Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, since 1981, not many years ago, more than a million Canadians have been added to the poverty level in terms of income. Because of the Minister's Budget last year, the poor of Canada, those with incomes at the poverty line, will see an increase in tax payable next year of $100. With more and more Canadians finding themselves at the poverty level, why on earth would the Minister increase the taxes which these people are expected to pay, making the poor people of Canada poorer at the same time as making the wealthy wealthier?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind my friend that a number of the adjustments made to the 1981 Budget were made following representations by the Hon. Member's Party. Does he want me to introduce, for instance, a taxation on health benefits and dental benefits of workers, which I have maintained to benefit workers, and which represent hundreds of millions of dollars? Is that what the NDP is asking for, that we tax workers more? That is not the view of this Party. As far as the poor are concerned, I remind him that the measure before the House on which the NDP is still dragging will provide $600 per year more to elderly citizens.

Mr. Deans: Which one are we dragging on?

Mr. Lalonde: That is only one example among many.

Mr. Deans: That is a lie; that is a lie.

Mr. Nielsen: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I heard unparliamentary language, Mr. Speaker.

THE CANADA COUNCIL

POSITION ON BILL C-24—ROLE OF DEPUTY MINISTER

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, last week the Director of the Canada Council, Mr. Tim Porteous, testified that the Deputy Minister of Communications, Mr. Rabinovitch, had instructed him that public criticism of Bill C-24 by him or his staff, or even board members of the Canada Council, would not be tolerated. When I raised the matter with the Acting Prime Minister last week he advised the House that the Deputy Minister was acting with the consent and, indeed, at the request of the Minister of Communications. Why did the Minister of Communications embark upon this policy of intimidation which has so infected the freedom of speech of the arts and cultural communities in the country?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member simply cannot be serious. He has asked me to comment upon the question of instructions. He alleged that instructions were given by my Deputy Minister to the Canada Council. I have discussed it with my Deputy Minister and he has confirmed that he did not in any case give any instructions of the kind to which the Hon. Member just referred, to the Canada Council. As a matter of fact I am on the record, and another Minister is on the record, Senator Austin, to the effect that we thought the Canada Council ought to appear before the parliamentary committee.

It seems to me that we have said, time and time again on this side of the House, that we are indeed interested in seeing that the traditional arms length relationship between the Government and cultural agencies be maintained, that if for some reason or other the legislative drafting of Bill C-24 did not meet this, we very much hoped that the Canada Council and other agencies of a cultural nature would appear before a committee of the House to make their case known to Members. I very much believe that legislation, by going through this process, can indeed be improved.

On the questions of instructions, once again no instructions of the kind referred to by the Hon. Member were given by my Deputy Minister.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister knows that the damage was already done. Indeed, Mr. Brian Anthony of the Canadian Conference of the Arts representing arts and cultural communities, said in his testimony last week:

> We have certainly been led to believe that it would be inappropriate for any agency to risk its good standing and well-being at this moment by speaking out against Bill C-24.

Why is the Minister hiding behind his Deputy Minister and hanging him out to dry? Why will he not take the responsibility and dispel the atmosphere of intimidation for which he, not his Deputy Minister, is clearly responsible?

• (1430)

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am on the record, not only in this House in previous replies to questions from my hon. friend, but also in the newspapers of the land. I refer to The Globe and Mail where I indicated quite clearly that the Canada Council was welcome to appear before the House of Commons Committee examining Bill C-24. The proof, as they say, is in the pudding. They have done so. It was indicated in the same article in The Globe and Mail on the part of the official critic of the Opposition on matters of culture and communications that the only thing he could reproach this Government for, in the field of culture and communications over the past four years, was for having done too much for the cultural community.

TESTIMONY GIVEN BY COUNCIL DIRECTOR

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, clearly what those of us who have been involved in the committee know, because of the testimony, is that the Minister is saying that the Director of the Canada Council, when he answered yes to the question of intimidation, was wrong and that that telephone call did not take place. From all the testimony, surely what has happened is that the arts and cultural communities believe that the Deputy Minister acted in that fashion. Will the Minister at least take responsibility to take steps to dispel that atmosphere of intimidation so that they can come forward to the committee?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am saying that it is indeed an erroneous interpretation to say that instructions were given. No instructions were given. I indicated that two Ministers of the Crown, myself and another Minister, in public statements, one of which is included in a release by the Canada Council—let's get back to the Hon. Member's question. He has asked whether there is a climate of intimidation. There is no climate of intimidation. The Canada Council appeared before the committee, of which the Hon. Member is a member, last week and gave testimony. Once again, it was invited by two Ministers of the Crown to appear before the committee to give its testimony and its point of view. We on this side of the House believe that the House of Commons is part of the legislative process. We on this side believe that legislation can be improved by going through that process. If it comes out of that process improved, so much the better.

MUSEUMS AND ART GALLERIES

CANADA MUSEUMS CONSTRUCTION CORPORATION—FUND RAISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. I hope I get more straightforward answers than those he just gave to my colleague from Rosedale. I want to follow up on a question that I asked the Minister on April 11 when he described the $24 million federal fund raising campaign for adornments to the Museum of Man and the National Gallery as a once-in-a-lifetime project. That spells the end of a lifetime for many private museums and little historical societies in Canada. Quite apart from the principle of the federal Government going after private funds, why are these things costing $24 million more than the Government stated in February, 1982?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat my answer once again. I hope this time the Hon. Member will listen. What I indicated last time was that in making an appropriation of approximately $190 million to build two fine museums in the national capital region of Canada, the new National Gallery and the new Museum of Man, the federal Government had indeed made available to the Canada Museums Construction Corporation sufficient funds to build these museums. However, over a period of time, it was thought that these museums should have an outward appearance befitting their position in the national capital of the country. To improve part of the facade and the appearance of that museum, it was estimated that an additional $24 million would be required. The Hon. Member is most welcome to ask those questions of the Chairman of the Canada Museums Construction Corporation during the course of the Estimates or at other appropriate times.

As to the Hon. Member's comments on the effect on fund raising in Canada, obviously this type of fund raising will not affect the small regional museums because we are not approaching the same type of clientele that is being approached by the small regional museums to which he refers.

MINISTER'S CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to go to the President of the Canada Museums Corporation to ask the Minister to explain comments in two letters, one in 1981 and one in 1984. I quote:

> —the federal Government recognizes that providing improved facilities for the National Gallery of Canada is its financial responsibility and there are no plans to solicit funds from the private sector for this project.

In a letter written in 1984, signed by the Minister's own hand, he stated:

> The federal Government has made a substantial contribution toward the cost of building new facilities for the National Gallery and the National Museum of Man. Adequate structures could be built with these funds.

Why does the Minister not live up to his responsibilities, reorganize those budgets, make use of the funds that the taxpayers are already spending for this upgrading and these adornments of the National Gallery and the Museum of Man, and stop robbing the private sector of vitally needed funds?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is just repeating what I said. I stated quite clearly that adequate structures could indeed be put up with the funds that had been made available to the Canada Museums Construction Corporation by the Government. However, we thought that these buildings should have an appearance befitting their presence in the national capital of our country, that they be buildings of which all Canadians can be proud. To do so, we thought it would be a good idea to have a partnership with the private sector, that Canadians from various parts of the country, by making a financial contribution to the building of that museum, would identify more closely with it and not see it as a government museum but as a museum that belonged to the people of Canada.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

PROJECTED REDUCTION OF WORKFORCE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I am sure the Minister will remember the many speeches he made during the long and acrimonious debate on the Crow freight rates. On many occasions the Minister said the passage of the Bill would lead to increased employment. On March 25 the Minister said:

"The change in the Crow rate . . . will create employment", giving the impression that it would create thousands of jobs.

The railway union which acts for workers of the CPR have been told, and I understand they have been in communication with the Minister, that in the next few years the CPR proposes to reduce its work force by something in the neighbourhood of 4,000 workers. This will have a very serious effect on workers in Moncton, Montreal, Winnipeg, and Calgary. Has the Minister discussed this fact with officials of CPR? If so, can he explain how his promise that there would be increased employment will likely lead to a very sharp reduction in the number of people working for the CPR?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the predictions that we made concerning the economic impact of the Western Grain Transportation Bill are bearing out. This year alone over $1 billion worth of new capital will be invested in this country, with a substantially large and major impact and the development of jobs in a wide variety of occupations. I draw to the Hon. Member's attention the tendering a few weeks back of major contracts for the Rogers Pass tunnel, which will be a $600 million project and have very major economic impact on the construction trades and others. When we talked about employment we were covering a broad base of employment in a wide variety of occupations.

On the particular matter of the proposed changes in the structuring of some of the workforces in the railroad, it is my understanding that those are caused primarily by new changes in technology in the attempts to gain productivity improvements. Certain practices become obsolescent and, therefore, savings can be occasioned. That is not something that has in any way been decided. It is my understanding that this is a matter that the railroads want to introduce as part of their labour negotiations, to work out agreements over a period of time with the unions. That is what collective bargaining is about, to sit down and look at a problem that jointly affects the operation of a corporation, in this case, and to have management and labour work out what would be a mutually satisfactory way of doing that. That is the kind of practice this Government deals in, to allow those problems to be properly addressed through the collective bargaining process.

Mr. Orlikow: When the Minister was making those rousing speeches about what the Crow rate changes would do, he certainly did not imply to the railway workers that part of the package would be a very substantial reduction in the number of people employed. I would point out that building the Rogers Pass tunnel will only create very temporary jobs.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONVENE MEETING OF INTERESTED PARTIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the President of the CPR Machinists' Union sent a telegram to the Minister asking him to convene a meeting between the officials of CPR, the railway unions, the Minister, and his Department, to discuss this threatened major lay-off. Has the Minister responded yet? Is he making arrangements for that kind of a meeting, or is it something which he will leave to the tender mercies of his friends in the CPR?

• (1440)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the Hon. Member is trying to shade the point. I have met on a couple of occasions with members of the railway unions to discuss the matter. I had intended to meet with them yesterday in Winnipeg but my presence was required back here for a vote that members of the NDP intended to have held but never got around to holding. As a result, I was not able to fulfil that responsibility and meet with the unions.

Mr. Deans: What are you talking about? That's not true.

Mr. Axworthy: However, we will be meeting with them at the first opportunity, and will also be meeting with the railway management to discuss the matter.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain seems to be growling in his chair in an irrelevant manner.

Mr. Deans: Damned right I am!

Mr. Axworthy: If he would permit me, I would like to answer his colleague's question. If he would have the courtesy to allow me to answer his colleague, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Deans: Why would I have courtesy for you? You're not telling the truth.

Mr. Axworthy: The fact of the matter is that we are concerned about these matters. We will meet with the unions and the management to make sure that the employment is there.

Mr. Deans: Sit down!

Mr. Axworthy: I would hope that members of the NDP would not have such an obsolete point of view that they would be prepared to say that no company at any time should be allowed to look at how it can improve the productivity of its workforce and therefore be able to provide a more competitive and lower cost service to the shippers of the country so that we may compete economically around the world.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST THAT PRISONER IN KANSAS BE TRANSFERRED TO CANADIAN PENITENTIARY

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Under what, I am sure, was a well intentioned but seemingly misguided policy of the Manitoba Government, young Indian children were sent to the United States for adoption. One Cameron Kerley was allowed to be adopted by a single male who, as it later turned out, was a homosexual. After repeated attempts to escape, and after much provocation, Cameron Kerley killed his adoptive parent. This situation was described on CTV's television program, W-5.

Having killed this person, Cameron Kerley is now serving a sentence in the United States. Has the Solicitor General been contacted by counsel for Cameron Kerley with a request to move this young man back to Canada?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the Hon. Member brought this case to my attention. I would like to thank him for doing so.

Today, I was in touch with a lawyer in Winnipeg who is acting for Mr. Kerley. Since Kansas is one of the few American states with which we do have a transfer of offenders agreement, I agreed on behalf of the government to approve that transfer if a request for it is made by Mr. Kerley and by the State of Kansas. I was told that Mr. Kerley still has rights of appeal and, of course, the transfer option does not arise until his rights of appeal are used or abandoned.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

IMPACT ON OIL SANDS PROJECTS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will know that the National Energy Program killed oil sands mining in northeastern Alberta, that the Syncrude expansion was tabled, and that the Alsands mining operation folded completely, at a cost of 100,000 to 150,000 jobs to Canadians across the country. As well, it killed Canada's chances for achieving oil self-sufficiency by 1990. What is the Minister doing to create incentives for oil sands mining in northeastern Alberta?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member forgot to add to his list the decision that was made by Exxon in the United States to cancel a $1 billion investment that it had already made in oil shales in the United States at the same time as some multinationals and other companies in Canada decided not to proceed with oil sands development projects. This happened because, as in the United States, the price of oil was not increasing as fast as had been expected, and because of the high cost of constructing those plants. The Hon. Member should know about those decisions which were made in the United States. This is something that the Hon. Member forgot to mention.

Second, I invite the Hon. Member to pay a visit to northern Alberta. If he did, he would find that at Wolf Lake and Cold Lake, for instance, investments are taking place at this time that are in the hundreds of millions of dollars. I believe that these investments are being made in his riding. He might be interested in paying a visit to those projects so that he may realize what is happening in his own back yard.

Third, our goal was to achieve self-sufficiency by 1990. The Hon. Member should know that, since last August, Canada has been a net exporter of oil. We have been self-sufficient to the tune of about 25,000 barrels a day. This is a record that my friend should indeed find very difficult to match.

Finally, the Hon. Member knows about the letter of intent that was signed last week between the federal Government, Husky, the Government of Alberta and the Government of Saskatchewan, whereby a heavy oil upgrader will be built at a cost of over $3 billion. This is not something that is bad.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I would like to recommend to the Minister that he look into the difference between oil shales and oil sands. Oil shales involve a very high cost of recovery. The in situ investments in northeastern Alberta to which the Minister referred, being the Imperial Oil project at Cold Lake and the BP project at Wolf Lake, are going ahead because the National Energy Program was changed. I am talking about the mining operations in northeastern Alberta and I am talking about things like the Alsands and the Syncrude expansion. The Minister spoke of net export. We are importing high grade crude oil and we are exporting bunker fuel. That is what the Minister has failed to tell us.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CHANGE PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister when he will allow 150,000 to 200,000 jobs to be created across the country by changing the National Energy Program. The President of Petro-Canada, Bill Hopper, has suggested that if the Government will put the proper incentives in place, those mining operations will go ahead. Perhaps the Minister could answer the question and stop evading it.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to oil shales as being too costly in the United States, and to Exxon having to abandon a $1-billion investment. The same thing is happening in Canada. If the cost of building a tar sands plant is excessive compared to the cost of enhanced oil recovery and the cost of the recuperation and the upgrading of heavy oil, those plants will, of course, not be able to compete.

The Hon. Member knows that adjustments have been made to the National Energy Program. For instance, the Wolf Lake and Cold Lake projects, as the Hon. Member himself has said, are being realized because such adjustments have been made. We have always been ready to consider making adjustments. We have negotiated these adjustments with the Government of Alberta in particular, and both Governments have come to the conclusion that there is a limit to the level of government support that can be provided for any kind of project. The fact is that Canada is oil self-sufficient today. The Hon. Member should know that. That has been achieved thanks to the policies that have been followed by the Government over the years.

Oral Questions

THE CANADA COUNCIL

TELEPHONE CALL MADE BY DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications and is supplementary to the questions asked by the Hon. Member for Rosedale. The Minister knows that Mr. Porteous of the Canada Council testified in committee that he received a telephone call from the Minister's Deputy Minister. The Minister also knows that last week in the House the Acting Prime Minister said that the phone call was made at the request of the Minister of Communications and with the consent of the Minister of Communications.

Does the Minister want the House to understand that the phone call was made, that it was made with his consent, and that he gave instructions with regard to that phone call? Further, since the Minister says that he did not give the instructions to which the Hon. Member for Rosedale referred, would he therefore tell us precisely what instructions he did give his Deputy Minister?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, a number of phone calls are made on a daily basis between officials of my Department and the Canada Council. I think it is quite obvious that there must be a working relationship between them. A number of issues, including ongoing issues, are indeed discussed during the course of these conversations.

After having reviewed the matter with my Deputy Minister, he informs me that there were indeed no instructions given to the Director of the Canada Council along the lines suggested by the Hon. Member. These may have been interpreted as instructions, and this is probably what Mr. Porteous is suggesting. But I have informed the House that there were indeed no instructions of that kind, and that perhaps the conversation was misunderstood.

To make it even clearer than that, I am referring to two earlier statements on the part of two Ministers of the Crown indicating that the Canada Council was welcome to appear before that committee. As a matter of fact, I personally told Mr. Porteous that the Canada Council ought to appear in front of that committee if it felt there were points which ought to be discussed and clarified.

REQUEST THAT DEPUTY MINISTER APPEAR AS COMMITTEE WITNESS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will particularly know how important the credibility of the Canada Council is in the arts community. Since the Minister seems to be implying that either Mr. Porteous misunderstood the conversation or has misrepresented it, will the Minister instruct his Deputy Minister to appear before the Standing Committee as a witness, now that the Canada Council has appeared before it, so that the Standing Committee may ask his Deputy Minister, as it asked the Canada Council, direct questions with regard to this matter, in order that the committee may determine whether in fact the Minister is hanging his Deputy Minister out to dry to protect himself?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed indicating on behalf of my Deputy Minister, as the Minister does—the Minister responds to questions in this House on behalf of his officials—that my Deputy Minister did not give any instructions to the Canada Council along the lines suggested by the Hon. Member. I am indicating that if the executive Director of the Council thought these to be instructions, he did not understand the conversation properly.

There were no instructions given to the Canada Council telling it not to appear in front of that committee. If you will allow me to repeat myself once more this afternoon—I said it four times, perhaps five times—I will say it a sixth time. I personally invited the Canada Council to appear in front of the committee. My colleague, Mr. Austin, did the same thing. The proof, once again, is in the pudding. The Council appeared. It appeared with members of the Council, members appointed by this Government, and it made its point of view known very clearly indeed.

As I indicated to the Hon. Member for Rosedale previously, we believe that perhaps as a result of this interaction by the Council and the committee, some good ideas may be generated on the other side of the House. If there are none generated on that side of the House, I am fully confident they will be generated on this side of the House and that this question will indeed be resolved to the satisfaction of all concerned.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

FORMULA GOVERNING DESIGNATION OF VICTORIA, B.C.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. On Friday the Minister claimed that no formula could be more fair or equitable than the present formula used to determine the tier designations for benefits under the Industrial and Regional Development Program.

Does the Minister know that for the last six months the unemployment rate in Victoria, British Columbia, has averaged more than 3 per cent above the national average? What does the Minister think is fair or equitable about a formula which designates Victoria for the lowest level of benefits, when its unemployment rate has fluctuated between 13.5 per cent and 17.6 per cent, which in February was the second highest unemployment rate for any city in Canada? What is fair or equitable about a formula which leaves Victoria at the lowest level of benefits?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, a full answer would be so long that I would not want to take the valuable time of this House to respond. Perhaps the Hon. Member can come to the committee when we discuss the program and the computation of the formula, and I will give him all the details. The fact is that the formula applies to every single census area in Canada. It is re-evaluated once a year. If, by the statistics indicated by the Hon. Member, Victoria is in worse shape than all of the other cities, that will affect the formula. Obviously, in that case, the census area of Victoria will change automatically.

APPEAL TO MINISTER TO REVIEW REGULATIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. If the Minister cannot tell me what is fair about the formula, I would like to tell him what is unfair about it. It is based on a ratio of unemployment insurance beneficiaries to the general population of working age. In Victoria, not only are there a large number of unemployed people whose benefits have expired, but there are also many people who have taken early retirement and moved there. Both of these factors distort this ratio. I would like to make a personal appeal to the Minister. Will he himself look into the Victoria situation, will he look at the hardship faced by that community, and determine whether some changes have to be made to the regulations so that people and businesses in Victoria can receive the benefits they need and deserve?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Hon. Member is trying to make some political points. However, I would hope he would go back and read the committee minutes with respect to the development of that formula. As a matter of fact, I believe one of the Hon. Member's own colleagues was applauding my response to the Hon. Member for Victoria last week when I indicated that the formula applies equally to all census areas across the country. It also happens to be, Mr. Speaker, the first time that a formula for regional development incentives to industry and tourism coincides with the job-creation program formulae conducted by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The formula we use is exactly the same, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

COD BLOCK INVENTORIES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister knows that as a result of marketing difficulties there are now high inventories in eastern Canada, especially in Newfoundland, of cod blocks. This will create problems for inshore fishermen as we get into the season. Will the Minister tell the House what steps the Government intends to take to alleviate the situation, either directly or through the Fisheries Prices Support Board?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member, who is a former Minister of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans. I am happy to report to him that Cabinet will be making a decision very shortly.

MARKETING SYSTEM

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Time is of the essence, Mr. Speaker, because this situation is creating problems for inshore fishermen in terms of disposing of their fish. Has the Minister taken any steps with regard to single desk marketing, setting up some kind of cafe kind of system so that cod blocks as a commodity can be sold through a single desk?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I believe that, first the Hon. Member will not have to wait very long for the announcement of the Government's policy. Second, I will be expecting some initiative from the industry itself which will suggest an orderly marketing organization structure.

THE CONSTITUTION

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF QUEBEC'S BILL 101—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I will direct my question to the Prime Minister, who will know that the Supreme Court of Canada has been urged by counsel representing the federal Government to disallow some 4,500 laws passed by the Province of Manitoba since 1890. The issue with respect to the legality or lack of it in connection with the laws of Manitoba was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada by the federal Government, for an opinion of the Court, within six weeks of the decision by the Government of Manitoba to abandon its plan to amend its constitution to extend constitutional language rights to the Franco-Manitobans.

Today a group from the Province of Quebec, representing the Quebec Federation of Home and School Associations, is in Ottawa for the purpose of urging upon the federal Government a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada of the constitutionality of some 31 provisions of Bill 101.

These people have waited some five and a half years to get on the regular Supreme Court docket in Quebec regarding the issues with which they are concerned. Is the Government of the Prime Minister concerned with protecting only certain kinds of minority rights in this country, that is to say, minority rights as they affect French-speaking Canadians? If it is not, why will the Government not take the step of referring the offensive provisions of Bill 101—which offends some 800,000 English-speaking Canadians in the Province of Quebec—to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I personally have some concern that it is taking so long to get this matter before the courts of Quebec, where the matter should properly be dealt with. As the Hon. Member would know, I have no authority over the administration of justice in the running of the rolls in the courts of Quebec, nor does this Government. However, I do hope some way will be found to have these cases brought to trial much sooner.

This being said, Mr. Speaker, I believe there is a difference between the two situations. The Hon. Member tries to draw a parallel between the actions of the Government in both cases. I would point out to him that when the courts in Quebec and in Canada decided that certain Sections of Bill 101 were ultra vires, the day after the decision the Government of Quebec righted those wrongs by rendering official the laws in both languages which had been proclaimed only in one language. In other words, when the courts rendered a decision the Quebec Government—for all my disagreement with it—acted immediately to conform with the courts. Therefore I think the people of Quebec who have wrongs and can have them righted by the courts will see a Government which respects the courts. Unfortunately, that is not what happened in Manitoba, as the Hon. Member knows.

• (1500)

The Supreme Court in 1979 declared ultra vires the laws adopted in one language only by Manitoba since 1890. The Government of that province did not do what the Government of Quebec did; it did not right that wrong, it let it live on.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S POWERS

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, that sounds very nice, with the exception of a couple of matters. To begin with, in asking what the Government might do, I provided the solution to that in my original question. What the Government might do is refer immediately the issue of the offensive provisions of Bill 101 to the Supreme Court of Canada.

With respect to the issues which are of concern to many people, the language of business in the Province of Quebec is an issue which directly conflicts with the trade and commerce power of the federal Government under the 1867 Constitution. If the Prime Minister wants grounds for dealing with that issue, they lie directly in the federal sphere of influence, as does, indeed, the power of extending English language education rights which his Government brought through by way of constitutional amendment. Bill 101 is in direct conflict with these provisions. For that reason I submit that he has the very best of reasons for referring these matters to the Supreme Court.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this Government has always taken the position that it was better and easier for the courts to judge the law in particular cases—and I have been saying that for 10 or 20 years—rather than submitting a theoretical proposition to them. When things can be brought to justice by applying to the courts by the public sector, or by individual litigants, in many cases, as the Hon. Member knows, we assist them with funds. When that is possible, that is the preferred course. That is the course preferred not only by the lawyers but by the courts themselves. They are judging on specific cases.

The Hon. Member should know that in the case of Bill 101 we have assisted many litigants in Quebec in seeking justice, and they obtained justice and redress all the way through the courts. The one exception is this case which has taken five years. I have already said that I regret that, and that I did not see an immediate redress to it. However, when you have the contra case, when litigants in Manitoba obtained, as Mr. Forest did in 1979, a favourable judgment and when the Legislature does not act to redress the injustice because its Members want to drag it out, or act in particular cases and so on, then this is indeed a case for reference.

I would point out to the Hon. Member that in our reference on Manitoba we referred not only Section 23 but Section 133, which is the Section which applies to Quebec and Canada. Since there seems to be some doubt in the minds of the Manitoba Government—I should say the Manitoba Opposition—which prevented the redress from being granted by the Manitoba Government, which Government attempted to grant redress and correct the injustice which the courts had recognized and this was prevented by the bell-ringing incidents of the Tory Opposition in Manitoba. Since this appeared to be the attitude, we said that we needed a more general decision, not a decision for each specific case.

The Hon. Member should understand that Mr. Forest won his case and nothing came of it. Then there was the Bilodeau case. If this is won, presumably nothing would be done with it either. What could happen is that a hundred cases would come forward and nothing would ever happen. Therefore, we want a general statement on the law in Manitoba. That statement is the one which we are now pleading for in the courts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SERVICES FOR THE HEARING IMPAIRED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier today I noticed, for the first time since I have been in this House, a group of hearing impaired individuals in the public galleries who also had available to them a sign interpreter provided through the good offices of the Speaker. I would like to congratulate you on that, Mr. Speaker.

I would also like to take this opportunity to suggest that you give consideration to the installation in the House of a loop system which would help those individuals who are required to wear a hearing aid device in order to listen to the proceedings in the House. I would hope that the Speaker would take that under consideration.

BILINGUALISM

TABLING OF LETTER TO PREMIER DAVIS OF ONTARIO

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table under the provisions of Standing Order 46(2) copies in both official languages of a letter which I have sent to Premier Davis of Ontario concerning minority language rights in the province. Given the nature of the correspondence, I wonder if I could ask for the consent of the House to have this letter printed as an appendix to this day's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, the usual practice and tradition with respect to these matters is that there is prior consultation. I would be glad to take the matter under advisement and we could possibly deal with it later. I have not been apprised of any suggestions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am quite happy to have the request of the Prime Minister accommodated, but the courtesies of the House, regardless of whether the matter is a serious one or a trivial one, should be observed. If this House is to perform its function properly, I would appreciate having the House Leader consult with me.

PETITIONS

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of citizens who are expressing serious concern in their petition with respect to the fact that the Government has refused to allow for broad public input into the drafting of security legislation by denying cross-country hearings. They express their concern for the fact that the proposed legislation would allow the new security service to target thousands of individuals who have broken no law whatsoever but fall within the sweeping scope of the definition of a threat to the security of Canada. They call for full and extensive public hearings across Canada and that the Bill not be proceeded with before such hearings have taken place. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. MITGES—LAW RELATING TO DIVORCE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of constituents of mine. The petition states that the family is essential to the well-being of society and it urges on the Government that any amendment to Bill C-10 consider very carefully the implications of obtaining an easy divorce by not allowing enough time for a cooling off period. This would detrimentally affect the family unit and any children which may be involved.

MR. FLIS—HUNGER STRIKE OF POLISH CANADIANS

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 71 I have the honour to present a petition of 1,197 residents of the constituency of Parkdale-High Park and other regions of Ontario, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, which humbly sheweth that the undersigned citizens strongly support the hunger strike staged by three Polish Canadians, and urges the Canadian Government to help the spouses and children of the strikers to join them in Canada. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Petitions

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present to the House today. The first petition to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled relates to the proposed security legislation. The petitioner, a resident of Ottawa, indicates that the proposed Bill poses a profound threat to the civil liberties and privacy of all Canadians. It grants sweeping new powers to the security service, including the power to open first-class mail, target foreign visitors, break and enter and steal, to examine income tax records, medical records, and all other confidential materials.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to demand full and extensive public hearings across Canada on the proposed Bill to establish a civilian security service and that the Bill not be proceeded with before such hearings have taken place. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

I have another petition signed by a resident of Ottawa with respect to the proposed security legislation, expressing concern about the unreasonable closure of debate in committee and at second reading. It notes that the Bill poses a profound threat to the civil liberties and privacy of all Canadians in that, despite the strong recommendation of the McDonald Commission, the committee refused to provide for any parliamentary oversight committee to prevent the service from becoming a political weapon in the hands of the government of the day.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call on Parliament to demand full and extensive public hearings across Canada on the proposed Bill to establish a civilian security service,and that the Bill not be proceeded with before such hearings have taken place. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

I have the honour to present a petition signed by a resident of Ottawa who is expressing concern, as have the previous petitioners, with respect to the—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member tabling a petition signed by a single individual?

An Hon. Member: That is what he said.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member intends to proceed with a series of petitions signed by single individuals, I suggest he might be able to indicate the general nature of such communications and provide them in summary form to the House.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): My understanding of the rules is that the petition need not be signed by more than one individual. Certainly I am proceeding in accordance with the Standing Orders of the House.

Mr. Evans: Who was it signed by? Svend Robinson?

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member has a series of petitions dealing with the same subject matter, he might be able to indicate the general nature of the subject matter.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Chair would not in any way want to impair the right of citizens of this country to petition the House of Commons. In accordance with long-standing precedent, which I certainly would be pleased to cite if the Speaker is in any doubt as to procedural acceptability, I am proposing to present a petition to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled which, as do the previous petitions and others, Mr. Speaker—because there is a great deal of public concern with respect to the subject matter of the petitions I am presenting—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member cannot make a speech. I have invited him to indicate the general subject matter and file his documents. I am well aware that if the Hon. Member is going through the device of presenting documents signed by individuals and citing at great length the nature of the communication, this can be a very time-consuming procedure indeed, if that is his objective. But I invite the Hon. Member to indicate the nature of the communications, summarize them, and file them with the Clerk.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I know the Speaker would not want to impute motives to any Member of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I am presenting a petition to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petitioner in question is expressing grave concern with respect to the proposed security legislation, in particular that it would deny access by the proposed Security Intelligence Review Committee and the Inspector General to Cabinet documents in possession of the security service, making this—

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member has a series of petitions dealing with the security legislation, he might indicate the general subject matter without repeating or reading essentially the same material time afer time to the House.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I certainly was not repeating the material. This was a petition relating to one particular concern of the petitioner with respect to the process of review which is contemplated. I certainly had not dealt with that prior to this time. I will summarize, however. The petitioner, in light of the concern expressed, is calling for full and extensive hearings to deal with that concern. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

I have the honour to present a petition from a concerned resident of the Ottawa area with respect to the long-established, ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance. This individual wishes this grievance to be brought to the attention of this House with respect to the proposed security legislation. The petitioner notes that despite the fact the security service opened files on almost one million Canadians, the Bill would allow the new service to target thousands of individuals who have broken no law whatsoever but who fall within the sweeping scope of the definitions in the Bill. It also refers to some of the sweeping new powers proposed in the legislation.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioner, humbly prays and calls upon Parliament to demand full and extensive public hearings with respect to the concerns raised in the petition and asks that the Bill not be proceeded with before such proceedings have taken place and these concerns are addressed. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Thacker: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Was the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that you ought not to be fooled under the rules. The Liberal Party West is forcing the Government to bring in time allocation, thereby giving the Government the out. That is how the NDP, the Liberal Party West, is going to hurt the people in the west through this obnoxious strategy.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, because the Conservative Party was hand in glove with the Liberal Party in committee on this legislation, I can understand why the—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just a minute. You go too far.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): —Hon. Member is somewhat sensitive on this question. The fact that the Conservative Party stood idly by while the Government attempted to ram this Bill through committee is good reason for the sensitivity, Mr. Speaker.

● (1520)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West rises on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) reading petitions, but when he tells untruths in the House I think you should be interceding. It is not argument now. We are dealing with petitions. He is making a dissertation about what happened in the committee which he knows is patently false.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for Burnaby, who seeks to be recognized on petitions, confine himself to petitions?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Precisely. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was responding to my colleague from Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

I have the honour to present a petition to the honourable the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled with respect to the concern on the part of the petitioner about the proposed security legislation. The Government has refused to allow for broad public output by denying cross-country hearings and has raised concerns with respect to the scope of the potential targeting of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member obviously has a series of petitions all requesting public hearings. Could he indicate the number of petitions and file them with the Clerk?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): He cannot deny the right for a petition, for Heaven's sake.

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member to indicate the number of petitions in his hand and to file them with the Clerk. They all appear to deal with the security legislation. They all appear to have the object of asking for public hearings on the Bill. The Hon. Member may have the intention to consume a considerable amount of the time of the House on this matter. In the interest of saving time, which I am sure is his concern as it is everyone else's, I invite him simply to indicate the number of petitions he has and to file them. Is the Hon. Member prepared to do so?

Mr. Deans: No. Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am rather puzzled by your request. I am assuming that you are asking the Member if he would care to do that. I can appreciate, as you do, that within the rules he is entitled, in fact honour bound, to present petitions in one of two ways. He can present them, as you have indicated, by filing them with the Clerk. However, he can also rise in his place and present the petitions orally from his place in the House of Commons. He has the choice. It is not the choice of anyone else; it is his choice which way he chooses to present the petitions. I am sure Your Honour is not suggesting to him that he must accede to a request to do it in either of the two ways. He is entitled to do it either way he pleases.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point. It is true that you also have the responsibility of making sure that there is order in the House. I submit very respectfully that it is the duty of the Speaker to make sure that no one wastes the time of the House and makes a joke out of Parliament the way the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is trying to do now.

Standing Order 71(1) reads:

> A petition to the House may be presented by a Member at any time during the sitting of the House by filing the same with the Clerk of the House.

Of course the Hon. Member has this option. However, since he seems to prefer to delay, obstruct and waste the time of the House, he takes advantages of the paragraph to read the same type of petition, to use the time of the House and to prevent us from reaching Orders of the Day and debating a most important Bill. There are a lot of people here in the galleries who are witnessing this childish tactic and lack of respect for Parliament. There are even more people watching on television the dilatory tactics of the NDP on this legislation.

We have spent months debating this Bill on second reading. We have spent weeks debating this Bill clause by clause in committee. We are now willing to devote a reasonable length of time to debate this Bill at its final stages. The NDP have chosen to obstruct. The way that they have done it this morning and are trying to do it now is simply unacceptable and disrespectful of Parliament. I submit that you are absolutely right, Mr. Speaker, to intervene at this stage, to plead for order of the House, and to assume your responsibilities and ask that the Hon. Member do the honourable thing, and that is table his petitions according to Standing Order 71(1).

Mr. Deans: Point of Order.

Mr. Speaker: I will cite to the House Citation 339 of Beauchesne:

> While a member may, if he desires, present a petition in his place in the House during routine proceedings and before the introduction of Bills, the general practice is to present petitions by filing the same with the Clerk of the House.

That is the general practice. It has been the general practice of the House. At this stage I am inviting the Hon. Member to file the remaining petitions with the Clerk of the House.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, what was the citation to which you referred? I have Beauchesne's Citation 339 in front of me. It does not relate to petitions.

Mr. Speaker: I am citing from the Fourth Edition of Beauchesne.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you would be kind enough to refer me to the section in the Fifth Edition of Beauchesne in order that I can follow it. I do not have the Fourth Edition.

Mr. Pinard: It is on the Table.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is under no obligation to cite another edition. The Chair is citing the Fourth Edition of Beauchesne, Citation 339, page 259, which is a practice observed in the House for a long time. In the circumstances, the Chair is calling Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order.

Mr. Hovdebo: Point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member for Burnaby to resume his seat.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member for Burnaby to resume his seat.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order. I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Heap: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the Hon. Member on points of order and I have heard his House Leader on points of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): This is a new point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear him for the last time on a point of order relating to this matter.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, thank you for letting me present the point of order. I cite Beauchesne's Citation 692 which refers to petitions. Citation 692 has in fact superseded Beauchesne's Citation 339 which was referred to by the Speaker previously. Beauchesne's Citation 692 is different in substance from Citation 339 and reads as follows:

> While a Member may, if he desires, present a petition from his place in the House during Routine Proceedings and before the Introduction of Bills, he may also present his petition by filing it with the Clerk of the House.

I emphasize "may". Mr. Speaker, that is fundamentally different from the citation which the Speaker referred to previously, that is, Citation 339 which refers to some alleged general practice which clearly had fallen into disuse.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member cannot reflect on a ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Deans: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Standing Orders have not changed—

Mr. Deans: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain resume his seat, please?

Mr. Deans: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please resume his seat? The Standing Orders of the House of Commons have not changed in this matter since the Fourth and Fifth Editions of Beauchesne's.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): They have so. It reads differently.

Mr. Speaker: The Standing Orders of the House of Commons have not changed on this matter since the Fourth and Fifth Editions of Beauchesne's.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Beauchesne's has changed.

Mr. Speaker: The fact remains that the wording may have changed a little bit. In the circumstances there is still an obligation on the Chair to preserve the orderly conduct of House business. In the circumstances, the Chair now calls for introduction of Bills.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

VISIBLE MINORITIES

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, if the House gives its consent and without debate, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Verdun-Saint Paul (Mr. Savard), that the second report of the Special Committee on Visible Minorities presented to the House earlier this day be concurred in.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has consulted with us with respect to what is in essence an extension of the life of the Committee on Visible Minorities until the end of June or until the next election, whichever should occur first. Naturally we would not want to stand in the way of that kind of motion. Therefore, we give unanimous consent.

Motion agreed to.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DEANS—BEAUCHESNE'S FOURTH AND FIFTH EDITIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I rise with some trepidation, but I rise nevertheless to ask you to consider a matter that I think is of vital importance for the orderly conduct of the House of Commons.

I draw to your attention, Sir, the Fifth Edition of Beauchesne. In the Preface we find the following:

Twenty years have now lapsed since Arthur Beauchesne published his Fourth Edition. With the extensive amendments to the Standing Orders of the House of Commons in 1968, the procedural advice offered by his book soon became outdated. In this regard, we decided to update and revise Beauchesne's work.

You are aware, Sir, as I am that the Fifth Edition of Beauchesne was written in 1978, which would now make it some six years old. That means it is 26 years since the Fourth Edition of Beauchesne's was written. It was written to reflect both the Standing Orders and the practices of the time preceding 26 years ago.

In the Fifth Edition of Beauchesne, written some 20 years later, changes were made. It has been the practice in this House, at least since 1980, to refer, when making rulings or when providing background for rulings, to the Fifth Edition of Beauchesne the reason being that the Fifth Edition dealt with until now, and continues to deal with, the most up to date Standing Orders and procedures.

I find it passing strange that on this occasion we should make use of an edition of Beauchesne which is clearly out of date and which has fallen into disuse I would ask, Mr. Speaker, without questioning the motive or without in any way questioning the right of the Speaker to make rulings, that the Speaker review the proceedings which brought about the reference to the Fourth Edition of Beauchesne and note the difference in interpretation contained in the Fourth Edition from that contained in the Fifth Edition. In addition, I ask that you recognize that under normal practice in the House of Commons reference has been only to the Fifth Edition, except in cases where there was no clear indication in the Fifth Edition of the matter which was in dispute before the House, and that we get an understanding as to which edition of Beauchesne we are supposed to use for reference purposes.

Concerning the House Leader for the Government and his participation in the proceedings, I would urge upon you to consider that he took more time to make his argument against what we were doing than we took in doing what we were doing.

Mr. Evans: Nonsense.

Mr. Deans: The fact that the Government is up-tight and the Table is giving bad advice to the Chair ought not to put the Chair in an embarrassing position.

Mr. Speaker: In reply to the Hon. Member, the Chair would state that we have changed neither the Standing Orders nor the practice relating—

Mr. Deans: We have changed the book.

Mr. Speaker: We have not changed as far as petitions are concerned. We often use earlier editions of procedural manuals, including Bourinot published in 1916. As far as the Chair is concerned, the practice relating to petitions in this House has not changed in the period between the Fourth and the Fifth Editions of Beauchesne.

The Chair quoted the Fourth Edition of Beauchesne, being, in the opinion of the Chair, a more careful and considered statement of the practice of the House and more relevant to the issue before us.

In the circumstances, the Chair has made a decision regarding the presentation of petitions and procedures that, in the judgment of the Chair, bordered upon a threat to the orderly conduct of the business of this House.

Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Robinson) (Burnaby).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned at one o'clock I was pointing out that Canadians knew very little about the activities of the security service until the then Corporal Samson of the Security Section of the RCMP was involved in an attempted bombing during which he injured himself. When he was brought to trial he blurted out that what he had done was something that was done quite frequently by the security service in conducting its operations.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In the past I have drawn to the attention of the Chair that report stage debate or even third reading debate, when there have been no amendments put in committee which are being changed by the Government or when there are no notices of amendments on the Order Paper, starts within 48 hours after the presentation of the Chairman's report. However, there is no proper printed record of the evidence as put forward before the committee, of the discussions which took place therein, available to Hon. Members of the House. If there is one thing which has to be done, if committee work is to mean anything, it is that Hon. Members have the full evidence of what went on before the committee.

The Chair has allowed the debate to start and, with the greatest respect, the Chair is responsible for the administration and the services to Members. It is the Chair's responsibility to ensure, through the administration, that all Hon. Members of the House have copies of the printed evidence of any committee hearing which forms part of a chairman's report. Unless that is done it is an abuse, and I say a transgression, of the privileges of Hon. Members of the House.

As a matter of fact, upon reflection, I would think that I am speaking more on a point of privilege than on a point of order because I am prevented from participating in this debate as are all Hon. Members unless they happen to be the chairman of the committee who has a copy of the rough "blues" of the evidence as taken before the committee. Therefore, we cannot do our work properly. I do not know what went on in that committee. Even the press does not know what went on in that committee. Therefore, I suggest that it is improper at this stage to take part in this debate without the administration of the House bringing forward the record of the evidence before the committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair has well received the point made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and appreciates it. Of course, the Chair is in no position at this stage to ascertain whether the allegation is true or false. The Chair has every intention of investigating it. Debate at the present time is continuing, and while it continues the Chair will take the matter under advisement and report as quickly as possible.

Mr. Lambert: I should not question the Chair—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member must have an additional point of order. On an additional point of order, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, the additional point is that if this is an abuse of privileges and the debate continues while a routine administrative inquiry, shall we say, is made, then that is a further abuse of the privilege of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It should be abundantly apparent to the Hon. Member that the Chair at the present time has no way of telling whether his allegations are true or false. When a debate such as this is continuing, there is no way that the Chair can stop debate in order to find out whether what the Member said is true or false. The matter will be taken under advisement and we will let the House know as quickly as possible what has been found out by the Chair.

Security Intelligence Service

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, following the testimony given by Corporal Samson, a large number of questions were directed by all Parties in the House to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), questions which they were unable to answer. This led to the appointment of the McDonald Commission. The commission took four years to travel across the country and take evidence from scores of people. It cost the people of Canada several million dollars. It found, and so reported, that members of the security service had been guilty of wrongdoing and breaking the law. There has been instances of barn burning, break and entry, theft of dynamite, opening of mail, and theft of a membership list of a legitimate political Party, the Parti Québécois.

I would just like to discuss that for a moment. I am opposed to separatism, whether it be in Alberta, Quebec or any other province. As long as we live in a democratic society, people will have the right to advocate separatism or anything else. What happened is that that Party, which believed in separatism, won an election, but not because of separatism. It held a very soft referendum which could not carry. According to the polls, it is now facing virtual extinction. The democratic process is working very well. Is there any reason for the security service or anyone else having the right to steal the membership list of any political Party? That is what was done.

This Bill legitimizes and makes legal all kinds of violations of the law which took place before the McDonald Commission held its hearings, violations which were planned at the highest level of the security service. They were probably—at least I hope so—hidden from the Ministers who were then in office. They are now condoned and even made acceptable and legal by the Bill.

I indicated when I began my remarks that I accepted the reality that Canada like any other country must have a security service. However, the powers given to a security service should be those which are necessary to meet the real security needs of the country. There need to be safeguards in the legislation to reduce and if necessary to permit the redress of any abuses of these powers.

It is being implied, because we are opposing this Bill, that somehow we are all alone, that somehow we are wrong and that we are just a bunch of kooks. As I indicated earlier, a host of organizations, churches, community groups, the attorneys general of the provinces and civil liberties associations have pointed out what is wrong with the Bill as it is today. The Canadian Civil Liberties Association believes that the powers the Bill would create are excessive and that the safeguards which it would adopt are inadequate. It pointed out that there was little or no attempt to gear the investigative response to the magnitude of the threat, and that virtually anything which falls within the wide definitions could justify virtually any surveillance techniques. It went on to indicate:

> Under Bill C-157, the new security and intelligence agency will have far too much intrusive snooping power—electronic bugging, surreptitious searches, mail opening, and invasion of confidential records.
> In common with the Official Secrets Act and the 1975 mandate, Bill C-157 would permit such intrusive surveillance techniques to be used for "activities directed toward" certain types of security related misconduct.

What is the scope of these words? Mr. Borovoy, general counsel to the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, indicated just yesterday that Canadians who raise money for the rebels in El Salvador, South Africa or Afghanistan could find their conversations bugged and homes surreptitiously searched under Canada's proposed federal security legislation. We could add to that list. I am sure some of the activities of the Sikh communities in Canada in opposition to recent happenings in India could be misinterpreted by our security service. It has demonstated again and again little sophistication or real understanding of legitimate protest movements. A group of Canadians of Jewish descent who support the Government of Israel or a group of Canadians of Lebanese descent who support some of the activities in Lebanon could be included in this list.

In my remaining time I should like to point out to the Minister that the Canadian Civil Liberties Association put before the committee which dealt with the Bill 21 concrete proposals or amendments that it thought the Bill would need before it would be acceptable. As far as I know, not one of those was accepted by the Minister. As usual, he demonstrated his completely slavish, unthinking support of the bureaucrats in his Department. For that reason I have no hesitation in opposing this Bill.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Party apparently supports this Bill. It is not willing to put up speakers. In fact, there are very few Members of that Party here to debate or to listen. In view of the long debate on the two Bills, Bill C-157 and this Bill, this debate is particularly important. Those of us who were not involved in the committee structure appreciate the opportunity to put this Bill in its historical perspective. I therefore ask your indulgence for a moment.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) just said that the Progressive Conservative Party supports this Bill. She knows well that we have had speakers up since eleven o'clock this morning. She also knows that we voted against every part of this Bill in committee. For her to continue saying this is a flagrant disregard of the truth. That should be considered a question of privilege of all Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I would very much like to, but I am afraid I do not, consider it a question of privilege. Rather, it is a point of debate. The point has been made.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope that the Hon. Member who just spoke will see that the Conservative Members will speak to these points.

Mr. Fraser: Where were you this morning?

Ms. Mitchell: Only one Member of our Party is allowed to sit on the Justice Committee which considered this Bill. The rest of us would like to hear what points the Progressive Conservatives wish to make. I do not know because—

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member continues to ask where the Conservative Party is on this. Apparently she was not here this morning and has had no reports from the committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Once again that is not a point of order but a point of debate.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Surely the point is that the Tories have the right to speak this afternoon and they are not putting up any speakers. For them to suggest that somehow the proceedings—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It is entirely within the rights of any Member to speak or to stay silent as he or she wishes.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I think your remarks indicate that the Progressive Conservatives have chosen not to speak. I would point out to the previous speaker that I was in the Chamber this morning. I did not hear any of the speakers seriously state their objections.

Mr. Fraser: I dealt with all the amendments, Margaret. Get the cotton out of your ears.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I would like to summarize the historical context which led up to the present irresponsible and deplorable Bill. It is really important that we look at the history of RCMP wrongdoings, the McDonald Commission recommendations, and Bill C-157, which was even worse than the present Bill, Bill C-9.

In 1976, the RCMP criminal wrongdoings in Quebec became a matter of national concern. These were documented in 1977 by the McDonald Commission which criticized severely the illegal acts undertaken by members of the security force of the RCMP. The McDonald Commission concluded that there had been widespread institutional law breaking by members of the security service. Most Canadians had been really proud of our national police force, the RCMP. They were shocked at that time to learn of these undercover activities, which we never dreamed would ever take place in Canada.

Even worse is the fact that once the McDonald Commission had revealed these wrongdoings, the Government did not take disciplinary action except in a few minor cases. It appeared that the Government was protecting the RCMP and even condoning such acts. Canadian laws, which must apply to all Canadians, including members of the RCMP, were ignored.

The McDonald Commission recommended that a civilian security service be established. However, it was clear that it did not intend a security service similar to that proposed in Bill C-9. I am sure the commission would be very concerned that Bill C-9 proposes a private spy agency which can do almost anything. It will have inadequate safeguards with respect to oversight. There will be no control over its powers.

The first attempt by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) was a very negative attempt to do something about a separate security service. That was Bill C-157, which was totally inadequate. It was a complete embarrassment to the Government and should have been to that Minister. I do not see why he was not forced to resign. The Minister did not bring this back to Parliament. He allowed the Senate to revise it. The Senate Liberal appointees disregarded much of what was in that Bill and went back to the McDonald Commission recommendations.

In developing both Bills, the Government completely disregarded the reports and criticisms of experts in the whole field of civil liberties, as mentioned repeatedly by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Bill C-9 gives sweeping powers to interfere in civil liberties. It lacks proper oversight and accountability. We strongly object to the establishment of such a new civilian spy agency which has special powers to open mail, wiretap, and make surreptious entry into homes and offices of Canadians, even those who have not broken the law. The proposed agency will have the power to use confidential personal information, government records, doctor's records and so on. As my colleague said this morning, the only exemption will be Stats Canada.

I am opposed to this Bill personally as well as in my capacity as a member of the New Democratic Party. I am opposed as a professional social worker as well as a Member of Parliament. I wish to take a moment to give some examples from this profession. The application of this Bill respecting the security police service such as this Bill proposes is completely in conflict with professional ethics and the democratic concepts of confidentiality as espoused by the Canadian Association of Social Workers and by professional social workers.

All too often poor people are victims of government institutions. Many times they feel intimidated and not protected in their rights. However, this Bill will go much further. Innocent people, particularly those registered with social service agencies because they are required to seek social assistance, who have the guts and the courage to oppose some of what they are experiencing, those who fight for welfare rights, for example, are likely to be photographed, if they are not already, by the RCMP. They will likely be victimized even more as a result of this Bill.

We know that unemployed people who are on social assistance and who, for example, are involved in protesting poverty, unemployment and the cutbacks that are being experienced, particularly in British Columbia, are likely to be suspect. If they organize welfare rights groups and advocacy groups and become more militant in demanding decent incomes, their activities are likely to be documented. If they dared to question the reasons for poverty, reasons which definitely involve the Government, and perhaps even use violent language, they will indeed be suspect even further. If they become militant enough to get involved in civil disobedience as a form of protest against injustices, we know that their activities will be documented.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but her time has expired.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if you could report to the House whether or not your investigation concerning the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has been completed and whether or not the transcripts are available to Members of the House. I was not a member of the committee, and in preparing my notes and thoughts for the debate, the transcripts would certainly be helpful to me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. Order. The Chair has taken the necessary steps to verify the question. The initial indications may be that the material is available. We must wait a few more minutes for verification before I can make a ruling on that point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Two members of the New Democratic Party have now been heard. We would certainly welcome the participation of members of the Conservative Party in this debate if they wish to rise at this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair has already indicated that it is entirely up to the individual Members to decide whether or not they wish to speak. Is there anyone else who wishes to participate in the debate?

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, if the Tories are really serious about their opposition to this Bill, I think that they should be making the public aware of their position. I am the third member of the New Democratic Party in a row who has risen to make a speech. Although we welcome the opportunity to get our point across, we would like to make this a serious debate by having someone from the Government and someone from the Opposition make their views on this Bill known.

The foundation of the Canadian judicial system is the rule of law. The bottom line of this system is that the law must apply to all Canadians, whether or not they are members of a security service. I consider myself to be a layman in the area addressed by this particular piece of legislation, so my point of view is really the point of view of a layman. Perhaps that view from the street is the approach we need to take when dealing with this particular legislation.

The first concern of most citizens is that we protect ourselves from an insurrection. When hearing of insurrections in other parts of the world, many of us have said that such a thing could not happen in Canada. I spent a number of years living in an African country that had been through a civil war and a couple of coups. I must say that the people who lived in that country had the tendency to say: "It cannot happen here". But it did happen there and it can happen here. In fact, it happened in that particular country more than once.

The country to which I just referred considered itself to be a democracy. Democracy can be undermined by the very institutions which are intended to protect it. Therefore, it becomes exceedingly important that we as parliamentarians control the forces that are necessary to protect our democracy. If we do not make the kind of laws that will protect our democracy, not only from without but from within, we will be entering into an unacceptable situation. We must carefully structure the security service of which we are speaking today in such a way that it will protect us not only from insurrection from outside the country but also from the kind of tyranny which is possible from within the country.

I do not think anyone disputes the need to be watchful. However, we must be sure that the structure we put in place does not itself create the circumstances under which there may be a possible insurgence. Over thousands of years, history has told us that there is such a danger. For instance, I wonder if the German SS did not begin as a secret service which was considered necessary and in fact good. I know that people say that Germany was a fascist country at the time but it did not start out that way. In 1933, Hitler was elected and later became a dictator. Germany was a democracy in 1933.

Power can very easily be institutionalized. The secret service or the security force can become a tyrant that thinks what it does is right and thinks that it has the power to do whatever it wishes. Back a few years ago, we were worried about the involvement of the RCMP security force in a number of criminal wrongdoings. It seems that the McDonald Commission report put forward some recommendations to solve the problem for us. However, the problem was not solved.

After the McDonald Commission report, the Government brought forward Bill C-157, a Bill which was intended to put in place a civilian security force which would not have the powers we thought the RCMP had and which would not do the kind of things that the RCMP had been doing. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), has said, that Bill was so bad that even the most lamb-like Liberal was aghast. The Bill died after receiving a devastating critique from the committee in the other place.

The Government then brought forward Bill C-9, a Bill which might possibly be a little bit better than Bill C-157. However, it still gives police state powers to the civilian security force. Under those circumstances, we are better off with the RCMP because the RCMP has a reputation across the country and has a contact with the public that a civilian force will never have. Consequently, it operates as a police force which is widely respected and loved across the country. If we are going to put into the hands of the civilian force powers which are unacceptable, without control or oversight by Parliament, then we are much better off with the RCMP security force. That is not to say that a civilian force is not what we really need, but at least under the old structure we were dealing with a group about which we knew.

When we look at the Bill, we must measure it against an objective standard. That standard can be explained in two very simple statements: First, does the Bill protect the individual rights and liberties of citizens? Second, in the process of operation, does the Bill have some kind of accountability to the political forces of this country—to the Parliament of Canada? In both cases, unfortunately, we must say no.

Bill C-9 was introduced in the House last January and has been discussed off and on since that time. In the next week, as we discuss the Bill we must look at the provisions in the Bill which are unacceptable. We must either eliminate them, or entirely eliminate the Bill. Consequently, our position is that we will not support the Bill as it stands. We will support a civilian force if there are safeguards in the Bill which we think are necessary and, incidentally, which many groups of people across Canada think are necessary. These are groups which have spent a lot more time thinking about and discussing this particular kind of protection than we have in this House.

In conclusion, I would say that it is very necessary that any threat to the security of Canada be balanced with threats to the civil liberties of the citizens of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): For continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) takes the floor, I wonder if there might be a Conservative Member who wishes to take her place. There have been four speakers from the New Democratic Party and we would welcome the intervention of at least one member of the Official Opposition on this important Bill. Perhaps, they are going to let it slide through the House the way they did in committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): On that point of order, which is not a point of order, it is entirely up to Members to decide whether they want to debate that point. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) on a point of order.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, on that point of order, you will note that we are dealing with the first motion of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) which would delete the title of the Bill. They are blocking our right to discuss Clause 2 which deals with definitions; Clause 12 which deals with powers; Clause 16 which deals with the collection of information; Clause 21 which deals with warrants; Clause 30 which deals with the Inspector General; Clause 34—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. That also is a point of debate. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have watched the debate on Bill C-9 for the last number of months with some concern. As well, I am very concerned with the way in which the Government is pushing the legislation through and the extreme reluctance which it has shown in accepting the necessary amendments to curb the unprecedented powers which would be given to the security service if Bill C-9 is passed.

[Translation]

The powers given the Canadian Security Intelligence Service in this legislation are too vast and are unprecedented in our system. The Government will have access to all governmental and private documents, excepting the data of Statistics Canada. For instance, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service will, if this Bill is adopted, be able to enter the offices of doctors, lawyers, priests and ministers, psychologists and private homes. A judge may issue a warrant authorizing the persons to whom it is directed, and I am quoting from the Bill:

(a) to enter any place or open or obtain access to any thing;

(b) to search for, remove or return, or examine, take extracts from or make copies of or record in any other manner the information, record, document or thing; or

(c) to install, maintain or remove any thing.

Perhaps I may note that among all these measures, there is a lack of any sense of proportion.

A person applying for a warrant for instance, to intercept and open mail or install bugging devices, is not obliged to establish the probability that a crime will be committed or the threat of a crime or a real or serious threat to the security of Canada!

Another serious shortcoming of Bill C-9 is the lack of any process of accountability.

The MacDonald Commission proposed that the Service's activities should be controlled by a parliamentary committee. The Bill before the House today gives the appearance of such controls but the powers granted to the parliamentary committee are inadequate. The proposed committee will have no right of access to Cabinet documents. As a result, it will be unable to judge whether or not activities undertaken by the Service are indeed necessary. The Government can always say that the committee does not have the necessary information to understand why interception procedures were carried out.

In other countries, including countries with security problems that are far worse than ours, these parliamentary committees do exist. In the United States and West Germany, parliamentary committees oversee security services, and have access to all information in the possession of these services.

[English]

The powers proposed in Bill C-9 are sweeping and unprecedented. Access to all private and government records, with the exception of the census documents of Statistics Canada, is a very modest amendment which was accepted. It was accepted probably for the reason that census records would not be very useful for security purposes. What would be useful are medical and psychological records, income tax returns, legal files, journalists' notes—the security service could break into any place, home, or doctor's office with a warrant.

The procedures for safeguarding the abuse of warrants are not adequate.

There were over 800 applications last year and not one rejection for a search warrant. The applications allowed the opening of first-class mail.

Despite the McDonald Commission's recommendation that these powers not be used against Canadians who are not engaged in espionage or terrorism, this recommendation was not accepted. The existing security service does not have those powers. When it acted as if it had those powers, it acted illegally. We have the situation that, instead of the Government bringing the security service into line with what is lawful, what it wants to do is to make lawful a whole lot of things which are simply immoral, currently unlawful and contrary to what decent Canadians think we should have as principles for the operation of our security service.

One of the recommendations made by the Pitfield committee, which was rejected by the Government, was that before granting a warrant for intrusive powers, the security service would have to convince a judge that the invasion of privacy was outweighed by the nature of the material to be gained. In other words, there would have to be some proportion. Intrusive measures could only be used for a very serious threat. It could not be used idly. It could not be used for all kinds of activities such as fishing trips and so on which are permitted in Bill C-9 as it is currently drafted.

A judge can authorize the interception of any communication or the obtaining of any information, record, document or thing. The security service may enter any place or open or obtain access to anything; may search for, remove or return, or examine, take extracts from or make copies of or record in any other manner the information; may install, maintain or remove anything. These are enormous powers. They are scandalous powers and totally unacceptable powers. Our Party has fought against these powers initially in the House and then in committee. Voluntary organizations have spoken out against them. Churches are speaking up. We all continue to receive mail from concerned citizens saying that these powers are excessive and that what we are going to end up with is a security service with powers which are totally inappropriate for the task at hand. The irony of it all is that this is a security service which is supposed to protect Canadians, to protect the values we stand for, and it is now to be given powers which will themselves undermine the very things we treasure about Canada, the freedoms we have and the high standard of civil liberties we enjoy in Canada and we want to see protected.

The provisions in Bill C-9 for controls through an Inspector General are really very weak indeed. The Inspector General would be appointed by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), so that does not bode very well. The Opposition would be consulted, but that does not necessarily mean there would be any acceptance of any of the advice given. The Inspector General would be bound by an oath of secrecy. In other words, this is a very internal appointment bound by secrecy and there is absolutely no manner of control over the operations of the security service through the Inspector General.

What we need to have is a parliamentary committee which would be given adequate access to information, with safeguards of course. This is indeed possible. Other countries have shown they can use parliamentary committees and have done so without any threats to their national security. I believe that is a reasonable level of control which we could expect from Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but her time has expired.

Ms. McDonald: Could I have unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to continue my remarks?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member has requested unanimous consent to continue her remarks. It would require the unanimous consent of all Members present in the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: I understand the Hon. Member was about to conclude her remarks, so if it is a matter not exceeding five more minutes, we agree. It is conditional on the fact that it should not exceed five more minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There would appear to be unanimous consent of the House to allow the Hon. Member up to five minutes to conclude her remarks.

Ms. McDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe I can conclude in less than five minutes.

[Translation]

Bill C-9 will mark a milestone in our history. For the first time in Canada, the mandate, powers and controls governing the operations of the new Service, with the conditions to which it would be subject, will be established through legislation. It is a laudable step, at least on paper. Unfortunately, the Government cannot be congratulated on the contents of this Bill. If measures to control the Service are inadequate, the principle of legislative controls will not suffice. Principle alone can do nothing. We must have both the principle of legislated controls and adequate measures in the Act.

[English]

This is a monstrous piece of legislation. It goes beyond all proportion. The controls for which we have argued and for which concerned citizens of this country have argued, are simply not there. It is very important that the Government listen and accept amendments. It should listen to the wisdom of people who are concerned and who know something about the issue and who are making these points constructively.

We have a number of amendments to bring to this legislation. We very much hope that the Government will accept these amendments. We cannot realistically expect the Government at this late date to change its mind. However, let us hope that, with the building of public concern, perhaps it will listen. It has certainly been very slow and unresponsive at committee stage, and I can only urge people in the community to speak up forcefully and try to stop this monstrous piece of legislation before it is too late.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Robinson) (Burnaby).

Mr. Dick: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick).

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, in looking at page 7 of the Order Paper for Tuesday, June 12, Motion No. 19, which is included in a number of motions listed, does not have the name of the mover behind it, which would be on the next page, page 8. I am wondering whether we could be informed as to who, in fact, is moving Motion No. 19? Or is it printed in error in the Order Paper?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair will take the point of order of the Hon. Member under advisement. Continuing debate.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, we are at the report stage of Bill C-9. I just want to take a few moments to indicate one aspect of the committee's work which is now being reported to the House. Motion No. 1 with respect to Bill C-9 before the House is a motion put forward by the NDP critic of the Department of Justice, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), that Clause 1 of Bill C-9 be deleted. I believe no further example need be shown of the rather destructive, negative, obstructionist point of view of members of the New Democratic Party in respect of this whole matter. After all, Clause 1 of the Bill is merely the title clause. I notice that there will be some discussion later, and perhaps a ruling from the Chair, as to whether or not that particular clause is in order. However, in any event I want to take advantage of the fact that Motion No. 1 is before us to indicate that one aspect of the committee's work has been a disappointment to me.

In committee, I believe a number of Hon. Members from all sides of the House were disturbed by the impression the public is receiving that this Bill is going to deal with an agency which is going to be all-inclusive and quite comprehensive in respect of security intelligence matters in this country. In actual fact, nothing could be further from the truth. Not only, of course, will this particular agency have jurisdiction in the security intelligence field, but within the Government itself there is authority, sometimes statutory, sometimes non-statutory and merely by Cabinet delegation for a number of different ministries, other agencies and other organizations within the Government to be involved also in the security intelligence-gathering field. This, basically, is the nature of my complaint.

The Department of National Defence, for instance, has some very large areas of jurisdiction respecting the gathering of intelligence. During the committee hearings I, for one, was instrumental in focusing the attention of the committee on some work being done by another agency within the Department of National Defence which has the jurisdiction to intercept, monitor and interpret long distance telephone calls within North America which happen to be sent over various microwave systems. As well, the Department of External Affairs is obviously quite heavily involved in security intelligence gathering. This is outside the country, but nevertheless they do it. One of the most important agencies for gathering interpreting security intelligence in the Government has not really been discussed in public, either before the Pitfield committee or before the House of Commons committee, that is, the work and functions of the Privy Council Office in respect of security intelligence gathering.

Having been a Solicitor General, I have reason to know that there have been occasions in the past when the right hand of Government in the security field did not know what the left hand was doing. On several occasions prior to 1979, the Solicitor General and the RCMP were bypassed as far as certain security intelligence was concerned. The repository for this information and the action which was initiated to counter certain unfriendly acts within Canada by other nations was solely and exclusively the Privy Council Office. Over the last 15 or 20 years there have been occasions when very important policy decisions in the security field were taken strictly at the behest and initiative of officials in the Privy Council Office. The Solicitor General of the day—not me but my predecessors—knew absolutely nothing about the circumstances or the action taken.

The jurisdiction of the Department of External Affairs is obvious when it concerns the expulsion of diplomats and others, citizens of other countries, who engage in espionage activities in this country. On occasion there have been very real missteps taken regarding communications and information in the hands of the security service of the RCMP and the Department of External Affairs. I would go so far as to suggest that on occasion the wrong people have been expelled from this country by the Department of External Affairs because they misread signals, information or communications from the security service of the RCMP.

Why do I make this allegation before you today, Sir? The people of this country, if they have been studying what has been going on concerning this Bill, will believe that almost all the security intelligence gathering by the federal Government in this country will be centered in this particular agency. A lot of people are being reassured these days, especially by government spokesmen, that the monitoring, auditing and inspection powers of, first, the Inspector General and, second, the review committee under this Act, will result in a comprehensive review and inspection by independent people in respect of activities by the Canadian Government and its officials in the gathering of security intelligence. My point, and I make the same point in committee on at least one occasion, is that this is simply not true. If we really wanted to have an independent monitoring group, such as the review committee which will have the jurisdiction not only to look at the whole security intelligence-gathering apparatus of the Government but also to correlate it, then I suggest that this Bill fails miserably in that attempt. By the Minister's own admission, indeed his insistence in committee, the review committee will only have the jurisdiction to review the activities of the servants of the agency and the policy of the Government in respect of the agency.

My plea to you on the first motion, because I do not know where else we are going to have the opportunity to talk about it, is simply this. If this Government does not do it, another government will have to do it, otherwise we are going to get into the same mess that led to the Mackenzie Commission and the McDonald Commission. Future governments are going to continue to get into this same mess, simply because there is no area of correlation in this whole matter. The only group which correlates information at the moment is the Prime Minister's Cabinet Commission on Security and Intelligence. Believe it or not, and I believe it, that committee, chaired by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), did not meet for three and a half years prior to 1979. That same situation could happen again. My plea to the House, through you, Mr. Speaker, is to make sure that the provisions of this Bill are widened so that all of the accounting, monitoring, auditing, inspecting and reporting provisions of the review committee are widened in turn so that these other areas of security intelligence gathering are included in its jurisdiction and purview.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. Following on the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), the Chair has had an opportunity to look at the Order Paper. The point was raised in connection with Motion No. 19 that the name of the mover of the motion was not printed on the Order Paper. However, on looking at page VIII, I find that the version in the right hand column in the French language clearly indicates that the motion is moved by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Obviously the error on the part of the printers in not putting the name of the mover of Motion No. 19 in the English version will be corrected in tomorrow's edition.

For continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege to speak on Motion No. 1 amending Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto. The short title of the Bill is the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act. It would be fairly safe to say that in western Canada the role of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has been a bit different from the role they have played in the rest of Canada, and so has the history of Security. For the edification of the House I will mention that the Northwest Mounted Police Force started in Swan River, some 110 miles northwest of Dauphin, which is now a part of my riding. In the prairie provinces, and specifically in Manitoba, we do not have a provincial police force. That little thumbnail sketch perhaps indicates some of the differences that Members from the west may bring to bear in this discussion.

● (1640)

In recounting this history and in looking at some of the proposals which our Party has made, it is important to consider the fact that we have called for public hearings on this Bill, a Bill which would have such widespread implications. The reason I gave the thumbnail sketch is that as far as the west is concerned, this Bill would have profound implications in terms of Canadian security. It would be important to have such hearings, as the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has stated many times before.

I will draw an analogy. I sat on the Special Parliamentary Committee on the Participation of Visible Minorities in Canadian society. As we travelled across Canada we discovered that all the ethno-cultural and various race relations groups appreciated the opportunity to present their briefs and concerns to the special committee of Parliament. That first-hand experience which I gained very recently on a very important issue in Canadian society gives me an experiential feeling as to the value that having such hearings would bring to Bill C-9 which is under discussion.

We in the New Democratic Party have a number of concerns, as has been mentioned. The defintion of the "threats to the security" of Canada in Clause 2 gives us great concern. We feel that this definition should be significantly narrowed in scope so as to ensure that this new service does not engage in surveillance of what could be lawful dissenting activity. We have had good representations. I listened to some of the debate earlier this day. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), expressed the concerns that various churches have raised with regard to subparagraphs (c) and (d). The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) of the Conservative Party was very concerned that if he spoke to the Western Canadian Concept party he may become a target of surveillance. I will not comment on whether he should be a target of surveillance. He expressed that concern very cogently in his representations.

We feel that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police should have a mandate to deal with domestic surveillance according to the criminal standard, as is the case in the United States. This would of course involve the deletion of subparagraphs (c) and (d) in the proposed mandate of this proposed agency. We are very concerned about this very broad, general, vague and threatening defintion of the threats to the security of Canada as contained in Clause 2.

One of the elements of concern which we have expresed has been in conjunction with the criteria for the various security assessments. In 1982, some 75,000 people in the federal Public Service had to get security clearance. There is not an adequate set of criteria to examine the security assessments which it is proposed should be conducted by this new civilian security service. We feel that any criteria which may be imposed should be put in a statute or that there should be some sort of regulation which would be made public and gazetted. In that way the public would have an opportunity to examine the criteria. In addition to that, the agency should be subject to some sort of review by a parliamentary oversight committee. We feel that these criteria for security assessments must be looked at very carefully. Furthermore, we feel that the security assessments should be made either by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or by a branch of the Public Service Commission, as was recommended by the McDonald Commission.

In addition, we are concerned about some of the broad implications of this Bill. Clause 16 of this Bill confers a new and unprecedented power on this new civilian security service which would target individuals who, we feel, pose no threat to the security of Canada. We feel that this clause would include political refugees, professors who are visiting lecturers at universities or even business or labour leaders. This power does not exist at present and we feel there is no justification for including it in the statutes at this time. I would remind Members of the House that the Canadian Association of University Teachers expressed itself on this particular matter. It has expressed concern that the security force may impinge on the activities of any visiting foreign professor or any foreign student at a Canadian university. We deinitely want to underline that particular concern.

Finally, I would like to discuss the review process. In his submission before the McDonald Commission, the Leader of the New Democratic Party said that there should be a small parliamentary oversight committee. The suggestion was made that this parliamentary oversight committee could be modelled after the American congressional oversight committee. That structure seems to be effective in monitoring these types of activities.

Given these considerations, we feel that our proposal for a series of public hearings across Canada is justified. We think that the proposal has merit since there is going to be such a great impact on the public. We feel that people deserve an opportunity to express their concerns, an opportunity to voice how they feel and an opportunity to give their suggestions to see what needs to be done in this area.

I notice, Sir, that you are nodding your head after signalling that my time has expired. I thank Hon. Members of the House of Commons for giving me this chance to express my concerns on Bill C-9.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, an hour and twenty minutes ago a point of order was raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). The Speaker said he was doing a quick search of the premises to find out whether, at report stage, the committee minutes giving the evidence were available. There was some doubt as to whether or not debate could continue when the evidence itself was not in printed form and available to all Members, because all Members do not serve on the committee. The time of one hour and 20 minutes is more than sufficient. I walked downstairs to General Distribution a few moments ago—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the Hon. Member speaking on a point of order or making a contribution to the debate? The Chair would like to know.

Mr. Dick: I was rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognized the Hon. Member for debate.

Mr. Dick: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Can the Chair advise us whether or not it is in a position, an hour and 20 minutes afterwards, to make a ruling?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I am aware of the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West but the Chair is not in a position at this time to make a ruling on that point. It is my understanding that a ruling may not be available before the end of debate today. It certainly will be in the Speaker's hands by tomorrow.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I then reserve my position possibly to address additional arguments to Mr. Speaker. I am aware of additional arguments. I raised the matter initially. I find frankly that the whole situation is unsatisfactory.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair makes good note of the Hon. Member's comments. The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew Carleton (Mr. Dick) is rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Dick: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is unreasonable to take an hour and 20 minutes to find out whether something has been printed. I went to General Distribution, which is the place at which all things printed are dispersed, and I found out that the minutes of the three sittings, sitting No. 38 of June 7, sitting No. 39 of June 7, sitting No. 40 of June 7, and sitting No. 41 of June 8, 1984, have not been printed. The evidence is not available. There is some discussion as to whether the evidence may be in rough draft form. I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that if it is in rough draft form, it will appear in the language spoken in the committee. It will not be translated and, not being translated, it will not be acceptable in this House. Therefore, it is clear that the evidence given before the committee is not available and I cannot see how we can proceed.

An hour and twenty minutes is more than adequate. Could you make a ruling on that, Sir?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would not, of course, want to comment on the specifics of the Hon. Member's point at this time except to say that I accept as a fact the statement he has just made. But out of that there is still left the matter of preparing or writing and editing a ruling, and that is the matter pending at this time, as I understand it.

The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) is rising on the same point of order?

Mr. de Jong: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to reiterate what the two previous speakers, who brought up this point of order, have said about the Government's being remiss in introducing legislation when all the records are not available. I was not a member of the committee. I certainly want to participate in this debate. I wish to have the opportunity to review the records of the committee, the testimony, the questions and the reasoning why the Government is in favour of some clauses and against other clauses in order to prepare my submission. We certainly have not heard from any government Members. I am very anxious to know what their reasoning is. Without having the transcripts available to me, I cannot prepare myself in an intelligent way to participate in this debate. I would urge you, Sir, to ensure that those transcripts are made available to all Members as soon as possible.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I think there is an additional difficulty which has not yet been noted. The committee was sitting, in effect, morning, noon and night under very strict time guidelines. It has dealt with a very large number of clauses during the days for which proceedings are not yet printed. As I understand it, this would seriously impair the ability of Members to address the issues that arise adequately. As I indicated, there may very well be the raw proceedings. They have not been translated. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Gourde) was sleeping during much of the proceedings. I know he would want to have an opportunity to review those proceedings. I would hope that in the very, very near future we might have an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to have these very important minutes of the proceedings translated and properly transcribed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one or two observations with respect to the matter raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), a former Speaker of the House of Commons and a distinguished parliamentarian of long standing. He is held in high regard by all of us. He has made, I think, a very valid point of order with respect to the ability of this House to carry out its responsibilities and a matter of privilege to him to carry out his responsibilities as a Member of Parliament.

I simply want to lend my support to the position the Hon. Member for Edmonton West has taken, particularly in light of the fact that, as we will learn by reading the transcript, there was an unusual precedent established, which I do not accept, in the arbitrary ruling of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in which he unilaterally imposed time allocation on the deliberations and debate. In order for us to discuss this matter of such serious consequence to Canadians generally on the floor of the House of Commons we should not have closure. It underlines the fact that, under whatever guise—and I do not speak of the motivation of the Chairman, who is an honourable and distinguished Member of this House—closure under any name is regrettable. It is an attempt to thwart free and unfettered discussion on a Bill, particularly one relating to national security. This is unacceptable in a free and democratic society. These matters have occurred during the course of debate, and my colleague from Edmonton West has rightly demanded that we have in our possession all records so that we may address this subject in terms of the legislation itself and with respect to some of the amendments proposed by way of motion by members of both opposition Parties.

I do not want to take up any more time of the House except to say that I firmly and unequivocally support the very germane point raised by my colleague from Edmonton West. I hope this matter will be rectified before the debate resumes on this legislation sometime tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, it being 5 p.m. the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on the Order Paper.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RATE OF INCARCERATION OF NATIVE PERSONS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the rate of incarceration of native persons at six times the national average is to be condemned as a serious indictment of the criminal justice system; and

That the House urges the government to collaborate with other governments in Canada, native and other voluntary organizations in order to take constructive steps to reduce the rate of incarceration of native persons; and that such steps include (a) changes in police training and practice to reduce the frequency of charges (b) development of informal community-based responses to non-violent offences (c) commencement of work on the revival of customary law and practice in criminal justice matters.

She said: Mr. Speaker, the facts are that Canada is not a very violent or criminal society. We would wish for much less violence and much less criminality, but compared with many other countries, we are very fortunate. Yet we have a very high rate of incarceration, even though we do not have a high rate of crime in general or of violent and serious crime.

Canada's rate of incarceration is 134 per 100,000. Let us compare this with Britain and France, the two countries from which the majority of our population has come. Britain's rate of incarceration is 85.1 per 100,000 and France's is 66.7. If we go to the Netherlands, the rate goes down further, to 24.6, which is considerably lower than what we have in Canada. If we go to another Commonwealth country with a frontier and which is more like Canada, according to some people's thinking at least, Australia also has a much smaller rate of 67.4 per 100,000.

In the northern territories, the rates of incarceration are higher still. They are three to four times the Canadian average. In the Northwest Territories, the majority of inhabitants are native people. In the Yukon they are about a third of the population. It is the over-representation of native people, especially in our prisons, about which I want to talk. When we break down the rates for the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, we see that a far greater number of native peoples are being put in jail. In the Northwest Territories, the non-native population in jails is 195 per 100,000. In other words, it is higher than the Canadian average. However, the native rate is 836, or 6.2 times the rate for Canada as a whole. When we look at the Yukon, for non-natives it is 248, or roughly twice the Canadian average. For native peoples it is 873, or 6.5 times the Canadian average. These are shocking and disgraceful statistics.

There is a similar over-representation of native peoples in the provinces of Canada. However, I suggest that is no excuse for those of us in Parliament concerned with the territories, which fall under the responsibility of the Solicitor General's Department and the Department of Justice. Yes, it is disgraceful what is happening in the provinces too, but it does not get us off the hook. We have responsibilities and we should be acting to reduce these drastic statistics of over-representation.

Instead, what have we had from the Government? We have had excuses that in fact native peoples are very violent and that society has to respond by using prisons. Let me point out that these statistics themselves are an underestimate of the over-representation because there are no federal institutions or penitentiaries in the federal territories. Any person native or non-native who commits an offence for which the penalty is two years or more, in other words the most serious offenders, go to southern prisons and are not even counted in the statistics. When we talk about these figures that are more than six times the national average, we are talking about people who are in prison for less serious offences.

We hear statements about leniency of treatment from the Assistant Deputy Minister of the Department of Justice before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in response to the issue I have raised who said:

In the North great attempts are made, perhaps on a scale that outdoes that of any other place in Canada, to deal with crime in a non-prosecutorial mode.

What is he talking about? We have an enormous number of prosecutions. The Chief Superintendent of the RCMP in the Northwest Territories, Mr. Feagan, said at the same hearing:

From my experience as the commanding officer in Prince Edward Island and in Nova Scotia, I feel safe in saying that we tend to treat offenders in the territories more leniently, in particular with respect to minor criminal offences and regulatory offences.

What does he mean by "more leniently"? The incarceration rates for native peoples in the territories are eight times those in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Islands, eight times more severe. If he really means it when he says that this is more lenient treatment, he must have an idea that native peoples perhaps commit 10 times or 20 times more crimes and, because they are treated more leniently, they go to jail only six times or eight times more often. This is a disgraceful thing to suggest, yet that is the only logical conclusion we could reach from his statement about leniency.

Further, we obtain responses from the Ministers and their Departments about all the good intentions in terms of diversion programs. The facts are that we have higher proportions of northerners on probation, doing community service orders, paying fines and experiencing all these non-prison sentences. There are so-called diversion programs in place, but in fact the number of offences rises year by year. Informal fine option programs were started in the Yukon, and the Department of Justice put an end to them. On diversion itself, we get gobbledegook from the Department of Justice and the Department of the Solicitor General that diversion is being used. If that were so, the rates would be declining. I should like to quote from a letter which I received from the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). It reads:

> Specific information on the number of charges, convictions and prison sentences before and after the introduction of specific diversion methods are not available. While the common aim of crime prevention and diversion methods is to reduce crime, it is very difficult to show actual reduction in crime rates especially in the short term. Prison population normally fluctuates and this is caused by socio-economic and other conditions and not only as a result of law enforcement.

Or course, there are fluctuations, but there is a very simple way of dealing with them. In a diversion program we should look at the rates for the two or three years preceding, average them, and then look at the rates for the two or three years after the program has been introduced. If there is diversion, the rates will go down. If the rates are not going down, we do not have diversion.

I should like to refer to the following quotation from the Department of Justice:

> The existing data on diversion programs is sketchy and firm conclusions cannot be drawn as to the effectiveness of such initiatives in terms of reduced numbers of charges.

Utter nonsense. Diversion programs have not been given priority in Canada. They have not been serious.

[Translation]

The excuses of the two departments are pitiful. Either those diversion programs have worked out as expected, or they have not. If a diversion program works out, the number of people sentenced, condemned and jailed will go down. If there is no decrease in the statistics, we must conclude that the program has failed.

We can now understand very readily how it is that our jails contain six times as many native people as other Canadians.

First of all, the number of policemen per capita in the north is twice as high as in the south. Communities, particularly native people communities, are small. Everybody knows everybody else. Whenever an offence is committed, everybody knows who is responsible. The neighbours know the guilty party and so do the police. The police tell us that it is very easy to get a confession when they make an investigation. Indeed, native people are generally more honest than non-native people. Their culture encourages them to tell the truth. They have no idea that it is up to the police or the Crown to prove that a crime or an offence has been committed, that the accused does not have to admit anything. The police tell us that when they ask a native person if he has done something, he answers yes. According to their culture, that answer is not a confession but only a way of admitting what one has done while waiting for an investigation into the circumstances. However, in the non-native culture, the culture of the majority, it is nothing less than a confession, an admission of one's guilt. Property rights are not interpreted the same way in both cultures. In the culture of the majority, the emphasis is on individual rights, the rights of owners of private property. In the native culture, private property is less important. The land belonged to society as a whole. The sharing of property was more widely acknowledged, and that is a source of difficulties in enforcing the Criminal Code. Now then, there are more policemen in the north than in the south and communities are smaller, with the result that the number of crimes and offences reported to the police is much higher in the north than in the south of Canada. In major cities, most crimes and offences are not reported to the police. People tell us that it is a waste of time because the police will not find the criminal or because the police station is too far. Besides, they do not want to lose a day's work to testify in court. None of those excuses is valid in northern regions. Like everybody else, the police know who is responsible and that person admits his guilt. The police are there on the spot.

I have to point out that we have a veritable caste system in the enforcement of law, a system run by non-native people. Overwhelmingly, the judges, prosecutors and police are southerners of white European origin and not particularly familiar with native customs. We have the participation of native peoples largely as court workers and special constables. That means they are paid less, do not have full status, or are justices of the peace and not real judges. While we deplore this caste system, let me make very clear I am not arguing simply for the replacement of native people in the white southern system where we would have a native person sent to jail by a native judge with a native prosecutor. That is hardly the answer to the question.

The Ontario Native Council on Justice pointed out the broader social and economic questions involved. We must be mindful of these. If talks about a meaningful redistribution of income, wealth, economic opportunity and political power from those who have to those who have not. In other words, it concludes that there will be a change in the ratio of natives and non-natives inside the prisons when there is a fundamental change in their relationship outside. Yes, but let us not wait and do nothing about the criminal justice system while we are waiting for economic and social change. We must work to change the system. Clearly we must understand that broader social and economic context, but we must not wait for a hundred reforms to be made before we work on one, which is our responsibility, which we could be working on very directly.

What I propose is very simple, direct, frontal action. We do not need more conferences. A major conference was held on this subject, organized by the then Solicitor General in 1975 with participation from the territories and provinces. A whole list of recommendations came out of that conference. Some have been implemented, some have not. The ones that have been implemented tended to be those which make the system more heavy. Since that documentation of the problem, the problem has become worse. In the Yukon, the increase in the incarceration rate from 1972 to 1982 was in the order of 9 per cent. In the Northwest Territories, the increase in that same period was a disgraceful 57 per cent.

We have had a major conference and we have had proposals, but the problem seems to get worse. People are not monitoring the answers. They are not looking. They are not trying. They are using excuses. They are accepting excuses. My proposals are to begin with the premise that native people are not more criminal than anybody else. It is urgent that we get those figures down. Any figures that show a greater representation of native peoples in jail are an indictment of the system that shows that in the end there has been some discrimination. That is not to document where it occurs precisely along the way. Unless we believe that native people are more criminal, we cannot accept that they should be in our jails in those numbers.

The federal Government should work with the provincial and territorial governments to set up concrete plans to look at the figures, monitor them, publish the information yearly, change the methods of training of police officers, review the procedures, and monitor all this annually to see that the rates go down. We do not want a conference ten years hence to find that the rates have again gone up. It has to be looked at. It has to get into the system. People have to report. They have to be held accountable.

People make annual reports, but what is in them? What should be in the annual report is the rate of incarceration, the rate of charge and the rate of prosecution for that year compared to the previous year. If the area has not managed a diminution, you fire the staff, demote them or do something. There have to be implications for those involved in the system. They need some incentive to deal with the problem and not make pious speeches about how lenient they are and how many diversion programs there are, when there is no real leniency, not that is demonstrable, and no diversion programs.

I wonder what the response of the Government will be. If it is simply going to be more pious words about its intentions, if we are simply going to hear about all its good plans and how it is working on this, that is not enough. We have plenty in the Justice Committee. I have been receiving replies from people. They are not facing up to the real problem before us.

The over-representation of native peoples in our jails is an indictment of the criminal justice system. If the Government is serious about correcting this injustice, it will speak up and give its agreement. My motion before the House today is a motion. It states a principle. It gives direction to the Government. If the Government really wants to see this terrible over-representation of native peoples in our jails, it will welcome this motion and act on it constructively. Merely to talk the motion out with all kinds of other possibilities, fiddling with the statistics, blaming the provinces, talking about programs in place or stating that statistics are difficult to get, is not enough. We have plenty of years. Since the conference in 1975, nearly ten years have passed. We know what needs to be done. We do not need another conference. We do not need more time. Injustice is staring us in the face. We must act promptly and constructively. I ask Hon. Members to support my motion this afternoon.

• (1720)

Mr. Raymond Dupont (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak to the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), concerning the incarceration of native persons.

The rate of incarceration of native persons is, quite rightly, a matter of concern to the Government. This concern has led to a number of initiatives aimed at establishing why so many native persons are incarcerated. Measures are being taken that should lead to a drop in the incarceration rate.

The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood has emphasized three particular steps. Changes in police practice, informal community-based responses to non-violent offences and the revival of customary law and practice in criminal justice matters. I shall elaborate only on the last two points, since my hon. colleagues will probably be commenting on changes in police practice.

The concept of native government, in other words, a form of political autonomy for Canada's native peoples, is not a new one. Native peoples had their own governments before the Europeans arrived. Over the last ten years, native peoples have shown a renewed interest in controlling their own system of government, native peoples also had their own way of resolving conflicts. In some cases, the Indian nations had developed procedures for judgment and sentencing very similar to our present system. However, although some customs have continued to exist, their role in society has been almost entirely replaced by the Canadian legal system. To find out whether both customary law and our own legal system can co-exist will require a great deal of research and consultation by federal and provincial governments and native peoples. We have learned a lot from native customary law. For instance, the concept of mediation and reconciliation of the victim with the offender and the community is gradually becoming accepted in our present legal system.

I believe we are getting away from a system of government paternalism which will give way to a system in which native peoples will have the legal and real power to govern their own lives and their own institutions. The Department of Justice is trying to translate these objectives in concrete terms. The Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. MacGuigan) announced in Calgary last September, at the Conference on Native Rights, that he was considering specific proposals by native governments, models of band government, alternatives to court proceedings and a vast range of specific issues. The Minister also indicated that he was seeking ways to ensure that the Canadian legal system would take into consideration the concept of native justice. This plan has already been realized in a number of provisions of Bill C-19 on criminal law reform, which I shall refer to later on.

The Department of Justice plays an active role in many initiatives designed to take into account the concepts and concerns of the native people and improve the way they are served by the judicial system. For instance:

The development and maintenance of a program to provide assistance to native persons outside the courts, the cost of which is shared with the Provinces;

A program of grants to encourage native persons to enter the legal profession;

Attempts to improve the provision of legal services to the native people through the fund called "Special Projects-Legal Aid Fund";

Legal information projects for both native and non-native communities;

A pilot project in Frobisher Bay concerned with providing legal services for the native people;

The financing of a survival law manual for native children in Saskatchewan high schools;

The Native Law Centre at the University of Saskatchewan; and finally:

The financing of a conference on Indian tribes which will be organized by the Saddle Lake Band in Alberta.

As I have already said, considerable work is underway to prepare the next First Ministers' Conference on constitutional issues of interest to the native peoples. One of the items on the agenda, Mr. Speaker, will be native self-government. This question touches on many legal areas, such as criminal law, family law, administrative law, the administration of justice, the courts, constitutional review and land claims. I am convinced that the work under way takes into account all these related issues.

The Hon. Member's motion also recommends the application of informal community-inspired sanctions for non-violent offences to reduce the number of native persons imprisoned. The Government has already proposed steps to reduce the rate of incarceration generally with the penalty reforms provided for in Bill C-19 on the reform of criminal law.

Mr. Speaker, these proposed amendments establish uniform principles and practices to guide the judges all across Canada by providing an official declaration of purpose and principles.

It is stated that the fundamental purpose of imposing a sentence is the protection of the public. The reform of sanctions is based on the principle that there are other methods besides imprisonment to protect the public. The proposed amendments reaffirm and encourage recourse to these non-carceral sanctions. The declaration of purpose and principles lists a number of ways of protecting society through sentencing, such as the imposition of just sentences, neutralization, deterrence, compensation and reintegration into society. The concept that the punishment must be suited to the crime reflects the objective of justice in sentencing. Fair sentences strengthen and promote respect for the law.

Certain serious offences require that the offender be cut off from society through imprisonment in order to guarantee the protection of the public. The amendments provide substantial assistance to the sentencing judge by stating the principles which determine whether it is appropriate to impose incarceration.

The first principle identifies the three main reasons which justify a prison sentence. First of all, to put away an offender who could threaten the life and security of others. Second, to put a stigma on a behaviour so reprehensible that any lighter sentence would be inappropriate. And third, to punish offenders who deliberately refuse to submit to other sanctions.

Another principle emphasizes the practical problems and the unfairness of imposing a prison sentence upon someone because of the supposedly positive effect it might have on that person's rehabilitation. When rehabilitation is the main objective of sentencing, the bill suggests other penalties which would be more appropriate.

The government's policy concerning the objective and principles of criminal law made public the Minister of Justice in 1982 in a document entitled Criminal law and the Canadian society. The purpose of criminal law is to ensure law and order within a society through prohibitions, sanctions and procedures meant to respond in a fair and equitable way to inacceptable forms of behaviour which cause or are likely to cause serious harm to individuals or groups of individuals. One of the principles to apply in order to achieve this goal is that, when sentencing, the judge should select the measure which is the least restrictive, while remaining sufficient and adequate in the circumstances. This basic principle inspired the provisions of the criminal law reform bill which deal with sentencing.

The consequences of the amendments are that for all offences, except the most serious ones, the judge should consider community service and non-prison sentences before imposing a prison sentence, and also, he should choose among a series of options ranging from light to very severe.

In addition to a variety of penalties, the legislation provides for a code of procedure concerning evidence heard in court to determine the penalty. That code ensures that the courts have complete and precise information available on the violator before chosing the adequate penalty. Under the proposals, the court must ask both parties for their comments and arguments on the facts relevant to the penalty, including the existence, availability and efficiency of various options applicable to the case. Mr. Speaker, the judge must also hear evidence on disputed facts. Further, the court must ask the culprit whether he has anything to say before sentence is passed. These provisions ensure that the court has all relevant evidence available. The court may hear or summon any witness other than the offender, whenever it deems necessary. For instance, the court could hear representations from the potential beneficiary of a compensation order.

As a general rule, the court must consider a pre-sentence report before passing a prison sentence on a violator who has never been detained. The contents of the pre-sentence report has been widened to include more complete information from all relevant sources, including the violator's school, his employer or other community groups. When imposing a prison sentence, the court must state its reasons, which are noted in the record or put down in writing.

Those proposals ensure that the judge has all relevant information available on the violator and on the potential non-prison penalties before considering the whole gamut of relevant penalties in the circumstances.

As I said, one of the principles that the court must follow before meting out a sentence is that it must consider the range of penalties as a hierarchy, from the least to the most severe one. The scale of penalties proposed by the Criminal Law Reform Act widens the existing penalties and introduces new, efficient and creative ones without prison terms. Each proposed penalty can be imposed alone, or with another one. The least serious penalty under the new proposals is release, with or without parole. That penalty could apply to all the accused, excepting business corporations and persons pleading guilty or found guilty of a crime for which the law provides a minimum penalty or a 14-year or more prison term.

Mr. Speaker, the second option would be a conditional penalty. The offender would take a commitment to good conduct or adhere to other relevant conditions. The conditional penalty would be a regular one, but could only apply to violations for which the law provides no minimum penalty for offenders other than business corporations.

The third option would be probation. Under the proposed amendments, probation would be a regular penalty with mandatory surveillance, and could be imposed in addition to any other penalty.

The proposed amendments widen and encourage the use of compensation as a penalty. Compensation includes both the replacement of property and financial restitution to the victim by the offender. Penalties also include special and exemplary damages for property losses and other financial losses and damages for bodily harm. In addition, the victim or the victim's representative can appeal to the court respecting the loss or damage sustained.

Those proposals require the court to consider factors affecting the offender's ability to pay. This would prevent useless compensation orders.

Moreover, fines would be more frequently used. The current restrictions would be removed to enable the court to impose a fine for any offence, except in causes where minimum penalties are provided. The maximum fine for a summary conviction offence would be raised from $500 to $2,000 for an individual and to $25,000 for a business. The maximum fine for criminal acts would be set by the court.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the court should be advised about the ability to pay of the offender before imposing a fine. In addition, jail terms for default of payment would be restricted to cases where default is voluntary and without any valid reason. Nobody would be jailed because he is unable to pay. The same would apply in the case of compensation. In the past, it has been suggested that most native people were jailed for default of payment. In any case, those proposals will guarantee that nobody will be jailed for being truly unable to pay a fine or to comply with a compensation order.

The proposals also officially recognize the alternative solutions to the fine for those who are unable to pay. Another possible penalty would be an order of compensatory work. Those orders would be an important alternative to incarceration which could be useful to the community in two ways. First, the community would save money on jail costs and secondly, the offender would take part in an activity of immediate benefit to the community. Such orders could be imposed for punishable offences on summary conviction as well as for crimes subject to a maximum of 400 hours. Voluntary default could entail a jail term of up to two years for criminal acts and a minimum of six months for offences punishable on summary conviction.

To ensure the effectiveness of penalties other than prison terms, the legislation provides a detailed mechanism of amendment and enforcement. The offender should give a satisfactory excuse in case of non compliance. If the court decides that there is voluntary default, it can alter the terms and conditions of the first penalty and in the case of fines and compensation, it can seize the salary or the property of the offender or, as a last resort, impose a jail term.

The combinations being offered provide an incredibly wide range of sanctions. There is nothing to prevent a creative judge from imposing sentences appropriate both to the offence and to the offender. Resorting to incarceration will be discouraged, but this sanction will always be available when circumstances justify.

The Government shares the concerns of the Hon. Member with respect to native persons and the traditional system, and it has taken steps to improve the situation. The Government is to be congratulated on the proposals contained in Bill C-19 on criminal law reform, which restate the law on sentencing, expand the range of sanctions and reflect the basic principle of our criminal law, namely, that we should always resort to the minimum amount of intervention required and justified by the circumstances.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me. Although I am not the justice critic, I am the spokesman for the Progressive Conservative Party on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I felt it incumbent upon me to address the motion which is before us today. I congratulate the Hon. Member for bringing this forward, but I am concerned that both she and the Government are again talking about band-aid approaches to a much larger problem. It is a problem which we do not have the opportunity to talk about very often in the House. It is a major, if not the major, social problem which we are experiencing in our country today.

The Hon. Member alluded to a number of statistics. I would be interested in finding out exactly when those statistics were published. I have found it most difficult to obtain up-to-date statistics. In fact, the latest statistics which I have been able to obtain are already seven years out of date. The last statistics which I have been able to obtain were published in 1977. However, the report, which was nick-named the Penner report—the official name of that report is: Indian Self-Government in Canada: Report of the Special Committee—has listed some startling statistics about which we should be concerned and which are pertinent to this debate. I do not think that we can overlook those startling statistics when talking about the justice system and the 280 Indians per 100,000 population who are penitentiary inmates as compared with the national figure of 40 penitentiary inmates per 100,000 population. We must ask ourselves as a society: Why is the number so high?

The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) alludes to the reason and says that it is an indictment of our criminal justice system. I would say that it goes far beyond that. In fact, it is not only the criminal justice system which is at fault; it is the society in which our aboriginal people find themselves. I think it is very important to outline some of these facts. For example, let us consider child welfare. The proportion of Indian children in care has risen steadily to more than five times the national rate. In education, only 20 per cent of Indian children stay in school to the end of the secondary level. The comparable national rate is 75 per cent. When we talk about housing, nearly 19 per cent of on-reserve homes have two or more families living in them. These conditions affect 40 per cent of all status Indian families. We can talk about facilities. Again we must go back to 1977, and I condemn the Government for not having more up-to-date statistics and information on this very important social problem. It is ridiculous that we have to work on statistics which are seven years old. However, in 1977, fewer than 40 per cent of Indian houses had running water, sewage disposal or indoor plumbing facilities. The national level of properly serviced housing is well over 90 per cent. The average income of Indian people is one-half to two-thirds of the national average. Their unemployment rate is about 35 per cent of the working age population. In some areas it is as high as 90 per cent unemployment. Despite improvements over the last ten years, the death rate among Indian people is two to four times the death rate of non-Indians. Causes of death from accidents, poisoning and violence account for over 33 per cent of the death among Indian people, compared with 9 per cent for the Canadian population as a whole. Indian people die from fire at a rate which is seven times that for the rest of the Canadian population. That speaks to the condition under which they have to live. The over-all rate of violent deaths among Indian people is more than three times the national average. Indian deaths due to suicide is almost three times the national rate. Suicide is especially prevalent among the age group of 15 years to 24 years. That says an awful lot in itself, that one statistic.

The infant mortality rate among Indian children is 60 per cent higher than the national rate. The life expectancy is much lower. The number of hospital admissions are much greater. And to get back to the problem which is being addressed in this motion today, native people are over-represented in proportion to their population in federal and provincial penitentiaries. In Manitoba, Saskatchewan and the north, native people represent more than 40 per cent of the prison population. The proportion of Indian juveniles who are considered delinquent is three times the national average. That is a pretty sorry and bleak picture I paint today of the position in which our aboriginal people find themselves. Because of those social conditions, I believe it is clear to anyone who would take a look at those statistics that in fact turning to crime is something which many native people, I suppose out of necessity in many cases, engage in. Therefore, to just condemn our criminal justice system and to suggest improvements to the criminal justice system—and heaven knows we need them. And I agree with the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood on that matter. It is not enough. I just do not believe it can be addressed in isolation. I believe we have to look at the much broader picture.

Why are our aboriginal people involved to such a great extent in crime and charges which involve incarceration? Something at which I did take a look was the major offences, just to make the comparison between native and non-native people. It is interesting to note that, in violent offences, our native people have a higher percentage than non-natives. However, the rate of offences against property is higher for non-native than for native people. The rate of offences against the Narcotic Control Act and the Food and Drugs Act is much higher for non-native than it is for native people. In other offences the rate is approximately the same.

With respect to the sentences to federal penitentiaries—and again the statistics are seven and eight years old, which is very frustrating—the number of less than two-year sentences is greater for native than for non-native people. However, the number of sentences over three years, on a percentage basis, is higher for native than for non-native people. The juvenile delinquency rate, as I mentioned earlier, is three times the national average. I suppose that when we look at these statistics we have to admit that the high Indian representation in our jails suggests there is a conflict between Indian and non-Indian values.

I believe Indian offences, as I mentioned before, mirror poor social and health conditions on the reserves. I do not believe there is any question about that. The high level of Indian juvenile delinquency, of young suicides, and the large number of children in care, suggest that deteriorated family and social conditions are having the greatest effect on Indian youth. The high representation of native people in jails and juvenile court also reflects the scarcity of preventive services and support systems for Indians as alternatives to jail.

A study was undertaken in 1979 regarding the issues affecting the total justice system, and the recommendations which were made were many and, I believe, very realistic. But those recommendations have not in fact been implemented. As I gathered from what the Parliamentary Secretary said earlier, the Government is still having conferences and debating what should be done and how it should be done. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that confidence has to be given back to the Indian people. The paternalism of the federal Government over hundreds of years must come to an end. In fact, our aboriginal people must take control of their own lives. As recently as Friday, a Bill was passed in this House, referred to as the Cree-Naskapi Act, which in fact gave the responsibilities for local government back to the Cree bands of northern Quebec and the Naskapi of Schefferville, where they belong. This came out of the James Bay Agreement which was reached in 1975. It has only taken the Cree, Naskapi and the federal Government eight years to negotiate the agreement which was passed through the House on Friday. Hopefully, it will receive Senate approval in the not too distant future and be proclaimed so that the Crees and the Naskapi can get on with governing their own affairs.

One of the things we discussed with respect to this Bill was the policing which would go on in these municipalities, these band areas, this 1300 square miles of land in northern Quebec. The Crees have their own police forces which have proved very successful. Of course I would like to see this type of self-government, and I am not suggesting for a moment that the particular model used by the Cree-Naskapi would be the model to be used elsewhere in Canada, but there are some very positive points in that legislation which could pertain to other areas of jurisdiction across this country. We have to encourage the Indian First Nations to assume the responsibility for administration of their own affairs. They should decide their own future rather than have to come cap in hand to Ottawa for every nickel and dime. They should not have to have some faceless bureaucrat in that tower in Hull tell them what they can do, when they can do it and where they can do it. We have taken away the pride of a very proud people. We have taken away their hope. We have taken away the glory that was once theirs. It must be returned, and when it is I am very confident that these horrifying statistics we read out today will change, and fairly dramatically so. We are going to see some very positive results. Indian political leadership today is as mature and capable as any leadership in this country, be it municipal, provincial or federal. Indian people are more than capable of administering their affairs. Of course I encourage the Government to come forward with enabling legislation to allow what is referred to as Indian self-government, and to do it quickly. The Indian people are ready for it.

The Canadian people realize that something has to be done. After looking at these statistics no Canadian can fail to say that this should not happen. There should be more involvement by native people in our justice system. Some services should be specifically designed for native people. There should be more native para-professionals within the justice system to serve in a liaison capacity. We talked about understanding the traditions of the native way of life. The best way of doing that is by involving Indian people in the justice system.

I will conclude by thanking the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood for bringing this motion forward. It allows us an opportunity to discuss some of the concerns we have about the aboriginal peoples in this country. Rather than condemn our justice system, which is a part of the problem, we should look at the broader problem of what is causing the people to turn to crime. That is the number one problem to be solved. We cannot do it piecemeal because it will not work piecemeal. For far too long this Government has done things on a band-aid basis. It keeps sticking one band-aid here, one there and another one over there. Well, it is not going to work any more. You cannot throw money at the problem, you have to solve it. We must show these people that we are not paying lip service to the problems, that in fact we mean business, and that we want the lot of the aboriginal peoples in this country improved.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have spent most of my life working for and with natives in northern Saskatchewan and northern Canada. I know that as these statistics we have seen today grow more and more ridiculous, there is less and less respect for the law among the native community. There is a need for the natives to make their own decisions. I want to read into the record a news release from the Native Council of Canada which talks about this question directly. It says:

> We believe the time is ripe to adopt pro-active and positive policies now that will go beyond the negative social control policies of the past to establish a momentum for social growth. It is our contention that, if as much effort and vision were expended in preparing people for social, economic and employment opportunity as has been traditionally expended on singing out for punishment victims of deplorable social conditions, much could be done to correct this totally unacceptable situation.

It goes on to say much more, but it concludes with this:

> One of the excuses given for inaction by responsible authorities is that these problems will work themselves out through the mechanisms of constitutional discussions and the advent of First Nations self-government. To date, most provinces have refused to consider a set principles upon which native people can build any sense of confidence in resolving any issue, including those in the area of the administration of justice.

It goes on to support this particular motion and says:

> We want, however, to be assured of a commitment to change and to justice. Mere token involvement in a meaningless dialogue will not satisfy native people, nor we believe, Canadians in general.

I just wanted to put that on the record, Mr. Speaker.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the very limited time I have I want to indicate that in my particular constituency we have instilled a sense of pride in our native people. Last Friday we opened a new cultural administration centre built by the native peoples themselves through the Government of Canada NEED Program. We opened a new community centre a little over a year ago, again built by the native peoples. Part of the furniture in this building was supplied by a native peoples woodworking factory established in yet another reserve close by. I look at the progress made by the band counsels in my particular constituency and their involvement in every-day decisions that affect their life. They have indeed come a very long way. They have acquired a sense of pride so necessary in today's world.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

TRADE—EFFECT OF CLOTHING AND TEXTILE IMPORTS. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the answer given by the Minister in response to the question which I asked in the House a couple of weeks ago completely missed the point. He indicated that information about the importation of beef would do instead of information about the importation of clothing. This is how seriously the Cabinet seems to take the very grave situation in Canada's clothing industry.

About three years ago the slogan of the Government was to let industries like clothing, textiles and footwear go because they are losers, and instead to boost the winners, the megaprojects and the high tech industries. The megaprojects flopped a few months later when the price of oil dropped and high tech industries have mostly evaporated and never would have provided any serious quantity of jobs in any case. The Government policy seemed then one of rising permanent unemployment. If that was the policy, it has been a resounding success for the Government and those who like high unemployment as a means of holding or driving wages down.

In the clothing industry the Government's policy has been to increase imports. In fact, imports have been increasing during the past three years at the rate of 20 or 25 per cent per year. The main increase comes from countries where wages are often less than $1 an hour. The Government chooses to blame Canadian workers for wanting more than $1 an hour in wages. There is no evidence to support the Government's assurance that these products from very low wage countries are a benefit to Canadian consumers. Apart from that fact, a Canadian worker has very little chance to consume when he or she is unemployed, especially after running out of UIC benefits; apart from that fact, the prices are not substantially lower than Canadian made goods.

Three years ago the Government adopted a new plan. It established the CIRB, the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board, which was supposed to renovate the clothing and textile industry. It is very difficult to see what it has done for employment. In fact, the board has no manufacturers in the clothing, textiles or footwear industries on it. It is predominantly a group of financiers, civil servants, some with backgrounds in banking, two or three manufacturers in the metals industries, a couple of trade union representatives and one former consumer association representative. It is very unclear what this is doing for the clothing and textile industries because there have been only piecemeal reports of the grants they have made to various industries and no progress reports about what was achieved through those grants.

Almost a year ago a task force was promised. It was finally appointed in February. There is still no word from this task force as to what it will recommend. Presumably the task force is meant to keep a lid on the question until after the next election.

In May the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Regan), being questioned by the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent), admitted the problem is that in the last couple of years there has been a great proliferation in the number of sources from which various types of textiles have been coming. He assured us that "our staff is establishing agreements with all these countries that", according to him, "are satisfactory". I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that according to the manufacturers in Spadina and in other places, some of whom have gone out of business because of the uncertainty engendered by this Government's policy, those agreements are not satisfactory, nor are they satisfactory to the unions.

Two weeks ago the whole question was laughed off by the acting Prime Minister who undertook not to make any difference between clothing and meat. What we need is a completely new start on our policy. We need to consider the value of producing as far as possible the things we need here in Canada, such as clothing, and providing work for the people of this country at jobs they are capable of doing. We used to have at least 200,000 capable workers in the clothing and textile industry. That number is now down to 150,000 or less. We still have many of those skilled workers on layoff. We have a capable workforce. We have the raw materials and the market. We ought to be developing that industry positively rather than following the Government's policy of undermining it and causing it to disappear.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Canada's policy for the textile and clothing sectors is based on the complementary elements of industrial adjustment and trade policy. With respect to adjustment, the policy seeks to establish viable and competitive textile and clothing firms through a variety of measures including the allocation of some $350 million over the 1982-86 period to be managed by the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board.

Regarding trade policy, as you are aware, Canada is a signatory to the multi-fibre agreement, which recognizes that developed countries may require temporary relief for their textile and clothing industries to allow them time to adjust and to increase their competitiveness with respect to disruptive imports from low-cost exporting countries. Accordingly, bilateral restraint arrangements for the period to the end of 1986 have been concluded with 21 low-cost suppliers of textiles and clothing to Canada with these having been concluded in the current year.

The Canadian textile and clothing sector is facing an increasingly serious situation as a result of low-cost imports. In this regard, imports increased by 25 per cent in 1983 and another 20 per cent in the first five months of 1984.

As a result of the import problem in the clothing sector, Canada has made several recent efforts at negotiating intended to address the problem within the framework of the multi-fibre agreement and the bilateral restraint arrangements.

One of a series of new initiatives was announced on July 21, 1983. These measures included seeking a more controlled flow of import shipments throughout the year, stricter customs inspections at ports of entry and examination of duty drawback and remission schemes.

Since that time, negotiations for new restraint arrangements with several sources, and expanded coverage under existing arrangements, have also been negotiated. Only last month, notifications were also made on nine additional low-cost sources for further restraint negotiations.

A Textiles and Clothing Advisory Committee has also been established by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan), representing a range of private sector interests, that is, producers, consumers, retailers, importers and labour et cetera. The Committee was formed to advise the Minister on international trade issues having a bearing on the domestic textile and clothing sector. The Committee has had several meetings and recently submitted a set of consensus recommendations to the Minister. These proposals, which focus on the unilateral imposition by Canada of global import quotas for clothing rather than the current bilaterally negotiated restraint regime, will be the subject of careful consideration by the Government.

In addition, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Lumley), has established a private sector task force to review the development, competitive environment and position of the Canadian textile and clothing industries and to make recommendations to the Government aimed at assisting the industry's restructuring and modernization plans and enhancing their international competitiveness. A report by this task force is expected around the end of September.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—WORKERS' CO-OPERATIVES—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT SUPPORT. (B) HOUSING CO-OPERATIVES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, co-op housing is being attacked in Canada. During the last three months the Government has moved to eliminate non-profit co-op housing, and it has done so very surreptitiously by cutting down on its allocation. The infrastructure which has made the co-op housing program work well during the last few years is dependent upon this allocation. Having reduced the funds to co-op housing, the Government has devastated the regional infrastructure for co-op housing so that one third of the association will die, one third will be unable to provide service and one third will basically reduce their service. The Government therefore is in the process of eliminating co-op housing.

Co-op housing is one area of the co-operative community which has the greatest social impact. The Government has been devastating co-op housing even as it has pretended to be very supportive of co-ops. it mentioned co-ops in the Speech from the Throne and in the Budget. It paid for a co-op task force and appointed a Minister responsible for the interface with co-ops. However, its first move has been to devastate co-op housing.

I dwell upon this subject a little more than necessary because when I asked a question on co-operative development on May 29, I received a brush-off. Obviously the Minister had no idea what I was talking about when I suggested that we needed to establish a parallel infrastructure for workers' co-ops. The Minister's answer indicated acceptance of all proposals.

I wish to reiterate today the need for support. There is a Spanish model which would work well. Also there is a French legislative approach to which we could look as a model. Will the Government put in place a support system which will assist the co-operative movement to develop? Will it put in place a financial structure to help workers' co-ops to develop the necessary expertise and to conduct the necessary research to develop workers' co-ops? Will it do what is necessary, not approach it in the same way as it has approached co-op housing? Will it allow the development of an infrastructure by keeping in place the financing which has gone to housing co-ops, not devastating the possibility of workers' co-ops by removing any support which might be available?

Housing co-ops could use more support. They are losing it as a result of the reallocation of money. If that is the Government's approach to assistance to co-operatives, it will do more harm than good to the co-operative movement.

Mr. Rolland Dion (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take the floor to answer the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) who expresses concern about federal Government support for the co-operative movement.

After last December's Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, a task force on the co-operative sector was established to study new ways in which that sector might improve its contribution to the economy. The Government has just received the task force report and will take it into consideration very soon, as it should.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, Senator Hazen Argue will set up an interdepartmental study group within a few weeks. This group will be chaired by a senior official responsible to Senator Argue and, through him, to the Cabinet. It would therefore be difficult and inappropriate to say more about the policy the Government might follow after considering the recommendations of the study group.

Mr. Speaker, I can state clearly that the Government has always been committed to promote the co-operative movement and contributed to make co-operatives play a larger role in the economy. In the early eighties, the Cabinet did realize that the objectives of the co-operative movement—fair prices, Canadian control and widespread participation—were at one with our own objectives in the energy sector. The Cabinet therefore began discussing the possibility of creating businesses jointly with the co-operative sector. Those discussions led to the creation of a joint energy venture, Co-Enerco.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I believe it can be said that this Government is truly a keen supporter of the co-operative movement. I believe this has been demonstrated on many occasions and in many fields, including housing co-operatives, with which the Hon. Member for Prince Albert seems to be concerned. Of course, the co-operative movement in the field of housing is constantly evolving. Regular checking is needed to determine whether the various organizations or groups actually play their rote well. Mr. Speaker, this is the reply I wanted to make.

LABOUR RELATIONS—INCREASES IN CORPORATE EXECUTIVES' SALARIES. (B) DOME PETROLEUM—EXECUTIVES' REMUNERATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago it was reported that executive salaries in Canadian industry and business rose by 12.5 per cent last year. This was at a time when the Government was urging restraint on ordinary working Canadians. The average increase for those who received wages or salaries was less than the increase in the cost of living last year. That is why I directed questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I questioned the difference in attitude of the Government to the ordinary Canadians and senior executives.

In 1975 this Government implemented so-called wage and price controls. As it turned out, it was actually only wage controls. The Government had fought and won an election by promising never to implement wage and price controls. In more recent times the Government implemented its so-called six and five program for federal public servants. It urged other governments and the private sector to follow suit, and many did. Last year wages and salaries increased by less than the increase in the cost of living. At the same time there have been tremendous executive salary increases in many corporations.

A good illustration of how not to do things can be found in Dome Petroleum. That corporation exists today because of the tremendous tax concessions and write-offs permitted by this Government to the oil and gas industry. Dome Petroleum has been tremendously successful in using each and every facet of the tax laws as they have been changed. This has permitted it to keep operating. It has been able to keep going as well because it has borrowed many billions of dollars from the banks. The loans are now guaranteed by the federal Government. It has reached the point where the bank cannot permit Dome Petroleum to go bankrupt. That would create a catastrophe for the banks. I am reminded of Lord Keynes' famous observation, that if one borrowed one hundred pounds from a bank and could not repay it that person would be in trouble. However, if that person had borrowed a million pounds and could not repay it the bank would be in big trouble.

United States laws and regulations, unlike ours, require corporations which sell their shares on the stock market to file a great deal of information with the United States Securities and Exchange Commission.

Thanks to the information which Dome Petroleum was required to file in the United States we have learned that the new chief executive officer of Dome Petroleum, John MacDonald, has an employment agreement for the next five years which will pay him a yearly salary of $500,000 in U.S. funds, plus annual increases equal at least to the rate of inflation, plus merit raises when the directors believe he is entitled to such increases, plus a moving allowance for moving from Calgary of $100,000. As well, he will have a guaranteed pension which will give him over $120,000 a year. According to the Financial Times of Canada, he received a total compensation of $687,000 in the last three months of 1983.

It is not surprising that Dome Petroleum has done that for the new chief executive officer because, according to the Toronto Star, the former Chairman of Dome Petroleum, Jack Gallagher, received $3,457,000 in 1983. Bill Richards, the former President of Dome Petroleum, received $1,408,000 in 1983. Those are exorbitant figures but they have been matched by many other corporations in Canada which have paid anywhere from $500,000 to $1.5 million to their chief executive officers.

Given the way in which the Government has called on ordinary Canadians to lower their expectations and to ask for less, given the lectures that Canadians have heard telling them that they cannot afford the kind of lifestyle they have had in the past and that they cannot expect to get, nor will they be able to get the kind of wage and salary increases they received in earlier years, and given the fact that the Government has used all its powers, moral and otherwise, to get ordinary Canadians to scale down their expectations, it seems to me that it would be at least fair and equitable for the Government to call upon the senior executives of Canadian corporations to show the same kind of restraint. Instead, it lets them run amuck and take whatever the traffic will bear. Often the amount the traffic will bear is not the amount the company can afford. That is what has happened to Dome Petroleum.

These directors take what the traffic will bear despite the fact that the companies have not been profitable and successful and despite the fact that what they are getting is being taken at the expense of ordinary Canadians. I say to the Government that that is not good enough. If the Government really believes that we should expect to get by on less than we have in the past, it should apply that belief to all Canadians and not just to the ordinary Canadians who are trying to live on their wages and salaries.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the available data indicates that in recent years the increase in average incomes for most Canadians exceeded the increase in prices. Although there are a number of comprehensive measures of average wages and salaries and of average incomes, these generally tend to move similarly over a longer period of time but can show different rates of change over a shorter period of time. The same can be said of prices. Consequently, average wages and salaries and average incomes rose less rapidly in 1983 than in preceding years, reflecting both the impact of the recession and slower inflation.

Nevertheless, over the first four years of the 1980s average personal income and average personal disposable income, the most comprehensive measures of income, rose more rapidly than prices, while average wages, salaries and supplemental incomes rose only slightly less and at about the same rate as price increases. The relevant average compound rates of change over the four years from 1980 to 1983 are these. The Consumer Price Index rose by an average of 9.8 per cent; the gross national expenditure deflator rose by 9.4 per cent; the GNE deflator rose by 9.7 per cent; wages, salaries and supplemental income per employed rose by 9.5 per cent; personal income per employed person rose by 10.8 per cent and the personal disposable income per employed person rose by 10.3 per cent.

The rates of increase in executive compensation which have been cited are indeed high. I these increases are general and widespread then they are of extreme concern. However, the cited increases must be put in perspective. These increases came from a recent survey which was carried out by the Financial Times of Canada. It included only 29 major companies. Moreover, the report did not point out that there were declines at six of the enterprises, and at another five increases were in the 6 per cent range or less. Thus, the reported average increase of 12.5 per cent is based on a very small number of companies. Certainly, we cannot jump to the conclusion that Canadian executive salaries jumped last year by 12.5 per cent. Much more information is needed.

Of course, the fact remains that large pay increases, whether to executives or to workers, which contribute to higher prices and inflation are detrimental to the economic recovery which is under way and the longer term growth and development of the Canadian economy. In general, pay increases in excess of productivity growth cannot be sustained without price increases. It may well be that market forces will at times necessitate higher than average pay increases to attract and/or to maintain first-rate executives and/or high-skilled workers. Equally important in such instances, similar market forces should likewise be operating to restrain any consequent price increases.

In summary, responsible actions by all the major participants in the economy, including management and labour, must continue if the current recovery is to be sustained and the Canadian economy in the longer term is to grow and develop further. Additional jobs and a higher standard of living will result. But, this will not occur if pay increases to either executives or workers are inflationary. In particular, there is the danger that substantial increases in executive compensation will serve as examples to workers as they negotiate new collective agreements. Consequently, responsible action continues to be needed.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

MAINTENANCE OF HISTORICAL HOUSE IN RIDGEWAY, ONT.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, the small Village of Ridgeway, where I make my home, was an area of great strategic importance during pre-Confederation days. One hundred and eighteen years ago on June 2, 1866, 54 years after the war of 1812, Ridgeway was not a peaceful little hamlet. Rather, it was the location of a fierce battle between the Canadian forces and the Fenian raiders from the United States of America.

A small house on a tract of land then owned by the Teal family, and recently restored by the Bertie Historical Society, was used as a field hospital to care for the wounded and dying soldiers. Bullets which missed their mark embedded themselves in the walls of the house, and are still visible. Women and children took shelter in a marsh just west of this house.

In 1975 the Bertie Historical Society undertook the project of restoring and moving the building. Now that this preliminary groundwork has been laid, the society would like to see the property taken over and maintained by the federal Government as an historical national site and park. Since my riding is experiencing high unemployment, and in light of the potential for job creation involved in the construction of a national historical site, I would ask that the Minister responsible for Parks Canada look into this matter immediately. I look forward to hearing from him, and providing more details.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

NEED FOR PRESENTATION OF FACTUAL INFORMATION

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the recent study based on the survey of 1,100 Metro students varying in age from 12 to 18 shows that 10 per cent admit to being troubled by war fears, 28 per cent wonder whether or not they will marry and have families, 24 per cent indicate the desire to live for the present and forget the future. It is my concern that the very organizations wanting to prevent nuclear holocausts repeatedly and graphically present the horrors of such a conflict to the point of saturating the mind of the young and old without presenting factual information that gives some hope for the future, information such as the fact that, for 39 years, living with the nuclear arsenal has prevented wars in Europe, that there are powerful peace initiatives that have been activated in response to the threats of war associated with the escalation of nuclear material, and that, despite prevailing mistrust between the major powers, both are cognizant of the potential global destruction of a nuclear war between them and will not start one. This is not to say that nuclear weapons in the hands of terrorists do not pose a frightening possibility of a localized nuclear explosion.

Young people are courageous and intelligent and, if given balanced information and views, not only can they handle a threatening situation, but they will make innovative suggestions for ongoing peace initiatives.

CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

CANADIAN HOME AND SCHOOL AND PARENT-TEACHER FEDERATION—REMOVAL OF PATRIOTISM CLAUSE FROM CONSTITUTION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Home and School and Parent-Teacher Federation is a long established organization in Canadian educational circles. Its objectives have focused on improving the educational system. At a recent annual meeting held in Winnipeg, the Federation removed the following declaration from its constitution:

—to foster high ideals of citizenship and patriotism and to promote, through educational means, international good will and peace.

It has come to my attention that this clause was removed because of threats from Revenue Canada that, if the clause were to remain, the organization would be under threat of deregistration as a registered charity. Much of this was raised in an article in The Winnipeg Sun by Peter Warren, investigative reporter.

It has come to our attention that the reason for Revenue Canada using this kind of threat is that patriotism is seen as being too political. I ask this House why is the Liberal Government, through the agency of Revenue Canada, arguing that citizenship and patriotism should not be taught, and that those who do will be deregistered by Revenue Canada?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENT'S RELATIONSHIP WITH INDIAN PEOPLE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, Indian people felt a surge of hope last November when a special committee of this House tabled a report on Indian self-government. The report called for a new relationship between Indian first nations and the federal Government, and for recognition of Indian self-government.

The First Ministers' Conference failed to provide constitutional entrenchment for this right because the Liberal Government, two days before the conference began, did not even know what position it would take. How then could it mobilize public opinion in support of Indian self-government? The promises to bring in framework legislation have also been a hoax. Instead of a new relationship with the federal Government, Indian people are being sucked into a new relationship with the Department of Indian Affairs. As one Indian leader told me last week:

> The self-government report is failing our people. The Department is getting more involved in our lives rather than getting out. The Department is trying to tell us what Indian self-government is about.

Indian women have also been betrayed. The Government promised time and again to end Indian Act discrimination against them, but where is the Bill to do this? Why does the Government not bring it forward so that it can be studied and debated? Indian people have heard government promises for so long that they have become part of their heritage, almost like an aboriginal right. When will the Government begin to act? When will it bring in Bills to recognize—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

CUSTOMS ACT

PROVISION GOVERNING DISPOSAL OF UNCLAIMED GOODS

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-6, the new Customs Act, is the Government's latest attempt to update a 137-year old piece of legislation that is inadequate and obsolete. Certain of the proposed changes are also inadequate, in particular the one dealing with the disposal of seized or unclaimed goods that have become the property of the Crown. It proposes that disposal by public tender or auction continue to be done according to guidelines established by regulation rather than by legislation. Current regulations prescribe that two senior customs officers shall conduct the public tenders, which the public is not allowed to attend. They also state that any envelopes opened by customs in error shall be resealed and held for the close of bidding.

The potential for abuse is obvious. What safeguards are there to ensure that the officers do not open each submitted bid in error, enabling them to determine the amount that a friend or relative could bid in order to win the tender? What provision is there to ensure that the highest bid will indeed be chosen by the officers?

One of my constituents was recently denied the opportunity to attend a public tender. He was bidding on an item with a market value of $45,000. The customs officers had set a minimum reserve bid of $7,500 on that item. Surely it is not the policy of this deficit-ridden Government to sell off Crown property at fire sale prices! I urge the Minister to address these problems, either through the legislation or in the new regulations now being drafted by his Department.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

INVESTMENT IN AMERICAN MOTORS PLANT AT BRAMPTON, ONT.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, in January, 1961, American Motors opened up its Canadian production plant in Brampton. On Monday an announcement was made by the President and Chief Operating Officer of American Motors, Mr. José Dedeurwaerder, announcing an investment of three-quarters of a billion dollars in a new American Motors plant in Brampton.

The announcement was made by the President in conjunction with the provincial Government of Ontario and the federal Government, both of which participated in the negotiations and both of which are providing funding on a repayable basis through the payment of royalties over a number of years. I would like to add my congratulations to American Motors and to both levels of government. At the same time, I would like to congratulate Premier Davis on his 25 years of service to the public which began on June 11, 1959.

TRADE

UNITED STATES ACTION TO RESTRICT STEEL IMPORTS FROM CANADA

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I recently read with interest a statement in the press attributed to high-ranking U.S. officials indicating that they were about to enter into a free trade agreement with Canada in one or more of our key sectors. I understand that it is the intention of the Canadian Government to enter into free trade arrangements with the United States on matters relating to computerization.

On the same day, and in the same newspaper, I read that the United States has moved to restrict the importation of steel from Canada into the United States. The Americans cannot have it both ways. They cannot argue for free trade and draw our Government into a position in which it may sign an agreement which will be detrimental to Canada's best interests, while at the same time argue for restrictive trade practices regarding the importation of basic steel. I would ask the Government of Canada to sign no free trade agreements with the United States until such time as it comes to grips with the problem of how to deal with access to the U.S. market for the Canadian steel industry.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CONVENTION

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, today there is a strange fog rolling into Ottawa from North and South, from East and West. This fog is thick and warm and full of spirits. I am told that this fog is to last for four days and then the sun is to break through, and a new chief disciple of confusion is to be proclaimed. Party politics is the very essence of confusion.

For months now, the airwaves have heralded the coming of John, and the promise of a new gospel according to John. But which John is it to be? Is it to be John, or Jean, or Johnston? Or is it to be John Turn-right, or Jean the Creator, or John-boy, or perhaps John the Reformer, or even Smoke-Signal John? Or is it to be Almost John, who is really Stetson Gene?

After the first salvo, who is to be marked as John the successor to Pierre the Great? Let us hope that, come Monday, the fog will have rolled out into the hinterland again and that this place will regain its perspective.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, the Government claims to have the best interests of Canadian farmers at heart. Every day I hear different Cabinet Ministers rise in the House and announce assistance for large corporations and guaranteed loans for other financially failing companies, such as Dome Petroleum. Yet when the Minister of Agriculture was questioned about assisting farmers by reducing farm credit lending rates, his only response was that rates are determined by U.S. monetary policy. When asked to extend the Farm Credit Corporation's interest assistance program to protect farmers from a sudden rise to a higher rate of interest, the answer was that no such proposal was being considered.

This, to me, shows a complete lack of commitment to this vital sector of our economy. Surely if the Minister of Agriculture could convince Cabinet that we must have a thriving agricultural industry in order to feed our people, Cabinet would see that further protection from escalating interest rates is essential now. Perhaps the Minister knows there is no use talking to Cabinet because agriculture has not been on its list of priorities for the last 16 years. As a result, we risk the possibility of losing our reputation as a net exporter of agricultural products and, indeed, of even becoming unable to feed ourselves.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

POOLS

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—FINANCIAL POSITION OF CORPORATION

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of amateur sport. It is a simple question. How much money has the sports pool lost to date? How much is it losing weekly?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I must say that when the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation was started a number of weeks ago, it was very successful in getting a share of the market. The trouble began, however, when the provinces decided to boycott the sports Pool and to actually stop the sale of tickets in locations that had the facilities to sell them. The Canadian Sports Pool Corporation has made a tremendous effort to establish itself on the market and to stay there. To do so, the Corporation has spent funds it was allowed to spend under the Act.

[English]

Mr. Bosley: We have another clear, specific, and direct answer, Mr. Speaker.

CORPORATION'S FUTURE PLANS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, since it would appear that the sports pool is losing approximately $750,000 a week, making even John Turner look like a piker, could the Minister tell the House what plans he now has in place, or is preparing to bail out the sports pool? Specifically, will the Minister confirm that he and his staff are considering a second game, modelled after the 6-49 lottery?

Will the Minister also confirm that a proposal is apparently under preparation to come to the Government to ask for a further $20 million for the sports pool?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member opposite is letting his rhetoric run away with him, and he is now trying to destroy any hope of helping—of doing what we wanted to do. To answer his question quite frankly—Take the time to understand—You never understood a thing in your life! To answer his question—It always takes you half a minute more than anyone else to understand. What I wanted to say was that the Sports Pool has been set up and it is going to stay. We have no intention of getting involved in lotteries. We intend to continue the work we have begun, and when you say that we intend to borrow or that the Corporation has applied for a loan—First of all, I have never received an official request in this respect, and second, I invite all Members of the Parliament of Canada, whether they voted in favour or against, to see for themselves that under Section 20, the Act provides that funds may be borrowed to start up and continue the Sports Pool system.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question directed to the Minister is this: since we now clearly know that the Minister does not care about public money, will the Minister guarantee the House of Commons that no further funds will be loaned, forwarded, or sent to the Sports Pool Corporation until the House of Commons has had a full public accounting and inquiry into what the money has been used for so far, what contracts have been granted, what people have been employed, and whether there was any tendering of the advertising contracts? In short, will the Minister guarantee the House of Commons the right to inquire into the mess which has been going on under his direction?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition's only contribution to the Sports Pool has been to discredit the Corporation. We never said things like the Leader of the Official Opposition, who stated that if he had been Prime Minister for fifteen years, he would never have hired a Liberal as long as there was still one Progressive Conservative alive! That is not our policy. That is not what we do. Certainly not. When it selected agencies to take care of advertising, the Government of Canada was entirely aware of the quality of the services these companies were able to offer.

Furthermore, when the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation was established, we knew for a fact that the Progressive Conservative Party was being supported by the provincial Conservative governments in its bid to sabotage this opportunity for helping people in Western Canada with the 1988 Olympic Games in Calgary, to destroy amateur sport in Canada, to destroy opportunities for getting funds for medical research!

What happened was that the former Government eliminated completely any possibility for the Government of Canada to make a contribution to the cost of sending Canadian athletes to national and international events. That is what you have done!

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—REQUEST THAT MINISTER EVALUATE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am very disappointed in the Minister's answers. If the Government is so anxious to help amateur sport and medical research, there are other and more honest ways of doing so.

Mr. Speaker, my question is—He can count on our support! My question, therefore, is as follows: The Minister is unable to inform the House what the Sports Pool's deficit is at the present time. The Minister is aware that there is a deficit, that it is getting bigger every day and that he is taking public funds to protect three or four hundred Liberal friends who will no longer have jobs after the next election. In the circumstances, I would ask the Minister to inform the House about the financial situation of the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation and at what stage the Minister will stop this blood-letting of public funds.

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I may remind my hon. friend from Joliette, and I have said so in the House, that I was available—and I have been available to Members on both sides of the House—to forward to the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation requests I received from Hon. Members for jobs for constituents within the Corporation. I accepted these requests which arrived at my office and I forwarded them to the President of the Corporation. If the Hon. Member for Joliette wants me to table the letters I received, I shall be glad to do so. But what I want to say is: we did not do what you are trying to prove we did. Certainly not! We made available to the Corporation, and this is public information, the amount of $10.5 million, which is allowed under the Act.

Furthermore, if the Corporation ever needs more money, Section 20 of the Act provides for mechanisms to allow funding, with the authorization of the Governor in Council, and we will see what happens then. Mr. Speaker, I have received no requests for funding at this time. What they are trying to do, Mr. Speaker, is discredit the Corporation just to show that at the national level there is no money available to help our athletes, support our commitments for Calgary and support medical research. That is what the Hon. Member for Joliette is doing by persisting in his criticism of the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation and by swallowing everything that has been said and printed without taking the trouble to do their own research. All they are doing is reading a few newspapers, and then asking questions! I am sure that the Hon.

Member for Joliette can read and that his information resources are far better than that.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DISCLOSE FUTURE INVESTMENT IN CORPORATION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am not impressed by the Hon. Minister's answers. The fact remains that he is incapable of informing the House what exactly the financial situation of this new Corporation is. The public is concerned, and the Government cannot afford to waste public funds at this time. That is the important point. The Minister knew perfectly well that he would not have the support of the Official Opposition for this "new creature", that he would not have the support of the provinces, because we had decided to give that source of revenue to the provinces—and we are glad we did so—and so, in the circumstances, the Minister is blaming the provinces, while he should be apologizing to the provinces instead of blaming them for being opposed to his system. Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask the Minister once more, and I will do so right now: How much public money will have to be spent to bail out an organization whose only purpose is to find jobs for partisans and Liberal friends?

Mr. Peterson: Louder!

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Joliette wants to put on a show, I can do that too! However, my responsibilities would not permit—I have just informed the House that the Canadian Government has made available the sum of $10.5 million under the legislation creating the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation. I have just informed the Hon. Member for Joliette, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I have yet to receive a request for—So if you are smart enough to understand, which I doubt, this means that the full $10.5 million has not yet been spent. Is that what you want to know? Since they did not ask—But I can say furthermore—In any case, we are not going to be as lavish as you were, when you gave the provinces $500 million and kept only $35 million for the federal Government—We need money to meet our commitments to Calgary. The people of Calgary and of Canada—

Mr. La Salle: There are other ways!

Mr. Olivier: —believe in the Olympics! We, Mr. Speaker, believe in amateur sport! We believe in medical research! As for the Hon. Members opposite, they are indulging in a lot of rhetoric to destroy the credibility of a Corporation—In any case, I would invite the Hon. Member to read the Corporation's press release. The Corporation says quite clearly how employees were hired and how contracts were signed. The Hon. Member was afraid of referring to it.

Mr. La Salle: That is false!

Mr. Olivier: The Opposition will never refer to it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn).

TRADE

IMPORT QUOTAS FOR JAPANESE MANUFACTURED AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. We in this Party are bitterly disappointed over the Minister's weak-kneed approach to Japanese automotive imports for 1984-85. Why did the Minister not demand a greater investment commitment on the part of Japanese automobile manufacturers than the almost negligible promise, in today's terms, of $100 million and 350 jobs, if we are lucky, by the end of this decade? Why was the Minister not stronger in his arguments?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member asked that question. I am also delighted that he showed to the public his lack of understanding of how to approach a very difficult question such as international negotiations on the level of car imports into our country.

The Hon. Member must keep several things in mind. First, we are a trading nation which exports more than it imports. Second, we sell far more to Japan than we buy from them. They are an important and growing market, creating jobs for Canadian workers. I want him to recognize that in continuing the voluntary agreement with the Japanese I wanted to achieve a level which would keep pressure on them to continue the very good start they have made with negotiations in this country.

It is all very easy for the Hon. Member to second guess. This is the first time the Japanese have started to invest and create Canadian jobs by manufacturing in Canada. This was negotiated by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and is a big step forward.

Finally, he must keep in mind that this is not totally a one-sided thing. I have protected the Canadian workers with this level. I have also given Canadian consumers some continuing choice. They have the ability to buy Japanese cars if they choose to do so. That is the sort of world in which we should live.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, the Minister appeared so upset in giving his answer that I know very well he is not convinced that what he says is right. The Minister knows that he has not been bargaining with the strength he should have been bargaining with for the past four years. Japan has the most closed and most protected market in the world. I do not know why the Minister is not on top of it.

LEVEL OF JAPANESE INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister for International Trade. Why could the Minister not work out a deal with the Japanese who have over 20 per cent of our market, similar to the one Renault and AMC have entered into in Brampton where that company is prepared to invest $750 million and directly create 1,800 new jobs as opposed to 350, plus another 4,200 spin-off jobs in the steel and other related industries? Why could the Minister not get as tough with the Japanese as they are with us? Has he ever tried to sell a Canadian made washing machine in Tokyo?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to hire the Hon. Member as a salesman. That is the last thing I would do. He needs to learn, first, that Rome was not built in a day, and, second, that American Motors were already here.

I want to refer the Hon. Member to the statements of satisfaction with the quota I negotiated, from Ford and the other Canadian car companies. I think I would go by their judgment sooner than I would go by the Hon. Member's. I am glad to see the Hon. Member gave credit to what the Minister of DRIE did in relation to the Brampton deal. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that was a case where AMC was already in the country. In relation to the Japanese, we now have the Honda deal in Ontario and we have a wheel plant in British Columbia. We have the Japanese using more Canadian parts including Michelin Tires from Nova Scotia. We are making some real progress.

Yes, Japan has been a very closed market, but it is a market that is opening up—

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Mr. Regan: —and it is offering more opportunity for our sales each time that it opens a bit more. I think we are bringing things along well, and at the same time we are putting first the interests of the Canadian workers in the automotive industry and providing a level of protection.

IMPACT OF AUTOMOBILE IMPORTS ON JOBS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): I have a final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister has been failing for four years. He has achieved peanuts.

Mr. Nystrom: The peanut man.

Mr. Blackburn: When will the Minister ask the Japanese when they will give back those 20,000 jobs which they have taken from the auto industry and the auto parts industry? That is the question I am putting to the Minister.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should keep in mind the fact that this Government turned the economy around in such a way that 25,000 Canadian automotive workers were recalled last year.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: The industry is right down.

Mr. Nielsen: It is right on its backside.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: That is the first thing I want to say to the Hon. Member. The next thing I want him to do is to take some time this summer to understand the flow of multilateral trade. As a country that has such a large trade balance in relation to our exports as against our imports, if we are going to say to every country: "Well, let us trade back the jobs that used to be in the other direction", then we will lose badly. We are creating many more jobs by our exports than our imports are costing us.

THE OLYMPIC GAMES

CALGARY WINTER OLYMPICS—IMPACT OF CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION ON FUNDING

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. I want to inquire about what is going to happen to the Calgary Olympics. While the Government initially told the International Olympic Committee that it would guarantee funding for the Calgary Olympics, it subsequently said that such funding would depend upon the revenue from the sports pool. Given that the sports pool appears to be a money sump rather than a money maker, could the Minister tell the House just what effect this will have on the Calgary Olympics?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that we were one of the first Governments to endorse Calgary's bid to host the 1988 Olympic Games. We were the first Government to make a $200 million public commitment on behalf of the Calgary Olympic Games and, along with the residents of that city, we promised that the 1988 Olympic Games will be a success on the national and international scenes. What I fail to understand is that people who hail from Calgary and western Canada are trying to discredit that source of revenue and simply do not want any national Government to promote the Calgary Olympic Games. That I cannot understand. What I do understand, however, is that the media have launched a petty political campaign against Calgary and the people of western Canada.

[English]

REQUEST FOR FUNDING GUARANTEE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. What I would like from this Minister, Mr. Speaker, is a guarantee, the kind of guarantee which this Party has given, that the Calgary Olympics will receive the necessary funding, that they will not have to depend upon the Sports Pool Corporation, the bungling of this Minister, or these grits at the hog trough, the pork barrel, who are running the sports pool and costing us millions. Will the Minister make a simple commitment that the Government will guarantee the Calgary Olympics will have the necessary funding, regardless of what happens to the Minister's sports pool?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, this Government has set up a program aimed at helping the Calgary Olympic Games through either Olympic coins, stamps or sports pools. This Government does honour its commitments and we have signed a contract with the Calgary-1988 organization committee to promote those Olympic Games. We have promised to come up with $200 million and, as a responsible Government, we intend to abide by our contract.

POOLS

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—FUNDING REQUIREMENTS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Parliament has voted $10.5 million to the care of the Minister for the sports pool. There is evidence that money has gone. There is evidence to indicate that the losses will exceed $25 million a year. What the Minister does not understand is that he is accountable to Parliament for that money.

Mr. Crombie: Right.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: That is the issue, Mr. Speaker. We have a right, indeed we have an obligation, to ask this incompetent Minister how much more money will Parliament be required to vote to bail out the Minister and the sports pool.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is not going to get a better answer to his question by calling me incompetent. I do not deny the Opposition its right to know the facts. However, I do deny the Opposition the right to try and discredit this Corporation. I recognize the rights of the Opposition. I recognize the right of the House of Commons to be informed. What I object to is, that the Opposition should knowingly discredit . . . And as soon as the Opposition decides to act responsibly, clear and specific answers will be forthcoming.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the Minister does not seem to understand that this Corporation was discredited the day it started, because it was in violation of a federal-provincial agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: That is what the Minister does not understand.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I ask the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, Sir, if he has nothing to hide will he agree to a parliamentary inquiry into this slush pool, at a time when millions of dollars are being squandered and when 800,000 young people out there are crying for jobs?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I have just said it again and I shall say it a third time . . . Pursuant to the Act, we have made a commitment to spend $10.5 million. We have complied with the Act and we shall continue to do so. Furthermore, as far as job creation is concerned, we are among the governments that have spent the most on job creation for young people. We spent $1.2 billion! So I do not think Hon. Members should start confusing youth and the sports pool. Youth has never been involved in the sports pool. What you are trying to do is to . . . athletes across Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Olivier: —You are denying their right to have an income! What you are saying is that we reneged on an agreement made in 1979. Mr. Speaker, we maintain that we have observed and are observing the 1979 agreement. The proof is that we created the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation. We knew right away that if we observed the agreement, it would be easier than having just a lottery.

Mr. La Salle: You are competing with the provinces!

Mr. Olivier: —You will see for yourself that it is not a lottery, it is a sports pool and it is harder to do.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—RED CROSS MONITORING OF PUNJAB SITUATION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the situation in the Punjab. The Minister may know that at present there are two delegates from the International Committee of the Red Cross in New Delhi monitoring the situation in the Punjab very closely. They will soon determine if there is a need for humanitarian and relief efforts by the International Red Cross. Has the Minister been in touch with the Canadian Red Cross on this matter and is Canada prepared to give assistance to these humanitarian and relief efforts?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been, obviously like the Hon. Member, monitoring the situation in the Punjab. We are quite distressed at the developments, particularly the situation that may affect the Canadians who are in that area.

• (1440)

The Hon. Member knows that this is basically a matter for the Government of India; it is an internal matter. Certainly we would be sympathetic, as we have been in the past, to lending our help on humanitarian grounds where there is an international move to do that. If this happened in the Punjab, we would certainly apply the same generous principles as we have in the past.

REQUEST THAT DEPORTATION ORDERS BE STAYED

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Sepaker, perhaps the Minister, in reply to my second question, will tell us what communication there has been with the Government of India concerning Canadians in the area. Then, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I wonder if I could direct my second question—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has one supplementary question.

Ms. Jewett: I will direct my second question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As he knows, there are a number of Sikhs in Canada facing deportation. Could the Government assure us that while the violence in the Punjab continues those deportation orders will be stayed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on that precise point it is a matter I would have to draw to the attention of the Minister responsible for immigration procedures. While we are dealing with that subject, I should add that the Government of India has advised us that it will require visas for Canadians entering that country. That rule will apply on June 15.

Obviously we have been following the situation in the Punjab with respect to Canadians. There are, known to us, about 50 Canadians in that area. It has been declared a restricted area. It may be that the Indian Government will ask people not to remain in the area. We have no reason to believe at the moment that there is any cause for apprehension about Canadians in the Punjab.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

HIRING OF PENSIONERS—REQUEST THAT STUDENTS BE EMPLOYED

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Last Friday I asked the Acting Prime Minister if he would look into the practice of CN hiring back pensioned off employees to look after running trade operations in western Canada in the movement of grain. I pointed out at that time that CNR was not, as was its usual practice, hiring students, or young people trying to get into the labour force. Will the Minister of Labour investigate my accusation, get in touch with CNR, ask it to desist in this practice, and to hire young people and students who normally seek summer jobs on the CNR?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, indeed it is a surprising policy on the part of CNR. I will bring the representations of the Hon. Member to the attention of the Minister of Transport. I am sure the Minister of Transport will discuss this matter with CNR officials and will report to him and the House as soon as possible.

POOLS

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—FINANCIAL POSITION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the amateur sports Minister. Does he know how much the sports pool has been losing per week?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting with the Chairman of the Board of Directors last Friday, and I met the Chairman of the Corporation this week. I am therefore familiar with the operations of this Corporation.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: We are making progress, Mr. Speaker. I might add that the Government has managed to do the impossible. It has found a Minister who makes the Minister of National Revenue look good by comparison.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CORPORATION'S LOSSES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister this simple question? What have been the losses of the sports pool to date?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, to evaluate budget operations, to evaluate the operations of a business on the basis of the first or second quarter, and over a year . . . We shall certainly act responsibly as a Government and table the annual report at the appropriate time. You will then have all the figures, and you will have a chance to challenge them.

[English]

REQUEST THAT AUDITOR GENERAL BE AUTHORIZED TO AUDIT CORPORATION'S BOOKS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. It follows on the ones of my colleagues. This is a very serious matter. There is hard evidence with respect to the losses being sustained by the sports pool. If he feels the House of Commons, or a committee thereof, is too political to look at the books of the sports pool, will he agree to giving the Auditor General approval and authority immediately to conduct a full auditing of the operations of the sports pool and to report back to the House of Commons? Will he do the honourable thing and show that he has nothing to hide?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the question put by my hon. friend opposite is strictly based on gratuitous statements. It is hearsay, and if he had any proof of bad faith or anything like that, we would be willing to investigate.

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT AUDIT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, we have given the Minister at least 15 opportunities this afternoon to say that the sports pool is not losing a substantial amount of money. If he stands in his place and tells us that the sports pool is making money, or breaking even, that is one thing. This is not the SIU; the Minister will understand what I am talking about. Will he please allow the Auditor General to make an independent audit and report to the House of Commons? Only then will the people of Canada feel reassured, because the Minister has been evasive in attempting not to answer the questions we have put to him in a very direct way.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people are going to understand that, considering the really insidious approach taken by the provinces . . . it is difficult in an area where there is so much competition, where the provinces have almost doubled their marketing expenditures just to deprive people of their income because they agreed to sell tickets for us, you will understand that Canadians are going to be much smarter than the Progressive Conservatives. They will understand that we cannot give out figures just like that, in public, which would provide ammunition for our competitors who want to destroy the sports pool. That is the real reason, because we believe in amateur sport, and we believe we must help the Calgary Games.

Mr. Speaker, that is why Canadians are going to realize that in an area as competitive as this one, where the provinces, through their lotteries, are spending millions and millions of dollars to counter the sports pool and the federal Government's efforts to help amateur sport in Canada . . . Canadians will, in due time, pass judgment on Opposition Members who do not want us to help the people in Calgary or amateur sport or medical research or arts and culture.

Canadians are going to understand, and if you do not understand, I suggest you do something about it.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

REQUEST THAT AMENDING LEGISLATION BE PASSED BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. In regard to the passage of Bill C-34, which is important to the health, safety and lives of Canadian workers, the Minister is quoted as saying:

> If we pass it, it's on our record. If we don't pass it, because of the Conservatives opposing it, we'll go on the hustings and blame the Conservatives for denying these amendments in favour of the workers.

This response is based upon election politics rather than upon any real concern for the lives of workers. It is completely unacceptable. Will the Minister take the legislation which he has proposed to the House more seriously, and agree to a House order which will ensure its passage before we recess for the summer?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this is of course a matter that is open to debate and to interpretation, depending on which side of the House one happens to be. The Government's objective is indeed to have this Bill adopted, and I hope that next week, when the parliamentary committee is sitting, we shall have the co-operation of all members of the Committee, both Government and Opposition Members, and that we will be able to adopt this Bill before the end of June.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

[English]

Mr. Murphy: The quote obviously suggests that he is more concerned with politics than with the lives of workers.

STEPS IN THE LEGISLATIVE PROCESS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, let me point out the history. It took over four years for the Liberal Government to introduce this Bill in the House. It took another month before debate on the legislation was started. It took another week before the Minister would even appear before the committee. That leaves us with less than two weeks to pass the legislation. We also know that this legislation is not on the Government's priority list. With those facts, why should the workers of Canada believe that the Liberal Government cares one iota for their lives, their safety, or for the health of unborn children of women workers?

● (1450)

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if we consider the work done by Parliament in the last few years and the last few months, it is clear that both the Progressive Conservative Opposition and the New Democratic Party have systematically held up the business of Parliament. Remember the bells. Remember the endless delay involved in adopting major bills involving the patriation of the Constitution and energy measures, and even now, the New Democratic Party is holding up the Security Bill. Mr. Speaker, if the NDP had any sense at all, it would let my colleague's Bill be adopted in the House and we could then proceed with the legislation for protection of workers.

POOLS

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—PROJECTED FUNDING FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport. One of the issues that he used to bring some credibility to the ill-conceived sports pool was medical research. From his present projections, how much money will be given to medical research from the sports pool?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, as provided for in the legislation approved by this House, our commitment is very clear, that is to provide assistance to the Calgary Olympics in the amount of $200 million and to subsidize the arts, culture and medical research. Depending on the revenue produced by the sports pool, this money will be distributed equitably, and in addition, we shall first discharge our commitment with respect to the Calgary Olympics.

REQUEST THAT HIRING CONTRACTS BE TABLED

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, obviously there is no money for medical research because the Minister is losing money on the sports pool. It is incredible that this Government can run a lottery and even lose money on that. Does the Minister now agree with the chairman of the Medical Research Council of Canada that they are not expecting any money or planning on any money because they know they will not get any money? I would like the Minister to confirm that. Also, will he table for us the names of people who were hired by the sports pool and, in particular, the contracts of service?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, let me simply remind the Hon. Member opposite that this Government has already committed $170 million to medical research. He said we are doing nothing for medical research, but I have given him an example of what we are doing.

Second, we have already allocated this year $17 million from the revenue produced to arts and culture. Before claiming that there will be no money left for these activities, the Hon. Member should perhaps do his research properly!

