Bill may benefit home owners having renewed or taken out a mortgage since that date.

As for the cost of the program, it is difficult to estimate since it will obviously depend on the number of Canadians taking part in the program and what mortgage rates will be in several years. Nevertheless, we can reasonably assume that the net cost of the program will be close to zero, in other words, the program should be self-financing.

[English]

Some Members may well ask: Does this mean that the Government is projecting higher mortgage interest rates? As I have stated many times, the Government is doing everything it can to keep interest rates as low as possible. However, we must recognize that we are participants in an international economy and there are many factors beyond our control that can influence Canadian interest rates. Home owners have expressed concern about the potential effect of higher rates. The Government has responded by providing them with a safety net. At the same time we will continue to focus on maintaining interest rates at the lowest level possible. Home owners would certainly not be unhappy, nor would I, if interest rates were to decline and no benefits were ever paid on this program.

Now let me turn for a minute to the provision in this Bill regarding mortgage-backed securities. While this has not received the public attention that the Mortgage Rate Protection Program has, it is an important initiative if we wish to see the reintroduction of longer-term mortgages in Canada, those with terms longer than five years. Further, it would provide for a more smoothly functioning mortgage market by providing an alternative method of financing mortgages.

[Translation]

This part of the Bill has also received the firm support of a number of groups, and I am thinking especially of the Canadian Homebuilders' Association, which favours the development of a market for mortgage-backed securities in Canada, which would make it possible to provide more home buyers with mortgages at reasonable cost. The housing sector has stated that 10-year mortgages would be an essential factor in providing for stability and growth in the residential construction industry. In the course of our post-budget consultations with financial market experts, it was clearly stated, as an essential condition for offering mortgage-backed securities in Canada, that conditions for payment of principal and interest on these securities would have to be strictly observed by the private sector.

[English]

Members of the House should be aware that the guarantee involves no government subsidy and will operate on a cost-recovery basis. The Government is taking the initiative in establishing a framework which will permit the private sector to develop a market for mortgage-backed securities. Preliminary indications are that there are several institutions interested in pursuing the development of this market if legislation constraints are dealt with. In addition to the timely payment guarantee, the introduction of mortgage-backed securities requires a legislative amendment to the Interest Act with respect to prepayment privileges. The Interest Act amendment is being handled in a separate Bill.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House that these amendments are supported by the housing industry, home owners and mortgage lenders. I have also received encouragement from Hon. Members on both sides of the House.

● (1550)

[English]

For example, following the February Budget the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) said that the housing measures were "nice things that no one is going to be against". On February 21 the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) said: "For our part we welcome mortgage insurance". At the risk of seeming immodest, I will also quote the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) who said on February 22: "I, too, commend the courageous Minister of Finance on those parts of the Budget that will help housing, such as protecting interest rates and allowing a mortgagor to pay off a mortgage without having to pay an arm and a leg".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He said that with tongue in cheek, too.

Mr. Lalonde: Members opposite have been eager to deal with this Bill. On May 10 the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) asked why the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan was taking so long. On April 30 the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) said to me: "Before it is too late, Mr. Minister, I ask you on behalf of Canadian home owners and prospective home owners: Where is the beef?"

In view of all that, I would suggest that the Opposition should not hog the Bill in the corner of the House for too long.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We did not get beef, we got baloney.

Mr. Lalonde: I expect Members opposite to act with the sense of importance and urgency which these measures demand. We have heard their expressions of concern over the impact of interest rates on home owners. We share those concerns. This Bill will provide the means for Canadians to protect themselves against the risk of higher mortgage rates. The amendments in this Bill are made in response to the concerns of Canadians about the uncertainty of future mortgage costs. In these proposals we have tried to ensure that the efficient functioning of the mortgage market is not impaired.

Under normal circumstances none of the proposals will impose significant costs on the federal Government although the Government is prepared to provide assistance in extra-ordinary circumstances. I urge all Parties to support these proposals so that Canadian home owners and prospective home buyers will have improved security against the risk of losing their homes because of fluctuations in mortgage rates over which they have no control.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Ten-minute period for questions or comments. Questions? The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle).

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, my question is of course directed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Since mortgage rates today are at about 14.5 per cent, and the Bill provides for an additional 2 per cent, borrowers will be facing rates of 16 or 16.5 per cent, if I understand the program correctly. Is the Minister claiming, with his concept of making home ownership available to all Canadians, that rate of 16.5 per cent is going to encourage people to buy houses? I am not referring to millionaires, I am talking about the average person, the average worker. Does he think this rate is low enough to make home ownership generally accessible?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, of course, my answer would depend on the financial climate at the time. I may remind the Hon. Member that even when mortgage rates were at 18 per cent, 19 per cent or 20 per cent, people were still buying homes. In any case, we must consider the state of the economy at a given time. If we were going through an inflationary period, with inflation at 12 or 13 per cent, as we have experienced in the past, it would not be surprising to see mortgages as high as 16 per cent, while interest on loans would also be very high.

I cannot predict what interest rates will be in five years, for instance when someone's mortgage expires. What the Bill provides is protection against interest rates that may prevail at the time people have to renew their mortgages. It is a little like fire insurance. When a person takes out fire insurance, he does not particularly want to collect. His reasoning is that if something happens, at least he will be covered. When people take out fire insurance, they do not say to themselves: I wish my house would burn down and I could collect the insurance! Unless, of course, they do so for reasons that are neither very legal or ethical. Insurance is a kind of protection, and that is what we are offering today, protection against events that would not be to the advantage of the borrower. I think the best analogy is still fire insurance or accident insurance. Nobody wants to have an accident, nobody wants his house to burn down, but everyone buys insurance, thinking: "If it happens, at least I am covered!" And coverage is what we are providing. If, for instance, interest rates increase by more than 2 per cent in five years, when my mortgage expires I will have the assurance that the Government will pay three-quarters of the difference between 2 per cent and 10 per cent more, for instance, so I am covered.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), with a supplementary.

Mr. La Salle: The Minister's answer is quite clear and it just means that people who have enough money, and I think that is always the minority . . . I would like to ask the Minister whether, for instance, with a family income of $35,000 or less, interest rates at 16 per cent would really make homeownership generally accessible? I have the impression that it would still be very hard for thousands of Canadians who would like to buy a home, even at present rates. I agree that anyone with an income of $40,000 and $50,000 or more can cope with today's rates. But what about young couples and so many other Canadians who earn between $20,000 and $35,000, for instance? Does the Minister of Finance still think that present rates are reasonable for this group of individuals which probably includes most first-home buyers?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is talking about an interest rate of 16 per cent. No one is borrowing at 16 per cent today. The Hon. Member was talking about rates of about 14 or 14.5 per cent for a 5-year period, and he knows as well as I do that lower rates are available for three years or one year. I may also remind the Hon. Member that there are programs to help people on very low incomes. I am thinking of Co-operative Housing Assistance and similar programs that have been in effect for a number of years, to help people on low incomes who need housing assistance. We do not claim that the Bill before the House today is the answer to all financial problems that may face Canadians who want to buy a home. There will be people on low incomes who will still have to resort to other Government programs designed for their particular needs. What we are offering today is an insurance plan available to all Canadians and which all Canadian home buyers should be able to afford, for a relatively modest fee.

