Instead of attempting to establish an insurance policy to protect against increasing interest rates, I suggest that the Government should withdraw the Bill and introduce measures to assure long-term, fixed and affordable interest rates that would encourage people to buy homes.

For example, I lived in New Zealand for a number of years. That country was in the process of trying to increase the amount of available housing. Therefore, that government only charged 1.5 per cent interest as a service charge to those who wanted to build or buy a home. These funds kept revolving so that when someone paid off their home, the funds were made available to someone else. This process went on for many years and the money was used repeatedly to help people build homes. In approximately 15 years, the amount of available housing increased by 20 per cent. That is the sort of approach that the Government should take.

Once the requirement for homes is established and people are able to buy them, the economy is affected in many ways. When a home is constructed, it is not only those in the construction industry who are involved but those who work in the factories that manufacture furniture, appliances and other fixtures for the home. This contributes to the economy which, in turn, improves the situation in the country and allows more people to buy homes.

It is only logical to create an economy that easily and quickly satisfies the needs of the people. Instead, the Government's policies have been designed to meet the needs for profit by the banks and other financial institutions. They do not meet the needs of the people who need shelter or those who pay up to 40 per cent of their income for that shelter. This Bill will not solve any of the problems of those who require housing. It does not even solve the problems of those who may be able to buy a home. Those who are paying $250 a month rent and want to buy a home might not do so if they believe that interest rates will increase by 3.5 per cent in the near future. This is true even if they have a reasonable initial interest rate. Of course, that is not possible right now.

What is the basic purpose of this Bill? While it is supposed to enhance the possibility of owning a home, it does everything but that. If an individual who earns $1,000 or $1,500 a month is paying $500 a month for a home, receiving assistance only after interest rates increase by 3.5 per cent is not enough to be encouraged to buy a home. Furthermore, since interest rates are already high, any increase in interest rates may eliminate the possibility of buying a home. Even a 3.5 per cent increase may not be affordable to some home owners. There are many people who earn $1,200 or $1,500 a month and are paying $600 on their mortgage. They cannot afford an increase of $50, and 3.5 per cent is much more than they can afford. In fact, I suspect there are many people who cannot even afford an increase of 1.5 per cent which is required for them to take advantage of this insurance plan.

One of the purposes of this Bill is to guarantee against increases in interest rates. This Bill does not do so because it provides for a basic 3.5 per cent increase before the plan takes effect. Our old laws used to allow a mortgage to be paid off after five years, with a three-month penalty period. This possibility is removed as a result of this Bill. Home owners who have owned their homes for more than five years will not have the possibility to save enough money to pay off their mortgage without a large penalty.

On many occasions in the House, Members from the NDP and the Official Opposition have told the Minister responsible for housing and the Minister of Finance (Mr. La!onde) about people who are trying to pay off mortgages that have gone out of sight as a result of high interest rates. When they have attempted to do so, they have been charged up to $8,000 in penalties, notwithstanding the three-month interest rate penalty. We have raised questions about those situations that have made it impossible for people to pay off their mortgages and avoid the 19 per cent and 20 per cent interest rates which some people faced. In fact, there are still some people in my constituency who are attempting to get rid of 19 per cent mortgages.

Rather than increase security for some people, this Bill removes some of the security of those who had an opportunity to get out of large mortgage payments from the past. This Bill is likely to decrease the amount of affordable housing for Canadians. It is estimated that we currently need approximately one million homes in Canada. If the Government were to establish a logical interest rate structure, without worrying about how much the banks and other financial institutions will make, it could instruct the banks to allot 10 per cent of loans for housing mortgages and they will receive 7 per cent of that. This was done for a number of years. We did that for a good number of years. If we did it again, the number of houses that would be built would be increased very quickly because people would begin to build their own homes or pay the construction industry to build their homes for them.

It is very sad that the financial structure of the country has become more important to this Government than the need for good, affordable housing. It is sad that banks and mortgage companies are more important to the Government than the need for good, affordable housing. Housing is a necessity. I am not even sure that banks are necessary.

When the Social Credit Party first came to power in Alberta, it was probably the first group of socially-minded people to tangle with the banks of Canada. At that time, members of that Government tried to put in place a system which would make use of the productivity and resources of Alberta and its people. They said that they did not need the banks and did not have to give 10 per cent or 20 per cent of their productivity away. They felt they could circulate the money with their own province and establish a financial structure which would be of benefit to Albertans rather than to large banks and financial corporations. The Aberhart Government passed what it thought was the required legislation which was then struck down by the Supreme Court of Canada. The Supreme Court would not allow the Aberhart Government to put in place a structure which would allow Albertans to use their own resources and their own productivity in the way they wanted.

Almost the same kind of thing is happening now. People who want to build a house and live in it cannot do so because the Government feels that we must not interfere with the ability of a bank to make money. There are many people in this country who are quite willing to begin to build houses and, with a little bit of help from the Government, they would do so. I am speaking of course of the large number of people who would like to start co-operative housing projects.

As well, there are a number of people in the country who are making war on that possibility. Builders' associations and other financially-based institutions have very strong lobbies that come to see Members of Parliament here in Ottawa to tell us that co-op housing should not be subsidized by the Government. Unfortunately, the Government is listening to that lobby and not to the millions who want affordable housing. The Government is listening to the banks and the mortgage companies, the companies that will make money on the buying and selling of houses. Consequently, the Government is not ready to allow co-operative housing projects to go ahead.

Co-operative housing has proven its effectiveness by supplying the community-based and socially integrated housing that is necessary for the people who find it difficult to get together enough money to build a house. It has proved effective for those who do not want to spend $80,000 on a house just to spend another $160,000 on interest in the next 15 years. Rather, they would like to make a commitment to pay for that house. Under the circumstances which have been put in place by the Government and which the Government is keeping in place, those people will pay $80,000 for a house and over the next 15 years will pay another $160,000. They will pay for that house three times. The builder of the house will only receive $80,000 but the person who has bought the house will pay for it three times. The Government is going along with that idea.

Housing is a necessity and a right, and it is something that we in this Parliament should stand up for as best we can and for as long as we can. Instead, we are discussing a Bill that does none of the things that are needed to increase available housing. It does none of the things that are needed to make it possible for those with lower incomes to buy houses. A few years ago, the Government, the Official Opposition and our Party made a commitment to the people of Canada that we would make affordable housing a major part of our platform and we have ceased to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. Are there any questions?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, there are two matters that came to my mind as I listened to my colleague explain his views on the Bill and the problems with housing. If I could, I would like to have him elaborate a little bit on both of those matters. I will put them to him one at a time so that I do not confuse anyone who may want to read his response in Hansard or, for that matter, anyone who may want to listen to his response today.

My colleague made mention of the fact that there was a desperate need to encourage the further utilization of co-operative housing as a way of improving the housing stock for Canadians who are of average income and find it most difficult to enter into the housing market as it now exists. I wonder if my colleague is aware of what now appears to be the fact that the Government of the day has reduced its emphasis on co-operative housing and that it now seems to be reducing the amount of money available to co-operative housing? From his own vast experience both here in Canada and abroad, I wonder if my colleague would be able to enlighten us as to how he feels co-operative housing could better serve the needs of that segment of the population that is now unable to qualify in the private housing market as a result of the high interest rates that have been charged?

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, not very long ago, I asked a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in the absence of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc). I asked him to explain why the Government had cut back on its allocations to co-operative housing and why it was not giving the people responsible for co-operative housing across the country the money required to keep on building co-operative housing projects. The Prime Minister was unable to answer my question, but he made the commitment to me that he would have the Minister of Public Works, who is the Minister responsible for housing, send me the answer to that question. The Minister of Public Works has still failed to do so.

I can talk about co-operative housing as being a solution to the problem with which we are faced. There are 500,000 people in Canada who are paying more than 30 per cent of their incomes for housing. These are the people who, because so much of their income is committed to housing, would very quickly join a co-operative if they could be sure that instead of the monthly payments of $400 or so that they had already committed to a project, they would not have to pay $700 a month next year. Many Hon. Members who have been approached by their constituents during the last few years will know that some of those constituents started out with—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. It being six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

Mr. Speaker: Before calling the order for the day, the Chair notes that there are two orders on the Order Paper and would be prepared to hear argument before making a decision.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, since we seem to go through this situation periodically, and having reviewed some of the precedents, I am prepared to argue this matter and to assure you that it has always been my intention as House Leader of this Party to ensure that the NDP is given adequate opportunity—in fact, we have bent over backwards—to have more than its share of allotted days. It must have something to do with their philosophy, which goes something like this: What is mine is mine and what is yours is mine.

However, the tradition that has been established is that we possibly get some indication of Your Honour's preliminary inclination, rather than have what happened the last time. I have a presentation I would like to make which I believe substantiates very much our entitlement to proceed today on the Opposition motion filed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty).

Mr. Speaker: If that is the wish of the House, the Chair is quite prepared to make some observations of a preliminary nature.

It appears that there are three supply periods which provide for 25 allotted days, six of which can end in a vote of non-confidence in the Government. In the current parliamentary calendar, the Progressive Conservative Party has used 18 allotted days, five of which have ended in a vote. The NDP have used five designated days, none of which has ended in a vote.

The preliminary inclination of the Chair would be to choose the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), but the Chair is prepared to hear argument.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I will address myself to this matter. We have a situation where you will be required, pursuant to Standing Order 62(4)(c), to select the motion to be debated by the House today. The last time the Chair was obliged to make such a decision was on November 22, 1983. Before you make your final ruling on the motions that are before us today, it might be useful if I review a couple of the issues that were raised at that time.

One point of view that was expressed last November was that the Chair pay some attention to the time in which the motions were filed with the Table in order to determine the order of precedence. The Acting Speaker, at page 29061, ruled that the time of filing was not the major factor in determining which motion should be put to the House. Indeed, the House Leader of the NDP argued that the time of filing should not be considered at all. His remark to that effect will be found at page 29060 of Hansard for that day.

Another interesting point that was made that day was that the NDP felt that the distribution of Opposition Days should be calculated on the basis of the calendar year. While both Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and the NDP are of the view that equity demands that Opposition Days be distributed on the basis of Party representation in the House, the Official Opposition was and is of the view that this distribution of days should be calculated on the basis of the year of supply.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the first semester of Supply takes place in the period ending June 30 each year. It is in that semester that the Main Estimates for the fiscal year are considered by Parliament. In the subsequent two semesters, Supplementary Estimates are the Business of Supply that is to be considered by this House. Therefore, it is a specious argument to suggest that Opposition Days should be distributed according to calendar years. Such an argument could only be advanced by people who are ignorant of the meaning of Supply.

Nonetheless, it seems that on November 22, 1984, you will recall that members of the NDP were successful in convincing the occupant of the chair—

Mr. Speaker: Excuse me. The Hon. Member said November 22, 1984?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am sorry, I intended to say 1983. Of course, on November 22, 1984, I will be sitting on the opposite side and not over here!

Mr. Deans: Not if the decision is made wisely.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is waiting for an opportunity to demonstrate his intelligence, we may have to wait for a long time.

On November 22, 1983 members of the NDP were successful in convincing the occupant of the chair that the protection of their minority rights demanded that they be given a day in the second semester of Supply in order to ensure that an equitable distribution of Opposition Days be made in the then current calendar year. Having adopted that view and having thus altered the distribution of days in that period, the Chair must now consider the implications of that decision on the distribution of days for this year.

Both Parties on this side of the House are in agreement as to the ratio that should be used in calculating the distribution of Opposition Days. Roughly one-quarter of the members sitting on this side are members of the NDP. Thus, it follows that they should receive one-quarter of the available Opposition Days.

The Standing Orders provide for 25 days to be given over to the business of Supply in each year. Based upon the one-quarter and three-quarter ratio that I have outlined, the NDP is entitled to 6.25 days out of the total days available in each Supply year. As well, in each of the three periods of Supply two motions may be put to the House under the provisions of Standing Order 62(9). Standing Order 62(9) states that these two motions constitute motions of no confidence and provision is made for a vote to take place at the conclusion of debate on such motions.

Using the same ratio that applies to the general distribution of Opposition Days, it follows that the NDP is entitled to 1.5 of the six voting days that occur each year. Because it is impossible to divide these votes in this manner, the distribution of these motions must be worked out on a two-year basis whereby members of the NDP are entitled to put three votable motions before the House over a two-year period.

In order to be able to discuss in a rational manner the problem which confronts you today, Mr. Speaker, I took the time to review the distribution of Opposition Days over the life of this Parliament. I am in a position to provide you with some statistics which may be of use to you in reaching a decision on this matter.

In 1980, the Supply year was disrupted by the fact that Parliament was called into session after the date on which the first semester of Supply would normally commence. For that reason, the Parties agreed that the second semester would be expanded and that all of the Opposition Days that would ordinarily take place during the first semester would instead be allocated to the fall semester.

Even under the terms of this arrangement, only 18 out of the normal 25 days of Supply were allotted in 1980. Of those 18 days, the NDP was given four days, one of which terminated in a vote. That year, members of the NDP did not complain because they did not receive their normal allocation of days. At that time members of the NDP understood that the distribution of days related not to the calendar year but to the Supply year. Not surprisingly, the records indicate that the NDP received an additional two days in the final Supply period of the 1980-81 fiscal year.

In the next Supply year, the NDP received seven Opposition days, two of which terminated in votes. In the 1982-83 Supply year, the NDP received six Opposition days, two of which again terminated in votes. In the 1983-84 Supply year, the NDP received seven Opposition Days and two of those motions came to a vote. Thus, over the past four years of Supply, the NDP have received 26 of the 100 Opposition Days and have had seven of those motions come to a vote. In other words, although members of the NDP constitute only 25 per cent of all Opposition Members, they have received 26 per cent of the Opposition Days and over 29 per cent of the motions filed under Standing Order 62(9).

However, the Chair for some reason determined last November that Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition would not be entitled to receive the day which they asked for at that time on the basis of a calculation of the distribution of Opposition Days. The Chair decided that the NDP argument concerning distribution of Opposition Days by calendar year was valid.

Therefore, we have gone out of our way to ensure that we are meeting our obligations by both standards. Not only did we provide the NDP with more than the number of days which constituted their minimum entitlement in last year of supply, but we have already given five days to the NDP in this calendar year. No matter how they slice it, the NDP has been receiving the days to which they are entitled.

Furthermore, we have been prepared to be even more generous in our distribution of Opposition Days. My predecessor offered the NDP four Opposition Days in a row in the last semester, all of which were refused. Since I have been House Leader I have offered the NDP another Opposition Day in this semester, which was refused. Still they complain that somehow we are being unfair in not allowing them an adequate opportunity with respect to Opposition Days. That is completely contrary to the facts. My Party and I have bent over backwards to offer the NDP ample opportunity to have Opposition Days, more than they are entitled to by the numbers.

Apparently today the NDP will stand before you, Mr. Speaker, and argue that they should be allowed to place their motion before the House. This would be the sixth time in this calendar year that the NDP would have had the opportunity to take over the debate on an Opposition Day. Based upon the NDP calculation with respect to the distribution of Opposition Days, they will have exhausted their full entitlement for the year before June 1. Therefore, if the Chair decides in their favour, it would demonstrate, in my estimation, that a minority of Opposition Members are able to exercise a disproportionate claim to precedence on Opposition Days, in that they want to have all their Opposition Days before June 1 of the calendar year, and on their own argument that they are entitled to only so many in a full calendar year.

The NDP cannot have their cake and eat it too. They should either calculate their entitlement on the basis of calendar years or on the basis of fiscal years. Equity demands that not only the rights of the minority be defended, but that the rights of the majority not be subverted by the actions of a few.

On November 22 of last year, the Acting Speaker ruled that the rights of the minority required protection, and that because the NDP had not been given an Opposition Day in that supply period, he would select their motion for debate. However, today we face an entirely different set of circumstances. As I have pointed out, the NDP won their argument the last time around. The occupant of the Chair agreed to disregard our understanding of the appropriate means of calculating the annual distribution of Opposition Days. Moreover—and this appears to be the critical point in the decision rendered that day—the Acting Speaker was of the opinion that because the NDP had not been given the opportunity to debate a motion of their choosing during a Supply period, he would give them that opportunity.

That is not the case today. The NDP have already received two Opposition Days in the current period. Based on their own calculations, this would exhaust their entitlement for the year if it were given on this day. We would then face the problem of having to decide whether or not the NDP would be entitled to an additional day in order to provide them with some opportunity to hold a debate of their choice in the fall semester. If that request were to be granted by the Speaker, not only would the NDP have been permitted to pre-empt Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition today, but the NDP would be permitted to appropriate an Opposition Day which would legitimately belong to our members.

The NDP may stand in the House and argue that there is some rule of thumb which would lead to their being given three Opposition Days in the spring semester. Presumably this argument is based on the proposition that the Parties are entitled to a proportional distribution of Opposition Days in each Supply period. The flaw in that argument is that based upon the ratio that I have referred to and that we have employed, the NDP would be entitled to precisely 3.25 days in the first semester, 1.25 days in the second semester and 1.75 days in the third semester. It is quite simply impossible to distribute days in that way.

For that reason, the allocation of Opposition Days in any given semester has varied over the life of this Parliament. Thus the average allocation in the first semester has been 2.75 days rather than the 3.25 days dictated by simple mathematics. In the second semester the average has been two days rather than the 1.25 days obtained through the proportional model. In the third semester the New Democratic Party has averaged 2.25 days rather than the 1.75 days which result from proportional distribution. Thus it can be demonstrated that the NDP have always been under-allocated days in the first semester; over-allocated days—50 per cent of the time, at least—in the second semester, and always over-allocated days in the final semester.

With regard to the distribution of voting days, Mr. Speaker, I can only ask how a distribution of three votes over a two-year period can be evenly spread across three semesters of Supply which occur in any given year. Furthermore, if the New Democratic Party chooses to argue that it has not received its entitlement of voting days for this year, I suggest it refer to the Votes and Proceedings for February 14, where it will find that the House divided on a motion by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

If you were to look back over the past four calendar years, Mr. Speaker, you would find an interesting pattern. In 1980 the New Democratic Party had one motion which terminated in a vote. The next year it had two motions. In 1982 it had one motion and in 1983 it had two motions. By extension one can see that 1984 is a year in which the NDP is entitled to only one motion pursuant to Standing Order 62(9), and it already has had one such motion put before the House in this calendar year.

Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party are certainly adept at complaining that no one takes them seriously and that their rights are continually being denied them. The reason for that is that so often their complaints are not founded in reality. What it comes down to today, Mr. Speaker, is that the New Democratic Party is afraid that the Government may decide to call an election prior to the end of the year and that it will, ostensibly, lose out on some fraction of the Opposition Days to which it would normally be entitled this year.

Our Party has not been restricting Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party from the opportunity to be heard in this place. In fact, the New Democratic Party has taken almost 30 per cent of the Opposition Days which have been held to date this year. The New Democratic Party does not want to debate the issue of the Government's mismanagement of Revenue Canada; that is clear. It does not want to allow our Members of Parliament to have a fair share of the Opposition Days. It does not even want to be consistent in its calculation of the way in which days should be allocated. Instead, Mr. Speaker, members of the New Democratic Party are going to stand here and anticipate the future life of this House, this parliamentary session, by attempting to get their Opposition Days in before some projected election call, and they are not even prepared to wait and see whether the final Opposition Day in the current period would be allocated to them. And as you know, Mr. Speaker, there is another Opposition Day which will be held at some time before the end of next month.

The New Democratic Party is also engaging in a more direct form of anticipation, Mr. Speaker. The motion which it proposes to move today condemns the Government for failing to introduce amendments to the Canada Labour Code. Quite apart from the fact that the motion contains the false accusation that the Conservative Party stands in the way of labour reforms, it also neglects to mention the fact that a Bill with respect to that legislation has been introduced before the House, that is, Bill C-34, which does purport to amend the provisions of the Canada Labour Code. The NDP by its motion proposes to anticipate the debate which will take place on this legislation in the coming days. The motion of the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe does not offend the rule of anticipation.

Under Standing Order 62(4)(c), you have the responsibility, Mr. Speaker, of selecting which Opposition Members' motion will be put to the House for debate. I would ask you to call the motion standing in the name of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe. I would ask that you do that, if not for the reasons I have just outlined, then because the Hon. Member had a similar motion standing in his name on the Order Paper which was not selected by the Acting Speaker last November. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the New Democratic Party should not be permitted to hijack an Opposition Day out from under the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe twice in a row.

If equity is to be the determining factor in the selection of today's Opposition Day motion, and if the protection of the rights of individual Members is central to your decision, I believe the motion of my hon. colleague should be the one to be selected for debate today.

• (1125)

Mr. Speaker: Did the Chair understand the Hon. Member to say there had been one motion voted by the NDP this year?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On February 14.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to say I regret very much that you have been put in the position of having to make a choice. I know the Chair does not enjoy having to make decisions such as this and I would have hoped that we could have worked it out in advance by agreement. Unfortunately, that was not the case.

I want to acknowledge at the outset the fine working arrangement that has developed between myself and the House Leader for the Conservative Party. He is, under normal circumstances, a person of impeccable honour and he works diligently at his job. I was therefore surprised to hear his submission. He knows full well, Sir, that in fact, even on the basis of mathematical calculation, what he has submitted is inaccurate. That, I think, is where we begin.

The Conservatives, as the Official Opposition, have consistently operated on the basis of the NDP being one-quarter, 25 per cent, of the Opposition. However, Sir, if you were to make a calculation you would find that there are three Conservatives to every one New Democrat. That would leave any thinking individual with the impression that there should therefore be three Opposition motions assigned to the Official Opposition and one to the NDP. That is all we are asking for. For every three motions that the Official Opposition puts forward, we in this Party, as the minority, should be entitled to one.

Having said that, we also contend that—

Mr. Forrestall: How can you say that without tongue in cheek?

Mr. Deans: I can say it without tongue in cheek because it is factual. We also contend that we are entitled to a votable motion. However the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition puts it, there can be no argument over the statistics. If you do it in this trimester, Mr. Speaker, in 1984 there would be 13 days allotted. Of those, two would be votable days. We contend, on the basis of three to one, that if the Conservatives get ten of those days, which is what they would get if we were given this day, we would be satisfied. Out of 13, the Conservatives get ten and we get three. That is all we are asking for; that is all we expect in the interest of fairness.

You will have noted, I am sure, that the Conservatives have put down for today a votable motion. If we are not allocated this day, that means there is no votable motion available after the vote is taken today at six o'clock. Therefore, it would not be possible, even if we were to be allotted the next allotted day, for us to be given a vote during this trimester. I contend that in fairness, which is all we ask for, we are entitled to one voting day.

I will now go back three trimesters. In the last trimester there were seven days, five taken by the Conservatives. They asked us to take two and we did, but we got no vote. In the previous trimester, the third trimester of last year, there were five allotted days. Four were taken by the Conservatives; one was offered to us, which we accepted, without a vote.

Looking at the third trimester of last year, the first trimester of this year, and this trimester which ends at the end of June, there have been 25 allotted days, or will have been. If you were to decide today that we were entitled to the day, then 19 of them would have been allotted to the Conservative Party and six of them to the NDP. That is as close as a three-to-one ratio could ever be. That is in keeping with the numbers within the House of Commons.

In addition to that, if you were to decide, as you have indicated you might in your preliminary judgment, that we were entitled to this day and that it is a voting day, it will be the first voting day that we have been granted in the last three trimesters. Taking that into account, it would seem that we would be entitled to have this particular—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair must interrupt the Hon. Member because there is a factual argument. Was February 14 a votable motion in the name of the New Democratic Party or not?

Mr. Deans: February 14?

Mr. Speaker: Of this year.

Mr. Deans: I will have it checked.

Mr. Speaker: It appears that it was. If so, the Hon. Member will have to take note of it.

Mr. Deans: I will have it checked. I do not have that in front of me. Be that as it may, it does not alter the argument on balance. I will come back to it. I put to you that even if it turned out that the fourteenth was a voting day, that would give us two voting days in three trimesters. Even at that, the balance would still be tipped very heavily in favour of the Official Opposition and we would not be getting more than we are entitled to.

The House Leader of the Official Opposition raises a number of different points. In the early part of his submission he talked about the time of filing. If the actual time of filing were to be a consideration in determining who should be given the allotted day, it would be possible for any one of the Parties to file everything at the beginning of a session and therefore pre-empt anyone else from getting an opportunity to seek an allotted day. The House Leader of the Official Opposition indicates that he offered us an allotted day. That is true; I accept that. However, I asked for an allotted day with a vote. I suggested that we felt we were entitled to an allotted day with a vote. The dispute arose over whether if we took a day without a vote we would therefore lose the opportunity to have a vote on a motion that we felt was important. You know, Sir, that voting is one of the ways in which Members of Parliament are able to put clearly on the record their support for or opposition to any matter before the House.

The House Leader for the Official Opposition tells you that some time ago we were given an additional allotted day. You may recall, however, that the reason we got the additional day was in order to accommodate the Conservatives who wanted to have a day without a vote on the day prior to their convention. They did not want to have the motion in their name. They asked us if we would take the allotted day in order to free their Members from having to be in attendance in the House of Commons. We, of course, in our normal generous way, accepted our responsibility to accommodate their needs. It is clear that we have not been given, nor have we requested, more than we are entitled to.

In the last session, on November 22, 1983 a question similar to the one now before you was before the Acting Speaker Corbin. The decision was made in favour of the motion which was standing in the name of a New Democratic Party member. The Acting Speaker said:

> Past practice indicates that Parties in opposition to the Government, other than the Official Opposition, have received their share of allotted days in any Supply period.

That is not in a calendar year or since the beginning of time, but "in any Supply period". He went on to say:

> Since this is the fourth day of a five-day period, and taking into account that three of the days have been used by Hon. Members of the Official Opposition, it is my intention to put to the House the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

The situation which pertained then is almost identical to the situation which you are now faced with. The Official Opposition has already had its share of the allotted days in this Supply period. To date there have been 11 allotted days, nine of them taken by the Official Opposition and two of them allocated to the New Democratic Party. If this was the last day, we could reasonably expect to be allocated this day on the basis of their having already used nine of the allotted days in this Supply period. Had the Official Opposition not chosen to put this day down as a votable day, we might have been prepared to attempt to negotiate further for the final Supply day which will presumably come some time before the end of June. Unfortunately, that negotiation process does not seem to be arriving at any satisfactory conclusion.

I ask you simply to reaffirm the preliminary judgment that you made and to agree that in this Supply period the ratio of days between the two Parties, given that there are 13 days, would be more fairly reflected if three were allocated to us and 10 to the Conservatives. That is a reasonable reflection of the numbers in the House of Commons. It is 30 per cent rather than 25 per cent. It is three to one. If that were decided we would find that desirable and acceptable.

I would like to clear up a misunderstanding which I had. You are correct, Mr. Speaker. In fact the motion of February 14 was a votable motion. I therefore do not want to continue with that submission before you. However, I do point out that, taking that votable motion and this votable motion and looking at the three trimesters, or even looking at the single trimester, we would not have had more than our share of votable motions during this period in the history of this particular Parliament.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will very briefly put on the record that we consider, as you surely do, that Standing Order 62(4)(c) must receive its application. It reads:

> When notice has been given of two or more motions by Members in opposition to the government for consideration on an allotted day, the Speaker shall have power to select which of the proposed motions shall have precedence in that sitting.

You have seen fit to hear the House Leader of each Opposition Party; that is in accordance with recent practice. I consider and hope that this is sufficient for you to make a selection now.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair thanks the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) for reminding the Chair of its obligation.

Having taken note that two notices of motions were filed yesterday evening, the Chair had anticipated the discussion which has taken place. There are two distinct issues to be addressed; the first is the distribution of allotted days between the Opposition Parties in any given period; the second issue is the distribution of allotted days ending in a vote of non-confidence in the Government over the three Supply periods of the parliamentary calendar.

On both of these issues, the Chair cannot make a ruling which would apply in all cases. The Chair's selection must be based on the representations of the Parties in the House and also on what has happened, by agreement of the Parties concerned, in the immediate past Supply periods. These conditions can vary from Parliament to Parliament and Hon. Members will remember that it was not so long ago that there were three Parties sitting in opposition in the House.

On November 22, 1983 the Chair exercised, I believe for the first time, its power of selection pursuant to Standing Order 62(4)(c). Faced with two motions on the Order Paper, the Acting Speaker chose an NDP motion because that Party had not yet had an allotted day in the Supply period ending December 10, 1983. There are five days in the said period. The Progressive Conservative Party had already had three of those days and the Chair felt it had a duty to give special attention to the protection of the minority in the House.

Our rules are silent on the second issue, that of non-confidence votes. Although caveats have been entered by Opposition House Leaders in the past claiming that a non-confidence motion is a prerogative of the Official Opposition, the Chair has found no precedent to support this contention and certainly should not, without direction from the House, decide that that is so. The Chair has also ruled that the timing of the filing of the resolution is not really relevant to this decision.

Successive procedure committees, despite the urging of the Chair to clarify the intent of the House, have also been silent on the matter.

Therefore, the Chair will again only exercise its power of selection based on fair play and impartiality.

The three Supply periods provide for 25 allotted days, six of which can end in a vote of non-confidence. In the current parliamentary calendar the Progressive Conservative Party has used 18 allotted days, four of which ended in a vote. The Chair made an error in its preliminary count. The NDP has used five designated days, one of which has ended in a vote. There appears to be agreement on the mathematics.

On that basis, the Chair selects the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). The Chair wishes to renew its appeal to the procedure committee to consider the principles which should underline the organization of the Supply procedures.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—REVENUE CANADA

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe) moved:

That this House regrets the failure of the Government to satisfactorily protect the civil liberties of Canadian taxpayers in their dealings with the Department of National Revenue and calls upon the Government to implement without delay the recommendations of the Progressive Conservative Task Force on Revenue Canada and, in particular, to curtail the Department's powers of search and seizure under Section 231 of the Income Tax Act, to guarantee taxpayers the right to a fair hearing on disputed reassessments before having to make payments or post security, to create a Taxpayers' Bill of Rights, and to provide an adequate system of appeals of unfair decisions concerning collections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I start this morning by expressing my personal thanks to you for the decision which you have just made, which I feel was a very fair and just decision. I am grateful for the discretion you have exercised.

The motion which is being moved today is a motion of non-confidence in the Government because of its handling of the administration of the income tax system. There is probably no issue which has more consumed the interest of Members of Parliament and the public than this issue. Over the course of the past several months since January, my office has received between 800 and 900 letters on this subject. We found ourselves literally incapable of keeping up with the volume of mail and telephone calls coming into the office, even with having hired other part-time staff.

It is apparent to us that there is deep public interest in and concern about the way the income tax system in Canada is being administered. It is clear that it is important that Parliament act now to begin to assure fairness in the administration of the income tax system in Canada.

You will recall that since September there has been a succession of revelations about improper actions on the part of the Department of National Revenue which have cast serious doubts upon the fairness of the system which we have operated.

The Government's response has taken many forms. The first was simple denial that there was a problem in the first place. Second, there was hedging, with the Government qualifying the initial denials. Third, it looked for scapegoats, ultimately firing the deputy minister and transferring him to another responsibility, leaving the impression that somehow he was solely to blame for the problems within the Department. Then we saw the Government acting to defer decisions. It appointed a private consultant in January whose job it was to take the heat off the Government for the duration of the year and prevent decisions from having to be made.

Additionally, the Minister refused to take decisions with regard, for example, to the odious film on auditing which has caused so much controversy. He had passed that element of his responsibility to a high-priced group of public relations people whose job it was to make recommendations on improving the Department's image. There was an attempt to defer decisions being made and to deny the Minister's responsibility to make these decisions.

Finally, in the past month there have been encouraging words from the Department but very little action to deal with these very fundamental problems. Encouraging words are not good enough. What we need at this point, is, first, a candid assurance from the Minister that he acknowledges that there have been serious problems within the Department and that he recognizes that the vast majority of Canadian taxpayers are honest and want to pay their taxes fully and on time. He should understand that they have rights. They are entitled to have those rights respected by his Department. The candid admission that his Department's procedures have often not been consistent with those principles and that taxpayers' rights have often been taken away is an essential first start to correcting these abuses and protecting the rights of taxpayers in the future. Yet that admission has never been made in that clear and simple way.

Second, we need something more than a simple admission. We need an action program. The Government should genuinely recognize that there are problems within the Department and that the rights of taxpayers have been in jeopardy as a result of actions of its officials. As well, it must recognize that their rights have been in jeopardy as a result of the writing of the Income Tax Act which gives the Department powers that surpass the powers of its counterparts in Great Britain or the United States and which often surpass the powers even of the policy, which may in some cases even be unconstitutional.

If the Government genuinely recognizes those facts, surely it is essential that the Government act now to curtail those powers and bring them back into line with basic civil liberties in this country, to ensure that never again will the Department use these excessive powers to take away the basic civil liberties of Canadian taxpayers.

Repeated studies have indicated how serious this problem has been, going back as far as the Rowe report which was commissioned by the Minister's predecessor. It studied the administration of the income tax system, referred to problems within it and talked about the need for the political will to act quickly to address the problems. Yet this report, which was conducted by a former leader of the Liberal Party in Newfoundland, was ignored by the Minister. It was suppressed for over a year. An attempt was made to prevent it from ever seeing the light of day. Instead of acting on the report, the Minister handed it to his officials who prepared a rebuttal in which they dismissed, one after another, each of Mr. Rowe's concerns and recommendations. There probably has never been a neater snow job on a Minister in my time in Parliament than was done in this case. He handed this report to his officials and they convinced him that there was no need for action.

That report was presented to the Minister in December 1982. Nothing was done. Since that time there has been a succession of other reports. Most recently, within the past week, we found a report that was prepared by the Joint Committee of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants which makes, in a very telling way, the argument which I was just placing before the House. We saw in that joint brief that was prepared by the CICA and the Bar Association a statement that recognizes how serious the problems have become. It includes this statement:

> Revenue Canada must have broad enforcement powers. But a balance must be struck between the necessity for effective tax administration and the protection of taxpayers from undue and unreasonable interference. In our view, the Income Tax Act (the 'Act') provides inadequate restraints on Revenue Canada's enforcement powers. The Act should be amended to impose powers. The Act should be amended to impose reasonable limitations on Revenue Canada's enforcement powers and to provide for independent judicial scrutiny of the exercise of those powers in all circumstances.

They refer as well in their report to their experience in dealing with the Department. They say this: "Most Revenue Canada employees are courteous, honest, competent and reasonable." The report continued by indicating: "Nevertheless our experience was that the attitudinal problem we have described is growing throughout all levels of Revenue Canada." That report was presented just last week by some of the most senior tax practitioners in the country.

On behalf of my Party, I endorse strongly the recommendations which have been made by the Joint Committee of the Canadian Bar Association and Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. In virtually every regard they are consistent with recommendations that were made by the Progressive Conservative Task Force on Revenue Canada.

Let us review for a moment the history of Parliament's involvement in this issue. Last fall we raised a series of questions with regard to problems in the administration of the Income Tax Act—the issue of quotas which were initially denied by the Minister but which he subsequently confirmed existed, and the issue of attempts by Revenue Canada to gain direct access to the computerized data banks of the City of Kitchener. This was the second issue which was of major concern and which we referred to the Privacy Commissioner. His report, which was released quite recently, found that Revenue Canada had taken a careless approach in this whole issue and that it had not observed proper regard for the rights of Canadian taxpayers living in the City of Kitchener. He raised serious concerns about the whole issue of privacy.

Hon. Members on this side of the House of Commons, including my Leader and my former Leader, called upon the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) to strike a committee of the House of Commons with a majority of Liberal Members and with a Liberal chairman, whose job it would be, first of all, to give Canadians a chance to be heard or to express their points of view about the administration of the income tax system; and second, to give to the Minister and to the Government a series of recommendations which would improve the administration of that system to make it more efficient, fair, accountable and effective. Yet the Minister refused. Parliament was to be denied the opportunity to have that sort of committee study. He said that it was good enough to parcel out this responsibility, which should be undertaken by elected representatives, to a group of private consultants.

As a result, my Leader announced at the beginning of February the creation of the Progressive Conservative Task Force on Revenue Canada. Five members of our caucus visited 23 communities across the country throughout the month of April. We listened to over 300 oral submissions and received a tremendous volume of written material, both when we were on the tour and after we returned. As a consequence of those hearings, we produced the report of the PC task force on April 8, 1984.

The contrast between the Government's approach to this issue and the approach taken by my Party is striking. First, we felt that it was an issue in which elected representatives should be involved. The Government sought to gag Parliament and to prevent Members of Parliament from hearing about this. The Government felt it was appropriate simply to parcel it out to private consultants. My Party spent its own money to pay for the work of the task force. We brought in a report, which has been virtually universally acclaimed by the press, the public and tax practitioners, on a budget of $100,000, paid for not by taxpayers but by the Progressive Conservative Party. In contrast, the Government's Woods Gordon study, the private consultants' study, was commissioned in January and then will not be making their report until toward the end of this year. The Minister has indicated that the budget for the Woods

Gordon consultants' study will be some 15 times the size of the budget of the Progressive Conservative Task Force on Revenue Canada. That private consultants' study will cost Canadian taxpayers $1.5 million.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Beatty: Yet we still do not see action being taken. The Woods Gordon study is being used as an excuse not to take action rather than being used, as the PC task force report can be used, as a blueprint for action to be taken now to redress the situation.

On May 2 the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) and I met with the Minister of National Revenue in his office. When we left that meeting, we indicated to the press what our honest impressions were. We were pleased with the reception with which our report was met by the Minister. He indicated a genuine concern about the activities of his Department and a genuine interest in making reforms. We were pleased with that. I indicated as well that I had repeated to him an offer which had been made by my Leader publicly, namely, that if the Minister or the Government were prepared to act on the recommendations of the task force, we would pledge in advance our full co-operation in implementing these reforms as quickly as possible, that there would be no delay coming from this side of the House. I stressed at that time the importance that we act, not leave it until after the next election. Time is running out.

At the same time I indicated to the Minister that positive words were not enough, that if the Minister and the Government were not prepared to act, we would take our case to the Canadian people. Indeed, that is precisely what we intend to do. There has not been action taken since that time. What have we seen? We have seen, finally, the report of their Task Force on Public Relations but no action. I might add that the findings of the Task Force on Public Relations tended to substantiate the case which has been made by our Party throughout and the recommendations of our task force. However, public relations improvements are not good enough. We need amendments to the Act. What we need is changes in procedure which will ensure that the rights of Canadian taxpayers are no longer abused.

Some of the key recommendations which we made were for a Taxpayers' Bill of Rights. There need be no delay on that. There is no reason for delay on a Bill of Rights, a plain language statement from the Minister himself outlining the rights of taxpayers in Canada and the sort of treatment they have the right to expect at the hands of departmental employees. The statement could be distributed to every taxpayer in Canada and to every departmental employee. When taxpayers feel that their rights are being abridged, such as their right to privacy, to fair treatment, to be presumed innocent until proven guilty and to full information when requested, these are basic rights which all Canadians should have. There is no reason a Taxpayer's Bill of Rights could not have been sent out before now. Yet no action has been taken. The purpose of the Taxpayers' Bill of Rights is to have in the hands of taxpayers a statement from the Minister so that when they feel their rights are being taken away by an official, they will be able to say: "The Minister is on my side and he says that you cannot do this to me; I have rights too".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Also we pointed out the serious problems under Section 231 of the Income Tax Act which gives sweeping, draconian powers of search and seizure to the Department. Again we find that the recommendations of the Joint Committee on Taxation of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants argue for a redrafting of Section 231. For example, the Committee pointed out that, in its opinion, there were even some doubts as to the constitutionality of some of the provisions in Section 231 and recommended that those provisions be narrowed. Surely, when the constitutionality of those provisions is in doubt, and when a group as distinguished as this one says that it is essential to protect the rights of Canadians and that amendments be put before the House quickly, that should be done.

There is no excuse for not acting. There is no excuse for deferring action to protect the rights of Canadian taxpayers. There is no excuse for not presenting to Parliament now, before an election, legislation which would protect those rights and would limit the powers of the Department to those powers which are essential for enforcement but are consistent with basic civil liberties in the country.

There is something grievously wrong in our system of tax administration when a person accused of a serious crime, such as robbing a bank or committing assault, has greater legal protection than a Canadian taxpayer who is under audit. There is something seriously out of alignment. Also there is something seriously wrong when we have a presumption of innocence until proven guilty in the case of people accused of criminal offences. Yet we say to taxpayers that if they are reassessed by the Department of National Revenue, they are immediately liable for payment of any money for which they are reassessed before they have had the chance of a fair hearing. Surely it is reasonable for all Hon. Members of the House to accept the position taken by Hon. Members on this side and by the joint committee as well—a position which, incidentally, is written into the law in the United States—that taxpayers are entitled to a fair hearing before they can be forced to pay money.

The Minister will likely point to the provisions of the February 15 Budget and say that it is adequate that now all the Department will do, instead of forcing collection, will be to tie up an individual's capital by requiring bank guarantees for the duration, literally possibly tying up thousands of dollars for years while the matter is adjudicated and preventing, for example, a small business person from having access to that working capital. We say that is wrong. We say the onus should be on the Department to prove its case before it can collect a disputed amount of money. There is no excuse for not acting on that.

Going back to the issue of the Department's powers in gaining access to records, there is something seriously wrong when the Department has the right to come into a business and seize business records which may be essential to the functioning of that business, take them to the departmental office and hold them for 120 days before having to go to court for an extension. It then has a right, which we do not dispute, to go to the court to ask for an extension.

What is extraordinary with the way the Act is written today is that the Department has the right to go in secrecy, without the presence of the taxpayer, to argue that it should be allowed to hold those essential business records. We say, as the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and the Canadian Bar Association said, that these ex parte proceedings must be stopped. We must amend the Act to prevent this sort of abuse taking place in the future.

What conceivable justification can there be for this? Is it a case where the taxpayer could destroy the documents or hide them? Of course not. They are held in the possession of the Department. I ask the Minister, what is the risk to the Department in a taxpayer being able to be in court to argue against the Department having an extension and holding essential business records? Surely under our system of Canadian justice you have a right to be present at proceedings which affect your basic liberties and your right to earn a living. As things stand today in Canada with the present Income Tax Act, you do not have that right.

We argue as well in this motion, as we argued in the task force report, that it is essential that there be a proper appeals procedure on collection. What we have increasingly found over recent years is that the Department says that because a person is liable the money as soon as he is reassessed, it will use its powers as fully as it can. Garnishees are issued to take away people's funds in their bank accounts or their pay cheques before they have had a chance for a fair hearing.

In addition, we found that the Department has often refused to use a discretion open to it to arrange reasonable collection procedures where a taxpayer is reassessed and it is clear there is no fraud, where the Department does not dispute that, where it recognizes that an error may have been made or there is a difference in interpretation of the law, with no intent on the part of the taxpayer to commit fraud. Taxpayers often ask to be given an extended payment term and be allowed to make the payment of every penny that is owed, with interest, over a period of time. We increasingly find that the Department has refused to do that. We have argued for an appellate procedure which would allow taxpayers to appeal unreasonable decisions.

I see that my 20 minutes is expiring. There are many other issues I would have liked to raise today, but in conclusion I want to express this message on behalf of my colleagues and repeat the offer that was made. There is no reason for not acting to guarantee taxpayers' rights now before an election. If the Minister and his colleagues bring forward legislation consistent with the report, we will co-operate fully. However, I serve notice on him publicly today that if the Government continues to refuse to act, this issue will be taken to the Canadian people in an election campaign. The recommendations of the task force will be a high priority for a Progressive Conservative Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The speech of the Hon. Member being concluded, there is a ten-minute period for questions. Are there any questions?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). Actually, what the Hon. Member said was not particularly new to me, because besides examining the report prepared by the committee chaired by the Hon. Member on behalf of his Party's Caucus, I also had a long meeting with the Hon. Member and members of his task force during which we thoroughly explored a number of subjects he has raised today and which are the subject of recommendations made by his taks force.

I do have some trouble accepting "certain charges", if I may use the expression, which were made by the Hon. Member. However, I hasten to say that I fully agree with the principles underlying the task force's recommendations. They are the same principles that form the basis for my Department's policy in administering the Income Tax Act.

Before speaking to the subject of the motion before the House today, I note, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member remarked that although it was time to act, no measures had been taken. I am sorry but I must object to this remark. A number of measures have been taken, and I am sure that the Hon. Member and many of his colleagues will acknowledge they have heard as much from their constituents, or have seen for themselves the results of such measures. These measures have taken the form of guidelines or basic principles to be adhered to in administering the Department, principles which I put down in writing when my deputy minister took up his duties at the Department of National Revenue. I believe these principles provide a very clear concept of the kind of action that should be taken in administering the Income Tax Act and that they cover much of the ground that was covered by the recommendations of the task force chaired by the Hon. Member.

A third preliminary remark is appropriate, Mr. Speaker. We must make a distinction, and this is particularly relevant considering what the Hon. Member said in his conclusions, between the responsibilities of the Minister of National Revenue and those of other ministers. I think that the Hon. Member, in formulating his motion, wished to indicate that distinction by going beyond the responsibilities of the Minister of National Revenue. For instance, when he refers to the changes to be made in certain provisions of the Income Tax Act and when these provisions are as general as Section 231, the Minister of National Revenue is not the only one involved. The proposals must be made in the House by the Minister of Justice. Furthermore, all other provisions of the Income Tax Act are, in the final instance, the responsibility of the Minister of Finance.

The Hon. Member has, and I am very pleased with his spirit of co-operation, clearly indicated, on behalf of his caucus, that if the Government makes proposals regarding changes it acknowledges are entirely justified, he is prepared, with the co-operation of his Party's caucus, to expedite passage of such proposals in the House. I admit I am very pleased with this co-operative attitude, and I have said as much to my colleagues who are responsible for the various departments concerned. I think it is time to complete our review of the various recommendations on changes in legislation and to do so as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the motion speaks generally about protecting the rights of taxpayers.

In his speech, the Hon. Member clearly expressed his conviction that from the way the Income Tax Act is administered, Canadian taxpayers, and he was speaking generally, feel that their basic rights are threatened. I would respond, Mr. Speaker, to this general accusation with an equally general argument. In our country's Constitution, this Government has laid down the basic rights of all Canadians. Anyone may, for any reason, avail himself of these provisions which have been enshrined in our Constitution, in the Constitution of this country, in order to obtain legal remedy if his basic rights have been infringed by any level of government.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the very nature of our tax system recognizes the basic freedom of the individual with the immediate corollary of freedom which is responsibility. What is the nature of our tax system? It is a soft-assessment system. The Canadian taxpayer is responsible for declaring all his income. The law says clearly: "all his income". Second: he must establish the amount of tax due. And finally, he is responsible for paying his taxes as assessed. For the vast majority of taxpayers, this exercise has been simplified because we have a system by which employees have their taxes deducted regularly at source, either weekly, every two weeks or monthly, depending on how they are paid. For these taxpayers, it is relatively easy to comply with the Income Tax Act. I would even say they have practically no choice in the matter, because their employers are given tax deduction tables, the amount of the deduction is calculated, and the annual filing of tax returns is merely an exercise in adjustment, in which the taxpayer reconciles the amount already paid with the various deductions to which he is entitled, or adds any income he may have received in addition to his regular income.

Other taxpayers, and especially those who are self-employed or have a business, pay their taxes according to a different formula and have a much broader range of deductions they can make from their gross income, before establishing the tax payable. Generally, taxes are paid in quarterly instalments. With an adjustment at the end of the year.

Mr. Speaker, our system of self-assessment must be the most tangible sign of recognition of a basic right of the individual, of the freedom of individuals in democratic society. That is how our tax system works. To maintain the integrity and reliability of a self-assessment system, we must ensure it is fair, if we are to maintain public confidence in the system. It is sound, reliable, and reasonable, but the taxpayer must be convinced the system treats all taxpayers equally, that is to say that each taxpayer is responsible for declaring his income and calculating the amount of tax payable and, importantly, for paying his taxes—and that everyone is on the same footing.

Since most taxpayers have their taxes deducted at source, Mr. Speaker, we must have mechanisms to check whether the others do abide by the law, and we must ensure as well that enough of them do so to maintain the system's reputation for fairness, so that all Canadian taxpayers will feel a commitment towards and give their full support to the system.

Mr. Speaker, the system itself fully respects the basic rights of individuals and must be provided with audit mechanisms if we want to maintain its integrity and soundness. Pursuant to specific provisions of the Income Tax Act, the department responsible for the administration of the act is empowered to carry out such audits as may be required to maintain the integrity and the equity of the system.

With respect to the second aspect of my remarks, the Hon. Member has quoted various reports which have been made public and he has indicated that the powers provided under the Income Tax Act are too extensive, and that the very nature of those powers—which is what the Hon. Member is concerned about, I am sure—and the way they are exercised may jeopardize the rights of taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I would rather not refer at length to the very complex rulings of various Canadian courts on the way the Department has used its powers under Income Tax Act Section 231. However, Canadian courts did state on several occasions that such powers were necessary, appropriate and justified in a free and democratic society. I might simply quote just one ruling made recently by an Ontario Supreme Court justice in which he concluded as follows:

[English]

The Court found that there was no improper conduct in the search of the private residence, that the judges had acted within their jurisdiction in making the orders under attack and that the seizures were authorized by the relevant statutory provisions. The Court further found that the Minister's powers of search and seizure and the related procedures were necessary, appropriate and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that was not written by some National Revenue official, but by a court judge in his decision. Of course, being concerned is quite normal, and we should be concerned about the way any enforcing organization is using its powers. We should keep in mind, however, that these powers are provided for in the legislation and that they are perfectly consistent with our fiscal system.

On the other hand, we should examine under what conditions these powers have been used. Hon. members are aware that the powers of search and seizure can be used either under the Minister's authority or a mandate issued by a court of law. In all, in 1984, some 16 million Canadian taxpayers have filed income tax returns. Out of these 16 million Canadian taxpayers, Mr. Speaker, how many would you say have been subjected to search procedures in 1984? Forty two. Not 42,000 or 420, but only 42 have been subjected to search procedures so far in 1984 out of our many million of taxpayers. There have been 143 ministerial seizures.

By quoting these figures and the judge's decision, Mr. Speaker, I wish to lay to rest the concerns some people may have regarding the use of such overwhelming powers. What I am saying is that the powers provided for in the legislation are now used with moderation and to the extent that special circumstances warrant them. I believe that this reflects a healthy administration of the legislation and a sound use of these powers.

Mr. Speaker, because of the very nature of the income tax system, it is an acknowledged fact that we need an audit mechanism to guarantee the fairness of the system and that we also need structures to enforce the Income Tax Act when people are not complying with it. This is not the only aspect of life in our society which is subject to enforcement procedures. We have in our streets people who are responsible for encorcing the law, and I do not think that people are frightened by the presence of policemen in a society. However, it is obvious that if we were to look at everything these policemen could do with the powers they have, we could be frightened. But the important thing is to recognize that, in most cases, their powers are used discerningly and in relation to the problems they must face. We have to view the power given to the Department of National Revenue in exactly the same perspective. Have these powers been used in relation to the circumstances the legislator said would justify them? Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice is now reviewing all these provisions and is making sure that these powers are in agreement with the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms contained in our Constitution and is also checking on cases where they have been used in the past to make sure that they were used properly.

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is running out; I would like to deal with another aspect of the issue, another specific case mentioned by the Hon. Member. It relates to the request for information made to the City of Kitchener by the Department of National Revenue. Mr. Speaker, I have already given my views when I answered questions in the House on the request itself, and I also have had the chance of discussing the matter with the Hon. Member and others. As concerns the lack of available information which seems to be common with a few groups, whether it is a municipal body or any other group, I believe that, except in this particular case, the examples I have given have convinced the Hon. Member, the House in general and all Canadians that it is quite legitimate for the Department, whenever there is a reasonable doubt about non-compliance with the law, to request this information in order to enforce the Income Tax Act and maintain the credibility, the integrity and the equity of the system.

The Hon. Member has directed three questions to the Privacy Commissioner about the specific case of the City of Kitchener. On this matter, the Commissioner did say that the request made by the Department of National Revenue was legitimate. The Commissioner made a legitimate and legal recommendation.

An Hon. Member: Legal?

Mr. Bussières: Read it! I hope you have taken the time to read it! Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should not try to juggle with words. He should read the paper and say exactly what it contains. He suggested something to the Department and made a criticism about a procedure used in connection with classified information. I am happy to indicate to the House that steps have already been taken, and that very soon I will appear before the Treasury Board with a submission along the lines recommended by the Commissioner. But most importantly, when answering the three questions, he recognized that the Department in no way contravened the Act which the Commissioner is duty bound to enforce.

Mr. Speaker, there are many things I would like to add—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I am sorry, but the Hon. Minister's time has expired. We should now proceed to a question period. Any questions?

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, at the end of his remarks the Minister dealt with the issue of the attempt by Revenue Canada to gain access to the computerized data base in the City of Kitchener. That was an attempt which was characterized—and the Minister perhaps overlooked it in his reading of the report—by the Privacy Commissioner as having exhibited carelessness and casualness in terms of the rights of the citizens.

The Minister will also be aware that the Privacy Commissioner made a differentiation between data matching and computer matching. He indicated that he did not believe this case involved computer matching. Will the Minister give the House the assurance that his Department has not to date in any instance engaged in computer matching of information, to use the term which was used by the Privacy commissioner?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, admittedly I had difficulty following the Commissioner's recommendation. This is an aspect now under review, and I understand there were further discussions between the Commissioner and my officials on that particular aspect, in order to identify the issue exactly and come to an understanding as to what the Commissioner meant concerning the Department's operations. Clearly, the Hon. Member is focusing on one aspect of the Commissioner's comments, but what is important is to have a good view of the issue. Taking, the first substantive issue, for instance the Commissioner's answer is clear. He stated:

[English]

The Privacy Commissioner stated:

The information sought by Revenue Canada from the municipal records of the City of Kitchener is relevant to the Department's operating programs of collecting taxes and determining compliance with the Income Tax Act. The collection of such personal information is authorized by Section 4 of the Privacy Act.

He concluded:

What is relevant is that any information obtained relate directly to an operating program of the Department—

In seeking such information from Kitchener, Revenue Canada did not violate the Privacy Act.