Third, what I want to say once again is that the Members opposite are trying to destroy the credibility of the sports pool by saying there is pork barrelling and that the organization employs only friends of the party in power. I shall simply refer them to the press release published last week by the Chairman of the Canada Sports Pool Corporation wherein he describes at length how the 90 permanent staff members of the Canada Sports Pool Corporation were hired and interviewed and how the other 300 casual workers were hired following advertisements placed in newspapers. All this information was very clear and specific, and the problem is that the Members opposite do not want to understand and are refusing to tell the truth in order to gain political points even though they are systematically denying amateur sport the right to survive in Canada on a national level. Simply said, what they want is to give back to their provincial friends all the commitments and the net income of $500 million they can obtain through lotteries, while, for our part, we do not have any lotteries, just a sports pool!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TERMINATE POOL OPERATIONS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport. The Minister said a few minutes ago that the Conservative Party was discrediting amateur sports in Canada. As a former Canadian Olympian, I resent such a stupid remark by the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: It is the Minister and the Liberal administration that are discrediting sport right across this country by continually tying it to gambling operations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Will the Minister do the honourable thing, terminate this phoney tax on the poor, a sports pool corporation which obviously is not working, and begin helping amateur sports in Canada by collecting funds in a more honourable way, such as I recommended to him personally in the past, through increased development fees by way of the private sector, and other honourable ways, and scrap this ill-fated nonsense?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, considering that the Hon. Member is supposed to be quite familiar with amateur sport for having been an active and worthy participant in the past, I am surprised that he should be unaware that even the Canadian Olympic Association has censured the Opposition for its attempts to discredit sports pools, and that last week the COA issued a press release in favour of sports pools. So what happens to those people? Secondly, I must remind the House that this Government gave the most generous contribution and the strongest guarantee ever offered, so that Calgary would play host to the Olympic Games in 1988. It is also this Government which will pay the lion's share to send our athletes to Los Angeles. Our Government also played its part by creating programs to help amateur sports throughout Canada. I am surprised that a question should come from him, for in principle he ought not to repudiate his origins. On the contrary, he should try to make his colleagues understand that when he discredits the corporation, he also discredits amateur sports and, in so doing, he casts a slur upon our athletes. Our athletes deserve more respect, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

ALTERNATIVE SPORTS FINANCING

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, the Minister misunderstands what I am trying to say. I resent the fact, as do athletes, that the Government is continually tying gambling operations to sports. It should not be doing that. I want to explain to the Minister, if he does not understand it, and I do not think he does, that a lot of tax dollars are being spent on developing amateur athletes in this country and not enough of the development fees are coming back. In skating, for example, a lot of our skaters are trained in Canada at the expense of the taxpayer, and then go to the United States to perform in professional ice shows. Why are we not getting development fees from professional ice shows, professional tennis organizations, and right across the board? That is the way to collect money for amateur sport, and that is the way to help the Calgary Olympics.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand the Hon. Member since Canadians are all in favour of Commonwealth Games, Canada Games, Pan-American Games or Olympic Games. But Hon. Members opposite always speak out against providing funds for amateur athletes. Those people deserve more respect, much more respect. We have assumed our responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, and we have set up programs for our athletes, the best in North America, because all we want is to encourage them to make a name for themselves on the international scene. We need money to do that, Mr. Speaker. Members opposite are first when it comes to denying the fact that a Canadian Government anxious to promote international competition has the right to seek funds willingly given by people who respect a law passed by the Canadian Government. That is one field where you rank first.

ENERGY

FEDERAL AGREEMENT WITH NOVA SCOTIA—DISCUSSIONS WITH GOVERNMENT OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to switch from dealing with one sleaze-bag situation to dealing with another. Were federal negotiators, including the Minister of Energy and the present Minister of Finance, instructed by the Government to tell the Newfoundland Government that the Nova Scotia offshore agreement signed in March, 1982, was complete as described, while in fact there was a secret clause that gave the Province of Nova Scotia certain special rights with regard to equalization? Were the Ministers instructed to misinform the Newfoundland Government, or did they lie to the Newfoundland Government on their own hook?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do know that exactly the same type of deal was offered to Newfoundland as that which was offered to Nova Scotia. That deal was the same, including any agreements which are made between the Governments and including any written or verbal instructions. In so far as the details of it are concerned, I would have to ascertain them from the Minister.

Certainly nothing was offered to Nova Scotia by way of revenues or by way of equalization treatment which was not also offered to Newfoundland. Therefore, it would seem to me that the Hon. Member's language was a bit excessive when he spoke of lying. I do not know if he was talking about his Premier or not, but if he was talking about any of my Ministers I can deny it categorically.

DETAILS OF OFFER MADE TO NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, so the Prime Minister will understand the question, the statement was that the federal negotiators, including the present Minister of Energy, solemnly told the Government of Newfoundland that the federal-Nova Scotia offshore agreement that was published and signed in March, 1982, was the entire agreement and that there was no more to it than that. However, it turned out several weeks ago, when the documents were tabled in this House, there was a secret side agreement dealing with the phasing out of tax equalization.

Did the Prime Minister instruct, or did the Government instruct these Ministers to keep this matter secret and to misinform—I will not use the word "lie"—or deceive the Newfoundland Government? This is a most important matter about which the Government of Newfoundland indicates that it was not told. It was told that the entire agreement was already publicly revealed, when it was not. If that is the case, could the Prime Minister tell us how there could be any agreement between those two Governments when the Prime Minister's negotiators have completely destroyed any good faith that might have existed, by using such tactics?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had understood the question. I wish the Hon. Member had understood my answer. I already answered the question which he has just repeated.

Mr. Crosbie: Will he check it out?

Mr. Trudeau: I do not have to check it out, Mr. Speaker. I do know that anything offered to Nova Scotia by way of a written agreement or by way of a side agreement on equalization was also offered to Newfoundland.

Mr. Crosbie: That is not true.

Mr. Trudeau: If the Hon. Member has been told something to the contrary, he has been told a falsehood.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister agree to a public inquiry in order to establish the facts? They don't like the truth on that side.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

AGRICULTURE

FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: The fourth report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture was presented to the House yesterday. In its report, the committee recommends that the Government give consideration to the advisability of introducing a new royal recommendation at the report stage of Bill C-33, an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act, and that the Government consider the comments made in committee relating to proposed amendments. The question is whether it is within the competence of a standing committee to make such a recommendation when its order of reference is a Bill.

The governing authority is Citation 621(2) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which reads as follows:

> A committee is bound by, and is not at liberty to depart from, the Order of Reference. Bourinot, p. 469. In the case of a committee upon a bill, the bill committed to it is itself the Order of Reference to the committee, which must report it with or without amendment to the House.

In the view of the Chair, there is no room for doubt or question about this citation, and it has been reinforced on numerous occasions.

I would also refer the House to a ruling made by my predecessor, Madam Speaker Sauvé, who ruled on a similar procedural difficulty on June 29, 1983, as follows:

> I want to remind Members of all committees considering Bills referred to them by the House of Citation 783 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition:
> "There is no authority that a committee of the House, when considering a bill, should report anything to the House except the bill itself".

The Agriculture Committee did just that in its Fifth Report presented yesterday. There are other procedural avenues for the consideration of such substantive proposals, but this cannot be done by way of a report from any committee studying a Bill. Therefore, I have no alternative but to declare the Fourth Report of the Standing Committee on Agriculture out of order and consequently it cannot be received.

PETITION

MR. STEVENS—HOME MAIL DELIVERY IN BOLTON, ONTARIO

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, the petition of the undersigned residents of the Town of Bolton in the Province of Ontario, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that although we the undersigned presently pay full postage rates, there is no home mail delivery; that although communities of equal size have home mail service, there has never been home mail delivery in Bolton.

Wherefore we the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the residents of Bolton receive home mail delivery. It is unfair, and indeed unjust, that Bolton should be denied equal treatment with other communities of equal size. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray. It is signed by several hundred petitioners and dated today.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 50, 500, 513 and 545.

CRISIS CENTRES

Question No. 50—Mr. Howie:

In the fiscal year (a) 1981-82 (b) 1982-83, did the Department of National Health and Welfare have any studies done regarding crisis centres by (i) departmental employees (ii) outside consultants?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): (a) (i) No. (ii) No.

(b) (i) No. (ii) Yes. In 1982-83, the National Clearinghouse on Family Violence entered into two contractual agreements with outside consultants to conduct two projects related to crisis centres.

The first project, conducted by Mrs. Jean McKay, began in May, 1982, and is scheduled to end April 1, 1984. It is comprised of a survey of all Canadian transition houses for battered women and their children. A report is expected in late summer of 1984.

The second project, conducted by Miss Jeanne Molgat, began in October, 1982 and is scheduled to end April 1, 1984. It consists of gathering information on resources for victims of wife assault, and completing data on crisis services, including police-based family crisis intervention teams, local crisis centres, crisis telephone lines and other crisis related services. Data will be available by June, 1984.

STUDIES RELATING TO ILLEGAL USE OF DRUGS

Question No. 500—Mr. Howie:

Did the Department of National Health and Welfare conduct any studies relating to the illegal use of drugs and, if so (a) were any of them conducted by a person or persons outside the Department and, if so, what is a list of the name or names of all such persons (b) on what date will the studies be completed (c) at what cost?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes. In January/February, 1983, the Department of National Health and Welfare carried out a survey of use and attitudes towards marijuana, alcohol and tobacco among Canadian young people. About one third of this study related to illegal drugs.

(a) Yes, the study was conducted under contract by the Canadian Gallup Poll Ltd. (b) The study was completed in March, 1983. (c) The total cost of the entire study was $73,000.

ABORTION COMMITTEES IN CANADIAN HOSPITALS

Question No. 513—Mr. Howie:

On the last date for which information is available, to the knowledge of the Government how many Canadian hospitals had abortion committees, and how many did not?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Committee on the Operation of Abortion Law (appointed by the Privy Council, September 29, 1975 and chaired by Robin Badgley) issued its report which indicated that 271 hospitals had established therapeutic abortion committees by the end of 1976. The report also noted that 288 hospitals did not establish therapeutic abortion committees even though they were eligible to do so. These 559 eligible hospitals were viewed in the report against the total number of non-military hospitals in 1976 which was assessed at 1,348.

The latest data obtained from Statistics Canada (Institutional Statistics Section) pertains to 1982. In this year there were 1,218 non-military hospitals in Canada of which 261 maintained therapeutic abortion committees. No information is available on the number of non-military hospitals that were eligible for such committees in 1982.

HYDROGEN AS AN ENERGY FUEL

Question No. 545—Mr. Howie:

Are any studies or research projects now under way relating to the use of hydrogen as an energy fuel?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed as follows:

In so far as the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned: The Federal Government supports a number of studies and research projects relating to hydrogen as an energy fuel. These are funded through the Inter-departmental Panel on Energy Research and Development. EM&R directly supports work in hydrogen/air fuel cell research at CANMET (Canada Centre for Mineral and Energy Technology) with an annual funding of $600,000.

In so far as the National Research Council is concerned: The national research and development program on hydrogen is managed by the National Research Council and is supported by National Energy Program funds. The amount spent in 1983-84 was $4.5M. This was almost entirely spent on work outside the National Research Council through a system of directed contracts. A status report of the program has been issued in a National Research Council publication number 21081, April 1983, entitled "Hydrogen and Energy Storage, Federal Energy R&D Program."

Considerable world-wide interest also exists in hydrogen energy. Canada participates in task-shared programs of the International Energy Agency and chairs the International Energy Agency Executive Committee on hydrogen.

In so far as the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council is concerned: The total expenditures for 1983-84 for research projects relating to the use of hydrogen as energy fuel are:

Operating Grants	$ 54,017	(4 grants)
Strategic Grants	255,009	(6 grants)
PRAI (Project Research Applicable in Industry)	55,475	(1 grant)
Total	$364,501	(11 grants)

In so far as Transport Canada is concerned: Transport Canada recently completed a Hydrogen Bus Project contracted to Urban Transportation Development Corporation. The project report, dated June 30, 1983, is entitled "Hydrogen Fuel Cell for High Capacity Buses". Transport Canada also recently completed a study of the use of hydrogen in fuel cells contracted to the University of Toronto. The project report, dated January, 1983, is entitled, "To Study Canadian Fuel Cell Development Strategy: Definition of Fuel Cell Design Macro Parameters and Selection of Design Concepts (1981-82)". No other studies are currently under way.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 12, consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Robinson) (Burnaby).

Mr. Speaker: First, the Chair would like to make a ruling on a point raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr.

Lambert). Then the Chair would like to hear argument on the point of order stemming from the remarks made by the Chair yesterday.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, if you will note, I indicated to the Deputy Speaker that I might wish to add further remarks before there was a ruling. At that time, I had an indication that in 1970 your predecessor, Mr. Lamoureux, had discussed this matter. He had not made a ruling, I say with the greatest respect to Your Honour. Our former colleague from Crowfoot objected at that time to committee reports being one month late, which was frustrating the work of the Agriculture Committee in drafting reports and in considering legislation. The then Hon. Member for Lotbinière, who was Leader of the Social Credit Party, had also indicated that, because of that Party's representation in the House, members of his Party were not members of many committees and, therefore, could not participate in the discussion of legislation because the committee reports were so far behind. I am not alleging that committee reports are far behind now. At that time the delay was one month. If one refers to the discussions at the time, in May of 1970, one finds that I raised a question with regard to the Finance Committee and the tax proposals which we were then considering.

I take it this way. First of all, yesterday, those of us who are not members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs had no knowledge of the amendments, discussions or attitudes taken by the members of the committee, including the government Members. We are as entitled as any other individual. Every Member of the House has the right to examine and speak. That right must be protected by the Chair.

It has been seriously suggested sometimes by administrative officials and others that Hon. Members can go into the administrative catacombs of the House of Commons, to the committee section, and look at the "blues", which are the typescripts that may be on file, or they may use the telephone. Sir, I reject out of hand the notion that these are facilities available to Members to enable them to do their jobs properly.

Few, if any of my colleagues, could deal yesterday with Bill C-9 and the amendments which were put forward at report stage. May I say that the rules specifically provide that a committee report shall be filed and that within 24 hours before the debate is taken up on that report, Members have the opportunity of putting amendments. How can they learn of amendments if they were not members of the committee and if they have no printed reports? How can they possibly introduce any amendments? Any Member has the right to introduce an amendment. It is not limited to a specific Member, to the critic or to someone else from the Party. This is the right of every Member of the House. It is on that point that I raised this matter yesterday.

I fully understand that, perhaps, today I am in an academic situation because the four delinquent reports which were missing yesterday were delivered to my office this morning. That is all very well. That has dealt with that situation as of now, except for this: The debate having started on report stage, Members are precluded from introducing any further amendments, which they have the right to do. However, they did not have the information because the committee report—the evidence—was not available to them.

This situation may arise again on another Bill in which we are at present interested. Sir, I serve notice right now that I will watch this situation very carefully. It is my contention, and this was the intention of the procedure committee of which I was an integral member in 1969. The House procedure was changed with respect to sending legislation to committees and with respect to Bills being reported back by the requirement that a 48-hour time period elapse between the presentation of the report and the commencement of any debate. It also provided for a 24-hour period with regard to amendments.

It was patently clear at that time that the committee chairman's report would have to contain the evidence. Reference to that was made in the report. It is not sufficient, particularly with this Bill when a stack of documentation which is perhaps two feet high if not more is tabled with a committee report. It is appended, it is included and it should be there. I repeat that it is not satisfactory. As a matter of fact, I would almost term it a sort of self-serving cop-out for anyone to suggest that Hon. Members could have reference to the typescripts which exist somewhere in the committees branch, or that one could resort to the telephone and make inquiries from a clerk in the committees branch in order to find out the necessary information.

I submit that I have a true point of privilege with respect to my ability to work as a Member in this House. That ability is being impeded and infringed upon by the non-availability of the printscipts of committee evidence which accompany a chairman's report on a Bill.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my comments will not be lengthy, however, I wanted to rise in support of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). As we all know, he is a former Speaker—one of your predecessors in the Chair—to whom I pay a lot of attention, as we all do.

I wanted to make an additional observation with respect to the circumstances in this particular case. It will make the point made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West even more germane and appropriate as a question of privilege. In this particular instance, the circumstance which developed was unprecedented in committee history, to my knowledge. Only those Members who attended the committee sittings had direct knowledge of and access to the information. The only way in which the rest of us could have had an opportunity to determine what had transpired, would have been if we had received a transcript of the proceedings of the committee. The Chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, who ultimately submitted his report with respect to the deliberations of that committee, in fact unilaterally moved to impose—without any authority under the rules—closure on the debate within the committee.

The point which is being made is that in normal proceedings in which there is no controversy or limitation on the part of Members to debate amendments, that is one situation. That is bad enough. However, when time allocation was imposed unilaterally by the chairman,—a distinguished Member of Parliament, whom I respect and admire as a colleague—I believe that was wrong in this instance. I find, under those circumstances, a situation which very seriously limits the ability of Members of the House of Commons to carry out their responsibilities.

If there had been full and unfettered debate in committee, we could, perhaps, rest assured that all the motions for amendments at report stage could have been dealt with by representatives of the Parties at committee. However, we did not have an opportunity of seeing how far the debate went. It was limited to five minutes or ten minutes for interventions with respect to each of these amendments. There was a severe and strict time limitation placed on them.

I brought this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, to show you what happens and what some of the difficulties are which arise when the Government rushes ahead to bring in legislation before we have had a full opportunity of carrying out, as parliamentarians, our right to file motions for amendment. I brought to your attention what has transpired with respect to amendments which were tabled in time, last Friday, by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) with the Journals Branch of the House of Commons. And what happened? The Journals Branch made a decision to deal with the very plentiful amendments and proposals put forward by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Nystrom: He is a good Member.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) says he is a good Member. What he did was to take all his amendments from committee, dump them in the laps of the people in the Journals Branch and say, "Fix them up and put them into proper form so they will be available for the Order Paper". I can understand the feeling of frustration of the people in the Journals Branch after receiving that kind of order. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, on the other hand, worked hard and long to make sure that his motions—I believe that to be the case—were in proper order so that they could be accepted by the Journals Branch and by the Table, by way of motions for the Order Paper, with very little attention necessary. There was a lot of work which went into the motions for amendment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The point which I am making now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: We are on a point of order. The Chair cannot hear an interruption of one point of order by another point of order. The Chair will attempt to hear systematically and in sequence Hon. Members dealing with points of order. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West has the floor.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To make a long story short, Mr. Speaker, what happened was that our motions, which were put in by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, were just simply not dealt with by the Journals Branch. We were informed that it did not have enough man hours or time in which to deal with these matters. So they were somehow arbitrarily put over. They appeared in the Votes and Proceedings on the subsequent day, which was Tuesday. They were dated Monday.

So this had two consequences. First, as I pointed out to Your Honour, by virtue of that decision by the Journals Branch, had the Government decided to move on Monday—which is its right, I suggest to you, and I pointed out the authority under our rules—to proceed with this business on Monday, we would have been precluded from having the motions or amendments on that day. That did not transpire. However, I say to you, Sir, that this is endemic—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has made a very specific point. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West has got something else out of his system, but he is not really dealing with the point made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I was just getting to that. I was just clearing my throat.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will deal with the Hon. Member for Burnaby as soon as the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West has concluded his remarks.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The point I am making, Mr. Speaker—and I wanted to get this in perspective because I feel there is an analogy in terms of what my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, suggested here—in terms of the privileges of Hon. Members of the House of Commons, is that in order to deal with any Bill which comes before us, we should be able to be assured of our complete and absolute rights as independent Members of Parliament. Part of that involves, of course, having access to the transcripts of committees which dealt with the legislation in question. I say to you, Your Honour, that the reason I raised this other matter is that it was another situation in which, it seems to me, we were very close to having our rights prejudiced in carrying out our duties as Members of Parliament by virtue of the Government bringing in this legislation before there was a full and adequate opportunity, administratively, for officials of the House of Commons to have carried out their responsibilities with regard to committee transcripts and to have dealt with motions sent to the Journals Branch on time and in proper form.

I simply conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that there are very few instances where legitimate questions of privilege arise, and they deal with circumstances, as you well know, where there is clear and unequivocal evidence of Hon. Members of the House of Commons being somewhat limited or thwarted in carrying out their responsibilities. Sometimes these are external circumstances where people actually prevent other people from coming to the House of Commons. However, it is equally serious when we are prevented from carrying out our responsibilities as Members of Parliament by virtue of the fact that we do not have the information, or the administration is not up to providing us with information on legislation. Therefore, we do not have all the facts in our possession in order to deal adequately with the legislation before us.

I simply say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that I believe the point made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West is a most valid point. I believe it is one of which we should be cognizant in terms of this piece of legislation and any subsequent legislation which comes before the House.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) next, followed by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on this point of order.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, you have invited argument on an intended ruling you will make. I may not speak on exactly the same point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Let me get things straight. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West has raised a very separate and distinct point of order on which I was going to rule. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West wished to present further argument, which I have heard. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West more or less intervened on that point. I am quite prepared to hear argument relating to the other matter at an appropriate time. Is the Hon. Member for Burnaby prepared to intervene on the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West?

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the question of privilege which has been raised—I believe it is a question of privilege. It certainly touches the privileges of all Members of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: It has been raised as a point of order. I have not been asked to make a prima facie finding of privilege. It has been raised by the Hon. Member initially as a point of order and it has been considered by the Chair as a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I am sorry. It was my understanding that it was raised in the context of privilege. I wanted just to take a brief moment to support the question of order or privilege which has been raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) because, of course, it goes to the very foundation of the consideration of this legislation which is before the House at the present time. I would note, as the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West, the distinguished House Leader of the Official Opposition, has already pointed out, that this particular report and the proceedings of the committee in these circumstances were extraordinary. It was at ten o'clock on Friday morning, Mr. Speaker, that the committee proceedings on Bill C-9 adjourned. For the previous two days, the committee had considered a series of amendments with strict limitations and, I might add, unprecedented limitations with respect to time. So the committee concluded its deliberations, Mr. Speaker, at ten o'clock on Friday morning, and at twelve o'clock, or shortly thereafter on Friday afternoon, the chairman of the committee tabled what purported to be the report of the committee.

I would note, as has already been suggested by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, that it was only late last night—and I was in my office at the time the proceedings were circulated—well after six o'clock, that Hon. Members of this House in fact received the transcripts in both French and English of four separate meetings of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs with respect to this Bill.

I would note as well that, pursuant to Standing Order 79(2), all amendments made in any committee shall be reported to the House. I certainly did not see the exact form of the report which was submitted to the House, but nevertheless—

Mr. Speaker: With all deference to the Hon. Member, I do not believe the facts are in dispute, as he is setting out. The issue before us is whether it is proper for the House to proceed with the legislative stages of a Bill in the absence of the committee evidence being distributed in the usual printed form. That is the matter before the House. Will the Hon. Member please direct his remarks to that problem?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Certainly, Mr. Speaker. As the Speaker is well aware, it is certainly the practice that proceedings of the committee are appended to the report of the committee so that Members attempting to draft amendments within the very strict time limits imposed will have some ability to do so. The circumstances are in many ways extraordinary. There is the unprecedented nature of the ruling in committee which resulted in the tabling of the report some two hours after the deliberations of the committee had been concluded. It was only last night that the transcripts of the committee proceedings were made available to all Members of Parliament. It was difficult, even for those of us who sat on the committee, to follow the somewhat tortured proceedings. Given all that, if there is to be an observance of both the spirit and the letter of the Standing Orders, Members such as the Hon. Member for Edmonton West should be given a further period of 24 hours within which to submit their amendments.

I note that we are on Motion No. 1 and I assume there will be some discussion on the Speaker's preliminary ruling with respect to the grouping of amendments. But that would not preclude the granting of what I consider to be the very important right of all Members of this House to submit amendments. A period of 24 hours should be granted so that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West and others who wish to peruse the transcripts of the committee—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is arguing for a change in the Standing Orders. The Standing Orders are quite clear about the period of time in which amendments may be presented. The concern which the Hon. Member for Edmonton West raises is the possibility of the House proceeding at report stage in the absence of transcripts. That is the very narrow point to which the Chair will address itself at this time.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, let me say in conclusion that I fully support the point made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West and I note that this is a precedent which should not be allowed to stand, particularly given the relatively short time limits for the submission of amendments. Those reports should be accompanied by the full transcript of the proceedings of the committee. I have suggested to the Speaker one means of ensuring that Members of this House, having perused the committee minutes, would be entitled to submit amendments. It is within the Speaker's powers to grant an order which would remedy what is clearly a flawed procedure, to assist Members of the House in peforming their duties of oversight of such an important piece of legislation.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has been arguing that he has not had enough time and that he needs a 24-hour extension. To me he is arguing, first of all, that he has not been assiduous, or he has not had the intelligence to do his homework in that period of time, neither of which points he would be prepared to admit to.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, besides speaking to the point of order I think it is appropriate that I bring out at this time more than just a point of order, in fact, my relationship to this Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please resume his seat? The Chair wants to make it very clear that there is a point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West. The Chair has been prepared to rule on that point and has heard further arguments. At this stage the Chair is not prepared to hear arguments on anything other than the very specific point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Yurko: Before addressing myself to that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to ask you if time will be available immediately afterwards to raise another matter which has concerned me considerably?

Mr. Speaker: Obviously after this point of order is decided, the House will be the master of its own fate concerning how its business will be handled. Obviously Hon. Members will have an opportunity to raise points of order as they are deemed appropriate.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, maybe I could just make a few points—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member at this stage please address himself strictly to the point of order of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Yurko: I will, Mr. Speaker. In my view, this Bill is of extreme importance, second only to the constitutional Bill. I have tried to get a transcript of the committee proceedings for a number of days so I could acquaint myself, as an independent Member, with the discussions in committee and some of the amendments proposed.

Mr. Speaker: The facts are very clear concerning the availability of transcripts. They were available yesterday, and sometime after six o'clock last night all the remaining transcripts were available, not before. The facts are not in dispute. The question is: Can the House proceed at report stage with the transcripts not being available? That is the issue.

Mr. Yurko: That is exactly the point I was trying to make, if you would just give me a few seconds. I have been trying to get those transcripts for days. They were not available until last night.

Mr. Kaplan: He just said that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: But he is an independent Member. He has a good point.

Mr. Yurko: They are voluminous. It is not possible to go through them in a matter of a few hours or days. I am simply saying that the suggestion that perhaps we should have another 24 hours is a good one, and I recommend that you give it serious consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair would like to thank the Hon. Member for Edmonton West and other Hon. Members who have participated in the discussion concerning the point of order relating to the publication of proceedings of the standing and other committees of the House.

May I briefly state that the issue raised by the Hon. Member is not new. He himself raised it before, on March 17, 1983. Frequently, Bills are reported with amendments by committees on the same day as they are adopted in committee. That was the case last Friday, and some of the proceedings and evidence of the standing committee to Bill C-9 were not yet available at 11 a.m. in their usual printed form. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West objected because he claimed there was "no proper printed record". The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) raised the question as to whether the debate could proceed since some issues of the committee proceedings were not available from the joint distribution branch.

First, let me say that the verbatim record was available in both languages on Monday morning through the Clerk of Committees or through the Journals Branch. Issues Nos. 38, 39, 40 and 41, in their usual printed form, were delivered to the offices of all Hon. Members last night. The Chair had intended to inform Members of the time the printed issues would be available before Private Members' Hour, but it took some time to obtain that information from the Printing Bureau. Normally, the proceedings of committees on Bills have first printing priority after the Order Paper, Votes and Proceedings and Hansard. I am sure that Hon. Members will understand that that in itself is a problem of some magnitude. However, may I reassure the Hon. Member that both the reprint of Bill C-9 and the entire committee proceedings related to that Bill were available to Members, albeit not in their usual printed form. In the circumstances, Bill C-9 was taken up for consideration at the report stage at the first opportunity allowed by the Standing Orders.

If a reprint of the said Bill had not been available or the proceedings of the committee had not been available, the Chair would certainly have informed the House and sought direction. The rules are silent on the form of publication. The Chair hesitates to rule that the proceedings and evidence of a committee must be in their usual printed form before debate on a Bill can proceed. Indeed, the decision to print is a power that belongs to the committees. Could it be argued that, if a committee decided to sit in camera and not to print its evidence, debate on a Bill could not proceed in the House at report stage? What if a printing were delayed by a natural disaster or strike? This is a question the Procedure and Organization Committee may wish to clarify when it meets, for the Standing Orders offer little guidance to the Chair.

There is, however, a precedent. I quote Mr. Speaker MacNaughton on March 17, 1965, as reported at page 12479 of Hansard: He said:

> The basic question is whether or not a bill in the House of Commons can be discussed, asssuming that the evidence has not been completely finished in its English and French printing. I have made a search of the records since confederation, and there is no case that says that a bill in the House of Commons which is up for discussion cannot be proceeded with until the evidence has been filed. If we were to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), emotionally pleasing as it may be, nevertheless procedurally in my opinion it would be completely wrong, and would establish a very bad precedent.

That is a ruling of Mr. Speaker MacNaughton.

The Chair would like to make one or two observations at this point. First, there has been an attempt to improve the printing of committee reports. The delays have been very substantially reduced. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West referred to delays of up to a month. I can remember that when I was first elected to the House that was far too usual a practice. Thanks to modern technology and improvements—I would like to think in the administation—the delays have now been reduced.

The present occupant of the Chair is sympathetic to the argument and the concern. I might add that I have not been in a rush to make any final decision, bearing in mind that these transcripts were not available. They were available sometime after six o'clock last night. I feel a little more comfortable about it. However, I really do feel uncomfortable when Hon. Members do not have the transcripts. However, I am guided by the precedent of Mr. Speaker MacNaughton. I am guided by the fact that the rules are silent as to the form of printing.

In the circumstances, I have to reject the point of order of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West following the decision of Mr. Speaker MacNaughton. For now the Chair will continue to ensure that, in these unusual circumstances, the manuscripts are made available to those who ask for them through the Clerk of Committees or the Journals Branch.

I can assure Hon. Members that every effort will be made to ensure that transcripts are available promptly in order that we can avoid this kind of situation. However, I can give no assurance that there will not be occasional situations. I understand that the major problem was a breakdown of a piece of printing equipment over the weekend at the Queen's Printer. However, we are conscious of the need for making the transcripts available with the absolute minimum of delay.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, in your consideration of this problem, would you take into account the fact that when Mr. Speaker MacNaughton made his ruling the rules did not apply as they do today? There was not a 48-hour and 24-hour requirement. That did not apply, and therefore I object to—

Mr. Speaker: I have the Hon. Member's—

Mr. Lambert: I did not address this point.

Mr. Speaker: I have the Hon. Member's point. The point of the Hon. Member concerns whether it is irregular for the House to proceed without the written transcript. I have dealt very narrowly with that question. I am aware that there is the additional question of the time in which amendments can be placed on the Table. Surely this is a matter in which the Chair will have to have some guidance from the Procedure and Organization Committee of the House. In the present circumstances the Chair is bound by the interpretation of the Standing Orders as I have indicated today.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I sincerely appreciate the sympathetic view that Your Honour takes with respect to this matter. On the basis of your very extensive experience as a Member of Parliament, I think you appreciate some of the frustrations that are experienced. I am sure that Members on all sides of the House will understand that our purpose is to ensure that we are fully able to carry out our responsibilities and to discuss matters in a proper and informed way.

Now that you have made your ruling, it is not my intention to comment further on it. Are we now proceeding with our presentations with respect to your preliminary statement of yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: At this stage the Chair will invite argument relating to the preliminary statement which I made yesterday. As indicated, the Chair has delayed as long as it seemed reasonable to do so. I hope Hon. Members are now prepared to make their arguments. The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Mr. Yurko: Question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko).

Security Intelligence Service

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which I think must be addressed at this time before you begin discussing the previous matter.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member is raising a question of privilege he must give notice in writing, unless it arises immediately out of proceedings of this day.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I gave notice—

Mr. Speaker: What is the Hon. Member's question of privilege?

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I gave notice to you on June 8.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member sent me a written notice. I called the question of privilege and the Hon. Member was not in his place that day. In fairness, the Hon. Member must observe the rules of the House.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please sit down? The Hon. Member gave written notice to the Chair of a question of privilege. That day the Chair very conscientiously called the Hon. Member for Edmonton East on the matter of which he had given notice. He was not in his place. The Hon. Member for Edmonton East.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that I walked up to you on that day and spoke to you privately about whether such a motion could be brought forward that day. You advised me that there was no way under the rules that you could deal with that question of privilege in the House on a matter which occurred in committee. That is why I was not in my place to brint it forth that day. Since the transcripts were tabled last night for the first time, this is my first opportunity to bring forth a question of privilege. I shall read to you Section 75 of Beauchesne.

Mr. Speaker: Let us have it very clear.

Mr. Yurko: I shall read section 75.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member will resume his seat. The Chair can take notice of a matter of privilege reported by a committee to the House. The Chair does not look behind proceedings of committees. To that extent, committees are masters of their own fate. The Chair advised the Hon. Member that it would be difficult for the Chair to find a prima facie case on the basis of the argument that he had put forward. That was by way of a preliminary indication to the Hon. Member. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that he can now raise—

Mr. Yurko: Yes I can.

Mr. Speaker: —a question of privilege based on a communication of June 8 to the Chair, the Chair is saying that that communication is no longer valid.

Mr. Yurko: Well—

Mr. Speaker: On what basis does the Hon. Member for Edmonton East rise?

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the basis of Citation 75 of Beauchesne. I would like to read it very quickly. Citation 75 reads:

> Many of the privileges of the House extend also to its committees. They may exclude the public from their meetings and commonly do so, particularly while considering their reports to the House. Members not on the committee may be requested to leave but cannot be forced to do so. Committee reports and the verbatim transcripts of committee hearings are documents published under the authority of the House and are entitled to the same absolute privilege as House documents. Extracts from committee documents enjoy the same qualified privilege as extracts from House documents.

Mr. Speaker, I am simply saying that I had to wait before raising my question of privilege, of which I gave you notice, until these documents were in fact available to the House. These documents were available last night. Under this citation of Beauchesne I can now bring forth my question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member totally misconstrues Beauchesne. The privilege relating to committees and the reports of committees does not relate to the matter which he indicated to me in his communication. However, if he wishes to make one further attempt to relate his question of privilege to the quotation he has put forward, the Chair will listen briefly. There are limits in terms of how far the Chair can be tolerant of an argument which so far is not very persuasive.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be as fast as I can in making my point of privilege. I simply point out that once the documents came available to this House, then the point of privilege I raised in committee, which was dealt with by the chairman of the committee, makes it possible for me now to raise the point in the House. I have waited—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member can only raise that point if the committee so reports. This is the essential part that has escaped the Hon. Member. The report of the committee did not relate to any matter of privilege in the course of its proceedings.

Mr. Yurko: It did, Mr. Speaker. The verbatim transcript has this statement in it:

> The Chairman:—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The transcript of a committee is not a report of a committee. Will the Hon. Member for Edmonton East please be quiet for a moment? A report of a committee is a report. The transcript of proceedings is another document and it is not a report.

Mr. Yurko: Let me say again, Mr. Speaker, that Beauchesne says:

> —the verbatim transcripts of committee hearings are documents published under the authority of the House and are entitled to the same absolute privilege as House documents.

I am simply saying, Mr. Speaker, that the verbatim transcripts are considered under Citation 75 of Beauchesne to be subject to the privileges of this House. It is very specific. There is no doubt about Citation 75. Until I have those transcripts in my hands, it is not possible for me to raise the question of privilege which I brought to your attention on June 8. Now they are available, as of last night, it is possible for me to bring you my question of privilege in accordance with this citation found in Beauchesne. Am I permitted to put before you, Sir, my point of privilege on the basis of Citation 75 or am I not? If I am not, then indeed an independent Member of this House is a second-class citizen of this House. He is not a Member like all other Members.

Mr. Speaker: The argument about the status of an independent Member is an argument on its own merit. The argument relating to privilege in committee is a very specific argument. Let me quote again Citation 76 from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition: It reads:

> Breaches of privilege in committee may be dealt with only by the House itself on report from the committee. Thus should a witness refuse to attend, or refuse to give evidence, the committee must report that fact to the House for remedial action.

The Hon. Member is raising some point and the Chair will hear his argument. The Chair has serious concern. First, I think in fairness, the Hon. Member should have given the Chair notice today if he was going to raise it now. Notice given last week does not relate to Wednesday of the following week. I am not prepared to accept that as a precedent in any way. In view of the Hon. Member's serious concern—and the Chair is quite aware that there are difficulties for independent Members in relation to committees—I am prepared to hear a question of privilege. Will the Hon. Member please argue a very specific question of privilege and indicate what he wants by way of a prima facie finding and what kind of motion he would put?

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for your understanding of my problem in relation to Beauchesne's Citation 76, which I understood when you told me what the problem was on June 8. You told me that night. Therefore, I referred back to Citation 75. It is now under Beauchesne's Citation 75 that I am raising a point of privilege rather than under Citation 76. It says very specifically that transcripts once they are available from a committee are indeed documents of the House upon which privilege can be raised. That is why I am doing it today.

Mr. Speaker: It reads "entitled to privilege", not upon which privilege may be raised. There is a difference.

Mr. Yurko: Then, Mr. Speaker, very briefly I will try to put my question of privilege to you as fast as I can. I thank you for the opportunity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yurko: I had appeared in committee and made a statement on Bill C-9. As I have said repeatedly, my view as an independent Member of this House is that Bill C-9 is the most important single piece of legislation dealing with the future, substantively into the future, that this House has had before it during this entire session. I consider the procedures followed in committee to be extremely important in dealing with this Bill. I went to the committee and I made a pretty substantive statement there. Then I was appalled, Mr. Speaker, several days later, after a ruling was made by the chairman, to receive a copy of the ruling not from the chairman of the committee and not from members of the committee, but from someone outside of the committee. The ruling of the chairman limited debate. I understand it is his prerogative to do so. But in limiting debate, he did several things to independent Members who sit in this House. I do not mean just me. There may be 20 independent Members in this House. Indeed, the Social Credit Members, and there were six in the last session, were literally classified as independent Members. They were not a recognized Party. That ruling of the chairman is unprecedented.

Before I touch briefly on the ruling, I would like to read what the chairman said when I put my point of privilege before that committee. Here is what he said. "You refer to Mr. Allmand and he is an alternate member of this committee, and in this regard that is why my ruling took him into account. I admit that your privilege might have been breached as a Member of Parliament. However, as the redress does not lie at this point in this committee, but in the House—" The chairman says "in the House". The chairman continues "I welcome the fact that you have brought this matter to our attention so that you then can bring it to the attention of the full House and ask the Speaker either to rule on it or to refer it back to the appropriate Table, which I suspect would be the Committee on Privileges and Elections".

That is the statement made by the chairman of that committee in ruling on my point of privilege. He has advised me to bring the matter here before you. This I did under the citation in Beauchesne which makes it possible for me to do so.

What was that ruling that is so totally offensive to an independent Member of this House? Let me suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the chairman recognizes the right of the three Parties in this House to participate in the debate on the various amendments. But there is absolutely no way that an independent Member could come to that committee and participate in any way in a discussion on those amendments.

Second, the chairman ruled that a non-member of that committee, Mr. Allmand, could bring forth amendments in committee on this Bill. But no such privilege was given to an independant Member of the House. In fact, I was not even advised.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has engaged in debate. At this stage the Chair wants to make it quite clear that the Chair is not bound by statements of a committee chairman. The Chair is not bound.

Second, the Hon. Member is claiming privilege, and the method of claiming privilege is to argue for a prima facie case, and an indication of a motion to be moved, and to that I direct the Hon. Member's attention.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, when I have finished what I have to say, that is exactly what I intend to do. I intend to do what the committee chairman suggested, that is, that perhaps the matter should be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. That is exactly what I intend to do. I have not finished my case, and I would like to be permitted to make it because I think it is extremely important. If I have no appeal to this place, to where do I appeal as a Member of Parliament when my privileges have been massively interfered with and indeed abridged? To where do I appeal if not to the House? That is what I am doing.

• (1600)

As I indicated, I feel very strongly that the ruling strips me totally as an independent Member of Parliament from active participation in dealing with clause by clause consideration of Bill C-9 in committee. Furthermore, I find it strange that when these amendments are brought before the House they should be grouped in such a way that no opportunity whatsoever is given to me to dwell on any specific amendment. In 10 minutes I cannot deal with 96 amendments or whatever the number is in terms of their grouping.

Mr. Speaker: In fairness to the Hon. Member who has been in the House some time, there are 175 amendments. The grouping of the Chair related only to proposals which would have simply cancelled the clauses one by one. Would the Hon. Member please deal with the problem before him? The question of the grouping of the amendments before us is surely a different matter.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, that may be so, but in my view it is not. When amendments are grouped as you have indicated in your statement—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is not prepared to hear argument on the grouping of amendments at this stage. The Chair has indicated that it will hear argument at a later point on a preliminary ruling. If the Hon. Member does not choose to deal with this matter of privilege, the Chair will have to pass on to someone else. For the last time, would the Hon. Member deal with the matter of privilege? The question of grouping can be dealt with later this day.

Mr. Yurko: What I am trying to set before the House is that my privileges in committee were abridged and that those same privileges should not be abridged in this House. Those privileges were abridged in committee, and I am simply trying to suggest that on the basis of any ruling in dealing with amendments, one would think that you would give serious consideration to independent Members of the House. If their privileges were abridged in committee in dealing with amendments, surely the same procedure would not be used in the House.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member thinks that he can force a clause by clause discussion in the House of Commons at report stage because he was not able to have it in committee, then he is mistaken. He does not have the right to force a clause by clause discussion in the House at this stage. If the Hon. Member has a complaint about the conduct of a chairman of a committee, then the proper procedure is for him to put on the Order Paper a motion of censure against a chairman of a committee. This is not privilege.

Mr. Yurko: Therefore, I move the following motion:

That the ruling of the chairman and the subsequent events of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs as a result of that ruling which abridged the privileges of a Member of Parliament in a very serious way be referred fully to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for consideration.

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to speak to one very narrow point in respect of the Hon. Member's question of privilege. Certainly it must be obvious to the House that I hold no brief for the ideals, philosophy, affiliation or non-affiliation of the Hon. Member. However, I think there is one point which concerns me. I hope I am misinterpreting some of the words of the Chair. In rising at this time on this one very narrow point, I am really seeking clarification, obviously a correct clarification.

I would hope that the interpretation of what the Chair is saying now would not be misinterpreted in the future, to the extent where a Member of the House could not stand in his place in this House and raise a question of privilege about a committee hearing or the proceedings in a committee solely and simply because there was no reference of those particular circumstances in the report of the committee to the House.

Let me go to the one extreme here. For instance, suppose an Hon. Member, like the Hon. Member who has just resumed his seat, went to a committee hearing and the committee or its chairman ordered his removal from the committee. I would think, Your Honour, that there would be two courses of remedy which that particular Member would have. In my view, he would either be able to come back to the House to move a motion of censure against the chairman or against the committee collectively, or certainly it would be his option, when the debate took place on the report of the committee, even though there was no reference to the activity within the committee, to raise his question of privilege.

In many, many instances when we get to more minor offences relating to questions of privilege, I would think the occupant of the chair in the House of Commons would reach for the easy solution and say: "I have no way of knowing what occurred within the committee until the committee reports". That has been done. With all respect, Your Honour, that has been done by the present occupant of the chair many times in relation to Members of the House who wanted to raise a question or a point about what went on in committee. Surely the option, especially when we are dealing with a matter of privilege, should stay with the Member who felt he had a grievance in relation to his privileges to wait until report stage of the matter in the House is reached, and he would then still be able to raise the matter even though it was not contained in the report.

I am not too sure just what is the Hon. Member's point. I think his point was that he was unable to raise certain points within the committee which he felt he had a perfect right to raise. Surely that is almost as serious a grievance as the physical removal of an Hon. Member from committee. If he is denied the opportunity to speak in committee, then he might as well not be there. If he is denied the opportunity to speak because he is physically thrown out by an abrupt or arbitrary chairman—and I am not saying that that was the case here—obviously he has a very real grievance and a very real question of privilege. However, I would think that in some cases, perhaps more minor cases, the Speaker of the House of Commons would be able to rely on the time worn excuse, quite rightfully, that he has no knowledge of what went on in committee and would have no knowledge of what went on in committee until report stage was reached. Simply because those circumstances are not referred to in a report should not deny the Hon. Member an opportunity of raising his question of privilege at the time when report stage is reached. Obviously in many cases these matters, as is the case before us, would not be dealt with in the report of the committee.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) has raised some very fundamental points. What is the right of a Member to participate when he is not, by a decision of this House, a member of the committee? It is the House which decides membership. It is not for the Chair to go behind that decision.

It is quite clear what the precedents are with relation to people who are not members of committees who raise questions of privilege. The precedents are abundantly clear. I have one decision of Mr. Speaker Jerome on May 20, 1975. Mr. Stevens, the then Hon. Member for York-Simcoe, rose on a question of privilege to allege that during a meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, convened to consider Estimates for the purchase of Canadair, the Chairman, the Hon. Member for York Centre, (Mr. Kaplan), now the Solicitor General, and certain other members of the committee were deliberately obstructive. Mr. Stevens moved that the matter be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The next day the Chairman of the Committee, the Minister now in the House, rose on a question of privilege to deny the allegations of the Hon. Member for York-Peel. He explained that the conduct described as obstruction involved his refusal to put the Estimates to a vote without a quorum. He then moved that this ruling, made in his capacity as chairman, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. The issue: Does an apparent obstruction on the part of a committee chairman constitute a breach of privilege. Decision: The issue raised is not a breach of parliamentary privilege. Mr. Speaker Jerome made it very clear that there is a well established practice that the Chair "ought not to sit as a court of appeal in respect to the proceedings in the standing committee".

This is the position of the Chair. The other matter which was raised by Mr. Speaker Jerome was as a matter of principle. One committee of this House should not be asked to sit in judgment of another committee. In this case the motion which is indicated is that if the Chair would find a prima facie case of privilege, the Hon. Member for Edmonton East would move that at once the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections should judge the conduct of another committee. That has been an unacceptable principle right from the beginning of our Parliament. Committees have not been placed in that position. Therefore, in the circumstances the Chair cannot find that there is a prima facie case of privilege for referral to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections and denies the point of privilege.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask you to reflect overnight, if you would, on the question of whether the Privileges and Elections Committee would be entitled to review a legitimate point of privilege in which it was established prima facie that a Member's privileges had been breached by the conduct of a committee of the House of Commons. If a Member's privileges have been breached, then they have been breached. If you can prove a prima facie case, then surely the only place—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is the reason why the practice of the House has been that a committee itself should report a matter and ask that a matter be decided. This is the reason for that procedure established within the House. There appears to be a misunderstanding about this. The Chair can only take note of matters of privilege in a committee when the committee reports to the House that there is a question of privilege to be examined.

This is the position in which the Chair finds itself, rightly or wrongly. The Chair cannot go behind the practice of the House, which is well established, with relation to committees. Behind it all is the question of how the House establishes its committee membership. When the House establishes committee members, what are the rights of other Members who are not members of committees? This is the issue which the Hon. Member for Edmonton East is raising. He is not a member of the committee and he is raising the question of his rights to participate in the proceedings of a committee of which he is not a member.

Mr. Lambert: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: Please. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has not been recognized. The Chair will now invite argument relating to the observations that were made.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some remarks, as I indicated in a preliminary way yesterday, and place certain observations on the record with respect to the preliminary ruling that you delivered yesterday morning. I do not propose to dwell on the question of the procedural acceptability of the motions filed by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). I am sure that the Hon. Member for Burnaby will want to deal at length on that particular matter on his own.

Having said that, I would like to pause for a moment to review your remarks with respect to the motions that the Hon. Member for Burnaby filed for the purpose of deleting individual clauses of the Bill. In your remarks, you suggested that the cumulative effect of affirmative votes on these motions would be to kill the Bill. You went on to state that for that reason you proposed to group the motions, both for the purpose of debate and for the purpose of voting. If you take the position that motions standing on the Notice Paper should be considered not for the specific effect that they might have but for their cumulative effect, you could very easily determine that every motion moved by all Members should be placed in one group for debate and that a vote on one motion would be sufficient to dispose of all other motions.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) says "good". I find that an unfortunate and dangerous frame of mind in a free and democratic parliamentary institution. I am sorry that he takes that attitude. I hope it is not reflected by members of the Liberal Government because it would indicate a jackboot mentality, especially when we are talking in terms of this legislation, that I find unacceptable.

What your preliminary ruling suggests is that the traditional understanding of separate motions constituting separate questions is no longer valid; that it is the view of the Speaker that the occupant of the Chair should no longer be restricted to grouping relating or consequential amendments, but can group motions without regard to the specific thrust or purpose of each motion. This would be an unprecedented ruling and would, in my view, undermine the right of Members to move such motions and be heard in this place. It is simply not possible to make an argument in support of each of the motions that you propose to include in group one in the course of ten minutes which Members are given for debate on this grouping. The effect of your ruling, therefore, would be to restrict the right of debate unduly.

By grouping the motions in the manner proposed, you would not be serving the House by reducing repetition or enhancing relevance in debate. Instead, you would be introducing a form of time allocation, something better left to the Government, because it, at least, can be held responsible for its actions in causing legislation to be rushed through the House without proper consideration.

As the distinguished occupant of the Chair, I would hesitate to place you in the position where you would be involved in any suggestion of a political consideration with respect to time allocation. The Standing Orders provide the Government the opportunity to come forward and, if it sees fit and is prepared to take the political heat, move time allocation. There is no question. I am concerned that Your Honour may be put in a position, by virtue of denying full opportunity for debate on motions, or at least dealing with the groupings in such a way that they are related to topics of unnecessarily restricting debate on important legislation.

With respect to point number two in your preliminary ruling, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the suggestion that Motion No. 3 proposes to add to the Bill by way of a substantive amendment to the interpretation clause, is founded on a misunderstanding of what is being attempted by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). As you will be aware, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has filed a series of motions, the objective of which is to bring the security service under the control of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Motion No. 3 does not stand on its own but is consequential to these other amendments.

In other words, if the Hon. Member were to be successful in causing his proposal to be accepted, then it would be necessary to amend the interpretation clause to reflect that change. Thus, Motion No. 3 should be considered in context with Motion No. 11. Motion No. 11 is dealt with in point four of your preliminary ruling. You cite Beauchesne's Fifth Edition to the effect that motions which would reverse the principle of a Bill as agreed to at second reading are out of order, as I understand your preliminary ruling.

I think that it is important that the question of what constitutes the principle of a Bill be addressed at this point. I would point out that Citation 712 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition indicates that the principle of a Bill is not limited to these specific matters touched on in the Bill. Indeed, in Citation 712, Beauchesne notes the following:

> The stage of second reading is primarily concerned with the principle of a measure. At this stage, debate is not strictly limited to the contents of a bill as other methods of attaining its proposed objective may be considered. This stage is coupled with an Order to commit the bill.
> (3) In committee—In committee the details of a measure are the primary objects of consideration with alterations in its provisions being proposed. Amendments must be compatible with the principle of the bill which the House has affirmed on second reading.

It is clear that the principle of a Bill is not confined by the clauses contained therein while second reading is under way. Does that principle become more restrictive once the Bill has passed second reading? Reason suggests not. Our rules make no provision for amemdments to the clauses or schedules of a Bill during second reading debate. Therefore, it must be left to the committee stage to modify the clauses of the Bill to better reflect the broad principle of the Bill. If the committee is unsuccessful in this task, then this work must be undertaken in the House at report stage. That is the situation we are faced with today.

The principle of this Bill is not to create a civilian security service but to create a Canadian security service. What could be more clear in this respect than the title of the Bill? The title of Bill C-9 is as follows:

> An Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact An Act respecting the enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto.

The broad principle of a Bill is established by its title. This fact is outlined in Citation 703(1) of Beauchesne's which, under the title. "Form of a Bill", reads as follows:

> Although there is no specific set of rules or guidelines governing the content of a bill, there should be a theme of relevancy amongst the contents of a bill. They must be relevant to and subject to the umbrella which is raised by the terminology of the long title of the bill. Journals, May 6, 1971, p. 532.

(2) Some of the constituent parts of a bill are essential; some are optional. The title is an essential part; the preamble is not.

By suggesting, as you do in your preliminary ruling, Mr. Speaker, that any amendment which would alter provisions contained in the Bill as introduced so as to cause the agency to be brought under the responsibility of the RCMP is out of order is to state that no amendment would be acceptable and that the principle of a Bill rests not with its broad objective but with its specific provisions. In my view, such an interpretation is not consistent with our practices.

The question that you must ask when attempting to apply Citation 773(5) of Beauchesne's is this: Will the RCMP control, negate or reverse the principle that a Canadian security intelligence service should be created? The obvious answer to that question is no. Indeed, the fact that the committee felt that it was within its competence to consider such an amendment should be a compelling argument in favour of the acceptability of the motion at this stage and at this time.

For the reasons that I have just outlined, therefore, I would ask you to reconsider your preliminary ruling that Motion No. 11 and the motions that are consequential to it are out of order. These amendments as proposed are, in the words of Citation 712(2), "other methods of attaining (the) proposed objective" of Bill C-9.

Within that grouping, Mr. Speaker, you have included Motion No. 53 as listed on the Notice Paper as being entirely consequential to Motion No. 11. However, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South filed three separate motions, which were rewritten by the Journals Branch and consolidated into one motion. The fact is that had the Hon. Member's original drafting been left untouched, only one of the proposed motions would have fallen into the category of motions which are consequential to Motion No. 11. The other two proposed motions dealt with quite separate issues and should be allowed even if you rule that Motion No. 11 is out of order.

With respect to Motion No. 49, which is also partially consequential to Motion No. 11, I suggest with the greatest of deference, Sir, that your preliminary ruling is incorrectly based upon Citation 428(2). Citation 428(2) deals, as you know, with the question of the acceptability of amendments. What we have before us today, Mr. Speaker, are report stage motions—and I underline the word "motions"—which have the effect of amending a Bill but which are nonetheless separate questions laid before the House. Therefore, it would be more correct to cite Citation 424(5) which contains the same observations with respect to motions. However, Citation 424 also contains other important observations. Citation 424 reads as follows:

(1) When a Member hands a motion to the Speaker after having spoken in support of it, the Speaker may, before putting the question to the House, make such corrections as are necessary or advisable in order that it should conform with the usages of the House. Journals, April 28, 1924, pp. 186-8 . . .

(3) It is the Speaker's duty to call the attention of the mover and of the House to the irregularity of a motion; whereupon the motion is usually withdrawn or so modified as to be no longer objectionable. If the motion is of such a nature that objection cannot be removed, the Speaker may refuse to put the motion to the House. He treats it as a nullity.

(4) The Speaker has the unquestioned authority to modify motions with respect to form. Journals, April 28, 1924, p. 186.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, you would seem to have the opportunity to correct the problem that may exist in Motions Nos. 49 and 53 in the event that you rule Motion No. 11 out of order. It would be a fairly simple task for you to exercise your authority to make any such corrections as might be required to bring the non-consequential portions of those motions into conformity with the usages of the House. In any event, you have the authority to correct the editorial decision undertaken by the Table with respect to Motion No. 53.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the editorial changes made by the Table could have been caught in time had the decision not also been made to not print the motions of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South on the day on which they were received. I alluded to that earlier. This resulted in their appearing on the Notice Paper on the same day as they were to be taken up in the House.

In conclusion, I would like to say that Your Honour is of course bound by the precedents, but there is an element of reasonable discretion in terms of the application of these strict rules. You sit as the first commoner and, as you have often stated yourself, you are a servant of the House. We are faced with an unusual set of circumstances here. I comment only on matters of which you will have received notice of the proceedings.

The motions that have been put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, have all received attention during the committee stage and were all addressed at some length in second reading debate. If I may be permitted to say so, these motions do not introduce any new or novel propositions which have heretofore not been the subject of the consideration of this Parliament and of this House of Commons. Indeed, these propositions have been matters of such enormous interest and controversy that they have been the items upon which the main lines of battle have been drawn between the government Party and the members of the Opposition and they have been debated vigorously. Your Honour is aware of these facts.

I simply say that these motions are responsible, germane and relevant. My colleague has included in his motions propositions, for example, with respect to the whole question of the review of the Canadian security agency.

● (1630)

In your preliminary ruling, Mr. Speaker, you put the proposition that a parliamentary committee should be established to perform an overview or oversight responsibility on the Canadian security agency. That is something which is a new and novel proposition, and therefore it is not acceptable. In looking at the Bill from my perspective, it is a Bill which creates a Canadian security agency. The Solicitor General, who is a Minister of the Crown, has carried this Bill, as is his responsibility. He has devoted about 75 per cent of his time talking about the review capacity within the legislation. He has argued that the proposals which he has put forward with respect to—

Mr. Kaplan: Separation.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am talking now about the amendment which was proposed by my colleague from Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) with respect to a parliamentary oversight committee.

The Minister has contended—and we disagree with him—that this Bill consists of the creation of a security agency over which there will be enormous powers of review. For our part, we had the temerity to suggest that a committee of the House of Commons should be involved in that review process. Mr. Speaker, to suggest such an amendment is a startling departure from the principle of review I think would be difficult to sustain. I think this is a method of review which, in a free and democratic society, should be available. We should have the ability, armed with special powers, to scrutinize the activities of the agency. It is not because it is a House of Commons committee, but rather because it adds another dimension to the review of the agency. It is another protection of the civil liberties of Canadians, another protection for the people of Canada.

I believe that the motions which have been put forward by my colleague from Vancouver South cannot be considered as specious. They are propositions which have been put forward seriously. The basis upon which they have been put forward is that they have been debated, proposed and discussed in the course of all stages of the Bill. We have not as yet been able to convince the Government of the rightness of what we have proposed, as being proper amendments to this legislation. To be denied the opportunity at report stage, having regard to the fact that there has been time allocation imposed, I believe would not be understood by the average Canadian citizen.

I am proposing to you, Mr. Speaker, on a very solid legal basis, what I hope is a strong argument for you to accept the motions of my colleague. This is a political institution. As Speaker, you have notice of the interest there is in this country with respect to these issues. I think the Chair should exercise its discretion in favour of a full and free discussion of the issues which are of concern to Canadians.

When I addressed my preliminary remarks, I indicated that I was concerned about the very restrictive nature of your ruling. All of us who have had the opportunity to practice in the courts of this land understand the concept of equity. It is on that basis which I appeal to Your Honour. Equity dictates the emotions and the proposals which were put forward by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South and they should be accepted. I think you will find that will expedite the consideration of this legislation as opposed to causing any undue delay.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will hear one representative of each of the Opposition Parties. Then the Chair will hear other Members. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity carefully to—

Mr. Fraser: On a point of information, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) have a question which he wishes to put to the Chair?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I understand the good sense of going to the other Party. However, I would hope the Chair is not suggesting that I will not be able to speak to this matter.

Mr. Speaker: No. The Chair has indicated that it would first hear one representative of each Party and then it would hear other Members. There is no intention on the part of the Chair to deny Hon. Members an opportunity to be heard on a matter as fundamental as this. The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, as you have indicated, we are dealing with a very fundamental question as to how we will approach debate at report stage on a most important piece of legislation, one which touches upon the most fundamental questions of civil liberties and the privacy of Canadians.

In prefacing my remarks with respect to the Speaker's preliminary ruling, the discussion on the legislation which we are dealing with today is attempting to arrive at an appropriate means of proceeding. I recognize that that is what the Chair has sought to accomplish as a means of facilitating orderly debate and ensuring that there will not be a repetition of the clause by clause debate which took place in committee. I fully understand that objective and it is one which is proper and appropriate at this stage of the proceedings. It is in that context that I will attempt to couch my remarks.

I must note, in determining how we will proceed at this stage of our deliberations, that I believe it to be appropriate that the Chair should take note of what took place in committee. I think it is proper for the Chair to consider that in determining what is a fair and equitable basis for proceeding in the House at report stage.

The Chair made a number of suggestions yesterday, I suppose out of frustration as much as anything else, to the effect that perhaps some Hon. Members were attempting to delay. I would like to assure the Chair that our objective in this Party is to have full and informed debate on the very fundamental issues which arise from this legislation. We are not attempting in any way to delay orderly debate on the legislation. I would note that it was only as a result of the introduction of a motion of closure, which would have denied any further debate in committee, and which was proposed by a member of the governing Party, that I felt it necessary, in order to preserve the democratic structure of the committee, to engage in what was unquestionably a dilatory tactic in committee. I would emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that that was following the tabling of the motion of closure by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Gourde).

We are prepared to approach this debate in a spirit of good faith and in the spirit of giving reasonable consideration to the very fundamental questions which are raised. In that light, as I have indicated, it is appropriate that the Chair consider the proceedings which took place in committee. I know that the Speaker is aware of the fact that the chairman of the committee has felt it necessary to submit his resignation because of the unusual and, indeed, unprecedented circumstances which arose at that time. The chairman indicated that he felt he had no alternative but to effectively impose closure, despite the fact that Standing Order 82 makes provision for closure not just in the House but also in committee. Surely, that would have been the appropriate means of bringing debate to a conclusion at committee stage, rather than the chairman taking the law into his own hands.

I would remind the Chair of the length and nature of the consideration of clauses in this legislation. Consideration took place on Wednesday nights, Thursday mornings, afternoons and evenings, and again on Friday mornings. We considered the clauses of this Bill on a clause by clause basis as well as the amendments to the legislation.

With respect to the time constraints in that committee, the Speaker is very much aware of the fact that the mover of an amendment had two minutes to indicate the basis for that amendment, and other parties represented on the committee had one minute to respond, a total of five minutes with respect to most clauses, although there were some greater provisions of time for more controversial clauses. Nevertheless, I emphasize that by the time we arrived at eleven o'clock on Thursday night, after having sat all day, the chair—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, the Chair is prepared generally to accept argument, or a recital of facts relating to committee, but the issue before us is a group of amendments and, with all due respect to the Hon. Member, the Chair would invite him to direct his remarks to the way in which the amendments should be grouped.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was attempting to lay a foundation for my remarks with respect to the grouping of amendments by noting that the procedures in committee were most restrictive indeed, and where there is any question as to the full and adequate consideration of the merits of the clauses in question, the Chair should surely err on the side of full debate and not on the side of restriction.

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect, again, to the Hon. Member, the Chair is hardly in the position of looking behind a committee report and passing judgment on proceedings within a committee. Committees are masters of their own fate. However, the Chair is very anxious to have the argument of the Hon. Member concerning matters relating to the preliminary ruling which the Chair made yesterday. Would the Hon. Member assist the Chair by indicating in what respects he agrees or disagrees with the preliminary ruling?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I believe I have made my point with respect to the unprecedented nature of the committee proceedings and the unfortunate denial of full debate in the context of the committee, a denial which led to the chairman of that committee feeling he had no alternative but to resign.

With respect to the question of the grouping proposed, and the admissability of the motions which are dealt with, I propose to respond to the Chair's preliminary ruling in the order in which the Chair has in fact made suggestions to the House. I appreciate the time which we have had to consider this question. As the Chair is well aware, the matters are not capable of speedy resolution. However, we have had an opportunity to consult and consider and, Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to respond to the points in the order in which they have been submitted to the House.

I would, as a preliminary question, Mr. Speaker, just ask whether the Chair does at this point have a preliminary ruling with respect to the motions which are numbered in sub-paragraph (10), or whether the Chair intends to make a preliminary ruling on that at the conclusion of the proceedings?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has indicated the procedure. Yesterday I indicated the matters in which I have come to preliminary conclusions. I am inviting argument on the matters mentioned yesterday. With respect to the remaining items in the Bill, all of them, again I will follow the same procedure. I will give my preliminary findings and give Hon. Members an opportunity to consider them and make argument again. Then there will be the final decisions.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will then confine my remarks to paragraph 1 through paragraph 9 in the Speaker's preliminary ruling. First, with respect to paragraph 1 dealing with the motions to delete which I submitted, motions seeking to delete separate clauses of the Bill as well as the schedule, the Chair suggests that the cumulative effect of affirmative votes on those motions would be to kill the Bill. Thus, in the opinion of the Chair they must all be disposed of together. The Chair suggested they be grouped for debate with a vote on Motion No. 1 disposing of all the remaining motions to delete the clauses and schedule of the Bill.

I would submit, Mr. Speaker, with respect, that this exceeds what would be appropriate in considering some separate elements of a complex piece of legislation. The Chair suggests that by virtue of the cumulative effect of these motions to delete, the Bill in fact would be "killed"—to use the words of the Chair—and that is good reason for lumping them together. However, Mr. Speaker, I suggest, with respect, that given the very stringent limitations on time at report stage—and that is understandable because we are not under the rules of committee where there is unlimited time for debate and we deal on a clause by clause basis—we do not want to rehash everything that has gone on in committee. Nevertheless, the purpose of submitting these motions of deletion was by no means to suggest that there should be a separate debate and separate vote on each and every motion of deletion. However, Mr. Speaker, what I was intending, having reviewed the provisions of Beauchesne and the Standing Orders carefully, which do clearly permit motions to delete, I felt it was appropriate to err on the side of caution and to submit motions to delete in the full knowledge and understanding that such motions would in fact be grouped by subject matter.

That is what I understood the role of the Chair would be after having, of course, consulted with the officers at the Table. It would be to consider the broad subject matter which is dealt with by the motions to delete; then to group them accordingly for debate.

However, if your honour examines the subject matter of the motions to delete, it is virtually impossible, in fact entirely impossible, in the course of a ten-minute speech to deal with such disparate elements as the management of the service; the question of the nature of intrusive warrants under the Act; the role of the oversight committee; the question of the handling of complaints with respect to the service; an entirely separate part on security offences; a series of consequential amendments; and a provision with respect to collective bargaining rights for employees in the service. There are six, seven or more fundamentally different areas which can certainly not be disposed of by one vote and certainly not, Mr. Speaker, appropriately or adequately dealt with under the provisions of one motion to delete, that is, Motion No. 1.

I would note, and I would draw to the attention of the Chair, two rulings by former Speaker Jerome with respect to the question of motions to delete. I am sure the Chair has considered these. However, I believe in the context of this question of grouping that it is appropriate that they be brought to the attention of the House.

First, there was a ruling of May 11, 1977 by Mr. Speaker Jerome with respect to the question of demanding a division of a Bill. The Chair will recall the controversy surrounding the omnibus Bill on the Criminal Code. At that point there was some suggestion that the Bill should be divided. The Chair, in rejecting that suggestion, suggested that instead of dividing the Bill, the device which was open to Hon. Members for that purpose was a motion to delete pursuant to Standing Order 75(5), as it then was.

I would like to quote—I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I just wanted to ensure I have the full attention of the Chair for this particular point. This is a quote from the ruling of—

Mr. Speaker: In case the Hon. Member has any doubt, the occupant of the chair will carefully read the transcript. Will the Hon. Member please proceed?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the ruling of May 11, 1977 with respect to a motion to delete, Mr. Speaker Jerome said:

> The motion allows a Member to isolate those sections of a bill which he feels ought not to be amended or ought to be voted separately, without offending the principle of the bill.

That was the purpose of what may have been an admittedly somewhat awkward decision to submit motions to delete to each clause. However, the purpose of that was to ensure that the separate sections of the Bill would be voted separately pursuant to the ruling of Mr. Speaker Jerome on May 11, 1977—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please indicate to the Chair just what he thinks the Chair should do, just exactly how they should be grouped, because the Chair is inviting specific comments? The Chair has listened patiently. The Hon. Member may have had some doubts as to whether the Chair is listening. The Chair wishes to assure the Hon. Member it is doing its very best to listen, but is waiting for very specific comments from the Hon. Member in terms of what should be done.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have just one final reference with respect to—

Mr. Kaplan: Tell us how they should be grouped.

Mr. Deans: He is going to tell you, if you will wait.

Mr. Kaplan: He has been speaking for 15 minutes. He has not said anything.

Mr. Deans: Are you going to bring in a security service and stop him?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has the floor.

Mr. Deans: Bring the Minister to order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) please be quiet. His colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby, has the floor.

• (1650)

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, just one final reference with respect to the question of grouping.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has the floor. Will the Hon Member for Hamilton Mountain please be quiet. His colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby, has the floor.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): On June 29, 1976, Speaker Jerome dealt with the question of motions to delete. He said that even if the fundamental principle of the Bill appears to be contravened by a motion to delete, because the Standing Orders make provision for this it "appears to give them a sanctity that does not extend to other motions". The relevant provision is as follow:

> It seems to be going far too extensively beyond the Standing Orders to suggest that, because the effect may be in some or in their collectivity—

And I emphasize that:

> —or in their collectivity to change the principle of the Bill, every Member who wants to put down a motion to delete at this stage ought to be deprived of that right.

In this particular instance it was a one-clause Bill and the motion was to delete the clause from the Bill, which obviously went to the heart of the Bill. It would have killed the Bill, yet that procedural opportunity was not denied the Member.

The purpose of proposing these motions to delete was to facilitate the work of the Chair in grouping relevant subject matters. The Chair has proposed instead that in one ten-minute speech Members should cover the whole range of subjects dealt with by the motions to delete. I note the contents of the Bill are set out at the back of Bill C-9 and I have used that as the basis for the broad subject matter to be dealt with. First, we are dealing with Clause 1, which has given us an opportunity for general discussion. I suggest that be disposed of at the conclusion of debate on that motion. Clause 2 is the interpretation clause which could either be dealt with separately or possibly lumped with Clauses 3 through 11.

The second major grouping would be Clauses 12 through 19 dealing with the duties and functions of the service.

Clause 20 stands on its own. It deals with the question of the protection in law of employees of the service. It is not in any way linked to other provisions in the Bill.

Then Clauses 21 through 28 deal with warrants. I was going to break that down, but I think we could deal with them.

Clauses 29 through 33 deal with the role of the Inspector General, and I suggest they should be dealt with and voted on separately.

Clauses 34 through 40 deal with the Security Intelligence Review Committee. They should be dealt with separately.

Clauses 41 through 55 deal with a process for complaints about the activities of the service, and they could be dealt with by way of a separate motion and vote.

Then there are Clauses 56 through 61. There were no amendments proposed to those clauses but it was certainly my understanding and that of other Members that there would be an opportunity to consider them as a separate package. They deal with the enforcement of security and related offences and surely we cannot be expected to do justice to those provisions in the course of a ten-minute debate on all other elements of the legislation.

There are a couple of other groupings and I think this would adequately respond to the need for debate. The question of Clauses 56 through 61 is illustrative of my point. They in fact constitute a separate Act. They were the subject of extensive debate in committee and under the Speaker's preliminary ruling they were to be lumped in with everything else.

I do not see any difficulty grouping virtually all of the consequential amendments in Clauses 62 through 71, 73 through 78, and 87 through 92.

I submit there are just three other areas which should be grouped separately. One is Clause 72 which deals with whether or not the new service should have the power to open first-class mail. That should be the focus of separate debate.

Clauses 79 through 86 deal with proposed amendments to the Immigration Act. These should not be lumped in with a discussion of the powers and duties of the Review Committee or the question of the warrants. These amendments touch on the Immigration Act itself and I suggest they be dealt with separately.

Finally we have Clause 93 which would stand on its own. It deals with the very sensitive question of collective bargaining rights for employees of the service. I emphasize that that is not dealt with in any other provision. I suppose it might be grouped with those provisions in Clauses 3 through 11 dealing with the management of the service. However, I urge that it be dealt with and voted on separately.

Mr. Speaker: Could the Chair ask the Hon. Member if he is prepared to withdraw any of these motions to delete? Does he consider that every single motion to delete should be considered by the House?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, if it would facilitate debate on the broad subject matters referred to, I am certainly prepared to withdraw motions to delete. the purpose of the motion was to facilitate the grouping under broad subject matters by the Chair. If it would assist the Chair in permitting grouping of this nature, I would be quite prepared to attempt to review the provisions and remove motions to delete under each of those subject headings. I have no difficulty with that proposal whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could communicate with the Table officers and at the appropriate time it might be considered. It appears to the Chair from a preliminary examination that many of the clauses are subject to amendment and also the Hon. Member's deleting. The Chair is simply calling the attention of the Hon. Member to whether it is necessary for the motion for deletion, for his purposes to be considered in every case. That is a matter for the Hon. Member to weigh.

The Hon. Member has not concluded his remarks?

• (1700)

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): No, Mr. Speaker, I was dealing with the first point. As I have indicated, I am quite prepared to be flexible with respect to the question of the motions to delete. My primary concern is that there must be an opportunity for reasonable debate on the broad subject matter referred to in the legislation.

I note that there are a couple of relevant citations. Section 787 of Beauchesne, which refers to report stage, reads as follows:

> In general, the report stage of a public bill is one of reconsideration of events that have taken place in committee. The consideration of a bill is now a more formal repetition of the committee stage with the applicable rules of debate which are proper when the Speaker is in the Chair. Although amendments which were rejected in committee and amendments attempting to restore the original text of the bill may be proposed, the Speaker's power of selection of motions in amendment is a check upon the excessive repetition of debates—

That is precisely the point that we are attempting to address here. We do not want to repeat clause by clause study. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the grouping which I have put forward would facilitate the discussion of the board subject matter of the legislation, which is the purpose—

Mr. Speaker: A number of the amendments would certainly permit that. Again the Chair invites the Hon. Member to consider whether, when a specific amendment is put forward, an amendment to delete is also required.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I certainly will consider that. I will review the motions which have amendments attached as well as motions to delete. I am quite prepared to do that. If the debate can be facilitated by a discussion on the amendment, I am certainly prepared to withdraw any motion to delete on that particular clause. I appeal to the Chair that there are a number of clauses which have no amendments attached whatsoever. The only means of dealing with those particular clauses and that particular subject matter would be by way of a motion to delete, precisely because there are no amendments which deal with the subject matter referred to in that particular grouping.

Those are my suggestions with respect to grouping the motions to delete. I certainly will review the motions in light of the Chair's suggestion. I note as well that the Bill itself is broken into four or five major parts. There is a clear recognition of the fundamental distinction of the different parts. I will attempt to deal with the motions to delete, particularly in the context of those motions which are made to clauses which are the subject of amendment.

That is the proposal which I would make with respect to the grouping of amendments. I strongly appeal to the Chair that there must be some systematic grouping by subject matter. To suggest that one 10-minute speech can deal with all of the diverse subjects which are touched upon in the groupings I have indicated does not do justice at all and is far too restrictive. The votes on those questions are separate elements.

The second paragraph of the Chair's preliminary ruling is with respect to Motions Nos. 3 and 4. The Chair notes that these motions propose to add new features to the Bill by means of a substantive amendment to the interpretation clause, which is out of order. I certainly recognize the citation in question. I suppose this relates to a difficulty which is referred to in Sub-paragraph (7) of the Speaker's preliminary ruling. If indeed the Speaker rules that one sub-paragraph of Motions Nos. 3 and 4 is defective, I appeal to the Chair as to whether that would in fact mean that all elements of that motion are defective.

We are dealing here with the definitions section. There are a number of provisions in Motion No. 3 in the name of the Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), and in Motion No. 4 submitted in my name, which in no way expand the scope of the Bill beyond that which is permissible. There are a number of sub-paragraphs. As I say, given that this is a definition or interpretation section, I appeal to the Chair to show some latitude in permitting those paragraphs which do not, in the view of the Chair, exceed the bounds of relevance. Those particular paragraphs should be permitted under the scope of Motions Nos. 3 and 4 instead of striking them out entirely.

I will give just one example of what I am referring to. In Motion No. 4 submitted in my name, there is a provision for an expansion of the definition of security assessment which would simply require that the criteria for such security assessments be set out in regulations under the Act, which regulations shall be made public. Clearly that is within the scope of the Bill. I recognize that the Chair has some concern about the concept of the parliamentary oversight committee. However, I would appeal to the Chair, given that this is a definition section, to show some latitude. If the Chair feels it necessary to strike one or more of the paragraphs as attempting, in the words of the Chair, a substantive amendment to the interpretation clause, those other provisions included in other paragraphs should be permitted to stand.

Turning to the third paragraph of the Chair's preliminary ruling with respect to Motions Nos. 5 to 9 inclusive, the Chair is suggesting that these should be debated together. It is also suggesting that an affirmative vote on Motion 5 would dispose of the subsequent four motions, but that a negative vote on Motion No. 5 would necessitate separate votes on Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9.

I would draw to the attention of the Chair that we are dealing with very different subject matters in Motions Nos. 5 through 9. Motion No. 5 is submitted by the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). Motions Nos. 6 through 9 were submitted in my name on behalf of the New Democratic Party. Motion No. 5 would substitute five different definitions of "threat to the security of Canada". There was some debate on that. Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 deal with four distinct elements of the definition of threat to security.

Given that, I strongly urge the Chair to reconsider its decision with respect to the grouping of these amendments. At the very least, I suggest that Motion No. 5, which was submitted in the name of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East, should be dealt with as a separate motion and that Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 submitted in my name be dealt with. If the Chair insists they be dealt with together, so be it, thay can be dealt with together. However, I suggest that to lump Motion No. 5 with the subsequent four motions does not enable us to do justice to the very essential questions which are raised in these motions.

I note as well the suggestion that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 5 disposes of Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9. With respect, if Motion No. 5 were to be adopted, that in no way disposes of Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9. Motions Nos. 6 through 9 in fact delete specific elements of the definition of "threat to the security of Canada". These specific elements stand on their own. They are specific paragraphs. As I understand it, amendments can be proposed to Motion No. 5. I would seek some guidance from the Chair on that question because it affects my argument with respect to Paragraph No. 3. As I read the Standing Orders, that is permissible under Standing Order 79(8) which reads as follows:

When the Order of the Day for the consideration of a report stage is called, any amendment of which notice has been given in accordance with section (5) of this Standing Order shall be open to debate and amendment.

As I understand it, it would be entirely in order to propose amendments to the motions of which notice has been given under the provisions of Standing Order 79(8). I do not know whether it is appropriate for me to seek guidance at this point. I may ask the indulgence of the Chair on that point. If that is indeed possible, it would be possible to move amendments to Motion No. 5 which would achieve the objective set out in Motions Nos. 6 through 9.

Mr. Speaker: The answer to the Hon. Member's query is yes, amendments are permitted.

● (1710)

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, that would facilitate the discussion on Motion No. 5. I would still strongly argue that Motion No. 5 should be dealt with separate from Motions Nos. 6 through 9.

Turning then to Motion No. 11, which is—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has at this point proposed a certain scheme of grouping. The Hon. Member is giving an argument for an alternative scheme of grouping. It would be possible, the Chair submits, for a number of schemes to be proposed. The difficulty the Chair has is, first, trying to do justice to the Hon. Member's argument, and every effort will be made, but there has to be a decision. There is a element of discretion in the decision. Can the Hon. Member give good reasons why these groupings are better than the suggested ones? Short of being corrected upon reading the transcript—it is not always easy to follow argument—the Chair has the impression that several schemes could be offered on about the same basis. The Chair is then left in a position to choose. If the Hon. Member can give me reasons why the groupings I have suggested are really not satisfactory, it would be helpful.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, with respect, that is precisely what I have attempted to do by dealing with the substance of the motions in question. As the mover of a number of motions which the Speaker has attempted to group, and having had an opportunity to re-examine the substance of those motions, I am trying to provide an alternate means of dealing with the grouping of the motions in question, bearing in mind the suggestion of the chair yesterday that Members should in fact review the Speaker's preliminary ruling in the context of the motions which they have submitted. If it is the Chair's opinion that I am not doing that, I apologize. My clear intention is to point out the distinctions with respect to substance on a number of these motions.

With respect to Motion No. 11 which stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, the transcript of the committee will record the fact that I myself did raise some question as to the procedural admissibility of a motion which would maintain the security service under the control of the RCMP. I note the Bill does propose to create an independent service which is not under RCMP control. I think that given the fact there was considerable debate on the question whether or not a service within the scope of the RCMP, but subject to stricter guidelines, would in fact be an alternative acceptable to this House, and I have certainly made my views known on that subject—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair does not wish to be disrespectful to the Hon. Member. I have in mind a citation in Beauchesne and the role of the Chair in the circumstances. From the Fifth Edition of Beauchesne, I quote again Citation 795 (1) and (2) which read:

(1) At the commencement of the report stage of a bill, the Speaker by virtue of S.O. 75(10) may select or combine motions in amendment for debate as he may think fit. At this time, he may also give notice of those motions which are of procedural concern and ask for guidance on their procedural acceptability.

(2) By practice, the Speaker will also decide whether the motions will be voted separately or in groups.

The concern the Chair has at this point is that the Hon. Member appears to be proposing a totally different scheme. The Chair stands to be corrected on reading the record. It would be helpful if the Hon. Member could give an indication that he has a difference of opinion regarding where the Chair has proposed that certain amendments are not acceptable. Would he focus on that? The Chair is anxious to be fair and just. The grouping obviously is at the discretion of the Chair. The Chair is not prepared to argue that the greatest of wisdom in the world resides in the Chair. There is going to be a certan arbitrariness in the grouping and in the decisions as to voting, but the Chair tries to reduce that element to the absolute minimum. But what appears to the Chair to be a totally different scheme at this point presents certain difficulties.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not attempting to present a totally different scheme; I am attempting to respond on a point by point basis to the scheme which Your Honour has proposed. I am in no way proposing a scheme which is entirely separate from that.

I am not going to make any further representations with respect to Motion No. 11, other than to indicate clearly that if we are to have a full and informed debate with respect to the fundamental question whether the service should be included within the umbrella of the RCMP and subject to greater parliamentary safeguards and restrictions on powers, then certainly Motion No. 11 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South would facilitate such a debate.

As to the procedural acceptability of that motion, certainly the Chair has made its views known. I believe it would facilitate that debate. I will leave it at that, Mr. Speaker.

With respect to Motions Nos. 13 and 14, paragraph 5 of the Speaker's preliminary ruling, the Chair is suggesting that Motions Nos. 13 and 14 should be grouped for debate, and that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 13 would obviate the need for a vote on Motion No. 14. If there were a negative vote on Motion No. 13, there must be a vote on Motion No. 14.

Briefly, I must note that Motion No. 13 deals with the question of the appointment of the Director of the service who, subject to a certain subsection, has operational responsibility for the service. That is a motion standing in the name of the Member from Vancouver South.

Motion No. 14 has a fundamentally different objective. Motion No. 14 would require that the Prime Minister, after consultation with the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons and the Leader of any Party which has at least 12 members, should appoint the Director and that the Director could only be appointed following such consultations.

Motions Nos. 13 and 14 are totally unrelated and in no way, Mr. Speaker, I submit, should Motion No. 13 be grouped for debate with Motion No. 14. Just to illustrate a somewhat surprising position in which we would be left under the suggestion that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 13 would obviate the need for a vote on Motion No. 14, let me say that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 13 would state that the Director has operational responsibility for the service. Let us assume there is an affirmative vote on that. That in no way, Mr. Speaker, deals with the scope and the objective of Motion No. 14, which calls for consultation before the Director of the service is appointed. I am not sure what the objective of the Chair was in grouping those motions. I hope the Speaker recognises that an affirmative vote on one would not dispose of the other. They are separate points and should be grouped separately and voted upon separately.

Turning to a paragraph 6 of the Speaker's preliminary ruling, which deals with Motions Nos. 15, 76, 84, 117 and 175 on the question of the introduction of the principle of a parliamentary oversight committee into the Bill, the Chair notes that this is a concept which is not in the Bill as introduced or as read a second time, and refers back to Motion No. 4. The Chair suggests it is a new idea which was not contemplated in the Bill as agreed to at second reading.

With respect, Mr. Speaker, this question of the possibility of a role for Parliament in the oversight of the operations of the new civilian security service is a question that was dealt with repeatedly by this House at second reading. It is a question which many Members of the House, including Members of the Opposition, view as being one of the central issues to be addressed in this Bill. Even the Solicitor General suggested that he was prepared to hear debate on the question of parliamentary oversight. He was prepared to hear representations by witnesses with respect to the amendment I was proposing on that question. Indeed, even Members of the Liberal Party were prepared to support the concept of parliamentary oversight.

To suggest that this concept or principle is one which is novel, or one being introduced for the first time, flies in the face of the debate itself. It flies in the face of the fact that this is a concept which was dealt with on many occasions by many speakers from all Parties—not just on the Opposition side of the House but on all sides—at second reading.

I will not take the time of the House to read some of the representations which were made by Hon. Members at second reading on the question of a parliamentary oversight committee.

Mr. Kaplan: Go ahead, read them.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Unless the Solicitor General so insists.

Mr. Kaplan: You want this to last forever. You might as well read them.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I will certainly note that many witnesses dealt explicitly, at the suggestion of the Solicitor General, with the question of parliamentary oversight.

What motions are referred to in paragaraph 6? First, there is a suggestion that before the Director of the new civilian security service is appointed, that appointment must be ratified by the parliamentary oversight committee. Surely that does not go beyond the scope of this legislation. Surely it is not unreasonable to suggest that Parliament should play a role in the appointment of the Director. That, I suggest with respect, flows directly from the Bill itself and from the principles underlined in it.

Similarly, Motion No. 76 suggests that the appointment of the Inspector General must only be made pursuant to ratification by the parliamentary oversight committee, again a function which is essential and which in no way derogates from the underlying principles of the legislation.

Motion No. 117 is the one which explicitly would establish this parliamentary oversight committee. This is the motion which the Speaker suggested went beyond the scope of the Bill. The motion suggests that the report prepared by the Security Intelligence Review Committee—and that Committee is already established in the Bill—on an annual basis, together with any special reports which are prepared, should be referred to a special committee of the House of Commons or a special joint committee which would be established by Parliament for the purpose of engaging in effective and comprehensive oversight of the administration and policies and operations of the service, and they would have access to the information.

That in no way transgresses the principles of this Bill. Indeed, the Solicitor General has argued on numerous occasions that there will be a role for Parliament to play pursuant to the provisions of the legislation. All this is doing is codifying the role that Parliament will play in this essential question of oversight by elected representatives. Therefore, I must take very strong exception to the suggestion that it is somehow beyond the scope of the Bill to include the concept of a parliamentary oversight committee.

There was never any suggestion at committee, either by the chairman of the committee or any member thereof—and I see a number of the members of the committee in the House today—that this concept of parliamentary oversight, which would help to ensure that the committee would not become a political tool in the hands of the government of the day, should not be included. This concept has indeed been adopted in other jurisdictions such as the United States, West Germany and elsewhere. Certainly this concept is one that should be included. Indeed, Hon. Members of the House should be given an opportunity to debate it at this stage of our proceedings.

For the Chair to suggest, after having given lengthy consideration to this question of parliamentary oversight at second reading, after having invited witnesses to make representations with respect to the role that Parliament will play in oversight and after having had a comprehensive debate on that very question in committee, that somehow down comes the guillotine and we are no longer permitted to debate the question surely is unacceptable if we are to give the Bill adequate scrutiny.

Finally on this question, I would note that there appears to be at least a considerable inconsistency in the preliminary ruling of the Chair. Motion No. 123 which was submitted by the distinguished Hon. Member for Vancouver South reads:

The administration, provisions and operation of this Act shall be reviewed ona permanent basis by such committee of the House of Commons—

Or such joint committee, to paraphrase in the interests of time.

—as may be designated or established by Parliament for that purpose.

Motion No. 117 refers to a committee which would be responsible for engaging in effective and comprehensive oversight of the administration, policies and operations of the service. Motion No. 123 talks about a committee which deals with the administration, provisions and operation of this Act. How is it that my motions, which deal with the essential question of parliamentary oversight, are ruled out of order?

Mr. Peterson: Oh.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I would be prepared certainly to yield to the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) if he wishes to speak at this point.

Mr. Peterson: I am going to the garden party.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I would submit that Motion No. 123, which is entirely in order, in effect is on the same point as the motions which have been ruled out by the Speaker.

Turning to subparagraph (7) of the Speaker's preliminary ruling—and I do not have very much more to say on this very important preliminary ruling—it deals specifically with my arguments with respect the procedural admissibility of Motion No. 49. First, I would note that the motions which are consequential to Motion No. 11—Motions Nos. 18, 21 and so on as set out in subparagraph (7)—proposed by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South with respect to the bringing of the service under the control of the RCMP should be considered by the House, just as those consequential motions should be considered by the House.

Motion No. 49, just to refresh the memory of Hon. Members, contains three or four subparagraphs. I would just ask that the Chair exercise some leniency, since it suggested in its ruling that subparagraphs (a) through to (c) are to be ruled out of order. I assume that is pursuant to the ruling on subparagraph 4. Surely the Hon. Member for Vancouver South should be permitted to put the remaining subparagraph (d) of Motion No. 49. That is the paragraph which would require the Attorney General of Canada to report all relevant information to the Attorney General of the province in which the alleged unlawful activity occurred, unless the Attorney General of Canada certified a document. That motion of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South is clearly in order. If the Chair insists on ruling subparagraphs (a) through (c) out of order, certainly this House could proceed to consider subparagraph (d) with respect to the reporting of possible illegal activity.

Turning to the final page of the Chair's preliminary ruling, I will now deal with paragraph 8. This paragraph deals with Motions Nos. 19, 23 and 24. It is suggested in the Chair's preliminary ruling that these motions be grouped for debate, but that they be voted on separately. I have no difficulty with voting on these motions separately, but surely even a cursory examination of the provisions of Motions Nos. 19, 23 and 24 makes it clear that the subject matter of these motions is fundamentally different and distinct. They should not be grouped for debate any more than they should be grouped for a vote.

There are two separate broad subject matters referred to in Motion No. 19 which have been lumped together in the interests of efficiency and time. Motion No. 19 refers to the proposed power on the part of the Minister and requires the Minister to issue policies with respect to the use of undercover operatives by the service, policies with respect to the use of physical surveillance, the training of employees and minimization procedures for warrants issued under the Act.

Second, it would require that a clause be added that the Director shall keep the Minister fully and currently informed of the operations of the service. That clause stands on its own in terms of some requirements for reporting on the part of the service. That is an amendment which was proposed to Clause 6.

Motion No. 23 proposes an amendment to an entirely separate clause on an entirely separate question. How on earth the Chair, with the advice of the Table, saw fit to group a motion which deals with directions that can be given to the service with a motion which sets out various prohibited grounds for discrimination in hiring members of the service remains a mystery. I can only assume that that was done by inadvertence. There is clearly not the slightest shred of linkage between Motion No. 19 on the issuance of directions and Motion No. 23 on a separate clause entirely which deals with the suggestion that there must not be discrimination in the service on the basis of race, colour, national or ethnic origin, religion, sex, marital status, family status, sexual orientation, disability, political belief or conviction for which a pardon is being granted.

With respect to Motion No. 24, which is lumped with these two entirely separate motions, that motion is totally unrelated to Motions Nos. 23 or 19. Motion No. 24 deals with the collective bargaining rights of employees of the service. How on earth can it be argued that there is any connection whatsoever between a bar on discrimination in the hiring of employees and denial of collective bargaining rights of employees and the kind of directive which can be issued, or the requirement that the Director of the service keep the Minister fully and currently informed of all operations of the service? There is patently no connection whatsoever. I submit those motions should be dealt with separately and voted on separately.

Coming to the penultimate paragraph in the Speaker's preliminary ruling, this paragraph deals with Motions Nos. 31, 32 and 34. The suggestion is that they be debated together but voted on separately. Once again it is important to note—I am not sure if my privileges are being affected by the attire of the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), but I will attempt to carry on despite the obvious distraction. Motions Nos. 31, 32 and 34 are to be debated together and voted on separately.

Looking at the contents of Motions Nos. 31 and 32, I have no difficulty with the suggestion of the Chair that they be grouped for debate, although I believe they should be voted on separately. Motions Nos. 31 and 32 both deal with Clause 12.

I would have preferred that Motion No. 31 stand on its own, particularly because it would include an amendment that would ensure that the new security service would not be engaging in some of the dirty tricks that unfortunately brought such discredit to the RCMP security service. That amendment states that it shall not be a function of the service to carry out measures to enforce security. That is a very important amendment which should be debated and voted on separately. In the interest of time, I am prepared to agree with the Speaker's suggestion that it be voted on and debated together with Motion No. 31.

The suggestion that Motion No. 34 be lumped with Motions Nos. 31 and 32 must surely be unacceptable. I see the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) nodding his head in agreement. Motion No. 34 deals with an entirely separate question. There is a suggestion at page seven that Clause 13(3) be dealt with separately. That clause permits the new civilian security service to enter into agreements or arrangements with governments of foreign states. The Solicitor General admits that the present RCMP security service enters into arrangements with countries that do not even acknowledge the existence of their own security agents.

The suggestion in Motion No. 34 is that we not permit that kind of co-operation with banana republics that the Solicitor General might want to have a cosy relationship with. Motion No. 34 is fundamentally distinct and separate. Indeed, it relates to a separate clause from Motions Nos. 31 and 32. On that basis, I submit that Motion No. 34 should not only be voted upon separately but debated separately as well.

Finally with respect to paragraphs 10 and 11 of the preliminary ruling, I note that the Speaker will be making another preliminary ruling on the motions referred to in those paragraphs.

I have tried to keep these remarks brief. I will have some remarks of similar brevity with respect to the Speaker's preliminary ruling on the other motions. I underline the fact that we are dealing with a Bill which fundamentally affects the rights and freedoms of Canadians. If there is to be full and informed debate on the sensitive questions which have been the subject of such intense public discussion over the years, we as Members of Parliament must have an opportunity to debate them fully in the context of report stage. It is on that basis and in the interest of time that I will take my seat. I hope the Speaker will carefully consider the representations I have made with respect to this preliminary ruling.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I realize that it is not possible for the same individual to occupy the Chair perpetually throughout a long day and it is no slight to you, Sir, when I say that I regret that Mr. Speaker is unable to hear this argument. However, I am sure that you will pass my comments on to your senior colleague.

An Hon. Member: Have no doubt.

Mr. Fraser: I hear from my colleagues on the Government side that I should have no doubt that my comments will be passed on. I have no doubt about that at all, because of course it will all be recorded. Whether it will all be read is something else again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Let me assure the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) that the Chair has many ears and that it is all ears.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: He got a haircut!

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, your comment has brought forth ribald comment here in the Chamber. I hope for your own dignity, Your Honour, that you did not hear some of the comments that have been made which, of course, have been made in jest.

I would first like to point out that there are about 24 motions which have been put forward in my name on behalf of this Party, all of which propose amendments to Bill C-9. The important thing to remember is that of those 24 motions, only approximately 11 of them are separate motions or motions that stand on their own. It must be clearly understood that a number of the motions which have been put forward are consequential upon another main motion. The motions which are consequential motions are the following ones: Motions Nos. 3, except for paragraphs (f), (g), (h) and (i). At this time I wonder if I could give to the Table a copy of my own amendments with comments. I think this would assist the Table in taking notes throughout this argument.

If the Clerks at the Table will look at Motion No. 3, they will notice that Motion No. 3 contains Paragraphs (a) to (i) inclusive. Paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) are paragraphs which are consequential, as are all of the motions to which I shall refer, to Motion No. 11, the motion directed toward retaining the security service under the aegis of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Now that the Table has the documentation before it, I shall continue to list the motions which are consequential, and they are as follows: Motions Nos. 3, 13, 18, 21, 27, 29, 44, 49, 53 which is a motion which is part consequential and part substantive, 65, 74, 81, 83, 91 and 115. The motions which stand on their own are the following: part of Motion No. 3, as has already been explained, Motions Nos. 11, 32, 49, 53, 62, 68, 79, 94, 123 and 130.

I wanted to list those motions so that I could put this matter into some perspective.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May we have order in the House, please. Will the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) resume his seat. Order in the House, please. The Hon. Member for Vancouver South has the floor.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you will allow me to continue, I would like to deal with the preliminary ruling made yesterday by the Speaker. I shall turn to page 2 of that ruling and to paragraph 2 thereon. I am not concerned with the reference therein to Motion No. 4, but I am concerned with the reference to Motion No. 3. That paragraphe of the preliminary ruling reads as follows:

> Motions numbered 3 and 4 propose to add new features to the Bill by means of a substantive amendment to the interpretation clause, which is out of order. I refer honourable Members to Beauchesne's 5th edition, Citation 773(10), which states:
> "A substantive amendment may not be introduced by way of a modification to the interpretation clause of a bill. Journals, May 21, 1970, p. 835."

Let me put my proposition before you, Mr. Speaker, which deals with Motion No. 3, paragraphs (f), (g), (h) and (i).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I appeal to Hon. Members to resume their seats if they wish to have private conversations? The Hon. Member for Vancouver South was recognized.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion No. 3 purports to amend Clause 2 of the Bill. Clause 2 of the Bill begins with the words "In this Act," and then sets out a number of words which are then defined. It is an interpretation clause. On page 2 of the Bill, still within Clause 2, the words "threats to the security of Canada" appear and then certain things are set out in paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d). Those paragraphs are very central to this piece of legislation. When I say central, I mean central because the Bill mandates rules of behaviour and guidelines for a security service. These paragraphs set out the kinds of things that can be investigated by the security force.

Paragraph (a) is fairly simple. It deals with espionage or sabotage that is against Canada or is detrimental to the interests of Canada, et cetera.

Paragraph (b) reads:

● (1750)

> —foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada—

Paragraph (c):

> —activities within or relating to Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state—

Paragraph (d):

> —activities directed toward undermining by ocvert unlawful acts, or directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of, the constitutionally established system of government in Canada—

It is extrememly important to this House that those four paragraphs were the subject of more comment and debate in committee than any other single part of the legislation. As you know, Mr. Speaker, a number of witnesses appeared before the committee and discussed those clauses. Their concern was that the wording was inadequate for two reasons. First, the wording was unclear in some cases. The consequence of unclear wording would be that those who must operate a security service would not know exactly what it was they were to investigate. They would not know what information to seek out. To the degree that it was unclear, they might go beyond the intended mandate.

The other criticism was that, whether the wording was clear or not, it gave too broad a mandate in some circumstances. I refer especially to Paragraph (d) which has been referred to over and over again as the paragraph which will have the effect of giving to the security service the right and power to have intrusive surveillance—wiretap, searches, et cetera—of Canadians operating in this country and operating in a way which is lawful.

Citation 773 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, paragraph 10, was cited by Mr. Speaker to indicate that the amendments which I have moved to the four paragraphs are substantive amendments to an interpretation clause. The citation provides:

> A substantive amendment may not be introduced by way of a modification to the interpretation clause of a bill.

Beauchesne's goes on to cite Journals of May 21, 1970, page 835. Mr. Speaker will know that the citations in Beauchesne's are extremely helpful, but they are like the headnotes of a law report; they do not tell the whole story. As every law professor has told every law student, "Don't count on passing if all you can remember is the headnote".

I have taken the trouble to look at the ruling which is supposed to have been made on the basis of the citation from Beauchesne's. That is from Journals of May 21, 1970, page 835. If, Mr. Speaker, you look carefully at that ruling, you will find that that case dealt with the report stage of that Bill. It happened to be Bill C-144 on that day, which was to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada, including research, planning and the implementation of programs relating to the conservation, development and utilization of water resources. Certain amendments were attempted, which the Chair eventually ruled out of order. Some of those motions were related to the question of the financial initiative of the Crown. They were ruled out of order. The Speaker of that day said:

> I might also add that in the opinion of the Chair amendments of a substantive or declaratory nature should not be proposed to an interpretation clause.

We see clearly what the Speaker then had in front of him. He had what amounted to amendments which had nothing to do with the interpretation clauses themselves which were in the Bill. In other words, someone was trying to get around the rules by trying to work those amendments into the interpretation part of the Bill at report stage.

Let us look carefully at what is contained in the Journals:

> It must be recognized in the first instance that motion No. 2 purports to amend the interpretation clause of the bill. Accordingly, the form and content of the motion must be consistent with the purposes sought to be effected by the interpretation clause. Although the preliminary sentence of motion No. 2 appears to be in the form of an interpretation provision, what follows is a list of prohibitions and objectives to be observed in the administration of the Act. In other words, motion No. 2 is but a substantive proposition of a declaratory nature. It neither defines nor interprets any provision of the bill.

The point is that in the case which forms the basis of Beauchesne's ruling, in the Speaker's preliminary ruling of yesterday the reasons that the motions were not allowed was that they neither defined nor interpreted any provision of the Bill. That is quite clearly the basis of Beauchesne's ruling. I have no quarrel with that.

If you looked at Beauchesne's quotation which Mr. Speaker included in his preliminary ruling yesterday, and then examined the facts of the case which led to it, there would be an opportunity to say: "Are the circumstances here today the same?" My argument, Mr. Speaker, is that clearly they are not, because each of the motions which I am putting is not foreign to the interpretation clause of the Bill. They are, in fact, very much a part of the interpretation clause itself. Therefore, there is a fundamental distinction between the circumstances before us today and the facts upon which the ruling by Beauchesne was made.

Perhaps I could call it six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND SITTING HOURS

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to move a motion with the unanimous consent of the House. I have had consultations with both House Leaders on the other side regarding the extension of hours for the last ten sitting days, and we have reached an agreement. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That, commencing Monday, June 18, 1984 until Friday, June 29, 1984 inclusive, the House shall, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 9, continue to sit beyond six o'clock p.m. and shall adjourn at nine o'clock p.m. on every sitting day provided for in the Standing Orders with the exception of Fridays;

That during this period the sittings of the House shall not be suspended between one o'clock p.m. and two o'clock p.m.;

That these sitting hours shall not affect the hours set aside for Private Members' Business on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays;

That for the purposes of Standing Order 45(1) the adjournment motion shall be debatable from nine o'clock p.m. to 9:30 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays;

That during the additional hours provided herein, the only business to be considered shall be Government Orders; and

That following the adoption of this motion, no motion under Standing Order 9 shall be receivable on Monday, June 18, 1984.

Mr. Speaker, if you were to seek unanimous consent for the presentation and adoption of this motion, I have no reason to believe that it would be denied.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader is correct in that there have been discussions and consultations among the House Leaders. Accordingly, through our respective caucuses, we have considered the proposal put forward by the Government House Leader and we are prepared to give our unanimous consent for the motion to be presented now and adopted.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as was mentioned by the House Leader for the Government and the House Leader for the Official Opposition, we did engage in discussions on this matter and we came to an agreement that these hours would be satisfactory. We recognize that there is substantial legislation which still has to be dealt with by the House of Commons and we would very much like to see those priority pieces of legislation passed before the House rises for the summer.

• (1115)

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 13, consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Robinson (Burnaby)).

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has heard comments concerning a point of order flowing out of the preliminary remarks of the Chair.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, when I stopped speaking at six o'clock last evening Your Honour was not in the Chair but your colleague was. You will have had a chance to look at the transcript of my remarks. I was referring then specifically to paragraph 2 of your preliminary ruling in which you cited Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(10), which states:

A substantive amendment may not be introduced by way of a modification to the interpretation clause of a bill.

I had been showing, Mr. Speaker, that in the Journals of May 21, 1970, at page 835, which was cited as the basis of that Beauchesne citation, the situation there was clearly different from the situation before us. To sum up what I said yesterday, and I do not believe it is necessary to go over it, I would ask that Your Honour look very carefully at the Journals themselves which form the basis of the Beauchesne citation. I believe you will see that yesterday I distinguished quite clearly the factual situation. My proposition is that what we are trying to do here is not to bring in an amendment which does not properly belong in the interpretation section of the Act. What we are trying to do is improve the wording of the interpretation section of the Act and adjust that wording to limit the possibility of a greater invasion of privacy and liberties than would generally be desired with the mandate.

I know Your Honour will consider very carefully the remarks which were made and I would, therefore, feel it appropriate to move on to the next stage of my argument. You will know, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday I was able to give to the Table a package of motions which are being proposed in my name on behalf of our Party, in order to assist the Table and Your Honour. It is headed: "The Report Stage of Bill C-9, Canadian Security Intelligence Service. Notes on Proposed Amendments of the Official Opposition. June, 1984".

Before leaving Motion No. 3, which I was discussing yesterday, with respect to Clause 2 of the Bill, I want to make the record clear. What we propose in our Motion No. 3 would be to narrow Paragraph (a) of the Bill before us. Specifically it would narrow the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" by making it clear that the espionage or sabotage must be against Canada, or detrimental to the security interests of Canada. This amendment would narrow the definition to preclude economic or commercial espionage from being included in the service's mandate. I remind Members of the House that the Attorney General of Saskatchewan, in a brief filed with the committee, said that the phrase "detrimental to the interests of Canada" is wide enough to include economic espionage and any other espionage that could be construed as detrimental to our interests and should be limited to the national security interests of Canada. The offensive aspect of economic espionage should be dealt with by the criminal law.

Further, our amendment would narrow Paragraph (b) of the Bill; that is, narrow the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" by making it clear that the foreign-influenced activities within or relating to Canada must be detrimental to the security interests of Canada in order to come within the mandate of the security service.

Another amendment under our Motion No. 3 would significantly narrow Paragraph (c) of the Bill as it is presently before us relating to the definition of threats to the security of Canada by restricting the mandate of the service. Activities would not only have to have as their purpose the achieving of a political objective within Canada or a foreign state, but as well would need to be detrimental to the security interests of our own country, Canada.

The other amendment under Motion No. 3 would narrow Paragraph (d) of the definition of threats to the security of Canada by removing from the mandate of the service the investigation of activities directed toward undermining the system of government in Canada. It would instead deal with what the McDonald Commission termed "revolutionary subversion". The wording at page 441 of that Commission's report states that "revolutionary subversion" means activities directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow of the democratic system of government in Canada.

It is important to note that the Canadian Bar Association said that the words "undermining" and "intended ultimately" should be removed as they are too vague and broader than necessary. Also, the Attorney General of Saskatchewan, at page 5 of his brief, stated that the word "ultimately" in the definition is "not particularly definitive". Our amendment also removes the reference to the "ultimate" intentions and the amendment would also ensure that lawful advocacy, protest or dissent are not the subject of investigation by the service. In relation to this matter the Attorney General of Saskatchewan called the closing words of the "threats" definition as presently before us "an empty guarantee".

I think it can be shown that our Motion No. 3 does not come within the stricture of the Beauchesne's section which Your Honour asked us to consider yesterday. However, there is another aspect to this. It is not just a procedural matter at all. These four paragraphs in the Bill, Subclause (2), (a), (b), (c) and (d), are of utmost importance in the working of the mandate set out in the remainder of the Act. Your Honour will remember that yesterday I pointed out that these definition sections caused very great concern to the many people who brought briefs and suggestions to the committee. These amendments are aimed at improving the wording of these definitions. They have nothing to do with anything else in the Act. They direct themselves entirely, completely and exclusively to the definitions which are presently before us in the Bill. I think they are in order. I do not know how we would explain to the public of Canada if, when we got to report stage of this Bill, after weeks of listening to witnesses, some of them with quite significant credentials in terms of the law and civil rights, we could not follow up on any of the suggestions they made by moving amendments to these very vital definition sections.

In your ruling you also said that Motion No. 11 seems to change the purpose and principle of the Bill as agreed to at second reading by bringing the service under the control of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Your Honour has, of course, cited the traditional rules which say that an amendment cannot be contrary to the principle of the Bill. With that proposition I have no quarrel. The difficulty lies in deciding what the principle of a Bill is. The difficulty also lies in deciding what is meant by "approval in principle" in terms of the second reading debate.

With respect, the real purpose of Bill C-9 is to establish a lawful framework within which the security service of Canada will operate. The word which is being used all the time is a "mandate" for the security service. It really means that rather than having the present security service, which has been physically in place with its personnel and activities for many years, subject only to government guidelines, this Bill properly seeks to set out a mandate. To put it in simple terms that a child could understand, the Bill seeks to set out rules within which the security service must operate.

When the second reading debate was held and there were comments made about the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, there was no suggestion that that was irrelevant or something which could not be discussed. During the committee hearings there were representations reviewed by the committee which dealt directly with whether the security service should become completely a civilian service or whether it should stay under the aegis of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. When this question was being discussed in committee by witnesses who put forward their propositions and submissions from briefs that were filed by other witnesses, it did not seem to be such a bizarre notion to be discussing whether it was appropriate to remove the security service entirely from the aegis of the RCMP. It is important that people understand that this security service which is receiving this set of rules and regulations as set out in this Bill is not something that will suddenly take effect the day after the Bill receives Royal Assent. It has been in existence for many years. The security service has been a mix of many things. While it is under the aegis of the RCMP, not everyone in it is a member of the RCMP.

The Commissioner has been operating the service and has been responsible to the Solicitor General for its operation. All that this present Bill does is replace the Commissioner with a Director. That is one of the simplest effects of the Bill. The essential purpose of the Bill is to place the rules by which the security service will operate into law. This Bill would still stand if it were amended to read "Commissioner" of the RCMP instead of "Director" except for some consequential amendments. We have made it quite clear which of our amendments would be consequential. The mandate would still exist.

The mandate can apply easily to a service under the aegis of the RCMP or a service under the civilian Director. In other words, the purpose of this Bill is not to create a new security service. It simply sets down some rules for a security service that already exists. All of this talk about a new security service, especially in the media, is, with great respect, inaccurate. There is nothing new about it.

I think it is appropriate at this time to put on the record what the Minister said in committee to support the fact that this security service has been in place for many years and will continue to exist with the same people. This Bill will make many of the present regulations and rules that have been applied by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) mandatory after the unfortunate troubles of over a decade ago. I put this question to the Minister in committee:

> The fact is, Mr. Minister, that for many months now—for many years in fact—since the revelations in the House of Commons in 1977 and the action which was taken consequently, the security service has been working as a part of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The commissioner has been reporting to the Solicitor General effectively, competently and in a manner in which I am sure you would agree meets with your approval. You testify that this has been done in a manner which meets the appropriate sensibilities of the Canadian public. Is that not so?

The Solicitor General replied:

> Yes, that is so.

It is important that we understand what we are doing here and that the Canadian public realizes that this exercise is not to create anything new at all. We are laying down the set of rules into law under which the security service, which has been in existence for these many years, will have to operate. In fact, we are putting rules into statute form that are already in place. The passage of this Bill is, to a remarkable degree, a firming of the rules that were established after the revelations of the wrong-doing in the early 1970s that were brought to the attention of the House in 1977. I point out that it has been seven years since the matter was raised in the House of Commons and 14 years or more since some of these wrong-doings that were complained about took place.

I also want to refer to some of the comments of the Solicitor General during second reading debate. This is what the Hon. Solicitor General said in the House about the principle of the Bill at second reading:

> Mr. Speaker, the proposed legislation before us today represents a major turning point for Canada's security intelligence system. We are asking Parliament to provide for the first time in Canada's history a legal framework more comprehensive and more detailed than that of any other security system in the world.

Notice that he says "We are asking Parliament to provide a legal framework". I agree completely with what the Hon. Solicitor General said because I suggest that that is the basis of this legislation. He went on to say:

> The purpose of this bill is, therefore, to a large extent, to provide a new set of guarantees and controls that do not exist at the present time in order to protect the rights of Canadians against undue interference.

The Solicitor General was explaining at second reading stage what this Bill is all about. It does not take much imagination to realize that all of that is just as applicable to a security service that reports through the Commissioner of the RCMP as it is to a security service that reports through a civilian director.

There has been much talk about great change. However, the fact is that all those who have been in the security service all of this time will still be there when this Bill is passed. This Bill will set out the legislative mandate, through the rules that have been passed by the House of Commons of Canada, which they must apply. That is the purpose of this Bill. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to take that into account when you consider your preliminary ruling.

I am trying as best I can not to deal in this discussion with your preliminary comments which do not affect my motions. There are others who seem to be quite able to argue their own case and I do not want to stray into that area, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, and I am sorry to have to advise your Honour of this, I had made some careful notes on my own copy of your ruling of yesterday which would have enabled me to get through my submission more quickly this morning than I am going to be able to because somehow that copy has been mislaid. I am at a bit of a disadvantage, but I will try to move on as rapidly as possible.

My argument has dealt with your paragraph 2 and my Motion No. 3. It has dealt with Motion No. 11, which is the motion to retain the service under the aegis of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I think in the interest of cohesiveness, I want to discuss for a moment paragraph 6 of Your Honour's preliminary ruling. Paragraph 6 reads, "Motions Nos. 15, 76, 84, 117 and 175 attempt to introduce an entirely new concept and principle into the Bill of a parliamentary oversight committee, a concept not in the Bill as introduced or as read a second time. Such a committee was also mentioned in Motion No. 4, previously ruled out of order, and is a new idea which was not contemplated in the Bill as agreed to at second reading. Thus it is clearly beyond the scope of the Bill, and I must rule each of these motions out of order."

Those particular motions which are set out in paragraph 6 are basically motions which have been introduced by other Members. What Your Worship may not have noticed is our Motion No. 123—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is rising on what basis?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have a question as to the practice with respect to the appellation of the Chair. I have heard reference to "Your Worship". I know "Your Worship" is not a mayor. I do not know whether this is an appropriate—

Mr. Speaker: I suggest there might be a little latitude permitted. The Hon. Member is not being disrespectful to the Chair. The Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser).

Mr. Fraser: Your Honour, I have spent a good deal of the life I led before I came here in various courtrooms and places of significance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: I have been in the habit of having to think through carefully just how I address the august and esteemed persons before whom I appeared. I want Your Honour to know that I was concentrating so hard on the pith and substance of my submission to you, as I know you were, that I did not notice having said that. The interesting thing is that you were listening so carefully to me that you did not notice either!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I was listening.

Mr. Fraser: But my hon. friend from Burnaby was not listening to the pith and substance at all, Your Honour. He was just listening to these little details. I have, however, refrained from addressing Your Honour as "Your Lordship" or "Your Grace", knowing that even if I—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to get on with his argument. I am sure the mood of the House is to extend a certain latitude because courtesy is obviously being extended to the Chair. Under such circumstances, the Chair could not care less.

Mr. Fraser: Your Honour, if raising your dignity will advance my argument any, I would cheerfully do it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: Back to the pith and substance of this cogent argument that I am making, motion No. 23, which is our motion, deals with a parliamentary oversight committee. It is not mentioned in your paragraph 6, which I suppose was an oversight, but I want to discuss it. I think I am duty bound to bring this to your attention. Unless it is dealt with in the context of your paragraph 6, it will just have to be dealt with at another time because I am sure Your Honour would notice it.

Motion No. 123 is not mentioned in paragraph 6. I hope your Table officers are following carefully the point I am making because I think Your Honour would have wished that it be included, so I will address it now. The purpose of Motion No. 123 is to introduce a new Clause 56. Motion No. 123 reads:

> "56. The administration, provisions and operation of this Act shall be reviewed on a permanent basis by such committee of the House of Commons or of the House of Commons and Senate as may be designated or established by Parliament for that purpose."

What that does, Your Honour, is enable the government of the day from time to time, according to what it wishes to do under this section, to create a review committee made up of Members of the House of Commons, or of the House of Commons and Senate. Your Honour has indicated, at least in your first view of this, that this would be an entirely new concept, and as a consequence it would be beyond the scope of the Bill. The Bill does include a review committee. It is an appointed committee and it could include Members of Parliament. I think the general intention was that it would be aimed at people not in the House of Commons or Senate. To bring in an amendment to this Bill that would also establish a parliamentary overview committee in my view does not seem to break with the principle or add some new principle to the main theme of the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The point is the process by which committees of this House are established. There is an amendment which says it should be reviewed by a parliamentary committee. The initial reaction of the Chair is that Parliament can always decide that a review should take place, but to establish a special committee by this process gives the Chair concern. There is a method through the Standing Orders. Sometimes the statutes may expressly provide. However, to establish a special committee through this process is what gives the Chair concern.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the point that you are making. The fact that this is particularly aimed at a parliamentary overview committee made up of parliamentarians to overview the security service may take it out of the general proposition which you have advanced to me for my consideration. I have to argue that that would be my reply to the proposition which you have raised.

We also have to look at the common sense of it. There was a great deal of discussion in committee about whether there should be a parliamentary overview committee and what its powers should be. In fact, the committee went to the trouble of bringing two distinguished public servants from Washington to give us extensive testimony on how the United States Senate overview committee on security matters operates and is supported and staffed and, although not in as great detail, some interesting information with respect to a similar committee of the House of Representatives.

Nobody suggested at that time that to organize it, to go to the trouble of bringing them here and hearing these witnesses, would somehow be discussing a matter which was outside the principle of the Bill. I would argue and I would urge upon Your Honour that, to the degree possible, you would view this amendment and other amendments seeking the same objective which have been filed by my learned friends as not being something that is foreign to the Bill but is very much part and parcel of a principle which is in the Bill, and that is the principle of a review.

The other thing that is important is that the basis of the acceptance of the security service in the mind of the Canadian public is trust. To our great dismay and to the dismay of all decent Canadians, revelations were made in 1977 concerning things that were done that ought not to have been done over a decade ago. When they were made public, there was dismay. Apart from the detailed acts, what hurt us all, including a great institution as well as the institution of this Parliament, was that it was clear that there had been an absence of adequate control by political Solicitors General and perhaps even the Prime Minister. What hurt most was the sense that our trust had been betrayed.

As Your Honour, we in this House and the public of Canada know, notwithstanding all the laws we pass, that we run a civil community, with decency and fairness under the rule of law, to a great degree on trust. In the context of trust, it would be beneficial to have an overview, oversight or review committee consisting of Members of Parliament. Members of Parliament, whatever their faults or their occasional indiscretions—

Mr. Pinard: That is not a point of order. You are debating the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I invited comment by the Hon. Member concerning the proposal that this motion is inadmissible. In fairness to Hon. Members, the Chair is giving a fair amount of latitude, as was the case of the previous speaker, in hearing argument. Following the argument, the Chair proposes to deal with the matter as the Chair is obliged to do.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I will not be overly long. I will sum it up by saying this. There is an overview committee provided for in the Bill. All this amendment is doing is making a special arrangement whereby this House can appoint Members of Parliament to review our security service. I am suggesting that that is not outside the spirit of the Bill. Members of Parliament are in contact with the public at all times. As I was saying, despite whatever sins of commission or omission they commit, or whatever their frailties, on a daily basis they have to respect that relationship of trust between the public and those they send here to pass the laws and govern the country. I do not need to overstate the case, but that is the position I am trying to make.

I will deal briefly with the various motions which we are introducing. As I indicated to the Table yesterday, when you take away the consequential motions which would only pass if our Motion No. 11, the retention of the security service under the aegis of the RCMP, were passed, we have before Your Honour only nine motions and part of two others. That is not hundreds. I want to get them on the record very quickly so that we understand what they are.

I have dealt with Motion No. 3 to amend Clause 2, which deals with the very important amendments in the definition section. I dealt with Motion No. 11 which amends Clause 3. If it were passed, the security service which presently reports through the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police would continue to do so. Motion No. 32 amends Clause 12. The purpose is to make it abundantly clear in the legislation that the collection of information and intelligence by the security service should be limited to "strictly necessary for the purpose of protecting the security of Canada". I do not think Your Honour would find that motion out of place.

Motion No. 49 to amend Clause 20 would require the Attorney General of a province in which alleged unlawful acts occurred to be informed by the federal Attorney General unless it would not be in the public interest. In that case the Attorney General of Canada would have to certify his reasons and forward them to the review committee. The reason for that motion was that there was ample testimony before us indicating that the relationship between the federal Government, the provinces and the other police forces is one which must be respected and dealt with appropriately.

Motion No. 53 amends Clause 21 which deals with warrants. Again, very briefly, the effect of this amendment would be that warrants would not be granted for ordinary domestic activities on the basis that the need for warrants for these matters had not been demonstrated. That is consistent with what Commissioner Simmonds of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police said when he appeared before the Justice Committee. He said that the intrusive powers envisioned by the Bill which is presently before us would be of only marginal use to such investigations.

The other part of that same amendment provides that warrants should only be granted where there are reasonable and probable grounds for such warrants. The clause in the Bill presently reads only "reasonable grounds". We would like to change that clause. The words "and probable" tighten it up because the phrase "reasonable and probable" has been defined by many judges and courts across the land. There is plenty of law regarding the exact definition of that phrase. As well, the amendment would see that warrants for intrusive techniques should only be available for a maximum of 60 days rather than the one year that is presently provided for in the Bill. That change is consistent with the Criminal Code.

Motion No. 62 amends Clause 22. This clause as well applies to search warrants and warrants for intrusive surveillance. The purpose of our amemdment would be to limit the maximum length of a renewal of 60 days, which is again consistent with our original position that the first warrant for intrusive surveillance should only last for 60 days, as is provided in the Criminal Code of Canada.

Motion No. 68 amends Clause 24. Again, this clause deals with warrants. The present wording of Clause 24 contained an awkward part which make it unclear as to what would happen to an innocent third party who was told to do something by a security service person operating under the authority of a warrant if it turned out that what the third party was asked to do was unlawful. As Bill C-9 presently stands, an innocent third person is expected to believe that the official person giving him the orders does in fact have a warrant. I must ask Your Honour to consider how often a janitor, a person working in a store or a taxi driver who is told to do something quickly by an official who says he is in the security service would cross-examine the official on the spot and ask whether he in fact has a warrant.

Motion No. 79 amends Clause 31. This clause deals with Cabinet documents. Our position is quite clear and it is that the Inspector General ought to be able to see Cabinet documents that relate to the work of the security service, because if he does not have that ability, he is clearly not in a position to know exactly what is going on.

Motion No. 94 amends Clause 38. This would have the effect of allowing the review committee which is established under this Bill to review and have oversight on other security and intelligence agencies or arrangements in Canada. Motion No. 123 amends Clause 56. This is the motion I have discussed at length which would establish a parliamentary oversight committee. Motion No. 130 amends Clause 61. The effect of our amendment would be to establish a positive duty on the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to consult with other police forces when investigating national security offences, even though the Royal Canadian Mounted Police would have primary responsibility.

I do not think it is necessary for me to argue the rationale behind those motions. That is our basic package, Your Honour. We think it would be hard to explain to the Canadian public why those amendments ought not to be put to this House at report stage. The substance of all of those amendments has been the subject of much debate in the committee and the subject of many briefs that were submitted to the committee. The substance of those amendments has been spoken to by witnesses who have appeared before the committee at great expense.

I would urge that when considering your preliminary ruling, Mr. Speaker, you reconsider your view that some of these amendments are not in order. As well, I would urge you to interpret the rules as broadly as possible, as I know you will, so that the work that has been done in committee will actually be reflected in the amendments that are brought forward at report stage.

This Bill went through second reading, and at that time the Government indicated that when the Bill went to committee, it could be improved. It indicated that we were to bring forward our amendments at that time. The fact of the matter is that the Government has not accepted any significant amendments. One must ask oneself what this was all about. It is not that some very significant matters were not brought to the attention of the Government in committee because they were. However, the Government did not accept anything. There seems to be very little indication that the Government will accept anything now. One of these days, people will look back at this Parliament and say: "In view of what that committee was told by eminent Canadians on the question of civil rights, why did the Government not budge, why did it not adjust, why did it not pay attention to some of the matters that were brought before it?" Someone might say: "Well, there are only a few Government Members in committee and they do not reflect the entire government caucus".

I think it is important that these amendments be put to the House because we know that there are Government Members who think that there is considerable merit to a number of these amendments. They feel there is merit to the amendments on parliamentary oversight, on the review committee's right to have access to Cabinet documents that relate directly to the security service, on the definition clause which is Clause 2, Paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d), and on many other matters. We know that there are Members on the Government side who think that these amendments which we are trying to put before the House have merit. As a matter of fact, some of the amendments are being moved by a former Solicitor General of that Government.

If these amendments are blocked here, then one of these days someone is going to look back on this Parliament and ask: "What in the name of heaven went on?" Some of these Government Members will respond to that by saying: "Gosh, I did not realize that that was happening. I would have supported that adjustment to Paragraph (d). I do not think that Cabinet documents directly related to the security service should be kept from the Inspector General and the review committee. How could this have ever happened?" It will happen. They will be able to get away with that kind of falderal if these amendments are not put at report stage.

There is the question of process and procedure. There is also the question of the substance of these amendments fitting into the mandate of the legislation which will set the rules under which the security service has existed these many years and will still exist. It will not be born anew with this legislation.

We also have to address a sense of fitness. Is it appropriate that this House would take these amendments coming from committee—all of which have been discussed extensively and are the subject of briefs which were prepared by Canadians of eminent learning and experience—and decide that it would not accept any of the amendments? Worse than that, it will not even let those amendments be put.

I know that Your Honour will consider my remarks carefully. I know that the Table officers have been listening closely. I have tried to put my argument in such a way that it is clear, concise and flows in some proper order. I have some hon. friends in this Chamber who do not believe that anyone here could ever say anything which is clear, concise and in the proper order. Perhaps they are seeing the rest of us through eyes that know themselves only too well. I shall rest my remarks and trust in the wisdom and judgment of the Chair, which is assisted, of course, by able Table Officers. Depending on the ruling, I do not know whether I will have the chance to be as approving later as I am now. However, faith and trust are important matters. We should call upon them at times like this and wring every ounce of goodness which we can from them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I find it almost a challenge, of which I may not be worthy, to follow the Hon. Member who has just sat down. He covered almost everything that one could ever expect to be covered with regard to the ruling. I look forward to reading Hansard in order to garner even more wisdom from his comments.

I would like to deal with three matters and I would like to deal with them very quickly. The first matter is the appropriate groupings, as we interpret them, from the point of view of the amendments which we have put forward. I would like to reply to a question which was asked by the Speaker when he was in the chair yesterday. I would also like to deal with the question of admissibility of the clause which will put into place parliamentary oversight.

To begin with, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you will know that Mr. Speaker Francis, on page 4639 of Hansard, when referring to my hon. colleague from Burnaby, said:

> —but the issue before us is a group of amendments and, with all due respect to the Hon. Member, the Chair would invite him to direct his remarks to the way in which the amendments should be grouped.

At a later point in the proceedings yesterday, Mr. Speaker Francis indicated that the question of grouping was the responsibility of the Chair and that there were many ways in which amendments could be grouped. Of course, he is absolutely right. It is the responsibility of the Chair. Not only that, there are a number of different ways in which amendments could be grouped, given that he specifically requested us to suggest for his consideration how we thought they should be grouped.

I would like to draw your attention to the comments of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who, having probably as much knowledge of the content of this legislation as any single Member in the House of Commons, and I suspect having as much knowledge of the content of the legislation as any member of the public in Canada, as reported on page 4641 of Hansard proposed a way of grouping the amendments which were put forward by the New Democratic Party. His suggestion would allow us not to have to deal with each and every single one that was filed for the purpose of report stage debate. He has reduced from some 90 or more amendments the total number of votes to something in the order of 12 to 14 votes. In doing that, I think he met the challenge of the Chair. The Chair quite rightly requested that proposal.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the amendments which we proposed were to be grouped in the way in which the Hon. Member for Burnaby suggested, they would be grouped according to subject matter. I think that that is a practical way in which to apply groupings. They would also be grouped in such a way as to allow a vote to take place which would dispose of the amendments without the necessity of going through each one individually. I commend to the Chair that particular series of groupings. I would expedite the business of the House in dealing with the Bill. It would improve the mood of the House, which I think we are all trying to do at all times. It would make it possible for the House to deal in a fair and reasonable way with this very difficult subject matter.

It was said by the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) yesterday that this is perhaps one of two pieces of legislation which have been paramount importance to the country. He is absolutely right. I think for the benefit of hindsight historians will reflect upon this legislation and the constitutional changes which took place two or three years ago. They will analyze the work of this Parliament and come to the same conclusion: that those two pieces of legislation will probably turn out to be the most significant legislation which has been dealt with during the history of this particular Parliament. There will be tremendous force and effect felt as the result of the changes which we now have before us. Therefore, we ought not to deal with it frivolously. Neither should we allow the possibility of taking an extra day or two to interfere with doing a good job.

The second point which was raised by the Chair can be found on page 4641 of Hansard. Again, Mr. Speaker Francis rose and asked the Hon. Member for Burnaby the following question:

> Could the Chair ask the Hon. Member if he is prepared to withdraw any of these motions to delete? Does he consider that every single motion to delete should be considered by the House?

You will perhaps be aware, or you will be made aware, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Burnaby, in his response, said that we did not in fact intend that every single motion to delete ought to be or need be dealt with by the House. He has, after a very careful analysis of each of the motions, offered to the Chair a large number of amendments which we believe can be withdrawn and need not be dealt with. We hope, in taking into account those two actions, on the one hand our proposal for grouping, and on the other hand our offer to withdraw a significant number of motions, that that will find favour with the Chair and that the Chair will in its final ruling reflect that gesture of goodwill on our part which is intended to facilitate the business of the House.

I believe, therefore, we have met the two challenges given by the Chair to the Hon. Member for Burnaby, who was speaking on behalf of this Party. We believe on those two questions the action of the Hon. Member for Burnaby will help to improve the orderly disposal of this legislation.

I would now like to come to what I believe is perhaps the most important matter left to be dealt with. On page 3 of the preliminary ruling, the sixth point states:

> Motions Nos. 15, 76, 84, 117, and 175 attempt to introduce an entirely new concept and principle into the Bill—a parliamentary oversight committee—a concept not in the Bill as introduced or read a second time.

The paragraph continues and the relevant ruling, if you will, preliminary though it is, is as follows:

> Thus it is clearly beyond the scope of the Bill and I must rule each of these motions out of order.

I do not have to explain the Bill to you, Mr. Speaker, as you are probably just as familiar with it and all of its clauses as I am. However, the bill is for the purpose of setting up a Canadian Security Intelligence Service. That is the main principle of the Bill. Within the Bill itself there are a number of proposals which deal with how the security service should be set up; who should constitute the security service; how the security service should be administered; and how oversight, if you will, should be provided. There are at least two sections in the Bill which deal with the question of oversight, which deal with the very important question of who is to be responsible for ensuring that the actions of this security service, if, as and when it becomes law, will be adequately judged and reviewed by an appropriate body.

We are not proposing to remove the review committees which are presently provided for within the Bill. What we are proposing is that they do not go far enough. We are proposing to extend the oversight provision. What we are saying is that there can be no group anywhere in the country more suitable than Members of Parliament in determining the appropriateness of the actions of the security service. We are the only people in Canada who are directly accountable. The decision to accept unto ourselves the resonsibility, onerous though it is, of answering for the actions of the security service is a decision, I believe, which shows both intestinal fortitude and a sense of the importance of the service and of Parliament. It surely is the responsibility of Parliament to make that kind of decision. That cannot be beyond the scope of the Bill. Surely there can be no one who could argue that the Parliament of Canada does not have the right to set up a committee for the purpose of ensuring that the security service of Canada operates within the legal framework established by the Act under which it is constituted. If we do not have the right to make that decision, then who does? If we do not have the right to establish a committee—

Mr. Kaplan: But not at report stage. That is on second reading.

Mr. Deans: The Minister interjects—and I am not being critical of the interjection—and says that we should have made this—

Mr. Kaplan: You did make it.

Mr. Deans: Wait a moment—we should have brought this to a vote at second reading. But we cannot make the amendment at second reading.

Mr. Kaplan: No, at committee stage.

Mr. Deans: But we did take it to the committee stage.

Mr. Kaplan: That is right.

Mr. Deans: And the committee decided not to approve it. I do not want to give a lesson on parliamentary procedure, but the reason for the report stage is to allow Parliament as a whole to consider those matters which were placed before the committee, if it so desires. That is what the report stage is all about. We have a report stage so that all Members of Parliament will be given the opportunity to exercise their responsibility by voting for or against matters which the committee—being representative of Parliament but not in fact involving everyone in its deliberations—had placed before it and decided upon.

Let me suggest, for example, that it is my understanding that the Minister is going to attempt to put back before Parliament a clause which the committee decided it did not want in the Bill. The Minister is going to do that. Would he argue that since he lost it in committee he is not entitled to ask that the House vote on it? Of course not. Why, then, would he argue that an amendment moved by the Opposition which was defeated in the committee is inappropriate to place before the House at report stage? One cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Kaplan: But one was out of order.

Mr. Deans: One was not out of order. It was quite in order. The rules of Parliament make it abundantly clear that it is possible to move not only to alter clauses contained in a Bill which is before the House or before the committee, but it is equally appropriate to move to introduce new clauses provided they are within the general scope of the Bill as contained in the principles debated at second reading.

Quite clearly in the debate at second reading, we raised the question of the inappropriateness of the review structure contained in the Bill and indicated that we intended to move an alternative review structure, or if not an alternative review structure, to augment the review structure in the Bill with an additional review. We said so at second reading. We served notice at second reading that that was our intent. The Minister in response said, "Bring it up at committee". And we did. It was not ruled out of order at committee; it was voted down by the Government majority.

It is therefore appropriate, given that it was considered in order at the committee, given that it is clearly within the scope of the Bill, given that it is simply an extension of the review structure which already exists within the Bill and given that it is intended to place in the hands of Parliament and parliamentarians the responsibility for ensuring that the actions of the security service are indeed actions which it is legally entitled to undertake within the broad scope of the legislation, given all of those things it surely cannot be argued that the Parliament of Canada does not have the right to vote upon that and to make the decision, yes or no, whether we want to assume that responsibility.

I put it to you, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that it would be wrong to deny Parliament the opportunity to assume a responsibility that, at least in part, it believes it would like to assume. It would be wrong to rule out of order an attempt by Members of Parliament to assume their responsibilities. I therefore cannot agree that it is beyond the scope of the Bill. It is not beyond the scope of the Bill. The Bill clearly encompasses the question of review. The method of review is up to Parliament. The Government said there should be a review and the Opposition said the review offered by the Government is inadequate. We are simply asking that the review be expanded to allow parliamentarians to do their job.

I therefore urge upon you, Sir, after careful consideration, that you come to the conclusion that while perhaps at first glance it would have appeared to be out of order, with the benefit of a more careful review, in fact the principle that Members of Parliament be part of the process of review in no way deviates from the main principle of the Bill or, for that matter, in no way takes us outside the scope of the Bill.

Having said that, I leave to your good judgment the appropriateness of the suggestions we have made. We have responded properly to the questions the Chair placed before us. We have attempted throughout this discussion to provide the Chair with an alternative which we believe is both practical in its use of the time of the House as well as ensuring that adequate debate is allowed to take place. Equally importantly, we consider that it would ensure a proper vote on the various clauses of the Bill.

As I said earlier, we will withdraw certain of the motions to delete and we will have provided today a substantial list to the Chair for consideration for withdrawal. I ask in all fairness, since we are prepared to do that, that we not be abused by the process and that that portion of our submission not be the only one given proper consideration. I would find it offensive, quite frankly, if all other arguments we placed before the Chair fell on deaf ears and only our willingness to withdraw certain of the amendments in the interest of the orderly proceedings of the House of Commons was accepted. I am sure that will not happen but I say it so it is on the record.

I appreciate your patience in hearing me out, and if we could get a favourable ruling along those lines it would expedite the orderly disposition, through passage or otherwise, of this legislation and enable us to get on with the business of Parliament.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I sat throughout those many days of committee hearings and I watched this whole process. The first observation any partial or impartial person outside would have to make is that the whole process was handled very badly, indeed incompetently, by the Government and its advisers. Here we are into a procedural wrangle and it would not have been necessary at all had the Government had its wits about it and had the Government's advisers simply followed the rule of law.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we are here because the Cabinet made a decision many months ago to have a civilian security intelligence agency. Out of that process came Bill C-157, which was so badly drafted and such a disaster that the Government, even before it came to the House for second reading, had to pull it out and sterilize it by putting it into a Senate committee. They heard dozens and dozens of witnesses and made over 40 changes. Had the Government been competent in the first place, Bill C-157 would have come to the House, had a proper debate with amendments, and it could now be the law.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I invite the Hon. Member to limit his remarks to the suggestion of Mr. Speaker that comments should relate to the grouping itself and not to the relative merits or substance of the Bill, if I may suggest.

Mr. Thacker: I appreciate what you are saying, Mr. Speaker, but you will see as I get into my argument that it will deal with equity in this highest court of the land. It will deal with how the Speaker in his equitable jurisdiction should be dealing with this as compared to the strict rule of law or the statutory rules, although I have an argument on that subject as well.

Bill C-9 comes in, closure is applied on second reading, and the Government now seems to be saying that because something was not dealt with at second reading stage it cannot be dealt with at committee stage. The Government did not give us a chance at second reading. We could not put amendments in when the Government brought in closure, so we have to do it at committee stage. They were deemed acceptable by the chairman at committee stage, fully debated, some were passed and some were defeated. Now we are back at report stage and everyone has the right to put in as many amendments as they want. That is exactly what has happened. Had the Government been able to foresee, as it should have, what would happen in committee, we would not be involved in this huge debate with the loss of all sorts of time.

I would rather be debating the substance of the Bill than a procedural wrangle. In committee Government Members themselves came to realize that much of what the witnesses were saying, along with the amendments we were putting forward, was reasonable. Indeed, they accepted one of the amendments. One Member abstained, and the chairman, having sat through this for months and months, voted with the Opposition on one of our amendments which resulted in its getting through. Government Members have strong feelings on this themselves and they would like to see some changes.

We have our little green book, Mr. Speaker, which gives us the process for resolving conflicts. When the Government decided that the NDP had put in too many amendments or that it was stalling, there was a mechanism to deal with that. Standing Order 80 provides that the Government can try to reach an agreement which can be filed in this House and put time limits on the committee stage. But even if it cannot get agreement from all three Parties, it could have used Standing Order 81, which states:

When a Minister of the Crown, from his or her place in the House, states that a majority of the representatives of the several Parties have come to an agreement in respect of a proposed allotment of days or hours—

That can be filed in the House as well, but no one approached us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I really apologize to the Hon. Member for interrupting him again. However, I feel he is not addressing the very specific matter of groupings and the Speaker's comments. The Hon. Member is now referring to events which occurred in committee. I appreciate his earlier remarks, that he is attempting to lay the foundation for argument on some point which he plans to raise later on in his remarks. But I would invite the Hon. Member, for the sake of orderly debate and strict relevancy to what is now exercising the House, that is commenting on the Speaker's proposed ruling, to reach that point as soon as possible so that I can have a better understanding of what he is arguing.

● (1240)

Mr. Thacker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that in your equitable jurisdiction you would agree that the court should never be put in the position of having to rescue someone as a result of one of the people appealing to you not having followed the rules. If the Government would have followed Standing Order 81, wherein it could have dealt with us and the two Parties could have struck an agreement, it would not have mattered what the NDP wanted. Failing that, it could have acted under Standing Order 82 wherein the Minister can simply and say there is no agreement. Therefore, they could have brought debate to a close, not only in the House but in the committee. That is the point. There was a mechanism to resolve the conflict in the committee. Standing Order 82 states "at which a public bill was under consideration either in the House or in any committee". That is my point. They are calling upon the Chair to extricate them from a situation which the Government itself caused. I do not think the highest court in the land, and the Speaker of that court, should have to rescue the Government as a result of its own incompetence.

Referring to what you were calling upon in terms of motions, Motion No. 11 is one of the PC motions which is really the heart and core of what we are saying in the sense that the existing service should continue, that the statute which is going to codify the existing practice should simply apply to the existing organization which is there. We should, as a Parliament, be able to make a division on that. It would be quite appropriate for you to say that Motion No. 11, being the substantial element of it, has a lot of consequentials, so that if Motion No. 11 is deleted all of these consequential motions fail. That would be a reasonable grouping right there. It is not crystal clear from the preliminary ruling that that is the case. I think that should be one of the chapters. That would be fair and reasonable.

My hon. colleague from Vancouver South laid out very well the case as to the other groupings and the other nine motions, all of which I believe should be found in order. The House should be able to divide on those. The proposal of the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is truly a reasonable proposition for the grouping of the NDP amendments as well.

I would like to make one brief comment with regard to some of the remarks that were made in the House about the conduct of the chairman of the committee. I believe he was put in an impossible situation, just as you are, Mr. Speaker. In that impossible situation he had to act, and he acted to the very best of his ability. As a result he did the honourable thing: he resigned at the end of it. He said that he had been put in such a terrible position by the actions of the Government that he felt he had no choice as chairman of the committee but to make a resolution and resign. The Government should have gotten him off the hook by coming to the House and seeking an order under Standing Order 82. That was the proper and lawful mechanism to resolve it, but the Government allowed the chairman of the committee to hang out on the line. He had to save their bacon two or three times. Indeed, when he felt it was proper he voted with the Opposition Members. Now the Government is bringing in motions to change around the amendments that were accepted and voted on by some of their own Members. It is an absurd situation. I take exception to the chairman being hung out to dry for the incompetence of the Government.

I want briefly to reiterate the argument put by my hon. colleague from Vancouver South. I too went back and looked at the Journals. I believe this is one of those cases where the quote in Beauchesne does not adequately reflect the actual wording of the Journals. I can remember the Chief Justice of the trial division of the Supreme Court of Alberta speaking to us when we were graduating as young law students. He told us how we would go before the court and be psyched out by senior lawyers who have had 20 years' practice and seem to know everything. He told us not to be fooled by it. He said that if a young lawyer goes behind the headnote and reads the cases, he will often find that the case does not actually bear out what the senior counsel, going on long-term memory and flying by the seat of his pants, is saying. He told us we would win several cases on that. That is true. This is an example of that, Mr. Speaker. I would encourage you strongly to read the actual Journals. I do not think it is a sound basis for the quote from Beauchesne.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter into the debate at report stage. In other words, I want to address Motion No. 1.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is quite in order. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) for that purpose on Motion No. 1.

Mr. Blackburn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the opportunity of speaking on Bill C-9 at second reading although I was limited to 10 minutes then as I am now. This is one of the most important Bills ever to come before the House in my time. I am in my fourteenth year in this Chamber. In some respects it is also one of the most odious pieces of legislation which we have had to deal with because of the intransigence of the Government and its refusal to, what I call, democratize, or I might even use the word "liberalize", the framework of this very important piece of legislation.

I can recall a few weeks ago speaking before the county council of Brant, the riding which I represent. That council is dominated by Conservatives and Liberals. They informally expressed very grave concerns about the arbitrariness of Bill C-9. Intrusive powers have always been looked upon with a tremendous amount of concern by Canadians. We are not essentially a criminal nation by any stretch of the imagination. There may be evidence, and no doubt there is, of terrorist or potential terrorist activities in our country as well as subversive or potential subversive activities. I would like to pay tribute to the work that the RCMP have done over the years in keeping our country relatively free of these most objectionable and heinous individuals who have from time to time arrived on our shores or may have been born here.

I ask myself why we must pass a Bill such as C-9 which would give a civilian security agency so much more power to legitimize the dirty tricks that the RCMP security division were guilty of back in the late 1960s and early 1970s and which brought this whole matter to the surface. I suggest that the dirty tricks were perpetrated primarily because there was not a chain of responsibility from the head of the security branch of the RCMP through to the Solicitor General and from the Solicitor General to the Cabinet and from the Cabinet to the Prime Minister.

There is nothing in this Bill which sets up that direct chain of responsibility. In a democracy it seems absolutely incredible that we, the people's duly elected representatives, would allow a secret police force to have such power that it is not directly responsible to any of the people's representatives. If you look at the Bill carefully you will see that the Director General is not obligated to report on every aspect of all the activities which are going on at any given time within the security force. Even if he is asked by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) or ordered by the Cabinet or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), he is not obligated to present all the information that he has at his disposal. He can be very selective. In other words, the Bill gives arbitrary, virtually dictatorial and indeed authoritarian power to the Director General of this proposed security agency. That is anathema to me, as one who believes in democracy. I do not believe for a moment that the Solicitor General can argue that to protect ourselves, our country, our laws and our institutions, we need that kind of authoritarian power. I went through the intrusive powers, as we all have, at second reading and committee stage.

The other point I want to speak on very briefly is the oversight committee. In West Germany there is a parliamentary oversight committee. We in this country often tend to think that the American police forces, such as the FBI and CIA, have such untrammelled and unlimited power that it is dangerous. We are talking about a security agency in this country that is somewhat analogous to the FBI. We have the impression that the FBI has tremendous power. However, in the United States, because the FBI abused that power which it developed by hook or by crook since I believe the early 1930s, the U.S. Congress in its wisdom set up an oversight committee.

Let me quote from an article in The Globe and Mail of February 11, 1984, written by Mr. Jeff Sallot, in which he refers to that oversight committee and what the chairman of that committee of the House of Representatives had to say about the laws and powers that we are about to give to this civilian security agency in Canada. He says:

Congressman Donald Edwards—

He is an elected representative of the people, as we are here as Members of Parliament.

—the chairman of the House of Representatives committee which scrutinizes FBI activities, said that the 'loose' definitions of threats to national security in the Canadian bill would never be tolerated in the United States.

He is referring there to an oversight committee, not some ancient Privy Councillors who may have sat in the House 25 years ago or indeed never run for public office but were somehow appointed to the Privy Council of Canada as friends of a Prime Minister. He was referring to a committee of Congressmen who represent congressional districts and are elected directly by the people. They are on that oversight committee in the United States to ensure that the FBI does not break the law and is not guilty of dirty tricks.

That is what the New Democratic Party is asking for. We are asking for an oversight committee composed of parliamentarians. What does the Solicitor General have against parliamentarians? What does the Cabinet have against parliamentarians? Are we not trustworthy? Can we not be expected to do an honourable job in making sure that the civilian security agency operates according to the regulations and laws that we gave it in the first place? That is what is important and what is at stake. That is a fundamental democratic principle on which we base our arguments with respect to the oversight committee.

The third point I want to make concerns the powers that the RCMP already have through the criminal justice system. As I read the Bill, the civilian agency would take over many of those simple and sometimes not so simple police activities which the RCMP is presently charged with carrying out. These include to cause an investigation, secret or otherwise, to effect arrests, to lay charges and, through the Crown, bring the suspects to trial.

In the United Kingdom there is what is called the MI-5, which is somewhat similar to what we are proposing with the secret service here and the FBI in the United States. However, in the United Kingdom MI-5 officers do not carry guns, do not effect arrests and do not even lay charges. Their job is counterintelligence. Their job is to gather information within the law. It is a special branch of Scotland Yard that does the police work.

I suggest that that is the way it should be here in Canada. The RCMP, which is a police force, should be charged with the normal application of the criminal justice system in effecting arrests and laying charges, and this new civilian security force should have no right whatever to act as policemen. They are not, in fact, trained as police officers. That is why I would like to see a considerable amount of the authority that is provided in this Bill remain within the hands of the RCMP.

Finally, I do not know why the Solicitor General has ignored many of the basic recommendations of the McDonald Royal Commission which led to Bill C-9 in the first place. I do not know why he insists on refusing to follow the advice of the Pitfield Committee in the other place. In both those instances, they warned against too much power, too much authority and too much secrecy vested in this proposed civilian agency.

That is why, at the outset of my remarks, I said it was odious. It is anathema to those of us who truly believe in democracy in a country such as Canada. Canada is not a hive of subversion and subversive activity. It is not a mecca of terrorism. It is true that we no doubt have some persons in this country who harbour terrorist aspirations and who may in fact be directly involved in terrorist activity. There are others who would no doubt like to undermine our democratic institutions by force. But in a country such as Canada, these conditions are to the best of my knowledge, and looking back over the years historically, an absolute minimum. While I agree that we desperately need a much more effective security force in Canada and, if need be, a civilian security force, as a believer in democracy I refuse in principle to grant those authoritarian powers to the secret little club that the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General want to establish.

I would like to call it one o'clock, if I may.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House disposed to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BALTIC STATES—ANNIVERSARY OF CITIZENS' DEPORTATION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, on this forty-third anniversary of a terrible event I would like to draw to the attention of the House a moving event which took place last night in downtown Montreal. Several hundred people gathered together to remember something. They were members of the Baltic Federation of Montreal and they were taking time to remember the terrible events of June 14, 1941, in Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia.

What took place was a brutal round-up and deportation to Soviet hard labour camps of thousands upon thousands of citizens of the three Baltic States. They were rounded up between 1 a.m. and 5 a.m. that night, given only a short time to gather a few personal possessions, put in trucks, and taken to railway stations. There they were herded into boxcars, each one of which was hopelessly overcrowded. Slits in the sides were all that let in some air and some light. A hole in the floor served as a toilet. Throughout a journey lasting several days and nights, they were given no food or water. The doors were barred and were opened only at the destination, by which time, starvation, illness, and death had all taken their toll.

No wonder so many Canadians of origin in the Baltic States took time last night to lay their wreaths and to say "je me souviens". I should also add that representatives of the following Montreal organizations were in attendance: the Canadian Polish Congress, the Canadian Hungarian Committee of Montreal, the Canadian Ukrainian Committee, the Czechoslovakian National Association, the Afghan Association, and the anti-Bolshevik Association.

RADIO-CANADA

REQUEST THAT VILLAGE OF KEGASKA, P.Q., BE GIVEN ACCESS TO TELEVISION PROGRAMS

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken a number of times in the House about the television problem in Kegaska, a small village on the middle and lower North Shore. A few weeks ago, Radio-Canada informed me that it would be possible to use equipment formerly used in Gaspé to set up a transmitter for Kegaska. Mr. Speaker, at the present time, this small village with a population of 200 does not receive either French or English television. Every time, the CRTC has turned down requests for cable because the village does not have the required minimum population of 500. I would ask the Minister responsible to take the necessary action to give this community access to television broadcasts. Canadians ought to realize that before setting up a second network, the CBC should make sure that everyone in Canada can at least receive the first network. I think it is very sad that after four years of repeated requests, the CBC has yet to find a solution to a minor problem that might cost them about $250,000. Mr. Speaker, I am repeating my request and I want to make sure that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation takes the appropriate action so that the community of Kegaska can receive television broadcasts in 1984.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COVERAGE OF LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CONVENTION

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have it on good authority that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation producers of this weekend's Liberal leadership extravaganza are praying that the race will go to four or five ballots. That is the only way the CBC will have time to roll all the credits for participating commentators, most of them Liberals. Heaven help them if this thing only goes to one ballot. Quite apart from the amount of money these well known Liberals are being paid for their transportation and expertise, our government owned network cannot deny its long-time friends due recognition at this Liberal-CBC love in.

Seriously, a few of these high powered Grits will be worth hearing. From Newfoundland, representing Atlantic Canada, we will have the Hon. Joey Smallwood, a distinguished Father of Confederation. From the West Coast we bring you such famous names as Senator Ray Perrault, Senator Jack Austin, and former Vancouver mayor and defeated candidate, Art Phillips; from Edmonton, Alberta's only surviving Liberal, Mayor Laurence Decore; from Saskatchewan, former Liberal leader and now a Senator, Davie Steuart another impartial observer and survivor of Liberal fortunes in Western Canada; from Manitoba—are you ready for this, Mr. Speaker?—Izzy Asper, once a rumoured Liberal leader in that province. And so it goes.

We have a distinguished former broadcaster, the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), all lending their impartial expertise this weekend. It beats me, when we have some 5,000 journalists and independent analysts in town—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time, unfortunately, has expired.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CLEANERS' STRIKE AT TORONTO'S FIRST CANADIAN PLACE OFFICE TOWER

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Two hundred immigrants, mostly Portuguese women, have for several years cleaned the offices and stores in First Canadian Place, Toronto's biggest and snazziest office tower. Although the owners, Olympia and York, are worth $3.5 billion, the cleaners are expected to support families on $5.83 an hour. Therefore they went on strike on June 4, led by their union, the Food And Service Workers of Canada.

Support for the strike is strong among the union members and within the Portuguese community in Toronto, many of whom have joined the picket line. However, the strikers are shocked to find the Government of Canada trying to help the employer break the strike.

Canada Employment Centres are sending unemployed workers to cross the picket line. Not only does the Government use poor people against poor people, but it uses the workers' own unemployment insurance payments to defeat the workers. It is intimidating the unemployed by suggesting that if they do not cross the picket line they may lose their entitlement to unemployment insurance.

The Portuguese cleaning women on strike, and all other workers, are angry at what is called "being kicked with their own boot."

I demand that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), when he returns from his paid vacation with the leadership campaign, immediately make a public declaration assuring unemployed workers that they will not lose their entitlement to unemployment insurance by respecting and refusing to cross a legal picket line.

THE PRIME MINISTER

TRIBUTE TO LEADERSHIP

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): This day the Liberal Party of Canada bids a special farewell and thank you to one of its most illustrious leaders and a most eminent parliamentarian. It is my concern that at this time we should reflect on the principles that have guided our Leader in Parliament.

His irrepressible debating skills will not soon be forgotten, especially by the opposition Parties. His arguments inevitably were based on rational thinking and logic, rather than on emotion. They were motivated by an intense love of country and a respect for all Canadians. His goal was unity of the country and a federal Government that spoke for all of Canada.

His statements were always tempered by respect for the rule of law and the judgments of the courts of this land. His decisions took into account the historic perspective of Canada.

The parliamentary process itself was enriched by his introduction of the innovative use of committees and task forces, by making available, to Government and Opposition, improved research facilities and manpower.

Outside the House he acquired the respect of members of the press, even if he did not capture their affection. His thinking crossed Canadian borders, making him a citizen of the world. He was an internationalist, with the intense desire to overcome the gap between the rich and the poor.

Though he will be missed as a Leader of the Liberal Party, I sincerely hope that in his future endeavours the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will continue in his role that has been so meaningful to Canada and to the world as a whole, and that is as a respected, informed, and articulate ambassador of peace.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

FUNDING OF RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, a very important loans program appears to be suffering greatly at the hands of the Canada Housing and Mortgage Corporation. The Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, known more commonly as RRAP, is under funded to the point that it is nearly ineffectual. The CMHC office in North Bay, which is responsible for the riding I represent, received only two-thirds of the funding it sought for this calendar year. Consequently there is a waiting list of roughly 70 applications from persons in dire need of home repairs. We are not talking about people who want financial assistance for swimming pools and hot tubs. We are talking about people who need new heating systems, plumbing, fire safety systems, and whose house structural foundations are crumbling beneath them. RRAP loans also make homes more livable for the disabled.