As I said earlier, for a $75,000 mortgage, coverage will cost $11 or $12 per month. This is not excessive in relation to the mortgage amount itself. For a home that costs half as much and with a much lower mortgage, the cost of coverage will be half the amount I just mentioned. With a $35,000 mortgage, the monthly cost will be $5 or $6. I think the advantages are considerable. Here again, no one is forcing Canadians to take advantage of this opportunity, any more than anyone is forcing them to take out fire insurance. I think Canadians should be encouraged to take out this insurance policy, just like the usual insurance policy when they take out a mortgage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Any other questions or comments?

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is three-fold. He mentioned repeatedly that he had been consulting with a number of groups, including home owners. Could he share with us in what way he was communicating with home owners to receive input for Bill C-37?

Second, he referred to this insurance plan as being similar to taking out hail or fire insurance. Floods, hail, fire and the like are really acts of God totally unrelated to the works of man. Yet interest rates in other countries, when it comes to mortgages, are set or there is a very definite ceiling allowed. I think specifically of the country of Norway when I make that comment. In a sense we are dealing with man's actions when we talk about interest rates, not acts of God.

Third, the Minister of Finance has indicated his concern many times in the House regarding people who are locked into mortgage rates over a five-year period when interest rates drop substantially. I think he has indicated his interest in a three-year penalty as being a reasonable one under those conditions to allow people to renegotiate their mortgages to take advantage of lower rates. Does the mortgage-backed security aspect take into account this option of a three-month penalty clause being sufficient?

• (1600)

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, on the first point the Hon. Member knows that we have programs in Canada whereby we put an effective ceiling on the mortgage rates being paid by certain Canadians who are in need. He knows there are programs, for instance, where a person pays 2 per cent for 35 years on his mortgage and CMHC is going to cover the difference. That program is centred on people with lower incomes who need help and support in order to have access to housing.

That is not the type of measure my hon. friend would recommend we apply wholesale. The cost would be horrendous. It would also introduce severe distortions into the economy. We have as much as possible a free market in the mortgage area and in the area of interest rates. The hon. Member knows that we are very dependent upon what is happening in the international community. He talks about acts of God, such as fire and so on. He knows also in the area of interest rates that there are a number of factors over which we have no control domestically. We live in a world with considerable pressures taking place. Canada as a medium-size country is one, suffering particularly from some of the decisions being taken in the United States, which has the largest and strongest economy in the world. It has advantages in some regards, but it also has drawbacks, as the Hon. Member knows.

As far as the other point is concerned, the Hon. Member knows that under the proposed amendments to the Interest Act we have removed the provision concerning the three months' penalty. This has been done following extensive consultations. The Hon. Member asks with whom. I can say that we have had extensive consultations with the Consumers' Association of Canada which comprises hundreds of thousands of Canadians who also happen to be home owners. As I mentioned, 14,500 Canadians have written to me asking for more information on housing. We have consulted with the industry, house builders, et cetera, and found that these people are very interested in selling houses and they have the interest of the potential home buyer very much at heart. They are not interested in building homes just to let them sit empty. Everybody who has an interest in the housing area has been invited to contribute. People have made their contribution, supported the measures we have put forward and the conclusions we have reached.

I hope we will have a very short discussion of this Bill so that it can be considered in committee. We will be very happy to discuss with Hon. Members the details of the measure in committee. I hope in the interests of all Canadians that we can get the Bill considered as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. The period set aside for questions and comments has expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to make some comments regarding Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, which is intended to give some relief to the volatile interest rates affecting mortgage holders. I am pleased to see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is in the House as well as the Minister responsible for the Bill.

I have listened carefully to the observations of a number of Hon. Members regarding Bill C-37. It is important that we recognize the situation in which this Bill is brought forward. We have a very serious housing situation in Canada. Mortgage rates today are in the 14 per cent to 14.5 per cent range which makes home ownership an impossibility now for most Canadians who presently do not own their own homes. Considering that every indicator of which I am aware would suggest there is a good possibility of interest rates increasing in the weeks and months ahead, this gives Canadians cause to believe that the mortgage rates they are paying on their homes will likely increase.

We are talking about a situation of people desiring to be new home owners who are finding it an impossibility today to think seriously about investing in a home. Those who are renegotiating mortgages today and in the weeks and months ahead have serious concerns about the implications of the present high interest rates and the spectre of increasing interest rates. The construction industry has indicated concern as well.

The construction industry in parts of Canada has virtually died. I am thinking particularly of parts of British Columbia and Alberta which for all intents and purposes have no viable housing construction industry at all as a result of the general economic conditions, mortgage interest rates and the uncertainty surrounding the interest rate phenomenon. We are talking about the tens of thousands of manufacturers both large and small which serve the housing construction industry. We find that they too are in a slump situation because new homes are not being built as required.

In the City of Kamloops the mayor wanted to put together a promotional video cassette not too long ago. He asked people in his building department to take pictures of some of the construction going on in the community, but there was no construction going on anywhere in the city. He could not find a person banging on a wall or shingling a roof. People had to manufacture a show of building. That is the situation in a city of 60,000 to 70,000 people.

If you walk around the subdivisions and through the inner cities of Canada, "For Sale" signs have become a reality on most streets. These signs of people moving out of their homes do not reflect a mobility taking place; they reflect growing numbers of Canadians being forced out of their homes or abandoning them.

What has happened is that three or four years ago both husband and wife were working. They could quite easily afford a mortgage payment of $400 or $500, perhaps even a bit higher. They assumed they would have to work, scrimp and save, but making a mortgage payment of $400, $500, or $600 was something they could manage and they entered into a mortgage. Perhaps they tied themselves in for five years or less, but they were into their first home and were part of the home ownership that Canadians have taken to so strongly.

Then one of them was laid off. It might even happen that both were laid off. Interest rates meanwhile have increased. Rather than paying $400, $500, or $600 a month on their mortgage, they are now required to pay $700, $800, or $900. They are, of course, unable to do so. It takes two, three, or four months of non-payment or partial payment before the axe comes down. For many people the answer is simply to walk away from their home or be forced out by the banks or other financial institutions when they are unable to make their payments. This is an incredible situation, Mr. Speaker.

Members of Parliament, particularly those from western Canada, fly across the country on a weekly basis. They see forests covering the nation from one end to the other. We have thousands and thousands of hectares of forest land. There is space everywhere around our cities. We know the wealth of the country is in place. We know savings accounts and so on, as we are told on a weekly basis, are filled. To have the housing crisis that we have today, you really have to work at it. We have a government that has worked at it and developed it so well that we have literally thousands of Canadians who ought to be living in a home and making mortgage payments today but are not. The housing construction industry is on its knees. It is an incredible situation. Then along comes the Government saying that it has the answer with Bill C-37, the Mortgage Rate Protection Plan.

Let me say at the outset that I will not support this particular program as it has been presented. It is an absolute sham. It is a shame that the Government brings forward a piece of legislation which does not ask the banks to pay any more for the high interest situation. In fact, domestic bank profits are the highest they have ever been in the banking history of the country. That will not be changed one iota. It allows the banks virtually to charge whatever they wish for mortgages.