[Translation]

And he answers the three questions. Now, as I indicated at the beginning of my answer, when I last discussed this particular aspect with my deputy minister, he told me there would be further discussions between my Department and the Commissioner, in order to come to a clear understanding of the terms used and the substance of the issue.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, you will note that the Minister did not answer the question, which was whether he could give the House the assurance that in the past there has not been computer matching of data as referred to by the Privacy Commissioner. I will not repeat that question, but I would simply draw to the attention of the Minister an article which appeared in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record of last Saturday. In that article an official of his Department indicated that, in fact, such computer matching appears to have taken place in the past. I think the Minister should be aware of that fact.

Second, the Minister should also be aware of the fact that the Privacy Commissioner found that if, in fact, the Department had gained access to the computerized data from the City of Kitchener, the failure to have the information properly catalogued would have been in violation of the Act. I think he overlooked that fact.

I would like to ask the Minister about another matter which is under his jurisdiction. I draw to his attention a bulletin called the Special Investigations Bulletin, which I believe was published in March, 1984. At the very same time there was a stable of very high-priced flacks revealing the public relations policies of the Government. In the bulletin there is an article headed "Department 'takes in' what Chinese 'took out' ". It refers to the operations of a Chinese restaurant operator.

• (1230)

I want to ask the Minister whether he feels this sort of casual racist reference to Chinese in this way is appropriate in an official publications of his Department. A subsequent article entitled "Precious Metal Attracts Precious Taxes" deals with the file of a Brockville doctor. Why was it not necessary in that article to identify the doctor by his race or nationality when it was deemed necessary by his Department to identify the individual mentioned in the previous article as Chinese? Does he feel that this sort of reference is appropriate in official government documents? And does he not feel that this casual racism is something which should be prohibited?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to this once I have clarified the point in the Privacy Commissioner's report concerning appropriate classification of information obtained. I indicated in my comments, perhaps too quickly, that the Department has already established new lists and new schedules, and that a representation will be made to Treasury Board to satisfy the concerns of the Commissioner with respect to the information obtained, so as to avoid any possible criticism by the Commissioner and to comply as strictly as possible with the various regulations and other provisions concerning information held on individuals.

Mr. Speaker, I am not sure about the document to which the Hon. Member referred but I do understand his question. In any case, and I say this without the slightest hesitation, any departmental document, whether public or internal, which has racist overtones is unacceptable. I cannot really judge the document until I have seen it, but as a general rule, I can assure the Hon. Member that any departmental document that would use expressions with racist overtones or make discriminatory remarks about a particular group is unacceptable, since this Government's principles and policies are clear on the subject, and all departments must, above all, comply with those policies and principles which are not only the policies and principles of this Government but also those of the House, as expressed on many occasions by the House itself.

[English]

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) much earlier talked about the need for a Taxpayers' Bill of Rights. Today he has again brought up the subject of the need for a Taxpayers' Bill of Rights. In responding a few moments ago the Minister wrapped himself in the Charter of Rights and submitted that somehow all of the rights and protections of citizens were wrapped up in that document.

How can the Charter of Rights protect a taxpayer in a situation where he has been reassessed and the Government demands that he pay now, before he has had a fair hearing? How can it ensure that he will get a fair hearing before he has to make payment? How does the present Charter of Rights give full protection against that kind of situation? And if full protection is there, why is it that the taxpayer has to make his payment before his hearing under the present tax system?

[Translation]

Mr. Bussières: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it was my intention to turn down outright the proposal contained in the report prepared by the committee of the Progressive Conservative Caucus, regarding a more direct expression of rights and responsibilities. I think the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) will agree when I add "and taxpayers' responsibilities", considering the tenor of the discussion we had. He agrees that in a self-assessment system, both rights and responsibilities must be made clear. I think this goes without saying, in view of the close correlation between these two concepts.

I would like to make it clear to the Hon. Member that I do not want to hide behind this particular concept of rights and responsibilities vis-à-vis a Department or the administration of an extremely complex Act, especially with respect to this group of taxpayers. I simply would like to draw the attention of the Hon. Member to the letter I wrote to my deputy minister when he commenced his duties. In that letter I stressed the fact that in our communications with the taxpayer, whether these would concern assessment or collection issues, we should indicate to the taxpayer his rights and recourse with respect to the Department's decisions. I should also like to indicate to the Hon. Member that the whole issue of collecting taxes after assessment is now being examined, that a more flexible approach has already been proposed by this Government, either through the Budget or through strict administrative measures, and that the concept must be examined within the context of the whole concept of our tax system—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I am sorry, but I shall have to interrupt the Hon. Minister because his time has expired.

[English]

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), for an excellent address on his motion, which gives us an opportunity as parliamentarians to discuss a matter of great importance to the people of Canada. I would be remiss in my duties as well if I did not also congratulate the Hon. Member and his task force for the excellent job done in travelling across Canada and gathering such extremely useful information.

In his remarks a moment ago, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) made the distinction between the role of the Minister of National Revenue and the role of the Minister of Finance. He was correct in making this distinction. Both Ministers are members of the same Cabinet, a Cabinet which speaks with unity. As a member of that Cabinet, the Minister of National Revenue has a rare opportunity to propose and fight for tax reform in substance, if he so desires. As Minister of National Revenue, he has the unique opportunity to correct administrative defects within his Department. The Minister is in a unique position no matter which route we take in helping to bring about the reforms which we have spoken of and will speak of in the course of this debate.

I would like to thank the Minister for being present during this debate. I hope that the points we make will be useful in helping us as parliamentarians to chart a new course for the people of Canada and correct some areas which are badly in need of correction. I agree with the Minister that the taxpayer must be convinced that the system is fair to all. The taxpayers are not so convinced, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, as late as Monday of this week, in Prince George, British Columbia, a very distinguished and prominent Canadian, Mr. John Turner, said that he has read the Progressive Conservative task force report and that if he is put into a position of authority, he will see that the administration of the Act is brought back into unquestioned equity and fairness.

I do not want to project myself into the Liberal leadership race; there are enough people already in it. However, I do want to say that I hope during the course of the leadership race other candidates will also make such frank statements. As for the Minister, I want to suggest to him that if the House continues it appears he may have some support for his position; and if the House does not continue, our Party will form the next Government and he will then see some action.

Since last year we have seen and heard growing evidence to the effect that Canada's tax collection system, once one of the most fair and effective in the world, has deteriorated very badly. We have received complaints from a wide spectrum of our population that a new hard line approach to the administration of the Income Tax Act was leaving an angry trail of taxpayers who have become disillusioned with the system and are demanding justice and fair play from their Government.

• (1240)

Last September the Canadian Chamber of Commerce warned there was a clear perception across the country that Revenue Canada was becoming more and more aggressive in its attitude towards the assessing and collecting of income taxes. Notices of objection filed by taxpayers jumped by 36 per cent. Significantly, over 70 per cent of all notices filed were settled in whole or in part in favour of the taxpayer. There was more evidence. In November of 1983 every chartered accountancy firm in the city of Cambridge, Ontario, signed a letter alleging that local auditors were operating under a quota system. We all know of the debate that ensued from that allegation and we all know of the results.

When the Government rejected the idea of a full parliamentary inquiry proposed by our Leader, he set up a task force to listen to Canadians and their concerns about how taxes are collected in Canada. The mounting evidence of problems in the system left little doubt in my mind or in the minds of those in the task force that we should provide a forum for taxpayers to present their views and should recommend ways to improve the administration of the Tax Department in Canada.

After holding meetings in 23 centres across Canada through the month of March this year, the task force received more than 300 oral presentations in addition to a large number of written and informal submissions. The meetings were both disturbing and encouraging. The picture that emerged was that of a Department with powers that even the police do not have. Tax professionals, the lawyers and accountants who have dealt with thousands of tax cases over the years, told us of a marked change in the Department in the past two years. They spoke of a new aggressiveness that presumes the taxpayers are guilty until they are proven innocent. Additionally, the collections area of the Department has been much less flexible in agreeing to repayment terms when taxpayers are reassessed.

On the positive side, we were encouraged to hear that the district office in Calgary has a co-operative attitude in dealing with inquiries from taxpayers or their representatives, and I have discovered that the Saint John, New Brunswick district taxation office has been courteous and co-operative in dealing with complaints I have put forward from my constituents. The Minister's office has also replied with courtesy to inquiries I have put forward on behalf of my constituents.

On the other hand, I must say that much of what we heard during our task force hearings disturbed me greatly. We were struck by the fear with which ordinary Canadians greet a call from the Tax Department, a fear that is sometimes cultivated by Revenue Canada in its attempts to frighten ordinary taxpayers. We found that the Tax Department often pursued Canadians of modest means who lack the resources to fight back and defend themselves. Accordingly, we have a recommendation that we think will help the Tax Department deal more fairly with people in this category and I will refer to it in just a moment.

We found the sheer complexity of many provisions caused serious problems for taxpayers who can least afford costly professional assistance. The growing complexity in the law, sweeping departmental powers, and a new hard line attitude towards taxpayers appears to have eroded the rights of thousands of Canadians and undermined public confidence in our tax system and our Government. We were shocked to hear testimony of poor internal communications within the Department, particularly between the computer centres, which should be supplying the service for district taxation offices, and the offices themselves. We heard testimony of one citizen's bank account being frozen even after his debts were paid in full.

Throughout Canada the task force heard evidence of problems caused by the "reasonable expectation of profit" rule as it is interpreted and applied by the Department. Under this test, small businessmen, farmers, artists and writers all have no way of knowing clearly and in advance how a loss will be treated. Worse, disallowing losses after they have occurred creates a kind of double penalty in that having lost the money one is then deemed to be a hobbyist and must, in effect, pay tax on the loss. I suggest that at least the basis of determining whether a business loss will be allowed against other income, if not a determination itself, should be available in advance of making an investment. Equally, should the ground rules for making these determinations later change, retroactivity should not be applied.

A common complaint of farmers and artists was that the Department arbitrarily established time frames within which profitability must be achieved, although it often takes several years of hard work and financial investment before profits are made. Until a consultative group established by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has made its report public and it has been debated, individuals who have claimed bona fide farm losses should not have their ability to deduct those losses restricted simply because they have had to earn other income in order to support their family and business activities.

Again, a decision by Revenue Canada to alter established practice and to give at times the narrowest possible interpretation to the reasonable expectation of profit test is causing a terrible injustice to Canada's artists and scholars. Until the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture has completed its review of matters relating to the taxation of our artists and writers, the treatment of artists' and writers' expenses should revert to the old interpretation; or at the very least a moratorium should be placed on any further reassessments.

Of all the assets of Revenue Canada, its staff is unquestionably the most valuable. Unfortunately, the task force uncovered considerable evidence that a number of the Department's policies and practices have resulted in poor morale, reduced productivity and an unacceptably low standard of service to the public. These problems must be reversed. The quota system, by whatever name, should be scrapped and never be a measure for promotion and advancement. The accent should be on accuracy, not the maximization of tax revenue. The quota system is a stain on the conscience of the Tax Department as indelible as the dark spot with which Shakespeare cursed Macbeth.

It is essential that Revenue Canada move away from an attitude that taxpayers are potential crooks waiting to be caught to a more positive service attitude. Canadians are an honest, decent and law-abiding people and have every right to be treated as such by their government and all its employees. Taxpayers should enjoy the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty, and no payment should be required on assessments until appeals are resolved.

In addition, and this is the matter I mentioned earlier, we need a small claims tribunal to deal with disputes under $5,000, and taxpayers should get a response to their cases in 30 days. This informal procedure would help cut through red tape and promote efficiency and deal more fairly with Canadians in the lower and middle-income groups. We should make taxpayers' files more accessible by returning them to their regional offices after they have been processed. Our Party would significantly curtail the Department's powers of search and seizure.

Our task force made 76 recommendations, including the creation of a Taxpayers' Bill of Rights. It is a plain language statement of the treatment taxpayers should be able to expect. It supplements the Charter of Rights just as every other piece of legislation we passed in this House supplements it. Among our recommendations is one for a Taxpayers' Bill of Rights. This Bill would include the presumption of innocence until proven guilty; the right to privacy; the right to timely and accurate information; and the right to courteous treatment. These matters are not spelled out in the Charter of Rights; they are refinements of fundamental rights spelled out in that Charter. Surely there could be no objection to this measure.

We also recommend that taxpayers who disagree with the reassessment be given the right to a fair hearing before the Department can take away the pay cheques or their bank accounts. Surely powers given the Tax Department which exceed those in Britain or the United States should be changed to ensure that while the Department has all the authority it needs to enforce the law, taxpayers are guaranteed at least the protection our law gives people accused of serious crimes, a protection they do not now have.

Our report is non-controversial and non-inflammatory. It succinctly and coherently describes ways in which Revenue Canada could function better serving both public and administration alike. I urge the Government to act now, even at this late date before it loses power, to implement the report's recommendations and thus provide an important service for all Canadians. If the Government chooses not to act, the Government which succeeds it will.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House will now proceed to questions and comments. Are there any questions? The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) on debate.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I see by the clock that my remarks will by interrupted by the dinner bell. One of the problems which mankind has always had with tax systems is finding a system which will seem to be fair and will be administered fairly. With the income tax system we have an attempt to operate a self-assessment system.

That concept was not first developed during World War I when income tax was introduced. The self-assessment feature of taxation has been used by many civilizations in the past. One which comes to mind particularly is a self-assessment system that was used in the Sound between Denmark and Sweden. It was called the Sound tax which the King of Denmark collected. He made himself responsible for patrolling the Baltic Sea. All shipping that went in and out of the Baltic Sea did so under a method of taxation which was a relatively fair self-assessment tax. When the ship captains applied to go through the Sound they presented the Tax Department with an assessment of the value of the cargo. They simply paid 10 per cent of that amount. In order to keep it fair and reasonably honest, the King of Denmark had the right to buy the cargo at the rate at which the sea captain had valued it. That is a sample of a self-assessment tax system.

One of the problems which we have run into with our self-assessment tax system as it applies to income tax is that there are too many instances surfacing in which it does not appear to be fair. The self-assessment features are being challenged dramatically by the Government. In too many cases the challenge appears to be unfair and unreasonable. It is to that that this motion addresses itself.

We propose to provide an additional amendment to this motion. If it is permitted, as I understand it is at this point in time, I would like to present my motion prior to continuing with my speech so that I could address the amendment as well as the motion. I will pause for a moment to receive your ruling; my understanding may be incorrect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I would invite the Hon. Member to read his amendment and send it to the Chair so I can look at it.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I propose to remove the period at the end of the motion which is before us and add the following words:

—and further, to recognize the inequity of the appeal process by guaranteeing to taxpayers who are successful in an appeal through the courts that their legal costs will be paid for by Revenue Canada.

Mr. Beatty: It is already done.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the matter the Member has raised as an amendment to the motion has already been carried out.

Mr. Mayer: That is typical of the NDP. They are redundant anyway.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is not the responsibility of the Chair to answer that preoccupation of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore. All I have to do is ensure that the amendment relates to the main motion in front of us and that it does not go beyond the scope of the intention of that motion. It does not and is well related, so I declare the amendment acceptable. I will put the amendment at this time.

Mr. Althouse, seconded by Mr. Lewycky, moved to amend the motion by removing the period at the end of the motion and adding:

—and further, to recognize the inequity of the appeal process by guaranteeing to taxpayers who are successful in an appeal through the courts that their legal costs will be paid for by Revenue Canada.

The question is on the amendment. The Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, we have concerns about the powers that have been used by Revenue Canada personnel and by the Act. I suppose it is not just the powers of the Act that are of concern, but more precisely some of the powers through Orders in Council and by internal operating procedures of Revenue Canada. As part of my presentation here today I would like to review three or four instances which I think highlight some of the abuses that are referred to, both in the motion and now in the amendment. I would like to go through those three or four examples. It would be more convenient if we could do them back to back, Mr. Speaker. Since it is pretty well the hour for adjournment, I propose to call it one o'clock and proceed after the lunch hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Before we adjourn, I would like to clarify one point. I should have put the motion at the end of the speech. I am sure the House will agree that the Hon. Member may continue his speech by unanimous consent after lunch. Is it also agreed to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

THE LATE GENERAL GEORGE R. PEARKES

TRIBUTE TO ILLUSTRIOUS CANADIAN

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is customary to take a few moments to pay tribute to an illustrious Canadian who is no longer among us. I am of course referring to General George R. Pearkes who died this week at the age of 96. I would like to express to the House and to all Canadians, my admiration and respect for this illustrious Canadian, and recall the many services he rendered to this country.

[English]

In his long career General Pearkes touched many Canadians, as a keeper of the peace with the Royal North-West Mounted Police, as a hero among heroes in the First World War, as a staff officer and educator in the Canadian Army, as a politician, as Minister of National Defence, and as a representative of the Queen in British Columbia.

[Translation]

He will undoubtedly go down in history as the soldier who received the largest number of decorations and awards from the Canadian Forces. He will be remembered for his courage. He was wounded five times but was always prepared to serve his country when danger struck.

[English]

But for many Canadians who had the privilege of knowing him, General Pearkes will be remembered as a courtly gentleman of enormous integrity, a man who devoted his life to public service, and an example to all the people of Canada for generations to come.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians who knew General Pearkes in his later years as an outstanding Defence Minister in the Diefenbaker Government and Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia, were unaware that he was a genuine Canadian hero.

He left the Royal North-West Mounted Police of fabled memory, where he was serving in Whitehorse, Yukon, to go overseas in the First World War, where he won every available medal for bravery and distinguished service, from the Victoria Cross, Great Britain's highest honour, to the Croix de Guerre, and including the Military Cross, Distinguished Service Order, and the United States Order of Merit. He was wounded five times, and was mentioned four times in despatches.

Following the war, he continued his military career as General Staff Officer at Royal Military College, Director of Military Training at National Defence Headquarters, and Officer Commanding, Military District 13.

In World War II he gathered new laurels as Major General in command of the First Canadian Division overseas.

In 1945, at a time when most men are thinking of retirement, he undertook a new career in politics and soon demonstrated the same qualities of courage, devotion to his country, and rugged honesty which he had displayed on the field of battle.

As Minister of National Defence in the Diefenbaker Government he upgraded the weaponry and equipment of our fighting forces, recognized and respected the NATO and NORAD commitments to the full and, in spite of his army associations, regarded the air as the first line of defence.

Both the Arrow and Bomarc controversies erupted while he was head of the defence portfolio, and with wit, honesty and good humour, he bore criticism for decisions which were based on carefully considered recommendations of the Chiefs of Staffs based on their conviction that manned bombers were already obsolete.

When he left the defence portfolio to assume the Lieutenant Governorship of British Columbia in 1960, George Pearkes was undoubtedly grateful for the opportunity to leave the turbulence of politics.

Of him it can be said that virtually his entire life was one of service. His contribution to Canada and democracy was always one above and beyond the call of duty. He gave more than was expected, and always with a quiet modesty and good cheer that became a man who never turned his back on the foe, whether military or political.

The thoughts of this House remember him fondly and go out today to his wife, Blytha, his close friends and family who have suffered a loss comparable only to that suffered by the nation.

Of him, John Diefenbaker once said, "He was a great soldier." We can do no better here today than echo those words.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words on behalf of our Party because I represent a riding in British Columbia which is one of the places that General Pearkes served so well. It has already been said that he was a Mountie. He was a Victoria Cross winner in World War I. He was a staff officer. He was a politician. He was Minister of National Defence. He was a representative of the Queen as Lieutenant-Governor of my Province of British Columbia in 1960.

He was a gentleman, a soldier, and a person of great integrity. If that could be said of any of us in the House, we would consider it to be a wonderful honour.

Most of my generation never served in the Armed Forces. Thank God we did not have to go to war. I believe we must thank people like General Pearkes and other soldiers who did go to war to serve Canada and help make the world a safer place for people of my generation.

It has been said that General Pearkes was a genuine Canadian hero. At the time of its fortieth anniversary, D-Day is much on our minds. Many of Canada's old soldiers are going over to the beaches of Normandy. I trust and hope that they will reflect today on the passing of General Pearkes. He had a full life and I think we should be thankful for that. Old soldiers never die.

On behalf of my Party I want to extend to his family our thoughts and gratitude for the fullness of this man's life.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, when I came here as a member in 1957, it was to assume a post as first parliamentary assistant to the Minister of National Defence, the late George Pearkes.

• (1410)

As a veteran of World War II with a lot of friends at National Defence, and working under a man who was Officer Commanding, First Canadian Division, when I went overseas in 1941, not to his division but to another formation, I can assure the House that he had the loyalty of Canada's Forces behind him. As was indicated by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), there were tough decisions, I remember, on the Arrow and on the Bomarc. However, he always served as Minister of National Defence in the House with the greatest courtesy to all, and with a determination to get the job done.

May I just add a further note that in his role as Grand President of the Royal Canadian Legion, a year or so before he retired from that position he received an honour from the Legion in convention in Edmonton which is rarely accorded—a standing ovation on being introduced.

He had an honourable life since leaving the office of Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, where he was one of the most popular Lieutenant-Governors in recent history. We who have known him for many years watched his declining health with continuing concern. May we say that it is unfortunate he did not reach a century. On the other hand, I think his family and friends will be relieved that he has slipped quietly away. To his widow, Blytha, and to his son, John, may we all say we are sorry. George was one of Canada's great men.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, General Pearkes was a legend in the Canadian Forces, but his life before he joined and after he left the Forces was equally outstanding. He came to Canada to homestead on a prairie farm in 1906. Then he joined the Royal North-West Mounted Police as a rookie and served as a constable, serving in the Yukon and elsewhere. In January, 1915, he joined the Canadian Mounted Rifles, now the British Columbia Dragoons, which was then a cavalry unit stationed in Victoria. He joined as a private soldier and worked his way up through the ranks, achieving a record in the year 1916 which has not been equalled before or since, of going from the rank of Sergeant through all ranks to the rank of Major in one year. He finished World War I as a Lieutenant-Colonel, with the Military Cross, Distinguished Service Order, and the most highly regarded decoration in the world, the Victoria Cross.

He remained in the permanent Force in that fine regiment, the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry and, on the outbreak of World War II, he again went overseas in his country's service. He commanded the Second Brigade and then the First Canadian Infantry Division, where I first met him while serving under his command. I served under him again when he was General Officer Commanding, Pacific Command, and of course when he became Minister of National Defence in 1957.

His moves from the military to the House of Commons, to the Privy Council, and to Government House in Victoria, in his mind I believe, were simply a continuation of his public service and his duty.

It is difficult to find words to describe adequately the respect and affection which the people of Victoria, and indeed the Canadian public, felt for this man. To state it simply, they trusted him and they believed him. His service to Canada in war and in peace set an example which may never be equalled.

The Late George R. Pearkes

I wish to add the condolences of myself and of the citizens of Victoria to those already expressed by the Leaders of the Parties of this House and others, to his wife and family.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, Major General, the Hon. George Randolph Pearkes, Victoria Cross, Member of Her Majesty's Privy Council, Companion of the Order of Canada, Companion of the Order of the Bath, and awarded the Distringuished Service Order and the Military Cross, all titles and honours in the service of his country, died yesterday in Victoria. His honours were many; we are honoured to have known him.

As the Member who represents the same people of Esquimalt-Saanich for whom General Pearkes spoke in this place with such honour, dignity, civility and humanity, I cannot fail to be aware of the responsibility that now is mine. In fact General Pearkes set a model for all of us to follow as Members of Parliament speaking here on behalf of our constituents.

His record in the service of Canada and Canadians is one that is not easy to match. Arriving in this country as a young man in his late teens, settling on a farm in Alberta, which at that time had only recently been created a province of Canada, and spending the first few years homesteading there, gave him a deep appreciation of Canada's richness and its readiness to reward those who were prepared to work with its endless resources.

I suspect it also gave him, unless he brought it along with him, a healthy humility when confronted with God's manifold favours. He was a devout man, respecting his God, living by God's laws, and knowing he lived always in God's sight.

He served several years, much of it in the Yukon, as a constable in the Royal North-West Mounted Police. When war was imminent, he enlisted as a trooper in the Second Canadian Mounted Rifles. He trained in Canada and went overseas.

Late in October, 1917, and as a Major, he displayed the fearless courage that marked his whole life. Although wounded, he led his men with the utmost gallantry and disregard for danger—because he was under ground fire and air attack; he fulfilled his Colonel's orders, reached his objectives and returned with his company, depleted, it is true, but their task was fulfilled. His valour on this occasion at Passchendeale won him the Victoria Cross. Throughout that battle and in all his subsequent commands, as Major, later as Colonel, and eventually as Major-General, he never lost the common touch. Because he had grown up humbly, he never became arrogant. Success never went to his head. It merely gave him an added opportunity to serve his fellow men.

There are many instances of his love for his fellow men, his simple, direct approach to all he met, his kindliness, and his concern for people, all of which endeared the man to those who served him or with him, as Commanding Officer, Member of Parliament, Minister of the Crown, or Lieutenant-Governor. As Her Majesty's representative in British Columbia he earned the respect of all those he met and thousands more he never met.

Of no one in the country can it be said more justly that he won our respect because he respected each of us. A more fitting tribute for a great Canadian, a more worthy example for all of us, in whatever walk of life, would be difficult to find. His citation for the Victoria Cross begins "for most conspicuous bravery". For his record of service to Canadians for more than 70 years, I would suggest that we add "and for most conspicuous service".

To Blytha, his wife, to whom he was married for almost 59 years; to his son, John, and to his grandchildren, I am sure the House will want to express its sincerest condolences and prayers for their comfort in their loss. Their loss is ours too.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the House that we rise and observe a minute's silence in memory of the late George Randolph Pearkes.

[Whereupon the House stood in silence for one minute.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is there unanimous agreement that Question Period extend until five minutes past three?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE ADMINISTRATION

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—REFERENCE TO AFRICANS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister of which I have given him prior notice. It has to do with an article that appeared in yesterday's Globe and Mail concerning statements made by his Minister of Agriculture. I quote one paragraph:

> A man should always wear a hat. . . . No easier way to catch a cold in winter than to go bareheaded. And in summer, the sun'll roast your brains if you don't wear a hat. That's one reason they have low IQs in Africa. They don't wear hats.

Does the Prime Minister find this acceptable behaviour by one of his Ministers, and what has he done about it or intends to do about it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I always hate this kind of a question, although I did get notice of it. I received the clipping. I realize why the Hon. Member is only quoting one paragraph, as he said. If he read the next phrase after the one he stopped reading, it would have gone on to say:

Another reason, and a more important problem is malnutrition, something that as President of the World Food Council for the past two years he has been intent on doing something about.

He has done a great deal about it. I know Mr. Whelan. I know that he has constantly been raising the problem of malnutrition in Africa. He has been raising the problem in Cabinet. He has been trying to help refugees.

I would agree that the phrase about IQs and wearing hats does not sound very good when you look at it in black and white, but I would imagine Mr. Whelan did it with tongue in cheek. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West looks disgusted at my answer. I remind him that his seatmate, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, talked about our former Minister of Finance, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, going to Gabon to be with people who were swinging from trees. Do you remember that? I remember it. I do not think that was a very good remark either, but we did not make a question out of it. I can give other examples.

I know Mr. Whelan. I know that he is very sensitive to the difficult economic situations in Africa. I certainly am not going to make a fuss about this.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that many of the things the Prime Minister said in his response are total non sequiturs. His Minister, a Minister of the Crown, has uttered what most people would say is a totally unacceptable racial slur. If the Prime Minister does not ask for the Minister's resignation and continues to keep him in his Cabinet, he will cast some very serious doubts on his lifelong concern over civil liberties, his Charter of Rights, and his concern for minority rights. I ask him again whether he is prepared to ask for that Minister's resignation. If he does not, he will be launching his retirement on a very sour note that is in contrast to many of the things he stood for as Prime Minister of this country.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not going to ask for his resignation, but I would ask the Hon. Member if maybe he goes out in the sun without a hat sometimes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, Members on the other side can laugh all they want, but this is a very serious matter. A Minister of the Crown of this country has insulted a whole continent with which we have good relations. I again suggest that, if the Prime Minister treats the matter in this kind of offhand manner, he will find that his cavalier attitude toward this matter casts a very serious doubt over what he has stood for on behalf of minority rights in this country.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is one sentence that expresses a thought which, quite often, I like to take as a guideline: "One ought not to take tragically what should properly be taken seriously". I am always astonished to see the Opposition take tragically things which have been said lightheartedly on this side of the House.

[English]

Why did they not make a fuss when their Leader, Mr. Mulroney, made fun about our Minister of Finance going to an OECD meeting in Paris in order to be with the Folies Bergères? Was that a racial slur, or was that just absolute nonsense? This kind of thing crosses this aisle often and I do not take it tragically.

REQUEST FOR APOLOGY

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any analogy whatever with respect to the examples that have been given. The Minister of Agriculture, representing Canada, who is also President of the World Food Council, has uttered a very unacceptable racial slur. The Prime Minister will know that Mr. Earl Butz uttered similar racial slurs in the United States, and he resigned. He was asked by the President to resign his portfolio. What I find unacceptable is that the Prime Minister condones the statement of the Minister of Agriculture, which is really incredible. Will he not at least ask him to do the decent thing and apologize, particularly to those Canadians of African descent who require an apology from the Prime Minister of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does his usual thing. He says I condone. I did not condone. I said the contrary. The Hon. Member is distorting what I said. He is doing it in a way which I find unacceptable, in order to prove a point about a statement. Everybody knows the Minister of Agriculture. He is talking in the House all the time. Everyone realizes that he is a good, sound, human being.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ESTIMATES

NON-APPEARANCE OF MINISTER OF ENERGY BEFORE COMMITTEE

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. His Government's Estimates are deemed to be passed by midnight tonight, yet his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has refused to appear before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works to explain and defend his Department's expenditures totalling $3.1 billion. The Minister has already defied the Prime Minister's instructions to be in the House to answer questions. The Minister is introducing the Canada-

Nova Scotia Energy Agreement later today. He is not here now to answer questions about secret side deals. Why does the Prime Minister allow his Ministers to let their leadership aspirations take precedence over their parliamentary duties? Surely the minimum standard of accountability should be appearance in committee to defend the way he, as a Minister, spends public money?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member phrases her question in a dangerous way when she talks about letting leadership aspirations get in the way of parliamentary duties. She could look at her own Leader and ask herself why he does not discharge his parliamentary duties once in a while.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Prime Minister. We look forward to being before the Parliament of Canada and its committees on important matters such as the Estimates after the election. One of the issues we wanted to raise today deals with the petroleum compensation charge. We have evidence that gasoline prices are being kept artificially low until after the next election. Is the Liberal Government so indifferent to the spending of taxpayer's money that it feels it does not have to come to Parliament and explain this kind of glaring discrepancy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the minister of Energy, Mines and Resources proved unavailable the particular day the committee was sitting, I asked his Associate Minister to appear before the committee, which I am told he did. Therefore the committee members could ask all the questions they wanted. The Hon. Member is not complaining about a question not having been answered. The Hon. Member is complaining about the Minister not being there when another Minister was there in his stead.

RAILWAYS

PRAIRIE BRANCH LINE REHABILITATION PROGRAM

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In his absence perhaps his Parliamentary Secretary could answer. I think the Minister is to be commended for the announcement made a couple of days ago concerning the Prairie Branch Line Rehabilitation Program, particularly as it affects Saskatchewan and the allocation in my own particular riding. People are waiting to see if the Government will carry through with this program. There are, however, some questions that are as yet unanswered.

I am wondering if the Parliamentary Secretary could inform the House if the miscellaneous $51 million incentive fund is meant to assist communities that are left off the five-year rehabilitation program because they were low on some arbitrarily drawn priority list, or if the fund is meant to assist in branch line abandonments by funnelling this money off to something like trucking subsidies to replace the branch lines that are in danger of being put out of the permanent network.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank my Opposition colleague for asking me this question. I should like to remind him that we already have a $520 million program for the rehabilitation of railway lines in Western Canada. It is a five-year program. The additional $51 million fund which has just been announced will be spent for special programs which will have to be submitted to the Senior Grain Transport Committee. The particulars and all necessary data related to this new program will be readily available to the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake.

[English]

PURPOSE OF INCENTIVE FUND

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, at committee the people from Transport Canada were saying that the money for trucking subsidies would in fact come from part of the money that was to go to the Prairie Branch Line Rehabilitation Program. The Parliamentary Secretary has said that some $528 million is going into the rehabilitation program. As well, there is the issue of the $51 million incentive fund. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary could tell me if this $51 million is part of the $528 million, or if it is possible that the $51 million is a special allocation above and beyond the $528 million and is really meant for trucking subsidies.

[Translation]

Mrs. Éva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): To sum up the situation, Mr. Speaker, $520 million have been set aside for a five-year railway lines rehabilitation program, including over $300 million to be spent in Saskatchewan alone. The $51 million we are talking about today is in addition to the amounts already announced and, as I just said, they will be spent for special programs which grain transport system users will have to submit to the Senior Grain Transport Committee.

With respect to trucking, the Minister of Transport is indeed quite interested in that question, and I should think that representations will have to be made to the special committee which is now considering the whole question of grain transport in Western Canada.

[English]

ALLOCATION OF MONEY

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The announcement of the funding for the Prairie Branch Line Rehabilitation Program said it was to be given out during a five-year program, as pointed out by the Parliamentary Secretary. The largest expenditure is to be in the first year. I wonder if the Minister could tell us if the money that is to be spent over a five-year period is tied with an ironclad guarantee, or if it is subject to Treasury Board approval each year and therefore subject to the new priorities of a new Government that may come into power within the coming months?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to check into the situation and report back to the Hon. Member.

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—MINISTERIAL STAFF GUIDELINES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the continuing allegations in the media, as well as now by personnel in the offices of certain Liberal leadership candidates, regarding the use by all candidates of staff or consultants who are on the public payroll, and the use for partisan purposes of government facilities and aircraft paid for by the taxpayers, contrary to the guidelines laid down in the House and elsewhere by the Prime Minister, I wonder if the Prime Minister could tell us what is being done to enforce these guidelines. For example, what is being done about the specific allegations made in today's press concerning the use by the Minister of Justice of his personal staff to further his leadership aspirations in violation of those very guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member alludes to general problems like those with aircraft. I believe that any problems along those lines have been dealt with, and I have dealt with any discussions or questions asked of me in this House.

The Hon. Member asked about something which was reported in the media today. I asked to be informed about it, and thus far all I can find out is that there has been an ongoing process of a shift in the workload for these people as they have moved from departmental responsibilities to leadership responsibilities. As this has happened, they have taken leaves of absence or have resigned. That is what I have found out thus far, and that seems to be a move in the right direction.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, If there is constant monitoring of those guidelines, then obviously the Prime Minister's guidelines were pretty empty rhetoric.

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF JUSTICE ON HATE LITERATURE LEGISLATION AMENDMENTS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question may I draw the Prime Minister's attention to a Canadian Press item from Montreal yesterday relating that the Minister of Justice, at a private breakfast, allegedly gave details of some important proposed amendments to the Criminal Code for the control of hate literature? The news report quoted the Minister as saying that he would make details of the amendments public tomorrow, that being Friday, not here in the House of Commons but at a press conference or a campaign meeting in Toronto, presumably because he is too busy campaigning to be here in the House.

Is it now government policy to make such important announcements on the campaign trail rather than in the House of Commons? Is it the Government's honest expectation that any such amendments will be passed before the summer recess, or is this simply another—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has some concerns about the nature of the supplementary question arising out of the original question.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, it relates to the campaign activities of one of the Ministers of the Crown. I think it is a very valid supplementary question.

Is this another piece of huffery and puffery by a candidate on the campaign trail?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): For heaven's sake, Mr. Speaker, I do not know by what double standards the Opposition is trying to play. It is perhaps fair ball to draw attention to the activities of the leadership candidates, but no one seriously expects that during a leadership campaign Ministers will sit in their seats in the House every day to answer questions or make announcements. They are out there trying to be elected as the Leader of the Party.

In so far as their staffs are concerned, Mr. Speaker, I have set down guidelines. As far as I can see, the spirit of those guidelines is being respected. There may be one or two instances of slowness in getting around to following them but one can remember that there was a leadership campaign on the other side of the House—

Mr. Lawrence: They weren't gone—

Mr. Trudeau: Let me finish. That was last year, and I guess most Members of the House were out campaigning. They were not here. I would bet my bottom dollar that their staffs were also involved in helping them out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Why all this hypocrisy? It may be just rhetoric and I do not take it seriously.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Prime Minister that all the candidates for the leadership campaign last year resigned from their positions in the shadow Cabinet for the duration of the campaign.

Mr. Lawrence: Including the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Trudeau: But did they use staff?

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

AID TO DEVCO COAL MINE—INSTALLATION OF FIRE DOORS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and it relates to the support that the Government announced last week for the Devco mine and the closure of No. 26 Colliery, an announcement which we on this side of the House welcome. However, I am sure that the Minister is aware of the concerns that have been expressed regarding the safety of the mine, and of the hope that has been expressed that this type of disaster will not recur.

Since Colliery No. 26 experienced a series of fires over the years, some of which caused fatalities, there have been recommendations for the installation of fire doors in the mines to control fires. Would the Minister say whether he has ascertained why these fire doors were not installed in No. 26 Colliery? And would he tell us whether it will be a requirement that fire doors be installed now in all Devco operations?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should have directed his question to the minister who, through his department, is responsible for security. I can tell him, however, that some of my officials are now carrying out an investigation on the spot and discussing the situation with representatives of both the company and the union.

[English]

MAINTENANCE OF EQUIPMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary question to the same Minister. Mr. Webby Murray, a retired CLC safety inspector, is quoted as saying:

> There's no doubt in my mind that if the belt lines (underground conveyors which transport the coal) had been properly cleaned and serviced and stone-dusted, (which reduces the likelihood of sparks igniting), 26 would not have had that fire.

Is the Minister, during the course of his investigations, looking into this allegation, and others like it, as part of the comprehensive review of corporate operations which was announced by the Minister last week?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my officials, while carrying out their investigation, will certainly check whether this statement and others are true.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

DATE OF PRESENTATION OF MOTION TO ESTABLISH TASK FORCE ON CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Leader of the Government. I would like to know whether he could tell us when the motion providing for the setting up of a committee to consider the definition of a charitable organization under the terms of the Income Tax Act will be introduced in the House?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is already on the Order Paper. I am now negotiating with the Opposition hoping to get it approved as quickly as possible and I expect an answer to my proposal within the next few days.

I can therefore assure the Hon. Member that, as far as the Government is concerned, we want this motion to be approved as soon as possible. However, there are not many days left before the summer adjournment and we will try to reach an agreement with the Opposition to debate and approve this motion in the very near future unless the conditions laid down by the Opposition are so exaggerated that we cannot reasonably accept them as this would mean going against the other priorities of the Government.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

REGULATION OF LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE SERVICE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The Minister knows that Canadians are proud of the high quality and reasonable cost of their telephone service. I am sure he also knows that, as a result of deregulation of the telephone industry in the United States, local rates for U.S. residents and small business people have doubled and tripled. The CRTC is now going to consider an application by CN-CP Telecommunications to be permitted to compete with Bell Telephone for long distance telephone service. If its application is approved it will soon mean substantial increases in the monthly rates paid by consumers.

Will the Minister exercise the authority which he has as the Minister of Communications and tell the CRTC that we do not want deregulation of the telephone industry, which will have a disastrous effect on the consumers?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises an obvious question of very great importance. The Hon. Member knows that the CRTC receives applications from various telephone companies across the country on a number of subjects, and that the Government's power to intervene is usually on appeal. The Government does not at the moment have power of direction over the CRTC. I would very much encourage the Hon. Member to discuss this matter with the critic for the Official Opposition and to seek quick passage of Bill C-20, which would give Parliament and the Government of the day the opportunity to look at this question and to issue directives to the CRTC on the type of architecture we want to have for our telecommunications and broadcasting system in Canada.

Up to now I do not have the co-operation of the Official Opposition in order to bring this Bill forward and pass it quickly before the House rises. I would very much hope that we could do so in order to allow us to make substantial progress in ensuring that the elected representatives of the people are the ones who decide on the architecture of the system.

BELL CANADA—LOCAL SERVICE RATES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister knows that the next step to deregulation in the United States, and one which is being considered by Bell Canada, is local measured service which, again, would mean very sharp increases for the consumers, particularly for the elderly and the sick. Would the Minister indicate to the CRTC, and to the people of Canada, that the Government of Canada opposes that kind of idea which is now receiving support in the United States?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, once again the Hon. Member raises a question of fundamental concern, and one which Canadians will certainly be debating with a great deal of interest in the years to come. I feel that this type of question should be debated in this forum and in parliamentary committees. One way of doing so is the passage of Bill C-20 which—

Mr. Dick: What is the government view?

Mr. Fox: —the Leader of the Official Opposition wants us to split in two parts, basically allowing part of it to go through, but not allowing the part to go through which would allow Parliament, and the Government of the day, to have an influence on this type of question—

Mr. Dick: What is the Government's view?

Mr. Fox: —instead of a quasi-judicial body. I would very much hope that, through the Hon. Member's questions, the House Leader of the Official Opposition would be sensitized to this question. It is of fundamental importance to the type of telecommunications industry we will have in this country, a fact which the Official Opposition does not yet realize and fails to accept.

POOLS

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—ALLEGED DIFFICULTY IN SECURING PRIZE MONEY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport).

Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, in the last few days the Minister has been telling us about his new system for Sport Select, the sports pool, and he tried to prove that the system was foolproof. Yesterday, a man from Laval won the incredible sum of $20.65. He had to go to two gas stations, plus four corner stores, to get his money! Considering the fact that ticket vendors were selected on the basis of competence and not party affiliation, could the Minister inform the House today whether he is going to comment on the problems encountered by this lucky winner in collecting his $20.65?

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Joliette for giving me this opportunity to mention some of the extraordinary things that have been happening across this country. For instance, one participant in Prince Edward Island won $25,000, and after that, because he was also a ticket vendor for the provincial lottery, his licence to sell tickets was taken away. Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that people from the provincial lotteries across Canada, with the support of our friends opposite, are blackmailing storekeepers. They order them to stop selling sports pool tickets unless they want to lose their ticket vending machine or, if they do not have one, they will be at the top of the list, so they will never get a terminal, and then they can never get a lottery licence! And this is the kind of blackmail being perpetrated by our friends opposite! These are guerrilla tactics!

SYSTEM OF CLAIMING PRIZES—REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE—CORPORATION'S PROFITABILITY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister's reply is almost obscene. I was just asking him on behalf of people who bought a few tickets for the sports pool . . . I think the Minister must be responsible for seeing to it that those $20.65 are paid! He certainly cannot accuse us of being responsible for that kind of poor administration!

In the circumstances, Canadians would like to know, Mr. Speaker, and I think the Minister has forgotten to give us his projections at least for the next year . . . Could the Minister inform the House what guarantees he has for the system's profitability? Is the Corporation unable to pay the winners at this time? Canadians would like to know whether the system set up by the present Government, which in fact infringes on provincial jurisdiction, is profitable. I think Canadians would like to know whether the Minister can give us the assurance that the system will be profitable over the months to come.

• (1450)

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite is asking me to guarantee how many millions of dollars we are going to make available for amateur sport, medical research and all the other reasons for which the legislation was passed. I cannot give him any figures, but it is a foregone conclusion, provided the provinces leave us alone and stop harassing small retail businessmen who want to sell those tickets, retailers who want to help us develop amateur sport, pay for the Calgary Olympic Games, and pay for medical research . . . I am sure that if the Members opposite would speak to the provincial governments, to their political friends, we would then be able to set up an organization that will help us develop a true concept of amateur sport, we would be really independent! We would not depend on their political friends out there!

When they signed an agreement in 1979, they simply transferred $500 million to the provinces, to Progressive Conservatives and separatists, in exchange for the $35 million we had left to develop the Olympic Games, amateur sport and medical research! That is what they did!

[English]

CORPORATION'S ISSUANCE OF ADVERTISING CONTRACTS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister. I put the question on Friday last, and the President of the Treasury Board took it as notice for the Minister.

The Canada Sports Pool Corporation has awarded two advertising contracts, one of them to Planicom in Montreal, specifically to the publicity manager for John Turner. Were those contracts tendered, Mr. Speaker? If so, was the French language contract awarded to the lowest bidder? Will the Minister table those tenders? If they were not tendered, why not?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that the two advertising agencies were selected by the Canada Sports Pool Corporation. Now, some Members seem to want politics to be constantly involved in the corporation's decision-making process. That decision was made entirely by the Canada Sports Pool Corporation and not by the Minister.

[English]

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, the Minister can try to duck the responsibility for as long as he wants. The Government of Canada is responsible for public money in this country, and the Minister is going to learn that fact.

CONTRACT TENDERING PROCEDURES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE LIST OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is a simple one. Were those contracts tendered? If they were, will the Minister table the tenders? If they were not, why not?

At the same time, will the Minister today give the House the answer to the question as to whether he will table the hiring contracts and the list of those people whom the Liberal Party has chosen for patronage reasons to put on the public payroll?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, there is no patronage involved. I am simply saying that the agencies which were selected had the qualifications and the ability required to do the job.

Mr. La Salle: You are unable to—

Mr. Olivier: I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member for Joliette would listen to my answer!

In addition, Mr. Speaker, since there is a good deal of competition in this industry in any case, according to what the Canada Sports Pool Corporation has said, we could not have the same advertising agency as Loto Quebec because we are in competition with them.

The choice made by the Corporation therefore seems to be the right one to me. It will have an impact, and in this regard, I believe that the people in the Corporation who hired this agency made an excellent choice.

SOCIAL SECURITY

IMPACT OF EVENTUAL FISCAL TRANSFERS

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Quebec Minister of Social Affairs has just demanded that federal jurisdiction over old age security pensions be transferred to Quebec, in return for fiscal compensation—

Mr. La Salle: They answered that question yesterday!

Mr. Duclos: Mr. Speaker, could I be allowed to ask a question? As I was saying . . . in return for fiscal compensation for the Government of Quebec. Since the tax point yield . . . That's over your head, Tit-Roch!

Some Hon. Members: Ha, ha!

Mr. Duclos: Since the yield on the tax points which would then be transferred to Quebec would be less than the average yield for tax points for Canada as a whole, could the Minister inform the House what the consequences would be of transferring jurisdiction over old age security pensions paid to senior citizens living in Quebec?

Not as easy as yesterday's question, Tit-Roch!

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member for Joliette would repeat out loud for the media, his constituents and all Quebecers, an opinion that shows, surprisingly, that today he is clearly a federalist and that he realizes Ottawa's old age pensions are steady pensions . . . Well, that is because you were not clear. Only the ambiguous are misunderstood.

To answer the Hon. Member's question, and without wishing to alarm senior citizens, because I think this is only a red herring thrown out by Dr. Laurin . . . So, without wishing to cause our senior citizens undue concern, I think it is obvious that the value of the tax points represented by our old age security payments to Quebec pensioners would be much lower, because a tax point from Quebec is worth less, and has been for many years, unfortunately, so that Quebec pensioners would receive less money if they had provincial pensions.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

IMPACT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA ALCAN PROJECT—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs who is just behind the curtain looking for delegates. Would he come back to his seat?

Now that the Minister is back in the House, I am sure he is aware that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has completed meetings throughout British Columbia regarding Alcan's $3 billion Kemano completion project. Fishermen, native people, farmers, and water users generally have pretty much unanimously called for a full public inquiry. The Minister is aware that Treasury Board has put forward funding for some of the affected bands in the area. Two weeks ago he told the Haizla people that he was going to call a full public inquiry. Will he tell this House, the native people in that area generally, fishermen, and British Columbians whether or not that public inquiry will be called before the end of this session in June?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is not my role, nor do I have the authority, to insist on a public inquiry. If he is asking my view on a matter of this significance, I think there should be a very full airing indeed of all the implications. Yes, I indicated that I would be prepared to consider the application of the band for the money necessary to undertake some real research into what the implications of such a development would be.

MINISTER'S POWERS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, at least the people in British Columbia understand the effect of this project is to lower the Fraser River by three feet at Hell's Gate and join the two major river systems of British Columbia, the Skeena and the Fraser. I recommend that the Minister talk to the parliamentary legal counsel. Under the federal Inquiries Act he has the power to call a full public inquiry, and I do not think it is legitimate for him to go around peddling leadership bull to people across the country that he is going to call a full public inquiry, and then stand up in the House and say he does not have the power to do it. Is the Government going to do it or not? It has had five years to call it, and it has done nothing.

Mr. Benjamin: Come on, John. Put up or shut up.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for St. John's West.

INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF PULP AND PAPER MILL AT CORNER BROOK, NFLD.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, responsible for DRIE. It has to do with the situation at Corner Brook where, as the Minister knows, Bowater is closing its pulp and paper mill this fall. A number of proposals have been made to the Newfoundland Government and Bowater with respect to other concerns purchasing the mill and carrying on, but they are all dependent on financing from the Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada for improvements to the mill. Could the Minister tell us whether he has received any proposals, whether the Government of Canada has a task force reviewing this situation, and just what the situation is now?

• (1500)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that the Premier has asked us not to discuss the details of any of these commercial negotiations in public, obviously because of potential problems they would have in Newfoundland in handling the discussions with the various companies themselves. I can say, however, that we have indicated to the Province of Newfoundland that the pulp and paper modernization agreement funds, the balance of which I believe is almost $26 million, are available for any new purchaser of Bowater. We have had a request from Newfoundland for additional funds and are looking at the possibility of providing them.

REVIEW OF PROPOSALS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister advise the House whether his Department, or he himself, is reviewing the best of the proposals that are made, and when a decision might be made with respect to what assistance government is prepared to grant to help modernize that mill? When will a decision be made on that? Is the Government prepared to put further money into the agreement entered into between Newfoundland and Canada, to save thousands of jobs and the city of Corner Brook by keeping that mill operating?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my previous answer, we have had a request from the Province of Newfoundland for additional funds over and above the millions that are in the pulp and paper modernization agreement. We have said that we will look very seriously at their request. We are not personally evaluating the proposals. That is being done by the Province of Newfoundland. We have offered our expertise with respect to any particular aspects put forward by the individual companies which have made proposals for the mill.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

RENTAL OF PROPERTIES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works who is responsible for the National Capital Commission. I have learned this week that there are 1,241 properties which are owned by the National Capital Commission. Many of these properties in the Ottawa area are rented to people on the preferred list of many of the directors of the National Capital Commission, at rents which are somewhat less than market value. Why is the Minister reticent to release the list to the media or anyone else who is trying to find out where the properties are, who the tenants are, and how much rent is being paid for these properties?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, going back to my days as Minister of Fisheries, I have always been reticent to release names and addresses of individuals due to the normal privacy to which we are all entitled. Outside of that restriction, I am certainly open to inquiring whether more information can be made available.

REQUEST FOR DISCLOSURE

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Minister responsible for Public Works that under the Access to Information Act there is no confidentiality involved with regard to a fringe benefit of rent subsidy offered to possible employees of the federal Government.

Why is the Minister not disclosing the lists of these properties? It is not even possible to obtain the addresses of these 1,241 properties which the National Capital Commission is administering, other than a rural route number which means absolutely nothing when one tries to check out who is the tenant. Would the Minister again look into the Access to Information regulations and legislation, and agree that it is possible to disclose those lists?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made a fairly long parliamentary career of making all kinds of accusations and not listening to the answers. I said very simply that there is legislation which imposes on Ministers some limitations under the right to privacy. I have to see whether I am allowed to release names and addresses in that situation. We are all entitled to the privacy of our personal addresses if we so choose. I will look into it, and I will release what information I can under the Access to Information Act.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, would the Government House Leader outline for the House the proposed business for tomorrow and into next week?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will dispose of three Bills in the following order. The three Bills will be introduced later today. They are the Yukon Quartz Mining Act, the Skagit River Treaty and the Asia-Pacific Foundation.

On Monday we will start debating the second reading stage of Bill C-40, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act. The back-up legislation on Monday will be Bill C-39. Next Tuesday will be the last allotted day of the current period of Supply. Next Wednesday and Thursday we will resume debate on the National Housing Act, Bill C-37, with Bill C-36 as the back-up Bill.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would like to reinforce what I have raised on two previous occasions. It would be the desire of this Party to see the Canada Labour Code amendments dealt with expeditiously. I would like to urge the Government House Leader to attempt to find out from the Conservatives why they are stalling.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that serious consideration is given to all Bills on the Order Paper, including the one just referred to. As he knows very well, a few minutes ago the three House Leaders were negotiating a package. The Bill he referred to was included in the package. We must wait until next week before we know the results of our negotiations. I certainly do not intend to continue negotiating on the floor of the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am sure there must be something wrong with my hearing device. I would have sworn that I heard the Member for Hamilton Mountain make the accusation that somehow we in this Party are holding up a certain piece of legislation with respect to the Canada Labour Code. I can only say that that statement is the opposite to the truth.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, taking into account the comments made by the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition, perhaps the Government House Leader would check with the Minister of Labour to see whether he has received a reply from the Leader of the Official Opposition with regard to speedy and expeditious passage of the Canada Labour Code amendments which are now before us, given that up until now I have not been able to decide where they stand on it.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that if it is true that the Official Opposition is disposed to allow the Canada Labour Code to go to committee, and if it is also true that the NDP is serious in wanting that Bill to go to committee, that would have been done at this time if the NDP had not used two days to debate Bill C-37, the National Housing Act.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind what the Government House Leader has said, I would ask you to seek unanimous consent for leave to introduce the following motion pertaining to the treatment of Bill C-34. If unanimous consent were forthcoming, I would be prepared to move and to support that the Standing Orders be amended by adding immediately following Standing Order 79(1) the following:

79.(1a) The purpose of this Standing Order is to provide for the orderly and timely consideration of Bill C-34, An Act to amend the Canadian Labour Code, and to be finally disposed of no later than June 30th, 1984;

(b) When the House is considering the said legislation for second reading, at the end of one day's debate, all questions necessary to dispose shall be put;

(c) That the said legislation shall be deemed to be returned to the House for report stage and third reading no later than June 28, 1984.

If there were unanimous consent for that motion, Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to support it.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain to introduce his motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I understand the interest of the Hon. Member. However, I am very much surprised at his request at this time. We just had a House Leaders' meeting. It was made very clear that since this Bill was included in our negotiations we would not raise this matter on the floor of the House of Commons today.