More funding is needed for more delivery agents to assess the work on behalf of CMHC. Organized areas with municipal representation have the advantage of agents supplied by the councils, but what may be done for those persons who are not represented at the municipal level, those who live in unorganized territories? I appeal to the Minister responsible for CMHC to approach Treasury Board for increased funding for this important program.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

DAMAGE CAUSED BY HELICOPTER ACCIDENT IN HALIFAX, N.S.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, Nova Scotians in Halifax West are proud of the presence in the community of the Canadian Armed Forces, particularly Maritime Command. Respect for the naval tradition was evident in the massive response to the parade of sail in Halifax harbour involving 50 tall ships and sailors from all over the world. However, while the Armed Forces are welcome in Nova Scotia, the Government must make appropriate amends for damage or loss resulting from military activity.

On June 10, 1984, a Seaking helicopter operating from CFB Shearwater caused an unfortunate accident not justifiable on grounds of military authority or emergency. The Seaking damaged a power line, resulting in a lengthy interruption of electrical services to thousands of homes and business premises in Halifax West. Damage ranged from spoiled foods in households to substantial injury to food products held in storage. Liability should be accepted by the Government as a public responsibility. Those incurring losses should not be subjected to technical legal defences, nor incur the expense of protracted legal action. I urge the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) to accept responsibility and proceed to settle claims on a fair and reasonable basis.

DISASTERS

LOSSES CAUSED BY FIRE AT FOAM LAKE, SASK.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, on June 1 of this year the town of Foam Lake suffered the worst fire in its history. I had the opportunity to survey the damage last week, with Mayor Velma Johnson of the town of Foam Lake. Part of the main street was destroyed, including a large hardware store, a grocery store, home care offices, and a large grain annex. The damage is around $2 million. In addition, there were a lot of firefighting costs. The fire was still smouldering in the grain annex four or five days after June 1. Therefore the damages have been quite extensive for the town.

I was shocked to find out that the provincial Government has denied any emergency assistance to the town of Foam Lake, despite the tremendous cost. The Mayor and the townspeople are very disappointed with this. My purpose in rising this afternoon is to ask the federal Government whether there might be some emergency assistance it can give to the town of Foam Lake. Perhaps the Government could help me to negotiate with the provincial Government in an attempt to try to persuade it to fulfil the obligation it has to the people of Foam Lake. This is a very expensive burden for the people of that town. They deserve help.

EMPLOYMENT

SPECIAL EMPLOYMENT INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO OKANAGAN-SIMILKAMEEN RIDING

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, some months ago the shame of the Special Employment Initiatives Program of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) was revealed to the nation. In a secretive manner, funding was provided to Liberal MPs only for distribution of grants in the ridings they represent, for the obvious purpose of buying favour with the electorate. The Minister said then: "Golly, I am sorry I forgot to tell opposition Members about the grants". Therefore I submitted a number of applications on behalf of constituents in Okanagan-Similkameen, and pursued the matter through numerous conversations and correspondence with the Minister, but did not get so much as an acknowledgement of receipt of the applications.

Last week the Minister of Employment and Immigration and B.C. Senator Jack Austin announced, with great fanfare, a grant of $40,000 to the Penticton Triathlon Society, one of the applications I had submitted to the Minister for approval. Here we have it, $500,000 or more distributed to Liberal held ridings, $40,000 provided to Okanagan-Similkameen in a manner which suggests that grateful constituents should kiss the Liberal hands that opened the purse just enough to give a peek at what is going on in Liberal Canada. Imagine being expected to show gratitude to those responsible for this blantantly partisan, corrupt, unfair, unethical, irresponsible, unacceptable way of dealing with the citizens of Canada.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN BANK RATE—EXCHANGE RATE OF DOLLAR

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, who undoubtedly knows that the bank rate has again today jumped. Our dollar has been taking a pounding, forced down to the lowest level it has been since 1855, yet we find this morning that plant utilization in the manufacturing sector is actually down. Will the Minister explain to the House why the Canadian dollar is taking the pounding it is now taking, and why interest rates are rising at a time when plant utilization is actually falling off?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the latest information I have is that the dollar at noon was at 76.88, which is not the lowest level it has ever been, as the Hon. Member was suggesting. Second, as far as interest rates are concerned, he knows the bank's rate went up 7/100 of 1 per cent, which is a very small increase. It is not expected to have any direct impact on loans to individuals or on mortgages.

As the Hon. Member knows, the prime rate in Canada is lower by half a point than in the United States. Conventional mortgage rates in Canada are still generally lower than in the United States. As far as the Canadian consumer and borrower is concerned, he can still get a better deal in Canada than he can get in the United States.

However, the Hon. Member knows that in the open market we are learning that interest rates in the United States have a major influence, not only in Canada but in all other industrialized countries. If he looks at other currencies, European currencies for example, he will see that those currencies have been under pressure because of the particular strength of the United States dollar. I could go on with a longer explanation and a longer discourse on the subject, but I am sure the Hon. Member knows all these facts already.

SIZE OF DEFICIT—STATEMENT PUBLISHED BY HON. JOHN TURNER, LIBERAL LEADERSHIP CANDIDATE

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is very simple. Does the Minister of Finance agree with the statement of John Turner that is now hitting the streets of Ottawa, called "John Turner Speaks Out"? I quote:

Without getting into what the deficits do to us in terms of impeding investment, keeping interest rates high, jeopardizing the exchange rate—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has some concern on two points, first the displaying of a document and, second, concerning the request for an opinion. These have been traditional—will the Hon. Member please let the Chair speak? This is a concern that I only wish to express at this point.

Mr. Stevens: The quote continues:

—what they are really doing to us, if we do not get them under control, is forcing us to pay 20 cents on every tax dollar to pay the interest on our debts, and a good deal of that is being paid to foreigners.

Is that a fair statement of Canada's position today? If the Minister agrees with that statement, why has he allowed that to happen?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that I made a very similar statement in the last two Budgets and that we have taken steps to reduce the Canadian deficit gradually. The Hon. Member will also know that at the present time in Canada the budget deficit has no impact on the level of interest rates for the good reason that there is indeed a considerable supply of funds on the market. The banks and financial institutions have an ample supply of funds for both the private and public sector. There is no domestic reason why the interest rates are under pressure at the present time. The pressures are being created by the situation in the United States. This is a view that was expressed most strongly by the other six major industrialized countries at the recent summit in London.

• (1420)

The American administration has been repeatedly told that the evolution of interest rates in the United States was a source of great concern for all industrialized nations, for the developing countries and particularly for the debtor countries which are facing very substantial increases in payments for every 1 per cent increase in the value of the American dollar. A 1 per cent increase in interest rates means that these countries will have to pay $4 billion more in interest every year. These facts have been drawn to the attention of the United States administration repeatedly, and we have urged that administration to take steps to reduce the pressure on United States rates of interest, steps which would have a beneficial effect on all other industrialized countries.

FORECAST OF INCREASE IN UNITED STATES INTEREST RATES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the Minister of Finance who has just stated that our interest rates are being influenced to a major extent by American rates. He undoubtedly knows that this week Goldman Sachs has stated that a large rise in short-term interest rates in the United States of 3 per cent to 5 per cent lies ahead, and that the yield on 30-year treasury bonds will probably exceed the previous historic peak of 15.25 per cent. Does the Minister agree that there may be such a spiralling of American interest rates? If he does agree with that, will he allow Canada to be crucified on the cross of those American rates without stopping this nonsensical tracking of the American rates that he has been doing?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would only say that I will not speculate on the evolution of American interest rates, except to say to the Hon. Member that the view he attributes to Goldman Sachs is certainly not shared by the United States administration, Treasury, and President. We will see who is right and who is wrong.

As far as the rest of his question is concerned, I notice that my friend, the finance critic for the Opposition, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, is not in the House today. If he were, he would certainly dispute the argument of the Hon. Member that we could somehow have a totally independent of interest determined rate in this country alone. That is certainly not the view of the Hon. Member for St. John's West, and I would hope that the Conservatives would stop trying to speak from both sides of their mouths.

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT PUBLISHED BY MINISTER OF ENERGY, LIBERAL LEADERSHIP CANDIDATE

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. His colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has recently stated:

> The last decade has taken a profound toll on individuals, families and communities.
> Continuing levels of unemployment unknown since the Great Depression—unemployment that has been particularly hard on the young and the less educated—

In his brochure which can be obtained across the street, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has indicated:

> With youth unemployment at almost 20 per cent, the major priority must be to create jobs. Youth unemployment is a serious social and economic problem. I am deeply concerned about the scars that might be left on an entire generation.

All these, Mr. Speaker, are the words of one of the members of Cabinet who has been a part of the Government for many, many years. These words amount to an outright condemnation of the policies of the Minister of Finance. Does the Minister of Finance accept this outright criticism of the policies of his Government that is being made by candidates who seek to replace the Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair wishes to repeat its reservation. The introduction of literature relating to events taking place outside this House and clearly identifying the candidate—

An Hon. Member: Who says that?

Mr. Speaker: Suppose a Liberal back-bencher were to introduce such literature? There must be some impartiality. I plead with Hon. Members not to introduce documents or displays which are identified with individual candidates.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I may remind my hon. friend that instead of poring over material published in connection with the Liberal leadership race which is on at the present time, he ought to read the Budgets I brought down, in which I have stressed the importance of the unemployment question in this country. The last two Budgets I brought down set a very high priority on the unemployment issue and job creation in this country. I am not going to repeat all the measures these Budgets contain, but I may remind my hon. friend that, for instance, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has often stressed the positive and job creating factors we have introduced starting in the energy sector thanks to a set of measures we have implemented.

As for youth unemployment, I may remind the Hon. Member once more that for 1983-84, this Government allocated the sum of $1.113 billion for young people alone. The services thus funded will benefit more than 2,146,000 young people in our country in 1983-84. This is the largest amount ever earmarked for youth unemployment in the history of this country. The Government has made a commitment to reduce youth unemployment. We have done everything we could, and we shall continue to do so.

[English]

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I prefer the honest assessment that the Minister's colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has made of the disastrous state of our economy, to the fluffed-up, pontificating of the Minister of Finance, who has obviously failed the country miserably.

CONFERENCE BOARD OF CANADA STATEMENT ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, in its recent report the Conference Board of Canada states that high interest rates continue to inhibit business investment and consumer spending in Canada. In a recent statement, John Turner, another candidate who proposes to become the next Prime Minister, makes it clear that he has no solution to the high interest rate problem.

Would the Minister of Finance admit that consumer spending is more buoyant in the United States than in Canada, as pointed out by the Conference Board because in Canada, unlike in the U.S., households cannot deduct mortgage interest costs from taxable income, thereby maximizing disposable income. Is the Minister of Finance in favour of giving Canadian home owners a break on their mortgage interest payments by allowing deductibility of these costs, or does he really propose to offer himself to John Turner as Canada's next Finance Minister, given his disastrous record of failure to date?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, quite clearly the Conservatives are running scared.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I will only say that they have good reason to be running scared. I can say that either of the two gentlemen to whom he has referred will run them into the ground at the time of the election.

My friend was quoting a particular institution. I will quote Carl Beigie to him, one of the outstanding economists in the private sector of the country, who said that the Canadian economy is in better shape at the present time than it has been in the last 15 years, for making further progress.

EFFECT ON INTEREST RATES—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance who has already been reminded today of the potential impact of increasing interest rates. He knows that with interest rates at their present level, without allowing for the increases that we are now seeing, economic recovery will likely be aborted.

The Minister has come out very strongly against the American position on interest rates, saying that President Reagan has taken an "I'm all right, Jack" position. As reflected by his interest rate policy, it is obvious that President Reagan does not care about Canadians. Paul Volcker does not care about the economic plight faced by Canadians. Does the Minister of Finance care about the plight that is faced by Canadians because of the high interest rate policies which the Government is pursuing? If he does care, why does he not do something about it? Why does he not begin to take some independent action on interest rates here in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question, Mr. Speaker, is yes. As far as the second question is concerned, I need only tell my friend that in the last two years interest rates in Canada have gone from 3.5 per cent higher than interest rates in the United States to half a point below them. This shows that we care and that we are doing everything we can to bring interest rates down to the lowest possible level.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I would like to question the statement of the Minister that he does care. As a result of his high interest rate policies and of his reluctance to take independent action, there has been a social consequence in the country. Many hospital psychiatric wards are filled with young people who are depressed and young people who have attempted suicide as a result of being unable to find employment. The Minister knows that alcohol and drug abuse and family violence have increased, and that is partly because of the Minister's high interest rate policy, the lack of economic activity and the resulting economic growth, and the fact that so many Canadians are jobless.

● (1430)

Does the Minister have a conscience? Can he sit there today, knowing interest rates are again moving upward, and legitimately say that there is nothing he is prepared to do? He is just wringing his hands and saying he, in fact, does care, but the social consequences of his interest rate policy would indicate quite the contrary.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to "my" high interest rate policy. I do not know where the Hon. Member has been in the last two years. I have just answered in the previous question that indeed we have succeeded for the first time in a very long time in getting interest rates in Canada to a lower level than in the United States. This required some imagination, some work, and some good co-operation from Canadians in this country, which was more than we received from the New Democratic Party, I must say. It is more interested in moaning and complaining than in trying to look at issues and trying to address them in an objective and positive way.

I can only say to the Hon. Member that if his Party has policy proposals, put them forward and let them be examined and criticized. Let those Hon. Members spell out what they would propose for this country. Let them say whether they want exchange controls. Let them say whether they want to have a policy which is going to be made in Canada only, as if the rest of the world did not exist, as if 30 per cent of our income as Canadians did not depend on our exports, as if we were not very much interdependent with the rest of the industrialized world. We are, for better and for worse, very closely tied to what happens in the American economy. Overall Canada has benefited more than suffered from its geographical and economic situation vis-à-vis the United States. We should bear that in mind.

REFORESTATION INVESTMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will know that one of the reasons why the United States has shown some economic activity is because it has been investing heavily in its war industry in preparation for war. As a result of that, money is circulating in many of its communities and economic growth is taking place.

The Minister asked for some suggestions. Would the Minister consider declaring war on our number one problem in Canada, that is, unemployment? Would the Minister take some independent action right now to provide jobs for Canadians in an effort to get money circulating in our Canadian communities by investing, let us say, in reforestation projects and in fishery enhancement programs?

An Hon. Member: We have done that.

Mr. Riis: You have not done that. Where it has taken place is on a very measly level. If the Minister is serious about getting people back to work, why does he not show some leadership and get on with it? Will he declare war on unemployment in this country and get money circulating in the communities of Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was asking for positive proposals—

Mr. Riis: Reforestation. I just gave it to you.

Mr. Lalonde: —and I received rhetoric. Unfortunately that is what we are accustomed to receiving from the New Democratic Party. I suggest to the Hon. Member that if he looks at the federal programs he will find, for instance, that we have signed agreements with a number of provinces which include reforestation programs. The Hon. Member knows, or he should know, coming from the Province of British Columbia, that those resources belong to the province and to the provincial Government. We cannot just walk in and tell the provincial government: "We are going to plant trees in your forests". It requires the co-operation of the provinces for this. Some provinces have co-operated. Others are dragging their feet. If the Hon. Member has something to complain about, he should go to his own provincial Government—

Mr. Riis: That is hopeless.

Mr. Lalonde: —which has been dragging its feet in that regard.

Mr. Riis: The Socreds are hopeless.

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member says it is hopeless. Well, he should not blame the federal Government for the situation which exists because of the action or inaction of his own provincial Government. That is the situation.

I invite my friend to realize what this federal Government has done in federal-provincial agreements on forestry. I invite him to look at the hundreds of millions of dollars which we have put into helping the fishing industry, and at the measures which the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is due to introduce in the next few days to help the fishing industry in British Columbia. I will look forward to seeing what the New Democratic Party is going to do when we bring forward those proposals to help the British Columbia fishing industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE

HARASSMENT COMPLAINT AGAINST OFFICIAL IN VICTORIA

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General, and I have given him notice of it. The Minister has known for 11 months about a case alleging harassment by a senior official of the Correctional Service's parole office in Victoria. That case, aided and abetted by the outrageous procrastination demonstrated by his Department, has resulted in serious morale problems for all staff members. Can the Minister now, after 11 months, advise the House when we may see an end to this matter? When will he stop postponing the full disciplinary inquiry which has been called for?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want the Hon. Member to know that I also very much regret the length of time it has taken to reach a hearing on this matter. The Hon. Member will know that a large part of the delay, in fact, the delay presently being experienced, is the result of a court order that no hearing occur until the fall. Therefore at present my hands are tied. However, I have indicated to the Correctional Service of Canada that I would like the matter to be proceeded with as quickly as possible. I have its assurance that it will be proceeded with by the middle of October. I hope that is satisfactory to the Hon. Member.

In the meanwhile, so far as disruptions of the office are concerned, I have taken steps to ensure that the office continues to be run and is running in an orderly way and that business as usual continues as much as possible under the circumstances.

Mr. McKinnon: I point out to the Minister that there were four postponements of the disciplinary inquiry before the court order.

DELAY IN CONVENING INQUIRY

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The terms of reference for the preliminary inquiry included: "It has been alleged that Mr. Murray Gaw, the Director of the Victoria District Parole Office, has been involved in activities related to: (1) harassment; (2) sexual harassment; (3) police harassment; (4) public mischief; (5) discrimination against union members; (6) counselling the commission of unlawful acts; and, (7) improper staffing activities." This stonewalling has made a farce out of the Human Rights Act and clearly demonstrates we either have a weak-kneed Solicitor General or that his Department is completely out of control in its stonewalling activities in this case.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I feel it is very regrettable that the Hon. Member would rehearse a set of allegations in the House of Commons. I hope that the statements he has made do not damage the possibility of seeing justice achieved in this case.

TOURISM

INCREASE IN DEFICIT—PROPOSED AGREEMENT WITH ONTARIO

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Minister knows that the Canadian tourist deficit has increased from a record $2.1 billion last year. It is projected to increase to a staggering $3 billion this year. According to Statistics Canada that will result in the loss of 150,000 jobs. One of the reasons for these alarming statistics is because of the reluctance of the Liberal Government to co-operate with the provinces. Specifically, I would like to ask the Minister why he is dragging his heels in signing the tourism development sub-agreement with the Province of Ontario. This is an agreement that has been in the works for four years. It is an agreement which, if signed, would enhance the tourist industry in Ontario. Why has the Minister not made a decision on this very important matter? And when will he?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first of all, with respect to the preamble to the Hon. Member's question, I would indicate that my colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, I believe, in the past year has done a fantastic job with the industry. For example, he has increased the budget for advertising. He has introduced a special advertising program, for example, throughout the whole northern part of the United States in order to increase traffic back and forth in terms of tourist development.

Mr. Jelinek: What about the deficit?

Mr. Lumley: In terms of the co-operation with the provinces, Mr. Speaker, up until this point in time I believe we had—going back as far as five years and six years ago—about nine or ten sub-agreements on tourism. Therefore the Hon. Member's comment with respect to co-operation with the province is not accurate.

With respect to a possible new sub-agreement between the Province of Ontario and Canada, we are considering it. It was most unfortunate that the Treasurer of Ontario would mention that in his Budget before we had made a decision to have a sub-agreement. However, it is still a possibility.

BANKS AND BANKING

BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA—FORECLOSURE ACTION AGAINST BRITISH COLUMBIA COMPANY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Ministr of Finance. He may or may not know that the Bank of Nova Scotia has just foreclosed on a loan to Winde Pacific Forest Products in British Columbia. There was no warning, no notice, and no compensation. More than 100 people now have no jobs. Will the Minister not agree that this foreclosure in a province suffering the second highest unemployment rate in Canada, by a fat bank whose profits went up 66 per cent last year, is yet another prime example of the insensitivity and irresponsibility of the banks?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I might just ask my hon. friend which Party in this House has been holding up the adoption of improvements to the Bankruptcy Act which are in committee at the present time?

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is just dodging the issue. He knows perfectly well that he could take action, and I ask him what specific action he is prepared to take when that bank's profits go up 66 per cent and it is investing $7 billion in the United States, 13 per cent of its assets? When is he going to say to the banks, through regulation, that they must lend a substantial portion of their investment capital to Canadian small business to help Canadians and help keep Canadian jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, fundamentally what the Hon. Member is asking is not that the banks invest more in Canadian businesses. She is suggesting that the banks should not collect their loans. That is a strange approach to running a business, even a bank.

Mr. Stevens: Not for a socialist.

TOURISM

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE CONCLUDED WITH ONTARIO

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Further to the questions of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Halton, I would like to ask the Minister is it not true that you have no intention of signing that $30 million agreement—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Stewart: Through you, Mr. Speaker—the agreement with the Province of Ontario. You are a Minister from that province.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Stewart: Sixty-nine per cent of all American tourists and 53 per cent of all overseas tourists come through the Province of Ontario. That agreement has been sitting on the Minister's desk for four years. I asked his colleague, the Minister of Tourism, who, we know, obviously has no clout in Cabinet, why the agreement could not be signed. Ontario is the most important province for tourism in this country, and I say again that the Minister is sitting on his fanny, talking about cars and watching thousands of jobs disappear.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy answering the questions of Members who are so negative. They give you a great opportunity to respond. We have not been talking about cars, Mr. Speaker; we have been actively involved in obtaining over $1 billion invested in the automotive industry in the Province of Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: I am sure that the Premier of the Province of Ontario will look very seriously at the comments of the Hon. Member which demean the importance of the automotive industry in Ontario.

Also, Mr. Speaker, for the first time in Canadian history the tourist industry has been added as a major sector for industrial assistance under the new program called IRDP which was approved unanimously in this House almost a year ago this month.

Mr. Bussières: He was not here. He was sleeping.

Mr. Lumley: A substantial number of applications have already been approved. If the Hon. Member would just look at matters a little more positively I think he might see what is going on, instead of closing his mind to what is actually happening.

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE SIGNED

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, the new Honda automotive plant is in my riding, of which I am justifiably proud.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: But I hate to see a Minister hiding under IRDP which in my vocabulary answers to CRAP. He talks about billions of dollars—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The first indication was that the Hon. Member did not want a supplementary. If it is a short supplementary, can he put it?

Mr. Stewart: I did. There is a $3 billion deficit in tourism. Will the Minister sign that subagreement with the Province of Ontario tomorrow?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Hon. Member's preamble, the first he heard of the Honda announcement was when he saw it in the paper, unlike a lot of House colleagues. I will even give credit to his side of the House. A lot of his colleagues, when they heard about the possibility of having a Honda plant come to Canada, wrote and asked if we could put it in their constituencies. That Hon. Member did not say one cotton-pickin' word, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: Then, to top it off, he tried to stand up in the House a week later under S.O. 21 and did not even acknowledge the contribution of the Government of Canada in getting the Honda plant there.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Lumley: Also, without the IRDP program, the new $764 million American Motors automotive plant would not have been possible in Canada. It was that program that enabled the Government of Canada to offer financial assistance to obtain that plant.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: Finally, Mr. Speaker, we will look very seriously at the possibility of a subagreement with the Province of Ontario on tourism.

ENERGY

COST OF ELECTRICITY IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On May 25 I asked the Minister whether the Government would be open to the idea of an energy subsidy for Prince Edward Island given that the province's electrical costs are at least twice those of the rest of Canada. His reply was entirely negative on the grounds that Prince Edward Island had missed its opportunity to lower electrical costs by rejecting energy from the Lepreau nuclear plant in New Brunswick. Is the Minister aware of data released by the Minister of Energy in Prince Edward Island, Fred Driscoll, a few days ago demonstrating that energy from Lepreau would have been much more expensive for P.E.I. than other options? If not, will the Minister inform himself about Mr. Driscoll's data and take a fresh look at the issue in light of that data?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I previously referred to Mr. Carl Beigie, and I would not want to be unfair to him, but I should also add that I understand Mr. Beigie has been asked to advise the Conservative Party on policy. Therefore I think his statement has all the more authority when he says that the economy has never been in better shape in the last 15 years.

I might advise my friend that I did not take a totally negative attitude to his question the other day. On the contrary, I indicated the large contribution the federal Government had brought to Prince Edward Island in helping that province reduce its dependence on oil in particular, especially in the area of conservation of energy generally, through home insulation, et cetera. Programs were specifically tailored for situations like that of Prince Edward Island.

As far as the report the Hon. Member has referred to is concerned, I will read it with interest, but I can tell him that the studies the Department of Energy had made at that time, in consultation with the Governments of New Brunswick and P.E.I., seem to indicate that the cost of not using the Lepreau electricity was much higher than if it had been used.

ENERGY SUBSIDY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will recognize that, while conservation is important, it is just the tip of the iceberg as far as Prince Edward Island's energy problem is concerned. Therefore, does he at least recognize that exorbitantly high electrical costs on the Island constitute the biggest obstacle to that province ever achieving any degree of economic self-sufficiency? If so, would he be prepared to recommend to the new Liberal Prime Minister after the weekend that he examine the idea of a P.E.I. energy subsidy with an open mind so that the Island can become more industrially competitive and ultimately less dependent on transfer payments both to individuals and to the Government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the analysis of the Hon. Member. I can only remind him that the federal Government paid $18 million, I believe, for an electrical transmission cable to Prince Edward Island. That is a significant subsidy to help reduce the cost of electricity to the people of Prince Edward Island.

INDUSTRY

LAY-OFFS AT WOODS INCORPORATED, TORONTO

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services concerning another plant closing, Woods Incorporated, in my constituency. Some 140 production workers have been laid off, and the question is whether it is temporary or permanent. The Minister will know the company because it bid successfully on a number of contracts before, and has recently bid on a major contract. Can the Minister hold out any hope for those workers who have been laid off that there will be production jobs in September and that they will be getting back to work?

• (1450)

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for her question and for giving me advance notice of the question.

I discussed with the Hon. Member the offer made by the company in her riding. The information I was able to obtain was as follows: The contract will be awarded in the first half of July. At the present time, the Department is checking the quality of certain materials for these emergency bags which will be used by the Armed Forces. Today I am not in a position to say who will or will not get the contract, but I realize that the workers in the company mentioned by the Hon. Member are in a difficult situation. I hope, if the company's price and product is the best one being offered, that it will get the contract.

[English]

SLEEPING BAG CONTRACT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister, or perhaps for the Minister of National Defence. It is with regard to a similar contract. Timing seems to be very important in this situation. For this company to survive and these jobs to continue, there must be some production in the fall. Yet there have been a number of delays on another major contract of around $1 million for sleeping bags for the Armed Forces. Can we have an understanding as to when this contract will be out for bids? The company has been told week after week that it is immiment, yet there has not been any action. I trust both the Ministers are aware that the livelihood of a community, and of real people who are suffering, is at stake.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to look into the representations of the Hon. Member. I am not familiar with the particular contract she is speaking of, nor the particular requirement. I will inquire and provide her with as much information as I possibly can.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—EXIT VISAS SOUGHT FOR FAMILY REUNIFICATIONS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The question concerns the very brave struggle of the hunger strikers in front of the Polish consulate in Toronto. I want to associate myself with the question raised earlier by the Member for Parkdale-High Park urging the Government to press the Polish authorities to grant exit visas to the families of those people who are now in their twenty-fourth day of hunger strike.

In order to put more pressure on the Polish authorities, would the Government contact the other signatories of the Helsinki Accord and request that they urge the Polish authorities to grant those exit visas, in order to add the strength of world opinion in opposing this clearly inhumane act by the Polish Government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is raising cases which are quite well known to the Government and myself. Under instructions, officials of the Department have made representations to the Polish authorities toward the end of May and again this month with respect to these cases. Up to the present time the Polish authorities have declined to reverse the decisions which they have already made. We have indicated our readiness to receive the members of the strikers' families. All we can do is continue the efforts. The Hon. Member may remember that late last year we had similar incidents which we substantially solved. I am hoping we will have the same result here.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER SEEK SUPPORT OF HELSINKI ACCORD SIGNATORIES

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my question was in no way critical of the Government's effort in the matter. In fact, it has been exemplary. I was making a suggestion and wanted the Minister to respond to it. I suggest that the Government go further and contact the other signatories of the Helsinki Accord and ask them to put pressure, along with the Canadian Government, on the Polish authorities. That would allow further weight of world opinion so that we could put that kind of pressure on the Polish Government. Clearly the weight of the Canadian Government is not—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is giving the Hon. Member an opportunity. I think he has made his point. There are several Members on his side who are anxiously seeking recognition. The Chair understood there was only to be one question by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Crombie: May I be allowed to put the question, Mr. Speaker? I simply wanted to ask the Minister to respond to the suggestion that we could gain something on behalf of these people by contacting the signatories of the Helsinki Accord and asking them to intervene on behalf of the strikers.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's suggestion is a serious one. We do associate ourselves with the other members of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe in family reunification cases. In our discussions we move together. The idea that a number of countries join in supporting cases respecting Canada is a novel idea. I am doubtful whether it would be effective. I certainly will give consideration to it.

It is true that of all the eastern European countries the Polish authorities have been among the most co-operative in responding to family reunification cases. I hope that the more open attitude which they have demonstrated will be reinforced by action they may take in the cases which the Hon. Member mentions.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT TAX ON TOURIST MATERIALS BE REMOVED

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It is with regard to his 9 per cent tax on tourism materials. The tourist industry in Canada employs about 11 per cent of Canadians. It could employ a lot more Canadians, including young Canadians, particularly in small business. The tax is constituting a growing irritant to Canada-U.S. relations. In view of the fact that the tourist industry association is so concerned about this tax, will the Minister agree to have it removed in the interest of creating more tourism jobs across Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the Hon. Member make this representation on various occasions. The Hon. Member ought to mention, as well, the efforts being made by the Canadian Government to help the tourist industry. My colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, spoke earlier about all the splendid activities being initiated by the Government to help this industry. I shall consider the Hon. Member's question as a suggestion, but I may remind him that this Government is doing more for the industry today than any other Government has done in the history of our country.

[English]

POSSIBLE PRINTING OF TOURIST PAMPHLETS IN UNITED STATES

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister responsible for tourism. Brewster Transportation of Alberta has indicated to him that it will move the printing of its pamphlets for 1985 to the United States unless this tax is removed. That will cost more jobs. I remind the Minister that a lot of young Canadians get jobs with Brewster Transportation in that province. Can the Minister share any information about this tax beyond what his colleague has said?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, this matter falls within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance. He has indicated he will review that proposal. I will discuss it with him.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gary Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. The Government of Canada is supposed to be committed to the reduction of acid rain by 50 per cent by 1994. What is the Minister's plan of action?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member would ask such a question. He knows very well, or should, that we have developed a plan of action over the months which would be too long to explain in a short answer.

In essence, we have brought together a political commitment on the part of provincial and federal Ministers of the Environment to cut emissions by half by 1994. We followed that up shortly afterwards with an international conference here in Ottawa which permitted us to obtain the support and a pledge by nine European countries, in addition to Canada, for a commitment to a minimum cut of 30 per cent by 1993. On June 6 provincial and federal Ministers of the Environment met as a working group to set into motion the various aspects related to the economy and technology which are needed to reach this objective.

Thanks to the efforts of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, we have also produced a paper for the modernization of non ferrous metals in Canada which would permit us in the years ahead, in the wake of modernization, to bring about a cleaning up of the pollution caused by this industry, and increase productivity in order to permit us to remain competitive on international markets.

Mr. Gurbin: What the Minister has just done is confirm that he has no plan of action.

PLAN OF ACTION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that the Government's words are empty and hollow unless he has a specific plan of action to reduce acid rain. In view of the jobs, the industry, and the environmental impact, will he undertake to put before the House a specific plan of action to reduce acid rain, by the end of June of this year?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I cannot substitute for the incapacity of the Hon. Member or his colleagues on that side to interpret answers. He knows very well that we have set a plan in action and that we have already made progress since 1980 by cutting SO_2 emissions in this country by some 15 per cent. He also knows that we have announced a reduction in lead in gasoline by the end of 1986. He also knows that the Minister of Transport and I have made plans for consultation about NO_x with industry this summer. He also knows that we have a plan of action in Canada already in place today, which our neighbours to the south do not have, for a reduction by 25 per cent by 1990. In addition, there are other commitments that have been made before the production of the report by Energy, Mines and Resources. If the Hon. Member considers that as no plan, I am sorry, I cannot help him.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he could outline for us the business of the House starting on Monday of next week. As he knows, we will not be sitting tomorrow. While we have a tradition of asking about House business on Thursdays, in view of the fact that there will be a new leader of the Liberal Party after this week, I thought I might have asked the question on Monday because any new Prime Minister would probably reject out of hand all the legislative initiative taken by the Government. However, I will not do that. I will let the Government House Leader let us know what he has in mind before he consults with the new Liberal leader. We can see what happens Monday morning.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the business of the House for next week will be Bill C-9, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. Priority will be given to Bills that are at report stage. Therefore, the back-up legislation will be Bill C-40, the Old Age Security Act, whereby the Government of Canada wants to increase the GIS $50 a month by the end of the year. I think the new leader will want to support that kind of legislation and will be pleased to debate it in the House and see the Tory Opposition reluctance regarding social policies in this country.

The other back-up legislation will be Bill C-37, the mortgage protection plan. I also doubt that any Liberal leader would be inclined to withdraw such legislation that intends to protect home owners against high interest rates. The third back-up Bill will be the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Again, my hon. colleague should know that there is no Liberal leader who would not be glad to continue supporting the farmers in this country, especially the western farmers.

Therefore, the business for next week will be Bill C-9, followed by Bill C-40, Bill C-37 and Bill C-33, all good Liberal legislation designed to help old age people, the western farmers, and home owners with high interest rates.

We all know that this morning we agreed in the House to sit extended hours after next weekend. I just want to seize this opportunity to thank sincerely the House leaders of the two Opposition Parties for their co-operation. It is only the second time that we have had an opportunity to live with the new rules. The first year we were unable to get an agreement in advance on the extended hours. We had to move a motion, debate it and vote on it.

This year, thanks to the co-operation of my colleagues on the other side, it was possible for us to agree in advance. Therefore, we will be able to plan business in a reasonable way, sitting from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays and sitting from 2 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Wednesdays without any interruption for the lunchtime hour. We will also be able to sit on Fridays from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. without interruption. Therefore, we will be sitting over 28 additional hours during the last 10 sitting days before summer adjournment.

I thank my colleagues for their co-operation and I hope that together we will be able to show that we do not need the threat of sitting during the summer, that we can live with the parliamentary calendar and at the same time allow Parliament to be productive in those last 10 sitting days.

We will come back on September 10. Whatever Bills we are not able to deal with before the end of June, Parliament will still be well alive come the fall and I am sure that we will be able to deal with all other matters.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the statement of the business with respect to next week and through to September 10, although I do not believe him for a moment. We may be back on September 10 or September 12, but it will be with a new Progressive Conservative Government.

Seriously, I take it that the Government House Leader is, in effect, suggesting that the senior citizens, the people who are looking for legislation with respect to mortgage protection and the western grain farmers will be held hostage by the security Bill. Until such time as that legislation is passed; these items will not be brought forward by the Government House Leader. He will want to have report stage of the security Bill out of the way before these other items are dealt with expeditiously by the House.

The Government House Leader will remember that it was only by virtue of the intense pressure put on by the Progressive Conservative Party in this House that the western grain farmer got any attention from this Government. The senior citizens had this Bill brought forward because of our urgings and the fact that we dragged the Liberals kicking and screaming through the legislative timetable.

Can the Government House Leader tell us whether or not he is going to await the passage of a very controversial Bill affecting the civil liberties of Canadians before dealing with the other items he has mentioned? It seems to me those items are matters of which he could get quick disposition. He has his priorities in reverse. He should have the Bills that will be of benefit to the people of Canada passed expeditiously. He should not have us arguing about a Bill which seriously and negatively affects the civil liberties of Canadians. He knows this Bill will be involved in a lot of serious and justified debate on the floor of the House of Commons.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that Standing Order 22 requires that the order of business be decided by the Government. That is exactlty what we have done. During the last four and a half years we have been able to get through Parliament some 200 pieces of legislation, among which were major reforms: the patriation of the Constitution, the Charter of Rights, the Crow rate—

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Pinard: —the National Energy Program—

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Pinard: —and a lot of measures, 200 of them. Parliamentary reform is also one.

I would like to be very specific on something. I take the Hon. Member's remark very seriously. In the last ten sitting days we were able to get through Parliament in all stages some eight to ten pieces of legislation. It would have been possible and it is still possible to get through all stages the Bills to which my hon. friend refers. If he had wanted, the senior citizens, the western farmers and the home owners would now be able to see their legislation in place. That is not the case because the Hon. Member's Party has refused to agree to pass those Bills through all stages more quickly than has been the case.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is wrong.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are contradicting yourself.

Mr. Pinard: I am not contradicting myself. I am saying that if we were able to agree to pass legislation through all stages at least eight to ten times during the last ten days, then it would have been possible for us to add to those eight to ten Bills the Old Age Security Act, the National Housing Act and the Western Grain Stabilization Act. All we needed was the consent of the Tory Party, but we did not get it.

Mr. Mazankowski: What took you so long to bring the Bill on in the first place? Where were you six months ago?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is nonsense and gobbledegook.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is having a little difficulty relating all these remarks to current business before the House, with all due respect.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I see my good friend from Vegreville has just discovered that if the senior citizens, the western farmers, and the home owners have been taken hostage, they were not taken hostage by the Government but by his own Party. The Tory Party could have very easily agreed to the quick passage of those Bills.

An Hon. Member: We could have passed them a year and a half ago.

Mr. Pinard: The Conservatives will have an opportunity before the end of June, Mr. Speaker, to give that kind of agreement.

As a matter of fact, I will give a very specific offer to the Hon. Member. I am willing to pass those three Bills this afternoon by unanimous consent if the Tories are willing to give unanimous consent to the passage of Bill C-9, which is now on the agenda. I am sure they will not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: What a phoney.

Mr. Gustafson: Do you want to hang a millstone around the farmers' necks?

Mr. Pinard: They want to score political points. They are not interested in seeing Parliament make progress. The Hon. Member for Vegreville should be ashamed.

Mr. Mazankowski: You should be ashamed.

Mr. Pinard: The Hon. Member's Party and the Hon. Member are the ones who are taking hostage the old age people and the western farmers. The Hon. Member will have another opportunity, I guarantee, after the convention to co-operate and to react more positively to the generous offers made by the Government to pass not only the four Bills I am talking about, but a lot of other measures that are on the Order Paper that are most important to the people of this country. The minute the Tories stop filibustering and delaying, as they have done so many times during this Parliament, including ringing the bells for 14 days, which was shameful of them—

Miss MacDonald: The people approved.

Mr. Pinard: —then we will be able to see how we can deal with all of those problems.

Once again, the business for next week, and it can be dealt with even faster—I will be prepared to outline other Bills assuming the Tories really care for the old people and the western grain farmers—will be Bill C-9, Bill C-40, Bill C-37 and Bill C-33. If we succeed in passing those Bills before the end of the day on Monday, I will be here personally to outline the other good measures which the Government will bring forward.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, with respect to House business, first I should say that we are quite prepared to accept the very generous offer of the President of the Privy Council that we continue debate on the security legislation in September. Prior to that time, I suggest that rather than attempting in effect to blackmail this House by holding the old age pensioners, the home owners and the western grain farmers hostage to this Government policies, we on this side of the House are prepared to deal expeditiously with all of that legislation but not at the price of the fundamental civil liberties of Canadians. We want to make that very clear. We are prepared to continue that debate in September as the Government House Leader suggested, Mr. Speaker.

With respect to Government business today, what action does the Government intend to take to ensure that, prior to the House rising on June 29, that legislation which fundamentally affects the health, the safety and indeed the lives of many hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers—I am referring to the proposed amendments to the Canada Labour Code—is dealt with? Or is the Government House Leader going to use his form of blackmail with respect to Canadian workers as well as farmers, old age pensioners and home owners?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member looks upset. He appears to be upset about something, I do not know what. There is no need for him to lose his cool. He should realize that Bill C-34, the amendments to the Canada Labour Code to which he has referred, would be law today if he personally would have allowed some other legislation to be disposed of quickly in the House of Commons. He knows very well and the public knows very well—we have read it in the press—that because of his childish attitude and systematic obstruction on Bill C-9 at committee stage as well as since the Bill has been reported to the House, it has not been possible for Parliament to dispose of Bill C-34 quickly.

I want to assure this House and the workers of this country that, despite this dilatory attitude on the part of the Hon. Member, we nevertheless introduced that Bill, managed to negotiate its passage at second reading, sent it to committee, and it is one of our priorities to pass the Bill through third reading before the end of June. If the Hon. Member wants to show a little more maturity and allow Bill C-9 to get out of the way, this will allow us to deal with all of the Bills that are at report stage.

Once again, the Bills that will get priority in this case are the Bills that are at report stage. The Bill to which the Hon. Member refers is not yet at report stage but could be before the end of June. It will be given priority in due time. The sooner Bill C-9 is passed, the better our chances for Bill C-34 to be adopted in this House, as well as Bill C-40, Bill C-37 and Bill C-33.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I believe one week ago and perhaps on two or three previous occasions I posed a couple of questions to the Government House Leader regarding the status and progress of two agricultural Bills. This might not be the best way to view the discussions and the attitude presently prevailing in the House—

Mr. Speaker: The last intervention of the Hon. Member turned out to be a 15-minute speech. The Chair hopes he does not have the same thing in mind.

Mr. Wise: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker, and I can recall your words of caution to me one week ago. I will certainly bear them in mind. I will come directly to the two Bills in question. One was the required amendment to the advance payments Bill. The Minister is well aware why I posed that question. He indicated to me that he was not certain whether the Bill would be passed next week or before the House adjourns for the summer recess. The second one was the required amendments to the National Farm Products Marketing Act to meet the request of the troubled tobacco industry in southwestern Ontario. To help the Minister out, he responded to me on that occasion by saying that the Bill will be introduced once the policy has been approved by Cabinet. Can the Minister give us any further information or tell us if there has been any advancement in the progress of the status of those two pieces of legislation?

● (1520)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, this question is the same as the one asked last week by the Hon. Member at page 4448 of Hansard. My answer appears on the same page and at page 4449 of Hansard for June 7, 1984. I invite my colleague to read the answer. It is the same one I have to give today.

BILINGUALISM

TABLING OF LETTER TO PREMIER DAVIS OF ONTARIO

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to seize this opportunity to seek the unanimous consent of this House, presuming that the Tory Party have had the time to read the letter on language rights signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and sent to Premier Davis. I again seek the unanimous consent of the House to append this letter which was tabled in the House by the Prime Minister earlier this week to today's Hansard.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader never ceases to surprise me, and he has done it again today. The usual courtesy is that we have prior consultation. It does not involve standing up one day with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) attempting to slip in a letter as an appendix to Hansard without even having the courtesy of consulting prior to that with other Members of Parliament.

Second, we should look at occasions when we append items to Hansard with some care. There should be the fullest consultation. We know that the appending of items to Hansard has been restricted almost exclusively in the history and tradition of Parliament to items dealing with budgetary matters.

What I wanted to discuss had I had the opportunity of a tête-à-tête, mano a mano, eyeball-to-eyeball discussion with my colleague, the Government House Leader, is just what the parameters are with respect to requests on the part of the Prime Minister, the Government House Leader or any Member of Parliament, for unanimous consent to append documents, however important or trivial they happen to be. If the Government House Leader wants me to give my consent right now, I cannot give that consent. I would want to consult, as is the custom in my Party, with my colleagues about this. We are a team over here. We work together. We consult with each other. I always do the courtesy to my colleagues of discussing these matters to make sure that we understand what the rules are, unlike the Government House Leader who seems to have a penchant for autocratic action, given the leadership by his own Prime Minister pro tem.

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the remarks made by my colleague. This is not the first request for unanimous request to append this letter to Hansard. The Prime Minister made that request on Monday. Therefore, he should not be surprised. I understand that language rights constitute a very sensitive issue for his Party. I am just asking for the same consent asked a week or so ago by the Prime Minister. My colleague should not lose his cool or get upset because I make that request without having talked to him privately and asking whether he read the letter a week ago. He knew of that request. He does not have to agree to it.

I do not agree with what he said about the kinds of documents that are appended to Hansard. By unanimous consent we can append any letter or document. If he does not agree, all he has to do is say no. What we are dealing with is language rights, specifically language rights for the French-speaking minority in Ontario. The Tory Party is free to say yes or no to appending a letter from the Prime Minister to a Premier. If they say no, they say no; but they do not have to argue about being taken by surprise. The request was made a week ago by the Prime Minister. After four or five days I suppose they have been able to read the letter. All they have to do is say yes or no.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, just to show the Government House Leader, before he goes into the Liberal convention, that I am a person of some considerable compassion, I have listened to what he has had to say and I will give his request the most serious consideration.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

MR. BLAIKIE—VERNON ARMY CADET CAMP

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the residents of Winnipeg who are concerned that vacancies for the cadet leader course at the Vernon Army Cadet Camp have been halved recently, resulting in an unavailability of positions this summer at the Vernon Army Cadet Camp. They are concerned that at least 11 members of the Winnipeg, Manitoba-based army cadet corps may not be able to attend this course despite their earnest desire to do so. Therefore they call upon Parliament to instruct the Department of National Defence to increase enrolment in the cadet leader course in Vernon, B.C. this summer.

PROTECTION OF CHILDREN FROM SEX OFFENDERS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition from a number of citizens in British Columbia, mostly from the municipality of Surrey, who are very concerned that the law relating to known sex offenders loitering around areas frequented by children is defective. Therefore, they appeal to the House of Commons to ensure that that law is remedied so that children will receive proper protection. I submit this petition and urge the Government to take action on it.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present several petitions from different municipalities in British Columbia. The first one contains some 340 names. It is from parents of children living in Vancouver City and has to do with asking that Section 175 of the Criminal Code be amended. There was an error in the original section. They ask that this law be changed so that children will be safe against known sexual offenders.

I have a similar petition from North Vancouver and West Vancouver with about 30 names, asking for the same change in the Criminal Code inasmuch as the peace officers do not have power under the present Code to protect children against known sex offenders.

Similarly, there are some 50 or so names from Richmond, Delta and Langley municipalities in British Columbia. These are largely parents of school children. They state that our present federal law system is void and, because of an error at this time, our children receive no justice in any way. They say the law should be immediately rectified so that growing children can be safe against these scaring offenders. The children should be protected from known sex offenders.

Similarly, I have several petitions from Surrey and North Delta in British Columbia. They also ask that the Criminal Code section be changed.

I would like to say that I presented several hundred petitions to this effect formerly. I hope the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) is taking note and will do something about this situation. It is very important to parents.

Mr. Speaker: I commend the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) for the way she has dealt with a number of petitions and summarized them. Her conduct is exemplary in that respect.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a large number of petitions with hundreds and hundreds of names of people from British Columbia, drawing to the attention of the Minister that Section 175 of the Criminal Code must be altered to permit more protection for young children from sexual offenders and child abusers. The names on the petition are by and large from parents of children in a variety of schools, indicating a concern for individuals who are known sex offenders lurking and loitering in areas around schools. They are concerned that the present law makes it very difficult for law enforcement officers to provide the appropriate protection for young people and ask that Section 175 be reviewed.

• (1530)

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to follow the exemplary practice of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) when presenting these petitions. I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents from Burnaby, the North Burnaby area and the Burnaby Mountain area. This petition raises very serious concerns with respect to what the petitioners allege to be a weakness or deficiency in the present provisions of the Criminal Code with respect to known sex offenders that is found in Section 175(e) of the Criminal Code. They urge that what they view as this anomaly in the law be rectified in order that their children may be safe against the offenders to whom they refer. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

I have as well a petition signed by a large number of constituents from the South Burnaby area to the similar effect. I will not repeat the contents of the petition other than to indicate once again that these petitioners are some 20 constituents who are extremely concerned that, in their view, having carefully examined the provisions of the Criminal Code, it does provide inadequate protection to young people in the community.

I have a number of other petitions of a similar import with respect to the deficiencies as viewed by my constituents from different parts of Burnaby in this area of the Criminal Code. My constituents would urge that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) view very seriously their concerns with a view to making the necessary changes in the Criminal Code. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Speaker: Those are all the petitions of the Hon. Member?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Yes, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: Again, the Chair would like to commend the Hon. Member for the manner in which he presented the petitions.

NATIONAL ANTHEM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-247, an Act to amend the National Anthem Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, may I explain briefly that this amendment to the National Anthem Act makes a change that I consider necessary to conform to the spirit of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the endorsement of equality for men and women. Specifically, the change removes the words "thy sons" from O Canada so that the national anthem will now ask for "True patriot love in all of us command!"

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-248, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act (political rights).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I feel it necessary today to introduce a Bill which would give the same rights to federal public servants to participate in political activities as are enjoyed by most other Canadians. I do this now at a time when the Public Service Commission is ready to discipline federal employees who register as delegates at the Liberal Convention and after watching the witch-hunt which took place in Saskatchewan after the last election. This Bill would give federal public servants the right to attend and participate fully in the meetings and activities of a political Party or candidate and the right to work for or against a candidate, Party or policy on their own time. I hope our respective House Leaders will agree that this should be dealt with in Private Member's hour before the end of June and before the time of the next federal election.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 155, 242, 428, 433, 666, 670, 671 and 845.

DND—CODE OF CONDUCT

Question No. 155—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of National Defence have written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for employees of the Department and, if so, are they embodied in a code of conduct or other specific document and is the code or document available to the public?

"THE PINES", KENORA, ONTARIO

Question No. 433—Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River):

1. Did the Department of the Solicitor General sign a contract with "The Pines" of Kenora, Ontario, for the provision of a halfway house for prisoners and, if so, on what date?

2. Did the Department agree to (a) pay an amount per occupant of "The Pines" and, if so, what amount (b) guarantee a number of occupants and, if so, how many?

3. Did the Department advance any moneys to "The Pines" over and above the amount referred to in part 2 and did it make any other cash advances?

4. During the period October 8, 1982 to August 31, 1983, what amount was paid to "The Pines"?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): In so far as the Correctional Service of Canada (CSC) is concerned:

1. CSC renewed its contract with "The Pines" on April 1, 1983 for a period of one year.

2. (a) CSC pays a per diem rate of $42.37 per federal offender placed in this Community Residential Centre (CRC). (b) CSC guarantees and pays for the use of a minimum of six beds per day.

3. The Pines Camp Board of Directors incurred a debt of approximately $15,000 over the projected relocation costs of the Camp due to the necessity to construct a new road and to install a new septic system as per provincial standards. CSC advanced a payment of $12,000 in the form of a loan while the Ontario Ministry of Correctional Services, made a $3,000 loan contribution. This prepayment is being recovered by holding back 15 p. 100 of the monthly contract payments to the CRC until such time as the total amount is recovered. No other cash advance has been made.

4. During the period of October 8, 1982 to August 31, 1983 "The Pines" provided services to CSC for a total amount of $64,798.14. However, 15 p. 100 of this amount was deducted towards the repayment of the $12,000 cash advance.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 507 could be made an order for return, that return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 507 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLICATION "NATIONAL DRUG INTELLIGENCE ESTIMATES 1982"

Question No. 507—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Was a publication, entitled "National Drug Intelligence Estimates 1982" printed and distributed by or for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and, if so, at what total cost?

2. Did Quorum Graphics provide any services with respect to this publication and, if so (a) what were they (b) at what cost?

3. To what individuals, groups and organizations was the publication distributed?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Evans: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) could inform us of the reason for the delay in the responses to Questions Nos. 664 to 676 which are on the Order Paper. These are questions which have been put in the name of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and have been on the Order Paper since February of this year. They relate to pension funds. I think it would certainly be most appropriate that answers to those questions be tabled before the House rises because, as Hon. Members know, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre will not return to the House in his capacity as a Member. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to take that under advisement.

As well, I would ask about the current status of the response to Question No. 835, which stands in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) and deals with contributions by the Department of National Health and Welfare under the Canada Assistance Plan to the Province of British Columbia for social assistance and various social services which, as we know, have been squandered on megaprojects and not utilized for the benefit of the people of British Columbia.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can be assured that I will look into these matters and see if we cannot have expeditious answers to those questions. It is not that any Member is more equal than others, but we will look into this matter especially in the case of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Robinson) (Burnaby).

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is prepared to make a decision on matters outstanding on a point of order. Before I rule on the preliminary statement I gave the House on June 12, I wish to thank Hon. Members who gave me the benefit of their thoughts. I also wish to make some observations on report stage of Bills.

Report stage of a public Bill in our procedure is a very important stage. It offers the whole House an opportunity to reconsider what has taken place in committee. I think I should underline that report stage is not a repetition of the committee stage nor is it a repetition of the second reading stage when a Bill is considered in principle. The House is not considering clauses in principle. The House is addressing specific amendments to the Bill which may or may not have been discussed at the committee stage.

I also wish to remind Hon. Members of the Speaker's role in relation to report stage, for nowhere in our Standing Orders is the Speaker's discretion so absolute. The Speaker has power to select motions in amendment; that means he can choose certain motions or choose not to put certain motions to the House. This power of selection has never been exercised by the Chair, probably because the number of amendments filed at report stage has been relatively small in number in the past. If amendments at report stage are to be as numerous as they recently have been, the Speaker may indeed have to exercise his power of selection in the near future.

The second power given to the Speaker during report stage is that of grouping motions either for debate or for voting or both. Again, this power is absolute and the Speaker can combine motions as he may think fit. No occupant of the Chair can exercise this discretion without keeping in mind the importance of his decisions. That is why I have sought comments on the procedural acceptability of certain motions in amendment to Bill C-9. In listening to yesterday's and today's comments, what I have heard were interventions dealing with the substance of the amendments, the desirability of the amendments and a wish to discuss in principle certain clauses of Bills at report stage. All of the above are noble intentions but, unfortunately, they are not of a procedural nature.

I have also been offered alternative grouping schemes, and I have been convinced in listening to the argument that the scheme that I proposed should be modified.

In presenting his argument, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) suggested that the initial grouping contained in the Chair's preliminary statement, if taken as a precedent, would undermine the right of Members to present motions to delete and have them debated.

There is no question about the procedural acceptability of these motions, and I might add that the debate has already begun. While Members have an undoubted and, within the limitations set out in our rules and practice, virtually unlimited right to propose motions to delete clauses at the report stage, the Speaker has the power to group motions for debate.

While Members' rights to offer such motions at report stage cannot be undermined, may I draw the attention of all Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 787, which states, in part:

—Although amendments which are rejected in the Committee and amendments attempting to restore the original text of the Bill may be proposed, the Speaker's power of selection of motions in amendment is a check upon the excessive repetition of debates which have already taken place in Committee.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) made several points on the grouping of the motions to delete, and his arguments have convinced me to group the motions to delete clauses with those motions which amend the same clauses. The remaining motions to delete have been grouped in three separate groups, according to parts of the Bill. To do so effectively, I have had to group all the motions standing on the Order Paper. The grouping of all motions for the report stage debate shall, therefore, be as follows:

First, the motions to delete clauses which do not also have substantive amendments proposed in relation to them will be grouped for debate as follows:

(a) Motions Nos. 10, 16, 20, 25, 26, 28 and 35 will be debated together, and a vote on Motion No. 10 will also dispose of the remaining motions in this group.

Security Intelligence Service

(b) Motions Nos. 64, 69, 70 to 73 inclusive, 80, 82, 87, 88, 90, 92, 98, 103 to 107 inclusive and 110 to 112 inclusive will be grouped for debate, and a vote on Motion No. 64 will dispose of the remaining motions in this group.

(c) Motions Nos. 124 to 128 inclusive, 131 to 137 inclusive, 142 to 150 inclusive, 156 to 158 inclusive, 161 to 165 inclusive and 168 to 174 inclusive will be grouped for debate, and a vote on Motion No. 124 will dispose of the remaining motions in this group.

Second, Motions Nos. 2 and 5 to 9 inclusive should be debated together and voted on as follows:

(a) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 2 will dispose of Motions Nos. 5 to 9 inclusive. A negative vote on Motion No. 2 will necessitate a vote on Motion No. 5.

(b) In the event that a vote on Motion No. 5 is decided in the affirmative, this vote will dispose of Motions Nos. 6 to 9 inclusive. A negative vote on Motion No. 5 will require separate votes on Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9.

(b) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 22 disposes of Motions Nos. 23 and 24. A negative vote on Motion No. 22 requires sparate votes on Motions Nos. 23 and 24.

Fifth, Motions Nos. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38 and 39 will be grouped for debate and voted on as follows:

(a) An Affirmative vote on Motion No. 30 will dispose of Motions Nos. 31 and 32. A negative vote on Motion No. 30 will require separate questions on Motions Nos. 31 and 32.

(b) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 33 will obviate the need for a vote on Motion No. 34. A negative vote on Motion No. 33 will require a vote on Motion No. 34.

(c) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 36 will dispose of Motion No. 37. A negative vote on Motion No. 36 will require a vote on Motion No. 37.

(d) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 38 will dispose of Motion No. 39. A negative vote on Motion No. 38 will require a vote on Motion No. 39.

(c) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 45 will also dispose of Motions Nos. 46 and 47. A negative vote on Motion No. 45 will require separate votes on Motions Nos. 46 and 47.

(d) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 48 will dispose of Motions Nos. 50 and 51. A negative vote on Motion No. 48 requires separate votes on Motions Nos. 50 and 51.

Seventh, Motion Nos. 52, 54 to 63 inclusive and 66 to 68 inclusive shall be grouped for debate and voted on in the following manner:

(a) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 52 will also dispose of Motion Nos. 54 to 59 inclusive. A negative vote on Motion No. 52 will necessitate votes on Motions Nos. 54 to 59 inclusive, as follows:

(i) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 54 would obviate the need for a vote on Motions Nos. 55, 56 and 57. A negative vote on Motion No. 54 requires separate votes on Motions Nos. 55, 56 and 57.

(ii) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 58 would preclude the putting of the question on Motion No. 59. A negative vote on Motion No. 58 would require a vote on Motion No. 59.

(b) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 60 will dispose of Motions Nos. 61 to 63 inclusive. A negative vote on Motion No. 60 requires the question to be put on Motions Nos. 61, 62 and 63 as follows:

(i) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 61 would obviate the putting of the question on Motion No. 62. A negative vote on Motion No. 61 requires a vote on Motion No. 62.

(ii) Motion No. 63 would be voted on separately.

(c) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 66 precludes the question being put on Motions Nos. 67 and 68. A negative vote on Motion No. 66 would require separate votes on Motions Nos. 67 and 68.

Eighth, Motions Nos. 75, 77, 78 and 79 should be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 77 will dispose of Motions Nos. 78 and 79. A negative vote on Motion No. 77 will require the question to be put on Motion No. 78 and, a vote on Motion No. 78 disposes of Motion No. 79. Motion No. 75 will be voted on separately.

Ninth, Motions Nos. 85 and 86 are to be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 85 disposes of Motion No. 85. A negative vote on Motion No. 85 requires a vote on Motion No. 86.

Tenth, Motions Nos. 95, 96 and 97 should be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 95 will dispose of Motions Nos. 96 and 97. A negative vote on Motion No. 95 will require separate votes on Motions Nos 96 and 97.

Eleventh, Motions Nos 99 to 102 inclusive will be grouped for debate and voted onas follows:

Twelvth, Motions Nos. 108 and 109 should be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 108 disposes of Motion No. 109. A negative vote on Motion No. 108 requires a vote on Motion No. 109.

12. (a) Motions Nos. 113 and 114 should be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 113 disposes of Motion No. 114. A negative vote on Motion No. 113 requires a vote on Motion No. 114.

Thirteenth, Motions Nos. 116, 118 to 123 inclusive should be grouped for debate and voted on as follows:

(a) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 116 will dispose of Motion No. 118. A negative vote on Motion No. 116 requires the question to be put on Motion No. 118.

(b) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 119 will dispose of Motion No. 120. A negative vote on Motion No. 119 will require a vote on Motion No. 120.

(c) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 121 will dispose of Motion No. 122. A negative vote on Motion No. 121 requires a vote on Motion No. 122.

(d) Motion No. 123 will be voted on separately.

Fourteenth, Motions Nos 129 and 130 should be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 129 will dispose of Motion No. 130. A negative vote on Motion No. 129 requires a vote on Motion No. 130.

Fifteenth, Motion Nos. 138 and 139 should be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 138 will dispose of Motion No. 139. A negative vote on Motion No. 138 requires a vote on Motion No. 139.

Sixteenth, Motions Nos. 140 and 141 should be grouped for debate. An affirmative on Motion No. 140 will dispose of Motion No. 141. A negative vote on Motion No. 140 requires a vote on Motion 141.

Seventeenth, Motions Nos. 151 to 155 inclusive will be grouped for debate and voted on as follows:

(a) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 151 will dispose of Motions Nos. 152 to 155 inclusive. A negative vote on Motion No. 151 requires the question to be put on the remaining motions in this group, as follows:

(i) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 152 disposes of Motion No. 153. A negative vote on Motion No. 152 requires a vote on Motion No. 153.

(ii) Motions Nos. 154 and 155 are to be voted on separately.

Eighteenth, Motions Nos. 159 and 160 should be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 159 will dispose of Motion No. 160. A negative vote on Motion No. 159 requires the question to be put on Motion No. 160.

Nineteenth, Motions Nos. 166 and 167 should be grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 166 disposes of Motion No. 167. A negative vote on Motion No. 166 requires the question to be put on Motion No. 167.

The Hon. Members for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) have suggested that the proposal to bring the Security Intelligence Service under the control of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is fully within the purpose of the Bill as read the second time, because the purpose of the Bill, as laid out in the title, is to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service.

In making this suggestion, they quoted Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 704(1), as follows:

A bill may have two titles, one long and one short. Both the long title and the short title may be amended, if amendments to the bill make it necessary.

(1) Long Title—the long title sets out in general terms the purposes of the bill. It should cover everything in the bill.

May I underline that the purpose of the Bill is laid out only in general terms in the title. It is clear from a reading of the Bill that it intends to establish a service distinct from the RCMP.

In my view, Motions Nos. 3, 11, 18, 21, 27, 29, 44, 49, 53, 65, 74, 81, 83, 91 and 115, which relate to this proposal, negate the purpose of the Bill, which is specifically prohibited by our practice, and I refer Hon. Members once again to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(5) to that effect.

May I say, in passing, that a careful examination of the notice submitted by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South in relation to Motion No. 53 reveals a single motion, not three separate motions. While I might agree that some of the parts of the motion, had each been a motion standing on its own, would have been in order. I again refer the Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 428(2), to which I referred in relation to Motion No. 49. It reads:

When an amendment is irregular in one particular, the whole of it is not admissible and must be ruled out of order. Journals, April 29, 1970, p. 732.

Therefore, Motions Nos. 3, 4, 11, 15, 18, 21, 27, 29, 44, 49, 53, 65, 74, 76, 81, 83, 84, 115, 117 and 175 are all ruled out of order.

At this point, the Chair has to make some remarks regarding the three remaining motions which, at first glance, give the Chair some procedural difficulty.

Motion No. 89 is attempting to remove the control of the Treasury Board over the operational expenditures of the review committee. This is clearly beyond the royal recommendation.

May I refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 540, which states, in part:

The guiding principle in determining the effect of an amendment upon the financial initiative of the Crown is that the communication, to which the Royal Recommendation is attached, must be treated as laying down once for all (unless withdrawn and replaced) not only the amount of the charge, but also its objects, purposes, conditions and qualifications.

Since this appears to relax one of the conditions of the royal recommendation, it would seem to infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown and would be out of order.

Motions No. 93 and 94 go beyond the scope of the Bill. Both these motions contemplate a broadening of the review committee's functions to include its reviewing of the relationships between the security service and other intelligence agencies in Canada. This is clearly a new idea which was not contained in the Bill as agreed to at second reading stage. It would seem that both these motions are out of order.

The Chair has undertaken to hear procedural argument on Motions Nos. 89, 93 and 94, but will do so at a later time.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the Speaker's ruling. I wonder if Your Honour could indicate specifically if you have dealt with the question of Motions Nos. 15, 76, 84, 117 and 175 with respect to the question of the parliamentary oversight committee? I did not see any explicit reference to that particular subject. It may be that it is couched within the terms of the ruling itself. Perhaps the Speaker might indicate where that is to be found?

Mr. Speaker: I made very explicit reference to a parliamentary oversight committee in my preliminary ruling and did not see fit to repeat it. A motion has been accepted to refer to a parliamentary committee, but the basic principle of creating a special committee with special duties by this means is unacceptable.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in rising, I am, of course, very cognizant of the respect which I, as a Member of this House, owe to you as the Speaker of our House. I hope you will keep that very much in mind in listening to what I have to say. Your ruling, of course, must be accepted in the sense that it is a final ruling. Your Honour will know that at least for two days I strove mightily to change your mind. I understand that you have your obligations and you have to make these rulings according to the precedents and rules as you interpret them, and I respect that.

As Your Honour knows, Hon. Members of the House and I have always done everything we could to make it very clear that we cannot conduct our affairs in this House without respecting your position and recognizing the fact that sometimes you have to make decisions which do not please all Hon. Members. However, I want to say this, and it is no reflection, Sir, on you. I am not questioning in any sense your integrity or devotion to your duty in making the ruling you did. People were asked to come before the committee and make suggestions about this Bill—

• (1600)

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has some concern. Is the Hon. Member debating the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. Fraser: No.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is quite prepared to hear debate on the items which will be debated in this House. The Chair has listened to argument on a point of order at some length. The Chair has made a ruling. At this stage the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member on the motion and not recognize him on a point of order. Perhaps he can make a very brief intervention.

Mr. Fraser: It will be very brief. I have chosen my words carefully because I respect Your Honour's position, but the effect is that those who came to our committee to give us suggestions for improvement of the Bill are now left with the result that those suggestions in the way of proposed amendments are not now going to be considered by this House:

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member made this point very clearly this morning. The Chair listened to him carefully. The Chair has heard argument and made a decision, and the House will now proceed to the motion.

Is the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) rising to speak on the motion? The Hon. Member has already spoken on the motion. On what point is he seeking to be recognized?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, a very brief point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I trust the Hon. Member is not going to reflect on the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I certainly will not reflect on the decision of the Chair. I merely seek guidance with respect to the Chair's ruling. The Chair indicated that Your Honour would be ruling on the remaining 42 motions, that is Motions Nos. 37, 39, 41, etc. through to Motion No. 167 as soon as possible. May we have some indication?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair certainly gave an indication, and the preliminary ruling did not cover it all, but with regard to groupings, the Hon. Member himself went through the whole Bill with the suggested groupings. The Chair found that, once it got into the ruling there was no other way but to carry through in a consistent way. I have looked at everything on groupings.

With regard to the other clauses of the Bill, I am inviting argument with relation to three specific clauses that give concern to the Chair and will hear argument relating to them early next week.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have just one final question, again not reflecting in any way upon the decision of the Chair. The document I have indicates that it was drafted at 11.15 this morning. That was before the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) had an opportunity to conclude his deliberations.

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, for purposes of convenience he was given drafts. The Hon. Member is well aware that there is such a thing as putting drafts together by stapling. I can assure the Hon. Member that there have been numerous last minute changes. If he is trying to make the suggestion that the entire document was prepared prior to 11.15, that is simply not true.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): May I speak to the motion, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is perfectly in order. We are resuming debate on Motion No. 1 in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). The Chair recognized the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word or two about the importance of this debate, and a word of appreciation to the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) for consistently forcing this matter to the front of Parliament's attention. Otherwise it could very easily have slid over.

There is a great deal of attention being paid to the events taking place in the Liberal Party this week in Ottawa. Perhaps some people might think that this is the most important thing happening in Ottawa today, but in fact the most important thing for the future of Canada today is not who is going to be the new leader of the Liberal Party, but what we are going to decide on this Bill, which affects the fundamental rights and freedoms of Canadians. There is a debate in the Liberal Party as to whether or not the new leader will represent the head of the Party, the brains or the heart, but if we want to know about the Liberal Party we need to read this Bill. We see here the guts of the Party in this Bill which really is a denial of fundamental rights and freedoms. It is rather sad that this evening there is going to be a testimonial dinner—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Will the Hon. Member please be relevant to the motion now before the House, not to extraneous matters?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking to the motion. The motion is that the title should be deleted, and I believe that is very germane because this is what Shakespeare would call a "whoreson" act, an act that does not deserve a title or name. We feel it betrays the fundamental rights and freedoms of Canadians. I was about to say that it is a rather sad that when there is a testimonial dinner for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) this evening—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. With all due respect, I have asked the Hon. Member to address his remarks to the motion now before the House, which is that Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 1. He should restrict his remarks to that matter.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate your concern that we should relate our debate to the deletion of Clause 1 which contains the title. I am trying to point out that this Bill is so dificient in meeting the needs of Canadian people that the title should be deleted. In fact, the entire Bill should be deleted. I simply want to make the point that it is a sad fact that this Bill is one of the final legacies of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the very day—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again with all due respect, I hope the Hon. Member appreciates the point the Chair is attempting to make. If I may be permitted, I will make the point that at report stage we must be relevant to the motion, and this is very much in keeping with our practices and traditions, and I would be happy to quote the relevant citations if the Hon. Member so requests. Remarks must be strictly relevant to the motion at hand, that is, to the amendment that I have just cited. I do not in any way intend to restrict the Hon. Member's freedom of expression, but the rules are clear. His remarks must be restricted to the motion now before the House. I plead with him to abide by that practice.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I will indeed endeavour to follow the very strict rules which you in your wisdom are applying. The motion before us is that we should delete the short title. I am trying to make the point that because of the very negative effects of the Bill, because of its doubtful value to the Canadian people, it should indeed go forward to the Canadian people without any name whatsoever. It is an illegitimate Bill and it should be without a name.

Canadians are generally perceived as being a people who are very respectful of authority, just as Members of this House are respectful of the authority of the Speaker. I presume that a good deal of this respect for authority, certainly in English Canada, is the result of our United Empire Loyalist heritage. This respect for authority is not to be despised, it is not a negative trait, but neither is it to be abused. This Bill abuses our traditional respect for authority, and that is why I want to see the name deleted.

The authority of the state is perceived by most Canadians as being a guarantor of our rights and freedoms. Through this Act the authority of the state will be used to subvert and take away our rights and freedoms. We have had a long struggle in Canada and in our respective ancestries in Europe and other parts of the world for responsible Government. We have had to struggle to ensure that the state did not trample on the rights and freedoms of individuals. This Act, which should go forward without a name, would establish a security service which would undermine the guarantee of the rights and freedoms of individuals. Instead of seeing the state as the guarantor of our rights and freedoms, Canadians will see the state as the perverter and subverter of those rights and freedoms.

It is a sad day when we must debate this kind of an Act. That is why I support Motion No. 1 to delete the title. In the long run it is going to subvert the very respect for authority which many people have remarked upon as being a very Canadian characteristic. Many people appeared before the committee which was considering this Bill. The great majority of them have been very apprehensive about the effects this Act would have and the way in which it would destroy rights and freedoms. It is on that basis that I am supporting this motion and saying that the title should be deleted and that this Act should go forth into the world without any name at all, if the Act itself is passed.

I would like to share some of the concerns which were raised. Rev. Dr. Donald Anderson, the General Secretary of the Canadian Council of Churches, sent a telegram which reads as follows:

> Bill C-9, An Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, should not be passed by the present Parliament until: (a) it makes clear and rigorous provision for the accountability of the service; (b) defines national security and describes more precisely those activities which are illegal under the Act; (c) provides for the continuation of a free and vigorous participatory society in which work for justice on behalf of the poor, the marginalized and refugees may be carried on without fear of surveillance and prosecution.

That is from the Canadian Council of Churches speaking on behalf of a wide variety of Canadian Christians. That is one reason we feel that this Act should go forth into the world without any title, if indeed it is passed at all.

It is interesting that when the moderator of the United Church, Dr. Clarke MacDonald, had a message read into the record of the committee, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) objected to this and told him he should mind his own business. This reminds me of King Henry II asking who is going to get rid of this turbulent priest, referring to Thomas à Becket. The attitude of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton is perhaps indicative of the whole approach of the Government toward this Bill, which is that it is wrong for people to speak out. Somehow a moderator of the United Church is not minding his business when he tries to warn the Canadian people that this Act is potentially dangerous, urges that there be public hearings, and suggests, that unless certain safeguards are put in it, it should be withdrawn. It is on that basis that we feel that this Act is harmful, that it should not have a title, and we urge that Clause 1 be dropped. We have heard similar representations from the Canadian Association of University Teachers and the Canadian Medical Association.

In conclusion, I urge that this first clause be dropped and that the Bill itself be dropped until proper safeguards have been built into it to ensure that the security service will be responsible to Parliament and not to some nameless committee appointed by the Party of patronage.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, indeed it is a sad day. We are in the month of June of the year 1984, the year made famous by the British author, George Orwell. In his book 1984 he portrayed a society in which individuals had lost all of their civil liberties. In that society a mind police operated which stamped out any individual thought, and government propaganda was the only information people could read. George Orwell coined the phrase "doublespeak". Doublespeak is what the government used in its propaganda. It means saying one thing while actually meaning something else. Indeed, as we debate Bill C-9 today, we see all these warnings by George Orwell come true.

We are debating a Bill which could allow wiretapping the phones of those Canadians raising money for—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair really regrets to interrupt the Hon. Member. At this time debate should not be so broad that Members can address remarks to the general principle of the Bill. Members must address their remarks to the specific amendments before the House. I have deliberately listened with some patience and I find that the Hon. Member has yet to address specific remarks to the motion which seeks to amend Clause 1 by deleting it. I wish that he would come to that matter soon.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I know the Chair will recognize that over the course of the debate thus far on Motion No. 1 the Chair has allowed considerable latitude in view of the fact that we are dealing with Motion No. 1 and Clause No. 1. If the Chair reviews Hansard, the Chair will indeed find that the debate has ranged over a very broad number of areas respecting the fundamental principles of the legislation. I recognize that Motion No. 1 does deal with the title. I say with respect that if we are guided by the wisdom of the previous occupants of the Chair and indeed the present—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The present occupant of the chair is the Chair. I have been participating in the debate. The Hon. Member for Burnaby of course feels that he is raising a valid point of order. However, the Chair takes a different view. The Hon. Member for Burnaby will recall that debate was initiated on Motion No. 1 so as to allow Hon. Members, the Chair and the Table officers to come to some understanding as to the grouping of the motions before the House. It was with some licence that debate was allowed to extend somewhat. The rules were not strictly applied in that very specific and particular context. However, that matter has now been settled. It is my duty as occupant of the Chair to ask Hon. Members to limit their remarks strictly to the motion at hand as is the standard practice in the House at report stage. I invite the Hon. Member to continue his remarks.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I was going to continue in my remarks to try to make a case for giving the Bill the title "1984" rather than its present title. The title "1984" is more representative of the contents of the Bill than the present title of the Bill.

It is darn shameful that a Government, which parades itself as the champion of the individual and of free thought in the Liberal tradition, should introduce a Bill which creates one of the most draconian secret service agencies in the western world. The Government, which introduced the Charter of Rights, at the same time introduces this piece of legislation which takes away the very freedoms and rights which the Government has given with the Charter of Rights. With this piece of legislation it yanks those freedoms and rights away from the Canadian people.

That is why we on this side, the churches, university teachers and provincial attorneys general right across the length and breadth of the country are outraged at this piece of legislation. We are outraged at the tactics of government Members in committee. We are outraged at how they are shoving down our throats a piece of legislation which is as important as the Charter of Rights and the Constitution. In fact, the independent Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) made a very valid point the other day. He said that the two most important pieces of legislation were the Constitution and this Bill. Yet, at the end of this long session and the life of this Parliament, we see the Government introduce a Bill and insist on something on which there is no national consensus. Enlightened, concerned and educated people right across the country are opposed to this.

One must ask the pertinent question: why does the Government continue with this Bill? Why does it continue with legislation that could be used to remove legal and medical files of individuals who might be protesting the state of unemployment or the state of poverty in this country? For instance, those files could be used against farmers who are demonstrating against farm bankruptcies. They could be used against native organizations or any group of people who want to see some basic change in the social and economic structure of this country.

That is why we introduced Motion No. 1 that we are debating today. We are opposed to this Bill starting with its title. As I mentioned, there is a long list of people who are opposed to it, including even members of the Government. The former Solicitor General, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) is outraged at this piece of legislation. Yet the Government continues to push ahead with it.

I think we are all aware that currently societies all over the world are experiencing very rapid technological, social and economic changes as well as psychological changes. We will see human displacement on a scale that we have not seen since the advent of the Industrial Revolution. This displacement will lead to periods of discontent. Yet, believing as we do in the democratic process of our society, we hold true to the belief of open debate and discussion so that a new equilibrium of power sharing will evolve.

This Bill will suppress legitimate opposition. People who are suffering within the present economic and political structure will be forced underground because they will have no sense of security that they will be able to raise legitimate debate in this country. The Bill will simply be an excuse to go underground. Violence begets violence. If the mentality exists that there are spies and terrorists under every bed, lo and behold you create the reality that you set up to protect yourself against. That is my prediction while debating this Bill. It is like a mirror image. The Governemnt is opening the way to the very reality that this Bill is supposed to be protecting us from.

Why is the Government so insistent on this legislation? The police forces in this country already hold power that very few police forces in the western world hold. I am told that there are some 800,000 files on Canadian citizens. The power that the police already have is quite awesome. Does the Government suspect that there are 800,000 spies and terrorists in the country on whom we must keep files? Is that what it believes the Canadian people are all about?

Why does it want more power? Why does it want to legalize opening mail, taping telephones and obtaining medical records and legal records? Why does it want to infringe on the basic democratic rights of Canadian citizens? It would do this without having a parliamentary overview committee which would have the power to police the police.

The Bill is flawed in many ways. It is a danger to the democratic process and to our rights as Canadians. It does not have the types of checks and balances that one finds in the American system. It does not have a parliamentary overview to make certain that the secret police do not get out of hand and become involved in their own web of paranoia which can damage the social fabric.

The Government seems to be afraid of making the secret police accountable to Members of Parliament. It seems to fear its own shadows. As such, we cannot but go on to one course of action, that is, to attempt, with every conceivable tool that the Opposition has, to stop this legislation. As the third Party, we do not have too many tools, but whatever tools we have we will use to stop this piece of legislation. We know that if this piece of legislation is allowed to pass, it can ultimately endanger Canadian society more than any foreign enemy of this country. It is a greater danger to our way of life as we know and cherish it than any foreign agent can be. As such, we will stand opposed, opposed and opposed.

Mr. Pinard: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order.

Mr. Pinard: I am already recognized on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have already recognized the Hon. President of the Privy Council on a point of order.

M. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, if my colleague has something important and serious to say, I may just allow him to speak first. I just wanted to know if the hon. gentleman who just finished his speech was speaking in the name of his Party when he promised to do whatever he could to delay and prevent this Bill from being passed in the House. This is a very serious threat of a pure filibuster that is unacceptable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thought the Hon. President of the Privy Council was rising on a bona fide point of order. However, he rose to put a question, rhetorical or otherwise. A question can only be allowed at this time by unanimous consent, because the time allotted to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) had expired. Therefore, I will ask if there is unanimous consent to allow the President of the Privy Council to put his question. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: Were you speaking for your Party or not?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I understand that I do have unlimited time to answer the question by the Hon. Member. It is a very serious question that the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should make it very clear at this time that, contrary to what he may think, the Hon. Member does not have unlimited time to answer the question. The Chair will allow him reasonable time to answer the question. That is the Chair's discretion.

Mr. de Jong: It is an important question that has been asked. We in this Party are very much opposed to the Bill as it stands. We do not state that there is no need for a security service. We believe that there is such a need. However, we believe that major changes to the Act must take place in order to create that balance which will, on the one hand, provide the safety and security of Canadians that can be guaranteed by an effective security system while, on the other hand, the freedoms and rights and liberties of Canadians are guaranteed and not endangered.

We feel that this piece of legislation is so important that the very fabric of Canadian society is threatened by what we have in front of us. Therefore, we will use all means at our disposal—and they are limited because the major opposition Party has many more tools than us—to change the legislation. We will do whatever we can, Mr. Speaker, to introduce legislation, to discuss the amendments, and to convince the Government to sit down and reach a consensus among all Parties in this House, among all segments in Canadian society including university teachers, the churches, the provincial attorneys general and the Canadian Civil Liberties Union. We must achieve that consensus so that we can have a piece of legislation that, on the one hand, will protect Canadian citizens and our way of life, and yet, on the other hand, make certain that our democratic freedoms and our individual rights are not threatened by some cloak-and-dagger concoction which this Government or its successors will have at their disposal. I hope this answers in full the question that was put to me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Red Deer.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, certainly this day can be referred to as Black Thursday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Towers: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the "Ohs" come across from the other side. It is they who have little regard for the freedom of the Canadian people. Members on the other side disregard that completely. This is what we are talking about, Mr.

Speaker, the freedom of Canadians. Look at what happened in the Department of National Revenue. Look at what happened in the Department of Justice.

An Hon. Member: Tell us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I plead with the Hon. Member, who is a very experienced parliamentarian, to address his remarks to the motion now before the House. His remarks cannot be of a wide ranging and broad nature. The Hon. Member must address himself to the specific amendment.

Mr. Towers: I understand that, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize for digressing, but I did have to take care of the "Ohs" from the other side. Apparently that is all they are able to say.

In dealing with this motion before us today, because of the Speaker's ruling we find it strikes at the very guts of the whole Bill. The Speaker mentioned—would you allow me?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am afraid the Chair cannot allow any comment or reflection on the Speaker's ruling. That is very much against the rules, practices and traditions of the House. I plead with the Hon. Member to restrict his remarks to the motion before the House.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, if we can delete the title, then we will be able to deal with the other aspects of this Bill when we get to those motions that are of fundamental importance to the Canadian people. I refer to Motion No. 11 which has been negated by the title. If the Government opposite would see fit to delete the title, then we could deal with Motion No. 11. I hear the Gentleman of the Black Rod at the door, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Someone is practising.

Mr. de Jong: That is the knock on the door for the 12 Liberal Cabinet Ministers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member to pursue his remarks. The noise is not a knock on the door.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May we have order in the House. It is very distracting to the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) who is making a speech to be disrupted in this fashion. If we could have decorum in the House the Chair would appreciate it, as would the Hon. Member for Red Deer I am sure.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, the Government has not convinced Canadians that the close surveillance of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service will be adequately controlled. They are not satisfied that Parliament, the Minister or the Cabinet are going to have adequate control of this service. This is the frightening part of this legislation. That is why I say Motion No. 1 should be withheld or deleted until such time as the changes that can be made within the debate as it goes clause by clause take place. Perhaps the Government of the new Leader of the Liberal Party will have a change of heart and thereby we will have that opportunity to make the changes that will be satisfactory to Canadians.

I am sure that the people you represent in this House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, are just as concerned as the people I represent. They have seen so many of their freedoms disappear, disappear through agencies over which there is no control. The best example I could give you is of the dark days of Quebec in 1970. Hindsight is always better than foresight, as the saying goes, but nevertheless we do have to set legislation in place to ensure proper protection for Canadians so that they will not experience those kinds of problems in the future.

All one has to do is to read the minutes of the committee hearings, statements in the press and, statements made by representatives of all three political Parties, even the Party opposite, which show concerns about the changes of establishing this agency without adequate control put in place. We have had a ruling today. Unless we can change the title, delete it or table it until such time as there has been adequate debate in the House of Commons to ensure that legislation is put in place to protect Canadians, we are going to suffer a great deal of apprehension about what can happen in the future.

It does not matter from which province you come, certain circumstances can happen anywhere, not necessarily in the province of Quebec. I have often said, and I continue to say, that anything that can happen any place in the world can happen in Canada. We read every day about what is happening in other countries. We read about agencies getting out of control and the rights of individuals suffering as a consequence. I have to warn you, Sir, and the Members opposite that I am not speaking lightly about this. I am very sincere. We read in the papers about people who object to certain things, in other countries and suffering the consequences by having their arms cut off. These atrocities take place elsewhere in the world today because some entity is given control.

Let me refer to the armed forces. I have always felt, and people will tell you the same thing, that as long as you can keep control of the management of the armed forces under three different heads you will always have that alternative, that alternative force, to ensure that total control does not take place. We have seen what has happened in the world when one man gets control of a society. This has happened within our memory and it is a situation happening in different places in the world today. At the present time, there are 35 areas of war in the world. Any of these things can happen in Canada.

I would urge you, Mr. Speaker, to accept this motion. I would urge you to encourage debate and to encourage Members opposite to take whatever action is necessary at least to agree to the tabling of this motion at this time. It is of fundamental importance to the well-being and protection of our Canadian people.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTION TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the question to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment is as follows: the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Canadian pacific Railway (a) Projected reduction of workforce. (b) Request that Minister convene meeting of interested parties.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Robinson) (Burnaby)).

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion to delete Clause 1 of Bill C-9, it appears obvious that the discussion to delete the clause is improper. The motion does not add anything to the debate that has taken place on Bill C-9. I want to speak against the idea of tabling the Bill or the clause—

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Bill S-15 an Act to provide for the creation by amalgamation of The Wesleyan Church of Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, it is not quite five o'clock yet, but I wonder whether or not we could deem it five o'clock and go on to Private Members' Hour. Could you ask the House for such unanimous consent?

Mr. Pinard: Agreed, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it five o'clock?

PARITY PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville) moved that Bill C-232, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate having been afforded the time of the House to move Bill C-232 and I thank the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) for seconding the motion.

Bill C-232 is an Act respecting parity prices for farm products. Very simply, parity pricing means that a farmer should receive for the product he or she is selling, whether it be grain, cattle or hogs, a guaranteed price that is based on the cost of production and a decent profit or a decent living wage. That is really all Bill C-232 is asking for and it is really no more than many other people in our society have today.

Many contracts negotiated on behalf of unions contain cost of living clauses. Teachers receive annual increases. Members of Parliament now receive annual increases to our wages and salaries. Even senior citizens receive cost of living adjustments to the old age pension every three months. Bill C-232 only asks that farmers receive a return on their labour and on the investment they make in grain and livestock that reflects the cost of production and a decent living wage so that they may support themselves on the farm.

Bill C-232 is before the House because a group of five farmers came to see me last November after I had held a series of meetings in a number of towns in my constituency. I went around not only to Yorkton and Melville but to towns like Kamsack, Canora, Ituna, Foam Lake, Priestville and many other places. These five farmers came to see me one evening to tell me that they were having a lot of problems. That part of Saskatchewan is not an area in which many farmers are very wealthy. In fact, according to the recent census, the average farm income in my constituency is one of the lowest on the Prairies. Because of that, many people are going bankrupt. In fact, one of the farmers who came to see me that night was a farmer whose property was being foreclosed by the Bank of Montreal.

These farmers came to me with an idea. That idea was parity pricing. It had been talked about in the past by the old CCF, by the Farmers' Union, by John Diefenbaker and by many others on the Prairies back in the 1940s, 1950s and even into the 1960s. These farmers came to me with a written proposal and asked me as their Member of Parliament to present that proposal as a private Member's Bill in the House. I agreed to do that. The Bill saw first reading on April 5, and it is now before us for second reading.

The farmers on the Prairies now find themselves in a difficult situation. The world prices for many commodities are dropping. In many cases, the prices for grain and livestock certainly do not reflect the cost of production, let alone a decent living wage for the ordinary person of the land. On the other side of the ledger, the costs of production continue to rise. The price of land, interest rates, energy costs and things of that sort continue to escalate, forcing many small and average-sized farmers off their land. I see this happen in my riding every week. I see the farms disappearing and I see fewer and fewer farmers.

When I was in a small town called Duff, a farmer told me that when he was going to school about 20 or 30 years ago, there were four country schools plus one village school. The country schools have now disappeared and only the village school still remains. That shows how the depopulation of the rural areas in escalating. I believe a Bill like this one would help to reverse that trend, because it would mean that a farmer would receive a decent return on his or her investment in a farm and on the labour that he or she puts into keeping that farm going. That is why I have decided to proceed with this Bill.

This Bill is in two parts. I will describe it very briefly because I know that other Members wish to say a word or two about it. Part I of the Bill deals with grain and provides that there shall be a parity price based on 90 per cent to 100 per cent of the cost of production and a decent living wage. It provides that the cost of production shall be established annually by the legislation that is proposed in this Bill. It also provides in a very democratic way that the Wheat Board Advisory Committee shall advise and shall recommend to the Government what that parity price should be. I think that that is very important because I would like to make sure that this Bill and all legislation in this country is as democratic as possible. As well, if the parity Bill is enacted, it would be an offence to sell grain anywhere in the country at less than the parity price. There is a provision in the Bill for a penalty if someone does try to sell grain at a price lower than the parity price; in other words, if someone tries to undercut his or her fellow farmers.

Part one of the Bill is rather simple. The Canadian Wheat Board and the export agency do exist. We do not have any problems with GATT. Part I is fairly clear-cut and is not complicated. In effect, it would replace the two-price wheat system which exists today and would guarantee to farmers that the grain that is sold domestically for human consumption would return a parity price based on the cost of production and a decent return as well as increase the chances of attaining prosperity and a decent income for the ordinary farmer.

The second part of this Bill is a little more complex and deals with pork and beef. What we are suggesting here—I say "we" because I have involved the farmers in drafting this Bill—is the establishment of a national beef marketing commission and a national pork marketing commission. The farmers may decide whether or not they wish to join those commissions. There would be five to nine members on these particular commissions who would oversee the selling of beef and pork in the country. Of course, the majority of those commissioners would be farmers. I think it is very important that farmers do have a majority say in what will happen.

After one particular commission has existed for five years, the Bill recommends that the commission be changed to a marketing board. However, that change would only take place if a majority of the producers in each commodity area vote through a national plebiscite or election for such a board. In other words, the Bill which is before the House today practises economic democracy. It is not the central Government, it is not bureaucrats, and it is not Parliament imposing something on beef or pork producers that they do not want. They will receive a parity price and a national agency. That will be required because of the GATT rules and the trading rules. The producers will receive it only if they want it. The farmers will make that particular decision. I would like to make it very clear that it will not be imposed on anyone. If the farmers vote against it, fine, that is their decision. Those provisions are included in the Bill which is before the House today.

If the farmers, indeed, vote for a parity price for beef, pork, or grains, as is mentioned at the beginning of the Bill, then once again there will be an advisory board. That advisory board will be elected by the producers. It will not be appointed by the Government. That is similar to the way in which the Wheat Board advisory committee is elected across the Prairies. I think that outlines in a very brief way the kind of idea which we have in mind with respect to the parity price Bill, Bill C-232.

I would like to conclude by thanking literally dozens and dozens of farmers who have lobbied on this Bill. A committee of farmers came from the Prairies to visit Ottawa about three weeks ago, during the seeding season. Those farmers came here to speak with Members not only on the Government side, but as well with Members of the two opposition Parties. They spoke to most of the members of the Agriculture Committee, including the Chairman. They stressed to everyone they saw the importance of establishing parity pricing as a principle in this country. I found it interesting that in Regina, on Tuesday of this week, seven farm organizations met to talk about the parity Bill. Six of those seven farm organizations agreed publicly at a press conference that they would endorse the Bill in principle. Of course, they also indicated that there were some details in the Bill on which they could not agree. That is normal and that is natural. That is why it is important to ensure that a Bill such as this be referred to committee so that it can be studied in detail.

The interesting thing about those farm organizations is that they are very diverse. They include the National Farmers Union, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the Palliser Wheat Growers Association, the Canadian agricultural movement, a cattlemen's group which is called the Cow-Calf Association, as well as the Canola Council of Canada. Those six groups endorsed in principle, via a news conference in Regina, the idea of parity pricing. I grew up on a farm, and I know that it is very rare for all of these farm groups to get together to endorse anything in principle. I think it shows us in this House—and I think it is a non-partisan matter—that the farmers on the Prairies are rallying around an idea which is important. What they are saying to us in principle is that they want a committee to study this matter, they want public hearings and they want the House to act quickly. If we do not act quickly, more and more farmers will go bankrupt. Therefore, I make the appeal to my hon. friends in all three Parties that the subject matter of this Bill be sent to committee.

In the last few days I have been involved in conversations with various Members of the House in attempting to reach an agreement to pass a motion which would refer this subject matter to committee. I gather that this is the correct procedure and perhaps, later on in the proceedings this afternoon, a Member of this House could move a motion to that effect.

I would like to thank the Members of this House for the co-operation which I have received from my colleagues, from members of the Liberal Party and from members of the Conservative Party. I hope that this matter will be referred to committee and I hope that it will be possible for the Standing Committee on Agriculture to hold public hearings as soon as this summer. I hope there will be some action to establish parity prices for farm products. As I have already indicated, I am not wed to every idea, every "i" that is dotted and "t" that is crossed in the Bill. We are putting it forward for discussion and we hope that the House will agree to have the Standing Committee on Agriculture consider it.

I would like to single out one farmer from the Yorkton area whose name is Jim Coueslan. He is the person who was selected by the six farm organizations in Regina on Tuesday to act as their spokesperson on parity pricing. He is a former farm broadcaster from Yorkton at radio station CJGX and is a farmer in the Saltcoats area of my riding. I wanted to thank him publicly. I dare not mention other names because, if I did, I would be missing too many. I think that what these farmers have done is something which is very exciting. They united and rallied around an idea, stirred up public support for that idea and popularized it. I am very proud, as a Member of Parliament from Yorkton-Melville, to play a small part in attempting to get this matter studied seriously by the Parliament of Canada for the first time. I hope it will have the co-operation of the House.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to indicate to the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) that he has the concurrence of this Party in seeing that this matter is referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elzinga: In saying that, I would like to share a few concerns which relate to the agricultural sector as a whole. I respect the sincerity of the Member who introduced the Bill. However, the NDP is involved in spouting platitudes while we are involved with specifics and are interested in turning around the economic hardships which those in the agricultural sector face. In looking at the legislation, it is obvious that individuals throughout the country are being misled as to what this specific legislation would do.

Last Saturday evening, I had the opportunity to speak with a farm survival group in my riding. They mentioned this legislation and they also indicated that it would establish parity for all agricultural products. Nothing could be further from the truth. This Bill simply establishes parity prices for wheat, oats and barley which is used for human consumption in Canada. That is a very small portion of the grain which is produced in Canada. Quite frankly, the Bill does not go far enough.

Mr. Nystrom: It is a good step, though.

Mr. Elzinga: It is a good step, but it does not go far enough. Our Party proposes to go further. I would like to outline a number of steps which we will implement after the next general election.

As the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville did, I would like to commend those individuals who are involved with the farm survival groups. I had the opportunity to read Farm Gate Defense. It outlined in a very moving way the difficulties which those in the agricultural sector face. I recall, as the Hon. Member indicated, under the Government of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, the work which was done by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) in trying to establish parity pricing for agricultural products. It was not easy then, and it will not be easy now.

When we look at the income declines within the farming sector, we find that in 1983 the realized net income—a reflection of what the farmer has in his pocket—was down 4 per cent from 1982 levels and down 11 per cent from 1981 levels. If we look at total net farm income—realized net income plus or minus inventory changes—that was down 24 per cent from 1982 levels and down 39 per cent from 1981 levels. My Party has a broad outline on economic recovery for the agricultural sector. We will not simply oppose everything which comes forward, as does the New Democratic Party. One only has to look back to the Crow debate. At that time we indicated that changes were needed in the Crow legislation. It is heartbreaking to see the attitude of our Liberal friends opposite as it relates to the agricultural sector. They are the direct cause of the economic hardship that this sector has faced over the last number of years.

Rather than taking a great deal of time to criticize, I will indicate in a very forthright manner the position which the Conservative Party is taking. We will provide up to $100 million to assist producers with their existing high interest rate loans. We will establish an agri-bond to provide loans at reduced rates. Tax exemptions will be provided to encourage individuals to invest in this program. As well, we will establish a farm finance review board which will serve as a negotiator and a referee in helping producers to re-organize their debt repayments. We will immediately introduce legislation to double the maximum cash advance level for individual farmers from $15,000 to $30,000. In addition, we will reduce the input cost as it relates to the agricultural sector. We will reduce farm fuel costs. The current excise tax rebate on farm fuels is bureaucratic and inadequate. Fuel costs are a major component in the production of food. As our leader has said consistently in this House, we will eliminate the 9 per cent federal sales tax on farm fuel. That reduction will result in a saving in the vicinity of 20 cents on a gallon of diesel fuel. We have given a commitment as well to the farming sector to abolish the capital gains tax as it relates to agricultural land. That is a commitment which this Party will live up to. We have indicated we will develop a voluntary national income stabilization program for the red meat sector. We have three caucus members working very hard at the establishment of that program.

Just as important, even though it might not have any direct economic impact, we have indicated that in the event the Canadian people do place their faith in us—and I am confident they will—we will immediately allow dual labelling of agricultural chemicals and fertilizers, whereas the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) indicated to the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) just a few days ago in the House that he was not open to that type of suggestion.

Our Party is also aware that tariff protection is required for our beef sector. We are going to be more responsive with our stabilization programs by advocating an increase to 95 per cent of the pay-out. What farmers need, Mr. Speaker, is lower input costs and better prices for their commodities. We are committed to that. We are committed to the specific programs I have just outlined to the House of Commons. We have called for an increase in the initial price of grain.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate again that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville indicated he came from an agricultural background, as do I. We know that agriculture is the hearbeat of this country. If we neglect the agricultural sector, every sector in this country is hurt. It is heartbreaking to see the low priority which this Liberal administration has given on a consistent basis to this very important sector, the prime sector in our Canadian way of life. I just want to offer the reassurance to Canadians that this is going to be a prime area for our Party once we are the government. We are committed to an economic resurgence in the agricultural sector and we are committed to giving it the high priority which it deserves and needs so that we can all prosper together.

[Translation]

Mr. André Bachand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-232 which is now before the House may contain certain elements that are worthy of consideration, but after a careful study of those proposals and considering the current situation in Canada's agricultural industry, there are many proposals we cannot support. We feel they would be very difficult to implement and would not be desirable for Canadian agriculture at this time.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may explain our reservations in this respect. The Canadian grain industry owes a major part of its success to its flexibility. It has kept pace with consumer demand by carefully watching variations in the selling prices for its products.

A system like the one proposed here might have a number of negative effects on the industry. By artificially maintaining prices between 90 and 110 per cent of production costs, we would not be encouraging producers to diversify production to meet demand.

The federal Government, more specifically the Canadian Wheat Board, has been successful in assisting producers while at the same time interfering as little as possible with the laws of supply and demand on which producers depend to determine what kind of grains they should plant.

The Western Grain Stabilization Act guarantees producers the cash flow they need without modifying market prices. Similarly, the transport of all grains is subsidized. We feel we must maintain this flexibility which is essential to the development of Canada's grain industry.

Parity prices based on a cost-of-production formula do not offer the flexibility, sought by both producers and the Government. Nevertheless, we believe this new proposal would be worth discussing.

The red meat sector is another area that is very sensitive to exports, although particularly within the North American market. As in the grain industry, it is clear that without strictly controlling supplies, it would be very difficult to set prices to producers at "parity level".

During negotiations leading to the development of the Red Meat Stabilization Program, it became clear that many producers were not interested in such controls. Since supply management did not find favour with the producers, the federal Government has worked on other forms of assistance.

The most important assistance program is undoubtedly the Agricultural Stabilization Act, which guarantees producers 90 per cent of the average market price over the last five years, indexed to allow for increases in production costs. Since 1976-77, $224 million has been paid to beef and pork producers.

Therefore, we are understandably somewhat hesitant to adopt a Bill that, in its present form, might ruin the chances of success of an entire segment of our industry.

Nevertheless, the "parity level" concept does have some interesting aspects, and I am sure my hon. friends would not wish to reject a proposal of this kind without prior discussion.

That is why the Government is agreeable to referring the subject of the Bill to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, a good many Hon. Members in the House, particularly Hon. Members from the west, represent rural ridings. As such we have first hand knowledge of the tremendous hardships which are being faced by farmers right now. At the same time, we all recognize that we should not in any way build up false expectations, because farmers are one group you cannot fool. But there is an election coming up in the near future and it is in the interests of all the Parties to get this legislation into committee, because everything about it deserves to be studied deligently. However, I would not want ever to be in the position of telling the farmers that something was going to happen quickly when I know in fact, because of my experience and understanding of the operation of Parliament, that this will not become law in the near future.

There are many aspects of this legislation which are troubling from an international and domestic prespective. The solution is to get the prices up. That can be done at an international level by an international wheat agreement. However, I believe Hon. Members of Parliament in all Parties have been trying to achieve that for a number of years and it has simply not been possible.

Another solution is to get the costs down. In terms of farmers, the most dramatic increase in their costs over the last four years have been in the fuel taxes. The farmers, of course, get a triple whammy because of the six separate individual taxes which the Liberal Government has imposed on energy, ranging all the way from just after it leaves the ground to six separate taxes over and above the federal corporation tax. It has imposed six federal taxes on energy alone. We can all handle this tax burden with respect to our cars, driving off to get groceries on Saturday and to church on Sunday. However, when it attacks farm fuels, it hits the farmers not only on the fuel for their trucks but on the fuel for their tractors which they use on every acre of those hundreds of millions of acres in western Canada which have to be gone over four or five times a year. They have to pay federal tax on every gallon of fuel they use. The tax is imposed to such a point that it captures also all the energy going into fertilizers and chemicals, so it amounts to a triple whammy dealt to farmers. If we could just move on the fuel taxes we could help farmers more productively instead of using a stop-gap measure. It is like putting a finger in the dike when, in fact, you should be looking at the whole dike and at the reason why the water is piling up on the other side.

The reason the water is piling up on the other side of the Canadian dam and starting to flow over is demonstrated by the figures in today's Globe and Mail concerning government borrowing. In 1983, the federal Government had to borrow $26 billion; the provinces and municipalities together borrowed $14 billion, and the amount left for private industry to borrow was some $12.7 billion. As recently as 1981, the federal Government borrowed $11.5 billion, so it has gone up two and a half times. The provinces borrowed about the same, $14.6 billion, but the amount borrowed by private industry was $46.5 billion. That went into creating jobs, which result in taxes flowing the federal Government. The amount of private investment this year amounts to $4.7 billion, therefore the jobs are not being created, which means less tax revenue, and increased unemployment insurance and welfare payments. So we are caught in the circle of more and more government spending, which results in deficits.

If the Progressive Conservative Party had been in power since 1979, we would not have had to face the fuel tax, we would not have such a large national debt, and capital gains taxes would likely have been eliminated. Those are the reasons why we need an election, just for a new approach. The reason we have had this Government since 1980 is that the NDP made a quite proper political calculation that if it brought the Joe Clark Government down it would get more seats. It was successful, but unfortunately it also brought the Liberals back to power. That increased our debt, and this is what is generally hurting the farmers on an over-all basis.

I commend the Hon. Member for his stop-gap measure, but we need to look at the whole lake on the other side of the dam rather than just at one crack in the dam.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it seems there is general agreement that this is a terribly important matter and needs to be studied. I certainly agree with that. It should be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture and looked at in great detail. Hopefully, the committee will then report back to this House on the legislation which might be considered by Parliament. In that spirit of agreement, which I sense among the three Parties—

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—PROJECTED REDUCTION OF WORKFORCE. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONVENE MEETING OF INTERESTED PARTIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, two days ago I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) if he was aware of the fact that the CPR had told unions representing its employees that in the next few years the workforce of that company would be reduced by some 4,000 people and, if so, would he at least convene a meeting with the company and the unions concerned to discuss the situation and what might be done to lessen the very serious effects of such massive lay-offs. This is just one of many questions having to do with the railways and their workers, particularly in Winnipeg, which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and I have asked the Minister of Transport.

The Minister's reply two days ago was very like the replies he always gives. That is to say, he is at the very least evasive. There was no commitment to arrange a joint meeting with the employer and the unions. He accused me and the NDP of being "prepared to say that no company at any time should be allowed to look at how it can improve the productivity of its workforce". Nothing could be further from the facts, Mr. Speaker. He ignores, and not by accident, the fact that a reduction of 4,000 employees by the company is a reduction of 10 per cent or more of its entire workforce. Employees with many years of service will get their walking papers.

That is not what we were told when we were debating the Crowsnest freight rate changes. The Minister said that in British Columbia we were talking about direct expenditures by the railways of $5.4 billion which will result in 87,000 person years of work. That will mean $3.1 billion of labour income. Well, Mr. Speaker, what he did not say was that that work would be of a temporary nature. The former Minister of Transport said, in introducing the Bill at a press conference in Winnipeg, that 250,000 jobs would be created.

We fought that Bill because we knew there would not be this tremendous increase in employment. We knew that the result would be major lay-offs rather than increased employment. We knew the farmers cost of shipping grain would increase by 300 per cent to 400 per cent. In a speech I made in June of 1983 I said that we are not opposed to modernizing the system. I said, "We want the railways to get on with the job of upgrading their system in order to move all our goods. We know that our shipments of grain, sulphur, coal and potash will increase greatly in ten years. However, we do not want this to be done at the expense of the farmers or the railway workers. However, Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what is happening. It is the railway workers and the farmers who are going to pay the bill for the changes which were made."

I look around and see what the Government's priorities really are when it comes to the railways and who benefits, Mr. Speaker. Almost every day I see the former President of the CPR, who in recent years until he retired earned a salary of $500,000 a year or more. I see him almost every day because he got what the Government considered to be his just reward. He was appointed to the Senate. On the other hand we see what the Minister and the Government think is important for the employees of the CPR. Four thousand of them will be looking for other work. The Minister is not even ready to arrange for a joint meeting between himself, the company and the unions.

• (1730)

I urge the Minister to think about the people who are going to lose their jobs. I urge the Minister to take at least the first step and arrange for a meeting between himself, the company, and the unions to discuss what is likely to happen and what can be done to cushion the shock and to protect, at least in part, the workers of the CPR who are going to be laid off, many of whom have worked for that company for many years.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question put by my hon. friend from the New Democratic Party, I can say that the CPR, like any other transport company, must remain competitive and offer quality service and competitive prices to Canadian customers. When transport companies modernize their equipment and improve their productivity, both the economy and the Canadian public stand to benefit.

However, the Minister is very concerned about the effects that introducing new technology and modernizing operations will have on hiring procedures and employment levels. It is a subject that is of particular interest to him, and that is why the Minister has already met with union representatives of CPR employees in Winnipeg and is planning to meet them again. He has indicated to this group that he intends to examine the responsibilities of the CPR under the Western Grain Transportation Act, with respect to their hiring programs and policies.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) also intends to meet with CPR management. I earnestly hope that my hon. friend will agree that both the Minister and the CPR are determined to maintain as many jobs as possible, considering these developments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It being 5:33 p.m., in accordance with the order adopted on Thursday, May 10, 1984, the House stands adjourned until Monday, June 18, 1984, at eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

The House adjourned at 5.33 p.m.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Thursday, June 14, consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and Motion No. 1 (Mr. Robinson (Burnaby)).

Mr. Speaker: Before hearing procedural arguments regarding Motions No. 89, 93 and 94, I should indicate to the House that, although the Chair gave its reasons for ruling Motion No. 91 out of order last Thursday, through a technical error this motion was not included in the list of motions which were ruled irreceivable. As a result, it was quite properly left on the Order Paper with the other report stage motions. In spite of this technical error, Motion No. 91 is irreceivable and I so rule.

I am now prepared to hear procedural arguments with respect to the admissibility of Motions No. 89, 93, and 94.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, with deference to you and the other Hon. Members of the House, I wonder if we could postpone those arguments. I appreciate the fact that you called for argument with respect to this matter; however, we are not in a position to argue this matter at this point in time. Having returned to Ottawa late last night after vacating the premises for the last few days, I am not in a position to argue at the present time. With the agreement of Hon. Members of the House, I would appreciate very much if we could postpone this to a time convenient to Your Honour.

• (1110)

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I was very surprised to hear this request. Last week the Chair clearly indicated that it intended to hear arguments on the subject. My hon. friend and his colleagues have had the whole weekend to prepare their arguments, and they know this Bill is urgent. They know the House will soon be adjourning for the summer. The only valid excuse I can think of is that my hon. friend was so absorbed in and by the learned speeches of all the Liberal leadership candidates on the weekend and was so keen on hearing what our new leader, Mr. John Turner, had to say, that it kept him from concentrating on the business of the House. I still do not think his request is very reasonable. However, out of courtesy to the Hon. Member, and I still say I am surprised at this request, we certainly have no objection to his taking forty or fifty minutes to prepare and submit his arguments, which he should be able to do before noon. Not any later, however. I think it would be unreasonable to prevent Parliament from hearing considerations on the admissibility of these amendments, for which notice was given more than a week ago, especially since the Chair indicated last week that it wanted Hon. Members to prepare their arguments for submission to the Chair. I think it would be unreasonable to delay unduly the presentation of these arguments. It is of course up to you, Mr. Speaker, to decide how much time you wish to allow. However, we on this side of the House are surprised that a request should be made at this time, and we do not think any more than three-quarters of an hour or an hour, at most, should be allowed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: If it is agreeable to the House, I will hear argument at Orders of the Day this afternoon.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, certainly that is agreeable. We, as well as members of the Official Opposition, observed with joy and pleasure the outcome of the Liberal leadership convention. Certainly we are prepared to defer argument even though we were prepared to proceed at this time.

Mr. Pinard: The Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party has just indicated those Hon. Members are prepared to argue now. If they do argue now, then at three o'clock the Chair will require less time to hear the arguments of the Tory Party.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) wishes to be heard now, the Chair would be prepared to hear him and to hear the representatives of the Official Opposition later this day. Is the Hon. Member for Burnaby prepared to argue the point of order at this point?

Mr. Kaplan: He just said he was.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of a reply debate will take place on Clause 1. We are resuming debate on Motion No. 1 of the Hon. Member for Burnaby, seconded by the hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), that Clause 1 be deleted. Are Hon. Members seeking to be recognized?

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words to say at this stage on Bill C-9, which is a very important Bill. It is a Bill which has received considerable comment, I suppose, right around all of our constituencies, but perhaps more so in Saskatchewan than in some others, because Saskatchewan is known as the home of the RCMP, with the training school located, in the city of Regina. A lot of folk have been inquiring what this new security service would mean to the future of the RCMP and what it would mean to the people of the province. They ask why we need this new security service, this new security agency, with its powers, and so on. We have had an awful lot of questions and comments about why we need it, and so on.

I want to spend just a few minutes this morning raising a few concerns at this stage, and to state why I believe we should take another look at this particular Bill. Something which seems to me to be rather interesting is that the provisions of the Bill would give the new security service, as I read it, more powers in many ways than the FBI possesses in the United States. That seems to me a rather strange phenomenon, Mr. Speaker, because political violence in this country is really quite insignificant when compared to violence in the United States throughout the years.

• (1115)

The United States is a much more violent society. Some four Presidents have been assassinated. I am, of course, old enough to remember the assassination of President Kennedy in 1963. Despite that kind of problem, the security agency there, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, does not have some of the powers that this Government wants to give the security service in Canada. There was the attempted assassination of President Reagan about two or three years ago. We have been fortunate here not to have that kind of violence against our political leaders, with the exception of the 1970 FLQ crisis. Therefore I think it is rather strange that we give this kind of sweeping power to the security service. We should take a very careful look at that.

There are also all kinds of organizations extremely concerned about what this might do to our civil liberties and to the freedom of people who launch legitimate protests.

Mr. Speaker: I have a strong concern about the content of the debate at this point. We have a motion to delete the title of the Bill. I am aware that the Hon. Member has some general observations, but report stage amendment is not a repetition of debate in principle, which ordinarily takes place at second reading. The Chair invites the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), experienced parliamentarian that he is, to address his remarks to the precise amendment before us.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I perhaps made the mistake of following precedents. I do not think I have been more general than most of my colleagues on this particular amendment. I suppose one can say that the title is very symbolic of the Bill itself, and that is why this amendment was moved by my colleague from Burnaby. The title itself shows that this security agency is going to have powers which are not really needed and which might be an infringement upon the civil liberties of innocent people. That is not a concern just of some Members of this House; it is a concern of a number of organizations around the country, including some of our leading newspapers, churches, peace and labour groups. They are also concerned about the unnecessary powers being given to the new security agency. I do not really think those powers are necessary. The Security Service within the RCMP has adequate powers. It can do the things that have to be done to protect the security of the country.

I, along with a number of other Members, was here in October, 1970, during the FLQ crisis. I saw the sweeping measures brought in under the War Measures Act, and I saw the number of innocent people who were arrested.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. If the Hon. Member is going to range into that particular subject, will he please let the Chair know how he can relate that to the elimination of the title of the Bill?

Mr. Kaplan: This is the title of the Bill.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the sweeping powers in the Bill. Of course the title is symbolic of that. It signals the kind of powers which are contained within the Bill. I lived through a period when two sweeping powers were utilized, and a lot of innocent people were injured because of that.

• (1120)

Mr. Kaplan: What has that got to do with the title?

Mr. Nystrom: This is one of the reasons why this—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. The difficulty of the Chair is this. Presumably the Member is speaking in favour of removing the title from the Bill. There must be some argument presented as to why he wants the title removed from the Bill. I ask the Member, if he would not mind, to continue his remarks referring to the reason he wants the title removed from the Bill.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have pretty well summarized it. I will just leave it at that. I think the title is symbolic of the Bill and the concerns contained within it. I will abide by your ruling and participate later on during report stage.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, in order that everything I say within the next 10 minutes will be understood to be germane to this, I support the idea of the motion here with respect to Clause 1, the short title. Clause 1 says that "This Act may be cited as the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act". That is a misnomer. The title of the Bill does not reflect exactly what the Government has put forward with respect to this legislation. This legislation has many very serious and dangerous elements contained within its body. That is not reflected in the title.

When we talk about the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act we must look at precisely what has happened before and since last Saturday. Now that the Liberal Party has a new Leader, I would like to know where the new Leader stands with respect to the oppressive elements of this legislation. Is the new Leader—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. Would the Member please help the Chair by telling the Chair how that particular argument can be related to eliminating the title from the Bill?

Mr. Blenkarn: It does.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that the title is a misnomer because it does not adequately describe the apparatus and mechanism established within this legislation. You can understand that, Mr. Speaker.

I want to know whether the Government's policy with respect to this legislation continues. Are we going to assume that the new Leader of the government Party subscribes to this misnomer, this statement of what this Bill purports to encompass, or does he not? I believe we are entitled to hear from the Government side whether, by way of example, the new Leader of the Liberal Party thinks that this legislation should be amended in a substantial way. According to Mr. John Turner, should the title of this Bill be an RCMP security service or should it be a civilian intelligence agency? That is germane to the title of this legislation. Where does Mr. Turner stand with respect to this very important element?

Mr. Blenkarn: Where does he stand?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. As the present occupant of the chair I do not consider that we can introduce into debate anything other than the Bill itself. The contents of the Bill are a government matter. I am not prepared to hear any discussion on any changes that may or may not take place on the government side for as long as the Government remains in office.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I, of course, understand your position as the independent chairman of these proceedings. I will put it in another way. Does the title of this Bill clearly define the legislation we are considering? I think that is germane, and Your Honour clearly can understand that.

Our Party has been vigorous in our opposition with respect to this legislation because we believe that an intelligence service should contain safeguards for the Canadian people. Our critics and spokespersons on this legislation have come forward on a number of occasions and demonstrated the fact that this service that is being established seriously jeopardizes the safeguards of the civil liberties of Canadians.

We believe that this legislation and its title, which represents the intention of the Government, do not meet the expectation of the Canadian public and do not meet the anticipation of those who are concerned about the national security of our country. I simply say that this is a germane provision of the legislation and we wish to demonstrate our concern and opposition with respect to the way in which the Government is operating with this legislation.

A number of people have commented on this agency. We had a long debate with respect to procedural matters before the Speaker, in which I thought I had made it abundantly clear that this Bill is entitled the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act and does not refer to a civilian security intelligence service. Indeed, our Party put forward a number of proposals, not only at second reading but in the course of committee debate and report stage, urging that the RCMP should be involved in this new security service.

It is clear that the Government's policy has been one of distancing itself from the RCMP and leaving that proud force to hang out to dry. That has been the intention of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). That is why he is so anxious for this title to go forward. That is why he is anxious to have a civilian service. It is because he knows that the Government has left the RCMP in a very unfortunate position. It has not been supportive of that police force which has the respect of the vast majority of Canadians.

All that I can say is that, as far as we are concerned, we in this Party are proud of the service to Canadians that has been performed by the RCMP. We feel that that force has been severely maligned by the Liberal Government which, during the course of the difficulties of the 1970s, left the RCMP to hang out to dry, hid behind the RCMP, and took no political responsibility.

Now, when it comes to establishing an intelligence service in our country, the Government will in effect say to those proud members of our national police force that they are responsible for everything that has gone wrong in the past and the Government accepts no responsibility. It will not be reminded of its own shortcomings and lack of political accountability.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. The Chair is very sorry, but the Chair has reread the title. It is the opinion of the Chair that the title is sufficiently broad that the debate could relate to the title, as to whether the title should or should not be included in the Bill. I do not believe the Member should be broadly ranging in his remarks on a motion which is very specific. The ten minutes accorded to the individual Member should relate to this particular motion.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, thank you for supporting me on the relevance of what I have said. While you understand what I am saying, I will try to make it clear the Members of the government side because they have difficulty understanding basic and fundamental concepts.

I was saying that the title does not adequately and properly reflect the contents of the Bill. It talks about a Canadian Security Intelligence Service but it does not talk about the fact that this is a civilian service. It does not talk about the fact that the RCMP is being removed from responsibility in terms of security items. That is why this title is inappropriate and why the Government should give serious consideration to renaming the Bill and to being candid about the change. It should be entitled an Act to try to get the Canadian people to forget that the Liberal Government refused to accept responsibility in the past for security services. Taht is what the title should be. The Liberals should not be talking about a brand-new security service because what they are trying to do is to hide their political past. Somehow I think the fact should be reflected in the title of this Bill. They are the ones who left the security service, which is under the aegis of the RCMP, hanging out to dry during the time of the FLQ crisis and the Quebec situation.

• (1130)

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling that my time is coming to a close. I hope I have been able to demonstrate and to convince you, at least, that this title is inappropriate. It does not reflect what is happening with respect to this legislation nor does it reflect what has transpired. I know it is difficult for these people in the Government Party to understand, but at some time I would like to find out just where Mr. John Turner stands on this issue.

Mr. Evans: Wait for the next election.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the debate this morning specifically on the wording of the title. It reads:

An Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact An Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto.

I believe it is extremely important to be able to define correctly what is going on, to say a thing clearly so that it relates to an idea which everybody understands. What I talk about is not a new idea.

In the first chapter of the book of Genesis the question of being able to name the creation is how ancient people addressed the very important fact of why human beings differing from other beings in creation are able to explain, to say and to know exactly what an idea is.

In the title before us I feel there are certain words that in no way explain what is meant or understood. The first word is "security". I have already spoken to this idea. I want to say again that I believe the word "security", at least in English, is a word that does not have a clear understanding today. It is a vague word. In fact, it is more than vague; it is a word that to my mind has literally changed its meaning in my lifetime and during the time I have been speaking the English language. When I was a child, as other Members of my age will remember, the word "security" referred to a state of being. It was the kind of thing that happened when you were safe at home. It was the kind of thing that took place when you had enough to eat and you were warm and dry. It is an idea signifying that basically you were in good status.

I believe in our lifetime, and recently more so than ever, the word security has litarelly changed its meaning for many, many people. The word security more frequently now is used, and used very commonly, to refer to the fact that everybody has to be mistrusted. I think the best example I can give in the experience of everyone in this House of Commons and of every Canadian is how a person is treated when going to board an airplane. Not many years ago I could go to an airport and board an airplane with the same facility as I can board a bus or a train. In recent times, because of incidents in international aviation, security clearance has become an accepted pattern in many parts of the world, although in some places security clearance is being overlooked and in some Latin American countries I know now that security is not carried out at the airports. But notice how I use the word "security". Security now refers to an event, a happening or a situation in which everybody is considered a possible criminal. People have to be challenged personally at a particular time to make sure they are not criminals. I believe that is against our tradition. I believe that in the tradition of Canadian life it is important to remember people are not criminals before you address them.

I find it very disconcerting and in a sense dangerous that many people, without thinking, accept the fact that you have to go through security to get on an airplane. I do not feel any more secure getting on an airplane after having gone through the little electronic door than before. I believe anyone who wants to steal an airplane will steal an airplane whether that person goes through the electronic door or not. That does not make me any more secure. But the falseness that anybody can look after your security, that "big brother" somewhere can make you more secure, is what this Bill is basically about.

When I address the title, Mr. Speaker, and that word "security", I feel we are being led down the road. Probably if we want to use the word security, we would be on much safer ground if we started to call the Bill something like a Bill to set up the national security state. The national security state is a reality. I have lived in national security states. A national security state was a movement that took place in the last 20 years. In many of the Third World developing countries, Latin America in particular, a national security state became a dominating philosophy of the people in power. It became the philosophy that those who were against the people in power were subversives. National security police agencies were required and these people would go after the subversives. I speak from conviction and from experience.

That kind of state developed in very democratic countries and it developed in the last few years. Chile is an example. It is a national security state in the new understanding of national security. Chile has a massive police force, an army, not to go against people of other countries but to go against its own people. That situation also took place in Brazil, Bolivia and Uruguay. It still exists in Uruguay. Last week the Leader of the Opposition of the Uruguayan Parliament returned to Uruguay and was immediately imprisoned. Why? Because he had committed a crime? No, because the national security state said that he did not have a right to be in opposition to those in power.

What about the notion of this Bill and its name? Remember that naming something is extremely important. A dictionary will explain how to name something. It will tell you the genus of what something is basically about, that two things coming together will make it possible for a human being in his or her mind to say that this particular being over here is this and not that. The title of this Bill, at least to my mind, does not tell me it is this and not that. I think Canadians are aware of this. I have been told that a more apt name, if we want to think about another name, would be to call it an Act to suppress the civil liberties of Canadians. That might be closer to the understanding of what the Bill does and it might be easier for Canadians to understand. Mr. Speaker, I believe personally that the present title does not give us a clear understanding of what is going to take place in this Bill. The Bill should be clearly titled and understood before its less important matters are debated. I hope the Minister who has proposed this Bill will hear what is being said and will understand that what is taking place in the naming of the Bill is extremely important. It has not been well done.

The second word in the Bill that I believe should have a much more clear understanding is "intelligence". What does intelligence mean in present day English or present day French? To what does it refer? Whose life does it interfere with? What does it mean in relation to myself or to any other Canadian? Who has the right to look into my life, to find out things about my life, to keep them secret from me and from lots of other people, but which could be used against me whenever those in power decide that I have become a subversive, one who endangers the security, as they would say, of the state?

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I feel quite honoured to have an opportunity to make some comments regarding Bill C-9, especially the very first clause in it, the short title, which reads:

This Act may be cited as the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act.

When I read that title, I become very concerned. Not long ago I recall that George Orwell's Nineteen Eighty-Four publication received a round of support as we entered the year 1984. Canadians reread that piece of work and were reminded of the term "doublespeak" or "newspeak". During 1984, as described by George Orwell, the term was used to describe something that was not what was actually there but was the opposite. For example, when it talked about the department of privacy, it did not mean that there was a department concerned with the privacy of people, but quite the contrary. There was a department concerned with prying, spying and poking into the lives of people in terms of carrying on an intelligence service in the interests of those few people who control the state. When I look closely at the title which we are debating at the moment as part of the report stage amendments, I see terms such as "security". This is a security force, yet when we consider what the Bill will do, we wonder to what extent people will feel that their lives are more secure.

I want to identify for the benefit of Hon. Members the security about which we are talking as part of this new civilian service. It will have the right to open confidential first-class mail. That will be a given right. It will also have the right to open confidential tax files on individuals, so that information presented to tax officials in confidence, in an effort to maintain an open and democratic system, will not be confidential. These tax files will be open to agents of this agency. We all have in our safety deposit boxes confidential legal files with our lawyers, all kinds of confidential papers such as wills, et cetera. They are simply agreements between ourselves and individuals which are not for public consumption or for public eyes. Yet this agency will have the opportunity to access such files, all in the name of security. The notes of journalists and broadcasters will be open to inquiry on behalf of agents. This is what this Bill calls security. Security for whom?

Psychiatric and all kinds of medical records will be open to the security force. All records of government and of all public and private agencies will be open to agents of this organization. Family allowance application forms and various medical files will be open to them. Even when a person goes to confession in a church and speaks with his priest, it will not be in confidence. Those discussions will be open for inquiry through agents of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service.

Let us consider what the term "security" means in the title. It means that there will not be any security, that all areas which are considered to be highly confidential, such as agreements between two parties, individuals and groups, will be open for inquiry, surveillance and examination by this particular agency.

The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) clearly articulated that it meant in many countries to be secure when the security forces were really oppressive armies with the sole responsibility of providing anything but security. They make every home in the nation tremble with fear at night when there is a knock at the door; they wonder whether the security force is coming to take them away to be shot, imprisoned or tortured. That is what security has come to mean in many countries.

When I hear and read that the security intelligence service will have unlimited freedoms to pry, poke and inquire into all aspects of the lives of Canadian citizens, I become very concerned. Also I become concerned with another part of the Bill which does not use the term "secret". The implication is that somehow this will not be secret, undercover work. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and other colleagues of mine have called on many occasions for the need for accountability so that these services are not cloak and dagger endeavours but will be accountable to Parliament and to parliamentarians through a special committee or a special system. However, the Government says that it wants to keep it secret, that it does not want to have Parliament and its elected representatives involved in any way at all.

When we consider what might be an appropriate title, perhaps we should consider something like the Canadian suppressive, spying and prying non-accountable service, in an effort to describe more adequately what is going on with Bill C-9. Its particular title does not serve us well. It simply shrouds and clouds what is beneath the legislation and gives one misinformation as to what is actually going on.

Also there is no motion of "civilian" in the title. Government Members have been rising and reminding us as Opposition Members that this is a change from the RCMP, that it will now be a civilian agency. As a western Canadian who grew up studying the history of western Canada and learned from the beginning that security—law and order as we have come to know it—was first introduced in the west through the RCMP, which was then known as the North West Mounted Police, I wonder what is wrong with the work that it has done.

I recognize that there have been problems and that there have been some changes to legislation, but by and large I, like other western Canadians, feel quite strongly about the role it has played in terms of the security of western Canada. We wonder what is behind this move, particularly when we read articles such as the one that appeared in The Glove and Mail in February this year. It read: "Kaplan opens doors locked even to the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the United States". It indicated that FBI, operating in a country where security was much more appropriate than here in Canada as it was one of the major powers in the world, does not even begin to have the same powers which will be given to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. We must ask ourselves as concerned parliamentarians and legislators why we would want extensively more powers for prying, surveillance and undercover work in Canada than is the case in the United States through the FBI.

Those questions have not been answered to date. I become concerned when I am approached by church, labour, business women's and peace groups. I could list a number of groups in my constituency who have asked about the service. For example, a number of groups in the Kamloops-Shuswap area are involved in raising money and helping various relief organizations in certain countries. They look at this particular Bill and ask whether they will now be seeing agents from the Canadian Security Intelligence Service involved, in a sense, in infiltrating these groups to find out to what extent they are supporting groups in countries such as El Salvador through relief organizations. Are they sympathetic with the rebels in El Salvador and therefore opposed to democracy? We have been told that democracy is being introduced in El Salvador but of course no one believes it. That is the myth. By supporting in some way the rebels, are they now opposing the concept of democracy? Are they supporting subversives? These security people could quite easily break into churches, tap their telephones and open their mail. They could have various agents infiltrating church groups because of a fear of subversion. What we have is simply a congregation attempting to raise funds through bazaars, garage sales and the like to assist in relief operations in countries such as El Salvador.

In closing, this title concerns me very much. It does not adequately explain what is involved in Bill C-9. We would like to see this amendment supported and the title removed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. Before recognizing the next speaker, may the Chair again refer to the motion before the House. I personally do not believe that the motion is particularly restrictive, but when addressing their remarks to the House, I want Members to refer specifically to the title and the fashion in which they are bringing their remarks to the motion before the House.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto. Clause 1 of the Bill reads:

> This Act may be cited as the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act.

With due respect, I say to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) that the title is very misleading. We very much object to it. It does not identify the seriousness of what the Bill entails. As the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) stated, the word "security" has many meanings.

When I am in my riding, it is this Bill that is most often referred to. People are concerned. This title in no way expresses the kind of concern they have brought to my attention. They are concerned that there will be someone supposedly in a security role doing things which they suspect will be far beyond what the title suggests. We know the Bill goes far beyond that. For the House to accept this title when the Bill has such far-reaching effects on all Canadians, especially civilians, is wrong. The title is misleading and wrong. The Government should take another look at it. We do not agree with many parts of the Bill. The title does not identify our real concerns.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) identified many of our concerns with regard to the word "Intelligence" and how this will affect people in their normal lives. To say that this Act may be cited as the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act is totally misleading.

You have asked us, Mr. Speaker, to deal specifically with the title. I will try to do that. However, the title is so far out of context that it is very difficult to deal with it in that manner. Every speaker from this Party has expressed concern about the far-reaching effects of this Bill. I cannot over-emphasize the fact that the Solicitor General is trying to push this Bill through the House in the last few days. The title of this Bill is so misleading and wrong that we cannot accept it.

Who has the right to look into my life or the life of any of my constituents in an intelligence role? Who has the right to suggest what security we need? We have a police force that has been accepted all across Canada. There are other areas of concern. We can identify them. Do we have to set up an Act that may be cited as the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act? I think not. The title is wrong.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap identified such areas as tampering with the private lives of people. I want to look at the possibility of this Bill reaching into the workplace in such areas as compensation cases. The intelligence service may look into the background of compensation cases to see whether these people are allowed to work in other areas. That kind of intelligence service is wrong. The average Canadian does not want that. It is wrong for the Government to use this kind of title. The Government knows that this Bill has far-reaching effects, far beyond the title it has put forward.

We have identified this portion of the Bill. As we get into other parts of the Bill, we will identify other areas. This title should be removed. The Member for Saskatoon East suggested that if the Government were truthful in what it is putting forward, we would not even have a democracy in Canada. This kind of title is misleading. It does not tell Canadians what is in the Bill. There are some very serious ramifications. The title does not reflect the ramifications, the secret service and intelligence work that will go on in the back rooms. The Bill does not relate to the suspicions that people will have.

The average Canadian reading this title would wonder what the problem is and why we members in the House are standing up. The short title clause reads:

This Act may be cited as the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act.

That sounds pretty timid. It sounds as though the Bill has no real significance. The title is misleading. It is wrong. The Solicitor General knows it is wrong. The Government knows it is wrong. They are trying to hide behind a title that is misleading. That is not in the best interest of Canada.

We on this side know what the Government is trying to do. We know they are misleading the Canadian people. They may be able to mislead them in other areas, but they will not mislead those of us on this side of the House. The New Democratic Party feels that this is wrong. The title is wrong, it should be changed. It should be more truthful. The Liberal Government has a policy of hiding behind misdemeanors, hiding behind titles, trying to make them appear less restrictive than they are.

We in the New Democratic Party know what the Government is trying to do. It has been trying to push this Bill through since January. It is again trying to put it through. We object to the title.

Mr. Kaplan: Well, vote against it.

Mr. Parker: We object to the Solicitor General trying to push it through at this time.

Mr. Kaplan: If you don't like it, vote against it. That's your right.

Mr. Parker: The Solicitor General says "vote against it". The Solicitor General should withdraw the Bill and reword it.

Mr. Kaplan: You do not decide what the House does.

Mr. Parker: The Solicitor General says I do not decide. We will have some say about what is going on in this House.

Mr. Kaplan: So will we.

Mr. Parker: The NDP will not allow him to ram it through. We are going to speak out against this clause in particular. It is misleading and wrong. The Solicitor General says vote against it. We will vote against this clause, rest assured about that. It is wrong. The Solicitor General knows it is wrong. We in this Party know it is wrong.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I kind of like the name of the Bill as described in Clause 1, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act. If the name were reflective of what was in the Bill, it could serve Canadians well, However, I will be voting for the amendment to Clause 1 to delete the short title of the Bill because I do not think it is reflective of what is contained in the Bill. hat is unfortunate because we in the House of Commons have had the opportunity to deal with the concern of Canadians about national security and the opportunity to deal with legislation which would make terrorism, espionage and subversive activity more difficult for those who would participate in such activities. However, the Bill does not do that and is therefore, misnamed.

We are, of course, concerned about subversive activities undertaken by nationals outside of Canada. We would like to have a security service, whether it is an RCMP security service or a civilian security service, which has the power to determine threats to Canadian security. This Party has made amendments to this Bill which would clearly define some of the activities about which we in Canada are concerned. However, the Bill does not simply deal with espionage and subversive activities. The Bill has the power to undermine the civil liberties of many Canadians because of its provisions for wiretapping with the approval of a Federal Court judge, for the opening of first-class mail and for the availability of almost any public or private document to an ill-defined intelligence service.

The title of the Bill does not make it clear whether the intelligence service will be a civilian one or whether it will fall under the aegis of the RCMP as it presently does. The title of the Bill is not reflective of the broad powers the Bill introduces over Canadian civil liberties and the power for the infringement on those civil liberties which Canadians have been so adamant in protecting.

Many of my own constituents believe that this Bill is necessary. However, they are not aware of what the Bill actually provides for in terms of the infringement of the freedoms that they enjoy at the moment. By looking at the title only, I think the general public would feel fairly certain that this Bill in fact provides for an intelligence service similar to the FBI in the United States but are unaware that it provides even broader powers than those given to the FBI, an agency whose powers are looked at with some suspicion by many Canadians.

The intelligence aspect of this Bill deals with developing a secret intelligence among subversive groups within and outside Canada. However, the Bill's definition of subversive groups in Canada is very broad and can include many legitimate groups of dissent of which Canadians are supportive and protective. As well, the intelligence aspect of the Bill only relates to the civilian intelligence agency that will be formed by this Bill. It gives that agency broad powers to look into documentation of a public and private nature.

The Bill really does not deal with what we in the NDP think is very important, and that is the ability of parliamentarians themselves to understand and have access to some of the information that will be gathered by the RCMP agency or the new civilian agency. No parliamentary committee with oversight is proposed in the Bill. The title of the Bill would indicate to Canadians that an agency will be gathering intelligence on foreign nationals and groups that are attempting to overthrow legitimate governments or organizations within Canada. However, that title does not significantly define the flaw in this Bill, which is that parliamentarians will not have access to all of the information to which the intelligence service and the oversight committee have access. That oversight committee would include an Inspector General and three to five review committee members. Parliament will not have access to Cabinet documents and will not have the same kind of access to information that is gathered by the intelligence service as will the overview committee provided for by this Bill. I believe that that is a major flaw in the Bill. We as elected representatives should have a parliamentary committee that will look into this Security Intelligence Service. Such a committee is essential. Because that essential committee is not provided for by the Bill, it makes the title of the Bill invalid.

I would think that the title of the Bill would give Canadians the feeling that the security service will look at foreign nationals and foreign governments and that the intelligence aspect of it will be the gathering of intelligence which would be available to the security agency. I think the Canadian public would feel more secure with the knowledge that Parliament itself was looking at the service provided by the new civilian security service and that Parliament was confident that the civil liberties of Canadians were not being infringed upon in an attempt to gather information on sources within Canada and on Canadian citizens. Canadians would feel more secure if we as parliamentarians knew that any necessary wiretapping was legitimate and that the documents that were being investigated by the civilian service were truly important to its investigations and did not cause an infringement upon the common liberties to which Canadians have become accustomed and are intent upon protecting. Although I would like to see this Bill rightfully entitled the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act, I do not think that the Bill itself reflects its title and I will certainly be supporting the amendment of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 79, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Order, please. Motions Nos. 2, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 have been grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 2 disposes of Motions Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9. A negative vote on Motion No. 2 necessitates a vote on Motion No. 5. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 5 disposes of Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9. A negative vote on Motion No. 5 necessitates a separate vote on Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 2.

He said: I wonder if I could just seek some clarification, Mr. Speaker. Does the Chair intend to put Motions Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 at this time as well?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I will put the other motions. However, the Chair is having some difficulty. Motion No. 5 is in the name of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) who is not present in the House. Therefore, I require an Hon. Member to indicate that he is prepared to agree that the motion should go forward in the name of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East.

• (1210)

Mr. Fraser: I will be very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to introduce that motion.

Hon. John A. Fraser (for Mr. Allmand) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 30 to 46 at page 2 and lines 1 to 10 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"threats to the security of Canada" means

(a) espionage or sabotage directed against Canada,

(b) foreign activities within Canada which are harmful to the vital national interests of Canada,

(c) activities within or relating to Canada involving the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving political objectives within Canada,

(d) activities within Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property for the purposes of achieving a political objective in a foreign state where such activities are prejudicial to the safety, defence or foreign policy of Canada, and

(e) covert unlawful acts directed toward the destruction or overthrow by violence of the constitutionally established system of government in Canada, but does not include lawful advocacy, protest or dissent.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 36 to 40 at page 2.

Motion No. 7

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 41 to 46 at page 2.

Motion No. 8

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 1 to 6 at page 3.

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out lines 8 to 10 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"or dissent."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): For debate, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion that in the alternative would delete Clause 2, or would amend Clause 2 by deleting a number of the proposed subparagraphs which are contained in that clause. Clause 2 is, in many respects, one of the most important clauses in this legislation. It is the clause which defines the scope of the mandate of the new security service with respect to the targeting of so-called threats to the security of Canada.

I could do no better, in pointing out the very seriously flawed nature of this clause, than to quote from another motion which is before the House at this time, that of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). He was a former Solicitor General for a period of four years, and therefore is obviously in a position to be well aware of the nature of the threats which should be pursued by a security service in this country. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East said the following:

This is a key clause in the Bill, and on my examination it is an extremely flawed clause. I think it has been greatly improved over Bill C-157, but it is still very seriously flawed.

Those are the words of a former Solicitor General and a member of the Government side of the House.

The definition of "threats to the security of Canada", which is the object of at least part of the motion before the House at this time, is dangerously broad. It would permit the targeting of hundreds of thousands of Canadians who have broken no law whatsoever, but who are engaging in dissent. Historically, we know that one of the great difficulties of the RCMP security service has been distinguishing between subversion and dissent. This Bill would permit the targeting of Canadians who are engaged in dissent.

I have only ten minutes and therefore can give but a few illustrations of the dangerous scope of this particular provision. The legislation refers to threats to the security of Canada. The definition is so broadly worded that Canadians who support liberation movements in Central America, or a church group which would like to support liberation movements in Central America—which is struggling against oppression, violence and brutality—could be targeted. The members of that group could have their telephones bugged, their mail opened, their medical records examined, and made subject to all of the intrusive techniques, which would include the placing of an informer in the group, without any requirement whatsoever for a judicial warrant. The Bill does not even provide for the minimal safeguard of a judicial warrant.

A further example could involve trade unions. If the Canadian Labour Congress decided that it would like to support the African National Congress in its attempt to eliminate the institutionalized, violent system of apartheid in South Africa, it could be targeted. How on earth could it be suggested that those kinds of activities should be the legitimate scope of a security service which supposedly is watching over the best interests and security of Canadians?

As well, I would note that the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" includes a very broad reference to so-called domestic subversives. Despite repeated attempts by members of my Party in committee, as well as many witnesses, to seek clarification from the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) as to who these so-called domestic subversives are who are gnawing away, using violent means against the democratic fabric of our society, he was not able to give a single illustration of such a threat to the security of Canada today.

The Solicitor General has said: "What about the future? Should we not have these kinds of powers so that if such a threat does arise in the future, we can deal with it?" My answer to that question is clearly no. If the Government can point to a threat of that nature in the future, then it should come before Parliament and seek the necessary powers. No Parliament will deny the powers which are necessary to deal with a legitimate threat to the security of this country. To suggest, on the basis of some alleged threat, that we should give the security service the powers which are sought by the Solicitor General, I submit is completely without foundation.

Instead of including within the mandate of the security service the power to deal with Canadians who have not broken the law but who are allegedly involved in so-called subversive activities, I suggest that we look very carefully at the American example. Far from enhancing the powers of the security service in the United States to deal with so-called domestic subversion, in the wake of the Watergate revelations they moved in the oppositive direction. The Solicitor General is indicating that we should not use a criminal standard, but that those which we suspect may be involved in so-called domestic subversion could have all of the intrusive techniques used against them. I would say to the Solicitor General that threats south of the border, in the United States, are no less serious and no less significant than threats to the seucrity of Canada.

Yet the United States has not gone anywhere near as far as the legislation which this Solicitor General is proposing. In that case there must be evidence of a breach or a suspected breach of criminal law.

In looking to the future, we must take some cognizance of the past. We have seen all to clearly the abuses of the RCMP's security service under this head of so-called "domestic subversion", the fact that files were opened on over 800,000 Canadians. We still do not know how many have been destroyed. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that there were Canadians targeted who broke no law whatsoever. What this Bill will do, Mr. Speaker, is institutionalize that mandate.

My ten minutes for debate on report stage is coming to an end, but I would like to note and to draw to the attention of Hon. Member the comments which were made by representatives of citizens' coalitions, the Montreal coalition of citizens against state surveillance, the Vancouver coalition against the security Bill, and so on, which pointed out that in the guise of protecting the security of Canadians, what this Government is doing in fact is fundamentally attacking the security of Canadians. In the guise of enhancing civil liberties, it is attacking civil liberties. If the definition proposed in Clause No. 2 is carried, then, as those coalitions put it, this will impose a chill on democracy in this country and will be the first step down the slippery slope towards a denial of those civil liberties which Canadians have fought long and hard to protect. I urge the adoption of these motions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Clause 2 of Bill C-9. In committee, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Council of Churches put forward many concerns with regard to Bill C-9 and specifically Clause 2 of the Bill. I would like to quote some of the things it had to say with respect to some of the concerns it has, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Council of Churches submitted that the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" is vague and uncertain and hence is excessively broad in effect. It is particularly concerned about the effect of broad interpretations of paragraphs (b) and (c) of Clause 2. Its submission is, and I quote:

> —the Canadian security intelligence security could construe lawful church activities, for example in mission work, and-or lawful church and community activities, including development, education, peace advocacy and human rights defence as falling within these lawful activities as threats to the security of Canada.

Clause 2 of Bill C-9 is very broad, Mr. Speaker. It gives the Government and this intelligence service broad, sweeping powers which go far beyond what anyone could imagine. Another area in which the Canadian Council of Churches expressed their concern is with regard to Clause 2(a) and (b) and the vague phrase "the interests of Canada". The Council states,and I quote:

> What are the legitimate "interests of Canada"? Who defines these "interests"? Are the "interests of Canada" distinguishable from the interests of the citizens of Canada? Could there be a legitimate conflict among the citizens of Canada as to just what Canada's "interests" are?

Those are the questions which the Canadian Council of Churches is asking. Further on in its report the Canadian Council of Churches states:

> With regard to paragraph (b) for example: consider that a visiting foreign finance minister from a country where churches have carried on mission work for many years, requests a private meeting with Canadian church officials, in Canada, to discuss Canadian aid and trade policies.
> He wishes to decrease his country's dependence on Canadian exports, while maintaining or increasing Canadian aid to his country.

Those are far-reaching concerns, Mr. Speaker, and are concerns which the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) should be considering instead of trying to push through a Bill which gives these broad, sweeping powers.

Mr. Kaplan: You have put your amendments on already.

Mr. Parker: The Solicitor General says to put our amendments on.

Mr. Kaplan: You have already.

Mr. Parker: We have asked for these powers to be deleted.

Mr. Kaplan: Let us vote on your amendments.

Mr. Parker: The powers this Bill gives go beyond what even the McDonald Commission was suggesting. We say it is wrong, wrong, wrong! In a brief submitted by Dr. Philip B. Berger, it is stated:

> Section 2 of the Act is so broad that any Canadian citizen involved in human rights work on behalf of people in any foreign state would be defined as a security threat to Canada. Even with assurances from the current Government that the Act will not be used to stifle the activities of human rights organizations there is no guarantee that future governments will hold the same view. For the Act will remain while governments change.

That should be a concern, Mr. Speaker. Clause 2 is so broad in its scope that it should concern every citizen in Canada, because every citizen in Canada is going to be affected by what is in this piece of legislation. We have seen some of the powers which governments have used. We saw some of those powers when the War Measures Act was brought in in Quebec. Granted, there was a problem; but the civil liberties of people were still suppressed, and this Bill will go a long way in bringing about those kinds of activities.

We in the New Democratic Party do not like to see those broad powers given to an intelligence service in the name of security. We say that Parliament, or some committee of Members of Parliament from all parties, should have some overview of this at least once a year to monitor the kind of things which are going on. Those are some of the suggestions which were put forward.

We believe Clause 2 of Bill C-9, Mr. Speaker, will take away many of the democratic rights which we enjoy in Canada. We have the democratic right to be able to assemble without fear of an intelligence service coming in with these broad powers to oversee and to spy. We believe, as the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) suggested with regard to the privacy of safety deposit boxes, that wills which have been completed and are contained in them could be scrutinized. We have seen some of the activities of the Income Tax Department. If this kind of intelligence service was to get into those areas, people in Canada would live in fear of an intelligence service looking over their shoulder at every turn. Clause 2 as proposed by the Liberal Government gives those kinds of broad, sweeping powers to this intelligence service. We say it is wrong for the Solicitor General to be pushing this Bill through at this time, trying to get it through before the House adjourns. We ask him to delete the broad, sweeping powers which Clause 2 puts in to the hands of this intelligence service.

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I am going to support the amendment calling for the deletion of Clause 2. We would ask that the Government and the Official Opposition as well stand with us and delete these broad powers. We say they are wrong and should not be put forward. The Canadian Council of Churches has identified its concerns. The medical associations have expressed their concerns. As I go through my riding, my constituents have been expressing their concerns. I urge the Government to delete Clause 2.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, there have been two speakers from the New Democratic Party on this clause and no speakers from the Conservative Party. I do not know whether they have an interest in the Bill or—

Mr. Kaplan: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair will recognize an Hon. Member if an Hon. Member wishes to stand.

Mr. Kaplan: You are just wasting time, gentlemen.

• (1230)

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, you would think the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) did not understand the law, or at least the rules of Parliament. He keeps trying to interrupt and I would be glad if he would get up and defend some of the points being attacked. But he does not want to do that, he just wants to stay put in his seat and heckle.

The fact is that this clause has been rejected by spokespeople for a great many Canadians; not just the churches or the labour movement, but all kinds of groups across the country, even including the medical profession. The Canadian Association of University Teachers has objected very strongly. If you add these groups together, even allowing for a certain overlap, you find a majority of Canadians, certainly a majority of the articulate Canadians, are against this Bill. There is almost no one speaking out in favour of it except the Solicitor General and his caucus, who are no doubt acting according to some kind of direction which they have not explained to us. This Bill has been condemned again and again by all kinds of Canadians, particularly this clause because it is too vague. The Solicitor General has simply refused to countenance any kind of restriction or sharpening of the meaning of the clause, even when it was moved in committee by a former Solicitor General who has much wider support and respect among the people of Canada than the present Solicitor General has.

The term "sabotage" is undefined, which has given great concern to a number of unions. The Labour Council of Metropolitan Toronto, in a telegram dated June 7, said:

> We wish to advise you that the Labour Council of Metropolitan Toronto is opposed to the passage of C-9 in its current form.

It is signed Wally Majesky, Labour Council of Metropolitan Toronto. This is in keeping with a number of briefs presented to the committee which focused on the vagueness of the terms in Clause 2 under which people can be attacked by this so-called security service. Suppose that unions were engaged in what is basically essential and legitimate activity for a labour union, a withdrawal of labour, namely a strike. Suppose there was a strike by merchant seamen. Would the Minister or some unnamed director of this secret service choose to identify that as sabotage? Would Parliament ever have a chance to review that decision?

Mr. Kaplan: Yes.

Mr. Heap: The answer is that they would make those decisions but Parliament would not have a chance to review it unless the Director of the Service chose to present it in a report to Parliament and raise that question for consideration. That is not very likely to happen. The Director would simply decide that it is a security matter which he would withhold from Parliament.

The same can be said for the railway and trucking unions, or unions in the communications industry. If they carry on their legitimate activities and the government of the day chose to do as this Government has done and rule it illegal, or they change the law as they did against the postal workers a few years ago, then this kind of legislation could be used. Given the past performance of the Solicitor General in condoning, excusing and protecting the crimes of the RCMP, it probably would be used not only to throw some of those trade unionists in jail but also to take further action against them under this Bill and accuse them of some kind of sabotage.

Suppose there were peaceful and non-violent demonstrations against the production of weapons, such as with Litton Systems in Toronto. Again, instead of charges only of trespass, which Canadians have been willing to undertake in order to make their protest, or charges of perhaps obstructing police, which were questionable in that case, the Minister may be providing here that those people could be charged with sabotage or treason or some such undefined term. We have the testimony of a Dr. Berger, later supported by the Canadian Medical Association, pointing out that Canadian doctors have examined people who were tortured in some authoritarian regimes and those examinations have been used by groups in Canada opposed to those regimes. Under the terms of Clause 2 not only those groups but those doctors could be drawn into the net and accused. A phrase like "foreign-influenced activities", or "activities detrimental to the interests of Canada", could have been applied against the many tens of thousands of Canadians who supported the California grape boycott. Words like "clandestine" and "deceptive" are simply undefined here.

There have been other union boycotts affecting other countries perhaps allied to Canada. The boycott of J. P. Stevens textiles produced in vicious anti-union shops in the southern United States is an example. For all we know, some anonymous or practically unknown director of the security service could decide that was detrimental to the interests of Canada and that therefore the people leading that boycott should be subjected to all the attacks available under this so-called security legislation.

For several years church leaders in Canada conducted an information and criticism campaign against Noranda Mining because of its interest in supporting the fascist dictatorship of Pinochet in Chile. There was money to be made in the copper mines there by using cheap labour. The churches did their best to expose and oppose Noranda's action in this situation, and this could be construed by Noranda as contrary to its interests. They wanted to make more money. People in sympathy with Noranda's desire to make more money, who dominate this present Government and perhaps even the one that wishes to succeed it, people who think money comes first, might well have accused all those church leaders of acting contrary to the interests of Canada.

In the case of the Middle East, whether you were in support of Israel or Lebanon, you could be accused in Canada of supporting someone trying to act against a foreign state. In South Africa the point has already been made. In Namibia the point is even more confused. If someone supported the UN position in Namibia, which is contrary to that of the South African Government, he might be accused under this clause. But if someone supported the position of the South African Government, which is contrary to the United Nations' position, since we are a member of the United Nations he could be accused.

This is not fantasy, Mr. Speaker. A few months ago four men were arrested in Toronto. The main accusation against them was that they were Armenians. They are in fact of Armenian origin. They belong to certain Armenian groups. They were accused, and I was present when the accusation was read in court, of being engaged in certain criminal activities in Canada, such as extortion. They were acquitted. They spent a long time in jail because they were not allowed bail, and the judge said in effect that the only evidence against them was that they belonged to an organization of Armenians campaigning for justice over the Armenian massacre by the Turks many years ago, and campaigning for independence from Turkey. Simply because they belonged to an organization which advocated a change in Turkey, under our present laws those men spent many weeks in jail. Under the law sought by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), they would probably be locked up for many years to come. That would be wholly unjust according to the present standards of Canadian law. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks on this clause. I am amazed that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) would support a clause like this. He and I, as are many other Members of Parliament, are supporters of the State of Israel and the people of Israel. I do not believe that the Solicitor General will be Solicitor General for very long. The security service and another Solicitor General could interpret much of the activity carried on in support of the State of Israel as being subversive. They could therefore begin to interfere, through monitoring, wiretapping and surveillance, with most of the Jewish organizations which support the State of Israel.

I will demonstrate that what I am saying is not far-fetched by quoting a few paragraphs from the brief submitted by the Canadian Council of Churches. Its membership includes virtually all the major churches in Canada, such as the Anglican Church, the Baptist Convention, the Greek Orthodox Church, the Presbyterian Church and the United Church of Canada. About this Bill, and particularly about this clause, they said:

> We submit that the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" is vague and uncertain and hence excessively broad in effect. Our submission is that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service would construe lawful church activities, for example in mission work, and/or lawful church and community activities, including development education, peace advocacy and human rights defence, as falling within these definitions, and hence to determine previously lawful activities as threats to the security of Canada.

What is happening in the Middle East, Mr. Speaker? The Government of the State of Israel has encouraged the settlement of Jewish people on the West Bank. This has created a great deal of hostility on the part of the Arab people. Unfortunately there have been terrorist activities on both sides. As the Canadian Council of Churches has pointed out, there is no doubt that a security service and a different Solicitor General could decide that support for either side in the Middle East may lead to terrorist activities and therefore should be kept under surveillance. The Minister is in fact agreeing to this as it is certainly a possibility when he is gone.