In effect, the Government of Canada has caused these high interest rates by agreeing to a high interest rate policy, but it will not pay anything in return. Who will pay now to protect themselves from high interest rates? It will not be the Government which created those high rates nor the institutions which benefit from them; it will be Canadian home owners. In other words, they can take out an insurance policy.

As the Minister of Finance said, Canadians are accustomed to taking out insurance policies. They take out hail insurance if they are farmers. They take out fire insurance, theft insurance or whatever. If they take out flood insurance, hurricane insurance, revolution insurance or insurrection insurance on foreign investments, they are dealing with matters completely beyond their control. In many cases they are acts of God. However, what we are dealing with today is the concept of mortgage rates, and that is not an act of God. Perhaps the Minister of Finance would argue against that, since it is his policy, but the point is that interest rates are government policy.

I should like to indicate that this need not be the case. The other day I talked with representatives of the Government of Norway. I asked them what they did about their mortgage rates and how they organized the market in their country. They said that it was simple, that their people could obtain mortgages at 10 per cent today and the most they will ever have to pay is 12 per cent over a 30-year term. It does not matter if inflation reaches 200 per cent or 300 per cent. It does not matter what happens in terms of the money markets. They have mortgage money for that length of time at a maximum of 12 per cent because the Government of Norway decided that it was important for its people to be able to afford to own their own homes, that it was in the nation's interest.

When the Minister of Finance says that the Government wants Canadians to take out insurance against high interest rates, it is a sham. I think the Government has stepped back from taking responsibility for dealing with high interest rates. As a previous Hon. Member indicated today, this mortgage insurance program does not provide any protection for up to a 2 per cent increase from the day a mortgage is taken out. Today the mortgage rate is 14.5 per cent. What they are saying is that they will allow the rates to go up to at least 16.5 per cent before Canadians obtain any relief whatsoever.

What does it mean when Government Members are asking Canadians to pay at least 16.5 per cent on their mortgages before any relief is provided? Will that bring comfort to the average household in the country? Will people say that they can now afford mortgages at 16 per cent to 16.5 per cent? Some people would say that that is usury, that a 16.5 per cent mortgage rate is totally unacceptable in a country as rich as Canada.

The Government has made an admission that not only is it helpless in this situation, in its own mind, but it is unprepared to deal with the issue as it should. Once again it is asking hard-pressed home owners to carry the can. The Government is asking Canadians to pay premiums which will be 1.5 per cent of their mortgage value. This is to be paid at the time the mortgages are taken out or amortized over the term of the mortgage. On a $70,000 mortgage, that would amount to $1,050 or $11 per month. The insurance will be 2 per cent deductible. In other words, interest rates will have to increase at least 2 per cent before anything is done. If a mortgage were to rise by 6 per cent between the time the mortgage was taken out and its date of renewal, the insurance would not cover the increase resulting from the first 2 per cent. The insurance would cover only three-quarters of the increase in monthly payments over 2 per cent. Therefore, if the rate went up by 6 per cent, which is certainly a possibility in these times, the coverage would be for only 3 per cent of the increase or 50 per cent of the cost.

This is a very expensive piece of insurance. The Government is asking people who are thinking of buying homes to come up with another $1,000 in cash or to be prepared to pay another $11 per month over the term of their mortgage. Quite frankly, we feel this is very misleading.

The Minister of Finance indicated that he has had 14,000 inquiries from Canadians about what the Government was doing to assist them with their mortgages. This does not mean that he has had 14,000 inquiries about Bill C-37. When Canadian citizens find out what really is in Bill C-37, what this mortgage insurance program really means, they will laugh at the Government and say that it cannot be serious if this is its idea of providing Canadians with high interest rate relief. The Government is not prepared to pay a penny itself. It asks Canadian home owners to carry the total burden. Today the Minister of Finance indicated that the Government's intention was not to provide a cent, that it was a break-even plan and that it was a regular insurance program for which people obtaining insurance will pay. Considering that the Government created the situation in part, we feel it is turning its back on its responsibility for encouraging home ownership and assisting Canadians to pay their mortgages.

In a sense it almost rationalizes further interest rates. Then the Government will be able to say that it cannot do anything about high interest rates and that home owners should not be concerned because they can take out insurance if they so wish. I do not think that is a reasonable approach to this matter. We in the New Democratic Party are concerned about the fact that there are other options to pursue. For example, the Government should have the courage and political will to deal with high interest rates. After all, high interest rates in Canada are the problem. We have heard Liberal leadership candidates—and I do not have to name them because the media has done that well—saying that something has to be done about high interest rates. As a matter of fact, one even said that Governor Bouey of the Bank of Canada should be fired because of the advice he has given the Minister of Finance and the Government of Canada.

Mr. Gamble: That was a joke, remember?

Mr. Riis: It certainly is a joke. The whole approach is a joke. Leading Cabinet Ministers, one after another, agree that action should be taken on high interest rates. We have seen what other countries do when it comes to dealing with interest rates. If we are to provide affordable mortgages for Canadians, we could categorize the group of Canadians we would like to assist, such as Canadians with family incomes below a certain amount. They should be able to obtain funding for mortgages at a set rate from financial institutions. In other words, we should say to the banks of Canada that they have to set aside a certain portion of their loan portfolios to assist home owners and set mortgage rates at 8 per cent or 10 per cent over a prolonged period of time. That is a requirement of the Bank Act. We could ask other financial institutions to follow suit, to make it a fair system. Other countries do that. They have done it for years and years because they realize that home ownership is important and that affordable housing is important. Whether it is rental or home ownership, it is important that people have affordable housing. They take steps to enable their citizens to obtain it. We are not talking about pie in the sky ideas or magical solutions. We simply say to the Government that it should introduce policies that other countries have proven work very effectively. We want the Government to deal with interest rates or, if not, to bring in a special provision.

• (1620)

Not long ago there was a special provision for small businesses and farmers. It was called the Small Business Development Bond through which money could be borrowed at half prime plus 1 per cent. It cost some money to enable the small business sector to avail itself of money at half prime plus 1 per cent. If it can be done for that particular sector, surely it can be done for others.

Imagine what this could do for the economy of the country. While it may cost the Government a few hundred million dollars in lost revenue, think of what the federal coffers could gain from the increased housing construction that would go on across the country in every community. We would see construction in rural areas as well if people could afford new homes or add to existing homes. It would result in cash circulating within our country and increased sales tax, personal taxes and corporate taxes. It would assist the construction and manufacturing industries. Most importantly, it would allow Canadians to obtain affordable housing of one kind or another.

We look forward to Bill C-37 going to committee. Since we are only discussing the principle of the Bill at this stage, we will be attempting to fine tune the Bill and to suggest a number of alternatives.

Let me comment on the mortgage-backed securities portion of this Bill. I commend the Government for taking some steps to increase the availability of mortgages beyond five years, but this means that Canadians will once again be locked into interest rates at perhaps 14 per cent to 15 per cent. If interest rates drop they will be told that they can get out of that agreement, but they will have to pay the entire cost of interest to which they agreed. I distinctly remember numerous occasions in the House when the Minister responsible for CMHC and the Minister of Finance said that a 3 per cent penalty clause ought to be adequate. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Finance was surprised that financial institutions were charging more than 3 per cent. We now have legislation that does away with that 3 per cent option once again. We will debate that loudly and push strongly for that option when this Bill gets to committee.