● (1510)

Mr. Deans: That's not true.

Mr. Pinard: It was made very clear that the content of our meeting would not be made public. We want this Bill to be passed. We want other legislation to be passed. We hope that our negotiations will be fruitful and that Bill C-34 will be passed before the end of June, as will Bill C-37, the amendments to the National Housing Act.

The Hon. Member knows very well that the two are very much tied together, and all the time used so far by the NDP on Bill C-37 is preventing us from dealing with Bill C-34. If the Hon. Member wants to give a positive answer to my offer to allow Bill C-34 to go to committee very quickly, on the same day we will send the National Housing Act. That I can do any time next week.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I hate to say it but what the Government House Leader said is not true. I made no such commitment with regard to raising this question at the House Leaders' meeting. There was none and he knows it. I am surprised that he would even indicate that that is the case. He sought the commitment and I refused to give it. If he thinks back on the meeting and searches his mind, I think he would feel an obligation to rise and apologize for having suggested that.

However, with regard to linking the two, the National Housing Act Bill and the Labour Code Bill, I am prepared to pass the Labour Code Bill with one speaker per Party. I cannot get agreement from the Conservatives.

An Hon. Member: Who are you? Are you the Government?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt the good faith of the Hon. Member. I certainly do not intend to apologize because I believe what I said. All I can say is that the Hon. Member has developed the art or the cult of ambiguity. It was very clear to me that we made an agreement not to raise this matter today because we are negotiating it.

You are supposed to go to your caucus next Wednesday, as is the Official Opposition. I do not mind talking about it publicly, but since we have agreed not to raise it—I repeat we had agreed not to raise it—

Mr. Deans: That's not true.

Mr. Pinard: —I just want to live by what I understood. If I misunderstood, that is fine. I do not doubt the good faith of the Hon. Member and I am not upset about what he is saying, but certainly he should not expect me to apologize because I do not feel that I am wrong.

I am saying that we are negotiating as usual as House Leaders. The Bill to which he refers is included in our negotiations and the fact that he has raised it now will not facilitate the passage of the Bill. If anything, it will make it more difficult for me to pass it. However, I will still try to do my best to allow the Bill to be passed before the end of June, provided the Hon. Member and his Party are reasonable and also allow other legislation to be dealt with.

The very simple request is to allow the Canada Labour Code Bill to go to committee in less than a day, provided that at the same time, after two days of debate, we allow Bill C-37 respecting the National Housing Act to be sent to committee on the same day. That is a very simple proposition. If the Hon. Member is sincere and acts in good faith, as I believe he is, he will agree to that. That is the answer that I was waiting for. I am still waiting.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader says that he does not doubt the good faith of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. I must say that I am sorry to report to the House that I do.

I have not been in this job very long. My understanding of the responsibility of House Leaders is that when we have meetings our negotiations are to be carried on in good faith and in confidence. There is a process of negotiation that takes place. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party, that my mandate involves ensuring that Parliament is productive and passes the legislation that should be passed.

Our position is well known to the Government House Leader. When someone stands in the House and attributes a position taken in the course of negotiations that is wrong and misleading with respect to our position on the Canada Labour Code, I can only say that it brings shame on that member.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am not going to be away all next week like the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. He makes a big show before he goes away. He will not be in the House of Commons or Canada. I will not stand here and be a hypocrite. If he wants to carry on the negotiations in public and if he wants us to participate with him in the same room, he better rethink whether he is going to discuss what goes on in House Leaders' meetings.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you look carefully at the record of what I said. I made no reference whatsoever to anything that happened at House Leaders' meetings. Absolutely none. I made absolutely no reference to today's House Leaders' meeting. I did not make any reference to what was discussed at the House Leaders' meeting. The references were made by the Government House Leader and the House Leader for the Official Opposition.

I simply asked that we come to some understanding with regard to a piece of legislation that I have been asking about since it was introduced. We have been asking that there be some clear understanding on the record of how that Bill is to be dealt with. I am prepared to enter into agreements on legislation at any time, as I frequently do, in order to try to expedite the business of the House of Commons.

As far as my absence next week is concerned, perhaps the Hon. House Leader for the Official Opposition would like to suggest that perhaps I ought not to be there representing Canada at the D-Day Remembrance, as I have been asked to be. Maybe he thinks that is not important in the over-all scheme of public business. Maybe he feels that we ought to ignore the request of the veterans who have asked that I take part. Perhaps that is his attitude.

Mr. Speaker: It is the interpretation of the Chair that the request for unanimous consent has been refused.

PETITIONS

MS. McDONALD—TREATMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition supporting my Private Member's Motion concerning injustices to Japanese Canadians. This is a petition signed by a large number of people, including some in my riding of Broadview-Greenwood, many others throughout Toronto and the surrounding area as well as Ottawa. They ask that the many injustices committed against Canadians of Japanese origin and after World War II be responded to with an acknowledgement of these injustices.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to acknowledge the loss of dignity and human suffering, to enter into negotiations with representatives of the Japanese Canadian community for compensation for the wrongs committed and to re-examine the War Measures Act in the spirit of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to the end that such injustices never recur.

MR. KING—ACTION AGAINST PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to lay before the House a petition which attests to the stated concerns of 89 residents of the riding of Okanagan-Similkameen who have affixed their signatures to an objection which states that they object to any form of pornography depicting women or children in degrading and sadistic sexual roles. They also object to the purchasing of films of children being abused sexually for therapeutic use on sexual offenders in Canadian prisons. They further state that enforced regulatory measures must be taken to prohibit the entrance and use of this material in Canada.

As a result of these convictions, these constituents pray and beseech the House to consider this vital issue and to introduce a satisfactory Bill into Parliament to fight the war against obscenity and all flagrant forms of indecency.

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA OIL AND GAS AGREEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the question to the House, I draw its attention to a discrepancy between the English and French versions of the title of the Bill and the wording of the royal recommendation as they appeared in yesterday's Order Paper. The English version in both cases was correct. In today's Order Paper, the French version in both cases has been corrected and the title of the Bill and the wording of the royal recommendation are in conformity in both official languages. I draw this to the attention of the House, but I see no difficulty in putting the question on the motion for leave to introduce the Bill at this time.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-43, an Act respecting the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement on Offshore Oil and Gas Resource Management and Revenue Sharing and to make other related and consequential amendments.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—REVENUE CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty:

That this House regrets the failure of the Government to satisfactorily protect the civil liberties of Canadian taxpayers in their dealings with the Department of National Revenue and calls upon the Government to implement without delay the recommendations of the Progressive Conservative Task Force on Revenue Canada and, in particular, to curtail the Department's powers of search and seizure under Section 231 of the Income Tax Act, to guarantee taxpayers the right to a fair hearing on disputed reassessments before having to make payments or post security, to create a Taxpayers' Bill of Rights, and to provide an adequate system of appeals of unfair decisions concerning collections.

And of the amendment of Mr. Althouse to remove the period at the end of the motion and add the following words:

—and further, to recognize the inequity of the appeal process by guaranteeing to taxpayers who are succesful in an appeal through the courts that their legal costs will be paid for by Revenue Canada.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, just before the luncheon adjournment I introduced an amendment to the motion before us today. I noticed when I received the "blues" over the lunch hour that when I introduced the amendment, some Hon. Members seemed to think that indeed there were now guarantees which recognized the problems of taxpayers appealing their cases before the courts. They shouted that the Government would now permit Revenue Canada to pay legal costs when taxpayers are proven to be in the right. I have a slightly different understanding of what is a guarantee.

I recognize that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) has directed his Department to pay the cost of such appeals when the Department is clearly in the wrong. However, I do not think that is a guarantee which will be of any good to my constituents who run into difficulty next year, the year after or 10 years from now. Indeed, constituents have experienced problems with the Minister and with the Department interpreting somewhat differently that same law of Parliament. When I talk about guarantees, I mean guarantees in the form of a law or Bill passed in the House of Commons which makes it clearly understood where the responsibility lies. This is what we will be voting upon later this afternoon.

I should like to deal with some of the cases to which I referred just prior to the luncheon adjournment. For example, a small farmer who is in his late fifties or early sixties, has farmed all his life on a small acreage, raised his family and has run into a succession of crop failures due to hail and frost for four years in a row, has no choice but to go out and work. The very fact that he did this in his late fifties or early sixties got him into trouble under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. An assessor in the Department decided that because crop failure forced him to go out and work, according to the rules he was suddenly a hobby farmer, even though he had lived and worked on that farm all his life.

On the fifth year, as luck would have it—and it was purely luck—he showed a profit from his crop. He had that argument to make when the Department decided to press its case and take him to court. The poor man had no recourse but to obtain legal assistance from a lawyer and pay the legal costs. The case reached the point where the prosecuting attorney looked at it and decided that there was really no case to win in court. Therefore he telephoned my constituent's lawyer and said: "Why do we not get the Department to change the allocation and, instead of putting him under no losses, allow him to operate under the restricted farm loss section?" This meant he could have losses of up to $2,500 per year. Since the difference was somewhere between $3,000, the amount of the original assessment, and $600 to $700 under the new assessment, the lawyer convinced his client that it was the way to go. Instead of being assessed at something in the neighbourhood of $3,000, my constituent paid between $600 and $700 to the Department of National Revenue and a legal bill of something over $1,000. Had he and thousands of other small taxpayers been guaranteed in law that the Department would be responsible for paying the legal costs if the case were pursued, he would have pursued it, showed that he was indeed a farmer and liable to no taxation. The legal costs would have rested on the shoulders of the Department rather than his own. As it turned out, he paid out nearly as much in combined legal and tax fees as he would have paid had he paid the original assessment.

Thousands of small taxpayers are in this position. They have the choice of fighting the case and paying more in legal fees than what the assessment is, or simply caving in, paying the assessment and writing it off to experience. It is necessary to have guarantees written into the law of Canada, not into the operating procedures of the Department or leaving it to ministerial discretion. There should be guarantees from this House of Commons that taxpayers' rights are clear and guaranteed to them.

I have a number of other cases I want to point out to the House to show where I believe the responsibiilty of tax collectors and tax assessors has been overrun. I cite the case of a younger farmer who ran into some financial difficulties. His best choice was to sell the farm and leave farming. He sold the farm. Because of the requirement in our tax law that allows the principal residence to be free from capital gains tax, he worked out an agreement with the buyer of the property, which included the farmhouse, as to the valuation to be put on that house. They agreed that it should be done at about $30,000. Taxes were filed and paid accordingly.

The subsequent buyer of the property decided to move the farmhouse into town and put it on a lot and foundation, which cost him $5,000. He moved the house on to it and sold the property for $35,000, which is a clear indication that the house was worth $30,000. An assessor came to reassess his claim. The assessor only looked at the broken basement on the farm and never looked at the house. He never interviewed the buyer of the house or the subsequent seller after the original buyer resold it. He did no ground work. On the basis of the broken foundation, which naturally was broken because the movers broke down the sides to get the house off it, he decided that the house could not have been worth $30,000 and reassessed him. The case has been in the appeal process for two and a half years.

These types of things should not happen. On some occasions, I dare say, we have incompetent assessors, people who are perhaps trying to rush through too many cases. I do not know what the excuses are, but they do not do a complete and proper job. Because of that and because there is not adequate protection in the Act for individuals who are attempting to play the game fairly, live by the rules, be fair in their self-assessment, and are subsequently proven to have been fair-minded people in their assessment of what they owe in taxes, they have been harassed by the Department. There have been demonstrations of incompetence. It is only fair that the laws of the country be tightened up and changed in Parliament to guarantee that those taxpayers so harassed will have their costs paid when proven to be innocent of the charges laid by the Department.

It is extremely important to discuss and to have in this motion a guarantee from the House of Commons that taxpayers' interests will be looked after when they are taken to court by the Department of National Revenue. When the taxpayer is proven to be correct in his self-assessment, it is the Department and not the taxpayer who should pay the cost of that defence.

I see my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I have just a simple question. Can the Hon. Member tell me whether his Party was aware of the change in policy earlier today when it moved the amendment?

Mr. Althouse: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we were.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there other questions or comments? If not, continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, how interesting it is that the NDP has put forward this amendment to our motion. For the last two or three years we have been battling Revenue Canada. Where has the NDP been? We have heard very little from these people. Now they bring forth an amendment to a motion that is clearly past history. This situation was addressed in the Budget. On April 25, the Minister released a further amendment to his Budget, lifting the ceiling on the costs that are paid by taxpayers who have won their case. They are trying to play catch-up, and it is reprehensible.

When I was elected as a Member of Parliament, little did I know that I was destined to spend a good portion of my political life corresponding, questioning, arguing and fighting with a huge federal bureaucracy called Revenue Canada. If I had been forewarned, I would have surely returned to university and taken a double-barrelled degree in accounting and law. As a matter of fact, I would have enrolled in law school in Philadelphia, because I am convinced that only a Philadelphia lawyer could ever hope to do battle with Revenue Canada and come out on top.

What I have learned over the last few years has at time dismayed, discouraged and even disgusted me. I must quickly admit, however, that there have been occasions in dealing with the Department when I and my staff have received prompt, courteous and fair treatment on behalf of my constituents. There are many good and dedicated personnel in the 20,000 people who work for the Department. Unfortunately, there are the other type as well, and they should be, and will have to be, dealt with as they deserve.

Naturally, one must keep in mind that in many situations Revenue Canada employees are simply following the guidelines and interpretations of legislation passed by Parliament. Tax legislation endorsed by Parliament is obviously the root cause of most problems that we run into, all of which can be exacerbated by the attitudes of personnel whose job it is to collect taxes; not a pleasant task at the best of times, as has been recorded down through the ages.

I feel certain that there are very few Members of Parliament who, if they really understood the income tax legislation they were asked to pass, would ever vote for it. For years, Ministers of Finance have continued to table tax legislation written by bureaucratic drafters that is continually more complicated and incomprehensible. Much of it reads like fine print in an insurance policy. Those drafters probably never really intended to bring forth rules and regulations which, when interpreted to the letter, could literally bankrupt taxpayers and give powers expected only in a police state. However, that is what they have done and that is what we have done. The Act now is so large, complicated and convoluted that I do not think there is anyone in this country who really understands it. Members of Parliament henceforth should be certain, in fact they must ensure, that tax legislation is clearly understood, its ramifications clearly explained, before ever voting in favour of it. If only it were possible to scrap the entire Act and put in its place something clear and simple, it would be much better, because that is what Canadians want. I do not think that any administration will ever have the fortitude to do what the majority of the people wish. One becomes rather cynical in this place. So often, people never receive the commonsense things that they want.

It was actually four years ago that I received my baptism respecting Revenue Canada. I recall that my office had been contacted by two ranchers in Williams Lake, British Columbia, a part of my constituency, who claimed to be having tax problems. I met with them on my next regular trip to my riding and was presented with two similar tales of woe, both of which I could not believe. Without going into great detail, let me say that both had been reassessed under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, a particularly stupid, ambiguous, poorly drafted and odious rule, and both feared huge tax bills.

Both of these men, because of hard times, had taken jobs off the ranch to augment their farm incomes. Both had large families and were struggling to stay in business. Both were working along with their wives day and night to keep from going under. Both were good, honest Canadian folk who were trying to do what their forefathers had done and succeeding, until they were descended upon by the collectors of tax. While everyone agreed that the situation facing my constituents was most unfair, we lost both appeals, and as the men involved had no money to hire expensive professional help, they had to give up and they had to pay up. One survived and one did not.

About one year later, it suddenly became evident that there was an audit blitz going on in certain parts of my constituency and that the target was the small farmers and ranchers. Hundreds were audited and reassessed. People were left stunned and in a state of shock. We learned that this was going on in other provinces as well. Farmers were being targeted as had been fishermen a year or two before for what the Department refers to as a project "L" audit.

This concern was raised time and again in the House and we then progressed to the situation concerning quotas. Several of my colleagues did a superb job of drawing attention to this disgusting process. Finally, as Members know, after the Minister refused to appoint an all-Party task force to investigate the operations of his Department, our leader appointed a Tory task force on Revenue Canada. It was my good luck—although sometimes I wondered about that—to be appointed as a member of that task force.

Because I had received so many complaints from farmers respecting Section 31 of the Act, I took special interest in such cases as they came before us. I continued to watch for what I felt was a typical case and I selected one to present today. This particular case concerns the plight of a couple, both of whom are medical practitioners, who are raising horses in the Fraser Valley of British Columbia. In 1969, because of a lifetime interest in horses, this couple decided to develop a racing stable. In 1970, they organized this venture as a bona fide business. Books were set up by a chartered accountant. A trainer and grooms were hired and salaries, feed costs, bills for tack, vets, farriers and other bills were all paid. At the end of this first year, a reasonable profit was recorded, which in itself is praiseworthy, and the couple paid income tax.

At this point Revenue Canada entered the picture and informed these people that because they were both professionals, they were not allowed to have more than one source of income. Consequently, all capital costs incurred in setting up the business were disallowed, resulting in a large reassessment. This reassessment was paid. At that time, Revenue Canada indicated that under Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, Revenue Canada would in future only permit costs of up to $5,000 to be deducted annually. In spite of this initial setback, this couple went ahead. The enterprise expanded and enjoyed a fair measure of success.

In 1975-76, their business was re-audited and everything was found to be in order. In 1977, because of the success of this business, they decided to expand into horse breeding and consequently purchased a small farm for this purpose. The farm was run down and they spent a considerable amount of money in its upgrading. The wife took charge of raising the horses and the husband took out a licence as a trainer.

In the spring of 1983, Revenue Canada commenced a further audit. All records and receipts plus a 13-page letter of information covering the period from 1979 to 1982 were submitted to Revenue Canada. The auditor in charge was asked repeatedly to visit the farm but refused to do so. To this day, no Revenue Canada employee has done so. In the guidelines to auditors who are doing a Section 31 audit, it is recommended that the auditor visit the farm. At no time was this done in this particular case.

On May 31, 1983, a letter from Revenue Canada was received by these people stating that the provision for the deducting of $5,000 per year in expenses was rescinded for the years in question because the auditor claimed that there was no expectation of profit. A reassessment was made, which the couple immediately appealed. As soon as the notice of appeal was lodged, the taxpayers began to receive threatening phone calls from Revenue Canada collectors stating that if they did not pay the assessed amount, they were liable to be sent to jail. Ironically, after being disallowed costs because of no reasonable expectation of profit, a profit was actually made in 1982 and 1983.

These taxpayers have been fighting this case ever since. They have spent a small fortune on professional assistance and have had a good portion of their bank credit tied up in a letter of credit payable to Revenue Canada. I personally investigated this case as did my colleague in whose constituency these people reside. Their story is irrefutable and has been presented publicly in great detail. These people are good, hardworking, honest individuals who believe in Canada and are trying to survive in business in spite of the bungling and harassment of Revenue Canada. What is even worse is that, as I said at the outset, this is a typical case.

To say that the situation is ridiculous is a gross understatement. It is nothing short of disastrous and is a travesty of justice. Hundreds of farmers across the country are in similar circumstances all because of a section of the Income Tax Act that is clearly accomplishing nothing but is in reality destroying incentive and causing bitterness and ruin.

As I see it, the essential problem is that in many cases the taxpayers know that they are right. They understand the legislation and their current position with regard to that legislation. In addition, they know that if they appeal, a tax court will eventually rule on their case. However, that ruling comes after they have paid and after they have put up the hard earned money which they did not think they should have remitted in the first place. In addition, after shelling out for these unexpected taxes, many of them cannot afford to defend themselves against a Government that already has their money. This is clearly an injustice.

Because these citizens are at an overwhelming disadvantage, they are prepared, out of absolute fear, to accept payment plans and halfway deals from the Department. The taxpayer knows that he is right, but he is willing to pay the tax anyway because he risks losing his business, his house, his pay cheque and his savings before obtaining the right to an impartial review of the situation. All too often, it appears to be less expensive to pay than to fight. Is the Government protecting the civil liberties of Canadians in these cases? I simply do not see how it is doing so.

It is interesting to note that on a recent trip to British Columbia, Mr. John Turner, one of the Liberal leadership candidates, was asked about reforms to the tax law of Canada. In response, he said:

> I will look very carefully into the Administration of that system. I will read the report that Mr. Beatty, the Conservative Member of Parliament, has put together—as a matter of fact I've read it. And, if I'm in a position of authority I'll see that the Administration of the Act is brought back into unquestioned equity and fairness.

That is a fine statement. It is interesting that the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) is a supporter of Mr. Turner. I certainly do not think that Mr. Turner is a very strong supporter of the present Minister of National Revenue.

The power of the Department is so insurmountable that the taxpayer is completely at the mercy of the collector. The taxpayer will have the right to a hearing sometime in the future, but in the meantime his whole livelihood could be taken away. The situation is pitiful. Re-assessed taxpayers feel that they are taking on the whole world and no one can offer them the guarantee of a fair and impartial review before payment of disputed tax. Taxpayers receive conflicting advice and guidance from the Tax Department, tax accountants, lawyers and politicians. They are left alone to evaluate the conflicting advice with no indication of their personal rights. Tax officials offer them deals and remind them of the enormous powers of enforcement which the Department has. Tax accountants maintain that the returns they file on behalf of taxpayers, which are under dispute, are still correct. In Section 31 cases, lawyers—if they can be afforded—say that the law is in a state of flux. National Revenue has the advantage at the moment, but important cases are currently before the courts, and that could be changed. Politicians argue that the law should be changed. Consultative groups and committees have been set up, but the process is slow and taxpayers cannot rely on them. If a taxpayers' bill of rights such as the one proposed by the task force existed, these people would at least be guaranteed the right to a review of their tax situation before having to pay disputed taxes.

It seems that Canada now subscribes to the Napoleonic form of jurisprudence, at least where Revenue Canada is concerned. Thus, the accused stands guilty as charged and the onus is on him to prove his innocence at great personal cost and inconvenience. This is diametrically opposed to the basic tenet of our common law whereby the accused is presumed innocent until the courts prove him guilty. It must be changed. In my mind every Canadian should be guaranteed these rights. In order to provide these rights, we should adopt a bill of rights as proposed by the PC task force on Revenue Canada.

In closing I would like to read a short portion from a submission which was made to the task force. It states very clearly the feelings of many taxpayers of the country. In part it reads:

> In summary, then, we have presented in detail just one case, which we believe shows an overbearing bureaucracy at its worst. Countless other examples exist—you have heard many of them already during your deliberations.
> Are all these people, as Revenue Canada would have us believe, all deliberate tax evaders? Are all these Canadians dishonest entrepreneurs, trying to beat the system? We don't think so. We are a generally peace-loving people, and tolerant probably to a fault. But we have reached the end of our tether, and we demand that something be done to right the inequities in this system, and restore to us the dignity and consideration which is our right.
> If this Task Force accomplishes nothing else, it must seek to make Parliament curb these unwarranted and unjustified powers of the bureaucrat over his employers, namely the besieged taxpayers of Canada, and allow the taxpayer the right to redress through the courts.

That is the reason for the debate today. We have done enough talking. We have done enough consulting. We have scores of proposals for change to act upon. The only logical thing to do now is to act. We must move quickly and decisively to institute the important changes that have been proposed so that Canadians once again can rely on an efficient, fair and voluntary tax system.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. Are there any questions? The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Robinson).

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has mentioned a number of what might be called horror stories with regard to the implementation of the Income Tax Act. I wonder if he could tell the House if all of the cases are very recent and if they are presently being acted upon efficiently and effectively by people in the Income Tax Department.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, there were some 300 oral submissions and 100 written submissions brought before the task force in its hearings. Some of the cases go back 10 years or 15 years. Many of the cases are current, but the Section 31 cases basically go back to 1978-79. Some of those cases are being acted upon, but I am not sure with what diligence or speed. It seems to me that many of them are hung up in the appeal process and the Department is waiting for court decisions. There is a tremendous amount of apprehension and unease among taxpayers. They do not know whether or not they owe money. In many cases, the taxpayers have had to sell out because they have had to pay before their appeals were heard. If they could not raise the money, they had to sell some of their equipment, stock and, in some cases, their real estate. The whole situation must be addressed and addressed very quickly.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I agree that these matters must be addressed and that they must be addressed quickly. However, I would ask the Hon. Member if he knows of recent cases in which taxpayers are not receiving compassion and consideration in accordance with the dialogue which has been going on in the House for the past six months.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, it is my experience, since we have started to raise this issue and since the task force began its work, that we are getting a much better service from the Department, at least in my constituency. There are hundreds of cases. Very few of them have come to an end. The majority of cases are still in progress.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member because I have problems in my constituency with regard to income tax cases. I am sure every Member has. But I would like to ask one further question. He referred to a Napoleonic Code approach in the Income Tax Act. I would point out to him that, of course, it is a negative piece of legislation in that people are guilty and must prove themselves innocent as opposed to the normal trial situation in which a person is innocent until proven guilty. I appreciate that point. Maybe it is something which does have to be addressed. However, I wonder if the Hon. Member realizes that amendments to the Income Tax Act would have to be made through the Department of Finance and the Minister of Finance and not through the Department of National Revenue and the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Greenaway: I certainly do realize that. It must be taken into account by the Minister of Finance. I know that he has made one move toward correcting the Section 31 situation and has appointed a group to look into it. However, it took the Minister three and a half months just to appoint the group. Lord knows how long it will take for that group to report and how long it will be before action is taken.

I would also remind the Hon. Member that in the United States the situation is the other way around. Taxpayers do not have to pay money until they are found guilty. If a taxpayer is deemed to have been using the system to try to delay his payment of taxes, he can be assessed and fined for a spurious attempt to delay the payment of his tax.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no further questions or comments, for continuing debate, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to point out that, in my view, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) has brought before the House a very interesting and timely motion. It follows the filing of income tax returns for the year 1983 and it also follows the concerns which have been expressed in the House for many, many months. I am sure every Member of the House of Commons share the same concerns as the Hon. Member. I share those concerns and I think that it is most timely that we are considering it further in the House today.

The Hon. Member, I am sure, is concerned about the fairness of the tax system, the rights of the individual, the Public Service versus the taxpayer relationship and, of course, service to the public. I would like to make a few comments on the latter point. It must be evident by now, Mr. Speaker, even to Members of the Opposition, that Revenue Canada, Taxation is currently engaged in a process which is substantially increasing service to taxpayers in Canada. Furthermore, proposed changes to the legislation are designed to support and enhance this upgrading in service. There is no question, Mr. Speaker, but that additional improvements will also result from the study being conducted by Woods-Gordon, the group commissioned by the Department to study the entire operations of Revenue Canada, Taxation. This study, which is headed by Mr. W. A. Farlinger, will identify areas for improvement for the longer term. In the meantime, there are a number of steps which have already been taken by the Minister. Operational changes to improve service include additional staff, increased tax advisory service by the Department, and greater access to the Department.

I would like to outline briefly some of the improvements which are already made, and then provide an indication of just how taxpayers will benefit from the proposed changes contained in the last Budget.

The Department has added more than 1,000 person years to provide the public with a faster and more complete tax information service. This is clearly a commitment on the part of the Department, and also an indication of the priority this Government places on service by Revenue Canada Taxation. The increase in almost 40 per cent of the total number of additional person years authorized by the federal Government for the current fiscal year. Revenue Canada has also established feedback procedures which will make the Department more accessible as well as provide a means to measure taxpayers' satisfaction in their dealings with the Tax Department. I am glad to see this happen because, in my view, this is indeed very important.

I think it is significant that the Minister has issued a number of directives which were subsequently supported by recommendations contained in briefs presented to the Woods-

Gordon group. I assume this also includes the brief presented by the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe. This is a clear indication that modifications to a government service are in line with the wishes of the public which is being served.

Included in these directives are instructions to put in place a means of monitoring and reporting on taxpayer satisfaction. These reports will be provided to the Minister on a quarterly basis beginning in September of this year. The Department will also be introducing surveys, questionnaires and interviews to identify the level of taxpayer satisfaction in the areas of audit, assessment and appeal activities. All three of these areas are, in my view, tremendously important and I am happy they are being attended to in this way.

Another area of increased service to the public is a recent pilot project which saw the creation of nine seasonal tax assistance centres for the peak filing season. These centres were established for the sole purpose of making the Department more accessible and making information more readily available to the tax paying public. The effectiveness of this service, which was available to approximately 300,000 taxpayers across the country, is now being evaluated. Depending on the outcome of that evaluation, this additional face to face assistance may well become a permanent feature in coming years. I would also point out, Mr. Speaker, that this service is in addition to the existing network of some 30 district offices and the several sub-offices which were introduced in the last few years.

I believe the spirit in which the taxpayer service is being upgraded is embodied in a recent letter from the Minister of Revenue Canada, Taxation to his Deputy Minister, Mr. Harry Rogers. I believe most Hon. Members already have a copy of that letter. It is a letter dated April 2, 1984. I will not read all of the letter but there are certain parts which are quite relevant at this time. That letter, in part, covered the following points:

> Letters and messages to taxpayers should be reviewed and, if necessary, revised to make them more understandable, personalized and courteous.

This, of course, is in respect of the attitude of the Department of National Revenue about which so many people have complained. Another point in the letter was:

> Where appropriate, correspondence should include an outline of taxpayers' rights and responsibilities.

This, in my view, is absolutely essential as a step in the right direction. Other points in the letter were:

> Officials of the Department should consider the introduction of more storefront services and additional sub-offices to make tax help more accessible to more Canadians.
> The Department should ensure the establishment of liaison committees with tax practitioners in each of the district offices and examine ways to more effectively distribute interpretive material to taxpayers.

There is now under way, Mr. Speaker, a process which will generally ensure greater personal contact with taxpayers, provide additional checks and balances to protect the rights of taxpayers, and provide training of department staff to better ensure the fair and equitable application of the legislation. In fact, all training will reflect a commitment to taxpayer service and the communication of taxpayer rights. I feel that is absolutely essential.

These measures have been put in place, Mr. Speaker, to provide better service to taxpayers and, at the same time, to maintain public confidence in our self-assessment system of taxation because, without that public confidence, the system will not work. I believe we have some confidence, and I hope and trust we will have more in the future, because the vast majority of Canadian taxpayers have little or no problem with Revenue Canada, Taxation. Notwithstanding the media attention, less than half of 1 per cent of taxpayers filed notices of objection last year. Of these, the majority were settled at the local level to the taxpayers' satisfaction. That leaves the balance of about 16 million taxpayers with routinely filed and processed returns. I doubt very much if many private sector enterprises enjoy such a low rate of unsatisfied customers. Nevertheless, the numbers of unsatisfied taxpayers should be further reduced. It is hoped that many of these proposals will be helpful in this regard.

I believe it is also important to note, Mr. Speaker, that the steps I have outlined represent only the beginning of the general upgrading of service to taxpayers. More long-term improvements will follow the study by the Woods-Gordon group and, certainly, changes in the Budget will have a lasting effect when they are passed into law. That brings me to the other vital player in this process of change and improvement to taxpayer service, namely the Department of Finance. As Hon. Members know, the Department of Finance is the source of budget change, and the last Budget provided for a number of changes in the Income Tax Act which will directly affect taxpayers. Proposed simplification of the legislation will not only provide tax savings for a number of groups, but will also substantially reduce paper work for almost 300,000 small companies. In fact, Mr. Speaker, approximately two-thirds of the legislation relating to small business will actually be removed from the books. That is really a step in the right direction. Small business is going to be very happy about that.

Proposed changes in the Budget will also exempt in the order of 350,000 senior citizens from having to pay quarterly tax instalment payments, and the same holds true for about 50,000 small businesses. Other measures will make it easier for taxpayers to file an objection to an assessment, and there is now no restriction on the amount a taxpayer may be awarded in costs upon completion of a successful appeal. I believe this satisfactorily takes care of the amendment to the motion which was put forth by the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party.

All these measures are in addition to existing services such as the more than 600 different forms and guides produced to assist a wide variety of taxpayers in filing returns. To further improve communications and help develop stronger ties with the business and financial communities, the Department established the taxation advisory committee in 1970. Composed of tax experts from these sectors, the committee meets regularly with departmental officials to offer constructive criticism of the Department's policies and procedures. Departmental officials also meet annually with representatives of the joint committee of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and the Canadian Bar Association. I understand that the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe has a copy of the latest publication of both the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and the Canadian Bar Association. Unfortunately, I have not received a copy as yet. He seemed to be able to get it much more readily than myself.

To help taxpayers plan or make decisions involving complex business transactions, the Department also offers an advanced rulings service.

• (1610)

These initiatives, Mr. Speaker, demonstrate the good faith of a government which sincerely wants to encourage open dialogue with all sectors of the tax-paying public. The wide variety of tax information material made available free of charge illustrates an awareness of the special needs of the many different groups and individuals who participate in the self-assessment system. Take for example the information circulars and interpretation bulletin series, to which I am sure many Hon. Members subscribe. Intended primarily for lawyers, accountants and other tax consultants, these publications explain the Department's administrative interpretation of tax law as the Department's own auditors and assessors apply it. I think it is fair to say that there are few Departments in the federal Government which have greater direct contact with the general public. It is equally fair to say that there are few Departments with a greater information flow to and from the general public. The process now under way will not only increase that contact but also increase that two-way flow of information.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There now follows a period of up to ten minutes for questions and comments.

Mr. Beatty: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, but I might start by associating myself with my friend's remarks regarding the NDP amendment. One would be hard pressed to think of a more irrelevant amendment that could be moved. Nothing to date could better characterize the NDP contribution to the Revenue Canada debate than the fact that the task force made its report which recommended lifting that ceiling on the awarding of costs at the Tax Court of Canada on April 8, and on April 25 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) tabled his amendments which did precisely that. A month later the NDP comes along and puts itself squarely in favour of a policy which has already been announced. Certainly one wonders where it has been throughout this debate, if it has been serious about this.

I want to ask my friend about another matter. I was somewhat confused about one part of his speech where he seemed to be implying that the fact that a high percentage of the notices of objections filed by taxpayers are resolved in favour of the taxpayers was proof that the system is working well. Would it not be more correct to argue that in fact it was proof that the Department was wrong, in whole or in part, in 70 per cent of the cases where a notice of objection was filed? Is that not proof of how badly the system is working instead of how well?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, it depends on whose glasses you are looking through and whether you are a pessimist or an optimist. I like to look at things optimistically, and I am looking at it from the right end of the telescope at this time. We are looking for all kinds of improvements, and I think we are going to get them. Probably a great deal of the impetus is a result as well of what the Hon. Member and his colleagues have been trying to do.

Mr. Beatty: If my friend has his optimists glasses on at the present time, does he find it encouraging that there was an increase of something like 36 per cent, year over year, in notices of objections being filed by taxpayers? If he finds it encouraging that 70 per cent of those people are in the right and the Department is in the wrong, would he be doubly optimistic if twice as many notices of objections were filed of which 70 per cent of taxpayers were right and the Department was wrong?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): I think the approach I would like to take is that if the assessors and auditors are doing their job as efficiently and effectively as I hope they are and will be, if not now at least in the future, we will not have as many objections. People will find that they owe the tax and will pay it or make arrangements to pay. I think it is most unfortunate when people have to go through a court process in order to determine if they owe money. I think this is really what the Hon. Member is bringing to the attention of the House.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has a strong interest in civil liberties and the rule of law. Could he take off his Parliamentary Secretary's cap for a moment and put on his MP's cap, and deal with the issue of the Department of Finance and the Department of Justice? He pointed out quite properly that some of the recommendations made in the task force report would require the consent of and initiative on the part of those two Departments. In particular he will be aware of the fact that both the task force and the joint committee of the bar and the CICA recommended that Section 231, the search and seizure powers, be amended to bring them back into line with civil liberties. Is he prepared as a Member of Parliament to recommend to his colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), that in fact such amendments be put in place before this House recesses for the summer or is dissolved for an election?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member brings up a very important point. There is plenty of power there, but it is a question of carrying out the power and responsibility with discretion and feeling to help the individual taxpayer. This is really what we are looking at. It is in part attitudinal. We want to be sure that we are being fair with the taxpayer. I am not afraid of the power; I am only concerned about how it is actually carried out.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, do I understand my colleague correctly? If he is not concerned about the power that is given in the first place but only about the administration, would he not be concerned if the Government were to say that the Department may seize any documents it sees fit irrespective of their relevance or the effect upon civil liberties, and then amend the Act in that way and just hope the officials in the Department will act wisely? Or does he feel the responsibility of Members of Parliament is to ensure that, on the one hand, the Department has all the powers it needs to enforce the law, but that, on the other hand, those powers do not go beyond the basic need and do not offend against basic civil liberties? Does he not feel that Parliament has a direct and very real responsibility to write the law in such a way as to prevent abuses from taking place? Should we not be writing the law for the worst case, not the best case?

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, maybe what we have been doing is writing the law for the worst case and that is why there has been so much power put into it. That is why I think it is a question of how you use the power that is important. There may be extreme cases where you need to have a lot of power, but there are a lot of other cases which do not fall within that ambit. That is where I think discretion has to be shown. Having said that, yes, I agree with the civil libertarians, I agree with freedom of information and the Charter of Rights and so on.

Mr. Beatty: Save the whales.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): I agree that taxpayers have the same rights as any other citizen and they should be properly respected. I understand what the Hon. Member is saying, but all I am saying is that it is the way the Act is perceived and the way the power is used that is of the utmost importance to me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no more questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Don Valley West in debate.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in opening my comments on this motion, I say with great respect to the Parliamentary Secretary that it is not the way in which one applies the thumbscrews to an innocent taxpayer that matters. It is the applying of thumbscrews to an innocent taxpayer that matters. That precisely is the issue that we in the Revenue Canada task force found underlines the whole problem. I know the Parliamentary Secretary is at heart a decent person. I suspect that what we have seen today is a speech prepared by the Department for him and I do not believe they are his words. I say that directly to him, Mr. Speaker, through you.

I may say almost as an aside, Mr. Speaker, that one of the tragedies of our task force was the fact that we had to go out ourselves and that we could not go as a full parliamentary inquiry with Members from the opposition benches, including the Parliamentary Secretary, who would then have seen and heard what we saw and heard. If the Department abuses a taxpayer—and I think the Parliamentary Secretary knows that there are dozens of those cases—it is not whether that abuse is applied or conducted courteously that matters. The Department has done some things which are unbelievable, and if it walks into someone's place of business or property—and in one case we know that happened in advance even of a reassessment notice being issued—and seizes every piece of personal property, it does not matter how courteously that property is seized. What matters is that the property was seized. It is simply that. All the good will in the world, all the attempts to communicate better, do not get at the fundamental issue. The fundamental issue is not treating the taxpayer with courtesy or improving the service of the Department. The fundamental issue is captured absolutely aptly in the words of the joint committee on taxation of the Canadian Bar Association and Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. Their section happens to be in collection procedures, but it applies throughout the whole system. Their first recommendation is:

> The tax liability ought to fall due only after the taxpayer's liability has been established—either by expiration of the period for filing a Notice of Objection, by the appeals process, or by the courts.

That is the fundamental principle. Somehow we have to get through to the Parliamentary Secretary, his Minister, the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and the entire Government that that is the fundamental issue.

I listened with care to the words of the Parliamentary Secretary, as I listened earlier with care to the words of the Minister. They confirm the reason for the need for the motion because the fundamental message has not got through. Earlier today the Minister said that all the rights and protections that Canadian taxpayers need are found in the Charter of Rights. That is not good enough. If we had thought that was good enough we would not have recommended a taxpayers' bill of rights. There is no right in the Charter of Rights which guarantees that a taxpayer will be presumed, treated and regarded as innocent until proven guilty. There is a law of this House and of the Parliament of Canada which says that the Department has the right to presume that a taxpayer is guilty until the taxpayer proves himself or herself innocent. In fact, the law of the land is what is at fault. No charter of right protects against that law as it is written.

If it is the attitude of the Government that the taxpayers of the country have to go to court to have that law declared unconstitutional, that is the clearest evidence from the very top of the Government down that the attitude which is expressed in that law, which is the problem, is accepted by the Government of Canada. The Government of Canada could stand before this House and the people today and say that it finally understands that it must create fundamental protections for Canadians when the Tax Department comes to them. The Government does not choose to do that today in response to this motion tabled by the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). The Government repeats the old chestnuts.

For instance, earlier the Minister made the statement that every freedom carries responsibility. Of course it does. Every right carries obligations. Of course it does. He went on to talk about the freedom that is guaranteed in the self-assessment system as though the self-assessment system were created to create freedoms. The self-assessment system exists because it is the single best way to collect taxes at the least cost. That is its reason for existence. It is not to guarantee freedoms.

He used the following argument, and it is specious. The vast majority of Canadians have their taxes deducted at source. I do not know of any taxpayer who has his tax collected at source or any employer who employs employees who has any freedom to do anything but collect taxes at source. He then went on to say that those who do not have their taxes deducted at source have to be checked by the Department in order for the system to be just so that those who do not have their taxes deducted at source are found and encouraged to pay the taxes they owe. The whole case put by the Minister is that those who have their taxes collected at source are clearly honest and can be trusted—the translation is that they have no choice—and everyone else should be checked. If you start from the premise that everyone who is self-employed or files an independent tax return in the country needs to be checked, you have built into that premise an assumption that they are guilty and are trying to do something other than pay the taxes they owe.

That is precisely the attitudinal problem that members of the task force found throughout the country in terms of the way the Department approaches a taxpayer. We could never get this clear to Members on the opposite side. We thought perhaps that we would never find an occasion on which to demonstrate the problem to Liberal Members. Recently, when studying the Estimates of the Minister we persuaded the Government to bring to the committee some of the training films which were used and may still be used. Although there is some lack of clarity about whether they are going to be abandoned, I believe they should be. At this point it appears that they are going to be used.

We saw a film in which an interviewer was interviewing actors portraying senior members of the Department on the question of the powers of the Department. They were discussing whether they were broader than the British and American powers. Senior members of the Department were proud to say that there is no guarantee of one's right not to incriminate oneself as there is in the United States. We do not have that in Canada. Departmental officials sat before the committee and said that this is only for the big companies, those people with gross sales of more than $12 million a year. I remember that Liberal Members opposite looked at us and asked what we were talking about. They said that those powers are only applied against big companies and that big companies should have big treatment.

We asked whether there was not a preamble to that film recorded by the then Deputy Minister. The departmental officials admitted that there was in fact a preamble. Having seen the film in the morning, the Department was able to find that introduction to the film that afternoon. They ran the introductory piece for members of the committee, including Liberals who had been present in the morning. Lo and behold, the Deputy Minister introduced the film with the following statement, which I paraphrase; "You are going to see a film now about techniques that we use primarily with companies with over $12 million a year in annual sales. However, these are the same techniques we use for all taxpayers and companies in Canada".

For the first time we saw the beginning of shock and awareness on the faces of Liberals on that committee. In the morning they had been assured by senior departmental people that those practices were not used with ordinary taxpayers. Those are practices of fishing expeditions which were touted in the film, the practice of trying to go around tax advisers to Canadians and of assuming that there was probably something to find in any audit that was out. In the afternoon the Deputy Minister made perfectly clear to members of the Liberal bench what we already knew from having been on the road. We knew that those were indeed the practices which are used against all taxpayers.

The importance of that is to remember a human thing, that is, that the biggest people in the country have the biggest resources with which to defend themselves. Consequently, across the land it is not particularly the biggest taxpayers who are being abused. Equally, if you are a good assessor or good auditor you tend to get promoted up the system. That means that the best tend to deal with the biggest. Those who have the least capacity to defend themselves get the people who are either new or perhaps, in one sense, not the best or the most aware of the proper interpretations of the Tax Act. The combination is self-evident.

Add to that the situation which occurs when supervisors pass files on to auditors for review and tell those auditors they would not be giving them those files if there was not something to be found in them. The assumption is created at the lowest level of the system that a junior auditor must find something when he is given a file. If a junior auditor has ambition, he or she had better find something in that file in order to have a career.

Although we did not hear from enough members or ex-members of the Department, we did hear from several of them. I will never forget the story told to me by one ex-departmental auditor who appeared before our task force. She told us that we should understand that when she is given a file and returns to say to her supervisor, after conducting an audit, that she found nothing in the audit, she is told by the supervisor that she was wrong because she would not have been given the file if there was not something there. She was told to find it. She said that she re-audited the taxpayer, but still could not find anything. She went back to her supervisor, who told her again that she was wrong because she would not have been given the file if there was not something there. That auditor did what anyone else would do in the same circumstances, she reassessed the taxpayer. That is how she met the goals, the model and role set for her by her boss. The consequence of that is, to put it mildly, difficulty for the taxpayer. It is that type of situation that illustrates excessive use of the Department's powers.

The Parliamentary Secretary asked one of my colleagues if it is true that the Department is treating taxpayers better than previously. The answer is yes, they are being treated better. The local office treatment of my constituents is better at this point than it was a year ago.

However, that is not a defence for keeping the law as it is. It only means that four or five years from now if the Government does not change, God help us if it does not, another group of parliamentarians will have to go on the road again to make the same report and attempt to restore the proper treatment for taxpayers. That misses the whole point.

No taxpayer in this land who believes that he or she does not owe the money that the Government tells them they owe should have to put up one cent or a day in court. If we as the Parliament of Canada do not accept that principle, we are saying that we do not trust the taxpayers, the people who pay us. That is a phenomenal statement for us to even contemplate.

I find it incredible that it is even necessary for the Parties to debate this question or that there should be any delay in changing the basic structure of the system. Our report and the report of the lawyers and chartered accountants make it clear that when the Government believes there is fraud or has reason to move expeditiously it should have that right. But it should go to court first. We also believe that anyone who tries to cheat the rest of us should be subject to severe penalties and the potential awarding of costs by the court.

However, the premise of our report and the report of the chartered accountants and lawyers is that we cannot base our system on the assumption that everyone is a cheat and will be forced to prove his or her innocence. The consequence of that is that the self-assessment system will be destroyed. We will run the risk of people not trusting the Government. They will not report their income and will make the Government go to them. We found in our hearings across the land that that view is beginning to be felt by too many Canadians.

What would you say, Mr. Speaker, to a couple who owned a trailer park and came home from vacation to discover that their house was ransacked? This appeared to have been done by burglars but in fact it was Revenue Canada, that had done it. The Department conducted a net worth audit on that couple, which is a means by which the Department decides what one actually earns and then taxes one on it. You must then prove your innocence. The Department decided that these people had an unreported income of $1.6 million. When the case was finally settle in court and the dust had settled, a reassessment was issued. The Department determined that their taxable income for the year was $20,000. In the meantime their property, their car, their clothes and their radios were seized and sold at a sheriff's auction at a loss. Not once has the Department admitted that it treated those people unfairly. In fact, it was not very long after that that the Department was still after penalties and interests.

I want to close by replying to the comment by the Parliamentary Secretary that one-half of one per cent of cases turn into objections. It is not those cases where there are no disputes that should concern us in this debate. There is no problem with the 15 million taxpayers who file their returns and there is no re-assessment, no objection and no appeal.

It is when there is a dispute that the question of civil liberties and treatment arises. Surely when the taxpayers are winning 70 per cent of the appeals that are launched and when there are well-known cases of excessive use of power, it should take no more than that for the Department to understand that an increasing number of innocent people have been hurt. They are not people who have tried to cheat the system.

It is important to improve the communications practices and to improve the taxpayers' knowledge of the system. The fundamentally important principle, for which we will press until it is accepted, is that we should not have a situation in this land where a taxpayer must prove his innocence against the resources of the Department. There should be a recognition on the part of the Department of Justice, the Department of Revenue and the Government that a fundamental principle of our way of life and justice is that taxpayers should have every opportunity for a day in court. If taxpayers succeed in their day in court they should get their costs and damages if it is deemed appropriate. If we do not accept that principle, then shame on us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I believe that we all agree with the last points made by the Hon. Member. There is no reason to think otherwise.

Surely he realizes that the people who work in the Department of National Revenue are public servants who are also taxpayers. They are only doing the job that they are required to do under the Income Tax Act. While we may differ about how they are doing that job, we agree that they must carry out their functions in accordance with the present law. Does the Hon. Member not agree that the law should be changed but not by the Department of National Revenue but by the Government through the Department of Finance?

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, the people who have been abused do not care which Department changes what law. They are only concerned that the law be changed.

Of course we agree that the law should be changed. That is the whole purpose of the motion. However, it is no defence for maintaining the law as it is for one branch of the Government to say that it is not its fault. Of course the employees in the Department of Revenue are doing what they have been taught, trained and told to do by their superiors. Of course they are implementing law and the practices they have been taught. The question is, when will the Government change the law?

The point of this motion is to say that the Government has had adequate time and knowledge to change the law. All it has to do is to table the change in the House of Commons. We have indicated repeatedly that it will receive quick passage. Instead of asking us whether we know that the Department of Justice has to introduce the law, the Parliamentary Secretary ought to be going to the Minister of Justice and to his superiors and saying that he wants the law changed before the summer, before the election, because it is only right and fair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no further questions or comments, for continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Welland.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like paraphrase the question asked by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley). He asked what was the humane thing to do. When we are attacking institutions, we must remember that these so-called institutions are run by humans. Yes, we agree with his statement that the people in the Department of National Revenue are simply carrying out their responsibilities as they have been trained to do. However, what we are doing is destroying in many ways the people who are carrying out their responsibilities. I hear an Hon. Member opposite laughing. He thinks it is funny when we put extra hardships on these people.

Today we have heard many hardship stories. Perhaps I could put the other side of the story on the record. Approximately 10 days ago I was flying home and I happened to sit beside a gentleman with whom I eventually conversed. I asked him what he did, and he said that he worked for the Government. I asked him three or four questions before he told me that he was a tax assessor. I said: "You fellows have been under a great deal of pressure within the last few months, in the last year". He said: "Yes, and most off it unjustifiably so". I want to put that part of the argument forward on behalf of those people who are carrying out the responsibilities placed on them by the Government of Canada. Tax assessors have never stood in very high repute with their fellow citizens. If taxes were not assessed or collected, how could society have existed as it has?

I should like to deal with two points that were raised by the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). One was the payment of tax under dispute, and the other concerned tax appeals. The Hon. Member suggested that the Government has failed to protect satisfactorily the civil liberties of Canadian taxpayers in their dealings with the Department of National Revenue. That is the crux of his argument and of his motion. He heralded a cry for a guarantee to taxpayers of the right to a fair hearing on disputed reassessments before having to make payments or post security. Is there anyone in the House of Commons who would not agree with that position? It is a reasonable position to take. My friend across the floor is certainly good with slogans. He captured the attention of taxpayers with his battle cry that they must be considered innocent until proven guilty. I agree with this, and this is what is being done in the overwhelming majority of cases. Despite the Hon. Member's ability with slogans, his foundation in fact is somewhat shaky.

I should like to bring forward a few matters which perhaps have not been considered to this point in time. Few tax systems in the world depend upon and operate upon a voluntary reporting of income as does the Canadian system. The Canadian taxpayer is awarded the highest level of trust, of innocence and of basic rights by the very structure of our tax system. It cannot be a system without checks. It cannot be a system operating under naive principles. It is voluntary, but the system is not naive. Does the House not think that after so many years in the tax collection business, the Tax Department and its employees have not seen their fair share of schemes, devices, plans and dodges for evading or avoiding altogether the payment of taxes? Is it not a human trait of some of us perhaps to try to beat the system? Does the House not think that one of the reasons for the complexity of today's tax law stems from the very fact that the wording of every section of the Act has been examined for the smallest, most imperceptible loophole, and that in closing these loopholes the Act has grown in length and in complexity? Does the House not think that without audits, some investigations, cross-references and matching programs, some of us in our human frailty might be tempted to forget to include some of our income or overestimate the expenses or deductions we claim?

While there is in Canada an extremely high standard of compliance with the law, 99.9 per cent, I believe the self-assessment system can be maintained only through a vigilant inspection of tax returns. This does not mean that we check everyone's tax down to the final comma. I am not saying that, but the examination of a taxpayer's books and records to determine accurately the legitimate taxes, interest and penalties payable under the law, is a method used to monitor and maintain the self-assessment system which I believe to be one of the best in the world.

The argument has been put forward that when Revenue Canada reassesses a taxpayer following one of those audits or other types of checks, the taxpayer should not be required to pay the tax assessed if the amount is challenged by an objection or an appeal. In theory, this idea has great merit and in fact I understand that serious consideration is being given to it. However, I must point out the obvious difficulty in taking the position that tax would not be due until all objections or appeals have been settled. It seems obvious that the number of objections and appeals would rise drastically, some based upon very legitimate arguments with an assessment and others, in fairness and in honesty, would be used as a delaying tactic to avoid the immediate payment of the tax. If someone owed $1 million in back taxes—and I know that amount is very high—and if the interest on that money was 10 per cent, that is $100,000 per year that that taxpayer would have over other taxpayers who did not owe that amount of money, if indeed he owed the $1 million of assessment. We must strive for an assessment system which is fair to all taxpayers in Canada.

Mr. Bosley: If you destroy someone for the sake of fairness, that is okay?

Mr. Parent: I cannot hear the Hon. Member. Perhaps he could rise on a point of order.

Mr. Bosley: I will.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Welland has the floor.

Mr. Parent: Clause 43 of the notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act tabled in the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on February 15, 1984 indicated that for taxes in dispute which are payable at any time after that date, taxpayers should be permitted to provide security for payment satisfactory to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières).

I am pleased to inform Hon. Members that Revenue Canada has modified its policy regarding accounts under notice of objection or appeal, so that the Department now accepts any negotiable security in lieu of payment for the duration of the appeal process. This means that the Department does not limit itself to bank letters of guarantee. Of course, where the security may be of fluctuating value such as in bonds or not immediately realizable, a satisfactory payment arrangement may be required as part of the agreement to protect the Department's interests. While the Opposition calls for an end even to the provision of security in cases where the tax is in dispute—and I believe that is what the Hon. Member for Don Valley West was alluding to—I am sure you can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, the dangers inherent in such a move. However, with the possible guarantees that I spoke of, guarantees against frivolous disputes intended only to delay the payment of tax, the question can be taken up for consideration and no doubt will be examined seriously.

My concern continues to rest with that vast majority of taxpayers, really the silent majority from whom we hear few if any complaints, whose taxes are deducted at source and who have little or no cause to dispute their tax assessments. I personally feel that the rights of these taxpayers must be protected at all costs.