The World Council of Churches was headed for many years by the primate of the Anglican Church of Canada, Archbishop Scott. The Council collected money and transmitted it to the African National Council. Important church leaders in the United States and other countries accused the World Council of Churches of funding organized terrorist activities against the present Government of South Africa. Given the powers that the security service has under this Bill, they could infiltrate affiliates of the World Council of Churches. They could wiretap the telephones, break in and photocopy the mail, or get the membership lists. All of this is permissible under this Bill. That is what this Solicitor General advocates. That is the kind of power he wants to give to the security service.

Until a very short time ago Argentina had a military dictatorship. I am sure that there were refugees from that dictatorship, Argentine citizens and people sympathetic to democracy who were working against the military regime in Argentina. We know the kind of things which the security has done. We know of the surveillance which they kept on organizations which disagreed with policies of Canadian Governments. We know of the way in which they infiltrated the peace organizations which are opposed to the spead of nuclear arms. We know how they stole the membership lists of the Parti Québécois, which is a legitimate democratic Party. Argentina now has a democratic government but Chile still has a military dictatorship. Can the Minister assure us that if groups contribute money to organizations fighting the present military regime in Chile, the security service will not infiltrate, investigate and harass those organizations? Even if the Minister could give us those assurances, of what worth would they be when we know of the kind of activities the security service carried on in the past?

We have differences of opinion about Nicaragua and El Salvador. I suppose the security service would say that the people opposed to the Nicaraguan regime, which is backed by the CIA, are okay and should not be bothered. I wonder what the security service would say about the opposition to the Nicaraguan regime led by the former leader of the Sandinistas, Mr. Pastora, who recently almost lost his life in an assasination attempt. The assassin was probably someone associated with the CIA. Would our security service believe that he is a subversive because he does not get along with the CIA? If we believe in the right of people who hold minority views to express their opinions about being harassed or investigated by the security service, then we must limit the ability of the security service to do those things.

I will close by saying that I think the Minister owes a responsibility to the Jewish community, among others, to guarantee that they are not going to be investigated. They may not realize the difficulties which they may have. However, I suggest to the Minister that they have no more right to feel that they will not be spied upon than all the other groups who have been spied upon until now. We know how the student groups which expressed early opposition to nuclear arms were investigated. We know how Operation Dismantle has been watched by the security service. We know that those who oppose the Cruise missile have been spied upon by the security service. We do not believe that those are legitimate activities. We do not believe that they are necessary or should take place in a democratic society.

We say that the Government does not really believe in democracy if it condones and legalizes all those activities which the McDonald Commission pointed out so clearly were illegal and improper when they were carried out. The Government will now make these activities permissible by law.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in the interest of those who are watching or those who may read these debates, it should be recorded that we are presently at report stage of this Bill after a number of weeks of consideration of its clauses in the committee. The motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) simply states that Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 2. What is Clause 2?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that the Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) would not want inadvertently to mislead those who are following this debate with care and would want the record to show clearly that we are not just debating Motion No. 2 but that we are debating Motion No. 5, which in fact was moved by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, as well as Motions Nos. 6 through 9. These are all in addition to Motion No. 2.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I suspect that the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) was posing a rhetorical question.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend's intervention but I was getting to the point that he was covering. Essentially, the motion in the name of my hon. friend for Burnaby is that Clause 2 of the Bill presently before us be deleted. As my friend pointed out, there are several other motions which would deal with amendments to that clause, but I want to refer specifically to Clause 2 because it is important that the Canadian public know what Clause 2 of the Bill is. The fact is that trying to follow a procedural argument in the House is extremely difficult.

Clause 2 of the Bill defines what are threats to the security of Canada. The definition begins: "threats to the security of Canada mean . . ." and is followed by four extremely important paragraphs, (a), (b), (c) and (d). Those paragraphs are important because they are the trigger mechanism which permits the security service to conduct its investigations and to collect information.

During the weeks of committee hearings witnesses who appeared there stated that these four paragraphs could be better drafted so as to constrain more exactly the appropriate activities of the security service. It is important to realize that despite those suggestions and the amendments which the Progressive Conservative Party put in the House and to the committee to accomplish that, the ruling of the Chair was that those amendments cannot be put at all at report stage. As Your Honour knows, the consequence of that ruling is that some other amendments can be put but none dealing with these four paragraphs that were put by the Conservative Party can be put. Of course, it is not my purpose to reargue why they were ruled out but it is very important that the public know that those amendments to Clause 2 which were moved in my name have in fact been ruled out.

It is also important that the public realize that the majority of witnesses that came to the committee were gravely concerned about these four subparagraphs that define threats to security and trigger what the security service can and cannot do. During second reading debate on this Bill, the Government implied that once the Bill got to committee the Government would listen carefully to any proposals to improve the Bill. The public should know that the Government did not in fact listen, and with respect to Clause 2 concerning the definition of threats to security of Canada, did not accept any amendments.

The question which this raises is: What does this do to the process? When a government indicates that suggestions to improve the legislation made at committee will be seriously considered, one should be able to accept it at its word. The fact of the matter is that recent events have shown that the Government had no intention of changing one word of any of these definitions despite the fact that eminent lawyers and knowledgeable people in the field of civil rights in Canada came before the committee and made suggestions for change.

Let me address another aspect of this Bill. It is very easy for some Government Members to leave the impression that anyone who criticizes the Bill is in some way against having a security service in this country. That is not so. When questioning the many witnesses who came before the committee, I was very careful to determine whether their criticisms went as far as saying there ought not to be a security service at all. Not once did any of those critics who came before the committee go that far. There has been a security service for many years. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) agreed in committee that it has been doing its job competently, effectively and in a manner which would meet the proper sensibilities of the Canadian public. The question is not whether there ought to be a security service but whether this legislative mandate which has been presented to the House is as good as it could or should be in terms of putting the appropriate constraints on any security service for which this Bill clearly provides wide power.

I believe it was my obligation earlier today to rise in place of an Hon. Member from the Government side who unfortunately was unable to be in his seat. He is the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), a former Solicitor General of Canada, who moved Motion No. 5. That motion incorporates some fo the suggestions which were contained in the amendments that the Progressive Conservative Party put forward. What the Member is trying to achieve in that amendment is a more exact definition of threats to the security of Canada. He sets a number of them out. The concerns in this interpretation clause are very real. For instance, the Attorney General of Saskatchewan, at page 3 of the brief, filed by the Attorney General of Saskatchewan before the committee, said this about this definition clause:

> The phrase "detrimental to the interests of Canada" is wide enough to include economic espionage and any other espionage that could be construed as detrimental to our interests and should be limited to the "national security interests of Canada".

That is the essence of my remarks, Mr. Speaker. These definition clauses are vital in the Act and they should be more carefully worked in order to establish more appropriate constraints on the security service.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, this collection of amendments to which we are directing our attention now are, to my way of thinking, the very pith and substance of this Bill. You will pardon the apparent irrelevance, but it is not irrelevant if we look at Clause 12 of the Bill where we find that the duties and functions of the service being proposed are "to collect, investigate, analyse and retain information and intelligence respecting activities that may, on reasonable grounds, be suspected of constituting threats to the security of Canada". This is the duty, the function, and the role of the proposed intelligence service. In order to combat the threats to the security of Canada. Naturally at this stage, that is, in Clause 12, it will not be possible to define what those threats are. Therefore, and as is normal in legislation, the definition clause comes early in the Bill.

We are at the present time looking at the definition of "threats to the security of Canada". We have before us a collection of amendments which are being grouped for debate, the first one being in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) that Clause 2 be eliminated. That is patently nonsense unless he just wants to eviscerate the Bill and eliminate its whole purpose.

There is some cause to examine the existence of the Security Intelligence agency as it is now and to decide whether it is working properly and is being properly administered and responsible to any of the Ministers of Government. That part of it rather suggests to me that Motion No. 2 proposed by the Hon. Member for Burnaby is a bit of a nonsense motion, if I may be allowed to say so, because the Hon. Member eliminates entirely the various definitions so essential to understanding what this Bill is about, in particular the threat to the security of Canada, to which I have referred, which appears later in the Bill in Clause 12. If the Bill is to have any meaning at all, if it is to be accepted at all, it is obvious that there have to be definitions. We have to know the duties the agency is charged to perform. Therefore, this section is essential. Essential is almost too weak a word to emphasize the importance of this clause with regard to threats to the security of Canada.

I have before me Motion No. 5 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), proposed by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) in the absence of the former. I am not entirely in agreement with the suggested amendment even though the proponent of that amendment has been, at a certain stage in his career, the Solicitor General. I cannot, for example, understand why he should abbreviate paragraph (a) of that definition—threats to the security of Canada. I do not think it will be improved by being curtailed. The shorter version which is proposed here is that threat means espionage and sabotage directed against Canada. The original version read:

> (a) espionage or sabotage that is against Canada or is detrimental to the interests of Canada or activities directed toward or in support of such espionage or sabotage,

There are components of that paragraph (a) which I contend deserve a place in any definition of threats to the security of Canada, particularly the latter part, "or activities directed toward or in support of such espionage or sabotage".

In the next amendment, paragraph (b), the Hon. Member proposes the words, "foreign activities within Canada". I do not think the Hon. Member has improved the language, the significance, the meaning of paragraph (b) in the original Bill, that is, "foreign influenced activites." The amendment reads, "foreign activities".

Some of these activities may be foreign, some of them foreign influenced, some of them may be foreign inspired, and some of them may be natively inspired, coming out of the substance of Canadian thoughtfulness but directed toward subversion and harmful to the vital national interests of Canada. I do not think that is an improvement on the paragraph where it reads:

—the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person,

Involving a threat to any person, I suppose, is looking at terrorism, but the whole thing is all mixed up, Mr. Speaker. It is not just activities designed to pull down the institutional structures of Canada. That is one aspect of it. There is another aspect, the terroristic aspect involving persons. What about the pursuit of persons? That is contained somewhat in the original paragraph (b). I believe that the notions there ought to be properly filtered out, clarified and assigned their proper role, not just jumbled together. That is really my criticism of the definitions as they stand in Bill C-9. The motions are jumbled together and are not clearly set out. That will not help—and I am directing my words to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) who is listening—nor will it assist any security intelligence agency if its functions and the notions that define those functions are jumbled.

I plead with the Minister to accept some redefinition and clarification of the threats to the security of Canada as outlined in the definition clause of the Bill.

I cannot quite understand the technique of the Hon. Member for Burnaby. His Motion No. 2, which is one of those we are talking about, deletes this clause. Then his Motion No. 6 deletes certain sections of the threats to the security of Canada, and his Motion No. 7 deletes certain other sections of the threats to the security of Canada. I think he was attempting to have a number of amendments in his own name by dealing with paragraph after paragraph after paragraph. At the same time he suggested that the whole clause should be deleted. I do not know what he wants to do in proceeding in this manner. I wonder whether he knows. If one clause is eliminated, then it goes. Perhaps he thought half a loaf is better than no loaf at all. However, at the same time I feel that he is suggesting an unusual procedure. First he suggested that we should eliminate the whole thing and, if we could not do that, we should eliminate one portion of it and then another portion of it.

It would have been much better for him to examine the notion of the threats to the security of Canada. He could have clarified them, as he can clarify them; he has a fairly good thinking mind. He should have clarified them, sorted them out and unmuddled them. Then he would have rendered a much greater service to the parliamentary process.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to rise to speak on the motions relating to Bill C-9 which are now before the House, those motions being Nos. 2, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 that were grouped for voting. Despite the claptrap which were hear from the government side, it is not the intention of anyone in the House to not have a security service in Canada.

What we are trying to get across to the Canadian public is that the Government is not supported in many of the definitions and clauses in this Bill. To date, either in committee or in the House, either publicly or anywhere else, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has not taken the time to put evidence before the people of Canada or before us as to why he is seeking the kind of legislation he is obviously seeking. The Solicitor General has not come forward, nor has any Government Member, with a supporting list of Canadians who would like to see the legislation brought forward, particularly containing Clause 2. That clause goes much further than Canadian tradition or Canadian law would demonstrate is required. Interestingly enough, it is not supportable in terms of the great republic to the south of us and the studies which it has conducted through its general accounting office, Congress and Senate in looking at the operations of the CIA. In fact, they are going in exactly the opposite direction, in terms of definitions and activities, to what the present Solicitor General of Canada is trying to do.

The Solicitor General is trying to bring in a definition of threats to the security of Canada which is so broad that it would include—and I am humble in having to tell you this—yourself, Mr. Speaker. The definition is so broad that certain activities in which you are involved, Mr. Speaker, such as going to church, could perhaps be considered under the very broad rubric of the definition used by the Solicitor General as requiring the security service to have to go out and target.

I was glad to see that some of the Tories were finally rising to speak on Bill C-9. Certainly they have said in British Columbia that they are opposed to this legislation, but they do not demonstrate that very sincerely in the House or in committee. The point which must be made in terms of Clause 2 is the concern of major groups in Canadian society. I am referring to those groups concerned about civil liberties and human rights and about the proper role of dissent in Canadian society. What are they saying, groups such as the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, the Canadian Council of Churches and so on? I will deal with them in a few moments.

I suppose Clause 2 as proposed by the Solicitor General is supported by some Liberals. When they find out what the electorate thinks about it, I am sure they will cut themselves loose of Bill C-9 as fast as they can, particularly this clause. The clause allows for the targeting of responsible groups or individuals who happen to work on issues inside or outside Canada that have political objectives. Unfortunately, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) was unable to be here, so the opposition Party had to put forward his motions. Despite what he would hope to do, it went some distance. As a former Solicitor General of Canada, he is far more widely supported by civil libertarians than the present Solicitor General.

There is a mood among many Canadians involved in church groups which are trying to provide legitimate help and care for refugee groups, particularly political refugees and so on, or even in commercial activities, that the intention of the clause is so broad that the Solicitor General or the Government will be allowed to use it in a very political way. Groups such as the PQ in the Province of Quebec have a legitimate right to be disturbed about this clause. Despite the fact that there was obviously a political hand involved in getting the RCMP security service to steal its membership list and in activities ranging from the burning of barns, to breaking into people's homes, to stealing things, kidnapping, forgery, fraud and assault, there has been no justice.

Where has the justice been in terms of our existing security service? The present Solicitor General has never demonstrated any particular backbone in bringing those criminals within the security service to justice. I think Canadians expect it. If he would have come in with a clean slate and said that he would set right what Mr. Justice David Macdonald felt was wrong in terms of the existing system and situation, then there would have been a greater mood in the Canadian electorate to say that the man and his Party were demonstrating the integrity required to bring in a security service with powers that are really required. Instead, the Solicitor General brought in a truly Draconian Bill, going in exactly the opposite direction to that of the CIA, which has for many years been out of control in the great republic south of us.

Who could be targeted? I pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that you could be. Let us take a look at who else might come under the definitions proposed by the Solicitor General, who, I am quite confident, will not be the Solicitor General at the end of this week.

On page 13 of the brief of the Canadian Council of Churches, paragraph 42 reads:

> We submit that the definition of threats to the security of Canada is vague and uncertain and hence excessively broad in effect.

Why would the Solicitor General not take that advice? Why does he piously sit in the House of Commons and say that the NDP and the Official Opposition are just stalling?

We will do more than stall. We will ensure that the Bill is changed. The Solicitor General might think he will be able to jam it through the House of Commons, but we can put up speakers on every clause and make sure that he will ultimately have to start accepting some changes to the Bill. It will not be passed into law while New Democratic Party members are sitting in the House.

In paragraph 43 it goes on to indicate:

> We are particularly concerned about the effect of broad interpretation of paragraphs (b) and (c) of Section 2. Our submission is that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service could construe lawful church activities, for example in mission work, and/or lawful church and community activities, including development education, peace advocacy and human rights defence as falling within these definitions, and hence to determine previously lawful activities as threats to the security of Canada.

What would happen to these church groups under the "shall" clause which the Minister slipped into Bill C-9? They would have their mail opened and be subject to all kinds of intrusive techniques.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has a problem. Is the Hon. Member confining his remarks to the particular clauses grouped for debate? He appears to be ranging outside this particular group of clauses.

Mr. Fulton: I am dealing specifically with Motions Nos. 2, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9. Motion No. 2 seeks to delete Clause 2 and the other motions seek to eliminate parts of the clause. The part proposed on the government side actually amends those clauses. I am sticking to those clauses. However, I want Canadians to know what happens if they are defined or identified under this very broad rubric definition of a security threat to Canada.

What happens under the "shall" clauses of the Bill is that they will have their mail opened, telephones bugged, medical or work records seized and on and on. The Canadian Civil Liberties Association in its brief to the committee on this clause, the delegation at that time being composed of Mr. Borovoy and Mr. Swan, the general counsel and vice-president of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, took a very close look at this clause and said the following:

> —the Bill would make such intrusive surveillance available for "activities" ... intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of the constitutionally established system of government in Canada". When ultimate intentions become the operative threshold, there is a great danger that speculation rather than evidence would be at a premium. What indeed would constitute acceptable evidence of an ultimate intention? Can the word "ultimately" deal with any point between now and the end of time? The more speculative the exercise becomes, the greater the risk of intruding on completely lawful behaviour.

Having come from the court system, having been a probation and parole officer and being the only elected peace officer in this House, I can state what kind of powers the present Solicitor General would be proposing if he were to apply the same principles he wants in Bill C-9 to the Parole Act of this country. We already have the second highest rate of incarceration in the western world. We are already a very punitive society.

What we have within our system of justice in Canada is a balancing act. We have a defence and we have Crown counsel. In Parliament we have the government side and the opposition side. The Minister is proposing a piece of legislation that is so highly politically motivated, so highly open to political manipulation that no one in our society who may simply want to dissent about anything could be certain that Big Brother's eye would not come upon them. If they became a political thorn in the side of the present Solicitor General, you can be darn sure that he or someone of that ilk will invoke some part of Bill C-9 and have them brought under some kind of intrusive techniques. Ultimately, completely honest, open, law-abiding Canadians would find themselves before the courts and in jail as a result of some activities in which they were legitimately involved, and the harassment potential of Bill C-9 would simply be used to muzzle them. On behalf of all Canadians, I will fight Bill C-9 and this clause until the end of time.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise this afternoon to make some comments on the second motion before the House on Bill C-9. The general thrust of the motion is that Clause 2 be deleted from the Bill. Consider the reasons for that. We are talking about the clause in the Bill that is perhaps the most important of all. It attempts to identify all the interpretations of the very critical terms included in various parts of the Bill.

When you look at what this means, I am afraid that our Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) begins to make Ronald Reagan look like some kind of a bleeding heart. For example, Clause 2 talks about foreign influenced activities. Numerous church groups, priests and ministers from a variety of churches throughout my constituency have studied this Bill and the implications thereof. Like many other Canadian humanitarian organizations, churches maintain a variety of very direct links with colleague agencies in other countries through development assistance grants of one kind or another, through church and seminary support organizations, through various human rights documentation and advocacy groups, through ecumenical exchange of personnel from one part of the world to another, and through assistance to general refugee groups and various relief organizations and activities around the world.

Furthermore, the graduates of mission-related schools, associate and partner churches and agencies, may rise quite conceivably to positions in the political or economic life of a variety of these countries. In the world-wide church family, there is a great deal of exchange and collaboration, hence a good portion of the day-to-day life and work of Canadian churches and church organizations and agencies could be held to be foreign influenced. Of course, that relates directly to Clause 3(b) referring to foreign-influenced activities.

The point is that when talking about foreign-influenced activities, we include the groups that are indeed engaging in some type of dissent. Now this dissenting group could be called a group of subversives. It could be identified as a group carrying out some kind of subversion. We in the New Democratic Party have had some real concerns expressed to us by church and religious groups, peace groups, trade unions and various community organizations. They feel that mission work abroad, development education and the various peace advocacy groups could all be determined to be some kind of subversive activity led by a subversive group. This causes us concern. When the Solicitor General hears of all of these concerns, I really wonder why he does not stand in his place and react to them.

Mr. Kaplan: Why did you not bother to come to committee?

Mr. Riis: I wonder why he does not comment on them. After all, report stage is the point for us to raise concerns and perhaps hear some explanations from the government side. The government benches are mute on these concerns. I hope that eventually the Solicitor General and some of his colleagues will rise in their places and comment.

I am concerned about the need to incorporate in Clause 2 the terms "espionage" and "sabotage". Espionage is already defined in Section 46(2)(b) of the Criminal Code. It is an offence in criminal law today. Why does it have to be in this Bill along with the word "sabotage" which is defined in Section 52 of the Criminal Code and can be dealt with adequately in that area? A whole list of these various terms are involved. Their purpose is anything but clear.

I now move away from the concerns I have for the terms espionage and sabotage to the next subclause, which is again much too wide. It is very open and vague. Let me give an example of how this is a concern to me. It reads:

(b) foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person,

I want to refer to the Crown corporation Petro-Canada. Frequently parliamentarians rise to condemn Petro-Canada as some kind of subversive corporation. They say it was introduced by the Government not in the best interest of Canada, not in the best interests of energy security or developing self-sufficiency in a very critical resource called petroleum. Are we not hearing Members of Parliament in a sense carrying on subversive activities that incite people to move against the decision of the Government? Oil company presidents, vice-presidents and chief executive officers condemn Petro-Canada as something that is working against the national interest, whose mandate is against the best interest of Canada. By this Bill, these executive officers and other executive members of Canadian and foreign-owned companies could be identified as urging activities that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and could be defined as being clandestine, deceptive or involving a threat to the country or to Canadian persons. Basically what this Bill is saying is that those kinds of individuals including parliamentarians could be identified as carrying on foreign-influenced activities within and relating to Canada.

I would like to raise a concern that was brought to the attention of the committee by a group of Canadian physicians who found themselves involved in examining patients whose injuries were the results of torture in their home countries. These patients were seeking refugee status in Canada and had gone to members of the medical profession to have evidence of their torture verified and documented in order to make the case that to send them back to Chile or whatever country was involved would certainly not be in their best interests because, upon returning home, they would likely be imprisoned, shot or tortured further.

The doctors involved have now become concerned because the results of these examinations have been used within Canada by Canadians opposed to foreign Governments and by groups that are perceived by some to advocate the threat or the use of acts of violence for the purpose of achieving a political objective within some foreign country. Indeed, some of these physicians are actual members of organizations that donate funds and goods to opposition groups in foreign states that defend themselves in violent confrontations with governments in the pursuit of democracy and freedom. In their own words, the activities of these physicians are certainly directed toward opposition groups which are trying to obtain and achieve a political objective in foreign countries. These physicians would fall squarely under the definition of "threats to the security of Canada".

One could list a whole number of groups and individuals who are genuinely concerned about the pursuit of democracy in other countries and who are genuinely concerned about assisting the various groups that are attempting to achieve open and free countries. By the definitions we see before us in Clause 2 of Bill C-9, these people could then be identified as individuals who must be spied upon, whose telephones must be tapped, whose offices must be broken into and whose files, both public and private, must be opened up to ensure that they are operating in the best interests of Canada.

In rather simplistic words, that is why we feel that this clause must be deleted in its entirety and why we feel that it is important that the Government take action and delete this clause. I would encourage the Solicitor General to explain at least why the Government is ignoring the various concerns that Hon. Members have put before it and why it wants to proceed with the Bill with Clause 2 in its present form.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) might be considered frivolous by some. May I ask, Mr. Speaker, what alternatives exist for an Opposition which has had its amendments dealing with this very important Clause 2 and related clauses struck out? What alternatives are available to an Opposition that wants to see an intelligence service well established with reasonable, well defined and responsible terms of power and authority? The situation before us then is an extreme situation. It must be so because there are no alternatives for an Opposition in the House today.

Bill C-9 offers the intelligence service powers and guidelines which are far too broad and far too vague. Many witnesses who appeared before the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee were quick to point this out. In response, the Government said that we must trust it. We must trust this Government after experiencing its 16 years of abuse? Perhaps the Government was not prepared to listen to the testimony of those witnesses who appeared before the committee. However, we on the opposition side were required to listen to those witnesses and were required to go home and speak to our constituents. We are well aware of how the Canadian public feels about Bill C-9. The thrust of that Bill is clearly wrong.

We on this side of the House recognize the seriousness of the amendment that has been put forward by the Hon. Member for Burnaby. Clause 2 goes to the very heart of the Bill. It is the definition clause and relates to several other matters as well. Within the definition clause is the definition which concerned practically all of the people of Canada, and that is, the definition of what in fact does constitute a threat to the security of Canada. When a Party puts forward an amendment seeking to narrow and to define that definition more clearly and that amendment is rejected, then we must take this extreme measure which I now support and approve.

Canadians have a good idea about what is meant by subversion. Our idea may be shaped by a cloak and dagger film shot against a background of foggy darkness. However, we know subversion when we see it and we know subversion when we hear of it. Subversion consists of more than an academic discussion which may take place around a kitchen table or in a church basement, whether it deals with the Cruise missile or any other matters of concern and interest to Canadians generally.

The view of subversion in this legislation is that subversion could be just about anything including those discussions to which I have already referred. Threats to our security are whatever the civilian Security Intelligence Service decides are threats. For example, part of Clause 2 reads:

> —"threats to the security of Canada" means . . .
> (c) activities within or relating to Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state,—

That is a pretty broad definition, Mr. Speaker. The definition does carry on to exclude lawful advocacy, protest or dissent unless that lawful advocacy, protest or dissent is carried on in conjunction with the wrong activities referred to earlier. At first glance, one might conclude that the exclusion of lawful advocacy, protest or dissent resolves the matter. However, the real key question is who will determine what is meant by the words "in conjunction with".

Who is to say that the activities of a group of people in my church basement who are discussing the testing of the Cruise missile consist of no more than an intelligent and constructive conservation or that it is something more than that? What would happen then? An informer would be placed in their midst or some electronic means of bugging would be established or the telephones of those persons who took part in that discussion would be tapped. There is clearly no doubt that an academic discussion would not be in breach of the Act, but the fact that it was only an academic discussion would only be determined after a good deal of surveillance and supervision. That amounts to a testing of the credibility of the Canadian people before they are finally acquitted for having had those peaceful academic discussions. It is quite another question to make a judgment call as to whether or not such a discussion could be linked with something more serious.

The Government still argues that we should trust it. The Government argues that we need not fear the occurrence of fishing expeditions. It says that it is above that. I would argue that fishing expeditions will be inevitable if the definition clause of this Bill is allowed to pass. It is the opinion of the Government that undoubtedly it will pass. However, we cannot forget that Clause 2 relates as well, to efforts within Canada to achieve political objectives in foreign states.

Every night on the news we watch acts of violence in other lands. Does support in Canada for the Solidarity movement, the Sandinistas, the Israelis, the Palestinians, or any of the dozens of trouble spots, or for the Canadians involved in those trouble spots around the world, make that people subject to surveillance by the intelligence service or a threat to the security of Canada? According to Clause 2, it will. There is no denying the acts of serious violence which are taking place in the far corners of the world. I regret that. I also regret the fact that the Bill which is before us does not make clear when I as a Canadian will be involved in that threat and how far I would have to be involved in support of another faction before I am subject to this Bill.

I regret that my time is drawing nigh to the end of the ten minute comment. Clause 2 is one of the most important clauses in the entire Bill. It is the heart, the crux, the definition clause. It will be the clause referred to when the civilian Security Intelligence Service is attempting to decide whether or not a Canadian has infringed or will infringe upon the civil liberties of Canadians. For this reason, the sloppy workmanship in the drafting of the Bill, it should be subject to repeal and redrafting. In lieu of that, it should be disposed of by the approval of this motion.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I think that "pleased" is the wrong word to use when one addresses his or her feelings with respect to participating in a debate on a subject such as the one which is before us today. However, I am pleased to support the amendments to Clause 2 which were proposed by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). In addressing Clause 2 there are a few things which I would like to say in the few moments which are available to me.

In reading Clause 2 of Bill C-9, I must again draw attention to some of the verbiage within the existing clause which deals with definitions it reads as follows:

"threats to the security of Canada" means

(a) espionage or sabotage that is against Canada or is detrimental to the interests of Canada or activities directed toward or in support of such espionage or sabotage,

The phrase "detrimental to the interests of Canada", in its various contexts, as it appears within the clause, is so wide that it has brought forth a number of vigorous objections from groups as varied as the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and the Canadian Council of Churches.

Subclause (b) reads:

—foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person,

There are so many "ors" in that subclause that each could be taken independently. It is not "and". It does not have to be a definition pursued by the new Canadian Security Intelligence Service that includes all of those things within any one of those clauses. Any one of the "ors" will do.

Finally, subclause (c) reads as follows:

—activities within or relating to Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state,

If we delete some of the "ors" we can have the clause read: "(c) activities within Canada in support of a threat of violence against property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within a foreign state". It is when we reach the kind of meaning which is implicit in that clause that we begin to get more than a little concerned. The power to define threats to national security is so broad that it is incumbent upon us to consider the mind of the Government and the mind of the security service which it will set up.

We are not considering previous faults. The RCMP has many good points, but it also has faults. This Bill, in part, has arisen out of concern regarding those faults, particularly the faults which were evident in the early 1970s. We must be concerned with the state of mind of the Government and of an agency which will be empowered, at least in the initial stage, to make definitions and to carry out various surreptitious and clandestine activities.

I find it more than a little disturbing that the report of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), which covered the activities of the last year, indicated that some 545 electronic surveillance warrants for national security purposes were issued within Canada. I am particularly concerned that there were only 699 other applications for authorization to wiretap by the RCMP for all other purposes. Some 44 per cent of wiretap authorizations in Canada last year were for "national security reasons". I do not mean to downgrade the importance of this nation, but when 44 per cent of authorized wiretaps are for national security reasons—even within a subagency of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which has more important things to do as far as the public is concerned—what are we likely to see in terms of intelligence activity, wiretaps, surveillance and opening of mail once the bureaucratic imperative comes into play and we have an agency whose sole raison d'être is security and intelligence? At least 90 per cent of the Canadians whom I am acquainted with have not placed those kinds of issues at the top of their agenda. To have a separate agency which has as its sole reason national security and intelligence, and given the record when it is a minor department of a larger agency, I really fear the direction in which we are going.

I have a number of signatures on petitions from my constituents which relate exactly to those concerns which my colleagues and I have been discussing today and to concerns which have been discussed earlier with respect to this Bill. My constituents are very worried about the grave possibility which I have indicated. As I said, we must address the state of mind of the Government.

One of the things which we must consider is the extraordinary ruling by the chairman of the committee. He indicated that he would resign, following the process which was undertaken in relation to Bill C-9, in order to avoid the future work of that committee being tainted by the processes which were undertaken by himself and by the Government. Why the unseemly haste? They are willing to throw all traditions and all regular workings aside. They admit themselves that what they are undertaking with this Bill has very serious implications. They are using a ramrod and a railroad in attempting to push the legislation through committee and through the House more than is normal for many of the pieces of legislation which have a much higher priority rating with the people of Canada.

This is essentially the same Government that in 1970 thought that four kids with guns who ran around in a car meant a state of apprehended insurrection. Someone was murdered, but murders are committed every month in this country. However, when four kids with guns ran around in a car it was considered to be a state of revolution and enough to suspend civil liberties for hundreds, thousands and millions of Canadians. What kind of confidence does that give us in the way the Government will interpret its enforcement, and its agencies' enforcement of this Act? Perhaps we should be asking, Mr. Speaker, what the state of mind is of its new Prime Minister designate? Does John Turner agree with those people across the way who are setting up a separate spy agency, a separate security intelligence agency in Bill C-9, which has a greater priority than the passage, for instance, of Bill C-34, which could help to protect the lives and livelihoods of hundreds of thousands of working Canadians? What is his priority? Is spying more important than workers' lives? Is that the priority of the new Prime Minister designate? We ought to ask him that question and let him make the choice. These people, that Minister and other Ministers, may not be around very long for one reason or another, and before we are asked to do something as extraordinary as pursuing this kind of agency, particularly with the very broad and dangerous generalizations which are included in this particular clause, we ought to ask ourselves what the priority is of this government and what is its state of mind. Is justice more important than spying on fellow Canadians? Just where does the Government stand? I hope that one of those Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, will answer.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on Motion No. 2 which moves to delete Clause 2 of this Bill. In this connection, I would like to say a word of appreciation to the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) for his effort. All the members of our caucus have greatly appreciated the hard and dedicated work which has been done. We appreciate the plaudit of the justice critic of the Tory Party. If he had been a little more active, we would perhaps have seen some more changes brought in which are necessary. However, we do appreciate the work of the Hon. Member for Burnaby.

In moving to delete Clause 2 we are especially concerned about the definition of "threats to the security of Canada". As had been remarked, not only by different Hon. Members speaking in this Chamber but by many of the witnesses who have appeared before the committee, these definitions are much too broad and loose. That broadness and looseness constitutes a very real danger to the civil liberties of the people of Canada. That is why we are opposed to this Bill. Really, when one looks at these definitions, one sees the way in which this Bill opens up to abuse by the proposed civilian security service the basic rights and freedoms which Canadians had taken for granted until the 1970s when the extent to which these rights had been subverted by members of the security service of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were revealed. When we look at the definition of "threats to the security of Canada", we should pay special attention to the definition in paragraph (b) which states:

> . . . foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person, . . .

The phrase, Mr. Speaker, " . . . detrimental to the interests of Canada . . ." is a very vague phrase. We would be interested in knowing just precisely what the Government means by it. Does it mean, for example, someone who opposes the sale of Candu nuclear reactors to other countries? Certainly this Government has planned a fair amount of its economic program on the sale of those reactors. Because it has been such a flop, this Government has suffered. Would opposition to the sale of those reactors be detrimental to the interests of Canada? In my previous work, Mr. Speaker, as clergyman with the United Church of Canada, I was very active in such movements as "Ten Days for World Development", which was concerned with the needs of people in Third World countries and the kinds of oppression which are faced by many of those people. There is concern expressed by the Canadian Council of Churches about the way in which this proposed definition can affect that kind of work within my church and within other churches. In the brief submitted by the Canadian Council of Churches, it is stated:

> With regard to section 2(a) and (b) we are concerned with the vague phrase "the interests of Canada". What are the legitimate "interests of Canada"? Who defines these "interests"? Are the "interests of Canada" distinguishable from the interests of the citizens of Canada? Could there be a legitimate conflict among the citizens of Canada as to just what Canada's "interests" are?
> With regard to paragraph (b) for example: consider that a visiting foreign finance minister, from a country where churches have carried on mission work for many years, requests a private meeting with Canadian church officials, in Canada, to discuss Canadian aid and trade policies. He wishes to decrease his country's dependence on Canadian exports, while maintaining or increasing Canadian aid to his country. He enlists the assistance and advice of his Canadian friends. This meeting could be construed as "foreign-influenced", given long relations between his government and church agencies in his country and with Canadian churches. It may be "detrimental to the interests of Canada" if its objective is decreasing Canadian sales in his country. Because the meeting is private and confidential it could fall within the definition of "clandestine", there being no definition of that term within Bill C-9 itself. Presumably the meeting might also be "deceptive", for instance if the visitor had told Canadian state officials that he wished to meet with the churches to discuss the construction of a church-sponsored hospital. The activity is clearly "within Canada". Even though we would understand this meeting to be a lawful activity, the participants are potentially targets for surveillance by the Security Service.

It is that kind of concern, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Council of Churches has. It is that kind of concern which is held by our Party and by many other groups which came before the committee. The definition of "threats to the security of Canada" is much too broad. Who decides what the legitimate interests of Canada are? It is not even going to be the Liberal majority in the House of Commons which decides, because it does not have to come before it for that kind of definition. Perhaps it could be some member of Cabinet or perhaps some overzealous member of the proposed security service itself who decides. It is worthwhile noting that in testimony, the Minister admitted that the great majority of the proposed members of the security service would come from the secret service of the RCMP, the very people who were involved, along with Hon. Members of the Government, in the kind of illegal activity which took place in the late 1960s and early 1970s, for which justice has not yet been done. The Canadian people want to see some action taken to assure them that their civil liberties and their human rights will take a higher place in courts of law than the Government's priorities, whatever they might be. We are concerned that the vague definitions in this Bill can target peace activists and people who are concerned about Central America or South Africa. They can be targeted with all the kinds of intrusive devices which this Bill is offering. We are concerned that this Bill and this clause open very wide the door to very great government intrusion into the lives and activities of ordinary Canadians and respectable Canadian organizations. We do not have the kind of checks and balances in this legislation which we would have liked to have seen.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to support the motion of the Hon. Member for Burnaby to delete Clause 2. I hope that all Hon. Members on both sides of the House will recognize the wisdom of what we are saying and move with us to delete this clause.

CANADIAN HERITAGE

BICENTENNIAL OF NEW BRUNSWICK

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, today marks the bicentennial anniversary of the Province of New Brunswick. In 1784 the British Government divided Nova Scotia, as it then was, and created a separate Province of New Brunswick. In 1867 New Brunswick became a founding province of Canada. Today the province stands as a memorial to all the people who contributed to its development. New Brunswick has a multicultural heritage enriched by our native people, Empire Loyalists, Acadians, people from the British Isles, Europe, Asia, Africa, the United States of America, indeed, from all parts of the world.

Today a special stamp will commemorate the occasion. It will be unveiled in the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick. All year, and every year, Canada's picture province will welcome our fellow Canadians and visitors from around the world to share in our hospitality and the warm New Brunswick welcome that awaits them.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND WOMEN'S POSITION ON CHILD CARE EXPENSE TAX DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to read the following letter which I recently received from the P.E.I. Women in Support of Agriculture:

Dear Sir:

At the annual meeting of the P.E.I. Women in Support of Agriculture, a resolution was submitted and passed by which we agreed to make our views known to our Members of Parliament on the following subject.

Accordingly we are writing with regard to, and in criticism of the recent changes in the Income Tax Act dealing with child care expenses. More specifically, we take exception to the change which dictates, with few exceptions, that "whichever of you has the lower net income must claim the child care expenses".

Although this discriminates against any working mother, it tends to affect farm families to a greater extent. This is largely true since the farming spouse does quite often have a low net income for several reasons, and therefore must claim the child care expenses yet derive little benefit from this deduction in comparison to the working mother who actually pays the child care expenses.

In conclusion, it is our opinion that the benefits derived from increasing the allowable deduction for child care expenses to $2,000 per child were largely offset by the addition of the "supporting person" concept to the Act, especially as it applies to the agricultural sector.

Trusting that you will give this matter your consideration and take some positive action with regard to the situation.

Yours sincerely,

Mrs. Wanda MacMurdo
President of the Provincial Women in Support of Agriculture
Mrs. Rena Thompson
President of the Charlottetown Area Women
in Support of Agriculture

I support their stand, and I urge the Minister to take positive action and change the clause dealing with child care expenses, which discriminate against women, especially women in agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: By agreement, the Chair would like to recognize the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), followed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney), and a spokesman from the New Democratic Party.

Presence in Gallery

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF HON. JOHN NAPIER TURNER, LEADER OF LIBERAL PARTY OF CANADA

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to draw to the attention of the House the presence in the gallery of the Hon. John Turner. As you know, over the weekend, in an open and democratic convention, Mr. Turner won the support of the Liberal Party of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that we on this side of the House extend to him our congratulations and our loyalty.

There were six other candidates in the race also, and we extend to them our admiration for well organized campaigns, and for conducting themselves with dedication and dignity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Our choice was endorsed by all of the delegates at the convention as a result of the usual and characteristically generous action taken by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) in moving a motion of unanimity at the end of the deliberations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: May I say that Mr. Turner will be no stranger to the House of Commons. During his 14 years in this Chamber he established a solid reputation as a parliamentarian. He has deep respect for the traditions of Parliament, and he is at home in the House of Commons. We look forward to welcoming him back as Prime Minister after the next federal election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you that we on this side are ready to go the moment our Leader gives us the word.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues I am honoured to rise today to convey our warm congratulations to the Hon. John Turner on his very impressive victory on Saturday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I had the opportunity of doing so in a personal way late Saturday, and I am pleased to do so today, and to convey, having been in that position in another circumstance, a tribute to those who were not successful. It occurred to me, and I know to my colleagues, that losing in those circumstances is never easy. I thought all of the contestants conducted themselves with dignity. I commend all of them on a fine fight.

• (1410)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I especially wish to congratulate the Hon. Jean Chrétien on the dignity and courage he showed throughout his campaign.

[English]

I noted with interest the statement of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). I suppose he was being as consistent today as he was on Saturday. If that were the case, I want to assure my hon. friend that we too are ready, willing, and more than able, to deal with the writ.

I can tell you something extra. Early this morning, with the permission of the Chair, I had the carpenters down here fixing the seat of the Leader of the Opposition for Mr. Turner, because I know he is going to be sitting here for a long time, and I want him to be comfortable.

To Mr. Turner, to Geills, and to the children, we extend our best wishes for health and happiness in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney), and speak on behalf of my Leader who is unavoidably absent this afternoon, and my caucus, in welcoming Mr. Turner to the leaderhips of the Liberal Party, and presumably to the post of Prime Minister in the not too distant future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: However, having seen the behaviour here this afternoon, I want to ask him whether he is sure he really wants it.

I would like to say to those who were not successful that I have some knowledge of how it fells. You heal. It takes time. Each of you conducted magnificent campaigns.

I watched with great interest from an unusual vantage point. Having been a politician for most of my adult life, I had always thought that only those of us in political life had to find things to say when there was little left to say, for long periods of time at a stretch. However, I sat among the press over the course of Friday night and Saturday. There were long stretches when little was happening that could usefully be commented upon, except to say that the end result appeared to be inevitable.

I would like to say to Jean Chrétien in particular, who is not here, that his campaign carried with it a great deal of emotion which I think many people in the country felt throughout the campaign. His campaign served him well, and will make him a politician in the hearts of Canadians for a long time to come.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: It will not surprise Mr. Turner to hear me say—and this, of course, is a secret not to be repeated anywhere else—that there were those in the NDP who, in their own self interest were hoping he would win.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is too late, Ian.

Mr. Deans: The Deputy Prime Minister says that they are ready to go, and there are those of us who, for the last three years, have been wishing they would. I hope that when Mr. Turner assumes the post of Prime Minister he will move quickly to have the writs issued in order that the question of who should govern Canada may be cleared up once and for all. I will look forward after that to welcoming him into the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CHANGE POLICIES TO ASSIST YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. We want to welcome him from the backrooms of the Liberal Party convention where it was rumoured that he was available if necessary, but not necessarily available. In the Province of Alberta the Minister has a reputation as a job destroyer because of his Budgets and his energy program.

On the weekend a consultant of the Department of Manpower and Immigration attended a Canadian Mental Health Association conference. She made some very strong statements about the pathetic plight of young people in the Province of Alberta. There were other consultants from the United States who indicated that, because of the 12 per cent increase in unemployment rates among young people in Alberta, we could expect increased assaults, vandalism, about a 60 per cent increase in suicides, and a 75 per cent increase in mental health breakdowns requiring hospitalization.

In the last two weeks of this Parliament are we going to have action to change the energy program and the transportation program, or are we simply going to have election campaign talk while these young people experience depression, suicide, and all of those things?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say that I spent the last several days meeting a large number of people from Alberta, including a large number of young Albertans. Far from being pessimistic, they were very optimistic, very sure of themselves, and very confident about the future of the country. They were eager and ready to contribute fully to our country. They were confident that their province would indeed again experience excellent days. Obviously these were not young Conservative people who had their noses to the wall and were following the example of their elders as the national complainers and negativists. They were young Liberal people who had confidence in themselves and in the country.

If my friend checks the record he will find that the period in which the city of Calgary had the largest increase in terms of violence and local crime was when the city was at the height of its growth, several years ago. There was a large influx of people into Calgary at that time. That led to very serious local problems. As a matter of fact, while I did not subscribe to this utterance and found it very shocking, I remember a Mayor of Calgary complaining about everyone in Canada being attracted to that city, and complaining about the problems. He must have been a Conservative too.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance indicates to us that we can solve the crime problem in the country through unemployment. I think that is a rather bizarre statement. However, it is in accord with his view that when you throw people out of work they do not use as much oil and gas, and therefore you can have security of supply and a balanced self-sufficiency picture.

VIEWS ADVANCED BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister of Finance read the speeches by the Leader of the Opposition? Does he agree with the Leader of the Opposition that, to help individuals secure more training, we should have a registered training account, an expanded loan program, and better tax deductions to allow people to contribute more money to their own training? Does the Minister of Finance agree that the country needs those kinds of stimuli to help young people in particular to continue their training?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have imposed upon myself the difficult task of reading most of the speeches of the Leader of the Opposition. Up to now I have found nothing but rhetoric and generalities in them.

I am glad that the Hon. Member asked what we have done. I remind him of the several hundreds of millions of dollars which we have brought to the Province of Alberta in the last several months in terms of the developments taking place in Cold Lake and Wolf Lake, and the developments which will benefit Saskatchewan and Alberta at Lloydminster, with the heavy oil upgrader. We are putting hundreds of millions of dollars into Alberta and British Columbia through the expansion of the rail transportation system, thanks to the amendments which have been passed through the House, against Tory opposition, in order to change the Crow rate situation. These are things that we have done, rather than the empty rhetoric coming from the other side.

• (1420)

Mr. Hawkes: I do not know who on the Minister's staff is giving him the speeches made by the Leader of the Opposition, but ten days ago in Thunder Bay the Leader of the Opposition laid out a program, with six principles and 16 specifics, that deals totally, absolutely, and entirely with the issue of training and what the country needs to do about it. It is now ten days later. If the Minister is reading those speeches, why has he not read that speech, and why does he not have an answer for us about that?

NEEDS OF WESTERN CANADIANS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, as a Member from Outremont, which is a high income area, does the Minister believe that he understands what western Canadians need, better than the members of the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party who have been sent to this Chamber by the people who live in that region? We say to him that he has been wrong about energy, and wrong about transportation. We want a change, and we want it in the next ten days. Will your new Leader help us get that change within ten days?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard the best example of the empty rhetoric that I referred to in my previous answers. I am glad that the Hon. Member is confirming my statement in that regard.

I must tell him that, as Minister of Finance, I am Minister for all Canadians, not any particular region or any particular constituents. I have been in the House for 12 years serving all Canadians, not any particular region or any particular constituency.

I must tell my hon. friend again that, rather than resorting to the empty words of the Leader of the Opposition, we have resorted to action. We passed in this Parliament—again against the footdragging and opposition of the Conservative Opposition—a new National Training Act which has had the support of the provinces and which is the most modern piece of legislation in that area. We have allocated over a billion dollars a year to that, which is by far the largest amount that has ever been allocated in this country for the training of young people and adults, and the retraining of workers.

In addition, we are now providing $6 billion or $7 billion a year to the provinces for post-secondary education, which is more than has ever been spent in this country by the federal Government in the area of post-secondary education. These are firm commitments by this Government to help the young people of the country to be ready to face the rest of this century, and the twenty-first century, well equipped.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. First, I want to commiserate with Mr. Pierre Elliot Turner and the albatrosses he is discovering that he will have around his neck, as he sits here today in this Chamber. By the way, I congratulate the Minister of Finance for not emulating the Deputy Prime Minister and scuttling across the convention floor like an anxious crab to a dead herring, as the Deputy Minister did.

Mr. Rossi: What happened to you?

Mr. Crosbie: There is no good in asking me to come with you; I won't do it.

It has been four months since the Minister's feeble Budget of February 15. The latest Statistics Canada figures on the use of industrial capacity show that we are stalled at about 71.7 per cent use of our industrial capacity, 10 per cent under what it was before the recession. Of course this means that jobs are not being created. There are 120,000 fewer jobs than in mid 1981. Does the Government plan any action now, or do we have to wait even longer than we have waited during this tiresome, preordained convention, for some action? Will something be done to get a grasp on this and begin an economic recovery in Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no doubt Canadians have heard the best news today. It is that the Hon. Member for St. John's West will not rejoin the Liberal Party that he left several years ago.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Where did you begin, Marc?

Mr. Lalonde: He need fear nothing. We would not welcome him either, so he is all right over there.

I would suggest to my hon. friend that, indeed, we may do something today that would mean action immediately and would help the economy of the country. In approximately 35 minutes, my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, is due to introduce a Ways and Means motion, to introduce all of the amendments to the Income Tax Act that have been considered already by the parliamentary committee and which will mean a very significant reduction in the burden on small business and medium-size business. I invite the Opposition to pass this Bill immediately. It would show a spirit of co-operation in terms of helping the unemployed and in terms of giving a good spur to the economy.

Mr. Crosbie: First, of course, I was ahead of my time. Hundreds of thousands will desert the Liberal Party in the next few weeks.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION TO HELP UNEMPLOYED

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Fulton musketeer, the old Tory. The Minister was an old Tory back in the days when he thought it was advantageous for him to be a Tory.

New investment in factories, offices, and homes is declining. Capital spending is down for the third year in a row. Housing starts are fading. The leading indicators of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce have dropped for two months in a row. The last time that this happened was just before the recession in 1981-82.

In view of these forlorn signals, in the last few days he has as Minister of Finance will he take any steps at all to help the unemployed? His Budget of February 15 did nothing for them. Every indicator that has come out since shows how flat the economy is, and the lack of growth in jobs. Will he attempt to do anything before he is bounced by the next Prime Minister, who will bounce him if he wants to have any chance of success at all?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thought the repartee of the Hon. Member was rather flat, compared to his usual style, until I noticed that it came from the Leader of the Opposition. I suggest to him that he should find a better source of inspiration the next time, or rely on his own wit. He is better when he is at it himself.

I invite my friend to examine the investment forecast that will come out in a few days, I am told. I believe he will find that the plans of the private sector are certainly encouraging and that there is an indication that we will have growth in investment in real terms in the next few quarters.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADING RELATIONSHIPS—REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON FREE TRADE DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know that there were statements made in Washington last week that Canada and the United States were in the process of reaching an agreement on free trade in one sector. At the same time there were statements out of Washington that the U.S. Government is moving, not very cautiously, toward imposing rather severe restrictions on the importation of basic steel into the United States. It is pretty clear that there is a conflict some place.

Has the Government of Canada made representations to the Government of the United States that there will be no further discussions of any kind relating to a freeing up of trade arrangements until such time as the United States Government comes to grips with the problems that it will inevitably create if it moves to restrict Canadian steel access to the United States?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member certainly raises a subject that is of keen concern to the Government. However, he shows small understanding of the process involved in international trade policy and trade rules under the GATT.

What is involved in the Hon. Member's question is, first, the discussions between Canada and the United States about the possible liberalization of trade in particular sectors, to the mutual benefit of consumers and workers in both our countries. In order to be more competitive in the world as a whole, there might well be advantages in taking such a course of action. That course of action in relation to specific sectors is being investigated by our two countries in those discussions. Negotiations, as such, have not been undertaken as yet and will only take place if it is found there is such a mutual advantage in various sectors.

One of the reasons Canada is particularly interested in those sorts of discussions is the fact that the United States, faced with an incredible trade world-wide that may this year reach $120 billion—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The teacher says 52 per cent. Sit down.

Mr. Regan: —is finding that its Congress and its industry are utilizing either new legislation proposals or existing legal mechanisms for the examination of the provision of safeguard actions on the limitation of imports. Unfortunately, if they take those actions in various products, and I refer particularly to steel, which is the centre of attention at the present moment, and since they apply them on a multilateral basis under Article 19—

Mr. Nickerson: Order.

Mr. Regan: —even though Canada may not be the target for the problem, Canada can be severely affected. As a consequence, I have made representations to Mr. Brock, and the Deputy Prime Minister has made representations to Mr. Shultz about the strength of Canadian views on this subject, that any actions the United States takes must be taken in a way so as not to impact on the important two-way trade that exists in steel between our countries.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Regan: I want to assure the Hon. Member that the course we followed was successful when our lumber exports of over $2 billion a year to the United States were threatened by countervail, and we won that battle. We won the battle when there was the threat against potatoes, and we are following with the same zeal—

An Hon. Member: That's enough, Gerry.

Mr. Regan: —in relation to the question of steel our efforts to protect the jobs of the Canadian steel industry and its important American market.

Mr. Deans: It is clear one of us does not understand, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBLE UNITED STATES RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTATION OF CANADIAN STEEL

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, would the Government be prepared to sign into law an arrangement with the United States freeing up trade between Canada and the United States in one sector of the economy—choose whichever one you will—while at the same time sitting by and allowing the U.S. to impose restriction in an area which will be vitally important to tens of thousands of Canadians' jobs both now and in the future? Is the Government simply going to sit idly by, as is now the case, and allow the U.S. to move almost inextricably toward the imposition of restrictions on basic steel, while at the same time continuing discussions on the freeing of trade in other areas?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Ladies and gentlemen, brothers and sisters.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: The truest words that I have heard in here—

Mr. Mulroney: John is impressed.

Mr. Regan: —in a long while were when the Hon. Member said that one of us does not understand the situation, and it is he, I can assure you without any question of doubt, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are Okay, Gerry.

Mr. Regan: Let us consider what the Hon. Member is saying. He is saying that if there is some advantage to Canada and to Canadian workers in achieving a sectoral free trade in one product, even if that is going to protect Canadian products and jobs, let us not talk to the Americans about that possibility if they are taking protective action in relation to any other product. If that is not NDP confused thinking, then I have never heard it. I am saying steel, carbon steel, is one of the subjects where we are discussing the possibility of free trade with the Americans right now because we saw, while the Member was still daydreaming, the threat that exists in the protective action that has resulted in the fact that the American steel industry is only operating at 50 per cent. We are trying to combat that in the same way that we combated the threat to lumber, while the NDP continues to daydream.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that volume and verbosity will not take the place of brain.

Mr. Pinard: Louder.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Minister for the last time is it the intention of the Government to continue negotiations in areas other than basic steel, which are presently going on, and he knows it, to establish a free trade agreement with the United States in computerization and in other similar fields, and at the same time allow the U.S. Government to impose restrictions which will cost tens of thousands of Canadian jobs?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, with due respect to the Hon. Member, I suggest to him that I am in a better position to decide how we can best protect those jobs in negotiations with the Americans than the Hon. Member, who has shown no previous interest in the subject.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Come on, Gerry.

Mr. Regan: The question of what negotiations we will carry on in negotiations with other sectors will depend upon the interest of Canadian workers in those other sectors. At the same time we will continue to give the strenuous protection to the steel workers in this country that we gave to those who worked in the lumber industry.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

DE HAVILLAND—SALE OF AIRCRAFT TO CANADIAN COMPANIES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal of concern in parts of the country over the possible lost sale of $100 million worth of aircraft from de Havilland to air companies here in Canada. My question is for the Minister of Finance in light of his statement in the House that the federal Government cannot give subsidies to Canadian companies wishing to buy aircraft from de Havilland. Would the Minister of Finance explain to the House how he justifies the financial assistance package to de Havilland of $20 million to sell aircraft to Indonesia, while we lose jobs at de Havilland, and while 10,000 other jobs are in jeopardy in the industrial sectors of the nation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member looks at the support the Government gives to de Havilland, he will see that, contrary to the negativist attitude of the Conservatives, the Government has been very strongly behind the aviation industry. I remember when the Opposition was attacking us for giving aid and support to Canadair, and when the Opposition was attacking us for giving aid and support to de Havilland. We have been committing support by investing hundreds of millions of dollars, as a matter of fact, in equity in these corporations. In addition, we are encouraging them to make use of all the various government programs that are available to industry generally in order to expand exports of Canadian goods abroad and also to meet competition. The more support we give to de Havilland generally is going to show in the total price at which it will be able to sell its product, whether in Canada or abroad.

The Hon. Member knows, however, that under the Export Development Corporation there is a program available to all corporations in Canada in order to favour exports and allow us to meet competition abroad. De Havilland is in the same situation in that regard.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, the Finance Minister fails to recognize that people who are put out of work in Toronto and area, because those aircraft in which we have invested $500 million to manufacture cannot even be sold in Canada, are the ones adversely affected.

REPORTED OFFER OF ASSISTANCE PACKAGE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. How could the Minister advise this House on April 17 that there are no subsidies to give to this company to sell these aircraft in Canada, while Parliamentary Secretaries debating in this House say there is an assistance package being offered to Canadian companies, yet as of today all three of them, out west and in Ontario know nothing about this assistance package? Could the Minister of Finance or the Minister responsible for de Havilland rise in his place and answer? Is the Government going to protect these jobs by offering interest assistance to de Havilland, or will the Government let $100 million worth of aircraft from offshore be sold here in Canada?

• (1440)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, once more I am happy about the latter day conversion of the Conservatives to support of the Canadian aviation industry. I can tell my hon. friend that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Minister of Transport, the Minister responsible for CDIC, and myself, have been very actively at work trying to find ways and means of ensuring that de Havilland will indeed be a very thriving company and that it will be able to market its products, both in Canada and abroad, on a competitive basis. That work has been progressing significantly, and when the announcement is ready the Ministers responsible will make it.

INDUSTRY

MOBILE ARCTIC ISLAND ENGINEERING CONCEPT

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who crows about being the Minister of all Canadians, even though his policies have led to the unemployment of hundreds of thousands of them. Another study has just been released proving the viability of small-scale oil production in the Beaufort Sea through the use of the mobile Arctic Island concept. The Canadian consortium promoting this project includes a firm in my constituency. It has been trying to gain the support of the Minister for this unique Canadian concept for over two years. When will the Minister of Finance pledge his personal support for this project so that it may soon come to fruition, creating hundreds and hundreds of jobs, particularly in western Canada?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer the Hon. Member's question. There is no one individual in the House who has been a stronger advocate of the development of energy in this country than the present Minister of Finance, both in his present portfolio and in his previous one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: Also I can advise the Hon. Member that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and I have met with the various principals of this project on two or three occasions and that analysis is going on right now with respect to the potential development benefits for Canada of the project.

Mr. Siddon: It is interesting that the Minister of Finance hedged on that question. As witnesses have told the Senate hearings on the National Energy Program, the NEP only allows for large scale oil development. That is the way in which the incentive system was structured. Therefore the Minister of Finance would have to admit the failure of the NEP if, indeed, he recognizes the viability of this small-scale Arctic Island project.

PROPOSED DRYDOCK FACILITY AT NANAIMO, B.C.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Will he pledge today to announce funding for a major drydock facility in Nanaimo, British Columbia? The proposal has been on his desk for many months. This drydock facility would allow the construction of the unique mobile Arctic Island Canadian concept, thereby putting hundreds of British Columbians back to work.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member has been all this time. The Government has supported a substantial number of new ideas with respect to exploration. We welcome his sudden and latest advice with respect to this particular project.

Mr. Lalonde: Your Leader is against Arctic development.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What about your Leader?

Mr. Lumley: Also I want to indicate to the Hon. Member that there is more exploration going on in Canada right now than at any particular time in any other country of the world. The Hon. Member is totally wrong and totally incorrect in his preamble. With respect to the particular project, we will give it our usual analysis and thrust if we think it is important for Canadians.

Oral Questions

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—EFFORT TO INITIATE JOINT CANADA-UNITED STATES LEGAL ACTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure he is aware that Vermont Governor Richard Snelling is meeting this afternoon with five Canadian Premiers, along with the six New England Governors. He will be asking them to join in a $100 billion lawsuit against acid rain producing utilities in North America.

Since political action has stalled and to date failed dismally to produce any serious action on the reduction of acid rain, and with 14,000 lakes in Canada dead and 50,000 dying, will the Minister comment upon the meeting which is going on in Vermont? Would he also agree to commit the very substantial scientific and legal resources of Canada to this very important and vital environmental legal challenge which may well take place in the courts of the United States in the near future?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have made the question of acid rain one of the major issues in our discussions with United States authorities. The Minister of the Environment and myself have been ceaseless in our efforts to try to convince authorities in the United States to join with us in an abatement program which would apply in North America. Up to the present time that has not succeeded. However, it is a fact that the Government of Canada and the provinces have entered into agreements with respect to abatement programs in Canada, and that recently Canada and a number of European countries have done the same. What is required, of course, is a decision by United States authorities. I do not foresee a decision this year on the part of the administration. Earlier I have said so publicly, that it is not likely they will change their view, which is at the moment that more research is required.

Mr. Fulton: That is precisely my point. The political actions which have been attempted in both Canada and the United States have been unsuccessful. There have been no major reductions in acid rain in Canada or in the United States.

IMPACT OF ACID RAIN ON BRITISH COLUMBIA ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Since his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, is in Europe until July, and since reports over the weekend in British Columbia indicate that there has been an alarming increase in the amount of acid rain on the southwest coast of British Columbia, particularly coming from the Puget Sound area around Seattle, my question to the Minister is exactly the same. Does he have anything planned? Will he be talking with George Shultz? Will he be talking with any of the Socreds who were here as delegates over the weekend? Will anything be done for British Columbia, either to reduce the production of acid rain in B.C. or to deal with the production in Puget Sound? Will he do anything? Will he allow it to go to the courts? Will he support the court action? That is really the crucial question.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in my view the solution has to be a political one reached with the administration of the United States. We have to continue our efforts to persuade United States authorities to come to terms with this question. They have not yet done so. We have met similar situations in the past where we have taken some time in order to reach conclusions with the United States. That does not argue for giving up. We do not intend to give up.

The Hon. Member talked about legal action. Let the Governors produce their grounds for legal action and take it, if they wish, in the American courts. Let them pursue their own objectives in the United States. We have to pursue our objectives in Canada and with the administration in the United States, which we are doing. I expect that we will succeed. I hope urgently that we will succeed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—GRANTING OF EXIT VISAS TO FAMILIES OF HUNGER STRIKERS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the Polish Government is now prepared to grant exit permits to the family of one of the three people in Toronto who have been on hunger strike for the past 28 days, will the Minister press Polish authorities to extend similar humanitarian and compassionate concern so that the other two families can be reunited?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we certainly will do that. We have been doing it up to the present time in cases where family reunification is held up because Polish authorities have refused to grant exit permits. Of course that is the problem. We have received indication from the Polish Embassy in Ottawa that Mr. Augustyniak's family had been approved for passports but that they will not be issued until the hunger strike has ceased.

Also I want to advise the House we have been told that of the 16 cases, which include those of the hunger strikers on whose behalf representations have been made to the Polish Consulate in Toronto in early April, 13 have now been promised passports. We are making some progress. As the Hon. Member suggested, we will continue to press Polish authorities until we have succeeded in all the cases which require attention to bring about family reunification.

FINANCE

SCHEDULED INCREASE IN SALES TAX

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Part of the Minister's recovery program that reduced unemployment from 12.3 per cent to 11.7 per cent over a year was a new tax to increase the sales tax, and tax telecommunications. Does the Minister really intend to proceed with that tax in view of the fact that fewer people are working today than were working before the recession began?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have answered the same question on several occasions, and I have nothing to add to my previous answers.

[English]

APPROVAL OF EXCISE TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, and bearing in mind that companies that are collecting sales tax have to program their computers—there is a great deal of work that companies must do—is it the intention of the Minister of Finance to press Bill C-15 through this House before we adjourn on June 29? If it is not passed by then it will be literally impossible for companies to change the organization of the collection of sales tax for October 1 as set out in the Bill, unless there is a special recall of this House. Does the Minister really intend to do that, or is he just fooling us?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is of course a matter the Parliamentary House Leaders will have to discuss. The House is not going to be forced to do anything. The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that any measure adopted by the House requires the co-operation of the Parties. Thus, the matter is in the hands of the Parliamentary House Leaders.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Business. How many projects have been approved under the Western Economic Development Fund of the Native Economic Development Fund, the $345 million which was approved over a year ago?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, after that fund was established we set up an advisory board. We wanted to consult with them in good faith. They established the criteria, reviewed the applications, and have now recommended, I believe, six for approval. I might add that most of those are in the Province of Alberta. They are in the final stages of negotiation. Once agreements have been reached, we hope to announce them very shortly.

TIMING OF APPROVAL

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, for other Members of the House, that translates into none. That program was established over a year and a half ago, with $345 million in funds. By the Liberal smoke and mirrors, native people across the country have been encouraged to put in thousands and thousands of applications to gain access to that fund. Not one project has been approved to date. That is deplorable. The Minister said there were six awaiting approval. When will those projects be approved?

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the proposals are in the form of agreements. We have to negotiate those agreements with the various groups.

Mr. Shields: When?

Mr. Smith: When they sign.

Mr. Shields: When are you going to sign them?

Mr. Smith: I have already signed them.

RAILWAYS

PROPOSAL TO DISCONTINUE USE OF CABOOSES

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Concern is emanating, not only from the United Transportation Union but from several municipalities, about the intention of CN and CP Rail to discontinue the use of cabooses. When dangerous goods are being transported through communities, this demands every safety precaution. Will the Minister intervene in the CTC hearing, or indicate to the CTC that it will not be acceptable to permit CN and CP to discontinue the use of the caboose?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the railways have not made any specific proposal other than to raise the question that, in the United States, a number of railway operations there have replaced the old caboose system with more sophisticated technology for the detection of safety problems. From discussion with the railways, I thought their intention was to raise the issue simply as a matter of negotiation with the unions during the bargaining sessions, and then they will have to determine what the acceptability would be under those conditions, leaving that kind of determination up to the collective bargaining system. At this time that kind of examination is best left to those kinds of examinations between the two. If there were any problem related to actual safety we would, of course, take action.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S ADVICE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I am one of the millions of Canadians who took an interest in and watched the Liberal leadership convention this past weekend. Without doubt it was a time of emotion, elation, and foofaraw. If I could say a little bit, Mr. Deputy Prime Minister, today it is coming down from the mountain into the valley of darkness, to the reality of what is going on.

At the very same time that the convention was going on, the Community Information Centre in Toronto was receiving more calls than ever from people who have no jobs and no finances. At the same time 1,460,000 Canadians are without a job. I do not believe any of them were at the convention. What is the Deputy Prime Minister going to advise the new Liberal leader on how to solve that problem?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked a question that has more to do with the internal operations of the Liberal Party than it has to do with what ought to be asked in Question Period. Because he does raise a very important matter, namely, unemployment, I would refer him to the numerous answers which have been given by the Minister of Finance on this question, not only today but in previous Question Periods, in which he has laid out policies which he has been following in attempting to reduce unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: Could the Hon. Member's supplementary be of a more precise nature?

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the reality of Canadian life is that there are 1.5 million unemployed people. What went on last weekend did not address that question. I would like to ask what the Government plans to do to address that question. In Saskatoon this week—

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, questions in Question Period should be such that they can be answered in the relatively brief time constraints available. The Chair has difficulty. When a question like that is answered, how does one allocate time to the reply? It is very difficult for the Chair to be fair and reasonable under such circumstances. Will the Hon. Member please ask a more specific question?

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, there was a 70 per cent increase in the number of unemployed in Saskatchewan from April, 1982, to May, 1984. What is the Government of Canada going to do to address that question?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that a Member from Saskatchewan would not be aware of what the Government has done. He will realize that the Province of Saskatchewan had the lowest level of unemployment and suffered the least from the recession in 1981 and 1982. I remind my hon. friend that as recently as a couple of weeks ago we announced an agreement in principle to construct an upgrader for heavy oil in Saskatchewan that will involve an investment of some $3.2 billion, one of the largest single investments ever made in Saskatchewan. This was done thanks to the co-operation of the private sector, provincial Governments, and the federal Government. These are things that the federal Government has done. Since the Hon. Member is so interested in the Liberal Party I will add that we have elected, from Saskatchewan, an outstanding Indian representative who, I am sure, will bring to the attention of the Party and the Government the concerns of the people of Saskatchewan just as well as the Hon. Member.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH NATIVE DEVELOPMENT BANK

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Small Business. It is supplementary to the question of the Hon. Member for Athabasca concerning the Native Economic Development Fund. As the Minister knows, he instructed the board of directors of the Native Economic Development Fund to study the possibility and feasibility of using the $345 million, or what remains of it, as the capitalization for a native economic development bank. That was in keeping with one of the recommendations of the special committee on Indian self-government. Will the Minister tell the House when we can expect a report from the board of directors on the feasibility of using this money in such a fashion, rather than in the way in which it is being used at the present time?

• (1500)

Hon. David Smith (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, shortly after the board drew up its criteria for financing various proposals that would come to it, it established a subcommittee to look into that very point. I might say that the work done by the committee that the Hon. Member chaired has been very helpful in that regard. I understand that that subcommittee has more or less completed its report. I have not yet received it, but I expect to receive it shortly.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know it is not Thursday but certain events have taken place in terms of the leadership of the Liberal Party. In fact, a new leader has been selected. As a result, I thought it appropriate at this time to ask the Government House Leader a question.

I assume that the legislative agenda of the Government will remain the same as has been stated by the Government House Leader. If not, will there be a change in the agenda since there has been a change in the leadership of the Liberal Party which has selected Mr. Turner as the ostensible Prime Minister designate? In short, I would like to ask the Government House Leader whether or not the legislative agenda and the priorities stated by the Government House Leader before the convention remain the legislative agenda and the priorities until the end of this trimester.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, even without a leadership convention, the order of business is always subject to change. Until I notify my hon. colleague of any change, nothing has changed.

PETITIONS

MR. RIIS—VIOLENCE IN AMRITSAR, INDIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present on behalf of the majority of Sikh constituents in the constituency of Kamloops-Shuswap a petition bringing to the attention of the House of Commons the profound tragedy that has been inflicted upon a small minority of the people of India. The petition wishes to draw to the attention of Members of the House of Commons the brutality and violence which has been perpetrated against the holy Temple Amritsar which is presently lying in ruins. They ask for a stay of deportation proceedings for the Sikhs presently within Canada and urge that the International Committee of the Red Cross be given all the necessary support by the Government of Canada to bring aid and relief to those suffering as a result of the violence in the Punjab.

MR. KRISTIANSEN—CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition signed by a number of constituents from Nelson, British Columbia, to the honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned citizens, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, humbly sheweth that, in the opinion of your petitioners, the Liberal Government is attempting to unreasonably stifle debate by using closure at second reading and committee stage on the proposed Bill to establish a civilian security service, that the Government has refused to allow for broad public input into this process by denying cross-country hearings and that the proposed Bill poses a profound threat to the civil liberties and privacy of all Canadians in that (a) despite the fact that the security service opened files on almost one million Canadians—

Mr. Speaker: May I call to the attention of the Hon. member that he should give a simple summary of the contents and purpose of the petition.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, in summary, the petition indicates that the Government has its priorities totally backwards and that the jobs and lives of working Canadians are more important than the creation of a new spy agency.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, the intention of this Bill is to provide protection for the innocent by amending the Criminal Code to reintroduce capital punishment for premeditated murder. This will coincide with the opinions and the desires of well over 70 per cent of the people in Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Hon. Serge Joyal (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-47, an Act to amend the Indian Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

NOTICE OF ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-9

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that there have been consultations among the representatives of the Parties and that it has not been possible to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 80 or 81 which regard to the allocation of time to the report stage and third reading of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain securities and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, and that therefore at the next sitting of the House I shall propose a motion pursuant to Standing Order 82 to allocate one sitting day to each of the said stages of the said Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Closure!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my understanding that there are still some procedural rulings to come from the Chair. How can we possibly end the debate on a motion that is without procedural rulings?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has commenced debate. The fact that there are possible points of order raised in the course of the debate will not affect the validity of the motion put by the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in giving notice, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) is attempting to shut down debate on one of the most important—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is not speaking to a point of order.

[1] Where the Corporation requires an employee to relocate to an area where the cost of housing of comparable standard is significantly higher,, assistance in meeting this additional cost may be provided in the form of an interest-free loan for a limited period of time. The CBC policy in this regard is in line with that of other large Canadian corporations and government departments.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Robinson (Burnaby)), Motion No. 5 (Mr. Allmand), and Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 (Mr. Robinson (Burnaby)).

Mr. Speaker: The Chair indicated previously that at this point it would hear arguments relating to the matters to which the Chair referred in its decision of Thursday last. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few short observations. I apologize for what happened in the proceedings first thing this morning. However, I was not aware of the fact that the discussion would be taking place at that point in time and my notes were in my office. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I like to extemporise as much as possible but I want to be precise in order that you could get the full thrust of my legitimate intervention on this point of order.

As the House has just witnessed, closure through time allocation has now been moved. In terms of the admissibility of proposed motions for amendments at report stage, Your Honour, whom we acknowledge must look at the procedural rules but also has a certain capacity for discretion with respect to these matters, should in each instance, especially when there will be a severe limitation imposed on debate, opt for the admissibility of motions which are legitimate and which are in fact an attempt to deal with shortcomings as seen by a significant number of Members of Parliament in this legislation, indeed shortcomings which have been acknowledged generally by a very large number of Canadians.

I would like to make a few short remarks, Your Honour, with respect to your initial observations concerning the procedural acceptability of Motion No. 94 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). It is a motion with which we in this Party are particularly concerned. Mr. Speaker, you have stated that, in your view, the motion attempts to insert a provision in the Bill which exceeds the scope of the Bill as passed at second reading. The object of the motion is to clarify the nature and terms of the review that is to be undertaken by the review committee established by the Bill. I think that this is an important point: Motion No. 94 merely clarifies the functions of the review committee which is created by Clause 34 of Bill C-9.

As indicated in Clause 38, the primary object or function of the Review Committee is to "review generally the performance by the service of its duties and functions". However, Mr. Speaker, Clause 38(a) outlines in detail certain of these functions. These subclauses, while falling squarely within the general object of the review committee, do not permit the review committee to fulfil its entire mandate of undertaking a general review of the duties and functions of the service.

For example, although Clause 38(a) contains references to the specific powers outlined in certain clauses of the Bill, it does not give the review committee the authority to review the service's role in providing security assessments to departments pursuant to Clause 13(1), or its role in providing advice to all Ministers pursuant to Clause 14. Thus, the specific objects of the review committee fall far short of the general function or objects of the review committee. I suggest with all deference, Mr. Speaker, that Motion No. 94 would correct this oversight.

The general review of the performance of the service cannot take place in a vacuum. Clause 12 of the Bill empowers the service to collect, analyze and retain information relating to threats to the security of Canada and to keep itself informed through public sources of information about the "political, economic and social environment within Canada and matters affecting that environment". Since the service is given such a broad mandate, is it reasonable to assume that a general review of the performance of the service could be any less wide-ranging?

With respect to the specific powers of the service for which no review is provided under Clause 38, it is interesting to note that Clause 13 of the Bill permits the service to provide security assessments to all departments of the Government of Canada. The definition of the word "department" is that contained in the interpretation clause of the Bill and reads as follows:

> (a) any portion of a department of the Government of Canada or of the province, and
> (b) any Ministry of State, institution or other body of the Government of Canada or of the province or any portion thereof;

As well, the service is empowered under Clause 14 to:

> —advise any Minister of the Crown on matters relating to the security of Canada that are relevant to the exercise of any power or the performance of any duty or function by that Minister under the Citizenship Act or the Immigration Act, 1976.

Thus, it can be seen that the powers of the service cut across all departments and agencies of the Government of Canada. It is also evident, however, that the review Committee that is to be established under Clause 34 of the Bill does not have the authority to review all of the activities, functions and duties of the service. The motion of my colleague would serve to correct this deficiency in the Bill.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, an important aspect of any review of the performance of the service must include a general review of the effectiveness of Canada's security and intelligence functions and arrangements. Only by conducting such a general review of the measures that are in place can a rational evaluation of the security service's role and performance be made. In other words, if it is done in a vacuum, not having regard to the other important elements in terms of the security intelligence gathering functions of government, then the review which takes place by the review committee will be ineffectual and inadequate for the purpose for which it was established. It stands to reason that, even in light of the broad mandate of the service, if other agencies of government are involved in intelligence gathering, then there must be some failure on the part of the service to fulfil its mandate. That information is of importance to any review that might be undertaken by the review committee. Furthermore, such a review is necessary when placed in the context of the service's advisory role to other departments and Ministers.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, it can be seen that the effect of Motion No. 94 would be to bring the powers of the review committee into line with the broad general powers of the service as outlined in Clause 12, and would provide the review committee with sufficient authority to undertake a review of the service's studies under Clause 13(1) and Clause 14. Having regard to what I hope I have established as being the relevance of this amendment with respect to the powers contained in the legislation, and the existing powers which were passed and approved at second reading stage, it seems to me that there is a solid and rational basis upon which Your Honour could come to the conclusion that it is in fact germane and within the scope of the legislation as presented and passed at second reading.

The difficulty which I see if we do not allow a reasonable interpretation in terms of legislation of this nature is this. It is fair to say that you, Mr. Speaker, can take notice of the fact that there is a considerable amount of public interest and concern shown when we are entering into the passage of legislation which deals with the national security of our country. The legislation deals with the establishment of an agency which will have the scope and power to investigate and, to use the colloquial term, spy upon people, residents and citizens of Canada. Procedural observations should be equitable and brought forward on the basis of a fair and rational debate in a free and democratic Parliament.

I do not want to sound maudlin, Mr. Speaker, but I believe there are important principles of freedom involved in this legislation which would dictate that you, as the first commoner, would opt for a reasonable interpretation of this legislation, allowing a debate on the ability and capacity of the review committee to investigate the capacity of the security service to operate in the context of other security intelligence gathering agencies in Canada. That is the essence of it. I believe it is based upon fair and reasonable procedural considerations. I believe I have been able to demonstrate with respect to this legislation that there is relevance to the principles approved by the House on second reading.

I realize I have mentioned this before in other procedural arguments, but I feel strongly, and Hon. Members of my Party feel strongly, that, as much as possible within the bounds of procedural acceptability, we allow motions and amendments which are germane to the legislation and in which there is a very substantial interest of the people of Canada and very great stakes are involved.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I hope you will exercise the fair discretion of your responsibilities as Speaker of the House and allow the motion which was presented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), namely, Motion No. 94.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief because I would certainly by and large adopt the arguments made by my friend, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), with respect to the admissibility of Motions Nos. 93 and 94.

With respect to Motion No. 89, which attempts to provide for greater flexibility and independence on the part of the review committee in the hiring of its staff and the establishment of its budget, I recognize the citation which Your Honour has referred to from Beauchesne does specifically preclude any imposition of an additional condition with respect to the royal recommendation. Of course, since the involvement of the Treasury Board would appear to be one of the safeguards which, even though some of us might disagree, the Minister appears to want to include in the powers of the review committee, I recognize that that is a condition and that by attempting to remove that condition we appear to be moving beyond the scope of the royal recommendation. Therefore, I will not take issue with Your Honour's preliminary ruling with respect to Motion No. 89.

I would, however, strongly appeal to the Chair to reconsider Your Honour's preliminary ruling with respect to Motions Nos. 93 and 94. I recognize the wisdom of Your Honour's preliminary ruling with respect to Motion No. 89. However, I ask Your Honour to reconsider Motions Nos. 93 and 94 for the reasons enunciated by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West, and given the context of the proposal which is set out in Motions Nos. 93 and 94. Motion No. 94 generally refers to the relationship between the proposed civilian security service and other intelligence agencies in the Government of Canada. Motion No. 93, which is set down in my name on behalf of the New Democratic Party, calls for a review of the relationships between the service and all other bodies and agencies engaged in security or intelligence functions in Canada. Then there were a number of other provisions with which I believe the Chair has not taken issue.

Your Honour stated in your preliminary ruling: "This is clearly a new idea which was not contained in the Bill as agreed to at second reading stage". Surely, Mr. Speaker, one of the purposes of clause by clause study is to improve upon the substance of legislation, not to import wholly new concepts or new ideas which are beyond the scope of the Bill. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, where there is an opportunity to improve upon the Bill as presented, surely that is the responsibility of the committee.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that by including this provision we have not gone beyond the broad scope of the Bill, the principles of the legislation. What we are doing effectively, Mr. Speaker, is responding to many representations which have been made to the effect that one of the responsibilities of a new review committee must surely be not only reviewing the intelligence functions of the service but as well the relationship between the service and other intelligence agencies in the community. Certainly this was a strong recommendation of the McDonald Commission.

I would note, Mr. Speaker, that we are not dealing in this instance with a suggestion that the review committee should somehow have jurisdiction over other intelligence agencies. That would be a separate amendment, to suggest it should have the power, as indeed was recommended by a number of witnesses, to effectively provide for oversight of the other operators in the intelligence community. Some of us believe that would be a good idea. However, that is not the purpose of this amendment. This amendment states that the security service obviously is going to have relationships with other agencies in the intelligence community. It would merely expand—but not beyond the principles of the Bill—the scope of review of the new security intelligence review committee to encompass those relationships. Therefore, it builds upon the foundation of the Bill, Mr. Speaker. It does not in any way add a new or different principle to the Bill.

I suggest that if there is any doubt whatsoever as to the procedural acceptability of a motion of this nature, particularly where it is—I believe the Speaker would recognize—very close to the line, perhaps, it nevertheless is one which I would submit, after reviewing the question, falls within the nature of an amendment which adds to the Bill. It certainly does not in any way alter the substance of the Bill. Therefore I would urge Your Honour to permit the debate which should be held on this very important amendment. I would urge Your Honour to allow the debate to take place on Motions Nos. 93 and 94.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that you are in the position of having to make rulings on these amendments a few minutes after the new Leader of the Liberal Party, Mr. Turner—who has come out of a convention talking about reform of this place, reform of the Liberal Party and reform of the process—has just moved a form of closure on the security Bill. Your Honour, of course, is not a part of any of that. I could not agree more that this is not of your doing. However, it is interesting and I believe it puts Your Honour in a more difficult position than Your Honour ought to be placed in.

However, the fact of the matter is that shortly after this great convention in which we are told we are going to have change and reform, the first thing which is done by Mr. Turner is to make sure that closure is put on the discussion in this House of the security Bill. There is no way he or anyone else can get away from it. What should be clearly understood, Mr. Speaker, is that nothing has changed as a consequence of the weekend. The Government Party now with its new leader is just as determined to continue the tactic it has used so far, which is to accept no amendments whatsoever, then to make every effort to make sure that those amendments which have been put forward cannot properly be debated.

Referring specifically to your ruling, I understand perfectly the rule which Your Honour asks us to address, that is, whether an amendment which could charge the review committee as set up in Bill C-9 to examine other than just the security service is such a departure from the Bill that Your Honour cannot accept it in this Chamber at this stage. That is your specific point. That is what you have asked me to address.

I want to remind the House that under Clause 38 the Government has insisted that the Security Intelligence Review Committee should only review the operations of the service and no other agency dealing with Canada's security. The Progressive Conservative position is put forward in Motion No. 94. It was argued in committee and was the subject of a great deal of discussion. That position is that the committee should have as one of its functions the review generally of the effectiveness and propriety of Canada's security and intelligence functions and arrangements wherever such functions and arrangements are carried on in the Government of Canada.

For those who might argue that this motion brings in some separate notion, I would point out that the security service has been in existence these many years and it will continue to be exactly the same security service when Bill C-9 is passed. That security service is dealing with every other element of intelligence gathering within the Canadian system. It is naive and ingenuous in the extreme to suppose for one minute that a security service operates in this country without having a great deal of interaction with other intelligence gathering agencies or groups within Canada. One of them, of course, is the communications security establishment of the Department of National Defence; and, of course, another is the Department of External Affairs.

The rationale for this amendment is that the Security Intelligence Service will be interacting every day with other agencies and institutions of this Government which are engaged in security information and in intelligence. The Security Intelligence Service, for example, may—and I would say it goes beyond "may"; it will be receiving information from the communications security establishment of the Department of National Defence and certainly from the Department of External Affairs. It is our position that the committee must be able to assess the reliability of such information that the service may act on. In addition, the committee must also be able to look at all such functions in order to determine whether certain activities are being performed on behalf of the service and should be removed from oversight and review.

The whole object of this Bill is to establish by mandate a set of rules which will try to establish in the minds of the Canadian public a sense of trust that the security service indeed has clear direction and at the same time is properly constrained. The point I am making is that it is impossible to expect the review committee as set out in this Bill to effectively review the activities of the security service which everyone knows relate to other information gathering agencies in the committee cannot examine that relationship. That is the substance of my argument. It has been set out quite clearly by others speaking before me and it may well be repeated.

The other issue is that Your Honour is now caught in the unpleasant situation of being asked to rule on these matters, as is your duty and responsibility, at a time when a new leader of the Liberal Party has obviously sent a direction to the Solicitor General to put closure on this most important Act, which Alan Borovoy has stated recently contains some of the greatest threats to the security of Canadians since the beginning of Confederation.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair would like to indicate at this point that there seems to be agreement with regard to Motion No. 89. The Chair will rule that out of order. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) indicated he accepted it. The Chair would like to reserve judgment on the other two motions, No. 93 and No. 94, and will attempt to render a decision at the earliest possible time after reviewing the record of the House.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, we are now dealing with a most important issue. We saw the Government move closure on second reading. We saw the Government refuse to take amendments in committee, as well as try to stifle debate. Now we have the Government, led by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), moving closure on Bill C-9. Closure under a new Prime Minister who is going to be more open and less arrogant towards Parliament and the Canadian public. In view of the continued arrogance of the Liberal Party and the disrespect shown for Parliament and for the Canadian public, I would like to move this motion:

That this House now adjourn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Chair has received the motion from the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller). The Chair would refer the Hon. Member to Standing Order 8(3):

When it is provided in any Standing or Special Order of this House that any business specified by such Order shall be continued, forthwith disposed of, or concluded in any sitting, the House shall not be adjourned before such proceedings have been completed except pursuant to a motion to adjourn proposed by a Minister of the Crown.

Because of that Standing Order I cannot accept the motion of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There is no special order or House order with respect to the conduct of the business at the present time, so surely to goodness a motion to adjourn under these circumstances is entirely in order. That Standing Order is not applicable in these circumstances. If there was a House order for a vote at 5.45 today or at 9.45 today, in those circumstances that Standing Order may be appropriate. However, it is under no circumstances applicable in these circumstances. I respectfully submit that Your Honour reconsider and recognize that there is Government business before the House and that it is the right of any Member to protest the arrogance of this Government in moving closure on such an important Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I was prepared to listen to the Hon. Member presenting an argument until he started debating another issue. I would refer him to Standing Order 9(1) which provides that:

On the tenth sitting day preceding June 30 a motion to extend the hours of sitting to a specific hour during the last ten sitting days may be proposed, without notice, by any Member during routine proceedings.

I refer the Hon. Member to the proceedings of this House on Thursday, June 14, where in unanimous consent was given to a motion proposed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). As a result, I am afraid my ruling stands and a motion cannot be accepted.

For continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, we are now dealing with provisions of this legislation dealing with the definition of national security in Canada. I had the privilege of representing my Party for a period of time as critic with respect to this legislation. We had a very full debate and a number of representations were made to us by people across this country which I think were fairly consistent. These were not a group of lunatics or people who were unduly concerned or a little crazy. These were eminently sensible, outstanding citizens of our country who made a consistent plea to us as Members dealing with this legislation.

● (1540)

The plea which we as Members of Parliament received was that there was great concern and apprehension over the broad definition of what constituted a threat to national security under this legislation. I will give an example of what I am talking about. Under this legislation, if you are found to have supported movements and groups outside of Canada which advocate the overthrow of established governments in other countries, you become a target for the civilian security agency to spy upon. There is no question that at first blush that does not sound like an unreasonable proposition. There are some groups which I do not think 99 per cent of Canadians would want to be associated with which do support the violent overthrow of some legitimate foreign government.

It has been pointed out to the Government time and again that there are some very legitimate concerns. Sometimes there is an element of violence involved. However, sometimes this is the only recourse for people who live under oppression in countries which are not democratic. Are we going to say that the people who support Solidarity in Poland should become a target of our new security service? That is an outrageous proposal for any of us. It is outrageous to say that those of us who support freedom against tyranny and oppression should become legitimate subjects of our new spy service. If that is common sense and logic, and if that will be the result of this legislation, where are we headed in Canada?

I would have thought that after the Liberals had a chance to consider the leadership of their Party this issue would have been defined and articulated. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) was one of the leading supporters of Mr. John Turner. I assume when the Solicitor General takes a position on this legislation that he reflects and advises Mr. Turner as to the position the Government is going to continue to take with respect to the legislation. He is a spokesman for John Turner, the future Prime Minister, with respect to this legislation.

I asked the Government House Leader today whether the legislative priorities were going to continue. He said that nothing has changed. The Government House Leader said that Mr. Turner is the new leader and everything that is going on in this institution is okay with him. We had hoped that the matter of civil liberties, the freedom of people in Canada to conduct their affairs without being spied upon by this new civilian intelligence agency, would have been an important issue to Liberals and to Mr. Turner. Where does he stand? He is cheek by jowl with the Solicitor General. He believes the Solicitor General is right. One of his leading supporters and organizers is now, by this definition of "threats to national security", imposing one of the most serious threats to Canadians in any legislation which has been passed during my parliamentary experience, which extends back some 10 years.

As parliamentarians we ask ourselves how any government comes to the conclusion that it is going to open up an agency to spy upon people who have legitimate concerns about the freedoms of people in other countries. Under this legislation the Government is able to unleash enormous capacity to spy on everything done by individuals, groups and agencies which may in fact support the Sandinista movement. There is violence involved there. What about Central America? What about the Afghan rebels? Is anyone in this House prepared to stand in their place and say that anyone who supports the Afghan rebels should be the subject and target of the secret service in this country? It is preposterous even to suggest that.

We brought in amendments. Unfortunately the Speaker saw fit to disallow them because of a procedural fluke. The Speaker said that this is a substantive amendment to a definition section. We have been prohibited by the Speaker from bringing in amendments to tighten up the definition of threats to national security. Our last resort is to support a motion which deletes this provision and opens up the question of redefining threats to national security. That is the serious matter we have before us now.

I know the kind of advice that people in the Government get from their bureaucrats. That say that they need a certain flexibility in the operation of a security service. That kind of advice is for self-protection. The transition team is most interested in not having too many constraints placed upon it. It wants a broad scope and mandate under which to operate.

That is only normal. It is human nature, if I may be permitted to say so. The Solicitor General may be being advised not to get too technical, not to put the service under too many constraints or to make their lives difficult. That is what political responsibility is all about. That is why, in our system of government, the Minister should stand up and say that although it may be difficult to carry this out and administer it, he is talking the political responsibility to show the people of Canada that never, while he is Solicitor General, will we have a country in which civil liberties will be trampled upon and free expression in support of democratic principles will be thwarted.

Where is the Liberal Party in terms of the freedom of Canadian citizens? Why is it silent? Why, except for the purpose of moving closure of this debate, are Government Members not standing up to defend their position if it is so defensible? They are silent because they have no defence.

As a western Canadian I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that as I speak to Canadian citizens in my part of the country I learn that this concept of a civilian security intelligence agency has caused apprehension. Liberal Governments have had the mentality that they know best, that people cannot be trusted, and that bureaucracy is everything. People often wonder why there was such an outcry when we questioned some of the moves that the Government has taken in terms of emergency planning legislation in peacetime, in terms of taking control of our communications and, by Order in Council, taking control of things which we thought were under the direction of Parliament. When the Government has that kind of mindset it is no wonder that it is prepared to resort to closure in order to trample the civil liberties of Canadians. This is not going to be forgotten by hundreds and thousands of Canadians who are going to be faced with the issue in the next election.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I must say that I am absolutely fed up with the process that is taking place here today. As a result of the Liberal leadership convention, I thought there was supposed to be a new Liberalism and a new approach. Particularly, the Liberals were going to be sensitive to the interests of western Canada. However, what do we find? When we return on Monday after the new leader was been briefed on Sunday, the Liberals are putting closure on a motion.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is a foreclosure on freedom.

Mr. Thacker: They are foreclosing freedom. It is absolutely abominable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. I must draw to the Hon. Member's attention the fact that we are not debating a motion to allocate hours; we are presently debating a series of motions, starting with No. 2. I would appreciate Hon. Members giving attention to the motion that is being debated.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, we are essentially discussing the clause that deals with threats to the security of Canada. The action of the Government this morning is a threat to the individual security of Canadians.

The RCMP has had a long history in this country. It is respected from shore to shore. Recent polls show that people have immense trust in the RCMP. Everyone knows that the RCMP were let down by the politicians.

While it is true that the RCMP burned some barns and broke into some offices, it did so at the impulse of the highest order in this country. When they were exposed, the politicians and Cabinet scurried for cover and left the RCMP to hang out on the line. In order to punish the RCMP it brought in this civilian agency to take that responsibility away from the RCMP.

The actions of the Government will destroy another major institutions in this country. It is an institution that people trusted. Of course, that is part of the Government plan. The Government will pay a bitter price. How will the Liberals be able to go to the west to ask for votes? How can they tell westerners to trust them when, the first day after they pick a new leader, they destroy the security agency of the RCMP?

Let me say why I am critically worried about the wording of these clauses. Clause 2 deals with threats to the security of Canada. It gives the definition of those threats but to truly understand it one must read Clause 12 first to see how they work together. Clause 12 states that "The service shall collect, by investigation or otherwise . . .". What does otherwise mean? The clause continues: ". . . information and intelligence respecting activities that may on reasonable grounds . . ." All the witnesses said that it should state "reasonable and probable grounds", which is a higher standard, before it can begin to collect information. However, the Government would not accept that amendment. It only states ". . . on reasonable grounds be suspected of constituting threats to the security of Canada"; and thereon it shall report and advise the Government, which is the Cabinet.

Once this security agency is in place it will collect information by investigation or otherwise. It will take information intelligence on activities. One must then look to see what "threats to the security of Canada" means. We all understand what "threat" is with respect to espionage or sabotage because in our modern world, particularly with Soviet agencies operating around the world, we must counter that. We understand its meaning when dealing with people who come from other countries with the intent to destroy our way of life. We have no trouble with its application to foreign-influenced activities or activities within or relating to Canada that will cause threats or violence to property or people. However, we are concerned about Clause 2(d). Clause 2(d) states:

activities directed toward undermining by covert unlawful acts, or directed toward or intended ultimately—

—to attack the constitutionally established system of government. The security service can interpret those words widely. For instance, if the Western Canada Concept said that it may have to separate if it does not get reasonable representation in the west, the security agency can say that that statement is intended ultimately to overthrow the constitutionally established system of government.

Mr. Evans: You leave out the words "by violence".

Mr. Thacker: It says "intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or"—

Mr. Evans: "Or overthrow by violence."

Mr. Thacker: It can be "either or". It is not "and".

Mr. Evans: The destruction or overthrow by violence, either one by violence.

Mr. Thacker: Either one, that is the point. By taking a broad definition, the agency could interpret that to be the destruction but not by violence. If the clause read "toward the destruction and overthrow", then both tests would have to be met before that clause could be triggered. Once the agency triggers the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), for example, because he spoke to a group that the agency believes ultimately intends to get at our way of life, it can intercept his first-class mail, instal telephone taps and remove his medical files and legal documents even though it is his private business. There can be a massive investigation of his personal life because he gave a speech to or went to a rally of a group that, in the opinion of the security service, ultimately intends to overthrow or destroy by violence the Government.

That clause is simply worded wrongly. I sat on the committee. I listened to those 25 witnesses and read over 50 briefs which were presented by people like Mr. Borovoy of the Civil Rights League of Canada and the lawyers who appeared. Many legitimate groups said that this wording is too broad in the Candian tradition of freedoms. Consequently, they proposed amendments to it. They have proposed amendments that reduce the ability of the security service to go after our own people. This clause is not designed to go after others because that is provided for in the other clauses. This clause is designed to go after our own citizens. We all feel the shame of what we did to the Japanese-Canadians. They were Canadians whom our own Government uprooted, removed their property and never adequately compensated. Today, in 1984, the Liberal Cabinet is insisting on a wording that would permit the same type of attacks on our own people. We do not have a history of subversion that justifies that at all.

The Government's own member, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), is a former Solicitor General in the Liberal Cabinet who knows what it is like from the inside. He has said that the wording is wrong and has put down and amendment that is very reasonable. Yet the Cabinet has rejected a proposed amendment from a former Solicitor General of its own Government. There is something wrong.

The Government is insisting on this wording even though it is too broad. This wording has been rejected by witnesses. A proposal for change has been made by the former Solicitor General. I just do not understand why the present Solicitor General and the Cabinet would not accept an amendment to Clause 2(d) which attempts to go after our own people. It is an intimidating clause. How will I, as a Member of Parliament, be free to talk to groups when I know that this clause will allow someone in the security agency to single me out and I could be subjected for years to investigation and intrusive techniques on my life? It is wrong and the clause must be defeated.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke on this Bill at second reading, I tried to emphasize our concern about the need to have narrowly defined definitions. If we are going to talk about security, we had better define it very carefully. I have wondered since that debate why it is that the Government has so much inertia, so little willingness to listen to any kind of change that might narrow that definition. It suddenly dawned on me that possibly one of the reasons the Government does not want changes is that it does not understand the genuine concern and fear that exists on the Opposition benches. It does not understand it, though not because it does not want to. When you look at the Government benches there are so few Members who represent the multicultural community and therefore have no input that would allow them to understand this kind of fear.

I can tell you that within this caucus there are numbers upon numbers of Members who come from a multicultural community who either themselves or their relatives have experienced a police state that gives them a genuine concern for and fear of this kind of legislation. They have faced this kind of insecurity. When I look at my colleagues who have come from Eastern or Western Europe and who have faced this kind of situation where any kind of definition can be changed to suit a situation at the whim of an official, I know there is cause for genuine fear.

Members of the Government do not understand the sincerity of our concern regarding this aspect of the legislation. It is impossible for them because neither they nor their families have experienced such a situation. When we live in times of real calm in Canada, when we are at peace, when there is no social upheaval or international upheaval that touches our borders, it is understandable they do not really appreciate what we are talking about.

In the seven or eight minutes left to me I want to remind Members opposite of four experiences which they should be able to recall that underscore why we are worried. First is World War II and the climate of fear that existed in Canada on the part of those who did not come from United Kingdom stock but who came from European or Oriental stock. Let me remind Hon. Members that it was the Liberal Party in 1939 or 1940, when it wanted to criticize the CCF, as it was at that time, and Mr. Woodsworth's defence of the Orientals, that put ads in the paper reading: "Vote socialist and you bring in the yellow peril". That is what the Liberals were advertising in those years. That was done because of the emotional charge at the time and the racism that existed in the Liberal Party; there is no question about it.

I draw on my own experience in World War II. I come from a German ethnic background and happened to be pacifist. How would you like to live in a German community, Mr. Speaker, having the name Schmidt and be in a pacifist community which refused to take up arms against the Germans? You were a pacifist because your religion said you should not take up arms. When you combine wartime fever and the anti-German atmosphere, which cultivated hate and fear, with a religiously pacifistic community, there was nothing that could stop that community from being the subject of hatred by the rest of the community. All you needed was a secret police contingent to swoop down.

Let me remind my colleague across the way who shares my alma mater with me at the University of Washington what it was like in the late 1960s and the early 1970s during the Kent State riots. I remember standing in the commons of that university seeing policemen standing on the library roof looking down at a crowd of 10,000 students and the drifters who came off the street to demonstrate against the administration. You could easily understand, with the police up there, why the people who demonstrated wondered how many police there were among them. During times of high emotion there is legitimate concern when one has loose definitions.

In October, 1970 in the Province of Quebec, I do not have to remind Hon. Members that over 400 Quebeckers, citizens of Canada, were arrested and imprisoned but never charged. The former Speaker of the Senate, who is a former Minister of Transport in this Chamber, Mr. Marchand, a very honourable person, laughed when he saw the list of people who were arrested during that time of peak emotion.

I want to point out to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) that today there are citizens of Canada who are demonstrating against a foreign government. I am speaking of the Sikhs in Vancouver, Calgary, Toronto and other places who are demonstrating against their former country of Indian because of the policies of the Indian Government against the province of Punjab. They are demonstrating in favour of the State of Khaliskan and so forth. When you see them on television demonstrating, in our terms peacefully, all it takes is a wild-eyed secret officer to say they are being violent.

I want to bring to the attention of the Solicitor General that many thousands of Canadians came from the Third World and thought they were escaping the kind of legislation he is introducing today. When they see the implications of this legislation, I can tell him that members of the Sikh community in my constituency will be concerned. There were 2,000 people who demonstrated in Vancouver and if they knew what this legislation portended they would be very concerned.

Definitions have to be very precise. Under the dynamics of today's world when the ideologies of the counter culture have a dynamic that is built upon changing meanings of words, it is imperative that definitions be very precise. If we do not have a precise definition for violence or what constitutes overthrow, what constitutes national security, those people in the counter culture who are bent upon non-democratic means are going to twist the meaning of words. That is their goal. That is their modus operandi. Therefore, as a lawyer, as a civil libertarian and a man who ought to be concerned about the civil rights of all Canadians, I urge the Solicitor General to look at the definitions and make certain that when we are debating national security, violence and overthrow of government, all those kinds of terms, he gives us definitions so precise that they cannot be twisted.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Pornography—United States legislation action—Canadian position. (b) Government plans; the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain)—Finance—Proposed mortgage rate protection program. (b) Increase in mortgage rates; the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen)—Co-operatives—Task force recommendation on workers' co-operatives. (b) Consultation with Canadian Labour Congress representatives.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Robinson (Burnaby)), Motion No. 5 (Mr. Allmand), and Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 (Mr. Robinson (Burnaby)).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I am afraid the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) has already spoken and cannot be recognized at this time.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In ruling me out of order in moving a motion, you did not recognize me standing thereafter to speak in this debate. Either I was speaking on an adjournment motion or I should have been recognized to continue debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I draw to the Hon. Member's attention, so that there will be no misunderstanding, Standing Order 41 which is quite clear. In part it reads:

No Member, unless otherwise provided by Standing or Special Order, may speak twice to a question—

I do not need to read the rest of the paragraph. In fact, the Hon. Member rose to propose a motion which was not accepted by the Chair. However, that means he is recognized as having spoken on this question and I cannot recognize the Hon. Member for a second time.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments on Clause 2 of the Bill because I am concerned about the expansiveness of some of the definitions. Certainly the Hon. Minister and the Government should give some thought to defining these words much better than they are defined in Bill C-9.

I was rather amazed that the first act of the new Liberal leader was to announce closure on this important Bill. Surely the consideration of whether we have the RCMP or a separate intelligence body is an important issue for the country, yet the new Liberal leader pronounced closure almost before his ears were dry from the convention. Certainly that was no tribute to the Liberal Party or to freedom of speech. I think the people of Canada should be aware of that. Surely to goodness a Bill concerning the authority—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I hate to interrupt the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), but I have already referred to the fact that the motion before the House is the one which is supposed to be debated. I cannot accept continuous allusion to extraneous matters.

Mr. Taylor: However, Mr. Speaker, closure was announced today on this particular Bill.

Mr. Kaplan: You can speak on that tomorrow.

Mr. Taylor: Consequently, what I had to say was in connection with that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I do not think the Hon. Member is wanting to argue with the Chair. However, I point out that if there is a motion proposed at some future date, that would be the time to speak on it.

Mr. Taylor: That is fine; we will certainly do that because the people of Canada should know that closure was his first act.

Let me deal with these threats to the security of Canada. I was raised in a coal mining area. I know what can happen if the words "security", "threats" and "activities" are not very carefully defined. When I was a small boy of six or seven years of age, I recall that World War I had almost ended. Even now I remember the violence and the feelings which ran so high against German people on account of Kaiser Bill because many of our boys from the Drumheller area had lost their lives on foreign soil fighting for freedom to run our country the way we wanted. Some people felt that it was the time to get even. Two or three of them went at midnight to the home of a Canadian of German extraction who lived by himself. They had evil thoughts in their minds. They pounded on his door and broke his windows. Finally they were about to break in his door when he warned them by saying: "I have a shotgun; if you come in I will use it". They had no right to be on his property. He was a Canadian citizen. He was not responsible for what Kaiser Bill did, any more than the German people in my constituency were later responsible for what Hitler did. They had no sympathy with it. It was completely unfair to chastise them and put them on the spot, thinking that anything they did was in line with what the German leader did. But they did not stop. They broke in the door, and the Canadian of German origin used his gun and killed one of them. That ended that fracas. Then the police came.

In part, Clause 2 reads:

(c) activities within or relating to Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state—

Certainly the freedom of unions to operate is highly political. Also the clause provides:

(b) foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person.

The definitions are entirely too wide. Let us look at the strikes that take place in coal mining areas. I have referred in the House before to a number of strikes. When I was in grade 12 I had to walk through a barrage of people who wanted a particular union. My folks happened to be UMWA people, which I think is a splendid union. It has proven itself to be an excellent union. However, there were other people who wanted the Canadian union which, in my view, was headed by nothing short of a bunch of communists.

Was this a threat within Canada in which the intelligence corps should become involved and take sides? Those who were on the side of UMWA received threats that their houses would be burned. Many of them, including my own brothers and sisters, insisted upon going to work because UMWA was not on strike. The Canadian union was determined that no one would go to work. They broke car windows, threatened to burn houses and so on. These types of things take place, but who is to say which side happens to be loyal to Canada? I think both sides included many people who were loyal to Canada. Later on one of the leaders of UMWA became an excellent ambassador of the Canadian Government in another country. Certainly we could not say that the people on the UMWA side were disloyal to Canada. On the other hand, the convictions of a number of people were that the Canadian union should have dominance because they did not want funds going to the United States, to the UMWA. The UMWA has certainly taken funds from Canada to United States. During the depression years, funds came the other way from the UMWA. They came back into Canada to help the depressed families when the going was tough and the coal miners were not working.

The point is that we have a clause that would enable action to be taken against people because they are fighting for their convictions, for their freedom of choice. Surely our people should not be put in that position when they fight for their convictions in the belief that this will make a better country. I say that for both sides in that strike.

I remember walking through a crowd in front of the bands of men and women who were on the side of the Canadian union. It should have been called the communist union. I remember them with their pitchforks, shovels, axes and knives. What could happen with definitions like this with regard to threats to the security of Canada, the political objective within Canada or a foreign state?

I urge the Minister to consider the definition of "threats to the security of Canada". Suggestions have been made as to alternatives which makes some sense. At present it is far too wide. I urge the Minister, even at this late stage, to bring in amendments. If Canadian men or women so much as talk to a union, they may well become a marked man or woman. That is not freedom of speech or freedom of tenure. That is not the kind of country I envision Canada to be.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion before the House today which, if adopted, would delete Clause 2 of the Bill to establish a Canadian Security Intelligence Service. What we find offensive in this clause are the subclause near the end of the clause. The rest is simply definitions of an employee, a foreign state, who the Inspector General is, who the Minister is and that sort of thing. It then tries to define threats to the security of Canada. There is quite a detailed explanation as to what threats to the security of Canada might be. It states, and I quote:

(a) espionage or sabotage that is against Canada or is detrimental to the interests of Canada or activities directed toward or in support of such espionage or sabotage,

The Criminal Code defines "espionage" and "sabotage" effectively and directly, yet we have a very detailed explanation here which goes beyond the Criminal Code explanation. It "fuzzifies" the whole definition. The balance of the definition of threats to the security of Canada is as follows:

(b) foreign influenced activities within or related to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person,

(c) activities within or relating to Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state, and—

I will read the final subparagraph because it should be on the record:

(d) activities directed toward undermining by covert unlawful acts, or directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of, the constitutionally established system of government in Canada, but does not include lawful advocacy,—

That is the disclaimer.

—protest or dissent, unless carried on in conjunction with any of the activities referred to in paragraphs (a) to (d).

That opens up a lot of questions. The Canadian Council of Churches went through this Bill. They have some questions which have not yet been answered. They pose questions concerning the interpretation of subparagraphs (b) and (c) of that clause. They wondered if that clause could be construed to mean that lawful church activities and mission work, or lawful church and community activities, including development education, peace advocacy and human rights defence, might not fall within those definitions. How could a church lawfully raise money, as many churches are now doing, for governments in Nicaragua, Guatemala and a great many countries in Africa where churches are providing assistance, countries that are in a politically unstable state? Sometimes our country does not approve of the government in power at the time.

Would it be construed as going against the best interests of Canada if our current government did not approve of their current government? If members of an activist group in another country came here to address the church group, would they subject themselves to surveillance? Would their activities fall within the definition in Bill C-9? In defining the powers of this Bill, it is a question of what is in the interests of Canada?

The interests of Canada are not defined in this Bill. Some of the interests of Canada may be defined in the Constitution, but it is hard to find much in that. Ultimately it comes down to somebody, somewhere in the security service, deciding what are the interests of Canada. They do not report to the House of Commons or to the Parliament of this country, yet the interests of Canada are supposedly being looked after. Someone elected to the position of looking after the interests of Canada has no way of finding out what this agency is doing and what is defined to be in the interests of Canada. We could well have the little social affairs committee of a church in Fort Qu'Appelle, Saskatchewan subjected to surveillance by the new security service because it has chosen to discuss the political situation in a country such as Nicaragua and Guatemala.

The churches also have some problem with the definition in subparagraph (b) and pose this question: Consider that a visiting foreign finance minister from a country where churches have carried on mission work for many years requests a private meeting with Canadian church officials in Canada to discuss Canadian aid and trade policies. This is not a hypothetical kind of question. In the last couple of years, officials who are former church officials and are now members of the government of a foreign country have come to Canada to discuss that very item. When such a visitor comes, he inevitably comes in part to aks for assistance. He attempts to enlist the aid and advice of his Canadian friends in the churches. What would that action be deemed to be by this faceless agency that is deciding what are the interests of Canada? Would it be felt to be in the best interests of Canada for a group of church people to be discussing development and political problems that exist in a foreign country with someone from that country, or would the agency that is deciding what is in the best interests of Canada decide that these people are a bad influence and therefore this group is a bad influence and that by simply holding a meeting with such a person from such a country, that group would then become subject to surveillance and investigation in this country? I think that strikes at the very root of the democratic right that we in the country thought we had, the right to meet in public assembly and to discuss any topic we wish to discuss in public assembly.

By leaving the definition of the interests of Canada vague, ill-defined and almost not defined, and by leaving those decisions to be made by the security service itself, a service which does not properly report to this House and is not properly accountable to this House, a very scary situation is created. In order to have a better clause, we at this time move to have Clause 2 deleted, and that is what we are proposing to do by this amendment.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this particular clause of the Bill involves definitions. Grouped for debate are Motions Nos. 2, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9. I wish to direct your interest to Motion No. 5, Mr. Speaker, a motion placed on the Order Paper by a former Solicitor General for the Government, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). I think that this particular motion gets lost in what I might call a ridiculous motion, it being Motion No. 2 which had been moved by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), a motion which seeks to strike out the entire clause. Frankly, I think that was an unreasonable motion and that it should perhaps have been disallowed in the first place.

What is most important is that in presenting his Motion No. 5, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East deals with the central issue of this Bill, and that is the vagueness with which the powers of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service are defined. As you will know, Sir, Clause 2 attempts to define "threats to the security of Canada". We wind up with the requirement for another subclause, because "threats to the security of Canada" have suddenly become something detrimental to the interests of Canada. I do not know what is detrimental to the interests of Canada. Frankly, most of the time I think that this Government is detrimental to the interests of Canada. Indeed, a million and a half people who are presently unemployed think that this Government is detrimental to the interests of Canada. Taking a broad look at the Bill, that would presumably allow this security service to investigate everything and everyone.

The amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East specifically and narrowly defines in a proper fashion what the interests of Canada are and what threats to the security of Canada are. Rather than dealing with espionage or sabotage that is detrimental, the Hon. Member specifically suggests that the definition in Clause 2 be confined only to espionage or sabotage directed against Canada and not espionage or sabotage that is detrimental to the interests of Canada, whatever those may be. That is the Hon. Member's first suggestion and it is clear and understandable. The gobbledegook that is contained within the Bill unnecessarily broadens the grounds for investigation to something far beyond what I think is proper.

The second suggestion made by the Hon. Member is in paragraph (b) of his amendment which reads:

(b) foreign activities within Canada which are harmful to the vital national interests of Canada,—

Paragraph (b) of the Minister's clause reads:

(b) foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person,—

If any activities involve threats to persons, those responsible can be prosecuted under the Criminal Code. The fuzzy definition that we are expected to approve in the draft Bill that was returned from committee is improper. The tight wording proposed by the former Solicitor General makes sense and should be adopted.

Throughout this whole debate, we should look very carefully at the suggestions made by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. His suggestions are sensible and tie down the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" in a precise fashion. That definition is tied down to the point where such activities must be related to what is happening within Canada. As the Bill presently reads, it allows investigation of all kinds of activities rather than just those activities which are related to or in support of threats of violence in the country. Again, it is important that the amendment which narrowly limits the grounds on which threats to the security of the country may be investigated by this service be considered.

I believe we ought to take the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East very seriously. That Hon. Member has had experience as Solicitor General of Canada. He is interested in the whole problem. He does not produce a blanket "get-rid-of-the-clause" amendment that lacks reason. He produces for us a cogent, well argued and well defined amendment that makes it possible for us to say that if that amendment is accepted this Bill will be a better Bill.

I know that the only change to the Bill from the way it was presented at second reading and altered in committee that was accepted by the Government thus far was the insertion of the word "serious to paragraph (c) of Clause 2 which falls under the definition of "threats of the security of Canada". That is not good enough. We cannot allow this clause to go unchallenged. We must have the narrow definitions that are required as presented by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East.

For example, Sir, paragraph (d) of clause 2 reads as follows:

(d) activities directed toward undermining by covert unlawful acts,—

And it goes on to read:

—or directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of, the constitutionally established system of government in Canada,—

What does "ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of" mean? How far ultimately down the road must we go? The Bill does not tell us that. The narrow definition which is contained in (e) of the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East indicates that the covert unlawful acts must be directed to the overthrow of the existing constitutionally established system of Government in Canada. They will not ultimately lead to the destruction, but to covert acts which will, in fact, lead directly to the overthrow of the constitutionally-elected Government.

The wording which the Minister is imposing on the House is wording that can only lead this agency to have such police state powers that it must be unacceptable to every Member of the House with democratic beliefs. I am surprised that the Minister should even have thought of this particular kind of provision. Surely, with his background he should have been more concerned than others about the kind of police state possibilities that exist in the security service. When the Bill deals with an activity which might ultimately lead to the destruction or overthrow of a government by violence, there is no limit to the activities which might ultimately lead to do something. How far down the road do we have to be "ultimately lead"? That is the kind of wording which is in the Bill proposed by the Minister and the Government. The fact is that this wording gives the security service far broader powers than were ever contemplated by most Members of the House.

If we are to pass this Bill, we should get rid of these provisions and accept the amendment which was proposed by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. That amendment makes some sense. It ties down, with a little bit of precision, the powers of the security service. It ties down, with a little sensible precision, threats to the security of Canada.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this crucial clause of Bill C-9, which involves the question of defintions of subversion as opposed to dissent, I would like to begin by saying that my attitude for some years now has been one which favoured the separating of security work from the work of the RCMP. I would like to begin by saying why I believe that.

As a result of my own personal experience, I have gained a great deal of respect for police work. I was born into a world in which my maternal grandfather was the chief of police in my home town of Transcona. His son, my uncle, followed him into police work and was in the RCMP for some 25 years. I have always had a great deal of respect for the work done by the police and for police people in general. Also, I came to know a great many of them through my involvement in the militia. And so it began to disturb me, when I became involved in questions of political import, that the people for whom I had the greatest respect, in this case RCMP people, were also being asked to perform work which I considered quite unsavoury. They were being asked not to enforce the law, but to do things which from time to time constituted harassment and unnecessary intrusion into the lives of law-abiding citizens.

I came to the view that this kind of work ought to be separated from police work in general. When I am stopped on the highway, for whatever reason, I want to see a person who is enforcing the law, not someone who is associated with all these other matters. I felt that the RCMP was coming into disrepute as a result of its security work. I would like to see that work separated, because I would like to see a police force which we could respect in this country, and I expect that that kind of work will go on, no matter what kind of amendments we make to this Bill, because it is the nature of governments to do so. That is why I still favour in principle the separating of those two functions.

In spite of my cynicism about the future, the House had an opportunity, when bringing this new service into being, to correct some of the mistakes of the past and to admit that there has not been a great deal of sophistication or, for that matter, sound political judgment in the matter of who was simply engaged in legitimate forms of dissent and who was truly a threat to the security of Canada.

We had an opportunity throughout this debate—and it is an opportunity which I genuinely feel has been missed—to focus on what is meant by security, to focus on what are threats to security, to narrow them down and to give our security service a mandate and a focus which respects the full breadth of what it means to be a democracy. We have not done that. Instead, the definitions in Clause 2 provide the legal framework for the leeway which has always been there in an illegal way in the past. We could have taken this opportunity to define what security means, thereby ensuring that all the people who have been unnecessarily watched, unnecessarily harassed and unnecessarily paid attention to in the past will never again be in that situation. That is what we could have done. Instead, we have a situation in which the previous leeway is being institutionalized. Ironically, we are providing the legal framework in 1984 for the kind of vision about which George Orwell so rightly was concerned some 40 years ago.

People may say, "Well, don't be ridiculous. We don't plan these sorts of things". However, we are not legislating only for this Government or even for the next government. We are laying the framework for what will constitute threats to the security of Canada for a long time to come. In that respect, I share the view of the Canadian Council of Churches that Bill C-9 is too broad in scope and vague in definition to be acceptable in its present form. Bill C-9 would permit intrusive surveillance in the form of the electronic bugging of conversations, surreptitious entry of offices and homes, invasion of confidential records, mail openings, and infiltrations of social organizations, including churches, agencies, members and employees. It would also make possible the surveillance or interference of many lawful activities. I share the Council's view that that kind of broad permission is inconsistent with the vision of the kind of Canada that all of us ought to be seeking and in which we want to live.

I am particularly concerned, Mr. Speaker—and it was mentioned earlier by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—with the question of what is detrimental to the interests of Canada. I believe that has to do with the clause on domestic subversion. Who defines the interests of Canada, Mr. Speaker? We are here every day debating what constitutes the interests of Canada. Many of these so-called political and security questions over the years have been questions of whose economic interests are at stake. Anyone who has taken any time at all or made any effort to study history knows that what has sometimes been elevated to the category of "interests of the nation" or the interests of a particular country, or, for that matter, the interests of a particular alliance, has really been the economic interests of powerful groups within that particular country, that particular nation or that particular group of countries. Therefore, it frightens me, Mr. Speaker, to think that we could have so general a definition of what this new security service is instructed to concern itself with. Determining what is "detrimental to the interests of Canada" surely is what the political exercise in this country is all about. We have a wide variety of views as to what constitutes the "interests of Canada". Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we have missed a wonderful opportunity here. I must say I am not surprised that we missed it but I am deeply disappointed, because what we have here is a confirmation of the fact that this Government is not particularly enlightened or concerned about civil liberties. It is not particularly concerned about parliamentary accountability. It has not seized the opportunity to do the kind of things which we could have done. If there had been the will on both sides of the House to do a good job, we could have made Canada into an example to the rest of the world of how to conduct the admittedly necessary business of protecting the security of one's country, but we could have done it in such a way as to eliminate as much as possible the possibility of anyone being unnecessarily harassed, watched or investigated. We missed that opportunity, Mr. Speaker. I can only say that I hope many Canadians share my disappointment and I hope that not too far in the future we will have the opportunity to review the whole thing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Debate.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also want to say a few words on this particular clause of Bill C-9 which is before the House today. I am concerned about the tremendous discretion which the definitions allow the new security service when it comes to defining what "threats to the security of Canada" means.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, there was an excellent comment made about that subject by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) when he spoke in committee on December 6. Perhaps I will repeat it for the House because the Hon. Member really summed up our position well.

He said:

Mr. Chairman, on Clause 2, clearly the relevant and the most important provisions in Clause 2 are the provisions containing the definition threats to the security of Canada, because it is on the basis of the definition of threats to the security of Canada that all other activities of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service flow; that is, other than the secondary mandate, the mandate with respect to security assessment and the mandate with respect to foreign intelligence.

He went on to say, Mr. Speaker:

In my view the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" in this legislation is dangerously drawn up and would permit, furthermore, the targeting of either groups or individuals within Canada that are seeking to support groups outside Canada that are trying to achieve political objectives; trying to overthrow, in a number of instances, repressive military dictatorships. Under the provisions of this legislation as it is worded, Mr. Chairman, under the definition of "threats to the security of Canada", as witness after witness has submitted to the committee, this would effectively permit the service, at its discretion, to target peace activists, church groups that support liberation movements in Central America; to target political organizations or the labour movement when they send funds in support of the African National Congress in South Africa.

[English]

I believe that that definition of the sweeping powers given to the new security service for those kinds of activities really sums up the feelings which a lot of Hon. Members have about the definition of words like "subversion". I know from experience that many peace groups, for example, might be under surveillance because someone in the security service may think that they are on the wrong side of the political fence, or that what they are doing might not be good for the Government of the day, and so on. I also know from experience that in many democratic countries, including our own, many of the church activists are often under surveillance because of some of their activities. As I have already mentioned, groups in this country which are raising funds for certain liberation movements in different parts of the world, and so on, are sometimes under surveillance because the Government of the day might not agree with that kind of activity. Therefore, I am concerned about this provision, Mr. Speaker. I hope that for those reasons this Bill will be amended so that the definition of "subversion" and other definitions are made much more restrictive.

We are, obviously, Mr. Speaker, not the only people who are concerned about this. There has been a general clamour across the country from many different groups that too much power will be given to this particular security service. For example, the Canadian Council of Churches, which is a group of some 12 Canadian churches which voluntarily co-operate through its agencies on matters of economic and social concern, are also very concerned about the breadth and sweeping nature of the security Bill which is before the House today. The Canadian Council of Churches includes the Anglican Church, the Baptist Church, the Lutheran Church, the Greek Orthodox Church, the United Church and many other churches which have banded together to express their great concern about the sweeping nature of this Bill. I believe we should take their point of view into consideration, and that should be one reason at least why this Bill should be radically amended.

Security Intelligence Service

Something else which concerns me as well is that it is not just the churches, Mr. Speaker, who have expressed their concern, but a number of other groups such as the Canadian Civil Liberties Association have done so also. That is a highly respected group which involves a lot of Canadians. It has said to the committee as well as publicly that it is very concerned also about the extent of the discretionary powers which are allowed to be used by the new security service, for example, the snooping power through electronic devices, bugging devices, through all kinds of searches, through mail openings, or through invasion of confidential records. These groups say that these powers are too sweeping under the legislation the way it is written. There is too much discretion being left in the hands of the security service itself, or in the hands of the Government, in terms of deciding how far the security service can or should not go. These are concerns, as I said, not just of a few of us, but of the Canadian Council of Churches and of the Civil Liberties Association of Canada. I can also tell you, Mr. Speaker, that those are the concerns of a lot of average citizens as well.

I said earlier this morning that the United States has a much greater record of political violence. It has experienced the unfortunate assassination of several of its presidents, including the attempted assassination of President Reagan a few years ago. Despite that, the FBI does not have the sweeping powers this Government across the way wants to give to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. I suggest that you would probably agree that Bill is giving unnecessary power to the security service. That is not a very good thing for our society. It is unnecessary and it is going to provoke more harm than good.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Shall all orders and items preceding No. 115 stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSIONERS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved:

That in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending Section 16(1) of the House of Commons Act to provide for the appointment of additional members as Commissioners of Internal Economy from the House at large, and to provide for the remuneration of the Commissioners appointed pursuant to the said section.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have just reviewed my file on this particular question of amending the provisions with respect to the Internal Economy Commission, and I see that I first raised this point almost ten years ago. In October of 1974, at the opening session of Parliament, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) moved the nomination of four of his Cabinet colleagues to the Board of the Internal Economy Commission, I rose on a question of privilege and challenged the view that hitherto I had been given by the Prime Minister's Office, but one which was severely challenged in other sectors, that the commissioners had to be from the Cabinet rather than simply Privy Councillors as provided for in the Act. It is a question of determining which Privy Councillors. In May of 1980, I put forward Bill C-273 which amended the Senate and House of Commons Act but which did not provide for any remuneration. In drafting the terms of this motion I followed the proposal put forward and ready to be tabled in the form of a Bill by the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) in December of 1979. It would have added to the board and provided for some remuneration.

I will read from a letter I wrote to the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead on June 19, 1979. I am sure that he will not mind if I read this although he is the recipient and the owner of the letter now. I was suggesting to him that one of the questions he would have to decide before the newly elected Government met Parliament was this question of the board of Commissioners of Internal Economy. I said:

You may recall that on the opening of the session October, 1974 I raised a question of privilege about the practice of naming exclusively as commissioners four members of the Cabinet and contended that it was within the power of the Prime Minister to include members of the Privy Council who are not of the Cabinet. This would have allowed wider representation including from the Opposition among the commissioners.

It is not that I contended that the practice of naming Cabinet ministers exclusively was in itself illegal but I felt that it was not necessary to do so, contrary to the opinion of the then Prime Minister. In this matter I was supported by our caucus because it was a view that Mr. Speaker should be ultimately assisted by Commissioners of Internal Economy representing the House generally. In order not to open the House of Commons Act for amendment and in order to achieve this, it would be a first step to name Privy Councillors who are not members of the Cabinet among the Commissioners of Internal Economy.

I agree that one or two of these commissioners should be members of the Cabinet as the government party has an undeniable right to majority representation on the Board of Internal Economy.

May I interpose here to say that this could also apply to a number of my colleagues opposite who are, like myself, not of the Cabinet. We are Privy Councillors but we are not of the Cabinet. My reason is that Cabinet Ministers are so busy that it is very difficult to get them together for appropriate meetings to study a situation. I will go into that in a few minutes. My letter continues:

> The upshot was the naming of an advisory committee of the House of Commons to Mr. Speaker and the commissioners which has sat so far under the chairmanship of a member of the Opposition. This latter fact was as a result of keen negotiations I had with the government representatives on the committee where we had the Honourable Angus MacLean to offer as an experienced parliamentarian as chairman.

I think it was a stroke of genius on the part of the committee to accept the Hon. Angus MacLean, because he was probably the most respected Member in the House at the time. He was extremely knowledgeable of this place and a keen observer. He was followed by Bob Coates, MP, as chairman. I went on to say in the letter:

> However, you may recall that the other day you and I discussed briefly the nature of the administration of the House of Commons and its rather sad state in a number of sectors. One of the reasons that this is so is the grave difficulty of getting together the Commissioners of Internal Economy because of the pressure of their other duties.

This had been communicated to me by the then Speaker as being one of the biggest difficulties in getting decisions. I continue:

> It is a rare occasion on which these representatives can be brought together to assist Mr. Speaker and frankly the situation demands better than that. Even sixteen years ago, when I had a brief term of duty as Speaker, it was very difficult to get together the board, and I suppose this may have been at the root originally of my concern about the nature of the administration of the House.

Now, I say advisedly, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a change in the administration. It has been tightened up very much. But there are many of us who feel that the House of Commons has now become in effect almost another department of government. This is a natural reaction of the people who have been brought in to head various sections of the administration. With the greatest respect I say that I do not think the Speaker has the time to oversee fully, as he or she should, the administration of this House as well as look after the responsibilities of being the Speaker of this Chamber. With the greatest respect to the Chair, I say that I think the Speaker's role should be defined as being that of being responsible for the operation of this Chamber and the social responsibilities of the first Member on the Hill. However, the nuts and bolts of the restaurants, the health services, the pay services, the pay scales and negotiations with Hill staff should not be the day-to-day responsibilities of the Speaker.

● (1710)

Matters such as facilities for Members and conditions under which they travel should be considered by a commission board generally composed of Members of the House. We are dealing with ninetheenth century paternalism. The Speaker and four Cabinet Ministers decide what facilities and amenities I and my colleague from Dartmouth should have. They decide how many times he should be able to travel to his constituency and what is required of constituency offices. Cabinet Ministers have their passes and assistance provided through other means. They are so busy with their offices, departments and constituencies that they cannot give the required detailed attention to examine the proposition with regard to Members. The net result is that although they attend commissioners' meetings—I gather they are now on a more regularized basis—they know nothing of what is on the agenda. They receive their advice from the Administrator or from the Speaker who has been advised by the Administrator and other administration officials, whether it be the Sergeant-at-Arms or the Clerk.

I say that is wrong. We have plenty of talent among Members who could handle this job much more effectively and responsibly for the constituents of the board of the Internal Economy Commission who are Members of the House of Commons, their staffs, and the staff of the Hill. That is why I want to see the change.

This is done in a different way in the United Kingdom. The Speaker is still the nominal head and takes a certain direction depending upon the personality of the individual. There is a board which operates usually with a junior Cabinet Minister as the responsible head. A number of staffs at Westminster are unionized. I have been there when the dining room staff, for instance, was on strike. They have a great habit of going on strike. Those negotiations must be carried on by someone authorized to do so on behalf of someone.

As a matter of fact, I would strongly contend right now that the office of the Speaker is not authorized to negotiate collective agreements on behalf of Parliament or the House of Commons with members of the parliamentary staff. The commissioners themselves do not do so. There is nothing in the Senate and House of Commons Act which says that they can do it. Therefore, there has to be legislation introduced which will set up a commission board presided over, if need be, by the Speaker, with power to add a flexible body, but a body definitely corporate in law which can be a party to a collective agreement should one come about.

At the present time those who are asking about collective agreements on the Hill are baying at the moon. The Canada Labour Board, biased as that body may be, cannot authorize the House of Commons by law to be the signatory of a collective agreement. That legislation will have to be brought forward. Doing so provides the opportunity to change the nature of the board of the Internal Economy Commission.

There are a lot of things about which Members are complaining. However, they have no sounding board. There is the Management and Members' Services Committee. The chairman of that committee has never met the commissioners in session. He has never been brought in for consultation as to the nature of recommendations put forward by the advisory committee. Mon Dieu, que c'était un dialogue de sourds under the previous Speaker. The situation has deteriorated to the point at which it became sheer frustration on both sides. That is a committee which is non-partisan. I have been a member of that committee since 1975, and so have many others. It is non-partisan. We are looking after the interests of Members. I have never seen a body that was so frustrated and angry, and that was unnecessary. There was a breakdown in communications which should never have happened.

How can we improve on that? I am not trying to knock the situation merely for the sake of knocking it. I want to improve the situation. This is likely one of the last speeches which I may make in the House. I want to point out that after 27 years as a Member I think I can appreciate the limitations and frustrations that are the lot of a private Member. One of them is this institutional treatment of Members as though they could not look after their own affairs. We are treated as though we were in a big school with a board of masters looking after us which is so high and mighty that they do not understand the problems. For instance, there is not one Cabinet Minister on the commission who understands the problems of a wife who travels far in western Canada. She is charged 1.5 points if she is travelling with her husband but is only charged one point if she travels economy. All Members are entitled to travel first class and are not charged 1.5 points. The decision to mix the points was made by the Internal Economy Commission.

● (1720)

The put-down experienced by wives of Members from western provinces and Newfoundland in order to use that facility is unbelievable. It only takes four trips to exhaust a wife's complement of points. If a Member must travel six times, he can do it in economy, but the wife is aware that by travelling economy she has been put down by this differential rate. This is what I am talking about.

We all know that of the many changes that have been effected with regard to parliamentary staffs this is an improvement, but it should come from where Members can go and see their own people.

I thank you for allowing me to transgress on my time, Mr. Speaker. I earnestly urge all Members to allow this motion to go to committee or to be accepted so that it will be a signal to the Government that Members of Parliament want a change in the nature and composition of the board of the Internal Economy Commission so that they may have a say in the operation of the matters that concern them so much.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. I know you are smiling. Always beware of Members of Parliament who start their speeches this way. However, you may take me at my word. I am somewhat hesitant about speaking again to this subject. The Hon. Member who moved the motion will remember that I took part in a similar debate before. In any case, I am doing this for the simple reason that it may be my last chance to speak to my peers, since I thought, after ten years in politics, this might be the right time to say farewell to this House. At the end of this term, I shall be leaving public life, and my Rosemont constituents will have to choose a new Member of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, with your leave, and despite the rules of relevance, I would like to thank all my colleagues with whom I have worked during the last ten years, and also the officials of the House of Commons and, of course, my constituents in the riding of Rosemont, who during three terms have allowed me to represent their interests at the seat of Government, and to do so to the best of my ability, to work for the well-being of the people who elected me, and to try to make our governments as responsible as possible so that Canada, this exemplary parliamentary democracy, will take the road of progress at the end of the twentieth century and look to a future which, I hope, will be as progressive and as positive as it can be, especially for our youth who are seeking their identity and are looking at the future with some anxiety.

Mr. Speaker, the last ten years were ten years of experience on which I look back with pride, not because of my work as such, because one must be humble in politics, but because serving one's country is probably the highest goal to which we can aspire in our working life.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned accountability, which is the essence of the motion of the Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). The Hon. Member wants to include in the Board of Internal Economy, now consisting of members of the Privy Council, a number of backbenchers who would provide better representation, within a body that manages our destiny as an institution, for the divergent but also complementary interests of the Parties, the Government and backbenchers, the aim being improved accountability, whether physical or financial, on the part of the administration of this House, to the elected representatives and the Canadian people.

I need no convincing by the Hon. Member to realize that this is the way of the future. In fact, the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, or rather the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform, whose third report and the amendments proposed therein continue to structure the business of the House during this trial period—it is to be hoped they will become permanent for the next Parliament—this committee then proposed in its ninth report a formula very similar to the one suggested by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West. In this report, committee members suggested that the enabling legislation that provides for the organization of the Board of Internal Economy be amended to allow four backbenchers to sit on the Board, two representing Government backbenchers and two representing Opposition backbenchers, with at least one representing the Official Opposition. More importantly, Mr. Speaker, Special Committee members were in favour of having these representatives elected by their respective caucuses, this to avoid a situation where once more, the Government would be controlling these appointments. The exact formula could be worked out later and is not all that important. It is the principle that counts, which is to make the Board of Internal Economy truly representative of the interests of all Members of this House, which is not the case right now. I am not criticizing the way the Board operates.I think Hon. Members who sit on the Board at the present time and are members of the Privy Council certainly have our interests at heart and are doing their best to respond to suggestions coming from the Committee on Management and Members' Services.

That being said, the very concept of accountability implies that we must not only have the right, we must also be seen to have the right. The visibility of this right is lacking in the Board of Internal Economy and its membership. Let's be realistic. In other parliamentary democracies, even in Canada in the provincial legislatures, backbenchers have a say in the administration of the institution. Why should we not have the same responsibility and the same duties here in the House of Commons, especially since our parliamentary colleagues in the other place have already taken steps to make their presence felt in the manner in which they are administered.

Mr. Speaker, in the Senate, which I suppose I should not name, they have already done in practice, though not in law, what the Hon. Member for Edmonton West is suggesting.

We are nearing the end of this Parliament. I do not think that, in the few days of debate we have left before a general election, we can expect to change the Board of Internal Economy. It certainly is not, and perhaps should not be, a legislative priority. However, I urge all my colleagues on both sides of the House who return after the election to act on the recommendations of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, which are also contained in the Ninth Report of the Special Committee on Regulator Reform and adopt them, either as is or as amended.

The time to do this is at the beginning of a new Parliament. We now have two new leaders. What will be their respective positions? Let the voters decide. However, one will be Leader of the Opposition and one Prime Minister. The two new leaders have promised to give the House of Commons more responsibility and a more active role, which might even go so far as the much maligned free vote, but at least some necessary changes will be made in our operating methods.

The Third Report of the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform is only a first step. The House must go much further when a new Parliament begins. For instance, it should start by broadening the scope of the Board of Internal Economy by opening membership to backbenchers and making the Board truly accountable. Mr. Speaker, as you know, neither the Chair nor the President of the Privy Council nor members of the Board of Internal Economy may be questioned here in the House on the operations of this Board. We have no way, as parliamentarians, to express within these walls any problems, concerns, queries or complaints about the Board of Internal Economy. We must go through the Committee on Management and Members' Services, which is only an advisory body that transmits the complaints of Members of the House of Commons to the Board of Internal Economy, the latter having the actual executive power with respect to the administration of this House. Therefore, a good place to start would be to bring some democracy to the Board of Internal Economy, to do what our Senate colleagues have done, and our colleagues in Westminster, and the Questure in France, and what our provincial legislatures or at least most of them have already done, which is to allow Members to run their own affairs, because that is what it boils down to. Let us run our own show! This House belongs to us. We work in it. We are responsible to the voters if there are any administration problems. Therefore, if we are accountable for its administration, we should also participate in that administration. Responsibility implies accountability. However, for the time being we are accountable, but not responsible. Give us the responsibility and we can then be truly accountable for the administration of the House of Commons!

Mr. Speaker, without wishing to take up any more of the House's time, since other Members will probably want to speak as well, I should only like to add that I agree wholeheartedly with the Member for Edmonton West, who for many years has been in favour of this measure which, as a concept, is reflected in the recommendations of the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform. It is a measure that probably has the support of most Members of this House. I therefore urge the future Leader of the Government, when a new Parliament begins, to implement not only this recommendation but also the other recommendations made by the Special Committee on Regulatory Reform, in order to make this institution as modern and efficient as it should be and also to make it accountable for its administration to those it administers.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I want to thank my constituents and my colleagues. Until we meet again. Goodbye!

An Hon. Member: Hear!

• (1730)

[English]

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I can only say it is very odd to rise in the House of Commons to speak after two distinguished gentlemen who have both indicated they may each have made their last speech. I would like to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who has been a prominent force in the House of Commons for as long as I have been here. He is a former Speaker of the House and has always taken a very active interest in the proceedings of the House of Commons' committees on procedure. He has also taken a very prominent role in financial measures before the House of Commons.

I also regret that my friend, the Hon. Member for Rosemount (Mr. Lachance) is leaving. It seems to me that he and I have spent the last year working together on the Special Committee on Procedural Reform for the House of Commons. I have come to know him and to appreciate him in ways that I had not before this opportunity came about. I think the House will be poorer for the loss of both these hon. gentlemen.

One of the things that always impressed me about the hon. gentleman from—

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to do Hon. Members who participate in the debate the courtesy of being here, but unfortunately I am now five minutes late for a very important steering committee meeting downstairs. I shall return immediately so that I will not miss their golden words.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West has a reputation for being very persistent. This particular motion is one that he has been trying to convince the Government to accept for about ten years. It is a motion that I support.

I have never understood the reluctance of the Government of Canada to allow Members of Parliament who are Privy Councillors but who were not Members of the Government to participate in the affairs of the House of Commons. We were able to obtain a halfway step in the formation of the Special Committee on Members' Services, and later its inclusion as a committee in its own right in the Standing Orders. But there is nothing in the law that ever prevented the Government from accepting the principle that other Members from other sides of the House and from the back-bench of the governing party be represented on the Commission of Internal Economy. It is no wonder that Members used to call the Commission of Internal Economy the commission of the infernal economy. It tended to make judgments and spending decisions which many Members had a great deal of difficulty understanding and accepting. It was, I think, one of the extensions of the Government that caused Members of Parliament a great deal of difficulty in understanding the motivations of Government in terms of its approach to the House of Commons. The fact that the Government kept extending its control over the precincts of the House of Commons, over the operation of the building that houses the House of Commons and the Senate, always struck me as extraordinarily retrogressive steps.

One of the reasons I support the proposition advanced by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West is that the House of Commons Act, Sections 15 and 16, which set out the powers and the duties of the Committee of Internal Economy. Section 16(1) reads:

> 16.(1) The Governor in Council shall appoint four members of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada who are also members of the House of Commons, who, with the Speaker of the House of Commons, shall be commissioners for the purposes of this section and Sections 17 and 18.

You will note it simply says members of the Privy Council who are members of the House of Commons. It does not say members of the Privy Council who are Members of the Cabinet or Members of the Government. Yet, the Government has refused to accept the possibility of extending to Members on all sides of the House the opportunity to participate in what is in effect their Chamber.

This reluctance on the part of the Government has made life more difficult for Speakers. It has certainly made life more difficult in the House for the Government than was necessary. It was in my judgment a stupid blunder on the part of the Government not to extend representation on the Commission to Members on the opposite side and to Members on the back-benches of the Government side. It always increased the suspicion that what was going on in the House of Commons was not in the interests of Members but, rather, only in the interests, of the Government itself.

If Hon. Members will look at the work that has been done by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure they will see that one of the items we took up was the question of how should the House of Commons govern itself. Should we continue with the existing example? Should we look, instead, at the way in which the Senate has governed itself? Should we look at what other Parliaments have done? In effect, members of the committee examined very closely the manner in which the British House of Commons governed itself. We also took a look at the way in which the Senate of Canada governed itself.

Hon. Members of the House of Commons may be amazed to discover that Members of Parliament in the Senate have a system of governing themselves which is absolutely mind-boggling to those of us who sit in the Lower House. There, power over Senate affairs is shared among all Parties. Members are appointed to the governing committee in the other place, not on the basis of being members of the Government but rather for independence of mind and questions of good judgment.

Here, one has to demonstrate perfection by being in the Cabinet to be a member of the Commissioners of Internal Economy. In Great Britain they go further. They provide for a strong committee on which the Government has representation and on which the back-benchers of the governing party have representation, as well as all other parties. There is a fair amount of consultation and consensus developed over time. Even though the Government makes the appointments, the appointments in fact are made on a highly consensual basis.

What we tried to do in the report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure will be found in its ninth report to the House, which was tabled on June 22, 1983 and is now Sessional Paper 321-8/26F. The report is not long, it is succinct and to the point. It makes a great deal of sense. It will provide a blueprint for whomever becomes Prime Minister after the next election for reforming the House of Commons in a manner that will be acceptable to all, except those people who have sat on the Commission of Internal Economy as Commissioners and have jealously guarded those powers. To those Members who have never had that advantage, these reforms will seem like a breath of fresh air.

The committee made a number of recommendations which I think are eminently supportable. Basically the committee indicated that the House of Commons Act could be changed to amend the existing sections with which I dealt earlier in my speech, that a new board of internal economy be set up and that the change in terms of membership would be as follows: Members of Parliament, not just Members of Parliament who happen to be Privy Councillors, who are not in Cabinet would be eligible to sit on the new board. That would open the scope of membership to all Members of the House of Commons. It would not exclusively provide an opportunity only for those Members of the House of Commons who are Privy Councillors, not in Cabinet per se. I think that is a significant change in itself.

The board in the future would be composed of the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker, two Ministers of the Crown—that is Cabinet Ministers,—the Leader of the Official Opposition or a Member designated by him and four others: two Members appointed by the Government caucus and two from the Opposition caucuses, including at least one from the Official Opposition. The proposal we made did not specify how the caucuses were to make their appointments because we thought that was best left to the caucuses themselves. This would ensure that the dominance in terms of numbers at least on the new board of internal economy would be broadly spread out through the system.

We would recognize the special position of the Leader of the Opposition who under the Standing Orders is in fact an officer of the House of Commons. He would be represented on that board in any way he saw fit. It would satisfy the necessity of Members of the back-benches of the Opposition caucus and of the right of the New Democratic Party or a third Party to be represented by caucus as well as the right of the back-benches of the governing Party to be represented by caucus. It would provide a broader range of opinion and it would provide an appropriate role for Members of Parliament to participate in the governing of our Chamber.

Mr. Deans: That is fair.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): I hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). We tried to provide when we were discussing this matter a method which would be unassailable, that no person, not even the most devout proponent of the existing system, could possibly find unfair. We tried to make it more palatable for the Government and we included two not one representatives from Cabinet on the board. I felt that was somewhat excessive, but I recognized the fear which the Government had that Members might act irresponsibly. It was certainly culpable because of the reluctance to allow anyone else on the committee before, but probably as an interim measure this was as good as we could get.

If we take a look at the proposals we have produced we find that they meet the requirements the Hon. Member for Edmonton West has put forward in terms of fairness, being logical and disturbing the Government probably less than it might be disturbed in its desire to control the affairs of the House of Commons.

I confess that as a former Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader, that is to the President of the Privy Council—of course not the current one—I often felt that because of the responsibility of the President of the Privy Council for the Commissioners of Internal Economy, he tried to run the House of Commons as if it were a branch of his own Department. In fact, I often felt there were dangerous tendencies on the part of Presidents of the Privy Council to regard the operations of the House of Commons as they regarded the operations of their own offices. I think it is an instinctive reaction because of the unique position in which the House of Commons Act puts the President of the Privy Council. Basically he carries responsibility for the Estimates and, by and large through the Council, he has the responsibility to veto spending propositions. In point of fact, the way in which financial reporting was established, he had power over the operations of the House of Commons as if it were in fact his own Department.

One proposal we made was an attempt to break that kind of absolute control with which the President of the Privy Council tended to feel he was blessed by the House of Commons Act, by trying to demonstrate that there were wider interests to be considered as well. I might say that the President of the Privy Council often shared that power and authority, particular aspects of it, with the Speaker and with Opposition Parties. It was never a total one-way thing, but the responsibility, as the Act was interpreted and implemented, certainly led the President of the Privy Council to feel that he was responsible for the conduct of business in the House of Commons.

I think that approach communicated itself to the Government. One tendency I have seen over the last five years or six years which I regard as quite undesirable has been the overtaking of the administration of the House of Commons by the Government. For example, there has been the change in the control over the grounds outside from the House of Commons to the Department of Public Works. That is one item which I find most unfortunate. I feel the House of Commons and the Senate should be much more co-operative in order to fight off the imperatives of various government Departments as they try to take over more and more of the precincts of Parliament. It is recognized by all that they can play a very useful consultative role, particularly as the precincts of Parliament have grown substantially over the last 10 years.

As a result we have another proposal in our report which requires the establishment of a joint committee on parliamentary services between the House of Commons and the Senate. We feel that would lead to a quick resolution of a number of duplications of services that have continued to plague us, and of the difficulties we have had from time to time in terms of the jurisdiction of the building.

As Hon. Members will recognize, there has been a tendency for the jurisdictions to clash. I think we are all aware of the last example, but I think I should mention it. It occurred when a decision was made on the House of Commons side to have a different form of security clearance than Members of the other House were prepared to accept. There was a clash between the representatives of those chambers.

Putting in place a mechanism such as the committee recommended would go a long way toward eliminating those kinds of problems and making life in this building that we share much more harmonious than it has been from time to time. We do have a number of joint committees. For example, there is the joint committee on the library, the joint committee on the restaurant, and a number of others. Unfortunately, for reasons beyond my knowledge at the present time, the chairmen have not called meetings of those committees. We have not had an opportunity in those committees to review the activities that properly are the responsibility of clearly defined committees within the responsibility of the Standing Orders of both Members of the House and Members of the Senate.

It has always been a source of amazement to me, and from time to time I have made inquiries, that the mechanisms in place to provide for the calling of these meetings were never really activated. With the new rule that emanated from the third report of the special committee, I hope that kind of situation will no longer continue. It strikes me that once Members give up their rights to sit, meet and discuss the business of how the House of Commons operates, they give them up to the bureaucracy, the Government or a party leadership. That is undesirable. We have suffered from the effects of these neglects. In my judgment, we have only ourselves to blame because we as a group have not brought pressure to bear on our respective caucus organizations and leaderships.

I agree with the thrust that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West has developed over the last ten years on this matter. He has been a leader in these matters. He has correctly pointed out on every occasion he has been able to find in the House how we have cheated ourselves of a perhaps much different kind of administration in the House of Commons. I am delighted that he has again had an opportunity to put forward his message. I am pleased to inform him that in point of fact the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure did take into account the representations he has been making over the last ten years. It did put some effort into a discussion of the problem. It has come down with a report which we believe is clear, concise and acceptable to Members on all sides and, hopefully to the Party leadership on all sides.

I hope that when the new Parliament is called into being one of the first items will be, not the calling of the old forum of the Commission of Internal Economy but, instead, a recognition by the new Prime Minister that as an interim step the commissioners of economy should be expanded by calling on Members of the House of Commons who are Privy Councillors, but not necessarily Members of the Cabinet, to serve on this committee, and that at an appropriate time a Bill will be brought forward to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act to allow Members who are not Privy Councillors to sit on this committee as well, the way the committee has recommended.

Hon. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to enter this debate on Motion No. 115 of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I too should begin by sharing the concern expressed by my colleague about the loss to this House and to Canada of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West who will not be returning after the next election. I too share the view that he has made a great contribution to this place and to the parliamentary life of Canada. I regret that we will not have the benefit of Hon. Member's wisdom and sage advice from time to time, as we have had in the past. I have served on a number of committees with the Hon. Member. He has always been an excellent Member and has made a great contribution, whether it be on the finance committee, miscellaneous estimates or any of the others he has served on so ably. His contribution in this House has been excellent. He has been here for well over 20 years. It is a shame to see him lost to the people of Canada.

With regard to his motion, it is in some ways precluded or superseded by the actions that have taken place by the Special Committee on on Standing Orders and Procedure to which my friend from Kenora-Rainy River referred. There is a report outstanding which deals with the question of the Commissioners of Internal Economy. It makes recommendations with which I believe there is a great deal of sympathy throughout the House. Restudying the issue, as suggested in the motion before us today, would be somewhat redundant in that that job already has been done by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures.

Quite frankly, I share the view of my friend from Kenora-Rainy River and my friend from Edmonton West that there is a necessity to change the composition of the board of internal economy. As has been stated, there are obviously some problems with that in that the current situation effectively puts the Government in charge of the spending of taxpayers' money. The spending of taxpayers' money is certainly involved in the administration of the House of Commons. The Government includes Privy Councillors, the Cabinet, and is in many ways synonymous with the Cabinet. Since it is the President of the Privy Council who is responsible for carrying through the estimates of the House of Commons, along with the Speaker, it falls on the shoulders of the Government to carry out this responsibility. The situation has evolved where the board of internal economy includes only Members of the Privy Council who sit in the Treasury benches.

I suggest, as did my friend from Kenora-Rainy River, that there is certainly room and latitude for change in this area. I believe, and I am sure that Members who are here today, as well as those who cannot be with us, would certainly agree, that the whole question of parliamentary reform, including the parliamentary responsibility for its own spending and its own internal decision-making, is something with which we should be moving forward.

As my friend from Kenora-Rainy River mentioned, the ninth report of the special committee puts forward several recommendations. The fourth and fifth recommendations deal most explicitly with the matter before us today. The fourth recommendation is "that the House of Commons Act be amended to restructure the board of internal economy". The committee members in their report went on to say that they did not feel it is appropriate for only Cabinet Ministers to be responsible for the internal management of the House of Commons, that the House of Commons is a community of many interests and this should be reflected in the way the commissioners are appointed. That is certainly true.

If Parliament is to become more responsible and respected in the eyes of the Canadian public, it is necessary that it assume more of the responsibilities for its actions. This means a reduction in the power of the Government over the House of Commons, or the Government in relation to the House of Commons. However, I think quite frankly that that is a good thing. I think it is a good thing that the House of Commons be seen to be taking more responsibility for its own actions, and that Members of Parliament as individuals be seen to play a greater role in Parliament. I would like to see these changes take place.

Mr. Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and Motion No. 2 (Mr. Robinson (Burnaby)), Motion No. 5 (Mr. Allmand), and motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 (Mr. Robinson (Burnaby)).

Mr. Speaker: I would like to make a ruling on the point of order that is outstanding with regard to Bill C-9. I would like to thank Hon. Members for their contributions to the consideration of the admissibility of Motions Nos. 93 and 94. The Chair has given serious consideration to the argument with respect to the review committee's powers. I still have serious reservations about the admissibility of these motions because they appear to go beyond the scope of the Bill as agreed to at second reading. Nevertheless, the contributions of Hon. Members were sufficiently persuasive that I am prepared to give them the benefit of the doubt.

Accordingly, Motions Nos. 93 and 94 will be grouped with Motions Nos. 95, 96 and 97 for debate and shall be voted on separately.

Before Private Members' Hour began, the House was considering the report stage of Bill C-9. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) had the floor. I now recognize the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much having to take part in yet another debate on the security legislation which is before us. It is a very monstrous piece of legislation and one which threatens the security of Canadians in the guise of attempting to protect the security of Canadians.

I would like to deal with this all-embracing, ill-defined, enormously mistaken and ill-thought-out part of the legislation which contains the definition of the words "threats to the security of Canada". Such threats have been far too broadly defined. The legislation is wobbly. It is not careful and it is not precise. Its result is that normal, law-abiding people who pose not threat at all to the security of Canada can be targeted for all means of surveillance.