In conclusion, this Bill is not an answer to the high mortgage costs that Canadians are facing today. It is worse than a sham because it gives Canadians the impression that the Government is taking action when all it is doing is telling them that if Canadians want very second-rate insurance coverage to protect them from higher interest rates, this is the vehicle. That is not what the people of Canada deserve and not what the people of Canada should be getting from the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that I will have an opportunity to speak at this stage of the debate so I want to ask the Hon. Member to comment on what I feel is a flaw in this legislation. That is, the effect it will have, if passed, on the public's lack of will to deal with the fundamental problem of high interest rates which the Hon. Member commented on. If this Bill is passed and people believe that there will be some semblance of protection against increasing interest rates, their will to put pressure on the Government to control those interest rates will wane somewhat. Has the Hon. Member considered how this may reduce some of the political pressure on the Government to take action against the banks that are charging exorbitant rates and reduce some of the pressure on the banking policies of the Liberal Government?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to make a comment in that respect. This Bill gives Canadians the impression that the Government is taking action against high interest rates when it actually shows that the Government is not taking any action at all. The Government is assuming that high interest rates are here to stay and that they are likely to increase. If the Government did not believe that interest rates would increase, there would be no need for this particular Bill. All this Bill does is protect one against increasing interest rates. It does not protect one from being locked into these higher interest rates and enable Canadians to take advantage of lower rates. In fact, it penalizes people because they will not be allowed to take advantage of lower interest rates.

The Government has failed to deal with high interest rates and has based its policies on the assumption that Canadians must follow U.S. interest rates. The Minister of Finance has said that he cannot do anything and must look to Paul Volcker, the Chairman of the Reserve Board in the United States, for guidance. This means that the Government of Canada is saying that a foreign bureaucrat in Washington, D.C. is deciding our monetary policy, the state of the Canadian economy and whether we will stagnate longer, grow, or make matters worse. The Government has no control over what is happening.

I do not believe there is another country in the world whose Minister of Finance would give a foreign bureaucrat all the responsibility to determine its future. The Minister of Finance has made this incredible statement time and again.

In summary, this Bill means that the Government has admitted that interest rates will likely increase and that it plans to do nothing about it. However, if Canadians want to take out very expensive insurance that does not even cover all of their losses as a result of increased rates but simply a portion thereof, they will have the opportunity to do so. I believe it is absurd for the Government to take no action but to introduce the simplistic insurance policy contained in Bill C-37, when we are the richest country in the world with unbelievable resources and a very small population. It does so at a time when there are literally tens of billions of dollars in Canadian savings accounts and a variety of vehicles that would enable the Government to take advantage of lower interest rates. Canadians are interested in getting on with building the economy, of which housing is one option to pursue.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) commented at some length on the problems with this Bill. In doing so he pointed out certain shortfalls in other government housing programs that have been undertaken in past years. One of those programs, about which many of my constituents have expressed concern, especially those in the co-operative housing movement, is mentioned in the report of the national task force on co-operative development which was filed with the Government yesterday through the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. The Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development (Mr. Johnston) suggested in an answer yesterday that he was agreeable with the new co-operative thrust.

Would the Hon. Member elaborate on the impact of the cutbacks in funding from CMHC to the co-operative housing sector? These cuts are in fact destroying the existing structure and support for co-op housing just when the Government seems to be prepared to support more co-op housing and is taking action to protect Canadians against the threat of increased interest rates. Can the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) give us some examples in his area or other areas of British Columbia that are showing the effect of these cutbacks to CMHC funding for housing co-ops on the housing supply in Canada?

• (1630)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I certainly can respond to that question. In my own constituency, we have had the opportunity of developing two co-operative housing complexes. The first one that was built was, I would say, one of the nicest housing developments in the City of Kamloops. There is another co-operative housing complex presently under construction.

I must say that the interest in co-operative housing has risen beyond anyone's wildest dreams, at least in central British Columbia, and I suspect in other areas of the country with which I am familiar as well. Co-operative housing does allow people who would not otherwise be able to afford their own home the opportunity to do so. They have been built extremely well and are being run extremely efficiently. As I say, they allow people to own their own homes.

Unfortunately, while people have been encouraged to start thinking more and more along the lines of co-operative housing, we are being told by CMHC that funding is no longer available. We are being told that while the interest in co-operative housing is appreciated, the fact is that adequate funding is simply not in place. Many people see co-operative housing as a viable housing option, have supported the concept and see its benefits, but they have found that the financing is simply not there. Considering how well it has worked, in spite of the reports of some of the housing construction organizations, it is a shame that we cannot see more support for this kind of housing option. It has been successful in the past and with proper support, it could certainly be successful in the future as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there further questions or comments?

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) whether or not, being the confirmed socialist that I assume he is, he thinks that a housing project which by obligation must make available only 15 per cent of its housing to people of low income is adequate. Does he think that 15 per cent is an adequate figure, taking into consideration the fact that the number of people who are waiting for better housing is increasing? Does he not think that these organizations should come forward with a much larger percentage of assistance for the occupants of their projects?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): A short response from the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, a short response would be that I agree with the general thrust of the question. Co-operative housing is intended to provide a mix of residential ownership, and an increase in the percentage of houses available to those of low income would certainly be appropriate. I believe that it is the mix that is important and that mix could be altered appropriately with the appropriate support of the federal Government to enable a larger percentage of the occupants of co-operative housing projects to be those who come from the low-income strata.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the end of the period allowed for questions and comments. For continuing debate.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, best typifies the new era of legislation that we have come to expect from the Liberal Government. It follows a pattern that is unfortunately becoming all too common.

Before I make some of the remarks I wish to make on second reading of this Bill regarding its general principle, I would like to acknowledge that since there are about 5.3 million households in Canada, half of which are owned by people who have mortgages on their residences, the intended thrust of this legislation smacks of relief. I say that because we have been told what the legislation will in fact do.

We have all seen the little booklets that were published immediately following the release of the Budget by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on February 15 of this year, and we all recognize that since that date, interest rates in Canada have risen by between 2 per cent and 2.5 per cent depending upon the term of the mortgage. The larger increase applies to mortgages with one-year terms and the lower increase, although the higher rate, applies to mortgages with terms of five years. We are now looking at interest rates of roughly 12.75 per cent on mortgages with one-year terms and 14.5 per cent on mortgages with five-year terms, with the expectation that those rates will increase. Accordingly, if this Bill were ever to be of any value, it would be of value now because of the built-in advantage to mortgagors who will take advantage of the Bill since it dates back to March 1. From February 15 to March 1, interest rates did not change appreciably.

Let me briefly explain to the House what I understand to be the general terms of the Bill. The provisions of the Bill are such that it appears that for a fee of 1.5 per cent of the face value of the secured obligation up to a maximum of $70,000, the mortgagor will be entitled to have that portion of payment under a protected mortgage paid to the extent of 75 per cent thereof by the corporation after self-insuring to the extent of 2 percentage points. I say that it appears to do so because I am not too sure that the legal language used accomplishes the alleged purpose. I believe that mortgagors should understand that that is indeed the case. The protection becomes available for a fee of 1.5 per cent. It is certainly not to be regarded as a gift from the Government, although the Bill clearly indicates that funds are to be made available to the program initially from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

There are a number of very substantial gaps in the Bill. It refers to benefits, but it does not indicate how those benefits are to be paid. I am at a complete loss as I examine the Bill. When the Minister has an opportunity, perhaps he might like to indicate to us how those benefits are to be paid. Let us assume that we are dealing with a mortgage that was renewed just at the time this plan became effective. When the new renewal comes up, the protection is paid for the full term.