We have heard figures in this House in answers from the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Finance that as much as $3 billion a year go uncollected. If that is the case, who is paying for that $3 billion if not the other taxpayers who have their taxes deducted at source? It is we who pay our taxes who are being penalized by those who do not. I have not heard anyone here dispute the fact that $3 billion more in taxes should be collected. I have not heard that addressed. If it has, by whom and when?

I now turn my attention to tax appeals. This matter was raised by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West in his request that we make the whole system more humane. The rights of taxpayers have become the watchword of the day, and rightly so. Every citizen in Canada—I should not say every one because some are too young to pay and some do not earn enough to pay taxes, but the watchword is that the rights of these taxpayers have to be first and foremost. No doubt the wrongs of taxpayers are of somewhat less interest to my colleagues on the other side.

I would like to discuss briefly some of the rights that taxpayers enjoy under the current system, the changes which the Minister of National Revenue has already made in his Department and some of the measures that the Minister of Finance recently introduced that will further ensure the protection of rights of Canada's taxpayers. I will begin by talking about the tax appeals. The Canadian taxpayer has available a system of appeal that reaches right to the Supreme Court of Canada. I must point out that for the vast majority of people who object to a tax assessment, a resolution is found at a much lower level than the Supreme Court, and rightly so.

Let us look at the figures for last year. Of the 45,000 notices of objection filed last year, fully 35,000, as mentioned by the Parliamentary Secretary, were resolved at the local level to the satisfaction of the taxpayer. That is the overwhelming majority. Before examining this figure further, let me also point out that those notices of objection represent one-quarter of 1 per cent of the 16 million taxpayers in Canada. With all respect, that is not a high degree of dissatisfaction.

When the task force set up by the Opposition was going across the country—and perhaps the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe will ask some questions later—were there any people who appeared before the committee who thought the taxation system was fair, or did they only hear from those who, for want of a better term, had a beef to bring forward? Perhaps that could be addressed a little later.

With regard to the degree of dissatisfaction, not only does this performance seem inconsistent with the criticism levelled at Revenue Canada, the premise on which I started my remarks, but I would suggest that it represents a Department more than willing to listen to and accept the objections of taxpayers. Notices of objection are the means of redress for taxpayers written into the Income Tax Act, and the Department publicizes them.

There has been a great deal of talk concerning the cost to the taxpayer in taking this particular route. This too was alluded to by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West. Let me make the point that the initial review at the district office level does not involve cost to the taxpayer. If the taxpayer wishes to engage a representative such as a lawyer or an accountant, this cost is deductible for income tax purposes.

There are no charges in appealing to the Tax Court of Canada and if subpoenas are required, they are provided without charge. Again, if the taxpayer engages an agent, these costs are tax deductible. If taxpayers lose an appeal, they are not required to pay court costs. The Hon. Member must have had this information when he brought up this argument. I hope he does question me. Perhaps he could then let us know whether this information was available to him.

We have recently taken steps to protect the taxpayer even further. Legislation proposed in the Budget presented in this House on February 15 which allowed a judge to award up to $1,000 in costs to the taxpayer has now been modified, removing the $1,000 limit and leaving the award of costs at the discretion of the Tax Court. This proposed legislation also specifically prohibits any such award to the Department of National Revenue.

There has also been a change in one other area. When the Minister appeals a decision of the Tax Court of Canada involving disputed tax not exceeding $2,500 or a disputed loss not exceeding $5,000, the Federal Court will order the Minister to pay all reasonable and proper costs of the taxpayer. The February Budget provides that these amounts be increased to $10,000 and $20,000 respectively, thus increasing the number of appeals eligible for costs. Surely Members opposite will agree that this is going in the right direction. I guess that wanting us to stand here and object to everything they said is not reasonable. I see my time is running out, so I will terminate my remarks.

In addition to the measures recently undertaken by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Revenue has also taken steps to ensure that the taxpayers are fully protected in their dealings with Revenue Canada. The Minister has recently advised his Deputy Minister that a complete evaluation of the appeals function be undertaken to determine its independence of the assessing or audit functions. I hope I will receive some questions. I will be very happy to answer them.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I would not want the Hon. Member to be disappointed. I want to take him up on his invitation. He put a question to me that I can respond to at this point. He asked whether the only people we heard before the task force in the over 300 submissions we received were those who had a gripe with the Tax Department. I suppose the implication of his question was that somehow the only people we would hear were chronic complainers who wanted to destroy the system.

If he put people like the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants in that category as well as the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Canadian Organization of Small Business, the various arts groups which came before us, federations of agriculture and others, that would be a judgment which he would have to make. As a matter of fact, we went out of our way to solicit balanced views, to hear from experts, and indeed we went so far as to indicate that we wanted to receive representations from officials within the tax Department itself. We had hoped to hear from the Deputy Minister and from other senior officials within the Department.

When attempting to get this information, we found that the Minister took the trouble to send a memorandum to every single employee of the Tax Department indicating that they could not come near us and that in no way would they be allowed to speak before us. He put a gag on every single employee within the Department. Now the Hon. Member has the temerity to suggest that we were not seeking to hear other points of view. Of course we were, but the Minister put every possible impediment in our way.

Notwithstanding that, we were able, through groups like the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, to hear good, balanced and very fair opinions. I would be interested to know whether or not the Hon. Member agrees or disagrees with the submission that was made jointly by the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, a submission which was referred to earlier today.

I would like to ask a question of the Hon. Member. He can correct me if I do not quote him correctly, but my understanding is that he said that our system of taxation has the highest degree of trust and protection of the rights of taxpayers of any system in the world. I am interested in how the Hon. Member does his research. Exactly which authority did he refer to when making that statement?

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I have two things to say. The first is that the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe makes the assumption that I am judging the people who appeared before him. To the contrary. He has said that he tried to get a balanced view. My question remains: did he indeed get a balanced view, or did everyone who came before him have a problem? I do not judge these people and these different groups to which he referred. If they came before him, I would hope that they put a balanced view before him.

As far as the appearance before the task force of employees of the Department of National Revenue is concerned, surely they are not the only Canadians in the country who are satisfied with the way the taxation Department is being run. What the Hon. Member would have us believe is that all Canadians are dissatisfied with the taxation system.

Mr. Beatty: False again.

Mr. Parent: I beg your pardon.

Mr. Beatty: Wrong again.

Mr. Parent: There you are. Whatever deductions we make are wrong and whatever deductions he makes and whatever groups he refers to are correct. That does not require argument. I will just let that pass and take it at face value.

The Hon. Member asked me what the source was for my remarks. There are tax systems in the western world, and if he wants a specific quote from a specific publication, I will be happy to table that for him in the very near future, if I can get the information for him. The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) laughs again.

Mr. Malone: Indeed I do.

Mr. Parent: Indeed he does. You can see, Mr. Speaker, that whenever we do not have information that is documented to the nth degree right at our fingertips but say that we will get that information, it is always a cause for rejoicing on the other side. That is because their research is so slipshod that whether they had a day or a week, they would not be able to get the information to us.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue the question of the Hon. Member's research. Is he saying that he simply does not know where he got the information he used to make the assertion that there was the highest degree of trust and protection of the rights of taxpayers in Canada of any system in the world? How could he make a bald assertion like that if he does not have the foggiest idea where he found the information? Second, in what form will he be conveying this information to us? Will he be tabling it in the House or will he send us a letter? Can we release any letter that he sends?

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, any information that I put forward can be released at the discretion of the Hon. Member. I said to him that I did not have the specific quotation. I also gave him my opinion after having looked over some of the tax assessment systems in the western world. I will get him direct quotations if that is what he wants.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Hon. Member through you why he believes that if he were to receive an assessment that was improper, that he knew to be improper and that he could not get resolved at the lowest levels and were thus forced to go to the courts, it would be fairer for him or for any taxpayer to pay the taxes that are claimed to be owing prior to having his day in court? This can be compared with the system that we have recommended and that the chartered accountants and lawyers have recommended whereby the Hon. Member would not have to pay anything until he had had his day in court but interest on the moneys that the courts indicated were owing would run from the day the assessment was issued. In other words, if someone were to make an appeal and lose, they would wind up owing the taxes plus the interest. That is normal. Could the Hon. Member tell me why it is fair for any Canadian, including himself, to be forced to put up what could amount to a very large sum of money which may even bankrupt that person or his business before having his day in court?

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, in my remarks I stated specifically that I do not agree that a taxpayer should have to put up money, so let us start from there. However, today, this very day that we are debating this issue and asking each other questions, it is possible to put up collateral which is not money. Is the Hon. Member saying that this is not the way it should be? Is he saying that he does not agree with this? Perhaps he could give me his views on that.

Mr. Bosley: Sure I can. Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Hon. Member whether he knows that that power to accept security did not begin with the Budget but has always been with the Department? If the Hon. Member were a small businessman who was reassessed and the Department claimed that he owed $50,000, and he had a working capital credit line of $20,000, $30,000 or $40,000, why would it be fair to require him to tie up his working capital in some form of security which, as the Hon. Member knows, would be a liability on the books of his corporation? Why would that be fair when that liability might in fact shut his business down and put it into bankruptcy? That is exactly what has happened in several cases. Why would that be fair when it turns out in the end that his business does not owe a penny in taxes?

Let me ask the Hon. Member a supplementary question because it is part of the same issue. When a business is deemed by the courts to owe tax, why is it left entirely to the discretion of the Minister what security will be taken? Would it not be fairer, when there is a dispute about the payment process, to allow an appeal to the courts in order to find out whether the Department has been unreasonable in refusing the form of security that is available to that taxpayer? That is also a part of our recommendations.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) has one minute to answer the question.

[English]

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked two questions. I agree with the proposition put forward in his second question, so we can put that one out of the way. With regard to the first question, it is my understanding that one can put up collateral which is not money or currency. For example, one can put up a collateral part of one's business or a structure. One could pay money for that later on. That does not tie up the cash flow to which the Hon. Member refers.

Mr. Bosley: Of course it does. That is the point.

Mr. Parent: In my view, if a man has assets in his business which are put up for collateral, that would be fair. As long as one has collateral, it should not be necessary to put up the money. I agree that that has happened and I agree that it should not happen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): This puts an end to the question period. We are resuming debate.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, throughout the course of this debate, not only today but also over the course of this past year, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) has been asking for a taxpayers' bill of rights. The speech made by the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) has now underscored the need for precisely such a bill of rights.

Using some false form of logic, the Hon. Member suggested that if collateral is put up, it somehow justifies everything. He suggested that if one has been charged but not yet heard, it makes everything okay when one puts one's collateral forward. If the Member had had some business experience, he would have known that as soon as collateral is put forward, that limits collateral for any other business enterprise. He would also have known that in many cases tax reassessments are made many years before the hearing process. In effect, he is asking that we simply freeze the capacity of an entrepreneur who has developed some collateral to raise capital against the collateral he has. Why? Because Revenue Canada has made an assessment that the taxpayer believes is wrong.

In the normal legal process an individual pays, or receives punishment for a charge, after the hearing has been held. However, the Hon. Member for Welland would like to see the full payment made and only then hearing held. Had he applied that method to capital punishment, we would be executing people and then, on some occasions, finding that the person was innocent. In effect, he is proposing the same kind of punishment. It will prevent capital flow by causing people to pay the price. Often it is an extensive price for an extended period of time. The damage is done.

Throughout the past year, the Government denied that there was a problem. Then it admitted that there might be a problem with Revenue Canada. Then it admitted in the House of Commons that there was a problem. However, it admitted only that the problems were isolated examples which existed in Kitchener. Then, when it found out that these problems existed in other places, it was basically a day by day and pick by pick method by the Opposition which exposed the Department's incompetence.

Frequently, many issues are raised by all Parties in the House of Commons. However, one of the interesting things about this issue was that shortly after it was raised there was immediate public reaction. People said to our Party, "You are on the right track on this one". The people immediately understood and believed that there was something wrong with Revenue Canada. As all of us will quickly concede, there is no great love affair between Revenue Canada and taxpayers. There are not many Canadians who love to pay income tax. In spite of that fact, most of us believe that in many cases our taxes do some good. I know the old Will Rogers' saying of, "Thank goodness we don't get all the government we are paying for", but nevertheless, we concede that we need a public Treasury.

However, the public is saying that there is something fundamentally wrong with Revenue Canada. We have heard today Hon. Members from the Government side praising the system. They have said that it is a great self-assessment system. When I was elected to Parliament in 1974, about 80 per cent of the farmers in my constituency filled out their own income tax forms. That is my own estimate, and I will have to swallow those words if I am wrong. Today, I doubt if 10 per cent of those farmers fill out their own income tax forms. Whether those are the precise figures or not, certainly that is the trend. Fewer and fewer small business persons today fill out their own income tax forms. I doubt if I could go to any community in my constituency and get two accountants, working separately and apart, to fill out a business person's income tax form and arrive at the same number on the bottom line. The specialists in the field look at this boondoggle of a mess called Revenue Canada regulations and guidelines. The truth is, the specialists will come up with a different set of numbers every time. If that is what the professionals are faced with, then we cannot claim to have a self-assessment system. When I heard the Hon. Member for Welland telling us in his speech that we have the most trustworthy system in the world—ignoring Australia, New Zealand, England and the United States—and claiming that ours is the best, I believe that all that I am hearing is one more Liberal speaker trying to defend the undefendable.

There has not been any action. Interestingly enough, one of the leadership candidates for the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Bay Street, Mr. Turner, proclaimed that the report of the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe was one of the finest reports he had ever seen. If that man should by some chance happen to win the Liberal leadership race, I do not know how we could possibly be effective in instrumenting such a program because of the nature of persons such as the Minister and those who stood up today to defend the status quo. I submit that if that is the defence, it is not a question of the leadership of the Party, it is a question of the Party. Truly, there needs to be a whole rethinking of the question of how taxes are collected.

I would like to turn to some specifics. First, I would like to deal with Section 31. It indicates that farmers who work beyond their farms must classify those farms as hobby farms because they have other income. The truth of the matter is that we are in a situation today in which interest rates are very high. Not only are those interest rates high at the banks, but they are high at the Farm Credit Corporation. Farmers are also faced with fuel taxes imposed by the federal Government and the provinces, royalties and the like. For example, today when a person buys $15 worth of gasoline, he pays $5 for the gasoline and $10 goes to tax. Actually, the gasoline is not expensive. The tax is expensive. The result of that, added to the fact that there is the PGRT—the front-end taxing on fertilizers and natural gas which makes nitrogen fertilizers—is that we are experiencing record farm bankruptcies.

In the last decade, farm input costs have increased 150 per cent. Statistics Canada has projected that by the year 1988 the farm input costs will have increased another 110 per cent. The prices today for farm commodities on the average are the same as they were in 1973. So we are comparing 1973 receipts with a 150 per cent increase in farm input costs. Obviously, because of that situation, the economy of our nation has driven many farmers to seek second jobs to supplement their farms. High interest rates have meant that many young persons who want to start farming for the first time cannot do it unless they work as well in the oil fields, drive a truck, or earn income in some other way. Often it is the farmer and his spouse who are both out earning income to contribute to the farm. Yet the Government has the harshness to say that that farm is just a hobby. They do not allow that farmer to write off any normal deduction which would be presumed for a full-fledged farmer. What the Government is doing by that policy is saying that the only people who can continue to farm are the ones who are already farming and have their debts paid. One of these days those people will die and we will end up with no food in the country. The truth of the matter is that we have frightened away an enormous potential number of young people who could be coming into the farm enterprise sector. Section 31 obviously needs to be amended, because the only way for people to establish themselves in farming today is by either winning a lottery or taking an extra job.

I would like to focus also on a subject which is of considerable concern to me. That is the question of third party demand. I agree that a third party demand on a person's account is probably a tool which the Government should have, but it should be exercised with very strict control under the authority of someone at the highest level of Revenue Canada. That is not what is happening today, however. If you talk to the manager at any bank in the country you will find that he has had third party demands put on his bank. And who is it who is doing this? Someone new to the Department, often young in age, arrives with a briefcase with forms which have a rubber stamp of a person's signature on them. He can say to the bank manager, after showing his identification, "Do you have the account for a certain person"—and name him or her—and then with that rubberstamped signature he can close that person's account.

It is shoddy, Mr. Speaker, to destroy a person's credit in this country in that way. It is too easy to do this. In my constituency it was happening with some regularity. It was brought to my attention by a banker who was concerned. I was very interested to find out, Sir, that with the exception of two, every one of those third party demands was reversed within 24 hours. Someone might say, "In that case, what are you crying about? What are you giving a speech on that for?" I come from a small community, Mr. Speaker, and news travels fast in a small community. City people think they have some advantage with their telephone service, but I can tell you that news travels much faster in a small community without the benefit of a telephone. I can tell you, Sir, that a lot of financial reputations were severely damaged when people found out that the Department of National Revenue had come in and, not with a stroke of the pen but with a rubber stamp, closed out a person's account.

I found out something else, Mr. Speaker. When people wrote letters, made phone calls and had personal conversations with Revenue Canada personnel trying to set up arrangements for a pay-back because they did not have the amount of money owing at that time but were expecting some money very soon and wanted to pay what they owed in some regulated way that they could afford, Revenue Canada preferred to bring down the guillotine and just throw them right out of business. I will not give you the name of any particular business, but I can tell you that one of the firms employed four people, and when it was closed down, not only was its capacity to pay taxes ruined from then on, but the four people who worked for it became unemployed. And that has repeated itself throughout the country. Surely, the danger of third party demands ought to have been recognized.

I would also like to raise the matter of the insensitivity of those persons who put into effect those third party demands on behalf of the Department. They did not do it in the private back office of some bank. Right out in the public rotunda of a bank, they filled out third party demand forms, side by side with the people who were making a withdrawal or deposit or in other ways doing business with the bank. There is a notion, Mr. Speaker, that the subject of income tax is absolutely private and personal to the person involved. But here was an employee of the Department of National Revenue, standing where one could look over his shoulder and see him, closing out accounts. One official stood in one bank that I know and did that for ten different accounts. He closed them out right there in that public area. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that kind of behaviour is shoddy. No wonder the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe brought forward a motion calling for a taxpayers' bill of rights.

It is not a question of whether or not we live by the rule of law. That has never been the question. The question is whether or not we have a recognition of where power comes from in this country. The presumption has been since the Magna Carta that power belongs to the people. All this place is is an institution where we work on behalf of the people. That is why it is called the House of Commons. It is where we work for the common people. The common people said that the king will not have the control, that we, the people, will. But Revenue Canada is all-powerful. As a matter of fact, it is so all-powerful that people have more protection under the Criminal Code of Canada. A criminal who commits such atrocious sins against society as Clifford Olson, even though he mass murdered young girls in the Vancouver area, has more rights than the taxpayer of Canada. At least under the Criminal Code you are presumed to be innocent until you are proven guilty.

I believe very strongly, Mr. Speaker, that there should be no third party demand unless it is signed in pen and ink and unless someone at a high level in Revenue Canada accepts the responsibility. No one today accepts the responsibility. No one admits that he or she did this. Someone just shows up with a briefcase and closes out accounts, and you cannot find out who ordered it. We cannot trace this action back to anyone who will accept the responsibility.

I see you are indicating, Mr. Speaker, that my time is up. I am sure my colleague will take over where I left off in debating this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, before I direct my question to the Hon. Member, I would like just to comment that it is quite unfortunate that a massive tax audit was started in the fall of 1979 when the Progressive Conservative Party was in power, and we saw for four years fishermen harrassed throughout Canada. Some of the statements made by previous speakers on the unfairness of the collection system certainly ring true. It is unfortunate that the tax audit was ordered in 1979. I am sure that if the Liberal Government had been in power at that time it would not have been ordered.

• (1730)

Mr. Beatty: It was and it did.

Mr. Forrestall: You would not want to mislead the House, would you?

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member who introduced this motion was, I believe, a Cabinet Minister at the time. It is unfortunate that some of the good things he is suggesting now were not initiated by his own Government.

Mr. Beatty: In those two months!

Mr. Baker: My question deals with the third party demand. Does the Hon. Member have the same difficulty I do with a disgusting aspect of that third party demand on low-income people, the primary producers? The third party demand is made on the gross amount, not on the net. If a fisherman owes money to the dealer to whom he is selling fish and he has other expenses, the 25 per cent, sometimes 50 per cent, is taken right off the top. You take the Revenue Canada portion of the attachment, then you take out his expenses and he is left with zero, or sometimes less than zero. Does the Hon. Member find the same thing in dealing with primary producers in his part of the country?

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Hon. Member's first comment, I can only tell him that after not being in power for the better part of this last half of the century, obviously when you come to power you cannot stop everything and start all over again. We inherited quite a hornet's nest when we came into Government. If the Hon. Member is saying that some things continued which ought not to have, then we concede that. We only wish that they had given us enough of an opportunity in power so that he would not have to lament his own actions today.

As to his question concerning the third party demand, I can only say that I believe from the tone of the Hon. Member that he and I would be in full agreement. Certainly the demand ought not to be on the gross, it ought to be on the net. As a person who represents farmers and ranchers, I have a great affinity with the people he represents in his area such as fishermen. In the primary resource sector, whether on land or on water, the economics are very similar, and I am sure we would share a similar view.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has a farm background, and my question has to do with a fellow in the farm implement business who was assessed an amount of $750. He appealed the assessment and it cost him $10,000 in legal fees and procedural costs thus far. He has not yet come to the end of the case. It seems to me that an appeal like that is not worthwhile. This is why so many people will pay these smaller amounts rather than go through the cost of appealing the assessment. It does not make sense to appeal, given the costs, even if you are right. I would like to get the views of the Hon. Member on that.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the answer is obvious. Surely when the cost of an appeal is greatly in excess of the assessment, only those persons who are fighting for a principle will proceed with the battle. I know of cases, as do other Members, where a person has been reassessed and the cost of defending their case might be half as much as the reassessment. That does not sound so bad; you are reassessed $8,000 and it is going to cost you $4,000 to defend. But then comes the word from a Revenue Canada staff person who says, "We will continue to reassess you until you do pay". Then the person starts to think that there is no sense in winning because they are going to reassess and reassess. When that is the process, people just give up in fatigue. What my hon. friend is saying comes down to the need for a taxpayers' bill of rights. The Government has the right to make a reassessment, but when it loses the reassessment, it has the obligation to bear the burden of costs. If it does not, it can virtually destroy the private citizen economically through the process, which is absolutely wrong and must be done away with.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will recall the meeting of the task force in Calgary where John Bullock, representing over 60,000 small businesses, appeared. He said that not only did he fully support the measures of the task force, but that the Conservative task force was the taxpayers' finest hour. I think you will recall that he was applauded and then he went on to elaborate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Chair regrets to interrupt the Hon. Member but the question period is up. For debate, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I see I have only about seven minutes left, but I want to put some comments on the record in the debate today. I agree with much of what the Official Opposition has said regarding the taxation system. I disagree with other aspects which they have touched on from time to time. The most important point I want to bring out is that both the Liberals and the Conservatives have overlooked a large part of the problems in the system, and I would like to touch on that briefly.

Since I have been a Member of Parliament I have had many farmers and small business people come to me about their feelings of being dealt with unfairly by the system, by auditors and collectors from Revenue Canada. In some cases they have had very just complaints. The most common complaint seems to be about the aggressiveness with which Revenue Canada sometimes pursues audits and collections. At the same time, I think people feel a great deal of unfairness, especially those involved in small business and farming operations. An auditor from Revenue Canada can tell an individual that his business or farm is not a viable operation and therefore he cannot deduct the year's losses or the legitimate expenses which he feels he is eligible to deduct. The Department is going to have to consider that case very seriously. I have some confidence that the pressure of the Opposition will cause the Government to recognize that there is a problem and that it will be rectified in the future. It had certainly better be or we will not have many farmers left in many areas of western Canada other than long-time established farmers or those who have very large and wealthy farming operations, which is not the norm.

The other problem is that in pressing economic times many people, especially young farmers, find themselves leaving the farm to earn income, when they are not involved in the farming operation itself, to put bread on the table and enable themselves to live at a standard of decency that is above the poverty line. The issue of off-farm incomes and the arbitrary assessments by Revenue Canada people that a business or farming venture is not viable must be reckoned with.

In the literally dozens of cases which have come to me in the past four and a half years I have found most of the public employees within Revenue Canada to be quite helpful. There are some who are not, just as in any other organization or government Department. The taxation office in Saskatoon has been helpful, as has the regional office in Winnipeg. I usually deal at these levels with problems which constituents have brought to my attention.

I will turn to what I think both the Liberals and the Conservatives have overlooked. Our taxation system has become a nightmare of complexity and unfairness. As the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) pointed out, very few people anymore fill out their own income tax forms. That is just one example of the complexity of the system. The unfairness is what many of the politicians and parliamentarians are overlooking. The Canadian tax system is based on a simple premise that one pays taxes on income earned. The more money you make, the more taxes you should pay. In 1981, 8,000 people earned more than $60,000 and paid no taxes. That is what the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) refers to as the golden loophole award for the people in those brackets. In 1981, 239 Canadians earned an average of $635,000 and paid no income tax. There were another 1,200 Canadians who earned $100,000 and paid no income tax.

Some of the largest and most profitable corporations in Canada have been able to defer taxes. In 1980, $25 billion, which was more than the deficit, was deferred in taxes. They say they do not owe this money. During the committee meetings on Bill C-155 when the Crow rate was abolished, CP said that it did not owe those taxes. It said those were deferred taxes. I think that is a good indication that it never intends to pay them.

I only have about one minute left. Since the mid 1970s the tax breaks to corporations have more than quadrupled. They now total more than $25 billion and are equal to roughly $1,000 in lost revenue for every adult Canadian. These tax breaks mean lower tax rates and higher profits for corporations. The result has been higher rather than lower unemployment. I see your clock is about one minute different from the clock on the wall.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply in accordance with Section 9 of Standing Order 62.

Mr. Althouse, seconded by Mr. Lewycky, moved that the motion be amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and adding the following immediately thereafter:

—and further, to recognize the inequity of the appeal process by guaranteeing to taxpayers who are successful in an appeal through the courts that their legal costs will be paid for by Revenue Canada.

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Deans: Agreed. What are you talking about? Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but there is a procedure one must go through in order to determine whether a vote has been carried or lost. You asked, "All those in favour?" We said, "Agreed", and they said "No". You do not declare the amendment lost. Surely you must ask for the yeas and nays.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair has been following the procedure, except that when the Chair asked, "Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?", the Chair listened. The Chair heard "noes" but did not hear any "yeses". I may ask again. Those in favour of the amendment, will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Those opposed to the amendment, will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion which was negatived on the following division:

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

FISHERIES

PLIGHT OF NOVA SCOTIA LOBSTER FISHERMEN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement regarding the Shelburne County enforcement crisis. By condoning the oppressive crackdown on lobster fishermen in southwestern Nova Scotia, the present Liberal Government is once again demonstrating its insensitivity to the need for Canadians in small communities to retain their dignity and economic self-determination.

These fishermen are being unfairly attacked because they were honest enough to inform the Government that the lobster trap limit set in 1968 was being over-fished and needed to be revised. Last fall, these fishermen were anxious to consult with federal officials and resolve the issue, but it soon became clear that the Government did not respect the knowledge and opinions of the fishermen. The Government was determined to bring in its heavy artillery and enforce the old trap limit in spite of evidence that lobster stocks are increasing. This enforcement would ultimately keep these fishermen below the poverty line, or drive them out of business altogether.

It is not only the fishermen who are under attack but the entire social fabric of Shelburne County. The reputation of the Crown is being defiled in the process. Fisheries officers are destroying legal fishing gear and refusing to acknowledge the fact. They are also guilty of making misleading statements and of unreasonable search and seizures, harassment, and unequal application of the law. Every attempt by fishermen to resolve this issue peacefully has been contemptuously rejected. I wrote to the Minister about this on February 28—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time, unfortunately, has expired.

Mr. Crouse: —and have received no response.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

NATIVE PEOPLE FISHING FOR SALMON—INTERPRETATION BY MEDIA

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, in the last few days, there have been frequent comments on television and on the radio that Indians are overfishing salmon. I would like to say that this is not altogether true, because last November, when the Government of Canada, through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, purchased fishing rights for the Mingan River, the Montagnais Indians in the area unanimously decided to refrain from all fishing in this river, in order to protect the salmon and evaluate fish stocks.

Mr. Speaker, what we must understand at this point is that the issue is not really the Indians' salmon fishing rights but their ownership claim on the salmon rivers.

Mr. Speaker, I think there are two things we must distinguish here. When the media tell us that the Indians refuse to observe salmon quotas, it is not the same as being told they refuse to act responsibly in this area. By fishing selectively, the Indians want to show us that they own these rivers. What the provinces must do is ensure that the Indians are given responsibility for the rivers and leave it at that. I am convinced the Indians will do exactly what they did on the Mingan River this year, where no salmon was taken at all. They are now proceeding with a scientific evaluation of the fish stocks.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should be careful when the media say the Indians are acting irresponsibly with respect to salmon fishing, because it is another case of claims being made on the basis of aboriginal rights.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES PROPOSAL TO ISSUE BEAUFORT SEA OIL DRILLING LEASES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions my colleague, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), has risen in this House to condemn the action by the United States of putting out to tender sub-sea oil and gas drilling leases in the Dixon Entrance area off the coast of British Columbia in waters which belong to Canada. This action constitutes a deliberate slight to Canadian sovereignty and threatens the peaceable resolution of Canada-U.S. boundary disputes, yet our own Government stands mutely by and does virtually nothing.

It has now come to my attention that the United States plans to issue more oil and gas leases, this time in the Canadian sector of the Beaufort Sea east of the 141st meridian. As the Member of Parliament who represents the area concerned, I take great exception to this unwarranted, incautious, and antagonistic proposal, and call upon the Government of Canada to protest this infringement on our national sovereignty in the strongest possible terms.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

NON-RECOGNITION OF PENSIONABLE INJURY CLAIMS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Government has recently announced that it is increasing the veterans allowances for those veterans whose claims are recognized, which, of course, must be welcomed by everyone. But the Government should also deal with the problem of veterans whose claims have not been recognized. There are many veterans of World War II who claim that they have pensionable injuries which are not being recognized or are being underrated by the Pension Review Board. Some of them received back or leg injuries which seemed slight at the time of discharge when they were young and healthy, but now, after many years of heavy industrial work, are seriously hindering the ability of these veterans to earn a living.

Some of these veterans have hearing problems, such as tinnitus, which can be related to the heavy bombardment they endured at places such as Arnhem. However, because it took years to show up, their claims are either not recognized or are very slightly recognized.

Many of these people have organized into a new group called "Suffering Veterans", some being members of the Canadian Legion and some not. They are trying to bring their case to public attention. When we have $100,000, which I welcome, to give to those veterans whose claims are recognized, we should also consider doing something for those whose claims are not recognized or are being underrated, in the opinion of the claimants. I would urge the Minister—

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

ABSENCE OF LIBERAL MEMBERS FROM COMMITTEE MEETING

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, Liberal Members are so in the habit of blaming others for all of our nation's difficulties that they forget to look at themselves. According to the Liberals, high interest rates are the responsibility of the Yanks, and unemployment is the result of a world-wide condition. With respect to the national debt, the Liberals say: "Golly, that just happened. Don't blame us". And when the Ministers mess up with poor legislation and ridiculous scheduling of House business, the Liberals blame the Opposition.

But careless Liberal priorities were revealed last night. With real urgency to complete the Standing Committee study of the Western Grain Stabilization Act amendments, which will provide immediate financial relief for western farmers facing financial disaster, who fails to have members in attendance? The Liberals. To the shame of the 145 Members of the Liberal Party in Parliament, they could not find even two of that number who had enough interest to attend. The Liberal Chairman would not try to fill the empty chairs, saying: "I have 300 miles to drive tonight". What a way to run a country! What a way to accept responsibility!

Who is responsible for the failure to get Bill C-33 out of committee? Not the six opposition Members who waited for Liberal Members to show up. This is the same Liberal gang who are responsible for high interest rates, the national debt, two million unemployed, and the lack of respect which many Canadians hold for the institution—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INCLUSION OF WORKERS' DISABILITY BENEFITS IN CALCULATION OF INCOME

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult enough in these hard economic times for average Canadians to live comfortably on their earnings. For our elderly living on low and fixed incomes it is virtually impossible. Our senior citizens struggle to stay alive while the Liberal Government wastes billions of Canadians' dollars on Canadair, de Havilland, Petrofina, and Maislin. Now the Liberals are trying to pay off their massive deficit on the backs of Canadians, taxing everyone and everything in sight, including the elderly.

Previously, when applying for the guaranteed income supplement, workers' compensation benefits were not counted as income, because a disability is a disability regardless of age. This year the Government decided that workers' disability benefits must be counted as income. Senior citizens who have suffered an injury on the job need and deserve the disability benefits which they effectively lose through this totally unnecessary government action.

There is a real fear among our senior citizens that this Liberal Government, insatiable in its quest for tax revenue, will directly tax workers' compensation benefits next. This must not be allowed to happen.

• (1115)

After a two-year delay, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has the nerve to announce a $25 increase in the GIS, while simultaneously declaring compensation benefits must be counted as income. This type of Liberal chicanery has driven one of my constituents, Mr. Harry Kuzick, of Surrey, B.C., to express his frustration: "Do those Liberal idiots in Ottawa know what $70 means to an elderly person's income?"

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROPOSED VOLUNTEER INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the House is so quiet today I think I should make an announcement. The Department of Employment and Immigration will announce in early June a new program called the Volunteer Initiatives Program. It is for people on unemployment insurance who are unlikely to find work. It will pay $50 a week to sponsors for their overhead. I am not sure whether it will pay the people on unemployment insurance any extra money. The sponsors are charities, schools, hospitals, and some community centres.

The problem is that this program is the old Liberal shell game of job creation. You take some workers off the streets and possibly replace people who are already working full time in these voluntary organizations. The Government is again using charities to fill gaps in the Public Service. We in B.C. know what it is like when nurses are laid off and low wage, unskilled volunteers are hired to fill their place.

I have three suggestions for the Government, one, that there be a mechanism in this program to protect existing workers in agencies so that we are not just displacing existing workers. Second, more people should be eligible. People on welfare, for example, should be eligible. Third, we should look at a full-scale program of job creation, not just one more stop gap, band-aid measure.

POOLS

FEDERAL SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—APPOINTMENT OF COMPTROLLER

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. He will know that the Minister of Sport, through his executive assistant, has put his riding president, friends of the Minister of Finance and relatives of Liberal MPs on the payroll of the Sports Pool. The latest news is that another of the Minister's election organizers, Mr. Norman Merssier, has been hired as comptroller of the Sports Pool, at a salary of $70,000 a year. Will the Minister now admit that, even for a Liberal, this Minister has gone too far? Or has the Liberal Party become so fat and arrogant that there is no standard of public morality below which it will not sink?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite my hon. friend to take that information with a grain of salt. For example, I was reading in one of the papers recently that a gentleman by the name of Mr. Deschèsne from St. Laurent was a well-known Liberal organizer. My information is that this particular gentleman never got involved in politics or any political party at all. As a matter of fact, one wonders whether he ever voted. I think my friend should be very careful in throwing names around, and to begin with make sure he has the right information.

Secondly, the Minister has answered this question extensively in the House, saying that the people hired by the Corporation were hired after the normal interviews were carried out, and the decisions were taken by the Corporation itself. I am sure that if my friend looks carefully he will know that one of the chief organizers of his friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Rosedale, former Conservative Minister, was hired by the Corporation in a very senior position. If he looks carefully I am sure he will find Conservatives, and maybe even a few NDP people, among the staff in the organization. The Minister has said that the hiring was not based on political affiliation.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, it is well known that advertising contracts have been let without tender to Liberal firms. The Minister will know that employees have been hired temporarily for six months at salaries of $40,000, with expense allowances, and two years' severance built into their contracts. He will also know that the Minister of Sport, who says it is just a sports pool, held meetings especially with members of the Liberal Caucus in order to tell them how to get their relatives, friends and neighbours on the payroll of the Sports Pool. How long does this have to go on before the Government will finally recognize that it is time for the House of Commons to have a full inquiry into the hiring practices, advertising practices, and employment contracts which have been let by the Sports Pool at the request of the Minister responsible for sports?

• (1120)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will take the case of the advertising companies. McLaren's advertising is doing the English advertising, and Planicom is doing the French advertising. Together these companies have several hundred employees. If my friend wants to investigate, I am sure he will find that there are people of all political affiliations and parties working for these two large organizations. Both of them are recognized as outstanding advertising agencies in Canada. Both of them have won prizes from their national associations for the quality of their work. Both of them have been recognized by receiving large contracts from private firms all across Canada. These are the facts.

My friend should look at the facts and recognize that the quality of those firms compares favourably with any other corporation. As the Minister has already said, the decision in that regard was made by the Corporation on the basis of the quality of the work which was going to be provided by those firms, and on the basis of their track record in terms of performance in the private sector over the last several years.

REQUEST THAT CONTRACTS BE TABLED

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, let the Minister explain why contracts are let by the Government without tender. The Minister says this is just a normal matter. Will the Government arrange to have all of the contracts which have been let, and all of the employment arrangements which have been made, tabled in the House of Commons so that Members of the House may see whether the protestations of innocence are accurate, or whether in fact what we believe to be true is the case, that is, that the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) is proving to be no amateur at patronage, potentially unfit for office, and an even sleazier user of patronage than the Minister of Employment and Immigration?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, by his own sleaziness the Hon. Member shows that he is the one who is mainly unfit to sit in the House of Commons. I would hope that the people of his riding will take care of that when the next election comes.

Mr. Mayer: Call it. Let them decide.

Mr. Lalonde: It will be called in due time. You are going down fast enough. We will give you a little more time to go down even further, and then you will see.

An Hon. Member: Call an election.

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member knows the rules of the House very well. If he is interested in getting information, he can put a question on the Order Paper. That is one way of doing it. In addition, there are parliamentary committees where the Estimates of all Departments are put forward. Witnesses can be called, and Members can ask for any information they wish to have. He knows what the rules of the House are. Rather than grandstanding like he does at the present time, and rather than resorting to the kind of phoney allegations he is making, he should at least read the rules of the House, and follow them.

ENERGY

PROPOSED DISTRIBUTION OF BROCHURE ON NEWFOUNDLAND OFFSHORE RESOURCE ISSUE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is not for the OECD reject. It is for the Acting Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Energy. The OECD reject has proved himself well rejected.

Apparently the Government has made a decision to send a brochure out to every householder in Newfoundland two days before the Liberal leadership convention which will come in the middle of the month. It is supposed to deal with the Government's offer to the Province of Newfoundland with regard to the offshore mineral question. Cabinet has apparently approved this. The only question remaining is whether it should be signed by the Minister of State (Mines), the Minister from Newfoundland, or the Minister of Energy who, as we know, is the new Rocky and a leadership contender.

What is the purpose of the Government and the Department of Energy now in sending out such a brochure over a year and a half after all negotiations ended? Why are they sending it out? What will it cost the taxpayers? The cost will be at least $50,000 to $100,000. Why is this felt to be necessary? Is this to give publicity and support to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in his bid for the leadership? Just what is the purpose that lies behind this latest sleaze-bag effort in Newfoundland?

• (1125)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should think that the purpose of the effort should be self evident, that is, to give the people of Newfoundland the information that they ought to have about the attitude of the federal Government. I understand that the Government of Newfoundland has been quite active in making known to the people of Newfoundland its views on the offshore question. Doesn't the Hon. Member think it is reasonable that they ought to know what the federal attitude is, to enable them to make up their own minds? That is the sole purpose. I think that is pretty reasonable.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman's definition of reasonable does not correspond with ours.

CONTENT OF BROCHURE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, there was some suggestion that this brochure might also explain what the agreement is that the Government is entering into with Nova Scotia. Certainly the documents that were issued yesterday obscure every provision of the agreement.

Will there be photographs of these Ministers in the brochure and, if so, is there not a grave danger that there might be a rash of premature births in Newfoundland if the pictures of these gargoyles get into every household in Newfoundland in such an insidious manner? Can the Deputy Prime Minister promise the House that there will be no photographs of those Ministers, particularly not of the two I have mentioned?

Will the brochure explain why the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was repudiated by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister after he reached a verbal agreement with the Newfoundland Government on the offshore matter? Could he please deal with those questions in a succinct and reasonable manner?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what photographs, if any, will appear in the brochure, but I would think that if the people of Newfoundland can stand the photographs of the Premier of the Province and of the Hon. Member, they can pretty well stand anything.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

NEED FOR NATIONAL DAYCARE SYSTEM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. As the Minister knows, 85 per cent of the children in Canada who have need are denied access to daycare. She said in committee yesterday that she, as Minister, was "persuaded there was a need for action now". Yet the day before she announced the establishment of a committee that would have the task of looking into ways of somehow improving the situation but would not report back until the end of this year.

Given the real need of the children of Canada, which the Minister has publicly discussed herself, is the Government committed to the principle of universal accessible daycare for all of Canada's children?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must be aware of the controversy that rages around this particular issue, and he must be also aware of the provincial sensitivities. That is why I met with my provincial counterparts on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week to discuss this very issue in depth.

I might add that the provinces justly guard their area of jurisdiction very carefully and want to be very sure of the direction we are taking, to ensure that we do indeed face the realities of child care needs in this country but do so on a flexible basis, and on the understanding that there are many kinds of daycare. We are all committed to changes to meet the needs in the country. I can assure the Hon. Member that, with the formation of this task force, we at the federal government level are taking a very real position of leadership in this area.

Mr. Broadbent: That is to define leadership as simply setting up a committee to study something for another six months. Once the report comes in, presumably it will be another six months before whatever Government is in power acts on it.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION—REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that there is a need for action. We agree. Instead of setting up committees, will the Minister take action? The current jurisdictional authority is with the provinces. However, when we took action on medicare the federal Government committed itself to the principle and then negotiated ways of implementing that principle with the provinces. I want the Minister to be clear cut today. Will she tell the House if the federal Government, the Liberal Party of Canada, is committed to the principle of universally accessible daycare?

• (1130)

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very clear that the federal Government is committed to changes in the daycare system. Whether the kind of system the New Democratic Party wants to put in place is the right answer, we do not yet know. It is clear the NDP is committed to this. What we, the Government, are committed to is a program that will meet the needs of the country. If the New Democratic Party were to examine the real childcare needs in the country, the NDP would know that there is not universal support for the kind of universal daycare the Hon. Member is describing. There is universal support for change, the kind of change that will meet the real needs of the parents and the children of this country.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, at one time there was not universal support in this country for medicare either, but some parties took leadership on the issue to build universal support.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ASSOCIATION'S FUNDING PROPOSAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is clearly not committing herself to the principle at all. She has said there is an immediate need for the children. She said:

> The current situation is just not acceptable.

Those are the Minister's words. On the question of immediate need for all the children of Canada, she has had a proposal submitted to her by the Canadian Day Care Advocacy Association for an immediate grant of $5 per day from the federal Government for each licensed daycare space. That would amount to only 15 per cent of what the Government used to bail out Canadair. Will the Government at least commit itself, before Parliament recesses at the end of this month, to spending this minimal amount of money of $5 per day which the children of Canada badly need?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no one knows better than I the requirements of daycare in this country. The Hon. Member should be very much aware of what the Government has done in this area. Through the CAP program we are spending something like $150 million a year, and we are also spending an incredible amount of money through the tax system. This Government has already indicated that we are prepared to move, and we have moved. We upped the childcare deduction from $1,000 to $2,000 last year, to a maximum of $8,000 per family. That is a considerable amount of money and a clear indication of this Government's commitment to this problem.

The Hon. Member brings up the Canadian Day Care Advocacy position, which is a very valid one, but it is only one position. I suggest the Hon. Member take a more realistic position. I suggest he sit down with representatives of those provincial Governments with whom I sat down to hear what their positions are, and then begin to negotiate honestly and fairly to do something. We are prepared to do that. I suggest he not make empty statements about what the NDP would do, because we know very well the NDP cannot do it.

ENERGY

DISTRIBUTION OF PROPOSED BROCHURE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Acting Prime Minister and it is supplementary to the one asked by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West. Why is the Government of Canada sending a brochure to the general population in Newfoundland? Will the Government be sending a brochure, a direct mailing, to the other coastal provinces, such as British Columbia? Why is the Government going over the head of the Government of Newfoundland in this way as opposed to taking the initiative to resume negotiations? More particularly, now that we have a Bill before the House, putting the Nova Scotia agreement in legislative form, why did the Government not take that opportunity to announce its position to the people of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are not going over the head of the Government of Newfoundland.

Mr. Forrestall: You are going behind its back.

Mr. MacEachen: Surely the Government of Canada has an equal right with the Government of Newfoundland to advise the people of that province what its policies are. I understand the Government of Newfoundland has been very diligent in ensuring that the people of the province know what it thinks about the off-shore. I believe it is in the interests of the people of Newfoundland to know what the federal Government is prepared to do. They can look at that, understand, and make their own judgment. It seems to me the maximum information that the people of Newfoundland have, the better. I do not understand why Newfoundland Members would object to that, unless they feel the attitude of the federal Government somehow ought to be concealed from the people of Newfoundland, or misrepresented.

Mr. Forrestall: You are an expert at that.

TIMING OF DISTRIBUTION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, all I am saying to the Acting Prime Minister is that he will have an opportunity and the Government will have an opportunity, to tell the people of Newfoundland and the people of Canada just exactly what their position is when the Nova Scotia legislation is debated. I suspect the real reason is an intrusion into the Liberal leadership convention by this Government at taxpayers' expense, in order to help the aspirations of the Minister of Energy.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the on-going, whatever one might want to call it, debate, controversy, about the off-shore has nothing to do with the Liberal leadership race. It existed long before that event took place—

Mr. Forrestall: Then keep it out of the race.

Mr. MacEachen: —and probably it will continue well after it. I understand, and the Hon. Member can enlighten the House, that the Government of Newfoundland has been very active at taxpayers' expense, telling the people of Newfoundland what it believes about the off-shore. Is it not reasonable that the federal Government should be able to put its case before the people of Newfoundland? I think it is an act of confidence and an act of respect for the people of that province that we are prepared to tell them what we are prepared to do, and to let them make up their minds.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board, but he has left the Chamber again.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

DISASTERS

EFFECT OF WEATHER ON FARMING OPERATIONS IN NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Privy Council, who has responsibility for Emergency Planning Canada. My question relates to the very serious situation that exists in northern Saskatchewan's agricultural areas. Because such severe weather conditions have occurred, there is a serious matter which negatively affects farming operations in that area. Has the Minister been in receipt, through Emergency Planning Canada, of requests for financial assistance to this important part of our country? Is Emergency Planning Canada going to respond in a positive way?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we have a regional office in that region and we are in close communication with it. I want to assure the Hon. Member that if the natural disaster referred to meets the thresholds of our national policy to help regions suffering from such natural disasters, we will be pleased to assist in a financial way. We cannot do that unless we receive a request from the province, and we have not yet received a request from the Province of Saskatchewan. The minute we receive that request, I want to assure the Hon. Member that we will be most pleased to help in the same way as we have very often in the past helped many other regions of the country.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the Province of Saskatchewan is taking action with respect to this unfortunate situation in northern Saskatchewan.

By way of a supplementary question, will the President of the Privy Council, as a member of the national Government, take the initiative and make inquiries to ensure if at all possible the wheels are put into motion so that we can get some assistance in northern Saskatchewan to help those people who are operating farms in that part of the country?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I have just stated, whenever a natural disaster occurs in an area of the country, we usually have in the vicinity a regional office where the manager makes the necessary investigation and keeps us informed about any development. He is also there to provide all required information to the Provinces or regions involved and to brief them on how to proceed to apply for federal assistance if the criteria underlying our assistance policy in cases of natural disaster are met.

In this case, I can repeat what I have just told the Hon. Member in my answer to his previous question, namely that we have a regional director in the area, that we shall see to it that the Province is informed of all its rights and that we shall co-operate fully to provide assistance if at all possible under the provisions of our federal assistance program in cases of natural disasters.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF WOMAN CHAIRPERSON

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I should direct my question to the Minister responsible for the Council on the Status of Women or to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. In any case, I will direct it to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport to find out whether there is any truth to the rumour we heard this morning about a woman being appointed as new chairperson of the CN board of directors.

Mrs. Eva Côté (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, all Canadian women were very pleased this morning to learn that the Minister of Transport has appointed a woman, Mrs. Betty Hewes, as the new chairperson of the CN board of directors. As you know, Mrs. Hewes is from the City of Edmonton and she has a wide experience in the field of public administration and social affairs. She has been a member of Edmonton's municipal council for ten years, sits on Canada health councils on mental health, and is a former special adviser to the Minister of Health of the Province of Alberta.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, this is a great day as much for Canada as for the CN which will be headed by an extremely competent chairperson who will represent all Canadian women and make them proud. We are delighted and, on behalf of all my colleagues, I want to extend to Mrs. Hewes our best wishes of success in her new career.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS

Mr. Speaker: May I call the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of the Lieutenant Governor of the State of Illinois, the Hon. George Ryan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

PARLIAMENT HILL

AUTHORITY FOR USE BY PEACE CAMP

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. Each day as I come from the Confederation Building I notice a mini campground in front of the entrance to this great place, the House of Commons. I understand that the grounds are under the Minister's jurisdiction, and I ask him to clarify the status of the public grounds around Parliament Hill. Do these members of a special interest group have an agreement with Public Works, or are they paying rent?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I presume the Hon. Member is referring to what has commonly become known as the Peace Camp. Am I correct? This situation arose quite a long time ago, as the Hon. Member knows. In fact it lasted throughout the winter. Perhaps the Hon. Member knows that under the previous administrative arrangements there was a committee composed of a number of Departments which, in fact, gave permission for the initial demonstration or manifestation of views to take place. So far the Government has not chosen to put an end to this expression of views.

CAMPING REGULATIONS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I would then assume that any Canadian citizen or group of Canadian citizens could apply for permission to camp there, or camp there without permission. What action would the Government take? Would they be welcome to camp there during the summer season in particular when there are a lot of campers who would be interested in such a nice camping spot?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the NCC provides other camping facilities with somewhat better services than those provided in front of the Centennial Flame. That being said, it is because of the possibility that other groups might want to set up a permanent Hyde Park corner type of arrangement that we are reviewing the administrative processes that I mentioned earlier.

BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT'S PROPOSAL TO EXPORT WATER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. I am sure he is aware by now that the auctioneers presently running British Columbia, known as the Socreds, who are the Liberal wing in the West, have authorized in principle the export of fresh water from British Columbia. A short time ago, and I am glad to see him in the Chamber today, the Hon. Member for Dollard proposed damming the southern part of James Bay with a 160 kilometre-long dike and diverting those rivers to the United States, undisputed by any members of Cabinet as to the legality or illegality of such a proposal.

In a letter to me dated February 3, the Minister said, and I quote:

> —the Government of Canada has never formally sanctioned any water export scheme, and is clearly on record as opposing the export of our water resources. Provincial statements parallel federal policy in this regard.

Will the Minister tell us whether the proposal by the British Columbia Government is legal or illegal? Since it is not sanctioned, what does that mean? Will he stop it or not?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as a citizen of British Columbia the Hon. Member holds part of the responsibility for that Province being up for sale. Having said that, I would confirm the letter from which he is quoting dated last February, by saying that a number of ideas have been floating around, not just in British Columbia, about water diversion and the export of water. Nevertheless, our position on that is clear and consistent. We do not subscribe to this notion. We reject the contention that water is available for export. This will be a very important commodity for Canadians in the decades ahead. We therefore reject any such notion, whether it comes from provinces, municipalities, or regions in the North.

JAMES BAY WATER RESOURCES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. The Minister wrote me on February 15 stating that he supports the export of Canadian pop, Canadian beer and Canadian booze, but, to quote him: "You can be assured that the policy of the Government of Canada is not to sanction the export of fresh water." I wonder whether the Minister had his thinking cap on this morning and whether he can tell us if he supports and endorses the proposal by the Hon. Member for Dollard to divert James Bay to the United States, and what he thinks sanctions are in terms of the approval in principle by British Columbia to export water internationally.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is concerned about moving from one Minister to another for supplementaries.

Mr. Broadbent: Why?

Mr. Speaker: Either we have procedures in the House or we do not. The Chair will permit the supplementary question.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we certainly subscribe to the idea of exporting beer to any part of the world that recognizes the high quality of our product, but we do not subscribe to the idea of exporting our water. It is as simple as that.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

AURORA AIRCRAFT—ENGINE DEFECTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. It has to do with the engine problems experienced some months ago in the Aurora aircraft. Will the Minister indicate whether the engineering defects in those Pratt & Whitney engines have been overcome? Are all aircraft now operational?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. He is quite right that engineering difficulties were experienced with the guide vanes on the Aurora aircraft engines. Those problems have now been rectified. There has been a replacement of the guide vanes. I am pleased to advise the Hon. Member that we identified the engineering changes that will be required. Those changes are presently being tested.

OPERATIONAL STATUS OF AIRCRAFT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I asked whether all the aircraft were operational. If not, can the Minister indicate when they will be operational? Can he indicate whether as a result of contracts with Pratt & Whitney and Lockheed, the cost of re-engineering these engines is to be borne by Canada, or were those engines under some form of warranty?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that as of this morning 12 of the 18 aircraft are fully operational. The changes have been effected on all the engines that had manifested difficulties. We have had a great deal of co-operation from the engine manufacturer and from Lockheed in effecting the changes. In terms of the cost, I will have to review and report to the hon. gentleman.

PROPOSED EXPORTATION OF WATER FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. It is further to the question of the Hon. Member for Skeena. I think he has misrepresented what is going on in British Columbia. What they are proposing to do is take water from a waterfall that is dumping into the Pacific Ocean, in a tanker and export it to Mexico. That would not be much more water than goes every year in beer bottles to the United States. What could possibly be wrong with taking water that is going to waste, and exporting it in a tanker to Mexico?

• (1150)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that a Conservative Member must rise to clarify a policy statement made by the Social Credit Government of British Columbia. I would draw his attention to the fact that when one begins to pump water into tanks for export purposes, one deprives the water basin of its water. In addition to that, it deprives the river of the biological role that that water plays downstream in its estuary. Thus, it affects the life forms along the shores and under the water surfaces that exist as a result of that water coming down from higher levels. Therefore, the removal of water has long-term and very serious biological effects. I am surprised that the Hon. Member is not aware of such an elementary notion, one that is known by every child in grade five.