Let us look at what is stated in the legislation. Under the subtitle "Duties and Functions of Service", Clause 12 of the Bill reads as follows:

> The Service shall collect, by investigation or otherwise, to the extent that it is strictly necessary, and analyse and retain information and intelligence respecting activities that may on reasonable grounds be suspected of constituting threats to the security of Canada—

Turning to the definitions clause which is Clause 2, the relevant portion of that clause reads as follows:

> "threats to the security of Canada" means
> (a) espionage or sabotage that is against Canada or is detrimental to the interests of Canada or activities directed toward or in support of such espionage or sabotage,—

I note, however, that espionage and sabotage are not themselves defined and that the interests of Canada are not defined. They could include economic interests or any number of interests apart from vital issues of national security. Paragraph (b) of the relevant portion of Clause 2 reads as follows:

> —foreign influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person,—

Does that mean any one person? What does clandestine or deceptive mean? It is not defined. "Foreign influenced" is a very, very broad expression that could involve people belonging to international organizations. Paragraph (c) reads:

> —activities within or relating to Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property—

Note how broad that is. It does not include only threats to life and physical security but also threats to property. These could be trivial threats to property as well as serious ones. The paragraph continues:

> —for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state,—

Again, this includes the whole world and any kind of political objective, even though it may be a very legitimate one. paragraph (d) reads:

> —activities directed toward undermining by covert unlawful acts, or directed toward or intended ultimately—

And "ultimately" is a word that we might well dwell upon.

> —to lead to the destruction or overthrow by by violence of, the constitutionally established system of government in Canada,—

There follows a paragraph which exempts people who are engaged in lawful dissent or lawful political protest but, contrary to the wild, woolly and broad definitions under "threats to security," the exemptions are very narrowly defined. This paragraph reads:

—but does not include lawful advocacy, protest or dissent, unless carried on in conjuction with any of the activities referred to in paragraphs (a) to (d).

Not very many things fall under the exemption category whereas a great many things constitute a threat to our security.

This ill-defined clause has been kept in the Bill despite cries of protest from civil liberties organizations, church organizations and many others. Hearings have been held on this matter and there have been protests. My own Party has protested this clause most vigorously, strenuously and in great detail. The net has been cast too broadly.

Foreign-influenced activities within or relating to Canada could be activities which have nothing to do with terrorism, espionage or anything else that constitutes a serious threat to the security of the country. When dealing with the reference to political violence, the McDonald Commission recommended that the word "serious" be added. Even that word was not included. We are therefore faced with a definition section that is quite dangerous to those engaging in lawful political discussion.

I would like to refer to some critical remarks that have been made by the Canadian Council of Churches on this matter. I think these remarks are very good both in their philosophical approach and in their very precise analysis of particular clauses. The Canadian Council of Churches represents an enormous cross-section of the religious community within Canada. Member churches include the Anglican Church in Canada, the Armenian Church, the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec, the Disciples of Christ, the Coptic Orthodox Church, the Greek Orthodox Church, the Lutheran Church in America—Canada Section, the Presbyterian Church in Canada, the Reformed Church in America, the Society of Friends, the Salvation Army and the United Church of Canada. These churches collaborated to come up with what, in my opinion, is an excellent critique of the Bill.

The philosophical point raised by members of the Canadian Council of Churches which I think is well worth considering in our debate today is the difficulty of attaining security, and the very fundamental questions that arise and must be asked. What or whom is the Government seeking to secure against what kind of threat and by what means? There are simply no easy answers to these questions.

Members of the council warn against very heavy handed measures which are intended to secure the lives and communities of Canada but which may not do so. They call the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" vague and uncertain and hence excessively broad in effect. They are particularly concerned about the broad interpretations of paragraphs (b) and (c) of Clause 2 to which I have already referred. I shall read that concern from the report:

Our submission is that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service could construe lawful church activities, for example in mission work and/or lawful church and community activities, including development education, peace advocacy and human rights defence as falling within these definitions, and hence to determine previously lawful activities as threats to the security of Canada.

This is an extremely serious charge which has been made by the mainstream Christian churches of our society. They say that according to these loose and woolly definitions, their own peace activities and missionary efforts could be construed as being threats to the security of Canada. Let me explain how this is so.

With regard to Clause 2, paragraphs (a) and (b), they are concerned about the vague phrase "the interests of Canada". What are the legitimate interests of Canada and who defines what they are? Can we distinguish the interests of Canada from the interests of Canadian citizens? Could there be a legitimate conflict among the citizens of Canada as to what Canada's interests are? They cite, for example a visiting foreign finance minister from a country in which churches have carried on mission work for many years. Suppose the finance minister requested a private meeting with church officials and that meeting took place. Because the meeting was private, it would then be considered clandestine and perhaps deceptive. He may wish to decrease his country's dependence on Canadian exports, but increase Canadian foreign aid—a very laudable objective in our opinion, but certainly not one which the Canadian Government would promote.

• (1810)

The visiting foreign minister might enlist the assistance of Canadian friends in the churches in Canada. Therefore, the meeting could be construed as foreign influence because he comes from a foreign country. It may be detrimental to the interests of Canada if the interests of Canada are seen in a very narrow, economic fashion. It may be in the interests of Canada to exploit all foreign countries to the hilt. That is a horrendous but, nevertheless, very possible definition of the interests of Canada. The meeting might be classified as deceptive if it had not been clearly specified presicely what the meeting was about. If the meeting was given a loose definition to the press, or to other people, that it was to be about missionary work, it could then be included in the clandestine and deceptive category.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I must advise her that her time has expired.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, could I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to finish my remarks.

Mr. Kaplan: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member seeks the unanimous consent of the House to continue her speech. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, one of her colleagues made exactly that same speech less than one hour ago. Therefore I withhold my consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is not unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, normally Canadians are said to be rather dull and not politically active. In fact, Canadians have generally been described as being pretty grey. When looking at the legislation which the Government is introducing, an observer from another country or from another planet would surely come to the conclusion that underneath this facade, or this reputation which Canadians have, they must be pretty dangerous animals. They must exist in tremendous turmoil underneath the surface. They must be plotting and they must be active in terrorist organizations. And, they must be concerned with pulling down, by violent means, the state.

The Bill before us treats this country and Canadian people as though subversion is running rampant. We must guard against it. There is a tremendous danger to the security of our lawful form of government which requires a secret police force with tremendous powers so that this widespread subversion can be stamped out. But, it is absurd to assure that Canadians are subversive folk and terrorist people, that we have a tremendous history of subversion and terrorism in this country, and that the Government needs the type of legislation it is presenting to us today.

In this year of our Lord 1984, a year made famous by George Orwell in his book Nineteen Eighty-Four, we find being brought to life in the Bill things about which George Orwell warned. Particularly, in the area of definition, we find the thoughts of George Orwell coming to life.

This Bill allows the Government far-reaching powers. The definitions are so loose that practically any political activity that attempts to create some change can be deemed to be against the best interests of Canada and the Canadian Government. Farmers who protest high interest rates and farm bankruptices; workers involved in strikes or demonstrations; peace activists signing petitions; members of churches involved in raising funds for other countries in which dictatorships of the right or the left might exist; can all be considered, under the broad definition of this legislation as subversive. People can have their telephones tapped, medical files looked into, legal files snooped into, and be subjected to all sorts of activities that would normally be associated with a police state. People who are involved in very legitimate political activities could be subjected to acts which would normally be found in a police state, whether of the right or of the left persuasion.

I mentioned George Orwell earlier because in much of the debate which surrounds Bill C-9, we find Orwellian thoughts being expressed, and the type of double-think about which George Orwell warned. It seems very curious to me that the Government set up the McDonald Commission to look into the alleged illegal activities of the RCMP and to offer some remedies in order that the illegal activities which were being performed against Canadian citizens would not occur in the future. The McDonald Commission went through that long, arduous process, and what was the result? A Bill was introduced by the Government which would legalize the infringements which took place against the individual civil liberties of Canadians. The Government used the excuse of the commission to look into attacks on the civil liberties of Canadians. It used the commission as an excuse to legalize those very activities the McDonald Commission was originally set up in an attempt to protect Canadians from. It is Orwellian double-thinking that a government, on the one hand, would introduce a Charter of Rights and be very proud of what it has given to Canadian people—the protection of religious and political freedoms, and the right to express those beliefs—and, on the other hand, take away those rights and freedoms with this Bill.

Unfortunately, our Charter of Rights and Freedoms has a big red ink spot on it. Our national symbol has been spoiled by a misguided person. However, this Bill is a black spot on our Constitution and on our Charter of Rights which is a thousand times more evil than the red spot which exists on that document. This is a black spot which removes the heart and soul of our Constitution and our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The red spot is only a spot of ink on a piece of paper. This legislation ushers in the night—a dark period for Canadians.

Nowhere is this more evident than in the definition clause. My colleagues in the Conservative Party and in the New Democratic Party have expressed over and over again in this House the dangers which exist in the Bill. I am sure the Government, and the Minister responsible, will say the examples were are using are far-fetched, that they are not going to spy on people we are concerned, and perhaps raising money for some cause in El Salvador. Of course, they are not going to start keeping files on people who march in peace demonstrations, or on farmers who use their tractors in blockades as a way of protesting high interest rates and farm bankruptcies. The Government will say these are far-fetched examples.

It might be true, Mr. Speaker, that the present Minister and the present Government might not use these powers or interpret these powers in such a wide way. I expect those Hon. Members are honourable and decent people and will not needlessly go out and use what we consider to be illegal activities on their fellow Canadians. I am not certain, however, Mr. Speaker, of their capacity to control those men and women who will be hired to man this organization. I believe the Government and that Minister have a long record of not being quite capable of handling the people they are supposed to be in charge of.

Our view, Mr. Speaker, is that we are creating a monster which is going to have a life of its own and the political masters of that monster are going to be quite incompetent to controlling it, as they have been incompetent in controlling other parts of their bureaucracy. Other parts of their bureaucracy have grown, inflated and achieved a life of their own and have swallowed up their political masters. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, we are creating a monster here which is going to be much more fearful than any of the bureaucratic monsters which the Government opposite has created. It is going to create a secret police bureaucratic monster by which numerous individual Canadians are going to be swallowed up, and perhaps destroyed in terms of their individual lives, because that Government opposite cannot control the people of whom it is supposed to be the political master.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. de Jong: I would ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to continue for a few more minutes to complete my remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House give its unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member time to continue his remarks?

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to speak on Bill C-9 I cannot but help think that the measures proposed in this Bill by the Minister and by the Government are probably more in line with that old medical maxim that "cure is more dangerous than the disease".

I can honestly say, Mr. Speaker, I have probably had more letters from constituents and concerned Canadians about this Bill than I have received about any other piece of legislation I have had to deal with in this House since I came here, and it is little wonder. The Minister himself has been required to attempt to justify the provisions of this Bill to a greater extent than any other Minister, of which I am aware, in dealing with any other piece of legislation in this House. It is little wonder, Mr. Speaker, when one takes a look at the press interpretations of how this Bill would be applied and how it could be interpreted in the future once it passes through this House.

Let me give an example of the way the press has described, not only what is contained in the Bill but what the Minister has said about how the Bill could be implemented, and that certainly gives me great concern. I believe the same concern is shared by constituents across the country who have written to me and other Hon. Members. For example, in the Montreal Gazette on May 30, 1983, the headline reads, "Kaplan warns the Peace Movement could be probed". The Globe and Mail on May 10 stated, "A New Security Agency can Break the Law". The headline on the Vancouver Sun on May 24 reads, "A Shocking Bit of Business". It goes on and on, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, as I read those headlines myself, before I had the opportunity to go through the Bill to any great extent, I wondered what the Minister and the Government were trying to do in terms of the civil rights and liberties of the citizens of this country.

I have several letters here I am sure would be of interest to the Minister, because I believe they adequately express the sentiments of a cross-section of people who have written to me. I will read one from—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. However, I should remind the Hon. Member that we are now debating Motions Nos. 2, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 which have been grouped for debate. It would be helpful to the Chair, as is the practice in the House, that when Hon. Members rise to speak on debate they perhaps indicate to the Chair what motions they are directing their remarks to. In that way the Chair would be in a position to evaluate whether or not the Hon. Member's remarks are relevant to the motion.

I have been listening attentively to the Hon. Member who now has the floor. His comments really are of a general nature. He is quoting newspaper articles and letters. That is hardly, I must say, pertinent to motions, most of whose objects are to delete clauses, and one which strives to modify certain articles. I would invite the Hon. Member, therefore, to be more pertinent to the motions now before the House, if he would please do so.

Mr. Young: Thank you for your intervention, Mr. Speaker. I was addressing the concerns which people have about Clause 2, the definition of "threats to the security of Canada", and how the Government and the new security service could be inclined to interpret that particular Clause of the Bill. I certainly was speaking in a general sense, because my constituents, generally speaking, are not lawyers. They do not understand the legal interpretations which may be given strictly to these Clauses of the Bill with which we are concerned. However, I thought it important that the Minister, and Hon. Members in the House, understood the general concerns about the direction in which the Government may or may not go.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair, of course, has no intention whatsoever—and it is not permissible—to debate with the Hon. Member or to participate in the debate. However, the Hon. Member is surely knowledgeable of the process of passing legislation in the House. There are circumstances in which the Hon. Member may make comments of a general nature regarding the principles of a bill and to the contents of other clauses. I must ask the Hon. Member to be relevant and pertinent, and speak strictly to the motions now before the House. I am sure I will have his support in that objective.

Mr. Young: Unfailing support, Mr. Speaker. Clause 2 of the Bill, Mr. Speaker, provides the definition of "threats to the security of Canada" as follows:

(a) espionage or sabotage that is against Canada or is detrimental to the interests of Canada or activities directed toward or in support of such espionage or sabotage, . . .

Or:

(b) foreign-influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person, . . .

Again, Mr. Speaker, it would include:

(c) activities within or relating to Canada directed toward or in support of the threat or use of acts of serious violence against persons or property for the purpose of achieving a political objective within Canada achieving a political objective within Canada or a foreign state—

● (1830)

It also included activities directed toward undermining by covert and unlawful acts or directed toward or intended ultimately to lead to the destruction or overthrow by violence of the constitutionally established government in Canada, but it does not include lawful advocacy, protest or dissent unless carried on in conjunction with any of the activities referred to in paragraphs (a) to (e). I could go on but I think that suffices to give you the flavour of the things we are concerned about.

The Canadian Council of Churches, including such churches as the Anglican Church of Canada, the Armenian Church in North America, the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec, the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), the Coptic Orthodox Church, the Greek Orthodox Church, the Lutheran Church in America—Canada section, the Presbyterian Church in Canada, the Reformed Church in America—Ontario Classis, the Religious Society of Friends, the Salvation Army, and the United Church of Canada, have all expressed their concern that the definition of threats to the security of Canada is vague and uncertain and hence excessively broad. They expressed the view that they are particularly concerned about the effect of broad interpretations of paragraphs (b) and (c) of Clause 2, the clause we are dealing with at the present time. Their submission was that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service could construe lawful church activities such as mission work and/or lawful church and community activities, including development education, peace advocacy and human rights defence as falling within these definitions, and hence to determine previously lawful activities as threats to the security of Canada.

With regard to Clause 2(a) and (b), there is much concern with the vague phrase "the interests of Canada". What are the legitimate interests of Canada? Who defines them? Are the interests of Canada distinguishable from the interests of the citizens of Canada? Could there be a legitimate conflict among the citizens of Canada as to just what Canada's interests are? These are the kinds of things we are seriously concerned about, and it was in that light that I referred to other general concerns. For example, in paragraph (b), we should consider that a visiting foreign Finance Minister, from a country where churches have carried on mission work for many years, requests a private meeting with Canadian church officials in Canada to discuss Canadian aid and trade policies. If he wishes to decrease his country's dependence on Canadian exports while maintaining or increasing Canadian aid to his country—

Mr. Kaplan: That is the third time I have heard that speech.

Mr. Young: It may be the same speech but it is worth repeating if it gets the message through his tiny ears.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments on Clause 2. Members are well aware, and I suggest that most people who are watching are aware as well, that we are dealing with the definition clause. In the short five years I have been in Parliament I have discovered that these clauses are frequently the key to any legislation. Any parliamentarian who takes his responsibility seriously would take a good, hard look at definition clauses. A constituent asked me last week whether, if we take the security service out of the hands of the RCMP and place it in the hands of a civilian agency, as the Minister has asked us to do, that means that the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) would be eligible to be the director of this security service. Could that be done through and Order in Council without going through the House of Commons? Well, Mr. Speaker, that is what could happen. For people in the City of Calgary, in my region for the most part, the thought of that kind of appointment to this kind of a job was extremely bothersome. When you combine that principle with the looseness of definitions which currently exists in Clause 2, then I think you are asking for trouble in the future. The difficulty with Order in Council appointments is that they can always be made without public examination and for partisan purposes. They does not happen always, but the temptation is always there.

In the case of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service we might have a somewhat different view of the need to have really tight definitions. That is conceivable. The RCMP have made a couple of mistakes over their 100 years and more of existence. But it is an organization with a training program, a tradition, and a concept of the law and its place in Canadian society. With loose definitions, an organization like that is not likely to overstep; in fact it is less likely to overstep the bounds. But when we are dealing with a civilian agency, with a director appointed in secret through Order in Council, then I suggest we are putting a tremendous amount of temptation in the hands of a government which sooner or later will make a partisan appointment. We have seen that happen with the CIA in the United States. We have heard suggestions, through literature and the media generally, that the appointment process for the CIA, and even for the FBI, makes the office holder feel some sense of being beholden to the political Party that makes the appointment. Someone said we changed Ali Baba, but we still have the same 40 thieves here on Monday as we had on Friday. If that is the case and the Government is going to use its massive majority to bring in time allocation, or closure, to ram this legislation down the throats of Parliament and put in place this civilian agency to which the Cabinet makes the appointments, then the only protection we have left is to tighten up the definition. We cannot have that temptation sitting here waiting to be exercised within a framework which excludes that agency from very little if anything.

If you read Clause 2 of this Bill, you find that it is conceivable that any Canadian who actively contributed to a movement to drive the Russians out of Afghanistan or Poland or Czechoslovakia, anyone who is predisposed to support that kind of a movement, according to an interpretation of these definitions, could be subjected to a complete and thorough security investigation by this agency. People may be investigated for their participation through the donation process or perhaps through their membership in a church that is involved in an internal conflict in another country. According to these definitions, any member of that church or anyone who contributed to the activities of that church can be legitimately investigated. Anyone who chooses to donate time or talent to a group which gets involved in a conflict in another country could be subject to investigation.

The Minister wants the security agency to be allowed to scrutinize membership lists and to investigate every member thereon. In a democracy it is legitimate to have a Solicitor General who has that view of the world. I do not think that is the view held by the majority of Canadians. I suggest it is not the view which even 2 per cent of Canadians would hold. In my experience Canadians are a group of people who value their freedoms. They value their privacy and their approach to life, which is essentially a law abiding, co-operative approach. The thought that some hidden agency could begin to bug their telephones, open their mail and follow them is abhorrent. That is something which happens in totalitarian states like Russia. They have police forces which do that kind of thing. They have laws and rules which allow their police forces to do those kinds of things.

That is not our tradition, Mr. Speaker. If we are doing our job on behalf of the Canadian people, we should not allow the same old gang to put this Bill through by closure. We should amend this Bill. The RCMP should be in charge of security intelligence and there should be tighter definitions. I hope that every Member who stands in the next little while is going to re-emphasize the need for those tighter definitions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11) the recorded division on the proposed motions stands deferred.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 10

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 3.

Motion No. 16

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 5.

Motion No. 20

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 7.

Motion No. 25

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 9.

Motion No. 26

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 10.

Motion No. 28

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 11.

Motion No. 35

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 14.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of amendments proposed to certain clauses in this legislation. This particular grouping of amendments is one of three groupings which would delete various clauses from the legislation and would not in fact amend those clauses. There are two other groupings of that nature, motions to delete. It is very difficult, in the context of a 10-minute speech at report stage, to do justice to the broad range of concerns which are reflected by these motions to delete. I should indicate that this particular grouping of motions to delete deals primarily with questions of a more administrative nature with respect to the functioning and operations of the security service. I will attempt to summarize the reasons for the motions to delete in the course of the next few minutes.

The motions deal with some seven clauses. The first two majors which are touched upon by the motions to delete are Clauses 3 and 7. Pursuant to the provisions of Clause 3, the Governor in Council appoints the director of the new service. There is an indication of the length of the term of office of the new director. I made a motion suggesting that the director should only be appointed following a review of that potential appointment by a parliamentary oversight committee. That motion was ruled out of order by the Speaker. It certainly remains my view that Parliament should play a role in the decision on the appointment of such a key individual in the operations of the new service. At the very least, Mr. Speaker, the Minister should consult with Members on all sides of the House with respect to the appointment of such an important individual.

Clause 3 to which I referred is the clause which formally establishes the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and sets out its principal office location as being in the national capital region. I note as well that the Official Opposition tabled a number of amendments to Clause 3 which would maintain the security service within the umbrella framework of the RCMP, subject to stricter controls and a statutory mandate. As Members know, this Party supported that amendment in committee at second reading.

Clause 7 is a clause which deals with consultation between the director and the Deputy Minister with respect to warrants.

● (1850)

The primary purpose for moving to delete Clause 3 is that that clause formally establishes the service. It is our view that the establishment of this new civilian security service poses a serious threat to civil liberties. Rather than moving to set up a new bureaucracy that is secret, unaccountable and will have unprecedented intrusive powers which no other western industrialized country has granted to its security service, we should in fact be moving in the opposite direction.

There are a couple of clauses that are dealt with in these motions to delete that relate to the question of collective bargaining rights and the terms and conditions of employment for employees of this security service. I would note that, pursuant to the provisions of Clause 9, despite the alleged protection of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms of the right to freedom of association, for example, which is supposed to be accorded not on a selective basis but to all Canadians, members of the new security service are told that they will not be permitted any form of collective bargaining rights. I think that flies in the face of the protection of the right to freedom of association which whould be accorded to all Canadians in this country. I have no doubt that that provision will be challenged in the courts under the provisions of the charter. I hope that that clause will be overturned. That does not in any way mean that provisions with respect to withdrawal of labour cannot be specifically dealt with in the context of this legislation, but certainly to deny any form of collective bargaining rights at the stroke of a pen is an abuse of the employees of this new service.

As well, Clause 10 of this Bill which deals with the oath of allegiance and the oath of secrecy which are set out gives us very serious cause for concern. What the clauses do is effectively to require that all orders, whether lawful or unlawful, be obeyed by the employees of the service. The oath of office reads as follows:

I, ..., swear that I will faithfully and impartially to the best of my abilities perform the duties required of me as (the Director, an employee) of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. So help me God.

When I suggested that we add the word "lawful" to that oath to ensure that employees would not be called upon to perform illegal acts and would feel that they had taken an oath that binds them to perform such acts, that amendment was rejected by the Government, leaving open the question as to what sort of action it intends the employees and the director to perform in carrying out their shadowy responsibilities.

The oath of secrecy, which casts a complete veil of secrecy over all of the operations of the security service, reads:

I, ..., swear that I will not, without due authority, disclose or make known to any person any information acquired by me by reason of the duties performed by me on behalf of or under the direction of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service or by reason of any office or employment held by me pursuant to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act.

What that does is effectively to bar an individual who believes there has been wrongdoing in the service from being able to report that unless his superiors authorize him to do so. I would just remind Members of the House that it was not until 1976 when Corporal Robert Samson blurted out in a Quebec courtroom that there were a few things that perhaps he had been required to do that the public might be interested in, and later when a couple of other former RCMP security officers came to the then Solicitor General and indicated that they had been required to perform illegal acts, that the McDonald Commission and the Keable Commission were established.

Of course, under this particular oath, that type of whistle blowing activity would not be permitted. That kind of accountability, which is so essential in a free and democratic society, would in fact be stifled.

The final major clause which is referred to in these motions to delete is Clause 14. That is the clause that permits the service to advise any Minister of the Crown on matters relating to the security of Canada that are relevant to the exercise of any power or performance of any duty or function by that Minister under the Citizenship Act or the Immigration Act.

What exactly are the powers that this new civilian security service will exercise pursuant to the Citizenship Act or the Immigration Act? I recall only too well the time when one of my constituents was questioned—indeed I would suggest gruelled—by members of the RCMP security service with respect to her political beliefs. This was a woman who had been active in Chile in support of the Government of Salvador Allende and had fled following the fall of that government. She was questioned extensively.

Is this the kind of advice that the new civilian security service will be giving to the Minister of Employment and Immigration or to the Secretary of State who is responsible for the Citizenship Act?

In short, the purpose of these motions to delete is first, very candidly, to delete the clause which creates the service, because it remains our view that this service, instead of protecting the civil liberties of Canadians and the security of Canadians will in fact jeopardize those civil liberties and violate the fundamental privacy of Canadians, and indeed will itself costitute an attack on the national security of this country. How ironic that a Bill which is supposed to be protecting the fundamental civil liberties and securities of Canadians could turn out to be the biggest threat to those liberties and to security since the imposition of the War Measures Act in 1970!

I urge Members to vote to delete the clauses to which I have referred for the reasons I have briefly touched upon and, hopefully, to kill this Bill in its present form which constitutes such a grave threat to all Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity once again to rise and direct some comments to the new set of clauses that we are presently debating. I must say that I have some real concerns about a number of those clauses. Some of the subclauses cause concern about just what the Canadian Security Intelligence Service will mean in terms of some of the fundamental freedoms which Canadians have always thought they had.

I recall a number of such instances from my own experience. Some friends of mine had discovered that the RCMP had been conducting all sorts of investigations about some activities that presumably I had been involved in. At the time I was pursuing some scholarly endeavours and had taken it upon myself to write to a variety of countries to obtain documentation and scholarly works in order to continue my academic studies. Since this material came from foreign countries it had to arrive at Customs as its point of access. The RCMP was carrying out all sorts of investigations and interviews with some of my friends and scholarly colleagues about what activities I was involved in. Obviously the RCMP felt that there was something subversive about it. But my purpose was simply to write a number of papers on a variety of foreign affairs issues.

When I discovered that there were long lists, files, reports and briefs which various agents of the RCMP had submitted about my various activities, all of which were of a scholarly and academic nature, I began to wonder about the extent to which fundamental freedoms exist in this country. Of course I was pleased, as were all Members of Parliament, when the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was introduced and passed in the House, part of which included freedom of association. I believe that all of us believe very strongly about that. People who want to work together in organizations should be allowed the freedom to do so. Yet the Bill before us makes it impossible for employees of the new service to bargain collectively. This right has been denied all of the representatives of the new intelligence service. Again, this is something embodied in the Constitution of Canada, embodied in the freedom of association clause within the Charter of Rights. To think that we are being asked now to support a clause in this Bill that goes against the very charter that all of us supported in this House of Commons seems to be bordering on the ridiculous.

That is not the worst, Mr. Speaker. When you consider that my hon. colleague from Burnaby worked so hard in committee at a time when the committee was discussing the need of the agents of the security service to swear an oath of secrecy, part of which would suggest that they would never be permitted to comment on the affairs of the service and that they would be required to carry out unlawful activities as we have all come to know them, you might say, Sir, that surely we should not be asking members of this Security Intelligence Service to carry out illegal activities.

I must say that I was shocked when I first heard from the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) that we were being asked to pass a Bill which suggested that members of the agency should be allowed to break into one's home, office or private property in search of information or intelligence material, and that it would be appropriate for agents to open first class mail at their will, having received a judicial warrant. We know how successful that is in terms of screening. Last year out of every warrant requested, virtually every single one was immediately approved. It is hardly the type of security poeple would accept as protecting their rights and freedoms. Breaking into private property, opening up first class mail, going into tax records, family allowance records and all Government documentation about an individual, having access to all private information, being able to tap telephones, and I can go on with a whole list of activities, is not in the best interests of the nation. Yet we are saying in this Bill that members of the Security Intelligence Service will be permitted to do all these things in the so-called best interests of the nation. That in itself leaves a lot to be debated.

In the clauses we are presently debating we are being asked to support the concept of individuals taking an oath of secrecy. The suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Burnaby to include lawful activities as part of this swearing in process was denied. It perplexes and concerns me that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) would want to permit members of this agency to carry out unlawful activity under the direction of the director or other officers within the Security Intelligence Service.

When you start hearing about these various areas which cause serious concern to those involved with civil liberties in Canada, with fundamental freedoms for Canadian citizens, innocent Canadians I might add, one has to wonder, because clause after clause these shortcomings are being brought to the attention of the Solicitor General. Virtually every clause we have debated to date, and there is a whole list yet to come in the days ahead, we will be identifying the concerns we have as parliamentarians. Yet not a single one of those concerns has been answered in this House. I am hopeful that eventually we will see Members opposite rising in their places to answer some of the concerns we have. Can they explain why asking people to take an oath of secrecy that will require them to carry out unlawful activities is something we should support? I would like to hear the justification for that. I would like to hear the justification that it is appropriate now for members of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service to break and enter in pursuit of evidence, to open private mail and to get into all sorts of government confidential records. How can this be in the best interests of Canadians? How can this be in the best interests of creating an atmosphere of security in the country? This escapes me. I am hopeful and optimistic that Members opposite will shortly stand in their places and explain that we need not be concerned for these reasons. However, one does remain optimistic these days, Mr. Speaker.

In terms of the clauses we are presently debating, I must say that the points raised cause real concern, so much so that, if an adequate response is not provided, we will certainly have to vote against these clauses as they are brought forward.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on examining the amendments that came from committee and the proposed amendments here at report stage, I regret the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) did not include one to delete Clause 4. It is there that I find what is a very definite looseness in drafting as a result of an amendment put forward in committee. But because I am precluded from making any changes, since there is no amendment at this time, all I can do is to invite Hon. Members to look at the provision to see if the term "pleasure" applies during the second term.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would draw the attention of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) to the fact that Motion No. 12 specifically refers to Clause 4 and in fact it would delete Clause 4. That will come in due course.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The point is well taken. For the information of the Hon. Members in the House, we are now debating Motions Nos. 10, 16, 20, 25, 26, 28, and 35, which propose to delete Clauses 3, 5, 7, 9, 10, 11, and 14.

Mr. Lambert: I will have to defer my point for another time, Mr. Speaker, because it concerns a clause not included in this group. I do not intend, as I have seen all too often this afternoon, to include everything but the kitchen sink in certain remarks, therefore, we will limit ourselves to particular things.

I am especially concerned about Motion No. 20 to delete Clause 7. I find it a little difficult when I see the provision stating that the director, who is to be in charge of this security service, has to consult with the Deputy Minister. What is consultation? Is it getting the consent of the Deputy Minister which regard to the operational policies of the service?

Mr. Kaplan: No.

Mr. Lambert: Something further is added regarding any matter with respect to which consultation is required by directions issued under Clause 6(2). Here again there is something odd. Any directions issued under Clause 6(2) which are not subject to the amendment at this time, if they are later on, ought to go before the review committee. What is the review committee to do with them? Is it to be a toothless tiger as the one proposed in Bill C-24 dealing with Crown corporations? Is it to table certain things in the House and in the other place with no direction on what to do with them? Presumably they will be here for information purposes.

• (1910)

I would have to ask the direction of the committee as to Clause 7(2). When there is a question of applying for a warrant under Section 21 or Section 23, the director or the person so designated will consult with the Deputy Minister before applying for the warrant or the renewal of the warrant. What for? Why does the Deputy Minister have to consent to the issuance of a warrant under Section 21 or Section 23? Is the director who is running the operation not sufficient? The director is responsible to the Minister. Will he run his shop or will he run it with the Deputy Minister riding on his shoulder like an old owl? These are questions which I have to ask. Why was the amendment put in?

Mr. Kaplan: They were all asked at committee and answered.

Mr. Lambert: I am outside the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. What is the purpose of the amendment? What sort of bureaucratic monster is being created? Is it to operate or is it not? I am looking at something which is before me. I am not looking at the present system wherein the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is operating the security agency, which is where my colleagues have decided that it should remain. I am looking at something which has been put forward now, a civilian agency. Presumably it is the result of government policy and of the government majority on the committee. Therefore, it is the entire responsibility of the Government.

For instance, I want to know from the Minister why the Deputy Minister, if the director is responsible to the Minister, has to be consulted with regard to special warrants. The Deputy Minister is already responsible to the Minister. Why does the director have this two-headed authority over him with regard to special warrants? Then, on top of that there is this bureaucratic excess. If there is to be a renewal, what would happen if the Deputy Minister was not around? Deputy Ministers do not sit in their offices or at home waiting for calls. Who is the designated official below the Deputy Minister? Who is to exercise authority?

If I were to be the director of this operation, I would supposedly be directly responsible to the Minister. Either I am or I am not. However, suddenly I find that the Deputy Minister will have a hand in the issuance of directions by the Minister to the director. Why? Why say that the director is responsible to the Minister? He is not. The Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police reports through the Deputy Minister. That is the case now. That was an aberration of some years ago. That aberration is being continued by the report coming through the Deputy Minister. I think one would require a specialist to be head of the security service, but he does not get to his Minister unless he goes through the Deputy Minister. There are so many hobbles placed upon him that the Deputy Minister has control of the written instructions which are to be given to the director.

I do not know whether it is the careful hand of bureaucracy coming into play. It did before. It should never have. Running the RCMP calls for a special skill. Running the security agency will require a special skill. Why do they have to be funnelled through a Deputy Minister? The responsibility is that of the Minister who has available senior specialists. Why have the Deputy Minister? That is the question which I invite the Minister to answer?

As an individual I am looking at what the Government is now proposing. I say that there is a fundamental fallacy. I will not say that my mind is forever shut on it, but as I see it now it is a fundamental fallacy. I would like the Minister to tell me, not just because it has happened for the past 15 years, why we are continuing that tradition. I say it was a mistake 15 years ago to have the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police report through the Deputy Minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, because the Hon. Member asked such a pointed question and a good one, I ought to take just a moment to answer it. I do not want to delay opposition Members, who I know are very anxious to prolong the debate, in their opportunity to speak.

There is a very good answer to the good question which the Hon. Member asked. I receive a large number of files every day from each of the four agencies within my Ministry. Usually they recommend one course of action. I have to deal with them very quickly. Some days there could be 20 to 25 different ones. They come from the Commissioner of the RCMP who has the status of Deputy Minister. They come from the Commissioner of the Correctional Service of Canada who has the status of Deputy Minister. They come from the National Parole Board where there is a Deputy Minister with the status of chairman.

In each case I like to obtain an outside opinion about the advice being offered to me and the decision I am being asked to make. The outside opinion which I seek is that of my Deputy Minister. We have established in the Government of Canada over the last 14 years a secretariat made up of criminologists, sociologists and lawyers brought in from the Department of Justice and others. The secretariat has been specially set up to analyze all the documents that are being transmitted to me, all these requests for approval that are coming to me, and to give me an advice. I consider that advice to be very helpful. I do not think of it as being an extra layer of bureaucracy. I think of it as being very useful for a Minister to be able to respond promptly and get a broader picture than sometimes comes from the head of an agency. When I was designing the structure of the new security service, I wanted to be certain that that special input of secretariat-added guidance and advice would be there. That is the reason that the clause appears. With some of the other agencies that report to me, it is established by administrative directive or practice. However, I wanted the country to know about the secretariat, about the useful role it plays in giving advice to the Minister.

Consultation is just that. It does not mean that my Deputy Minister in the secretariat is suddenly responsible for running the RCMP or any other agencies. Consultation is just that. I consider it to be very valuable. I hope that the Hon. Member opposite will not vote to delete this very important clause.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I have to make a comment about my colleague from Edmonton West. He has done what I consider to be almost the impossible. He got the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) to stand up and speak on the security Bill. That in itself is worthy of commendation and shows what a distinguished and eminent Member my colleague from Edmonton West is.

I want to deal with this provision in this context. Mr. Speaker in his wisdom determined that motions and amendments proposed by our Party with respect to whether the aspect of a civilian intelligence agency as opposed to an agency which would be under the umbrella of the RCMP were not admissible. Mr. Speaker indicated that, in his judgment, that question would be resolved at second reading stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should caution the Hon. Member and bring the following to his attention, because there have been similar occurrences in the debate tonight which escaped my immediate attention. May I simply quote the last sentence of Standing Order 15(1). It reads:

No debate shall be permitted on any such decision, and no such decision shall be subject to an appeal to the House.

I appeal to Hon. Members not to debate in any way, shape or form the Speaker's earlier decisions. It is not in keeping with our practices and traditions. It is certainly not in keeping with the Standing Orders.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is a very interesting observation. I am simply stating a fact. I am not reflecting on it. If you want me to say that I agree that he has the right to make that decision, that is perfectly all right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am just making reference to that fact.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Standing Order is very clear: No debate. I invite the Hon. Member to continue his remarks on the motion now before the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I defer as always to the Chair. Let me pose a hypothetical situation to you with respect to the matter. Let me assume that a ruling had been made with respect to admissibility—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Will the Hon. Member make his remarks pertinent to the motion now before the House and not to the decision or conduct of the Chair.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you that I am not going to debate a ruling of the Chair now or at any time in the future. I am only going to say that this clause deals with the establishment of a civilian intelligence service in Canada. It would be the preference of our Party that that not be the case. We have suggested on different occasions, at second reading and in committee after hearing representations, that the security service be brought within the aegis and under the umbrella of the RCMP. I am going to discuss that because this is the only opportunity I will have to mention that fact because of certain occurrences that happened in a time past.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no misunderstanding at all between the Chair and the Hon. Member. The only reservation I pointed out to him is the reference to the Speaker and the Speaker's decision, drawing the Speaker into the debate. If he leaves those out, everything will be perfectly in order. I invite the Hon. Member to continue his remarks. Once again I apologize for butting in.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In support of this motion with respect to the deletion of the provisions dealing with the establishment of a civilian agency, I want to tell you that this is the only way that we are able to demonstrate or manifest our opposition to the way in which the Government is proceeding in this instance. Other options have been shut out to us.

The Solicitor General indicated that he was prepared to listen to representations to try to make this agency responsive to public opinion. In virtually every instance, including this instance, he has refused to listen to the input we have received with respect to this legislation. This is a good example. Who has spoken? Who has given evidence? Who are the people who suggested it would not be a bad idea to have this agency under the umbrella of the RCMP? They are not a bunch of lunatics. They are not a bunch of people who do not have the national interest at heart. There is a wide ranging group of people.

Let me point out some of the people who made representations and who said that the RCMP should remain involved, who say that the Government is wrong in taking the action it is taking, who say that the Government is trying to repudiate the RCMP by this legislation by saying they are not competent or capable of carrying on the security service of our country. Who are these people who are castigating the Solicitor General, the chief henchman of John Turner, the next Prime Minister of this country? This man will ostensibly give advice, along with the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) who tippy-toed over to Mr. Turner during the course of last Saturday's proceedings. Who are these people who will advise Mr. Turner about the way in which our secret service will operate in Canada? I take it that it will be the Solicitor General. What has the Solicitor General failed to listen to? He failed to listen to people involved in the administration of justice in our country.

By way of example let me point out that the attorneys general of all the provincial governments have been united on one thing, the proposition that the agency should remain under the aegis of the RCMP. The attorneys general of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have sent telegrams to the Justice Committee making their position known. The Attorney General of the Province of British Columbia submitted a brief to the Justice Committee and appeared before that committee. Among other things he said this:

> It seems to me to make a lot more sense to build on the institutional credibility that is already established, to use the umbrella of confidence that there is there, and to direct it and make it an effective security agency and make it an accountable one. I believe the Royal Canadian Mounted Police can be made an effective security force.

The Attorney General of Ontario, in a speech on February 7, 1984, had this to say:

> But I find extremely unattractive and fundamentally unsustainable the assertion in this legislation that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police would exceed a statutorily defined mandate, evade the formal external review mechanisms, thwart ministerial accountability and abuse its defined statutory powers. The history and tradition of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police suggests very clearly to me that once there is an end to the absence of governmental direction and responsibility, which gave rise to the RCMP wrongdoing, the force will respond willingly and effectively to the wishes of the Canadian people as reflected in the new legislation.

The Attorney General of the Province of Saskatchewan submitted to the Justice committee an extensive brief dealing largely with the separation of the security service. He said as follows:

● (1930)

> There is no indication, however, that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, as it is presently being managed by its senior officers, is not being responsive to the needs identified by Mackenzie and MacDonald for flexibility and change.

Who else has spoken in favour of the RCMP? Mr. John Russel, Executive Director of the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association, has spoken in favour of the RCMP.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), posed a question to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) in committee. He asked the Solicitor General if he was satisfied with the operation by the RCMP of its security services. Do you know what the answer to that question was, Mr. Speaker? The Solicitor General himself said yes, that is so. He said that he was satisfied with the operation of the security service. Yet he has brought this legislation to the House in an attempt to protect the reputation, whatever it may be, of the Liberal Government and to protect the Government from the way in which it simply hung the RCMP out to dry at a time of crisis in the early 1970s without having any Ministers of the Liberal Government accept responsibility for the actions of the security service of Canada. Government Members are now attempting to create a civilian intelligence service.

I think the people of Canada are very interested in whether or not this is really the position taken by this Government under its new leader. They want to know whether or not Mr. Turner, his solicitor general and his minister of justice will continue this repudiation of the force which has the support and admiration of the overwhelming majority of Canadians. They want to know whether or not this force, which has brought such pride to Canadians over the years and which has played such a great part in the development of our country, and particularly in the development of western Canada, will be publicly repudiated by the Solicitor General who has said that this agency is not competent to carry on the security services of our country.

The attitude that is being taken by the Government is one which most Canadians will understand. It will be a factor when Canadians make up their minds whether or not they should support this Government at the time of the next election. I would like to explain why this is so. We are now seeing demonstrations of the arbitrary nature of the Government. Nothing has changed. The events of Saturday afternoon did not change a thing.

The Liberal leadership candidates spoke of parliamentary reform and how they will make Parliament more responsive. What is the first act of government Members when they return to the House of Commons? They invoke closure. We cannot even debate this matter to the extent it should be debated. We have before us a Bill that is limiting the civil liberties of Canadians and is putting Canadians in jeopardy because of the powers being given to this new agency.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what kind of mentality exists among Liberal Party members who preach rhetoric about a brand new tomorrow during the course of a leadership campaign? They have said: "A new Jerusalem is in sight. All we need to do is find someone to succeed our present Prime Minister and everything will change. We will have a new responsiveness, we will have more access to our leader, we will make sure that democracy works and we will not have the country run by an arbitrary few." What is the first thing government Members do? They come to Parliament and move closure.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, what the people of Canada are to understand? Is this the new régime that we shall come to expect? Is this the form the new leadership will take? Is this the brave new world we will experience in which democracy thrives and freedom of speech is encouraged? Is this a world in which people will be able to speak about the serious issues that face Parliament? No; government Members would like to shut debate down. They do not want to hear arguments presented as to why we should have a different kind of agency, one which carries on the tradition of honour that has existed in the RCMP, one that carries on with a sense of self-discipline and has the flexibility to expand its horizons. I grant you, Mr. Speaker, that we could have an agency, even under the RCMP—and indeed under the RCMP—that would allow for the enrolment of people who have specific expertise and competence to carry on the security services of the country. But no, government Members do not want to hear anything about this alternative.

The reason government Members do not want to hear about this alternative is very simple. They want to shut the history books on the entire background which has led up to this legislation. They do not want to examine in detail exactly what transpired with respect to the RCMP security service in the early 1970s. They do not want to re-examine what went wrong. They do not want to talk about ministerial accountability and responsibility. All they want to talk about is the perception of progress. They say: "We are going to create this new bureaucratic institution out of a bunch of civilian people. There will be a certain amount of review and accountability and we will not have the troubles that occurred in the past which were not fault of the Liberal Government, of course. They were all the fault of the RCMP, they were the bad guys." That is why government Members have come forward with this proposal.

I see that I only have one minute left, Mr. Speaker. When a Government is so insensitive that it will not listen to a reasonable alternative; when just before a federal election a Government is so insensitive that it brings in legislation which is an insult to a fine and respected force in our country; when on the eve of a federal election it invokes closure in order to force through a Bill which has serious consequences to the civil liberties of Canadians, this Party along with its new leader has lost its ability to carry on the governing of the country. I say that this demonstrates more than anything else its lack of ability and lack of competence to carry on after the next election.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to express some of the sentiments and some of the thoughts expressed by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). I think there is much that he and other Hon. Members have said that should surely give government Members every reason to stop in their tracks and give very serious consideration to what in fact they are doing.

Near the end of the term of this Parliament we are seeing legislation being introduced that, to any fair-minded man or woman, is frightening in its implications regarding the personal civil liberties of Canadians. Yet we see this Bill being oozed through the Parliamentary process. In the last days of this Parliament, the Government is using its majority to enforce closure and to hammer the Bill through the House. It threatens to hold up other needed pieces of legislation that will help senior citizens, farmers and workers. These pieces of legislation are being bartered for our basic human rights.

In other civilizations and in other countries, men and women would be up in arms. The press would be screaming in headlines about what is occurring. I wish the cameras could pan over those desks across the way where the men and women of the Liberal Party do their correspondence and read their newspapers, while the other half of them sit at the sandwich counter ready to enter the House just to vote. Democracy and personal freedoms and liberties are going down the drain in such a nice, gentlemanly, parliamentary fashion. It makes me sick and it makes me outraged. It makes me sad that this horrendous piece of legislation with all of the threats it poses to ordinary Canadian men and women should, in such an orderly fashion, proceed through the normal channels toward its passage into law. It is a sad day for Canada. It is a sad day for Parliament. Surely the saddest of all is the reputation of the Liberal Government across the way.

I am rising in support of the motions which would delete Clauses 3, 5, 7, 9, 10, 11 and 14. I particularly, support the deletion of Clause 3. By deleting that Clause we delete the establishment of the secret service agency. The amendment which would delete Clause 3 as well as other clauses, is a very important amendment. However, most of my remarks will surround the motion to delete Clause 3.

My colleague from Burnaby has mentioned the reasons for which Clauses 5, 7, 9, 10, 11 and 14 should be deleted. They are valid reasons. It is very unfortunate that in this process we have yet to hear one government Member stand up and justify the legislation.

Mr. Kaplan: We were waiting for time allocation today.

Mr. de Jong: Government Members will not take the time to take their noses out of the newspapers, pay some attention to what this legislation is about and what are its implications. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), has said that we are trying to obstruct Parliament and that we are trying to delay passage. Yes, I am trying to delay. I am trying to do whatever I can to stop this legislation from passing. It wrenches my guts to see the nice way, the parliamentary way, the gentlemanly way, in which this outrageous piece of legislation is being passed through the House. It amazes me that we can hardly get a rise out of Members opposite. How cool, calm and gentlemanly they are while killing the liberty of individual Canadians. Mr. Speaker, I stand flabbergasted.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has not addressed himself to the legislation. The only time we can get the Solicitor General on his feet is when he is clearing up some bureaucratic point. He has not stood in this House to justify why we need a civilian security force. He has not stood up in the House to indicate why more police powers are necessary. He has not indicated to the House whether there exists a real threat to Canada in terms of terrorists or subversives.

Mr. Kaplan: I did that at second reading.

Mr. de Jong: I do not see any government Members standing up to justify the legislation. Of course, the so-called justification was made in committee. I am not a member of that committee.

Mr. Kaplan: No, no. At second reading.

Mr. de Jong: I expect the Government to give the justification to the nation in Parliament, where the whole nation can watch on television—

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Surely the Hon. Member knows that the place for matters of principle is at second reading debate. Fifty-seven speeches were made on the subject which the Hon. Member is now urging us to speak on again—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. That is obviously an exchange in debate.

Mr. Kaplan: You were not here. That is the trouble.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I was here and I participated in that debate. Much of what I am saying now I said then, because there were not many government Members in the House to explain the legislation at that time. The Solicitor General is hauling in a red herring in an attempt to justify this legislation. That makes it even more obnoxious.

The Solicitor General has not stood to explain why he objected to the amendment my hon. colleague from Burnaby introduced. That amendment would ensure that the oath which is to be taken by the officers of the agency which is being established by this Bill, would be to carry out legal acts. The Solicitor General did not explain why he objected to having the word "legal" inserted in the oath. He has not given us the assurance that the agency will not become a bureaucratic monster which will swallow up the political masters. He has not given us any assurance that he and his colleagues are capable of holding in check the wide powers that this agency will have. He has not given the House any assurance that the Government is capable of controlling this agency. This Government has particularly proven how incapable it is of controlling other departments and other bureaucracies, bureaucracies which have swollen and swollen and swallowed Cabinet Ministers and the political masters of those departments.

After seeing the lack of performance in this House and the lack of justification by Members opposite I am more afraid than ever before. I do not think the Government is capable. Personally I think Members opposite are honest, decent people who do not wish other people harm. However, I have very little confidence in their ability to administrate, to be on top of and in control of government. I have very little confidence in their ability to control the agency which the Government is creating. I am afraid that a monster is being created which, at some future date, government Members will regret. Unfortunately, it might then be too late.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with Clause 3 which is dealt with in the five or six motions that have been grouped for debate. In response to the last speaker, who was lamenting that government Members have not been speaking, to which the Minister replied that it was dealt with at second reading and that the amendment should have been made at second reading—

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): He did not say that at all.

Mr. Kaplan: After 57 speeches.

Mr. Thacker: The problem was that debate was closed off at second reading and we were not able to introduce some of the amendments. When the amendments were proposed at committee stage they were dealt with and considered by the committee. Amendments were proposed at that time which were subsequently returned to the House and ruled out of order. The point I would like to make is that whenever Liberal Members take a fresh look at a problem, with people grouped around, they find the amendments to be totally satisfactory. Indeed, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), formerly the Solicitor General during the period in which the RCMP allegedly got out of control, put amendments which the Cabinet rejected. That is the irony. A former Solicitor General with all his years of firsthand experience had his amendment rejected. Therefore, the Minister, with great respect, does not make sense in his objection.

As well during the committee stage, on one occasion independent government Members, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) and the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), when they looked at the amendments fresh without having received instructions from the Minister or the Cabinet, abstained from voting, and in some cases when there was a tie vote the chairman had to step in and save the Government. Indeed, even the chairman on one occasion voted with the Opposition. Now the Government is saying it will put in a fresh motion which will overturn the majority decision of the committee. If we could deal with Government back-benchers on a person-to-person basis, we could convince them on hard evidence. The committee did hear the witnesses. I am sure those Members would recognize that Bill C-157, which was the predecessor to Bill C-9, was worded so badly that in order to get itself off the hook, the Government sent it to a Senate committee. The Senate committee heard witnesses and made over 40 amendments to the Bill before it was returned to the House.

Clause 3 is actually the establishment of the service. Without saying it in so many words, it in effect creates a civilian agency, to do the same work that today is being done under the aegis of the RCMP. The reporting mechanism is through the Commissioner of the RCMP. The Government position, in essence, is that there should be a separate civilian agency. Our position, and I believe it is also the position of the NDP, is that it should be left under the aegis of the RCMP.

Let us consider what the witnesses said. The Attorneys General attended the committee and said:

> The provincial Attorneys General note that the need for a new separate security service is open to question.

● (1950)

The Attorney General of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have all sent telegrams to the members of the justice committee making known their opposition to a new civilian agency. The Attorney General of British Columbia actually came and gave evidence before us with respect to Clause 3. Among other things he said:

> It seems to me to make a lot more sense go build on the institutional credibility that is already established, to use the umbrella of confidence that there is there, and to direct it and make it an effective security agency and make it an accountable one. I believe the Royal Canadian Mounted Police can be made an effective security force.

The Attorney General for Ontario in a speech on February 7, 1984, said this:

> But I find extremely unattractive and fundamentally unsustainable the assertion in this legislation that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police would exceed a statutorily defined mandate, evade the formal external review mechanisms, thwart ministerial accountability and abuse its defined statutory powers. The history and tradition of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police suggests very clearly to me that once there is an end to the absence of governmental direction and responsibility, which gave rise to the RCMP wrongdoing, the force will respond willingly and effectively to the wishes of the Canadian people as reflected in the new legislation.

The Attorney General of Saskatchewan submitted an extensive brief dealing largely with separation of the security service. At page 14 he states:

> There is no indication, however, that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, as it is presently being managed, by its senior officers, is not being responsive to the needs identified by MacKenzie and McDonald for flexibility and change.

This is the evidence of people who have real expertise in the area. It is evidence we heard at committee, the result of which came back to this House by way of amendments. That is why we plead with the back-benchers on the government side to simply read the record, because I believe if they did they would be prepared to turn to the Minister and say "Mr. Minister, with no disrespect to you, we do believe that we could accept these additional protections where there is doubt".

Mr. John Russell, the Executive Director of the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association said the following in his testimony in committee on May 10, 1984:

> The Senate committee and McDonald commission cite essentially two reasons for civilianization. One is that the intelligence personnel of a security agency require different training and abilities from those RCMP officers have; and, secondly, the police hierarchy is incompatible with the strict process of review and control that is envisioned for a civilian security agency.
> I think the lie is given to the first item by the fact that the RCMP security section is going to be given over to the new security service. So we are left with the conclusion that either the RCMP does train competent personnel, in this case, or that the service will begin its life with unsuitable employees. In our view we would prefer that the Security Service, if there is to be a Security Service, should remain within the purview of the RCMP where threats to national security are more likely to be placed in a realistic context; that is, they will be assessed in relation to other criminal activity and not isolated.

I believe the coup de gras for the argument of the Government is that in the justice committee on May 23, 1984, the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan) made a very important admission. I quote the question put to the Minister by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

> The fact is, Mr. Minister, that for many months now—for many years in fact—since the revelations in the House of Commons in 1977 and the action which was taken consequently, the security service has been working as a part of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The commissioner has been reporting to the Solicitor General effectively, competently and in a manner in which I am sure you would agree meets with your approval. You testify that this has been done in a manner which meets the appropriate sensibilities of the Canadian public. Is that not so?

The answer of the Solicitor General was, "Yes, that is so". There we have it, Mr. Speaker, right from the Minister's own mouth. The people working in security presently under the RCMP are meeting all of the needs of the Minister and, therefore, if our amendments were accepted, it could very easily be that the RCMP in the future would operate under the statutory sections covering court orders for warrants, the inspector general would monitor and keep tabs on what the RCMP were doing in that area, as well as the review committee, which consists of Privy Councillors who are not active in the House or the Senate. It would be very easy to amend this legislation in a step-wise fashion. This is really a revolutionary change as compared to an evolutionary change. When it is put in the context of how deeply so many people feel about the RCMP, and the trust they have in it, we just should not be making that move to a civilian agency.

I have had the moving experience, Mr. Speaker, of talking to many of my constituents who are from eastern European countries. Indeed, my neighbour for many years still has the tattoo on his arm. They speak from first-hand knowledge about how a separate civilian agency can get out of control. If we talk to those people from South America we find it does not matter whether the Government is an extreme left wing government or an extreme right wing government, they create secret services wich have the potential of growing totally out of control. As we know from our debate on the definition of "threats", particularly with respect to domestic subversion, this is a possibility, albeit this Minister does not intend that. It could happen just as Watergate developed in the United States, starting with President Kennedy. One can see how subsequent administrations increasingly took the power and abused it more and more, until Watergate occurred. That is what could happen here, Mr. Speaker and I sincerely ask Hon. Members opposite to take a good look at this, because just a few amendments could fix this legislation dramatically.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have not spoken in this debate on Bill C-9 because I wanted to listen to the comments being made by Hon. Members on both sides. I would like to try to put into perspective from my point of view my own fears as to the direction in which this Bill takes us. I do not have to go into the minute detail of what is contained within the Bill at this point. The purpose of the amendments moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is to eliminate Clauses Nos. 3, 5, 7, 9, 10, 11 and 14. Those clauses are the heart, in many ways, of the proposal by the Government.

I was particularly interested in the content of a brief which was submitted to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs by Allan Borovoy, the general counsel and Kenneth Swan, the Vice-President of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, because it brought to my mind a situation in which I myself was involved. When one reads the Bill and analyses the content, one comes to the conclusion that there is the possibility, if not the probability, for similar kinds of actions to occur in Canada. Mr. Borovoy in making his presentation said that the agency proposed by the Government, though better than the agency previously proposed, has far too much intrusive snooping power. He said that the use of electronic bugging, the surreptitious searches, mail opening and the invasion of confidential records, is frightening.

There are Hon. Members in this House who travelled with me on two occasions to the Soviet Union. I have been involved with and interested in the question of human rights as long as I have been an adult in Canada, because it is perhaps the single most important issue which confronts us. I remember being in the Soviet Union. I could not help feeling, as I read Allen Borovoy's submission, that the very things he was bringing to our attention are the things that cause those of us who visited the Soviet Union, officially and unofficially, to be most concerned.

I will tell you this story because I think it highlights my opposition to the Bill as it stands. I remember speaking with people in their apartment in Moscow and the telephone rang—one ring. There was silence. They sent me a note, because they did not want to speak out loud, that that ring signified that they were being bugged—that very subtle ring on the telephone. They then went quietly into the hall, closing the door behind them, into the kitchen, and looked out the darkened window to view a vehicle sitting outside. The people in that vehicle were listening to the conversation we were having in that apartment. The conversation had nothing at all to do with the national security of the Soviet Union absolutely nothing. We were talking about mutual acquaintances. I was discussing with them their desire to leave the Soviet Union and come to Canada to be with relatives. I was discussing with them their application for permission to leave, just as you would discuss it with any friend at any time any place in the world. But the authorities there, under the aegis, if you will, of a law no doubt very similar to this one, had decided that I, being a foreign agent visiting with these people in their apartment—

Some Hon. Members: Ha, ha!

Mr. Deans: Listen, it is a very serious matter. For those of you who do not understand that, I urge that you listen carefully. When I visited there I did so out of compassion, out of concern for those people and people in similar circumstances all around the world. They were seen as a threat to national security and were under surveillance. Who were they? One was an engineer, one was a professor, one was so old as to hardly be a threat to any one at all, but they were being kept under surveillance because of legislation—in a totalitarian state legislation does not really matter a whole hell of a lot, but they were kept under surveillance because they were seen having discussions with people from outside of the country about matters the Government felt were not in its best interests and therefore they were deemed to be a threat to the security of that country.

I am not suggesting for one minute that there is anyone on either side of this House who would willingly or knowingly condone that kind of action in Canada—not one of us. But I also know that the checks and balances necessary to guarantee that this cannot occur do not appear in this Bill. That is what is wrong with the Bill. That is what is wrong with the whole process. You have to understand the fear. You have to realize what it is like to know that someone wrote you a letter but it was never delivered, and that that was not the fault of Michael Warren. You have to appreciate what it is like to live in a system where the thing you fear most is not that you will be caught breaking the law but that the Secret Service, in whatever form it takes, will be given the kind of power that enables it to foist itself upon you, to infringe upon your life and to take action against you even to the point of trumping up charges in order to get you out of the way and put you in jail.

I say to you that that is not foreign to Canada. We all know now that those kinds of things have happened here. That is what frightens me about this legislation and its passage. That is why I want to see some better measures introduced which will guarantee that no one can run away with this power we are vesting in these individuals. With all the best intentions in the world the Secret Service does what it thinks is best in the circumstances. There is no guarantee that you need to be considered as breaking Canadian law in order to be under surveillance under this Act. Well, that is wrong. That is why we are taking so much time trying to convince the Government, and trying to improve the legislation. You have to have been there to understand it, and I have been there. I understand it and it is wrong. It is dangerous. It is frightening. It can happen in the best circumstances with the most well-intentioned individuals. Therefore, we have to tighten up this Bill.

I see you are indicating that my time is about up, Mr. Speaker. It is not impossible to have a Watergate here with the expansion of power to be taken on by those doing what they believe is right but which is totally outside of what is acceptable within our society. Neither is it impossible to imagine circumstances such as those I saw when I went to Moscow. For those reasons, if for no others, I say to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), because I know of his interest in matters such as the ones I have raised, that he should give some more serious thought to whether or not there are better ways to achieve the ends that he and we all desire.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, anyone who has spent any time in Regina cannot fail to be aware of the "Barracks", as they were called in my day, and the respect held for that particular insitution. I can recall as a small choir boy being asked to go to the chapel at the "Barracks". There was only one "Barracks" in Regina at that time, as we knew it. It was a "B" Barracks, the RCMP Barracks. Evens as a small boy I felt that it was a signal honour to be asked to appear on Sunday morning at service there and see the scarlet coats on either side of the aisle. Having gone through that experience we thought our choir was a pretty special one.

I can also remember one of the Mounties who came to our Sunday school regularly. We knew he was a Mountie, though he came in mufti, his civies. One particular day he had a ceremony after Sunday school and he came in uniform. You can believe me when I tell you that when he walked in that morning he clinked in. You could hear the spurs and you could see the scarlet coat. We were in a special Sunday school class. I tell you that because it represents for me the feeling that I think is pretty general in Canada. It was very strong in Regina and I think it is very strong across the Prairies. I do not think it wanes on the way toward the coast. The RCMP is a respected, honoured force in Canada. It is a force for justice and right in which the Canadian people can have confidence. My early experience in Regina left with me those memories of the RCMP.

I feel that we should not remove from that force a function which they have been performing and are still performing, albeit with problems. The problems can be dealt with. They are retaining their respect, honour and the confidence which they have earned since their establishment at the end of the nineteenth century as the Royal Northwest Mounted Police.

Through the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) the RCMP are accountable to the House and to the people of Canada. For a short period in 1970 when, due to some activities which were thrust on them, they were directed to perform, or in any event occurred, there was a slight shudder in that confidence. However, they retained that confidence because of the great fund of goodwill and confidence the Canadian people have in the RCMP.

We are being asked to take away one of the functions of the force which enjoys such confidence. I admit that its prime function is the maintenance of law in areas where there is no other force of law available to the municipality or province, and certainly in the Territories and in the Yukon. We are being asked to take away from them a function which has been thrust upon them since the Gouzenko affair, during which they behaved with absolute scrupulousness and fairness. They reported to the Government of the day. The Royal commission carried out its work and the RCMP came out unblemished for their performance in that particular operation. Since then they have had to take on the function of the intelligence service guarding Canada against subversion and now, a new phenomenon which we all deplore, terrorism, which is a form of subversion, I suppose. Subversion means to turn people against authority. Terrorism is to frighten people so that they will lose confidence in authority.

Under Clause 3 of this particular legislation we are being asked to remove from the RCMP a function which they have performed most nobly. I have some difficulty understanding the manner in which the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has been dealing with this legislation. I suppose it may be that the Rules of the House require him to do it in this manner. He tried to have the legislation hoisted for six months. That did not work so he thought he would take it out piece by piece, clause by clause. He has done that. He was forced to do that by the Rules of the House. We now have before us six or seven motions. One of them refers to the establishment of a separate force.

In my earlier comments I said that there could be means of dealing with the problems which are presently being encountered by the intelligence branch of the force. We are aware of them. We are aware that there are those who are not members of the force who are within that intelligence branch. They do not know whether they are fish, foul or herring. Surely there is a method of establishing a personnel policy within the intelligence service which could be different from the personnel and promotional policy of the force itself. When the RCMP speak about the "Force" there is always a capital F in front of that word. They say it with meaning. They mean what they say. Surely there is a means of establishing within the force an intelligence service which would be under the general administration of the commissioner, under an assistant or deputy commissioner if you wish, having rules of promotion and drawing, where possible, from likely candidates within the force itself and shifting them into the intelligence force if they wish to be so shifted. We could also recruit civilians who have not gone through the training at Regina but who have demonstrated their ability in one way or another for this particular form of activity. That can be done.

I am sorry to see that my time is running out, Mr. Speaker, because I had hoped to be able to induce some Members of the Government to stand up and express some views about this force. We managed to provoke the Solicitor General to his feet. Perhaps we could get another Member to express his heartfelt views about this force and whether it should be within the RCMP or as a separate force.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, in debate this morning we heard a good deal with respect to Motion No. 1 having to do with the title introduced as it is in Clause 3 of the Bill. It may be said that that debate was somewhat initiated by reason of an amendment introduced by our Party suggesting that the title of the Bill might more properly be the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Security Intelligence Service. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) and others have already indicated the cogent reasons why that force might still be the adequate agency to conduct the intelligence service for our land. It was pointed out by the Attorney General that no cogent reason has really been established yet in the House as to why we should have a civilian security service. That being so, it is a sad day when closure is introduced so soon after the Government side has elected a new leader without a seat in the House, and without really having an opportunity to consider in any degree of depth the Bill that is before us for consideration today.

The Globe and Mail editorial of April 24 last reported that, although Bill C-9 has fewer flaws than its predecessor, Bill C-157, it should not be allowed to pass in its present form. This was in an editorial in one of Canada's national newspapers. It pointed out that Bill C-9 would still continue to grease the wheels of the domestic intelligence service. This domestic intelligence gathering force, which is supposed to have the responsibility of protecting the public, will gather information at the expense of the rights of the public.

Unfortunately, we must agree that there is a need for an intelligence service in this troubled land. It is also the responsibility of the Government to ensure that Canadians are protected by such an intelligence service, that our national interests and security are protected. However, should that protection be at the expense of public rights and liberties that Canadians have a right to expect? While that protection of security is a responsibility of the service, in no way can it be said that our rights and liberties should be prejudiced and diminished by reason of the need for that protection.

Bill C-9 still empowers its agents with the judicial warrant system to demand, seize and detain first-class mail, examine the health records of Canadians and violate the confidentiality of income tax returns. The agents are still able to tap telephones, but the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) only says that the review committee will blow the whistle on the agency as soon as it steps out of line.

Canadians have been burned before. The agency, believing to be acting in the best interests of the country, rode rather roughshod over large numbers of Canadians and over the civil rights and privileges of ordinary Canadians.

Bill C-9 does not ensure that this will not happen again. Critics of the Bill are not instilled with confidence in the review committee or even in politicians or political hacks. The review committee would be made up of Privy Council members who do not sit in the House of Commons or Senate, but Privy Councillors nonetheless who are appointed by the government of the day. They will be paid by the Government. There is an old adage which states that he who pays the piper calls the tune.

Perhaps at this stage I am not permitted to expand on the benefits of the RCMP or its history, but if there is any greater risk than placing the caretaking of the intelligence service in the RCMP, it is leaving it in the hands of politicians.

Bill C-9 makes no provision for an all-parliamentary review such as exists in West Germany or in the United States. Nor is the Solicitor General fixed with a responsibility such as recommended by the McDonald Commission of having knowledge and responsibility for the working of the intelligence service. The Solicitor General has put distance between himself and that agency. He has done this through a director and a review committee and has not given the faintest hint of any acceptance of an all-parliamentary overview of that director and the operations of his agency. That is left up to some persons who are appointed by the government of the day.

Even though there is a public demand which requires such an opportunity for an all-parliamentary review of an operation of such an agency, it has been denied to Canadians through this Bill.

Furthermore, despite all of the assistance offered to him by Opposition members and the witnesses who appeared at the committee hearings, the Solicitor General is either unable or unwilling to write a bill that would command the general national support of our people. Instead, he has introduced closure today, the first legislative day after his Party elected a new leader. He is the future Prime Minister but the Government, without the opportunity for its new leader to study this legislation, introduced closure. This is an arrogant approach by the Government. It is a sad day with respect to a totally incompetent Bill when it should take such action.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I was particularly prompted to make a few comments on this Bill by some of the remarks made by my colleagues, including the Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) and the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills spoke of the manner in which the committee hearings were conducted. The statements and opinions expressed by individuals who appeared before the committee were almost unanimous in their recommendations for changes to some of the particulars of the Bill. He also stated that the recommendations have been ignored, which casts doubts about the entire question of having committee hearings into the subject.

This was characteristic of what recently happened with respect to the committee hearings on the Canadian Institude for International Peace and Security. When public hearings were held in that regard, 14 of the 14 witnesses who were quoted in a paper presented by an observor to the standing committee for its perusal stated that seven non-Canadian directors on the institute was too great a number. The Bill provided for eight Canadian directors and seven non-Canadian directors which these witnesses felt was too heavily weighted toward non-Canadian directors.

How did the standing committee deal with those recommendations? It simply ignored them. It took advantage of the Government majority to pass Clause 18 of that Bill as it stood. It allowed seven non-Canadian directors on a board of 15.

• (2030)

When the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills was speaking of a similar experience with respect to the security Bill, it prompted the question: Why do we hold hearings? The most obvious reason would somehow be that it lulls the public into believing that it is having some participation in the Parliamentary preparation of a Bill, such as the security bill or the peace institute bill.

It is rather sad that a committee system within the House of Commons with representation of all parties, and to which Canadians look for a degree of wisdom and integrity, can be misappropriated to give a sense that something decent is being done when in fact there is no decency there. These thoughts were raised when the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills spoke.

I would rather think a Government that provides for committee hearings would also be prepared when it asks the public for submissions to listen to what the public is saying. There is a great deal of wisdom out beyond these walls. That may not appear to be the case to members of the Government, but that is a fact. I believe the least we can do if we are going to honour this institution, and if we are going to ask the citizens of Canada to respect the institution of Parliament, is to pay them the honour of listening to them when they speak.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) spoke of his experience in the Soviet Union a little over a year or two. Certainly he brought back some rather stark memories of my visit to the Soviet Union with others from this House in January and February. I think it is imperative that we ensure that our Canadian justice system and our Canadian security system does not fall prey to the type of misuse and abuse we see in totalitarian countries such as the Soviet Union. Citizens simply minding their own business or acting within the confines of the constitution of their country and breaking no laws can be the subject of heavy handed surveillance and heavy misuse of justice.

I believe it is almost imperative that security be left in the hands of the RCMP. If it is in hands in which Canadians do not have trust then its job is ten times, or many times more difficult. In fact, it may be impossible. We propose this be left in the hands of the RCMP. I know as I speak for constituents of Okanagan-Similkameen that I am expressing their wishes. If they had been available and free to appear before the standing committee hearings they would have stated that position.

I hope government Members will reconsider some of the positions they have taken, study the evidence before them, study the sentiments and opinions of the common people and the experts and change the legislation to conform more adequately to that which is required and desired by the people of Canada, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with this section of the Bill from a democratic point of view. In democracies Governments are elected to represent the thinking of the people. That is the way it was in the early days. At first everybody went to Parliament. As the population increased, this was impossible so representatives were sent. Representatives were supposed to represent the majority thinking of the people. But with this Government, we are getting further and further away from that concept and closer and closer to a totalitarian concept where the Government thinks it has access to all wisdom, and the Government tells the people what is good for them. I find that in this Bill, and it is wrong in a democracy. Canadians are getting sick and tired of being told what is good for them, instead of the Government trying to find ways and means of doing what the majority of the people want.

I do not think there is any doubt the RCMP has been doing a good job. If the RCMP is incompetent and is unable to do the job, that is one thing, but when we come to actual evidence we find the very opposite. I want to put on the record some of the evidence from the Committee. This is a question and answer portion involving the critic for our Party, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), and the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). The Hon. Member for Vancouver South, our critic, wanted to find out whether the RCMP was competent and whether it was doing the job well. Here are some of the questions and answers which I think the public is entitled to know about:

MR. FRASER: And the commissioner has remained responsible for the security service all during these tumultuous years.

MR. KAPLAN: Yes, he has.

He is referring to the years since 1978 and 1979. The Commissioner has been doing his job.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Members of the Conservative Party have read that question and answer into the record at least eight times today. Is there some rule against such a tremendous amount of needless repetition?

Mr. McCain: Change the Bill.

• (2040)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The difficulty in this debate, at least in terms of the last two speakers which the Chair has heard, is that they have not been relevant to the clauses we are discussing. The rules are fairly straightforward with regard to debate at report stage. It has to be relevant. It cannot be a general debate on the principle of the Bill. I wonder if the Hon. Member who has the floor is able to tell us what clauses we are on.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The point raised by the Hon. Solicitor General is hardly a point of order. Perhaps they should listen to these points; they still have not got home. The situation is the same as it was the other day when I said what we need is a carrier pigeon which has been crossed with a woodpecker, so that it will not only take the message over there but it will pound it into their heads. That is not happening. Surely democracy is not contrary to these clauses of the Bill we are discussing. Surely it is not. Now the Hon. Solicitor General wants to tell us what to say and how many times we can say it. That is just what I am trying to prove, that the Government is trying to tell people what is good for them. I do not want the Solicitor General to make my speeches for me. I will make my own. The people of Canada do not want the Government telling them what to do or what is good for them. They want the Government to reflect the thinking of the people in its administration.

The point was raised whether the service was bad. Was the service bad? That is relevant to this question. The Solicitor General said that it was not bad. I will refer to his exact words so that he will not raise another point of order. He said:

> Yes, I think we have been very well served by Commissioner Simmons of the RCMP.

The Commissioner has done an excellent job. Then the Hon. Member for Vancouver South asked him whether the security service had been working as a part of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Minister said: "Yes, that is so."

There is another point. The Hon. Solicitor General is saying that we cannot have one head and two branches. Look at his own Government. There are Ministers with two Departments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. This is the second time the Chair has tried to remind the Hon. Member to speak to the clauses which we are studying. Would the Hon. Member try to abide by report stage rules, that is, to be relevant?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are dealing with provisions now which in effect ask for the deletion of the clause that sets up a civilian intelligence agency. I think the debate on the part of many people on this side of the House has been extremely germane. In fact, we are the only ones who are speaking on this legislation. A civilian intelligence agency is the route being taken by the Government. We are supporting the proposition which will delete the provisions establishing the civilian agency. We are saying that the Government has made a mistake. As the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has said so eloquently, we think there is a better way. We are trying to explain this by virtue of this new method of delivery of a message to the Government—a cross between a courier pigeon and a woodpecker. I think that is the most appropriate way to deal with the Government.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Hon. Member referred to report stage in the disposition of a Bill as a new method of sending a message to the Government. I think that is an inappropriate observation. Report stage of a Bill is a very well established procedure. The rules are very clear. For the Hon. Member to argue that it is a new way of being able to send messages to the Government shows his basic misunderstanding of what this stage of the Bill is all about.

I support the Chair in its observation that Hon. Members should stick to the clauses to which amendments have been moved, and to the amendments.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order. I fully understand report stage. Report stage is simply a device which takes the place of Committee of the Whole. The Bill is sent to committee. All Members cannot be there, so we come back to report to the House on the committee's work. That is what report stage is. That is exactly what we are doing. If this hurts the Solicitor General so much, why does he not change it so that he will not be hurt by the truth?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): For a third time the Chair will ask the Hon. Member who has the floor to abide by the rules of report stage, please.

Mr. Taylor: That is exactly what I am doing, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking on report stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair is of the opinion that this is not what the Hon. Member is doing. The Chair will quote a Standing Order which may bring the Hon. Member back to his senses. It is Standing Order 38(2).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Taylor: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Withdraw that, that is hardly appropriate.

Mr. Taylor: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. You are supposed to protect the rights of all Members, not just the Liberals.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. It reads:

> The Speaker or the Chairman, after having called the attention of the House, or of the Committee, to the conduct of a Member who persists in irrelevance, or repetition, may direct the Member to discontinue his or her speech, and if then the Member still continues to speak, the Speaker shall name the Member or, if in Committee, the Chairman shall report the Member to the House.

The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has the floor.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me deal with another aspect of the Security Intelligence Service which is very relevant. That service should not have the opportunity of getting spies and subversive people in it. That is an important item of the intelligence service. What protection is there here in relation to the recruitment of spies as compared with that of the RCMP? A person joins the RCMP as a recruit, as a constable. He goes through many years of service. He would have to be very, very persistent to remain in there as a fifth columnist. However, in the civilian service one could be hired at any time. Consequently, there is no real check and balance in keeping fifth columnists out of the intelligence service when we have a civilian agency.

I should like to make another point. The RCMP has two separate methods of training its people. It trains those in the police service who will enforce the law, and it trains those who are in the intelligence service. They are not the same service. It is not the same training but they are trained. Even with a civilian service we will have to train people. We cannot hire them right out of university into the intelligence service. It takes a lot of work and it takes a lot of time. Consequently, as one of the Attorneys General said to the Committee, "Why do we not build on what we have?" We have that service there now. They have been trained in intelligence work. Why not build upon it instead of starting something brand new which has no checks and balances in it at all?

The Government is trying to ram down the throats of Canadians a civilian service instead of building upon the RCMP service which is already in place with well trained people. The Government is putting them into the civilian service. It is taking them out of the RCMP and moving them into a civilian service. It will have RCMP people there, but it will take away their uniforms. It will take away the RCMP aspect.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for indicating that I have only one minute remaining. Democracy reflects the thinking of the people. This Bill is just an indication or writing on the wall to the people of Canada that the new Leader and his Government will be the same old crowd, using closure and telling the people what is good for them. That is what is in the books for Canadians. They had better take a careful look at what is going on in the House today. It is an indication of what they will have for the next five years if they re-elect this crowd on the other side of the House, even though they have a new Leader.

• (2050)

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it might be possible to seek unanimous consent to hear the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) for another ten or 15 minutes. His remarks are most edifying and might enlighten the Members of the House. I would certainly be prepared to move such a motion if it met with the approval of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair will ask for unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) did not see fit to allow the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) to continue his remarks. Putting the best construction on it, he saw me getting up and I suppose he wanted to hear me speak. I would much rather that he heard the Hon. Member for Bow River.

This clause of the Bill has attracted more attention across Canada than most other provisions in this piece of legislation, that is, the issue of whether the security service should be part of the RCMP or should be a separate and totally civilian service. In every great debate and in every issue, especially a predominant one like this, there are two sides to the question. This issue has two sides to it as well. Some are attractive, some are not. It is our job to weigh the pros and cons. In this case it is not surprising that for us in the Opposition those things that seem to be attractive do not weigh very heavily against the parts that are negative.

The first attractive feature of separating the security service from the RCMP is the past work that the RCMP has been called upon to do for the security of the country. I refer to those incidents that took place mainly in the Province of Quebec about 15 years ago when they were accused and convicted of burning barns and raiding the offices of a political party in the Province of Quebec. Frankly, that has sullied the reputation of the RCMP. I do not blame those members of the force for wanting to see this particular service hived off the RCMP. That experience has hurt them. It has damaged the entire force. The problem is that many of us suspect that those directions came from political officers of the Government, that it was because of the political motives of the Liberal Government at that time that they were forced to do things they would not have done under normal circumstances. Therefore, the past history need not be the experience of the future. With an honourable government in office that need not happen again.

The second attractive feature is one of administration. I can well imagine that those in administrative positions within the security service might find it easier to operate the force if it does not have to think of both policing and security activities. To keep the security service separate from the RCMP may make it more simple to manage. It is a question of efficiency. Surely raw efficiency is not the bottom line when thinking of this kind of issue. There ought to be very relevant issues that form part of this debate on the administration of the force.

This brings me to the negative factors of splitting it, why we believe the security service should not be taken away from the RCMP. First, there is already all across Canada, in fact around the world, a trust on the part of the people in the RCMP. The people believe in the force. They trust it. They know the force to have a sence of honour. They know that given its own direction, without political interference, it is going to operate a good, well-managed, disciplined, professional service. Because of the history of the force, there is a sense of trust between the people and the force. That is something you cannot buy, nor is it something you can establish quickly.

Even if, in splitting the security service from the RCMP, you could establish a sense of trust, it would take a lot of time to build that kind of relationship between the force and the Canadian people. Since the security service is going to be in the background and not very visible, there is very little likelihood that it will establish that kind of trust. The RCMP did it by being very visible. We see them, they are around. We recognize them. When we recognize them and see the way they operate that trust is established. The fact that the security service is going to be a quiet operation does not allow that service to build that kind of trust.

The first reason we believe we ought to maintain a security service within the structure of the RCMP is because that force will need all the trust it can get from the Canadian people. Because of the nature of its work, the issues that we discussed in previous clauses dealing with such matters as security, what entails security, the nature of subversion and so forth and because the force will be dealing with very loose definitions, we will need and extra abundance of trust in that force. It will not be easy to build that.

The second reason we need to maintain the force under the aegis of the RCMP is that of the internal factors. It has to do with discipline. What do you do if things go wrong? The best force in the world will have things go wrong. The most well intentioned officers of that force will experience times when they either use excessive force, have poor judgment or miscalculate and things will go wrong. Personnel will do things that are wrong. The Bill proposes that ultimately that kind of problem will be dealt with in a quasi political fashion through the deputy, the Minsiter or Members of the Cabinet in a quasi if not a totally political manner. That is not good. The fact that the RCMP already has a structure for enforcing discipline makes it a very attractive way of handling that problem.

My colleague from Bow River gave an example of creating discipline through the system of promotion. You start as a constable and work your way up through the system by means of promotion, a system of tried and true escalation of authority. There is a built-in force of discipline. Second, if somebody has done something wrong, there could be a court martial. There is an enforced procedural judicial structure within the force so that when somebody does something wrong there is a procedure in place that will deal with it in a non-political way. When things went wrong in Quebec the politicians who presumably asked them to do something wrong let them hang out to dry.

When you have a system that is separated from politics and any other kind of internal discipline, how do you handle it? That concept has some attractiveness for the civilian security force. Those two aspects that would seem to make it attractive would weigh very lightly in the face of the very positive attributes to the concept of leaving it with the RCMP. May I call it nine o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

PORNOGRAPHY—UNITED STATES LEGISLATIVE ACTION—CANADIAN POSITION. (B) GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago, on May 22 to be precise, I rose to ask a question of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) regarding the government's plans to introduce legislation that would deal with the very grave problem we are having with child pornography in our country. I had travelled to Ottawa the day before and on the airplane I picked up a copy of that day's issue of the The Globe and Mail. I saw a front page story entitled "U.S. porn law advocated for Canada". I found out that a gentleman in Toronto by the name of Mr. Scott who has organized an anti-pornography activist group has advocated that Canada adopt parallel legislation to that which Mr. Reagan in the United States has now endorsed.

The fact is, Sir, that the American legislation contains some very attractive features. First, it provides for a commission which will examine the link between pornography and obscenity. The new act will increase fines for trafficking in child pornography, raise the age of children covered by the law to 18 from 16 and will broaden some investigative and prosecutional powers of the U.S. Department of Justice.

In addition to that, the Americans did something that I think was very smart. Before they announced and promulgated signed legislation they held a two-day seminar on the production and dissemination of pornography. That seminar was sponsored by the Justice Department. The people who were invited to attend were U.S. Attorneys, 20 post office workers, 20 local law enforcement officers and 40 members of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. They were briefed on the new legislation and were told how to investigate and prosecute cases involving the distribution of pornographic material such as magazines and videotape cassettes.

That is the kind of serious action that our country ought to take when it comes to pursuing this particular issue. Frankly, we in Canada have taken a very milquetoast approach to the subject and to the destruction that child pornography wreaks across Canada. There are some grave problems.

When I asked the Solicitor General whether or not he would implement such legislation, he told me that a couple of years ago the Government had introduced legislation dealing with child pornography. However, I would remind the House that that legislation was drafted so poorly and badly the Government withdrew. There was no way it could handle that legislation. Every group in the country saw that legislation as being a big problem.

The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), several other Hon. Members and I have been working on this theme for a number of years in the hopes that the Government would do something constructive and concrete to make sure that the lives of our young people would be protected from rather than contaminated by the kind of filth that is being sold for profit all across the country. You know, Mr. Speaker, that most of the pornography in Canada is imported from the United States. About 80 per cent of it comes from the United States, with another percentage from overseas. Very little child pornography is produced in Canada. However, the fact is that some of it is produced in Canada. If it comes in from the United States, it should be even more easily controlled, and it would be if there were some teeth in the Customs Act and the Post Office Act and if we had the kind of resources required to control it.

I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary who will respond to my question to urge his colleagues to do something constructive so there will be some kind of protection for our young people and our children.

There is another concern on my mind and in my heart, and that is that we are hearing contrary voices on the issue. I recall the former Member for New Westminster saying, "Look, if we pass that kind of legislation, you could not even read the Bible." Shucks, I do not see kids lining up to buy the Bible in order to read those passages. I wish they would. That is the issue. As a matter of fact, another somewhat stupid comment was made by a lawyer in Vancouver by the name of Jonathan Baker. He said that the local by-law would prevent people from reading Shakespeare. That is the kind of stupidity which is being promulgated by lawyers who want to sit on the sidelines and not to contribute to the protection of children.

• (2105)

There is another current which disturbs me. While groups across Canada are gathering their support for this kind of legislation—and I am speaking now of women's groups who fortunately are joining the battle and seeing it as an issue of violence against children and women—other organizations which have the respect of the large community are helping to create the problem. For example, I am thinking of Planned Parenthood. In a publication known as The Great Orgasm Robbery, they said:

> Sex is fun, and joyful . . . and it comes in all types and styles, all of which are OK. Do what gives pleasure and enjoy what gives pleasure and ask for what gives pleasure. Don't rob yourself of joy by focusing on old-fashioned ideas about what's "normal" or "nice". Just communicate and enjoy.

When that kind of hedonism is promoted through an organization that has some kind of credibility across Canada, and which receives government grants, how do we stop hedonism once it is moving? The kids who are taught that in school grow up to be teenagers who abuse other people. It is time that the Government quit giving grants to organizations which do that. As well, it is time the Government brought in legislation which would protect our youth.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with my formal remarks, I would like to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) for his genuine interest in this subject. It is imperative for Members of the House to remember the consistent efforts which have been made by the Department of Justice and the Government to combat pornography in all forms.

In 1978 the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs recommended that specific legislation be implemented to deal with pornography involving children. Following the tabling of that committee's report, proposals to deal with obscenity were contained in Bill C-51, which was introduced by the then Minister of Justice, the Hon. Ron Basford. Subsequently, those proposals were repeated in Bill C-21 which was introduced by the Hon. Otto Lang who as well was a Minister of Justice. The draft legislation adopted in substance the major recommendations of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. Unfortunately, both Bills died on the Order Paper due to the pressure of other business and the session coming to an end.

In January, 1981, the then Minister of Justice, the Hon. Jean Chrétien, introduced specific proposals to deal with child pornography in Bill C-53. With his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), he established the National Committee to Study the Sexual Abuse of Children and Youths which, among its tasks, was to consider the matter of child pornography.

During its consideration of Bill C-53, the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs debated at length the nature and form of such amendments. At the risk of the Bill dying in committee, the Minister agreed to split off the exploitation of children provisions of Bill C-53, which included measures to deal with child pornography from the sexual assault provisions. Bill C-53 died on the Order Paper at the end of the last session, in December, 1983.

The impasse over the proposals in Bill C-53 indicated the need to wait for the findings of the Committee on Sexual Offences Against Children and Youths which is due to report this July, as well as the Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution which is expected to report in December, 1984.

To assist these committees in their efforts, the Department of Justice is completing extensive emperical research into pornography. It is expected that the results of these endeavours will provide much needed information on the best methods to control the distribution of obscene materials.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please.

FINANCE—PROPOSED MORTGAGE RATE PROTECTION PROGRAM. (B) INCREASE IN MORTGAGE RATES

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, on May 10 I rose to voice my concerns about the devastation regarding the escalation of interest rates and what hardship it will impose on the housing industry and on jobs in particular. Since I posed my question to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren), the situation has deteriorated. Interest rates have risen 2 per cent since the February Budget to 14.5 per cent for five-year mortgages. The mortgage rate insurance plan is another prime example of what the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Fleming) described as a Liberal fixation for smoke, mirrors and ballyhoo. There is no leadership. There is no tackling of the problem of higher interest rates. We must provide stability for the housing market. We must increase the incentive for lenders to participate in the mortgage market at reasonable rates. We must reduce the deficit.

There is no quick fix-all, Mr. Speaker. There is no magic potion. However, by tackling the problem, interest rates can be reduced. By gaining control of the country's debt and encouraging risk-taking and thereby revitalizing the economy, all Canadians will be better off, and I mean "all Canadians". We have to rid ourselves of this regional disparity.

The housing market is crucial to the economy as a whole. Our goal on this side of the House is to help Canadian home owners and see more Canadians becoming home owners. Unlike the New Democratic Party, and the Liberals in some cases, we believe that the ownership of property should be entrenched in the Charter of Rights. We believe that every man or woman should have the right to own a part of this country. This is why millions of people emigrated to this country. The housing sector is a vital, important employer. Every housing start represents 2.5 jobs, and the lack of jobs is the main problem facing Canadians today. We cannot allow this vital sector to erode any more than it has.

Housing starts in 1983 were 179,000, and the projected rate for this year is only 135,000. For workers in the construction industry, the unemployment rate, seasonally adjusted for May, was 23.8 per cent. The five-year mortgage rate has climbed two points to 14.5 per cent since the February Budget. Two percentage points on the average Canadian 20-year mortgage means a home owner pays an additional $16,231. Yet, despite the severe limitations of the Bill, the bitter irony is that it should have been introduced six months ago. Even back dating it to March 1 is only providing token relief to Canadians.

Mainly the Government's mismanagement of the economy aggravates a worsening problem for the Canadian people. There is no relief in sight. Interest rates continue to climb. Unemployment climbs to above 11.7 per cent. The Canadian dollar falls to below 77 cents. High interest rates on mortgages have an impact on the price of housing in Canada. During the fourth quarter of 1983, the average sale price of a house in Canada was $76,800. If we look at a 10 per cent down payment, plus property taxes of about $1,200, while bearing in mind that total payments for principal, interest and taxes should not exceed 30 per cent of one's gross income, Canadians now need a family income of $36,200 to pay the average price for a home in Canada. In Toronto, Mr. Speaker, people need a family income of $46,000 to be able to afford the average price of a home at $100,300. A home in my area, in Vancouver, would cost $114,000, requiring a family income of $52,000. We do not even make that much.

In the face of all that, the much ballyhooed government assistance program, fraught with deficiencies, seems so inappropriate. It is a step in the right direction, but not enough. The maximum of $70,000 is not high enough, especially when you consider the various regions. The Vancouver area is one example. How was the 2 per cent limit arrived at? Could it be because only once in the last 33 years, that is from 1980 to September, 1981, did a five-year mortgage increase above 2 per cent? That may be the reason but we on this side of the House would like to know how it was arrived at. The fact that the protection fee of 1.5 per cent is the same whether you take out a one, three or five-year mortgage does not make sense either.

I take no joy in the fears I expressed on May 10, nor in what I am saying right now. Therefore, will the Government not admit to the serious problems faced by the housing industry and move to address them? Every Canadian has the right to a job and the right to the chance of owning a home. These are the pillars of our society. These are the dreams, the hopes and aspirations of every Canadian and they are being taken away because of mismanagement by the Government. I urge the Government to reassess its position. It has done nothing with the selection of its new leader from Bay Street. He is in bed with the banks and the CPR. I call on the Government to call an election immediately.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, legislation for the Mortgage Rate Protection Program has been introduced in the House of Commons. Before its introduction, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and their officials were actively involved in intensive consultations with the housing industry, with consumers' representatives and with lenders. This consultative process was surely the best way to develop and implement this budgetary proposal. the basic purpose of the Government's proposed Mortgage Rate Protection Program is to offer security against severe financial disruption due to sharp increases in interest rates. By limiting an individual's exposure to extreme volatility in mortgage rates, the program will help to encourage more individuals to buy houses, including newly-constructed dwellings, and will contribute to the stability and growth of the residential construction industry. The degree of protection provided by the program can be very large if mortgage rates should increase dramatically.

In considering this measure, the Ministers involved have attempted to ensure that the mortgage market remains as viable and responsive in the future as it has in the past. We certainly would not want to approve measures that would have the effect of increasing the cost of mortgages, decreasing the availability of mortgage funds or reducing the range of instruments available. Indeed, the various measures in the Budget related to mortgages are expected to improve the security of home owners and prospective home buyers and increase the flexibility of the mortgage market. In view of the extensive consultations and the wide support the Mortgage Rate Protection Program has received, it is hoped that the legislation will be passed expeditiously. In addition, the Mortgage Rate Protection Program legislation is to be retroactive to March 1, 1984, so that delays resulting from the consultation process would not prevent home owners from obtaining protection.

The Hon. Member mentioned that property rights should be enshrined inthe Constitution for every Canadian. I have to remind him that those rights are within provincial jurisdiction. If he wants those rights enshrined, he should have the provinces give up the authority to the federal Government so we can proceed with this provision for all Canadians.

Adjournment Debate

CO-OPERATIVES—TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION ON WORKERS' CO-OPERATIVES. (B) CONSULTATION WITH CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on May 30 I asked some questions of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) regarding the May 29 task force recommendations on a co-operative development strategy for Canada. That report, which arose out of the Throne Speech last December and a committee financed by the federal Government in January of this year, produced an excellent report, the Report of the National Task Force on Co-operative Development. I would like to make the Government aware that both I and my Party are in strong support of many of those recommendations. The Government has had at least a couple of weeks to have an initial look at the report. We hope that it will perhaps give us a more clear and forthright response, at least in terms of direction, than was obtainable either from the Prime Minister on May 30 or from the Minister responsible for economic development when he was asked a question on May 29, immediately following the presentation of the task force report by my colleague, the Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

The recommendations of the task force dealt with a number of areas. I will quote from their release of May 29. It reads:

> As priorities the task force recommends increased development in four areas of national concern where co-operatives have "significant undeveloped potential"—worker-owned enterprises, health services, fisheries, and housing.

One of the areas which I am most personally concerned with as a representative of an area of British Columbia with a very high level of unemployment and a very strong spirit of independence, which is suffering under a rather reactionary provincial government at this point, has regard to the lengthy sections of the task force report which refer to the success of worker co-ops in the Basque area of Spain. Anyone who comes from my region cannot help but draw certain parallels between the situation in which we find ourselves in the west Kootenays of British Columbia and that confronted by the people of the Basque for several years under Franco. By the process of worker co-ops, during that period of 30 to 40 years, they have been able to become one of the most industrialized and prosperous areas of that country, in spite of a Government which tended to victimize them on occasion.

Particularly I would like to make reference to the three major recommendations of the task force on worker co-ops. The report reads:

> The task force puts forward major recommendations to help spur the development of worker co-operatives:
> A support system should be created "under the direction of the co-operative system but in partnership with the federal Government and interested provincial governments".
> A steering committee should be set up with representatives of both the established co-operative movement and emerging worker co-operatives to formulate a plan for creating a regionally-based worker co-operative development agency. The plan would specify respective roles of the co-operative system, federal and provincial governments, and local worker co-op organizing groups.
> The federal Government should endorse worker co-operatives as a priority vehicle for employment generation. It should also make funding assistance available to the co-operative movement for the staff work of the steering committee, for regional development assistance agencies, and for the creation of a pool of start-up funds or start-up guarantees for individual employee-owned co-operatives.

There are a number of other recommendations. There are some 14 pages within the main report on the establishment of worker co-ops alone.

When the Parliamentary Secretary opposite replies, perhaps he could give some assurance in answer to the other question which I posed to the Prime Minister to which I got an interesting, but not particularly relevant reply. It has to do with the absence of consultation with organized labour by the task force. If we want to see the maximum utilization of the concept of worker co-operatives we must attempt to enlist the co-operation and support, because there will naturally be some suspicion, of those people in organized trade unions in order to facilitate the logical and orderly growth of a principle which I think many people on the Government side, as well as many of us in the Opposition, support. For years and years there has been a joint labour co-op committee within the Canadian Labour Congress. There are many other examples of long-standing, at least consultation if not always active, co-operation between those two sections of the popular movement in Canada. It would be very regrettable if we missed the opportunity to maximize the consent and support for such a worthwhile concept. It may indeed hold a lot of economic and political answers to maintaining democracy, both in the economic and political sphere in this country and to help resolve some of the problems of severe economic dislocation that some of our regions have suffered.

● (2125)

I look forward to hearing some assurance, not only this evening but in the upcoming campaign, that it will be one of the major subjects addressed by the Government. It will certainly be a subject to which we will give active discussion during that period. Hopefully, with whatever government we are blessed or obsessed following the campaign, we will be in a position to take concerted action to realize these constructive dreams that offer the best of all possible worlds for the benefit of the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Rolland Dion (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have this opportunity to answer the question put by the Member for Kootenay-West (Mr. Kristiansen).

Mr. Speaker, the report ordered after the Speech from the Throne last December was published on May 29 and contains, of course, a number of recommendations. Tonight I would like to comment on the Government's position for a number of years on co-operative movements. In this connection, I would like to quote some resolutions adopted at the National Convention in Winnipeg in July 1980. At the time, one resolution from Saskatchewan urged and I quote:

(a) That the Liberal Party of Canada again recognize the uniqueness and desirability of the co-operative approach to organizing a large part of Canadian activities; and

(b) That the Government of Canada consult often with co-operatives, encouraging them to expand and promoting a strengthening of the role they play in this country.

Mr. Speaker, in the last two years the Government has responded to a number of initiatives from the co-operative sector. It has provided financial assistance to Canadian Co-Operative Implements Ltd., a farm machinery manufacturing company located in Winnipeg. By amending the Financial Administration Act, the Government—I think this is very important, and I am referring to a legislative measure that may not have received much publicity but was still very important—the Government removed a number of obstacles which for quite some time had prevented the Caisses populaires and credit unions from providing financial services, including holding federal Government deposits. The Caisses populaires and credit unions are co-operatives. The government has provided readier access to other Government services by making changes in administrative methods. The Government has always made a point of consulting with the private sector and co-ops. I am thinking particularly of the consultations on the Budget held by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and I am referring to the last two Budgets of the present Minister who held a number of consultations with the private sector, including co-operatives.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Government of Canada is very sensitized to the co-operative movement. It has demonstrated this in the past and it will surely continue to do so in the years to come.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The motion to adjourn now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 9.29 p.m., the House adjourned.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Monday, June 18, consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and Motions Nos. 10, 16, 20, 25, 26, 28 and 35 (Mr. Robinson (Burnaby)).

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak in support of the motion to delete Clause 3 from Bill C-9. Clause 3, Mr. Speaker, is the proposed Section setting out the establishment of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. I have indicated in earlier remarks that I accept the fact that Canada, like every other country, needs a security service. It needs a security service which will protect the interests of Canada. I am not very concerned whether that security service should be a civilian security service or a part of the RCMP.

I recognize the fact that, for many years, and even today, the RCMP had and has an excellent reputation. It has earned the respect of most Canadians. Therefore I am not too worried about the question of where the new security service should be lodged, either as a civilian service or as part of the RCMP. What I am concerned about is that its mandate should be crystal clear. It should know what its job is, and what its responsibilities are. It should know what it can do and what it cannot do in order to fulfil its mandate.

For many years most people in Canada knew very little about the work of the security service. There were people in trade union movements, universities, student and church organizations who had a feeling that the security service was keeping an eye on them, infiltrating their organizations, even though they believed that the things that they were doing were quite legitimate and did not need to be spied upon. But they had no real evidence that this was happening until a few years ago.

I was a Member of this House when stories began to circulate about some of the activities in which the security service had been involved. I remember that, as each story came out, the then Solicitor General, first the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), and later the present Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), assured Members of this House, the media, and the general public that these were isolated cases. Well, either they had not been told what was going on or they did not want to know. The McDonald Commission looked into all these questions, and in fact they did not know what was going on.

Eventually we had the prosecution of a former RCMP officer, Mr. Samson, which, along with other things, led to the establishment of the McDonald Commission. It spent several years, heard hundreds of witnesses in public and in secret, and made a report which ought to have caused a great deal of hard thinking and anguish on the part of all Canadians. The situation was in fact very, very serious. The report said that the security service had been involved in the theft of membership lists of a legitimate political Party, involved in burning barns, and in the theft of dynamite, and wire tapping. Those are just a few of the activities in which the Security Service had been involved.

Eventually the McDonald Commission made a number of recommendations calling for legislation to set up a new security service to make clear what its job and responsibilities were, what its officers could and could not do, and what they should be able to do in order to fulfil their mandate. We have had at least two Bills from the Government supposedly dealing with the problems, and making proposals on how to deal with the recommendations. The first Bill died because there was so much opposition to it. It was clear that the Bill and the proposals were deficient.

Now we have this second Bill which was referred to the Senate and had a number of changes made to it, based on the recommendations of the Senate. The Minister has said repeatedly that it is only a small group of malcontents who are opposing that Bill for political reasons, or because they do not understand it. But the Bill is still being opposed by very important non partisan groups in the community. I will list them very briefly. They are the Canadian Conference of Churches, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, the provincial Attorneys General, and organizations such as the Canadian Jewish Congress. Such organizations appeared before the committee and made very detailed critiques of the Bill, which included a number of very specific recommendations on how the Bill should be amended to meet the standards of fairness which are required. Virtually all of their recommendations have been ignored.

I remind Members of the House that the Canadian Jewish Congress was very active in an earlier major debate which we had in Parliament on the question of the Constitution and the Charter of Rights. Its presentation was made at that time by its then president, Professor Irwin Cotler, a professor of law at McGill University. He is a leading spokesman on human and civil rights, and is legal counsel to Anatoly Shcharansky, the famous Soviet dissident.

Mr. Cotler was an assistant to the new Leader of the Liberal Party, Mr. Turner, when Mr. Turner was the Minister of Justice. A long article in yesterday's Globe and Mail said that Professor Cotler was one of the people Mr. Turner recruited when he became the Minister of Justice. Mr. Turner wanted small l liberals, progressive thinking people who were interested in questions such as civil rights. Professor Cotler was one of Mr. Turner's assistants. The article in the Globe and Mail reads:

> Prof. Cotler says at first he mistrusted his boss, figuring that he was not serious about the issues, such as civil liberties or poverty, he said he wanted to address.
> Mr. Cotler says his mind was changed when he watched Mr. Turner deliver a hard-hitting speech calling for justice to the poor—

I wonder what Mr. Cotler would think about the Bill we are discussing now. I wonder what the new Leader of the Liberal Party would think about this Bill. Mr. Cotler has not spoken on this Bill, but the organization of which he was the president until about a year ago, has spoken.

I will quote a few of the recommendations of the Canadian Jewish Congress which the Solicitor General has ignored completely. Dealing with threats to the security of Canada they proposed the following amendment to what is now in the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair regrets interrupting the Hon. Member, but his time is up. The Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser).

● (1120)

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who preceded me was asking rhetorically what Mr. Turner or Mr. Cotler, the eminent lawyer on civil rights, would think of this Bill. What does it matter? It does not matter what Mr. Turner thinks. There is nothing new about Mr. Turner. It is not a new deal, it is the old deal writ large.

Mr. Turner is now the leader of the Liberal Party. We saw the unseemly haste with which all the sycophantic members of the Trudeau Cabinet jumped on his bandwagon early in the game, because they knew that the fix was in. The establishment was going to put him in office.

When the Hon. Member asks what would Mr. Turner think, I say that it does not matter what Mr. Turner thinks. What matters is is whether the public would buy a used Government from that man.

Alan Borovoy is not a kook, lunatic, or nut; he is one of the most sensible and intelligent critics on the question of civil liberties in Canada. He has said that this Bill in its present form is the most dangerous attack on civil liberties since Confederation.

When one talks of Mr. Turner, and reform, and the new Liberal Party, it is all a lot of garbage. The first thing that happened in this House after Mr. Turner became the Leader of the Liberal Party was the implementation of notice of closure on a Bill that is absolutely essential and integral to the civil rights of Canadians. What we listened to last weekend was absolute claptrap. There is nothing new. It is not the new deal. I said, it is the old deal, writ large.

The disgrace about this Bill is that the Government said at second reading stage that we could make suggestions at committee. That was a fraud. It was dishonest and was not intended. The Government has not made a significant acceptance of suggestions made by Hon. Members in committee or by those who came to the committee at great expense to the Canadian taxpayer.

All that we are listening to on the Government side is sanctimonious nonsense. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) is reported in today's Canadian Press as saying that this is all a filibuster, and even a child could understand that Hon. Members are just playing games. Are we playing games with Clause 2, subparagraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) which define what are threats to the security of Canada, and trigger what a secret group can do secretly, in the dark, to other Canadians?

Some day someone will ask why some of us MPs did not say something. The fact of the matter is that we have been saying a lot, but because the media have been running around writing inane stories about an inane bunch of people, nobody has been reporting what we have been saying. One of these days the same reporters, the same graduates of the same crummy journalism schools, will be writing sanctimonious, pious editorials asking how did all of this happen in the House of Commons of Canada. When that happens, I hope some of them have their noses rubbed in some of the speeches that have been made here.

I am fed up to the teeth with the hypocritical claptrap of the Liberal Members. We are not even allowed to put most of the amendments in the House that would force them to vote. Even the Liberal Party's former Solicitor General does not agree with this Bill. They will not even listen to him. He is the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). Unfortunately he is away, and I had to move his amendments yesterday. He was probably sent away.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who is an eminent Member of the House and has been here for many years, asks the rhetorical question: what would John Turner think of this Bill? John Turner knows all about the Bill and has thought about it. He said to get it out of the House as fast as possible because he does not want to be embarrassed by

it. Therefore yesterday the Solicitor General, who has been wandering around with a John Turner button on his lapel for weeks, if not months, said that he will move notice to cut off debate. I would not mind their cutting off debate if they would accept some amendments that would make this Bill safer for Canadians.

I practised law in courts for 17 years before I was elected in 1972. I worked in a logging camp and lived in a bunkhouse when I was 15. I do not come from a silver spoon background, and I have been about. I got out of law school and I went to the Yukon, and paid my debts by running a string of pack-horses. I have served in the Canadian army. There is not much I haven't done or haven't seen.

I do not come to this debate with some kind of ingenuous, rosy hued notion and fantasy out of the classroom. Of course I am a civil rights lawyer. Any lawyer who knows the common law has to be a civil rights lawyer. Common law is our pride and our tradition, because lawyers who went to court had the guts to get up and say some of the things that were not the conventional clap-trap wisdom and herd mentality of either the media or the cocktail party set. That is what this debate is about, Mr. Speaker.

The Government could accept some amendments to this Bill if it had any conscience or any sense. But the Government has dug in. The Liberals have been told by a group of so-called experts that that is what they have to have. The other people who come representing traditions and values that determine and guarantee our freedom have not been listened to. Those of us who talk about civil rights are looked upon by the Government as some kind of left-wing kook fringe.

I am ashamed at what is happening in this House. I am ashamed also that across the country the people who are supposed to be watching this debate, and supposed to be finding out what the issue really is, cannot seem to figure it out. I do not know what we have journalism schools for. What about the people in the ivory towers of the media who prate, rant, and preach, and tell us, MPs, how we ought to behave every once in a while, give us lectures about the price of food in the parliamentary restaurant, tell us that we should never have an increase in pay, or get so righteous? While all of this has been going on, where have they been? Sitting in their ivory towers, in their executive suites, while their underpaid minions have been dazzled by a party show that has gone on in the last few weeks. As a consequence this vital issue, as Alan Borovoy said, the most important issue in civil rights since Confederation, has been ignored.

I am ashamed for this place, and I am ashamed of the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Debate.

Mr. Kaplan: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair would like to remind the House that Motions Nos. 10, 16, 20, 25, 26, 28, and 35 have been grouped for debate.

A vote on Motion No. 10 disposes of Motions Nos. 16, 20, 25, 26, 28, and 35.

The question is on Motion No. 10. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Althouse, moves that Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 3.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the Motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Pursuant to Standing Order 79 (11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The Chair would like to remind Hon. Members that Motions Nos. 12, 13, and 14 have been grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 12 disposes of Motions Nos. 13 and 14. A negative vote on Motion No. 12 necessitates a vote on Motion No. 13. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 13 disposes of a vote on Motion No. 14. A negative vote on Motion No. 13 necessitates a vote on Motion No. 14.

• (1130)

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 12

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 4.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South) moved:

Motion No. 13

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 4 by striking out line 22 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"appoint the Director of the Service, who, subject to subsection 6(1), has the operational responsibility for the Service."

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 14

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 4 by striking out line 22 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"appoint the Director of the Service, after consultation by the Prime Minister of Canada with the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons of each party having at least 12 Members in that House."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): For debate, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this group of amendments is to deal with the question of the appointment of the Director of the proposed civilian security service. A number of questions were raised in that connection, including the proposed term of office of the Director, as well as the consultation which should be mandatory on the appointment of such an important individual and the powers which the Director of the service will hold.

I listened with considerable interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) with respect to the previous motion. I only wish that his fire and brimstone had been applied equally vigorously in committee. This legislation might not have seen the light of day in its present form had his colleagues in caucus been a little more vigorous in their opposition to this legislation instead of co-operating with the Government in expediting its passage.

The first motion is Motion No. 12 which would delete Clause 4. However, I should like to talk for a moment or two about Motion No. 14 in particular. That motion would require that the Minister appoint the Director of the service only following consultation by the Prime Minister with the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, as well as with the Leader of each Party having at least 12 Members in the House. This was one of the essential recommendations of the McDonald Commission, that in the appointment of such an important official whose powers are so sweeping under the terms of the legislation, there should at least be consultation if not a requirement for ratification of that appointment. Indeed, I believe a requirement for ratification would be preferable, but at least there should be consultation before appointment to such an important position.

What is the history on this question? Shortly after the report of the McDonald Commission was tabled, the Government announced that it intended to create a new civilian security service. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) went on to name the man he decided was to head the service. At that point it was Mr. Fred Gibson. There was no consultation whatsoever with either of the Opposition Parties, the Government having ignored that recommendation. Some time later Mr. Gibson was appointed to the position of Deputy Minister and yet another individual was named to be Director of the new civilian security service whenever it was created, Mr. Ted Finn from the Privy Council Office, a former crony of Michael Pitfield. There was no consultation whatsoever with the Opposition on the appointment of Mr. Finn, the new Director, despite the very clear direction on the part of the McDonald Commission that there should be consultation with the Opposition before the appointment of such an individual. The purpose of Motion No. 14 is simply to include in the Bill the requirement for that consultation. I cannot imagine how the Government could oppose such a reasonable suggestion.

I am sure we will hear from the Hon. Member for Vancouver South with respect to Motion No. 13 since that motion was moved in his name. However, with respect to Motion No. 12, the motion to delete Clause 4, I would note that it is one which deals with the question of the Director of the service and the powers of this new service. Those powers which will be granted to the new Director are sweeping and unprecedented in any democratic society. For the first time in Canadian history the Director of the new service will have the power to go before a court and seek a warrant to break into anyone's home, to remove anything—this is what some have called legalized theft—to break into an office or any other place, to instal bugs and to take away anything it wants to take away. In effect, we are seeing here the legalizing of what was documented as illegal by the McDonald Commission. If the security service breaks into the offices of the APLQ and steals documents, under this Bill that is now legal. If the security service breaks into the offices of the Parti Québécois, a legal party, and steals computer tapes with its membership records—and the McDonald Commission said that that was illegal—under the provisions of the Bill that is now legal.

The McDonald Commission documented a series of breaches of federal and provincial law. In virtually every instance the response of the Government has been to change the law to make what was illegal then legal now. Surely in a democratic society that cannot be acceptable.

The Director appointed under the provisions of Clause 4 will have the power to appear before a Federal Court judge and seek a judicial warrant, after having consulted with the Minister, to break into any place, to remove any thing or to open first-class mail. That power has never before been granted for any purpose to any police agency in the history of the country. The Government comes before Parliament and says that it is a power which it needs, despite the fact that the McDonald Commission clearly argued against extending the power to open first-class mail of Canadians suspected of so-called domestic subversion. The Director can seek the power to open the first-class mail of all Canadians. The Director can go before the courts and seek a warrant to invade the confidential medical records and confidential psychiatric records of Canadians, a power which is not in existence at the present time.

• (1140)

For the first time in the history of our country, the Director of the service will be able to go before the courts of this land and seek a warrant to access confidential income tax records which, once again, have never in the history of this country been made legally accessible to any police force or security service. The McDonald Commission documented the fact that the security service illegally had access to income tax records. The response of this Government is that while it may have been illegal then, we are telling Parliament that we are going to make it legal today. That is the power that is contained in this Bill and which is conferred on the Director under Clause 4. It is for that reason that we are seeking the deletion of Clause 4. Nowhere, in no other western other country in the world, whether it be the United States, West Germany, the United Kingdom, New Zealand or Australia, are the kinds of powers being sought in this legislation conferred.

What is so special about the threats to Canada? I suggest these motions should be supported. These draconian powers which are granted to this new super spy must be curtailed. On that basis, I urge the House to adopt Motions Nos. 12, 13 and 14.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word or two about Motions Nos. 12, 13 and 14 which deal with Clause 4 of the Bill. In the original statute this clause was different. After having heard the witnesses, the Government agreed that it would accept an amendment. It prompts the comment that on many occasions the Government was prepared to accept the evidence of the Senate committee, the McDonald Commission and our own committee, yet in other clauses that were equally reasonable and upon which Government Members themselves could see the logic of the change, Cabinet has decided not to accept it. I think it is fair comment that if the thinking of the McDonald Commission was proper on several of these issues, surely it is just as proper on other issues. I do not understand why the Cabinet accepted some and not others. Likewise the Senate. I would like the Minister to comment on that. It is not this clause in particular but some of the others as well. I would like him to think about it. Maybe he could give us the benefit of his thinking as to what occurred within Cabinet that some of the McDonald Commission recommendations were accepted and some were not, in terms of judicial warrants and so on.

Mr. Kaplan: Why do you accept some and reject some?

Mr. Thacker: My acceptances and rejections are based on evidence that we heard in committee.

Mr. Kaplan: So are ours.

Mr. Thacker: We have a disagreement then as to the weight that should be attached to the evidence we heard. The Minister will agree that some of his own Members felt in their questioning of the Minister that a change would be acceptable if the Minister did not. Is that because he and the Cabinet have vastly superior access to information, even though they did not hear the witnesses? This is a general comment I have about the whole process which has broken down in Parliament.

We have second reading of the Bill. In a sense, second reading is premature. It is only after you hear the witnesses that you get the broad scope of the Bill. I agree with those who believe that after the Bill is introduced for first reading it should go directly to committee. We could then hear the experts from the various fields. The committee could then recommend changes. At that point the Bill could come back at second reading and be discussed on principle. It would be easier for the Government to accept amendments at that stage, before we have second reading debate and it has been passed in principle. The Government at second reading of this Bill stood and defended the principle of it. It then went to committee. When faced with the many changes suggested by the experts, the Government will not accept them. The Government and its caucus are convinced that the Bill has been approved in principle and therefore cannot accept any changes.

Clause 4 dealing with the Director originally stated that the Director shall be appointed to hold office during good behaviour for a term not exceeding five years. We immediately picked up on the fact that the Director could not be dismissed by the Government if the Director did something politically improper or improper for reasons other than conduct. We therefore proposed the motion that the Director hold office at pleasure. That makes him much more accountable and responsive to the government of the day. That was a good amendment and I commend the Minister for accepting it. I wish he would accept some of our other amendments at the same time.

The Director at the expiration of his first term of five years can be reappointed for a further five years and no person shall hold office as Director for terms exceeding ten years in the aggregate. That is good. We should learn from the United States situation when Mr. Edgar Hoover was director of the CIA. He was in office so long that he collected dossiers on all people in public life. He was able to block appointments of people to public office, promotion of officials within the hierarchy of the United States administration and actually perverted the political scene in the United States because of the power he had built up in the office. We do not want that to happen. I am glad that the Director, as good as he or she may be, will have to leave at the end of ten years. If I had my way, that same rule would apply with respect to the Prime Minister, the Premiers and indeed to all of us in public life. After ten years such a person would have to drop out for at least one term.

There is no doubt that the Hill is an unreal place. There is the very real possibility of losing touch with what those at the grassroots feel about issues. We would be much more responsive if we had to stand down for a term after ten years in office.

Motion No. 12, which is an attempt by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) to have the whole clause struck out, is pursuant to his strategy that if he cannot have his changes, the whole Bill should be knocked out. I disagree heartily with his comments vis-à-vis the comments of my colleague from Vancouver South who presented his case in committee in a rational and logical way. If it would not have been for the Hon. Member for Burnaby, I feel the Government would have been more inclined to accept amendments. I think the strategy and tactics of the Hon. Member for Burnaby in committee so early on inflamed the Government and it took extraordinary remedies. The actions of the Hon. Member for Burnaby have been deleterious to the parliamentary process in dealing with this Bill. I know from talking with some of my colleagues on the Government side privately and off the record that they may have been inclined to accept more of these amendments had it not been for the actions of the NDP and the Hon. Member for Burnaby.

As I look at the further sections of the Bill dealing with the Director, I note that the Director has absolutely enormous powers regarding the appointment and management of the employees of the service. The relevant clause states:

The Director . . . has the control and management of the Service and all matters connected therewith.

The clause dealing with appointments relates back to Clause 4. Clause 8 reads:

Notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act and the Public Service Employment Act, the Director has exclusive authority to appoint employees—

That is a very broad power. This Director is being given an enormous power over his own employees. If this Director were to have unlimited tenure, that power could very easily be used against the employees of the service.

I have one more minute left, Mr. Speaker. That is a part of my argument regarding why there should be a limit of ten years on the tenure of the Director. He has exclusive authority to appoint employees and, in relation to the personnel management of employees, to provide for terms and conditions of their employment. That is a very dramatic power and I think we would not want to have anyone with that kind of power hold an office for more than ten years.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I am supporting the amendments that have been put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), and particularly the motion to amend the clause that requires consultation with leaders of other Parties. In a case like this, it is of absolute importance that there be no veto power by other political Parties. That would be wrong and unwise.

The Bill gives this agency wide and sweeping powers. It gives it powers far in excess of those suggested by the McDonald Commission and far in excess of and much more sweeping than those suggested by virtually every major group that appeared before the committee. Therefore, there should at least be some consultation between the leaders of the Parties in this House of Commons, Parties which have received a substantial degree of support from the Canadian electorate.

I believe that the people of Canada have a right to the knowledge that the director of any agency that has the right by law to interfere in many aspects of Canadian life that have hitherto been considered well protected if not inviolate has been subject to a Parliamentary review. They have the right to the knowledge that the experience and character of such a person has been subject to a review by those people Canadians have chosen to represent their various legitimate interests in the House of Commons. I am not suggesting that the Government is not acting with the best intentions. We all have our own various ways of achieving what we think is good for society. However, I cannot understand why the Government and the Minister would have an objection to this kind of consultative process.

It has often been said that justice must not only be done but must be seen to be done. Nowhere must it be seen to be done more than in the choosing of a director and the setting up of an administration that is responsible for the very broad and sweeping powers for which this legislation provides. Even at this late date I would hope that the Minister, if he will not support the motion put forward by my colleague, will at least consider consulting with his other colleagues and perhaps returning to the House with Government amendments which would provide that what is seen to be done when setting up the administration of this service is beyond reproach and that every step is taken to ensure the consideration of all valid and legitimate expressions of political opinion in Canada. This is the very least that should be done when setting up an agency which has a mandate, as I have said many times before, that gives it very wide and sweeping powers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I am so glad to see members of the Government Party returning to the House to hear what I have to say about this particular legislation.

Mr. Orlikow: Because you're so good.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, I say this in all modesty. Any circumstance which would cause Liberal Members of Parliament to listen to those expressing their points of view is really an unusual circumstance. I am grateful for small mercies. Government Members have been silent on this bill. We have not had an opportunity to hear Members of Parliament representing the Liberal ranks defend, as I assume they should, the positions that have been taken by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan).

We can only assume that the Solicitor General has now had an opportunity of clearing his positions with the new leader of the Liberal Party, Mr. John Turner. We know that the Solicitor General was one of the key workers for and advisers to Mr. Turner. I therefore must assume that this legislation and the tactics that are being employed with respect to the closure the Government has imposed on this legislation and its provisions have the full sanction and support of the new leader of the Liberal Party.

We are dealing now with provisions which affect the whole question of what kind of protection should be afforded to the civil liberties of Canadians generally. One of the things that has bothered me is that this legislation raises some serious questions about the protection of Canadians from unauthorized snooping and spying by an agency of the Government, the function of which is the collecting of files on individuals and the compiling of portfolios on people in Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair would like to remind the Hon. Member that we are dealing with report stage of the Bill and we are presently considering the grouping of Motions Nos. 12, 13 and 14 which deal specifically with Clause No. 4 of the Bill pertaining to the appointment of the Director. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to direct his remarks to that particular clause.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the point of these amendments which are before us is either to amend the position of the Director of this service that is proposed by this legislation or indeed to remove the provisions respecting the appointment of a Director. It seems to me that that is one way of manifesting our objection to the way in which the Government has dealt with this legislation. There has been a lack of sensitivity to the suggestions that we have made about the accountability of people who will be involved in this service and particularly about the person who will be primarily involved in the operation of the new security service, the Director. This person will play a pivotal role in carrying out the functions of the new security agency. Therefore, naturally we are concerned about what precisely will be the parameters of the powers of the Director.

Are we getting ourselves into the same situation which was subject to much criticism with respect to the operations and the arbitrary nature—according to all press reports—of the director of the FBI, J. Edgar Hoover, in the United States? We know through freedom of information sources in the United States about certain things which transpired because of the fact that the director of the FBI had limited accountability. The director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation deemed it appropriate to obtain the goods on certain people within the United States for purposes which he felt were justified. However, in the cold light of historic perspective, they turned out to be very much self-serving endeavours on the part of the director of that agency. We must guard against the availability of unlimited discretionary powers for the director of any agency in this country.

This agency will not be involved in the prosecution of criminals. It will not be involved directly in law enforcement as such. It is an agency which collects and deciphers information on people and on organizations. Its sole purpose is to garner information with respect to activities going on within Canada and outside of Canada. The question may be asked: If they are not in a position, as a police force is, to prosecute or lay informations, what difference does it make whether they collect information with respect to the citizens of Canada? There is a well-known axiom that knowledge is power. If certain groups in a free and democratic society have the function of advising government in terms of security matters and are able to develop files on individuals across Canada, and this information is made known without accountability to political sources within our country, the information has the possibility, indeed the probability, of being used for political purposes to the detriment of people in Canada.

I do not want to rehash old news, but I am still scandalized by the actions of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) at the time of the election of our new Leader, the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney). The Minister of Finance instructed officials in his Department to go through files and to seek out information which might cause embarrassment to the Leader of the Opposition. People say that this could not happen in Canada. However, the Minister of Finance was forced to stand in his place and admit that that was precisely what happened.

Knowledge is power. The danger with this organization is that if it is able to obtain information with respect to individuals in our country through surveillance, authorized wire taps, investigation of income tax returns, investigation of medical records, information which may be embarrassing or damaging to the reputations of individual Canadians, think of the potential that that information could be put to by a government that is inclined to use that information for its own purposes.

When we talk about the appointment of this Director—and these motions precisely deal with that—do we not have the responsibility as a Loyal Opposition to indicate that we have many, many concerns about the accountability and the review process which is generally contained in the legislation? Our many concerns have been expressed and manifested in different ways—through motions, at second reading debate and also within committee—about the mandate which has been given to this agency. We are concerned about the scope, the breadth and the fact that there is a high element of discretion involved with respect to activities which could be carried out by this agency.

In conclusion, are we not entitled to look at the powers and the accountability which the Director of this new service should be given? I am in support of the amendments which are in this particular grouping because I think the Government has, with the weight of its majority, decided to ram this legislation through. It is insensitive to the representations which have been made, insensitive to the feelings of the people of Canada and insensitive to the whole concept of freedom in a democratic society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The question is on Motion No. 12. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Pursuant to Section (11) of Standing Order 79, the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The House will now consider Motions Nos. 17, 19, 22, 23 and 24 which have been grouped for debate. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 17 obviates the need for a vote on Moton No. 19. A negative vote on Motion No. 17 necessitates a vote on Motion No. 19. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 22 will dispose of Motions Nos. 23 and 24. A negative vote on Motion No. 22 necessitates separate votes on Motions Nos. 23 and 24.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 17

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 6.

Motion No. 19

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 6

(c) policies with respect to training of employees;

(d) policies establishing minimization procedures for warrants issued under this Act, and a copy of any such direction shall forthwith after it has been issued be given to the Review Committee.

(b) by adding immediately after line 40 at page 4, the following:

"(4) The director shall keep the minister fully and currently informed of all operations of the service."

Motion No. 22

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 8.

Motion No. 23

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 8 by striking out line 23 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

Motion No. 24

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 8

(a) by striking out line 23 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"of their employment, without denying collective bargaining rights of the said employees, and"

(b) by striking out line 3 at page 6 and substituting the following:

● (1210)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motions with which we are now dealing relate to two very important clauses of the Bill, Clause No. 6 and Clause No. 8, which essentially set out the functions, duties and responsibilities of the management of the Director of the service as well as the relationship between the Minister responsible, that is, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), and the Director. These clauses as well permit the Director to establish unilaterally terms and conditions of employment for employees of the new service.

There are four or five motions before the House, Mr. Speaker. These motions deal with a number of subjects because of the way in which the Speaker has chosen to group them. In ten minutes it is very difficult to explain adequately the full purpose of the amendments.

The first grouping of amendments is of those which deal with Clause No. 6, that is, Motion No. 17, which refers to the deletion of Clause No. 6, as well as Clause No. 19 and Clause No. 20. Speaking first, Mr. Speaker, to Motion No. 19, as Clause No. 6 is now worded, the Minister at his or her discretion may issue written directions to the Director of the service and, after those written directions are issued, shall forward a copy to the review committee. Nowhere in this Bill, however, is there any obligation on the part of the Minister to issue such written directions when dealing with important questions of policy. Therefore, the review process, which has already been effectively gutted by the provision in the legislation which would deny access to any documents which are referred to as Cabinet documents, is further weakened by the possibility that the Minister may not in fact pass on written directives to the review committee. The first purpose of this amendment is to require that directives be in writing when dealing with the broad, general operational policies of the service.

As well, Mr. Speaker, this Bill at the present time is totally silent on a number of very important policy questions which I believe must be addressed in the context of the legislation and, more importantly, must be addressed by the Minister and the review committee. These are set out in Motion No. 19. First, Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 19 requires that the Minister establish clear policies with respect to the use of undercover operatives—informers, if you will—by the service.

The placement of an informer can be one of the most intrusive and invasive technique which is available to a security service. It is far more intrusive in a number of instances, Mr. Speaker, and far more chilling in its impact on an organization, than even the placing of a telephone bug or the opening of mail. In a number of instances, as we know all too well, informers have been used not just to collect information, but to attempt to shape the decisions of the groups which they infiltrate. Yet, Mr. Speaker, this Bill is totally silent on the question of the role of informers. Indeed, there is not even a requirement that a warrant be obtained, the minimal requirement of a judicial warrant before an informer is placed in an organization by the security service.

The Keable Commission, which was established in the Government of Quebec, very strongly argued that there must be provision for judicial review before the use of undercover spies and informers in a democratic society. Yet, Mr. Speaker, not only is there no requirement for judicial warrant, but this Bill does not even address the issue of informers and the placement of informers.

Once again, we do not have to look very far; we do not have to look beyond the report of the McDonald Commission to see the historic abuse of the placement of informers into groups which broke no laws whatsoever. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, right here in Ottawa Hon. Members will recall that the security service placed an informer, Andrew Moxley, into that subversive group which was attempting to persuade Canada not to test the Cruise missile. As well, informers have been placed into groups which are attempting to support liberation movements in Central America. This Bill, which purports to establish a statutory mandate for the security service, says not a word on this fundamental question.

My amendment would as well, Mr. Speaker, require that policies be established with respect to the use of physical surveillance by the service. Once again, there is no reference to that whatsoever in the Bill as it now stands. My amendment would require policies to be established with respect to the training of employees in order to ensure they are a little more sensitive to civil liberties.

It would, finally, Mr. Speaker, require that policies establishing minimization procedures for warrants issued under this Act be set out, and set out clearly. This Bill goes far beyond comparable American legislation in terms of the nature of warrants and the extent to which warrants can be used. Minimization procedures, Mr. Speaker, would require that if a tap is placed and it subsequently become known that the tap should not have been placed, then it would be removed immediately and any information collected would be destroyed. That minimal safeguard is totally lacking in this legislation.

As well, Mr. Speaker, there is a requirement—this is something which was proposed by many witnesses—that the Director must keep the Minister fully and currently informed of all operations of the service in order to avoid any suggestion of blindness, so that a Minister cannot suggest that he or she did not know what was going on in the service. This would require that the Director be fully and currently informed and thus could not use the excuse of wilful blindness.

As well, Mr. Speaker, there is a reference in this motion to the terms and conditions of employment, and a specific prohibition of discrimination of employment in the service, a discrimination on the grounds which are set out in the Canadian Human Rights Act, as well as on the basis of political belief or sexual orientation. Hon. Members will again recall that in appearing before the justice committee, the present Commissioner of the RCMP security service stated that "the security service at this time will not in fact hire individuals who may be gay or lesbian". That was indicated, Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that he admitted openly that there was no threat to security whatsoever in the case of individuals who are quite open about their orientation, but he said that other members of the service do not feel comfortable with these people around.

What kind of absurd rationale is that in a democratic society? It is the same rationale, Mr. Speaker, that we heard with respect to blacks and women not so long ago, with respect to Jews and other minorities, that they do not feel comfortable around them. Yet this Minister, Mr. Speaker, stands by and permits that kind of discrimination to take place. He should be ashamed of himself, Mr. Speaker, as a member of a minority himself, that that kind of discrimination would be tolerated in this society. This amendment, Mr. Speaker, would ensure that that kind of discrimination would not be permitted in the new civilian security service.

Indeed, the proposed Director, Mr. Finn, has said before the committee that he would not allow such discrimination and this amendment, Mr. Speaker, would ensure, in statutory form, there would be a bar on that discrimination which is not tolerable in today's society or, indeed, in any society.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the amendment would require that the terms and conditions of employment of members of the service not deny them collective bargaining rights. As it stands now, the legislation would deny the fundamental freedom of association—a freedom which is supposedly contained in the Charter of Rights—to members of the new service. This amendment in Motion No. 24 would ensure collective bargaining rights for all members of the service. I want to commend the association of 17 Division of the RCMP for attempting to secure collective bargaining rights for all members of the force. Not the right to strike but the right to bargain collectively on terms and conditions of employment, a right which is denied even possibly to employees of this House.

I want to reiterate that the thrust of the amendments is clearly to establish the responsibility of the Minister to set out policies with respect to the use and placement of informers by the new security service, informers who can have such a chilling impact in a free and democratic society; policies with respect to training and minimization procedures for warrants. Secondly, it would prohibit discrimination in establishing terms and conditions of employment on the grounds set out in the Canadian Human Rights Act as well as on the basis of political belief or sexual orientation. Finally, it would deny the service the right to infringe on freedom of association and full collective bargaining rights. I strongly urge Members of this House to adopt these motions which would strengthen the service and bring the terms and conditions of employment in the service into the 20th century.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about Clause 6 of this Bill pursuant to these five motions grouped for debate. Clause 6, dealing with management of the service, states that:

> The Director, under the direction of the Minister, has the control and management of the Service and all matters connected therewith.

You will see instantly that the issue we have to deal with is whether the Minister is responsible politically for the actions of the Director, or whether he can somehow slip out of the noose, so to speak, if the service does something improper, as the RCMP did back in the 1970s. We had quite a debate in committee as to whether that was so. As I recall, the Minister felt that because the Director is under the direction of the Minister, the Minister would be on the hook for that type of wrongdoing. That may well be so. Clause 6(2) provides that:

Security Intelligence Service

In providing the direction referred to in subsection (1), the Minister may issue to the Director written directions with respect to the Service and a copy of any such directions shall, forthwith after it is issued, be given to the Review Committee.

My concern as a Member of Parliament is that if this section said the Minister "shall" issue to the Director written instructions which then have to be followed, it would be less easy for the Minister to somehow get out of the ultimate responsibility. All of this instructions would have to be in writing, copies would go to the review committee, and if the service did something outside of those written instructions then the Minister would be quite properly off the hook and the Director would be on the hook. We had quite a debate over whether the Minister "shall" issue directions, and if you review the minutes of the committee the Minister was saying that there are occasions when that is just totally inappropriate because he might be in Timbuktu or something like that and have to give telephone instructions. We accepted the Minister's point on that, but I think we would all agree that we want to have the Director responsible to the Minister, so that if anything goes wrong there is political accountability at the highest level for the actions of the Director.

Clause 6(3) goes on to say that the directions are not statutory instruments. That is in order to maintain secrecy other than through the established review mechanism, the Inspector General and the Review Committee. But it does raise an issue that Hon. Members should think about seriously. This review committee will be appointed by the Governor in Council and they will be Privy Councillors. At first we thought that would mean retired MPs and Senators, because the statute clearly states they cannot be active MPs or Senators. But we found in the evidence of the Minister that no, that was not necessarily the case and they may well pick someone off the street, appoint them Privy Councillor and then put them on the review committee. That completely changes the sense of direction and accountability.

We believe, and the witnesses were clear, that people who have served in public life, in elected office, whether MPs or Senators who at one time served in the House, have a much greater understanding of what Canadians are feeling than someone who might be appointed from a university, the academic community, or some Liberal who has served the Party in a minor role. Therefore, I wish Government Members would take another look at that because I believe we should be closer to the United States situation where the review committee is composed of elected officials.

The U.S. has a much more sophisticated CIA operation. There is a review body of elected officials, one from the Senate and another from the House of Representatives. Why is it that in Canada we distrust having elected officials as a review committee? The U.S. has no trouble with this and they certainly have no more leaks, I suppose, than other countries I believe the Minister should rethink this question.

The witnesses also felt that the Minister should be politically responsible for the CSIC on a day to day basis. That is why we got into this argument about "shall" as opposed to "may". The Canadian Jewish Congress proposed very extensive amendments to Clause 6(1). For example, they say:

The Director, under the direction of the Minister, has the control and management of the Service and all matters connected therewith, but the Director shall comply with directions issued by the Minister under subsection (2) and shall keep the Minister fully informed of the operations of the Service.

They have five other subsections of amendments, none of which was accepted by the Minister. I wish he would stand in the House and tell us why he did not feel disposed to accept the amendments of the Canadian Jewish Congress. They come at the problem with a very special and particular interest. They, more than anyone else, have been oppressed by secret service agencies in other countries, whether it be South America or Eastern Europe. Therefore we felt that their evidence had much more weight than that of myself, say, as a civilian having been born and raised on the western plains. I never have been exposed to any form of oppression, other than by the Grits here in Ottawa responding to central Canada, I suppose. I wish the Minister would stand and tell us why he was not disposed to accept the evidence of the Canadian Jewish Congress on this clause.

We are under time allocation and I wonder if the Minister should not respond on these major clauses particularly.

Mr. Kaplan: We are not there yet. I will as soon as we are.

Mr. Thacker: Will you respond on Clause 6? I felt the Canadian Jewish Congress had done a very good job. Those are the only comments I have with respect to Clause 6, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The question is on Motion No. 17. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11) the recorded division on the proposed motions stands deferred.

Motion No. 37

Security Intelligence Service

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 15 by striking out line 46 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"section 13 or advice pursuant to section 14, utilizing only such techniques as are approved by the minister by regulation, such techniques not to include the use of undercover operatives or those for which a warrant is required under section 21 of this Act."

Motion No. 38

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 16.

Motion No. 39

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 16

(a) by striking out line 8 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"capabilities, intentions or activities of any foreign power or agent of a foreign power".

(b) by striking out lines 19 to 22 at page 8.

(c) by adding immediately after line 31 at page 8 the following:

"(4) The service shall cease immediately the use of any technique for which a warrant is required under section 21 of this Act when obtaining information pursuant to sub-section 1 when performing its duties and functions under sub-section 1 immediately upon learning that the interception involves a communication involves a Canadian citizen or a permanent resident within the meaning of the Immigration Act 1976 is a party.

(5) The service shall not for the purpose of this or any other section of this Act be authorized to receive information fro the communications security establishment which has been obtained by the interception of communications of Canadian citizens or permanent residents within the meaning of the Immigration Act 1976".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this group of motions deals with Clauses 12, 13, 15 and 16. These are the clauses which effectively establish the mandate of the new security service to deal with the so-called threats to the security of Canada, which we know have been drafted far too broadly, the mandate to provide security assessments, and the new and unprecedented mandate under Clause 16 of this Bill, the so-called foreign intelligence mandate, which would permit the new service to target foreign visitors to Canada who have broken no law whatsoever and pose no threat whatsoever to the security of the country.

In the 10 minutes available to me I will attempt to explain briefly the purpose of each of these amendments. My colleagues will deal more specifically with the threatening and unprecedented powers which are contained in Clause 16 of this Bill, which powers have been severely criticized by many witnesses appearing before our committee.

Motion No. 30 would delete Clause 12 and Motions Nos. 31 and 32 would amend Clause 12, failing deletion. Clause 12 is the clause which gives the service the power to "collect, by investigation or otherwise, to the extent that it is strictly necessary, and analyze and retain information and intelligence respecting activities that may on reasonable grounds be suspected of constituting threats to the security of Canada".

The purpose of this series of motions with respect to Clause 12 of this Bill is to ensure two things. Motion No. 31 would ensure that the service would only retain information which it is strictly necessary, in the pursuit of its mandate, to retain. The present RCMP security service has open files on over 800,000 Canadians. They have some 1.3 million files. Under the wording of this Bill as it is presently construed, it would not be a requirement that unnecessarily open files be closed.

This amendment would achieve that. The amendment would include the following:

(2) It shall not be a function of the service to carry out measures to enforce security.

This deals with the question of so-called disruptive measures which were clearly documented by the McDonald Commission, the countering and disruption of lawful political groups. A clause of this nature was strongly recommended for inclusion by the McDonald Commission and is contained in comparable legislation in New Zealand and Australia. Disruption of political groups has been well documented not just here in Canada but in other jurisdictions as well. That is why those other jurisdictions have seen fit to include a clause of this nature. Yet the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan) denies that such a clause should be included in this legislation.

● (1240)

There are many examples of the abuses of countering and disruptive techniques both before and after 1974. These include the so-called preventive security interviews or briefings which can jeopardize the employment of individuals, relations with the press when members of the service plant material in the press about events or persons, misinformation and smear campaigns, disruptive measures which mislead other Government officials, the abuse of double agents and informants. As well there is the conspicuous surveillance and technique of intimidation which is an attempt to discredit individuals and members of particular groups.

These are types of disruptive measures that the Solicitor General assures us will not be conducted by the new agency. Yet when he is put to the test and it is suggested that a clause be included which would specifically bar such disruptive measures, a clause which is contained in comparable legislation elsewhere and which was recommended by the McDonald Commission, the Solicitor General says that he will not do it.

Many of the witnesses who appeared before the committee have a real fear that such disruptive measures may indeed be permitted under the Bill. Indeed, Professor Peter Russell, Research Director for the McDonald Commission, said in a letter:

I strongly endorse your effort to persuade the government to adopt recommendation 33 of the McDonald Commission calling for a clause in the legislation establishing the security intelligence agency which 'expressly denies the agency any authority to carry out measures to enforce security'.

The Government snubs its nose at that kind of very sensible recommendation.

Clause 13 would permit the Government to exchange information, to use a euphemism, with intelligence agencies of other countries, the existence of which is not even acknowledged by a number of those countries according to the Solicitor General. What kind of banana republics are we sharing our information with? The new security agency would continue to share information with them under the terms of this legislation.

The proposed amendments to Clause 15 would deny the use of any of the so-called intrusive techniques for security assessment. Specifically, it would deny the right to plant an informer or the right to use physical surveillance in conducting security assessments. According to this Bill as it now stands, individuals who are applying for a job with the Government could be targeted by the service for purposes not dealing with a threat to the security of Canada but to determine whether or not they get a security clearance. Again, consider the chilling impact that that has in a free and democratic society.

The final series of amendments in this grouping deal with proposed Clause 16. I wish that I had more time to set out clearly the implications of Clause 16 because this is a new power which is not contained within any agency in Canada at the present time. The security service does not have the power to engage in foreign intelligence activities. The Department of External Affairs does not have this power. The Department of National Defence does not have this power. Nowhere in Canada today does such a power exist. Yet the Solicitor General comes before Parliament and says that the Government wants the power to be able to target visitors to this country, anyone who is not a Canadian citizen or landed immigrant. Why? It is not because they may be a threat to the security of Canada since that is covered elsewhere in the Bill. It is because the information they have might prove helpful to Canada in obtaining information about external affairs or national defence. This means that no foreign visitor to this country is immune from the use of the most intrusive techniques at the hands of the security service. Their hotel room can be broken into. Their phone can be tapped. Their office be broken into and documents seized. Their income tax records can be examined as well as their medical records, not because they are a threat to our security but because they might have information which is helpful to us.

A visiting businessman, a visiting delegation of American Congressmen or a visiting professor who is an expert on eastern Europe matters could be targeted by this new service. When I suggested to a witness from the United States who is an expert on intelligence policy that these powers were proposed for Canada, she could not believe that in a democratic society such as Canada the Government was seriously claiming that it wanted these powers. If a government in the United States came before Congress seeking this kind of power, there would be a national uproar. Nowhere in the western world, including the United States, do such powers exist. In the United States it is only in the case of a foreign power or an agent operating on behalf of that power that certain intrusive techniques can be used.

This Bill would indicate to anyone visiting this country from outside that they are fair game and can be targeted. I suggest that the implications of that kind of proposal not just on the academic community but on our reputation abroad are devastating.

In conclusion, I would urge the adoption of these motions which would tighten the mandate of the new service. They are motions which would deny the right to send information to repressive dictatorships about Canadians or refugees from those countries. They are motions which would deny the use of intrusive techniques for security assessments and they would effectively exclude form the mandate of the service this very dangerous, unprecedented power to collect foreign intelligence against individuals who pose no threat whatsoever to the security of Canada.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, this is the set of motions that deals with the heart and core of the Bill, namely the duties and functions of the service. For that reason the Government must accept some amendments in this area. Surely, when the evidence of the witnesses is so clear, including that of the Canadian Bar Association, the Government would feel compelled to accept these amendments. However, I suppose I am blowing in the wind because the Government did not accept them at committee stage.

The duty of Members of Parliament is to take the Bill as reported back from the committee, study the recommendations and look at the proposals and report stage amendments so as to form an opinion and make suggestions to the Minister. I urge my colleagues opposite to look at the proposed amendments to Clause 12 because they are reasonable.

Clause 12 states: "The Service shall collect, by investigation or otherwise . . ." What do those words "or otherwise" mean? We discovered from the evidence that they mean that the service can do virtually anything. It will be able to do to citizens of this country far more than the FBI can do in the United States, which is a world power and a world source of technology and inventiveness. There are far more spies in that country pursuing their industrial secrets and military secrets. Yet the FBI in that country will not have the intrusive powers that the Canadian Liberal Cabinet will foist and impose upon the citizens of Canada. There should be people rioting in the streets over the incredible power Cabinet is seeking to impose on them. It is simply wrong. I am not sure why we are so complacent. So many of our people seem to have this incredible trust in the Government. Clearly on the evidence it is not warranted.

When you look, Mr. Speaker, at the powers governments have taken in this country in the last ten or 15 years, what do you find? You find the imposition of Crown corporations to an incredible extent, taxes that are extracted directly through the income tax system, sales taxes and energy taxes, and then taxes indirectly on the people by way of the deficit and inflation. To my mind Canadians should be marching in the streets.

It all comes back to Clause 12 of this Bill which was agreed to by the Liberal Cabinet without adequate review by the Government's own back-benchers. If a Cabinet of which I was a back-bencher put some of these clauses in the Bill, I would be standing in this House pursuant to the mandate that I received from my constituents and I would say: "No way, I am going to vote against you. I do not care if you are the Cabinet. You are responsible to the House. As a back-bencher on the Government side, I have a duty to hold you accountable. If you do not, then I will vote against you and if it brings on an election, so be it." I honestly believe that many of the Government Members on the back-benches are not performing their duty. I know if they sat with their uncles and aunts and went through this Bill, their uncles and aunts and other relatives would be saying to them: "That is too much power in the hands of a Cabinet. It is too much power in the hands of a director. You, as my Member of Parliament, should be diluting it."

Clause 12 reads:

The Service shall collect, by investigation or otherwise, to the extent that it is strictly necessary—

At that point our Motion No. 32 puts forth an amendment suggested by the Canadian Bar Association. The Canadian Bar Association consists of men and women who looked at Bill C-157, made their submission to the Senate committee and had some of their recommendations accepted. They then looked at Bill C-9 and again throughout the process consulted lawyers across the nation who deal with this matter daily. They came up with the proposed amendment which would have Clause 12 read, after the word "necessary":

—for the purpose of protecting the security of Canada, and analyse and retain.

Those words, Mr. Speaker, are a real check on the abuse of power by the service. Yet the Liberal Cabinet has rejected the suggested amendment by the Canadian Bar Association. This clause goes on to read:

—and analyse and retain information and intelligence respecting activities that may on reasonable grounds be suspected of constituting threats to the security of Canada—

We put forth the amendment at committee stage and it was rejected. We wanted the words "and probable" added. Within our common law jurisdiction we have jurisprudence built up around the words "reasonable and probable". They are in the Criminal Code. Lawyers have been using these words and judges have been making decisions on these words for hundreds of years throughout the common law tradition. The Government tells us that the words "reasonable and probable" are exactly the same as the individual word "reasonable". That is not so, Mr. Speaker. When judges look at a case, if the test is reasonable and probable grounds, that means something. If a new section says "reasonable grounds", that means the standard has been lowered and therefore people can be scrutinized for a much lower position by the Director and his agents than if the words were "reasonable and probable grounds". The Government itself should at least be maintaining the standards set under the Criminal Code of reasonable and probable grounds with which we have all lived for many hundreds of years.

Do you think that we could get the Liberals to accept this amendment, Mr. Speaker? No, because they got a statement from some lawyer, one of the 600 they canvassed in the department. Finally one gave them an opinion that "reasonable" was exactly the same as "reasonable and probable". All of us with common sense, let alone those who have some legal training, know that if instead of the words "reasonable and probable", which have been interpreted, as a conscious act of Parliament, a new clause uses only the word "reasonable", it is a much lower test.

What are the consequences of a lower standard? Our citizens can be investigated using such means as opening first-class mail, entering cars and houses, installing bugs in cars and houses and intercepting communications with lawyers. This can be done even though in common law there is a solicitor-client privilege, which is not the privilege of the lawyer but the privilege of the client to be able to deal with a lawyer in confidence. Indeed, lawyers' offices can be broken into at night and documents removed without leaving copies. Agents can destroy a man. It is the same as when the President of the United States destroyed good people who were innocent by turning the IRS on them. That situation could happen here.

Suppose you went to your doctor, Sir, to have a test for some condition that you want kept confidential for business or personal reasons or whatever. Agents can go into your doctor's office, take documents away and use them against you. That is not the tradition of this country.

That is not what our ancestors came here for. They came here to get away from that kind of conduct, for God's sake! But here we have a Liberal Cabinet making that a real possibility. I just do not understand why each generation continually has to refight the battles of 1215 and 1776 to try and get freedom. Let me come to the entrenchment of constitutional rights. In spite of the fact that our ancestors fought and died for the right to own property, the Liberal Government would not entrench that as a right, and that issue the NDP has to take some heat. Members of the NDP are not standing up for the rights of people to own property. They are just as glad that they do not.

Mr. Fulton: What about the Premiers? Of course, they are Tory Premiers.

Mr. Thacker: We understand, but this is the Parliament that sets those rights. If the provincial Premiers of whatever political stripe are opposed, we should be standing up and saying that we speak for the people. We know that some of our people come from Eastern European countries. As I said yesterday, I have sat around the kitchen table with many Eastern Europeans, people with marks and tattoos on their arms. They tell me this Bill is dangerous, and I believe them.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say something about a piece of legislation that strikes me as nothing short of treasonous. Regarding the duties and functions of this service, Canadians from coast to coast must wonder why not one single Liberal has stood up to support it. Not one single Liberal who is actually representing his or her constituents has got up even to make a comment on one of the most draconian unCanadian, treasonous pieces of legislation that has ever come before this House. As far as I am aware, it is endorsed only by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), who as I have said before will not be the Solicitor General for very long.

Let me deal quickly with Clauses Nos. 12, 13, 14 and 15. With only ten minutes I want to spend some time on Clause 16 and on why that particularly draconian measure should never see the light of day outside this Parliament.

Before I do that, I want to add to the words of other Members in this House today. It is peculiar that the press have somehow been muzzled in this country on a Bill that portends to change the face and nature of Canada totally in terms of freedoms which many of our forefathers fought very hard to gain. It seems very few Members of Parliament are prepared to stand up and fight for that today. I can say only one thing, Mr. Speaker. This Parliament is dying as a result of the way this kind of legislation is going through where no one on the Government side gets up to defend a piece of legislation. The Opposition are always in a position of having to educate themselves on every piece of legislation and of getting up and fighting to try and change legislation. We have an occasional loudmouth on the other side. They never have the guts to rise and say that they stand for these particular clauses and why they stand for them. Not even the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has the gumption to stand and explain why he supports a piece of legislation which is clearly treasonous in terms of Canadian history.

• (1300)

The duties and functions of the service in terms of collection, analysis and retention are improperly worded. The clause is far too broad. Clause 13 in terms of security assessments is far too broad. I would encourage Canadians, who have some interest in what is about to happen to their rights now that closure has been invoked and this legislation is to be jammed through, to take some time to read this. Only those who are watching television or listening to this debate on the radio will learn about it, because the press has never bothered to come in here to cover any of the ongoing debate. The press does not even understand that if it starts writing articles opposed to this sitting Government or to some Minister, it, above and beyond all others—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt my hon. friend who is talking about the press not being here. The Canadian public should know that there is not a single member of the Press Gallery, numbering several hundred persons, in the Chamber at this time. Probably none of its members are watching this debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Obviously that is a contribution to the debate. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) should continue his remarks.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, that was an important and timely point of order. As I said, I will focus my comments on Clause 16. With only 10 minutes left and with closure having been invoked, it is not possible for me to cover Clauses 12, 13 and 15. I do not think many Canadians recognize what we are being asked to give up. We are gaining nothing with this guts part of the legislation that relates directly to spying techniques. Not only will it affect Canadians but, as my colleagues have pointed out, it will affect those tens of millions of foreigners who come to Canada every year. Very few Canadians realize that about 30 million Americans per year come to Canada and that there are literally tens of millions of others who travel through Canada either for the purpose of visiting relatives or for the purpose of carrying on some kind of business.

I should like to focus upon the wording of Clause 16. Very specifically it reads:

> Subject to this section, the Service may, in relation to the defence of Canada or the conduct of the international affairs of Canada, assist the Minister of National Defence or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, within Canada, in the collection of information or intelligence relating to the capabilities, intentions or activities of
> (a) any foreign state or group of foreign states; or
> (b) any person other than
> (i) a Canadian citizen,
> (ii) a permanent resident within the meaning of the Immigration Act, 1976, or
> (iii) a corporation incorporated by or under an Act of Parliament or of the legislature of a province.

What is being proposed here is to allow spying, not only in relation to defence. At the very least this clause should be broken into two parts to remove the distortion so that those who would quickly read it will not think that it is only for the defence of Canada. This was designed by the Solicitor General. I suppose the Liberals opposite know that. I am no longer so sure because none of them will rise and speak. This is clearly intended to be a very broad-ranging power to allow spying on anyone who comes into Canada, whether they are coming here to visit a relative, for commercial purposes or for teaching.

I should like to deal very quickly with the teaching aspect. The Canadian Association of University Teachers made a very excellent presentation to the committee, which was scoffed at by Liberal Members. It was supported very broadly by those associated with universities and colleges in Canada. Referring to Clause 16, Mr. Donald Savage of CAUT wrote:

> We find this section . . . seems to say, for instance in he university context, that two Ministers of the Crown can sign a document which will allow the security forces to collect intelligence relating to the capabilities, intentions or activities of any visiting foreign professor or any foreign student at a Canadian university. It does not require that this be triggered by reasonable suspicions of involvement in terrorism, espionage or subversion. It need only be done pursuant to the conduct of international affairs of Canada. Nor does this section indicate how this intelligence will be gathered, but I assume that it would allow telephone tapping, mail opening and any other similar means to gather the information.
> It is true that the section then goes on to say that such information will not be directed at Canadian citizens, permanent residents or corporations. However, no safeguards are provided for the foreign visitor. If our interpretation is correct, . . . I suspect that some foreign academics may well have qualms about coming to our country as visiting professors if they can be subjected to intelligence operations in the casual manner suggested in section 16. We in Canada wish, of course, to have programs concerning other parts of the world of the highest possible quality. This necessarily involves invitations to distinguished foreign academics to come as visiting professors. By the nature of things, internationally respected foreign area programs must be able to attract such scholars.
> We are not, of course, suggesting that such visiting scholars be immune from security legislation. They should be subject to investigation on charges of terrorism, espionage or subversion in exactly the same manner as other Canadians.

As I indicated, it was signed by Mr. Savage, Executive Secretary of CAUT. His suspicions and those of academics in Canada are absolutely correct. As a result of the desire of the Solicitor General to be able to spy on anyone anywhere at any time, to bug their telephones, to break into their homes, to break into their cars or do whatever he pleases, ultimately it comes down to base, crass politics. Certain people who are so taken by their own power demand that they be protected from any kind of forces of change. The ultimate reactionary conservative sits there as the present Solicitor General.