By the way, a five-year mortgage is the best deal and there is no doubt about that since there is no difference in premium rates if a mortgage is taken for five years, for three years or for one year. I think the general public should be made aware of that. As a matter of fact, I think that a big blue flag should be put on all of this material to indicate to home owners that they get the best deal with a five-year term. I would have said a red flag but we are the ones who are drawing this to the attention of the public.

This Bill does not indicate that mortgagees are entitled to receive anything less than that which is provided under the terms of the mortgage. Mortgagees in fact will be paid the full amount. The home owner and CMHC will step in and jointly make the payments that must be made. I would like to know where in the Bill reference is made to who gets the money. Does the home owner receive a monthly cheque from the corporation or does the corporation pay the funds directly to the mortgagee? In any event, that is only one of the gaps in the Bill. I know we will be told that all of that will be established by regulation.

• (1640)

We have been waiting for this legislation for a long time. I certainly do not intend to delay it. However, I believe that it is important to examine in a forthright and honest fashion the way in which the legislation has been drafted. I do not know who the Government has retained in the Department of Justice to draft legislation, but this is, to say the very least, a dog's breakfast. As I examined the Bill, it became apparent that there was one potential for conflict after another. The word "term" is defined on page 10 of the Bill as follows:

—in relation to any borrowing of money or any loan, means a term stipulated for the repayment thereof and includes a period of extension or renewal of such a term.

If one had a five-year mortgage, "term" would clearly mean that it would include a five-year renewal in the event that the mortgage referred to a potential for renewal, or it would include a renewal if that renewal were negotiated prior to the expiration of the date of the original term. However, if we examine page 11, there appears a rather interesting provision. Clause 34.82(1)(b)(iii) states:

—the term or each of any such successive terms is not less than one year.

The question is: How can it possibly occur in the event that "term" means original term and any possible renewal thereof? It is interesting to note that "term" is defined in Clause 34.82(a) wherein it reads:

—the home owner obtains for that purpose on or after the expiry of that term;

The plan, as I understand it, contemplates obtaining by an insurance-like premium a protection for the renewal of a mortgage at a rate which is guaranteed with respect to the rate of interest in part only. Clause 34.82, which is the operative part of the Bill in terms of providing protection is, to say the very least, extremely confusing.

If that provision is confusing, I would invite Hon. Members to proceed to Clause 34.83. What I thought was the nature of the protection as explained in the immediately preceding paragraph is destroyed by providing that: "The corporation"—which is CMHC—"may, from time to time, in prescribed manner, establish rates of interest, for publication", and upon such publication the rates which are to apply to the protected loan and the base loan shall be the rates which are established by the corporation. They are to be the rates which will give rise to the extent of the protection. I say that because that is apparently what the words mean but, I cannot understand the process. If, indeed, they do provide for an abatement between the real rate paid and the rate contracted for and if they reduce that gap protection, then I would clearly ask that this matter be drawn to the attention of the public. The public is clearly of a different view.

One of the most troublesome provisions which should concern all Members of the House is the persistent reference to regulation, prescribed forms, prescribed circumstances and deemed consequences. In this 17 page Bill, regulations or prescriptions occur 55 times. What should we call a Bill which provides for such mammoth and substantial changes when, by way of regulation the heart and soul of the Bill may be removed? That is what the Bill does.

I know it is pleasant for the Government to come to the House and say, "Please pass a skeleton and we will add to it the meat. Please stick up a stake and we will stick the limbs on it." That is exactly what it is doing. We will not have to return to this troublesome place—the House of Commons—for further examination and approval or changes. If there are any mistakes, the Government will fix them by regulation.

Let us look at some of the significant provisions which may be altered by regulation. Let us look at the very heart and soul of the Bill in terms of the insuring of mortgage interest rates. As I indicated earlier, that is Clause 34.82. If we examine that Clause from the beginning it states:

(1) Subject to this Part and any regulations made under subsection 34.88(1)—

The very heart of the Bill is subject to regulations. It also makes reference to specific regulations. If we turn to Clause 34.88, among the provisions that may be changed by regulation, on page 16, under item (d) it states:

—prescribing any terms and conditions to which entering into a contract under subsection 34.82(1) shall be subject;

The place to determine the conditions which entitle people to receive their money is in the Bill itself and not in the regulations. We have already established that. People have to pay a premium of 1.5 per cent. The maximum amount of the mortgage that can be secured is $70,000. People are only entitled to recover three-quarters of the amount. It is all spelled out in the legislation. Increases of over 10 per cent interest are not entitled to reimbursement. As well, there is a 2 per cent self-insuring clause. What then does this clause mean? I do not know. Because I do not know, I should naturally be alarmed that I am called upon to pass legislation which, by the very terms of the Bill itself, authorizes the Government to step in and potentially change the main thrust of the legislation.

That is not the only place in the Bill where that kind of circumstance applies. It is sufficiently harmful that I think it requires renewed examination. Surely the Government can come before the House with a plan which is clear. It is able to spell it out in the pamphlet which has been issued. For instance, we could look at one of the provisions in the pamphlet which asks: "Can a Home owner Renew his Protection? Yes. Upon expiry of his or her original mortgage, the homeowner can extend the mortgage protection by paying an additional premium. This gives the homeowner the option of continuous protection until the mortgage is paid off."

• (1650)

One should examine the provisions of Bill C-37, under Clause 34.87(1) which deals with the establishment of the base loan and the protected loan—and one may be deemed to be the same as the other—and then read Clause 34.87(2), which states:

Notwithstanding subsection (1), where a home owner has been provided with protection in respect of any loan, no further protection in respect of that loan may be provided.

That is one statement in the Bill, to my mind, which is in direct contradiction with the statement which appears in the pamphlet. I believe that the Government genuinely intends that the statement which appears in the pamphlet be the law, but this provision in the Bill has, in my submission at least, the very real prospect of creating the opposite effect. If the words are intended to convey some other impression, can they not be spelled out in a fashion which Hon. Members of this House can understand? In their present form they leave me with the very distinct impression that the opposite effect from that originally intended, allegedly, by the Government, will result if this House passes this Bill in this form.

In my view, we have a responsibility—if I may deal with the way in which legislation is introduced in this place—to see that Parliament itself understands legislation it passes; not fails to understand, not delegates to someone else, not delegates to the Governor in Council. We have a parliamentary form of government, and the establishment of legislation which is the trunk of a tree on which limbs are to be hung, or which is the skeleton on which the government is to put the flesh, is not the purpose of this House. I urge the Minister, who is here, to go back to the person who is doing the drafting of Bills for him, and when this matter is referred to committee he should be prepared to make some very substantial changes which will reflect what appears to be the alleged intention of the Government.