WATERFALL ON PACIFIC COAST

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Minister, I would like to tell him that this water is coming from a waterfall and is dumping into the Pacific Ocean. It is not being caught upstream and diverted, but is going to waste. It is a completely different situation from the one which has been presented.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have a little bit of envy for the capacity of the Hon. Member to think in compartments. To him, water that falls from a waterfall is different from water that flows along a river. I reject that notion because water is water, and it performs a biological role downstream no matter whether it comes from a waterfall or from a normal, peacefully flowing stream anywhere on this planet.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PLIGHT OF SOVIET DISSIDENT, ANDREI SAKHAROV

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister is fully aware that the Sakharov case continues to receive world-wide attention and that much anxiety over this case is being expressed in Canada. That fact was impressed upon Dr. Arbatov, Director of the Soviet Institute of the United States and Canada, during his Wednesday visit to Parliament Hill. At that time we emphasized that abuses of human rights such as those affecting the Sakharovs are major impediments to achieving better relations between our countries.

Would the Minister inform the House of the results of the consultations he undertook with the Foreign Ministers of NATO countries during the NATO meeting in Washington earlier this week, which were prompted by the unprecedented action of the Nobel Peace Prize Committee in putting the prestige of that Committee behind a direct appeal to the President of the Soviet Union requesting that Andrei Sakharov and his wife Yelena Bonner be freed?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for raising the matter of this important human rights case in the House once again. Before I went to the NATO meeting in Washington we had an exchange, and I said that I would be exploring the possibility of having anything further done by the NATO Foreign Ministers.

Certainly the matter of the Sakharovs was mentioned frequently by Ministers in their assessments of East-West relations. On reflection, it appeared to me that it would probably be counterproductive for NATO Ministers to make a declaration on this particular case because it might be construed as being a confrontational and political move on the part of the Alliance, when it is really a case of human rights and humanitarian considerations. For that reason I certainly did not press my colleagues to go beyond that which each of us is presently doing, namely, carrying out the wishes of the people of all of our countries to urge the Soviet Union to respond to our pleas. As the Hon. Member knows, we have made quite a number of representations, and will continue to do so.

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, may I remark to the Minister that that was the reason for the original suggestion which I made in the House, which was that this be done through the nations which are signatories to the Helsinki Accord, the C.S.C.E. nations, those nations which have a feeling for human rights that parallels our own.

REQUEST THAT JOINT APPEAL BE CONSIDERED

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister indicate to the House whether or not he would in fact be prepared to proceed with some type of joint appeal with the Helsinki Accord nations?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada would certainly have no difficulty joining in such an appeal. As the Hon. Member knows, the conference on disarmament in Europe is presently in progress in Stockholm and I believe that that is a place where one might make further representations or further references. I know that our ambassador in Stockholm has been discussing this matter with his colleagues.

As I said to the Hon. Member when responding to his question of last week, it is unlikely, and in fact will not happen, that all the signatories to the C.S.C.E. will sign such an agreement. However, while Canada would link itself with a joint appeal, I wonder whether such an appeal would be any stronger than the appeal which each of us in his own way and each country in its own way is presently making, and will continue to make to the Soviet Union.

The Hon. Member may have noticed that our friend, the Foreign Minister from Australia, made the case directly to Mr. Gromyko, as did Mr. Genscher and other Foreign Ministers of NATO who were recently in the Soviet Union. I think we are all working as hard as we can, and if there are other more effective methods, including the one put forward by the Hon. Member, we are prepared to consider them.

TRADE

EFFECT OF CLOTHING AND TEXTILE IMPORTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns international trade, and since the Minister responsible had to leave to catch a plane, he assured me that the Minister for External Relations would be willing to answer my question. As the Minister knows, Canada now allows a larger share than most other countries in western Europe and North America of its domestic market in clothing and textiles to be taken by imports from countries with Governments that have forced wages down to levels which are about 10 per cent of those in Canada. Furthermore, imports from those countries with very low wages have risen by about 20 per cent or 25 per cent over the last three years. This has created a serious unemployment crisis in the clothing manufacturing industry.

Will the Minister ask his colleague to reconsider his declared policy of reducing the import restrictions during the coming years? Will he ask him to institute import controls that enable Canadian clothing manufacturers to establish firm and long-lasting employment, on the basis of a reliable share of the Canadian domestic market?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the notes left by the Minister who is in charge of international trade really only cover the beef situation. I understand that there is such a thing as clothed beef, but clothing and beef are really two separate entities.

In the notes that are before me, the Minister makes the case that there are two types of beef imports. I myself knew that from being Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. One type is the chilled quality beef, and the other is the frozen beef. Most of our imports are in the second category. After that, the Minister makes the case that indeed there has been a tremendous increase in imports of beef, particularly from Nicaragua and Ireland, and that—

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the Minister that, as I understood it, the question related to clothing quotas.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, thank you for clarifiying the question to the Hon. Minister. I realize that he may have been concerned with dressed meat and thought that that was what I was talking about when I mentioned clothing manufacturing. However, I am very much concerned for the tens of thousands of jobs which may be lost in several parts of Canada, and I am sure that the people who may be laid off are not laughing.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I would ask whether or not the Minister would ask his colleague, the Minister for International Trade, to convene a meeting of the interested parties, particularly the manufacturers and unions in the clothing industry, with himself and his staff to address the present crisis which is being caused by the escalating share of the Canadian market being lost to countries that pay wages of 50 cents or less per hour?

• (1200)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, that kind of discussion is really one in which judgment plays a very major role. How much Canada should import and how much it should prevent the importation of something is constantly under study. I am looking at the Minister of DRIE because his Department studies that situation constantly. It is a problem of balance. If we are too protective against other countries which try to export to Canada, obviously they will reciprocate in kind—sometimes in even greater measure against our exports abroad. The whole exercise is one of balance. It is quite normal that after talking to interest groups in this area, a Member of Parliament tends to exaggerate or tends to bend the other way. But the Government's role is really not to be excessive either way.

IMPACT OF BEEF IMPORTS FROM IRELAND

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question which I would like to address to the Minister for External Relations. My question relates to the Irish beef situation, which has been raised twice before in the House with the Minister of Agriculture and with the Minister for International Trade. I would like to ask the Minister if he is aware of the situation and aware of the serious problems which it is causing? Every time we import beef, we potentially put Canadians out of work.

I would also like to ask the Minister if he is prepared, through his Department, to assist the producers of the country develop their case in order that they will not have to spend the $60,000 or $80,000 that apparently it will cost to prove injury. Is the Minister, under the GATT arrangements, prepared to slow down beef imports? It is a very serious situation. I wonder if the Minister could bring us up to date on what the Government is doing or is prepared to do about this situation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am terribly pleased to be viewed as relevant, because this is a subject on which the Minister for International Trade has beefed me up. The case which he is making is that indeed beef imports from Ireland have gone from 1.3 million pounds to 11.8 million pounds for a comparative period this year over last year. The Minister says that it is due to a substantial subsidy which was paid by the Government of Ireland. That subsidy has now been reduced. Consequently the effect on pricing in Canada is lower than it was—the difference being that it has gone from ten cents a pound to seven cents a pound.

The Minister has already indicated to the cattlemen—the beef producers in Canada—what to do in this instance, and has given them an indication of how to proceed. The Minister for International Trade ended his analysis by saying:

—it may be difficult to substantiate their claims as domestic prices have been relatively firm and have even shown some evidence of strengthening.

That is the description which the Minister gives of the present situation. It may not be conducive to dramatic action against Irish beef.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ASSIST BEEF PRODUCERS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief supplementary question. Is the Government prepared to work with the producers to assist them in developing their case to show whether there has been injury? There is evidence which points out that there has definitely been injury. What I would like to know is whether the Government is prepared to work with the producers to develop a case as quickly as possible so that they will not have to go through the expense themselves.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Of course, Mr. Speaker. The Minister a few days ago, indicated just that. He is very keen to help those who feel prejudiced and to make that case to National Revenue.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CROSBIE—REMARKS OF MR. TRUDEAU DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It relates to the proceedings which occurred yesterday in the House and remarks made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) which were wrong and incorrect. I would like to draw that to the attention of the House. Those remarks should not be allowed to remain on the record. The Prime Minister was questioned yesterday—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member alleging unparliamentary language? It is not a point of order to have a disagreement relating to facts.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, then I will rise on a point of privilege. I have been lied about in this House by the Prime Minister and I want to draw that to the attention of the House.

Point of Order—Mr. Crosbie

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please resume his seat. The Hon. Member rose on a point of order. I have asked the Hon. Member whether or not it was dealing with unparliamentary language, but that does not appear to be the case. If the Hon. Member feels that he has point of privilege, I will hear him on a point of privilege.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: I would draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that, if he has a point of privilege, the normal course would be for him to give notice to the Chair, which he has not done. If there is a difference as to the facts, there are various opportunities open to the Hon. Member, one of which is the "late show". If the Hon. Member does not have a point of order, he should give notice to the Chair before raising a point of privilege at this point.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: On what point does the Hon. Member seek the floor?

Mr. Nielsen: Let him have a word, for God's sake.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member is seeking the floor, the normal courtesy to the Chair is to indicate the basis on which he seeks it, whether it is order or privilege. If it is privilege, I have indicated the problem. If it is a point of order, the Hon. Member should indicate the point of order.

Mr. Crosbie: I certainly do not want to interrupt your good self, Mr. Speaker. My point is a point of order in my view. If it is not a point of order, then it is a point of privilege.

I was misquoted in this House by the Prime Minister yesterday. He tried to divert the House with a red herring by saying that at some time I had said the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) should go to Gabon to be with people who were swinging from trees.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has made his point—

Mr. Crosbie: That is false and I want to give notice that I will raise it with the Prime Minister when he comes to this House again. He is a liar by public opinion.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that it is a matter which the Hon. Member should take up with the Prime Minister on the next occasion the two are together in the House.

Some Hon. Members: That is exactly what he said.

Mr. Speaker: In that case he did not have to take the time of the House today.

LABORATORY INVESTIGATIONS PROGRAM

Question No. 638—Mr. Stewart:

Is there a Laboratory Investigations Program and, if so, what (a) department or agency is responsible for its administration (b) amount was budgeted for the program in the fiscal year (i) 1982-83 (ii) 1983-84?

Mr. Rolland Dion (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): (a) The National Research Council of Canada. (b) (i) $1.1 million, (ii) $2.7 million.

DVA—POST-GRADUATE FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR STUDENTS

Question No. 770—Mr. Towers:

1. Does the Government give any grants, bursaries and/or scholarships to students who are children of veterans attending post-graduate schools in Canada and, if so, at what (a) total cost (b) cost, by province?

2. How many persons are now receiving such grants, bursaries and/or scholarships and (a) what is the average grant, bursary or scholarship and, in each case, what is the average amount paid, by province (b) during what average period do students receive such assistance?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Yes, the Department of Veterans Affairs provides post-graduate financial assistance to eligible children through the Children of War Dead (Educational Assistance) Act. (a) $164,204.33 FY 1983-1984.

(b) Province	Cost
Newfoundland	Nil
Nova Scotia	$13,884.65
Prince Edward Island	$ 2,290.82
New Brunswick	$ 3,231.57
Québec	$42,244.79
Ontario	$48,559.26
Manitoba	$11,515.45
Saskatchewan	$ 9,584.28
Alberta	$ 6,049.79
British Columbia	$26,843.72

2. Fifty-six persons. (a) $2,932.22 per student annually.

Average grant by province
Nova Scotia	$1,983.52
Prince Edward Island	$2,290.82
New Brunswick	$3,231.57
Québec	$2,484.99
Ontario	$3,468.52
Manitoba	$3,838.48
Saskatchewan	$2,396.07
British Columbia	$3,934.82

(b) The average period during which students receive assistance varies depending on students course of study and the degree of concentration of study. Generally speaking, their period is from one to four years of which six months per year is funded, based upon annual study requirements. However, no assistance is provided beyond age 30 or, the end of the academic term in which the student reaches the age of 30.

YUKON QUARTZ MINING ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING STAKING OF CLAIMS

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Yukon Quartz Mining Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Neilsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister seconding the motion should be in his seat.

Mr. Speaker: The Bill will be seconded by Mr. Lumley.

● (1210)

Mr. Evans: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe if you seek unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, you will find that there is such consent that the Bill not be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development but be referred rather to Committee of the Whole; and we will proceed through all stages of the Bill with one speaker per party.

Mr. Nielsen: No, no!

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the arrangements which were suggested by the Parliamentary Secretary are fine, with one exception. Because this Bill does affect the riding of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yukon, we will have two speakers speaking on this Bill. I would not want to limit the motion brought forward by the Parliamentary Secretary to one speaker for each Party.

Mr. Evans: That is agreeable, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Then it is moved by Mr. Pepin for Mr. Munro, seconded by Mr. Lumley, that Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Yukon Quartz Mining Act, be now read a second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

[Translation]

Mr. René Gingras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak on second reading of the Bill to amend the Yukon Quartz Mining Act.

Although the proposed amendments are relatively minor since they concern only one section of the existing legislation, they are extremely important to the continuing stability and expansion of the mining industry in the Yukon. That is why I hope the House will expedite consideration and passage of these amendments.

Yukon Quartz Mining Act

As some Members may be aware, the Yukon Quartz Mining Act which regulates mineral prospecting and mining in the Yukon, is one of many pieces of legislation which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) is responsible for enforcing. In practical terms, this Act regulates prospecting and the staking of mining claims in the Yukon, with respect to a large number of minerals including gold, silver, lead, zinc, and tungsten. Extracting the metalliferous ores is one of the basic activities of the mining industry in this territory.

I may recall that this legislation came into effect nearly sixty years ago, and although it was amended in 1952, a number of provisions are now obsolete and should be reviewed and revised.

Section 12, which is of specific interest to us today, sets strict limits on the rights of private citizens to stake claims in a given location and during a given period. When the legislation was introduced, most mineral prospecting and mining was not really extensive, and it was judged that such limits were necessary and desirable. However, with the expansion of the mining industry in the North, these activities have expanded as well. Because of the economic situation, the high cost of prospecting and setting up facilities cannot be justified unless one has good reason to expect substantial production.

Section 12 of the existing Act allows a person to stake only eight claims within a radius of sixteen kilometres or ten miles, over a period of twelve months. However, the territory covered by mining companies has expanded. Some companies hire a group of individuals who each stake eight claims, registered under their own name and subsequently ceded to these companies. That is how companies are able to acquire the vast amounts of land they need to warrant the cost of prospecting with modern techniques.

I am particularly concerned, and that concern is shared by those who are trying to expand mining in the North, that a court might rule that this procedure contravenes Section 12.

Mr. Speaker, a ruling of this kind would not only have disastrous consequences for the future of the mining industry in the Yukon, it might challenge the validity of all claims staked in this way over the years. The amendments presented in the House today will have the following consequences:

First, removal of restrictions on the number of claims an individual has the right to stake;

Second, removal of the provisions on staking claims by power of attorney;

And finally, validation of existing claims in accordance with the provisions of Clause 12.

Mr. Speaker, I may add that the proposed amendments will bring the legislation on staking claims in the Yukon into line with similar legislation in other jurisdictions in Canada. The regulations on mining in Canada, which deal with similar issues in the case of the Northwest Territories, were amended in 1975 in order to remove such restrictions. Thus, we now have two different pieces of legislation dealing with mineral prospecting north of 60°.

I believe Hon. Members will agree that this is not a desirable situation. The proposed amendments are firmly supported by the Government of Yukon and the mining industry. Those most affected by this issue are very anxious to see us take preventive action to end situations that might do considerable harm to the Yukon's economic expansion.

I hardly need remind the House how important the mining industry is to the people of the North. Since the Klondike gold rush, mining has played a major role in opening up the North to the outside world and has provided lucrative employment for the local population.

Even more important are future prospects for mining in the North, not only for the local population but for all Canadians. Forty per cent of Canada's territory is located north of 60°, where substantial mineral resources are as yet untouched. It is therefore in the interests of all Canadians that mineral prospecting and mining in the North should be done as efficiently as possible.

The Yukon's mining industry went through difficult times at the beginning of the eighties, because of a slump in demand and a drop in prices for its main products, lead and zinc. Nevertheless, in recent years this sector represented about 3 per cent of total mineral production in Canada, it provides about 10 per cent of the jobs, which works out to more than 5,000 person-years, and makes the most substantial contribution to the territory's gross domestic product.

Practically all the Yukon's mining production is exported and accounts for a substantial part of Canada's balance of payments. I may say that the mining industry has a promising future in the Yukon. Short-term forecasts for precious metals are good. More than half of current and projected spending on prospecting in this region is directed towards precious metals. Last year, three high-grade silver mines were operating, and placer mining, a traditional part of the mining industry in the Yukon, has resumed.

In the long run, it is quite probable that the discovery of substantial reserves of lead, zinc, iron and tungsten will increase exploration activity during the next twenty or thirty years. This means that the mining industry in the Yukon might expand further during the same period.

How are we going to make this come true, Mr. Speaker?

I believe that one of the most important things the Government should do is promote economic stability and political confidence, and maintain a climate that is favourable to the development of the North's resources. Developing mineral resources requires long-term planning and commitment of often very substantial funds. If we want to encourage mineral prospecting and exploration in the North, we must provide guarantees that such activities will take place in a stable environment and that the Government is willing to contribute to the success of these ventures.

We have made many efforts to create such a climate. In fact, I feel that the definitive settlement of the general claims by the Yukon Indian Council will help politically to restore confidence and stability in the Yukon.

Furthermore, our policy for supporting a comprehensive and ongoing program for construction of roads and industrial facilities in the North is a clear indication to prospective entrepreneurs that the federal Government is prepared to make the North's resources more accessible. More directly, the Department has for some time been working closely with representatives of the Territorial Government and the mining industry to develop a comprehensive policy for mineral prospecting and mining in the North.

These efforts have been successful, and very shortly a series of documents will be published, dealing with some of the main problems connected with the long-term viability of mines in the North and their impact on the region's economic expansion.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill before the House today is a direct result of our concern for maintaining this climate of confidence and stability. We must deal with a situation that might create a lot of confusion in the mining industry in the North and thus preclude future resource prospecting and mining in the Yukon. It is a situation that is not in the interests of the people of the Yukon or of Canadians. The proposed amendments will give us the means to circumvent this problem and establish specific regulations that reflect the realities of our time. This Bill is supported by the Territorial Government and the people of Yukon, by the mining industry and by this Government. I believe it deserves the approval of all the Members of this House.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I am going to participate very briefly in this debate, and then I am certain the Chair will recognize my colleague from Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who, needless to say, has a very great interest in this legislation.

I will begin my remarks by referring to something that the Parliamentary Secretary said, that these are minor amendments but extremely important. They are extremely important to Yukon. For that reason I am very disappointed that the Minister has not seen fit to bring the amendments to the House but has asked his Parliamentary Secretary to do so. I am not reflecting badly on the Parliamentary Secretary; he is a very fine gentleman. But I am extremely disappointed that the Minister, who has $3 billion in the Estimates, appeared once before the committee for approximately one hour and half and that is the last we have seen of him. I have heard rumours he is out campaigning for one thing or another, but we are not sure because he does not show up in any of the polls they publish these days. I am very disappointed that he is not here to bring this Bill through. It just shows the people of Yukon—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I would just like to remind the hon. gentleman that referring to the presence or absence of Members in the House is not in order.

Mr. McDermid: I am referring to the Minister's Bill and he is not here to bring it in. I am very disappointed at that and the people of Yukon can see that he really does not have an interest in them at all.

I was very interested to listen to the Parliamentary Secretary talk about the great interest in mining this Government has and how it is all fired up to encourage it. The amendments to this Act will no doubt help. On the other hand, the Government is bringing in big clubs to regulate the industry through some onerous conditions to be imposed on certain mining sectors in the north. We are very concerned about that. We feel the Government is speaking out of both sides of its mouth. Although the Parliamentary Secretary gave a very eloquent address this morning, one that was obviously written for him by someone in the Department, we treat those remarks with some suspicion. I just did not feel that there was conviction in the tone of delivery.

This Bill abolishes Section 12 of the Yukon Quartz Mining Act and replaces it with a new Section 12. I will not go through all the things it does once again. The Parliamentary Secretary fairly well laid it out, although there were a couple of things I was concerned about. He said individuals could lease to mining companies and I think he means that they could transfer to mining companies. One of the concerns we have is that the old Section 12 referred to every person 18 years of age, et cetera. Of course, under the interpretation section a "person" meant "company" and that has now been changed to "individual". We were concerned that companies were excluded.

Under Section 88 of the Act there are conditions for the transfer of a mineral claim from an individual to a corporation, or in effect, I guess, to another individual. Section 93 refers specifically to where a transfer is made to any person or company after a certificate of improvements has been issued. The intent is very clear that in fact companies can participate through their representatives and transfer claims to the corporation. That was our major concern.

I must say that on my recent trip to Yukon I spent a considerable amount of time in the placer mining area near Dawson City. It was a great experience. I got to learn first-hand of the miners' problems and concerns over the heavy-handedness of the Government in its dealings with them. The concerns are genuine and I would hope that this Government, although it has a very short time to go, would listen to those concerns. I can assure those people that when we form the next government, we will listen to those problems and act on them because they are very real.

The placer mining industry is a key industry to the economy of Yukon. It is an exciting industry. I can understand the fever that hits miners in the field having listened to them, watched them work and observed the atmosphere in that great metropolis of Dawson City. I can understand some of the motivation that the miners have in getting involved in placer mining.

We on this side will be supporting the Bill and we hope to move it through all three stages this morning and have it passed into law so that the mining industry will not be retarded in any way because of our negligence in not passing this Bill.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention also to speak very briefly on this Bill. The objective of the Bill is to eliminate the restriction on the number of claims that can be staked by any one individual in the Yukon Territory. The reason that restriction was enacted years ago was to prevent one person from tying up too much ground. In the early part of this century and the latter part of the previous century prospectors would go out and, once they found a showing and had perhaps done a fair amount of work on that showing, it would then be staked.

That is not the way exploration is done these days. Most of the showings that could be found fairly easily have already been found and evaluated. On the basis of regional geology, regional geophysics or geochemistry, an area is now outlined and the exploration company or prospector will go into that area. They like to have some assurance of title on that area so that a fair amount of money can be spent on detail work. Very often the large area of ground is only required for a period of one or two years while this work is being done. When more desirable areas within that region have been delineated, the rest of the ground will be let go. That is the reason that for initial stages of exploration today it is necessary that far more than eight claims, which is about 400 acres, be held by one individual or corporation for the purposes of exploration.

I would like to bring to the attention of the House one instance of what I would call miscarriage of justice resulting from the Canada mining regulations made under the Territorial Lands Act. A few years ago under that Act there was a similar restriction on the number of claims that could be staked by any one individual. What is normally done in the Yukon today, as was done in the Territories on that day, is that people would go out and stake the maximum number of claims. A friend would stake the contiguous ground and then transfer it to the person who wanted it.

In this particular instance a prospector had gone up to the Hackett River area in the Territories. A group of some 150 claims had been staked and transferred to the principal by people who had assisted him. He then auctioned that ground to a British Columbia corporation. The auction payments were not made so he took the B.C. corporation to court and tried to sue it for the moneys owing. The judge in the case in a British Columbia court ruled that no moneys were owing because the claims had been improperly staked; that the intent of the regulations had been broken and he had in fact acquired more than the permitted number of claims.

That presumably meant that the ground was open because the claims were improperly staked in the first place. The gentleman went back and restaked over the top of the ground he had initially staked. When he tried to record these new claims with the government official he was told that he could not do that because they were validly staked already. He was not able to recover in one way and was not able to get satisfaction in another way. That is one of the worst instances I can think of in Canadian jurisprudence where somebody got a pretty bad going over by the courts.

As a result of that case, the restriction on the number of claims which could be staked in the Territories was removed. It was a lot easier to do in that case because we were operating with regulations rather than an Act of Parliament. I am pleased to see that this type of miscarriage of justice will not now happen in the Yukon as a result of the passage of these amendments.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to speak on Bill C-44 to amend the Yukon Quartz Mining Act. One of the reasons that there is some urgency to have this Bill dealt with today is that there is a trial pending in the Supreme Court of the Yukon. It was originally set for this month but is now set for September. Under the existing piece of legislation there would have been some pretty severe ramifications for mining companies and individuals involved in the staking of claims, prospecting or mining.

The Bill currently before the House does a couple of things to amend Section 12 of the Yukon Quartz Mining Act. It removes the limit on the number of mineral claims allowed to be staked. Second, it repeals provisions respecting staking of claims by power of attorney. Third, it validates all existing mineral claims which may be deemed invalid only by reason that they were staked without prior filing of a power of attorney and/or in excess of the limit imposed by the current Section 12 of the Act.

Having staked claims and mined myself in the Yukon when I worked at Big Creek south of Carmacks for Kaiser Resources, I know what the implications would be for many individuals and companies who have made use of the Act. As you will appreciate, it is a somewhat old piece of legislation; it was passed 60 years ago. It is the wording which is creating the problems. The existing Section 12(1) reads as follows:

Subject to subsection (2), a person eighteen years of age—

As has been noted by a previous speaker, "person" is no longer the proper word to be used in terms of interpretive law. It in fact should say "individual", as is now the case in the new Section 12. It goes on to say:

—or over, may personally or by attorney—

Historically that has meant that one can stake claims or by power of attorney one can be given the right to do that for someone else and then file those claims. It continues:

—enter, locate, prospect and mine upon any vacant territorial lands in the Yukon Territory, for the minerals defined in this Act, and upon all lands in respect of which the right to so enter, prospect and mine such minerals has been, or is after the 19th day of July 1924 reserved to the Crown.

The change for that section is essentially an interpretive one. It will now read:

Any individual eighteen years of age or over may enter, locate, prospect and mine for minerals on

(a) any vacant territorial lands in the Territory; and

(b) any lands in the Territory in respect of which the right to enter, prospect and mine for minerals is reserved to the Crown.

That clears up the interpretive problem in terms of who can do it and where.

The second major change is really a retroactive one. Section 12(2) of the old Act provided:

Subject to section 46, during any period of twelve months no person is entitled to locate, whether personally, as attorney for another or by an attorney, more than seven mineral claims in the aggregate within a distance of ten miles from any other mineral claim (making a total of eight mineral claims) located by him personally, as attorney or by attorney, during that period.

Subsection (3) reads:

Every power of attorney authorizing a person to enter, locate, prospect or mine pursuant to subsection (1) shall be filed with the mining recorder before the entering, locating, prospecting or mining is undertaken.

The possible impact of the trial which would proceed this September would be to rule invalid enormous numbers of claims throughout Yukon. It could place many individuals and companies who had staked claims in the last six decades in a very unpredictable situation. They have acquired claims in areas where they feel there is a substantial lode of some kind or another, whether tungsten, zinc, gold, silver or whatever.

The new Section 12.1 which deals with that retroactivity reads:

No mineral claim recorded before this section comes into force shall be held invalid by reason only that (a) during any period of twelve months more than seven mineral claims were located by the same person,

That is the key new clause. It continues:

—whether personally, as attorney for another or by an attorney, within a distance of ten miles from any other mineral claim located by him, whether personally, as attorney for another or by an attorney, during that period; or

(b) a power of attorney authorizing a person to enter, locate, prospect or mine was not filed with a mining recorder—

Two key points are added in the new section. If I had given someone power of attorney to stake claims for me and he or I had not filed them properly or they had not been properly transferred, in most cases in Yukon that has now been retroactively dealt with. Part of the court case before the Supreme Court of the Yukon is to deal with what would happen if that process were to go ahead. As I said, it would have some rather serious negative repercussions on individuals.

I understand that all major northern mining industry representatives as well as the Mining Association of Canada and private corporations have indicated their concern and the urgent requirement of the House to deal with this section, especially prior to any kind of ruling by the courts.

It has been the practice in the Yukon for many years for groups of individuals to locate contiguous blocks. If you chain in one direction or the other, in fact it is possible to stake off eight claims rather quickly in an afternoon. It has been the practice to locate contiguous blocks of eight claims each and to transfer their interest to one person, whether it is a corporation or an individual. Thus it may be argued that this one person has acquired, by attorney, more than eight claims within a distance of ten miles in a single 12-month period in contravention of subsections 12(2) and 12(3) of the Yukon Quartz Mining Act. As I said, it would contravene the old Act but will not contravene this one either in the future or retroactively.

This problem has been recognized for a long time. The Act was last amended over 30 years of ago. A Bill was brought forward in 1970 that was to be a new Yukon minerals bill. In that Bill, Clause 104.1 would have validated the mineral claims acquired in a 12-month period beyond the limit imposed by the existing Section 12(2) of the current Act. However, there was not a lot of support in Yukon or in the industry generally for that particular Bill and it did not get anywhere.

In 1979 and 1980 another Bill was initiated to effect the minor amendments desired by the industry, one of which would have validated the subsisting mineral claims in the same way as the 1970 Bill as well as the Bill that we will pass this afternoon. The difficulty that arose with the 1970 legislation was that there were a number of other elements in it which were supposed to modernize the old 1925 Act.

Mr. Nielsen: It was a whole new Act.

Mr. Fulton: It was supposed to modernize it but there were a number of sections of that Act that were not popular with the industry. For that reason it did not make its way through the House.

Consensus for action has been difficult to achieve because, on the one hand, the mining industry which seeks this amendment has strongly opposed other measures which were included in the Yukon minerals Bill in 1970, and, on the other hand, there has not been much enthusiasm for opening the Yukon Quartz Mining Act to make only a few changes knowing that the whole Act must be brought into the twentieth century.

The anticipated reduction in investment in mining in the Yukon, foreseen if the Act was not amended, would have caused the loss of hundreds of jobs in mining which, as all Members will know, is one of the key employers in the Territory. Opportunities in the mining industry have provided employment for decades, not only to native Yukoners and Indian people in the Territory but to many who go there from other parts of the country, as I did from northern British Columbia years ago to work in the industry.

I am pleased to have spoken to the Leader of the Opposition in the Yukon Legislature, Tony Penikett, who supports the early and quick passage of this Bill to ensure that jobs are not lost or that chaos is not brought to the industry by a court ruling which would have affected the number of claims, the title to many of those claims, and which could very well have brought a dark cloud over the mining industry in Yukon. I must say that with the existing government, the cloud over the mining industry in Yukon is dark enough.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since there was a House agreement to hear two speakers, including the member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), I think we should make certain that we keep our procedures clear. Since we did go to two speakers, we would be willing to make it three speakers, including the Member for Yukon, so that he could make his speech. I know that it is a variation from the original agreement between the House Leaders to have one member per Party. We had agreed to allow the Member for Yukon to speak but our Party would again agree to a third speaker who could be the Member for Yukon.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is right. The understanding among House Leaders was that we would have one speaker per Party on the first Bill, one speaker per Party on the second Bill and that the Conservative Party would have two speakers on the third Bill. There would be one from the NDP. If time would allow, we would have a second speaker on the third Bill.

I understand that while I was away, unanimous consent was given so that the Hon. Member for Yukon may speak. I certainly agree to that. However, we were surprised to see that there was another speech; perhaps he did not know. In any case, provided that we get the three Bills this afternoon, I agree with the Hon. Member that the Member for Yukon should now speak. On the second Bill, it should be one speaker per Party and on the third Bill, it should be one Liberal, two Conservatives and at least one NDP member.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just wanted to say that I had a knowledge of any agreement between the House Leaders. If I have disrupted that, I certainly apologize for it.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) and the member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) for their courtesy. I will be very brief.

I was waiting for the briefing notes, which the Parliamentary Secretary was courteous enough to supply to us, to be dealt with, but he did not deal with the points made in those very excellent briefing notes by departmental officials. In those briefing notes, the real reasons for the changes are given which are, with respect, more accurate than those which were expounded by the Parliamentary Secretary. However, that deficiency was cured by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) who extensively used the briefing notes of the Department in making his remarks. Therefore I need not go into those now.

I think it would be of interest to members to know that there are two methods of mining in Yukon; placer mining and what we call hard rock. This Bill deals with the hard rock. The Yukon Placer Mining Act, which is not under discussion here, deals with the other method.

Historically, putting it into perspective, the Bill was the brainchild of a man who subsequently became a Member of Parliament. He is the late Hon. George Black, who indeed occupied the Speaker's chair during the Bennett Government of the thirties. That Act was the product of his intelligence, as was the Placer Mining Act. It has stood ever since 1924 when the Act was originally passed. This legislation has enabled the industry to function efficiently and well in Yukon.

One notable, remarkable feature about the Quartz Mining Act is that it has not been changed significantly at all in those almost 60 years since it was first passed. I am afraid that every Bill that we see coming out of this place and other levels of government has a tendency always to contain a power to regulate, a power to make regulations to achieve the purposes of the Bill. The argument of the bureaucrats always is that they may have overlooked something and must make a regulation to cover the oversight.

This Yukon Quartz Mining Act has no power to make regulations and has worked very well and efficiently for 60 years. It will interest the Member for Skeena to know that the prime reason that the 1970 legislation failed—I might add after being two years in committee—was that there was a power to make regulations. The industry, the prospectors and the mineral developers in Yukon were as certain as I am now standing here today that if that power to regulate were included in the mining legislation in Yukon, they would be suffocated, as they are being now in the Yukon placer mining industry. They are being suffocated by inspectors from the Fisheries Department and inspectors from the Department of the Environment. Not that those matters are not important, they are. We have situations where a public servant from the Fisheries Department goes to a placer miner, and speaking about his mining of gold says: "Why do you want to mine it anyway, you cannot eat it?" Then he shuts him down for one reason or another.

That kind of conduct is not expanding, as the Parliamentary Secretary said in his remarks; it is suffocating the industry in Yukon. When the Parliamentary Secretary speaks of the need to pass this Bill because of the rapid expansion of the mining industry in Yukon, he is topsy-turvy. By reasons partly attributable to government and partly attributable to international markets, there is no mining industry in Yukon now except the placer mining industry and one silver mine, not three, and that mine having only opened up less than a year ago. All the rest have been shut down. Cyprus Anvil has been shut down, Venus has been shut down and Clinton has been shut down. Again, why? Partly because of FIRA and because of the application of impossible to live with regulations made by people who do not know what they are talking about; made by people like those, again with respect, who wrote the material for the Parliamentary Secretary to which he treated us this afternoon. The kindest thing the Parliamentary Secretary could do would be to divorce himself from the beliefs expressed in the material which he gave to us.

The mineral industry in Yukon is important not just to Yukon, it is important to Canada. We displayed that when the Cyprus Anvil mine was fully operating and exporting. It affected significantly our balance of trade. It accounted for 40 per cent of the economy of Yukon. Now it is all but shut down. All that is going on now is a stripping program, with $25 million put up by the company and $25 million put up by the Government in order, as it were, to improve the asset.

What happens when the mining industry closes down, as it has in the Yukon? The railroad closes down. The railroad is still closed down because there is no backhaul of mine products. It remains closed down and the Government, knowing that there are international elements to pull together, labour elements to pull together, industrial developments to pull together from several different areas in order to reopen Cyprus Anvil and the railroad, is not acting as the catalyst it should in order to achieve that opening.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if that railroad or the Cyprus Anvil mine were in the area of Oshawa, Metro Toronto or Downsview, they would both be functioning by now. I cannot overstate the importance of the industry not being isolated to Yukon but being part of a very important asset that can be exploited to the benefit of the entire country.

Southerners really do not appreciate the richness of the asset that lies in Yukon and is affected by this legislation. Stability that amendment will bring; expansion, no. This very important amendment to Section 12 will not bring about any expansion. Expansion will be brought about by the Government addressing policy questions and solving problems that are solvable immediately. There is the question of transportation, a tied-up railroad, the question of energy rates set by a Crown corporation. We even had all-Party agreement on the Penner report, but the Government did not like it, shunted it aside and sent it over to the National Energy Board and the mine is still closed down.

What are the facts with respect to this specific amendment? Fifteen years ago when I was practising law actively I discovered the defect in Section 12 and some others, although they were certainly not as fatal as this one was. I prepared a very lengthy opinion, some 50 pages of legal opinion, for the client who eventually consented to have that opinion released to the Government.

I brought this matter to the attention of the Government some 14 years ago and asserted that, if it were not rectified, what the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) calls absolute chaos would be extant in Yukon. It takes only one case to be successful and the floodgates of overstaking and claim jumping would open. This is what this case is about to do which the Hon. Member for Skeena speaks of as being before the Supreme Court in Yukon next September.

The flaw was always there. It is vitally important that it be corrected and it is vitally important that it be made retroactive to 1924 because every single mineral claim that has been staked under the provisions of Section 12 is fatally flawed by the defects. It strikes at the root of title to the holder of every mineral claim in Yukon. It throws a cloud over the operations—if it ever gets operating again, and I hope it will if the Government does the right thing—of companies such as Cyprus Anvil. It throws a cloud over the title of the operating silver mine in Yukon now, United Keno Hills, and virtually every other one that may come on stream. A change is vitally necessary. But the real reason for it is to cure a title defect. Without the change that case undoubtedly would go in favour of the interpretation of the existing legislation which this amendment is intended to cure.

I just want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary in the two or three minutes remaining, because I have finished my remarks, in the event future judicial interpreters of this legislation might get to the stage where they have to read the debates to clear up any meaning which a clause might have, whether he would give me his assurance that the changing of the word "person" to "individual" has no effect, when taken together with Section 88, in preventing partnerships, syndicates, consortia, partnerships between prospectors or companies, from acquiring mineral claims by way of transfer from the individual who stakes them under the new section.

That is my understanding of the effect. However, I think we should have the Government's assurance on the record that that is the intention, so that if we ever get that far in the judicial interpretation process it will be clear for future judges who might consider these matters.

I am sure the House would agree, Mr. Speaker, not to see the clock until the Parliamentary Secretary gives us that assurance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent not to see the clock? Is there unanimous consent also for the Parliamentary Secretary to answer the Hon. Member's question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1300)

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, if one reads Section 88 concerning the transfer of a mineral claim and continues through to Section 93, I should think that there is no possibility of misinterpretation. When reference is made to the transfer of a mineral claim, whether from an individual or a person, it is actually stated:

> Where a transfer is made to any person or company after a certificate of improvements has been issued—

I do not see any interpretation problem because Section 93 does state that the transfer may come from anyone, from one company or other, from a person or from an individual. I can assure the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) that the Government is not attempting to play hide-and-seek with this Bill.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the House ready to proceed before the lunch hour?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Guilbault in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): It being after one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1.03 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If you will seek unanimous consent, I think you will find that there is unanimous consent for us to consider Bill C-41 in Committee of the Whole and to do third reading today with one speaker per Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent for the proposal just enunciated by the Parliamentary Secretary?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SKAGIT RIVER VALLEY TREATY IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (for the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that Bill C-41, an Act to implement a treaty between Canada and the United States relating to the Skagit River and Ross Lake, and the Seven Mile Reservoir on the Pend d'Oreille River be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: That is the right mood for us to be in because this is a good news Bill. One of the major successes in the relations between Canada and the United States in the past year has been the satisfactory conclusion of negotiations to resolve the Skagit issue. This issue, the threatened flooding of the Skagit River Valley in British Columbia by the raising of the existing Ross Dam in the United States, has been a long-standing irritant in Canada's relations with the United States. The settlement proposal developed during negotiations involving the Canadian and American federal Governments, the Province of British Columbia and the City of Seattle, when ratified and implemented by all parties, will remove the threat of flooding, thereby ensuring that the Skagit River Valley can be treasured and enjoyed by future generations in its present natural state.

It is for these two reasons of diplomacy and environmental protection that I am very pleased to introduce into the House Bill C-41, its short title being the Skagit River Valley Treaty Implementation Act, a Bill that will provide the basis for federal support of the over-all Skagit settlement.

As my hon. friends know, this Bill is necessary to the ratification of the treaty. Essentially, it is necessary in order to authorize the export of electrical power by British Columbia for 80 years and a federal guarantee of possible financial obligations. These are the two reasons why the Bill is necessary.

The basic document in the over-all settlement is a detailed agreement between British Columbia and Seattle which reflects the long-standing position of the Government that the solution of this problem was best left to those directly involved. The federal Government, however, pledged to do all within its power to facilitate the settlement in any way possible. This the Government has done.

[Translation]

That is why, Mr. Speaker, when negotiations began to bear on issues beyond the jurisdiction of British Columbia and the City of Seattle, the Canadian and American Governments took responsibility for settling those issues through a bilateral treaty, the Skagit River Valley Treaty. The Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) had the great honour to sign that treaty on behalf of the Government of Canada when he met with his American counterpart, Mr. Shultz, in Washington on April 2, 1984. He said at the time that it was a supportive treaty, and that is indeed what it is. In fact, on March 30 1984, representatives of British Columbia and Seattle met in Vancouver to sign an agreement which is the keystone of the Skagit River settlement.

• (1410)

[English]

One of the essential provisions in the British Columbia-Seattle Agreement is the obligation on the part of British Columbia to supply electric power to Seattle over an 80-year period from 1986 to 2066. As you may know, Mr. Speaker, currently the National Energy Board Act restricts the authority of the Governor in Council to make regulations respecting the duration of export licences to a period not exceeding 25 years. British Columbia, therefore, could not obtain a licence under the existing Act to fulfil the province's obligations under its agreement with Seattle. In order to overcome this, the Government of Canada undertook in the Skagit River Valley Treaty to seek the authorization of Parliament through the Skagit River Valley Treaty Implementation Act to approve in this specific case the export of electrical power by British Columbia for a period of 80 years. In doing so now—and it is asking the House to authorize it—the Government of Canada recognizes that the Skagit problem requires a unique solution including an exceptional override of existing legislation.

The other provision of the British Columbia-Seattle Agreement which is supported by the Treaty and addressed by this Bill involves undertakings on the part of both the Canadian and United States federal Governments to guarantee potential financial obligations on the part of British Columbia and Seattle under their agreement. I should point out that a separate Canada-British Columbia Agreement—a fourth legal document—would ensure that the federal treasury is reimbursed fully in the highly unlikely event—I underline that because I would not want to be chastised in British Columbia for lack of faith in the financial responsibilities of the provincial government—that funds are paid out by the federal Government on British Columbia's behalf.

I would like to outline briefly for the benefit of Members, and possilby more for the benefit of students of Canadian-American relations, the background of the issue and the over-all settlement. Since the City of Seattle obtained an order of approval from the International Joint Commission in 1942 to raise the Ross Dam and thus flood the Skagit River Valley, opposition to this proposal has grown in Canada, especially in British Columbia. Early attempts to have the Commission order rescinded did not prove to be successful. However, in 1982 the International Joint Commission temporarily suspended the approval given in the 1942 order to raise the Ross Dam and established a joint consultative group on the Skagit to oversee the development of a satisfactory agreement between British Columbia and Seattle. The group was co-chaired by Commissioner Richmond Olson—who I am happy to salute in the gallery—and also by Mr. Keith Bulen from the United States. Both of those gentlemen were from the International Joint Commission. The group also included representatives of the governments of Canada, the United States, British Columbia and the City of Seattle.

In December, 1983 the group formally reached a consensus on a settlement package proposal consisting of the British Columbia-Seattle Agreement, the Canada-United States Treaty and the Canada-British Columbia agreement. The basic provision of the settlement is that Seattle agrees not to raise the dam and consequently not to flood the valley, in return for a commitment from British Columbia to supply to Seattle the equivalent electric power it would have obtained if it had raised the dam. That is the quid pro quo. In return, I repeat, Seattle will pay to British Columbia an amount deemed to be the equivalent of the capital cost of the dam plus an annual amount in lieu of the operation and maintenance costs of the dam. That is the basic trade off. The agreement will last for 80 years, which is the estimated life of the dam.

I provide this information to Parliament, even if Members of this House are not being asked today to approve the details, which are between British Columbia and Seattle. I would, however, like to register my admiration for what is in reality a very sensible solution, one which serves to respond to the interests of all concerned. I am particularly gratified that the International Joint Commission has again proven its value in resolving bilateral issues with the United States.

The settlement as outlined in the British Columbia-Seattle Agreement will run for 80 years. On the date the Skagit River Valley Treaty comes into force, the 1942 International Joint Commission order of approval sanctioning the raising of the Ross Dam will be terminated and a major environmental objective will be achieved. Bill C-41 is necessary if Canada is to fulfil its commitment to ensure the successful resolution of the Skagit issue. It is but a part of a settlement formula developed in an atmosphere of close co-operation with the Government of British Columbia. By adopting the Bill, Parliament will not only authorize export of electrical power and provide a recoverable financial guarantee, but it will also ensure that important provincial objectives and expectations are met by this supportive federal action.

In pressing forward with negotiations, the Government was conscious that the potential flooding of the valley was of serious concern to the House as well as to the population of British Columbia. This House has expressed, in two unanimous resolutions which were made in 1970 and 1973, its desire for a solution. Ministers of environment of this Government and former governments took an active interest in promoting a successful resolution of the Skagit issue. I know that many individual Members of the House have also sought to ensure that a satisfactory settlement be found before the valley was flooded and would want to ensure that the solution was implemented without delay.

Finally, I would also point out that the United States administration, having successfully concluded its internal arrangements concerning the settlement, is now working hard to ensure Senate ratification of the Treaty. I understand that the Treaty will be submitted to the Senate next week for its ratification. We are under a deadline to complete our ratification and implementation process. The British Columbia-Seattle Agreement cannot, of course, be brought into force until this ratification and implementation Bill has been proclaimed. If the Treaty has not been ratified by both the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States by December 31, 1984, the Agreement will not come into force and will terminate. Should this happen, the settlement will fail.

The Government of Canada is not at all confident that, if that happens, it would be able to reopen negotiations and obtain as good a settlement as it has in this particular instance. So we had better make sure that we get to church on time! Of course, I would not expect the opposite to happen—we will get to church on time. I believe that this House, which has already stated its desire for the kind of solution which is being proposed, will co-operate fully and ensure passage of the Bill before it adjourns for the summer. It might even do that this afternoon, if the mood remains as good as it has been up until now.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of his remarks the Minister indicated that this was a happy occasion in the House today. I say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister, to Government Members, to my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, to my colleagues inthe Progressive Conservative Party and to the public of Canada, that this is indeed a happy day in the House of Commons of our country.

What we are doing today completes the last stages of a struggle which commenced many years ago to save a beautiful valley in British Columbia from being flooded as a consequence of an order made by the International Joint Commission in 1942. That order was directed to permitting Seattle City Light, a power utility, to raise its existing Ross Dam on the American side of the border, and on the lower Skagit River, to an additional height which would have resulted in flooding on the Canadian side.

One may say, well, if that happened in 1942, how did it happen if so much objection was raised many years later? It is instructive, I believe, to advise the House of the hearing, which was held in Seattle, from which the 1942 order arose. It was held in the autumn, in September of 1941. I will read from a publication produced by a group of citizens, organizations and individuals who banded together years ago to save the Skagit River. It is called "A Citizen's Guide to the Skagit Valley". On page 54 the following records what happened in 1941, and I quote:

> The only opposition came from B.C. Game Commissioner J. G. Cunningham. After apologizing that "I am not familiar with the subject discussed here today . . . our Commission was not on the list of those advised", he continued "I am here merely to present a brief on behalf of the sportsmen of the Skagit River. It is one of the best fly fishing streams in the whole of British Columbia . . . the more of that stream you flood, the less fishing we are going to have".

The book from which I am reading continues on in the next paragraph, and I cannot help but enjoy the smile of bemused understanding on the Minister's face because he knows what is coming. It continues, and I quote:

> Canada's contribution to the Commission's deliberations was a fifty word statement from Victor Meek, Controller of the Dominion Water and Power bureau, who said: "I am representing the Canadian Government, Department of External Affairs, and I have no statement to make at this time. I assume that we will have an opportunity of presenting a brief later, after we have had a chance to study the details of this project as presented this morning."

The book goes on to comment on that pious hope of a further discussion and brief—and I see the Minister smiling broadly now "He never did". So the matter, Mr. Speaker, drifted away out of the consciousness of even those few people who did attend on that momentous occasion, and for many years in British Columbia those of us who loved fly fishing, camping and the outdoors visited the Skagit River never realizing that between the years 1941 and 1942 an order had been passed, without any public notice of any tangible degree, which, if acted upon, would take that valley forever from the people of our country.

Hon. Members of this House will know that eventually, in the passage of time, the Government of British Columbia negotiated with the Seattle City Light utility as to what should be a fair rental for the land which was to be flooded. For a long time the then Premier, the Hon. W. A. C. Bennett, would not come to an agreement with the City of Seattle because he apparently did not think it was a good enough deal.

Then something quite extraordinary happened. In 1967 British Columbia suddenly signed an agreement with the City of Seattle, and again I quote from this short but succinct history book:

> Considering how long the B.C. Government had stalled Seattle's plans, the terms of the final agreement signed by B.C. Resources Minister Ray Williston on January 10, 1967 are truly astonishing. For an annual rental of U.S. $34,566.21 . . . and taxes of about $10,000 per year, Seattle Light gained the right to flood 21 km of prime Canadian land and to save itself $12-15 million per year on the cost of alternative electrical power.

Therefore, Hon. Members will understand why, when this information finally became public in British Columbia, those who cared were mobilized into action. It is impossible today, Mr. Speaker, even to begin to honour, to extend our appreciation and congratulations to all those Canadians who tried so hard in those early years to mobilize public opinion and who, by their tenacity in staying with the challenge, have contributed so substantially to this moment today.

However, some of the people should be mentioned. One person is a former Liberal member of the Legislative Assembly, David Brousson. Another person is the present Premier of the Province of British Columbia, Bill Bennett. When he became Leader of the Social Credit Party, he made a political decision to try to save the Skagit River. He no doubt listened long and hard and carefully to the arguments of Mr. Brousson, who worked with other members of the Legislature, including members of the New Democratic Party, to persuade Mr. Bennett to fight to save the valley.

Another person who it would be remiss not to mention specifically is the Hon. Stephen Rogers, who was the Minister of the Environment and had an outstandingly capable Deputy Minister, Mr. Ben Marr, at the time when the most difficult negotiations were carried on with Seattle. I believe it has to be remembered that if it had not been for the conviction on the part of the Hon. Stephen Rogers that this was the right thing to do, to find a way to make an agreement with Seattle City Light and to do this in a civilized way between good neighbours who share a common border, we probably would not be discussing this Bill today.

Having mentioned these particular politicians, Mr. Speaker, it must also be recorded that men and women of all Parties with goodwill in political life, who sit in the Legislature of the Province of British Columbia and in this House, have worked continuously for many years to be sure that a happy result would indeed come about. So I pay them tribute.

I would like to pay tribute also to the International Joint Commission. The Minister has referred to two members of that commission, one a Canadian and one an American. However, I believe for the record that we should record that when this arrangement was finally effected under the aegis of the International Joint Commission, the Hon. J. Blair Seaborn was, and is, the Canadian Chairman; Mr. E. Richmond Olsen and Monsieur Charles Bedard are the other two Canadian members. At the same time the American Chairman was the Hon. Robert C. McEwan with his commissioners, L. Keith Bulen and Donald L. Totten. I am sure that the other members of the International Joint Commission will not mind at all when I single out the Hon. Richmond Olsen and the Hon. Keith Bulen for having played a significant and at times almost dramatic part in establishing a regime and climate within which the Agreement the Minister referred to was worked out.

• (1430)

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to record the associations which made up the ROSS Committee, which was called the Run Out Skagit Spoilers Committee. These are citizens' groups in British Columbia. The Alpine Club of Canada; British Columbia Federation of Fly Fishers; British Columbia Wildlife Federation; Dogwood Canoe Club; Federation of B.C. Naturalists; Federation of Mountain Clubs of B.C.; Langara Environmental Voice; Recreational Canoeing Association of British Columbia; Sierra Club of Western Canada; Skagit Anglers; Society for Promotion of Environmental Conservation; University of British Columbia Environmental Interest Group; Vancouver Natural History Society; and the Western Canada Wilderness Committee.

Some may have been missed. Certainly there is no way that all the individuals who helped can be recognized today. But it is also very important for everyone in this House to realize that if we had not had the dedicated help of American citizens on the other side of the line who with us wanted to save this valley, we would not have been successful. I know all Hon. Members will agree with me that we wish a tribute to be extended to all of the Americans who, over so many years, helped us in Canada to save this valley, not just for ourselves but for our children and grandchildren.

This has indeed been for me an exciting and wonderful occasion this afternoon. Dave Brousson, who I mentioned earlier, was a Liberal member of the Legislative Assembly in B.C. in the late sixties. In 1970 he came to me and asked if I would get involved. Would I be prepared as a lawyer, in my own time and at my own expense, to present a brief to the IJC. We did and that put some of the legal arguments and constitutional and international issues in the public forum. There were a great many people who worked very hard because they believed in something decent and right. They were able to persuade others that this indeed was the way to settle matters between Canada and the United States. To them I want to express my deep appreciation for the work which has led to this Bill being presented in this House today. I am sure that all Hon. Members will agree with me when I echo again the Minister's words, that this is indeed a happy day.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured as well to have an opporutnity to speak very much in favour of Bill C-41. It is a happy and important day where all Members of this House can rise and take some pleasure in complimenting those hundreds and thousands of Canadians who worked so long and hard to see the Parliament of Canada pass our part of this Treaty. I am sure we all share the hope that the U.S. Senate will move expeditiously next week to pass their part of the Treaty.

There are a couple of points which the Minister touched on which I think are worth reiterating. Power will be supplied by British Columbia to Seattle for the next 80 years. What this Bill does is override part of the National Energy Board Act which allows only a 25-year maximum firm power export. It also enshrines federal Government guarantees should there be any difficulties on either side regarding any change in view by Seattle City Light on the one hand, or by British Columbia on the other. The interim agreement reached on March 30 of this year, and the Bill we are going to pass in the House today, was signed by our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and his American counterpart, Mr. Shultz, on April 2 this year. The Treaty will take us to the year 2065.