As I said several times in my speech, I consider these sections to be acts of treason against the people of Canada, nothing short of that. It changes what my family came here for 300 years ago and what they fought for in every war since then. That man and that Party intend to take it away. The press sits on its hands absolutely mute. Its members are sitting across the street drinking beer and drooling in their own froth. They do not have the guts to write a single editorial in the country to cover any of the debate here or to give the kind of round, sound condemnation which there should be of the Liberals over there. Those people are not fit to govern this country. In fact, they are not fit to live in this country. They should not be sitting in the House of Commons if they are not prepared to rise and tell us why they want these kinds of powers which can be put against anyone who comes into the country and which can be put against any foreign state. The Solicitor General should rise and explain. He should get one of jackals on his back-benches, who are only interested in their pay cheques and their pensions, to rise on this one piece of legislation and for once in the history of the country explain why they intend to take away all the rights for which I, my family and my forefathers have fought. I say that it is an act of treason and he should not be in this House of Commons.

Mr. Kaplan: And people call us arrogant!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver South.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Just a minute, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) is well and favourably known to me. We have been good friends on honourable causes on a number of occasions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I could clear up one matter with the Hon. Member. I recognized him to make a speech. Is he making a point of order?

Mr. Fraser: I am making a speech, Mr. Speaker. As I said, the Hon. Solicitor General and I have been allies on honourable causes. When he says that the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is just talking a lot of claptrap—

Mr. Kaplan: I did not say that.

Mr. Fraser: —with great respect I say he is wrong. The Hon. Member for Skeena is saying exactly what I said a couple of hours ago in this Chamber. The fact is that the media of the country are asleep at the switch on this Bill. They do not want to be told that. There is only one member of the several hundred person Press Gallery of Canada in the Press Gallery right now.

A couple of days ago this Bill was called by Alan Borovoy, general counsel to the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, hardly a left-wing twit or some kind of screwball nitwit, "one of the greatest threats to civil liberties Canada has seen for many years". That got reported; Lord knows how, but it got reported. The Hon. Member for Skeena is not in the same Party as I am, but he talked about his ancestors fighting for the liberties we have had for over 300 years. So did mine. We came here in 1759 with the Scottish Regiment that was forced to enlist because we were pushed out of our Highland home. All those years we were loyal to the flag and to the Crown of this country. My friend from Skeena is right when he talks about the traditions that are bound up in the principles of this Bill. I am fed up to the teeth with this limp-wristed, hand-wringing, sanctimonious lecturing and preaching we have been getting from the Government side and some kind of vacuous minded editorial writers.

What is all this talk about Bill C-9 being debated endlessly? They go back to the Mackenzie Commission in 1969, the 1977 revelation of wrongdoing in the late sixties and early seventies, the McDonald Commission, Bill C-157 and the Senate committee. They say it has all been settled.

Where are these twits who say it has all been settled? Who are these people who comment like that, who cannot understand that, under our system of government, when you pass a piece of legislation the words rule you? It is the words in front of us now in Bill C-9, not in Bill C-157, the McDonald report or the Mackenzie report. It is these words that rule us. When somebody like Alan Borovoy can say that this Bill is the greatest threat to civil liberties this country has ever seen, somebody in the country should know about it.

I am fed up with the fact that all the reporting has been about a filibuster in the committee or in the House. What is wrong that these people cannot understand why we are indignant? I will tell you why. This Bill could have been and should have been a better Bill. The Government absolutely refused to accept a single amendment. The only amendment we got through committee, which would give to the review committee the right to look at Cabinet documents relating to the security service, went through because the Chairman of the committee, a Liberal, the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), a damn good Member, voted with the Opposition. We got it through, and what does the Solicitor General do? He has an amendment, that he is going to present, wiping out the only thing we got in committee. That is what they are doing.

The media of this country, the several hundred people who sit around here and criticize us for the price of food in the restaurant or the cost of the rug or MPs who did not pay their bills on time, all go to the restaurant. That is probably where half of them are right now instead of being here. I do not care whether every one of them campaigns against me in the next election. In the last couple of days on this issue the media have been a disgrace to a free country. As I said earlier, one day they will be writing editorials when something goes wrong because the proper amendments were not put in. It is absolutely appalling. I do not know how many deans of journalism there are, but this ought to be compulsory reading for every one of their students from now on. The media have absolutely copped out on this. I do not care whether they like me for saying it. The fact is that the Canadian public does not realize that the only time these guys and women come in here is during Question Period when you have the show. The rest of the time they do not cover this stuff. It is no good their coming now and saying "Well, we covered it months ago, we wrote some in-depth articles some months ago".

The issue is the fact that Canadians came to committee with suggestions for change, not suggestions to destroy the Bill, not suggestions to destroy the security service, not suggestions saying that we should not have lawful mandates that constrain, regulate and overview the security service. Canadians said the wording is faulty, it can be better. There are dangers in the loose wording that is there and in some of the concepts. What is appalling is that since the day we got into second reading debate, months ago, the Government has had no intention of accepting any amendments, nothing. That is what should be in the headlines of every paper.

As for John Turner and his reform Liberals, as I said earlier, it is not the old deal but it is the old deal writ large. I have to say one other thing about Mr. Turner, who is supposed to be a lawyer. This is the guy who has never told us why he brought in the War Measures Act. Once upon a time when I was 20 and Mr. Turner was in his mid-fifties I would have been impressed, but I am not anymore. I say in conclusion, knowing that nothing has changed, that everybody ought to be asked: Do you really want to buy a used government from this fellow?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am very reluctant to participate in the debate, given its tenor. I will explain in a moment. I cannot refrain from rising to comment on some of what I just heard. I totally reject the superiority that Members opposite want to draw from the fact that their ancestors came to this country so many generations before mine. I think I am just as good a Canadian as they are whether my ancestors did or did not come here in the 1700s, as the Member for Vancouver South—

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There was absolutely no reference by myself or by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—and I sat here during the whole speech—to the period of time in which the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) came to Canada. He is trying to abuse the process of debate.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I gather from you that that was not a valid question of privilege, so who is abusing the rules of the House? It is the Member opposite, trying to make a question of privilege out of a statement that is not.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Kaplan: Now we have a point of order. I think I should be allowed to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) allow me one comment? I invite Hon. Members—and this is somewhat at the discretion of the Chair—to stick as much as possible to the contents of the motions now before the House. The Chair has listened to Members on both sides of the House with some leniency. Hon. Members have been allowed to digress from time to time to make personal points. But at this time we ought to strive once again to make every effort to debate the motions now before the House. I will be glad to enumerate them for Hon. Members once again. Having said that, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Skeena on a point of order.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make it clear that I did not rise on a question of privilege but on a point of order. It demonstrates once again that the Solicitor General does not listen to what goes on in the House of Commons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is quite right. The Chair had recognized the Hon. Member for Skeena on a point of order. At this time I invite the Solicitor General to continue his remarks on the motions before the House.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I gather it was not a valid point of order either. The Member opposite did accuse me of treason. He did say that we should be kicked out of the country. He can check the record on that. He did put on the record how many generations he and his ancestors have spent in this country defending our liberties, for which I am very grateful. This is a great country. I only want to say, perhaps for those in the Gallery who think the Government has been reticent to listen to reason on this Bill, that there has been a great deal of process associated with this Bill already. Notwithstanding what the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) said, the Government has accepted over 5 major amendments since the—

Mr. Fraser: Not on this Bill.

• (1320)

Mr. Kaplan: May I finish? It has accepted that number of amendments since the introduction of Bill C-157, which was the Government's initial response.

Mr. Fraser: That was not in the House of Commons.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my understanding that at this point in the debate we are dealing with a number of motions that refer to Clauses 12, 13, 15 and 16. Not a single member on the government side stood to support those clauses. On a number of occasions, the Speaker has called Members on this side of the House to order because they did not deal with the motion before the House. It is about time that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) finally did so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would invite the Hon. Member not to reflect on the Chair's comportment in this debate.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Apply the same standards to them as you apply to us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) should listen for a moment. I sat down just a moment ago and I did request of the Hon. Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan) that he confine his remarks to the motions now before the House. I will invite him to do so again, and I rise as often as is necessary, as I have been doing to invite all Hon. Members on either side of the House to do just that.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I will just wrap things up. I gather that I have hit a sensitive nerve opposite. I do not wish to delay debate. In fact, I will simply indicate that all of the reasons for which Members on this side of the House support the clauses of the Bill have been explained at very great length in committee and on second reading. Those reasons have been explained by me in speeches that I have made across the country and in interviews that I have given to journalists.

We do not want to see this debate prolonged unduly and repetitively. That is the reason why we are not standing up. It is not because we are arrogant or because we feel that there are no good answers; it is because we recognize that we have been elected to act and action in the legislature produces legislation. We would like to see this legislation, which has been very much improved by public debate, by discussions and by amendments, moved forward and become law. That is why we are not standing up. All of the other improper imputations that have been hurled across the floor to explain our failure to rise are just baloney.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed by the remarks that were just made by the Minister. It was just yesterday that the Minister and his Government moved closure.

Mr. Kaplan: Order. What has that got to do with the debate?

Mr. Orlikow: The Minister knows that the debate on this Bill will end on Thursday evening. Members on this side of the House who disagree with the Government cannot hold the Bill up. We cannot filibuster the Bill.

If he had the courage, which he does not, the Minister could rise in his place and explain his reasons for the legislation that he is proposing. The Minister does not rise, not because he does not want to prolong the debate. He knows that the debate will end. The Minister does not rise because he knows that the individuals and organizations for which he has worked over the years are completely opposed to many important clauses of the Bill which the Minister has brought before us. He knows that these organizations and individuals have made specific proposals for improving the Bill and have made specific recommendations for amendments to plug what they consider to be important loopholes in the Bill.

The Canadian Association of University Teachers, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and the Canadian Conference of Churches are all groups with which the Minister and his Party have worked for many years on many subjects including the Constitution. These organizations have now come forward with objections. Why does the Minister not use the opportunity he has here in the House to answer these—

Mr. Kaplan: I already did. I have answered all of those briefs. You know that perfectly well.

Mr. Orlikow: I was not a member of the committee—

Mr. Kaplan: But you can read.

Mr. Orlikow: Like other Members of Parliament, I was attending other committee meetings when that particular committee met. Now is the time when the Minister—

Mr. Kaplan: This is the time for action, not the time for slicing baloney.

Mr. Orlikow: Now when some Members have brought forward specific objections and reservations to the legislation that have been stated by responsible organizations and individuals is the time for the Minister to stand and explain the Government's position. Perhaps one of his colleagues could do so. I have never seen Liberal Members of Parliament so silent. I can only assume that they do not wish to be on record so that if and when they are questioned and if and when they are criticized, they can say: "Well, I was not very enthused about that Bill. I did not speak for it, I did not speak against it. I had to vote for it because that was what the Party Whip required." I sat on a committee with the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher)—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Could the Hon. Member please inform the Chair of the way in which his general comments are pertinent to the motions now before the House?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I was simply trying to give some specific illustrations of the groups that oppose specific clauses. I would invite the Hon. Member for Mississauga North to speak on this Bill. I know that he has spoken frequently about his belief in freedom of speech.

Several Hon. Members have put on the record the views of the Canadian Association of University Teachers with regard to the clause of this Bill which gives the security service the right to put under very aggressive surveillance foreign academics who come to the country even though there is no evidence that those foreign academics are or may be involved in espionage activities. Let me put on record two of the letters which were received by the Chairman of the committee. These letters were written by university professors who—

Mr. Kaplan: They are on the record already, David. They are part of the record.

Mr. Orlikow: They are on the record. Suddenly the Minister has found his tongue. For days he has been silent, and now suddenly he has found his tongue. I wish—

Mr. Kaplan: You have nothing new to say.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, instead of interjecting—although I do not mind his interjections—I would invite the Minister to stand and give me an explanation—

Mr. Kaplan: My answer is on the record as well.

Mr. Orlikow: I would invite the Minister—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair finds these repartees from either side of the House disruptive to the process of debate, and they must certainly be annoying to the Hon. Member who has the floor. I invite the Hon. Member to continue his remarks.

Mr. Orlikow: Let me read a portion of a letter which was received by the Chairman of the Standing Committee from the President of the Canadian Association of Slavists, Nicholas Zekulin. The letter reads in part:

> We are, of course, aware that not all the activities of all visiting academics, professors or students, are legitimate, but this does not mean that some safeguards should not be built into the legislation specifying that there should be grounds for suspicion of activity inimical to Canada before the provisions of the act are invoked.

That seems to me to be a very reasonable proposal. As well, I have in my possession a letter addressed to the Chairman of the committee from Dr. Peter Bly, Professor of Spanish and President of the Canadian Association of Hispanists. He has written the following:

> Obviously, we could not countenance the activities of foreign professors and students detrimental to Canada's security and would publicly support all attempts to prohibit the entry into Canada of such undesirable people. But we feel that indiscriminate surveillance and monitoring of bona fide visitors will adversely affect our attempts to establish links with Spanish-speaking academics as well as being a gross injustice to these individuals in question.

Those are just two of the many letters which I am sure were received by the Government. We are, as we should be, encouraging professors in Canadian universities who wish to learn more and wish to be able to teach their students more about countries in South America, in Africa, in China, in Eastern Europe and elsewhere. If they are to learn more, there must be an exchange of academics. Our professors must visit those countries and their professors must visit Canada.

Let us be realistic. Professors in communist countries are, in all likelihood, members and supporters of those regimes. Otherwise, they could not be professors. We know that when we invite them and when we permit them to come to Canada.

We should certainly be able to assure them that, as long as they are here for legitimate academic reasons and are not involved in espionage or any other aspect which is inimical to our security, they will not be spied upon, have their mail opened or their telephones wiretapped. We would expect the same kind of treatment for our professors who visit those countries.

I would urge the Minister, or any Member of the Liberal Party who is in the House, to rise and explain how this proposal, which will affect university professors and their organizations, could be viewed as being impractical. Why did the Government not accept that proposal? I would say that there is a very simple reason. The Minister has forgotten the things he knew before he took his present appointment. The Minister has sloughed off all the principles in which he supposedly believed. He is ignoring the advice and urging he receives from the people he has worked with over the years. He has become a complete captive of his bureaucracy and has caved in to it. That is why he has taken this view.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with a number of clauses in the Bill. But I would first like to refer to a problem with Clause 12, which I think is typical of a great many other areas in the Bill, that is, the very poor English in which it is written. The language could be misinterpreted. If and when this legislation goes before the courts, it is the wording that will decide justice. It is not the way someone else interprets it. It is not the way it is discussed in the House of Commons. It is the way in which it is written in the law that will decide justice. It will decide whether we have justice, or whether we have an unfair type of law.

For example, in Clause 12 a sentence appears which reads as follows:

> The Service shall collect, by investigation or otherwise,

The first thing I would like to know is: What does "otherwise" mean? Does it mean the bugging of cars, the bugging of telephones or the bugging of the telephone of a person from another country? What does "otherwise" mean? It is like saying et cetera, et cetera. It can mean everything and anything. That is the first thing which I object to in the Bill. I would like to know what the service can collect by investigation and by what other means. "Investigation" is a pretty big word. It pretty well covers the slate.

The Government added the words "or otherwise". Therefore, it can collect in formation by investigation or it can do so "otherwise". The words are not "and/or"; the words are "or otherwise". Therefore, if the service cannot do it by investigation, it can do it "otherwise", whatever that is.

I have not heard anyone explain that. It is a matter to which I take objection. If this legislation is sound, why are the Members on the other side of the House not taking their proper turn in defending the legislation?

Mr. Kaplan: Because we want to vote on it, that is why.

Mr. Taylor: Because you want to vote on it. You want to get it through before people even know what it means. That is what the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) says.

Mr. Kaplan: Before the session ends.

Mr. Taylor: He wants to vote on it. He does not care what it means. He does not care how it will treat human souls, not a bit. He wants to vote on it. This Party wants to do more than vote on it. When we vote on it, we want to know what it means. We want to be able to explain to our constituents what the legislation means. But the Government is not giving us that explanation. The back-benchers sit there like a bunch of clones—pardon the expression. They are simply going to accept anything that the Minister puts into the legislation.

I ask Hon. Members on the other side: What does "otherwise" mean? Instead of standing up and giving us a lecture, as the Solicitor General did a few moments ago, why does he not explain the legislation? That is all we are asking. A simple explanation. It is like a teacher who says to a class: "You are doing it wrong. You are doing it wrong". That does not help the youngsters. They will not learn anything. The pedagogue who knows what he is doing will mark it on the board to show why it was wrong in order that the youngsters will not make the same mistake again. That is pedagogy, not dictatorship.

I would like to make a further comment about Clause 12, which reads:

> The Service shall collect, by investigation or otherwise, to the extent that it is strictly necessary,

What is strictly necessary, "the investigation" or "otherwise"? to what does it refer? It is simple English. If the youngsters, who are sitting in the Gallery today, were asked to analyse that, they would tell us that it could not be properly analysed. We do not know to what the "it" refers. "The Service shall collect, by investigation or otherwise, to the extent that it is strictly necessary". "It", what in the world is that?

No wonder the committee is befuddled. No wonder an amendment was put forward in an attempt to have that wording changed. The committee proposed that the service's collection of information and intelligence should be limited to what is "strictly necessary for the purpose of protecting the security of Canada". That is what it should say. We are talking about the security of Canada, but the legislation does not indicate that. It says "it". Whatever is that supposed to mean?

The vote on that amendment in committee was: four in favour and five against, with the Chairman not voting with the Government. The Chairman said:

> The chairman regrets that the government could not see fit to accept that amendment.

Is that not strange? The committee voted four in favour and five against. The Chairman is a member of the Liberal Party and I believe a lawyer, but I am not sure. I know he is well learned. He said that!

Is it not a simple amendment which attempts to clarify the law? Is that not why we are here, to clarify the law in order to be fair to those people who are charged under the law? All we are asking for is a simple clarification.

That Clause is enlarged by adding words which cannot be defined—"otherwise" and "it". That is supposed to be draftsmenship? Whoever drafted this should enlist the help of a few good school teachers. They could do better.

Mr. Kaplan: It was the Senate committee.

Mr. Taylor: It should read, "for purposes which are strictly necessary, and "for purposes of protecting the security of Canada". That is the proper enlargement of that phrase—not "it" and not "otherwise". We are talking about the protection of the security of Canada.

• (1340)

It is too bad, Mr. Speaker, that for some reason we are not hearing from Hon. Members opposite. I do not know whether the new Leader has told the Liberal Members not to talk. Perhaps he has put a zipper on their lips. Perhaps he feels the legislation is so bad he does not want them to talk about it, and now he is going to bring in closure so that even we cannot talk about it. As the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) said, the press just looks at the Bill and does not even bother dealing with the inequities, the poor draftsmanship and what this will mean to the security of human lives later on. That is all we are asking the Hon. Members opposite to do, to think about what this is going to do perhaps to their sons, daughters or grandchildren. Imagine what the courts will do because of the way this legislation is worded and then you might be willing to accept an amendment which is sensible and sound.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I was inspired by the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) who has a reputation in this House for telling it as it is. He speaks because he consults. He speaks because he represents his constituents with great distinction and because he is prepared to listen to what people are saying on the streets of this country. I commend that attitude to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and to Hon. Members of the Liberal Party, because what we are dealing with now in this particular clause and the motion which has been put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), is a provision which would put some precision into the definition of the operations of the new security service.

What we have now is a very wide-ranging and vague mandate for this new security service. What we have now under the terms of Clause 12 is authority given to the service to go about this country and collect information on Canadian citizens, community groups, church groups, action committees and political groups as the service deems necessary.

I have never seen a better recipe than what is contained in this legislation, put into statute form, which would provide any secret service agency with the ability to conduct witch-hunts, politically motivated investigations, and wide ranging irresponsible investigations into the affairs of the people of our country. What our Party has been trying to impress upon the Government is that when one deals with legislation of this sort, which in effect impacts negatively on the civil liberties of Canadians, and for purposes of security allows an agency to go about opening up files on Canadian citizens, to investigate their backgrounds, their social, business and other activities, which gives authority to this group to look at our income tax returns, which allows this service to go into our medical records, then one must say to oneself, "What about Canada which I always understood to be a country where freedoms and privacy are respected?"

So we said to the Solicitor General in committee that we think there should be some more precision in the wording of this Act, that the people of Canada would expect no less in a free and democratic society. We told him that if he is going to bring in legislation which is going to allow an agency of the Government to snoop into our affairs, there should be a very precise definition of those powers. I do not believe that is an unreasonable request to make of any government. I am not trying to be troublesome or controversial. I am simply saying to the Government, "Let us have common sense in this. Let us make sure there is a balance in the wording of this legislation". And that is what happened in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, how delicate the situation was. People did vote on Party lines, so the motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, was defeated in the committee five votes to four. That was because the Liberals had the majority in the committee. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River, pointed out, the Chairman of the committee—who will admit it himself—is a partisan Liberal who sits on the Liberal benches. He was appointed by the Government and owes his position to government support. But I say to you, he has some common sense and some sensitivity with respect to matters of this import and has demonstrated himself to be a fair and competent chairman, and he has my respect. He was not required to break the tie. He was not required to cast the deciding vote because, I suppose, in that instance, the tradition required that he vote for the government position. However, he made what I consider a telling statement in committee. He said that he regretted that the Government did not see fit to accept this sensible amendment.

The amendment is exactly as was stated by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South. It gives precision to the provision. It does not say that the agency shall not have the ability to obtain information by these various devices it deems necessary in its own discretion and opinion. We just suggested that there be some tangible criteria established within this Bill and within this clause under which it would be possible for an aggrieved citizen to go to a court of this land and say, "This is not within its mandate because it cannot establish that the investigation was in the interests of the security of Canada". It is a very simple definition of what the parameters should be in this clause.

We have been bringing forward suggestions, and it is an example of the intransigence and the blockheadedness, if you will, of the Government and of the Solicitor General in particular, that he will not accept any reasonable amendment. The Solicitor General is the captive of his bureaucracy, but he is not capable of making a decision on his own without advice from his bureaucracy. It has told him not to put too many constraints on the service, not to give it too many difficulties so that it will have to be accountable. For heaven's sake, that would make it difficult for the service. It would have to work for a living. I am not alone, Mr. Speaker. I will tell you who else thought that this motion was required—

An Hon. Member: We are with you.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Over here we have quality as opposed to quantity, and I say to the House Leader of the New Democratic Party that I appreciate the fact that that Party is always willing to learn. I am trying to help the NDP—

Mr. Deans: When we come to vote on your motion, we will rise with you.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I know you will be with us. However, do not make it public, because every time you vote with us it causes me great political embarrassment back home.

What I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, is that the people who are in support of this kind of amendment are responsible citizens of Canada. They include the British Columbia Law Union, the Canadian Bar Association—not exactly a revolutionary crowd—the Attorney General of Saskatchewan and the Attorney General of Ontario. These people are involved in law enforcement and legal matters in their own jurisdictions. The Canadian Bar Association represents the legal profession across the country. Indeed, I believe I can go back to the Senate committee which looked at this matter. It indicated that it would like more precise language with respect to the mandate of this agency. All of these groups and the individuals whom I have mentioned have been supportive of the amendment, which our Party supports and which has been presented by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, you must ask yourself a question: What is so wrong with this proposal? Why is the Government so adamant in its refusal to accept as an amendment an eminently sensible recommendation? Is there not someone over on the government side who can stand up and give a rationale? Let it be just one Member, I do not care who. I would even accept the Solicitor General standing up and telling us why he thinks he cannot accept our proposal. But all we get is silence. It does not augur well for Parliament when Members on the government side refuse to defend their own legislation. Let us assume the agency got out of control; what would happen? We would have a repeat of what happened in early 1970. There would not be one person on the Liberal side with the courage to stand in his or her place and say that the legal processes of Canada are being abused. They are used to silence, to standing by like patsies and to doing what they are told. If that is the kind of government we are going to have under the Liberals, you can well imagine how the people of Canada will respond. They will see the cavalier and cynical attitude taken by government Members who do not have the courage of their convictions. They will not stand up and tell us why they refuse to accept the amendment.

Mr. Kristiansen: They are training for the secret service.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Secret service is right. It should be called the "secret (silent) service". That is the way these people are operating with respect to this legislation. They do not have the courage of their convictions and they do not deserve to be on the Government side.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to serve under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member who just spoke on the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. A more fair, adept and appropriate chairman I do not think anyone could ask for. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) talked about why we do not support this amendment, or why the Minister would not listen to the amendments. The facts are of course exactly opposite. Before Bill C-157 was brought in, the McDonald Commission held over 300 hearings, saw 150 witnesses and read 124 written submissions. Then Bill C-157 went before the Senate committee. It heard testimony from over 30 individuals and groups and over 50 submissions. A significant number of changes were made to that Bill. Ultimately it resulted in Bill C-9. Therefore, to suggest that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) is not prepared to listen to amendments is just not in accordance with the facts.

The problem we have is that we have another amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). We have been subjected to a farce. For example, at the very last minute we had presented to us in committee something like 300 amendments of the kind being produced here today. The attitude is: If we cannot have it our way, we are not going to play. We are not going to help with legislation and we are not going to have debate.

Mr. Forrestall: What debate can you have with closure?

Mr. Cullen: The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) hit the nail right on the head. The fact is that in participating in this debate one feels one is participating in a farce. There were some amendments put forward in committee on which we could have had good debates. We could have expressed our point of view and then had our vote. Unfortunately, as a result of the tactics adopted by the NDP—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I invite the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) to indicate to the Chair what motion he is presently debating. His comments appear to be of a general nature and of a very wide-ranging scope. I invite him to confine his remarks to the motions before the House.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I accept your admonition. I was responding to the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West and the farcical approach being adopted by the NDP.

There are merits in many of the amendments put forward both by the Government and by Opposition Members. This one is probably a good case in point. On its face it appears to be not a bad amendment. But those of us who sat on the committee know that every one of the amendments put forward here was put forward at committee stage. They were answered by the Solicitor General and all the reasons were given why this amendment or others are not appropriate at this time. Sadly, when we get a decent amendment, one that has been carefully thought out, such as this particular one put forward by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), one feels hamstrung because, by endeavouring to bring the parliamentary process to bear, ond finds that one is participating in a farce orchestrated by the NDP, primarily by the Hon. Member for Burnaby. I am more concerned about the manner in which legislation and amendments such as the one produced by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South cannot be adequately and properly debated and then voted upon. The fact of the matter is that we are participating in a farce.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The motions before the House are clear and explicit and I invite the Hon. Member to address his mind to the motions before the House and not to attempt to justify the shameful inaction of government Members—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), in the Chair's opinion, is relating to the motions at hand. He is explaining his position. I find his remarks to be relevant. They may be generally relevant but they are relevant.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, if there is a person from whom I do not need lecturing on parliamentary procedure it is the Hon. Member for Burnaby. The position taken by the NDP on this motion and others is much more dangerous to Canada and to the parliamentary system than amendments of the kind the Hon. Member for Vancouver South is putting forward here today. We have had a muzzling of Parliament on motions like this one because of the tyranny of the minority. We saw it in committee and we are seeing it here. I think this is a good amendment, one I would like to have debated, one I would like to have the Solicitor General participate in as well. But when you get 50, 60, 70 or 80 amendments designed primarily to destroy the parliamentary process from Members who "if we in the minority cannot have it our way, nothing is going to happen in Parliament", then that is much more dangerous than the legislation itself. I ask the NDP to get back to the principles brought to this House by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Show some respect for this place so we can have a legitimate debate on this amendment and others and then have a vote. I do not intend to pursue any more of this particular farce orchestrated by the Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 30 in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 79, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to statements under Standing Order 21.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

AGRICULTURE

DESIGNATION OF WESTERN BEAN CROP UNDER AGRICULTURAL STABILIZATION ACT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of great concern to western Canadian coloured bean growers. In the gallery today we are pleased to have the presence of a delegation from the Western Canadian Pulse Growers Association. They are here in the capital to meet with representatives of Agriculture Canada and the Agricultural Stabilization Board.

For the past three years these bean growers have been trying to get their crops recognized as designated crops under the Agricultural Stabilization Act. Their request for 1981 was basically refused, and they are still trying to receive a reply to their application for 1982. So far they have only seen and experienced the revolving door. This matter is made more serious by the fact that white bean growers in the Minister's own riding had their white bean crops designated under the Stabilization Act, to the tune of some $22 million for the 1982-83 crops.

In a communication which I received from the Minister, he stated "that the need for assistance will be evaluated in light of other government economic priorities at the time". Clearly the western farmers' plight should be an economic priority of the Government. Or is the plight of white bean growers a priority while that of the coloured bean growers is not? I thought we had an entrenched Charter to handle this type of thing. This type of discrimination is clearly not conducive to national unity, nor in accordance with the way Canadians expect to be treated by their elected representatives.

The plight of western Canadian coloured bean growers is critical. They are faced with depressed prices for their commodities due to a lack of demand, caused by over-production in the U.S. along with the inability of Third World markets to import because of the high U.S. dollar.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE FRANCHISE

OPPOSITION TO EXTENSION TO PRISON INMATES

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I have received communications in my office objecting to the introduction of legislation that would give prisoners the right to vote in elections. In my view, extending this right is utterly ridiculous and the proposal should be nipped in the bud immediately.

We continuously give more and more rights to inmates, while doing very little to help victims of crime. Often these victims go through a great deal of suffering and pain, and are sometimes handicapped for the rest of their lives. Meanwhile the criminal does his time in an institution where he, in many cases, he has access to excellent sport facilities and eats better food than some Canadians living on the outside.

And now some are suggesting that the right to vote should be extended to these offenders, to murderers, thieves, rapists, and defrauders, to name just a few. Instead of giving the voting right to inmates, we should be improving the rights of victims. Such legislation has been before the House since February 7, and I urge all Hon. Members to work towards its passage and not to pursue legislation giving prison inmates the right to vote in elections. To extend this right would be adding insult to injury. These people are not confined for a paid holiday. They are confined because they broke Canadian laws, and therefore forfeit the privilege of voting.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—SUGGESTED RECONSTITUTION OF SUBCOMMITTEE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of the House the plight of the subcommittee on acid rain. The subcommittee of which I am, or was, a member, fulfilled its mandate as prescribed by Parliament earlier this month with the tabling of its report. There are presently no provisions to reconstitute this valuable subcommittee. I fear it will fade into a polluted sunset when it is most needed.

Members of every political stripes sitting on the committee agreed that working on the problems of acid rain gave them as much, or more, satisfaction as anything they have done since becoming Members of Parliament. So long as the serious problems of acid rain persist, should the subcommittee not persist in finding solutions to this, Canada's worst environmental blight?

Our report is now in the hands of the Minister of the Environment. Sixteen recommendations appear in the report. Only a subcommittee composed of all Parties represented in this House can monitor the results of those recommendations. Should the subcommittee be dissolved, no single Member will have the clout required to urge the Minister to follow the recommendations. After all the miles travelled, and thousands of hours spent on research, it would be a moral crime to deprive Canada of the follow-through needed to stop acid rain.

EMPLOYMENT

LIBERAL PARTY LEADER—POSITION ON YOUTH JOB-CREATION MEASURES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, it was a breath of fresh air to listen to John Turner on Saturday night talk about the relevant employment issues in the country when he spoke about young people being given an opportunity to compete for government sponsored jobs. I know, the Canadian people know, and John Turner knows what the Opposition Members do not know, and what they should know.

I pointed out on three occasions in this Chamber since January that young people, new and re-entrants into the workforce, were placed in the lowest of four categories for referral to job-creation projects started by agreements with provincial Governments. I pointed that out, and asked opposition Members to intercede. Not one of them followed through to bring about a change. It is unfortunate that government backbenchers and John Turner have to do the job of the Official Opposition in the House. John Turner will be the turning point in the fortunes of these young people.

FORESTRY

IMPORTANCE OF FOREST INDUSTRY TO ECONOMY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, across Canada our forest industry is in crisis. More than 300 Canadian communities depend on our number one industry to provide jobs. Municipal, provincial, and federal Governments all look to the forest industry for tax revenue. However, the Liberal Party, like the Liberal Government, is blind to this industry. In the formal nomination speeches last Friday, of the seven candidates for the Liberal leadership, only one made any explicit reference to the forest industry. Who was that? You guessed it, Mr. Speaker. The candidate who mentioned forestry in his speech was the one who came in last with 83 votes, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). We would have hoped that at least John Turner, with his corporate involvement in MacMillan-Bloedel and Canadian Pacific, would have known how important the forest industry is to the Canadian economy.

Hundreds of forestry workers have been laid off by both MacMillan-Bloedel and Pacific Forest Products. Considering this crisis, Mr. Turner should appoint a full-time Minister of Forests to ensure that our number one industry receives proper attention. Apparently the new Liberal leader, like the old one, sees neither federal opportunity nor responsibility in forestry. Mr. Turner cannot see the forest for the balance sheet.

DISARMAMENT

LIBERAL PARTY LEADER—STATEMENTS ON PEACE ISSUE

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence this morning the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) stated that he was saddened that not one Liberal Member running for the Liberal leadership mentioned anything about peace and security. Such a statement cannot go unchallenged. I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Simcoe South, and all Hon. Members in the Official Opposition, that all seven candidates stressed the importance of pressing for the international peace initiative begun by the Prime Minister.

The future Prime Minister emphasized that he will put his energies towards issues related to international peace and security, with emphasis on defence, arms control, disarmament, and conflict resolution. In Toronto on April 24 the future Prime Minister said:

> I will follow in the footsteps of our last three leaders in the search of peace and international stability. I will seek ways to take advantage of the momentum generated by the initiatives of Prime Minister Trudeau—ways to give it a new thrust.

On the CBC program The Journal in March of 1984 the future Prime Minister said:

> Peace is a concern to all of us. The old fears of war have been replaced by an even greater fear—fear for the survival of the human race. The devastation of modern weaponry defies the most fertile of imaginations.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

ENERGY

ATLANTIC OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT—POSITION OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to inform the House of the Atlantic Offshore Energy Accord, the bold initiative that our Party has taken which will encourage the timely development of East Coast resources for the benefit of the region and for all of Canada. An important component of our approach is the promotion of a positive and constructive climate of co-operation between the national Government and the provinces.

When Atlantic Premiers sit down with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) to negotiate, they will get a new deal, a fairer deal, and a better deal than that put forward by the Liberals in Ottawa. The agreement in principle between the Leader of the Opposition and Brian Peckford, the Premier of Newfoundland, proposes that a province will be the principal beneficiary of its oil and gas resources. Newfoundland will be a full partner in its own economic development and the management of its reserves.

● (1410)

A joint agency, consisting of three provincial and three federal appointees and a neutral chairperson, would manage the offshore. The province would have the ultimate decision in matters affecting the manner of development, as long as the attainment of self-sufficiency is not delayed. The federal Government will possess paramountcy if energy security is threatened.

Importantly, a province will be entitled to establish and collect resource revenues as if those resources were on land. There will be no discrimination with inshore provinces. Through a series of special offset payments, equalization payments will be protected for a generation.

The proposals of a Progressive Conservative administration outlined here are evidence of the conviction that the energy resources of the Atlantic region must be developed—

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED MOBILE ARCTIC ISLAND ENGINEERING CONCEPT

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, yesterday both the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Lumley) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) refused to state their support for small-scale oil production in the Arctic by using the mobile Arctic Island concept. Millions of dollars have been spent to prove the viability of this proposal, yet the Minister, who has known about it for several years, still procrastinates and is studying it.

Anyone who has examined this scheme would be baffled by the Government's negative reaction. The project would benefit several small Canadian firms that were hard hit by the National Energy Program. It would increase Canada's domestic oil supply, and it would create thousands of jobs, most notably through the construction of a major drydock facility in Nanaimo, B.C.

As I say, the Government's opposition is baffling unless one takes into account the fact that approval of this project would require Liberal Ministers, such as the Minister of Finance, to admit to a major mistake. Of course the mistake is that the National Energy Program includes a regulation and incentive structure that is only beneficial for companies looking for a mammoth oil discovery in the North, a discovery which in all likelihood will not be made.

There is no incentive system to produce tens of millions of barrels from small-scale deposits which have already been found. When there is a choice between a project that means thousands of jobs, increased oil production, and help for Canadian companies, or saving Liberal Cabinet Ministers from humiliation prior to an election, it is obvious how the Government will act.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

BRITISH COLUMBIA NORTHEAST COAL PROJECT

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, despite heated warnings, and sound advice from a western Senator on August 6, 1980, the Liberal Government decided to proceed with the development of Northeast Coal. I have opposed this project from the very beginning, and presented over 2,000 petitions to the House of Commons, stating that these new projects will result in an overproduction of coal in terms of markets available to southeastern British Columbia.

I have called for a united front in the communities throughout the riding, urging the coal producers, workers, and municipal representatives to meet on a regular basis to protect the interests of the coal producers and the workers. Despite this, the Government of Canada and the Province of British Columbia signed an agreement in February, 1981, to proceed with the development of Northeast Coal.

I have also called upon the communities to endorse a resolution for the sale of western Canadian coal to central Canada markets. The New Democratic Party and the United Mineworkers of America called for a joint federal-provincial task force to be created. This was rejected by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The Province of Alberta has now recognized the importance of this resolution and has taken steps to ensure that it is fully investigated, which leaves out the producers of southeast British Columbia and the workers involved in the coal mines.

An executive of Fording Coal has described the situation as an economic crisis, and I plead with the Minister to use his influence with the Minister of Energy in the Province of British Columbia to ensure that the coal producers and the workers of southeast British Columbia have equal opportunity of supplying the coal markets of central Canada, especially since the whole problem was created by the untimely development of the Northeast Coal project by both the federal and provincial Governments.

POOLS

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—CALL FOR EXAMINATION OF BOOKS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I take advantage of this opportunity to give the new Leader of the Liberal Party a piece of advice. Since he maintained throughout the campaign that he could not tell Canadians or members of his own Party anything about his fiscal policies until he had seen the books of the Government of Canada, and since he claims that he will bring a new breath and a new life to the affairs of government as managed by the Liberal Party, I suggest that his first act within the next 24 hours should be to order that the books of the Sports Pool Corporation be opened to the House of Commons.

The House of Commons knows full well that that operation is riddled with incompetence, patronage, and every arrogant misuse of power for which the Liberal Party is famous. I suggest in all sincerity that the future Prime Minister clearly put his stamp on his Party immediately and open the books of the corporation to let the House of Commons see the contracts and finally find out whether the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mr. Olivier) has been telling the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Otherwise, Canadians will have every reason to believe that the new Leader of the Liberal Party is no better than his predecessors.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL PARTY LEADER—ACCESS TO CABINET DOCUMENTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the House of Commons whether the new Leader of the Liberal Party will be privy to any confidential Cabinet documents during the period that he remains a director of Canadian Pacific Limited, Bechtel, Massey-Ferguson, and other corporations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have authorized the Secretary of the Cabinet to brief the future Prime Minister of Canada for the purposes of the transition period. I have complete confidence in the Secretary of the Cabinet. I know that he will not put any possibility of conflict of interest in the way of the new Leader of the Liberal Party.

CONTENT OF BRIEFING

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, just so we might be more precise, will the briefing that will be made available to this serving director of Canadian Pacific Limited, Bechtel, Massey-Ferguson, MacMillan-Bloedel and other corporations, contain confidential information, confidential Cabinet documents?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would think it would, Mr. Speaker. I would hope it would.

POSSIBLE DISCUSSION OF TRANSPORTATION POLICY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister tell the House of Commons whether the Minister of Transport will be discussing any aspect of transportation policy with Mr. Turner while Mr. Turner remains a director of Canadian Pacific Limited?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Minister of Transport is going to discuss with Mr. Turner.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, in the interest of respecting the spirit of conflict of interest guidelines, will the Prime Minister ensure that no confidential Cabinet information is made available to a serving director of those Canadian corporations or other corporations while that person remains a director of those corporations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that Mr. Turner has offered his resignations to those corporations as a director of those corporations.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They have not accepted them.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure they plan to accept them. Therefore, I do not see what the former Leader of the Opposition is worried about.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO SEAGRAM CORPORATION CHAIRMAN

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Acting Minister of Finance. As he will know, the Chairman of Seagram Corporation, in reference to the reappointment of Mr. Turner to the board of Seagram Corporation during the Liberal Leadership campaign, said: "From a Seagram's standpoint it would not be a bad thing to have a future Prime Minister on our board".

Would the Acting Minister of Finance assure the House that in any briefing given to Mr. Turner, no material dealt with will have any relevance to matters which could affect the profitability of that very large and powerful corporation, Seagram's, of which Mr. Turner continues to be a member of the board?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any such material going to Mr. Turner.

DIRECTORSHIP OF MASSEY-FERGUSON

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. In view of the fact that Mr. Turner is a member of the board of Massey-Ferguson, which is largely dependent upon support of the federal Government, can the Minister give the assurance that none of the material in any briefings given to Mr. Turner during the transition period while he is still a member of the board of Massey-Ferguson will deal with any matters which are relevant to the profitability and future of Massey-Ferguson?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not the Minister responsible for the shares of Massey-Ferguson which are held by the CDIC, but I will pass the Hon. Member's comments on to the responsible Minister.

BILINGUALISM

EDUCATION OF IMMIGRANT CHILDREN

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, if I can get his attention. The Secretary of State knows that in many cities of Canada, such as Toronto, Vancouver, and Winnipeg, to mention just a few, a very large percentage of students attending our schools comes from families in which the language spoken at home is neither English nor French. They are having great difficulty adjusting to our school system and to our society.

Given the fact that their parents came here as a result of an immigration policy adopted by Liberal Governments, given the fact that the school districts in which they go to school, and the provinces in which they reside, are finding it impossible to provide the financial resources to upgrade their education, would the Minister give consideration to the federal Government helping and co-operating with the school districts and the provinces to improve educational facilities so these children as they pass through our schools can really fit into Canadian society?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question. In fact I would like to inform the Hon. Member that we already have agreements with the ten provinces of Canada. We signed an agreement with the Province of British Columbia more than a year ago. These are agreements under which we provide to the provinces half of the cost for the equipment, the material, and the cost of teaching one or the other of the official languages in Canada. My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, has already notified his provincial colleagues to reopen those agreements in order to reflect the needs of the provinces better, especially the needs of the new Canadians who have access to the school systems and to the labour market, to make sure that new Canadians have all the facilities with which to join the labour force, to join the educational system, and so have their fair share in Canadian society.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of just helping new Canadians learn one of the official languages. It is a question of all the difficulties they have because they are just not ready for one of our languages. What is needed is not teaching in another language. What is needed is new text books, new work books, and teaching aids. In fact a whole range of things are required. That is very expensive and that, we have been told by school districts, they simply cannot provide.

NATIVE INDIAN CHILDREN—ACCESS TO ABORIGINAL LANGUAGE EDUCATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development may I direct my question to the Secretary of State which he might discuss with the Minister of Indian Affairs. The same problems apply in many Canadian cities to native children who are now attending schools in the cities in very large numbers. Would the Secretary of State and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development give consideration to what is needed and the kind of help which the provinces and the school districts require so that our Indian children, who are attending schools in cities, can at least have a chance to fit into society, a chance which they have not had up until now?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the Throne Speech of last December contained a provision through which the Government of Canada expressed its intention to favour the teaching of heritage languages and among them, of course, aboriginal languages.

I have negotiated an agreement recently with the Government of the Northwest Territories through which we will teach, and make available, seven aboriginal languages in the Northwest Territories. My colleague, the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, is in continuing discussion with the provinces to favour the teaching of native languages. There are at least four provinces in Canada which have included in their curricula the teaching of native languages. It is a domain of public interest, and it is a domain to which the Canadian Government has already devoted large sums of money. There is no doubt the preoccupation which the Hon. Member has expressed recently will be taken up by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to make sure that aboriginal languages remain part of the teaching of languages in Canada.

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL PARTY LEADER—ACCESS TO GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Would he quite clearly tell us whether he believes it is appropriate for Mr. Turner to see briefing documents before he has resigned all of his directorships?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend being overly technical with this. Obviously if the Opposition is concerned about a possible conflict of interest, in my first answer I indicated that I had confidence in the Secretary of the Cabinet in making sure there would be no possibility of such a conflict. That was answer number one. Answer number two is that, if Mr. Turner has resigned, I do not imagine the CPR or any of those other companies are going to hold a meeting of the board of directors in the next few days at which Mr. Turner will be in a position to use the very secret knowledge that he has from the Secretary of the Cabinet in a way which is detrimental to the people of Canada or beneficial to the CPR. The whole thing seems so far-fetched and preposterous, Mr. Speaker, that I am not seeing—

Mr. Bosley: How do you know?

Mr. Trudeau: —the problem as tragically as the Hon. Member. Mr. Turner is an honourable man, and I am sure he is not going to exploit any information he has, for devious purposes.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What about the conflict of interest guidelines?

Mr. Trudeau: The Opposition should realize that he as Prime Minister designate is entitled to have access to the workings of the Government and to prepare the succession. He is entitled to have the knowledge which is even made available to the Leader of the Opposition when it comes to preparing the mechanics of a changeover. The Hon. Member is coming back on the same technical point as the one the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead raised.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Ha, technical.

Mr. Trudeau: Ha, yes. The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead says ha, technical. That is what it is—ha, technical, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is what you tell Alastair Gillespie.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, The Prime Minister, I take it, continues to regard conflict of interest rules as simply a technical matter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): My question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, is very simple. Since we know the standards of the Prime Minister on this matter, let me ask him another question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I sense a certain nervousness on the other side.

Mr. Bosley: Will the Prime Minister undertake to discuss this matter with the Prime Minister designate and report to this House what the standards are of the Prime Minister designate with regard to conflict of interest? In other words, will he tell us, after talking with Mr. Turner, whether Mr. Turner believes it is reasonable while he maintains his directorships to see confidential briefing documents?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will be happy to take notice of the question on behalf of Mr. Turner, Mr. Speaker.

CORPORATE DIRECTORSHIP RESIGNATIONS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. If you exclude the activities of the companies with which Mr. Turner is connected, the briefing books will be pretty thin indeed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: I have one simple question for the Prime Minister. Has he himself suggested to Mr. Turner that Mr. Turner should resign the corporate directorships before taking office—like now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no, I have not suggested that to Mr. Turner. It seems to me self-evident that Mr. Turner is not going to be serving the CPR or any of these other companies.

Mr. Stevens: How do you know?

Mr. Trudeau: He has been elected Leader of the Liberal Party.

Mr. McDermid: And elected to the boards, too.

Mr. Trudeau: He will be Prime Minister in a very short time.

I take it that the only reason his resignations are effective at the end of the month is only a technical reason, once again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: It is pay day.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He doesn't get a cheque unless he resigns.

Mr. Trudeau: The Members opposite seem to be very aware of the technical and financial aspects of that particular date.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: And the nation be damned.

Mr. Trudeau: That is their chosen field, Mr. Speaker, It is not mine. If it is for some—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Wait a minute. You might end up on one of those boards.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They are looking for somebody—anybody.

Mr. Trudeau: I have got to be gentle on the CPR.

Mr. Stevens: You have always been gentle on the CPR.

Mr. Trudeau: After all they may be looking for a replacement for Mr. Turner.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You have done enough already.

Mr. Trudeau: All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is, if drafted, I will not stand.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, we are sorry that the Prime Minister finds questions and issues of public morality to be a laughing matter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1430)

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, changes are being proposed to the National Energy Program to correct some of its more glaring errors. Does the Prime Minister feel that it is all right or acceptable for Mr. Turner to be informed of these changes while still in the pay of Canadian Pacific and Bechtel?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that Mr. Turner is in the pay of anyone. I imagine if one is a director of a company, one does not advise the company on a day to day basis. I imagine one goes to a board meeting once a month, once every three months, or once a year. I do not know.

I repeat, Hon. Members opposite are making representations. If there is some concern on the part of Mr. Turner as to the appropriateness of that date, I am sure he will reconsider it. If there is some concern on the part of the Secretary of the Cabinet on the appropriateness of briefing Mr. Turner, he will reconsider it too. The only effect of it is that Mr. Turner will not be able to be briefed until the end of the month. Therefore I will not resign until after the Queen comes, and then I will be happy and everybody will be happy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EMPLOYMENT

ENVIRONMENT 2000 PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It will be a grim summer for many young people in British Columbia. In regard to the Environment 2000 Program, of which I am sure the Minister has some knowledge, some 450 applications have been made in British Columbia under the environment aspect of the program. Only 50 of those applications have been approved, and all the funding has run out.

In view of the importance of those projects and some of the anger generated by the refusal of applications, is the Minister aware of any additional funding which could go not only to British Columbia but nationally to the Environment 2000 Program, to put many young Canadians back to work over the summer months?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, of course I am very much aware of the Environment 2000 Program. I think the Hon. Member is aware of the recent addition to funding which was announced for the program earlier this month, or at the end of last month. I am not responsible for the administration of the program. It is in the hands of my colleague, the Minister of the Environment. I can neither attest to the accuracy of the statements of the Hon. Member nor can I tell him how much funding remains in the program. However, I will be happy to forward his representations to the Minister of the Environment who no doubt will be in touch to provide him with accurate information as soon as possible.

CREATION OF JOBS IN FOREST INDUSTRY

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister responsible for forestry who, I understand, will not be back before the end of the session, I will direct my question regarding the forest industry to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. There are two million people out of work in Canada, and we have a very seriously depleted forest resource. Our most important renewable resource is in need of great reforestation and intensive management.

Would the Minister commit himself to joining with the Minister responsible for forestry to call a national conference on forestry, including the federal and provincial Governments as well as labour and management, to work out a comprehensive strategy for reforestation and employment on a permanent basis for the many forest workers who are out of work and will not be getting back into the manufacturing aspect of the forest industry, but who could certainly serve in reforestation and in intensive management of our most important renewable resource?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am really a little startled by the Hon. Member's question. He should know—perhaps he does, and does not care to say it directly—that there have been continuing meetings between the Ministers of Forestry at the provincial level and their federal counterpart. Indeed, as a result of those meetings a federal forest strategy was brought forward and was discussed with the provinces. We are in the process of signing individual agreements with each of the provinces to focus on reforestation and silvaculture problems and responses.

The fact of the matter, as he should know, is that in his own province it is the failure of the provincial Government to support those activities, and indeed the withdrawal of the provincial Government from some programs such as the Employment Bridging Assistance Program, which have undermined those efforts. There has been a continuing, firm, and constant effort on the part of the federal Government to respond exactly to those problems within the framework of the forest strategy which has already been developed. His criticisms, and I hope he would make them with great vigour, should be directed toward provincial authorities in his own province, not toward this side of the House.

TRADE

POSSIBLE UNITED STATES ACTION TO LIMIT IMPORTATION OF CANADIAN STEEL

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. While the Minister was having polite discussions with Mr. Shultz of the United States regarding free trade, Congress was very busy with legislation labelling Canada as a nation which is dumping steel into the United States. That involves 5,000 jobs and almost $1 billion worth of export L'hon. Gerald Regan (ministre du Commerce extérieur): Monsieur le Président, selon moi, il s'agit là d'une question extrêmement importante. Il est également crucial que les députés intéressés soient bien informés. Étant donné l'importance que le député attache à cette question très grave, permettez-moi de lui signaler que ce n'est pas avec M. Shultz que j'ai discuté du libre-échange sectoriel, mais bien avec M. Brock, le représentant commercial des États-Unis. C'est la première chose qu'il doit comprendre.

Il doit savoir, ensuite, que ce n'est pas le Congrès qui a jugé que le Canada faisait du dumping sur le marché de l'acier aux États-Unis ou nuisait à ce secteur. L'étude du projet de loi en question n'a pas progressé au Congrès. Il est sur les tablettes. Ce n'est pas la principale menace à l'heure actuelle. Ce qui nous inquiète plutôt, c'est la requête que la société Bethlehem Steel a présentée en vertu d'une procédure en vigueur aux États-Unis, qui prévoit que l'on doit procéder à une enquête lorsqu'une industrie est durement touchée par des importations dont le prix est si bas que les produits américains sont invendables. Cette enquête est menée par l'ITC. Il s'agit d'une procédure quasi-judiciaire. Dans cette requête, on ne s'en prend pas au Canada, mais bien aux importations en provenance de tous les pays.

Ce qui s'est passé, c'est que l'ITC, au premier stade de son enquête, a découvert que ce secteur avait été victime des importations. Il y a plusieurs autres étapes à franchir avant que cette question ne soit soumise au Président qui devra décider si l'on doit restreindre les importations.

Des voix: Règlement!

M. Regan: Entre-temps, le Canada présente ses instances au gouvernement américain au sujet de l'importance des ventes d'acier canadien aux États-Unis et il lui signale que les Américains ont déjà les moyens de déterminer si un pays en particulier pratique le dumping et de prendre des mesures contre ce pays. Les États-Unis n'ont pas à prendre une mesure générale qui nuirait aux exportations canadiennes vers les États-Unis. Nous continuerons de présenter nos instances à cet égard.

M. Friesen: Avec ce genre de charabia, j'aimerais autant que le ministre ne passe plus son temps au États-Unis, afin qu'il ne nous mette pas davantage dans l'embarras.

ON DEMANDE DES MESURES POUR PROTÉGER LES EMPLOIS AU CANADA

M. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-Delta-Nord): Monsieur le Président, je ne parle pas de la pétition 201. Je parle du projet de loi. La pétition 201 peut constituer un jugement contre le Canada, mais le projet de loi met le Canada dans le même sac que tous les autres pays qui eux pratiquent le dumping, alors que le Canada n'en fait rien. Pourquoi le ministre n'a-t-il pas fait des démarches aux États-Unis pour veiller à ce que la réputation du Canada demeure sans tache, pour protéger 5,000 emplois et des échanges commerciaux d'un milliard?

En outre, lorsque le ministre convoquera ses homologues provinciaux à une réunion, va-t-il veiller à ce que toutes les provinces y participent, contrairement à ses plans antérieurs où la Colombie-Britannique et cinq autres provinces en étaient exclues? Veillera-t-il à ce que toutes les provinces puissent faire entendre leur voix quand il s'agira de discuter d'un plan commun pour contrer ce genre de stratégie aux États-Unis?

Des voix: Bravo!

L'hon. Gerald Regan (ministre du Commerce extérieur): Monsieur le Président, je crois que les députés applaudissent trop facilement. Ils ont le devoir de veiller à ce que l'on pose une question intelligente avant de réagir de cette manière.

Voici maintenant que le député parle du projet de loi qui a été présenté au Congrès, plutôt que de la pétition 201.

M. Friesen: C'était l'objet de ma première question.

M. Regan: Il devrait savoir que c'est la pétition 201 qui constitue l'initiative dangereuse pour les intérêts de l'industrie sidérurgique canadienne à l'heure actuelle. Le projet de loi n'a été que présenté au Congrès où son étude n'a pas vraiment avancé. En réponse à nos protestations à ce sujet, le gouvernement américain a très clairement fait savoir qu'il s'y opposait tout comme il s'était opposé à d'autres mesures protectionnistes similaires qui ont fait long feu à propos de la participation du Canada à la fabrication des automobiles ou à d'autres encore qui auraient pu avoir des répercussions fâcheuses sur l'industrie canadienne. Nous protestons auprès des Américains de la même façon qui s'est révélée appropriée. Nous avons gagné notre cause dans le cas du bois d'œuvre et dans le cas de la pomme de terre. Nous ferons encore beaucoup mieux dans ce cas-ci si le député suivait la voie que les gouvernements provinciaux et le secteur privé ont suivie avec nous dans le cas du bois d'œuvre et qu'ils se proposent de suivre avec nous dans le cas de l'acier, c'est-à-dire de travailler ensemble, calmement et efficacement, dans les intérêts des travailleurs canadiens.

QUESTIONS OUVRIÈRES

LE TAUX DE CHÔMAGE—LA COMPARAISON AVEC LES ÉTATS-UNIS

M. Doug Lewis (Simcoe-Nord): Monsieur le Président, j'ai une question à poser au ministre de l'Emploi et de l'Immigration. Aux États-Unis, le taux de chômage est de 7.5 p. 100. Il a baissé de .3 p. 100 le mois dernier. Ici le taux de chômage est de 11.7 p. 100. Il a monté de .3 p. 100 le mois dernier. Comment le ministre explique-t-il cette différence et cette tendance?

L'hon. John Roberts (ministre de l'Emploi et de l'Immigration): Monsieur le Président, j'ai souvent répondu à cette question à la Chambre. Ce qui explique la différence des taux entre le Canada et les États-Unis, à mon avis, c'est la différence des arrivées sur le marché du travail. Si par exemple on remonte à 1970 et qu'on tienne compte de la croissance de la population adulte au Canada, on constate que la force de travail s'est accrue beaucoup plus vite que la population adulte. Je dirai même que si la force de travail ne s'était pas accrue plus vite que la population adulte, le taux de chômage se situerait au Canada entre 2 et 3 p. 100, au lieu de dépasser largement les 11 p. 100. Il faut tenir compte non seulement des créations d'emplois, auquel cas notre taux n'est pas pire que celui des États-Unis, mais aussi de la situation difficile qui est causée en partie par des facteurs démographiques et en partie par le grand nombre de femmes qui cherchent du travail, ce qui explique l'ampleur du problème.

levels in Canada would be between 2 per cent and 3 per cent, not well over 11 per cent. One has to look not only at the creation of jobs, in which case our rate does not compare unfavourably with that of the United States, but one has also to look at the degree of challenge which is caused partially by demographic factors, partially by the high rate of entry of women into the labour force, to see the extent of the problem we face.

The problem we face in creating jobs really is extraordinary and in a sense unique because of the very high entry into the labour force that we have had up to the present time. As one looks ahead toward the end of the decade, the demographic factors shift and we will not have to the same degree the factor of entry of young people into the labour force as we have had over the last few years. The Hon. Member asks me to explain the divergence between the Canadian rate and the American rate. The essential explanation lies in the facts as I have described to him.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the 1.5 million Canadians who are out of work are not prepared to wait to the end of the decade.

FINANCE

INCOME TAX—COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Finance. In the United States personal income taxes have been cut 28 per cent in the past three years. That tax cut has produced consumer spending, industrial growth, and created jobs. Will the Minister agree that the accumulation of huge deficits, started in the early seventies by Mr. Turner and continued by the present Government, has eliminated the Government's ability to cut taxes and thus create jobs?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): No, Mr. Speaker. the Hon. Member opposite has overlooked the fact that in Canada, unlike the United States, income tax is indexed. Therefore we have an automatic and built-in means of restraining tax increases in Canada which is unavailable in the United States. Further, we in Canada have the opportunity to write off certain expenses and costs which is not present in the United States, and which also can provide an additional stimulus to economic growth.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPLICATION TO CLOSE NORTHERN STATIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a series of questions for the Minister of Transport. My questions are with regard to the attempt of CN and VIA to reduce safety, service, and employment in Canada's railway system. As the Minister knows, today in Churchill the CTC is holding a hearing on CN's application to tear down local stations and to remove station agents from nine northern communities. This is an action which CN is also taking in a number of other communities throughout western Canada and northern Ontario.

One method that CN uses to decrease service is not to advertise the local telephone number in the phone book in a community. For example, in the community of Cranberry Portage there are ten numbers for CN and VIA, but not one of them is the local number. After doing this for a number of years, it applies to the Canadian Transport Commission to take away the station and the job of the local agent. Is that fair, Mr. Minister, and what are you going to do about it?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Hon. Member for Churchill that in the last three or four months we have taken a number of new initiatives to improve service in northern Manitoba substantially. I particularly draw to his attention the inauguration of the new rail bus demonstration which is a highly innovative and new attempt to provide an effective means of rail transportation for northern residents. That has been part of the new railway transportation package that we signed by way of agreement with the Government of Manitoba, and to which CN is a party.

In addition, as the Member knows, we have committed a substantial number of dollars for the improvement of the Port of Churchill and the development of the new freight rate system and freight car system in that area. It would be proper to say that we are paying a high degree of attention to the transportation interests of the North. What is taking place in terms of the CTC hearings is the opportunity for residents, the railways, and all other interested parties to present their case on how we can provide those transportation services at an efficient level.

Rather than raising somewhat spurious comments, as the Hon. Member has done in the press, he would be much better off to present his case to the CTC which has been able to make judgments based on a proper assessment of all points of view rather than trying to play politics in the local press or in the House of Commons, because the CTC is there to make those decisions.

NON-ADVERTISING OF LOCAL SERVICE TELEPHONE NUMBERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister read the local press and the Winnipeg Free Press, perhaps he would recognize that the remarks quoted in the Winnipeg Free Press were from my submission to the Canadian Transport Commission. I am now going to the Minister in his role as the Minister to whom CN and VIA Rail report, and asking him directly why those Crown corporations do not advertise the number of the local station in the local telephone book. How does he expect local people and tourists to do business with local station agents if the local number is not listed in the phone book? Why is there an unlisted number for those stations?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I just pointed out to the Hon. Member that the representations that will be judged are those that will be made to the Canadian Transport Commission. It is there to assess the various claims and propositions put forward by Members of Parliament, local residents, or whomever, and to judge whether effective service is being provided. The Hon. Member for Churchill is less than charitable and less than informative in his unwillingness to recognize the major investments being made in northern Manitoba by CN and VIA Rail, substantially improving transportation and passenger services. If he were doing his job as a Member of Parliament he would be prepared to offer a full range of services, rather than picking out one particular point with which he happens to disagree.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PAY 50 PER CENT OF INCREASED SOCIAL BENEFITS FOR YOUNG QUEBECERS

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister is probably aware of the fact that young welfare recipients in Quebec are asking to have their benefits of $152 per month raised to the same level as benefits received by welfare recipients over thirty years old.

Could the minister inform the House whether under the Canada Assistance Plan, the federal Government would be prepared to pay 50 per cent of the cost of increasing welfare benefits paid by the Government of Quebec to young welfare recipients in Quebec?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes, the federal Government would automatically pay Mr. Lévesque's Government, in other words, Quebec, 50 per cent of any increase the Government of Quebec decides to give young welfare recipients. However, although the present monthly amount of $152 is very low, the federal Government does not have the right, according to the Constitution, to ask or suggest that Quebec increase that amount. On the other hand, if the Government of Quebec, through Mrs. Pauline Marois, should take the initiative, it does not need our permission, and we would automatically reimburse 50 per cent of the amount involved.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSEQUENCES OF REMOVAL OF LOCAL STATION AGENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Transport. In responding to his last remarks, I recognize the importance of the agreements in northern Manitoba.

If you take away the local agent, which is what the application by CN is, how do you make use of the improvements? What do the people who live in those communities do when the local agent is taken away and the local station is taken down? What do tourists who come to town do when there is no local service?

● (1450)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I expect that that decision would be made once a decision has been made by the CTC. Unlike the Hon. Member who seems to see everything in a pessimistic and negative way, I am confident that the Canadian Transport Commission will carefully weigh all of the evidence presented to it. If, in its judgment, it feels that the station agent should not be removed, it would so decide. If it decides otherwise, then we would obviously take whatever action is required to make sure that there is a full range of services.

The unfortunate part of the Hon. Member's question is that he is already making an assumption what the decision will be before the CTC has had a chance to hear the evidence or make a judgment. I would expect that we would all be much better off if we allowed the CTC to listen to the evidence. If some form of remedial action is then required, I would assure the Hon. Member that I will act in the best interests of the people of the area of Churchill, as I have in the past.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT MEAT IMPORTS BE CURTAILED

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Bearing in mind that the red meat industry is in some difficulty with respect to prices and that the long and historically established western packing industry is certainly in some considerable stress, I would like to ask the Minister what action is he taking with respect to curtailing the dumping of northern European beef into Canada, and particularly that from the country of Ireland.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly, the inquiry which is deciding whether or not countervailing action should be taken should be finished soon, if it is not finished already. I have not had time to check on it in the last couple of days. I will return to my office shortly and check to see what the situation is at the present time.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I would trust that the Minister would add to that that he will check on it and report back to the House.

CONTAMINATED MEAT INQUIRY

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question I would ask the Minister if he would report back to the House after giving his consideration to the import of contaminated meats. My understanding is that some 40 per cent of meats imported into Canada have levels of contaminant chemical contents higher than the levels that are allowed in domestic packing plants. I would ask the Minister to give his consideration to that and cease the import of those meats so that our western packing industry might continue to survive.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have seen nothing concerning the contamination of imported meat. I understand it goes through a pretty rigid inspection process. The only thing I am aware of is that some meat was actually shipped out of Canada to Great Britain and returned to Canada. I have seen nothing like the kind of situation to which the Hon. Member referred, dealing with imported meat coming into Canada. It is inspected very thoroughly.

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL PARTY LEADER—TRANSPORTATION BRIEFINGS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Transport a supplementary question arising from earlier questions with respect to briefings to his new Leader. May I ask the Minister how he plans to conduct briefings to his new Leader with respect to transportation when in fact his new Leader still holds a corporate directorship in the CPR? Can the Minister assure the House that such briefings will not take place prior to the time when the new Leader's resignation will take effect?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the question of briefings of the new Leader of the Liberal Party is a proper subject for discourse in the House of Commons. However, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that, like he is with most of his questions, he is a little out of date. Mr. Turner, as the new Leader of the Liberal Party, has already submitted his resignations which will take effect at the end of this month.

TIMING OF CORPORATE DIRECTORSHIP DESIGNATIONS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the point of my question. Can the Minister assure this House that briefings with respect to transportation, particularly as it relates to CPR, will not take place while the new Leader of the Liberal Party is in effect still holding directorships, since his resignations do not take effect until the end of the month?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, again I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Vegreville, because it is quite obvious that he has forgotten, that the new Leader of the Liberal Party is also a Privy Councillor. Therefore, he has taken a very serious oath which he respects, and which I hope the Hon. Member opposite also respects when we take him into our confidence. Most times that confidence is honoured. I would not say that it is always honoured, but it is most times. Therefore, I would assume that the same kind of discretion in judgment shown by all Privy Councillors in respecting the confidence of the Crown would again be respected.

Mr. Mazankowski: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has already asked a supplementary question.

Mr. Mazankowski: Supplementary, Sir. In the spirit of that confidence which the Minister is willing to share—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Mazankowski: Perhaps he may—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has already asked a supplementary question.

Mr. Mazankowski: They got two over there.

Mr. Speaker: To put the record straight, there was an initial question put by a member of the New Democratic Party and only one supplementary question was requested. The second supplementary question was accorded as a courtesy to a later questioner in that Party. The Chair has scrupulously observed the proprieties of fairness in this situation. I recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT RATES IN MANITOBA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a single question to put to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It would appear that there must be something of a bias in the job-creation programs, or perhaps some discrimination is taking place, because the Province of Manitoba has such a relatively low unemployment rate when compared to the national average, and the unemployment rate in British Columbia is twice that of Manitoba. Does this reflect some type of discriminatory practice on behalf of the federal Government in terms of its job-creation programs, or does it have something to do with the nature of the Government in that province?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure from the Hon. Member's question whether he is talking about the Government of Manitoba or the Government of British Columbia.

Mr. Riis: Manitoba.

Mr. Roberts: He is talking about the Government of Manitoba. I would like to assure him that our programs show no particular discrimination against the Government of Manitoba, or indeed against Manitobans. I do not have the figures with me, but a couple of months ago, when the matter was very much under discussion in this House, we reviewed the over-all percentage of allocations and compared them with the levels of unemployment that existed over the past year. We found that when looking at all of the job-creation programs of the Government of Canada, the over-all percentage of allocations roughly reflected the percentage of unemployment, with some discrepancies which I think can be accounted for by the fact that some provincial Governments have more resources with which to tackle unemployment within their own provinces than others. In effect, there was a parallel allocation which pretty well reflected the unemployment percentage levels. If I can find the information easily, I will bring the figures up to date and forward them to the Hon. Member.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF TOBACCO NATIONAL MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister will recall that yesterday over 1,400 tobacco growers came to Ottawa to make an urgent representation to the Minister for an amendment to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act which would permit the establishment of a national marketing agency for tobacco. The Minister will also recall that my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Elgin and the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk, have likewise pressed the Minister, as have some of his own colleagues.

Back in May the Minister promised us that we would see such an amendment introduced in the House in the first part of June. Could the Minister tell us why he has reneged in honouring his commitment? Does he plan to bring this amendment to the House for first reading in the immediate future?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made some statements about the tobacco growers who want an amendment to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. As we see it at the present time the Act is discriminatory because it gives some farmers the rights to supply and management, particularly poultry farmers, and does not give farmers producing other products the same rights.

I would not be in favour of bringing the Bill before the House simply for the benefit of the tobacco growers, and I have made that clear in all instances. The Act should be open and non-discriminatory for all farmers of all products. Farmers are not forced into using the provisions of that Act. They use the democratic action of deciding for themselves if they wish to fall under that kind of plan. If I can get the unanimous consent of the House that the plan could be that broad kind of a plan, I am pretty sure that we could bring the amendment to the House very quickly, particularly if we had the agreement of all Parties to pass it.

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, our House Leader is very anxious to see that amendment. We are anxiously awaiting its introduction.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I wonder if the Minister could tell us whether or not it is true that she is being subjected to very heavy lobbying against this amendment to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act and that this is the reason it is being held up in Cabinet.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PETRO-CANADA—TREATMENT OF INDEPENDENT GASOLINE DEALER

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Recently Petro-Canada informed an independent gasoline dealer in my riding that he no longer qualified for a minimum margin should the price of gasoline fall below a predetermined level as a result of gas wars. However, the outlets which deal directly with PetroCan and have the PetroCan signs are entitled to a minimum spread of two cents per litre. Therefore my question to the Minister is this: what will she do about this unfair practice which could drive this dealer out of business?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the case, but I can assure the Hon. Member that if he were to provide me with the details I would direct my officials to look into the matter.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the reply of the Minister. Indeed, I will favour her with that information.

TREATMENT OF GAS STATION OPERATOR

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received a telephone call from a woman who operates a store and a gas station. She is an independent dealer who sells PetroCan gasoline. Her margin was cut from 2.8 cents per litre to 2.2 cents per litre as a result of being an independent dealer. I would note that the margin of the other dealers was not cut. Therefore I would ask the Minister to respond as well to that question.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I will.

Mr. Speaker: That kind of question might well be on the Order Paper in terms of the level of detail requested.

TABLING OF AGREEMENT ON NATIVE RIGHTS

Mr. René Gingras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling, on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), in both official languages, copies of the Agreement concluded by the Committee for Original People's Entitlement, representing the Inuvialuit of the area designated, commonly referred to as the COPE Agreement, and the Government of Canada, on June 5, 1984.

PETITIONS

MS. McDONALD—CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from members of my riding of Broadview-Greenwood. In the opinion of the petitioners, the Liberal Government has attempted unreasonably to stifle debate by using closure at second reading and committee stages on the proposed Bill to establish a civilian security service. They feel that the Government has refused to allow for broad public input into this process by denying cross-country hearings, and that the proposed Bill poses a profound threat to the civil liberties and privacy of all Canadians.

Wherefore the petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to demand full and extensive public hearings across Canada on the proposed Bill to establish a civilian security service. They ask that the Bill not be proceeded with before such hearings have taken place.

MR. LEWYCKY—RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 503 residents from the communities of Dauphin, Swan River and Sifton, who express their concern that there are over 60,000 abortions annually in Canada. They state their opposition concerning the commercial experimentation on unborn fœtuses. They call for legislation to recognize the rights of the unborn.

MR. WADDELL—PENSION BENEFITS FOR PART-TIME WORKERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition which was signed by Mr. Shawyer, who lives on Rupert Street in Vancouver, and other people showing that whereas there are no pensions provided by the Government of Canada for individuals who work less than 20 hours per week, and whereas Canadian citizens who work a 15-hour to 20-hour week perform jobs which are an integral part of our economy, and whereas the citizens who perform this work are hardworking and deserve recognition for their contribution to Canadian Society, and whereas those Canadians who perform part-time work for less than 20 hours per week and who wish to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan should be entitled to receive pension benefits from this program, therefore the Canada Pension Plan should be amended to provide pension benefits for these part-time workers.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SERVING OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-250, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to abolish the existing prohibition to sell and to serve alcoholic beverages during polling hours on a federal election or by-election day. It is believed by many, including the Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel, that the present law is archaic and unnecessary, and in fact, among other things, creates substantial revenue losses for the already ailing tourism industry, restaurants and other service sectors. Therefore, I hope that the House will see the wisdom to make this long overdue change.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING REPRESENTATION ON QUEBEC COMMISSION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain), for Mr. Benjamin, moved for leave to introduce Bill C-251, an Act to amend the Harbour Commissions Act (Port of Quebec Harbour Commission).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), I would like to thank the House for giving its consent for me to introduce this Bill.

The purpose of the Bill is to provide for a more proper representation on the Port of Quebec Harbour Commission. It is to ensure that elected representatives in the municipalities being served by the Commission are, in fact, entitled to serve on that Commission.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read that second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-9

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada) moved:

That in relation to Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading of the said Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

● (1510)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I must confess, and I know it is no secret, that the Government always acts with great regret when any time allocation resolution must be introduced. Under a properly working House of Commons, one would hope that a debate would be proceeded with seriously and in good faith by all sides of the House and, having exhausted all of the reasonable arguments and exchanges which ought to take place in parliamentary debate, that Hon. Members opposite would be prepared at a certain point to see the question put, to express their views through the procedure of voting, and see legislation proceed. Regrettably, virtually all serious legislation of this Government and this Parliament has needed the assistance of some form of time allocation at some stage or other in order for that legislation to be carried forward. It has regrettably become a necessary role of the Government at a certain point in the proceeding of every major piece of legislation to introduce time allocation. Therefore, with regret, I rise to introduce time allocation at this point in the consideration of this very important piece of legislation.

Let it not be said, as the Opposition has been attempting to do, that this legislation, the ideas and concepts, and the question of national security, have not had adequate debate or adequate public consideration. Nothing could be further from the truth. This is an issue which has been on the front burner before the Canadian people in many ways, I can say, for the past 17 years.

A royal commission on security known as the Mackenzie Commission was established in 1966 and its report was published in June of 1969. At that time there were 175 hearings and 250 witnesses who all recommended that a separate civilian security service be established in Canada. Mr. Tommy Douglas, a distinguished Member of this House at the time, reported in this House, and I quote:

Without any reflection whatsoever on the very excellent service the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have performed, there is a great difference between law enforcement and the carrying out of the duties of a security service... Therefore, I think the recommendation of the royal commission for the setting up of a civilian non-police agency has a great deal of merit.

There was then the McDonald Commission which was established in 1977. That commission held over 300 hearings and heard nearly 150 witnesses.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And we have had about three hours.

Mr. Kaplan: It received 124 written submissions. It made its report and recommended as well that there should be established a separate civilian security service.

[Translation]

As my hon. friends will recall, the Government tabled Bill C-157 in the House in May 1983. A special committee of the Senate was asked to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill and the Canadian Security Intelligence System. The Committee also held many public hearings, heard more than thirty submissions and received about fifty briefs. As the Leader of the Official Opposition in the House said earlier, the Committee proceeded with a clause by clause examination of the Bill. The members of this Committee declared unanimously, and I quote:

That legislation dealing with Canada's Security Intelligence System is necessary, and that it should be enacted in the near future. The status quo is not acceptable.

[English]

This special committee of the other place reported in November of 1983, and in January of this year the Government tabled Bill C-9 which is now before the House for third reading. On the second reading debate there were six days of debate and 57 speeches. The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs received the matter at committee stage. There were over two months of meetings, 43 meetings, and 85 hours of debate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And closure! You did not mention closure!

Mr. Kaplan: Testimony was received from 25 individuals or groups and over 50 written submissions were presented to the committee. I appeared for approximately 59 hours before the committee at 24 different meetings.

I have been sitting patiently in this House through this debate on report stage. I have noted the continued representations from Hon. Members opposite, including those from the Opposition House Leader just now, that there has been insufficient hearing. I would quote the respected journalist and former New Democratic Member of Parliament, Douglas Fisher, who characterized the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) as having "the gall and effrontery", to use his words, to say that this issue has not yet been fully discussed and debated.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Take it easy. It takes one to know one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I believe the honourable and distinguished Minister is quoting from a document. In accordance with House rules, I believe he should table the whole document which, indeed, contains some very interesting references to the Minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister wish to comment on that matter?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am not reading from the column. I am quoting one or two words from it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: I do not actually have it here to table.

Mr. Waddell: Table it.

Mr. Kaplan: I do not have it.

What has clinched it for the Government, in fact, in making it obvious that time allocation was absolutely necessary, was a press release, which I am prepared to table because I have it right here in my hand. It is a news release from the New Democratic Party on June 5, 1984 which is headed; "NDP to block spy bill". The Hon. Member for Burnaby is purported to have said in this document produced by his Party: "If the Government refuses to act on these important amendments being proposed by the New Democratic Party, and called for by many witnesses across Canada, then the caucus will do everything in its power to prevent the proposed security legislation from being enacted in this session.

Mr. Waddell: Table it.

Mr. Kaplan: I would be delighted to table it.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this document be appended to today's Hansard.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, no. We are not going to waste the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan) is seeking to table a document. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A request has also been made by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) that that document be appended to today's Hansard. Is there unanimous agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous agreement.

An Hon. Member: Kaplan said no.

Mr. Parent: I said no. Point of order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) on a point of order.

Mr. Parent: I would like to point out, so that it will be in Hansard, that I was the one who said no in this House to that request.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kaplan: In summary, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the New Democratic Party is not interested in responsibly stating its position and seeing Parliament function. It is simply interested in delaying the passage of this Bill and preventing Parliament from carrying out its responsibilities.

● (1520)

We are very close to the end of the session and the end of a Parliament. I would like to end my brief remarks with a recent quote of Professor Peter Russell, research director of the McDonald Commission. He commented as follows:

I cannot think in living memory of legislation coming as close to a Royal Commission's whole set of recommendations as C-9 now does. Let's get on with the job.

[Translation]

That is exactly what this Government is trying to do. For the first time in this country's history, it is seeking to enact legislation that would define the framework, mandate and powers of a Security Intelligence Service and make each of its activities subject to judicial control and a system of external monitoring. This would be a major step, but the New Democratic Party members have, through their actions, not only discredited their Party, they have also made it difficult to pursue the very debate they were demanding.

[English]

This Government, in the tradition of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), will shoulder its responsibility and, with the assistance of this House, complete the final chapter of this long book and bring in legislation that represents a great step forward in this important area of public concern.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) indicates that he has run out of patience with the process. Well, isn't that too bad! Let me tell you what we have run out of. We have run out of patience with a Government that, on second reading, says that when the Bill goes to Committee it will consider the representations brought to it and, where appropriate, make amendments. That is what this Government said, but it had no intention of keeping that commitment. It has put everyone through a fraudulent process on Bill C-9 which has gone on for some months. The Minister said 25 witnesses appeared at committee and there were 50 briefs filed. True. The one amendment of any substance passed in committee was one which got past Government Members and allows the review committee to see the Cabinet documents which directed the security service. What is the Solicitor General doing now? He is bringing in an amendment to wipe that amendment out! That is what we are impatient with. We are more than impatient; we are fed up to the teeth.

The Minister talks about the Mackenzie Commission. Lord love a duck! Half the reporters in this town were in knee pants or in the cradle when that Commission came in. The so-called terrible things which created the need for the McDonald Commission were done 13 and 14 years ago. I asked the Minister questions in committee about the RCMP. I said:

The fact is, Mr. Minister, that for many months now—for many years in fact—since the revelations in the House of Commons in 1977 and the action which was taken consequently, the security service has been working as a part of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The commissioner has been reporting to the Solicitor General effectively, competently and in a manner in which I am sure you would agree meets with your approval. You testify that this has been done in a manner which meets the appropriate sensibilities of the Canadian public. Is that not so?

What did the Solicitor General reply? He sat there and meekly agreed. He said:

Yes, that is so.

So much for his argument that the security service has to be removed from the RCMP. As for the argument that this is some brand-new security service being invented by the Bill, that is the most errant nonsense. It is exactly the same people, same typewriters, paper, cupboards, floor and rugs. The same everything. All this Bill does is set out an appropriate mandate and more rules within which that security service is to be constrained.

It is very interesting that the first act of this Government after the great convention that was going to reform the Liberal Party with the great new leader, John Turner, is to move closure on a security Bill which Alan Borovoy, the distinguished and eminent leader of civil rights in this country, says is the greatest threat to civil liberties since Confederation. But it is not surprising. Mr. Turner talks about a new deal. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, this is the old deal writ large. Mr. Turner was part of the Government that used closure in 1968 to impose the rules under which this closure is taking place. So much for civil liberties.

As for this pack of fellow travellers on the Government side who, with unseemly haste, bounced over to Mr. Turner when the Liberal establishment told them to many weeks ago, the question that should be asked the Canadian public is: Would you buy a used government from John Turner?

Under other circumstances and on other occasions the Solicitor General is a good personal friend of mine, but what he is saying today cannot go unchallenged. The reason we in the House are still fighting this Bill is that the Government has not accepted a single suggestion made by all of the competent people who came in front of the committee. Not one. That process has been made fraudulent by a Government that was not going to listen or accept suggestions. Clause 2(a), (b), (c), and (d) are the definitions of what constitutes a threat to the security of Canada. Those are the key sections which trigger all of the activities of the security service. The language is loose and does not adequately constrain the activities of a security force acting in secret. But this Government will not accept a single amendment. The Government does not want a parliamentary review committee.

Interesting, isn't it, that our neighbour, the United States, has a Senate review committee for security matters as well as one in the House of Representatives. But this Government, which just spent all last weekend talking about reform, does not want Members of Parliament to have anything to do with reviewing security in this country. That is the Government that does not want the review committee to see even the Cabinet documents that direct the security service because that would be a breach of Cabinet solidarity. Well, one of the American witnesses said that your review committee has to be a watch-dog committee and it better not be a sleeping dog committee. Well, if you cannot see what the Cabinet is directing the security service to do, the committee is a sleeping dog committee.

These are substantive and important amendments. It is no good that the Government or some nameless person in a editorial office somewhere is talking about the Mackenzie Commission, the McDonald Commission, Bill C-157 and the Senate committee, saying that there has been debate. Why can these people who are supposed to be educated in the journalism schools of this country not understand that what rules us is the wording of the legislation here in the House of Commons, not in the Senate, the Mackenzie Commission or the McDonald Commission? What is wrong with a fundamental and elementary understanding of our system? That fact does not seem to pervade the editorial boards of this country, and it certainly has not pervaded the cranium of the Solicitor General.

As for the pack of sheep on the Government side, with the exception of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and one former Solicitor General, the members of the so-called reformed Party have sat there in dumb obedience week after week after week. Then they wonder why we are impatient. The whole process has been traduced by a government which put a Bill into committee and never intended to make one change to it.

It is all very well for the Solicitor General to talk about the 25 witnesses whocame in front of him. How do you think those witnesses feel knowing what is going on here? I talked to some of them. They asked what it was all about and why they bothered. Trust and reform are incredibly easy words to use. When you have a majority at your back for a limited period of time and the arrogance of appearing always to be in power, trust is dissipated like a will-o'-the-wisp at the first notion that someone may raise something which would mean you cannot have your own way absolutely. In 1688 we traded the Divine Right of Kings for the Divine Right of a Prime Minister with a majority at his back for a period of years. This is a brutally powerful system. When it is coupled with the attitude which has been exhibited on this Bill by the Government, the Solicitor General and the new leader, Mr. John Turner, there are no checks and balances in the system whatsoever.

Let there be no doubt about why the Opposition is arguing about this Bill. It is because the Bill is not as good as it could be. It is a flawed Bill. We know there must be a security service, but eminent, intelligent and capable people came before us and made suggestions which would make this Bill better and more trusted by the Canadian people. The Government accepted none of it. This is not a day to be very proud of in the House. Every Member of the Government should be ashamed, as I am ashamed, of what is happening here.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in rising to address the motion of closure before the House I would seriously suggest to members of the Chamber that this represents one of the darkest days for democracy in the history of this country. I remind members of this Chamber and those Canadians who are observing our proceedings that it is the same Government that brought forward the proclamation of the War Measures Act in 1970 that now brings forward legislation which constitutes nothing less than a massive assault on the fundamental civil liberties and privacy of all Canadians and anyone visiting our country. In the guise of protecting our national security the Government would take a sledge-hammer to our civil liberties. In the pretext of fighting totalitarianism and totalitarian governments characterized by an atmosphere of oppression and the suppression of dissent, the Government would itself adopt those totalitarian tools.

It has been argued that the status quo is not acceptable. I agree. One need look no further than the litany of horror stories documented by the McDonald Commission which reported in 1981. However, let there be no misunderstanding. Far from being an improvement on the status quo, this Bill represents a very serious step backward. Given the alternative between the status quo, flawed though it may be, and the provisions of this Bill, many Canadians would certainly say that we should not move forward with this flawed legislation.

The debate on some of the provisions which are of greatest concern has been stifled consistently. The Bill was introduced in January and the Government cut off debate at second reading. After having begun a discussion at the clause by clause stage in committee, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Gourde), the Minister's number one flunky on the committee, brought forward a motion of closure to shut down debate. I filibustered that motion of closure for three days and I make no apology for having done so. The essence of that debate was that by moving in that heavy-handed manner, the Government was denying the committee the right to debate, in a full and informed manner, the provisions of this Bill. The Government denied the committee the right to hold public hearings across the country on legislation which so fundamentally affects the rights, liberties and privacy of Canadians.

If there had been public hearings, perhaps there would have been a little more attention paid by the members of the press. I accuse them of blatant disregard of one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before the House. The gallery was empty this morning and yesterday and is virtually empty today. They move around in their discussions, debates and great analyses of the flim-flam of leadership and completely ignore one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): That is a shameful denial of their obligations to the people of the country for which they stand condemned. I suggest that it is indeed members of the press who may be victims of their own negligence down the line.

The Government denied public hearing, cut off debate at second reading and choked off debate in committee. The chairman of the committee was forced to resign after having taken action to shut down debate in committee, which is unprecedented in the history of this country. We come before the House for debate at report stage and third reading and the Government once again brings in the guillotine. The Government shuts the debate down using closure. So much for democracy! So much for the rights of Canadians to a full and informed debate on this Bill.

We in this Party said that we would do what we could to block the Bill if the Government did not accept amendments which would narrow the powers of the new security service and prevent it from having the right to target Canadians who have broken no law whatsoever. The McDonald Commission would have denied that power to the security service. That power is not granted to any security service in any western country in the world. That power is unprecedented in the United States. It is the power to target Canadians suspected to be subversives or spies. That power should not have been granted. We in this Party said we would not tolerate that power.

We said that there must be a role for Parliament, as did the McDonald Commission. We said there must be effective parliamentary oversight to prevent this new security service from becoming a political weapon in the hands of the government of the day. Yes, we said we would block this Bill if the Government did not move in that direction. We said we would not stand idly by as the Government brought forward a bill which would brutally suppress civil liberties and expand the powers of the service. The expanded powers include the right to open first-class mail, the right to access confidential medical records, the right to break into one's home and steal from it, and the right to access all government records. Nothing is sacred in this country.

With regard to foreign intelligence, the Government proposes new powers which are again unprecedented in any western country in the world. The Government proposes to have the power to spy on anyone who visits this country. This is all in the name of protecting the national security of Canadians.

We in the New Democratic Party make no apologies for standing up for the civil liberties of Canadians. I can only express my profound regret that we did not have more support from my colleagues in the Conservative Party in this fight against this repressive Bill. They stood by in committee as this Bill was being debated. They certainly have not put up the kind of fight which they put up against the National Energy Program or the Crow Bill. This bill is certainly one of the most important Bills to come before this Parliament. This closure motion effectively denies the right of Members to debate this Bill in an orderly and comprehensive way.

● (1540)

The Bill has been condemned by witness after witness who appeared before the committee. The Reverend Clarke MacDonald, Moderator of the United Church of Canada, indicated that church and community representatives have detailed the flaws of this Bill and suggested alternative ways of serving the legitimate security needs of Canadians. He states: "We urge you to withdraw the Bill in its present form". These are the views of church groups, academics, labour groups and civil liberties organizations. To whom is the Government and its future Prime Minister, John Turner, prepared to listen as it proceeds to ram this legislation through the House of Commons? This is a dark day for democracy in this country.

I would like to conclude my remarks with a quote from Mr. Justice Powell of the United States Supreme Court, who said:

> The price of lawful public dissent must not be a dread of subjugation to an unchecked surveillance power. Nor must the fear of unauthorized official eavesdropping deter vigorous citizen dissent in discussion of government action in private conversation. For private dissent, no less than open public discourse, is essential to our free society.

This Bill must be stopped in the interest of democracy, liberty and freedom in this country.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, unlike the two previous speakers, I make no apologies for the use of the rules of Parliament, namely time allocation, when it becomes very obvious from pamphlets and edicts put out by the NDP that they were going to do everything possible to delay this Bill. It is interesting to note that the time allocation rules provide for an opportunity of discussion with Opposition Parties, then with the Official Opposition, and if no agreement can be reached on the appropriate allocation of time for a debate, the Government is required to take its responsibility and ensure that a Bill it has initiated sees the light of day and has a vote in the House of Commons.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is really condemned out of his own mouth. The fact of the matter is that if he had a legitimate argument in this particular instance he would not have had to resort to name calling, referring to people as flunkies and using other such terminology. It is not becoming of a parliamentarian to talk in that way. I think he degrades himself when he uses that kind of language.

None of the witnesses who came before us and no honest, right-thinking person would deny the necessity for having a security service in Canada. We have been singularly fortunate that we have essentially been spared the problem of terrorist activities such as those that have taken place in so many countries around the world. However, we are not totally immune and have had our own incidents, and we need this security service. It should be in civilian hands. We need this service in order to have proper accountability so that our civil liberties might be protected.

As a former member of the rules committee, a high priority for us was to enhance the role of the Private Member. The way this can be done is through the committee system. It is in the committee that the ordinary Member of Parliament has an opportunity to participate in debate and to make necessary changes. However, after the approach adopted by the NDP at second reading and committee stage, I wonder if they have not set back rule changes and the enhancement of the role played by the individual Member of Parliament.

Mr. Waddell: That is inconsistent and you know it.

Mr. Cullen: As a result of the tactics that have been adopted by the NDP—

Mr. Waddell: You want the Private Member to be good and when he does something you give him hell.

Mr. Cullen: This is typical of an NDP member. I am expressing a point of view and the Hon. Member is endeavouring to shout me down. At least get in your own seat if you are going to shout me down, so that if you have a point of order you can raise it. Frankly, I found the approach adopted by the NDP at committee reprehensible.

I basically disagree with the position taken by the Progressive Conservative Party which indicated that it would like to see this security service returned to the RCMP despite the decision of the McDonald and Mackenzie Commissions, and the decisions made by the Senate and the Government, for that matter.

What approach did the Conservatives take? I thought that the Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) asked a series of very pertinent questions at the committee stage. He raised the issue and it was debated at committee. Although they lost the vote, they made their point. We were able to have a reasonable debate. But what did we see from the NDP? They sought amendments to delete clauses of the Bill. There were 300 amendments brought in at the committee stage. What does that do for democracy? It ruins any opportunity for any kind of debate.

I basically disagree with the judgment of the Progressive Conservative Party on this particular Bill. I do not believe the service should be returned to the RCMP. No one has more respect for that particular agency than I. I had the privilege of working with the RCMP when I was Minister of Employment and Immigration. We had to deal with security matters and had to rely in large measure on the judgments and decisions of the RCMP. I was satisfied that we received excellent briefings and that the reports which I received had been carefully thought out before I was asked to make a decision.

In order to complement that particular protection of civil liberties of Canadians or of others coming to the country, I saw fit to appoint a board. It was made up of three members, a former civil servant, a former Cabinet Minister and a former judge of the Supreme Court in Quebec. They were to study the evidence that had been presented to me to determine what weight I should give to this material. I had no other way to check other than relying on the RCMP and the judgment of these three senior Canadians whose judgment I respected.

That is what we are looking for in the security service. We are seeking a "delicate balance", as I believe it was put by the Senate committee. We must have an indication that the information that comes before us has received all the necessary screening. I believe the report from the Senate committee was one of the better reports from the Senate that I have had the privilege to read. That Senate committee and the McDonald Commission indicate that a civilian agency is the proper medium for this particular service in Canada.

Hon. Members opposite say that they did not really have an opportunity to study this matter at committee. The fact of the matter is that the Minister has indicated that he was at approximately 24 committee meetings. In each instance the Minister indicated why the Government could not accept a particular amendment. Those reasons made eminently good sense, which Hon. Members opposite knew. In some instances they could not accept those reasons and they appropriately brought forward amendments when they could not accept that reasoning. I know that in many instances they accepted the Minister's reasons. However, likely in an attempt to delay the Bill, they saw fit to move a whole series of amendments. I am specifically referring to the New Democratic Party. We discussed many of these amendments at committee stage. Again, it was a complete waste of members' time. What is the point in having committees if every amendment that is presented at the committee stage is presented again at the report stage?

I hear Opposition Members talking with approbation about the American experience. American witnesses appeared before the committee. We had a particularly good witness from the security section of the American Government. She told us that they tried to introduce a Bill which provided for everything necessary to protect all rights and prevent any interference. That Bill collapsed under its own weight. There were so many qualifying phrases in the Bill in an attempt to protect civil liberties that the Americans ultimately had no Bill at all. Therefore, that country has a presidential edict. The Attorney General of the United States indicates what is to be done.

We do have accountability in our Bill. I think the individuals who will be called upon to look into the actions of the other security service will recognize their responsibilities. They will be well respected Canadians, I am certain. They will require the approval of the Leaders of the Parties in the House of Commons, so there is significant accountability in this Bill.

I for one am happy that, after some five years, we will have another look at this Bill. Others will do that because I will not be here. They will look at whether it has worked. They will look to see if there have been any infringements of or intrusions into the civil liberties of Canadians. I do not think we have to quote other individuals to tell us whether this Bill is good or bad. I think we are hired and retained by our constituents to come here and look at legislation. What Members opposite, particularly those in the New Democratic Party, do not recognize is that Bills are gone over and over again at the caucus stage before they see the light of day. We have long, serious and sometimes it might be called great debate before a Bill sees the light of day. This lets us do all that is possible to apply the necessary delicate balance to the necessity for having a security service and yet not encroaching upon the civil liberties of Canadians, at least beyond that provided for in the Bill. As well, the committee can say to the security service: "You are accountable to us and we will be reporting to Parliament".

Bill C-9 is a good Bill. It is sad that we had to use time allocations, but frankly, there was no other way to get this Bill through given the farce presented by the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I am truly glad to lend my voice of opposition to this procedure which the Government has imposed upon Parliament, namely closure on an important Bill. I think every Member of this House should be opposing this motion for closure. As voiced by other Members, this Bill is not a normal Bill. It is not a usual bill of administration, of economics, social services, or any of the other millions of things with which this House is concerned. Bill C-9 concerns the rights, the privacy and the freedoms of Canadian citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dantzer: Earlier on in the term I have been here, this Government introduced civil liberties legislation and enshrined it in the Constitution. The Liberals were very pleased with themselves. This same Government is now ignoring all of those civil liberties which they enshrined in the Constitution. They are bringing before the House a Bill that will restrict those liberties.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dantzer: I find it very difficult to understand that kind of thing happening. Normally people on the Government side of the House are pretty rational, but several times in the past four or five years they have thrown away all good judgment and imposed this type of thing on Parliament. If I were their leader, I would be very unhappy to be, I suppose, catalogued for the rest of a short career as the leader of the Liberal Party who imposed closure on a Bill which restricted the rights, liberties and freedoms of Canadians. If that man is not Mr. Yesterday, I do not know who is.

Earlier a Member talked about the committee system and how this Government tried to improve it. This legislation was first before a committee in the other place, before many commissions, and was examined in long hearings of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It is precisely because of the way the Liberals have used that committee system that we on this side are so upset. The Government has received representations right across the country from very august groups, universities, church groups and civil liberties groups. The Government has paid absolutely no attention to those representations.

This set of circumstances reminds me very much of the committee hearings on the National Energy Program. That particular committee sat longer than the committee that considered Bill C-9 and it heard more witnesses. Every witness—and I say every witness—who appeared before the committee concerned with the National Energy Program opposed the legislation and found fault with it. But what did this Government do? It did not accept one recommendation of the committee. If you want to know the history of the National Energy Program, Mr. Speaker, which turned into an economic disaster, I would ask you to read the projections made by the witnesses in those committee hearings as well as the reports which outlined in detail the effect of that legislation. The Government paid no attention to them.

This same thing is happening with Bill C-9. The Government heard representations in the committee hearings. The Government listened to briefs. But the Government has not acted. Why do we have a committee system if the Government intends to impose legislation on Parliament? Why waste the time of so many people? If people are not listened to, it is frustrating to those both inside and outside Parliament. Also people who have taken the time and made the effort to present their expertise before a committee will think that the democratic process is poor because they realize they are not going to be listened to. That is why we on this side of the House are so opposed to this kind of procedure.

A Member opposite said the Conservative Party opposed this legislation because control of the new service was not within the RCMP. That is true, but that does not go far enough in our view. That is one of our proposals. Basically the real opposition we have to this Bill concerns the definition found in Clause 2. Clause 2 gives this super-snooper outfit the power to permit an agent or agents to enter people's homes and destroy property. In fact, innocent people can have their whole way of life upset by this legislation. This is because the definition section is too wide.

A previous speaker said that the Government has tried to create a balance. The Minister many times in committee admitted that Clause 2 was perhaps too wide and was open to abuse by a secret service force. He said: "I cannot draft the legislation. I cannot find the right balance. We find it impossible. The best draftsman have tried to do what we want but it could not be done." That is because the Minister is trying to give the secret service super-snoopers wide enough scope that they can solve every single problem or every single threat, no matter how small.

We tried to impress upon the Minister time and time again in committee that instead of giving the super-snoopers a Lincoln or a Chevrolet with which to do their work, make it difficult for them. If this agency over the next four or five years finds that it cannot do its work properly, there is provision for the law to be brought back to Parliament to be rewritten. It would be far better for the secret service to come back to Parliament and say that the Bill is not wide enough, that it does not give them enough power to do their work. We should be shown specific instances, which has not been done to this day, and I am sure Parliament would respond and say: "Fine, we will widen your mandate and give you power to solve this real threat about which you now tell us". It is far better for the security service to come back to Parliament than the average Canadian citizen who has had his rights run into the ground and who has suffered at the hands of some overzealous secret police. You know how difficult it is, Mr. Speaker, for any individual to do that. It would take years. I say this Bill puts the onus on the citizen to protect his rights. It gives all the privilege to the secret service police.

I am sure it will be echoed in this House, it will certainly be echoed in the country, that there is an obligation on the Government to ensure that the Canadian citizen is protected, that his privacy is protected. This Government has not done so in this Bill. Therefore, I am opposed to this high-handed, guillotine-like procedure of closure. I hope the Government will have time in the next day or so to reconsider and open up this matter. Surely the matter is much too important to rush into at this time.

• (1600)

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a couple of observations concerning the procedure today. I remind the House that the subject matter or the intent of this particular Bill was dealt with by two royal commissions in the past two decades. Substantially they recommended what the Bill provides. The committee has been studying it for about two months. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) spent many hours before the committee. Some 25 or 26 individuals and organizations made representations to the committee. I understand that there were more than 50 speeches at second reading. It was the subject of a very valuable Senate report. Some of the very worth-while recommendations of the Senate committee were incorporated into this Bill.

The subject matter under discussion today is closure. It is interesting to listen to Hon. Members talk about closure. They say that somehow the rights of Canadians are being denied by closure. One wonders just how the time of the House of Commons is used throughout the year. We could look at a situation where an entire year was spent in this Chamber dealing with very few Bills. Very few Bills ever see the light of day out the other end.

If I were to suggest that we bring in a parliamentary rule change providing that every motion put would come to an automatic end at the end of the day on which it was put, I would be accused of putting Parliament to rest or taking away all its rights. That would be absolutely outrageous to Hon. Members, but it is the exact change which has been implemented in most legislatures under the British parliamentary system. The motion is put and it comes to an end in one sitting day. That would be absolutely outrageous to us as parliamentarians in Canada. That is the system which is the effect in our Mother of Parliaments. The reason for it is that legislatures under the British parliamentary system, except the Canadian Parliament, eventually decided that they would go along with changes in parliamentary procedure not made by Members of Parliament. In effect, in Britain today there is an outside committee which is not connected with Members of Parliament. It brings in recommendations for rule changes in that Parliament.

Unless similar action is taken in terms of our Canadian Parliament, I am afraid that we will not keep up with the times in trying to deal with the many issues facing the country. I am referring to the many issues with which Parliament never deals because there is no chance and the mechanisms are not in place.

I could outline what has happened to committee structures in legislatures throughout the British parliamentary system. I could outline what happens during Question Period and every other part of a day's sitting. I could outline what happens when motions are brought before those chambers. We would see that their procedures differ vastly from what is in effect in the Canadian Parliament. When we question the people who brought in these changes in other legislatures, they indicate that we are back in the dark ages and they wonder how we can function. Somehow there is always an attitude in our Parliament that unless we keep things the same, we lose a part of our democracy in this Chamber.

The only point I wanted to make today was that our parliamentary system is quite different from that of other Parliaments under the British parliamentary system. To say that closure is an outrageous act by government to shut off debate, to another Parliament would in itself be an outrageous statement.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard a few comments by the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker). Clearly he is a man who is so oblivious to what has happened in our Parliament that he does not even know that we have undergone very substantial changes to our rules with respect to the way in which we conduct our business. Somehow or other he talked about a Parliament which existed years ago. He does not know that the Government is now seized with the current Standing Orders, which were introduced in the House as a result of the work of a committee on which I had the privilege of serving, that put limits on the length of speeches and now make it virtually impossible for anything in the nature of a filibuster to occur in the House. Apparently the Hon. Member is oblivious to what has gone on in this House. If he were telling the complete truth and were fully informed, he would have to admit that under the new rules the Government has the hammer as far as legislation is concerned.

He talked about the United Kingdom and the Mother of Parliaments. He is the only Liberal I have heard speak approvingly about the Mother of Parliaments. Under his Government everything possible has been done to separate us from our relationship with the United Kingdom and the Mother of Parliaments.

At least I give him credit for looking there for some precedent. However, he forgot to mention the fact that the United Kingdom is a country which does not have a separate provincial jurisdiction. It deals with legislation which is covered by our provincial legislatures as well as by our federal jurisdiction in Canada. Its workload is quite different, its scope is quite different and its rules are quite different. It is modelled upon their own experience. We in Canada have a system which is adapting and in fact reflects regional disparities. At least some of us in the House think that individual Members of Parliament should have a role to play with respect to the important issues facing Canada.

I should like to talk about the kind of approach we should take to this legislation. I should like to quote, because the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) is wont to do so, the McDonald Commission. Section 28 on page 15 of its second report, Volume I, dated August, 1981 is headed: "The need for trust". It reads:

> The most important word in the Commission governing this Inquiry is "trust". No police force protecting the peace can be effective unless it has the trust of the people it seeks to protect; no security intelligence agency can be effective without the trust of citizens. Moreover, neither can be effective without the trust of government.

That is what we are talking about. We are talking about trust. We are talking about a Government Party which has just gone through a convention in which the word "reform" was used liberally, if I may put it that way. Its members indicated that there would be parliamentary reform and that their new Leader would ensure Parliament was relevant. What was the first thing they did after the election of a new Leader? They brought in John Turner's chief operative on the floor—I saw him on television in black and white—and he came into Parliament and gave notice of closure. If that is their idea of parliamentary reform, God protect the people of Canada.

Let me put the facts before you, Mr. Speaker. They are simply this. We were involved, by virtue of a ruling by Your Honour, in a procedural debate on the admissibility of motions to amend at report stage until the day before yesterday. Finally these matters were resolved. Only yesterday we made our final procedural argument. I venture to say that at report stage, forced as we are with a great number of suggested amendments, we have had something in the vicinity of five or six hours' debate on this Bill.

This Bill does not involve some kind of contract for snow clearing in Sarnia. It is not a minor Bill. This Bill will have a very serious impact on the civil liberties of Canadians. It will create an agency with enormous powers. To use the words of the McDonald Commission, this agency will not be able to function properly unless it has the trust of the people of Canada. It will not operate unless the citizens of Canada have trust in the Government of this country.

When talking about curtailing civil liberties, is it consistent with the concept that we have of a government moving the weight of its majority in this House in a dying Parliament, in the dying days when this Government has no mandate, when its new Leader is talking about an immediate election, that one of its final acts is to curtail debate without any consideration of reasonable amendments? It says it is not going to listen to the representations, that it will not listen to those who came before the committee, will not listen to the advice of the provincial Attorneys General and will not listen to the advice of representatives of church groups, public interest groups and civil liberties groups.

Worst of all, what the Government is saying by this motion is that it cares not a whit what Members of Parliament say with regard to this legislation. The Government does not want to hear any more, does not want further discussion, even though it knows that its mandate has expired. It is exhausted. It is going to push this Bill through whether the people of Canada like it or not. That is what is at issue.

I am not so completely partisan that I am not impressed by my colleagues. I realize that no Party has a corner on people of goodwill and good spirit, that there are people of that type in every party in Canada. I listened with care to what was going on with the new Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, Mr. John turner. He has had experience in this House. He left the Government of Canada for his own reasons and now has come back. I heard him talk about the new approach, the new spirit of civility that he wants to bring to the Parliament of Canada. The first act that takes place after he has been elected is the heavy cloud of closure which is now being presented to the House of Commons. This is a very foreboding development.

If we cannot discuss issues, if we cannot have a perspective in terms of the issues before us in this debate, if we cannot, as the McDonald Commission said, instil a feeling of trust with respect to the fact that there are to be some reasonable rules governing the control of this agency, if we are to enter this experience in terms of our own security, having an intelligence service which will not be under the discipline of the RCMP, if we do not have a fine and honourable tradition to guide it in its operations, its deliberations and its accountability, our country will be in a sorry state indeed.

I say with all the emotion I am capable of that I resent the cynicism with which this motion has been brought forward. I resent the attempt at this time in the life of our Parliament to throttle free discussion of a Bill which involves the rights and freedoms of Canadian citizens. It brings into being a service, Mr. Speaker, that will have access not only to your tax returns and mine, but to those of all Canadians across this country. It will have the ability to go into medical records, to put intrusive devices in our homes in order to gain information which can be a valuable tool in the hands of an unscrupulous government. When closure is being brought forward on this legislation, those who watch these proceedings or read them will be left wondering. They must ask themselves, why do they stay? They must echo the words of Oliver Cromwell: "In the name of God, go!" I say to the Government of Canada that that sentiment is appropriate with this dying Government.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-9

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Kaplan:

That in relation to Bill C-9, An Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact An Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof in relation thereto, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stages and the third reading of the said Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I guess I see myself as still being relatively new in this House in the sense that I was first elected in 1979. I have just served five years as a Member of Parliament. After having lived through the constitutional process, having lived through times in which time allocation and closure was imposed on this House, I can understand why early framers who looked at the American Constitution with its congressional form have said that it is the perfect form of government. The individual elected there is held accountable on a non-partisan basis to his or her constituents. I am convinced that unless we can radically reform this place to the point where there are genuine free votes which will impose an individual responsibility on each of us, on every piece of legislation, to look at that legislation, to vote as our constituents and our conscience dictate, we will continue to have the parliamentary form of government where a cabinet, in conjunction with a very well educated and powerful bureaucracy, will make decisions that it can force through this House because if back-benchers, however well intentioned they may be, vote against the government, they will bring on a general election.

I am convinced that as a result of all the complexity of government, the volume of government as well as the legislation that is necessary, the system has broken down. Either we have radical changes within our responsible parliamentary forum or we move to a congressional forum where the executive would be isolated off to the side and charged with administering the laws. Then the House with its Party system, where there would be cross-representation depending on the issue, would be much more responsible to the people.

I have just read some poll data on this Bill. Over 80 per cent of the Canadian people have indicated they would like to have the security service remain with the RCMP. Yet the Cabinet and the bureaucracy, for very good reasons that they generated in their own minds which are logical and rational to themselves, are going to foist their view on the people. That is not satisfactory and we must return to a better system.

Twenty-five witnesses appeared before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and gave well-meaning and valuable evidence. In a sense, these witnesses were the experts. When members of the Canadian Bar Association speak, we should listen to them. When members of the Canadian Jewish Council speak on a Bill that deals with individual liberties and freedoms, surely the people who hear their words should give them enormous weight. There is no doubt that if you were a judge, Mr. Speaker, who heard the evidence that came before the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee, you would not have hesitated at all in accepting the recommendations for amendments. Yet this just has not happened. Therefore, our system has fallen down.

If an individual who worked for this new civilian intelligence service had reasonable grounds to suspect that you, Mr. Speaker, were a threat to the security of Canada, then your mail could be opened, your medical records could be seized, your legal records could be seized, your tax files could be searched, your home, office or car could be bugged and searched overtly or covertly, your telephones could be tapped and your doctor's or psychiatrist's offices could be searched. All that remains confidential is your five-year or ten-year census records. Everything else can be stripped and investigated. For one year you could have intrusive devices placed on your person and your telephones could be tapped, and after that year it could go on for a further year and yet another year. That flies in the face of those fundamental freedoms that our ancestors came to this country to achieve.

Our ancestors did not cross the ocean on boats, stand at the corner of a quarter section of land containing only rough prairie and trees, give their lives cutting trees, breaking land and living in sod huts simply to pass the time of day. They did all of that because they came from jurisdictions in which they felt oppressed. Often times they felt oppressed because of the economic situation of a country or because of the laws of a country. In most cases they felt oppressed by their country's government of the day.

I would say to the Government of this country that with this legislation we are creating a real possibility and perhaps even a probability that at some future time this new civilian security agency will become oppressive to our own people. Clause 2(d) defines threats to the security of Canada and deals with subversion. Subversion means actions taken by our own citizens.

None of us has any trouble at all with paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of Clause 2 which deal with the actions of KGB agents and people who come to Canada to hijack airplanes and blow things up on behalf of other countries. Clause 2(d) deals with our own Canadian citizens and therefore should be drafted in an extremely narrow fashion. If such a narrow definition does not work in the future, then the agency could return to a future Parliament which would gladly decide, based upon actual cases, to expand that definition so that the proper delicate balance is achieved.

The present wording of Clause 2(d) gives such a wide mandate to the Bill that many of our people will have to suffer dramatically before the definition will be narrowed. That means that those people who are affected will then be required to hire a solicitor, if they happen to find out that they are being investigated. These people may not be able to get jobs and will never find out why they could not get jobs. They may lose their jobs and never know the real reason why. They may not be able to get passports or be bonded and never know the reason. All this because this clause has been cast too widely. That is why I say we must begin with a narrow definition and let future generations widen it based upon experience.

I wish Government Members would take another look at Clause 2(d) because it is never too late to do so. Without expanding the size of the Minister's head, I would say that I believe the Minister wants to be reasonable and, in many respects, is a reasonable man. As I listened to the Minister's speech, when he got right down to it he pointed out that the reason for the imposition of time allocation is that we are nearing the end of a session. When dealing with a statute that will have influence on future generations, saying that we are nearing the end of a session is simply not a good enough reason for imposing time allocation. A future Parliament could deal with this legislation.

If we had the time, we could improve this legislation. I found that when given the opportunity at committee, Government Members were prepared to sit down and discuss this legislation. Indeed, they themselves proposed some amendments. If we could just discuss the legislation with them further and hear more witnesses, we could get it right.

I would like to be critical of members of the NDP as well because at the beginning of the process they were so radical that they polarized the Government to the point that reasonableness and common sense could not prevail. That is not what I was elected to accomplish. My people sent me here to do a job, to look at legislation and to rise and speak on their behalf. I show you a questionnaire, Mr. Speaker, which asks: "Are you satisfied with the RCMP performance on matters of national security intelligence?" Of the respondents to that questionnaire, 71 per cent said yes and only 8 per cent said no. Surely we should listen to what the answer to that questionnaire is telling us.

I know that my friend, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), has an absolutely incredible and revolutionary idea. He believes that elected representatives should do what the people want. That is not the way the Liberal Government has operated. However, that is his view and that is my view as well. It is a view to which I wish we would all adhere.

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak to the motion on time allocation for the debate on Bill C-9.

This afternoon we have heard a lot from the Opposition, and the gist of it seems to be that these Hon. Members who represent the Canadian people have not had a chance to consider all the whys and wherefores of this Bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have been Parliamentary Secretary since March and have attended all the meetings of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which dealt with this Bill. I must say there were times when we were almost ashamed to admit we were Members of Parliament and were sitting opposite certain Members of the New Democratic Party who were using every trick in the book—and I am referring to the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—and I am sure they would have found a few new ones if they had had more time, to set up a regular filibuster. In fact, that is more or less what the Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) said, and I would refer you to Hansard of June 12, 1984, at page 4568, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, I rise with some sadness at report stage of this Bill because we are again faced with a situation in which NDP members are helping the Government achieve one of its goals while loudly protesting what the Government is doing. NDP members are actually helping the Government because they are going to force the Government to put time allocation on report stage and third reading stage—

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that in Canada, security is an issue that has been discussed for many years.

Commissioners Mackenzie, Pratt and Coldwell reported to the Government in October 1968, and the Commission's report was published in June of the following year. In the course of their inquiry, they heard about 250 witnesses, including Ministers and former Ministers of the Crown, public servants and retired public servants, private citizens and representatives of public sector organizations. They examined numerous files and documents, received briefs and papers and consulted public information sources. Their report was well received by a very large audience.

The work of the McDonald Commission, created in July 1977, consisted in the most thorough examination of security intelligence issues and procedures ever carried out in Canada's history, or in the history of any nation, for that matter.

Commissioners McDonald, Rickerd and Gilbert were assisted by an exceptionally competent staff of seven full-time investigators, thirty lawyers and sixty research officers. In the course of an inquiry that lasted four years, the Commission held 169 public hearings and 144 hearings behind closed doors. The combined transcripts of these hearings filled 174 volumes. As many as 149 witnesses were heard. More than 805 exhibits were received. The Commission investigated 292 allegations and examined 124 papers on national security policies, procedures and legislation.

In addition to hearings held in Ottawa, the Commissioners travelled throughout the country to receive briefs from the Canadian public, and I am surprised there are still Hon. Members who say today that Canadians have never had a chance to give their views on the subject. Especially since, in addition to the trips made by the McDonald Commission and our committee meetings, the Chairman published notices in forty newspapers across Canada, so that individual Canadians or groups would have an opportunity to testify before our Committee or submit written representations. In fact a number of groups and a number of individuals were able to testify. I shall get back to this later on.

The Commissioners of the McDonald Commission also met with Ministers, Members of Parliament and senior federal and provincial officials. Their research covered more than 500 books, articles and reports on the subject. They produced three reports, the second about 1,200 pages long and containing 285 recommendations. Therefore, I am indeed surprised to hear Hon. Members saying that the issue of security in Canada has not been examined. Strange as it may seem, the Opposition Parties often quote the McDonald Report, but only when it suits them.

While the McDonald Report speaks for itself, and I think that the Government, and we shall see later on . . . I read somewhere the following opinion given by Professor Peter Russell with respect to Bill C-9: "It is a pretty good Bill. I cannot think in living memory of legislation coming as close to a Royal Commission's whole set of recommendations as C-9 now does". Professor Russell concluded with: "Let's get on with the job" . . . and a subtle recommendation for approval or enactment of Bill C-9.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, last year Bill C-157 was tabled, and at the time it gave rise to some serious questions by groups and individuals. Bill C-157 was referred to a Special Committee of the Senate, and I might refer the House to a statement by Mr. W. A. Wilson . . . If the Hon. Member for Burnaby insists, I am quite willing to table the document! In an article published on June 2, 1984, and I cannot quite read the name of the newspaper, Mr. Wilson said that the report of the Senate Committee chaired by Senator Michael Pitfield was one of the best reports ever produced here in the Senate and that the Senate had every reason to be proud of producing such a document.

The Senate Committee heard more than thirty individuals and groups, and received more than fifty representations or letters. Last January, realizing that Bill C-157 was raising serious questions, the Government, through the Solicitor General, tabled an amended version of Bill C-157, now known as Bill C-9. The new Bill C-9 contained forty amendments made by the Government. Subsequently, at the committee stage, the Government added seven more amendments. When we proceeded with clause-by-clause consideration, the Government accepted several amendments which, although minor, helped to improve considerably the original version of the Bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear that today, we have a motion for time allocation because Opposition Members, and the New Democratic Party led the way in this respect, have given us no other alternative but to ask the House to limit debate. At the second reading stage, we had six days of debate and fifty-seven speeches. The Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs met for two months. In those months we had forty-three meetings and eighty-five hours of debate. We heard twenty-five individuals and groups, we received fifty written representations, and the Solicitor General attended the proceedings of the Committee for fifty-nine hours at twenty-four different meetings. If, after all that, no consensus could be reached in Committee or in the House, I think that even if we continued debate for many hours and many days, we would never get anything more substantial from the New Democratic Party, the NDP, also known as the Non-Decision Party, a party that has a habit of talking instead of making decisions. We had a taste of that in committee! The Hon. Member for Burnaby talked for hours on end to try and hold up committee proceedings.

In the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, we have no choice—these will be my last words—but to move the motion for time allocation, and that is why I support the motion.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary has attacked the NDP as leading the opposition to this Bill. On behalf of the NDP, I proudly stand here to add to that opposition. It is a proud tradition. In this House, NDP Members have stood against the tidal wave of public opinion to oppose the taking away of the property of Japanese Canadians. We stood against the War Measures Act and we stand against this Bill. I believe that history will prove us right as it has proven us right in the past.

The Parliamentary Secretary is missing the point. The point is not that security in Canada has not been debated. Of course it has been debated. It has been debated for a long time. Canadians may get tired of the debate, but it is a tough debate and it is a tough decision. Yes, we had the McDonald Commission, but that is not the point. We are dealing with this Bill and we should focus on it. This Bill is a flawed Bill. It must be corrected because this subject is too important. This is one of the most important subjects which the House has tackled in this Parliament since 1980.

I can recall the debate on the Alaska pipeline. Closure was moved on that Bill. I can recall the debate on the Constitution and the debate on the National Energy Program. This Bill ranks with those kinds of fundamental debates and fundamental decisions which will affect the future of Canada. Frankly, I find it unbelievable that this Government should now bring in that Bill, which is a seriously flawed product of a lame duck regime.

● (1640)

I have heard Hon. Members bringing John Turner into the debate this afternoon and in a way, criticizing him, for this Bill. I would exclude that criticism. We are dealing with the Trudeau Government, and we are dealing with a lame duck government, which has no right to bring in this seriously flawed legislation at the end of a session, because this legislation is going to have such an incredible effect on the country. I say it is a Trudeau Bill because it bears all the earmarks of the Trudeau-Pitfield elitist form of bureaucracy. It creates a small security service which will not be accountable to Parliament or to anyone. I predict it will get out of control. The problem with Revenue Canada will be nothing compared to what is going to happen here. The political masters will not be able to control this service. This represents the kind of elitist centralized small bureaucratic thinking which was the great flaw of the Trudeau-Pitfield years. We are seeing that in spades in this Bill.

It is unbelievable that Liberal Members should support this kind of flawed legislation at the dying end of a session. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that they should call an election on this legislation and that we leave the Bill right where it is. Let them leave the Bill now and go out to seek a mandate. If they get one, let them come back and then we can start off from where we are right now. We will get agreement from the other Party. I suggest that to the Solicitor General and I challenge the Liberals to do that. But they will not do it. They would prefer to hurry this Bill through Parliament.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), who is to be congratulated for his great work on this Bill, and the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), who spoke today, gave two of the best speeches I have heard since I came to the House of Commons. They were hard hitting speeches which took to task the national press for its coverage of this Bill. That is a hard thing to do for a Member of Parliament, but it was the right thing to do, because the Canadian people are asleep right now and the press is asleep in letting this kind of Bill go through. There is an exception, Mr. Speaker, and that is The Vancouver Sun who published an editorial. The Toronto Star, for example, said the Government should push the Bill through, "You heard 25 witnesses or so. Push the Bill through". But it forgot to say that most of those witnesses were against the Bill and that the Bill was seriously flawed. I will quote from the editorial in The Vancouver sun. It reads:

But the opposition parties must fight tooth and nail to prevent the government from ramming through its security and intelligence legislation—

Well, we are fighting tooth and nail. The editorial continues:

It is not just civil liberties groups that have condemned the legislation. Doctors and lawyers, labour and religious organizations, provincial attorneys-general and, yes, even some Liberal MPs have serious misgivings about it.

The language of the bill is simply too broad and loose to assure Canadians that their fundamental rights and liberties would not be infringed by the new civilian security agency.

It is not just outside sources like The Vancouver Sun which say that. Roy McMurtry, the Attorney General of Ontario, is quoted as saying:

It is critical in developing laws to protect our freedoms that we do not by these very laws destroy the very freedoms that they are meant to secure.

This law will destroy those freedoms. I suggest that Hon. Members opposite should seriously consider whether they should vote for this Bill. They should not be muttons or sheep, as they have been called. I suggest that those Hon. Members look at Issue No. 16 of the committee report. The Hon. Member for Burnaby asked Mr. Stewart, who lead a group from Vancouver, this:

What effect do you think that would have on the nature of dissent and certainly on the activities of the groups you represent?

He was referring to closure on the Bill and bringing this Bill through right away. Mr. Stewart answered:

I think it would have a couple. It would make some people quite cautious about what they did. You see, when you leave a tinge of suspicion in people's minds . . . We all know the police never investigate anyone without cause; that is drilled into us at school and is certainly confirmed in every day experience for a lot of people. If that general public view is maintained and we see that the Bill as it is presently written makes its way through the House, I think it will have a real sensory effect on a lot of activity.

In other words, it will stop dissent, legal dissent, in this country. Mr. Stewart continued:

That is one thing that will happen. It is going to make a lot of people very angry. It is going to make things much worse than they presently are, I believe. If people believe normal activities of dissidents, of protest in this country, are being closed down, I believe some people will be more likely to use alternative methods.

And we will see more of the Squamish Five, and that nonsense rather than less, if we pass this kind of a police state type of Bill. Mr. Stewart continued, and I will quote it in French for the Parliamentary Secretary:

Le résultat, comme le donne à entendre notre mémoire, c'est la fin du régime démocratique au pays. Cela aurait pour effet que la police chargée d'assurer notre sécurité deviendrait, à la fin du compte, des gardiens de prison.

I will repeat it in English. He said:

What that does in the end as our brief suggests, is close down democracy in this country. That would be the net effect; that these police who are here to look after our security would, in the end, become our jailers.

I think Mr. Stewart put it very well. The Hon. Member for Burnaby said in his speech that this Bill is unprecedented, that it gives new powers to the police to open first class mail. Do Liberal Members of Parliament want that? Do their constituents want that? It gives access to medical records. Is that what those Hon. Members want? Do Canadians want that? Do they want to give access to their medical records? It gives access to income tax returns. Do Hon. Members in this House and the people watching want to see this happen? It allows people to target Canadians who have broken no law at all. The definition clause, Mr. Speaker, will make it easy to go after legitimate groups who voice their dissent.

I believe the Government, in sneaking this legislation through, thinks that the people do not care. I was at a pot luck supper in Vancouver last weekend. A woman stood up and said that we need to support Svend Robinson on this Bill, and some people wrote on the tablecloth about stopping the Bill. I went to the Maritimes and people asked me questions there about this Bill. They asked, "Are they taking away our liberties?"

I would like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying this: This is a flawed Bill, for all the reasons which other Hon. Members have given. The Government is pushing this Bill through and accepting no amendments. Let the Government accept some amendments to the Bill. Many of us in this House, Mr. Speaker, have spent our lives fighting for civil liberties, for law in this country, and now we see a Bill that in fact attacks what is the nature of Canada itself. There is an ink blot, Mr. Speaker, on the Charter of Rights. It is a small blot, an act of some crazy person. But this Bill, if it passes, will do something worse. I feel that in the end it will kill the spirit and the letter of that Charter of Rights. The Liberal Members, the people of this country and the press, would be wise to take another look at this Bill before hurrying it through.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my remarks on Bill C-9, which establishes the Canadian Security Intelligence Services, by referring to two matters which I believe are vital to this debate. First and foremost, Mr. Speaker, is the survival of the Canadian parliamentary democracy and the vital effect it has on our society, both in political terms and in real terms for the Canadian people. Second, I want to speak about the status of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as Canada's national police force, and how it is affected by Bill C-9 and this process to which Bill C-9 has been subjected.

Let me say first, with respect to parliamentary democracy, that the purpose of having elected representatives and the whole idea being a parliamentary democracy is to invoke an evolutionary process in order to establish the laws by which Canadians are governed. That evolutionary process is designed to prevent and preclude the development of a revolutionary process. It is interesting to note that the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), referred to what may be a revolt on the part of the Canadian people with respect to a legislative measure such as that contained in Bill C-9. We are denying the parliamentary democracy which was established for Canadians over 100 years ago by taking the steps in this House of Commons which are being taken by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and his colleagues in the Government and in the Liberal Party. We are denying the opportunity for that evolutionary process to go through whereby we establish to everyone's satisfaction that a legislative measure brought to Parliament has the support of the Canadian people. That is the end test.

I agreed with the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, for once in our political lives, when he said, "If the Government is so sure of its position on this matter, let it be tested by the people". Let us go before the people and ask them whether they want Bill C-9 passed. Let them decide whether they want Bill C-9 passed. Let them decide whether they want a Canadian Security Intelligence Service in the form which is proposed in this Bill. But that is not what the Government wants, Mr. Speaker. That is not why it is rushing this Bill through the House of Commons, to get it stamped with the approval of Parliament so it can be a fait accompli before the Canadian people even get to realize and recognize what is part and parcel of the provisions of Bill C-9. The Government wants to put this dramatic and drastic change in our national police force behind it before government Members have to face the Canadian people. Unfortunately, they know that the public's memory is short. If the Bill can be enacted and the Canadian Security Intelligence Service created and put into operation, it may be forgotten. There will be complaints across Canada from a great many people but there will be no widespread movement against the action taken by the Government. The public will not blame the Government of Canada.

The Liberal Party has just gone through a dramatic national convention at which all the candidates, particularly the successful candidate, spoke of the need to reform the institutions of Parliament and Government. What a mockery! They talk about reform and then come into the House of Commons and clamp closure on such an important legislative measure. I cannot believe this was done without the consent and concurrence of the future Prime Minister, Mr. Turner. I cannot believe that the Solicitor General would introduce a drastic measure without consulting with the future Prime Minister. Let us make it very clear. We are casting the blame on the future Prime Minister, Mr. Turner, for this Bill. He will be the J. R. Ewing of Canadian politics. He will be the backroom schemer who directed that these actions take place and then, when the deed is done, he will come into the House and deny any knowledge or participation in that deed. But he is not going to fool anyone because it is now on record. We know that the actions of the Solicitor General must have the consent and concurrence of the future Prime Minister or we will not see the Solicitor General sitting where he now sits. We are not going to let Mr. Turner forget this measure. We are not going to let him pretend it was done by someone else at some other time. It demonstrates very effectively and for the record what Mr. Turner's attitude is toward parliamentary reform and reform of the Canadian institutions he regards as vital.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that history will regard the past 16 years as the Trudeau era. Among other things it will be marked in the eyes of the public by the downfall of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Do not kid yourself, the RCMP is not the national force it was 20 years ago. It does not have the high regard of the Canadian people. One of the difficulties is the government Party's representation across Canada. The RCMP are the police force in some provinces of Canada, but not in others. It is not difficult to determine where the RCMP operate as the provincial force and where Liberal members have constituencies. In the Province of British Columbia, where the RCMP operate as the provincial force, there are no Liberal members. The same thing is true in Alberta. In Saskatchewan it is the same thing, there are no Liberal members. There are two Liberal members in Manitoba where the RCMP are the provincial police force. Then we come to Ontario and Quebec where there is a very substantial membership in the Liberal Party but the RCMP are not the police force. Then of course in each of the maritime Provinces RCMP operate as the provincial force. The fact is that the majority of Liberal Members in this House is not familiar with the RCMP. It is not the provincial force in their province—

Mr. Evans: What absolute nonsense.

Mr. Crosby: —so they do not mind denigrating and degrading that institution. That is what they are doing in this Bill.

Mr. Evans: Do you like the sound of your own voice?

Mr. Crosby: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) speaks out again when he knows nothing about the subject. I challenge him to compare his knowledge of the RCMP with mine.

Mr. Evans: You sat there in committee every day, didn't you?

Mr. Crosby: We have talked about the RCMP and the opinion that Canadians now have of that force. What about Clifford Olsen and the money paid to find his victims? Then there is David Shearing. They could not find the murderer of three generations of one family even though he lived 300 yards from the scene of the crime. Noel Winters pleaded guilty to two murders while another two victims lay within yards of his house but were not found until after the case was completed and he was in jail and had confessed to the murder.

Mr. Evans: Who are you blaming that on?

Mr. Crosby: That is the kind of police activity that scares Canadians. We have to take another look at the RCMP. We have to provide them with more facilities and better support so they can do the job they are required to do under provincial laws. But what does the Government do? It erodes the status of the RCMP by taking away one of their vital functions. What does the Government want to provide in place of the RCMP, a national institutions which has been in operation since this country began? It wants to develop a spy network. As the newspaper says, the Government is going out and hiring spies.

The Solicitor General said that the RCMP must operate on a cost recovery basis in all the provinces. That is a direct encouragement to the provinces to form their own police forces and destroy the RCMP. I can tell the Solicitor General that his Security Intelligence Service is not going to work. He will recruit the worst kind of operative and the people of Canada will have to pay for his errors.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in this closure debate. I am not blaming it on the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau); I am blaming it on the future Prime Minister. If he is going to be the leader, he should be the leader. I have no doubt in my mind that this closure is his doing. Otherwise the Solicitor General would not have brought it in. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) blamed it all on the Trudeau-Pitfield group. They talked about reform at the national convention, but it is the same old group. They introduced closure again so that the people will not know the facts. When will the Government ever learn? It introduced closure on the National Energy Program and destroyed an industry in western Canada. It introduced closure on the Crow Bill and destroyed the farming industry. It ruined the cattle and hog and the processing industries. Then the Members opposite stand up as if they had done something wonderful. They have a celebration over the killing of the Crow. They did not kill the Crow, they just transferred it from western Canada into the boardroom of the CPR, and probably Mr. Turner had something to do with that. The CPR is getting all the benefits, the shortfall and the increased freight rates. It is getting everything, and who is paying? The farmers of western Canada. Members opposite can smile if they like, but the farmers of western Canada are not going to elect a director of the CPR as the Prime Minister of Canada, I will tell you that.

I want to say a few things also about reform. When the Members opposite talk about reform they mean deform. That is what they are doing in this House. They are not reforming anything, they are deforming, defacing and destroying democracy. They are totalitarian in aspect and outlook. Democracy reflects the thinking of the people. The Members do what the people want. Is this Government doing what the people want? No! It ignored our amendments to the Crow Bill. It ignored the amendment to the NEP. One destroyed an industry and one is destroying an industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I regret to have to interrupt the Hon. Member but—

Mr. Evans: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) is rising on a point of order.

REPRESENTATION ACT, 1984

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings) moved that Bill C-242, an Act to stabilize the representation in the House of Commons, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks by referring briefly to the Bill itself. I would like to read into the record the two short amendments which are the subject of this Bill. There are only a couple of clauses in the Bill. Clause 2(1) reads:

This amendment would dispense with the necessity of a readjustment of federal electoral districts based upon the 1981 census. The most recent readjustment, based on the census of 1971, did not finally come into effect until the election of 1979. The adoption of a revised representation formula in the year 1974, after an initial readjustment had taken place, required the whole process to be repeated a second time. The amendment would spare the public from further confusion and expense on this account during the 1980s.

Clause 2(2) reads:

This amendment would maintain the size of the House of Commons at approximately its present strength. The relative representation of the various provinces is determined by a formula found in Rules 1 through 6 of section 51 in which one province, Quebec, serves as the reference point. Quebec's representation now stands at 75, but is to increase by four with each successive readjustment of electoral districts, producing a corresponding increase for other provinces through application of the formula, which takes into account relative populations among other factors.

By virtue of this arbitrary increment, it is estimated that the number of members will rise from 282 to over 300 at the next redistribution. However, if, as proposed by the Bill, the figure for Quebec were held constant at 75, the figures for the other provinces would also remain steady under the formula, unless their population grew at a rate significantly higher than Quebec's.

The amendment would leave intact the formula itself, which was arrived at after extended negotiations among members of all parties in Parliament. At the same time, it would avert the expansion of the House of Commons to unwieldy proportions by the year 2001.

In preparing to discuss this Bill this afternoon I took the time to go back and look at my speech on a similar Bill, Bill C-276, which I introduced in this House in Private Members' Hour on July 23, 1982. I distilled the 20-minute speech I made at that time to a very few points. The point was made in debate that large ridings with twice the population of the average riding received only half the representation. I agrued then, as I would argue now, that large ridings, usually urban ridings obviously, because of the concentration of population and the growth in population following a census, received equally good representation from their Members as those ridings in Prince Edward Island, for example, where the total population of a constituency is perhaps 25,000 or 35,000 people.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) and his neighbour on the other side of the House, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) sometimes complain that they have difficulty in attending to all the mail and phone calls they get. I have a great deal of sympathy for that position. I suggest, however, that increasing the number of Members of Parliament in the House of Commons is not the answer. There are a great many ways that the workload can be made easier for them. I will deal with some of them in a little while.

We only have to go south of the border to see that our counterparts there in the House of Representatives have an average of 400,000 people in each of their constituencies, while we have, on average, less than 100,000. I suggest to you that our constituents are not four times better served in Canada. I would make no comparison between the two. I am confident that our colleagues south of the border do their very best to serve their constituents as we do. The number of people in a constituency is not any reason at all to enlarge the House of Commons.

I also took some time to look at the speech given by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), on January 13, 1981 when he introduced a Bill not dissimilar to mine in intent, although there was some lack of similarity in the wording. Bill C-223 was finally referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections but unfortunately, despite the excellent arguments made by my colleague from Red Deer at that time, the Bill died there. I do not intend to go into detail on the arguments that were made by my colleague at that time. Not unreasonably, they dealt primarily with the way the Bill would affect western Canada. However good his arguments were, the committee, with a majority from the Government Party, allowed the Bill to die and no action was taken.

I could make the partisan argument which my friends on the government side of the House may well want to consider, that is, that leaving the membership of the House as it is how would be better for them than it would be for Members on this side of the House. If you were to follow the redistribution process and add, as is required now, four more seats to the Province of Quebec, you would indeed add over 30 seats to other provinces, primarily Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia. Given the preponderence of the members of this political Party in those provinces, it would seem to me that any cautious Liberal Government would not want the membership of the House to increase since it would obviously stand to lose in an election. We could use that argument, but I do not think it is a particularly valid argument. I happen to think that in the next general election there may well be a major shift in the representation of our Party from Quebec and certainly a large increase in Ontario. If the Government Party wants to look at it that way, it may well want to support this Bill.

I intend to deal with what I perceive to be the need or, more correctly, the lack of need for the enlargement of the House of Commons. In legislation the House of Commons primarily reacts to the need of the population of Canada. In those instances where the Government has very rashly gone against the wishes of the electorate in general—instituting the metric system and doing away with capital punishment are two examples of this—there have been repeated requests by the population in all provinces to undo those measures. Those are two examples of which I can think where there was a general outcry from the public to take action. Where does anyone hear a general outcry by the public now to increase the number of Members of the House of Commons, to increase the spending that goes with it, to increase the bureaucracy and the office space and to increase the services and amenities? Where is the general outcry for that? I suggest that it is really not there.

• (1710)

Having said that, I want to interject one note. I have been a member of the Management and Members' Services Committee for some years. I know that you have sat on that committee from time to time, Mr. Speaker. However, I have sat there longer than any other Member, barring one, since its inception. I want to say that with a new administration in the House of Commons brought in by the previous Speaker, the increases in the House of Commons itself, as opposed to the increases in general government spending, have been very much in line. As a matter of fact, those increases have been kept to 5 per cent or less over the past few years at a time when other Departments have gone to 15 per cent and as high as 20 per cent increases. Even so, at the time when my colleague, the Hon. Member for Red Deer, was debating his Bill, the cost of the House of Commons stood at approximately $100 million. In 1984, the cost of the House of Commons has risen to $146 million. Surely there is no desire on anyone's part to increase that cost.

As you will be aware, we have introduced for the benefit of Members of Parliament a system that goes by the name of OASIS. That stands for Office Automation System and Information Services. That system, which in part could be brought on stream later this month, will be the finest electronic system in any legislature in the world when it is completed. I say that with a great deal of pride, having been part of the body that has worked on that system over the past few years.

Indeed, we have been consulted by members of other legislative bodies. Most recently there was a small group from the United Kingdom here to look at what we were doing. That system will allow present Members of Parliament to serve their constituency far better and easier than they have in the past, yet it will continue to provide Members with the background information that is necessary for them to serve in the House of Commons, perhaps to a greater degree than they presently are.

It seems to me that there is within the system the promise of the ability for all Members of Parliament to serve double and indeed triple the number of people whom they already serve. If this is the case, where is the justification for enlarging the House of Commons? There is no justification. There is no justification for the disruption caused by the changes in boundaries. We have all gone through them. While I do not say this to denigrate urban areas, we know that particularly in rural areas Members can drive down a country road and know every resident along that road. When the Government arbitrarily redistributes the boundary lines and sets out new areas so that people can participate in the next election, citizens become terribly upset. They have been used to dealing with a constituency. They are used to dealing with the people in the area. To have that changed is an unnecessary disruption.

Let me use my own constituency now and my former constituency prior to the redistribution as an example. Over the years, the people in Hastings County have obviously dealt with the City of Belleville as their county seat. They are used to listening to the radio from Belleville and watching television from that area. They are used to using the telephone book and newspapers emanating from Belleville. When the Government arbitrarily changed that and chopped Hastings into two ridings, they found themselves torn apart.

While my colleague, the Member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet), does a good job of serving those people whom I previously served, nevertheless they do not relate to the town of Napanee. They do not read newspapers from the town of Napanee. They do not find the town of Napanee in the telephone book. There is a distinct confusion when this happens.

There is no justification for the disruption. There is no justification for the confusion, and certainly there is no justification for the expense that would follow a redistribution which would increase the number of Members of this House to perhaps 310 members. Just the physical problem alone of putting 35 Members within this Chamber would be tough enough. Despite all that confusion, disruption and expense, there is simply no justification for increasing the size of the House of Commons.

I ask my colleagues within the House today, rather than talking the Bill out, to allow it to go to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. Perhaps we will still have an opportunity to deal with it in some depth before the end of the session.

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-

Hastings (Mr. Ellis) for bringing this subject to our attention at this time. It is a timely subject because we are just on the eve of the redistribution order going out which will make into law the recommendations of the redistribution commissions across Canada.

I can sympathize with his remarks about rural constituencies. When I was first elected in 1965, I had a small, compact riding of approximately 45,000 square miles. As a result of two redistributions, it is now 155,000 square miles. I can understand the pressures that rural Members come under in trying to serve ever-increasing geographical areas as well as ever-increasing numbers of people scattered over a wider geographical base. There is no question that it makes life more difficult for those Members and that it also reduces the quality of the representation that people in rural areas get because their Members are spread over such a wide distance.

Having said that, I think I should return to the terms of the Bill and point out to the Hon. Member and the House that, according to the Constitution of Canada, we are obliged to have a redistribution of parliamentary seats after each census. I was the Parliamentary Secretary to two Presidents of the Privy Council in the 1970s who had the responsibility of bringing forward the current legislation based on what we call the amalgam method.

I recall very well the original Bill for redistribution as put forward by the then President of the Privy Council, the current Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). That Bill provided that there would be a redistribution in which there would be a decrease in the House of Commons of one seat from 265 to 264. Hon. Members will recall the outcry, the outrage and the viciousness of the attacks on the Government not only from the four Opposition Parties in those days but from the back-benchers on the government side at the horrendous changes the redistribution Bill would have made to the House of Commons. What it would do in effect is to take away seats from five or six provinces and redistribute them to Ontario and, I believe, to British Columbia. There was a vicious debate that went on over a period of time until the Government got the message and, at the final moment, intercepted with a piece of legislation that interrupted the process. It was clear from that debate and the arguments in the House of Commons and in committee that the House was not prepared to accept a redistribution that would involve the loss of seats to smaller provinces.

As a result of that commitment, which the Government was forced to accept, the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections was re-established to look into the matter, and the Government, after the election of 1974, came down with a series of proposals which were put before that committee.

One of the problems is that the Constitution of Canada provides for a form of representation in the House of Commons based on representation by population. We have never done that in the absolute. We have always tended in that direction but we have never attempted to apply that principle across the board. We have always recognized that there are very large provinces, very small provinces, and some in the middle. We have always recognized that provinces require a certain level of representation in the House of Commons. There have been a number of formulae in various Acts which have protected the position of small provinces. It was really not until the great demographic changes of our country in the 1950s and 1960s, which led up to the redistribution of the 1970s, that we realized that the old system would no longer work. Therefore, a drastic overhaul was called for.

In the case of the proposition that representation was a major point of the exercise, three other principles also were developed to protect it.

The first was that no province could have fewer Members of Parliament than it had Senators. This principle protected, for example, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. This principle was added in 1915. The second principle was that no province could lose more than 15 per cent of its representation in a redistribution. This was added in 1952. The third principle was that no province could have fewer Members in the House of Commons than a province with a smaller population.

The problem was how to balance all of these conflicting problems. Furthermore, how could you balance these conflicting problems in light of what happened from 1972 to 1974 when it was clear that the House would no longer accept the principle that provinces could lose seats? Even with these three principles, the provinces had to be protected.

The difficulty was finding a new system. When the Privileges and Elections Committee met in 1974, it had five propositions before it which were designed to give the committee a variety of options. The committee, after investigating, chose the one which the Government proposed, the amalgam method. Why? Because that seemed to satisfy the requirements. As a result, the committee accepted it with a certain amount of enthusiasm. When the committee examined what could be done with the other four recommendations which the Government had presented, it decided that the amalgam method made the most sense. Second, the committee cast its net as broadly as it could among those few experts in Canada who knew anything about redistribution, and it was unable to come up with any other interpretation that would be satisfactory. The consequence was that, with some minor amendments, we ended up with the amalgam system and it went into effect in the redistribution which took place in the election of 1979.

I can certainly agree with the Hon. Member for Prince Edward Hastings that every sitting Member at that time who went through the redistribution found it an extraordinarily painful process. The problem we face today is that this is the second redistribution under that formula. As the Hon. Member for Prince Edward Hastings noted, the size of the House will increase substantially.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Shame.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): The question we now have to decide is whether that redistribution should take place, whether it will provide better representation for Canadians, whether it will be neutral or whether it will produce less representation for Canadians. Like the Hon. Member for Prince Edward Hastings, my own personal prejudice, quite frankly, is toward a smaller House. I would prefer a smaller House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): I was here, like many other Members, when the House consisted of 264 Members. When we had the elections in 1979 and 1980, I was rather overwhelmed with the impact that another 12 Members could make in the House of Commons. But nonetheless I believe the question has to be looked at basically from the view of the smaller provinces, and whether or not their position in Confederation would be better or worse. Second, what will be the quality of representation available to the rural areas. If you do not increase the number of seats, then clearly any redistribution that takes place will quickly move seats from the rural areas into the cities. We all know why. The cities are growing more rapidly than the rural areas. Third, we know that population is moving from smaller provinces to the larger provinces. Fourth, if we do not provide additional seats, these tendencies will be hastened with a smaller House and will be made far more difficult.

I was of the opinion that the proposals of the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, who led the charge against the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act of 1972, would, in effect, have an adverse impact on his home province of Saskatchewan, on Manitoba, and on the Maritimes. It struck me that those provinces were better off with a system in a smaller House where their Members would have more clout than in a bigger House where their Members would make up a smaller proportion of the whole. I argued that point with Members from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and the Maritimes. But so overpoweringly difficult was the concept that provinces would lose seats, that some provinces would come down to their Senate floor, and that some provinces would have enormous problems of compression when it came to the redistribution of seats that, by and large, they opted for the easy way out, which was to expand the membership. Having done that, and having agreed to that proposition, we ended up with the question: if you added 12 Members, what would be the status the next time? Could you just live with the increase of 12 Members? When you examined the demographics of the situation, you came immediately to the proposition that you could not, that you would end up with exactly the same proposition in the next redistribution. Therefore, the amalgam method was designed to provide a controlled increase of the House over three redistributions where it was thought it would level off and hold.

We are debating whether or not this should go forth. I believe that we have to look back to what our reactions were in the 1972 to 1974 period. It is my view that we cannot ignore the judgment we made at that point. Those of us who represented rural ridings know what happened even with the increase in seats. My constituency in the Province of Ontario, which received seven additional seats, I believe, tripled in geographical size, and in terms of population increased from about 52,000 to about 78,000, an increase of over 50 per cent. The representation of those people in that geographical area is a very difficult job for whoever happens to be the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River.

This was not an isolated case. If we take a look at rural Canada and at rural Ontario, we find that the rural ridings expanded pretty well all over, except those which had a significant urban population moving into the edge of it, for example, Nepean-Carleton at one point.

The dilemma is how we provide representation which will be acceptable. As a result of the premises which I have outlined that no province should lose seats, that no province should be in a position of going below its Senate numbers and that no province should have fewer Members in the House than a province with a smaller population, if we accept those principles we are in a conundrum. We would be in a conundrum if we stopped it at the population of the House of Commons today, at 282.

I doubt the redistribution commissioners would be any more successful in satisfying the House now than they were in 1974 when their last propositions came forward. It seems to me that that is the nub of the problem. The nub of the problem is how we represent all parts of Canada on an equal base. How do we represent all parts of Canada on a relatively equal population base or on a relatively equivalent regional base? In other words, how do we square the circle?

When we studied the present system in committee, we realized that it was certainly not perfect. It has great difficulties. It operates in some ways very irrationally, according to the formula we have laid down, but only because the conditions we have built into the formula are somewhat contradictory and somewhat irrational. Therefore, I regret that I cannot support that proposition of the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis) because it does not deal with the conundrum facing us at this time. I know that he and the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) have been very aggressive in arguing the point that we should stop. However, it seems to me that where they have been deficient is in not being able to tell us how to resolve the very real regional, provincial and local conundrums into which we keep running.

Ideally it would have been practical to put into place the original proposition of the then President of the Privy Council, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), but it was unacceptable. If the Government had come before the House with a similar Bill today, it too would have been unacceptable. It would have been acceptable to certain provinces in the West. Certainly it would have been acceptable to many provinces in the East, but probably it would have been unacceptable to Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia as well. We have a very real problem in balancing the considerations of locality, provinciality and regionalism.

I should like to go one step further and talk about the Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings. There is a bit of a technical problem with the proposition he has raised. In dealing with some of the details of this matter, it would be helpful for Hon. Members to understand just exactly what are some of our problems. Let me start first by looking at the explanatory notes to the Bill. They indicate:

The relative representation of the various provinces is determined by a formula found in Rules 1 to 6 of Section 51 in which one province, Quebec, serves as a reference point.

That is partly right and partly wrong. It is true that there is a base number of seats for Quebec. This is stated in Rule 1 under Subsection 51(1) of the Constitution Act. The number of seats allocated to Quebec is to rise at each subsequent redistribution by four. Under Rule 2, the electoral quotient for Quebec is divided into the population of each large province to determine the membership of the large province in the House of Commons. A large province is defined as any province other than Quebec having a population of more than 2.5 million. Following the 1971 census, only Ontario was categorized as a large province. Following the 1981 census, British Columbia was also included in this category.

The technical problem with the Bill is that the number of Members for small provinces, that is those with less than 1.5 million people, and for intermediate provinces, that is between 1.5 million and 2.5 million people, is calculated independently from the electoral quotient for Quebec. There is no relationship between their quotient and that for Quebec.

For small provinces, an electoral quotient is obtained by dividing their total population at the penultimate decennial census by the number of Members assigned to those provinces in the readjustment following the completion of that census. In other words, the practice is completely different, taking into account this census and the last census, as opposed to how we calculated for the large province where it is only done on the basis of population for that particular census.

Having done that, the quotient is then divided into the population of each province at the most recent census to determine its representation in the House of Commons. The Senate floor rule then comes into play. It prevents any province from having fewer seats than the number of Senators who sit for that province in the Senate. In the redistribution which led to the Representation Order proclaimed on June 11, 1976, the computation resulted only in Prince Edward Island being entitled to one seat and New Brunswick to nine. However, the Senate floor rule raised Prince Edward Island to four and New Brunswick to 10.

If Hon. Members thought that was difficult, they should look at the computation for what is called the intermediate provinces. It is more complicated. Again it is not determined by the electoral quotient for the Province of Quebec. It is calculated independently. In the last redistribution we had only two provinces in that category—British Columbia and Alberta. Under the present redistribution, British Columbia has moved into the large province size and Alberta is the only province which sits in the intermediate sector. I think Hon. Members understand the difficulty with the proposal of the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, having been a Member of Parliament through two redistributions—and perhaps I will be one through the third redistribution—I understand the concerns of the Hon. Member who made the proposal today. While he has raised and described the difficulties, he has not really answered any of the problems. He suggested at one point that what we have now was brought forward by the Government. That is true only to the extent that anything that passes Parliament is brought forward by the Government. The fact is that the present system which led to the increase in the number of Members of Parliament was agreed to by the majority of the House of Commons and, if I remember correctly, by a majority from every Party. The reason it was agreed to was because many Members of Parliament realized the tremendous difficulties which would be created if we did not increase the size of the House.

When I was elected I represented 125,000 people because in the years before the 1962 election my part of Winnipeg, like so many other areas and cities across Canada, had experienced a very rapid expansion. I had more people in my constituency than lived in the Province of Prince Edward Island. When there were federal-provincial meetings, I would ask why I could not be present because I represented more people than did the Premier of Prince Edward Island.

Let us look at what would happen if we do not increase the number of Members of Parliament. The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) has gone through a description of how the number of seats is allocated to each province. In the Province of Manitoba, which I represent, we went from 14 seats when I was elected to 13 seats. We could do the calculations very easily. In about 25 years, Manitoba would be down to ten seats. We would stay at ten seats only because that is the number of Senators for Manitoba. Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick would be in the same situation. The largest provinces would have more members and the smaller provinces would have fewer members.

That is not the whole story, or even the worst part of it. Of 14 constituencies in Manitoba, the constituency of Churchill covers two-thirds of the geographic area of that province. CLose to 60 per cent of the people of Manitoba live in the metropolitan area of Winnipeg. The same situation exists in British Columbia where the Cities of Vancouver and New Westminster have a very large percentage of the population. There is the same situation with Calgary and Edmonton in Alberta, Toronto and Hamilton in Ontario and Montreal in the Province of Quebec.

What is happening and will continue to happen if you limit the number of Members of Parliament to a fixed number will be predictable. The population will continue to grow in the urban areas. Not so many years ago, more than 50 per cent of the Canadian population lived in rural and isolated areas. I do not have the exact figures, but I believe in the United States about 7 per cent of the population now lives on farms. I presume we are moving in that direction in Canada.

What will happen in the smaller provinces in particular, and in the larger provinces as well, is that the population in the urban areas will grow and in the rural and isolated areas it will be reduced or remain constant. Therefore, at the time of each redistribution the number of Members from urban areas will increase and the number from rural areas will decrease.

In my own Province of Manitoba, at some point in the future 650,000 or 700,000 of the one million population may live in the area of metropolitan Winnipeg. If the present constituency of Churchill remains as at present, covering two-thirds of the area of Manitoba, and if we drop to ten Members, one from Churchill and nine for the rest of the province, there will be six or seven Members from urban Winnipeg and two or three for the rural population of Manitoba. Province to province, you will have the same situation.

This is the exact reverse of what the Member who introduced the motion wants to do. Those representing rural constituencies would represent very large areas. With telephones, modern means of communication and better roads, it is much easier than it was 30 or 40 years ago. Far be it for me to claim to be an expert on the work of a rural Member of Parliament. However, I believe it would be very difficult for a rural Member to represent an area 300 to 400 miles from west to east and from north to south.

I agree there are many difficulties with the system we now have, which was agreed to by most Members of all Parties. While there are many difficulties, while we have not achieved the principle of representation by population, which is our theoretical objective, we have recognized that there are special problems with rural and isolated areas. A rural Member or a northern Member will represent less people than a Member representing an urban area. While we have not solved all of the problems, we do have a system which is as fair as possible.