I also believe that it is vitally important for Members of Parliament, in the event that they are to discharge their duties, to be able to understand clearly and as promptly as possible what the words mean. In addition, every time the words "prescribed" or "fixed by regulation" appear, the Minister must understand that we are denied the right to discharge the obligations placed upon us by our constituents. I find this whole method of drafting legislation to be offensive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in the opportunity to contribute to this debate this afternoon on Bill C-37, which is designed to establish a mortgage interest rate protection plan. This Bill has in it a main component which is of more interest to me, that is it permits the federal Government to once again become directly involved in the delivery of a number of social housing programs which formerly had to be delivered through a number of provincial agencies.

I am happy that the Minister is in the House this afternoon. He will recall that I raised this question with him a couple of weeks ago. He told me at that time that the agreements with the provinces were short of a few minor details but they would be ironed out in due course. I am pleased in a sense to see that the ironing out which has been done resulted in eliminating the provincial jurisdiction in this area, and permitted the federal Government once again to deliver these programs directly, because that has been a more effective way, at least in my experience, in the past.

I am particularly concerned, of course, with the Rural and Native Housing Program—because of the nature of my constituency—which has been sadly neglected over the last few years. In a sense it is sad that we cannot get together in a more co-operative program of federalism which would permit the two Governments to co-operate in a more effective way. However, it seems that in all cases the federal Government insists on having its piece of plywood outside saying, "This is a federal project. Look at what we are giving you. Look at how generous we are with you. We want to remind you of that when an election comes around".

Naturally, the provinces want to collect their political currencies as well when these kinds of programs are delivered and public moneys are being spent. Unfortunately, in many cases that has resulted in not delivering the programs at all because the governments cannot get together and that is, in a sense, unfortunate. I do not know what the solution is, the nature of our business being what it is. It will probably always be the case that the government which delivers these kinds of programs wants the political credit for it. As I say, I consider this unfortunate.

There are a number of positive things which I could say about this Bill, but I am very much afraid that it is my role, and the role of the Opposition, to point out the more negative features of the Bill. Let me just say from the outset that apart from the social delivery system which has now been improved upon, I do not see anything in this Bill that is worth considering. There is a lot less there than meets the eye and a lot less than was in the Throne Speech or in the announcements by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) or, indeed, in the Bill itself.

We have a mortgage interest rate protection plan in this Bill. The Minister of Finance a few moments ago stood up in this House and told us not to worry, there is not to be any public money involved in this; that it is sort of a self-supporting, self-sustaining kind of a program; that the mortgage holders will be paying for the protection like buying life insurance or buying any other kind of insurance. What that means, in a sense, is that the mortgage holders, instead of waiting for interest rates to rise, will now have the privilege of paying their interest rates in advance.

There is a $70,000 limit on this program. That means, in many cases, if it is a five-year period, the mortgage holder will now have the privilege not only of paying the current rate of his mortgage, which is 14 per cent or 14.5 per cent, but in addition to that he may pay some interest in advance in the amount of up to $1,500. This shows how much faith the Government has in the stabilization of the market and the stabilization of interest rates.

The Minister of Finance said today during Question Period that his Government does not have a high interest rate policy. I suppose what he is saying to us is that there are no high interest rates in this country. This is just a rumour started by some ungrateful Canadians who cannot afford to renew their mortgages. The Government does not have a high interest rate policy, yet this whole Bill does nothing else but protect mortgage holders not from current high interest rates, but against future increases in interest rates. Therefore, there really is no help in there for the mortgage holder. Instead, it will create a lot of fear, anxiety and uncertainty in the marketplace because we are now saying, "Go and buy your mortgage insurance plan because the storm clouds are coming, interest rates are going to go up and we want you to protect yourself against these fluctuations".

The problem is not really so much with protecting mortgage holders against high interest rates. What we on this side of the House really expected was an attack by the Government on the cause of high interest rates in the housing field. We in this country have not yet recognized that housing in a modern civilized industrial society like ours is a social right. We pretend that we have recognized that, but we really have not. Like clothing and food, housing is essential, particularly in a country like ours when it gets to 40 below. People need to have shelters, therefore it is a social right. The Government talks about this social right, but it has done very little about it. Having accepted that principle, and recognizing that the problem with the housing industry is that it fluctuates with the economy, that is to say as the economy goes up and down so do interest rates and mortgage rates, other countries have managed to separate the housing market from the rest of the money market.

I would like to give the Minister a few examples of what other countries have done to bring about effective housing policies. It is not uncommon, even today in the U.S., to have a fixed mortgage at 6 per cent. It is not at all uncommon in Britain, France and in Germany to get 40 or 50-year fixed mortgages at 5 per cent or 5.5 per cent. How is it done? What are these people doing that we are not? First of all, they recognize that housing is a social right. Secondly, they have recognized that a home owner, by virtue of being a home owner, is a productive citizen. He is a taxpayer, he buys furniture, carpets, building materials and plants for his garden. He adds to the social inventory of the country. Almost every person aspires to own a home. It is a protection against inflation and they can pass it on to their children. But what do they do? Let us look at some of the schemes in place in the United States.

We have the great problem of a shortage of capital at times. That is the reason why the National Housing Act was created. The banks and financial institutions in our country did not, for whatever reason, satisfy the need that existed. Incidentally, this country has a backlog in demand for housing, about 200,000 housing units. That is, of course, more than we are building every year. Up to April of this year, compared to last year, housing starts are down 37,000 units. That is terrible. These other countries know that housing construction is very stimulative to the economy. The lumber industry, which is in such difficulty right now, would certainly be stimulated by more effective housing programs. This applies to all sectors of the economy. Well then, what can we do? We could entice people to invest not only in their own homes but in the housing market itself.

Canadians have more money invested in term deposits in the banks than any other nation in the world. That is why it is not too wise to make comparisons between Canada and the United States. People in the U.S. tend to invest in the stock market more than do Canadians. Some 27 per cent of all adult Americans invest in the stock market, whereas in Canada it is only 7 per cent. Canadians are, I suppose, very cautious investors. Perhaps it has to do with a little bit of ignorance about how business and the stock market work. Well, how can we get people to take their money out of the banks and put it in the housing market or small business or whatever? The way to do it in the housing market is to give them the necessary tax inducement to take money out of term deposits and put it in the housing market.

That is not new. In fact, the Government had discovered this idea, but its priorities are all wrong. You can invest money in the film industry and it is deductible from taxable income. You would not believe how much money there is available for the production of films. Well, it is very simple. The Minister would not believe how much money there would be available over night with the right inducements for people to put their money into a mortgage exchange corporation. The Minister has such an instrument. It was passed by Parliament in 1975 but it has never been declared. You pay money into a mortgage exchange corporation and the interest you earn is tax free. The interest rate, of course, is down to 6 per cent or 7 per cent. That saving would then be passed on to home builders and of course the net result would be that your earnings would be the same. If you paid tax on the interest from a 10 per cent or 11 per cent security deposit in a bank, you would be probably worse off than if you were earning 7 per cent in this other instrument. That is one way of doing it.

In 1979 we proposed the mortgage deductibility plan. You could deduct from your taxable income a portion or all of the interest that you paid on your mortgage. That resulted in a very significant saving to home owners and a very significant reduction in interest rates.