Before entering into the long history of this matter, Mr. Speaker, I want to add some kind words for the Ross committee. They worked long and hard for more than a decade to get Canada, British Columbia and the IJC moving, and to mobilize public opinion with our good neighbours in the State of Washington. I must say that wherever I went on this matter the work of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) was well known. I think that Members of the House are aware of the work he did, even though at times certain Members on the other side tried to dispel that by saying it was simply a rumour. The record shows, and those who have been involved for many years know, that his work on this matter was crucial to our being able to stand to speak in favour of this Bill today.

The history of the High Ross Dam proposal is worth putting on the record for, as the Minister would say, the students of the history of Canada-U.S. relations on matters such as this. I will try not to go back over the points touched on either by the Hon. Member or by the Minister. The original concept of the integrated development of the Skagit River hydroelectric potential was formulated by Seattle City Light back in 1906. After they looked at the area and the size of the dam required to maximize power production, the next major move was in 1929 when Seattle acquired private lands within the proposed flood basin in B.C., lots 221 and 222, which totalled about one square mile. In 1937 the Ross Dam, stage one, began, and by 1941 Seattle City Light had applied to the IJC for authority to flood Canada under the 1909 Boundary Waters Treaty.

On September 12, 1941, a hearing in Seattle lasted one hour and 55 minutes on the Seattle proposal. The Hon. Member for Vancouver South gave us a couple of appropriate quotations regarding that meeting. However, present at that time were only three of the six IJC Commissioners. The Canadian Chairman was absent. External Affairs was represented by a man who had not previously heard of this project and he stated that he assumed we would have an opportunity to present a brief after we had had a chance to study the details of this project as presented that morning. British Columbia, as has already been mentioned, was represented by Game Commissioner Cunningham, who was not officially notified of the hearing but simply came to talk about fly fishing for a total of about one minute.

In 1942 the IJC order of approval, giving provisional agreement for fair and adequate compensation of all interests in B.C., was concluded. The decision was taken by four of the six Commissioners, including the Canadian Chairman who had been absent at the earlier hearing. There is no known record of input by External Affairs on behalf of Canada, or by the public.

The next move in the long history of this matter was in 1947 to 1952 when there were a number of unsuccessful negotiations between Seattle City Light and British Columbia regarding compensation. Then the whole matter started to flare up in 1953 when Seattle City Light illegally flooded about one square mile of Canada's Skagit Valley line below the elevation of 1,600 feet. This was protested at the time and was subsequently covered by an interim agreement for British Columbia to receive the wonderful amount of $5,000 per annum from Seattle City Light for the flooding of a square mile of our country.

In 1967 it really started to heat up. British Columbia signed the agreement with Seattle City Light providing for the flooding of the Skagit Valley to an elevation of 1,725 feet, which is another 125 vertical feet of the valley floor, in return for an annual payment of just over $34,000 U.S. plus taxes. There was some quibbling as to how high the taxes would be. It depends upon which document you read; some say $3,000 per year and some say $10,000. Seattle was also required to clear the reservoir basin and replace the inundated sections of existing road before flooding using residents of B.C. for all the work.

It was at this point that Canadians started to realize the dilemma which had been created. The fishermen who went right down into the flood area at certain times of the year realized what was happening with the drawdown of the basin. They would see all the stumps and mud flats during the filling period, particularly early in the spring when there was some pretty good fishing. However, at that time it took most of the summer to fill the level of water up to any kind of a reasonable looking shoreline.

In 1969 there was an application for a licence by Seattle City Light and the public opposition really began. It was at that time that the ROSS Committee, the Run Out Skagit Spoilers, was formed. This group was very active for 15 years and still exists. In 1970 opposition to the High Ross Dam was announced by the Government of Canada. As the Minister pointed out, in that year and again three years later Parliament spoke as one voice, as we occasionally do, in unanimously opposing the flooding of the Skagit Valley.

In 1971 there was a bilateral reference to the IJC with the terms of reference limiting study to environmental effects and the potential for mitigation with recommendations not inconsistent with the 1942 order of approval of High Ross. We have to reflect on what was happening during that period of time when the initial order was made in 1942. The world was at war and the meeting, as we know, was a very unusual one in that our representative of External Affairs said 50 words. Our other representative was a game commissioner who said about the same amount. It is on that original meeting in 1942 that the City of Seattle based all of the litigation and desire to flood that part of the Skagit Valley.

In 1972 the Government of British Columbia announced opposition to the High Ross. It had taken some time. Perhaps to some extent a change in government had allowed for that initial change in view within the Province of British Columbia.

From 1974 to 1977 the U.S. Federal Power Commission, which is now called FERC, held hearings leading to the approval of High Ross. At that time there was no formal intervention by British Columbia or Canada. In 1975 negotiations between B.C. and Seattle in view of settlement began. These proved fruitless and were finally suspended in 1979. In 1980, at the beginning of this Parliament, the United States Court of Appeal upheld the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission decision in favour of High Ross, rejecting intervenors' petitions for review. I am sure that Members of the House recall that during the early days of this Parliament that matter was raised repeatedly and heatedly in the House. Various Members of the House intervened individually or as groups at that time.

On August 14, 1980 British Columbia filed a petition to the IJC requesting it to declare the 1942 order of approval a nullity. On reflection in a historical sense, I think we can all agree that in light of the circumstances of that period of the 1940s, that is something one would have hoped Seattle might have agreed to. The petition also requested the IJC to rescind the approval contained in the order, or to declare the raising of the Skagit River to an elevation of 1,725 feet contrary to the public interest of Canada and the United States, or to declare that no suitable or adequate compensation had been reached in accordance with the principles of the IJC, or to declare the 1967 compensation agreement invalid, and to direct Seattle not to flood the Skagit pending adjudication of the B.C. request.

The grounds for the request included the following: (1) That the 1941 IJC hearing was conducted by less than a majority of the Commission, and the 1942 order of approval was voted on by one member, of four voting, who had not heard the evidence, violating IJC rules of procedure and the rules of natural justice. (2) That the 1941-42 proceedings were undertaken during a state of national emergency in both countries with the express purpose of rapidly increasing power production for military purposes, and these conditions no longer exist. (3) Failure of the Commission to consider environmental impact of the project before taking its decision. (4) That Seattle City Light illegally flooded into Canada in 1953 and no adequate compensation had been or can be afforded therefore. And finally, that the 1942 IJC order and subsequent 1967 compensation agreement effectively delegated to Seattle and B.C. the power to determine fair and adequate compensation, a power expressly reserved to the IJC by Article VIII of the 1909 Boundary Waters Treaty.

Having given a little history, I would like to restate a few of the remarks I made in an intervention to the IJC regarding the Skagit River in the fall of 1980 concerning the history of errors. I will try not to touch on the points that have already been raised by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South.

The 1942 meeting of the IJC to discuss approval of the dam consisted of four to six Commissioners, including the Canadian Chairman. Only one member actually voted to approve the application. This was against the rules of the Commission. Based on this information, the Commission's original order should be considered invalid and, in my view, is one of the fundamental justifications at that time for the full public hearings and review.

The Province of B.C. concurred in the project since there was a "state of emergency" existing in the United States and developments requiring electricity would be required. Despite these claims, no such building took place. In fact, comments from the IJC hearing in 1941 indicate an extreme vagueness in this area: "In other words . . . in view of the present national emergency we do not know how much more power and what facilities are going to be required, and we want to be prepared to proceed to increase our plant to take care of that situation if it develops". That quote is from the IJC hearings in 1941.

Clearly the mood and the context in which the original order was made was that the U.S. was requesting of Canada and British Columbia a future right for potential flooding, principally for military purposes in the case of a national emergency. Clearly that has never occurred, but nevertheless the order is what they based all of their following legal arguments on.

The Commission did not consider the environmental damage to the Skagit Valley that would result from the building of the dam. However, the Ross Dam was completed in 1949. In return for allowing the dam to be built the Commission ordered that "fair and adequate compensation" be provided to B.C. Those negotiations took four more years, when Seattle City Light finally and illegally flooded 500 acres in British Columbia.

I would like now to refer to some of those who were the most active with the ROSS Committee in getting British Columbia, Canada, and to a great extent the State of Washington, Seattle City Light, and hopefully next week the U.S. Senate, all on board for what really is a momentous and important act of co-operation between our countries. The membership of the ROSS Committee who have been active since about 1969 included the Alpine Club of Canada; the B.C. Federation of Fly Fishers; the B.C. Wildlife Federation; the Dogwood Canoe Club; the Federation of B.C. Naturalists; the Federation of Mountain Clubs of B.C.; Langara Environmental Voice; the Recreational Canoeing Association of B.C.; the Sierra Club of Western Canada; Skagit Anglers; SPEC; the Vancouver Natural History Society; the Western Canada Wilderness Committee; and a number of others who were active or are active now.

One of their key spokespeople, along with Ken Farquuson, was Tom Perry who authored the book which was being referred to by the Member for Vancouver South. He did a phenomenal amount of work at his own cost and in his own time, not only in putting the book together and travelling extensively in the valley, but coming here to raise the consciousness of Members of Parliament in the early part of this Parliament to get moving again on this matter.

He also wrote articles such as this one, which is entitled "Hey, this Land is your Land, Too!" It appeared in Maclean's. I quote:

> The issue is an environmental classic. City Light wants to raise the existing Ross Dam on the Skagit River, backing the reservoir 13 km north into B.C. Seattle would gain electrical energy worth at least $1 million annually. In return, B.C. would lose a unique river valley and get compensation of a mere $34,566 per year.
> The Canadian Skagit is a flat low-elevation valley,, which is a rarity in a region dominated by high mountains. (Eighty per cent of B.C. is over 900 metres high, and 40 per cent is tundra.) The Skagit is only a two- or three-hour drive from half the population of B.C., yet it remains in public ownership, protected as a Provincial Recreation Areas. Through it flows the finest fishing and canoeing stream in the southwestern quarter of the province, and the valley's meadows support a rich diversity of wildlife, birds and rare plants unrivalled anywhere in the region. Tens of thousands of people, Americans and Canadians alike, visit the Skagit to enjoy these special values every year.

The work of people like Thomas Perry and others should not go unnoticed by the House. For some period of time during the negotiations, this Treaty looked very fragile and as though this event today and next week in the Senate might not occur. I can give examples of this by going back to newspaper articles from two years ago of which I have many. It is a very widely reported story, to say the least, particularly on the West Coast but also all across Canada.

On the Canada-U.S. page of the Vancouver Sun on March 17, 1982, the headline read: "U.S. half of Skagit Decision in Hands of Reagan Backers". The story filed out of Washington included the following:

> President Ronald Reagan may as well have appointed three billy goats to guard a lettuce patch as to name the present members of the International Joint Commission to watch over the purity of boundary waters.
> The commission's meeting here last week with B.C. Environment Minister Stephen Rogers, Seattle Mayor Charles Royer and their entourages led nowhere. At the end of a long day's argument, the meeting was characterized as 'helpful' which, translated from diplomatese, means nothing had been achieved.

The rest of the article is much more vicious so I will not read it. It became somewhat of a tit-for-tat situation between British Columbia and the City of Seattle, many viewing it as a situation where the then Mayor of Seattle was seen as likely trying to become the Governor of the State of Washington. All sorts of politics began to spill everywhere.

Skagit River Valley Treaty

The Province, on April 29 of 1982, ran another banner headline on the front page which read: "Seattle ready to go with Skagit Work". The story filed in Victoria reads:

Seattle will go ahead immediately with preparations for raising the Ross dam a year from now—just in case negotiations with B.C. fail, Seattle Mayor Charles Royer said Wednesday.

But it remains unclear whether Seattle has been given the green light to do so under a decision announced Wednesday by the International Joint Commission (IJC).

The decision gives the picturesque Skagit Valley southwest of Hope a limited reprieve from the threat of flooding. It imposes a one-year moratorium on the flooding to allow more time for a negotiated settlement.

After this long history of difficulties and meetings that did not seem to be originally designed to come up with the conclusions they did, there was this long period of tit-for-tat particularly between the newspapers in Canada and the newspapers in Washington and other areas of the United States. It seemed that matters would likely heat up. This was evident on April 28 with another front page banner headline in The Vancouver Sun which read: "Skagit Flooding delayed a year to let B.C., Seattle Settle Dispute". In the same paper the story went on: "Seattle Mayor's Ambitions Blamed in Skagit Issue".

I will not get into all the things that went on, but from a historical perspective it is important for people to know that as well as this Parliament being united now for almost 15 years to bring about today's Treaty, many people on the U.S. side were mobilized as well because of flooding that would damage a very beautiful valley with thousand-year-old cedars and wonderful fishing areas. There was a great deal of co-operation on the American side. There is now a good deal for Seattle City Light and the people of Washington, the valley has been saved for Canadians and Americans on both sides of the border, to say nothing of the good work done by the IJC and all Parties in the House and the Canadian public.

I put my remarks on the record with respect to the friction that took place between Seattle City Light and B.C. only as a historical reminder of all the negative occurrences before we had the opportunity to stand here today. I simply conclude by saying that, as much as Members have done a great deal of work, I think we can end this debate today by going to the Committee of the Whole and passing this Bill with the knowledge that there are tens of thousands of Canadians today who have waited a long time for this important and historic occasion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Herbert in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

● (1500)

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, if you would seek consent, I think you would find that there is agreement to dealing with Bill C-42 in all stages today and referring it to a Committee of the Whole rather than to the standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. The agreement involves having two members of the Official Opposition speak, at least one Member from the NDP and one from the Government side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Members have heard the proposal of the Parliamentary Secretary. His proposal requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Agreed and so ordered.

ASIA-PACIFIC FOUNDATION OF CANADA ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (for the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs), seconded by Mr. Pinard, moved: That Bill C-42, an Act to establish the Asia-Pacific Foundation of Canada, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to propose to the House the establishment of an institution which will go a long way towards strengthening the links between Canada and the countries of the Pacific region, and to make my fellow Canadians more aware of those realities. The Asia-Pacific Foundation of Canada will also put in concrete form Canada's "Pacific" dimension from a geographical, historical, political and economic perspective. As a country which stretches far into the west, we have to look towards the East and Parliament has a unique opportunity to do that today.

For quite a few years now, Canadians have been ever more aware of the "Pacific" dimension of their country. Naturally, Canada is proud of its long-standing relations with Europe and the countries of the American hemisphere, but the last two decades have shown us the ever growing importance of our relations with countries of the Asian and Pacific region which stretches from the Pacific rim to South Asia where more than half of mankind lives.

[English]

Canada's interest in this region is multifaceted. First, we are interested in it because of our security preoccupation, our preoccupation with peace, because of trade, commerce and economic development. We are interested in this region also because it was the first to receive Canadian development assistance. You will remember the Columbo Plan, Mr. Speaker, which was the first step Canada took in aid. The Columbo Plan was for that area. The Asia-Pacific region is also important from the point of view of immigration. Last year approximately 33,000 of Canada's 78,000 immigrants came from that region. It is important also from the point of view of education. For example, 33,000 foreign students who are studying in Canada now, 53 per cent of the total number, come from the region with which we are concerned now. Finally, it is important from a cultural point of view. I think we all know how much we have gained and how much we would gain from knowing more about those great cultures of Asia which are found in that area, referring to the Indian, the Chinese and the Japanese cultures. There is so much to be learned and so much to be absorbed from this region.

The recognition of the Asia Pacific region's importance to Canada is, of course, not new. The links constituted by human ties and commercial relations extend back to before the birth of Canada as a country. We Canadians have tended not to demonstrate a sufficient consciousness of this fact, about which I think all of us would agree. It was for this reason that over ten years ago the review of Canadian foreign policy priorities highlighted the Asia Pacific region as an area of challenge and opportunity for Canada.

The developments in the Asia Pacific region impact directly, as I said a moment ago, on our security and on our prosperity. We enjoy time honoured associations with many of the countries of the Asia Pacific region through our Commonwealth links. Furthermore, many Canadians trace their family origins to this region, which today is a major and valued source of immigration. In preparing for this speech through extensive research, I found that a decade ago the trans-Pacific immigration exceeded our trans-Atlantic immigration for the first time. Some of us might not be aware of that change.

Another related element of Canada's involvement with the region and an indication of the good faith of our commitment is demonstrated by the fact that approximately 40 per cent of our bilateral development assistance flows into the area, much of it to the heavily populated countries of south Asia. Curiosity forced me to see what that figure would be; it is over $300 million.

During the past decade, two-way trade with the Asia Pacific region has multiplied six times, and Canadian exports have increased faster to that region than to any other area of the globe. Another important landmark, if I may give another one, is that in 1982 two-way trade with the countries of the Asia Pacific region surpassed our trans-Atlantic trade for the first time. The two facts that I consider to be extremely important are, first, that immigration-wise ten years ago the Pacific region became a more important source than the Atlantic region to our population growth, and, second, that in 1982 our trade with the Pacific area became more important than our trade across the Atlantic.

The economic dynamism of many countries in this region has been extremely impressive, but the future holds even greater promise.

Many of us in this House are envious occasionally of the growth of some of these countries. I refer, for example, to Japan and Korea in this respect.

We must foster Canada's entrepreneurial capacity to contribute to and to profit from this process. There are not only great trading opportunities, but the scope for investment, joint ventures, and technological co-operation is significant. The Secretary of State for External Affairs gave a speech in Vancouver on May 22 entitled "Canada—A Pacific Nation", in which he gave some interesting examples of these developments with the Pacific region.

It is in recognition of these salient realities that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), when he was Secretary of State for External Affairs, asked Mr. John Bruk, a leading Vancouver businessman with extensive experience in Asia, to undertake a feasibility study to determine how best to enhance Canadian relations with that region. Attention had earlier focused on the concept of a non-profit independent foundation as perhaps the best vehicle to accomplish these objectives.

To examine this idea, a founding committee was created under the chairmanship of Mr. Bruk with the mandate to report to the Secretary of State for External Affairs by July 1, 1984. It is an indication of Mr. Bruk's competence and dedication that he brought in his report well in advance of that date. In reaching their conclusions, Mr. Bruk and his founding committee travelled widely within Canada and held discussions with a broad cross-section of individuals, including representatives of provincial governments, businessmen and academics and others with a strong interest in the Asia-Pacific region. The response to the founding committee's research was extremely encouraging and, in the Speech from the Throne Address in December, 1983, it was announced that the Government intended to facilitate the creation of the Asia-Pacific Foundation. This is what we are doing today.

The aims of this foundation reflect the outcome of the founding committee's extensive research. These objectives are outlined as follows: to heighten Canadian awareness that Canada is a Pacific country as well as an Atlantic country; to raise Canada's profile in the Asia-Pacific region; to increase Canadian participation in the region's economic prosperity; to focus on policy choices facing decision makers in the private and public sectors and to generate public support for new policy initiatives; to assist business to be better prepared to interchange with and be more informed about Asia-Pacific affairs; and, finally, to educate and train young people so that they will have the knowledge and skills to support Canada's future role in the Asia-Pacific area.

The founding committee has also identified four key issues shaping contemporary relations between Canada and the Asia-Pacific region upon which the foundation is expected to focus initially. These include the dynamics of political and economic changes in that region, commercial challenges, the impact of cultural influences and the promotion of Canadian interests in a broad context. These objectives and priorities correspond to those of this Government. The Asia-Pacific Foundation is intended to act as a catalyst in the pursuit of these objectives. In some cases it will undertake programs directly. In other instances it will contract outside organizations or individuals to undertake projects.

How will this corporation, described as a private non-profit corporation with charity status, be composed and financed? The organization of the proposed foundation is to some extent a new venture in Canadian legislative experience. The structure provides for the federal Government to appoint the chairman and nine other members of the board of directors following consultation with members of the founding committee. The other 20 directors will be appointed by the board of directors itself and will include representatives from the provinces and from the non-governmental sector such as business, labour, the academic world and so on. In drafting this legislation, the Government has been guided by the desirability of giving the board the maximum possible discretion regarding its composition and function.

The Government has developed a five-year funding strategy of $5 million for the foundation, with an initial financial subvention of $1 million. It is hoped that provincial governments and the non-governmental sector will contribute to the foundation both by supporting its operations and in the financial context.

At noon I read that three provincial governments had more or less committed themselves to support the British Columbia Government not only morally but with an amount of money. If I may be indiscreet, I think the contribution from British Columbia will be as much as $200,000 a year. The Government of Ontario and the Government of Quebec have also indicated their support. As I said, I am pleased that a number of provincial governments and private sector corporations have already indicated interest in supporting the foundation.

There are three or four other points in my notes that I want to put on the record. The first is where the foundation will be headquartered. I hesitate to quote the Bill, but it refers to the principal office being in Vancouver.

Mr. Waddell: Not Prince Rupert?

Mr. Pepin: Prince Rupert in due course maybe, but it will need more gestation and more of the aging process. The headquarters will be in Vancouver, which is a tribute to the importance of that city and of the west generally in the affairs of this foundation.

Another question might be asked about the status of the foundation. I have already stated that it is a private non-profit organization with charitable status. It is not a Crown corporation like IDRC, for example. One other difference from IDRC is that it does not have foreign content in its direction. It is made up of Canadians only.

Another question may be whether the directors of the foundation will receive salaries. The answer is no. There won't be a rush on that one!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: To be serious, board members other than the president—and I underline that the president is appointed by the board—who may be paid, will not receive salaries, although they will receive travel expenses and living costs for any work associated with the foundation.

What is the future of the founding committee? It has completed its work. It is hoped that some members of the committee will in the future be associated with the foundation.

What controls will the federal Government have over the foundation and its activities? The board is autonomous and policy direction will be formulated by the board. In the fifth year of operation, however, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the board will jointly evaluate the activities of the foundation, and this report, along with any recommendations, will be submitted to Parliament at that time.

I have already indicated the composition of the board, the chairman and nine others appointed by the Government following consultation with the founding committee. I also indicated how the other 20 directors will be appointed. The group includes 31 people, the thirty-first, the president, will be selected by the board.

At the committee stage following second reading, I will introduce two amendments. They are really technical only and not terribly important. I will state what they are. The French translation of Clause 8 of the Bill, page 3, puts things differently from the English text. In order to make sense and have the same on both sides, you have to say nine in the English text and ten in the French text. The English text says nine plus the chairman and the French text says ten minus the chairman. It is as crazy as that, but that is the way life is.

The other is an amendment to Clause 37. We have to say, "As soon as possible after the fourth year". If you want a review in the fifth year, you have to start in the fourth year, otherwise you have a review in the sixth year. Again, it is very, very simple.

I believe we have before us an historic opportunity to demonstrate this House's endorsement of the present and future importance of the Asia-Pacific region to Canadians. The creation of the foundation will symbolize Canada's commitment to the region and will provide the means to enhance mutual understanding for the people of the Asia-Pacific region. Canada should greatly profit from the foundation's activities not only in terms of the commercial opportunities which it will seek to enhance but also in terms of those other human and cultural riches with which the Asia-Pacific region is so bountifully endowed.

I hope that there is a will in this House to proceed quickly. I am sure that there is, and I commend this Bill to the consideration and action of my fellow parliamentarians. I will not sit down without having thanked John Bruk again for the dedicated effort he has put into the preparation of this foundation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to speak in support of Bill C-42 today, an Act to establish the Asia-Pacific Foundation of Canada. One reason why I am proud to be here is that the Act establishing the foundation is an historic recognition of the fact that Canada is a Pacific nation. As the Minister for External Relations (Mr. Pepin) just pointed out, in terms of both immigration and trade, the Pacific region is now more important to Canada than the Atlantic region.

The second reason why I am proud to be here todayis that I can acknowledge the fact that the genesis of this initiative stemmed from the administration of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark).

An Hon. Member: Oh?

Miss Carney: I am sorry that the non-partisan nature of this debate should be spoiled by Members on the other side. However, that is a recognized fact and it is why this Bill is being introduced in a non-partisan fashion.

An Hon. Member: I am not reacting to the Bill.

Miss Carney: I would thank the Hon. Member for his clarification. For the record, he said that he was not reacting to the Bill. This Bill has now been introduced and is being supported in a non-partisan atmosphere, as I am sure the Minister himself will agree.

As I was saying, the concept behind this Bill originated when the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead was Prime Minister. At that time, the Right Hon. Member went to the Tokyo Summit and returned with the conviction that the Pacific Rim was probably the most vibrant area for Canada's immediate and long-term future. He began a series of initiatives, including the planning of a major conference to focus attention on the Pacific Rim. This initiative was carried on by the then Minister of Trade, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), and I was asked to take on the responsibility of organizing the initial work.

At that time, the concept of a foundation was strictly theoretical as being one of the many things that were worth looking into. I think it is a tribute to John Bruk that he was able to carry this forward and it is also a tribute to the parliamentary spirit in which one administration will take forward ideas which originated with another administration. We hear a lot of acrimony in the House. There are many circumstances in which initiatives taken by one Party are not instituted by the other, but this is one initiative dealing with the future of Canada and the Pacific Rim which was taken up by the present administration with an acknowledgement of the work that had been done previously.

I would like to say a little bit about the background of this Bill because it shows some of the work that we as a country still must do in this area. When we first began to organize the conference at which the idea of a foundation took root, we thought that it would be something that would be of major interest to the western provinces. We did not anticipate the interest in the Pacific Rim that we found existed in the country as a whole.

When dealing with the business community, we found that it had in fact long acknowleged that Canada was a Pacific nation and that the Pacific was our front door and not our back door. The business community had long acknowledged that Canada as a whole had already done marvellous work in the Pacific Rim. We found that some of our best diplomats and some of the best External Affairs and trade people had already done much productive work in the Pacific Rim.

We found that the interest in what was happening in the Pacific extended well beyond Vancouver, a city which is and hopes to remain one of the biggest and most important centres on the Pacific Rim. I should mention that in acknowledgement of that, the City of Vancouver, under Mayor Mike Harcourt, has centred its entire strategic planning for the development of the city on its Pacific Rim future.

Premier Bennett, the Premier of British Columbia, has just returned from China with glowing reports of the increasing ties that we have in the Pacific Rim. It is worth noting that the press commented on the fact that Premier Bennett, a premier who does not always have good words to say about the present administration, spoke only as a Canadian when he was in the Pacific Rim and he spoke for Canada as a whole.

The second surprise we found when doing the initial work on the Pacific Rim was that the interest in the Pacific went beyond trade. We sometimes forget that while trade is one of the most important aspects of our external relations, it is not the only one. The interest in the Pacific Rim extends beyond business ties. As the Minister has pointed out, the interest is cultural as well and involves the flow of people into Canada, the increase in our population, the desire for information about each other and the wish to travel and learn more about each other. Therefore, it is interesting to note that when describing the purpose of this foundation, the Bill acknowledges this very broad based interest. I shall read the clause in the Bill which relates to this acknowledgement. Clause 3 reads as follows:

> The purpose of the Foundation is to develop closer ties between the peoples and institutions of Canada and the peoples and institutions of the Asia-Pacific region by
> (a) promoting mutual awareness and understanding of the cultures, histories, religions, philosophies, languages, life styles and aspirations in the Asia-Pacific region and Canada and their effects on each other's societies;
> (b) supporting development cooperation between organizations, institutions and associations in Canada and in the Asia-Pacific region;
> (c) promoting collaboration among organizations, institutions and associations in private and public sectors in Canada and in the Asia-Pacific region;
> (d) promoting closer economic and commercial ties between Canada and the Asia-Pacific region;

(e) promoting, in Canada, scholarship in and expertise on economic, cultural, social and other subjects relating to the Asia-Pacific region, and in the Asia-Pacific region, scholarship in and expertise on economic, cultural, social and other subject relating to Canada; and

(f) collecting information and ideas relating to Canada and the Asia-Pacific region and disseminating such information and ideas within Canada and the Asia-Pacific region.

As I said, the initiative for this foundation was at the government level but I think the personal initiative for this foundation lies with John Bruk. At the time he was asked to take this idea forward, Mr. Bruk was the President of Cyprus Anvil Mining Corporation. He served without any compensation for a very long time and his entire object was to promote and study the feasibility of establishing an institution to promote Canada's interests in Asia and the Pacific. His first report documented widespread interest, and in March, 1983, a founding committee was appointed. Its immediate objectives were to define the foundation's role, to set up the foundation's operating framework and to secure a broad base of funding.

It is important to note that this foundation is not one which will be funded only by the federal Government. The foundation has always worked on the belief that it should be funded one-third by the federal Government, one-third by the provincial Government and one-third by industry. The response was so encouraging and support came from such a wise cross-section of corporations and institutions that this Bill is before us today.

I should point out that the Asia-Pacific Foundation is not the first of its kind. Japan set up a similar institution more than 14 years ago. Countries such as Australia and Taiwan soon followed suit. We welcome the establishment of a non-partisan foundation which represents all regions of the country. We also welcome increased contact and trade with Asia-Pacific. It will help us, as the Minister acknowledged, build a bridge of understanding in Canada with our many Asian neighbours in the Pacific. It will help to contribute to the Canadian cultural mosaic which makes Canada unique. It will help our Pacific neighbours understand our economic potential as a trader and become more aware of the many products and services which Canada has to offer. The foundation can help us to do all this. It is a positive step which we are taking to develop a bond of trust and mutual respect. We must work together through the foundation to make that happen. In that spirit, I am pleased on behalf of my Party to support this Bill.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak on this Bill. The purpose of the Bill is to establish the Asia-Pacific Foundation of Canada. The purpose of the foundation is set out very well in the Bill. It will help to promote mutual awareness in the cultures, histories, religions, philosophies and languages of Asia-Pacific in its connections with Canada. It will help to support co-operation between organizations and groups from different sectors in the Asia-Pacific region. It will help to promote closer economic and commercial ties. It will help to promote scholarships and it will help students in the academic world in Canada to make connections with Asia-Pacific. It will help to collect information and ideas relating to Canada's relations with Asia-Pacific.

It is important to note that the foundation could have been incorporated under the Canada Corporations Act, but we are doing it by an Act of Parliament with the co-operation of all Parties in the House. The reason for that is to show to the world and to show to our fellow Canadians the importance of this region to Canada now and in the future. As the Minister said in his speech—and it was a fine speech—the Bill shows sufficient consciousness and interest in the Asia-Pacific on the part of all Canadians.

I am pleased to speak to this Bill for the New Democratic Party and to support it. I have carried out consultations with respect to the Bill, especially with the Mayor of my city, Mike Harcourt, who, as the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) said in her speech, has been a long-time supporter of this concept. I also spoke with Alderman Bill Yee who is a Canadian of Asian origin and who has been a supporter of this concept. I have had discussions with my own caucus and I am pleased to say that the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), for example, who does not represent the Pacific area of the country, has shown an interest in this concept. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) always shows an interest in exciting areas. He has also shown an interest. He lives closer to Asia than any of us. He lives in a log cabin in the Queen Charlotte Islands.

I would like to extend my thanks to another Canadian, John Bruk, who is in the Gallery today. As other speakers have said, he has done much to get this concept going and to get this Bill into Parliament. I would like to quote from a letter which Mr. Bruk, in his capacity as Chairman of the founding committee, wrote to my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). The letter is dated March 8, 1984, and reads in part:

As you know, one of the major challenges facing Canada in the coming year will be how to react to the emergence of the Asia-Pacific region as a principal economic and political power. Therefore, there is a pressing need for greater emphasis in making Canadians fully aware of the growing importance of our trade with the Asia-Pacific region, as well as raising Canada's profile in those countries and enhancing the skills and understanding of Canadians doing business within the region.

Moreover, we must ensure that the next generation of Canadian political and business leaders and the general public have an even greater understanding of Canada's opportunity in the Asia-Pacific region.

When I was entering this House to speak today I said to the pages: "You should listen to some of our speeches because in a few years you will be learning Mandarin". One of the pages told me that, indeed, he will be starting a course in the Chinese language, as I am this summer. I will speak in French later on and I am sure the Minister will say that perhaps I should spend my time working on French. However, I think that the letter from Mr. Bruk hits the nail on the head with respect to why we are incorporating this Bill.

I think we must understand what is happening in the most dynamic growth area of the world, that is, the Asia-Pacific. Some statistics were given by the Minister. I would like to quote from the Chinatown News. The editor of the Chinatown

News, Mr. Roy Mah, has been very active in promoting this concept. He wrote an editorial on April 3, 1984, which reads in part:

> Canada is a Pacific nation as much as an Atlantic one. Increasingly it is Asia which supplies our immigrants and purchases our goods. Last year, Asia provided 40 per cent of the new arrivals in Canada, compared to only 29 per cent of European origin. The Asian markets absorbed a record $8.6 billion worth of Canadian goods, while Canadian exports to Western Europe—worth $10.1 billion as recently as 1981—slipped to $7.5 billion.

Mr. Mah writes further on in the editorial:

> It is important that we expand the pool of businessmen, civil servants, scholars and communicators who understand the cultures, languages, politics and markets of Asia.

He is right. Many of us in the House have had a chance, during this session of Parliament, to visit Asia. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was with me when a parliamentary group visited China last fall. On that trip we saw a joint venture. In Shanghai there was a joint steel mill which was built by joint venture between Japan and China. I hope that someday that will happen between Canada and China. I have had a chance to visit Hong Kong, the Philippines and South Korea, which are only a few places in the Asia-Pacific. When Members of this House return from those trips, they say they are impressed with the dynamic nature of the region.

It was mentioned in the Chinatown News that Canada's trade with the region has exceeded European trade for the first time. Japan is our number two trading partner and Korea is our number five trading partner. We are just beginning to get into the Asia-Pacific area. We are still Euro-centric. That is only natural. We still look to Europe because, given our background, many of us have come either directly from Europe, or our ancestors have come from Europe. As well, Canada has played a very important role in Europe. It has played an important role in institutions, labour, defence, research, business, politics and so on, which I think has been of mutual benefit both to Europe and to Canada. Now we are saying—and I think this is what the Asia-Pacific Foundation is saying as well—that we have to play the same kind of role in Asia. First, however, we must have a better understanding of Asia. The foundation will help in that respect. Second, there will have to be more involvement in Asia.

The opportunities are great. I gave the example of the steel mill in China. China has decided as a matter of policy that by the year 2000 it will quadruple its Gross National Product. That means that one billion people will be quadrupling their Gross National Product. What a task! Canada will be able to help with that task. After all, Canada is a large country as well. We have learned to tame hydro power in Canada. We have had to, in order to produce electricity. We have learned to transport materials over long distances. We have opened up mines in harsh terrain. All these things Canadians can do and do very well. So there is an opportunity for the railway technology, hydro technology and mining technology of Canada vis-à-vis China.

● (1540)

Right now, Mr. Speaker, a Canadian engineering firm is developing a gold mine in China. We feel that these are bitter days when we see our people a bit depressed about the future because of the high unemployment rate in Canada. But what an opportunity we have. One of the Clerks of the House, who is sitting here today, was with us in China and we all could see the possibilities for Canada to play a role in the future of China. And not only in China but in Singapore and in the Philippines. We must, however, be honest about it. While there are opportunities, there are risks as well.

We should look at some of these risks. Our trade in fact is growing rapidly in the Pacific but—and the Minister might be interested in this—our trade is not growing at the same rate as in Australia or Japan. So we do have a lot to do and we have to deal with some very difficult problems which are coming out of the Asia-Pacific.

Take, for example, the low wage countries and the competition for our textiles. There are the low economic zones with low wages, bad working conditions and poor environmental and safety standards which we see in Southeast Asia. We must be honest about it. These are some of the concerns of our Party, as well as the concerns of other Hon. Members of the House. However, we must understand these conditions before we can deal with them. We should welcome the opportunity to open up our knowledge in that area.

The Hon. Member for Skeena and I myself have struggled with this problem. We in British Columbia live with the external trade policies of Japan. It often pursues a policy of oversupply of natural resources. So we open up northeast coal in British Columbia in competition with our southeast coal, or in competition with the Australian or Chinese coal mines, all at the bidding of Japanese policy. I am not knocking the Japanese policy. I am not even knocking the different coal projects in Canada. What I am saying is that we must understand what the Japanese policy is so that we can have an informed debate as to what our policy should be. I do not believe we have had a very informed debate up to now on, for example, northeast coal and other projects in British Columbia, and that is the challenge of the future. These issues have to be brought into the open. These are the risks we take in dealing with Asia-Pacific.

The biggest risk of all, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, is not understanding what is happening in this dynamic area and not taking advantage of our opportunities; and the Minister alluded to this. I do not believe we have truly recognized the dynamism of the Asia-Pacific region and we have not yet found our niche in that region. It is not just a problem or an opportunity for those of us in British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, I have already said that the new Asiatic markets are important to my own Province of British Columbia, but other Canadian provinces will have to get more enthusiastically involved in trade with the Asian and Pacific countries. I am referring to Quebec particularly because there is a francophone culture in the Pacific region—Tahiti, New Caledonia and others—and there are always people who speak French in the former French colonies of Southeast Asia. Quebecers might take advantage of that common linguistic heritage to seek new markets for their own products. True, the principal office will be in Vancouver, but it will serve Quebec as well.

[English]

It is very important, Mr. Speaker, that all regions of Canada have an interest in this. We must understand the Asia-Pacific. One of the ways in which we might do that lies right under our own noses; that is, that we have Canadians of Asian origin who do understand the languages, cultures and the business of Asia-Pacific. We should mobilize this Canadian talent. We should lay a foundation as a means of mobilizing that talent. I have only very recently formulated this thought in my own mind—although I am sure it is an old one—but I believe it is an answer to those of us on the Pacific coast who struggle with the problems of discrimination against new immigrants and the problems of racism, which is inherent, I must say, in parts of Canada. Our history proves that. However, there is also a good side to Canadians. It occurred to me, and I believe it has occurred to other people as well, that we have this multicultural aspect of Canada, which makes us credible to the Pacific nations. They see us as a peaceful people, a people of different backgrounds, many of whom are from Asia-Pacific and who have learned to live and work together. They see the French and the English people of this country living and working together, and they are seeing other Europeans living and working peacefully with Canadians. They can also see Europeans and Asians all living together peacefully as Canadians. That gives us a tremendous advantage and we should work on that advantage. Therefore, I ask my fellow Canadians to open up our collective eyes and to work from our strength, to use our people of Pacific origin in a much better way in order to help us understand the land of their forefathers, the Asia-Pacific.

How do we raise Canada's profile in Asia? The Bill talks about the role of the foundation; an exchange of scholars; visiting students; selected conferences and publishing programs which are in place already. For example, Mr. Speaker, it was just announced that the school system in British Columbia is offering Japanese and Chinese as optional languages. That is a real step forward taken by the Social Credit Government. The Simon Fraser University, UBC and UVIC are planning to establish a centre for Asian Pacific studies in the new Canada Harbour Place in British Columbia. That is another step forward. This foundation will be able to publicize these initiatives, taking that message to Asia.

The Minister has already spoken about the foundation, so I will not say too much about it. However, I will say that its responsibility is split in three ways: the federal Government, the provinces and the private sector. Private sector does not only mean business, I hope. It also means labour, students, young people and the academia, and that is very important. I am confident that the first directors of the foundation will keep that in mind. It is important that we get the youth involved.

I am proud that the foundation is going to have its head office in Vancouver. Recently the Vancouver City Council has twinned Vancouver with Canton, Kwangtung. That is a small step but it is a step forward.

I would like to conclude by saying that we are a bridge to the Pacific community, quite literally. We are a bridge between Europe and the Pacific. We are now truly a country which is both of the Atlantic and of the Pacific. This Bill, passed today on a quiet Friday afternoon, is a historic symbol and augurs well for the future. It is important not only for trade and jobs, but for world peace as well. If we can duplicate in the Pacific the efforts we have made in Europe, as I believe we can, we will be a positive force there. We can mobilize our human resources, our people from the Asian Pacific and here in Canada, to help us. Asia's coming of age is among the most significant themes of the remaining years of this century. The Asia-Pacific Foundation, through its organization of conferences, publications, information bank and promotion of educational and cultural exchanges, will bring us significantly closer to understanding Asia and will also help Asia to better understand us.

There is a Chinese symbol for crisis, Mr. Speaker, consisting of two components. The top character signifies danger, and the bottom character signifies opportunity. I think it is time to seize that opportunity, and this is what this Bill does. I think it was Confucius who said that you have to begin a journey of 1,000 miles by taking the first step, and I think we have taken that first step today in turning Canada into becoming increasingly a Pacific nation and taking advantage of the great opportunities in that region for Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is it the pleasure of the House—

Mr. Waddell: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think my colleague from Spadina wanted to say a few words on this matter. I think there is room for another short speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): A proposal was made that there be two speakers from the Official Opposition. However, if it is agreed, then I recognize the Hon. Member for Spadina.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support this Bill, not mainly because I visited the western Pacific last summer for some weeks, although that certainly increases my interest, but because I was uneasy at first about where this project might lead. There have been some misuses by Canadian entrepreneurs of the Pacific region in order to sell our resources at bargain prices and get a little there at bargain prices. A policy that will benefit but a few rich people here and a few rich people there and is detrimental to the great majority both here and there is a road to ruin.

However, I had the pleasure of meeting John Bruk recently and finding out from him how he sees this foundation. I was assured by him that the primary object of the foundation is to gain information and facts. For example, one sort of thing that the foundation would look into would be to find out what are the real wages not only of the lower paid people but of the highest paid people in all the regions concerned. I expect that on that basis it would be possible for us to establish a healthy sort of trade relationship. In fact, Mr. Bruk commented on the fact that there cnanot be any healthy economy without justice. If that is the kind of leadership this foundation will have, then I heartily support it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Mr. Pepin, for Mr. MacEachen, seconded by Mr. Pinard, moved that Bill C-42, an Act to establish the Asia-Pacific Foundation of Canada, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Herbert in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-42, an Act to establish the Asia-Pacific Foundation of Canada.

Clauses 2 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 8—First members of the Board

Mr. Pepin: This is one of two amendments I have, Mr. Chairman. My suggestion is that the French version of Clause 8 of Bill C-42 be amended by striking out line 40 on page 3 and substituting the following:

dix administrateurs, dont le président du

I believe your assistants have already told you about the validity of this amendment.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: The House has heard the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 8, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 8, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 9 to 36 inclusive, agreed to.

On Clause 37—

Leasing of Crown Lands

Mr. Pepin: I have an amendment here also. The Bill provides for a review after five years. If you expect to have a review after five years, you must initiate it during the fourth year. If you wait until the fifth year, you will be late with your review.

I therefore move that Clause 37 of Bill C-42 be amended by deleting line 15 on Page 8 and substituting the following:

As soon as possible after the fourth

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: The House has heard the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 37, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 37, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 38 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, as amended, read the third time and passed.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING LEASING OF CROWN LANDS

The House resumed, from Friday, May 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nickerson, that Bill C-241, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, there may be a disposition that this Bill be dealt with in its entirety this afternoon and be referred to a Committee of the Whole rather than the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I do not know whether that would receive the agreement of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): An amendment to the motion to refer the Bill to Committee of the Whole will require unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Agreed and so ordered.

Leasing of Crown Lands

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to thank the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) for the assistance and co-operation which he and his office have given to this matter over quite a few years. I would also like to thank the House Leaders from the various Parties for allowing this Bill to proceed expeditiously this afternoon.

When I introduce this Bill I do so with a certain sense of embarrassment. If this Bill is passed into law, the advantages which will accrue therefrom will be most advantageous to those Members who live in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. There are not very many of us. There are three Members of Parliament and two Senators. The problem which this Bill addresses is that under Section 20 of the Senate and House of Commons Act as it stands today, due to inadvertency Members of Parliament and Senators are prevented from leasing federal Crown lands. In the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, apart from a very small amount of privately owned land in municipalities, all the rest of the land is federal Crown land. That means that Members of Parliament from those Territories are unable to lease a cottage lot or acquire any land outside of privately owned land within the municipalities. I do not think that was the original intent of Section 20 when it was drafted. The intent was to prevent Members of Parliament from entering into contracts with the federal Crown from which they might derive pecuniary benefit.

Because I stand to benefit from this more than most Members of Parliament, I took the precaution of writing in advance to the Speaker of the House of Commons in 1980 when the Hon. Jeanne Sauvé was Speaker. I asked whether it would be proper for me to introduce such an amendment. In a letter dated July 2, 1980 I was told that it would be in order for me to do so and I would not be contravening any of our rules in doing this.

I will return to the recent history of the need for an amendment. On May 14, 1970 the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) rose on a point of privilege in the House and brought to the attention of the House the fact that he had been trying to acquire a cottage lease in the Yukon where he resided and had been turned down because of the provisions of Section 19, as it then was, of the Senate and House of Commons Act. As a result of his intervention on that day, the matter of his acquisition of a lease was referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, which duly convened to discuss the matter. It held a couple of meetings and issued a report which was tabled in the House of Commons on June 3, 1970.

The principal recommendations of the committees were as follows:

1. The question of privilege is well founded.

2. Your Committee, being of the opinion that as there may exist similar cases involving other Members of the House, recommends that the same considerations and recommendations should be made applicable in these cases.

3. Your Committee recommends that the Government should consider the expediency of introducing legislation to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act to resolve more clearly the question of the propriety of Members of Parliament receiving certain payments and advantages under Acts of general application and of Members making payments for leases, rent or sale of property in certain cases where they do not receive any special or undue advantages simply from the fact that they happen to be Members of Parliament.

The committee also recommended that the particular lease in question be granted. The report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections was concurred in by the House of Commons on June 10, 1970.

In my own case I have run up against Section 20, as it now stands, by virtue of the fact that before entering into politics I was a prospector and acquired, through staking, mineral claims in the Northwest Territories. A provision of the Canada mining regulations is that within a 10-year period a claim must be taken to lease. I was unable to obtain a lease because of the Senate and House of Commons Act and, therefore, property which I had previously acquired was in jeopardy.

The change which is proposed to the Act is a very simple one. I propose to read Section 20(1) as it now stands and insert the change. The sub-section reads:

In every contract, agreement or commission to be made, entered into or accepted by any person with the Government of Canada or any of the departments or officers of the Government of Canada—

We now come to the insertion:

—for which any public money of Canada is to be paid—

Now we go back to the old wording:

—there shall be inserted an express condition that no member of the House of Commons shall be admitted to any share or part of such contract, agreement or commission, or to any benefit to arise therefrom.

It is a very simple change. It would not change the Act in such a way that Members of Parliament could enter into contracts for the provision of services to Government, or enter into contracts where money would be paid by the Government to the Member of Parliament. Rather, it would only apply the other way around, where a Member of Parliament pays money to the Crown.

I think that is a sufficient explanation of the changes which are proposed. I would again like to thank the other Parties, and particularly the President of the Privy Council for the co-operation and worthwhile advice they have given with respect to this matter over many months, if not years. I think it has taken that long.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I only have a few brief remarks to make in support of Bill C-241. I recognize the dilemma in which the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) finds himself. While it may appear that we are taking the time of the House to pass legislation that only benefits that Hon. Member, upon close examination of old Section 20(1) of the Senate and House of Commons Act, one can see that it may well affect others besides the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the Hon. Member for Western Arctic or the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar). If one is to reflect on exactly what the wording means, for those Members of the House who may want to rent a cottage lot in Banff National Park it would not be legal according to a strict interpretation of the section as it exists today. If one were to read the section even more rigidly, one might suppose that even the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau)

house, Stornoway, or other matters directly related to federal properties would be included, because Section 20(1) states:

In every contract, agreement or commission to be made, entered into or accepted by any person with the Government of Canada or any of the departments or officers of the Government of Canada, for which any public money of Canada is to be paid, there shall be inserted an express condition that no member of the House of Commons shall be admitted to any share or part of such contract, agreement or commission, or to any benefit to arise therefrom.

I presume it has been many years since someone has been confronted by such a technical situation. Clearly, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic was the first Member to really run afoul of it, one might say.

Mr. Evans: No he was not.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps not afoul, but to run headlong into it.

Mr. Nickerson: Erik Nielsen was.

Mr. Fulton: The Hon. Member for Yukon was the first. However, perhaps it is more clearly defined for the Hon. Member for Western Arctic. Although he is required in the Northwest Territories by law to proceed within ten years in order to gain title to the claims he staked out, in order to get leases on those claims, he is expressly forbidden to do that by an Act of the House. This Bill is important in terms of what has happened to the Hon. Member for Yukon and the Hon. Member for Western Arctic.

When the Parliamentary Secretary rises to speak, he will also point out that if this action were clearly interpreted and applied, its application would be found to be extremely broad. It could in fact cause a chaotic situation for many Members who, with their own money and without gaining any particular gain in relation to the activities of the House, federal law, contracts or grants, may have wanted to purchase a cottage lot but have not been allowed to do so since Confederation.

The words that have been added make it very clear that that is not the case. The words that are added in the section are simply, "for which any public money of Canada is to be paid".

It is quite clear that the passage of this Act will not bring any specific monetary, legal or other gains to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, the Hon. Member for Yukon or other Members of the House. It is simply an attempt to make this section of the Senate and House of Commons Act clear so that Hon. Members in the future do not lose an opportunity to get a cottage lot whether it is in Banff National Park or the Pacific Rim. In the case of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, it will allow him to deal legally with mining claims that he legally holds and must do something about.

I am pleased to rise and support this Bill. I trust that it will go through all three stages and become law today. I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans) will probably want to join with me in saying that perhaps we should make one further amendment to the Senate and House of Commons Act, which is, perhaps, to abolish the Senate. However, I will leave it to you to decide, Mr. Speaker, whether you wish to rule that amendment in order. I am sure there are Members here this afternoon who would very much like to pass such an amendment and get rid of the other House in a quick and opportune way this afternoon.

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure the Chair would find that particular suggestion out of order.

I too rise to support the Bill. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and his office have certainly worked very closely with the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) on this particular matter. It is a situation that should have been corrected some time ago.

To my knowledge, the first person to run afoul of this section was the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) as a result of a lease on a cottage lot in the Yukon Territories. It was raised as a matter of privilege in the House of Commons and taken before the Privileges and Elections Committee. It was found in 1970 to be clearly a breach of the laws.

That situation is to be corrected permanently by what we are doing today. As the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has mentioned, this is much broader than just the coverage that one would find in the Northwest Territories or Yukon. It also covers many areas that one would think should not be covered in such a provision. For example, the National Capital Commission owns a good deal of land in the City of Ottawa and the National Capital Region. If a Member of Parliament were to lease a cottage lot at Meach Lake or Gatineau Park, of which there are some, that would technically be a breach of the Act as well. If a Member of Parliament were to rent an apartment on Sussex Drive on some of the land and restored buildings that are owned by the NCC, the Member would be in breach of the Act.

It is clear that there are some very serious difficulties with this particular provision. The law officer of the Crown has given the advice that the original intent of Section 20 of the Act was to ensure, as the Hon. Member for Western Arctic said, that a Member of Parliament did not engage in contracts, or transactions which would result in his or her receiving remuneration from the Crown. As the Hon. Member rightly pointed out, the effect of the amendment that the Hon. Member is putting forward today is to clarify that it applies in all cases in which a Member of Parliament was receiving benefit from the Crown in exchange for goods or services, but does not apply in cases where the Crown is receiving remuneration from a Member of Parliament for the lease of land or goods.

I suppose, according to this Act, if a Member of Parliament went to Crown Assets Disposal and bought a used filing cabinet, it would constitute a transaction between a Member of Parliament and the Crown. Prior to this amendment, it would be a matter that could be raised as privilege in the House. It would be in violation of the Act.

I am confident that there have been many Members of Parliament in the past who, like members of the general public, have gone to Crown Assets Disposal, which is in my riding, to buy a chair for an office or a filing cabinet. I am sure they have purchased something from the Crown while being a Member of Parliament. If I read the statutes properly, they have technically been in breach of this Act.

As the Hon. Member for Skeena has so rightly pointed out, the scope of this Act is far beyond what most would presume at first glance. The Government is pleased to have co-operated with the Hon. Member for Western Arctic in putting together this particular Private Members' Bill to correct this situation and bring the Act into line with the original intention. There is certainly a predisposition in the House that upon the completion of my remarks we would take this Bill through Committee of the Whole and third reading and pass it through all stages.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-40, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

She said: Mr. Speaker, let me say, first of all, that I certainly appreciate the healthy applause rising up from the Opposition benches. This augurs well for the debate on this Bill! I assume that Members will vote unanimously in favour of what will probably be the last Bill we shall be proposing in support of the Guaranteed Income Supplement, because once this Bill is passed, from then on all senior citizens will necessarily be above the poverty line.

[English]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-40 is basically focused on adding, in two slices, a full $50 a month, on top of the usual indexation, to what we call in the jargon "single pensioners" receiving the supplement. That means hundreds of thousands of seniors who are widows, widowers, single, separated, divorced and so on, who have no means or very little income other than what we call the "public pensions".

That is what this Bill is intended to do. However, we took the opportunity—and I am really confident that we will obtain the support of all Hon. Members of this House—to make other changes which will improve the pension system at the same time. These are small changes affecting perhaps 3,000 or even as few as 50 people a year. These are Canadians who for some technical reason fall between two chairs when it comes to the guaranteed income supplement. This, in a way, is a means to an end, and it is a happy end because it is the end to a very unhappy situation.

Some seniors, because of the limitations of, I suppose, the social sciences in preceding decades, still suffer a lot by not having a basic income guaranteed to them. Let me explain. In Canada, as in many other countries, I suppose—I would not know for sure until I researched the question—when we established the pension the concept was that a person who was alone, for whatever reason, would receive half of what a couple receives. However, because of studies of family budgets and so on we now know that to live alone costs more than 50 per cent of a couple's needs. For example, the basic one-bedroom apartment, hydro and telephone will cost the same for a person alone as for a couple. Therefore, many groups—and in all fairness we should refer to them right now in this House—such as the Royal Commission on the Status of Pensions in Ontario, the Canadian Council on Social Development, the Senate Committee on Poverty and, I believe, the National Council on Welfare, have advocated that pensioners living alone and in need receive 60 per cent or a little more—which is what they are going to receive—of the budget of a couple.

That is why—and I do not say it in apology but in explanation—the couples who receive the supplement will not at this time receive a special increase. They will receive their usual indexation in July, next month. It is those, however, who are single and receive the supplement who will receive an additional $25 a month starting with their July cheque, and another additional $25 in their monthly cheques beginning in December. That, in a nutshell, is the purpose of this Bill.