I recognize all the objections to the system. I understand how people feel when they read that in the future we may have 300 Members of Parliament. However, the alternative of fixing the number, given that we want some concept of representation by population and want to ensure that rural and isolated areas have adequate representation, the present system is probably as good as can be devised.

I would be happy if somebody made suggestions to improve the system. I would look at any ideas. However, the simplistic solution of fixing the number of Members that we have at present would create tremendous problems, something the Member who introduced the motion wants to avoid.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us this afternoon presented by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward Hastings (Mr. Ellis) proposes to maintain the size of the House of Commons at approximately its present strength by amending Rule 1 of the representation rules set out in Section 21 of the Constitution Act, formerly known as the British North American Act, so that the number of Members from Quebec would not automatically rise by four in each redistribution of seats.

I have been thinking about this for some time. I agree in great part with the Member. Before getting into my main speech and the information I have gathered, it seems that over the years we have done a great deal of talking about representation by population. With all respect to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), I suggest that we represent people as opposed to areas.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell), who was here a few moments ago, represents 25,000 people. From 1974 to 1979, I represented 125,000 in the riding of St. Catharines. If there had been representation by population, there should have been five of us in that city. I have not been able to come to grips with the whole idea of area versus people. Unlike people, areas do not have rights, and in that sense it is the people in the areas that we represent.

My dilemma is that basically I agree that we should limit this House to whatever number of seats we decide upon collectively. What will happen to this House of Commons over the years? The grievances that we have had will not be rectified in any particular way and we will keep going down the same path. Representation by population will ultimately fall by the wayside.

We often talk about rural areas. The Hon. Member has said that the rural area constitutes two-thirds of the Province of Manitoba. We could all understand the difficulty of getting around in an area like that if we had access only to horses and buggies. I could even understand it if there were only automobiles in which to get around. However, these days we have aircraft at our disposal. The Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. Lewycky) is present today. I know that his riding is very large in area.

• (1750)

Mr. Lewycky: Three hundred and fifty miles from the north to the south, and 250 miles across, and I have no airplanes at my disposal.

Mr. Parent: That is why we are having some of these problems. However, airplanes and helicopters tend to minimize problems which we once thought were insurmountable.

At one point or other, the House will truly have to come to grips with the whole concept of representation by population. I would like to put myself on the side of those people who say that we should be representing people as opposed to representing areas or land masses. Having said that, I am not sure that the Bill as it has been put forward by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings will necessarily accomplish what the Hon. Member sets out to accomplish. Perhaps I could put the matter into my perspective and share with other Hon. Members some of my dilemmas.

Even though the Bill which is before us proposes to leave the number of Members from Quebec at a static level, the representation from other provinces would still increase at the time of the redistribution which would follow the 1991 census.

Only the representation from Quebec would stay the same while the representation from the other provinces would change. The number of seats allocated to Quebec directly influences only the number of seats allocated to the so-called larger provinces as outlined in the redistribution rules. The effect of this Bill would be to leave unchanged the rules for allocating seats to the small and intermediate provinces. As I understand it, there will be only one intermediate province after the next redistribution and that will be Alberta.

I do not wish to dwell on the fault inherent in this Bill. I do wish that I had a perfect solution to offer. I wish I could say: "Look, your Bill is wrong and this is what is right and this is what we should be doing." I am still struggling with the concept. Logic would tend to put me on the side of those who say that they are representing people as opposed to geographic areas.

If I may, for the benefit of all of us, I would like to offer some comments on the background of electoral redistribution in Canada. It is important to note that it is not a simple matter. Other Members have already said that. There are probably as many solutions to the problem as there are Members of Parliament. Redistribution is an especially complicated matter because of the federal nature of our country, and also because of some of its unique geographical and ethnic characteristics. I shall try to deal with both of those reasons.

It is widely held that Members of the House of Commons are elected on the basis of representation by population. I believe that is the myth that we hold out. The old cry for "rep by pop" arose in Canada West, the area which is now the Province of Ontario, prior to confederation. The residents of that part of the United Province of Canada complained bitterly about the fact that Canada East and Canada West had equal representation in the Parliament of that day, even though the population of Canada West had come to exceed that of Canada East. In 1840 when Upper and Lower Canada were united, the opposite was the case. However, the situation had become reversed and this grievance was one of many which had to be settled in the years of discussion which led to confederation in 1867.

When the Constitution Act was passed, it provided for the apportionment of seats in the House of Commons after each census according to certain rules and limitations. The distribution of seats among the four founding provinces was outlined in the original Section 51 of the Constitution Act. Quebec was assigned 65 seats, a convenient arrangement since that was the same number of constituencies that existed within Canada East before confederation. In 1867, the other three provinces were allocated Members of the House of Commons according to the relationship of their populations to the population of Quebec. Section 52 of the Constitution Act provided and continues to provide the following:

> The number of Members of the House of Commons may be from time to time increased by the Parliament of Canada, provided the proportionate representation of the provinces prescribed by this Act is not thereby disturbed.

From the beginning, the distribution of seats among provinces was automatic. The ratio between seats from the various provinces and the total number of Members in the House of Commons could be changed only by constitutional amendment. On several occasions since 1867, amendments to the Constitution Act were necessary. The most recent such amendment occurred about nine years ago in 1975 when the representation of the Northwest Territories was increased from one seat to two. The necessity for a constitutional amendment was entrenched in the Canadian Constitution by virtue of the provisions of paragraph 42(1)(a) of the Constitution Act, 1982, which requires that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada may only be made in accordance with the general amending procedure set out in Subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act of 1982.

It is clear that the principle of representation by population was established early in our history as a united country. Within provinces, the size of constituencies often varied dramatically. Witness the words of the previous speaker, a Member who comes from Winnipeg, who said that one out of the ten ridings in Manitoba covers a geographic area equal to two-thirds the size of the entire province. This reflected the existence of huge, sparsely settled areas throughout the nation and the fact that there were limits on the size of a constituency which a Member of Parliament could reasonably represent. In addition, it became a fairly well established custom, even in the late 19th century, that urban seats would, as a rule, be larger than those in rural areas. Note that we are speaking of the 19th century, 100 years ago. Surely we have progressed enough now that we must somehow be able to make decisions based not solely upon geography.

The rule of representation by population was applied much more accurately among provinces than among the electoral districts within the provinces. Even so, there were departures from the principle of representation by population not long after confederation.

When Manitoba entered confederation in 1870 it was granted four Members, even though the population of the province entitled it to representation by only one Member. In 1871, British Columbia, which is now one of the larger provinces, was given six Members when there were only enough inhabitants in that province to justify two Members. In 1873, Prince Edward Island became the seventh province and, though entitled to only five Members, received six Members. When the great expanse of land which now includes Alberta, Saskatchewan and the Territories was first given representation in the House of Commons in 1886, the strict rules of representation by population were again departed from.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, to give you a great deal more information regarding exactly how it came about that the number of seats that we have now came to exist as opposed to the number of—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to order made Thursday, June 14, 1984, the House will resume consideration of Government Orders.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-9

The House resumed consideration of the motion (Mr. Kaplan):

That in relation to Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading of the said Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, a Government Member said that the British system worked differently. It said that the British system had closure at the end of every day. Yes, but there are other things in the British system as well. I have attended committee meetings in the British system. Those committees work as committees. Those committees accept recommendations from other Parties and embody the recommendations in their legislation, because they want to have the best legislation possible. We should not compare the British system to the one we have.

The Government brags about how many hours of debate there have been. The House has heard that from the two or three Liberal speakers who finally rose to speak today on closure. The only time government Members speak is when there is closure. Those Members rose today and spoke about the hours of debate. It is not the hours of debate about which we are speaking. Why does the Government not accept some of the recommendations which have been made? If recommendations are not made by Liberals, they are no good. That is a terrible situation to have in a country such as ours. However, that is what happens every time the Government does not want to accept recommendations.

The Government brags about the hearings which were held on this legislation. Recommendations were made by 25 organizations. Did the Government accept any of those recommendations? Is there an amendment based on one of those recommendations? Those organizations did not come to Ottawa simply to talk, they wanted action. Most of the organizations were opposed to a civilian organization. But, that does not make any difference; the Government knows better. The Liberals do not go by democracy any more. They go by totalitarianism—the Government knows better and it knows what is good for the people. The Government will tell the people what is good for them. That is what the Government has been saying for a number of years.

Almost half of the nation objected to the national energy policy, but it did not make any difference. Closure was moved, the legislation was passed and an industry was destroyed. It ruined hundreds of people in western Canada. Recommendations were made to the Crow legislation but that did not make any difference, the Government knew better. It introduced the legislation and gave the whole shebang to the CPR. No wonder Mr. Turner decided to run for the Party. How could he lose with the whole organization backing him? The Government could not be against the CPR. Now we have the future Prime Minister who is a director of the CPR.

Another matter which bothers me is that there has been no debate on why the RCMP was not chosen. What did the Government say? It said that the MacKenzie Commission in 1969 recommended a civilian service. The Mackenzie Commission did not study a civilian organization. What did the commission have to compare with since there was no civilian organization? If it was so wonderful in 1969, why did the Government not adopt it? It has been 15 years since that recommendation and the Government has not done a thing about it. Do not tell me about the Mackenzie Commission; this Government rejected that 15 years ago.

We could talk about the McDonald Commission which was set up to investigate the RCMP. That commission did not investigate a civilian organization. In no way did it have the authority to start telling people what kind of an intelligence service we should have in this country. Now we have this Bill.

Was the RCMP too hard on the communists? Is that why the Government does not want the RCMP? Has the RCMP refused the patronage which the Government wanted to give to it? Sure, the RCMP would do that. Maybe that is why the Government does not want it. It wants a civilian organization which will provide a few more jobs for a few more Liberal hacks.

In Britain, legislation goes to the Senate. If it is not right, it goes back. What happens here? It goes to a Liberal-dominated Senate which would pass anything and everything. The Canadian Senate even passed the holiday Bill. It was passed in this House by 13 Members. It went through all stages in one afternoon. In Britain, they would throw it back to the House of Commons. They have a system over there. This Government should not compare itself with the Mother Parliament.

In Canada, 71 per cent of the people do not want a civilian organization. They do not want civilians who are appointed by this Government to open their first-class mail. Neither do I. That does not matter because this Liberal Government knows better. It is made up of totalitarians. When these Liberals became Members they suddenly obtained a mass of wisdom they did not have before. Therefore, these Members can now tell the people of Canada what is good for them. The Government tells the people of Canada that this Bill is good for them, but the people do not want it. Democracy dictates that the people should get what they want. Our people are not illiterate.

The Government can get away with closure here, but the people will be pronouncing closure on the Liberals once an election is called. It will be goodbye Liberals. If the whole Party is wiped out, the people of Canada would be very, very thankful. It is a totalitarian outfit over there that does not care what the people think. This Government refuses to reflect the thinking of the people. This Bill, like the national energy Bill and the Crow Bill, is an example of a Government determined to have its way. It tells the people what is good for them. Why do they not wake up and start acting the way in which a democratic government is supposed to act? This Government should reflect the thinking of the people.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I believe that, considering the importance of this legislation and the motion for time allocation now before the House, it would perhaps be useful to put things into perspective and try and find some serious justification for adopting a Bill that, I agree, is controversial. I have been sitting on the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and have been a member of the Committee since 1968. I have tried to analyse the facts, to find some convincing reasons for supporting a Bill that, I repeat, is controversial.

I have found three reasons, Mr. Speaker, and I shall mention them briefly.

In the last fifteen years, two commissions have recommended creating a separate, civilian security intelligence agency.

In 1969, the MacKenzie Commission stated, and I quote:

> Aside from a number of similarities in the investigation methods used, the differences between the responsibilities of a police corps and those of a security service would seem to be very distinct. The primary concern of a police corps is to enforce the law, to investigate offences, to collect evidence and to bring offenders before the courts. Security services are mainly engaged in preventive action and the collection of information . . . Briefly, we believe that there is a distinct difference between the professional security officer and the professional police officer, and that this difference should be reflected in how they are recruited—

Mr. Speaker, I could also quote the McDonald Commission and the Senate Committee. In other words, I feel that anything is preferable to the status quo. It was the status quo that allowed the RCMP, that respected force, to take inappropriate action in Quebec, and I can certainly not find here any justification for the attitude of my hon. friends opposite, who in spite of all its shortcomings and imperfections, prefer the present situation to the proposed system. I am giving this Bill my approval in principle in order to eliminate the status quo and look to the future, even if I would have preferred to see a number of clauses amended.

• (1810)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. It being 6.10 p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 82 have expired.

It is therefore my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

Time Allocation

The question is as follows: Mr. Kaplan, seconded by Mr. Pinard, moved:

> That in relation to Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading of the said Bill; and
> That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Kaplan) which was agreed to on the following division:

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the electronic system has been working. I noticed one of the Clerks at the Table talking to herself. Unfortunately I could not hear what she was saying. I assume that we will now carry on with the rest of the Routine Proceedings and finish them so that we can get on with Orders of the Day. I believe we are to continue debate on Bill C-9.

Mr. Speaker: We are now on Orders of the Day under the Special Order which was adopted by the House during extended hours. This is to deal with Government Orders. By interpretation of the Special Order adopted by the House, we are now on Government Orders.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I understand Your Honour, we can all appreciate that what has happened now is that we are on Routine Proceedings on Motions. The motion was moved by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) with respect to time allocation. It was interrupted by Private Members' Hour from 5 p.m. to 6 p.m.

I understand that the Order had two elements to it. One element was that we would continue to observe the 5 p.m. to 6 p.m. Private Members' Hour regardless of what stage of the proceedings we were in. The second element was that the only business that could be considered during the extended hours would in fact be Government Orders. I think that a fair interpretation of that would presumably be predicated upon completing Routine Proceedings. Let us assume that normal circumstances prevailed and that we had this motion on a normal day. We would have the situation then of having to adjourn the debate in Private Members' Hour. If we were not sitting extended hours past six o'clock, it would then be another parliamentary day, at which time the normal procedure would be to transfer the motion to Government Orders.

However, since we are not moving into another parliamentary day, I suggest, with the greatest deference, that we are now faced with a continuation of the proceedings with which we were involved. Regardless of Private Members' Hour we would not arbitrarily curtail Routine Proceedings until they were completed at any point during the day unless we were interrupted by something that was provided for in the Special Order, such as Private Members' Hour.

● (1840)

It seems to me only fair and equitable that we get the normal Routine Proceedings out of the way. That would mean such things as answering Questions on the Order Paper and other items prior to proceeding to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is quite prepared to rule. It may be the wish of the House to proceed with the rest of Routine Proceedings but if the Chair is called on to rule, the Chair has a ruling prepared for these circumstances.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member took a very long route to ask for unanimous consent of the House. We agree.

Mr. Speaker: With unanimous consent, we will continue Routine Proceedings.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 44 and 830 to 834 inclusive.

[Text]

SURVEILLANCE OF COASTAL WATERS

Question No. 44—Mr. Herbert:

1. Does the Department of Fisheries and Oceans have specific responsibilities in connection with the surveillance of coastal waters and, if so, what are they?

2. Does the Royal Canadian Mounted Police patrol coastal waters?

3. Does the Canadian Coast Guard make routine surveillance patrols in coastal waters?

4. To which ministry do the RCMP and Coast Guard report for co-ordination of their activities?

5. Is the Department of National Defence responsible for the co-ordination of any search and rescue operations and which ministry has the responsibility for determining the need for and extent of such operations?

6. Does the Department of the Environment maintain any continuing activity in coastal waters and, if so, what activity?

7. Do the Departments of Energy, Mines and Resources and of Indian Affairs and Northern Development maintain aerial surveillance over coastal waters and, if so, is any information obtained passed to one or more co-ordination centres?

8. Which ministry, or ministries has or have the authority to issue instructions to private shipping in coastal waters?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed as follows:

1. Under the Government Organization Act, 1979 the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans' duties, powers and functions include all matters not by law assigned to any other department, board or agency of the Government of Canada relating to:

(i) sea coast and inland fisheries,

(ii) fishing and recreational harbours,

(iii) hydrography and marine sciences, and

(iv) the co-ordination of the policies and programs of the Government of Canada respecting oceans, and such other matters over which the Parliament has jurisdiction relating to oceans as are by law assigned to the Minister.

In order to fulfil the Minister's responsibilities, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans operates a fleet of fisheries patrol, hydrographic and marine science craft on both coasts. The fisheries patrol vessels conduct patrols for the purpose of monitoring foreign and domestic fishing activity to ensure the conservation and protection of fish stocks under the Fisheries Act and the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act.

2. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police has several motor vessels located on both the East and West coasts. These vessels are a means of transportation and used for the enforcement of several federal statutes, such as the Fisheries Act, the Canada Shipping Act, the small vessel regulations, the Narcotic Control Act, the Excise Act and others. In addition to these duties, the RCMP vessels are also used in an assistance capacity, in search and rescue operations, and mercy escorts (transportation of sick/injured persons) whenever the situation arises.

3. The Canadian Coast Guard (CCG) conducts surveillance patrols of coastal waters by ship for the purpose of marine search and rescue, the maintenance of aids to navigation, and pollution prevention. Canadian Coast Guard icebreakers carry out missions in these areas as secondary tasks. Pollution prevention patrols are also carried out by a Coast Guard fixed wing aircraft over the Canadian portion of the Great Lakes, the St. Lawrence River, and the Gulf as far as Sept-Iles. The Department of National Defence assist the Coast Guard in pollution surveillance as a secondary task during the course of their normal air reconnaissance missions.

4. In their individual capacities, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and Canada Coast Guard report to separate ministries. The RCMP reports to the Solicitor General of Canada and the CCG reports directly to the Minister of Transport. Should the RCMP and CCG work jointly on a venture, i.e. search and rescue, they do so still under the auspices and direction of their individual Ministers.

5. The Minister of National Defence is responsible for the co-ordination of SAR operations and for determining the necessity and extent of these operations. The Department of National Defence is responsible for co-ordinating all air and marine search activity in Canada and adjacent areas for which Canada has accepted responsibility under international agreements and for providing dedicated air resources to respond to both air and marine distress incidents.

6. In so far as the Department of Environment is concerned, the following activities are carried out by each service in coastal waters:

Atmospheric Environment Service—issues marine and aviation weather forecasts to the 200-mile limit; operates ice reconnaissance, oil slick trajectory, and voluntary weather observing programs.

Canadian Wildlife Service—carries out inventory surveys and research of marine birds and implements regulations under Migratory Birds Convention Act.

Environmental Protection Service—responsible for protection of marine environmental quality through (i) environmental assessment; (ii) protection from specific environmental threats (discharges from mines, pulpmills, municipalities, etc.); (iii) administration of Ocean Dumping Control Act and part of the Fisheries Act; (iv) response to environmental emergencies (e.g. oil spills); (v) general coastal zone management.

Parks Canada—controls certain surface water activities such as recreational boating around Pacific Rim Park and evaluates potential for establishment of other national marine parks.

7. No.

8. In so far as the Department of the Environment is concerned, the Environmental Protection Service does issue instructions pursuant to the Ocean Dumping Control Act and the Fisheries Act in relation to environmental protection considerations.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans has the authority to direct the activities of foreign fishing vessels in terms of virtually all their operations within the 200-mile economic zone. The Department has no legal power to direct the activities of domestic fishing vessels except as they relate directly to fishing.

The Ministry of the Solicitor General does not have primary statutory responsibility in respect of shipping in coastal waters. However, the RCMP assists several federal departments in carrying out their statutory enforcement obligations in coastal waters. In this connection, the force is empowered to issue instructions to private shipping in coastal waters.

The Department of Transport is responsible for the safety of shipping and prevention of pollution from ships in Canadian waters. The Canadian Coast Guard has the authority to issue instructions to private shipping in coastal waters related to vessel traffic services, ship routing, conditions of shipping, or conditions of the ships themselves requiring intervention by the regulatory authority. The Department is also responsible for issuing notices to mariners and notices to shipping to warn mariners of any dangerous or unsafe conditions such as pending storms, the presence of ice or outages of aids to navigation.

TRADE WITH CZECHOSLOVAKIA, ROMANIA, HUNGARY, EAST GERMANY AND POLAND

Question No. 830—Mr. Blenkarn:

2. In the same years were any Canadian manufactured goods sold in Czechoslovakia and, if so, in each case, what was the total value of all such sales?

Question No. 831—Mr. Blenkarn:

2. In the same years were any Canadian manufactured goods sold in Romania and, if so, in each case, what was the total value of all such sales?

Question No. 832—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. In (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 (d) 1982 (e) 1983 were any Hungarian manufactured goods sold in Canada and, if so, in each case, what was the total value of such sales?

2. In the same years were any Canadian manufactured goods sold in Hungary and, if so, in each case, what was the total value of all such sales?

Question No. 833—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. In (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 (d) 1982 (e) 1983 were any East German manufactured goods sold in Canada and, if so, in each case, what was the total value of such sales?

2. In the same years were any Canadian manufactured goods sold in East Germany and, if so, in each case, what was the total value of all such sales?

Question No. 834—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. In (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 (d) 1982 (e) 1983 were any Polish manufactured goods sold in Canada and, if so, in each case, what was the total value of such sales?

2. In the same years were any Canadian manufactured goods sold in Poland and, if so, in each case, what was the total value of all such sales?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

Statistics on the total value of Canadian imports from, and exports to Czechoslovakia, Romania, Hungary, East Germany and Poland for the period 1979-83 are shown on the table below.

CANADIAN EXPORTS (Domestics and re-exports)
(thousands of dollars)

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983
Czechoslovakia	36,182	128,091	28,238	31,507	15,266
Romania	32,290	22,633	9,372	4,576	18,999
Hungary	14,377	10,981	11,936	13,772	15,202
East Germany	35,979	10,605	4,455	21,552	202,143
Poland	276,226	357,403	332,953	359,608	45,860

CANADIAN IMPORTS
(thousands of dollars)

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983
Czechoslovakia	67,509	63,381	72,890	60,337	54,443
Romania	39,469	37,973	46,466	30,479	50,131
Hungary	31,215	25,897	31,225	25,531	27,984
East Germany	9,776	9,620	12,790	9,695	10,117
Poland	82,778	72,159	73,981	43,562	39,512

(a) The large increase in Canadian exports to Czechoslovakia in 1980 was attributable to large shipments of pulp and paper industry machinery ($98.8 million).

(b) Exports to East Germany in 1983 rose dramatically, due to greatly increased shipments of barley ($139 million) and wheat ($56 million).

(c) In 1983, export shipments to Poland fell sharply, primarily because of a large drop in wheat sales (from $348 million in 1982 to $18 million in 1983).

(d) With respect to the reduction in imports from Poland over the past five years, a number of product areas were contributing factors, none of which were as pronounced as the cases mentioned above. Some of these were:

	1979 ($ million)	1983 ($ million)
Meat and preparations	2.8	0
Fur skins undressed	2.6	0
Textile fabrics	9.2	4.5
Apparel	18.5	5.7
Other transportation equipment	6.7	1.1
Marine engines and parts	3.1	0
Footwear	5.3	2.2

The total drop in these products amounted to approximately $35 million over the five-year period.

● (1850)

He said: Mr. Speaker, this group of motions is a very important grouping. It deals with Clauses 17 to 20 inclusive of the Bill. These clauses establish the terms pursuant to which the proposed civilian security service may, as it was euphemistically called, share information with other government Departments, with foreign security intelligence services, or with foreign agencies.

The provision in Clause 18 is the provision which makes it an offence to disclose the identity of any person who is or was a confidential source of information or a person who is or was an employee engaged in covert operational activities.

Clause 19 is the provision which permits disclosure of information obtained by the service to a whole series of individuals, including literally any person in the Public Service of Canada where the director in his or her opinion believes that that disclosure would be helpful.

Clause 20 is the final clause in this package which grants the full array of immunities which are possessed by peace officers to the members of the proposed civilian security service. It establishes a mechanism whereby possible illegality will be reported.

The purpose of these amendments is to strengthen what are at the moment clearly very seriously and fundamentally flawed clauses.

Dealing first with the provisions of Clause 17, this clause permits the service to pass on information which it has obtained, using all of the most intrusive techniques set out in this Bill. It permits the service to pass on this information literally to any security service anywhere in the world. I think it is appalling that Canada should be prepared to share information on Canadians and on refugees from other countries with foreign security agencies which, by the admission of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) himself, are not even acknowledged in their own countries. What kind of regressive, military dictatorships are we dealing with, Mr. Speaker, that would not even acknowledge their own intelligence agencies and with whom we are quite prepared to share all the information they seek?

The Canadian Council of Churches appeared before our committee and expressed its very grave concern about this provision, particularly in terms of the potential implications for political refugees from Third World countries. The Council had recommended that the Bill specifically prohibit arrangements with nations and organizations that have been found to permit gross systematic and consistent violations of fundamental human rights. That is one of the provisions which I have proposed in this package of amendments in the motions now before the House.

I have only ten minutes so I will be brief on Clause 18. This clause sets out the criminal sanction for any individual who discloses information that could reveal the identity of an individual who is or was an employee of the service. This provision goes far, far beyond comparable legislation in the United States, the Intelligence Identities Protection Act. I would note that that Act applies only to operatives engaged in foreign intelligence. We know the provisions of Bill C-9 would not in fact enhance the operations of the service outside Canada. This Bill would make it a crime, punishable by up to five years in prison, for an individual to disclose that he or she was or is an operative of the service. It is only because of this kind of disclosure that historically in 1976-1977 many of the most serious abuses and criminal wrongdoings were revealed. But under the provisions of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, any individual who makes such a disclosure or any person in the press who repeats such disclosure could go to jail for five years. The provision was drafted far too broadly.

Clause 19 permits the service to use the information it has obtained through the use of intrusive techniques, bugging phones, breaking into homes, accessing income tax records and medical records. There is a whole array of powers. To whom can the service give this information? Incredibly, they can give that information virtually to anyone under the provisions of Clause 19 where it is stated that in the opinion of the director, the disclosure of the information to any Minister of the Crown or any person in the Public Service of Canada is essential in the public interest. Not only is there a massive intrusion on the privacy of Canadians initially but, having intruded on that privacy, the director of the service can then pass on any of that information literally to any public servant anywhere in the country. One of our motions would ensure that that kind of massive violation of the privacy of Canadians would not be tolerated.

The final motions in this package which are tabled deal with proposed Clause 20. Clause 20 is the clause which was inserted in the Bill to provide the full array of protections accorded to peace officers to the agents of the new civilian security service. This is completely unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. It would permit agents of the new service effectively to take unto themselves the decision as to which laws can or cannot be broken in pursuit of the sweeping mandate under this legislation.

We know all too well the unfortunate history of the RCMP security service which involves breaking and entering, theft, fraud, kidnapping, forgery, and breaches of a whole series of laws. This would provide carte blanche to the service to decide whether or not, in pursuit of their objectives, their civilian security objectives, they should be permitted to break laws.

I proposed an amendment which would have clearly prohibited the service from at least breaking the Criminal Code. But Members on the Government side voted even that proposal down. There is nothing that would prevent the security service from breaking the Criminal Code in the pursuit of its activities.

The McDonald Commission documented a whole series of violations of the law. The response of this Government is, "Well, it may have been illegal then, but we will change the law and we make it legal now." What does that do to the rule of law in this country?

Finally the motions which I have before the House would ensure that not only the Attorney General of Canada but also the provincial attorneys general will be informed of any suspected breach of the criminal law. As it stands now, it is only the federal attorney general who is informed of such possible breaches of the law. We know all too well the history of this Government in refusing to take action, in refusing to uphold the rule of law in Canada, in insisting there is one law for the RCMP and another law for all other Canadians. We want to ensure, through this motion, that the provincial attorneys general as well will be given the authorization to proceed to prosecute if, indeed, there is evidence of a breach of the law.

In conclusion, with respect to the sweeping nature of the powers to hand on information to other police agencies, with respect to the overly broad nature of the offence of disclosure of identity, with respect to the abuses which can occur in disclosing information obtained and with respect to the law enforcement powers accorded under this Bill, powers which are not accorded to comparable agents in other jurisdictions, these motions, I submit, must be adopted by the House in order to protect the fundamental civil liberties of Canadians.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the clauses we are considering now, Clauses 17, 18, 19 and 20, have caused a great deal of alarm not only in the riding of Spadina that I represent but in many other parts of the country. People are shocked to think that the Government is about to insist on establishing a secret police that will not be fully answerable to Parliament, because the information which will come to Parliament will all be screened by the director of the secret police, and that could enter into any kind of secret agreement with any agency of any foreign power which the Minister in charge and the Secretary of State for External Affairs choose to designate.

We have people in Canada who have come from all countries of the world with all kinds of governments. Some of them came on the run for their lives and have relatives or friends back home. I have spoken with many refugees, particularly from Latin American countries but also from eastern European and Asian countries. They are very uneasy, even under present conditions, about what might be done to people back home if certain agents of their home country obtain information about lawful words they may be uttering here or about legitimate and lawful actions which they may be taking here in criticism of dictatorial administrations back home. There are many people from countries such as those in Latin America who dare not speak out in Canada out of fear of the persecution which might be visited on their families and friends back home.

These proposals by the Government would make that situation far worse since it would then become potentially the duty of Canada's secret police to hand information to goodness knows whom in whatever country, perhaps based upon activities of naturalized Canadian citizens acting in Canada completely within the law. It is shocking that Canada would be asked to undertake to be the cat's-paw, the stooge for foreign dictatorships. That is clearly what the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) intends to provide when he refuses any kind of limitation on this clause concerning the human rights practices of governments to which this life and death information might be given.

There are millions of Canadians who are members of labour unions in Canada. Perhaps they are mostly Canadian born. I am not necessarily speaking of immigrants, but they are members of labour unions affiliated, for example through the Canadian Labour Congress, with groups such as the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions and with other labour bodies such as the International Labour Organization. There again they have grave concerns about what may be done by way of transferring information through Canada's proposed secret police to the secret police of any other country.

We have heard more than once the expression of concern of the Moderator of the United Church and others of the Canadian Council of Churches who have obligations as brothers and sisters within the Christian faith. The same applies to people of other faiths such as the Jewish faith and Asian faiths. Those concerns are legitimate ones of people who practise those religions in Canada.

I should like to refer to a telegram from the Canadian Council of Churches dated June 6. It reads as follows:

> Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, should not be passed by the present Parliament until (a) it makes clear and rigorous provisions for the accountability of the service,—

This is what we are concerned with in one of the amendments. Any lawbreaking should be fully accounted for, not covered over as provided by the Government's position. The telegram continues:

> —(b) defines national security and describes more precisely those activities which are illegal under the Act, (c) provides for the continuation of a free and vigorous participatory society in which work for justice on behalf of the poor, the marginalized and refugees may be carried on without fear of surveillance and prosecution.

It was signed by the Reverend Dr. Donald W. Anderson, General Secretary of the Canadian Council of Churches. Also I have a telegram from the Committee for the Defence of Human Rights in Colombia. We may think of the problems in Colombia as being a small matter, but there are Canadians who are concerned about human rights there. The telegram reads:

> As a committee which condemns the human rights abuses of the Colombian Government, we find the proposed Bill C-9 alarming and threatening. Even though our work is entirely legal this Bill could be used to secretly monitor our activities. It could be used to misinform, or inform out of context, the Colombian Government of our activities. In short, this is a dangerous and complex Bill which must not be passed.

It is signed by the Committee for the Defence of Human Rights in Colombia. I have another telegram which reads:

> I am strongly opposed to Bill C-9. As someone who grew up in a Latin American dictatorship, watching Canada become more repressive frightens you.

It is signed by R. Mesa. Also I have a very practical proposal from another constituent, which reads:

> Any Canadian who doesn't actively oppose Bill C-9 should be sentenced to a few years in many Latin American countries, to learn what a dangerous thing repressive power is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair would like to remind the Hon. Member that the remarks he is making should be directed to the clauses we are discussing. That does not seem apparent to the Chair in the telegrams he has read.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I accept your advice and wish to explain that I read them for the purpose of showing how this Bill or the proposal in it threatens the perceived safety of residents of Canada who consider that they are acting lawfully. They feel threatened because Clause 17 of the Bill proposes to give information to unnamed foreign powers under, perhaps, secret arrangements.

There is one further point I wish to make. I believe it is not sound in law to try to bind the conscience of any public servant. If it should happen, as it has throughout history, that a public servant engaged in police work feels that he has been led or pressured to violate his conscience in what he has done, and if he wishes to correct that situation morally and spiritually by speaking up, it ought not to be a matter for punishment if what he says is true. This Bill proposes to punish people for telling the truth about what they consider to be the misdeeds of the service. That is shameful. This provision ought to be withdrawn.

Finally, we should think of what will be done to all professional and government record keeping in the country if every time a person makes an entry he considers that it might be looked at by Canada's new secret police. It will destroy generations of professional tradition in objective and conscientious record keeping. The damage will not be undone for many years thereafter even when this unjust law has been repealed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): We will now proceed with the debate on this grouping of motions.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I had thought that perhaps I might have to speak on a motion proposed by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) but I am very pleased to see that that motion is not being moved at this time. Therefore, I will confine my remarks to the motions which are before the House at this time.

These motions deal with Clauses 21, 22 and 24 of the proposed legislation, Bill C-9. These provisions really lie at the heart of this Bill because they deal with the powers which can be accorded to the new service. Clause 21 is the clause which permits the service to obtain warrants for unprecedented interventions into the private lives of Canadians. This would include warrants for mail opening, warrants for obtaining access to confidential income tax records, warrants for obtaining access to medical records, warrants for breaking into homes and warrants for stealing documents. The list goes on and on.

I would emphasize that the powers proposed in this provision of the legislation are unprecedented and are powers which do not exist at the present time. The Pitfield Committee, in reviewing these particular provisions, urged for the use of a number of safeguards before a judicial warrant could in fact be issued. One of the most important of such safeguards is one which would in effect provide a balancing test to ensure that a judge, in granting a warrant, would in fact weigh the possible threat to the privacy of Canadians against the worth of the information which would be obtained in the pursuit of national security. The amendment in question would require that where the judge is of the opinion that the intelligence to be gained through the issuance of a warrant outweighs the harm to privacy that will result, provided that the judge is satisfied with the other conditions, the warrant could in fact be issued.

As well, I would note that the intrusive powers referred to in this Bill go far beyond those which were recommended by the McDonald Commission, because they could indeed be used against so-called domestic subversives. On that basis, I would strongly urge that these sweeping intrusive powers not be granted to the new agency. I could go on at some length to speak about the fact that these powers are unprecedented, but at this point I will take my seat and allow the debate to take its course.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this grouping of amendments relating to clauses in the Bill concerns me very greatly. I have been engaged in labour union activities, church activities, peace movement activities and civil liberties activities. I have been active as a member of a residents' association. I have been aware of the activities of the RCMP which, in many cases, has infiltrated these groups and treated us as though, somehow or other, we were enemies of the state. That is very destructive and very harmful. The police have no business doing that.

For example, I know of the case of a theological student who joined a civil liberties group at McGill University for the purpose of opposing the padlock law, a law which some years later was struck down by the Supreme Court of Canada as being beyond the powers of the provincial Government of Quebec. Yet this student was harassed in the sense that the police visited his academic superiors to try to hinder his graduation and subsequent ordination. That kind of activity does not protect the liberties of Canadians but will destroy the liberties of Canadians if we allow that kind of activity to go too far.

This kind of intrusive legislation ought to be withdrawn by the Government or defeated by the Members of this House. I urge that the legislation be rejected entirely.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Joyal: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Hon. the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) on a point of order.

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, when you called the various motions, there was one numbered 60 in the name of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan).

An Hon. Member: No. 61.

Mr. Joyal: I am sorry, No. 61. With your permission, I should put it to the House so that it might be debated and voted on eventually.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair gave the number of the motion a moment ago and since there was no reaction, it moved on to the next one. However, the Minister may move it on behalf of his colleague, if that is his intention. That is in accordance with the Standing Orders.

[English]

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I just sought clarification on this from the Clerk and it is my understanding that if the mover of the motion is not present in the House, then of course the motion cannot be put without unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The rule to which the Hon. Member has referred is a general rule which does not apply to members of the executive. We can find the proper quotation in Beauchesne's to indicate that, but Ministers regularly move motions for their colleagues without unanimous consent. The Chair has no choice. If the Minister wishes to move the motion on behalf of his colleague, the Chair must let him do so.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): On another point of order?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, may I say, before you rule, that the provisions state that when a Member does raise a point of order, it is required that the Chair cite the precedent in question or the provisions of the Standing Orders which are applicable.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Under the provisions of the Standing Orders, it is clearly the case that the Chair is required to cite the provisions upon which the Chair relies. Of course, I do not need to cite that provision to the Chair. Pending that requirement being fulfilled, I would suggest that indeed there is no special status for members of the executive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): No, the Chair has made a ruling which now stands. We will proceed, but meanwhile, to satisfy the Hon. Member, someone from the Table will research the rules in order to provide the Hon. Member, as he wishes, with reading of the proper citation.

The Hon. the Secretary of State.

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move Motion No. 61 which reads as follows:

Motion No. 61

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 22 by striking out lines 38 to 40 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"to apply for such a warrant after having obtained the approval of the Minister, the judge may, from time to time, renew the warrant for a period not exceeding the period for which the warrant may be issued pursuant to subsection 21(5) if satisfied—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on a point of order.

● (1930)

[English]

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order. The Speaker can correct me if I am wrong, but it was my recollection that the Speaker did in fact call Motion No. 61 and that no one was present to move the motion. Whether or not that was the case, certainly no member of the executive rose—even if they are permitted to do so—at that time to propose the motion on behalf of another Member. Mr. Speaker, I suggest, with respect, that even if the case is—and that remains to be determined—that a member of the executive can move a motion on behalf on another member of the executive, this motion was called by the Chair but was not proposed by another member of the executive. How on earth, at this point, without unanimous consent, can the House revert to an earlier motion which was called but was not put? I suggest that the Chair might want to seek some guidance from the Table. The motion was called and there was no one present to put it. Without unanimous consent, surely it would be procedurally improper to permit any Member to return to a motion which was not put forward at the appropriate time.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, you have ruled on a point of order. You are on motion No. 61 and the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) was reading it. What the Member opposite is trying to do is to question the ruling you have just made. Indeed, the Secretary of State was reading the motion and he ought to continue, as he should after the ruling you have made.

[English]

Mr. Burghardt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the Chair would like to refer to the point of order which the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) spoke to, I would point out that the Hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) tried to get the attention of the Chair and raised his hand when the motion was being called.

Some Hon. Members: That is not correct.

Mr. Burghardt: It is correct. I was here. I would bring that to your attention, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Minister for Veterans Affairs raised his hand in an attempt to get the attention of the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): All the remarks which the Chair has heard since the Hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) read the motion, are reflections on the ruling.

Mr. Blais: That is right.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair has recognized and has agreed to the fact that the Hon. Secretary of State may move the motion. We have not moved to the next grouping of motions. We are still on the same motions. Therefore, the Chair sees no reason that the Minister should not be able to move the motion on behalf of his Party.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, while we may have been dealing with a grouping of motions, the Chair called one motion. At the time the Chair called that motion; no one rose to speak to it.

Mr. Blais: You are in contempt. Sit down.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): It has been suggested that someone may have tried to rise. But, Mr. Speaker recognizes individuals who try to rise. Having called a motion, and no one having risen to put forward that motion, it is clearly out of order that the Government should now attempt to come back to it. It is a separate point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is clearly out of order.

Mr. Blais: You should be named.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Stifle yourself, Blais. You will not be around anyway after the next election.

It is clearly a separate point of order. I ask the Speaker to take note of the fact that this is a separate point of order, completely separate from the question of whether another member of the executive could move the motion. Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is whether another member of the executive council—one who is not sleeping like the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais)—could move the motion. That is a separate question.

The question is simply this: Did the Chair call Motion No. 61? The answer to that question is yes. The Chair called motion by motion, 58, 59 and 60. Then the Chair called Motion No. 61. Having called Motion No. 61 the Chair did not recognize anyone; not the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), not the Minister of National Defence, who was sleeping in his seat, to speak on that motion. Having called the motion and no one having risen to speak to the motion, I submit with respect that we cannot rewrite history.

Had the motion not been called, the argument could have been made that the distinguished Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) might have moved the motion on behalf of his colleague. That is a separate question. The motion was called. No one rose to speak to the motion. That being the case, after a lot of scurrying around on the part of the incompetent Parliamentary Secretary, suddenly the Government realizes that it may have lost the motion. It is Your Honour's duty to uphold the rules and precedents in this House. I would appeal to the Table to advise the Chair with respect to the propriety of a motion of this nature.

After a motion has been called it is utterly wrong—if no one has spoken to it—for the Chair to permit another member of the executive council to attempt to put that motion. That is not a reflection on the previous ruling of the Chair. The previous ruling dealt with the question of whether a colleague of the Solicitor General could move the motion. That was the previous ruling of the Chair. With respect, the Chair did not rule on the question of whether or not a motion, having been called and no one rising to speak to that motion, could be attempted again, a second time, a third time or a fourth time. Once it has been called and no one has risen to speak to the motion, or was recognized by the Chair, and the Chair moves on, clearly without uanimous consent that motion cannot be put again. I appeal to the Speaker to uphold the rules and traditions of this House.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Gourde) on a point of order.

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, before you rule on the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, I would point out, as the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) said to you earlier, that a ruling had been made. The Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) had just about finished reading the motion when he was interrupted by the Member for Burnaby who continues to do in the House what he did in committee, namely acting in the interests of the New Democratic Party rather than in the interests of democracy.

[English]

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we have a bit of a problem. The motions were grouped together. The motions were read and no one on the other side rose to move or second Motion No. 61. Debate then started on the grouping of the motions. Halfway through the debate, there was an attempt made to renew the motion. It seems to me that if this motion is allowed, there should be a provision made for Members to debate the group of the motions a second time.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, on the same two points of order, I am quite sure that the Table Officers have advised you correctly, that members of the executive can, in fact, move motions for a member of the executive who is not present. The point which the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and the previous speaker made is correct. I have sat here throughout this dilemma which seems to have seized the House. Mr. Speaker, I clearly heard you read—and I am sure the "blues" will demonstrate this—through those motions. When you came to Motion No. 61, no member of the executive—and there were two present, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal)—moved or seconded Motion No. 61.

Procedurally, in the five years I have been here I have never seen—after a motion has been called I have been called and no one has moved it, and once debate had already occurred—a case where the House reverted, to reintroduce a motion. I have never seen that situation. I would appreciate being informed of any citations which would allow that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): There are two questions before us. The first is whether the Minister required unanimous consent to move a motion on behalf of his colleague. I will deal with this matter first, and I will provide a citation for the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). The citation can be found on page 300 of Bourinot's. It reads as follows:

—Ministers also have the privilege of proposing the motions of their absent colleagues.

I could read the whole citation, but that is the main sentence.

Mr. Kristiansen: We accept that ruling. There is no argument there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): There was argument. Therefore, I am trying to clear it up.

With regard to the second point of order, I believe it will be much easier to deal with. We have not deferred this group of motions yet. Therefore, there is nothing which can stop the Chair from recognizing someone who wants to move one of these motions. As a matter of fact, the Chair had already ruled. But, out of courtesy, the Chair listened to several Members. However, if the Members look at the "blues", the ruling had already been made and the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) was in a position to read and move the motion on behalf of the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan). As a matter of fact, so-called points of order were raised at the time he was reading, an interruption, in fact, of what was going on. Therefore, the Chair sees no reason to change its previous ruling, and will revert to the Hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal).

• (1940)

Mr. Joyal: Mr. Speaker, I have already read the text of the motion in French. I could read it again in English, if you wish. But I have completed the reading of the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I thought the hon. gentleman had been interrupted in the course of reading the motion.

Hon. Serge Joyal (for the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan)) moved:

Motion No. 61

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 22 by striking out lines 38 to 40 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"to apply for such a warrant after having obtained the approval of the Minister, the judge may, from time to time, renew the warrant for a period not exceeding the period for which the warrant may be issued pursuant to subsection 21(5) if satisfied by".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, this motion is one which deals with the question of warrants. I know that this grouping includes as well a number of motions which deal with the question of the granting of warrants, including motions proposed by my friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser).

Unfortunately, I was not in the House at the time, but I know we would want to speak on Clause 21, which is the essential clause which grants warrants for some of the instrusive techniques permitted under this legislation. For example, Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 61, which is before the House, would permit the renewal of a warrant for the opening of first class mail. I know that the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, as a former Postmaster General, has some views on the question of the power to open first class mail. This grouping, indeed, refers to the question of opening of mail. It would grant powers to use a judicial warrant to access any government record, whether it be income tax records, confidential employment records or family allowance applications. Indeed, anything in the possession of the Government, Mr. Speaker, would be accessed under the provisions of this Bill. As well, Mr. Speaker, it would permit the breaking and entering into literally any place in this country.

That being said, I would note that this again is a new power in the hands of a security service, a power which does not currently exist. What we are saying, Mr. Speaker, is that even though the status quo is flawed, this Bill would take us backwards. It is a Bill which would give powers to the service to target Canadians who are suspected of being involved in so-called domestic subversion. I know that the Hon. Member for Vancouver South has an amendment in this grouping which deals with that question. It addresses the question of the deleting references to so-called domestic subversion. This Bill would permit intrusive techniques to be used against Canadians even though this proposal was rejected by the McDonald Commission.

Second, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) to this day has absolutely failed to justify his suggestion that intrusive powers are needed against so-called domestic subversives. Time and time again, Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Solicitor General where the evidence is which would suggest that there are groups or individuals in this country who must be targeted by the service because they are attempting to overthrow by violence the democratic structure of government in this country. The Solicitor General has refused to provide any evidence because the reality is, Mr. Speaker, that such evidence does not exist.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, even though the present Commissioner of the RCMP has clearly indicated that the use of such intrusive powers, or the possible use of such intrusive powers, would only be of marginal value at best in the pursuit of the security mandate, this Minister chooses to ignore that fact. He chooses to ignore the recommendations of the McDonald Commission and to completely ignore the practices in other jurisdictions. In the United States, for example, a criminal standard is applied before such intrusive techniques can be made available to the security service. There is no question, Mr. Speaker, but that if powers of this nature were being sought in the United States by the FBI, there would be a congressional uproar. Yet, Hon. Members on the government side sit like trained seals saying, "Ready I ready, Mr. Minister. We will do whatever you want".

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that the powers which are referred to in this grouping, on which we will be hearing very shortly from the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, are so sweeping and so unprecedented that they constitute nothing less than a massive assault on the privacy and civil liberties of Canadians. And this is all done, Mr. Speaker, in the guise of protecting national security. What a chilling example, Mr. Speaker, of double-speak or double-think.

I would note as well, Mr. Speaker, that under the provisions of this Bill, for the first time the confidential medical records of Canadians will be accessible to members of the security service. The Canadian Medical Association, not exactly a left wing subversive group, has written to Parliament urging the Government not to proceed with this Bill. This letter is from the Secretary General of the Canadian Medical Association who concluded by saying, and I quote:

> In summary I must express to you in the strongest possible terms the CMA's concerns over the potential misuse and abuse of the information in medical records if the aforementioned sections are retained in the bill.

The Canadian Medical Association made those representations to the committee. But what does this Government do? It ignores the representations and chooses to proceed with this provision.

The Secretary of State should hang his head in shame at being the mover of motions which would in fact permit access to medical records and which would permit access to confidential government records. At one time that Hon. Member, the Secretary of State, was known as a defender of the civil liberties of Canadians. Unfortunately, in moving this motion on behalf of his colleague, the Solicitor General; this motion which flies in the face of all of the recommendations of the McDonald Commission, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, la Ligue des droits et libertés, and all of the other witnesses who appeared before our committee, the Secretary of State has turned his back on the civil liberties of Canadians. I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, that is a sorry chapter in what has otherwise been a rather distinguished career.

I will conclude now, Mr. Speaker. I know I have little time and we will want to hear from Hon. Members of the Progressive Conservative Party on that important provision.

● (1950)

This legislation constitutes, without any doubt whatsoever, the most serious invasion of the privacy of Canadians that could be imagined. As I noted before, nothing is sacred. Even the church confessional can be bugged under the provisions of this Bill. There is one small exception, that of the census records. But why was it felt that the census records should be singled out, while at the same time allowing security access to medical records, journalist records; indeed, to all of the most confidential records which exist in this country? It is a shameful provision and I urge Members of this House to defeat this Bill, or any measure which would countenance such a massive onslaught on the privacy of Canadians.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I think the Government ought to explain to the House exactly what the purpose of Motion No. 61 is. It says:

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 22 by striking out lines 38 to 40 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"to apply for such a warrant after having obtained the approval of the Minister, the judge may, from time to time, renew the warrant for a period not exceeding the period for which the warrant may be issued pursuant to subsection 21(5)—

That literally means that despite the caveat contained in the spirit of the Bill, for the first renewal the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) must apply his or her mind to the problem. After that it would appear that there is no longer any requirement for the Solicitor General to concern himself or herself with further renewals. If I interpret the wording correctly, then that is really quite an extraordinary section to be moving into the Bill. I cannot understand why Government Members are not explaining what this really is intended to mean.

Mr. Deniger: Because it speaks for itself.

Mr. Fraser: I have forgotten the riding of my friend on the Government side. I will have to write it down because if he keeps making untoward interruptions I will have to put it on the record. He says the words speak for themselves. Well, they do, but is that what the Government intends? If they speak for themselves, they mean that once a warrant is granted the Solicitor General must agree to the first renewal, but after that they can keep renewing forever, before a judge, without the Solicitor General having to agree at all.

We have seen some quite extraordinary actions today on the part of the Government with closure and the refusal to accept any amendments whatsoever. We spent weeks in committee, heard from 25 groups and witnesses, and 50 briefs were filed. Despite all the nonsense that has gone on, and the fraudulent process, which has been commented on a number of times today, this is really quite an extraordinary amendment. I cannot believe, at least I would not want to believe, that Hon. Members sitting here tonight would seriously put this amendment forward and support it knowing what it says. Quite obviously the Government amendment has not been explained to anyone on the other side because they cannot explain it to us.

Just consider this. When you start renewing warrants, once, twice, four times, five times, and on and on and on, that is the very sort of situation the Solicitor General ought to be looking at. Suppose you had a group under surveillance for not just one year, but two years, five years or ten years. Is that not the kind of thing the Solicitor General ought to be addressing his or her mind to? Of course it is. Yet this amendment will legitimize a situation which was surely not intended. We can clutch at any straw of hope that may float by and say, perhaps there is a drafting error. But not a single Member of the Government wants to rise and tell us what in the name of all that is holy this amendment is all about. It does not make any sense. Quite frankly, I do not see how the Government can ask us to vote for it, or even against it, if Members opposite cannot explain it. They are not explaining it.

As you know perfectly well, Mr. Speaker, the position of our Party on these warrants is that they should be for 60 days, as are similar warrants under the Criminal Code. Members of the other Party have supported us on that, and even one Member of the Government side, who unfortunately cannot be here tonight, supports us on it. This clause does not make any sense.

One of these days someone is going to look at this legislation. If something goes wrong, they are going to take a long hard look at it. It will be interesting when Hon. Members on the other side, including the Solicitor General, are asked: You mean to say you put through a provision in this Bill that would literally keep the Solicitor General from knowing about renewals of warrants? This is really quite extraordinary. The whole purpose of having the Solicitor General look at the renewal the first time is to force the political person responsible for the administration of the security service to apply their minds to what is happening.

You can ask: Why is it necessary? It is necessary because the whole reason for this Bill, for the McDonald Commission, for Bill C-157 which went to the Senate, for the Senate report and all of the millions and millions of words expressed on this issue since the revelations of 1977, is to make sure that never again can a Solicitor General and a Prime Minister come in with the fatuous notion, as the Prime Minister did some years ago, that you do not have to worry about secret, illegal things because the courts will look after us. Those are his exact words. How the courts were going to look after us when things were secret and illegal I do not know. But the whole problem started because political Liberal Ministers were not asking the questions they should have been asking, and they were not controlling the security service as they should have been. There was no political control.

Therefore, I invite Hon. Members, if they can, to get up on their feet and explain to me and the public watching tonight, and to the media who I know are paying a great deal of attention, after a lack of attention the last couple of days—explain to all of us who are interested why in the name of heaven you want that amendment.

• (2000)

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, since, by your ruling, we have this clause before us, I want to point out two things in general and give some examples. I first want to point out how astonishing it is that the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) should insist on doing away with his own authority and responsibility and handing it over irrevocably to some appointed official. It is astonishing that he would insist on doing that in a matter in respect of which he is charged with safeguarding the liberties of citizens of Canada.

Second, I wish to point out how astonishing it is that we should be asked to approve a system in which surveillance of a persons not charged with any crime should be allowed to continue year after year in an automatic, bureaucratic way without any responsibility exercised by an elected official.

The public asked that several abuses which were carried out by the RCMP, no doubt at the direction of people such as the Solicitor General, and which abuses were documented by several commissions of inquiry, be corrected. The public is expecting that these abuses will be corrected by this Bill rather than being confirmed, sanctified and extended, which is exactly what the Solicitor General is asking us to do.

An example of the abuses which have undoubtedly happened thousands of times in this country is when the secret police, in this case the RCMP, went to a bishop to try to influence him against licensing a priest because that priest had been engaged in criticizing a law such as the padlock law. The RCMP went secretly to the bishop to try to prevent that priest from being licensed.

Another example is when the RCMP went to the manager of a factory to suggest that a certain worker was perhaps not fit to work in that factory because he had been outspoken in criticism of laws such as the padlock law.

That is not the business of the police. It is not the business that the public understands the police to be engaged in. The police are supposed to be finding wrongdoers and bringing them to light. That is the business the public associates with the Gestapo in Nazi Germany, or with the KGB in the Soviet Union. That is the business of suppressing dissent by intimidation and by spreading malicious and oftern false rumours.

Men, women, children in their strollers and babes in arms come to peace demonstrations and walk at peace under the direction of city police. They obey the law and the officers of the law charged with keeping the peace on the street. Yet other uniformed or police not in uniform are taking pictures of them. Why? Are they finding tens of thousands of criminals, some of them not yet one year old? Certainly not. They are trying to intimidate them. They are trying to make people afraid to come out publicly and express their opinions. This kind of intrusion is to be extended limitlessly. The Minister in charge is to be excused from any responsibility for extending indefinitely the scope of this kind of intrusion.

Travellers to the United States have been fingered by the RCMP with information to the FBI. These are not criminals or suspected criminals. They are only people who have been engaged in legitimate, lawful political activity which the Government of the day does not like. This kind of fingering continues, based partly on information obtained illegally and partly on information obtained with warrants such as this. The Solicitor General is asking that the police have virtually unlimited power to have these warrants renewed year after year so that they can harass these people.

In the same way the police, with or without permission, have been found to have been issuing false, forged documents slandering citizens of Canada. Again, these are not citizens accused of any crime. They are citizens who have engaged in saying truthful things that the Government does not like to have said. The Solicitor General wants the secret police to be able to get those warrants and have them renewed year after year without him having any moral or political responsibility for the harm that is being done by that kind of intimidation of dissent.

The Solicitor General ought to be ashamed. Obviously he does not know the meaning of shame. I hope there is more than one Member of the Government side who is giving this matter some thought. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would say to them that this could happen to any one of them. History is full of examples of that kind of reversal. The people who bring in these repressive laws finally fall under those same laws themselves. I ask Hon. Members opposite to think ahead and recognize what might be done if they ever conscientiously fall afoul of the opinion or the political dogma of some future Solicitor General. This law should not be allowed to pass in its present form.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the outlandish comments made by the Members opposite and I can no longer remain seated after listening to the remarks delivered by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) and the absolutely incoherent words gabbled by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser).

If there is an amendment which to my mind should please most Members in this House, and when I say most, I exclude of course the NDP Members, it is certainly this one because what the Bill said before this amendment was moved, Mr. Speaker—and if I may I shall read it—was, and this is quite clear: "The judge may renew the warrant if satisfied by evidence . . ." The amendment adds two restrictions to what the Hon. Member for Spadina could consider excessive powers. The first restriction or buffer is that the judge may renew the warrant, but only from time to time. From time to time does not necessarily mean always. However, the Opposition Members are trying to tell the Canadian public that this would be an abusive power, and they are taking it for granted that every time a warrant is issued, it would be followed by a second, a third and a fourth, and all this for unspecified periods. This is the first restriction.

The second restriction, Mr. Speaker, concerns the duration of the warrant. In the first version of the Bill, there was no mention of the period covered by the warrant, while the amendment moved by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), which is an excellent amendment, says that the warrant cannot be issued for a period exceeding the first one.

Those two restrictions or buffers, which were not contained in the original text of the Bill, have been added to prevent any abuse.

When the Member opposite mentioned the Padlock Act, which all law students in Quebec have studied, he should have known that this type of abusive political power cannot exist under such a Bill unless he does not believe in the independence of the judiciary. Here again, there is a third restriction because there must be agreement between the judge and the Solicitor General or else the warrant will not be renewed.

In addition, to have a warrant renewed after getting the Solicitor General's agreement, going before a judge and giving evidence to justify the renewal of a warrant for a period not exceeding that of the first one, you would have to prove under the provisions of the Act and all the provisions of Section 21 how the security of Canada and so on are threatened.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot remain seated after hearing such misrepresentations, because if any amendment should please all the Members of this House, it is certainly this one and I urge all my colleagues to support it.

● (2010)

[English]

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the package of amendments now before us with respect to the security bill, I must ask the Government why it believes that it needs more power to snoop on subversives, real or imagined, because it does not require this under other legislation either past or currently before the House. Why does it want more power to snoop on real or imagined subversives than it requires to gather intelligence on murderers, financeers of the narcotics rackets and a host of other criminal activities that are generally considered to be much higher on the national agenda in terms of public concern than matters of so-called national security in Canada? I am not demeaning the nation in any way, but I do not know many Canadians who have believed in recent years that national security and the fear of being spied on is a matter of such paramount concern that we need to usurp our traditional freedoms in order to satisfy a whim of the Government.

Presumably the Government did not grab this idea out of thin air. What does it believe will happen in this nation that it must give unholy attention to the need for all of these mechanisms that are outlined in this legislation? Some of the provisions in this legislation simply do not exist in measures for the investigation of other crimes in Canada at the moment.

One of the amendments moved by my colleague, the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), is Motion No. 59 which states:

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 21 by adding immediately after line 34 at page 13 the following:

"(6) A warrant shall not be issued under subsection 3 authorizing the obtaining of any information or thing or intercepting any communication which would reveal confidential medical records except with the consent of the patient."

What does the Government envisage happening in Canada in the next few years that has never happened before that will require it to be allowed to snoop on the private medical records of patients against their will and the longstanding tradition of confidentiality?

Will we become another Bronx? It was not long ago that I was talking to two German deputies from Schleswig Holstein at a NATO parliamentary conference in Copenhagen. These two members of the Bundestag visited Houston, Texas, and New York City. The one who visited New York City spent two nights in a patrol car in the Bronx. He was horrified because it reminded him of bombed out industrial Germany when he was a child. However, it was not only the physical condition that affected him, it was that no one gave a damn.

Is that what the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and the Government perceives the situation to be in the inner core of Canadian cities? Is that why it is so concerned about the possibility of widespread subversion and civil unrest, that it wants to be able to pry into medical records, taxation records and to continue to snoop by electronic means and the opening of private mail that the law does not permit it to do today?

What does the Government know that we do not know? Perhaps a member of the Government will tell us why it considers this matter of espionage and subversion to be so high on our national agenda that it is prepared to shove every other piece of legislation aside in order to proceed with it. I hope this is a bad dream and a figment of the Government's imagination. There must be a reason why it is willing to subvert our whole process of law in a way that has never been done before in this nation. Perhaps a Government member will enlighten us as to exactly what is taking place that our national priorities, and what is acceptable and unacceptable in law must be changed or will change.

The matter of prying into medical records was the subject of a rather interesting letter from the Canadian Medical Association on May 4, 1984. Mr. Freamo, Secretary General of the Canadian Medical Association, wrote a letter to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in which he said:

My attention has been drawn to criticism of the Canadian Medical Association expressed by committee members during yesterday afternoon's hearing. The criticism appears to have been based on the perceived "non-interest" in Bill C-9 on the part of the Association and in this context I would like to outline for you the CMA's actions to date.

In September of 1983, the CMA was made aware of problems that could ensue if sections of Bill C-157

That was the parent Bill to this one. It continues:

—were to become law. Concern had been expressed by Dr. Phillip Berger in a letter to Ms. Lorraine Gotlib, QC and it was through the Canadian Bar Association (CBA), to whom the letter had been forwarded, that the CMA was made aware of Dr. Berger's concerns.

The joint committee of the CMA/CBA reviewed Bill C-157 and agreed that the concerns and reservations expressed by Dr. Berger were valid. The joint committee reported to its respective executive bodies. Subsequently the CMA communicated its views to the chairman of the Senate committee charged with reviewing Bill C-157.

In mid-April the joint CMA/CBA committee reviewed Bill C-9 and concluded that the concerns previously expressed had not been allayed by the new version of the bill.

Of particular concern to the CMA are the following sections: Section 16—Collection of information concerning foreign states and persons; Section 19—Authorized disclosure of information; Part II Judicial Control, Sections 21-28.

Section 16 does not appear to build in any safeguards in respect to the Service obtaining from physicians information about individuals not protected under the section. The physician may well be in the 'protected' category and as such not have his or her actions investigated; an attempt to do this is outlined in Section 16(2). This section does nothing to protect the patient from having his or her records examined and/or drawing the physician into providing information about a patient over and above what may be recorded in the record.

I do not intend to read any more of that letter. However, I want to again point out to the Government and the public that this agency is going much further in regard to investigative powers than Canadian law has hitherto provided. Why is it necessary?

In the report filed by the Solicitor General for the period covering the last year, we see that some 44 per cent of the electronic snooping carried out in Canada was for reasons of national security. That in itself was a shock. However, when we see the Government paying undue attention to new and unheard of legal powers in Canada, we must be more than just a little disturbed.

Many of my constituents experienced the dark McCarthy era in the United States. We know what can happen even under a regime of law that has traditionally been much more protective of individual liberties than has our own. We have seen the abuses that have taken place once a certain climate of opinion is created. We saw how many people across Canada, including all of the people in the Government, were prepared on the very shallowest of evidence to obliterate or suspend civil liberties across Canada; because a few kids were running around in a couple of cars with guns. We know how easy it is for mass hysteria to be whipped up, just as it was against the Japanese Canadians during the early period of the Second World War.

It is important when we are dealing with these kinds of excesses and new powers that we remember we have to design law not only for normal times, but design the law in such a way that it will safeguard our basic rights at a time when national and public opinion may be, to say the least, abnormal and excited to the point where steps may be taken that would not normally be pursued.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question? The Solicitor General for Canada (Mr. Kaplan).

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by apologizing to Members for my short absence from the House in the last hour during which one of the Government amendments came up. It is not an amendement of tremendous consequence. It was merely an attempt by the law officers of the Crown to redraft an amendment which I accepted during committee hearings.

I am glad to see the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) in the House, even though I believe he is hiding behind the curtain, because it gives me the opportunity to contradict the assertion that not one single amendment was accepted during the committee hearings. In fact, amendments were accepted during committee hearings. This is an example of one. I wish the Hon. Member would stop saying that absolutely not one single amendment was accepted during committee hearings.

The object of the redrafting is rather technical. It is to conform the ministerial approval feature to the method in which ministerial approval is provided in the earlier part of the Bill which deals with first application for a warrant.

In so far as the convoluted interpretation of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South about whether the Minister's approval is required for subsequent renewals, I can assure him that it is. In the way the legislation is drafted now, not only is the original application subject to ministerial pre-approval, but every renewal will require ministerial approval. I think that is a suggestion made by members of the committee from all sides of the House, which the Government was very pleased to accept. The amendment which is being proposed by me for the Government on this subject is simply an attempt to draft the ministerial renewal provision in the same manner as the ministerial approval in the original warrant clause provides.

The Hon. Member who just spoke has left the House, after asking some tremendously difficult questions. I can see that the questions he asks are very important ones, questions which ought to concern every Member of Parliament. But I would like to remind him, or tell him, because it may be news to him, that that is not the first time those questions have been asked. Those questions have been asked in committee and at second reading. I can assure the Hon. Member that very good answers were given by me and by other witnesses.

Mr. Kristiansen: Let's have them.

Mr. Kaplan: For example, the McDonald Commission itself recommended the powers which are provided in this Bill.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Solicitor General is misleading the House. The McDonald Commission did not recommend intrusive powers against so-called domestic subversives, and the Minister knows that well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) does not have a point of order. The Hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan).

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): The Minister should not mislead the House.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member interrupted me. This is something the two of us have said to each other so often, I would say perhaps three or four dozen times. He has made the point that the McDonald Commission recommended these powers, and that is the point I have just made. But it did not recommend that they be available for domestic subversion. But when you talk about letter opening and all of the intrusive horrendous, in their view, powers which are being awarded to this service—

Mr. Kristiansen: Are they not?

Mr. Kaplan: —this is something which is news to the Hon. Member—They were recommended by the McDonald Commission for use, if the Hon. Member for Burnaby will let me finish, in connection with sub-paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of the definition. I have taken the position for the Government that they should also be available for sub-paragraph (d). But again the Hon. Member for Burnaby and I have had this exchange so often that it is painful for me to repeat it.

Mr. Heap: It is painful for us to listen to you.

Mr. Kaplan: This, of course, is one of the reasons the Government has introduced time allocation. It is because you just cannot go on hour after hour, day after day, having the Member ask the same questions, having the Minister give the same answers, having the Member ask the same questions, and having me give the same answers.

Mr. Kristiansen: Give a substantive answer, then.

Mr. Kaplan: You reach a certain point—

Mr. Blais: Sit down and listen over there.

Mr. Kaplan: —I am not giving my substantive answer again. I have given a substantive answer which has satisfied the media. I have given a substantive answer which has satisfied my caucus. I can give an answer; I can explain something to the Members opposite, but I cannot understand it for them. That is up to them. If they are not capable of doing it, I think we should just move along to another section of the Bill.

Mr. Kristiansen: Explain it.

Mr. Kaplan: I will not explain it again because I am fed up explaining it again. My answers are on the record dozens of times and I am not making them again. It is insulting of that Hon. Member to arrive here hundreds of hours after this debate has begun and start asking questions that were asked in the first five minutes of those hundreds of hours and were answered in the first five minutes. Nuts to him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is on Motion No. 52, the first motion of the present series of motions which has been debated. The motion is moved by Mr. Robinson, seconded by Mr. Heap, who moves that Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 21.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Order, please. The next grouping of motions starts with Motion No. 64.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I take it that in having deferred that grouping, we deferred all motions which were included in that grouping?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The vote on Motion No. 52 is deferred and that, of course, will defer all the rest of the votes on the motions in that particular grouping.

[Translation]

Mr. Deniger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please! The Hon. Member for La Prairie (M. Deniger) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Deniger: I just want to make sure that this is clear, so that there is no misunderstanding like before. They say here—and I understand that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 58 would dispose of Motions Nos. 53 etc., but that a negative vote would necessitate votes on Motions Nos. 54, 55, 56, 57, 58 and 59—now that I have read it again, I think I understand, don't you, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Personally, I feel there is no misunderstanding.

[English]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): moved:

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 23.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): For the benefit of the House, the motions before the House are Motions Nos. 64, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 80, 82, 87, 88, 90, 92, 98, 102, 104, 105, 106, 107, 110, 111, and 112.

• (2030)

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not clear about Your Honour's ruling on the point of order raised by the distinguished Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Deniger: It was for clarification.

Mr. Forrestall: It was for clarification. Perhaps the Chair might reiterate that because I am not sure that what I heard left that impression.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It was for clarification. When the vote on Motion No. 52 was deferred, that automatically deferred the vote on all other motions in that particular grouping.

If the House wishes, I could read all the motions in this particular grouping. Shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is that the pleasure of the House? I could read them all.

An Hon. Member: Read them all.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would urge Hon. Members opposite not to require the Chair to go through the motion of reading the motions included in this grouping. If they are interested in debate, surely they are capable of reading them and can spend the time more usefully discussing them.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I appreciate the new-found interest of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) in providing time for debate.

Mr. Blais: That is unfair.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): However, I would remind the Solicitor General that there are people outside this Chamber who are watching what is going on. They are watching with anger and outrage what is going on. Surely they should be entitled to observe these proceedings as well.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. It is the desire of the Official Opposition not to require the Chair to read in detail the amendments. I believe they are familiar to the people of Canada. The people of Canada are quite aware of our general opposition to the amendments. We do not require the reading of them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Whilst the Chair appreciates that comment, it is also the wish of the Chair to please all Hon. Members of the House. If certain Members require that the motions be read, the Chair will so do. The Chair has already read Motion No. 64. The remaining motions read as follows:

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 69.
That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 25.
Motion No. 70.
That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 26.

Motion No. 110

Motion No. 111
That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 50.

[English]

Motion No. 112.
That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 51.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): For debate on the grouping of motions, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the comments by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) that indeed the people who are watching the debate on television should know exactly what is happening as a result of these motions, perhaps Your Honour would return to the initial section which is being eradicated as a result of the motions so that the audience will be able to see exactly what provision is being deleted. In that way they will be better able to understand the debate before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I am afraid the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) will have to provide some explanation to the Chair on that point of order as to precisely what he wants me to do.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am suggesting that you have indicated the motions being introduced and the numbers of the clauses to be deleted. Since there is no explanation of what clauses are being deleted, so that the audience will know in accordance with the wishes of the Hon. Member for Burnaby the content of the clauses, perhaps Your Honour would want to read each one of them. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Burnaby would like to read each one of the clauses.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Now I understand what the Hon. Minister is saying. I have read the motions, which is all I have to read. If anyone else wants to read the clauses, they are perfectly at liberty to do so. The Bill is available to all Members of the House and I assume, on demand, to any member of the public who wishes to have it.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The purpose of the editorial electrification of our debates was for the edification of the people of Canada. It was not to prolong their suffering. Rather, it was to enable them to enjoy the House of Commons. The distinguished Member of Parliament who holds the portfolio of Minister of National Defence knows better. His remarks were somewhat facetious. On the other hand, I might join with him in the sentiment which he expressed because sometimes we do baffle people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I do not consider that to be a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I want to proceed to a very sober consideration of this important grouping of motions to delete. The motions in question would delete a number of clauses. I will certainly not take the time of the House to refer to all of them in the 10 minutes available to me.

Mr. Masters: Why not?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Because there are members of the public who have copies of the Bill available. I am sure they will follow with interest the debates in the House with copies of the Bill in their hands. They know that Liberal Members of the House have taken no interest whatsoever in the Bill to this point. Certainly we would welcome the participation of those Members in this debate for the first time.

• (2040)

Clause 23 gives a new power to enter any place, to remove anything which has been placed in a dwelling house, office or any other location. I would note briefly that this is a power which is being accorded to the service for the first time. As well, under the provisions of Clause 26 of the proposed Bill, none of the procedural safeguards which exist under the provisions of the Criminal Code with respect to interceptions of telephone communications under the code, none or at least minimal safeguards apply under this Bill. For example, the rules of evidence with respect to derivative evidence are not applicable. None of the safeguards that this Parliament insisted upon under the provisions of this Bill. We say that is wrong.

As well, under the provisions of the Bill that deal with the powers and functions of the proposed Security Intelligence Review Committee, I would note that this committee can engage in very sweeping powers, but the powers are circumscribed by one very essential element. That element is the oath of secrecy which is included in Clause 37. Under the provisions of Clause 37, the members of the Security Intelligence Review Committee are required to swear that they will not disclose or make known to any person any information acquired by them by reason of the duties that they are performing under the Act. Effectively what this does is to deny any power of meaningful oversight when coupled with the provision of this Bill that would deny them access to Cabinet documents as well.

In addition, the powers and functions of this review committee are set out at proposed Clause 38 of the Bill. These powers as set out in that clause fall short of those which are required for full and effective scrutiny and oversight. For example, there is no power under the provisions of the Bill as it is now worded for the service to review the relationships that exist between the security service and all other bodies and agencies engaged in security or intelligence functions in Canada. Despite the clear recommendation of the McDonald Commission and number of other witnesses that any review committee should have jurisdiction over all of the players in the intelligence community, this Bill would not grant that jurisdiction to the proposed Security Intelligence Review Committee.

As well, the committee has no explicit power to review the criteria which are set out for security assessments under subclause 13 of the Bill, security assessments which are obviously critical when it comes to the awarding of contracts, the hiring of individuals for government jobs or promotions. The criteria for those assessments are currently set out in an outdated Cabinet document, Cabinet Directive No. 35, which dates back over 20 years to 1963. There is no requirement whatsoever that the new review committee review the criteria of these security assessments to ensure that there is not an excessive number of such assessments and that such assessments are being carried out pursuant to carefully drafted criteria.

I would note as well there is no provision in the Bill that grants the review committee the power to review the terms of conditions of employment which are established by the director pursuant to Clause 8 of this Bill. I made reference to this on an earlier amendment, the possibility of unfair or unreasonable terms and conditions of employment being established by the director and with the denial of any form of collective bargaining rights to members of the service. They have no alternative whatsoever, no recourse at all. Clause 38 should permit the members of the service to have the terms and conditions of their employment reviewed by the Security Intelligence Review Committee.

Under the provisions of Clause 47 of the proposed Bill, where there is a complaint about the activities or conduct of the new civilian security service, the review committee has to tell the director ahead of time: "Excuse me, Mr. Director, there has been a complaint made about you. We are coming in to investigate." What does that do to the powers of independent investigation, this so-called independent watchdog that is supposed to be scrutinizing the new service? When they want to investigate a potential wrongdoing, before they get to first base they are denied any access to Cabinet documents and they have to inform the director that they are coming in to investigate. It makes a mockery of any suggestion of effective or independent oversight.

Clause 50 is another clause which would be deleted under the motions which have been grouped for the purpose of this debate. It was important that the Speaker not dispense with the reading of those motions so that the people of this country will know clearly that at least one Party in this House is prepared, unfortunately without the assistance of the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal), to fight the fight against this repressive legislation, a fight which in the past the Secretary of State was prepared to wage against similar repressive provisions in the Immigration Act.

Under Clause 50 of this Bill, the review committee has sweeping powers to summon individuals before it, to receive and accept evidence and other information, whether on oath, on affidavit or otherwise, as the committee sees fit. That means that in the case of an individual such as Victor Regolado, the El Salvadoran refugee who, despite being found to be a bona fide political refugee in this country was ordered out of Canada, ordered deported by virtue of a signature by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and his colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), the review committee could rely upon hearsay evidence submitted to them in the form of a letter from a secret police service in one of these repressive military dictatorships suggesting that the individual in question is a threat to security. There was a time when the Secretary of State would have stood in his place and denounced these repressive measures. Sadly, that time appears to have been passed. This provision makes a mockery of the rules of natural justice which should apply when dealing with the fundamental liberties of Canadians and indeed the fundamental civil liberties of visitors to this country.

In conclusion, I urge the Members of this House to support the motions before us. They deal with clauses which pose very serious concerns to Canadians. They deal with clauses which should be deleted in the interest of protecting and enhancing the civil liberties of all Canadians.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this perversion in the Government's Bill of the idea of a review committee is one of the two or three most serious faults in it. We have been told that the Government's legislation follows much of the McDonald Commission's recommendations. On certain points it does. We have been told that it follows the Pitfield recommendations. On certain points it does. One point on which the McDonald Commission was explicit was that this review committee should be set up to have real powers of review and should be subject to Parliament. There is something now being proposed, given the same name, that in its essential nature was changed by the Solicitor General's Bill.

This review committee has no right to access to Cabinet documents. I have heard Members opposite state publicly and to the media that this committee will have access to all information. That is false. I think that Members opposite, including some of the senior front-benchers who have made that statement, must know that what they are saying is false and intended to mislead the public. The committee will not have access to all information. It will be denied access to any Cabinet document which the director or the Cabinet or both together may choose to deny it.

The committee will not have the unfettered right to inquire into the actions of the secret service. It will need to give notice so that matters can be covered up, re-arranged and fudged over before the committee looks at them. The committee will be limited by an oath of secrecy so that it may learn things only under circumstances which prevent it from acting on the knowledge it receives. It may find itself in a position of servere conflict of conscience.

Parliament is essentially denied its control over that committee. I was very sorry to hear the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) say earlier this evening that the appointment of senior people to the committee will require the approval of the opposition Parties. That is false. I suppose the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton knew what it was false when he said it. However, he is not present so that he may blush. According to the legislation, those appointments do not require the approval of opposition Parties. The recommendation of the McDonald Commission was that those appointments should require that approval.

I do not know the intentions of the Hon. Member, but I regret the fact that he is not here to correct any unintentionally misleading remark he may have made. It was certainly misleading when he said that such approval is required. That is entirely false and I am sorry that a front-bencher for the Liberal Party would make that kind of remark. We have been told how this matter has been discussed over and over in caucus so as to create the best possible Bill. I am sure the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton was party to those discussions. He must know that on the very point about which he spoke, what he said was not true.

This Bill does not require that the members of the review committee be approved by the leaders of the opposition Parties. It only requires that the Prime Minister shall consult with the leaders of the opposition Parties. In other words, the Prime Minister may say: "I am going to appoint Mr. So-and-So and Mr. So-and-So, what do you think?" The leaders of the opposition Parties may say: "No, they are not fit," and the Prime Minister may reply: "Tough luck, boys, I am appointing them." That is consultation. It is consultation that is not subject to any requirement that the Leader of the Official Opposition or the leader of any other Party having 12 Members of the House should give approval.

It is very interesting that while the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) is using every dirty trick in the book to drive this legislation through the House, his front-bench colleagues find it appropriate to mislead the public by saying that appointments to this vital review committee require the input of the leaders of the opposition Parties. They know that that is false. They should be ashamed of their attempt to mislead the public in such a fashion. They are not misleading the opposition Parties. This is a point about which both opposition Parties have already made a very clear complaint. However, it is a point about which it appears the government Party is willing to try to mislead the media or, through the media, to mislead the public. It is very unfortunate that government Members have stooped so low.

These clauses of the Bill ought to be deleted. Better still, they should be withdrawn by the Government for reformulation so that they will be in accordance with the recommendations of the McDonald Commission. The recommendations of the McDonald Commission have the support of everyone in the country who has spoken to this matter, except the Solicitor General and his Party. They form the tiny minority in this country which disagrees with the McDonald Commission on this point, along with perhaps a few Party colleagues in the Senate.

The people who have spoken on this matter want that review committee to fall under the authority of the whole of Parliament, and not only the authority of the Government in consultation with the rest of Parliament. They want Parliament to have the powers of investigation that were recommended by the McDonald Commission. I urge the Government to withdraw these clauses. If that does not happen, I urge members of the Government to join with the opposition in voting them down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is on Motion No. 64, the first motion of the grouping which has already been read to the House.

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. As I said a little earlier, that automatically defers the divisions on the other motions contained within this particular grouping.

The next motion, the first in the grouping, is Motion No. 75. I shall read the motion.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 75

Motion No. 77

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 31.

Motion No. 78

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 31

(a) by striking out line 16 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"Parliament, the"

(b) by striking out lines 26 to 31 at page 16.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South) moved:

Motion No. 79

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 31

(a) by striking out line 16 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"Parliament, the"

(b) by striking out lines 26 to 31 at page 16.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): For debate, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser).

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, there are only a few minutes left. Certainly Motion No. 79 which stands in my name, along with the other motions in this grouping, is of very significant substance. I wonder if it might be the pleasure of the House to permit me to call it nine o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CROWN CORPORATIONS—NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY LIMITED—PROPOSED SALE OF COMPANY. (B) CASH ASSETS OF COMPANY

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, when I raised a particular question in December my main concern arose from the prospect that members of the management of NTCL may be involved in a consortium to purchase NTCL. This would give them a decided advantage over all other interest groups as they have had over four years to prepare for the sale of the company. It is for this reason that I raised that question.

In July, 1983, as a member of the Indian and Northern Affairs Committee, I began investigating the operations of NTCL. I placed my many concerns on the Order Paper. I have not received answer to those questions, even though the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gave me the assurances that then would be responded to before the company was privatized.

My concerns regarded safety practices; the quality of the steel which was used to build the barges for bulk fuel hauling, general mismanagement, as evidenced by the Thruster bargers and the refitting of the M.V. Broderick and the M.V. Bankland, and the desire for public hearings in communities which are serviced by NTCL in order that the people in the North could provide their input as to the conditions of sale.

I would like to put three concerns before the House. They are the assessment of the land, the accounting of revenues and the legislative requirements of the sale. As this company is intended to be privatized, it is important that there be an accurate assessment of the value.

The share value of the company is $25 million. There are shares of $250,000. The assessed assets are $60 million. That means that there is a share value of $240 per share. Some say that the assessed value is as high as $250 million. That would mean that the share value is $1,000 per share. If the assessed value is $100 million, the share value would be $400 per share. These are examples of assessed values. It is important for perceived buyers to know what the company is worth.

I would like to examine the Fort McMurray problem, which involves some 49 acres, most of which was seconded during wartime for this company. It was received at a very low book value, which is now the value it is assessed at in the company's assets. In Fort McMurray, the assessed value of its property, undeveloped, zoned industrial with no development plan at the present time is $5.5 million. As soon as a development plan is put forward and this property is zoned commercial the value will increase to $8.5 million. We know that NTCL has put forward a development plan, even though the chairman indicated that that was not taking place.

Now there is the arrival of First Boston of Canada. They are supposed to perform an assessment of the value of the company. It is important for that company to know what NTCL's assets are and what the potentials are if those assets are developed. We need a fair, accurate and real assessment. Therefore, I hope that the report of First Boston will be tabled in the House so that we all will know that it is an accurate assessment of the value.

We know that there is an architectural development plan for a shopping complex, complete with office towers, in progress. In fact, the present land has been re-zoned from industrial to commercial. Therefore, its assessed value will increase.

Another concern I have relates to the ARD-31. This ship was given to NTCL by treaty from the United States Government. NTCL is required by that treaty to report all revenues and profits to the United States Government. We are very concerned that this is not the case. We heard in the standing committee the state of the declared revenues from 1979 to 1980. There were no profits. In 1981, there was a profit of $4,000. In 1982, there was a profit of $233,000. In 1983, there was a loss of $321,000. It is impossible for NTCL to have revenues of $233,000 in 1982 if one company had leasing fees in that year of over $1 million. NTCL serves many other companies.

My concern is that for some reason there has been an improper reporting to the United States Government of the actual revenues and profits that the ARD-31 is earning in the North. I have been listening to the questions of a Congresswoman in the United States regarding the reporting of this income. The President of NTCL was asked to provide answers to those questions and he refused to do so. That indicates that there is some suspicion of what is taking place.

I have a copy of a letter which is addressed to the Congresswoman, the Hon. Patricia Schroeder, wherein it reads:

The Air Force contract administrator, Captain Mohn, attempted to obtain the requested information; however, Mr. L.R. Montpetit, President of NTCL, declined to provide the information.

Grimshaw Trucking, a wholly-owned subsidiary of NTCL, a Crown corporation, had been bidding for contracts this year at 1980 rates. Is it fair that a company which is a Crown corporation should be under-bidding the private corporations in that area, many of which are showing losses? They can in no way compete with these 1980 rates. Why would that company be doing this now, at a time when it is supposedly going to be privatized? The only reason I can see for that is they want to bring the value down so that those people who are interested in buying the company, perhaps even the managers themselves, will have a better opportunity to do so.

If one looks at the company, one will find that it has liquid assets almost equal to half the value of the company. It is almost possible to buy the company out with its own cash and the sale of some of its subsidiaries. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I want answers to these questions before this Government privatizes that company. I believe that anyone who would buy that company would want the same kinds of answers. I want to make sure that the taxpayers of this nation get fair value for what they have put into this company and that the citizens of the north who depend on it for service continue to receive that service.

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to answer the question raised by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) concerning the sale of Northern Transportation Company Limited.

The Hon. Member's concern seems to be that the Government of Canada is proceeding too quickly with the sale of this company to the private sector. However, it stands to reason the Government would want to expedite the sale. The Hon. Member should realize that once the decision has been made to sell the company, there is no reason to delay the sale. Any delay would create confusion that would cause concern among both employees and prospective buyers. We want to avoid this as much as possible. We would like to dispose of the company in circumstances conducive to getting us the best price. We would like Northern Transportation Company Limited to continue its important function as a reliable and efficient supplier for Northern communities and businesses.

As for the questions raised by the Hon. Member, I can assure him that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) is aware of these questions and that they will be answered. There is no connection between the decision to sell the company and questions that have been raised about details of the company's operations. Our decision to sell Northern Transportation Company Limited was made after an exhaustive analysis of the implications for native peoples and Northern development, not out of opportunistic, short-term considerations.

The Hon. Member has expressed concern about the company's assets. He ought to know that the company runs a seasonal operation which therefore needs more working capital than most other operations. He should also realize that the end of the year happens to be the time when the company's cash flow is at its maximum. It is therefore inaccurate to infer a connection between the financial situation of the company and the shutdown of the Athabasca operation. The decision to shut down the Athabasca operation was made after substantial financial losses were ascertained and after a thorough analysis of the situation, which confirmed there were acceptable alternatives to this traditional service.

As far as the Churchill operation is concerned, Northern Transportation Company Limited has not slowed down this operation at all, whatever the Hon. Member's questions may seem to suggest. Traffic depends on customers and not on Northern Transportation Company Limited.

ENERGY—PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND ENERGY COSTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY. (B) IMPACT OF NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on May 25, and then again on June 14, I posed questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) concerning the astronomically high electrical costs that burden the people of Prince Edward Island. Those costs are twice as high as those faced by the people of even the neighbouring provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. In Ottawa, people pay one third the electrical costs of people in Prince Edward Island. This situation prevents P.E.I. from being competitive with the rest of Canada because high electrical costs force up over-all costs of production, rendering the price of our goods and services unattractive to potential customers.

Indeed, high electrical cost was one of the key factors which forced the closure of Canada Packers in Charlottetown, the Island's second largest private sector employer. Cavendish Farms, a food-processing company located about 30 miles west of Charlottetown, estimates that its electrical bill alone exceeds $1 million a year, well over twice as high as that of its principal competitor, McCain Foods Limited of New Brunswick.

If Prince Edward Island is ever to achieve any degree of economic self-sufficiency, the province will require federal assistance with its electrical costs. Even a modest investment by the federal Government will go a long way toward reducing electrical costs for Island industry and consumers alike.

I asked about that possibility in my questions to the Minister of Finance in the House, but his reply was totally negative. He suggested that the federal Government was already subsidizing the Island's electrical costs through conservation programs, contributions to the cost of building the underground energy cable between P.E.I. and New Brunswick, and through other initiatives, including transfer payments which he said were higher for that province on a per capita basis than any other province in Canada. Most telling of all, the Minister said that Prince Edward Island had its opportunity to obtain cheaper energy by buying into the Lepreau nuclear plant in New Brunswick but had rejected that option for fear of, in the Minister's words, getting nuclear electricity out of its light bulbs.

I will ignore the Minister's claim that P.E.I. is already receiving its share of federal dollars in the form of transfer payments, for example, except to say this. It is largely because the federal Government has not recognized or helped with the Island's unique energy problems that we are so dependent on federal handouts, whether they be equalization payments to the provincial Government or unemployment insurance payments to individuals. If the federal Government would address our root problems, especially energy and transportation, it would cost the federal Government much less money in the long run, by enabling us to stand on our own feet.

As for the argument that we blew our opportunity for cheaper energy from Lepreau, the Minister is simply dead wrong. As P.E.I. Minister Fred Driscoll rightly pointed out at a recent news conference, the acquisition by P.E.I. of part of the Lepreau plant would not have reduced rates, it would have driven them up. The fact is P.E.I.s current purchases of power from the Dalhousie coal and oil-fired generating plant will be cheaper than the Lepreau option every single year right into the 1990s.

Comparative costs of purchasing power at January, 1983 levels based on 20Mw of Dalhousie power and 30Mw of LePreau power—the original entitlement amount—are 10.5 cents per kilowatt hour for Dalhousie and 10.7 cents per kilowatt for LePreau power. Even cheaper than Dalhousie would be power from Quebec Hydro, if that power could be transmitted through New Brunswick, a possibility the P.E.I. Government is now vigourously pursuing with the two governments concerned.

I hasten to point out that P.E.I. did not reject the LePreau option for environmental reasons alone, as the Minister suggested. The P.E.I. Government of Premier Angus MacLean recognized that by buying into LePreau it would have committed itself, as a part owner, to a share of all liabilities should the plant encounter problems or even have to shut down altogether, without any guarantee that a single kilowatt of electricity would be delivered to the Island. Given the problems with certain nuclear facilities in Ontario, such a doomsday scenario was not, and is not, far-fetched.

Why should the Minister be so shocked by my suggestion of a direct energy subsidy? Experts suggest that a $20 million one-shot subvention would be all that is needed to bring the Island's electrical costs in line with the rest of the Maritimes.

I will conclude by saying that the federal Government has been prepared to subsidize energy in practically every other province, from nuclear generating plants, to pipelines, to natural gas prices pegged at 65 per cent of oil prices, to every manner of other energy initiatives. Why should P.E.I. be discriminated against? You can be sure, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister would be much less reluctant if his native province of Quebec were in P.E.I.'s position. I urge the Minister, at the very least, to view this entire issue with an open mind.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is not federal Government policy to directly subsidize electricity rates in any province, including Prince Edward Island. We have encouraged Prince Edward Island to negotiate long-term, firm power purchases with New Brunswick power and Hydro-Quebec. Such an arrangement represents the best opportunity for Prince Edward Island to bring its electricity rates down to the national average over the long term.

It is, and has been, federal Government policy to subsidize energy costs generally in P.E.I. in a variety of ways. In 1976 Canada provided assistance to P.E.I. through construction of an underwater electrical transmission cable linking the Island's distribution system to that of New Brunswick. The $36 million cost of this cable was supported by a 50 per cent federal Government grant and a 25 per cent loan.

Prince Edward Island's particular energy circumstances were recognized in the National Energy Program of October 1980. A number of measures special to Prince Edward Island were announced. The enhanced conservation portion of the Canada Oil Substitution Program provided special grants for residential investments reducing oil heating costs on the Island. The Altantic Energy Conservation Investment Program was established, providing grants to firms for investments that increase energy efficiency. In addition, Prince Edward Island benefited from national conservation and renewable energy programs. To date $19.16 million has been expended in Prince Edward Island under the following programs: Canada Oil Substitution Program, $2.85 million; Canadian Home Insulation Program, $10.01 million; Atlantic Energy Conservation Investment Program, $.35 million; Conservation and Renewable Energy Demonstration Program, $3.25 million; Forest Industry Renewable Energy, $1.9 million; National Energy Audit Program, $.8 million.

In 1982 Energy, Mines and Resources agreed to undertake a special study, Prince Edward Island energy alternatives. The first phase of this study, which was completed in December, 1983, concluded that the most economic means of reducing energy costs on the Island lay primarily in conservation and the use of wood or biomass. Both alternatives involve a significant degree of provincial content generating economic benefits to the Island.

The federal Government is in the process of concluding an energy sub-agreement with Prince Edward Island which would expend several million dollars on initiatives which would concentrate on utilizing underdeveloped biomass and agricultural waste resources as alternative fuel sources, help to offset high energy costs, reduce the province's relatively heavy dependence on oil and provide a significant economic stimulus to the province itself.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MILITARY ACCIDENTS—RELEASE OF INQUIRY TRANSCRIPTS. (B) NAMES OF INQUEST WITNESSES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to follow up on a question that I asked of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Blais) some time ago. When I rose in the House on that day I was concerned that a promise the Minister had made on the nationally televised CBC, The Journal, was not being kept up to that point.

I was referring to the fact that the Minister had appeared on The Journal with respect to a case, which came to his attention through my raising it in the House, of the accidental deaths of two militia privates in Saskatchewan in August of last year. It is a long story which I will not go through, but through a series of questions in the House we came to a point where we broke some new ground in terms of the release of information to parents of militiamen killed in accidents while on duty.

The Minister indicated to me that no longer would people have to go through the access to information route to get copies of the transcripts of the inquiries that the militia conducts when such incidents occur. I had to go through that process on behalf of my constituents in order to set some precedents, and after that the Minister said that from now on parents or designated next of kin would not have to go through that process. All that they would have to do is indicate that they wanted a copy of the transcript and they would get it. That is the commitment that he made on national television that evening.

Some weeks later, however, I phoned the mothers of two militiamen who had been killed and they still had not received the transcripts, even though the Minister said on television some weeks before that all they had to do was call the next morning and he would see to it that everything was looked after and would turn out just fine. Yet we found out some weeks later that although those people had phoned the next morning they had not heard back from anybody and had not received a copy of the transcript. I rose at that time to push and hopefully embarrass the Minister into doing something about living up to that commitment.

I did make one accusation that day that I want to correct. At that time I indicated that the coroner who will preside over the coroner's inquest which is to be held this Friday in fact, into the Krosney-Laurendeau accident had been unable to get a copy of the Board of Inquiry transcript from the Canadian Armed Forces. That was the situation to the best of my information when I said that to the Minister in the House on that day. I learned later that day, from talking to people who were concerned, that the coroner had on the previous weekend been supplied with a copy of the transcript. Just for the record, and out of respect for the facts, I wanted to make that correction on the record.

However, a number of other concerns still stand. I would like to know, and I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary who is here to answer for the Minister will be able to tell me, whether or not the two designated next of kin who were the object of my discussion with the Minister the last time I rose in the House have now received a transcript. The Minister indicated to me in a letter that he would be in communication with those parents and would be providing them with the transcript. I would like to know if that has happened.

• (2125)

I would also like to know, Mr. Speaker, why in the case of Krosney there only seems to have been reform from the top down so far. I have to give the Minister some credit for having responded to the pressure we put on him through the media, through questions in the House and through petitions, etc. It took some doing, but nevertheless there has been some response. We see this reform from the top down but we still see no reform at the bottom, so to speak, at the regional and local level within the militia. The parents of Private Krosney and Private Laurendeau have still not heard from the militia. They have not received a letter of explanation, apology, or regret that all of this hassle had to be gone through, on top of their grief.

I wonder whether the reason for that is because in the final analysis, in spite of the fact we now have the transcript, and we were even able to get the recommendations which were initially hidden from us through the use of the access to information exemption, the fundamental question of whether or not Private Krosney on that day was trained to drive the vehicle he was driving was not addressed in the recommendations. In the evidence there is plenty of indication that he was not trained. In fact, there was a bald admission that he had no previous training driving a jeep with a gun on the top and a trailer behind it. If that is not addressed in the recommendations, maybe that is why there is still that kind of silence. I do not know, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Minister will have some answers for me.

May I just say that I do not want my comments in any way to be construed as an attack on the militia or the cadets or anything like that. I am a supporter of them. I rose in the House the other day to ask for increased funding for the army cadet leader course at Vernon. There are many other issues on which I will have occasion to rise in support of some of the work the militia and the cadets are doing. But they have to clean up their act with respect to how they relate to accidents and how they relate to next of kin. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will have something positive to report.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) for his continued interest and his continued support and concern for the militia. I understand the Minister has written the Hon. Member a letter in response to his May 23 question in the House. I believe in the three minutes allotted to me that it is worth recording the salient points which the letter contained.

When a member of the Canadian Forces dies in the course of his military duty, Canadian Forces authorities, by regulation, are required to conduct an investigation into the circumstances surrounding the death. This investigation usually takes the form of a board of inquiry which, I might add, is not a substitute for the provincial coroner's investigation, report or inquest.

In addition to determining reasons for and cause of death the Canadian Forces investigation may be used in support of an application for a pension for dependants, it may identify problems regarding material, it may alert authorities to critical requirements pertaining to operations and training. The investigation is a record as defined by the Access to Information Act and, as such, one may gain access to it in accord with and subject to the provisions of that Act.

The Minister has directed that the designated next of kin of a deceased member of the Canadian Forces need not follow the prescribed procedures in the Access to Information Act. Such a request, be it written or oral, is to be treated as if it were an access request under the Access to Information Act. It will be reviewed and subject to the exemptions provided in the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act, the investigation will be provided to the requester.

Addressing now that part of the Hon. Member's question which dealt with the provision of information to the Coroner of the Province of Saskatchewan in respect of the deaths of Privates Krosney and Laurendeau, I am able to inform you that on 27 April 1984 the Minister personally corresponded with Dr. McMillan. He also directed Canadian Forces authorities to extend fullest co-operation with the Coroner in the discharge of his duties. To that end, a copy of the minutes of the proceedings of the board of inquiry convened to investigate the deaths of Privates Krosney and Laurendeau was provided to the Coroner. The minutes provided were complete and include the names of personnel who gave evidence with the exception that the findings and recommendations portions had been removed. The minutes were provided to him for his personal use in the performance of his duties and, as a consequence, they were not to be made public or form part of teh evidence submitted at the inquest.

I am pleased to advise the Hon. Member that the Minister has personally written both to Mrs. Anne McKinnon and Mrs. Caroline Davies forwarding each a copy of the Board of Inquiry they requested. This should have given them the information the Member requested concerning the licence to drive. The only information not contained is that which is exempted from disclosure under the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act.

POLITICAL PARTIES

RESULT OF LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, thinking that the Liberal Party still retains some vestige of collective intelligence, I had so wagered on the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) last weekend. However, the death wish was amongst them and they disregarded the one candidate who might have stood them one small chance of success in the next election.

Doomed to failure with a Leader whose first act as the Prime Minister designate was to impose closure on the security Bill, therefore showing his disdain for Canadians and the institution of Parliament, the Liberals struggle manfully on to the oblivion that awaits them at the polls. Now that our friend from the ivory towers of Bay Street corporate law is to give up his lucrative directorships in CPR, Massey-Ferguson, Bechtel, Seagram's, et cetera, let me suggest that after the next election Mr. Turner could always keep body and soul together by selling Glad bags on television.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CONVENTION—ROLE OF EDMONTON MAYOR

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, westerners are proud people of honour who believe that a handshake agreement is a contractual bond. Then the bomb arrived. The true Grit Edmonton mayor who nominated the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) for Leader of the Liberal Party did a 100-yard dash to self-serving safety, right in the middle of round one. Commitment and loyalty were consumed by nervousness. The mayor's Liberal instinct was to seek power with honour if necessary, but not necessarily an honourable power. His was a buddy system that left his friend choking in the water while he climbed into a new self-preservation suit. What may we expect of a person who so openly betrays a friend? Would this person also pretend to oppose wage and price controls, or fool people into believing that we could have cheap gasoline in spite of world price, or speak with a forked tongue about co-operative federalism?

Apparently winning was more important than honour. In his game the score is irrelevant. The rules, written or otherwise, are there to be broken. All that matters is the glitter of the trophy at the pinnacle of power. When Lawrence was elected mayor of Edmonton, some people thought they might be getting a polished apple for the West; sadly, all we got was Decore.

MEDICAL CARE

ROLE OF MEDICINE IN LAW ENFORCEMENT

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, concern over the uncertain role of medicine in law enforcement is growing among many Canadian doctors. The focal point of their concern is that government intervention in the practice of medicine is increasing, and the time-honoured concept of doctor-patient confidentiality is in a state of serious erosion. Some of the questions doctors are now asking are: should a physician be required to use his or her clinical skills, or the information gathered, to enforce the laws of the land? To what extent should he or she be allowed to use professional discretion in determining the relevance of the knowledge so acquired?

Doctors generally agree that confidentiality is not for their benefit but for the patient's. If this confidentiality is destroyed, patients will be reluctant to communicate certain intimate facts, and physicians will stop keeping accurate records. The Canadian Medical Association is particularly concerned about pending CSIS legislation which will give an investigator special status, authorizing him to go into a physician's office and obtain information pertaining to matters under investigation. Physicians need to be reassured that access to medical records is a rare requirement in protecting the security of Canada, and that it is to be subjected to a rigorous process of control and review by Ministers of the Crown and the judiciary, along with a Security Intelligence Review Committee.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EXERCISE OF POLITICAL RIGHTS BY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, earlier today a number of students from the Canadian Labour College gathered on Parliament Hill to make a clear statement that public sector workers should have their political freedom. Over 400,000 public employees across the country are denied their basic political rights. In a democracy the freedom of a citizen to take political action is considered to be a basic right. It should only be removed when persons have proven themselves to be unworthy of that right. In the case of public sector workers, it was removed because the political Parties, their employers, were abusing the power and the system.

In the 1980 federal election all political Parties were asked if they supported the principle that public sector workers should have the same basic rights as other citizens to participate in the political processes of Canada, and, if elected, would their Parties introduce legislation to that effect. All three Parties agreed that the law should be reviewed and revised. In 1979 an all-Party committee said:

> Simply because political participation is a right of citizens, we believe that this should be the principle that applies to public servants, only limited in the exceptional cases where any indication of partisan political interests would compromise the reputation of the public service for impartiality or would damage the individual's effectiveness as a public servant.

Only the NDP has kept that promise. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), has at present just such a Bill on the Order Paper, C-248, and I ask all Members to help keep their own Parties—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EMPLOYMENT—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY LEADER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we may have been a little premature in criticizing the new Liberal Leader so heavily for being briefed. Today's Globe and Mail tells us that it seems the briefings are doing some good. The new Leader has discovered there are two million unemployed in the country, including 800,000 young people. For that we thank the briefings.

The other revealing part of that article is that there seems to be a concern on the part of the new Liberal Leader to have some activity on the employment front prior to the next federal general election. What that tells us is that during those briefings the new Liberal Leader may have discovered where the hidden pot of job creation money is. We have stood in this House and said that the Government opposite has hidden funds which it intends to trot out just prior to an election. Ministers are using the unemployed as pawns in a political game. They do not really care about getting jobs. They do care about getting re-elected. These briefings seem to confirm that fact. There is a difference between beef and baloney, and we know the difference.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF ONTARIO RIVERS—DELAY IN PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, in 1970 the English and Wabigoon River systems in Ontario were declared unsafe due to methyl mercury pollution from the Reed Paper Company's pulp mill at Dryden. These rivers are still closed today. The closing of these rivers destroyed the economic base of two Indian communities. The Indians of White Dog and Grassy Narrows lost their incomes, their employment, their source of food, as well as their dignity. Since then Great Lakes Forest Products bought out the Reed Paper Company after that company agreed to compensate the native community with some $15 million. To date this has not been done, after 15 years.

In the interest of human dignity and justice, I would urge the Prime Minister-elect to use his new position, and I might add his position as director of CP Limited and CP Investments, which are the major shareholders of Great Lakes Forest Products, to put in a good word and urge this company, of which he is still a small part, to fulfil their promise of compensation to the native population of Grassy Narrows and White Dog.

HUMAN RIGHTS

URUGUAY—DETENTION OF OPPOSITION LEADER AND SON

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that Amnesty International has declared that Wilson Ferreira and his son, Juan Raul Ferreira, are detained in custody in the country of Uruguay. This man was the Leader of the opposition Party which is known as the Blancos. He was attempting to return to Uruguay to participate in the election which is scheduled for October. During the 11 years that he has been in exile he has protested against the human rights violations which have taken place in his own country. Members of this House in all three Parties who served on the Latin American sub-committee know about this situation from personal experience. Ferreira has attempted to bring this reality to the whole world.

At this time I call upon the Government of Canada to protest vehemently against what has happened to Mr. Ferreira, a fellow parliamentarian, if it has not done so already. I call upon the Minister of External Affairs to ensure that our embassy in Buenos Aires, which looks after Uruguay, approaches the Government of that country to see that these two people are released immediately from prison.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DELAY IN MAIL DELIVERIES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post Corporation has of late taken many interesting detours from its only mandate, delivering the mail. It has experimented with selling goods for Consumers Distributing, and has considered selling sports pool tickets. While on its detours it seems to have lost its sense of time and direction.

I received a complaint from a constituent this week which described how it took from May 18 until June 9, 22 days, to deliver a letter from Toronto to Bolsover, Ontario, a distance of 75 miles. Another constituent waited 13 days in May for a cheque to be delivered from Pefferlaw to Markham, a distance which can be travelled in less than an hour. Yet another constituent demanded a trailer be unloaded by Canada Post to see if it contained a christening gown which was long overdue. Sure enough, when the trailer was searched the gown was found, long after the christening.

On behalf of my constituents and all Canadians I urge the Government to allow Canada Post to return to its primary mandated function. It is about time it devoted its time to improving mail service and nothing else.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on Standing Order 21.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has not called Oral Questions. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member.

OUTLOOKS OF LIBERAL AND PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY LEADERS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that my Tory colleagues to my right missed the point yesterday when they were going on about how the future Prime Minister ought to have resigned his various corporate boardroom directorships, as of course he should have.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1415)

Mr. Blaikie: Thank you. But the real point is that one cannot resign a way of looking at the world, and neither John Turner nor the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) can resign the way they have learned to look at the world and its problems in the boardrooms of the nation. That is what they have to resign if they ever want to be able to lead this country.

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL PARTY LEADER—RESIGNATION OF CORPORATE DIRECTORSHIPS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but remember that the Hon. Member who just spoke used to be, unhappily, a member of my Party. He has managed to change his view of the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would he tell us whether the Leader of the Liberal Party, the future Prime Minister, has resigned, effective immediately, all of the several directorships which bring him into an appearance of conflict of interest? If he has not resigned them immediately, does he intend to resign them immediately?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say for sure what Mr. Turner will do, but we did talk about this matter yesterday. It seemed to me that his inclination was to let his resignation stand as it was.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That then brings Mr. Turner into a very clear apparent conflict of interest.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES—APPLICATION TO MINISTERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I would like to read into the record of the House the conflict of interest guidelines set down by the Prime Minister. There are two principles:

(1) The onus for preventing real, apparent or foreseeable conflicts of interest rests with the individual;

In this case, Mr. Turner.

(2) Ministers must perform and appear to perform their official responsibilities and arrange their private affairs in a manner that will conserve and enhance public confidence and trust in government and that will prevent conflicts of interest from arising;

Acceptance of that standard is the price that Ministers must pay for access to confidential documents about the business of the country. Will the Prime Minister explain to us why the standards of a future Prime Minister should be lower than the standards of a serving Minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did lay down guidelines for Ministers. I did not lay them down for Leaders of Parties.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Our great regret and our great fear, of course, is that the new Leader of the Liberal Party will have standards as slack as those of the outgoing Leader of the Liberal Party.

Oral Questions

APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES TO MINISTERIAL EXEMPT STAFF

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, in this document containing conflict of interest guidelines there are guidelines that affect exempt staff. I quote:

> Each Minister is responsible for designating those exempt staff members to whom the ministerial guidelines apply. At a minimum, they normally should apply to Executive Assistants and Senior Policy Advisers—

We have executive assistants to Ministers and senior policy advisers to Ministers bound by conflict of interest guidelines, but we do not have the man who is going to be the next Prime Minister of Canada bound by those same guidelines. Will the Prime Minister explain to us why there should be a tougher standard for an executive assistant than there is for the future Prime Minister of the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for the simple reason that I have no authority over future Prime Ministers. I have no authority over a Leader of the Party. He is preparing the transition. He is doing it with officials in the Privy Council Office, not with exempt staff of my office or any other office. What access he has to confidential material will be under the discretion of the Secretary of the Cabinet, and that is good enough for me.

[And the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources having entered the Chamber, all Members rose in tribute.]

• (1420)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, before asking my closing supplementary question, let me simply welcome back to his place of honour in the House of Commons le petit gars de Shawinigan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister does have control over what confidential documents are made available for the Prime Minister designate. Why will the Prime Minister of Canada not honour his own guidelines and stop the circulation of those confidential documents to Mr. Turner in a situation which amounts to an apparent conflict of interest?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are in the presence of a doubt in the mind of the Hon. Member about the conduct—

Mr. Nielsen: The Right Honourable.

Mr. Trudeau: The Right Honourable, I stand corrected—of the Secretary of the Cabinet, the highest civil servant in this land, to whom I confided the responsibility of briefing the Prime Minister designate in whatever way he found appropriate. I repeat, as I said in my previous answer, that I have confidence in Mr. Osbaldeston. I have confidence in his judgment. I have confidence in the choice of documents that he will feel necessary to show to Mr. Turner. Second, we are dealing with a former Member of this House, a former Minister of the Cabinet, a Privy Councillor who is bound for life by his oath of office, and I have confidence also in the honourability of Mr. Turner's conduct as a Privy Councillor.

REPORTED FUND RAISING CAMPAIGN TO MEET TRANSITIONAL EXPENSES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. The June 10 issue of The Toronto Star reported that fund raisers for John Turner were attempting to raise some $600,000 for so-called transitional expenses of Mr. Turner if he were successful in getting his Party's leadership. These expenses would include moving his family to Ottawa, and other personal expenses. Has the Prime Minister discussed this matter with Mr. Turner, and does the Prime Minister believe that it is appropriate for the Prime Minister designate to be indebted to secret private donors in this way?

Mr. Regan: Little Lord Fauntleroy is worried.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Hon. Member did not ask if any of these funds came from abroad. We understand that funds came from abroad to help his Leader when he was in transition.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister attempts in a rather cavalier way to dismiss this.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): I want to put the question to the Prime Minister again, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister feel it is appropriate for his successor, the Prime Minister designate, to be receiving some $600,000 from secret private donors, to be used, among other things, for personal expenses? Should he be indebted in this way?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, the Leader of the Opposition, the Member of Parliament for Central Nova—

Mr. Regan: For the moment.

Mr. Trudeau: —obviously received funds for his campaign too.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Does the Hon. Member know that he received no funds in order to help him sell his Montreal house for a reasonable price and come and settle in Ottawa? I don't know, and I don't know about Mr. Turner either. I just presume that both of them are honourable. I wish to hell the people on the other side would treat other Members as honourable too.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is tough defending Turner, isn't it?

ENERGY

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM—INQUIRY WHETHER GRANTS MADE TO EAST COAST RESOURCES LTD.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I would like to congratulate him on his recent conduct and showing. Is the Minister aware that Petro-Canada had 40 per cent of the East Sable field, the Venture gas field off Nova Scotia, that 10 per cent of that field was given to the Nova Scotia Government under the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement, and that 10 per cent of that was given by the Nova Scotia Government through its energy company, to a company called East Coast Resources Ltd.? This was a popular investment among senior Conservatives. It has gone from $15 per share to 80 cents per share. Has any Petroleum Incentive Program money gone to East Coast Energy Ltd., to that company? Has the Government investigated whether any of this money was diverted to the anti-Joe Clark campaign in the recent Tory leadership convention?

• (1425)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Government of Nova Scotia does with its shares in that field. It is entitled under legislation to its share of the back-in. By the way, the Official Opposition opposes that provision officially, but the Government of Nova Scotia wants it badly. What it does with it, if it sells it back to some company, is a decision of the Government of Nova Scotia. I respect its jurisdiction. If it gives a break to some Tories in the province, it might be that it does not have the same standards as we have here.

K. D. MARINE (MARITIMES) LTD.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister this question seriously because we are talking about standards here today as well as a lot of federal money which goes into these projects. Has his Department had cause to look into a company called K. D. Marine (Maritimes) Ltd.? One of its directors, Michael Cogger, recently admitted to doing some political work for that company, anti-Joe Clark work, in 1982. Has the Minister looked into the conduct of the brokerage firm called McLeod Young Weir, as well as Mr. Walter Wolf and some of the allegations he has been making? Could the Minister confirm to the House that no federal PIP grant money has gone into funding this company?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can see that there might be some problems in the other family. The opposition family is different from the Liberal family.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: As long as the money has been channelled through this company, through the Tory administration of Mr. Buchanan, according to the Opposition, it is supposed to have very high standards. I hope the Leader of the Official Opposition will write to Mr. Buchanan to indicate that he should conduct himself in Nova Scotia with the standards of this Government.

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL PARTY LEADER—BRIEFING BY CABINET SECRETARY

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who admitted earlier that the responsibility for whom the Secretary to the Cabinet briefs rests with the Prime Minister himself. Therefore I will ask the Prime Minister the following question. Will he tell the Secretary to the Cabinet that Mr. John Turner has a choice? Mr. John Turner can spend the rest of this month earning the directors' fees he probably needs. In other words, Mr. Turner has a choice—the money or the briefings.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is very interesting. I will take that as a representation and make sure that Mr. Osbaldeston hears about it.

BASIS FOR CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister this question: if he believes that conflict of interest guidelines mean nothing more than trusting entirely the honour of a member of the Ministry, then why have them at all?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, they are exactly that. They are guidelines. They do repose on trust. They do repose on confidence. That has been my approach to government. I am happy to say that, after these many years in office, I have heard many, many questions and hints about scandals, and I am proud to leave at a time when there has been no real scandal in my time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR TRANSPORT

REGIONAL CROSS-BORDER SERVICES—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Transport. Since Monday Canadian and U.S. government officials have been negotiating and trying to reach an agreement on an aviation deal which would expand regional cross-border airline services. Could the Minister tell the House the status of these negotiations and what the implications will be for Mirabel?

[Translation]

I may add, Mr. Speaker, that the matter is of great interest to all Members from the Mirabel area.

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members of the House will know, we have been engaged in developing a number of new initiatives in the area of airline policy designed to provide more choice for consumers. I am pleased to indicate that the discussions with United States officials have reached the stage of agreement in principle for a new local and regional airline service that will provide a number of new opportunities for service between Canadian and American points.

● (1430)

Second, we have been able to negotiate an interesting experimental program for under-utilized airports which will allow more extensive use of Mirabel so that we will be able to provide direct service to a number of American cities and develop that as a starting point for new, low cost, no-frills airlines over a period of time. We have been able to proceed successfully with those conclusions. We have the agreements in principle. I hope by the end of the day we will have a full signing of those agreements. That will provide a larger choice for Canadian and American consumers, and provide for further growth in the airline industry.

THE ADMINISTRATION

APPLICATION OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It deals with the line of questions which were asked previously with respect to conflict of interest. It is my understanding that the principle the Prime Minister used when he drew up the guidelines in April, 1980, was that any Cabinet Minister accepting responsibility and the acceptance of documents which were confidential in nature had to divest himself at that time of those things which could give the appearance or indeed the fact of a conflict of interest. That appeared to me to be the principle. If that is the principle, does the Prime Minister think that is a principle that should be applied to Prime Ministers and Prime Ministers designate, as well as to Cabinet Ministers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is an important principle, but there is a more important one. Appearing to be right, and appearing to be truthful, and appearing to be honest, are important, but it is more important to be right than to appear to be right.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister drew up those guidelines, was it in his mind that the responsibility for those guidelines lay with the Prime Minister, the Ministers, or the head of the Privy Council?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was intended to be the one who would look at the application of those guidelines. That is why the questions about ministerial conduct are perfectly justified. However, Mr. Turner is not a Minister. He does not come under the guidelines in a technical sense. As a matter of honour on his part, and perhaps as a matter of honour on the other side, do not try to dredge up another phoney scandal, which is the only kind of scandal I have seen them dredge up in the past 15 years.

RAILWAYS

PROPOSAL TO PHASE OUT CABOOSES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In answer to a question asked some days ago by the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton, the Minister indicated that the matter of whether or not cabooses were to be phased out by CNR and, in turn by the CPR, was one that the Minister perceived as something that would be decided by collective bargaining. Has the Minister had a chance to consider his answer to that question, and will he say today that it is not just a matter for collective bargaining? There is an application before the RTC, something in which the Canadian Transportation Commission will be involved. It is also a matter having to do with larger questions of public policy with regard to technological change, public safety, et cetera. Will the Minister take an interest in the issue and not simply leave it to collective bargaining because, in fact, is it not just left to collective bargaining?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member the assurance that I have already taken an interest in the issue. I have met with the unions involved and have also had discussions with railway officials about the matter. What I did in my answer to the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton was to point out that, on the question of adjustments that might be occasioned as a result of this, it would be a matter best left to the negotiations between management and labour. Any question concerning the safety or technology aspects of it is before the CTC.

As the Minister to whom the CTC must answer, I am in the position where I may have to deal with an appeal or response, and therefore would not want to make any judgment at this time. That would be stepping beyond my bounds and would not allow the CTC to give full and proper account to the representations made before it. We are certainly taking into very deep and serious consideration that it is a matter of concern to the railways and the railway unions. The actions taken are to follow the normal prescribed procedures and not interfere or intervene in an unnatural way and simply distort the process.

EFFECT OF TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, if I recall the question of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton, it did not have to do with adjustments but with questions of public safety and the question of what was before the CTC. The question of adjustments is a matter that should only come up if and when, and hopefully only if, the decision to phase out the cabooses is actually taken. I would not want to prejudge that question by getting into the question of adjustments.

Will the Minister consider making technological change on the railways a case for technological change in general? Will he consider appointing a special task force, or something of that nature, made up of members of the unions affected, public interest groups and whatever, to look at technological change in the railways and the way in which it can perhaps be used as an example of how technological change should occur, instead of it just happening in a happenstance, ad hoc, and totally management-oriented way as now takes place on the railways?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Hon. Member that it was about three or four weeks after I was appointed to this position that I wrote to the chairmen of each of the boards of the Crown corporations that come under my jurisdiction. I indicated that I consider major changes affecting communities and workers due to technology or to productivity as a matter of high priority. I asked each of the board of directors of those corporations to address it as a number one priority, to establish a working committee of that board, to work with the respective unions and managemment in their corporations, and to come forward with prescribed answers.

I would further point out that the recent appointment of Alderman Hewes from Edmonton as chairman of the board of CNR, someone who is well known as having a great deal of experience in those kinds of negotiations and having an understanding of the impact of changes between workers and management because of her experience in the City of Edmonton, is further endorsement of our deep concern that, in the area of transportation, we will take the lead in responding to whatever impact new technology brings with it.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ASSIST PÉTROMONT

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister is aware of the problems now facing a company known as Pétromont in Montreal. Last year, we applauded the fact that the company was offered a federal subsidy. This year, because of the absence of any energy policy, the company is now in a situation where, it seems, it is about to announce the company is closing down, which would put 500 employees out of work. In the circumstances, considering the interest shown by the Minister a year ago, and also since there is a report that seems to offer a solution for the petrochemical industry, could the Minister promise today he will give some urgently needed assistance, and what kind of assistance is the Minister prepared to offer Pétromont in order to save 500 jobs in Montreal?

[English]

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know, of course, that Petromont's largest customer is the Union Carbide plant in Montreal. He has read articles in the paper similar to ones I have read. Union Carbide is giving consideration to closing that plant. Even if we were prepared to provide some money for Petromont tomorrow, that would not solve the problem of finding a market for its products, given the fact that Union Carbide might make this decision.

Second, I want to correct one thing for the Hon. Member. The $25 million we have provided to Petromont was not for one year. It was for two years. That money is still applicable to March, 1985.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER HELP SAVE 500 JOBS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Minister knows, first, that there has been no reply to the report, which said that only a policy that would make it possible for the petrochemical industry to buy oil at competitive prices could resolve the problem, and second, that if Union Carbide is obliged to close down its branch, it is because the Government did not respond to the recommendations made in the report last February.

The fact remains that the Minister is aware of the risk that this Montreal plant may close down this week. My information sources urged me to ask the Minister if he intends to take action to help this industry survive, as he did for Canadair and de Havilland when these industries were judged to be indispensable. To Quebecers, Pétromont is as important as the automotive industry in Ontario which the Minister helped last week, and he is to be congratulated for that. Is the Minister prepared to show the same concern for the Pétromont plant, in order to save it? I am saying it again on behalf of the company's 500 workers. I know the vast majority of Members on the other side agree with me and that they hope to have an answer from the Minister as soon as possible.

● (1440)

[English]

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that it is for Union Carbide to make a decision whether to close its operations for very sound business reasons. We have had discussions with the SGF shareholders with respect to their business intentions, but if

Presence in Gallery

Union Carbide does decide to shut down, no amount of money we would provide to Pétromont would provide a market for its products. We have indicated to several of the companies that if they are willing to present us with sound, viable, economic business plans, we will consider financial assistance with respect to conversion and also, through the IRDR program, provide assistance to downstream companies should they be affected by a closure in the industry.

NATURAL RESOURCES

REPORTED AGREEMENT SIGNED BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLAND PREMIER AND LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who may not have won the leadership of the Liberal Party but who has indeed won the respect and admiration of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maltais: Last week, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition released a so-called agreement on natural resources, signed by his Party with the Premier of Newfoundland. I would like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he has heard of this agreement? What is, in his view, the value of this agreement and what benefits will accrue to both parties if the agreement should be finalized? What difference is there between the terms of this agreement and those of agreements proposed previously by the present federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think it was just a publicity stunt orchestrated by the Leader of the Official Opposition, because this document has absolutely no validity. In fact, if we take a closer look, it is far from comprehensive. In fact, the revenue for the Province of Newfoundland would be less under this agreement than what we ourselves have offered. Furthermore, it is quite possible that some time in the near future, I shall be starting negotiations with the Newfoundland Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Stephen A. Neary. I am sure it would be much easier to obtain an acceptable agreement with Mr. Neary than has been the case with Mr. Peckford.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

NAVAL UNIFORM MATERIAL

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence concerning the safety of Canadian Armed Forces personnel in Maritime Command. The Minister must be aware of media reports that claim that the polyester uniforms worn by members of the Canadian navy are dangerous because the material is not heat resistant. The British navy had a bad experience with this material in the Falkland Islands conflict, and chose another fabric to replace the polyester fabric. Is the Minister aware of this problem? What action does he propose to take? Although our navy must use ancient equipment, surely we can supply it with safe clothing.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the conditions described by the Hon. Member. The experience that was gained by the British navy indicated that when it used cloth of a similar composition, with a heavy percentage of polyester, difficulties were created. As a result of that experience we have been looking at a replacement textile, and in fact we have found a replacement textile. In fact—

Some Hon. Members: Blue!

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, we will now be going to the marketplace with identified specifications in the hope of being able to have those specifications met in the very near future.

REQUEST THAT NEW UNIFORMS BE BLUE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I would urge the Minister to take action very quickly. This fabric can create a very serious problem in a boiler room within a seagoing ship. Now that he is going to change the fabric of the uniforms so that they will be safer, and now that he is going to acquire new materials for new uniforms, may I ask one more thing of the Minister? It would be a simple matter to make those new uniforms blue. Please do.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I get the distinct impression that the hon. gentleman wanted to ask the second question first.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FISHERIES

LEGISLATION TO RESTRUCTURE WEST COAST FISHERY

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who, I would have thought, would be present today after having draft legislation tabled on Monday, I address my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. On Monday the Parliamentary Secretary did table draft legislation on the restructuring of the Pacific fisheries at the same time as the Minister was holding a press conference in Vancouver, outlining a direction for the Pacific fisheries which is much different from the one taken by the legislation that was introduced in the House.

In view of the importance of the fishery to British Columbia fishermen and British Columbia residents in general, and in view of the complexity of this Bill, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if the Minister and the Government are really serious about introducing legislation now to be dealt with in the last two weeks of the Session, considering how all-encompassing that legislation is to be. Is the Government serious about attacking the problems that have been lingering for the last 21 months since the Pearse report was received?

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer of the Parliamentary Secretary reflects the concern of the Liberal Party for the British Columbia fishing industry and for those communities dependent upon it. I see the Minister has just arrived.

BUY-BACK PROGRAM

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans a specific question regarding the legislation that was introduced on Monday. I would like to find out if the Government has made a commitment to deal with the Pacific fishing industry in a constructive way in the last two weeks of this Session.

Will the Minister introduce a specific Bill dealing with the buy-back program which has now been universally accepted in British Columbia because of the need for a reduction in the fleet, for both the preservation of the stocks and for the preservation of the financial viability of the industry? Will the Minister specify the amount of funds that are available and whether or not the banks are to be involved in it, and how the banks will be bailed out? Will he specify how fishermen will be protected from the loss of their homes through a buy-back arrangement, and will he specify whether or not he can say what the fleet mix will be after the buy-back—

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest that the Hon. Member might ask one question at a time. The Hon. Minister could then reply.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Government is committed—

Some Hon. Members: It should be.

Mr. De Bané: If we could have the co-operation of both opposition Parties—I do not know why Hon. Members seem to be taking this so lightly. The Government is committed to having that legislation passed before the adjournment of this Session. Of course it is ultimately up to members of the Opposition to make up their minds.

Opposition Members did prove their responsibility when they passed so swiftly the Atlantic restructuring Bill. I hope we will be able to expect from opposition Members the same readiness to pass this Bill before the adjournment of the House. If opposition Members are opposed to it, it will obviously not pass and, as the Hon. Member suggested, hundreds and hundreds of fishermen in the West could face very serious economic hardships.

This Bill would achieve several things. First, it would limit the participation of the Department in the management and protection of the resource and would put the management of the fishery back in the hands of the fishermen. Essentially, the Government has accepted the philosophy put forward by the fishermen.

When I was in B.C. two days ago I was very heartened when the members of MAC asked me what they could do to see that the Bill is passed before the adjournment. I told them to phone the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni and the Hon. Member for Vancouver South who hopefully would listen to their representations.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTRODUCE SEPARATE BUY-BACK LEGISLATION

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am asking specifically if the Minister will separate all of the horrendous aspects of that Bill from the provision in it which was specifically requested by the Minister's Advisory Committee and fishermen in British Columbia, whether they be native, sports, or commercial fishermen? Will the Minister do away with the part of that legislation that is nebulous and inept, and deal specifically with a buy-back program which will be useful in management processes and in reducing the financial burden on fishermen? That is what we are prepared to look at right now. We are not prepared to look at the other horrendous aspects of that legislation that give the Minister more than dictatorial power.

• (1450)

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely shocked by the distortion which was made by the Hon. Member about what is the philosophy of the Bill. I hope when the Hon. Member is in B.C., or when he talks to his constituents—except, of course, Mr. Jack Nichol who has said that he will do his darndest to prevent the passage of the Bill—that he will listen to the wide spectrum of views. I can assure him that the reaction will be very, very positive.

To separate the Bill into two sections and to pass only the buy-back provision would be most irresponsible. I would remind the Hon. Member that this will be the third buy-back in 12 years. I believe the people of this country expect that those who want to get out should be helped a last time in order that they can get out with dignity. The people also expect a system to be established which would prevent any re-occurrence of the fantastic over-capacity which is the most extreme case of over-capacity in the world.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS—TIMING OF GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question which was asked by the Hon. Member for Joliette, and is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Unfortunately the Hon. Member for Joliette left the impression that there was only one recommendation flowing from the petrochemical task force. In point of fact there were 19 or 20 recommendations. I know meetings have been held by the Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with the officials. Is the Minister now in a position to tell us when he anticipates a response to the petrochemical task force report?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, at the present time we are contacting the provincial Ministers who have participated in the discussions with respect to the task force. Over the next 24 hours we will be meeting with the co-chairmen of the task force. I would hope that by the end of this week, or by the first of next week, we will announce the Government's response to the petrochemical task force.

TRADE

POSSIBLE UNITED STATES ACTION TO CURTAIL STEEL IMPORTS

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister for International Trade regarding the ruling which was made by the International Trade Commission in the United States. That ruling was made under the safeguard of GATT. It could well affect some $700 million worth of Canadian steel exports to the United States. Could the Minister inform the House and the workers employed in that industry what action his Government has taken to protect that large amount of export, as well as the thousands of jobs which are in jeopardy as a result of the ruling by the International Trade Commission?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to inform the Hon. Member of some of the things which we are doing. First, our opposition to such action by the United States has been made known by the Deputy Prime Minister to Secretary of State Shultz. I have made it quite clear to the United States Secretary of Trade, Mr. Brock, on several occasions during the time that this investigation, under the petition, was proceeding. We are now in the process, both at the ministerial level and through the Canadian Embassy in Washington, of making it quite clear to the Americans that they have existing mechanisms for pinpointing the transgressors who may be creating the problem to the extent that it exists, and that they are not required to take this universal type of action.

What has happened thus far under their law is that a quasi-judicial investigation is under way which cannot be turned off by the U.S. Government. The American administration cannot stop the investigation. The only point at which the Government of the United States becomes involved is after July 24, when the USITC reports to the President. At that point our Government will deal with the American administration. Actually, we are dealing with them in advance. On Monday I am meeting with representatives from the Canadian steel industry to ensure that efforts are co-ordinated between industry and Government. I am also keeping the provinces informed.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE—CANADIAN OPTION

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. It is all very well to express knowledge and concern about the ability of the American administration and the way in which the investigation must be continued. However, the Minister knows full well that under Article 19 of GATT when imports are restricted and a country is harmed—such as Canada will be—that Canada has the ability to retaliate if our markets are restricted in the United States. Has the Minister informed the United States administration that that is the exact action which Canada will take, that of retaliation, if Canada's imports are restricted to the United States?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Hon. Member that he leave it to me to deal with the Americans, with a feeling of confidence on his part that I will take the steps which are most appropriate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: The Hon. Member, in achieving that feeling of confidence, will recall that when the Americans took such a step in relation to specialty steel, our Government retaliated. At that time Secretary Brock stated that that was a very important message for the American industry.

Mr. McKnight: Give it to them again.

Mr. Regan: It is all very well to give it to them again, but I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member that there is a balance and that it is really not wise for a country our size to get into a trade war with the United States. The American administration has shown repeatedly that it is supportive of trade liberalization and resists protectionist actions. I have a certain confidence that it will continue to do that.

At the same time, I think the Americans know me and I think they know that if it is necessary to get the message across more forcefully, I will do that.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST SALMON FLEET—EFFECT OF BUY-BACK PROPOSAL

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question which I would like to direct to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Recognizing that the West Coast salmon fleet is worth some $2 billion, will the Minister confirm that his $100 million buy-back proposal will do no better than eliminate 5 per cent of the fishing capacity in the West Coast salmon fleet? Will he also confirm that, after the next election, a Liberal Government would propose to tax West Coast fishermen by way of a royalty, amounting to 10 cents—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has asked the first part of his question. It seems to me that the second part of his question, which relates to what might happen after an election, and another Government, is hardly a ministerial responsibilitiy of the present Minister.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the Hon. Member that during the hearings of the Pearse Commission, the Royal Commission on the Pacific Fishery, if there was one item on which every single group agreed, and on which there was total unanimity, it was that they favoured a royalty system to finance the operation.

The Hon. Member said that that fleet was worth $2 billion. I think that he is a shrewd enough businessman to know that the only value which one can put on any equipment or fishing gear is related to the income which can be generated with that gear.

As the Hon. Member may know, the value of those licences three years ago was $600 million. Now the value is $300 million. The projected loss for this summer for fishermen is over $70 million. I beg the Hon. Member to hear what those fishermen are asking: to allow those who want to get out to get out with dignity, to prevent personal bankruptcy, and to prevent the loss of family residences. Those who remain want a regime to be established which would bring stability to that sector.

PENITENTIARIES

PROPOSED EARLY RETIREMENT FOR CORRECTIONAL OFFICERS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It has been seven years since the Parliamentary Sub-committee on Penitentiary Reform recommended that there be implementation of early retirement provisions for correctional officers because of the nature of their work and the stressful circumstances under which they work. On May 22 the Minister responded to a question which I asked in committee. He said that legislation to implement this provision would be introduced in the House early in June. Where is that legislation? Also, could he tell us where is the report of the Vantour Committee, the inquiry into violence in the penitentiaries, which was promised for the first of June and has not yet been made public?

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with respect to early retirement, I can inform the Hon. Member that the Bill is now before Cabinet. Although we have only a week and a half left until the end of this session, I will do my best to get some progress on this issue.

As for the Vantour Report, I have received it but it is in English only. I have asked my Deputy Minister to have it translated as soon as possible, and I am expecting the translation any day now. I shall release the report as soon as I can.

I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), by filing with the Clerk of the House on Tuesday, June 19, 1984, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Point of Order—Mr. Deans

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DEANS—BILL C-9—PROCEDURE RESPECTING MOVING OF MOTIONS

Mr. Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain wished to be recognized on a point of order at this stage.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to put before you, very briefly, a concern I have over the proceedings which took place last evening. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, if you would review those proceedings and, at the very least, guarantee that what occurred last night will not be used as a precedent. On page 4841 of Hansard of last evening, the following appears:

THE ACTING SPEAKER (MR. GUILBAULT): Motion No. 61 is proposed by the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan). Will another Hon. Member move it in his absence?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE ACTING SPEAKER (MR. GUILBAULT): No.

Motion No. 62 stands in the name of Mr. Fraser who is also absent from the House. Mr. Ellis is prepared to move the motion if there is unanimous consent. Do we have unanimous consent?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker then went on to move Mr. Fraser's motion. Proceedings continued for some time and on page 4842 of Hansard there appears, at the bottom of the page, the following:

MR. JOYAL: Mr. Speaker, when you called the various motions, there was one numbered 60 in the name of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan).

AN HON. MEMBER: No. 61.

MR. JOYAL: I am sorry, No. 61. With your permission, I should put it to the House so that it may be debated and voted on eventually.

The only question I have, Mr. Speaker, is this. When the motion was originally put to the House by the Acting Speaker, there was no one prepared to move it. The Acting Speaker then went on to the next motion. I would ask you to consider for the purposes of the future—I do not ask that anything be done about yesterday—that we have a clear understanding that if a motion is put to the House and that motion is not moved, and a subsequent motion is then placed before the House, notwithstanding the fact that it all appears in one grouping, the very fact that the motion is not moved is an action of the House itself. When the request is made by the Speaker for the mover of a motion, if there is no mover of the motion, if there is no alternative mover, and if there is no request for unanimous request to move the motion, then that motion has been dealt with.

From that point on, that motion cannot come before the House again except by way of unanimous consent. I make that point and ask you to consider it, Sir, in order that we might not have either a repeat of last evening or, for that matter, that this particular dealing could not be considered a precedent in the future.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's observations carry a great deal of weight with the Chair. The Hon. Member prefaced his statement by stating he was not challenging a ruling of the Chair. However, he is calling attention to a practice which certainly is one which Hon. Members should have to think about. There is no question that Hon. Members should be alert. The fact that a number of clauses are grouped for debate by no means excuses the responsibility for proper moving of the motions at the proper time.

PETITIONS

MR. FLIS—REPORT ON VISIBLE MINORITIES

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition of the undersigned members of the Kababayan Community Centre and the Chinese Interpreter and Information Services Agency in the constituency of Parkdale-High Park, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, and humbly sheweth that the undersigned citizens strongly support recommendations 2, 3 and 6 of the Report of the Special Committee on Participation of Visible Minorities in Canadian Society, supporting the concept of continued funding of community efforts which assist visible minorities and immigrants to become self-sufficient participants in the economic and social life of Canada. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

MR. PELLETIER—AMERICAN PRESENCE IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from several hundred constituents of mine.

To the Hon. the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled. The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted rights thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your Hon. House will therefore provide a remedy. The petition was drawn up by the Comité Estrien pour l'Amérique Centrale, an umbrella organization for a number of organizations such as the Carrefour de Solidarité Internationale, the Service d'Entraide Internationale, and Développement et Paix de Sherbrooke.

Briefly, the petition expresses the desire:

First, that the Canadian Government urge the United States to recall all its troops and advisers from the territory of Central America.

Second, that the Canadian Government accept the hand of friendship offered by the Government of Nicaragua and as of now maintain privileged diplomatic relations by opening an embassy in Managua.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to consider the two aforementioned requests made by the Comité Estrien pour l'Amérique Centrale. And as in duty bound your petitioners ever pray.

MR. MITGES—RADIO AND TELEVISION SIGNALS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition from the broadcasters of my riding who are requesting a public hearing on the issue of cable distribution of distant Canadian radio and television signals. It is pointed out in the petition that additional competition in the form of distant radio signals will weigh heavily against a viable future for the industry all across Canada by further reducing interest in local services and that the introduction of more outside stations will increase fragmentation and, at the same time, decrease the penetration of the local stations which would tend to move in the direction of reducing interest in the station serving the area with local programming.

It is the hope of the petitioners that representation will be made by the Government to the CRTC to oppose any action being taken to further any move by the CRTC in this direction.

MR. LEWYCKY—RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I have 236 petitioners from the areas of Swan River, Durban, Brandon, Minitonas, Kenville and Benito who ask that the Criminal Code be changed to ensure that the unborn are given the same rights and respect to live as the born.

AN ACT TO GRANT ACCESS TO RECORDS OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON THE DEFENCE OF CANADA REGULATIONS

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-252, an Act to grant access to records of the Special Committee on the Defence of Canada Regulations.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Bill is to make available to the public the records and information acquired by the Special Committee during World War II. Those records are still under lock and key and are not available. It is now 1984 and the war ended in 1945. I believe it is time those records were made available to the Canadian public.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COLLENETTE—PROPOSED INTRODUCTION OF MULTICULTURALISM LEGISLATION

Hon. D. M. Collenette (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It had been my intention to introduce today for first reading the Multiculturalism Act. Unfortunately the royal recommendation has yet to be appended. If we secure that later this day I hope I will have the consent of the House to introduce it, since I tabled the report of the Committee on Visible Minorities just a few moments ago.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): The Minister approached me with respect to obtaining leave to table this Bill. I should say at the outset I was surprised he would approach me because in the Ukrainian News of Edmonton, Alberta, of March 14, Mayor Lawrence Decore accused the Minister of being frightened of Ukrainians. He said he had not done very much for the Ukrainian community. On the other hand, I was quite prepared to give unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), we cannot enter into debate at this point. I am sure the Hon. Minister is not seeking unanimous consent at this point.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would just say that in spite of all this I am interested in seeing this Bill. When the Minister approaches me again I want to get an explanation of this article and also find out what he is going to do about the multiculturalism Bill.

Mr. Speaker: It appears the Minister does not have unanimous consent of the House at this point.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Later on today.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 707 and 767.

[Text]

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE OFFSHORE APPLICATION ACT

Question No. 707—Mr. Skelly:

1. Did the Government announce a policy with respect to duty payable on vessels built, or whose construction was contracted for, after January 6, 1983 and, if so (a) on what date (b) what rate of duty was announced?

2. Did the Department of National Revenue exempt Offshore Marketing International Ltd., of Harbour Grace, Newfoundland from duty payable on two 73 metre offshore anchor-handling vessels to be built by the Hyundai Corporation of South Korea for delivery in January, 1985 and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The proposed Customs and Excise Offshore Application Act was introduced as a Ways and Means Motion on December 7, 1983, retroactive to June 30, 1983. This motion provides for revisions to the Customs Tariff as it pertains to various types of vessels and other water-borne craft. In essence, provision is made for a 25 per cent rate of duty applicable to most vessels and other water-borne craft with the exception of drilling rigs and platforms which are rated at 20 per cent duty. The other main provisions of the motion are to expand tariff jurisdiction to British registered craft and to extend customs jurisdiction offshore to the greater of 200 miles and the edge of the continental shelf.

Recognizing that capital goods such as ships, drilling rigs and platforms are ordered considerably in advance of delivery date, the proposed legislation contains a provision exempting from duty any such goods ordered on or before January 6, 1983, which would otherwise have been subject to duty. January 6, 1983, was the date on which the Government announced publicly its intention to seek legislation in this area.

2. No, the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, did not exempt Offshore Marketing International Ltd. from duty payable on the said vessels.

APPLICATION FOR PERMITS TO EXPORT LOGS

Question No. 767—Mr. Manly:

In each year since 1979 did Pacific Forest Products Company of Victoria, British Columbia (a) make applications for (b) receive any export permits and, if so, how many and, in each case, what type of wood, quantities and destinations were granted such permits.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) Applications for permits to export logs were received from Pacific Forest Products Ltd. of Victoria, B.C. as follows:

1979: none
1980: none
1981: 22
1982: 76
1983: 90
first quarter 1984: 8

(b) In each case, an export permit was issued.

The additional information being sought is considered to be commercially confidential.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereof, as reported (with amendments), from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and Motions Nos. 75, 77 and 78 (Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), and Motion No. 79 (Mr. Fraser).

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, a couple of minutes before nine last night I was addressing the House on several amendments, but in particular one which this Party has put forward. I want to take this opportunity to say to my friend, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), that he is correct about one thing; there were several amendments accepted at committee. I thought I left the impression yesterday that there were no substantive amendments accepted. However, I have looked at the record and I am prepared to say, out of courtesy to my friend, that I should have stuck with the word "substantive", because there were several amendments accepted. However, I still remain of the opinion that the amendments accepted were not substantive amendments.

I also remind the Minister again that the amendment to Clause 39, which would have allowed the review committee to see the Cabinet documents that refer to the security service, which was passed in committee, is now being attacked by the Minister with a specific amendment wiping it out. I am honour bound to correct the record which I regret was not absolutely accurate but, as I say, my position in substance is sustained.

The provision we speak to now concerns Clause 31 of the Act. What is all that about? I know that today the media are watching this debate and they will be interested in this. Clause 31 follows Clause 30, of course, which sets out the functions of the Inspector General. Under this Bill the Inspector General is to:

(a) to monitor the compliance by the Service with its operational policies;
(b) to review the operational activities of the Service; and
(c) to submit certificates pursuant to subsection 33(2).

The Inspector General is a review officer. He will make sure that this service conducts itself properly and within the mandate as set out in Bill C-9. What our amendment does is to say that the Inspector General should be able to see the Cabinet documents that relate to the activities of the intelligence gathering service. It is necessary to have such an amendment because the Solicitor General made sure that this Bill came in with a special provision that, notwithstanding the fact that the Inspector General was to do this review, he is not allowed to look at Cabinet documents. Exactly the same provision is in Clause 39, which I referred to, with respect to the review committee. It is not allowed to see the Cabinet documents related to the security service either. As I just reminded the Solicitor General, we got an amendment through committee, by accident, I suppose, because some Government Member did not vote, that would have allowed the review committee to see the Cabinet documents which relate to the security service. That is going to be wiped out by an amendment which the Government will get through in this place. This amendment deals specifically with allowing the Inspector General to see them. It is obvious why we ask that. In the words of the Senate committee report on the old Bill C-157, the Inspector General is to be "the Ministry's eyes and ears on the service". Clearly the Ministry's eyes and ears on the service should allow the Inspector General to see the Cabinet documents.

● (1520)

The Senate committee also said:

If any Cabinet documents relating to operations are in the control of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, the Inspector General should have access to them.

It is very curious that the Solicitor General cites the Senate committee report for what he chooses to put in the Bill and ignores it for what he chooses not to put in the Bill. In a speech the Attorney General of Ontario gave in Ottawa on February 7, 1984 he said:

The danger is that this secrecy provision can permit the Government to exercise political control over the activities of the service in a manner which is immune from effective review. I believe that there is great merit in the words of Professor Peter Russel, who said in relation to the denial of access to Cabinet documents that: "A Government that is itself so distrustful is not entitled to the trust that this legislation demands from the people it represents."

To make it absolutely clear once again today why we are so angry in this Chamber, it is that these are the kind of substantive amendments which were put forward in committee after listening for weeks to eminent Canadians who appeared before the committee and said that there are things we should do to fix that Bill up. These are the substantive amendments that the Solicitor General and the Government, now headed by the reform man, John Turner, is absolutely refusing to accept. That is the charade and shame that is going on in this Chamber.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motions which are presently before the House. These motions deal with two very important clauses in the Bill. I do not think I would argue that they are the most essential clauses by any stretch of the imagination. Yet the Minister has argued strongly that the Inspector General, who is appointed pursuant to the provisions of these two clauses which are before the House now, is indeed to be the Minister's man, an independent watchdog, within the frame work of the security service.

Let us look at the motions which we are dealing with. The motions would delete Clauses 30 and 31 and would ensure that if Clause 31 is passed the Inspector General should have access to all documents in the possession of the security service. That is a fundamental principle which I would hope Members of the House would see fit to adopt.

With respect to the role of the Inspector General, I argued strongly in committee that this position should only be filled following consultation with and ratification by members of all Parties in the House. It is not good enough that the Government should be in the position of appointing the person who is effectively supposed to act as the watchdog, on a day to day basis, of the operations of the proposed civilian security service. There should be consultations which extend beyond the Government merely talking to itself.

The most important element of the amendments which are being dealt with in this package of amendments is Motion No. 78. That motion would delete the glaring loophole which now exists in this Bill which denies the Inspector General, the person who is supposed to have day to day surveillance of the activities of the new service, access to what are called confidences of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada. The Solicitor General introduced Bill C-157 last May which was supposedly the Government's best response to the recommendations of the McDonald Commission. That Bill was soundly condemned from one end of the country to the other by every analyst and group that read it. Despite that, the same Minister was parading up and down the country telling us what a tremendous Bill it was and what an improvement it was in terms of the protection of civil liberties of Canadians. The same Minister, having suggested that the predecessor Bill, Bill C-157, was a wonderful Bill and a work of art, now comes before the House and asks us to trust him again. Some of us have some difficulties in doing that.

The Pitfield committee, which was chaired by Senator Pitfield in the other place, made a series of recommendations for improving Bill C-15. A unanimous recommendation made by that committee was that if the watchdog was to have any power whatsoever he should obviously have access to documents in the possession of the security service. It sounds pretty straight-forward. If the watchdog, appointed to ensure that there are no political abuses of the operations of a new civilian security service, went to the Director of the service and said that he understood there had been a directive received from the Solicitor General instructing him to spy on the peace movement and asking to see that directive—

Mr. Kaplan: All directives of the minister are available.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): —which falls within the definition of a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council—

Mr. Kaplan: It does not. If it is a directive it does not.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): That document falls within the definition of the confidence of the Queen's Privy Council. That is an incredibly broad definition.

Mr. Kaplan: It certainly does not include directives to the service.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I will welcome the Solicitor General's intervention on this point in defence of his rejection of the recommendation by the Pitfield committee on this important amendment. If that is the case, the Director of the new civilian security service can tell the so-called watchdog to get lost. He can say that he does not have to show him that document.

The Committee on Security and Intelligence, which is chaired by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and of which the Solicitor General is a member, decides the mandate and scope of the Communications Security Establishment. That is the shadowy body which has the power and technical capacity to spy on literally any conversation in the country. The Solicitor General asks us to trust them because the Cabinet does not allow them to do that under its present mandate. What if another Cabinet, at the stroke of a pen, as they could do, changed the mandate of the Communications Security Establishment? They could say that henceforth the CSE will be used to feed information to the civilian security service. We are put in a ludicrous position under the terms of this Bill. If the Inspector General somehow got wind of that particular decision and demanded to see the documents in question from the Director of the security service, the Director could tell the Inspector General that he does not have to show him that document. So much for the confidence of the Canadian people in the oversight process of this particular civilian security service.

• (1530)

I emphasize that Senator Pitfield is not a person who lightly recommends that certain confidences of the Queen's Privy Council be made accessible to any individual. Indeed, he was the chief architect of the exemption in the access to information law that led to that particular exemption. Yet that same individual along with other members of the Senate committee said that if there is to be effective oversight and if the public of this country is to have confidence in the oversight mechanism, surely as a minimum, if these documents are already in the possession of the security service, they should not be denied to the people who are supposed to be scrutinizing the activities of that same service. That was the recommendation of the Pitfield committee which the Minister chose to ignore.

I am pleased to say that at least one member on the Government side who I see in the House today, the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), who was chairman of the committee, strongly urged the committee to accept it. However, despite those urgings by that member of the committee and by a former Solicitor General, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), what does the Government do? It says to forget it; it will not trust its own appointed watchdogs with those documents. What incredible arrogance! What a devastating blow to the oversight process that the Government is suggesting meets the concerns of the public in terms of accountability!

The Government denies the right of Parliament to play a role. The basis for its rejection of Parliament's role is that there is another oversight process, an Inspector General and a review committee. That oversight process is gutted of any effective strengths if the Government defeats the motion which is before the House at this point. I appeal to Members of the House to look at what they are doing in terms of the future of this country, to look at what they are doing in terms of oversight. Surely it is not an unreasonable proposition that this motion, which would ensure that the watchers are able to fully carry out their mandate of scrutiny, must be adopted if that mandate is to be pursued with any effectiveness at all.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to make a few comments on this clause. Having spent several days listening to the clause by clause debate and to the amendments that have been proposed, you can see that this Bill is defective in many ways. However, it is not so defective that it could not be improved if we had more time to do so. The only reason we are being forced on this long march is that the Minister is worried about the end of the session approaching and he wants to have this Bill go through.

We have heard about the defects to the Bill and listened to arguments about whether the service should remain with the RCMP or should be a new civilian agency. It is an honest difference of view and while I believe it should remain with the RCMP, as do 75 per cent of the people, more time would let people hear the arguments on both sides and resolve it. It is evident that in this great country of ours it takes a month before people on the street really do come to see the issues clearly.

Mr. Kaplan: Do you think it has been a month? It has been 18.

Mr. Thacker: It has not been before the House of Commons for that long. When we are debating it in the House, that is when it really does get into the homes of the people.

We have also heard the dispute over the powers. We believe that the agency has too many powers. As parliamentarians, we should let the agency begin with narrow powers and expand them in the future if needed.

We have heard arguments on judicial warrants. We have also introduced amendments to limit the time of their effectiveness. Unfortunately, the Government has rejected all of these very reasonable amendments that would perfect the Bill rather than leave it in its present defective state.

With respect to Clause 30 which deals with the Inspector General, while it is a good idea to have oversight on a day-to-day basis by a person who is responsible to the Minister, the credibility of that man or woman could be vastly improved if there was consultation on the appointment of that person so that it was seen to be a position like that of the Auditor General who is accountable to Parliament rather than to the Minister himself. Perhaps that is an idea worth considering. The Minister refused to consider these ideas. We also believe that that individual should be able to see the same documents on which decisions are being made in order properly to enforce his or her mandate and be able to hear both sides of the story. Yet the Minister is restricting that person from seeing these documents, which are Cabinet documents.

As the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) told us in committee, the Cabinet documents which may be involved have been accessible not only by the Minister but the executive assistant to the Minister and the secretaries who typed the document. In fact, several layers of the bureaucracy have access to Cabinet documents and they are not nearly as secret as we might believe. As the former Solicitor General asked, why are we restricting that document from the Inspector General, who is supposed to be a check, when several layers of the bureaucracy at the political level and in the civil service have had access to it?

The Minister's arguments to restrict Cabinet documents failed on the weight of the evidence. I hope that even at this late stage Government Members will remind the Minister that he has been generous in the past. I agree that the Government has been generous in opening up the process for public scrutiny and it deserves credit for that. This would be a further step in that direction and would bring great honour to the Minister. Therefore I would ask him once again to change his mind and give the Inspector General at least access to these Cabinet documents.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think I should take a moment to explain once again the Government's position with respect to confidences of the Queen's Privy Council. I know that I cannot make any yards with the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). He challenged the Government to be reasonable. He is a Member who does not know the meaning of the word reasonable. If he did, I think we would have had more legislation proceed through this Parliament. In fact, in the context of this amendment, it makes me think of the great difficulty that the NDP has in recognizing the necessity to balance a variety of interests in order to get anywhere. They take the attitude, particularly the Member for Burnaby, that in measure after measure if they cannot get the whole cake, all the icing and all the candles, they would rather starve.

That is not the kind of attitude that permits any Parliament to work. In this particular case, Bill C-157, which I think is greatly improved by Bill C-9, was in itself a considerable improvement over the present arrangements. Bill C-9 takes us that much further. If the Hon. Member had his way and this Bill did not proceed, we would have no reform at all to the system of national security. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) was good enough to recognize that the review process, which is a reform in itself, does represent a considerable improvement and step forward. But as far as the Hon. Member for Burnaby is concerned, unless he gets his amendments or all the amendments, the review process is meaningless.

Let me suggest that the review process as it appears in the Bill is very meaningful. I appreciate the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills recognizing that it is in itself a step forward. The Inspector General and the review committee open the door. Although I can never explain adequately to the Member for Burnaby, let me explain again why it is that confidences of the Queen's Privy Council will—

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister continues to make reference to the need to explain to the Member for Burnaby. The Minister has to explain to the people of this country why he is mandating a service without proper overview.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. If the Hon. Member wants to rise on a point of order, he should stick to a point of order. That is debate.

Mr. Kaplan: During the administration of the Prime Minister, this Government has moved very considerably to reduce all of the prerogatives of the Government and of the Queen's Privy Council. I would say, and I do not think anyone here could contradict me, that the prerogatives of government have been reduced by legislation more in the last 16 years than in any comparable period in the history of the parliamentary system of government. We have introduced access to information legislation so that the former prerogative of the Government to keep all documents confidential unless it chooses otherwise has been very considerably reduced. We have introduced the Canada Evidence Act amendments which have reduced the number of documents that can be withheld from court process. We have introduced the Crown Liability Act so that the prerogative could not be asserted which prevented citizens of this country from using the Crown as a matter of right. That power has been reduced. In so many ways we have moved to reduce prerogatives of the Crown, and we have done it for a very good reason. It is because we want, to the maximum extent possible, to have an open and accessible government.