Let me tell the Minister of an even more effective and workable system. It was created about 150 years ago in Great Britain. Those governments, a co-op or a union permit people to save in advance for their homes. In Germany it is mostly the unions that manage these saving societies. It is not necessarily the potential home owner himself who does the saving. Parents and grandparents save for their children or grandchildren. Anyone who wants to save in the housing market can put money into a plan and then give it away to someone or even sell the plan for a little profit.

● (1710)

You put some disposable income into a mortgage exchange corporation or savings society. The money is government guaranteed. The interest rate is very low. It is 1 per cent or 2 per cent. You tailor your plan to your needs. If you need $80,000 or $100,000 10 years from now, you have a plan tailored for yourself. In 10 years you will have saved about 25, 30 or even 40 per cent of the total. You get only a very low rate of interest while you are saving. In return, when the plan matures, you get a fixed mortgage for whatever duration you wish at an interest rate which is presently, in most cases, 5.5 or 6 per cent. This happens in Great Britain, France, Italy, Austria and Germany.

These are countries which are over populated. I can fit three of these countries into my own constituency. There are 60 million people living in the Federal Republic of Germany. My nephews and nieces there all plan to build their own homes. Some of them are doing it right now. They are doing it at a fixed rate of 5.5 per cent because their fathers, and later on themselves, as they started to work, planned ahead and accepted the responsibility associated with planning your own future and building your house.

In Canada, 35 per cent of our population comes from countries which have this experience. Is it the banks that do not let you do these things because they need their pound of flesh? You are subsidizing the home owners with this nonsense. You are subsidizing the banks, the insurance corporations and the mortgage corporations. Is that the problem? Are you catering to the banks? Are you their puppet? Are you really worried about home owners? Why is it that we in Canada cannot do what other countries have done so effectively over the last 150 years? You make all kinds of comparisons with other countries all the time. These are not socialist ideas. They are effective ideas once you have accepted that housing is one of the three essential elements of life in a country like this. Why is it that you are so stubborn, so totally ignorant, and so totally devoid of any ideas? Why is it that Canadians cannot—

Mr. Speaker, how am I for time? Have I a few more minutes?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair was about to rise and advise the Hon. Member that his time is up. The Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) with a question.

Mr. Gass: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member to finish what he was going to say.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to abuse the patience of the House. I wanted to finish the question I was posing to the Minister. He has 10 minutes for question period. I would like him to rise and tell me why he is a servant of the banks instead of the executor of the mandate and the responsibility he has to provide Canadians of all walks of life with adequate and affordable shelter.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the last speaker indicated that there is 10 minutes of question period. As I understand the rule, those are 10 minutes of the last speaker. Perhaps following parliamentary procedure it would be in order to further develop this debate by asking questions of the last speaker.

Because of responsibilities that I enjoyed in this area for reporting for Canada Mortgage and Housing, I would be interested to know of the position of the Member and of the Party he represents with respect to affordable housing. How does he propose that housing could be made affordable for Canadians generally? Specifically, what is his view of shelter allowance? Does his Party intend to promote shelter allowance?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to answer that particular question because I know how anxious that Minister is. I give the present Minister of Housing credit as well for understanding the problem. Neither of them understand nor have ever understood the solutions.

A quick way of solving the housing problem in the country, and an even quicker way of finding out what the policies of the Progressive Conservative Party are in this area, is to screw up your courage and call the election. You will know immediately what the solution will be.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I think the subject is too serious to evade in that way. It is time the Opposition became honest about such an important subject. I will repeat the question. If they are going to make comments about policies and talk about them intelligently, they obviously must have a policy in mind. Certainly he would not want to admit that there is no policy there. Is he in favour of shelter allowances?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, as I told you earlier, this Party will draw from the experience of many people. We told the Government today what the solutions are. I was very generous. I told of a number of programs which are in place in other countries that have worked very effectively. I told what the results of these programs are. The problem is that we have given these people all kinds of ideas before. Why do they not take these two ideas and run with them? Why do they not tell your leadership contenders to go and announce them?

I am very much afraid, as was the case with all the other ideas we gave them, that they would bungle the whole thing. It does not take just ideas. It takes people who are committed to doing something. It takes people who are prepared to accept the social responsibility that is associated with being in power to put these ideas across. I do not have confidence, nor do Canadians generally, that these people will demonstrate that kind of responsibility.

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to filibuster this Bill. It is a very interesting debate. I would like to know what the present Conservative Party thinks of the Mathews Report which, amongst other things, would have suggested the dismantling of CMHC. I will not ask that question.

I know the Hon. Member is seriously interested in the amendments to the rural and native housing program. He seems to suggest that the amendments were brought about because we had a quarrel about signs and credit. If he believes this is the reason, I hope he will check with his provincial government. Does the Hon. Member know that we were unable to deliver to natives and rural people a program in British Columbia because under the law we had to have 25 per cent provincial participation and that participation, without reference to signs or credit, was not forthcoming?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the Minister understands my interest in this area as does the former Minister. In all fairness to him, I fully understand what the difficulties were in British Columbia. No social programs were delivered because the province had its priorities in other areas and did not provide the 25 per cent component, as was the requirement under the arrangement.

• (1720)

In fairness to the Minister, the Government was giving an undue amount of political credits. It was taking all the credits for this housing program and yet the Government did not see fit, at least in my province, and a similar situation exists in other provinces, to get these programs delivered. As I said at the outset, I applaud the Government for taking the necessary initiatives to deliver these programs directly, but that does not get the Government off the hook. This Bill does not attack the root cause of the problem. The housing market is tied to the cyclical nature of the general economy. Unless the Minister has the courage to correct that, we will have continuing serious problems in this area.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle). I am sure he will recall during the last election campaign the Liberal ads which appeared over national television during prime time, night after night. We saw the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) speak repeatedly on interest rates and what a horrible thing it was that interest rates were rising. Night after night over national television on behalf of the Liberal Party, with its usual pack of lies, he stated the Liberals would reduce interest rates.

That was over four years ago. Does the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River think that the Liberal Government should bring forward its policy and program on how it is going to reduce interest rates as the Liberals said they would over national television night after night during the 1980 election campaign? Does the Hon. Member not think that four to four-and-a-half years is just a little bit too long for the Liberals to take to bring in this policy of reducing interest rates? Does the Hon. Member think the Liberals should explain why they allowed the interest rates to go to 21 per cent? Interest rates are now on the rise and the Liberals still have not brought forward this policy of reducing interest rates.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: The Liberals are going to mislead the Canadian people again going into the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair has a problem of whether some questions are allowable. Questions should relate to the remarks made by the previous speaker. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) is referring to something that happened four years ago. The Chair recognizes that the subject of interest rates is in the Bill. The Chair will allow the Hon. Member to reply. This is a border case, which seems to have little to do with what we are discussing.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, what my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) has said is indicative of the kind of reluctance I would have in giving the Liberals our program in great detail, because they would not know how to handle it. The Liberals let interest rates run away, even though they promised clearly that interest rates had to go down. I can recall the present President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) getting up every day during question period saying that interest rates must go down. He was almost falling into the aisle while saying it.

Mr. McKenzie: He said he would resign.

Mr. Oberle: Interest rates went up. As my hon. friend indicated, the President said of the Treasury Board he would resign if interest rates did not go down. He is still here, Mr. Speaker, and he has not come up with any innovative ideas. The same is true with gasoline taxes. The Liberals said the price of gasoline would go up 18 cents if the bad Conservatives stayed in power. Look at what has happened, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The question period has now come to an end. For debate, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall).