I should mention that this increase will also be provided to widowed spouse's allowance recipients. Whatever their age or status, if they become widowed and they receive the spouse's allowance, which means they are younger than 65, which also means they are automatically in need, they will get the full $50 as well. In that way we are correcting what I would call a mistake of the past, of which I myself did not know.

[Translation]

At this point I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, and I think it is very important, that my colleague, the Hon. Member from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), is to be commended for having brought this problem to the attention of the Government. When individuals receiving the spouse's allowance are widowed—and in most cases they are women—they do not receive the special increase for single persons because of a technicality in the Act. However, they are single, to all intents and purposes.

We are therefore correcting this, so that all widowed spouse allowance recipients will now receive the additional $50 provided in Bill C-40. I think this is extremely important.

[English]

I will make the point rapidly that many people who get this $50 are women. Unfortunately I do not have in my notes the exact percentage, but it is a majority and quite a high percentage. It reflects the make-up of society. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), even if she is not always very nice to me when she speaks in this House, has joined forces with many of us to obtain changes in the pension system for homemakers. They raised the children, did unpaid voluntary work, or worked in the service industry or perhaps the small business enterprise of their husband, father or members of their family. They often had to work to help the family make ends meet without pay or with small pay and no private pension.

I also want to bring to the attention of Canadians that the group forming what we call the GIS pensioners, those who receive the supplement, are people in need. If they were younger than 65 they would be on welfare. We should not hide that fact from ourselves. We call it a supplement and there is no stigma attached to it, which I am very proud of. These people are in need and this Bill is not providing a luxury for them, it is a necessity.

To come back to this point of information, which I think should be shocking and shaking us all towards pension reform, the fact is that 235,000 single-rate pensioners in Canada have to receive the full supplement to the basic old age pension. That means they have absolutely nothing else in the way of income to live on during their old age. This is quite shocking for any country. It is dangerous as well because it means that a great number of Canadians, when they reach the so-called official age of retirement, will suffer quite a substantial fall in their standard of living. They may have their home paid for, especially in small towns or in rural Canada. However, in a city such as Montreal where 80 per cent of the people are tenants, they will not enjoy that benefit. That is a very worrying situation for the future and we want to address it.

Before moving to my next point I will explain something. The so-called single pensioners who get the supplement, even if only a partial supplement, will get the full additional $50, twice $25. People should know that. We are broadening the base of those who will get the supplement. There are those in the grey area of being very close to the poverty line. We are increasing the base. Our departmental estimates indicate that 25,000 old age pensioners who are not receiving any supplement will start to qualify immediately for a small supplement. They should check with my numerous offices all over the country and their local MPs to see whether they will qualify. These people have very little income and should apply.

Recognizing that single GIS pensioners are in need of better financial assistance was very important but in a way was not new. I will refer to the task force of parliamentarians of the three Parties who participated in what is now called the great pension debate. The task force on pension reform which studied the reform of private pensions also studied all pensions, including the two public pensions. For these GIS pensioners the task force recommended a special top-up benefit of $102 per month taxed back at 100 per cent in the lowest income group. Many Members and many Canadians think that would have been much better. However, it would have totally changed the system. It would have been better for some but it would have eliminated a lot of GIS pensioners from receiving the supplement.

Let me explain why I did not recommend that to the Government. The reason is that the $102 per month with a tax back rate of 100 per cent would have given more money immediately to those who have nothing but the GIS. However, any pensioners receiving any money from another source would have that amount deducted from their GIS. That is a problem. As a Minister I could not talk with the task force on pension reform because it must operate independently, but I think it is fair that I explain today to the House and my colleagues why I did not recommend that to the Government.

Our system has two advantages which would have been lost by the recommendation of the task force report. One advantage of our present system is that it is proportionately adapted to each dollar of additional income from other sources. It is a fine graduation from those who receive the full OAS and the GIS with no other income to those with limited other income, and finally to those who have other income but not enough to match what is missing by even $10 a month and takes them over the poverty line. There is no disruption in this system; it is a scale that is finely tuned to the realities.

The second advantage is that we only take back 50 per cent of other income and thereby leave them 50 cents on the dollar. This means that we have built in within the public pension system in Canada incentives for people to build up their own savings. I do not know if I am turning into a capitalist, I do not think so, but I believe it is sacrosanct to build in and keep incentives for Canadians to save toward their older days.

Mr. Epp: Go ahead, become a capitalist.

Miss MacDonald: That is John Turner's influence on you!

Miss Bégin: Yes, but with a heart. That is the difference. We need the money to spend afterwards. We need a viable economy because I know how to spend the money.

Of course, we want jobs first and a good economy at the same time. Then we can refine our social programs to have the fantastic safety net about which Canadians are so pleased.

This being said, and despite the way Opposition is teasing me—I take it that it is all in friendship which, of course, is very dangerous when it comes from them—let me speak about the money which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has provided in his Budget. In that Budget the Minister of Finance referred to the amount that this new program will cost. Of course, nothing can be established without a cost and I am proud that the Government saw fit to put aside, among its new expenditures, funds for two programs; jobs for young people in particular and funds for seniors in need to whom we have promised it as soon as the economy allows.

This year the increase will raise expenditures by $250 million. In the next fiscal year, 1985-86, there will be an additional cost of $460 million because the spending will be over the full fiscal year. I am pleased that we are hearing less criticism that these are non-productive expenditures and that mine is a non-economic ministry. I am prepared to answer those criticisms.

That $250 million which we just added to the Budget and for which I am asking support at the second and final stages of this Bill will provide an additional $24 in the next month's cheque for single GIS pensioners. That money will return directly to the economy. It will be spent in the daily budget of those people and will return more rapidly to the economy than other savings as they meet their basic and immediate needs. It will increase consumer demand. In order to convince people that this is not wasted money, I can go as far as arguing that this expenditure of funds has an economic benefit that is equivalent to creating 3,000 new jobs this year and another 2,000 jobs next year. I suggest that there are not only social benefits to these social expenditures but economic benefits as well.

I am also asking Members to support the reform which this Act seeks to bring about. I think they will agree with it because we have taken a pragmatic approach to a problem that is typical of Canada as a country of immigrants.

• (1130)

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one comment, and I think you will understand, since you are from Quebec yourself. Dr. Camille Laurin, who is now the Quebec Minister for Social Affairs, after a rather stormy career with the Department of Education—and I hope he will not take the same kind of action in our social affairs field—Dr. Laurin has stated all of a sudden that he wants to patriate old age security pensions. In the course of my usual activities on the weekend, I spoke to quite a number of senior citizens groups. There were senior citizens from various parts of Quebec, and these people came to ask me, to plead with me to keep the pension so that I would be there to make sure there were no problems and the Province of Quebec did not make a hash of something that was working quite well. So I would like to reassure our senior citizens and say that this is a lot of rhetoric! There is no reason at all for patriating pensions. The system has always worked very well. I would rather not make any more political comments than I have to, but I must say that I am rather surprised at this Government, this separatist Government which not so long ago said through its Premier, Mr. Lévesque, that senior citizens were a total loss, that it was their fault that the people who wanted Quebec to separate had lost the referendum and that senior citizens were holding Quebec hostage because they would not allow the province to separate, but on the other hand, they would all be dead in a few years and then we could have another referendum!

I would just like to say one thing. There will always be pensioners, there will always be senior citizens in Quebec, with the intelligence and discernment to realize what the advantages are for Quebec within Confederation. Therefore, despite Dr. Laurin's ideological dreams, old age pensions will stay where they are. If Dr. Laurin wants to give Quebec senior citizens more, or if he wants to give something to people between 60 and 64, he can do so right now. According to the Constitution, he does not need the permission of the federal Government and he does not even have to consult me, he can go ahead and do it. That is something we must not forget. Other provinces do it and refer to these additional payments as top-ups. Many provinces do this for their senior citizens.

[English]

I said we were also making a few other reforms to the system. One touches immigrants. Canada in that sense is a special country. We have immigrants who come here permanently. At the beginning of 1977 I became Minister of National Health and Welfare. That year we reformed the old age pension system for immigrants because Canada's rules were all or nothing. A person had to have many years of residence or he or she did not qualify. One did not have an image of the exact situation. Under my predecessor, who is now the Minister of Finance, amendments were brought in which changed the number of years of residence needed to qualify. The qualifications were more practical reflecting Canadian reality. We opened the door to all reciprocity agreements signed with other countries. Roughly one-third of our population comes from other countries. People who came from other countries had neither sufficient years of residence in their own country nor in Canada to qualify for a full pension. We organized a system allowing pensions to be brought from other countries which could then be combined with earned pension rights here.

[Translation]

Oh!—And since the Member for Kent (Mr. Bossy) who happens to be of Belgian origin is right next to me, I would like to say that on May 10 of this year, I signed the latest reciprocal agreement on old age security pensions in Brussels, at the Palais des comtes d'Egmont, an agreement which will make it possible for all Canadians of Belgian origin, immigrants of Belgian origin, and also people who decide to settle in Belgium, to qualify for their full pension, through the Canadian and Belgian governments. This is the sixth or seventh country with which we have signed an agreement, something that is very much appreciated, of course, by the Canadians concerned.

[English]

There was a downside to the 1977 amendments which favoured immigrants. I do not have the exact number of people affected, but a small number of Canadians of other origins do not qualify for pensions in Canada, or the GIS, for example. They do not qualify for x number of reasons. This could be aid to farmers in a person's native country not covered by any contributory plan. People could be in a situation in which they do not qualify for anything in their native land, nor in Canada. They literally fall between the two. This situation is being corrected by an amendment in Bill C-40. These people would be considered in a category of need. This does not open the door for people to send their older parents to Canada just to get the Canadian pension. That would not be realistic nor fair to other Canadians. But if people lived a certain number of years in Canada and are in need, they will be eligible to receive the full GIS or whatever part of the GIS they need.

There is another small change which is important. I am sure Members will all agree that each one of us is a social worker or an ombudsman in our ridings. We hear about and we see people who are outside of the system. Let me cite one case.

[Translation]

Here, I would like to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Gamelin (Mr. Portelance), who brought the problem to my attention. I was not aware of this particular problem. The Hon. Member reasoned as follows: If the Government of Canada can go back five years to check income tax returns, and that is what happens if a person fails to pay income tax, since the Government has the authority to check returns over the last five years, then why shouldn't a person who did not know or did not apply for his old age security pension be entitled to retroactive payments for up to five years? Someone who is 71 or 70 or 69 is not entitled to retroactive payments for the years for which no application was made, although that person was unaware there was a pension. But we are changing that now.

[English]

To sum up, a person in Canada can receive only one year of retroactivity the way the system exists now.

Miss MacDonald: I know of one case of three years.

Miss Bégin: That is illegal. We will have to correct that case by some special mechanism. A person in Canada older than 65 years of age who does not know there is a system of public pensions for whatever reason and has not applied can only receive one year's benefits retroactively.

One such case was brought to the attention of the Hon. Member for Gamelin (Mr. Portelance) who brought it to my attention. He pleaded with very powerful reasoning. I promised that as soon as we had a Bill in the House, we would include this situation. According to my officials and what we know of the situation, we think there are 50 cases a year. That means 50 Canadians are not receiving their fair share.

We are also proposing that post-mortem applications for Old Age Security benefits be allowed in cases where the deceased would have been eligible for benefits had he or she applied. This provision would also give a widow or widower, if all the qualifications were met—the person could be a spouse's allowance case—entitlement to the spouse's allowance.

In a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, several other amendments are proposed in an effort to make the Old Age Security program more equitable and efficient. Included are provisions allowing for compensating pensioners who lose any benefit entitlement as a result of administrative error or erroneous advice. I think everybody will agree that such a change was needed. This Bill will authorize when necessary the issuance of a certificate on presumption of death, repealing an unnecessary and potentially misleading provision dealing with benefit entitlement under international social security agreements. There are, of course, changes necessary to co-ordinate Canada Pension Plan benefits with other sources for GIS entitlement purposes. Members received the details of these amendments in the special information package we distributed to all Members in the House.

As my time is coming to an end, in conclusion I should like to call upon the new government, which we will form after the next election, to make a serious effort in the area of pension reform. Today I am talking about public pensions. Along with this provision, the law should be satisfactory for many decades because it brings all Canadians automatically above the poverty line. However, it is only above the poverty line. It is normal that the Government would not do more, in a sense, because Canadians should supplement that guaranteed tier of income, as it is often called, with their own private savings and, more important, with their company pensions. That is the image we should remember in Canada.

With Sweden we are the only countries in the world with decent universal public pensions. However, with the United States we are the worst countries of the industrialized world for not having private pensions. Approximately 55 per cent of Canadian workers, most of whom are women in the workforce, have no company pension. The others have pensions which are not portable, which do not have survivors' benefits, and which are not indexed in any way, shape or form to the cost of living. That is what I think should be the next step. We should put our own house in order in terms of Canada Pension Plan reforms which cannot be made without the agreement of a majority of the provinces with two-thirds of the population. Therefore, the Minister of Finance and myself are commencing discussions with the provinces toward that end. The best indicator of how good it is to live in a country is the way it treats its seniors, and I think every Member agrees with that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in commencing debate on Bill C-40, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party I want to say at the outset that we are in support of it. Not only do the major provisions of the Bill have our support, but they were recommended at various times through various opportunities by members of our Party.

That is my first point. My second point is that we do not intend to delay the Bill. We will co-operate not only in the debate on the Bill in terms of early and speedy passage but also raise certain issues which we believe should be addressed in the opportunity we now have in regard to pensions.

I point out to the House, and to the Minister specifically, that while we support the Bill there is a vast area of pension reform which we would have preferred to see addressed at this point as well. However, that takes us into the question of a time frame with which I will deal in a few minutes. Those two points of view stand on the record, and I want the House to enter into this debate with them in mind.

Before getting into the main body of my remarks, I pay tribute to a number of my colleagues who have been in the forefront on behalf of our Party in pension and pension reform. While those of us who have specific responsibilities now in the areas of health and welfare have a personal concern, we have not had responsibility for the Party as has the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). There is no other Member of the House—I would suggest no one in the country—who has developed over a period of time, not only through the process of time but because of dedication and keeping the matter in the forefront of issues, the issue of poverty among the elderly, especially the need to change the pension plan to address the economic reality faced by many of Canada's elderly women on a day to day basis. I pay tribute to her today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: In the latter part of my speech, as did the Minister, I want to talk about the task force on pension reform, and I will mention the work of other colleagues at that time.

It is important when we look at this Bill to let the Canadian public know at the outset what we in the House face at this point in time. Today, at the beginning of June, we have a Bill before us which received first reading on May 29. While I know the Government after first reading of the bill can come back with second reading very quickly, it is generally the process of the House that a period of time is allowed for private and collegial discussion after first reading and for groups in the country interested in the Bill's specific provisions to have an opportunity to look at them and come back with suggestions.

Pension reform—specifically the changes to the guaranteed income supplement—has been a point of discussion in the House for the last two years. On February 15, 1984 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) mentioned the $25 increase in his Budget to take effect on July 1, 1984 and the additional $25 in December, 1984. The Budget called for those provisions on February 15, but we only received the Bill for first reading on May 29 and today, on June 4, we are debating second reading. I am not trying to be difficult, but we have to be realistic about the situation. If we can get the Bill through the House reasonably quickly on second reading, it will go to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. At the present time that committee has before it Bill C-221, a Private Member's Bill in the name of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) dealing with amendments to the Narcotics Act and the therapeutic use of heroin. As well it has Bill C-5, an Act to amend the Radiation Emitting Devices Act. All of us recognize that there will be a certain number of allotted days in June and that there is a certain political event which the Party opposite wants to conduct in Ottawa this month.

That being the case, we have very little opportunity in either the House or in committee to get a grip on pension reform and the discussion which I believe should take place. If I have any regret or criticism of the Minister, it is just that I would have preferred to see the Bill much earlier. Then we could have had it in committee and discussed its provisions over a longer period of time. Despite that difficulty, the two points which I made at the outset of my comments stand.

The major feature of the Bill is to increase the income of elderly pensioners who now receive the guaranteed income supplement. Of course, to receive the GIS is contingent upon reaching age 65 or being eligible for the Old Age Security Plan. That supplement will be increased by $25 per month in July of this year and by an additional $25 in December. We support that, but as I said a little more time would have been helpful.

It is interesting to note that the Minister—and I do not think I am being unkind—has some difficulty explaining some of the other provisions because they are complicated and require some study. For instance, there are changes to the War Veterans Act and changes affecting immigrants, just to name two. There is also the five-year period in which a person can now apply whereas in the past it was one year. These are all important details and I would suggest that time would have allowed us to bring forward better legislation than that which we have now.

That being the case, I would like to outline for the House who these people are who will be affected by the increase in the guaranteed income supplement of $25. Within the confines of the House of Commons, it is very easy to speak of this matter in general terms. However, who are these people who will be affected? As of March of this year, 2,490,000 Canadians over the age of 65 were receiving the basic universal old age pension which currently stands at $265.89 per month. If we take a look at those 2.5 million elderly Canadians, we would also discover that approximately 50 per cent, or 1,241,000 of them, qualified for some sort of guaranteed income supplement in March of this year. However, of that group, some 302,812 or 12.2 per cent qualified for the full supplement. The rest qualified for the partial supplement. There is no question that there are a number of elderly Canadians today who are not eligible for company pensions or who did not have the financial resources to build up private pensions and are solely dependent on the Old Age Security and the guaranteed income supplement.

In one of the last statements made by the Minister, she said that the increase to the GIS would raise the incomes of those single elderly people who are receiving both the Old Age Security and the guaranteed income supplement above the poverty line. I suggest that that is not correct. In fact, when looking at figures that we and others in this field have worked out, it is my submission that with the proposed changes once implemented, including both the $25 in July and the $25 in December, the 1984 incomes of single persons receiving OAS and GIS will be $6,625 per annum. That is still some $697 below the poverty line for those who live in rural areas and some $3,275 below the poverty line for those who live in urban areas.

I know that when we speak about the poverty line for rural and urban areas, we are using a basic figure or a norm. However, I suggest to the Minister and to her departmental officials that they re-examine the statement made by the Minister. I do not believe it is the case that these people who will be receiving income only from the OAS and the GIS will be placed above the poverty line after receiving these increases. Even taking into account the December increase, those people would still fall below the poverty line.

It is for that reason that a number of provinces have brought in programs generally on a quarterly basis to increase the pension for these people. In pension jargon, it is called a top-up of the pension plan. There is no question that the provinces have had to address that question in a financial way. I would suggest to the Minister that while we welcome these additions, part of her argument and her laudatory statements are not borne out in fact.

It is also important to note something which concerns me and that is that elderly Canadians who earned salaries which were relatively low as compared to salaries today and who did not have extra money to purchase pension plans or worked for companies that did not have pension plans now use a disproportionate amount of their income for basic necessities such as housing and food. I will not take the time of the House to mention figures, but there is no question that that is the case.

The Minister has said that the extra money from the GIS will flow back into the economy immediately because these people will spend it. That is true, but it is reflective of a more important issue. These people are spending higher percentages of their incomes on food, clothing and household necessities. Despite the adjustments for inflation, the fact remains that these people, on a day-by-day basis, still must face a very specific budgeting process which only they are able to undertake.

The whole question of the future of our society, a question of which pensions is but a part, is one which should concern us in this House and should concern all Canadians. While we welcome this Bill, I think there is a fundamental reality that we must face. I am not convinced that we are facing that reality as I had hoped that this Bill would. That reality is that social policy relating to such things as pensions, health care and the Canada Assistance Plan, to name just three, cannot be divorced from economic policy. It is that economic policy which I would like to address for a moment.

It is said, and it is true, that the Government of Canada must be deeply concerned about additional expenditures because of both the annualized deficit of some $30 million this year and the cumulative deficit of some $155 billion at the present time. That is the legacy of the Liberal Government. Today, more than one-quarter of the entire resources of the Government of Canada are being spent not on debt repayment but on debt servicing. We as Canadians are now paying in excess of $20 billion for debt servicing. As is my bent, I will be conservative about it and say that if that amount could have been cut by 25 per cent through proper economic management, we would have had an additional $5 billion to put into pensions, health care, economic development or whatever the legitimate priorities of the Government may have been. Alternatively, we could have left that $5 billion in the hands of Canadians who could, with proper tax incentives, have bought pension plans on their own.

To put the situation into focus, at the present time the federal Government is spending approximately $9 billion on transfer payments through the block funding system for health care. If the debt servicing charge could have been reduced by $5 billion or 25 per cent, that amount would have been equal to 50 per cent of the total health care expenditures of the federal Government this year. That is why we cannot divorce economic policy from social policy.

We cannot afford to pay for social policies if our economic policies are not in place and properly managed. That is the dilemma and the legacy that I suggest is being left to elderly Canadians today and to generations to come. I say more in sorrow than in anger that that is the tragedy. When thinking of the potential of a country such as ours with people such as ours, one must recognize that we have unlimited opportunities relative to those of other nations. However, the deficit will affect social policy. No matter how much we want to be receptive to new plans and new expenditures and no matter how much we want the very best for our elderly, we must keep in mind that legacy. I condemn the Liberal Government for having foisted that legacy equally on the elderly and on future generations to come.

I spoke with a senior citizen this morning with respect to the Bill. I asked him what he would say if he had an opportunity to speak on the Bill. He said that he would speak about two things: the amount of money which is going toward servicing the debt; and the ravages of inflation on the elderly. There are some Canadians who can protect themselves to some degree from the ravages of inflation, but the elderly, who are on fixed incomes and below the poverty line in many cases, are not able to react as quickly. In some cases, they cannot react at all. It takes me back to the point which I just made: to develop a social policy of which we can all be proud, we must get our economic house in order. The only way to do that is for government to start placing a higher priority on economic matters than this Government has done.

Returning to the Bill, I have already stated that our Party supports the increase in the supplement. What else does the Bill do? The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) has been pressing for changes to the War Veterans Allowance Act for a number of years. Other Members on our side have been pressing for changes as well, but he has been especially vocal on that issue. Some changes to the War Veterans Allowance Act are included in the Bill. I would like to say to the Government, and to the Minister specifically, that in committee, we intend to examine the details not only with respect to those provisions but also the provisions which have been put forward by my colleague from Victoria.

I recall in 1977 debating changes to the Old Age Security Act with respect to immigrants. The Minister responsible for National Health and Welfare at that time is now Minister of Finance. At that time the Conservative Party raised the point that in future years the immigrant population would increase and have all the rights of citizens once they received their citizenship, but that they would always have difficulty with pensions. We asked at what stage would those immigrants have to be considered if the Government could not give their pensions proper adjustment. We asked at what stage—and the Minister used the words herself—would we have to look at social assistance or social welfare.

The provision which is before us today addresses, at least in part, the mistake that was made in 1977. I would like to say to the Minister that by putting the provision forward she is not doing something new, but rather in part correcting the mistake of her own Government which was made in 1977.

At the present time there is a one-year pay-back period for a person who applies for Old Age Security after the age of 65 which is being increased by the Bill. That is a provision which obviously we endorse. However, there is another provision which creates great concern. I am sure every Member of the House has had the experience of being visited by a senior citizen—and generally they are widows—between the ages of 60 and 65 who is neither eligible for Old Age Security nor for the spouse's allowance. In my experience those are the most difficult cases. These women have spent their working years in the home. They have probably given the greatest contribution to our country that anyone could, namely the mothering of their children and the raising of their families. But they have no pension plan. They do not have skills the marketplace needs and therefore they cannot find work. If they do find work, very often because of the physical nature of the work they are not capable of doing it because of their age. If there is a huge gap in our pension system, it is in that area. I look forward to a very early opportunity, after the next election when we form the government, to correct that fallacy. I would have hoped that the Bill would have corrected it today. I would have given credit to the Government if it had seen that mistake, after the cajoling and pressuring that has come from the House and, more importantly, from many single people, especially women. It is an issue which must be corrected at the very first opportunity. It is unfortunate that the Bill does not afford us that opportunity.

The House is now in possession of an excellent report on pension reform which was presented by the Special Committee on Pension Reform. It is interesting to note that pension reform, at least in my judgment, must and will become one of the top priority items on the national agenda in the next few years. That will happen for a number of reasons. I have already mentioned some of those reasons which include the economic reasons. However, there are other reasons. For example, our demographic reality is changing as a country. I do not like the term "an aging population". Somehow I think it is inaccurate. But the fact remains that at the present time approximately 12 per cent of our population is over the age of 65. By the turn of the century it is estimated that we will be approaching the 20 per cent figure.

That being the case, for those of us who try to plan for the future, there will be a greater demand on our health care system, there will be a greater demand on housing services, and specifically, for our purpose today, there will be a greater demand on the pension system. We must get our economic house in order so that we can meet that developing reality.

It is also equally important that we put in provisions whereby people can become participants in pension plans which are self-contributory, company-contributory, or a combination thereof, in order that when they retire they are not only subject to Old Age Security and the guaranteed income supplement. I have no doubt that those two plans will keep Canadians, whether it is 1984 or 2004, in or below the poverty line level. That is reality. The history of pensions will dictate that.

Having said that, there are a number of provisions dealing with pension reform which I would have hoped the Minister would consider in the Bill. The Minister said recently that private pension plans must be overhauled and reformed. She had an opportunity to begin the legislative process in this Bill but, unfortunately, it was not done. There is absolutely no doubt, when we look at the demographic realities of Canada, that we must address those questions.

The Minister also pointed out that she was ready to sign agreements. She indicated that the last social security agreement which she signed was with Belgium. We now have, I believe, seven of those plans in place. However, I suggest we must put much more effort into getting an agreement with the United Kingdom.

I am aware of the argument that possibly the Government of the United Kingdom is not at the moment ready to move. However, there are many Canadians who have lived in Britain, who have paid into the British pension plan and who are now residents or citizens of Canada, who have had a portion of their British pension plan benefits frozen. We must get an agreement for those Canadians because they have paid into that plan. We have an obligation to those people to ensure they can receive the benefits for which they have paid. I suggest to the Minister even in the last days of the Government of which she is a member that she make that item a priority. I want to tell the Minister and Canadians who are unfortunately facing that dilemma that there is a full commitment on our part that when we become the government we will make that a top priority item.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to end with the obligations we have to Canada's seniors. I am always concerned, when legislation such as this is brought before us, the timing of it, that it could be seen not as pension reform but rather as a good or opportune political moment to give some emphasis to Canada's elderly. While we welcome this Bill, I believe the time is past when we should simply say: "Let us have some legislation. It is $25 today. It was $30 in the last election campaign, and we are going to get the elderly vote that way". In fact, Mr. Speaker, if one wanted to be absolutely cynical, one could say: "Let us create two openings, one for July, in case we want a summer election, and another one in December, in case we want a fall election. And we have both covered with $25".

I say through you, Mr. Speaker, let us not play games that way. The reason I say this is that I had an opportunity to speak to the eastern Manitoba seniors' council this last weekend. There were 130 senior citizens present from my riding who are representatives of some 28 senior citizens' clubs with some 1800 members. We talked about pension reform, among other topics, and it was interesting to note how quickly these senior citizens in Manitoba raised a concern about the move—and the Minister mentioned this—of the Minister of Social Development in the Province of Quebec. While it was not going to affect Manitoba, these citizens were concerned about what happens when we start making these changes or these adjustments. What is going to happen to their financial security? Are they vulnerable?

I believe the point which is so important to make is that these are Canadians who have contributed to our country and who are now in a position where they have made plans for the future based on the present pension system. Therefore, when I speak of pension reform, I believe what we should concentrate on is building on what we have. In other words, I am in favour of reform, not revolution. Let us reform the system but let us not create fear, as did the Quebec initiative, at least in the minds of some senior Canadians who obviously have looked at pensions very seriously and who take their economic reality on a day to day basis very seriously as well.

I would like to say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that we have a long way to go on pension reform. In order to achieve that reform, we must have economic development and recovery. I want to say to Hon. Members of the House, and to Canadians, that our Party will support this legislation in a speedy manner in order that these moneys, which we believe these Canadians deserve, will be received before the end of this month.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party I want to assure the Minister as well that we want to see this measure passed by the House as quickly as possible.

I was curious about something which the Minister said at the conclusion of her remarks to the effect that following an election campaign the Government should speedily proceed in the area of pension reform. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that I have been hearing that ever since I came here in 1980. My research on that question has been going on much longer than that.

I have to say that I share the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), on behalf of himself and his Party, that because of the parliamentary timetable which is left to us, there is a real danger that this Bill would not see the light of day in terms of enactment. The Government has allocated two days for this debate, I believe, today and possibly Wednesday or Thursday, I am advised. We would then see the Bill referred to committee.

What the committee does with the Bill, of course, is entirely up to that committee. However, it is conceivable that this measure would not come back into the House until after the Liberal leadership convention. Who knows what is going to happen then. We could be into an election and all kinds of things.

In light of that, Mr. Speaker, if it would be helpful to the Minister, I would be prepared on behalf of the New Democratic Party to make an offer to the Minister that she probably could not refuse. That would be to give consideration to all stages of this Bill today so that the measure could be enacted today. The Bill is not complicated. It is straightforward. The measures proposed in the Bill are recognized by every Hon. Member of this House as being of benefit to the individuals who will be the beneficiaries of it. So I repeat again, Mr. Speaker, that we in this Party would be prepared to follow precedents which have taken place in this House previously on measures which I do not believe to be as crucial or as important as this legislation, and deal with all the measures in this Bill through all stages in this sitting day. Therefore, at the end of this sitting day the seniors of this country would know that they would receive the $25 on July 1 and the other $25 in December as a fact rather than something they could only expect.

Miss Bégin: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I should point out to the Hon. Member that any such move to change the Bill to refer it to Committee of the Whole would require the unanimous consent of the House. Would the Hon. Member keep that in mind, if that is the proposal he is making?

Mr. Young: I am aware of that, Mr. Speaker, but I appreciate your reminding me of it. It is something which I will certainly take into consideration during the remaining time I have left to me.

I have dealt with my first concern, Mr. Speaker. The other concern I have—I would welcome clarification from the Minister either during the course of this debate or during the lunch hour—is that the Minister said at the end of her remarks that this $50 increase over the six-month period would raise all seniors above the poverty level. There have been a number of organizations which have a tremendous degree of credibility in the country with respect to their research capabilities. They have come up with figures which are very similar to the figures I have. I want to read them because I think it is important that the House realize there are figures which dispute the Minister's figures. My figures show there will be a substantial number of seniors in the country who will still have an annual income much below the poverty line. I welcome my figures being disputed if indeed the other figures can be substantiated.

For example, in St. John's Newfoundland, after all the increases have been passed on, my figures indicate that a single person would still have an income of $2,769 below the poverty level, and a married couple would be $961 below the poverty line. In Charlottetown it would be $1,520 for a single person and $702 for a couple. In Halifax, the single would be $2,550 and $523 for a couple. Saint John, New Brunswick, $2,769 for a single and $961 for a couple. In Montreal it would be $3,266 for a single and $1,627 for a couple. In Toronto it would be $2,560 and $369 respectively. In Winnipeg it would be $3,178 and $1,522. In Regina it would be $2,469 and $421. In Edmonton it is $2,126 and $653. In Vancouver a single person would still have an income of some $2,799 below the poverty level and for a couple it would be $431.

I believe our figures are as accurate as anyone else's, Mr. Speaker. As I said previously, I would welcome the Minister responding to those figures and perhaps giving us the figures she has so we can compare them. Then people across this country will know whether these changes are going to be of the assistance the Minister's Department feels they should be.

I appreciate that the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has a rough row to hoe in Cabinet. Because of Cabinet solidarity, of course, I doubt very much whether she can express that opinion. However, I know from my own personal experience with other Cabinet Ministers that money for pensioners is not easy to pry out from the larger pie for a whole variety of reasons. Seniors know that very well because they made their presentations in a very eloquent and articulate manner to the task force on pension reform. However, there are some contradictions between what the Government says it wants to do regarding the GIS and what it is actually doing. As you know, Mr. Speaker, our Party is not what you would call a great supporter of the GIS. We would much rather see an expansion of the Canada Pension Plan and the public system than a GIS means test, or an increase across the board in the OAS. By the way, there is a large number of people out there who think that the $50 increase is in the OAS and not the GIS. Some people are going to be in for a rude awakening when they discover they are not going to get the $50 a month increase.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to what the Department of Finance and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) did in the last Budget to persons collecting workmen's compensation pensions. The Government changed the rules so that those pensions are now included in the calculation of income for GIS purposes. The Minister wrote a letter to the chief executive officer of War Amputations of Canada. She said that to ignore income from sources such as workmen's compensation would result in inequitably higher benefits for pensioners who have such sources of income than for pensioners without such sources. She said the purpose of the GIS is to ensure that every pensioner is guaranteed the same basis level of income. I never thought, Mr. Speaker, that meant reducing another person's income in order to make sure that higher income earners are making the same as bottom earners. I would have thought a more honourable thing to do would be to raise people from the bottom up to the top.

The one thing the Government ignores is that there are definite additional costs associated with being disabled. The House of Commons Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped made no less than 11 recommendations on that very question. We recognize that a person on a fixed income has associated additional expenses that an able-bodied person does not have. In all fairness to those individuals, the Government should have taken that into account. Certainly the Cabinet, in its response to that report, seemed to indicate that it fully understood that and would have some empathy for that argument. But what the Government did was to change the income tax system in order to chop away benefits from those individuals who were not otherwise affected in collecting the GIS.

I could say much, much more on this question. However, in the spirit of my previous remarks and my offer on behalf of the NDP to both the Government and the Official Opposition, I will not use up the entire time allocated to me. Rather than do that, I would ask the House for unanimous consent to move a motion to deal with all stages of Bill C-40 this day and refer the Bill to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The Hon. Member has proposed that the Bill be sent to Committee of the Whole and passed through all stages today. Such a proposal would, of course, require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Friesen: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have no personal hesitation in saying that we could do that, but I have an administrative concern regarding a clause of the Bill which requires an amendment. Since the Bill was introduced only last Wednesday or so, there has been no time to prepare the amendment. I believe the Minister would be interested in this amendment because she wants to make sure that people are not disadvantaged through the administrative changes she is making. I would like to be able to prepare that kind of amendment but the time allotted does not allow me to do that. I would be happy to give consent but because of the lack of time we cannot even prepare an amendment which the Minister might want to adopt.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, the Member was elected the same day I was in 1972 and he had plenty of time to learn the rules.

Mr. Friesen: No.

Miss Bégin: Then it was in 1974, which is ten years to learn the rules. He knows that he cannot include more money in any Bill being studied in the House. I would beg him to give unanimous consent.

• (1230)

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. All Parties have agreed to having our House Leaders decide items like this. Why are we doing the House Leaders' work on the floor of the House? Surely this could be taken up with the House Leaders. They are quite capable of bringing in that recommendation. Let us not do something over the heads of the House Leaders who we believe should be handling this type of procedure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) again if he has something to add to his previous point of order.

Mr. Friesen: Yes. The Minister misled the House. I said nothing about any extra expenditures.

Miss Bégin: You said more people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please.

Mr. Friesen: No, I did not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I do not think we should get into debate on a point of order. Does the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) want to add to the point of order?

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member who previously spoke, in the absence of my House Leader who is at the fortieth commemoration of D-day, I am the Acting House Leader for my Party. As such, I would be prepared to enter into discussions between now and two or three o'clock with the Government and the Opposition to see if we can come up with a satisfactory formula which would allow us to do what I propose.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): On the same point of order, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the question of getting this Bill through the House as quickly as possible is one which this Party has been urging for some time. In fact, just a few days ago I initiated an Opposition debate on that very issue urging that the Bill come forward. There are several things which have been included in this Bill that were not in the original indication given by the Government in its February Budget. Those are quite complex matters. I know the Minister appreciates that they are complex because it took her four or five months to prepare the Bill. Those matters have to be looked at and given—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. I do feel that we are entering debate. It is quite apparent that there is no unanimous consent given by the House to change the motion at this time. Therefore, for continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this Bill because I am very interested in a number of items in it. The $25 increase in July and November is certainly supported by all Members of the House. However, there are other things in the Bill which I think have to be considered. Quite frankly, I think they should be considered in committee unless the House Leaders can come to some other decision. I do not want to continue discussing the point of order, but I do not think the floor of the House is the place to discuss procedures of the House. That is why we have House Leaders. I guess that is enough said on that.

To begin with, I would like to deal with the specific matter of deductions for the purpose of arriving at the amount of money that we permit a person to secure the old age pension. I refer particularly to workmen's compensation. A question was asked the other day in the House with regard to a worker's compensation. I think the Minister had the wrong idea entirely of what partial permanent disability really means under the workmen's compensation Acts of the various provinces.

In no sense of the word is a PPD "income". When a man or woman is injured in industry, they go on regular compensation and secure two-thirds or three-quarters of their salaries for remuneration. That is income. They are unable to work and are paid this amount in order to continue living because the accident took place in industry. At the end of that time there is an assessment period. The work person is examined again to see if there is a partial permanent disability, a permanent partial disability or permanent total disability. It could be any of these. Permanent total disability would mean that perhaps both legs and both arms were gone or there was a very serious injury to the back which put a person in a wheelchair. That would be a total permanent disability.

When that occurs, surely we are not going to consider that as income. That is compensation because part of the body was left in the workplace. They were injured in the workplace through no fault of their own. They carry that loss throughout their lives. If that is to be considered income, the next step will be when a person like that obtains employment. A person who has lost both eyes, which would be almost total permanent disability, could not go to work because his income would be considered total income. Presently when a person employs someone who was completely blinded by employment, he is able to secure wages. It is recognized that that is compensation for the loss of the two eyes rather than payment for what he does afterward.

It is the same for a person who loses two legs or both arms. These people should not be penalized when they get to the age of 65 by suddenly making the compensation wages. That is completely contrary to compensation acts. That is completely contrary to what union people and others have fought for throughout the years. I do not like to see this even though it may affect only a few. The principle which is being established is not sound. It is not at all sound to consider a permanent total disability or a permanent partial disability pension as income. It is not income. It is compensation for the loss of part of the body or sometimes practically all of the body. The industry is paying compensation because part of the body was left in the workplace. That should not be considered as income for Old Age Security or any portion of Old Age Security. Income for Old Age Security is a different thing entirely.

The Government did go so far as to say that pensions granted to veterans who left part of their bodies on the battlefield would not be considered as income. That is right. Veterans who have left part of their bodies on the battlefield should not have their pensions considered as income. It is not income at all. It is compensation or pension because part of their body was lost in fighting for the country. The principle is really the same. We grant one and refuse to grant the other.

I think this is because there is a misunderstanding of what compensation is. It is not payment of wages. This is particularly so with regard to a permanent partial disability pension or a permanent total disability pension. It is not wages; it is compensation because part of the body was left in the workplace. I think that should be corrected when this matter goes before committee.

I would briefly like to discuss another point in the Bill. That is the reduction in residence qualifications for the spouse's allowance. I support that particular item. It would reduce from 40 years to 10 years the residence requirement for a full spouse's allowance. This is a worth-while amendment that is overdue. When a pensioner with whom a person over the age of 60 lives passes away, then certainly the ten-year residence should be sufficient. However, I even question the need of the ten-year requirement.

Let me deal with another aspect of the spouse's allowance. There are cases where the wife of an old age pensioner is working and does not apply for the spouse's allowance. They may be able to get by on her wages and his pension and therefore they do not take advantage of applying for the spouse's allowance. However, when the old age pensioner passes away, the wife is left only with her wages which are not enough to live on. She still must pay the rent and all the other costs of the residence. The only difference is that now she only has to feed herself. When she applies for the spouse's allowance, she is refused because she did not apply while her husband was living. She is refused even though she is over 60 years old and her residency qualifications are sound.

I think that mistake should be corrected. A person should not be penalized because she tried to help the country by working when she could have quit working while her spouse was living and applied for the spouse's allowance. By not applying for that allowance and attempting to save the Government money, the wife is now unable to get the spouse's allowance. This case may not occur very often, but it affects some of our senior citizens who are now denied the spouse's allowance because they did not apply while their husbands were living. That principle is neither sound nor right.

I am in favour of the bilateral agreements. There are a number of my constituents who came from Belgium, Austria, Germany, Czechoslovakia and almost every European and Asian country. Since some of them have pensions coming from their homeland, it is a far better arrangement to have an agreement between the two countries so they do not have continually to contact their homelands. It takes weeks and sometimes months to get a reply from some countries, particularly those dominated by the U.S.S.R. Therefore, any bilateral agreement that is achievable can only help because it will assist our citizens to get a better pension.

Let me speak generally about the adequacy of pensions today. Certainly in the Province of Alberta, a pensioner who secures any portion of the GIS secures a portion of the Alberta assured income. Although I am unaware of the situation in other provinces, the residents of Alberta who receive a full GIS will secure the full Alberta assured income. This is probably true in other provinces and it is very helpful because the additional amount from provincial governments may, in many cases, bring people over the poverty line and remove the fear of what may happen tomorrow. I am in favour of anything we can do in that regard.

I am disturbed by the fact that when pensioners receive a pension of any type, it becomes virtually a fixed income. This might be acceptable if other costs remain fixed but the fact is that nothing remains fixed in our society. The cost of living, rents and taxes go up and while there is some indexing with regard to the total cost of living, it does not affect many items that are necessary for the livelihood of our people. Their pensions are not sufficient to replace worn out blankets or to make house repairs. While the pension may be sufficient to look after their everyday needs, other programs are necessary to meet these other costs. For example, if a pensioner is forced to move because his rent has suddenly gone up, it is difficult to meet the additional costs and any additional money that can be provided by other benefits would certainly be well worth while.

I support the program which the Alberta Government provides for widows over the age of 55. They are a group that have been left out of our country's social programs and such a program is of substantial help to them. Generally speaking, Canadian women between the ages of 50 and 65, unless they are on spouse's allowance, have nowhere to turn except welfare. Having worked all their lives, they should not end up on welfare. Most women at that age are unable to build up a Canada Pension because they have stayed at home to look after an invalid member of the family or an aging mother or father. When they are faced with no income they are told that the only alternative is to apply for welfare. That is not good enough in a country like Canada. We should be facing this problem and tackling it.

While there are some men faced with this dilemma, it is women in particular who cannot get back into the workforce when they reach that age because there is no place for them.

Some of them find work scrubbing floors. I think it is unacceptable in this country that a woman who gets to the age of 50 or 60 must go out and scrub floors or do washing when her health is at stake. There are pitiful cases such as these in Canada, including in my riding where women are now existing, not living, on welfare. The very fact that they have to accept welfare is an affront to them. However, one must face this prospect when one is hungry and there are no other provisions.

Certainly it would help to lower the pension age somewhat, we must do something for these women between the ages of 50 and 65 even if it is on the basis of need. It is a blot on the social programs of Canada that they are left to depend solely on welfare. This should be corrected as soon as possible.

Although the $25 per month extra will help single pensioners, many of my constituents who are married pensioners are also having difficulty getting by. Their rents and other expenses have gone up. Their food costs are continually rising. They have asked why it is only single pensioners who are receiving the increase. They have difficulty accepting the explanation that two can live cheaper than one. In many cases the costs are the same because rent, tax, utilities, telephone and actual needs are not cheaper for two than for one. When only one pensioner receives an income, that pensioner must pay for everything. While there is no doubt that expenses are shared when there are two pensions, there is still a need among many of our married pensioners who barely meet the requirement for receiving the GIS.

The Hon. Minister mentioned a disturbing result when pensioners receive payments under these programs. They say they are now okay, that they have this part of the GIS and part of the assured income and can make a go of it. But the following year something happens to their income. They suddenly get a letter telling them to pay back certain sums of money to the Government. That is a nightmare to some of our pensioners who get these letters. Once they get the money, they spend it. They all have a need. As the Minister said, pensioners spend the money, they do not hoard it. They cannot. Few, if any, have bank accounts. Some try to put a little aside to look after funeral arrangements. You have to admire them for doing that. But not very many have bank accounts. It is a tragedy when they get letters saying that they have to pay back the money given to them inadvertently by the Government.

I think we should deal with that problem. I hope the committee will deal with it. It is a tragedy when people are suddenly told that the pension or the GIS they have received must now be paid back. The sums are not large, but they are large in relation to a pension.

This generation, as all generations, will be valued in history for the way we look after our senior citizens, particularly those in need, and for the way we look after our crippled, handicapped and retarded. I hope Canada will stand high when we get our social legislation put together in that we will not only look after our aged, those over 65, but also those between the ages of 50 and 65 who need help, especially our women, our retarded and our crippled.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. If there are no questions or comments, we will continue debate. The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to speak to this measure which will increase the pension benefits for those receiving Old Age Security and the guaranteed income supplement. I have always felt that the first role of Government is to protect those who, through no fault of their own, are vulnerable in our society. It is for that reason that the spokesman for our Party, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), has already indicated to the House that we plan to give speedy passage to the legislation. I hope the promise of speedy passage does not preclude an openness on the part of the Minister to accept changes by way of amendment at committee stage in order to improve protection for those who are vulnerable. By that I refer to amendments that would mean no further spending and which have nothing to do with tax revenues, but would simply improve the administration in such a way that the people who need to be protected will have that assurance.

Having said that, I accept the fact that we have probably not heard the last of this Bill. It is a strange perversity in this House that when we talk about measures passed in this Parliament that have become unpopular in the country, measures such as the National Energy Program, spokesmen on the other side in the Liberal Government say Parliament enacted this legislation. We hear them say that it was the will of Parliament that this should happen. But when it comes to measures like this one, it will not be Parliament which gave pensions or extended pensions; it will be the Liberal Government that did it. That is what we will be hearing in the weeks ahead.

As my colleague has indicated, it is not an accident of the calendar that benefits are staged to July and December so that if perchance we should be on the election trail in July and August or in October and November, members of the Liberal Party will be able to say, not in the high road of parliamentary language that Parliament enacted it, or that it was the wish of Parliament that pensioners get these extra benefits. No, by then we will revert to the former language. In other words, it will be the Liberal Government that gave these benefits.

We should not be deluded into thinking that we are talking about pension reform. We are talking about a supplement to what is already there. It is not in any way improving the benefits except to catch up with some of the inflationary pressures people on pension incomes have been facing. To some degree those who are vulnerable are made more vulnerable by what we are doing today. As we know, the GIS has created its own kind of dependency. Those who are vulnerable because they have to depend on all government pension plans are made more so by this Bill. It is because of the vicissitudes of government and government services that they become increasingly vulnerable. I am talking about such things as the mail service, computer breakdowns, the change of address that has to be worked through the system, the increase in inflation which is beyond the technocracy of government or the control of the pensioner—

Mr. Epp: Or the annual income report.

Mr. Friesen: Or the annual income report. The fact is that adjustments are made always the quarter after the inflation increase or the cost of living increase. Then as my colleague mentioned, the exchange rates between the United Kingdom and Canada are another example. Because the pound sterling has fallen in relation to the Canadian dollar, it means a reduction in the pension amount for those pensionable by the United Kingdom. Those kinds of vicissitudes make the vulnerable even more so. Those of us who spend time in our constituency offices know the pressure that rests on people who depend upon government pensions and government services to deliver them.

If we are going to talk about pension reform, we must talk about ways to diversify pension income so that pensioners will not be so dependent upon only one source. We think to diversify income is a very clever method when it comes to business. What about farming businesses? When a farmer can, he will diversify his income through the crops that he plants. Business will diversify its investment as much as possible in order to make sure that when there are down years in one area, there is income from another.

Why should we not be able to diversify income through pensions by creating a tax structure in such a way that those who are pensionable should be able to look forward to a variety of sources for their pension and not be vulnerable because of the vicissitudes of government pension schemes? It seems to me that if we want to talk about pension reform, we ought to talk about diversifying rather than pyramiding pension sources.

There is something ominous and pernicious about this Bill. It not only gives, but it also takes away. I refer now to the workmen's compensation provisions within this legislation. The Minister in her speech gave all her attention to how the Government was lifting up all of the pensioners. In her letter to the gentleman in charge of the war amputees of Canada she gives her attention to how she is planning to take away. In her public statements she talks about how she wants to lift up the pensioners, but in her private letters it is how she is pressing them down. The perversity of this Government is that public attention will be on pension increases and the public who hears about it will be happy. The individual pensioners across the country who are vulnerable by way of workmen's compensation pensions will be pushed down and we will not hear about those, Sir. That is the politics of this legislation.

TOURISM

MINISTER'S APPEARANCE IN TELEVISION COMMERCIALS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian tourism deficit continues to be one of our most blatant global embarrassments. It is not enough that we cannot lure foreigners to this fine country; we cannot even persuade our own citizens to holiday at home. It is a sad day when Canada fails to compete for the tourist dollar with countries outside our borders. Even with air fares included, it is often cheaper to travel abroad in the long run.

As a representative of one of the most fabulous tourist areas in Canada, that of Parry Sound-Muskoka, I want to ensure that the industry will not go down the tube. Speaking of the tube, I cannot help but notice the smiling face of the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Smith) on television, trying time and again to sell Canada to the world. I would assume the Minister appears in the commercial without taking an actor's wage, but it seems highly coincidental just prior to a federal election. Is he selling Canada as a tourist destination, or is he selling himself to the electorate?

With the Queen, the Pope, and the Liberal leadership convention in Ottawa soon, this capital city will fare very well, but the rest of the country is in real trouble.

CONDEMNATION OF SENIOR OFFICER'S CRITICISM OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, while congratulating and extending best wishes to Mrs. Hewes in her new post at CN, I also want to caution her to use her first few weeks in improving her peripheral vision so that she may protect her back. I would also counsel Mrs. Hewes to speak to her senior management team concerning its public utterances on the conduct and efficiency of Parliament.

A write-off of CN debts to the tune of $600 million by the taxpayers of Canada, a 50 per cent share of the $650 million contribution paid by the Government of Canada under the recent Crow legislation, and a 58 per cent increase in the cost of moving grain paid by western farmers, do not qualify the senior officer to degrade anyone. When CN shows steady profit and keeps trains running on time, then, and only then, will there be occasion for management to tender advice and counsel to others. Cobblers should stick to their lasts. No doubt Mrs. Hewes will profit greatly from the advice and experience of her predecessor in her new and important position.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER CANADA STUDENT EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM—CALL FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to impress upon the House the great need for additional funds for the Summer Canada Student Employment Program. The need for an expanded program is even more pronounced in areas of high unemployment like Newfoundland where summer jobs do not exist, generally speaking, in private enterprise, or in government Departments which are practically non-existent.

If the Government of Canada would increase funds for summer employment for students in direct job-creation programs, it could provide thousands of extra jobs for young people, and it would reaffirm the Government's commitment under the Student Employment Program, contrary to the policy of the Progressive Conservative Party which opposes summer jobs through government funded direct job-creation programs.

The Liberal Party, unlike the Conservatives, is interested in creating summer jobs in high unemployment areas. I call upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to increase that commitment immediately, and I do not mean in a month's time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF HAWAIIAN ISLAND AS PRACTICE TARGET—DEMAND FOR CESSATION

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, for a number of years the Canadian Navy had used the Hawaiian Island of Kahoolawe for shelling exercises. For a thousand years this island has been considered sacred to Hawaiian people. Yet from 1941 until 1979 its use for religious and cultural purposes was banned by the United States Navy.

In 1981 the entire island was added to the U.S. National Register of Historic Places because of its invaluable historic significance. At this very moment the Canadian Navy is again participating in exercises which include shelling this island, exercises that pose an immediate threat to some of the archaeological sites, despite petitions from thousands of Hawaiians, despite resolutions from the State Legislature and municipal governments, in opposition to the shelling, and despite the fact that the navies of Japan, Australia and New Zealand have ceased their participation in shelling. To these entreaties the Canadian Government has shown an amazing insensitivity.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), two Ministers of National Defence and various government and military officials have dismissed out of hand Hawaiian concerns and their requests that Canada respect their cultural and religious heritage by withdrawing from the shelling exercises.

I call upon the Canadian Government to cease immediately any participation in any shelling of this region which is very important to Hawaiian people.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF D-DAY

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, June 6 marks the fortieth anniversary of the Allied D-Day offensive in Normandy which led to the liberation of Europe from Nazi occupation.

Operation Overlord was a great achievement. Five divisions reached the Normandy shores by sea, and three more by air. Seven thousand ships landed at the heavily fortified shoreline, in secrecy. Canadians will remember with pride the courageous efforts of our soldiers on Juno Beach. Canadian casualties numbered 946. The Queen's Own Rifles suffered the most, losing 143. The Winnipeg Rifles lost 128, and the North Shore Regiment had 125 casualties.

On Wednesday we will celebrate the victory, but let us not forget the dead who paid for their success in blood that we might remain free. Ten thousand Allied soldiers lost their lives in a battle which has become, as Time magazine put it, "an almost unconscious reply to the pacifist view of war".

If there ever was a just war in our history, it was the one in Europe 40 years ago. Every Canadian is aware of the philosophy of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) toward that war. Hopefully our veterans will feel pride as he represents Canada in Normandy in one of his final, official, international functions as head of the Government.

May the fallen Canadians of Juno Beach rest in peace.

SOCIAL SECURITY

MEDICAL EXPENSES OF DISABILITY ALLOWANCE RECIPIENTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, we hear a great deal these days about the adequacy of our social programs, but there are still those who fall between the various social safety nets. One such group comprises those under the age of 65 who suffer from debilitating diseases and have to pay an exorbitant amount of their income for drugs and medication. Because they are under 65, disability benefits from the Canada Pension Plan do not include the cost of drugs.

Let me cite the case of a man in my own constituency who is suffering from Parkinson's disease. He is 52 years of age, is married, and has two teenage children to support. Out of his meagre disability allowance he must pay $400 a month for medication to keep his illness under control. That is the bleak financial outlook for him and his family, month after month, year after year.

I am sure that the situation of this man is not unique. There must be many disability pension recipients under the age of 65 who desperately need assistance with their drug costs. While the matter is in part a provincial responsibility, nevertheless the federal Government surely has some obligation to do its part. I would therefore urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to consult with her provincial colleagues with a view to taking early action on this critical issue.

INCOME TAX

INCLUSION OF DISABILITY BENEFITS IN CALCULATION OF INCOME

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, until 1982 workmen's compensation payments were not included in net income for income tax purposes. The November, 1981, Budget of the federal Government brought about a change such that all social assistance payments, whether made on the basis of a means, need, or income test, would be treated as net income and deducted when calculating taxable income. As a result, workmen's compensation payments are now included in the items to be treated as income when calculating net income, and deducted when calculating taxable income. The Old Age Security Act was amended to reflect this inclusion of workmen's compensation benefits in determining eligibility for GIS payments, as were other types of disability income payments.