● (1540)

This is not recognized at all by the New Democratic Party but I know it is recognized by the Canadian people. One very important reservation which continues to be reserved are confidences of the Queen's Privy Council. These have been reserved in the Canada Evidence Act. These have been reserved in the Access to Information Act, and they have been reserved for the very good reason that in the opinion of this Government the functioning Cabinet, under the cabinet system of government, requires that Ministers of the Crown and their advisers can communicate with each other in confidence. We think that government is more effective, that decisions are better, if members of the government and their advisers can communicate with each other knowing that those exchanges will not be made public and will not be made available beyond the realm of the cabinet system without the approval of the Prime Minister.

I do not know, but Hon. Members opposite in the New Democratic Party have never given any weight at all to this requirement of cabinet government. I am wasting my time to ask them to do so. I would like, at least for the benefit of the people in the gallery, to explain that you cannot have as effective a cabinet system of government if confidences are not protected.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Tell that to Michael Pitfield.

Mr. Kaplan: Let me explain that one of the aspects of privileged communication is advice. I go to Cabinet, and I take to my Cabinet colleagues the best advice I can about how things in the area of national security should be handled. That advice is what we are trying to protect here. If that advice has to be made public or can ultimately be made public, or it is accessible to anyone, there is a very good chance that the Minister will not ask for advice because he may decide not to take it. If he knows that advice can be made public and he can be asked to explain why he asked for advice, why good advice was given to him and he did not take it, he will be less inclined to get advice. The same thing applies to legal advice. I have encouraged all of my officials to get legal advice from the law officers of the Crown whenever they think it will be helpful to them. That advice is privileged. If they knew that advice could be made public whenever somebody requested it, they would be less inclined to seek advice. I think it is in the interest of good government in this country that that advice should be sought. We are seeking to reserve the prerogative of confidence of the Queen's Privy Council, notwithstanding the establishment of this review committee.

The Hon. Member opposite says that if they cannot get Queen's Privy Council confidences, the whole review process is useless. How wrong that is. I can tell the Hon. Member opposite that no privileges of the Queen's Privy Council have gone to the security service in all of the time that I have been Solicitor General. If that privilege were removed, there would be nothing to be made public under that heading so far as decisions or discussions of Cabinet Ministers going to the security service are concerned.

I think again Hon. Members opposite are very seriously exaggerating the significance of Queen's Privy Council confidences so far as the operations of the new agency are concerned. I can assure them that the review committee system and the Inspector General system will be very effective without it.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few comments on the little sermon we just heard from the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). First, the Solicitor General is dead wrong and he knows that he is dead wrong when he says, as he just did, and as he said on other occasions, that members of the New Democratic Party will not support a proposal, not support legislation, unless it contains everything they want. Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker.

I can think of two matters which are still before the House about which we are very co-operative in order to get them through before Parliament adjourns, even though they do not meet the problems which we think they are supposed to solve. We are not satisfied with the proposal to increase the guaranteed income supplement by $50 a month, but we will support it because it is better than nothing at all. We are not satisfied with the amendments to the Labour Code which are being brought forward. We think much more should have been done. In as far as they go, they are an improvement on what we have had. We not only support them but we have indicated very clearly that we will let them through with very little debate on our part.

Those are just two illustrations of the policy we have always followed of supporting legislation if it moves in the right direction, even though it does not contain anything we want.

I think the Solicitor General almost dislocated his shoulder trying to pat himself on the back while speaking. He talked about how Parliament had become more relevant and how much more open the Government is than it used to be. There is a consensus in the country and, I am sure, among Members of Parliament who do not happen to be Cabinet Ministers—I speak not just of Members of the Opposition but of backbench Members on the Government side—that Parliament has never been as irrelevant, has never been as little consulted, because the Government decides everything in advance and simply will not listen to any suggestions no matter from where they come.

The Minister talked about the great Access to Information Act. I have had some experience with that Act. We know from the McDonald Commission report that the RCMP security service collected personal files on 700,000 Canadians. I had a suspicion that I may have been one of those people. I followed all the procedures, filled out all the forms, and applied for permission to see my file. I still do not know whether the RCMP has a file on me, although I am reasonably certain it does because I was told that under the provisions of the Access to Information Act such information is confidential. Therefore, I cannot be told even whether there is or not.

Similarly, and I have mentioned this already, using the United States Freedom of Information Act, I applied for the same kind of information from the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Lo and behold, not being a citizen of the United States, I got from the Federal Bureau of Investigation what they had on me in their files. It was not of any consequence, but there is the difference. That is just one single illustration of the difference between the American Act and the Canadian Act. Our Act is to a large extent a hoax, just another way of creating the image that the Government has done something when in fact it has done very little.

It is the same thing with this Bill, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we need an Act with regard to the security service. What was wrong before was that there was little or no control over the security service. We do not need an Act which purports to lay down rules, regulations and procedures that the security service shall follow and at the same time gives it the power to do, not only everything it wants to do, but that which it did before that the McDonald Commission, among others, indicated was improper and immoral and broke the law. This Bill is changing the law to give the security service the right to do the things which it was not permitted legally to do before.

● (1550)

The Solicitor General, either deliberately or because he does not understand, tried to suggest that we are proposing in this amendment that all Cabinet documents be made available to the public. This is not the time nor the place to discuss what Cabinet documents should be made public. However, it is interesting to anyone who follows what happens in the United States to look at some of the books and articles published in recent years in that country. They will see the vast amount of information about what is going on in the American Government which is now available to the public—Cabinet documents, remarks of Secretaries, who are comparable with our Ministers, and so on.

What we are saying in this proposal is that the Inspector General is supposed to be the watchdog. Supposedly he is the person who will guarantee to the public that the security service is not misusing its powers. The Inspector General is to be the watchdog. The public is to assume that he is there and has the authority to ensure that the security service does not overstep its bounds, does not break the law, and gives adequate protection to the people of Canada. If the Inspector General cannot be trusted to get all relevant information, to see all relevant documents and to see all the motions passed by Cabinet, what is the point of having an Inspector General? The only point is the one that we have come to expect from Liberal governments. They will give the appearance of doing something and of dealing with a question. They will create the appearance that the public is being protected while in fact they, the security service or any other department, will be able to continue in the same secretive, high-handed, unilateral manner in terms of decision-making as they always have. This is why we proposed this amendment and why the Solicitor General ought not to try to cloud the issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is on Motion No. 75. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. For purposes of clarity, the recorded divisions on the other motions in this particular grouping, Motions Nos. 77, 78 and 79, are also deferred.

The next grouping will be Motion No. 85 and Motion No. 86.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 85

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 34.

Motion No. 86

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 34 by striking out lines 38 to 44 at page 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Each member of the Review Committee shall be appointed to hold office during good behaviour for a term not exceeding seven years."

and by renumbering subsection (4) accordingly.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of these motions which are now before the House, Motions Nos. 85 and 86, is to attempt to point out some very serious deficiencies in the proposed wording of the legislation with respect to the socalled watchdog, the Security Intelligence Review Committee or the SIRC, as it is known.

The Government does not trust Members of Parliament to oversee the operations of the new service. It refused to accept the recommendation of the McDonald Commission in this respect. It refused to accept the precedents of West Germany, United States and a number of other countries in this respect. Instead the Government says that we should trust its oversight process because it is establishing the Security Intelligence Review Committee.

What are some of the flaws in that oversight process, that SIRC process? First, although there is a requirement for consultation before the appointment of the members of that review committee, ultimately it is a decision of the Government as to who will be named to the committee. Government Members can name cronies of the Liberal Government or whomever else they choose without any opportunity for Members of the Opposition to have an effective say in the choice of members of the review committee. In terms of the appointment process, that is the first flaw in this provision.

Second, having appointed these people, what powers do they have under the terms of the legislation? The first constraint on the review committee is that it is bound by an oath of secrecy. Members of the review committee are bound by an oath of secrecy, so they cannot report to Parliament, to the elected representatives of the people of the country, anything which would breach their oath of secrecy. What kind of effective oversight does that give to Parliament? This secret, shadowy security service will be operating without any meaningful accountability whatsoever.

Another significant barrier to effective oversight is the fact that the review committee will not have the power, if the amendment proposed by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) is accepted in due course, to access Cabinet documents or confidences of the Queen's Privy Council.

I could do no better than quote Professor Peter Russell who talked about the sheer arrogance of this provision and how ridiculous it was that one group of Privy Councillors was not prepared to trust another group of Privy Councillors with information already in the hands of the security service. That effectively guts the review process of any meaning or any substance whatsoever.

Let us look at the tremendous powers which the new security service will have. It will have the power to break into anyone's home, to break into an office or any other place, to steal documents, to remove literally anything it wants to remove, to have access to confidential medical and psychiatric records, to have access to journalists' documents, the offices of Members of Parliament and their documents, and to have access to income tax records. The list goes on and on. We are told not to worry because there will be an oversight committee which will ensure that there are no abuses.

• (1600)

I suggest that this oversight committee is a completely toothless watchdog because it does not even have access to the essential documents in the hands of the security service. Some of us suspected that the RCMP security service was hung out to dry because of the failure on the part of former Solicitors General to accept political responsibility for their actions. That would continue to be possible under the provisions of this legislation.

We say that the oversight process is a sham. Only the involvement of Members of Parliament in a parliamentary oversight committee, as was strongly recommended by the McDonald Commission, is adequate if these sweeping new powers are not to become a political weapon in the hands of the government of the day. That is the purpose of Motion No. 85, to delete Clause 34.

Motion No. 86 would change the length of tenure of the proposed review committee from one term of five years which would be renewable for a second five-year term to one non-renewable term of five years. There is a real danger that the agency which is established to oversee the operations of the new security service could become captured by the very service that it is supposed to be overseeing.

There is a danger that if members of the review committee are currying favour with the Government and seeking reappointment to their positions, they will not be as vigilant in their oversight. Limited though it may be, they will not be as vigilant in that oversight as they should be. The amendment before the House would establish a term of office of seven years and would provide that that term should not be renewed in order to prevent that kind of toadying to the government of the day by the review committee.

The bottom line in this series of motions now before the House is that the Government has betrayed the trust of the people it was elected to represent. It refuses to provide for meaningful accountability and oversight for the operations of this new service which theoretically would have the power to say no, no to the suggestion that the security service might target hundreds of thousands of Canadians. Indeed, the RCMP security service opened files on close to one million Canadians, men and women who broke no law whatsoever, activists in the peace movement, activitists in support of the liberation movements in South America and South Africa; yet this Government has the audacity to bring a Bill before this House that would in effect countenance and make legal what was so clearly documented as being illegal by the McDonald Commission, institutionalized wrongdoing.

The purpose of these motions is very fundamental. It is no less than an attempt to restore some semblance of parliamentary oversight; failing that, it is an attempt to ensure that this toothless watchdog, the review committee which is denied access to documents in the possession of the security service, should at the very least not be currying favour with the government of the day in an attempt to win reappointment. Surely this Parliament should accept nothing less if we are serious about any kind of oversight of the operations of such a powerful agency in a democratic society.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, Clause 34 which sets up the Security Intelligence Review Committee is another area where our Party differs substantially from the Government. Canadians are entitled to be aware of the difference. Our view is that the officials of the review committee, SIRC, should be elected. Our neighbour to the South with its enormous security problems has its CIA and FBI accountable to an elected body of officials both in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. It is the elected officials who bear the ultimate responsibility to the people. We find that principle attractive.

Canadians need to know that the Government is not of the view that it should be putting responsibility and trust in the elected officials, that it wants to leave those responsibilities with people that it, the Cabinet, appoints. It is always dangerous to put information into the hands of elected people who are accountable to the populace in general. They may act in the interest of the people instead of in the interest of the government of the day. As we know from the actions of the Liberal Government, it finds that to be dangerous. People need to know. We have that fundamental difference as to who would be on this body.

When you look at the appointees to the hundreds of Crown corporations who have been appointed by the Governor in Council, the Cabinet, you see immediately why we are concerned. While a Crown corporation can work in certain jurisdictions, whenever they got into deep trouble it has been as a result of the appointees to their boards, appointed by the Liberal patronage machine. Canadair lost almost $2 billion of taxpayers' money, yet the directors of Canadair, all appointed by the Liberal Cabinet, received an increase in salary this year. They are not truly responsible because they are just political hacks rather than people who are genuinely accountable to the shareholders of that corporation. de Havilland also lost money. Every few years this Parliament has to write off $700 million or $800 million which CNR has lost because its directors, appointed through the political patronage of the Liberal Party, have not done their job. When Canadians see the billions of dollars that Petro-Canada has lost with the senior management of that corporation having been appointed by the Liberal patronage machine, they will be absolutely ill. They will be sick at heart because the Government does not have to operate that way. The Government will have to live with the judgment of the people in the next election.

In trying to ease the concern of people, the Government said that appointments would only be made after consultation with the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons and the Leader in the House of Commons of each Party having at least 12 members. That is a small step. I suppose consultation is better than absolutely nothing. However, let us look at what the witnesses said. These people tried to do what was right. They took time to read the Bill, ponder it, discuss it, and then gave us the benefit of their thinking. For example, the CJC suggested that in naming its members, the Prime Minister should seek the consent of the Leader of the Opposition and should consult the Leaders of the other Parties in the House.

I would go further. If we really want SIRC to have genuine credibility, the Leader of the Official Opposition should be able to appoint one in three or three in five of the review committee. The purpose of the review committee is to lend credibility to the security service so that Canadians know that that security service is not getting into areas that it should not. If we want that committee, which will have to issue a report to Parliament, to be totally believable, the ideal situation would be to have a key person involved, and it should be the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition. If that person were to appoint one out of three or two out of five of the commissioners, the Government would still do the bulk of the appointing but the committee would have enormous credibility if the Leader of the Official Opposition had that right.

● (1610)

Again the Government rejected that proposal, which we had put forward sincerely. The witnesses thought that there should be opposition consent, if not outright opposition appointment, and the Government rejected that. Therefore, as is true with all of the other proposals, whether they are to leave the service with the RCMP, the power of the agency is too broad or the judicial warrants are in effect for too long a period of time, the Government will have to accept the judgment of the Canadian people. The Canadian peole will have to take this matter in hand to get their sovereignty back. The Government will have to be defeated so that a new Government can continue an ongoing review process and make changes to bring the legislation back into line with our traditional Canadian freedoms which we have all come to respect and which I believe are being pushed rather hard by this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this grouping of motions concerns the clause by which the members of the review committee are appointed. It has been pointed out that the chief problem with the manner of appointment is that this review committee becomes the creature of the Government. Its members are appointed by the Government only, perhaps with some little official consultation. The appointments are decided on only by the Government and the appointees are therefore not in any sense responsible to Parliament.

It is not surprising that the Government, after indicating that the group will not be appointed by Parliament or be in any sense responsible to Parliament, has further indicated that the group should not trust Parliament and must take an oath of secrecy which separates it from Parliament. That oath would in fact bind the committee to the very group it is supposed to be watch-dogging. It is a strange kind of watchdog which must have a greater loyalty to the group it is supposed to watch than to the group whose interests it is supposed to defend. That is the case here.

This committee will owe its first obligation to the Minister's secret service and any obligation to Parliament will only be such that the secret service will allow. That is to say, the secret service will tell this committee what its limits are under the oath of secrecy, what information it is permitted to reveal to Parliament and what information it is not permitted to reveal to Parliament. It is because of that that we are experiencing this charade of Privy Council confidences.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has said that there are no confidential Privy Council documents being used by the secret service at present. He did not say that no such documents would be used but he did say that there are not any being used at present and that this is not an issue. If in fact this is not an issue, he should not have insisted on putting that restriction into law. He contradicts himself in that way. What is he afraid of? Is he afraid that people who have been hand-picked by the Government are not to be trusted? He tells us a ridiculous story about how every Cabinet document cannot be made public.

No one on this side of the House has suggested that every Cabinet document should be made public. We have suggested that if a Cabinet document has been made public to the extent of being shown to the security service for its use, something which the Minister says has not yet happened but clearly thinks might happen—and he might even want it to happen—then it should also be made available to one more person. It should not be made available to the whole world. It should not be made available to the press of Members of Parliament per se. It should be made available to the Inspector General and to the people who have already been hand-picked by the Government to review such documents. The Solicitor General acts in such a schizophrenic way that he now says that the group he is supposed to trust is not to be trusted.

The question is why we should trust the Solicitor General and the Government he represents. This is the party which used the War Measures Act against the Japanese in Canada 40 years ago, an action that has been regarded almost universally as being shameful and unjustified on the grounds then given of security. In recent years it has become apparent that the then Prime Minister and his Cabinet knew that such action was not justified on grounds of security because their own security advisers in the RCMP and the army had told them that it was not justified. They did it for other meaner purposes than security but used security as a cloak.

Likewise, the invasion of Montreal 14 years ago by the troops of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) occurred after the Liberal Government again invoked the War Measures Act for reasons that have not yet become clear. The actions taken at that time did help to disrupt a reform threat in the Montreal municipal elections but we really do not know what the Government was after. It certainly did not accomplish any of its stated purposes by invading Montreal with tanks and by throwing 300 or 400 people into jail, none of whom was found chargeable.

Very soon the voters will be asked to elect Members of Parliament. They will be told by the smooth talkers in the Government that the people they elect will defend their liberties as well as do other good things. They will be told that they are sending people to Parliament to guide and if necessary oversee the Government. Yet if this Bill has been passed by that time, that purpose will be completely frustrated because those who will be sent to Parliament, even the majority of those on the government side, will not have an opportunity to look into what is happening with the security service. Only a privileged few within the Cabinet itself and perhaps a few other Privy councillors who are satisfactory to the Prime Minister will have that opportunity. No one elected to represent the great majority of the ridings in Canada will have any right to watch over the actions of the security service. That is a destruction of the liberties we enjoy in this country.

I received a telegram from one of my constituents which reads:

> The Canadian Government sometimes forgets it is elected to serve the Canadian people. We, the Canadian public, cannot allow our fundamental rights to be "subverted" by government bureaucrats and the RCMP.

He might well have added to that "and by the new security service". This legislation will be marked as being the achievement of 1984 in Canada. The tradition of democratic control of the police, democratic control of the state that uses force and information search and intrusion techniques, democratic control of the powers of coercion, will be decisively taken away from the elected representatives of the country. That will be a sad day, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay the House but I do wish to say a word or two in regard to the Security Intelligence Review Committee. I think the provision for this committee is probably one of the most important items in the Bill because the public will depend upon the committee to see that things are done properly and correctly.

I would like to hear the comments of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) on one or two points in connection with Clause 34. The committee is appointed by the Governor in Council or by Cabinet. The committee is therefore responsible to Cabinet, not to the House of Commons or to Parliament. I do not have any great objection to that, although I would much rather have it responsible to the Parliament of Canada. However, being responsible to the Cabinet is certainly not too far-fetched if the Cabinet is responsible to the House of Commons and gives the House of Commons the information which is available and which it needs or wants.

● (1620)

There is a provision in Clause 6(2) which bothers me. That is the fact that the review committee is not able to give any information to the House of Commons committee for review. The House of Commons committee is denied that under Clause 6(3). It reads:

> Security Intelligence Service
> Directions issued by the Minister under subsection (2) shall be deemed not to be statutory instruments for the purposes of the Statutory Instruments Act.

Therefore, directions which are issued by the Minister to the review committee are being denied to the House of Commons committee. What is that? The committee in the House of Commons is composed of Members of Parliament from all Parties. The committee is the only access which Members of Parliament have to this type of information. If the House of Commons committee is denied information by a direction from the Minister and that information is made available to the Director or to the review committee, then that information is not available to Members of Parliament.

That is a very strange way of making Parliament responsible. Surely a committee set up in this House to review statutory instruments should have access to information which pertains to that. Why should information which concerns the civil liberties of the people of Canada be denied to a parliamentary committee? I cannot follow that. Is it that the parliamentary committee cannot be trusted? The review committee is being trusted. If it originally came from the Minister, that would mean that a number of public servants had already seen the information. Anyone in the Minister's office would have had access to that information. Several layers of public servants would have had access to it. Yet the House of Commons committee, which is set up by Parliament and under the rules of the House, would not be able to look at the information.

I do not think that is sound. If Parliament is responsible then the committee is accountable to Parliament and Parliament must have all of the facts—not just the facts which the review committee wants to give to it, but all of the facts. If the Parliament of Canada is denied that, it would indicate that the Parliament of Canada cannot be trusted; or, in broader terms, that the people of Canada cannot be trusted. The information should be made available to a committee of the House of Commons in order that it can analyse the information to determine if the information is right and proper. It might well be that a Minister issues directions which he feels are in good sense and good order. However, sometimes there are differences of views in regard to what is right and what is wrong. The Minister may very well issue instructions to a committee or to a public servant that are not correct and not in the interests of the people of Canada. Perhaps the instructions might be in the interests of an individual or in the interests of a political Party. Then what happens? A committee is set up in Parliament to review those instructions and to keep tab on them, but that committee cannot see them.

That is not accountability in my view. That is hiding the facts from the public. It is slipped in here in such an innocent way that I would think probably one out of every ten people would not even realize that it is in the legislation. Does the press realize that this type of information will not be given to the House of Commons committee which was set up to study it? I have not seen any mention of it in the newspapers. Therefore, the people outside this House are not able to receive the information. We might send a few of these Bills out to our constituents. However, unless those constituents have been given some guidance as to what is going on and what parliamentary terms mean, the Bills become almost meaningless.

I would like to mention another point which has been raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). It is in connection with the oath of secrecy. When the members of the committee are appointed by the Government in Council, they must take an oath. That oath is included in the Bill. I have no objection whatsoever to the oath of office because I think it is right. I think there are bounds within which people who are members of committees must be restrained from giving information to every Tom, Dick and Harry or Mary, Ann and Josephine. However, surely that should not be applicable to Members of Parliament who are responsible to the people. The oath of secrecy reads:

> I, . . . , swear that I will not, without due authority, disclose or make known to any person any information acquired by me by reason of the duties performed by me on behalf of or under the direction of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service or by reason of any office or employment held by me pursuant to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act. So help me God.

"Without due authority". From whom would they get the authority? From the Cabinet? Perhaps from the Minister. Normally the authority would be given by those who appoint a person. They are the only people who should have responsibility. When it is everybody's responsibility, it is nobody's responsibility.

I think we should give careful thought to this whole matter to ensure that this body will be responsible and accountable to Parliament—not only to the Cabinet but to Parliament which represents the people of Canada. That is the number one issue as far as I am concerned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is on Motion No. 85. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 79, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. Of course, that will also automatically defer the vote on Motion No. 86.

• (1630)

The next group of motions is headed by Motion No. 93. This series of motions for debate includes Motions Nos. 93, 94, 95, 96 and 97. Motion No. 93, proposed by Mr. Burnaby—by Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Orlikow, moves that Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 38 by striking out lines 5 to 7 on page 19 and substituting the following therefor—

Shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 93

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 38 by striking out lines 5 to 7 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"(vi) to review the regulations,

(vii) to compile and analyze statistics on the operational activities of the service,

(viii) to review criteria for security assessments pursuant to subsection 13,

(ix) to review the relationships between the service and all other bodies and agencies engaged in security or intelligence functions in Canada, and

(x) to review terms and conditions of employment established by the director pursuant to section 8 of this Act;".

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South) moved:

Motion No. 94

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 38 by adding immediately after line 7 at page 19 the following:

"(b) to review, generally, the effectiveness and the propriety of Canada's security and intelligence functions and arrangements, including such functions as are carried on by any agency, department or institution of the Government of Canada;"

and by re-numbering the subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 95

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 39.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada) moved:

Motion No. 96

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 39

(a) by striking out line 27 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"evidence, but subject to subsection (3), the Review Committee is entitled"

(b) by adding immediately after line 42 at page 19 the following:

"(3) No information described in subsection (2), other than a confidence of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada in respect of which subsection 36.3(1) of the Canada Evidence Act applies, may be withheld from the Committee on any grounds."

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 97

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 39 by striking out lines 30 to 32 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"Inspector General and to receive from the".

Mr. Waddell: I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on a point of order.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, when you were reading the motions, you referred to the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) as "Mr. Burnaby". I just want to point that out. While he has perhaps properly acquired the title in his work in this debate, in the interests of equality in the House, when you refer to me next, could you call me "Mr. Vancouver", please, Sir? It would help in the re-election of all our Hon. Members!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I appreciate the correction. As I recall, I did make a slip of the tongue and used the constituency, although I then added the words "Mr. Robinson". Debate.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, this series of amendments is absolutely critical to the Bill, and Canadians genuinely have to understand that the Parties have a very distinct and different view of them. What the Government has done, I feel, is just simply wrong. It is going to pay a bitter penalty for it. While we think we could have convinced Government Members to make some changes, part of the problem is the New Democratic Party. It has attacked every clause with equal vehemence because it had no sense of judgment as to what was absolutely critical to the Bill, and because it has used an elephant gun even on the pigeons, now that we have come to an elephant. Because of its stalling tactics, Canadians do not appreciate how critical this clause is.

Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker, that the review committee, in our view, should have access to Cabinet documents. The Senate committee which looked at this matter and heard dozens of witnesses felt that the review committee should have access to Cabinet documents. The Government did not and so there was no access put into Bill C-9. The witnesses who came before the committee said that the review committee should have access to Cabinet documents. A motion was put forth to bring that about at committee stage and it was passed by that committee so that, as the Bill which was reported from the committee stood, the review committee would have access to Cabinet documents.

The Cabinet has now put forth Motion No. 96 which would reinstate secrecy and the review committee would not have access to Cabinet documents. I sat in committee that night when this clause was being discussed at committee stage. Government Members on the committee were divided. As a result, one of the Government Members voted for our amendment, and that was quite appropriate, Mr. Speaker.

I guess what I am saying is that we have a process here in Parliament and we should trust that process and not let a Cabinet lay on its heavy hand. The Government is wrong. The Government is abusing the parliamentary process with the amendment it has put forth. It is abusing the trust of the Canadian people. Those Government Members are going to have to be defeated, every single one of them in the next election, by the looks of it, in order that we can get that trust back.

On this question, Mr. Speaker, I urge the Liberal back-benchers to search their conscience and to look at this issue. We know many of those Hon. Members believe there should be access to Cabinet documents. Indeed, the former Solicitor General who was part of the Cabinet and was the Solicitor General through the FLQ crisis, or at least part of that time, believes that this review committee must have access to Cabinet documents in order for that review committee to have credibility for it to be able to function effectively in holding the agency to account.

Where is Mr. Turner on this issue, Mr. Speaker? We know that his first official act in his role as pro tem Prime Minister, after being briefed in the afternoon, was to permit closure to be brought in on this Bill. We know that his second act was to have this Bill attack the real cultural tradition of this institution.

Mr. Evans: How do you know that?

Mr. Thacker: I presume that the Liberals are smart enough to brief their pro tem Prime Minister. Am I to assume, Mr. Speaker, that those Hon. Members are not informing their leader of these attacks on our institution?

However, his third act, Mr. Speaker, is to condone an action whereby the Cabinet is attacking the very parliamentary process which he claims he is going to strengthen. He is calling for more free votes. Well, let us have a free vote on this because I am confident that the Liberal Members of Parliament, in using their heads, would agree with our position on the issue and would vote with us. Indeed, they did at the committee stage, Mr. Speaker. Now Cabinet is going to sit on its members. Cabinet is saying to those Hon. Members: "You might be elected by the people, but if you do not go with us, we are going to hurt you. You will not get on any boards or commissions. There will be no judicial appointments for you. Either you fall in line or we will punish you". That is how the Liberal Cabinet has traditionally kept those Hon. Members in line.

Motion No. 94 in the name of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), should also be accepted, and I believe it would be accepted by Liberal back-benchers if we could have a free vote. What this motion says is that the review committee should not only have access to the documents and the work of the security service, but it should also have access to the security functions of other branches of government.

• (1640)

For example, we know that the External Affairs Department conducts extensive intelligence work, as does the Department of National Defence. Yet only the new agency will be subjected to overview by this review committee. Given the history of this Cabinet, there is no doubt what it will do when it is into something it wants to be kept secret. It will try to get the security service to do it. If the Director, because he has a review committee, says no, he will not touch that with a ten-foot pole, they will simply assign the job to the Defence of External Affairs security service and do indirectly what they cannot do directly. The motion by my friend from Vancouver South says "no way". All of these agencies have to go through the review committee so it will have a broad overview of what is going on and provide for some real accountability.

Make no bones about it, Mr. Speaker, this is a critical Bill. I regret that the NDP have sort of dissipated its importance by attacking everything equally. By applying some judgment to it, we should have forgotten about all the small clauses and honed in on the five or six critical areas. I think we could have more effectively convinced the Canadian people to go with us and put enough pressure on back-benchers on the other side that they could have stood against the Cabinet.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to rise again in this debate, especially after my colleague was interrupted by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). This distinguished Government Member was shouting across the Chamber because my colleague said what must be said. That is, that the first act of the reform-minded John Turner, who brought in the War Measures Act and never explained why, and never explained why he left this place, in fact never explains anything until a clarification comes up and you have to wait a long time for that—

Mr. Evans: Your fear is showing.

Mr. Fraser: The first act of the new Leader of the Liberal Party was to approve closure on the security Bill. If my hon. friend from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), who happens to be my Member of Parliament, is prepared to rise in his place and tell this House that the Hon. John Turner, this reform-minded fellow from yesterday, is not in favour of closure on this Bill, then let him stand up and say so.

[Translation]

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Gourde) on a point of order.

Mr. Gourde: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether my hon. friend from Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) has finished, but I just want to remind him of the rules of relevance in debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is not a point of order. The Hon. member for Vancouver South.

[English]

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, my good friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, was there in committee. He contributed mightily to the committee's work by moving a motion that would have cut off any debate whatsoever on any amendments. He contributed a great deal and he talked to me about relevance. Let me say something about relevance. It was not a Member on this side who raised the issue of whether Mr. Turner agreed with closure. It was the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre who raised it. All I was doing was giving my friends on the Government side the courtesy of responding to them.

There is another thing being done by this reform-minded Mr. Turner. Motion No. 96 is in the name of the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan). In the committee the only amendment of substance that was passed was one which said that the review committee should see the Cabinet documents that relate directly to the security service. That is what we managed to get done in committee. Now, with Mr. Turner's blessing, the Solicitor General comes in here a couple of days after this great reform convention—they are going to open this place up and let the fresh air in—with an amendment which would wipe out the only substantive amendment passed in committee. Some reform! As I said yesterday, it is not a new deal, it is the old deal writ large. We are going to be asking the Canadian public the simple question: Would you buy a used government from Mr. Turner? That is what they will be getting. That is what the issue will be in the coming campaign.

It is absolutely incredible. This Government tells us to get on with second reading, to get the Bill into committee, listen to the witnesses, make our motions for amendments, and the Government will give them due consideration. If there are sensible suggestions from sensible people they will listen and accept them if appropriate. We get an amendment in which finally gives the review committee what they absolutely have to have if they are going to be a review committee, and that is the right to see the orders from Cabinet. Sure, it was by accident because a Liberal Member was asleep in his chair, but we got it through nonetheless. But then what happened? The first thing Mr. Turner tells the Solicitor General to do this week is to get an amendment in to make sure there is no way in the world the review committee could ever look at what the Cabinet orders the agency to do.

This reminds me of the marvellous theory of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In 1977 we asked what they had been doing after these revelations of wrongdoing. He said we do not need to worry about secret acts done in the night by the police, the courts will protect us. That is what that great law professor, the Right Hon. the Prime Minister, said. What a laughable notion that was and is. If there are secret things done by the police in the dark of night, the court will never hear about them so they cannot protect us. But that notion is alive and well in this Chamber. The Solicitor General is imbued with it, as is the pack of mummified creatures which represent their constituencies on the Government side. No matter how ancient they may be or what wisdom they may have accumulated, they are all wrapped in mummy clothing and all you will ever get out of them is dust from their old, staring faces. These are the people who are going to go along with this quaint notion of the Prime Minister. They will make absolutely sure of it because the new Leader has made sure that the only substantive amendment the Solicitor General has at report stage is to wipe out what we managed to do in committee. How can a review committee give the public any confidence that it will know what is going on if it cannot see those documents? The fact of the matter is it cannot; the Government knows it but it just does not care.

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend, the Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), has often mentioned the good relationship we both have. He is right, on a personal basis, and I also admire him as a parliamentarian, because the way he works is usually very non-partisan.

Unfortunately, during the last few hours he has started fighting the next election. That is unfortunate, because at this stage of a Bill, we should be dealing with individual clauses. He said, for instance—and not once but several times—that the Government did not accept any substantial amendments in committee. I would like to emphasize at this point that we accepted about fifteen amendments to this Bill at the committee stage, including several to narrow down the definition of threats to national security by adding the qualifier "serious", which was proposed by the Official Opposition and the Senate, since it was a fairly serious amendment.

We also clarified the provision that gives individuals the right to appear in person before the Review Committee. We agreed to make substantial changes in the Immigration Act. And we also reduced the maximum duration of warrants issued in cases of subversion to sixty days, from the previous duration of one year.

If we include Bill C-157, there have been fifty or more amendments up to now. Since a number of those amendments were presented by the Hon. Member and by the Progressive Conservatives, the Hon. Member must admit these were amendments of substance.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) on a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the rules of the House have changed. Are Members now permitted to take photographs inside the Chamber? If they have changed I would like to take a few photographs too. One of the Liberal Members just took a photograph a few moments ago. That is against the rules of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The taking of photographs is not allowed in the House except by personnel of the House of Commons with special permission of the Chair. I would ask all Members to refrain from such a practice.

Mr. Taylor: I suggest the film should be destroyed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) on the point of order.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I am the one who took a picture. I was trying to see if there was film in the camera and it will be destroyed. You have my word.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Motions Nos. 93 through 97 which are presently before the House. We are now at the point in the deliberations of the House at which the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan) is attempting to reverse the one decision of substance by the committee to strengthen the provisions of this Bill. I emphasize that and hope that Members of the House are aware of exactly what is going on here. On a casting vote of the chairman of the Justice Committee the committee decided that the Security Intelligence Review Committee should have full access, at least to all of the documents which are in the possession of the security service itself. That was the decision of the Justice Committee.

I note that that decision was taken despite the fact that the former Solicitor General, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), was yanked off the committee. Although he attended meeting after meeting of the committee and heard the witnesses that appeared before the committee, when it came to the tough decisions on voting, despite being the Solicitor General of this country for four years, the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East was replaced by members of the Liberal Party who had never attended meetings of the Justice Committee.

Mr. Evans: Are you sure he did not ask to be taken off?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): What a shameful manipulation of the committee—

Mr. Evans: Did he tell you he was yanked off?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): —by members of the Government. Despite his expressed desire to vote on amendments, the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East was pulled off the replaced by the trained seals on the other side.

On this motion the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East said:

> Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the review comittee was to give credibility to the Bill, to assure the public that there would be a balance between the needs for security and the needs for protection of civil rights and so on. There are not too many occasions when Cabinet documents will be the subject matter of review by the security service, or in their hands.

He went on to say:

> But refusing to allow the review committee to examine them I think raises again more suspicions in the minds of the public. I have made this argument many, many times. I just cannot understand why we insist on preventing them—

That is a man who was the Solicitor General for four years. He is indicating that he has no idea why the Government is refusing access to these documents by the review committee. The chairman of the committee himself cast the deciding vote. The Liberal Member who chairs the committee said:

> The chairman has reflected for a long time on this subject and has heard all arguments. The chairman has never been convinced by the Minister that there was reason for those documents in possession of the service not to be shown to the oversight committee. For those reasons the chairman votes in favour of the amendment.

The amendment actually carried in committee. It was the one amendment of substance to be put before the committee and adopted. Now before the House the Solicitor General tells his trained seals that they do not want to accept the decision of the Justice Committee and tells them to reverse it. What insufferable arrogance on the part of the Solicitor General!

Professor Peter Russell was one of the many witnesses who appeared before the committee. The witnesses were virtually unanimous on the question of access to Cabinet documents by members of the review committee. Professor Russell said:

It is preposterous that some of the Queen's Privy Councillors cannot trust other of the Queen's Privy Councillors.

The Government that seeks our trust in establishing a civilian security agency under its direction must trust the watchdogs it will appoint on our behalf.

Those are the remarks of Professor Peter Russell. He talks of the sheer arrogance of the Government in this provision.

For once the committee was actually prepared to listen to the witnesses. Then the Government turns around and says to hell with the Justice Committee. Even though the Government puts its trained seals in, the committee will still be prepared to accept the amendment. But the Government is going to reverse what the Justice Committee did in the one area of substance. What a mockery of the independence of committees in the House!

The Senate committee was chaired by Michael Pitfield. He surely is not one lightly to disregard conventions of Cabinet secrecy and so on. Even the Senate committee strongly recommended this amendment. It unanimously recommended that the Security Intelligence Review Committee should have access to all documents, including Cabinet documents, in the possession of the security service. The Pitfield committee said:

As with the Inspector General, the SIRC should have access to all cabinet documents in the possession of the CSIS. Finally, the committee believes that the staffing of the SIRC is a very important matter and should be done with care to ensure that it is a small but effective body.

● (1700)

We can hear from the Minister's flunky, his Parliamentary Secretary, if he dares to stand up and defend this provision, if he is capable of defending this provision, which some of us doubt. We can hear from the Minister's flunky in due course.

However, the Pitfield committee makes it very clear that at least the review committee which is made up of Privy Councillors should be trusted by other Privy Councillors with documents in the possession of the security service. We reject the suggestion of the Minister that the decision of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs should be overturned and that secrecy should be the order of the day with respect to this review committee, particularly when the Government refuses to accept the recommendations of the McDonald Commission and the many witnesses who appeared before the committee. Parliament itself should play a role, not just to a group of handpicked former Privy Councillors. The Congress of the United States has trusted members of Congress to play a role in oversight.

The Government denies elected representatives the right to full and effective oversight and says that it is establishing a committee. But even though that committee will be made up of Privy Councillors, it will not be trusted with documents that are in the hands of the security service. What insufferable arrogance on the part of the Government. What denial of any meaningful oversight.

The motions before the House would also ensure that the relationships between the security service and any other bodies and agencies engaged in security or intelligence functions in Canada would also come under the umbrella of the review committee. Otherwise it will be all too easy for a government to evade its responsibility and evade the scrutiny of the oversight committee by in fact transferring responsibility from the Security Intelligence Service to some other shadowy intelligence agency that does not fall under the umbrella framework of this legislation.

Therefore, I urge Members of the House for once to display a little bit of independence. We know we cannot rely on the flunky, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister, to do so, but certainly I know that when the time comes to vote on this important motion perhaps there will be one or two Members on the other side of the House who will display some sense of integrity and dedication to the principles of effective oversight and will vote against the Solicitor General's motion.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, in joining this debate on the motions that are now before the House, I want to make some particular remarks about Motion No. 96 which deals with the amendments permitting greater access by the Security Intelligence Review Committee to information held by the Cabinet. One must consider this amendment in the context of the whole creation of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and all that has gone on before in terms of freedom of information. Those are the general thoughts that I want to put on the record in the House.

First, the Government brought before the House of Commons a freedom of information Bill called the Access to Information Act. The purpose of the legislative measure was to throw light on information held by the Government and to make it of a public nature, to the extent that it was in the public interest to do so. The principle that was adopted by the Parliament of Canada in enacting the access to information legislation was to allow sunshine to come into the government arena so that those who needed information from the Government for whatever purpose could obtain that information. That was a principle that was endorsed almost unanimously by the House of Commons. It is in that context that we must approach any attempt to keep information held by the Government secret.

We must start with the premise that all information should be public and that there must be very serious reasons for keeping information away from the public in general terms. The point I want to make is that the Government and the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), in dealing with this matter of access to information by the Security Intelligence Review Committee has not only disregarded the general principle of access to information but has disregarded the real need for access to information in this particular circumstance.

The public concern about a Security Intelligence Service for Canada is that the powers given to a service and the officers employed in such a service can be abused. The only safeguard against that kind of abuse is a review by some authority independent of the Security Intelligence Service. If that authority, which is the Security Intelligence Service Review Committee in this case, has its powers hampered by unnecessary legislative constraints and restrictions it will simply not be able to carry out its task.

What is more important is the signal that this kind of legislation amendment gives to those who are deeply and properly concerned about security intelligence legislation. The signal that is sent out by the kind of legislation amendment that is now being demanded by the Solicitor General is that the Government does not intend to have free access to information in this area of the review of the Security Intelligence Service. It wants to allow matters to be covered up, hidden away or obscured. That is entirely inconsistent with the purpose of a review committee. If the review committee has anything hidden from its purview and has any restrictions placed upon its access to information that relates to the operation of the security intelligence service, then that committee will not have the kind of power and authority that is essential to carry out its mandated function.

In simple terms, if the ability of a review committee to search out facts is going to be restricted, then there might as well not be a review committee. Those who want to hide the facts will simply hide them under that particular carpet. They will find ways to characterize and classify information as falling within the exception to the rule of access rather than to falling in the general right to access to information.

Those are the kinds of games that government officers throughout the bureaucracy of the Government of Canada has been playing in the last 16 years. The minute that a method is provided to hide information from those who would otherwise have a right of access to that information, they will use that exemption to hide that information in question. If Members doubt the ability of bureaucrats to utilize that kind of provision, I can say, after a number of years of experience in dealing with these matters, that that is exactly what they do. How do you think the Department of Finance hides away information concerning the finances of Canada? How do you think Revenue Canada hides away processes and procedures that it follows, as we have seen demonstrated time and time again? It is all under the claim of exemption and under a claim that there is no need for the public to have knowledge of that particular action. It is always under some statutory exemption or colour of right. That is what the Solicitor General is giving to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. He is giving the service the colour of right to hide away information from the review committee. In that way the Solicitor General is destroying the whole purpose and raison d'être of that review committee.

I believe we must stand and point out these matters. In my view, the public is not interested in this Bill in the way it has been presented to the House of Commons. There is no urgency. The only urgency is the empty space a few streets away from the House of Commons that the Solicitor General had rented for the Security Intelligence Service. There is no need to have a Security Intelligence Service this month as opposed to the next month or the month after. It is a false sense of urgency attached to the presentation of this Bill in the House of Commons. That false sense of urgency has been used as an excuse for such steps as closure that has been forced upon the House of Commons in relation to its deliberations on Bill C-9.

● (1710)

It is that idea of urgency that excuses the Government's action in invoking closure in this situation. But that will not wash with the people of Canada. There is nobody out there waiting for the establishment of the Canadian Intelligence Security Service, waiting for it to catch spies and to stop the espionage that may or may not be taking place in Canada. I do not know of one person who has approached me and said: "Get the Canadian Security Intelligence Service into operation before the Government and the country collapses". That false sense of urgency is in the big lie category that we have to get this service in operation quickly to save the country. That is nonsense. That is the kind of unnecessary speed and haste that can cause grave difficulties in the future. That is the kind of speed and haste that causes Parliament and parliamentarians to overlook the real problems that are involved in the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and the legislation relating to it.

Mr. Evans: Fifteen years is speed and haste?

Mr. Crosby: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) has come to my aid again. He says it has been sixteen years in the making.

Mr. Evans: Fifteen years.

Mr. Crosby: Why has it been fifteen years in the making? Because the people of Canada have not reached any consensus on the matter. I defy the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) who comes from the heart of Toronto and I defy the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to tell me what the views are in British Columbia, Nova Scotia or in other parts of Canada on a Canadian security intelligence service.

Mr. Evans: You just told us you don't know.

Mr. Crosby: If the Minister thinks the people of British Columbia are waiting for this service to come into operation, he is wrong. If the Solicitor General thinks the people of Canada want civil liberties set aside and the RCMP downgraded and denigrated in order to rush through the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, he is wrong. But it just indicates once more that there is no communication between this Government of Canada and the people. It proves once again that that line of communication has been destroyed. The Government does not know what the Canadian people are thinking. This is just one more dramatic illustration that the Government is out of touch with the needs of the people.

We are standing here in the House of Commons debating security intelligence legislation when we should be talking about job creation, about improving the Canadian economy and about getting people back to work.

Mr. Blais: You should have passed it a long time ago.

Mr. Crosby: We cannot stop the debate just because we are forced into that situation by the Government of Canada and by members of the Liberal Party. We cannot stop and we cannot give up on civil liberties. We cannot give up on a national institution like the RCMP merely because the Government of Canada has created a situation in Parliament that offends our sense of Parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in addressing the motions currently under consideration, I have to say that I have not heard as much gobbledegook in a long, long time as I have heard parroted from the Government benches in the last few minutes.

In one of the motions we are trying to restore by amendment one of the actions taken by the Justice Committee. All we get is shouting from the other side about how they have been waiting to do this for 16 years, and how this great demand is out there in the Canadian public to have a new security service, outside of the RCMP, with unheard of powers, unheard of in this country, unheard of in almost every other western country. In fact, it is totally unheard of.

While we are concerned about the details, we are also concerned as to the state of mind and the thrust that lies behind the Bill, particularly the willingness on the part of the Government to trample over the wishes of even its own Members on the Justice Committee, not to mention the feelings of other Members in all the Parties of the House. Within all Parties there are a number of serious reservations when we are dealing with legislation such as this and with motions such as these that deal with the review system.

Let us look at who makes up the review committee. Clause 34, which has been dealt with previously, reads:

> 34.(1) There is hereby established a committee, to be known as the Security Intelligence Review Committee, consisting of a Chairman and not less than two and not more than four other members, all of whom shall be appointed by the Governor in Council from among members of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada who are not members of the Senate or the House of Commons, after consultation by the Prime Minister of Canada with the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons and the leader in the House of Commons of each party having at least twelve members in that House.

If the Government is not prepared to have a body such as that, Mr. Speaker—and I would ask Hon. Members to take a look at all of the documents to which the committee felt it should have access—review all documents, then who the devil is to be trusted in the country in the Government's view? Is the Government saying that the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) judgment is not to be trusted, even when he had consulted with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and in consultation with the Leader of our Party? Is the Government saying that the Government's own Prime Minister who appoints these people is not to be trusted, or that other review committee members who are members of the Privy Council are not to be trusted with all of the information to which the Justice Committee thought it should have access? What absolute hogwash that is. These guys have gone right off the deep end. There is no public demand for this legislation.

On the other hand we have the Attorney General of every province in Canada opposed to the legislation, we have civil liberties groups, the Canadian Medical Association, everyone left, right and centre right across the whole spectrum of Canadian political opinion who think this is bad law. The Liberals apparently do not trust their own Prime Minister, even in consultation with Leaders of the other Parties on this.

Mr. Evans: No.

Mr. Kristiansen: You don't trust him. That is obvious and that is why the Government has brought in this amendment to overrule the feeling of the Justice Committee. If the Liberals do not trust whomever their own Prime Minister appoints, whom can they trust? Nobody. I do not blame them for not trusting him. I do not have a lot of faith in them over there either.

We have to ask ourselves again, if the Liberals are that imbalanced and if they are that topsy-turvy in their system of priorities. What is their state of mind and why?

My mind goes back a couple of months ago. I along with one Member of the Conservative Party, Gerard Docquier, President of the Canadian district of the United Steel Workers, and John Fryer, President of the National Union of Provincial Government Employees, attended a meeting about two blocks away from Parliament Hill of a group called the Niagara Institute. With the exception of the four of us whom I have just mentioned, the rest were chief executive officers of some of the major corporations and banks in Canada. A question was posed during the discussion. Their answer was virtually unanimous to the query: "When will a condition approaching economic normalcy be restored in Canada?" The assessment by thes chief executive officers was that it will come about in 35 to 50 years.

Is that the kind of agenda to which the Government is going to succumb in this country? Does it agree that that is the state of affairs we will have—unemployment ranging from 10 per cent up to somewhere in the 20 per cent range for the next 35 or 50 years? Those people in the board rooms are mostly the same people who dominate the major councils of the Liberal Party. Have they decided to surrender to that agenda? It is not what anybody wants, but are they going to surrender to it? That is the prediction, unless the Government takes a totally different approach from that which it had heretofore since Confederation. If that is to happen, and if that Government continues to be totally derelict in its responsibilities to do something about the basic economic and social conditions which that situation will create, then it may need some of these kinds of powers to stop civil unrest. Is that the Government's agenda? Has the Government admitted its failure and the only way the Liberals and their pals can continue to govern is by setting up the agencies of a police state? That is how this service can be used. Why else would the Liberals not accept even minimal amendments such as those proposed by the Justice Committee? Why else would they not propose some of the very minimal amendments that both my colleagues in the Conservative Party and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party are proposing? Why else? Nobody suggests that you over there are a bunch of bad guys. But are you so blind to the economic realities facing this country that you have come to accept the idea that we will see the same kind of growth of terrorism here as we have seen in Europe? God forbid. We have been immune from that so far. Are the Liberals surrendering to that possibility? Are they surrendering to the possibility that people will be continuously unemployed across the country over a 35-year to 50-year period and will be upset? No? Why then do they need the powers outlined in the Bill?

I see no reason. No one demanded it. Nobody aside from a self-appointed commission has ever recommended any of the proposals, and what that commission recommended did not go as far as the proposals in this Bill. The Government does not listen to the appointed members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It does not listen to anyone.

The Government has its own agenda. Whether it is a hidden agenda or a public agenda, it stinks and it is rotten. It ought to call a halt to this business and get on with the real priorities—the economic and social issues on which the people of this country are demanding action. The Government should give up. It is a failure.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak about one aspect of the group of motions before us, the abuse of the concept of Crown privilege. Canada is a monarchy. Most Canadians, whether or not they are enthusiastic monarchists, accept and rely upon the concept of our traditional form of government for both a sense of stability and a sense of fair play. Of course there have often been failures in that regard, but that is the system which is available and it is the one Canadians continue to support and choose. I do not think any one of us is aware of any likelihood of getting rid of it.

The Government is proposing a very serious action which will discredit the concept of Crown privileges. It is not the first time the Government has taken actions to discredit the Crown. However, on this occasion it is more serious. It goes much deeper than the other actions. It is much worse than the abuse of privilege when VIA Rail rode roughshod over Parliament. It is much worse than the abuse of privilege when the Government said that because a Crown corporation took part in a uranium price-fixing cartel, the cartel could not be investigated by the courts. The then Minister of Justice sneered at Parliament and said that we could not investigate the Crown.

When a matter concerns the fundamental liberties of Canadians, not one enterprise or another or a particular part of the economy, a matter which may be crucial to the actions of the security service, it cannot be examined by the watchdog appointed by that service nor by the watchdog committee appointed for that purpose, even though they are appointed by the Chief Minister of the Crown. In doing this the Government discredits the Crown in other respects. For example, it discredits the report of Senator Pitfield which soberly indicated that the committee ought to have access to Crown documents among others.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) assured us that there were no Crown documents in the possession of the security service. However, he did not tell us why he was afraid of the recommendation of the committee and he wanted to reverse it. Other commissions appointed under the Crown, such as the McDonald Commission, have also indicated that there should be oversight, including oversight of Crown documents.

Public leaders have spoken on this matter, such as the United Church, the Canadian Council of Churches, labour groups and civil liberties groups. They all feel, with due respect for the basic privilege of the Crown, that it should not be used in this way. The chairman of the committee appointed by the Chief Minister of the Crown and the committee as a whole thought that privilege should not be used in this way. However, the Solicitor General, again in the name of the Crown, overruled them.

For the average man or woman on the street, it is very demoralizing to see the concept of the Crown and the name of the Crown or Crown privilege being turned into nothing more than the privilege of a tiny group of men and women who happen at one time to have responsibility under the Crown. For this to be turned into a weapon that they can use against other agencies of the Crown and all other people who have sworn to uphold the laws of the land, such as Hon. Members of the House and of the other place, makes a mockery of the Crown. That one little group is now grasping the power to deny the obligations of the Crown as they are expressed through Members of Parliament in this place and in the Senate and other public groups established in the name of the Crown. Only one secret group will be allowed that Crown privilege, will be allowed to look at Crown documents, which may affect the liberties of Canadians in a fundamental way that we have never before experienced in the history of Canada.

We are told that some privy Councillors will and must distrust other Privy Councillors. That makes a mockery of the Crown. Apparently this tiny group of men has the power to do this and get away with it. They have been able to wrench the rules of Parliament and of committee. They have been able to drive through their points, notwithstanding the fact that the Opposition had been operating according to the rules. They simply changed the rules when it suited them. They can get away with it, but they do damage to the public morale and the public trust in the Crown which will take years and years to mend.

When the public begins to understand the contemptuous way in which the Solicitor General and his colleagues have abused the concept of the Crown, it will not be an easy matter for the Government or any other succeeding government to win the support and trust of the people of Canada. Perhaps the damage is not irreparable, but it will not be repaired for many years to come. It is regrettable that the Solicitor General and his colleagues have acted so irresponsibly as to insist upon reintroducing this abusive use of the Crown privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the Hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) seeking the floor on a point of order? He has already had the floor for debate on this grouping.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am seeking unanimous consent because it is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Solicitor General to speak for a second time on this grouping?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I will make my comments very brief. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has called us contemptible. He said that we discredited the Crown and that he considers us disgraceful and so on. I think those remarks were interesting coming from an Anglican clergyman who caused disorder in the House last week. He refused to withdraw his comments and was kicked out on a motion of the House. He is the one who is a disgrace to Parliament, and I thank him for giving me his consent to make these remarks.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to add my objections to those of the many other Members who spoke this afternoon. The Government is attempting to undo the work of the committee. Certainly there are several clauses in this particular Bill which have received a great deal of attention, and rightly so. Civil libertarians, most people who are involved, have experience and will be affected by this Bill, have spoken against those clauses, certainly Clause 39. It has been said many times that the Government watchdog, even though it may be a sleeping watchdog, should have access to Cabinet documents, not all, just those that are relevant. The reason why civil libertarians and others zeroed in on this clause is that they recognize that if the watchdog committee does not have access to these documents, a great deal of harm might flow from that.

● (1730)

In most countries of the world where people's rights have been restricted, downtrodden, stepped upon and trampled on, this invariably started through political activity. Unfortunately, governments such as this which have been in power for a long time gain in arrogance, they have a feeling that they govern by the grace of God, by Divine right. If there is objection or opposition to those governments, they take away the rights of certain citizens on the grounds that it is good for the public as a whole. They want to maintain the public good, as it were.

In many countries in Europe, Asia and Africa this type of slow and steady erosion of the rights of individuals has occurred. Unfortunately, it is usually done in the name of the law. That is the kind of loophole that Clause 39 creates for this Government. With all due respect, this Government has had a lot of experience in trodding on the rights of others. Historically, this Government has shown that it panics very quickly. We need only look back to the imposition of the War Measures Act, that phoney revolution that was about to happen in Quebec, to see how quickly that can happen. This type of clause leaves it wide open for the Government to instruct this secret service, these super snoopers, to go beyond the bounds of propriety and investigate things they should not investigate. Even then the watchdog committee will not have access to those instructions. It will never know about them. Parliament may never know. That is something this Government should not allow. The people of Canada are very much opposed to this potential abuse of the civil liberties of Canadians.

It would not have been as bad if the Government had agreed to a tighter definition of Clause 2 to ensure that the secret service had to work within the legal bounds of strict control and had not allowed it to use subversive techniques on those who had not committed a crime. Clause 2(d) in particular is causing much trouble. Then it might not have been as bad that the Government is insisting that the watchdog committee cannot investigate Cabinet documents. However, the Government has not done that. It has not done a lot of things it should have done and which the people of Canada have pleaded with it to do. In its own arrogance, it really believes it is right.

I find it difficult to understand how the Government arrived at that conclusion. In the last four years this Government has done almost nothing right. This Parliament will end in a short while and we will be left with this document. It is a document which is mightily flawed. If Clause 39 is amended as the Government is attempting to amend it, the document will be that much worse.

It bears repeating that the reason the Government has to amend this clause is that the Chairman of the committee voted against the Government. Had the normal complement of Government Members been there, the Chairman would not have had to vote. This Government is so disorganized, uninterested and lacking in will to proceed that it could not raise the number of voting members to ensure that it got its wish, so the Chairman had to vote. He is a very fair Chairman. On many occasions he said he did not like this clause and, therefore, he voted against the Government. That is the committee system at work. That is the whole purpose of it. One would expect the Government to accept something of that nature, but it does not. It abuses the whole process. Why should we waste our time in committee, sitting there hour after hour after hour? Why should the people of Canada spend hours appearing before that committee when the Government uses its powers to steamroll over what the committee proposes? On one hand the Government says it will accept what the committee does, but only in those situations where it gets its wish. Where it does not get its way, it does not accept what the committee does.

The Government tries to have it both ways. I suspect that it will succeed in having its own way for the next six or seven days.

It was said earlier that the people of Canada will remember this. They are very concerned about their rights. They are concerned that this legislation has the potential to damage the freedoms that have been developed in Canada over the past 170 years. It is incumbent on the Government before this day is out to withdraw its objection to the watchdog committee having the opportunity to review Cabinet documents. It may well be a sleeping dog committee because it will not be a committee of elected members, as proposed by most people. It could have allowed a parliamentary committee. Parliamentarians respond to the desires, wishes and fears of their constituents. Perhaps then Clause 39 would not be so bad, but the Government has not done that. It pushed aside every opportunity to make this a good Bill, one which would secure the rights of Canadians and at the same time allow the security service to do that which is necessary. The Government has not done that, and it is not likely it will.

There is one last opportunity for the Minister to correct this Bill. Perhaps he will do that. The Government could then leave this Parliament in the next few days having done at least something worth-while, namely, provided security legislation that is not a threat to every person in this country.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, a government should want its legislation to be effective. Looking at the amendment of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), I do not understand how anyone who wants proper legislation and the proper operation of a civilian or RCMP corps can vote against this motion. The motion was presented by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South. He is an experienced parliamentarian, having been in the House of Commons for many years. As a Cabinet Minister, I had the greatest respect for him. He found time to talk to the people and tried to reflect their thinking. That is democracy. I have the highest regard for him. He is trained in the law, practised law in Vancouver, was solicitor for municipalities as well as individuals. With his background, when he presents a motion, it should carry some weight. That is why I find it difficult to understand the reaction to Motion No. 94 to amend Clause 38.

● (1740)

I shall read the motion that we are now asking this House to adopt. If any Hon. Member in the House can give me one reason why this motion should not be passed, I will accept it. However, I cannot conceive of one reason why it should not be passed. This motion deals with the duties of the review committee. Clause 38 describes the functions of the review committee and this motion would add the following to those functions:

—to review, generally, the effectiveness and the propriety of Canada's security and intelligence functions and arrangements, including such functions as are carried on by any agency, department or institution of the Government of Canada;—

We are simply asking the review committee to look at the effectiveness and propriety of the functions and arrangements of the Security Intelligence Service. If anyone thinks that we do not need to include in the wording of it both "effectiveness" and "propriety", I would counter by suggesting a reason why we do need them both. Something can be effective and not proper. Something can be proper and not effective. I am concerned that under this clause, this committee should have the responsibility to review the functions of this intelligence service to find out if it is effective and is doing the job.

When I was the principal of a school, at the end of every month, and sometimes more frequently, I took an inventory of what the teachers were doing, what was effective and what was not effective. In a classroom, we would discuss why the particular method being used was or was not effective. For example, if a teacher was teaching arithmetic to a youngster in either grade one, two or three and the youngster was simply not learning how to add or multiply, I would say to his teacher: "His mother tells me that he cannot multiply and that he does not understand multiplication. What method are you using to teach him how to multiply?" The teacher would be very co-operative and would review her methods. She would say to me: "I will find out what I am doing wrong or if I am not spending enough time with the child." The following week she would say: "I know what was wrong. I was going over the subject too fast and Johnnie is a slow learner. I have to go through it three or four or five times with Johnnie before he begins to understand what I am trying to do." An owner of a business must check to see whether or not his methods are effective. Are people coming into his shop and buying his products? If they are, his advertising is effective. If they are not, it is not effective and he must make a change. I would think a Government would also check to find out whether or not it is being effective.

The motion of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South is only asking that the effectiveness of the methods of the security service be reviewed. If the methods are not effective, we should not waste the people's money. Who in this House could vote against that? Surely we want to get full value for every dollar spent. Not even the most extravagant Liberal member would not want government agencies to be effective.

The other key word in the motion is "propriety". We want the committee to review the propriety of the functions of the security service as well. We want it to review its functions to see whether or not it is acting in accordance with good behaviour and good morals. Take the War Measures Act of 1970, for example. It was certainly effective, but was it proper? Was it right to shove scores of people into jail without a trial when they had committed no offence? Some of the people were never even charged at all but were shoved into jail like cattle. The War Measures Act might have been effective but it would not pass a review of propriety because none of us believe in shoving people into jail without even giving them a chance to defend themselves. That is something that can take place. This civilian intelligence service is a body which is being given pretty wide powers. We should make sure that its actions are effective, proper and morally right.

The new Leader of the Liberal Party has indicated that he wants to make more use of committees and that he wants to have free votes. I will believe that when I see it. A committee has made a recommendation, but the Government is now going to change that recommendation because it does not agree with it even though its own members supported it. The committee's representations reflected the combined thinking of members of the committee. The new Leader says he will make more use of back-benchers, but will he then have the Cabinet overrule them and tell other Members that that cannot go on, that he will change it and wipe it out? I do not think that that is an effective way to administer a country. If we are going to have such things as committees, then surely the combined consensus of that committee should be accepted, particularly when scores of recommendations were made by people who appeared before it.

What else does this motion attempt to do? I shall read it again:

—to review, generally, the effectiveness and the propriety of Canada's security and intelligence functions and arrangements, including such functions as are carried on by any agency, department or institution of the Government of Canada;—

Does anyone here want to see an agency or Department behave badly, ineffectively and with bad morals? If not, there is no reason in the world why Hon. Members should not vote for this motion. We want effective administration and we want it to have good behaviour and good morals. I would say to Hon. Government Members that if they vote this motion down, they are indicating that they do not want full value for money spent, that they want to do things immorally and that they want to do things that are not proper, and that cannot be called good behaviour. I think every Member of the House should support this motion which has been carefully and excellently phrased by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I take part in this debate after having read Barbara Tuchman's book dealing with power. I would like to engage the attention of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and draw to his attention the whole matter of review and accountability.

My colleagues, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), have expressed their points of view, with which I fully agree. I would like to ask the Solicitor General if he would think about and learn from history so that we do not repeat history.

None of us in this place believe that we act as rubber stamps. None of us wish to act that way or will act that way. I give that much credit to all Members of this House. I would like to suggest to the Solicitor General that in the case of accountability and review of the service, he consider that someone somewhere must tell all Canadians what is going on in the way of security, surveillance, intelligence and the like. If the hon. gentleman has not read Barbara Tuchman's writings, he should read them. I have reread them. The German Reichstag, the Italian Parliament, the Parliament in Spain, and even the Supreme Soviet of the Soviet Union had their parliaments blindly and supinely agree to all the things which went on in those nations before the First World War—in the 1920s and in the 1930s.

In the situation in which we find ourselves in Canada, why would the Solicitor General refuse to accept amendments which attempt to guard against that kind of repetition of history? I can understand small countries which are in the midst of terrible war situations being extra careful and extra militant. But why would we want to bring upon ourselves, in this nation, in the context of the security of Canada, an opportunity for those who would destroy us on the left or on the right as had happened in previous decades?

The Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) made the mistake of mentioning the War Measures Act. I believe the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) did the same. They should at least have had the courtesy to blush. In 1970 only one Conservative stood up with the NDP caucus to vote against the War Measures Act. The rest of the Conservative Party voted for its implementation. That was nothing more than a symptom of the disease with which the Solicitor General is afflicted. It is a symptom of the kind of paranoia which wants to put the entire Canadian population into a situation as though we were a major power in the world, which we are not. We account for a lot of things on this planet, but in no way are we in the kind of major leagues in which the Solicitor General feels that this country should be trying to play. He wants to play in a major league with champagne measures for a beer operation.

If we are to learn anything at all from history, it should be the fear and the worry that cause us in our caucus, having learned those lessons not only in other countries but in our own nation, that what may be acceptable now, and what I think is acceptable now, was unacceptable in the 1920s and 1930s in Canada. It was the people who said that we must do something about getting rid of that foreign element who turned the RCMP on to trade union leaders, leaders of ethnic groups and political leaders including plainchothesmen who followed J. S. Woodsworth around. Surely the Solicitor General must know and understand this as well or better than I do.

I think it was Pastor Niemoeller who indicated that one did not tend to protest when laws and regulations such as this one were passed. He said:

In Germany they came first for the Communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the trade unionists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a trade unionist. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Then they came for me, and by that time no one was left to speak up.

It would seem to me that any open and democratic society must deal with threats to its security, sovereignty and right to keep secret whatever is worth keeping secret. Democratic societies must face the risk and the threat, even after the fact. There cannot be anybody in a democratic and open society with the authority to investigate the lives of anyone and everyone for whatever reason without having to account to this place and to the people of the country, even if it means the breaking of the oath of secrecy by a Privy Councillor. I would like to see a review committee which—if it decided against a procedure or action under this kind of legislation—would resign en masse and state why. I would like to see that happen with individual Members. This is nothing more than some kind of a desire by the Solicitor General to become a 007. He wants to join in with the CIA and the 15 intelligence agencies in the United States. The United States cannot even keep track of all of them.

Mr. Speaker, me thinks he doth worry too much. Any secrets which we have, our potential enemies already have. I would cite to the Minister the case which took place when we were dealing with the Elections Expenses Act. I was attempting to obtain the telephone numbers of National Defence personnel and Armed Forces personnel stationed at various bases around the world. I was told that it was top secret information. Then I obtained a copy of the Canadian Armed Forces magazine which published all of the telephone numbers—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his time has expired.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter this debate. I think it is a crucial and historical debate for the country and for the House of Commons. The question which is before us is: How do we achieve security and peace in this country for the population? Do we do that through adding more police, and more investigators, or do we do that by giving a broader mandate to security agencies? Do we do that by giving a blanket mandate to a new civilian security agency, or, are there other ways of giving Canadians a sense of security?

The legislation before us poses some very serious questions. It gives very broad powers to a security agency and it has very weak oversight provisions. There are very weak checks and balances for those powers. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the giving of very broad investigatory powers to an agency without appropriate checks and balances is bound to increase the strife and insecurity in this nation rather than decrease it. We are living in a time when tensions in our society are increasing by virtue of the inequality in income and benefits which exists in our country. All of us in this House are aware, Mr. Speaker, that the top 20 per cent of the population, for example, receives something like 40 per cent of the total income, while the bottom 20 per cent receives something like 4 per cent of the total income. With inequities like this, there are bound to be social tensions in this country calling attention to the injustices which exist, and there are bound to be political movements calling for change.

The relevance of that sociological comment to the present legislation, Mr. Speaker, is that we must be careful to make a distinction between dissent and subversion. If we are to make that distinction, Mr. Speaker, it must not only be made very clearly in legislation which sets out a limited mandate for a security agency but we must also observe this distinction in the administration of that agency. The only way we can observe the distinction between subversion and legitimate political dissent is by having a group which can oversee the actions of this agency.

The legislation before us today falls far short of the requirements with regard to oversight. What we need in this country is parliamentary oversight of any security activity which is going on in the country. This legislation does not provide for that. It provides another form of oversight which is extremely limited. The clause before us indicates how limited that oversight is. This committee, which would be appointed by the Government rather than by Parliament, could not even review all of the documents which would be in the hands of the security agency itself. Therefore, the security agency, in terms of access to information, would be above the review committee. That is a fundamental flaw and it will tend to lead to further distrust in the public's mind with regard to the activities of the security agency.

This legislation poses serious questions for us today because, Mr. Speaker, there are many people in this country who are seeking, through legitimate political means, to bring about a greater measure of social justice, whether they are involved in the native movement, the peace movement or are recent immigrants to this country. For example, there are immigrants to this country from Latin America who are interested in global justice. It is important that these people be given the assurance that an agency such as this will not abuse its authority and in any blanket way investigate anyone who goes on a peace march, or anyone who speaks out on behalf of the native community for social justice in this country, or any members of the Latin American community or the Chilean community who choose to speak out against the injustices of a regime such as the Pinochet regime which exists in Chile today.

I am blowing the whistle on the actions of this Government today, Mr. Speaker, because what it is doing is setting in place a police agency with very broad powers without adequate checks and balances. It is important, Mr. Speaker, that the checks and balances be there if we are going to give these kinds of powers to any agency in this country. We know from Canadian history, and American history as well, that it is possible to abuse power. We must learn from that history and we must guard against the abuse of power. I think specifically of the McCarthy era in the United States when people were labelled as communists and their careers ruined. Intimidation was used to prevent people from speaking out in legitimate political dissent. It is important that we learn from history that it is possible for Government and its agencies to abuse power. We must set in place the safeguards which will protect us from this potential abuse of power.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, is fatally flawed and should be changed before the Government seeks passage of it in this House. We are moving into an era of Canadian history which demands an act of citizenry, which demands that Canadians speak out against social injustice in this country. In these times we need a more active citizenry. We need people to speak out more forcefully on the maldistribution of income in this country, about the fact that the needs of the native people of this country are not adequately met, and about the fact that we continue to live under the threat of the nuclear arms race. This is not a time to give untrammelled powers to an agency. It is not a time to set up a situation which might lead to the intimidation of people in order to stop legitimate political dissent.

This is a time for sober second thought. That is not an original notion of mine, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the Senate has already taken that sober second thought and said, "Hold on, government of the day. Do not rush forward with this legislation. Amend it and amend it adequately before you present it to the House of Commons and to the public for approval". Therefore, I want to say quite simply, Mr. Speaker, that what we must do today is to sound the alarm. We must let every citizen in this country know that the Government has failed so far to put in place adequate safeguards against the abuse of power by this new security agency which it wishes to establish. There is no way that this legislation should be allowed to pass in this House without the Government changing the legislation and putting in place adequate safeguards. I call upon this Government and on any Hon. Members of the Liberal caucus who have the integrity to stand by their conscience, to—

Mr. Kristiansen: There are not too many of them.

Mr. Keeper: Well, hopefully, as the debate contines, there will be at least some Members in the back benches of the Liberal Party who will stand up and say to their own Minister, "Look, we take a long-term view of legislation and we do not think that any legislation which grants greater powers to a police agency should go into force without our putting in adequate safeguards".

So I would call upon this Government to put in place a parliamentary review committee to review the actions of this new security agency which is going to be established. I do not say these words lightly. There are too many people in this country who see the social problems which cry for attention and upon which they speak out. There is no way we should put in place an agency which might at some point abuse its power and serve to intimidate legitimate political dissent. I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that we must draw the line between subversive activities and legitimate political dissent. That line has not been drawn well enough, and as long as that is so, we draw the line and say, "no legislation".

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have sat here for several days now listening attentively to the debate, the interventions of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and the contributions largely from this side of the House. I do not believe there is very much I can say, or that needs to be said by myself, with respect to this legislation. The objections we have to it have been thoughtfully and forcefully put in front of the House. I did not intend to enter the debate until my friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), made an observation taken from a well known internationalist. I could not help thinking as he was speaking of an experience which I had, and I wish the Solicitor General could spend half a moment with me because I want to discuss Bupindhat Liddar for a moment or two. In the 20 years that I have been in this Chamber I have done one or two things I have not been proud of. A moment of rationalization could excuse the thoughtless way in which I as an individual—I will not speak for my colleagues because of course I cannot—approached the War Measures Act in the early 1970s. I made a mistake and I said so at the time, or shortly after the event. I believe I made another mistake in the summer of 1980. I was called to the residence of my then Leader, the Righ Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). After a conversation with him, I had an obligation to call the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) further to the subject matter. I did so and, with his counsel and approval, I went further. The consequence of those meetings was to sever the relationship I had with a very bright and intelligent young man who had a good Canadian career ahead of him. He was a landed immigrant. His great fault was that he had an affinity for the PLO and some friends of his were close to it.

On the advice of my Leader, the Solicitor General, and the intelligence force that operated at that level, I severed that relationship. I invited that young man to leave Parliament Hill. That is history, but I recite it because I want to draw to the attention of Hon. Members the difficulty that we can sometimes find ourselves in when we do not have access to information we know we can trust. My conscience is troubled because I was the instrument that forced that young man to leave Canada. He had been in Canada for seven or eight years. He went back to what was then Rhodesia and is now Zimbabwe. He is currently living there trying to eke out a living. He wants to be a Canadian and I denied him that opportunity. I did so, as I mentioned, on the advice of others. I take the liberty of mentioning this, without going into detail because much of it is confidential, to say that on reflection the evidence I was given was not enough to warrant the action I took. Together with a distinguished former colleague in this Chamber, now a Member of the other place, we intend to try to correct that error as nearly as we can.

I do not know what the information was on this individual and I have no way of finding out. I have no way of demonstrating to my satisfaction that in fact the reasons that forced this young man to leave Canada were accurate; that it was not anything other than an attack on his empathy, if you will, for those Arabs in that part of the world who were having problems and difficulties. We must always be careful. It was too easy for me to simply say, "yes, if that is so, then I must act". That was the simple, easy way, but I regret having taken it. I regret that in legislation such as is before us now there is not some capacity for even that form of post factum examination. If documents or files could be looked at even five or ten years after the fact, if the file were to be examined some day, then those who put the directives together and who carry out the activity would have to think twice. They would know that their actions would be reviewed, not necessarily in the context of the time of the act itself but at some point. I apologize, in a sense, for raising this matter, but, strangely enough, I feel a little better. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The question is on Motion No. 93. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 79, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The House will now consider Motions Nos. 99, 100, 101 and 102 which have been grouped for debate.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 99

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 41.

Motion No. 100

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 41 by striking out lines 22 to 25 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"dissatisfied with the response given."

Motion No. 101

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 42.

Motion No. 102

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 42

(a) by striking out lines 32 to 34 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"42.(1) Where the denial of a security clearance required by the Government of Canada is a factor in a decision made"

(b) by striking out lines 42 to 45 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Where the denial of a security clearance required by the Government of Canada to be given in respect of an individual is a factor in a decision made to deny the".

● (1820)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the clauses which are now before the House with regard to this security legislation and are the subject of the motions before the House at this time are Clauses 41 and 42. These clauses deal with the question of security checks and the role which is to be played by the proposed Security Intelligence Review Committee on the question of security checks.

I will commence my brief remarks on this series of motions by noting that in 1982, which is the last year for which we have figures, the RCMP security service ran some 76,500 security checks on public servants and employees in defence industries. This massive number of security checks has been described by the head of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, Mr. Gordon Fairweather, as a glorius waste of people's time. Not only is it a waste of people's time, it is obviously a considerable waste of taxpayers' money. Mr. Fairweather noted that unnecessary security clearances, unnecessarily high levels of classification, and unnecessary snooping into the lives of individuals are not only wasteful of our resources, not only morally repugnant, but they are discriminatory. Of course that is absolutely right.

One of the purposes of the series of amendments which were put before the House on this occasion is to put some semblance of order into the security assessment process. First, it would significantly narrow the circumstances in which security assessments can be ordered. As I have indicated, there are far too many at the present time. Second, it would require that the criteria for security assessments be clearly set out in statutory form or, at the very least, in regulatory form. As it stands now, security assessments in the country are governed by a 1963 Cabinet directive which is completely out of date and out of keeping with present conditions. That is the first recommendation of substance. The criteria for security assessment should be spelled out and updated.

As well, the question of security assessment should be subject to review by the Security Intelligence Review Committee. In that regard, I would note that the amendments in question would strengthen that review process. As it stands now, Clause 42, for example, indicates that where, by reason only of the denial of the security clearance required by the Government of Canada, a decision is made to dismiss, demote or transfer, etc., the appeal mechanism set out in the Act is available. That clearly provides an out for the Government or Deputy Minister or whoever wants to fire, not hire, or not promote an individual. They have to say that that was not the only reason the person was denied security clearance. They must say that they felt the person was not capable of doing the job, the person's health was not good enough, or they already had enough people.

This motion would ensure that in any circumstances in which the denial of a security clearance was a factor in firing, failing to hire, or failing to promote an individual, the review process available under this Act would indeed be made available to the individual in question.

I know, or at least I would assume that the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), who represents a constituency in which there are many public servants, would support an amendment of this nature. I see him in the House now. I invite him to rise at the conclusion of my remarks to speak on behalf of the public servants whom he is supposed to represent on this important question. Or perhaps he will remain silent and refuse to speak on this amendment which would strengthen the protections of public servants who are denied promotions or fired from their jobs. Certainly his silence on this subject will be drawn to the attention of his constituents.

Another objective of these four motions is to ensure that in any circumstance in which there is a complaint about the denial of a security clearance or about some aspect of the operations of the Security Intelligence Review Committee, that complaint must be investigated. As it stands now, the review committee has the power to summarily dismiss, without even an investigation, a complaint if it is felt that the complainant is being, in their terms, frivolous, vexatious, or trivial. To dismiss a complaint even before a preliminary investigation on those grounds denies full and effective oversight and review of the operations of the Security Intelligence Review Committee.

There are other concerns with respect to the question of security assessments. I have noted the fantastic number of security assessments. I would like to quote again from Mr. Gordon Fairweather, the head of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. He said:

> The unjustified proliferation of jobs for which a security assessment is required has a discriminatory impact, denying opportunities to persons of pardoned (criminal) conviction, national or ethnic origin, marital status or disability, all of which are prohibited grounds of discrimination under the Canadian Human Rights Act,—

Mr. Fairweather went on to say:

> People who are denied jobs because of their sexual orientation or their political belief are discriminated against if the security check was never necessary in the first place.

Once again, those are areas in which the law should clearly be changed to reflect the desire, hopefully, of all Members of the House, not to discriminate on the grounds referred to by Mr. Fairweather in his comments on security checks.

In conclusion, I urge Members of the House to adopt the motion before the House with respect to the provisions on review, security clearances and the complaints process. I await with interest the contribution of the Member for Ottawa Centre who, as I indicated, is in the House today. I am sure he will want to rise on behalf of his constituents to support this amendment which would enhance the rights of public servants whom he is supposed to be representing.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to rise to speak on these motions, but after listening to the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), I would like to make one or two related points. I certainly will not use the full time at my disposal.

It strikes me as being hopelessly naive at best to consider that many people will be advised that they have been refused employment on grounds of security. That is just not the way it happens in the real world. That is a sign of the kind of academic legal mind that this place abounds with which puts it so totally out of touch with reality. I am not knocking people in the legal profession. There are good and bad people, but some have a little more experience out in the real world than others. It does not happen that way in Government or in industry. The reason you are given for not getting a job, whether in government or private industry, may be reasons that touch on security, whether it be personal conduct or something else. The Government will have total access to this information. It can go into private medical records, legal records and tax records and there may be a host of reasons, not all of them illegal, that hold people open to some suspicion. It may be some activity in their past when they may not even have considered that they would be entering the employ of the Government. Young people in their teens often will get into scrapes that will be revealed in medical or other types of records but should have no bearing on it. It has certainly been my experience, both as a union representative and steward prior to coming to Parliament and certainly since being a Member of Parliament, that from the number of grievances coming from citizens, union members or people trying to get employee status with government or industry, one simply does not get those kinds of answers. It is absolutely unrealistic to believe that any government, whether it is Liberal, Conservative or NDP, can say that the reason that someone did not get a job is that he or she did not get national security clearance. That does not happen at all and will never happen.

A few weeks ago I was talking to a woman from Ainsworth, British Columbia, in my constituency. She talked about having discovered a black list from the mining industry in a cabin attached to another outbuilding behind her property. The list dates back half a century and it contained over 5,000 names from the Province of British Columbia. Unfortunately, it was treated as garbage and was thrown in the fire. That is a tragedy because there is nothing I would have liked better than to be able to produce a document such as that, because it was indicative of why the government and industry attempt not to hire people for a number of reasons. If the present Government or a future government continues with this economic trend, social tensions will likely become greater and provide further grounds for suspicion and for denying people status, and such powers will be exercised with increasing frequency.

During the McCarthy era in the 1950s, we know of dozens of people in the United States who made a career of drawing up "do not hire" lists for companies and governments. Not only did they make a business of drawing up those lists, they really made their money by allowing people to buy their name off the list when they found out that it would be included. Some people made a virtual career of that practice.

That is the sort of practice we are opening ourselves up to here, unless we allow this review process to be more flexible in what it is allowed to review. These are very narrow and unrealistic specifications laid out by the Government in these clauses. I hope changes are made because these clauses do not reflect reality.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is on Motion No. 99. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on Motion No. 99 stands deferred.

For the purposes of clarity the other motions in this subsection, Motions Nos. 100, 101 and 102 also stand deferred.

The next set of motions are Motions Nos. 108 and 109.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 108

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 48.

Motion No. 109

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 48 by striking out line 14 at page 22 and substituting the following therefor:

"shall be conducted in private, unless the Review Committee orders otherwise."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motions which are now before the House refer to Clause 48 of the Bill. One deletes Clause 48 and the second one indicates that it is solely within the purview of the review committee to decide whether it wishes to conduct its proceedings in private or publicly.

I suggest that there very well may be circumstances in which the review committee believes that a matter which is before it can in fact be discussed publicly without in any way compromising the security of the country. It may very well be that the review committee believes that such discussion would be in the interests of the country. It may be that it is discussing, for example, the revelation of wrongdoing on the part either of the political masters of the new service or indeed possibly on the part of the service itself.

I will not make lengthy representations with respect to this motion. I believe it is an important motion in the sense that it would enhance the powers of the review committee to determine its own procedure and decide for itself when it wishes to hold hearings in public.

As it stands now, its hands are tied. It is refused, under the provisions of the Bill as it is worded, the right to hold public hearings in any circumstances. This amendment will change that, and I hope that it will meet with the approval of Members of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there was considerable discussion about this particular clause of the Bill in committee and I made many points in the record to which I would refer Hon. Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is on Motion No. 108. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on Motion No. 108 stands deferred. For the purposes of clarity that also means that motion No. 109 is deferred.

The next set of motions are Nos. 113 and 114.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 113

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 52.

Motion No. 114

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 52 by striking out lines 14 to 27 at page 23 and substituting the following therefor:

"52.(1) The Review Committee shall on completion of an investigation in relation to a complaint under section 41, provide the minister, the director and the complainant with a report containing the findings of the investigation and any recommendations that the Committee considers appropriate."

He said: Mr. Speaker, in light of Your Honour's findings on the yeas and nays, I am not sure whether I should shout during my remarks but I will certainly attempt to make myself heard. The motions which are now before the House deal with proposed Clause 52. This motion would require that the review committee, after having conducted an investigation into alleged or potential wrongdoing on the part of the security service, that is a review of a complaint under Section 41, should provide the Minister, the director and the complainant with a full report, not merely the truncated with the recommendations of the review committee, but all of the findings of the committee.

● (1840)

I would submit, Mr. Speaker, on that basis that this motion is one which should be adopted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan).

Mr. Deans: What in heavens name is going on over there?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, again on this clause, I would urge the Hon. Member to bear in mind that the reason the report is not required to be made with all the recommendations to the complainant is simply that the contents of the report may recommend changes to the system of security or may name sources or targets or contain other recommendations important for the director to know to improve the operation of the service but not appropriate to be made known to an ordinary citizen.

Mr. Waddell: I have two points, Mr. Speaker. The Government is not really interested in having accountability at all. If it were, the Government would accept some of these amendments and we would have a security service, not a Big Brother.

My second point directed to you, Sir, in a good natured way is that maybe it is difficult for you to hear all these nays and therefore you hear the lesser noise of the yeas. I propose that we change positions with the Members on the other side, which would give you a better hearing of the nays. Of course, if we change positions, we could nix this bad Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I do not know whether that last comment was a point of order, but I will try to pay much more attention to the volume of the yeas and the nays.

Mr. Kristiansen: Pearson tried that in 1962.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is on Motion No. 113. The motion is moved by Mr. Robinson (Burnaby) seconded by Mr. Ogle, that Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 52.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. For purposes of clarity, Motion No. 114 is also deferred.

The next grouping of motions is Motions Nos. 116, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122 and 123.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 116

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 53.

Motion No. 118

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 53 by adding immediately after line 45 at page 23 the following:

"(2) Each member of the Review Committee shall be free to submit a Minority Report pursuant to this section.

"(3) The Review Committee may establish mechanisms for the submission of Minority Reports pursuant to this section or section 54."

Motion No. 119

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 54.

Motion No. 120

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 54

(a) by striking out line 1 at page 24 and substituting the following therefor:

"54. The Review Committee or any member thereof may, on"

(b) by striking out line 5 at page 24 and substituting the following therefor:

"performance of its duties and functions and where so requested by the Review Committee, the minister shall cause each such report to be laid before each House of Parliament on any of the first fifteen days on which that House is sitting after the day the minister receives it."

Motion No. 121

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 55.

Motion No. 122

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 55

(a) by striking out line 6 at page 24 and substituting the following therefor:

"55.(1) The Review Committee shall consult"

(b) by adding immediately after line 20 at page 24 the following:

"(2) The Review Committee shall have full authority to determine the contents of statements and reports referred to in subsection (1) of this section."

Mr. Vince Dantzer (for Mr. Fraser) moved:

Motion No. 123

That Bill C-9 be amended by adding immediately after line 20 at page 24 the following:

"56. The administration, provisions and operation of this Act shall be reviewed on a permanent basis by such committee of the House of Commons or of the House of Commons and Senate as may be designated or established by Parliament for that purpose."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): We have now come to debate on the grouping. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) will be along shortly. One of his motions is presently being debated and it is a motion on which he spoke in committee. It is rather unfortunate that he is not here at this point, but I trust that his colleagues are trying to find him to make sure he is in the House on this most important question.

What we are dealing with at this point in the debate is the question of parliamentary oversight and parliamentary review of the actions of the proposed civilian security service.

There are three essential elements in this legislation. The first is the potential mandate of the service. I have argued already that it is far too broad, that there are literally hundreds of thousands of Canadians who have broken no law whatsoever who can be targeted under the provisions of this legislation. The second is the powers of the new agency. They are sweeping powers, unprecedented under any democratic society. The third essential element is the question of what type of accountability or oversight should govern. I would note, Mr. Speaker, that the McDonald Commission, which studied this question for some four years, strongly recommended that if a new civilian security service is to have enhanced powers—and the powers which the McDonald Commission recommended were far less than those recommended by the Minister—it is essential that there be a parliamentary oversight committee in order that elected Members of all Parties, from all parts of the country, might have an opportunity to ensure that the proposed security service does not become a political instrument, a tool which can be abused in the hands of the government of the day. That proposal for a parliamentary oversight committee is one which is, in my view and in the view of many of the witnesses, indeed virtually all of the witnesses who appeared before the parliamentary committee, essential.

This is not a radical new idea, Mr. Speaker. It is not something which has not been tried and tried successfully in other jurisdictions. I would note that in the United States both Houses have full congressional oversight. There is a committee of the House of Representatives and there is a committee of the Senate. They have complete scrutiny of the policies and operations of the intelligence community in that country. That has worked very effectively. In addition, each and every member of Congress, all 435 members of the House of Representatives and all 100 Senators, have a right to full and untrammelled access to all documents in the possession of the committee, including line by line documents with respect to the budget. In the history since 1977 of the creation of those committees there has never been a single documented leak of information. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) says that we cannot trust Members of Parliament with this kind of information.

• (1850)

Mr. Kaplan: Where did I ever say that?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): "They might blab", those were the words of the Solicitor General.

Mr. Kaplan: I never said that.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): He said that Members of Parliament might blab. The Solicitor General is suggesting that the Government is not prepared to trust elected representatives of the people. That is shameful.

Mr. Evans: Oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Enjoy it while you can, John. Michael is coming soon.

Professor Peter Russell, to whom the Minister has referred on a number of occasions and cited with approval, indicated that in his view it was essential that there be the establishment of a joint parliamentary oversight committee on security and intelligence. He noted that it was essential, if there was to be full and effective scrutiny of the operations of the service, that Members of Parliament be involved.

What is it about this Government which makes it so afraid to subject the operations of this service to scrutiny by an all-Party parliamentary committee? What makes the Government so distrustful of elected representatives of the people of the country?

I put it to Hon. Members of the House that had there been such a committee in existence during the 1970s, many of the abuses which took place by the RCMP security service would have never occurred. The experience in other jurisdictions with similar committees has been that the mere existence of a watchdog committee of elected representatives served to ensure that no illegalities were attempted. That is what is proposed in this series of motions, and that is what I would hope would be adopted by the House.

The concept of the parliamentary oversight committee is one of the provisions contained in this grouping of motions. I will not go on at great length as I know some of my colleagues want to speak on it. I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) in his usual manner wants to speak on it. However, there are a number of other provisions in this group of motions which I should like to draw to the attention of the House in the limited time available to me. For example, the motions attempts to strengthen the review committee process. What it comes down to is that Parliament does not trust Parliament; in other words, if Hon. Members of the House vote against these motions, they will be saying that they do not even trust themselves to provide effective oversight of the operations of the security service. that is a pretty sad commentary. These motions would ensure at least some semblance of credibility in the review process, for example, by permitting members of the review committee to submit minority reports to Parliament. As it stands now, the review committee will be appointed by the Government. Yes, it will be after consultation, but in the end it can appoint anyone it wants. If we look at the record of the Government, we know it is very likely that it will be friends of the Government, friends of the Liberal Party who will be appointed. At least if there were provisions for minority reports spelled out in the Bill, it would ensure that if a member of the committee felt strongly that Parliament's attention should be drawn to a particular matter, he or she would be able to do so. However, in committee government Members denied that possibility, further weakening the oversight and review provisions of the Bill.

Also, this group of motions would ensure that the review committee, and the review committee alone, would be able to determine what it reports to Parliament. Motion No. 122 sets out the following clearly:

The Review Committee shall have full authority to determine the contents of statements and reports referred to in subsection (1) of this section.

This amendment is essential if Parliament is to have even the slightest shred of confidence in the operations of the review process. The only role for Parliament which is left, after the Minister rejected the recommendations for parliamentary oversight by many of the witnesses who appeared before the committee, is to review the reports submitted to it by the Security Intelligence Review Committee. If these reports have to be laundered and doctored by an official appointed by the Solicitor General before they can be submitted to Parliament, what kind of oversight is that?

I will make a prediction which I think will be borne out in the years to come. Parliament, after the passage of this Bill, will have no more knowledge whatsoever than it has today about the operations and the policies of the security service in this country. That is a disgrace in a democratic country.

In conclusion, I urge Members of the House to adopt these motions. I urge them to adopt the motion of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South which calls for parliamentary oversight. I, on behalf of my Party, proposed a similar motion, which was ruled out of order. That motion is an essential one, as are the other ones in this package, if there is to be even a semblance of meaningful oversight. If not, Parliament, the House and the Minister will be saying that they do not trust the elected representatives of the people of the country. That is a shameful denial of effective oversight of the operations of this service.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I want to commence my remarks by thanking the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) for speaking on my motion. I was momentarily detained outside the House. In his usual courteous way he assisted me.

Although the motion stands in my name, Hon. Members of my Party and of the New Democratic Party have exactly the same view about the necessity of establishing a parliamentary review commitee. What is incredible is that there is a notion in the country that the last thing one should ever do is to involve Members of Parliament in anything which has to do with substance or with the fundamental rights and liberties of the Canadian people. That is not a notion which is particularly peculiar to the Government. It is a notion of other people in the community, some of whom write editorials. Those same people are the first to prate, rant and preach about why Members of Parliament did not protect their liberties. I hope they take a lesson.

I do not mind being preached at by these people, but they do not have to get elected. We do. My answer to those outside government—and I will deal with the Government in a minute—who write editorials indicating that it would be completely wrong to have a parliamentary review committee, is that, frankly, they do not trust the parliamentary system any more than does the Government.

Now I should like to refer to my hon. friends on the government side. Some of them are friends, others are honourable.

Mr. Evans: Do you mean your friends are not honourable?

Mr. Fraser: Where I am likely to go, most of my friends will have some difficulty establishing their honour.

• (1900)

I want to ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) who just interrupted me, in a courteous way, why he does not get up and tell us why we should not have a parliamentary review committee. He has a lot of views. I believe he was trained in economics. I got a first class in economics once, and I have never trusted an economist since. Now that he is in the world of politics, I would like him to tell us why he would not trust a review committee of this House of Commons. Some of his colleagues would be on it. What is the strange notion of the parliamentary majority, the so-called Liberal Party of Canada, that does not trust the representatives of the people?

Liberalism in politics got its start from the term "liberales", a Spanish insurgent group in the 1830s. They caught the imagination of the intellectuals of western Europe. The name Liberalism came to be used to describe those forces in restrictive and autocratic regimes that were fighting for the right of the people and the representatives of the people to be heard.

I remind my friend from Ottawa Centre that I not only studied economics but I studied some political history as well. He is a distinguished Member of this House with fine academic qualifications, although perhaps with a short historical memory. I ask him what is wrong with having those whom the people elect forming a review committee on security. It is not wrong in the great republic to the south of us where there is one in the Senate and one in the House of Representatives. Why would it be wrong here?

Something that has gone wrong with the British parliamentary system under the years of Liberal political stewardship—I did not say philosophical Liberal stewardship because that is not what we have had—is that the Liberal party has taken advantage of the fact that it is a system which is extremely powerful and dictatorial. It is only held in constraint by convention and attitude, also the determination of some Members of all Parties to break with the monolithic dictates of the rigid suffocation of the party system in this country. Also, it depends on the adequacy, intelligence and imagination of the media to report what is really going on, despite the smoke and mirrors that appear to be the side show in this House most of the time. I ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre what is wrong with trusting those whom the people have sent here?

The Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) is in the Chamber. He is well and favourably known to me, as is the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. The Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park has spoken with passion in this House on the rights of minority groups within the varied, exciting and fascinating composites that make up our Canadian nation. He has spoken with great eloquence about what had happened in the country from which his people come, Poland. Why does he not get up and tell us why we cannot have in Canada what he would wish for his former countrymen, his relatives, friends and that magnificently vital freedom-loving nation from which he comes? I ask these questions seriously.

I also see the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) in the Chamber. I do not think he is sitting in his seat, but it does not matter.

Mr. Fisher: I have been put back here by the PM.

Mr. Fraser: I will not comment about where you have been put. I certainly will not be rude by suggesting where you ought to be put. You are sitting upon a seat, even if it is not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I invite the Hon. Member to address the Chair.

Mr. Fraser: As usual, Your Honour is absolutely right. You indicate I have one more minute.

Speaking about seats, I remind Hon. Members that it was once said by an irreverent poet that a politician is an arse upon which everyone has sat except a man. It would not be a bad idea if some Members on the Government side got up off that part, described by that rather irreverent word, upon which they are sitting and explain to this House why there should not be a review committee made up of elected members who are sent here by the public of Canada. I invite Government Members to answer my request and tell us why that is such a dangerous notion in a parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I interpret the remarks and the request of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) to be rhetorical, because he assiduously attended all the meetings of the committee which reviewed all of these clauses. I do not think there were any of these amendments that were not proposed and moved in committee. He would have had the answers which I and others gave during the course of the hearings, giving reasons why a parliamentary review committee is not considered appropriate, reasons which commended themselves to the Senate committee, which included some distinguished representatives of his own Party, who agreed with the system of review and did not propose that there should be a parliamentary committee engaging in oversight.

My colleagues on this side have had the opportunity to read the Senate committee report which did not favour a parliamentary review and to hear the arguments which I gave in the House of Commons committee against parliamentary review. He can take it that we are satisfied that the review committee can provide effective oversight. I remind him that the congressional oversight committee in the United States, which Members opposite view as such a desirable feature, does not have access to the documents and the individuals that the review committee will be able to call on. Under the proposed legislation, the review committee can call on any one who works for the service, can obtain any documents of the service and can obtain any information. The Hon. Member for Vancouver South knows that in the case of the United States congressional oversight committee, the only information to which they have access are reports and statements from the directors of the agencies within the intelligence community. The proposed review committee, in other words, has the capacity, and it is the expectation of the Government that it will engage in a far more profound review than the Congressional committee in the United States has the authority to do, or is capable of doing.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), I have to say a few words.

The Solicitor General says the review committee that will be appointed under the provisions of this Bill will be superior to a similar review committee in the United States because the Canadian review committee will have access to all documents it wishes to see, while the review committee in the United States which consists of members appointed by the Senate and the House of Representatives does not have such access. The difference, however, is that the review committee in the United States consists of elected members.

When, as happened very recently, the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency was less than forthright and less than honest, those elected members of the review committee raised hell. They did not raise hell privately, Mr. Speaker, they raised hell publicly. I say to the Solicitor General that we on this side have no confidence that the kind of tame cats that he and his Government will likely appoint to this review committee will do anything privately, let alone raise hell publicly, if things go wrong.

There at least two countries which I can name, West Germany and the United States, both of which are much larger countries than Canada, both of which are much more involved in world politics than Canada, and both of which have tremendous military and political problems, that have review committees made up of elected representatives. If those countries can have such review committees, there should be no reason why we cannot have such a review committee here, except for the very simple reason that in this democratic country we have been governed by members of one political Party for more than 50 out of the last 60 years. Obviously, that Government and that Party believe they have some God-given right to always form the Government.

Mr. Kaplan: We get elected in these elections.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, elected, and they obviously expect to continue to be elected.

Mr. Kaplan: That is up to the Canadian people, that is not up to you.

Mr. Orlikow: That is right. I am saying to the Minister that, from his point of view, the Canadian people some time in the future, and perhaps very soon, may make a mistake and elect another kind of Government. Then the review committee will be appointed by a Government that is not Liberal and different members will sit on the review committee. Then the Solicitor General, if he is still around—which I doubt—and his colleagues will find that they will be as frozen out from what is really going on as are members on this side of the House.

I would suggest to the Minister that he ought to keep in mind that there will come a time when he will have as much difficulty getting information and seeing documents on which important public issues are decided as we do. Then, Mr. Speaker, he will begin to understand why members of the Opposition and ordinary citizens of Canada, who are often adversely affected by the work of the intelligence organization, have so many objections to the kinds of proposals which are being made today.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address Motion No. 123 moved by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). This motion takes a position that I think responds to many of the misgivings about which we have heard from the Canadian people regarding what this agency might be investigating and the manner in which it is likely to carry out its investigations.

This legislation suggests a type of organization which is relatively new within the structure of the Canadian Government. I am delighted that the Hon. Member for Vancouver South brought forward a motion which would provide a means of examining, not the day-to-day operations of the agency but the general thrust of its activities and administration. The motion reads:

—The administration, provisions and operation of this Act shall be reviewed on a permanent basis by such committee of the House of Commons—

And it goes on. It is vitally important that such an amendment be accepted and that a committee be assigned the task of examining the activities of the agency.

During various discussions, in the press and when we have gone to our constituencies, we have heard it asked why the Government is proposing that an agency be set up that is separate from the RCMP and charged with the responsibility of collecting intelligence on security matters relating to threats to the security of Canada. We also hear questions about the manner in which it might be conducting its operations.

We dealt with some of the clauses of this Bill, but I am not sure whether amendments have been made to all of them. I have not been able to attend all of the discussions that have occurred during report stage.

In Clause 21 on page 11, and more particularly on page 12, we find that the agency, having set forth a good reason to a judge, may obtain from a judge a warrant authorizing the persons to whom it is directed, being members of the agency, to intercept any communication or obtain any information, record or document and, for that purpose—listen to this, Mr. Speaker—to enter any place, to search for, remove or return and to instal, maintain and remove any thing. Of course, when thinking of installing something, one thinks of listening devices. These are intrusions on the rights of citizens of this country, intrusions to which the citizens are certainly not accustomed. I hope the citizens will always have misgivings about such intrusions.

Therefore, it seems to me to be most important that there be a means for this House to review the actions of the service, not necessarily in open committee. I am not suggesting that that review be done in open committee. However, I am suggesting that there be a committee which will review these various activities and which will know just what it is the agency is doing, how it is doing those things and how this particular legislation is being administered.

Gross affronts to the rights of Canadians could occur in the course of the duties of this service, probably due simply to an excess of zeal in the carrying on of its activities. If a committee of this House were empowered to examine those activities, it would in my estimation and in the estimation of most Canadians enable Canadians to feel more secure. I am not questioning the fact that we do need some sort of a security intelligence agency of one sort or another and I would prefer that it be a part of the RCMP.

If there is a need for an agency of this sort, there ought to be a public body that will examine how it is carrying out its functions. It would be reassuring to Canadians if such an authority were given to the House of Commons, or to the House of Commons and the Senate as proposed in this motion. Such authority would include the authority to receive reports from the agency, to examine those reports and many other things.

We have only so much time to deal with this Bill. We are now discussing it under closure. It is very possible that this legislation will not be given the proper review before it is enacted into law as a result of the authorization of the new Leader of the Liberal Party. He has not raised a finger to suggest that it ought not to be passed into law. That seem obvious to me. Therefore, his connivance in the whole operation must be admitted.

We are not being given a full opportunity to debate this legislation, or to obtain responses from our constituents, the media and specialists in this area. Sure, many witnesses appeared before the committee, but now that the matter is being examined in greater detail there is an opportunity for public response to the matters we are considering. I feel that it is absolutely and utterly essential, partly because of the limited debate proposals which have been brought down, and also because of the newness of this type of legislation, that this House should be empowered to examine the administration of this Bill and bring forward amendments. Those amendments might tighten up the administration, or they might broaden the powers of the proposed service.

The committee which is proposed is a permanent committee, which I think is most appropriate. The committee should be permanent and it should have the legislation referred to it. It should be cognizant of the manner in which this legislation is being administered. I am worried, and I know a lot of people are worried, about the powers which will in all likelihood infringe upon the rights of Canadian citizens, justly or unjustly. When unjust intrusions into the privacy of individuals takes place, there must be some way in which those individuals can secure redress for the grievance which they have suffered. The review committee is more of a ministerial review. But, the parliamentary committee is a review of a much broader nature. The parliamentary committee would be concerned with the administrative provisions as laid down in the legislation.

This House is not being given an appropriate opportunity to discuss the legislation at length. Nor is the governing Party taking part in this debate, with the exception of the occasional intervention by the Minister. I would like someone on the other side of the House to rise to the challenge of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South and explain why this House, meeting in open session or in camera, should not be empowered to examine how this Bill would be administered and whether there have been infractions of our commonly-held traditions of freedom of speech and actions in this country.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the part of the Bill which we are debating now concerns the amendments which propose a parliamentary review committee of the new secret service. It seems to me that this is an absolutely essential part of the Bill.

I did not attend the meetings of the Justice Committee. Neither did most of the Canadians who, perhaps, are watching this debate on television. Therefore, it is not good enough for the Minister to do as he did a few moments ago, when he indicated that the answers to the questions posed by the Hon. Member—

Mr. Kaplan: I am sorry you were not at the meetings.

Mr. Waddell: Do not say you are sorry I was not there. Answer the question now in the House.

Mr. Kaplan: I spoke on it already.

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps the Minister could have one of his colleagues speak on it. The Minister told us that we should have been at the justice committee meetings. To be fair, he offered a defence as to why there is no parliamentary review. But, I think it was a pretty weak defence. If that was the whole defence, it was pretty weak.

Mr. Kaplan: There is much more.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister said that the review procedure, as I understand it, includes some retired Privy Councillors. It is not a parliamentary review procedure. It was recommended by a Senate committee. To put it mildly, perhaps the Senators do not appreciate what it is like to meet constituents, people on the street, ordinary people, because they have never been elected. The committee was chaired by Senator Pitfield, an example of the kind of closely-knit bureaucratic, elitist group which surrounds the out-going Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—the Trudeau group. It is the very kind of Government which the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), some of his friends and some of the Liberals who attended the convention were protesting. Turner people were saying that they would not like to see those kinds of things in government.

The Solicitor General said in his speech today that the United States committee, which has parliamentary access with a Senate committee and a House of Representatives committee, is made up of people who had to go through the battle of being elected and who are responsible to the electorate. They are democrats with a small "d".

The Solicitor General said that the U.S. committee did not have access to the reports which he is recommending the review committee should have. As the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) said, recently the U.S. committee has been pretty effective. When I was in the United States a few weeks ago, Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan resigned from the Senate Committee on Intelligence because the director of the CIA had not been forthcoming about what was going on with regard to the mining of the harbours in Nicaragua. The director had to come back with his tail between his legs and apologize. Senator Moynihan then returned to the committee. That is a pretty effective committee.

What are we going to have in Canada? Members can correct me if I am wrong, but as I understand it former Privy Councillors will make up the committee. There will be the likes of Mitchell Sharp on the committee. There is nothing wrong with Mitchell Sharp, but the problem is that he is long gone from democratic politics and therefore he will look at things in a very pro-government way. Or we will have senile Privy Councillors, old fellows who have been around a long time? The Government will put them on the committee as tokenism.

Mr. Kaplan: Do you think all senior citizens are senile?

Mr. Waddell: Do I think what?

Mr. Kaplan: Do you think all senior citizens are senile?

Mr. Waddell: No, I do not think all senior citizens are senile. I am referring to the type of Privy Councillors you will be putting on the committee. Why not put the committee in the House of Commons, as do other countries such as West Germany and the United States? What is the Government afraid of? That question has not been answered.

We believe in freedom and parliamentary democracy on this side of the House. I do not understand Liberal back-benchers, many of whom are committed to being socially progressive. They say they are committed. They are commited when other countries are concerned, but not here. Why have the back-benchers not come forward and grasped this? Perhaps, the Liberal convention interfered and they did not have a chance to realize the extent of the Bill. In choosing the most important thing a country can have, a secret service, can they really be serious about not having parliamentary review? The McDonald Commission recommended parliamentary review. There is parliamentary review in other countries. Can they really be serious in saying that this kind of set up will protect the rights of people? It is only window dressing. If Liberal Members have spoken about upgrading the rights of Parliament and individual Members of Parliament, then why not trust individual Members of Parliament with the review of some of these problems?

When the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) and the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) were speaking, I was thinking about the area of Boundary Road and 49th Avenue in Vancouver. East of that area is the riding of the Hon. Member for Burnaby. Southwest of that area is the riding of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South. Northwest of that area is my riding of Vancouver-Kingsway. All three of us have risen tonight to demand parliamentary scrutiny. All the people in that area are working class people. They live in small homes or apartments. These people, I feel, still trust Parliament but they do not trust a Government which has gone a long way away from them. These people are not subversives, nor likely to be. However, they may belong to a church group which supports, for example, aid to Nicaragua, and they are liable to be targeted. They may send their children to university, and while in university their children may espouse a progressive cause, such as not testing the Cruise missile. Those children may have their phones bugged or may be targeted. This can happen because it has happened to many people.

• (1930)

Mr. Kaplan: That is why we are introducing these controls.

Mr. Waddell: If it can seize the membership list of the PQ, it can seize the membership of a left wing club in the campus of UBC.

Mr. Kaplan: Why do you think we are introducing these controls?

Mr. Waddell: Would the Solicitor General listen to me for a moment? People may be in a peace march in Vancouver and may be investigated or targeted for that. Let us hope they will not be, and the chances are, perhaps, that they will not be. However, I would not count on it by looking at past actions. What happens if something goes wrong with the system? Philippe Gigantes, the Senator, wrote an article about things going wrong where some senior civil servants in this town were victimized by the security service. If something goes wrong, who is to review it? This is an agency which is responsible to no one, an agency which is appointed by the Government, and God knows what kind of Government we will have in the future in this country.

What are Liberal Members afraid of? Are they afraid to trust parliamentary democracy, Members of Parliament and themselves in a proper committee setting with the proper rules? They do that in the United States because Americans believe in democracy. We have often criticized the United States, God knows, lots of times on this side of the House, but one has to admire its faith in freedom and democracy.

Mr. Kaplan: And the operations of the CIA?

Mr. Waddell: But this system, Mr. Solicitor General, is a wrong system. You are going against the trend of parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Kaplan: You are happy with the CIA?

Mr. Waddell: The Minister, with this Bill, makes Reagan look like a civil libertarian, my colleague says, but I will not call the Solicitor General names.

Let me put it this way. There has been no good reason advanced tonight in the House of Commons why we cannot have a parliamentary committee looking at this agency. They have it in other countries. It was recommended by the McDonald Commission. The present system is inadequate. The Senate recommendation does not carry a heck of a lot of weight. I say that the weight of the evidence and the argument is that we should have a parliamentary oversight. I challenge Hon. Members opposite to vote for these amendments.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, every once in a while, as these amendments have come forward, the Opposition has thrown a lifeline or a lifejacket to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). Had he grabbed it he would have been able to pull himself out of the mess which he has gotten himself into. There is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that this Solicitor General will become known as the infamous Solicitor General who imposed upon the Canadian people this very flawed Bill to provide a secret service security force for the Canadian people. If only the Solicitor General would recognize that this is now a golden opportunity for him to get out of this mess!

I would like to read the motion to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the Canadian people. I am sure that anyone who hears this particular motion read will agree that it is a very reasonable motion. Motion No. 123 reads:

> The administration, provisions and operation of this Act shall be reviewed on a permanent basis by such committee of the House of Commons or of the House of Commons and Senate as may be designated or established by Parliament for that purpose.

Surely, that is the reason why people send Members of Parliament to this House. They want their elected representatives to watch over government activities. They want them to review the administration. They want them to look at the provisions and the operations of every department and every function which this Government undertakes. Therefore, what on earth is wrong with this particular provision? I am sure that no Canadian citizen who would believe that is other than a reasonable provision. If the Solicitor General would only try to understand what we are trying to do, I am sure he would grab the lifeline. It is perfectly apparent.

I have been trying to ascertain why this particular Minister is pushing this legislation through at this particular time when there is so much more important social legislation before this House. There must be a reason. I believe if we go to the Auditor General's report of the Solicitor General's Department, we will begin to see why the Minister is pushing this legislation through. The Solicitor General has spent millions upon millions of dollars for a transmission committee, rented space, and so on. He has wasted millions of dollars to put this new force into effect. I gather he feels he would look very silly if the House closed down at the end of this month and the whole summer went by without this particular Bill being passed. The first Bill he brought forth was so bad that he could not possibly hope to get it confirmed, and he is very worried about this one.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), who spoke previously, asked the Solicitor General why he opposed the insertion of Clause 56, as amended by Motion No. 123. The Minister did not really give the answer he gave in committee. I would like to give the House that answer. As I understand it, and the Minister may correct me if I am wrong, first of all the Minister said that the whole Act is good and should not be touched because it is better than what we now have. But we have nothing now. The Minister said, "Well, isn't it nice that we have this Bill now? But don't touch this Bill. It is the best thing we have ever had. Furthermore, I have changed it a little for you". But that evades and avoids the whole issue.

The point is that we are trying to make this piece of paper better. That is why we are here. That is why we spent so many hours in committee. That is why we are asking the Government why they will not accept any of these suggestions.

The second point the Minister makes is that we cannot have a parliamentary review committee because then the Hon. Members of Parliament on that committee might find out secrets which they would feel morally obligated to tell to their constituents. If there was ever a more ridiculous reason for not having Members of Parliament on that review committee, I have never heard it.

The American system, as we know, has a complete oversight committee composed of elected representatives. The United States has never had any problems—at least none that were made public—about receiving secret information, and there has never been the problem of that committee revealing any information which would affect the security of the country. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is incumbent upon the Minister to tell this House in much more detail—I am sure the House would give him permission if he so desired—why he opposes the parliamentary review committee. I understand that he has already spoken on this clause. However, I for one would be quite willing to have him state his case once more for the record. Certainly, I believe, his constituents in the next election are going to ask him why the parliamentary review committee was turned down by this House. I know that is something my constituents are going to ask me. I feel it is incumbent upon the Minister to tell this House now, at this time, why in fact he is refusing what is a very rational and reasonable clause; that is, for the House of Parliament to set up a watchdog committee to oversee this particular security force, which could be a real intrusion on the rights and liberties of Canadians everywhere in this country.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to support this amendment before us. I very much appreciate the action of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) in introducing it. The amendment is very plain. It reads, and I quote:

> The administration, provisions and operation of this Act shall be reviewed on a permanent basis by such committee of the House of Commons or of the House of Commons and Senate as may be designated or established by Parliament for that purpose.

It is a very simple, plain and essential motion, Mr. Speaker.

• (1940)

What I have discovered in three years here is that Ottawa is a long, long way from Canada. The consciousness of this place treats Canada, not just as if it was a foreign country, but as if it was on another continent or in another world. We think we should make all the decisions here without hearing from the rest of the world. The Government is even further removed. It wants to make all the decisions without hearing from Parliament.

In Spadina, we have many people who are professionally educated and employed. They are very capable of studying these matters, but with limited time since none of them is employed in doing this very work, except for me, and perhaps a Senator, if he still lives there. There are many people in small business, many people working at manual trade, and many with very little formal education. The majority come from other countries and have a varied and interesting basis of political awareness. They are all concerned with their freedom. They all want a hand in watchdogging their own freedom. The principal way of making that available to every one of them as a citizen of this country is by his or her vote in electing a Member of Parliament. They expect that vote to be the instrument by which, among other things, they will guard their freedom. They hold their Member of Parliament responsible for defending their freedom, because they do not trust this Government, and they have good reason not to.

I will not go into the long history of acts of untrustworthiness, I will simply refer to the remarkable statement the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) made a few minutes ago. He told us that the watchdog committees of the American Congress have access to even less information than is proposed for this committee here. What nonsense. It is well known that the appropriate committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives have the right to call anyone as a witness, and they do. They have the right to require them to bring any document, and they do.

Mr. Kaplan: That is not true.

Mr. Heap: They have the right to examine their budget, and they do. One example of that which became very public recently was when they hauled the Director of the CIA before the committee and demanded that he tell them what he was doing in connection with the mining of the harbours in Nicaragua. When he told them they bawled him out for it. I assume the Solicitor General is trying to speak through television to the Canadian people to say that the American Congress and Senate do not have the power to examine those things. Well, he is saying something that is patently untrue. I do not propose to suggest that he is deliberately misleading the House, since that would apparently offend him on account of my Anglican religion, to which he referred before. Therefore I must conclude that as the Solicitor General pushing through his police state Bill he is astonishingly ignorant in his own field of expertise. Imagine getting up to give us supposedly expert advice and being as mistaken as he was a few minutes ago. That is why the people of Canada do not trust him or his Government.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, if the Government chooses not to accept the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), it will simply be publicly announcing that the House of Commons is not what it was intended to be; namely, the instrument of the people through their elected representatives. Failure to accept this fact is an expression of contempt by the Minister for the trustworthiness of Members of the House of Commons.

His remarks with respect to the capabilities of the committees of the U.S. Congress are certainly not in accordance with the facts. Let us assume for a moment that they do not have total access to every single activity of every agent of the CIA. They have had the opportunity to demean directors of the CIA, and they have been replaced as a result of meetings of committees of the U.S. Congress. We, however, will have no such capability.

As I stand here I look upon the mace, the sacred symbol of the political capabilities of a democratically elected House of Commons. It is a symbol of the fact that you will be defended by arms, if necessary, against anyone who would intrude upon the deliberations of the elected body known as the House of Commons.

There are no intrusions and we have not had to use weapons. Neither have we had to call upon the Sergeant-at-Arms to defend this elected body. But we may yet find ourselves in a position where we wish that we had used arms at some point to deflect a government which trusts no one. Nothing could better illustrate its contempt of Parliament.

Do they mean to tell us that the Solicitor General and Liberal Members cannot trust the veterans sitting in this House? They put their lives on the line for this country. What about the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Neilsen) who so magnificently portrayed the efforts of Members of this House and other young people of that day in defending the democracy we are supposed to represent? Is he not trustworthy to sit on a committee and hear evidence regarding the security forces of this country? What about the lawyers who are sworn peace officers? Are they not worthy of trust as members of a committee to evaluate and judge the security forces we are appointing? What about the former Cabinet Ministers who may or may not have been veterans or lawyers? Are they not worthy of trust? Has this country not put its trust in those people as they sat in Cabinet? Are they not trustworthy? Are they going to babble, as I believe the Solicitor General said? If they are, then we are certainly in a defunct society. We have had the biscuit.

I want to say to you, Sir, that as I campaign in the next election I am going to lay the blame for this on the new Leader of the Liberal Party. We know what the degenerate system was under the old leader, and we are now getting the establishment, as was so thoroughly described by the press as they summarized the results of the leadership convention.

Mr. Fisher: Good luck.

Mr. McCain: It will be good luck, my friend, because my constituents are not as ignorant as some of those who sit on your right.

Mr. Fisher: Are they as impolite as you are?

Mr. McCain: Stand up and speak for your country! Don't speak against it as you are doing now. Treat it with sincerity of purpose and with resolution, not with contempt. Do not treat it with contempt, you and that—

Mr. Kaplan: Order.

Mr. McCain: I say through you, Mr. Speaker, that that type of behaviour is what has brought contempt to this House, and it has been led and fed and guided by the activities of the Government on the right. That mace, a symbol of protection for you and all Members of this House, is no longer a symbol of democracy and the right of the people to defend themselves against their government or against insurrection. The insurrection, Sir, is taking place to your right. It is an insurrection against democracy and its structures, a democracy which is now well into its eighth century since the signing of the Magna Carta in 1215. We have put the machinery in reverse as we pass legislation of this nature.

I am one of the Members of this House of Commons who is thoroughly, completely and totally insulted by this legislation. I am not trusted, even in camera, to be a part of the conduct of the business of the security of this nation which I love and for which, though I did not get into battle, I signed up and put my life on the line to defend.

I have contempt for a Solicitor General, a government, a Prime Minister and a new leader who allows this kind of legislation to be passed which makes the House of Commons untrustworthy to conduct the business of the people. There are vehicles which can be utilized for those who become untrustworthy in the land. They should be applied to any member of any House of Commons or Senate committee who may be privy to the secrets of this land in relation to the security of the country. Those things should be applied to the ones who babble. However, the initial trust must be placed in the hands of those who are elected to govern the country.

This is putting the security of the land at the disposition of political manipulators. It is giving the opportunity for pure partisan selection of the only committees which will have any view of the behaviour of the security system which we are setting up. We do not even have the confidence that we have been able to place in that loyal force of police officers known as the RCMP. We are now relegated to having a civilian force put in place which will be examined by political appointees of the government of the day. I do not care what government is in place. It should not have that authority. The security of the land and law and order should be the responsibility of, and should be extended to the elected Members of the people of Canada. I am not concerned about anybody from that committee babbling. If the Government uses judgment so poor that it appoints a babbler whom they cannot trust, the security agency is incompetent before it gets off the ground.

How many of us in the House have directly or indirectly already been evaluated as a security risk for one reason or another? This is a condemnation of the society and the people over whom you preside as Speaker in the House. For the life of me I cannot comprehend how the democrats of this country, those who love democracy, have remained so silent as they watch this force go into the backrooms of the Party in power for the day. To me it is incredible that they will accept that. If they do, it is because of the contempt in which we are held. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) once said that a Member of Parliament is a nobody when he is 100 feet away from the House of Commons. That is the opinion which the House has extended for itself through its agent, the Prime Minister of Canada. This is the exclamation mark behind that remark of the Prime Minister who did not want, does not comprehend, and never did respect those of us who were elected but were not Prime Minister.

This Act reminds me of another Act. The Auditor General is supposed to give facts to the Public Accounts Committee. He is supposed to be a check and balance upon the expenditures, allocations and use of money in general. However, if you sit on the Public Accounts Committee you will find that he has made a report. I trust totally that he will have accumulated the necessary evidence to make the necessary accusations and to put the necessary subject matters before the Public Accounts Committee. Having accumulated that evidence, it goes into a file and cannot be withdrawn. It can only be withdrawn if someone tells you exactly what question you should ask. The Auditor General is not authorized to give you that information.

The House of Commons has plodded along in the dark, depending upon someone slipping a little piece of private information unsolicited. Perhaps one would call it a leak. The Public Accounts Committee of the House has not been able to function as it was intended to function. Its intended function was to look after the expenditures of the land.

The House of Commons is now not going to be allowed to function with respect to the security of the land in the private force. We in the House of Commons may be veterans, lawyers or teachers, but we are Canadians all. We are not supposed to have enough interest in the well-being of our country to be trusted by the Government.

If this motion is turned down by the Government it will be a reflection upon the present Prime Minister and the one who aspires to be Prime Minister, because he is now considered to be the boss of the Liberal Party. If he is boss, between now and tomorrow night this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this occasion to speak for the first time on Bill C-9. I will try to express as simply as I can my concern about the clause we are debating now. I must relate to the situation of Members of Parliament going through their constituencies and talking to their constituents. Concern is expressed by the constituents that Members of Parliament really do not have enough say in the operation of Parliament and Government. When one sees the kind of legislation we are dealing with this evening in the last hour of report stage debate, one can fully appreciate the concern of the constituents.

The Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) is simply seeking an opportunity for Members of Parliament in the Government and in Opposition, and for Members of the Senate, to have some say in a committee that is to be set up to review the operations of the changes that are brought about by Bill C-9, an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto.

More simply put, that means that if someone, perhaps wrongly, is accused of some act of subversion or an act against the best interests of the country, and this committee is called into place to protect that person, the committee that will be dealing with the issue is nothing more and nothing less than a group of porkbarrel committee members appointed by the Government in power that day.

If that person who may be wrongly accused of actions wishes to bring his or her case to an elected Member of Parliament, that opportunity is excluded because the information is not available to the elected representatives in the House. It is not available in the presentation of information at the committee level because Members of Parliament on both sides of the House have been excluded from an opportunity to listen to the constituent who may be wrongly accused of an act. All that we as Conservatives in Opposition are asking for is an opportunity to establish a parliamentary oversight committee to review, on a permanent basis, the administration provisions and operations of this oversight committee.

I am sure that a lot of people in the country thought that after the last big Liberal leadership convention we had a new Liberal Party Leader who was going to do three things, as I thought he had assured the people of Canada. He was going to make Parliament more responsive to the people. He was going to consider the interests of the West in whatever actions might be taken, and he was going to have a more open Government.

However, what we have in reality today as we stand in our places debating this issue is an ignoring of the interest of the West by diluting the importance of the RCMP. The Government has taken responsibilities from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and is turning them over to a government appointed committee, while excluding Members of Parliament from representing their constituencies and having any input.

● (2000)

This is no different from what it was before. We have the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who minimizes the importance of Parliament. The new Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, by virtue of bringing in closure and limiting debate on this important piece of legislation, is doing no more and no less than the old school. We are back where we were.

We were currently dealing with a piece of legislation and a proposed amendment to it, through a motion by the Member for Vancouver South. That amendment is supported by the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and by the League of Rights. It is supported by the Canadian Council of Churches and it is even supported by Professor Peter Russell of the University of Toronto who was the solicitor for the McDonald Commission.

I know there are members on the government side in the House tonight who have stood up on numerous occasions in the House to speak out very vocally in support of responsible and representative government. They speak on behalf of minority groups quite often. This is simply a case of a piece of legislation that removes the protection of Canadian citizens from the scrutiny of Members of Parliament. Not one member from the government side has spoken in support of having parliamentary representation on this review committee—

Mr. Foster: Tell us about it.

Mr. Domm: —some from the Senate and some from the House of Commons.

Mr. Foster: Tell us about it.

Mr. Domm: I hear gentlemen on the government side saying "Tell us about it". I would like to hear them tell us why they are opposed to having some parliamentary representation on this review committee? If there is a good reason, why have we not heard it?

Mr. Kaplan: But you did not go to the committee.

Mr. Domm: None of these other organizations support the Government in its refusal for representation by Members of Parliament. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) keeps interjecting, yet there has not been one government member who has stood up and supported the exclusion of Members of Parliament from the review committee.

What is there that is new and different? We have the same thing today that we had two weeks ago. It is a government that brings in closure and a government that wants to exclude elected Members of Parliament from having input into important decisions affecting the citizens of this country. There is a bunch of sheep who are going along with the wishes of the Solicitor General, and not one of them issues a peep on that side of the House.

I believe we should be discussing the importance of representation on this review committee so that we have voices that speak on behalf of constituents. Members on the government side were elected to become Members of Parliament so that their constituents might have a say. The Member for Vancouver South is asking for no more and no less. We are not asking for dictatorial authority to make all of the final decisions. We are asking for the opportunity to have input on behalf of citizens who, rightly or wrongly, might be accused of an Act that causes them to go through interrogation by this new police agency.

We are dealing with something far more than a review committee. We are dealing with a police agency that dilutes the power of the RCMP and removes from Parliament the right of input from elected representatives. It turns over to a group of pork barrel Liberal appointees the right to decide in the reviewing process whether something is right or wrong.

As far as I, and I suggest the vast majority of Canadians across this land are concerned, it is wrong. That is not the process they would like to see. I am sure that most people in this House would agree that support for this motion is urgently needed. It is regrettable that not one soul on the government side is interested in speaking on behalf of the citizens who will not be represented on this review committee by elected Members of Parliament, or even appointed members to the Senate.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that I rose to speak on this very topic a day or two ago because I do consider it to be of major importance. I think it is fair to say that this legislation will go down in the annals of history as one of the most important pieces of legislation passed by the Government over the valid objections of those of us in the opposition who understand the important and far reaching effects of what is being done.

This legislation is important but not supportable, and I want to draw the distinction between the two. It is important because of the nature of the legislation and its potential to infringe upon the basic liberties of Canadians. It could be improved but could never be supportable.

I am surprised that the Solicitor General in many ways is betraying a longstanding publicly professed commitment to civil liberties. He now seems to be prepared to overlook or at least suppress what many in this country have long believed he stood for. He does not seem willing to listen to arguments being put to him.

This legislation could be made marginally more palatable with the acceptance of the amendment we are now debating. It is not revolutionary. It simply gives Members of Parliament that power which most citizens of Canada would anticipate they should have in any event. It gives to Members of Parliament the right to oversee that which has been given by an Act of Parliament, the most intrusive power ever granted in this country.

The other day I told the story of my visit to Moscow. I will not tell it again—

An Hon. Member: Tell us again.

Mr. Deans: My colleague says that he would like to hear it again, but perhaps repetition is not acceptable. However, I pointed out that the people I met when I was there feared their secret service more than they feared anything else. I think that is fair to say. I am not exaggerating. I believe that to be true.

That is true in many parts of the United States where people who have an axe to grind, if you will, or hold views different from the conventional and acceptable view of the Government in the United States: they fear the CIA more than most anything else. I cannot help but think that we are following the worst of all examples in Canada.

Let me ask the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) in the friendliest manner to consider the scenario that I put before the House the other day. Suppose that he was a visitor to Leningrad, and at the behest of families living in Canada were to make a decision to visit their relatives in Leningrad. If he were to telephone them and make arrangements to visit them in their apartments, he, being a government official, would be seen to be an agent of a foreign government. They, being citizens of the Soviet Union, would then be under suspicion for having had him visit. That is the system. They consider it right. They consider it appropriate. Those people, once under surveillance, are harassed and continually watched day and night. Their phones are tapped, their mail is opened, they are harassed at their places of work and frequently taken into KGB headquarters for discussions, if you will, about their connections with these foreigners from outside their own country.

• (2010)

The Government in the Soviet Union, and many people in the Soviet Union believe that is appropriate. I am quite sure in Canada you could find people who would think it appropriate here that the secret service should be able to open people's mail, tap their telephones, listen in with listening devices to their conversations elsewhere, and have access to and use of doctors' files, and all of those things. There are people in Canada who see no harm in that because they live in that wonderful naivete that somehow or other if you do not break the law, then what have you got to hide. That is how they view things.

I had the pleasure of sitting with a lady last evening at dinner. I was a guest of the Speaker. She said to me: "I do not really mind if they open my mail. I do not really mind if they listen in to my phone calls because I do not do anything wrong." I said to her: "Well, the fact you do not do anything wrong is the very reason you should mind. The fact that you are a law abiding citizen is the very reason you should be concerned. The fact that you never break the law is the very reason you should be offended that the Government has chosen to give to this agency the power to do those things to you."

That is what makes the Bill offensive. If a person is suspected of committing a crime, of being in violation of Canada's laws, then there is ample provision for conducting an inquiry into his or her daily life, finding out and rooting out what can be the evidence necessary for prosecution. There are ample ways available for doing that. But it is those who do not harm, who break no laws, who live according to high moral and ethical standards who will be most affected, unfortunately, by casual relationships which may result in their being placed under surveillance. They have no way to seek redress. They cannot come to their Member of Parliament because the Member of Parliament has no way of seeking redress. They cannot go to the review agency. They cannot identify the people who are snooping.

Mr. Kaplan: They can go to the review committee.

Mr. Deans: First, they have to know that they are being snooped on.

Mr. Kaplan: They just have to suspect it.

Mr. Deans: That is about as naive as the lady at dinner last night. It would seem to me that by virtue of the fact that I seek public office and by virtue of the fact that I get elected, I am deemed by a segment of this society to be trustworthy. I have to live up to that trust. I believe I could be given the responsibility of sitting on a parliamentary oversight committee, and I believe I would have both the capacity and the sense of loyalty necessary to be able to make judgments about the appropriateness of the actions of the secret service. I believe that.

I would be prepared, as Privy Councillors do, to take an oath guaranteeing the secrecy of the information I get, if I had to, but we do not have that opportunity. That is what is wrong. That is one of the great fears. That is why we are so adamant in our opposition.

Not only is the concept wrong, not only is it unnecessary in our society, not only does it go far further than reasonable people would be prepared to expect it to go, but there is no clear way for those of us charged with the responsibility of administering, interpreting, understanding and representing the views of the public before Parliament to come to grips with the violations. That is why we ask again at 16 minutes past 8, half an hour before the Bill goes to bed, so to speak, that just maybe some further consideration of a Parliamentary oversight committee makes goods sense.

We ask the Solicitor General to have some faith, to trust us just a little bit, to trust his own colleagues. I want to say to you—I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are telling me that I am finished—

Mr. Kaplan: You are.

Mr. Deans: —and that could mean many things. I just want to sum up.

By virtue of being appointed to the Cabinet, that does not give an individual elected Member of Parliament any more corner on truth or trustworthiness. It does not give that individual any more sense of appropriateness in dealing with matters such as this, not any more. I ask as best I can for reconsideration. This is an important amendment. The rest of the Bill is not supportable, but at least make it somewhat more palatable by accepting that we in Parliament could exercise that responsibility with a degree of commitment to this country, equally as well as people appointed by the Government.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I know you have been listening attentively and carefully to every word in this quite lengthy debate. You will have perceived without a doubt that there is a difference in approach by the two Opposition parties. On the one hand, we have seen from the New Democratic Party that mindless opposition which they display so often in this House. It would appear that the NDP want no security service of any kind in Canada. To that end, they have filibustered, they have moved motions which would delete every single clause in the Bill we have before us. The action of the NDP has put in jeopardy or denied proper consideration of the reasonable and sensible motions put forward by Members of the Conservative Party.

Our approach to this Bill has been characterized by this sense of reason, by this sensibility. We have argued at considerable length that the security service should be maintained under the auspices of the RCMP. That is not the item of debate now, so I will not reiterate those valid arguments in favour of that point of view. We have also tried to improve this Bill.

Many flaws in the Bill have been pointed out, and we have tried in our presentations to get a better system of accountability, a better system of control, and a better handle on the security service. We know that in this imperfect world there has to be a security service. It would be nice if we did not need one. But if we are faced with the necessity of a security service, then it is our belief that that service should be accountable to the people of Canada through their Parliament.

• (2020)

With that aim in mind, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) proposed what in all probability is the most important motion introduced to date at report stage. Were this motion to be carried, the administration, provisions and operation of this Act would be reviewed on a permanent basis by a committee of the House of Commons or by a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate. What could be more sensible or more logical than that? This proposal goes to the heart of accountability and the heart of proper parliamentary scrutiny over the affairs of the security service.

The Government in its wisdom—and I use that word rather loosely—seems to think that it is okay for Parliament and parliamentary committees to look after the little things. It can set up a task force to look into a problem of the bean-growers of Ontario, with no offence to those great Canadians engaged in the production of beans. However, when it comes to a matter of fundamental public importance like the operation of a security service, then Parliament is not to be trusted and should have nothing to do with that type of affair. It is okay on the little things, but the big important things have to come under the direct jurisdiction of the Government.

The people of Canada take the opposite point of view. They have some trust in parliamentarians, if for no other reason than they can get rid of us fairly easily once every four years or so if we do not take our responsibilities seriously. However, when accountability is given to some functionaries within the government service, then this is not the case. I am sure the public of Canada would rather put its trust in the people it has elected to serve it in the House of Commons than in a government hiding behind a wall of secrecy.

I would rather suspect that the committee of Privy Councillors envisaged under the Bill as it now stands would not do the same job as a committee of serving parliamentarians. I can foresee an occasion arising when the committee of Privy Councillors appointed by the government of the day, not entirely free from political and partisan considerations, sees some form of injustice being done. What would be its reaction? I suspect on many occasions its reaction on seeing an injustice would be to let it slide, not bring it forward or press for any corrective action. Some think that in the interests of the government of the day it is best slid under the carpet.

What would be the reaction of a committee comprised of parliamentarians, Members of Parliament and Members of the Senate who could join it, if it were the wish of Parliament? On seeing something of this nature, on seeing some injustice done by the security service, it would be much more likely to bring it forward, to insist that corrective action be taken and, if need be, to bring it to public attention so that pressure could be brought to bear upon the Government to correct the wrongdoing.

The system of elected representatives of the public being charged with scrutiny of security affairs works quite well in the United States. We have heard evidence to that effect tonight. I suggest that we should adopt the motion of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South and make Parliament work.

The Government gives various forms of lip service to parliamentary reform and to putting parliamentarians in important positions such as that envisaged by the motion, but whenever an opportunity arises, as it has tonight, it puts it aside and nothing happens. It is my submission that the Government, despite the oaths we have given, does not trust parliamentarians. In return, why should we and Canadians across the country trust the Government?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise as perhaps the second or third last speaker in this second last phase of government closure on Bill C-9. As other Hon. Members have said, this Bill is equally as important as the Constitution Act in its effect on the future of the country. Our children and our children's children will be affected by this Bill. I feel in my bones that they will be affected adversely.

I say this because I have travelled around my riding in which there are many new Canadians from eastern Europe.

Some still have tattoos on their arms. Their civil rights were lost and essentially they became slaves. They can talk with real meaning about what it means to lose freedom. They can talk about the sense of intimidation by the simple presence of a secret service agency which has the power to intercept telephone calls, to open mail and to seize legal and medical documents. This is exactly what the Government is appropriating to itself.

After Hon. Members of this Party examined the Bill, we had approximately five or six major goals which we put to the Government. Indeed, had it accepted five of the six, we probably could be supporting part of the Bill. However, it rejected every one of them. With great respect, members of the Cabinet made a decision some years ago that they had to take power into their own hands and concentrate it. They made a decision that they had to knock down the provincial premiers and Parliament because we were standing up and speaking out. A whole series of actions over many years has resulted in the situation where we do not have as much freedom in the country as we once had.

The reason our forefathers came here has been lost. Why did they come? I know that my grandfather at 24 years of age crawled out of a coal mine and came to Canada because he had no chance in a country with an economic, social and political system that was holding him back. Having already spent 10 years in a coal mine he came to Canada. He braved the broad ocean and all the language problems, then found himself standing out on the high plains of western Canada, on 160 acres which were his for ten bucks. If he remained on it for three years and built a home, he could get the pre-emptive quarter. He and his wife, my grandmother, put their hands to the plough, broke that quarter section and turned it into fertile land. They died and they rest there. The next generation stayed on the land and worked hard. My father went into the ground at 35 years of age so that we could have freedom. I have a sense that we are letting those people down. I will vote against this Bill, and I hope other Hon. Members will do likewise.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on Bill C-9. While we are discussing the Bill, the RCMP is quietly, effectively and efficiently carrying on the intelligence work of Canada. They are still doing the work even though they feel hurt because the Government is not recognizing the splendid work they are doing. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) says they are doing fine work, but he wants to kick them out and put in a civilian body. He does not want that civilian body to have any checks, he wants it to do what it likes. He does not want Members of Parliament to check what they are doing to see whether they are doing it effectively or otherwise.

Just a few moments ago the government Members turned down a motion in which the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) was asking that we have the civilian group work effectively, getting full value for the money and within the behaviour laws of the country. The Liberals turned it down.

• (2030)

When the first act of the new Leader of the Liberal Party is to bring in closure and pass a Bill without any of the amendments suggested by the Opposition or the common citizens of this country, it is getting pretty bad. The new Leader expects to become Prime Minister for a short term, and hopes to make it a long term through an election. If he is going to do that type of thing, Heaven help Canada. The people of Canada will not fall for that phoney stuff which some Liberals fell for the other night in the arena. He talked about western Canada. I hope he will help western Canada.

Mr. Fisher: Wait until we get your seat.

Mr. Taylor: Stand up and talk. You only talk from your seat. I guess the only thing good about you is your seat. That is the way they are. They cannot accept criticism. The Hon. Member was clapping his hands the other night when his Leader said: "We are going to win the West." He forgets that he has already doubled freight rates to the farmers. He is already robbing the farmers of their living. They did not kill the Crow. They moved it right into the offices of the CPR. That is what they have done. He is working with the CPR while he is Leader of the Liberal Party. That is the kind of Leader they have. That is the kind of Party it is. No wonder they do not want a review committee made up of Members. They want to hide it.

That is exactly what some of the great dictators of the world did. They got their country to the point where it could do nothing. Their secret service was able to do almost anything; there were no controls. Parliament was lost. Look at the history of the Nazi movement. I am not saying that this group are Nazis, but I ask you to look at the history of the Nazi movement where Hitler gradually got control of a great people. They were not even safe in their homes. The secret service would arrive in the middle of the night, take them away and they were not heard from again. That is banana republic stuff as well. That is what happened in Venezuela. We do not want that to happen in Canada. We do not want to see the beginnings, from where it might happen. We want this nipped in the bud. This is the place to do it.

This Bill gives too much power to a civilian organization which is not responsible to Parliament. The Government says it is responsible and then puts in a number of items that make it irresponsible, permitting it to do almost anything it wants. It can open my mail and yours, check into your bank account, check your income tax or check your medical records. What is it they cannot do? What kind of a country are we getting anyway?

I stood beside the graves of some of my friends who were killed in war. I wept because they thought they were fighting for a country where we would never see this type of thing happen. Now they are lying in graveyards in England and in France. It makes your blood boil when you think of the sacrifice of some of the finest young men in our country. They gave their lives so that we could have freedom. Then we have this kind of law brought into the Parliament of Canada. The Government should be ashamed. The Bill sould be withdrawn and the Government should start over.

We have an intelligence service which is operating well. Even the Solicitor General says that. It is morally strong. It does not have the powers being given to this civilian body. It is doing a good job. Most people in Canada want it to continue.

This Government will not reflect the thinking of the people. It wants to tell them what is good for them. Some of them have a closure idea. Maybe it was their Leader. I do not know. They are not following democratic principles. They should reflect the thinking of the people of Canada. The fact that 71 per cent of Canadians do not want this civilian intelligence service is reason enough to throw it out.

I wonder about the wives of some of the soldiers who gave their lives to make this a free country where Parliament could reflect the thinking of the people. That is why they died. I wonder what their mothers are thinking tonight. They let their sons go to war to keep this country free. What will they think when they see this legislation which words can hardly describe?

We have an RCMP force which is doing the job quietly and effectively. It is trying to do away with this type of thing. We do not need this kind of a new body. If we are going to have it, let us have enough control so that it will not become another Gestapo, another KGB. If the powers are left as they are proposed, there is a good risk of that occurring. This is a good country. Our people are too fine to have this type of thing forced upon them. This Government should realize, new Leader or old Leader—it is the same old gang—that it had better change its ways because Canadians are fed up to the teeth with this type of legislation.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) has already spoken on this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the Solicitor General rising on a point of order?

Mr. Kaplan: To close the debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Solicitor General does not have the right to speak again, I am afraid. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is on Motion No. 116 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Pursuant to Standing Order 79(11) the proposed motion stands deferred. Automatically with that Motions Nos. 118, 119, 120, 121, 122 and 123 are also deferred.

The next group of motions includes Nos. 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 156, 157, 158, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173 and 174.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The debate is on the grouping of motions and the vote will be on Motion No. 124. For debate, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments which remain on this black day for freedom and democracy in this country I would like to make a few remarks with respect to this legislation and with respect to the very serious and indeed fatal flaws which are contained within the proposed legislation.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is not entitled to address the whole Bill. The debate is on the motions you have just called.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The debate is on the grouping of motions I just called, which includes Motions Nos. 124 through to 174.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, there are some 40 clauses covered by these motions to delete clauses and it is those clauses to which I am addressing my remarks.

Without any doubt whatsoever, this Bill constitutes a massive assault on the most fundamental and basic civil liberties and rights to privacy of Canadians. The motions in question would delete a number of the most reprehensible provisions of this Bill. In the few minutes available to me, I would like to explain the purpose of these motions.

First, as the Bill now stands, the new civilian security service would have the power to massively invade the privacy of Canadians. It would have the unprecedented power to open first-class mail, to access confidential medical records and to examine confidential psychiatric records and journalists' records. Once again, I say that it is a disgrace and a shame that the press gallery is empty for this debate on one of the most important pieces of legislation in the country. Ironically, it may be the press that will become the victim of this new secret security service.

The service will have the power to break and enter anyone's home, to remove any document or indeed any thing from that home. In short, the powers that are proposed under the privisions of this Bill go far beyond those which were recommended by the McDonald Commission and have been attacked by virtually every witness that appeared before the Justice Committee. These witnesses included representatives from the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Association of University Teachers, the Canadian Jewish Congress—I could go on and on. Yet the Government shamefully ignores the will of the people of the country and proposes to plough ahead with a piece of legislation which flies in the face of all of the traditions in this country of civil liberties and protection of fundamental rights and freedoms. Any member of that Government who can stand up and support this Bill should hang his head in shame, because he is prepared to be a party to this attack on the civil liberties and the rights to privacy of Canadians.

The Bill constitutes nothing less than a denial of the rule of law in the country. There are those who ask if this is not at least a step forward because they say the status quo is not adequate. To them I say no, a thousand times no. While the status quo is flawed, this Bill with its sweeping mandate to target Canadians who have broken no laws whatsoever, this Bill with its wide and unprecedented powers to invade the privacy of Canadians, this Bill which denies Parliament a fundamental role to play in the oversight of the operations of the security service in the country, is a Bill which must be rejected by this Parliament if we are to preserve democracy in the country.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you that I look forward to a full and productive evening. However, I want to draw to your attention Standing Order 15(2) which states:

When the Speaker is putting a question, no Member shall enter, walk out of or across the House, or make any noise or disturbance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Let us not talk about the noise or disturbance, but I believe I saw a certain government Member walk in and out of the House. I do not think that vote should be counted with respect to this matter. It was improper and should not be allowed.

Mr. Speaker: I am informed that the vote of the Hon. Member was not counted. The Chair just wishes that it could enforce all aspects of the rule cited by the Hon. Member.

The next question is on Motion No. 2. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Orlikow, moves:

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 2.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Security Intelligence Service

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to have the results of the last vote apply to all other amendments except 61, 96, 153 and 160.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The proposal of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard)—

Mr. Deans: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not understand what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) said.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised. I am proposing that the same recorded division apply to all other amendments except Motions Nos. 61, 96, 153 and 160.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not acceptable. However, I would suggest that there might be a disposition of the House to apply the vote that was just recorded for Motion No. 9 to Motions Nos. 10, 12, 14 and 17.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement of the House that the vote which was applied to Motion No. 9 apply to Motions Nos. 10, 12, 14 and 17?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we want to make it clear that we are prepared to accede to any request that a negative vote apply to all amendments except 61, 96, 153 and 160, which are Government motions on which we want separate votes. We therefore suggested applying the same vote to all other motions by Opposition Members. This was turned down!

My hon. friend is moving a motion that applies only to two or three other amendments. Of course we agree, but it is not much of a proposal. It is a very modest one. However, I want to give him the assurance that, if he has any similar requests later on, we are prepared to keep the number of votes to a minimum, because we feel this is a lot of childish manœuvring by the New Democratic Party, which is making a laughing stock of our Parliamentary institutions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement that the vote which applied to Motion No. 9 apply to Motion No. 10?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 10.

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 3.

Mr. Speaker: I declare Motion No. 17 defeated.

The votes which have carried will dispose of Motions Nos. 16, 20, 25, 26, 28 and 35.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of clarification, I want to be sure that, in indicating that they be applied to the motions which I indicated, they be recorded as if the vote had been taken.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair very carefully called it so that the vote would be recorded, and declared the motion defeated in each case. The Chair has also—

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, since I came in at this point, prior to the decision of the Chair, I would like to know whether or not my name can be included?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: It was agreed that the votes as agreed to will stand. The Chair is repeating again, for the benefit of Hon. Members, that Motions Nos. 16, 20, 25, 26, 28 and 35 have been disposed of as a consequence of the votes which have been taken and recorded.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

Motion No. 16.

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 5.

● (2230)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, it appears that the New Democratic Party is now abstaining on motions against the Government. I take it that this is an indication that it now is apparently supporting the Government with respect to its legislation, since it has refused to take a stand.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the Hon. Member is making a point of order. Does the Hon. Member have a proposal with respect to the votes?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Well, I was wondering whether, in view of that circumstances, we might take a ten-minute break at this point in time, with unanimous consent, of course, in order to find out where the New Democratic Party stands on this Bill, or whether those Hon. Members are just fooling around and playing games.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for a ten-minute break?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan).

Mr. Nowlan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, but a different tack.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I think the House should consider seriously the proposal laid before the House—and ignored by the New Democratic Party—by the Government House Leader, whom I have personally always admired, but with whom I have often disagreed. But in terms of this present charade and circus, he had a proposal which would expedite proceedings and let this Chamber retain a little respect because, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, we need more than a new Liberal Leader to make sure the reforms of this House make some sense. This is absolutely stupid.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair calls to the attention of Hon. Members that there has to be unanimous consent for proposals to be adopted.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that you are not ringing the bells with the unanimous consent of the House. I would therefore request that you ring the bells.

Some Hon. Members: No bells!

Mr. Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 19. The Chair has had a number of appeals of order, which I hope are well founded. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, since there seems to be no disposition to alter the form of our vote at this particular time, may I seek unanimous consent of the House to relieve the staff of the cafeteria from duty so that they may go home and get some sleep, if the rest of us cannot?

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member's motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

The next question is on Motion No. 19.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I am putting the Hon. Member's motion. Does he have a problem?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, if the Conservative Party wants to co-operate with the Liberals in smashing civil liberties in this country—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Fulton, moves—shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

● (2240)

Mr. Speaker: The next vote is on Motion No. 19. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Fulton, moves:

That Bill C-9 be amended in Clause 6

(a) by striking out lines 34 to 36 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"to the service, and shall issue such written directions on general operational policies of the service including without limiting the generality of the foregoing subsection

(a) policies with respect to the use of undercover operatives by the service;

(b) policies with respect to the use of physical surveillance by the service;

(c) policies with respect to training of employees;

(d) policies establishing minimization procedures for warrants issued under this Act, and a copy of any such direction shall forthwith after it has been issued be given to the Review Committee.

(b) by adding immediately after line 40 at page 4, the following:

"(4) The director shall keep the minister fully and currently informed of all operations of the service."

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, perhaps you might seek unanimous consent to have the vote recorded for Motion No. 19 as applying to Motions No. 22, 30, 33 and 36.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement that the vote on Motion No. 19 apply to Motion No. 22?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand the proposal. I have a sheet of paper here from the—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair, I think, understands the proposal. Is there agreement that the vote applying to Motion No. 19 also applies to Motion No. 22?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered. I declare Motion No. 22 defeated.

Is there agreement that the vote on Motion No. 19 also applies to Motion No. 30?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the proposal presented to us by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) involved Motions Nos. 22, 23 and 24, not Motions Nos. 30, 33 and 36. It is either that, or he has given me information which is not on the proposal put forward—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair understands that we all have a little difficulty at this hour, and I am sure the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) does, too. The Chair is going stage by stage. Can the vote applying to Motion No. 19 also apply to Motion No. 30? Is there unanimous agreement?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I simply think that we should adjourn this House for ten minutes so I can consult with my colleague and find out exactly what he has in mind. It is not in accordance with the proposal he gave to me on paper. We may be able to resolve it faster.

• (2250)

Mr. Speaker: Obviously the Chair is not a party to private discussions that have taken place. The Chair distinctly heard a proposal for the vote which applied to Motion No. 19 also apply to Motions Nos. 22, 30, 33 and 36. The Chair is testing to see if there is unanimous consent of the House that these votes be so reported.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not.

Mr. Deans: I am sorry if I confused my colleague. I did not intend to.

An Hon. Member: That is easy to do.

Mr. Deans: No, it is not easy to do. It just happened. It may well be that the paper is different. The paper was a photocopy of what I was working from. It was my intention earlier to have the vote as recorded for Motion No. 24 apply to Motion No. 30. I recognized that the same vote that applied to Motion No. 19 could equally apply to Motion No. 30, so I included it in the numbers, that was all. However, if you will apply it to Motion No. 22, I will communicate with my colleague and we will straighten it out. Just apply it to Motion No. 22 and we will go on to Motion No. 23.

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement that the vote which applied to Motion No. 19 also apply to Motion No. 22?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous agreement I declare that the vote which applied to Motion No. 19 also applies to Motion No. 22. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Fulton, moves:

Motion No. 22.

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 8.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, while I know that the able staff are doing a superb job under the circumstances, I distinctly heard the Clerk call out Mr. De Bané who is obviously not here. I think the Clerk made a mistake.

Mr. Speaker: By agreement, the vote of Mr. De Bané will be stricken from the record.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I know it was probably an oversight, but I noticed that the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) clearly arrived after the vote had started and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) had cast his vote. The Hon. Member for Welland did enter the House then, and I am sure you would not want to record his vote.

Mr. Parent: He is right.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would like to seek unanimous consent to have the vote as recorded for Motion No. 34 apply to Motion No. 36.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on his predictable response.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that request is no.

Mr. Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 36. Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Fulton, moves:

Motion No. 36.

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 15.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion defeated.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I hope you did not record the votes of the Members for Yukon, Calgary Centre, Vancouver Centre and Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Nielsen, Mr. Andre, Miss Carney and Mr. Dick). The first three left the House during the division and the last Hon. Member was not in his seat.

[English]

May I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, Citation 223(2) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which reads as follows:

A Member must be in his own seat should he wish to vote and should remain in his seat until the division is complete and the result announced.

That rule was applied very strictly to me on the first vote. I would hope that it would be applied to Members on the other side. I would like to make sure that the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Neilsen), the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) and the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) will not be counted in this vote.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I must confess to a weakness which overwhelmed me after the Opposition had voted. I could not wait after the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) rose, so, indeed, I was not present for the entire count.

Mr. Speaker: For the information of the Hon. Members who have been named, the practice is to invite them to make a statement. Members are taken at their word.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I support the position of the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Neilsen).

Mr. Andre: Me, too.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I remained in the Chamber for the entire vote, but did move forward one seat to discuss a matter with my House Leader about the ridiculous procedures that the NDP has forced us into tonight. It is a desecration of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I have noticed a number of other Members moving and, as far as I am concerned, it is a disgrace to Parliament which has only been brought since Mr. Deans came here. It never happened in the 12 years before that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Peterborough on a point of order. The Chair will then recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that while we are straightening things out and clearing difficulties up, you will want to be made aware of the fact that the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) entered the House after the first vote has been cast by the New Democratic Party in the last vote.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, I was just at the last seat when the division started and I went behind the curtains.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr) by his own admission was not in his seat and his vote will not be counted.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is twofold. First, the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) referred to me by name which you will know is out of order according to the Standing Orders. The second point that I would like to make, over the noise of the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), is that while it might be claimed that the voting procedures in the House of Commons came about after I arrived, I think perhaps those procedures predated my arrival.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is perfectly right; the practice is not to refer to Hon. Members by their names, but by their constituencies. With these modifications to the vote, the Clerk will now announce the results.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is trying to establish a count and is having enough difficulty. Will the Hon. Member please resume his seat for the moment?

I declare the motion defeated.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West on a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I heard the House Leader for the Government read out the regulations. It seemed to me that until the vote was announced anyone who left their chair could not be counted. I see many Hon. Members behind the curtain. Were their votes counted?