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate, but very concerned in another way. Four years have gone by since this Government has been in power. Now we are in a situation where the Liberals are producing amendments not only to the Interest Act through Bill C-36, but also introducing amendments to the National Housing Act through Bill C-37.

This afternoon during question period we heard that we have to work together, meaning federal, provincial, and municipal governments, but when we look at Bill C-37, what do we see? We do not see federal and provincial governments working together. What we see is the federal Government going on its own. It is a sad state of affairs when we as a federal Government cannot work together with our counterparts in the provinces.

Housing to me and to the Members on this side of the House is very important. Everyone in this country should be able to have affordable housing. Everyone has a right to have a home. Let me speak about rural and native housing. There are a number of reserves in my riding of Timiskaming. Let me introduce to you, Sir, one part of my riding, the Moosonee-Moose Factory area. That area is made up of a native reserve and is in the northern part of James Bay. I went to that part of my riding last week. A housing survey was taking place. It was shocking, to say the least. In 1984 we still have people living in tents. I know that is hard to believe, but it is true. That same survey showed in addition to those living in tents two, three, and four families were living under one roof. In two or three rooms were 12, 14 and 16 individuals. I was told that in winter months, people were sleeping in the attic because that was the only warm area. Today, four years after this Government took over, we are only now debating this question. I hate to say this, but is it because there is a chance we will have an election this year and is it just an election issue? I hope not.

This year in the riding of Timiskaming we are allotted 30 homes under the Native and Rural Housing Program. That will not come close to what is required. In one area of my riding, the Moosonee-Moose Factory area, those 30 homes could be used exclusively. There are other parts to my riding, it is a very large rural riding. There are good provisions under this program. There are needy citizens not only in Northern Ontario, but across this country. There are people living in tarpaper shacks. They have pot belly stoves. They are unable to get warm and are unable to provide for their families.

We have to go further. I strongly believe we have to do so with provincial help. We have to work together to resolve the problems in the housing industry. We cannot do it by going it alone. Once again it is determined that this Government will not work with the people. The Liberals have their own thoughts. They do not share the thoughts of Canadians. They have their way of doing things and that is the way it will be.

We intend to change that pattern in a very short period of time. Let me now come to another area. Canadians young and old have always had a dream of owning their own home. We work hard over the years to get what we hope will be affordable housing. People have pride in getting a garden, a beautiful lawn, and a home.

I want to quote something that was said on February 10, 1980, "I would want to manage the economy in such a way that interest rates would, in fact, come down because the economy would be administered in a sound way." The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that in an interview with a reporter from The Toronto Star. Since that date I have friends, and I have colleagues who have friends, who have lost their homes because of this Government's policies and the increasing mortgage rates.

• (1730)

The mortgage interest rate policy of the Government has not been good for Canadians. The mortgage rate in 1974 was 11.88 per cent, in 1981 it was 21.46 per cent, and in 1984 it was 14.25 per cent. Approximately 2.2 jobs are created with every home built in the country. Coming from a resource-based area, I know that means employment not only directly in the construction industry but in the steel, forest and other related industries in the riding of Timiskaming and throughout northern Ontario. The adjustable seasonal rate is 166,000 or 22.5 per cent unemployed people in the construction industry across the country. It is a shameful number and it is due to the high interest rate policy of the present Government.

If a mortgage with a base rate of 12 per cent is renewed at 17 per cent, the first two percentage points are not covered by the insurance. Thus, three-quarters of the difference between 17 per cent and 14 per cent, or 3 per cent times three-quarters, which equals 2.25 per cent, will be paid. In other words, the Government is indicating that interest rates are rising. It is plain. It is in the Bill. There is no doubt that the Government is saying: "Hold on to your hats, here we go back to high interest rates". It is time for the Government to dissolve Parliament and go to the people. Then we could be rid of the problem—this Government.

Mr. LeBlanc: Have you read the Gallup?

Mr. MacDougall: The Gallup is fine. It is galloping along the way we want.

Mr. Malépart: Will you be back?

Mr. MacDougall: I will be back, and I will bring other colleagues from northern Ontario with me.

There are many areas at which I could look, but before concluding my remarks I would like to indicate that people with mortgage interest rates at 17 per cent, 18 per cent and 20 per cent are facing difficult times. Approximately two years to five years ago families had two working members. Today, if we travel across the country, how many families do we find with two members working? It could be the wife or it could be the husband who are working today. If they cannot afford the mortgages they have today, how will they be able to afford insurance to protect them against rising interest rates? If we are looking at $1,050 on a $70,000 mortgage or whatever, that might be a relief in some areas of the country. However, we are still not getting at the problem, which is the economic policies of the Government. This problem is evident in that mortgage interest rates are rising. The Government has mortgaged the future of our young people and the future of their children. At whatever we are looking, be it Bill C-37 or youth employment, it seems to come down to mismanagement by the Government and it is Canadian taxpayers who are paying for it.

I could refer to many sound areas such as native housing, RRAP and townships which do not qualify, housing geared to income and many other areas; however, I thank the House for the opportunity to participate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I realize the Hon. Member arrived here in the House after the short reign of the Progressive Conservative Government. Was he aware of the fact that the Minister responsible for CMHC asked one of his Conservative friends to examine how CMHC could be dismantled and divested of its programs, especially in the area of subsidized housing? The person in question was Mr. Elmer MacKay, who recently stepped down to let the Leader of the Progressive Conservatives run in his riding, I was going to say the little leader, and who is now an influential adviser.

My question will be directed as much to him as to the previous speaker. Do the Progressive Conservatives want an election as soon as possible so they can get rid of CMHC?

[English]

Mr. MacDougall: Yes and no.

Mr. LeBlanc: That is your policy—yes and no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any further questions? The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) on debate.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-37, which is supposedly to provide insurance against rising mortgage interest rates. However, it should be called a Bill to insure against government incompetence, because that is what it really attempts to do. It attempts to patch up the mistakes of the Government of a few years ago, mistakes which have caused the situation where people are losing their homes because of high interest rates and fluctuating interest rates. Instead of suggesting, as this Bill does, putting in place an insurance plan against high mortgage interest rates, it should be possible to put in place a set rate mortgage such as we had for many years.

Mr. Oberle: It was brought in by Diefenbaker in 1959.

Mr. Hovdebo: That could possibly be so. I would not want to question the Hon. Member on that. A fixed affordable interest rate on long-term mortgages for many years did for the housing industry what was necessary. It did not hamper the building of houses. However, that fixed interest rate was removed by the then Minister of Public Works, Mr. Hellyer, to open up the market so that builders would become involved in constructing affordable houses and would be able to sell them somewhat easier. The record will show that as a result of opening up the market and fluctuating interest rates, for a number of years housing starts declined and that the building industry was not helped. In fact, it made it somewhat more difficult for people to obtain affordable housing and, consequently, somewhat more difficult for people even to find housing.

Bill C-37 allows for interest rates to increase approximately 3 per cent or 3.5 per cent without any assistance being provided. That is a 25 per cent increase on interest rates with respect to the level of present interest rates. I do not consider these to be essentially affordable interest rates.