I am concerned that workers' compensation payments should not be included in net income for income tax purposes but, rather, that these funds should be used to help defray some of the additional expenses and suffering encountered by those who have been injured or disabled in the workplace. I therefore urge the Government to review its current policy regarding inclusion of Workmen's Compensation Board payments in the calculation of eligibility for GIS payments.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPLICATION TO REMOVE STATION AGENTS IN NORTHERN MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the Canadian Transport Commission will begin a series of hearings on a CN application to remove the station agents at eight locations in northern Manitoba. These locations are Churchill, Ilford, Thicket Portage, Gillam, Wabowden, Sherridan, Lynn Lake, and Cranberry Portage. In addition, the CNR plans to downgrade the existing station building.

At the very time the Province of Manitoba and the federal Government are spending $93 million to improve the Port of Churchill, CN is destroying the train system to northern Manitoba. This is yet another example of a publicly owned transportation system taking action that is contrary to the interests of the public.

In the brief that I will be presenting to the Canadian Transport Commission I list some of the frustations that are experienced by northerners when dealing with CN and VIA. For example, people have been left at the station in Pikwitonei because VIA would not put on an extra car to allow for extra Christmas traffic. In other instances native people have faced a language problem when trying to deal with a remote phone system in order to make reservations.

It seems evident that CN and VIA have no desire to meet the responsibility of providing services in areas where the train is an essential link. The destruction of services appears to be a deliberate attempt to destroy Canada's railway system. The losers are the people who have no recourse but to use the system however much it neglects their needs.

We, the public, who own VIA and CN, must call upon the Minister of Transport (Mr. Axworthy) to re-examine the aims—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED REPLACEMENT OF DEFINITION OF HATE LITERATURE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, hate literature is appearing all too frequently across Canada and is hardly a victimless product. Indeed, it is a malignant growth on the banner of freedom of expression, and the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has quite rightly called for the removal of two of the larger loopholes in the existing hate literature provision of the Criminal Code. That the existing Section is toothless is shown by the fact that there have been only four prosecutions under that Section in 14 years and that the one conviction was overturned on appeal.

As a former Crown and defence attorney, I believe that one major problem is the definition of hate literature in the Code, and I would propose the following replacement for the present definition:

> Hate literature is defined as any printed or written material or communication which promotes hatred of, or violence toward, any grouping of persons on the basis of colour, religion, language or place of origin.

Two other legislative remedies would also be helpful, and these were proposed in Toronto over the weekend at my Party's conference on multiculturalism. One such remedy is that the Criminal Code should be amended to allow a court, upon conviction, to increase the sentence if it finds that a crime was motivated by racism. Second, the post office regulations should be amended to prevent people from sending hate literature through the mails. The inadequacy of the postal situation is well shown by the fact that Ernst Zundel lost his mail privileges but they were returned on appeal.

THE ECONOMY

STATISTICS CANADA REPORT ON GROSS DOMESTIC PRODUCT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in the absences of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of State for Finance, I suppose I must direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister who, I believe, is also the Minister for External Relations. On Friday, June 1, Statistics Canada reported that in March the Gross Domestic Product in Canada was still 1.2 per cent below the pre-recession peak of June, 1981. In other words, Statistics Canada indicated that the Gross Domestic Product has not yet returned to its level of June, 1981. It also reported that capital spending in manufacturing will decline.

Since he has just come into the Chamber I will now direct my question to the Minister of Finance and I will repeat it quickly. On Friday, Statistics Canada reported that in March our Gross Domestic Product was 1.2 per cent below the pre-recession peak of June, 1981. In other words, Statistics Canada indicated that it was less then it was in June, 1981. As well, it reported that capital spending and manufacturing would decline in 1984 for the third year in a row, indicating that it would be $8.6 billion this year as compared to the $12.7 billion invested in 1981. The Minister knows the effect that will have on jobs.

Why did the Minister say on May 30, just last week, in reply to a question posed by the Leader of the Opposition on May 30, that in the first quarter of 1984 the economy recovered all of that which had been lost during the recession, when that was not the truth? Why did the Minister attempt to deceive the Members of the House and the Canadian public?

Second, could the Minister tell the Members of the House what he plans to do to correct the situation of a decline in capital spending in manufacturing and a GDP that has still not returned to its pre-recession level? What is he going to do about it? Has he been given any advice by the seven candidates from the Liberal reform school who are competing for the leadership?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that I stated in the Budget that in the first quarter of 1984 the economy would recover from the loss during the course of the recession, and this has been the case. I might also add that if the Hon. Member were to look at the Statistics Canada report he would see that in March the Gross Domestic Product increased 0.2 per cent following an upward revised figure of a 0.1 per cent decline in February; that in the first quarter real Gross Domestic Product increased 0.6 per cent following a 0.7 per cent increase in the previous quarter; and that goods and services production increased by roughly the same rate. There has been a record of continued increase. In March the real GDP stood at 7.1 per cent above that of the lowest point of the recession, which was in December, 1982, and 1.2 per cent below the last peak in June, 1981. These are the facts.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is as slippery as a seal that has just been sculped.

Last week the Minister said that in the first quarter of 1984 the economy recovered all of that which had been lost during the recession. The official publication of Statistics Canada of Friday of last week indicates that we are 1.2 per cent below the pre-recession peak. Either the Minister is deceiving the people of Canada or Statistics Canada is deceiving the people of Canada. I know who the public will believe is the one who is being deceitful, and that is the Minister.

NET INCOME OF FARMERS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, let me try to ask a question regarding another aspect of this matter. The total net income of Canadian farmers did not go up but fell—and that is down that way—more than 24 per cent in 1983 as compared to 1982. The value of farm capital declined, and the net incomes realized by Canadian farmers went down. These figures are not adjusted for inflation, but there has been a net decline of 24 per cent, making it the lowest level for farm incomes since 1977. Does that indicate that there is a recovery under way?

Will the Minister advise the House whether or not he will now cancel the sales tax increase of 1 per cent that he set down for the fall? Will the Minister remove the sales tax on fuel products sold to farmers and fishermen, as this Party has requested him to do time after time, so that we can help farmers whose net farm incomes have gone down 24 per cent under the tutelage of this Government?

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to specific groups, and he knows that the farm sector is a sector where incomes tend to fluctuate very substantially, depending on what happens in international markets in particular.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Under this Government, mostly down.

Mr. Lalonde: We have had record sales in terms of agricultural products, wheat, and so on, during the course of the last few years. However, the Hon. Member knows, and the farmers know much better than the Hon. Member, that the prices of agricultural products have not increased significantly. As a matter of fact these prices have gone down in many areas, in many sectors. Obviously this has had an impact on the total income of farmers in particular areas and sectors. The Hon. Member knows this.

The Hon. Member also knows that I have eliminated, for instance, the natural gas and gas liquids tax, which represents an $800 million reduction in terms of taxes by the federal Government in that particular area. As far as the other questions raised by the Hon. Member are concerned, I have already answered them several times in the House.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, Canadian farmers know that the Minister of Agriculture is talking through his big green hat, that that leprechaun has not done a thing for them. Since the Government came back into office four years ago, their total net farm income declined. It did not fluctuate. It did not go up and then down. Net farm income declined 24 per cent. For the third year in a row it declined. Is it fluctuating when it goes in only one direction—down?

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, there are six members of the Minister's Cabinet out attempting to fool the public into believing they have some solutions. I will now ask the Minister, who is in power and who is responsible, and I will ask this Government, what action are you going to take to assist the farmers of Canada who have suffered tremendously as a result of your negligence and incompetence over the last three years?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, thank God the farmers of Canada have better brains than the Hon. Member for St. John's West. They know that they cannot expect the Government—

Mr. Crosbie: I do not wear a hat. Is that why I have no brains? Be specific.

Mr. Lalonde: —to provide them with their income. They know very well that their income will depend on what they will be able to sell on the world market, and at what prices. The Hon. Member knows the steps which the current Minister of Agriculture, and this Government, have taken over the years to help the farmers. There is before a parliamentary committee at the present time amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act, for instance. I could talk about the stabilization programs which this Government has implemented—

Mr. Crosbie: What about the sales tax on fuel products?

Mr. Lalonde: —to help the farmers. And I could talk about the various sector programs, whether in the area of dairy farming or other areas, where we have taken quite significant steps to help the Canadian farmers to the tune of hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars.

The farmers of Canada know that. The Hon. Member does not. The Leader of the Opposition does not. If there is anyone trying to fool the people in this country by travelling around, it is the Leader of the Opposition, who does not bother to show up in this House. He is even more delinquent than the Hon. Member for St. John's West who, at least, pays us the courtesy of a passing visit to the House once in a while.

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—REFERENCE BY MINISTER TO POWER BROKERS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, we all noticed with interest in this morning's Globe and Mail a statement by the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development. He is quoted as saying:

> We're not getting money into the hands of those who need it most . . . the jobless and the working poor.
> There are those in our party—
> Referring to his own Party.
> —who are not really prepared to accept any reform. I'm talking about the power-brokers and vested interests. They like things the way they are. I promise if I'm your leader . . . I'll yank their noses out of the trough.

My question to this Minister who is responsible for economic development is this: who are those power brokers and vested interests which you mention are robbing dollars from the needy today, with so much unemployment in this country? Are they bureaucrats, civil servants, people on contract, or are they those in the Senate?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, that is a despicable mix of quotations taken from a speech.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: The Hon. Member takes one statement when I was talking about social policies and how they can be revised to put more money with those who need it most—perhaps that is not particularly appealing to the Hon. Member—and he combines it with an issue of internal party reform. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, seriously, I expect the Hon. Member to rise in his place and apologize.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Minister read page 5 of this morning's Globe and Mail. I quoted exactly what the Minister said.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRIAL GRANTS SCHEME

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): As the Minister responsible for economic development, you are reported in the same paper as favouring—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member address his remarks to the Chair, please?

Mr. Domm: The Minister is reported in the daily newspapers as being in favour of scrapping the $2.5 billion main industrial grants scheme which has failed to create jobs and the necessary infusion into the economy in order to turn it around to a better position. You said: "I get the feeling it is just not working".

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Domm: My question to the Minister, Mr. Speaker, is this: would the Minister, through you, tell the House what program he is suggesting be put in place to replace his own program which he now considers to be a failure, bogged down in bureaucratic administration?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Again, Mr. Speaker, I suppose if the Hon. Member is going to rely on the daily newspapers for the source of all of his information, I will have to live with that. The fact is I have suggested that for the small and medium-sized sector, for the entrepreneurial sector, there are ways we can attract capital into that sector and reserve the grants for major projects in the non-market sector or for regional development. That was the thrust of my remarks. If the Hon. Member will take the time to read my remarks, I will be happy to send him a copy of them, and a copy of the material I have released during this period.

I feel this is a better approach which we have evolved. My colleague, the Minister responsible for DRIE, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, brought in a program which was a vast improvement, I believe, over the program which existed before. This Party believes in making progress, and during the course of this leadership campaign I would hope you will see many of us coming forward with proposals so that we can build upon our achievements and create even better programs. That is what I was trying to suggest when I made those particular comments.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and it does indeed concern some people at the trough. It concerns a multi-million dollar waste in terms of government spending. Specifically, it concerns the R and D boondoggle which the Minister of Finance announced in his last budget, and which came into effect in January of this year. When the Government announced this program it promised the people of Canada that it would only cost $100 million a year. It also promised that all the money allocated for R and D would, in fact, be spent for R and D. Would the Minister confirm that, instead of this program costing the taxpayers of Canada $100 million, it is likely to cost ten times that amount, $1 billion? Even more seriously, will the Minister confirm that the taxpayers of Canada could end up spending millions of dollars and potentially none of it will end up being spent for R and D?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I would not confirm either.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister will not confirm it because the Minister, like his cabinet colleagues, never likes to admit the truth that they are using the taxpayers' money in a glaringly wasteful way. That is why he will not confirm it.

PAYMENT OF FUNDS IN ADVANCE OF EXPENDITURES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to ask the Minister a more specific question. Will the Minister acknowledge, as an official of the Department of National Revenue has acknowledged, that companies can receive taxpayers' money in advance for research and development even if they never do the research and development? Will the Minister tell the House that the Government's program permits companies to receive millions of dollars and then never do the research? Will he tell the people of Canada that they are about to pay a multi-million dollar restaurant bill for a lunch they may never get?

● (1430)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I would not say that.

Mr. Broadbent: That is all too characteristic of the Minister of Finance. A billion dollars of the taxpayers' money being wasted, and he will not even deal with the specifics in the House.

COMPANIES' INTERNAL ACCOUNTING PRACTICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister will not acknowledge that millions of taxpayers' dollars may go to companies which may not do the research and development, will he deal with another question? Will he confirm that under this program certain large companies or rich individuals, for example Imperial Oil, simply by involving themselves in paper transactions may benefit to the extent of millions of dollars without doing a single bit of R and D? Through a paper transaction they are going to get money from the taxpayers of Canada which ought to go for R and D. Will he at least have the integrity to acknowledge that in the House, or, if it is not true, point it out? Will he stop avoiding the question?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): I am not avoiding the question, Mr. Speaker, I am answering the very specific question the Hon. Member asked, whether I would acknowledge this, admit this, and all that. He asked me whether I will acknowledge the last point, and I will not. I can tell him that if there is evidence of purely paper transactions, like he says, we will certainly investigate the matter and prevent any loophole from existing.

In his first question the Hon. Member started by saying I had promised $100 million of expenditures. I had made a forecast of tax expenditures in my Budget, like we do all the time. If, in the end, the actual tax expenditures are higher than those forecast, I will not complain because it means those measures have been even more effective than we had anticipated, and there was more research and development done in this country than I had foreseen, thanks to that program.

Mr. Broadbent: Not at all.

Mr. Lalonde: I will rejoice about it rather than, like the Hon. Member, going into a kind of hysteria about the particular problem or issue.

Mr. Broadbent: You missed the point.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, in the absences of the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Environment, I would like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. He will know that acid rain continues to be a major environmental threat. A great deal of the acid rain that falls on Canadian lakes, river and forests comes from the United States. He will also know that we have been unable to reach an agreement with the U.S. to control this problem.

The Minister of the Environment has indicated openly that he does not feel it is worth while to continue negotiations with the American administration at the highest level. In light of that, does the Acting Prime Minister feel it is important for the Canadian Government to gain the co-operation of the U.S. administration? If so, have there been any discussions between the Prime Minister and the President of the U.S. since negotiations failed earlier this year? And, finally, is there on the agenda of the Economic Summit the Prime Minister will be attending, anything dealing with acid rain and the importance of Canadian-American relations in dealing with this problem?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, some of the postulates indicated by the question appear to me to be quite true. Government Ministers, the Cabinet in general, have had a very difficult time convincing the Americans of the urgent need to take action on acid rain.

I am not familiar with what my friend purports to be the opinion of the Minister of the Environment, to the effect that he was giving up on convincing the Americans of the wrongness of their ways. Ministers in the Canadian Government never give up when they have a good case, as in this instance. I would be very surprised if my friend, the Minister of the Environment, has said what he is purported to have said. It seems to me that on a number of occasions in the past the Canadian Government has taken lines that, sooner or later, sometimes later, the American Government has come to accept, and this might be another instance.

With respect to the Summit meeting, I read about the subject on the weekend and I have not seen the subject of the Canada-U.S. environment as one of the issues to be debated. My hon. friend will recognize that this is more a bilateral issue than a multilateral one, and consequently it justifiably might not be on the agenda.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER VISIT SOURCES OF POLLUTION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to emphasize the importance that we feel there is to having these negotiations carried on at the highest levels between our Governments. Following the failure to negotiate an agreement with the United States, Canada took a unilateral position to reduce our emissions by 50 per cent by 1994. The Conservative Party strongly endorsed that position and we committed ourselves to that same objective.

Will the Acting Prime Minister ensure that the Minister of the Environment does two things, first, that he visits the two largest single point sources of acid emissions in North America, Inco and Noranda Rouyn, to make sure he knows what is actually going on at those places? Secondly, will he ask the Minister of the Environment to discuss with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister responsible for Treasury Board the importance of continuing research into acid rain? An acid control program depends very much on continued research to measure its effectiveness.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of State for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that my friends, the two Ministers referred to, will read the question with great satisfaction and will be thankful to the Hon. Member for the support he is giving them now.

SPORT

FITNESS CANADA—APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport, who will know that recently he appointed a new director of Fitness Canada. He did that without a national competition or advertising. Can he tell the House why? Is he trying to replace the Minister of Employment and Immigration as the porkbarrel king?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that the Hon. Member has got his information wrong. This person was hired before I was appointed Minister. He was interviewed by officials of the Public Service Commission in accordance with existing regulations. The person who was hired is very competent, and I am very satisfied with the choice made by the Public Service Commission.

OLYMPIC GAMES

CALGARY OLYMPICS—TENDERING PROCEDURES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has a bad memory. The director was appointed on February 20, some two months after the Minister was appointed to his position.

Can I have assurances from the Minister that all contracts affecting employees and/or the supply of goods and services affecting the Calgary Olympics will be let after public advertising and public tender, and there will be no sweetheart deals or patronage deals by the Minister? Can we have that assurance as it affects the holding of the Calgary Olympics?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I am too polite to call the Hon. Member a liar. I will not do so. I would just like to point out that when the Hon. Member starts talking about one thing, he tends to get sidetracked.

First of all, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that the Organizing Committee for the 1988 Olympic Games in Calgary is responsible for awarding contracts for all construction to the appropriate departments, and my Department is not involved at all.

Second, when we signed an agreement with the Organizing Committee for 1988 Olympic Games—perhaps the Hon. Member does not visit his riding often enough or talk very often to his constituents—everyone in Calgary was very pleased with the agreement we signed to the effect that we would be providing $200 million towards the cost of the 1988 Olympic Games. If his brother or sister did not get a contract, let them talk to the people in Calgary!

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY—NEGOTIATIONS WITH JAPANESE MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. There is a feeling that when it comes to jobs for western Canada there is lots of talk from the Liberals but very little action when it counts. While we welcome the Honda plant in Alliston, Ontario, for Ontario workers, the Minister must appreciate that western Canadians would like some of that, too. Can he explain to the House the determining factor for the location of those kinds of automobile plants? Will he confirm that he has been having negotiations with two other Japanese auto makers, Nissan and Toyota, about further expansion of plants in Canada?

● (1440)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the preamble to the Hon. Member's question, I just returned from Manitoba where my colleague, the Minister of Transport, and I just announced a national centre for urban bus transportation. That is $50 million for the Province of Manitoba. Contrary to the Hon. Member's statement, the Liberal Party is very concerned about job creation in western Canada as it is in all parts of Canada.

With regard to the possibility of a Honda announcement, which will not be known until 3.30 this afternoon, we have tried to encourage some of the Japanese firms to look at all parts of Canada, western Canada, Atlantic Canada, as well as Quebec and the Province of Ontario. The key with respect to this potential announcement is the fact that they have a plant in Marysville, Ohio, where they have made about a $1 billion expenditure. The new production system called the "just in time" process, which the automotive industry is adopting all over the world, calls for part suppliers to be within a 75-mile radius of an assembly facility. Of course the bulk of the parts manufacturers is in southern Ontario.

The Hon. Member and all colleagues must remember that this is not Vancouver versus Toronto, Toronto versus Montreal, or Montreal versus Halifax. This is Canada versus the world. We must let these companies decide where the best place is to locate. Our real thrust should be to ensure that they invest in Canada.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Minister should understand that I am not knocking Honda going to southern Ontario. Far from it. We hope to sweep the seats there in the upcoming election.

BRITISH COLUMBIA SUGGESTED AS LOCATION FOR ASSEMBLY PLANT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that Honda had a plant in Marysville, Ohio, and so on. Toyota has a $20 million wheel plant coming up in Delta, B.C. They have a joint assembly plant with GM in Fremont, near San Francisco in California. Would the Minister agree with me that the second biggest market for cars is in California? As he knows, California is south of British Columbia. Would he be prepared to undertake to tell the House that he will go to Toyota and try to push for an assembly plant in British Columbia on the West Coast so that they can be close to the other plants in that area?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like to apologize to the Hon. Member if I gave any indication that I thought he was criticizing the location of the plant in southern Ontario. I know of the Hon. Member's interest, and I understand his sensitivity, as all western Canadians want to have their fair share of the automotive industry because it is a national industry.

To indicate the Government's sincerity with respect to trying to develop the automobile industry in western Canada, the Hon. Member should be aware that the Government provided almost one-half of the financial assistance to get that Toyota plant to locate in the lower mainland of British Columbia, whereas we have not provided any direct financial assistance for this Honda plant which may locate in the Province of Ontario. We are still hopeful that the Toyota company will expand its operation in British Columbia as well as adding to it in terms of assembly. That will be a process for negotiation in the future.

TREASURY BOARD

ANNOUNCED REMOVAL OF OFFICES

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. On Thursday, May 17, just a couple of weeks ago, it was announced that Treasury Board would in fact be leaving its premises in the Bell Canada building and moving to L'Esplanade Laurier. Could the Minister indicate in which month the change is expected?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this is being worked out now. We are presently located in Place Bell Canada. The Bell company wants to occupy the entire building. It is our intention, along with the Department of Finance and the office of the Comptroller General, to make the move as soon as everything can be worked out. I suspect it will be sometime in the fall.

TERMS OF CURRENT LEASE

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, although Bell Canada may be interested in occupying the entire building, the Department has an option in its present lease which could have extended its right to stay there, at a considerable saving to taxpayers. Why did the Department not continue with the option and remain there?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to give my hon. friend greater details about the transaction. I can only confirm that Bell Canada was in a position to take over the entire space, and it is very anxious to do so. I am surprised my hon. friend does not want to encourage co-operation with the private sector on matters like this.

COMMUNICATIONS

LICENCE FEES CHARGED FOR SMALL AIRCRAFT RADIOS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Since radios in small aircraft are required by law, are absolutely essential, and are a safety device, why does the Government charge a licence for these radios?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member's question has been asked in the House before by Members who either pilot small aircraft or are interested in this question. The Hon. Member's question is undoubtedly related to the increase from $20 to $40 for the radio licence fee in aircraft. I believe that licence fee was increased for the first time in some seven years from $20 to $40. It is not outrageous to ask pilots of private aircraft to pay some of the cost of managing the spectrum system, the frequency allocation system in Canada.

The Auditor General of Canada had actually asked my Department to go on a cost recovery basis a lot more quickly than we have done. We have tried to ensure that costs would not increase too quickly. In the case of small aircraft we decided that an increase from $20 to $40 was not an inordinate amount to ask, especially in view of the fact that no increase had been made in about seven years.

REQUEST THAT LICENCE FEE BE REMOVED

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am questioning the advisability of a licence fee at all for small aircraft radios. You do not charge a licence on the jets of Air Canada or CPA. The United States recognizes the radio in small aircraft is part of the aircraft. Is the Government now going to start charging a licence for tires and carburettors on small aircraft? It just does not make sense. It is part of the aircraft.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that Members on the other side of the House have always felt that we should be implementing some of the recommendations of the Auditor General and that we should be operating on a cost recovery basis in some of these areas. There is a cost associated with allocating frequencies to small aircraft. There is a cost associated with managing the spectrum in Canada. We have tried to identify the amount of money which should be charged to each class of operator. We do indeed charge for radio licences for every type of aircraft. We also charge boats and anyone else who is receiving a frequency.

We have just recently issued and gazetted a discussion paper requesting the public at large to have input into how we should be re-allocating these costs.

The radio is an important part for the safety of the pilots and occupants of small aircraft. When comparing the cost of a private aircraft to the annual cost of operating a radio, it seems to me that a $40 annual licence fee is not an exorbitant amount to ask of the owner of a small aircraft.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INCREASE IN OLD AGE PENSIONS—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION AGAINST RENT INCREASES

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and in her absence I direct it to her Parliamentary Secretary. I refer to the proposed increases to the Old Age Security which, of course, I welcome. However, in the past, seniors living in subsidized housing have lost federal increases because of the fact that their rents are scrupulously geared to income. In such cases increases intended by the federal Government to assist individual needy seniors have actually become another form of transfer payments to the provinces. What steps does the Minister intend to take to ensure that the proposed increases do in fact go to needy seniors?

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has mentioned, there are various funds available to help senior citizens. It is the hope that all Members of Parliament will impress upon provincial Governments the desirability to pass the benefits of the amendments to the Old Age Security Act on to the pensioners involved, and that the provincial Governments should not reduce their welfare payments correspondingly to the increases in the GIS, as has been done in the past.

QUEBEC GOVERNMENT'S ATTEMPT TO BUY BP REFINERY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance as one of the senior Cabinet Ministers from the Province of Quebec. Why did the Government of Canada turn down SOQUIP, the Quebec provincial energy corporation, and an individual from the independent petroleum organization, in their attempt to purchase the BP refinery which Petro-Canada acquired during the BP takeover? Subsequently, the Government turned a deaf ear to the approach from the Quebec Government and the independent dealers, and allowed Petro-Canada to tear down that refinery.

● (1450)

Could the Minister explain to the House why the federal Government failed to respond to that request? Could he assure the House that it was not some kind of animosity between the federal Government and the Province of Quebec, which prevented Quebec from expanding its interests in the energy sector?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this question does not relate to my responsibilities as Minister of Finance. I can add that I am not aware of the allegations that the Hon. Member makes. Second, such a decision would have been one taken by Petro-Canada, but the federal Government has not intervened one way or the other in this particular situation as alleged by the Hon. Member.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL TASK FORCE REPORT—FUTURE OF PETROMONT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the senior Minister would not know.

I will direct the second part of my question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It relates to the Petrochemical Task Force. He will be aware that Petromont, the petrochemical group in Montreal, is in very serious difficulty and is considering closing operations by the end of June unless there is assistance forthcoming.

First, would the Minister give us an assurance, because SOQUIP is a partner in that operation, that that is not one of the factors that has contributed to the Government's reluctance to respond to the task force report? Second, could the Minister indicate what the Government is prepared to do to ensure that jobs are protected in that petrochemical industry?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first, I think the Hon. Member should go back and talk to the researcher who wrote that question, because he is about a year and a half behind the times. A year and a half, or two years ago, the Government of Canada committed financial assistance of $25 million to Petromont to ensure that it would still be in existence today. The Government of Canada cannot keep contributing money to companies to ensure that they will succeed. At some point in time the shareholders of those companies must make some very difficult decisions about their own future.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

NEED FOR MUTUAL VERIFIABLE REDUCTION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I believe the Prime Minister just met with Dr. Carl Sagan. The Prime Minister will know that Dr. Sagan made the point to a number of people last night that a mutual verifiable reduction in nuclear weapons is an overwhelming need. Will the Prime Minister tell us what he believes Canada can and should be doing now to achieve a reduction in the number of nuclear weapons on both sides?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have taken a certain number of steps which should indicate to the Hon. Member what I think Canada and others should be doing. In February I proposed in the House of Commons ten points on which I think both East and West could agree at least to begin finding some common ground between them before underscoring the points of disagreement. I think this would get the talks and the relations on a better footing.

Unfortunately, the proposal to have these ten points supported by the House of Commons failed, when the NDP refused to support them. Then it failed because the Tory Party refused to at least permit me to say I had the support for them from that Party. Therefore, I have written on behalf of the Government and the Liberal Party to President Reagan and President Chernenko.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary. It is not an easy question to answer in Question Period.

NUCLEAR FREEZE—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind what the Prime Minister just said, and to the extent that what he just said is true, would the Prime Minister tell us what he thinks Canada and Canadians can do, starting today—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is raising questions that are very difficult to answer in the time available in Question Period.

Mr. Kilgour: Will the Prime Minister tell us where he stands on the principle of a verifiable bilateral nuclear freeze on both sides?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am really disappointed that the subject is not more discussed in the Hon. Member's caucus so that he would know the position of his Party, I believe, and of our Party. It is that a freeze at this point would be in conflict with NATO's two-track decision. However, this is so elementary that I am surprised that the Hon. Member would ask the question.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

DUTY CHARGED ON PINS EXCHANGED AT HOCKEY TOURNAMENT

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister may not feel that this is a very important matter, but I want to raise it because I believe it reflects on the Canadian image.

Recently a hockey team from Bottineau, North Dakota, went to Brandon for a tournament and had nothing to declare at the border. These were young fellows going to a hockey tournament. Suddenly they found that pins that are exchanged in hockey tournaments are liable for duty. Is that Revenue Canada policy, and will the Minister correct that situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the principles that apply to administration of the Income Tax Act also apply to Customs, and in specific situations judgment is very important. I am not familiar with this particular occurrence, but I think the regulations must apply.

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there were duties paid of $71.58, and that we have been castigated in the North Dakota press, and castigated as a country by the United States, will the Minister look into this case?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INVOLVEMENT IN PROPOSED TORONTO DOMED STADIUM PROJECT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Where in the mandate of the Canadian National Railway is the authority for the use of railway lands and railway money to build a domed stadium in Toronto?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not know of that mandate, but there may be some implications to the question that I have not understood. I will take notice of the question.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, has the Government of Canada directed Canadian National Railways to produce plans for a domed stadium as part of its railway mandate? Is that how the Prime Minister believes the railway should operate? Has the Government suggested that the railway should be compensated somehow if it builds a domed stadium in Toronto? Is that how the Government intends to have that program projected as government assistance to Toronto?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making many false presumptions. There is no government policy regarding the domed stadium. I know that many Members on this side would like to see it happen. They would like to see the Government support it. But there has been no decision taken as regards it, either directly or indirectly, through the CNR.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

REGULATION OF TELEVISION CABLE OPERATORS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. As he knows, the CRTC puts very heavy obligations on cable operators and the services that they provide to the community and also regulates them very carefully. Meanwhile, apartment block owners and hotel operators who install satellite antennae services can siphon off that industry. It has the effect of haemorrhaging the income of those cable operators.

Does the Minister have any intention of making certain that the CRTC relaxes the obligations placed on the cable operators, or does he have another plan to make sure that if there is to be competition rather than regulated monopoly in that marketplace, it will be fair for everybody?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's question is very basic and indicates a very clear understanding of the role of the cable companies in Canada. It also indicates a sympathy for the position that we in Canada should want to have a thriving cable industry and a strong broadcasting industry of our own. I would only encourage him to speak to his own House Leader to try to pass Bill C-20, since that Bill does indeed deal with the very problem that the Hon. Member raises. I think it is an important problem. I would very much hope that we would have the co-operation of the Hon. Member's House Leader to get this Bill through as soon as possible.

LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGN—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF ENERGY—REFERENCE TO UKRAINIAN WOMAN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is not related to that last gratuitous statement by the Minister of Communications, but is directed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. Her colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has been quoted with respect to the tradition of the Liberal Party of alternating between English and French leaders. He was quoted as follows:

> We have to select the best person. This (tradition) has to disappear. It's not an honorary post, it's the chief executive officer of the country.
> "If we use a quota system, it will develop that we can, at some point, only have a Ukrainian woman."

● (1500)

Obviously the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources thinks a Ukrainian woman as leader of any political Party is a last resort, the last option. Speaking as the Minister does on behalf of the status of women, will she dissociate herself and her Cabinet colleagues with respect to this point of view expressed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I think, Mr. Speaker, that it was an unfortunate remark, but at the same time it must be taken in total context. I will certainly have a discussion with the Minister as to exactly how that remark was made.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

ENFORCEMENT OF RULES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Communications. He is responsible for the administration of the CRTC. He is allowing that Commission to operate a two-track program, relaxed for the master antenna service and tough on the cable operators. When will he take his job seriously so that everybody operates under the same rules?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has been following the more recent CRTC decisions, he will see the rules that apply to master antenna television systems are the same as those that apply to cable operators. If the Hon. Member believes that the Government of the day and Parliament should have some say in deciding the architecture of the broadcasting system in Canada, including cable, he should once again speak to his House Leader, because Bill C-20 would give the Government of the day, after having tabled directives in the House of Commons, the opportunity to give directives to the CRTC on the over-all architecture of the system. I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. It indicates quite clearly that he, too, believes it is time that parliamentarians, the elected representatives of the people, should have more to say in the design of the architecture of the broadcasting system of Canada. That is our position in the House. We are simply waiting for the Opposition to indicate its willingness to go in that direction.

DSS—TOTAL VALUE OF CONTRACTS BY PROVINCE

Question No. 804—Mr. Towers:

In the fiscal year 1982-83, by province, what was the total monetary value of contracts for goods and services awarded by the Department of Supply and Services to businesses with more than (a) 1,200 employees (b) 200 employees but less than 1,200 (c) one but less than 200 employees?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services):

Province	(a) *Employee Size 1,000 and over $000	(b) Employee Size 200 – 999 $000	(c) Employee Size 1 – 99 $000	Employee Size Unknown $000

DSS—DOLLAR VALUE OF OFFSHORE CONTRACTS

Question No. 805—Mr. Towers:

In the fiscal year 1982-83, did the Department of Supply and Services award any contracts for goods and services offshore and, if so (a) what was the total value of all such contracts (b) did the Department determine if any Canadian suppliers could fulfil such contracts and, if so, approximately how much of the above total could have been supplied by them?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) The total value for all contracts awarded offshore for fiscal year 1982-83 was $616,966,688.

(b) The policy of the federal Government is to support Canadian suppliers when possible. However, there is no record readily available to determine the value of offshore purchases which could have been supplied by Canadian based suppliers.

It should be noted that federal Government contracts awarded to Canadian suppliers during the same period amounted to $4,346,940,000, (more than seven times the value of contracts awarded offshore).

DSS—CONTRACTS FOR GOODS AND SERVICES

Question No. 806—Mr. Towers:

In the fiscal year 1982-83, what was the total monetary value of contracts for goods and services awarded by the Department of Supply and Services (a) in all of Canada (b) by province?

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of Supply and Services):

(a) $4,346,940,000

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-40, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, when we recessed for lunch I had been in the process of making what I think are two important points respecting amendments to the pension plans of Canada. The first concerns people who are vulnerable. They are the ones who as their total income upon retirement have the Old Age Security pension and the guaranteed income supplement. They are very unfortunate because they have to depend also upon government services. When those services break down, they are affected.

It would be a matter of pension reform if in the process the Government introduced the kind of tax system that would allow pensioners to diversify their retirement income. What about putting in the kind of tax amendments which would allow people to save during their lifetime and invest the money in such a way that when they do retire they would have various sources of income, instead of having to depend solely upon the Government OAS and other forms of pension.

My second point concerns workmen's compensation pensions. During the Minister's statement in the House, she was giving the general public the impression that all of these amendments deal with improving the position of pensioners, making them all feel better because they will be doing better under the pension system. That camouflages and disguises a section of this Bill that is really not to the benefit of pensioners, specifically those who are on disability pensions from workmen's compensation boards.

I know it is politically attractive to put the best face on things and make measures look as though everybody will benefit from them. What the Minister has done today is to let Canadians believe that everybody will be benefiting from this legislation. Meanwhile those people receiving income from workmen's compensation boards individually scattered across a Canada will lose income in relation to other pensioners.

I was glad to hear during statements made today support from the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki), together with the applause given to his statement by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni). There are members of the Government who are just as concerned as members of the Opposition about this provision. People who are receiving their income from workmen's compensation boards should not be jeopardized because of this particular amendment which the Government has introduced.

The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) mentioned a letter which the Minister sent to the War Amputees Association. Let me quote from one part of this letter. The Minister wrote:

> To ignore income from sources such as Workmen's Compensation would result in inequitably, higher benefits for pensioners who have those sources of income than for pensioners without such sources.

That is the level of fairness the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) addresses and that is unfortunate. I suppose it is politically expedient to handle the matter that way.

My final point deals with the administration of the system. There are a number of amendments in this Bill which deal with the administration. I know the Minister was sincere in her comments during debate when she said that she wants to improve the administration of the pension scheme and make sure that the mechanisms in government do not create a built-in unfairness for pensioners, that there will be provisions in the administration of the pension system that will make it operate more fairly for all pensioners. I do not minimize the Minister's willingness to do this, her desire to improve things or her honesty in the statements that she has made today. I simply say they will not work because they are outside of her department.

I think all Members realize that, while we are passing provisions today under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and her administration, it is actually the Department of Supply and Services which does the work. They send out the cheques, they make the decisions, and when there are critical decisions affecting the pensions of senior citizens, they are not made as a rule by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. They are not necessarily made by officials in her Ministry. They are frequently made by members of the administration of the Department of Supply and Services.

I have a case in point and I will probably take the balance of the time allocated to me to illustrate the point I am trying to make. The case to which I should like to refer is that of a pensioner in my constituency whose husband had worked for the Government in the armed forces, in the post office and possibly in other government departments for most of his life. The couple had been married for 37.5 years at which point they were legally separated. In negotiating a legal separation the husband agreed that, upon his decease, his wife would receive all the death benefits. It was properly arranged in the lawyer's office and it was an amicable separation. Unfortunately the husband was an alcoholic, yet he realized he had an obligation to his wife. He wanted to look after her even though he was not living with her any longer.

Within a few months thereafter, having moved away and living in a different part of Canada, he signed a new agreement which denied to his spouse all death benefits. I realize the Bill we are discussing today deals with pensions, not with death benefits. In terms of a precise parallel it is not there except in the administration. I want Government Members to understand that we are talking about the administration of these systems through the Department of Supply and Services.

There followed a nightmare of trying to negotiate some sense of justice. Indeed, the newly-named beneficiary was willing to waive her benefits and so announced to the Department of Supply and Services. She requested a form so that she could waive the death benefits. It so happened that the spouse was also the executrix of the will.

I should like to point out some startling facts. First, the Department of Supply and Services never had the courtesy of notifying the executrix of the change in beneficiary. Furthermore, departmental officials never offered an apology, never said that it was negotiable, nor told the executrix that the new beneficiary was willing to waive her benefits. I would like to point out what happened in the negotiations. The change in beneficiary was made six months after the signing of the separation agreement.

I see Mr. Speaker indicating that my time is almost up. I was told that I had 12 minutes remaining after the luncheon break and I do not think I have spoken for 10 of them. In any event, six months after the separation agreement was signed, the man was in the last days of his life; he was an alcoholic. There was no guarantee established that the new beneficiary had received that new status legally. Was he under the influence of alcohol? Had he already deteriorated in his health to the point that he did not know what he was doing? There was no attempt on the part of the Department to establish the legitimacy of that change in beneficiary.

Since my time is coming to an end, I underscore for the Government that earlier in the day I said we could not pass all stages today because there were some amendments which ought to be made that did not concern money; they concern the protection of the spouse under the administration of the Department of Supply and Services. When officials in that Department are engaged in nothing more than protecting their own backsides, in following precise regulations of the Department rather than looking after pensioners and their benefits, we need some very close scrutiny of the regulations. When a change in beneficiary can be so loosely worded as to deny a spouse who had been married for 37.5 years death benefits which were rightly hers, we need to tighten up the Bill so that there is justice for widows and spouses who would otherwise be denied benefits which ought to be accruing to them as a result of this legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, in the nature of comments more than questions, I should like to refer to the Hon. Member's reference to myself as having applauded the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hudecki) today when he made a statement pursuant to Standing Order 21 about the fact that workmen's compensation payments are now included and therefore cause a deduction in the pension. I regret that very much indeed. Now that I am on the point of leaving, I can say that it was one of the few regressive steps ever taken by the Liberal Party. I believe compensation for disability should be ex gratia. It is society's only way to say thank you to veterans of war or victims of horrendous labour accidents. We should say thank you. We should not deduct money from them in any way.

Having said that, I challenge the Hon. Member in terms of another deduction from people who need the money most. We are talking about needy senior citizens to whom I made reference today during Question Period. My question was ably answered by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence. As a Conservative Member, the Hon. Member will know that most provincial governments in Canada are Conservative. If they profess humanity, every time the federal Government, usually a Liberal Government, gives badly needed money to the poorest people of Canada, why do provincial governments consistently take back what we try to give so that those who live in subsidized housing will have their rents geared to income? Here again we must define what is income. It is one of the most horrendous acts perpetrated by provincial governments. The fact is that when we give the $25 increase, the provincial governments will probably take most of it back for rents.

Another point I should like to make was referred to by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp). In his speech he referred to the fact that he and some of his colleagues had long advocated help for immigrant people. Many of the immigrant people who both of us know are generally very old and came to Canada when they were already quite elderly. Because of their age or because of other reasons, they were unable to learn either English or French, the two official languages. In her speech this morning the Minister referred to many of these immigrants who constantly lose out on some of the programs being offered to them.

I urge the Minister and all those who may be listening today that when we propose some kind of relief for immigrant people, we tell them in a way they understand. In this case I am speaking about talking to them in their own language. Perhaps the advertising of these benefits should be done mainly through the so-called ethnic press. We have to reach them. In my own small way I have reached my constituents who speak Italian because I happen to know that language. However many of my constituents speak only Polish, Ukrainian, Greek or whatever and I cannot reach them. Therefore it is the Government's job to reach them in the language they understand. They need to know. It is to their benefit.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, certainly I will respond to the Hon. Member's remarks which related to me. She mentioned that provincial governments tend to siphon the moneys transferred to them. I am not sure that is always the case. However, I urge the Minister to use her powers in negotiating with the provinces to ensure that the people out there receive the full benefit of this increase. It is her obligation to do that between now and when the time of the Government runs out. The Minister of Health has an obligation to make sure that the people receive all of the benefits of this legislation.

I would add to that that in the Province of British Columbia the provincial government tops up incomes over and above the OAS and the GIS. The Province of British Columbia has provision for a GAIN supplement, or a guaranteed annual income supplement, for those who are in need. The provincial Government of British Columbia and I suspect the provincial governments of other provinces are topping up the incomes of those who are already receiving OAS and GIS.

Third, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) mentioned the need for providing services in the language of the immigrants. I would agree that immigrants should not be denied any kind of help that they could possibly get. For example, I know that the father of the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) was once a translator in the courts. He translated for those who spoke only Russian or German and he provided that service through the years without any kind of government legislation obligating him to do so. The courts were generous and open-minded and they provided that service. Many of us in this House who speak more than one language do that in our riding offices all the time. We translate for those who speak German—the best language of all—or for those who speak other languages, and we do that constantly. I agree that we must accommodate those who do not speak either of the two official languages of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there other questions or comments? If there are no further questions or comments, we shall continue debate.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be taking part in this debate today and indeed to be addressing myself to this Bill which on other occasions I have urged the Government to bring before the House just as quickly as possible.

When I was looking at the Bill, I thought of the number of occasions over the past few years on which I have spoken of the need for pension reform. I began to go back through my own files and look at some of the most recent speeches that I made on this subject. Hardly a week has passed in the last two or three years during which I have not in some forum, either here in the House of Commons, before organizations across the country or on radio and television broadcasts, dealt with the subject of pension reform.

I have pointed out time and time again the pressing and urgent need for pension reform. In fact, as I look at this particular Bill and consider the issue, I would say that there is probably no other issue that has taken so much of my time, and I would say rightly so, in the last number of years. That is one of the reasons I am pleased to see this Bill finally come before the House.

While the Bill does not address the issue in any major way, it does deal with one of the components of the issue. It is a partial solution to what I think is the overriding social issue of our time. I went through the Bill and paid a great deal of attention to what the Minister said about it this morning. As well, I listened with great care to other speakers and to the spokesperson for the Conservative Party, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), who followed the Minister in the course of debate. At that time he gave the House the assurance that, as far as this Party was concerned, there would be speedy passage of the Bill. There should be no concern or doubt about that whatsoever.

Of course, there is one thing that we do wish to make very clear. There are items that are dealt with in this Bill that have not been mentioned previously. I am referring to some of the changes to the Act relating to spouses and some of the regulations with regard to pension adjustments that will be made for those who have emigrated to this country in recent years. Those are things which we will need to look at in some detail in committee, at least for a period of time, so that we do not make the mistake we made before of putting through legislation that we must subsequently correct. That has already happened two or three times with regard to various pension measures that needed changes. That happened in 1977 when we changed pensions for immigrants.

The House made mistakes and the Government made mistakes when it introduced the concept of a spouse's allowance. When the Conservative Government was in office in 1979, it took a step to correct at least one of the inequities with regard to the spouse's allowance that needed to be corrected. We were required to readdress legislation that had already been passed. I think it is very important that we take the limited time that will be necessary to look at this Bill in committee in order to ensure that we do not once again make mistakes that will create further inequities with regard to pensions across the country.

The Minister mentioned a couple of other things today to which I wish to allude. She herself mentioned the fact that single elderly persons require more than half the income of married elderly couples in order to get by; that when one spouse dies, the income of the remaining spouse should not be cut in half because the rent, taxes, transportation costs and heating costs are not automatically cut in half. I point that out because the Minister herself raised the matter.

It was on that basis that the parliamentary task force on pension reform brought in a proposal to increase the guaranteed income supplement for single elderly persons to at least two-thirds of the income of married elderly couples. We thought that that would be fair and even more fair than proposals that are now before us. The Government did not see fit to accept that recommendation. I think that recommendation would have done a great deal to alleviate the poverty of those most in need. They would have been the ones who would have been helped most. We in the all-Party Special Committee on Pension Reform felt that that would be the proper way to go.

The Minister has chosen to introduce an amendment which will increase the guaranteed income supplement for single elderly persons by $25 on July 1 and $25 on December 1. Certainly that is better than nothing. However, contrary to what the Minister said this morning, it does not bring the incomes of all of those single persons who are over the age of 65 above the poverty line. She said that it would but it will not. In my own community of Kingston, for example, a city of moderate size, the incomes of single elderly persons will still fall $1,700 short of the poverty line even after these two increases are implemented.

We should try to put the increase in the incomes of elderly persons in proper perspective. This increase will allow the income of a single person over the age of 65 to become $20 a day. When one thinks of the expenditures that must come from that $20, one realizes that we are not talking about any degree of affluence. It is far from affluence. Out of that $20 a day must come money for food, transportation, taxes, health care and a good many other things. When those things are paid for, very little is left over for those things which I like to call things of the soul: concerts, plays and all such other things that many people over the age of 65 must deny themselves.

The Minister said this morning that the Government brought in the increase as soon as the economy permitted it. I take some exception to that. I would like to know why it took so long to find out that the economy permitted it. When I look at some of the Minister's earlier statements I find, for example, that in March of 1981 she said:

> We have often repeated the commitment of this Government to bring all the senior citizens who now receive the supplement over the poverty line.

Two years later, in March, 1983, the Minister repeated her claim and qualified it somewhat. She said:

> The cost of bringing the single pensioners over the poverty line . . . has been approved by the Government as their first social spending—whenever we can afford it.

June, 1984, is obviously when the Government thinks the first social spending should take place. However, the economy permitted in the last two years that $2.1 billion be given to Canadair; it permitted almost $1 billion for de Havilland; it permitted $34 million for Maislin; and it permitted the executives of Crown corporations such as CDIC and de Havilland to receive large bonuses. It permitted all of these things. The economy could afford all of those, but it could not afford the $450 million for increases to the guaranteed income supplement until just before an election. That is interesting. Nevertheless, having said this, there is no question that we want to see the Bill being given speedy passage.

The guaranteed income supplement goes to some 700,000 Canadians, either in part or in full. I would like to take a look at those 700,000 people. When we examine who they are and when we talk about who are the recipients, we look at the question of Canada's elderly poor. When we do that, we can determine very easily who it is we are really talking about. Eighty per cent of the single elderly today who live below the poverty line are women. Four out of every five of the people living below the poverty line in their retirement years—their so-called golden years—are women. Those women did not ask to be put in that position. They contributed throughout their lifetimes to build this country. Today they find themselves in very, very straightened circumstances. Eighty per cent of the elderly poor in Canada today are women. Eighty per cent of the elderly poor in Canada tomorrow will be women, unless we do more than provide band-aid solutions by coming along after the fact to address the problems of those over the age of 65. This is where I take the greatest exception to the present legislation: it does not address the issue of pension reform.

Pension reform cannot be undertaken after the age of 65. It must be addressed while people are still below that age—in their earning years; in their contributing years—from the point of view of being part of the labour force. We cannot wait until those people reach the age of 65 to carry out pension reform. The reason that I dwell on this and have dwelled on it increasingly over the years, is that I and my Party consider pension reform to be one of the major pillars in guaranteeing economic equality to women in this country.

Why do I put this emphasis on how important it is to the women of the country that something be done about it? Quite frankly, unless something substantial is done in the way of pension reform before people get to the age of 65, we will see many more women living below the poverty line 10, 20 and 30 years in the future. Let me say why. There are still—and people often try to dismiss this—almost three million people who work full-time in the home. The great majority of them are women. They are people who, at the present time, do not have access to pension plans in their own right. Many of them are in a marriage contract which could quite conceivably dissolve before they reach the age of 65. What will they have in their own right to allow them to carry on pension payments in the future? If we were to go beyond that and look at others who do not have adequate retirement income, we could focus in on the five million people who are in the paid labour force today, who have no supplemental benefits or access to a pension plan beyond the Canada Pension Plan. They are not in a defined benefit plan and they have no company plan. They have, perhaps, very little money to put into a retirement savings plan. There are five million such people in Canada today. The majority of them, once again, are women. These are people whose average income is probably between $12,000 and $25,000 a year. They could, with proper fiscal encouragement and tax credits, be encouraged to begin to look to their own retirement future. However, at the present time, many of them find it impossible to do so.

It is substantial pension reform which we really need to turn the situation around and to make it possible for older people to face their retirement years with some sense of dignity and self-worth.

I would like to quote from a speech which I gave two years ago this month in Toronto. I said to the group at that time:

> Let us look at the situation of our elderly poor today, and call it what it is, a national disgrace.
> These elderly are treated worse than many whom we convict and condemn for crimes of theft and violence. Yet what did they do wrong? Do they ask to grow old? To outlive friends and relative? To be widowed or divorced? To be denied gainful work by age or inexperience or health? To be written off and forgotten? To live in small and dingy rooms, seldom eating a nourishing and balanced meal?

Sometimes, when I have spoken of these elderly Canadians, most of them women, I have been reminded of the millions around the world far worse off, caught in wars, and in famine. And it is true, very few of our elderly, even those hundreds of thousands of women over 65 who live below the poverty line, actually die from starvation or pestilence. None from war or political terrorism. Ours is a benign, not a wilful neglect.

It is that, above all, which is so shameful about our present pension system and its treatment of the Canadian woman.

I made this speech two years ago. I went on to say:

There was no deliberate intention to bring about the situation as it exists today. It just happened. It happened because we were not sufficiently alert. We weren't interested enough. We didn't know.

● (1540)

No one can pretend to have all the answers to such an immense problem and the causes behind it. But I do know that if we are now to rebuild our pension system we must do so as comprehensively as possible. We must not do it by half measure. We must not overlook, underestimate, or ignore any part of our society.

Especially women.

That is what I have been saying, Sir, for the last two, three and four years on this subject.

I am pleased to see this Bill come before us today. Yes, I am pleased to see the measures which are incorporated. However, I do point out to you, Sir, that it is just a very timid step. It does not begin to address the major problem of pension reform. We here in this House must feel the responsibility to address this problem. We must take it on, because if we do not, Sir, those people who will be in the senior citizen bracket 10, 20 and 30 years down the road will point to us, and rightly so, and say, "When you had the opportunity for action, you failed to take it. You failed us and, particularly, you failed the women of Canada". That kind of condemnation, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to receive, and I will do everything possible to make sure that that does not happen. That is why I say that this Bill does not go nearly far enough. We must have much more than this legislation in the way of pension reform.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a period of ten minutes for questions and comments. As there is no one wanting to put any questions or make any comments, we will continue debate.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to be able to enter into the debate on the Bill before us this afternoon. I have listened to the various speakers who have spoken prior to myself and what concerns me the most is the little regard which Hon. Members opposite have for the actual advantages and benefits of the Bill which is before us today. I do agree with the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and other Hon. Members, that perhaps it would be nice if more could be done in this Bill, or in general, for our senior citizens. I believe that is true. I do not believe there is an Hon. Member in this House who would disagree with that philosophy. I agree with the statement that more should be done for people over the age of 65 and, in particular, women in need. And I agree, as the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands points out, that women do form the majority of those in need over the age of 65. I disagree, however, with the Hon. Members opposite for the little regard they hold for this Bill. I believe this Bill is a very significant step forward and I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and other Hon. Members have suggested that this Bill should contain more benefits, that it should contain more changes, that perhaps it could be meatier, more in respect of the whole question of pension reform. At the same time Hon. Members opposite have criticized the Government for not bringing the Bill forward earlier, in spite of the fact that the provisions which are in the Bill today were mentioned in the Budget of February 15. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands herself, on an Opposition Day or May 10, criticized the Government for not bringing forward these amendments. In spite of the fact that she knew that the first $25 increase would take effect on July 1, she was still pressing the Government to do something. We are now doing something. We have this Bill before us today.

Mr. Blenkarn: Why did it take you so long?

Mr. MacLellan: The New Democratic Party moved a motion that all stages of this Bill be dealt with today. We on this side agreed to that, but members of the Progressive Conservative Party said that they needed more time to study certain aspects of the legislation. If members of the Progressive Conservative Party are sincere in their intention to study positively and quickly all aspects of this Bill, then that point of view is acceptable to us. I do hope they are sincere when they say they do not wish to prolong debate on this Bill and want it to come into effect as soon as possible. It is very important that this Bill go to committee. I hope that the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), who is the health critic for his Party, would agree that, if there are amendments or questions he would like to bring forward in committee, those questions will be dealt with as quickly as possible, not to shorten the time spent on it, but so as not to delay the meetings in committee so that this Bill can receive swift passage.

The Hon. Member for Provencher has mentioned, and I feel rightly so, that there are two Bills before the committee at the present time, Bill C-221, which deals with the therapeutic use of heroin, and Bill C-5 dealing with the question of radiation. He is a member of the steering committee and knows that the dates for hearings on these Bills were agreed to by all members of all Parties in this House. If he wishes to change the order of the hearings before the standing committee and bring Bill C-40 before the committee prior to the other Bills, I will support him in that. However, to say that because these Bills are before the committee the Government is not sincere in dealing with the provisions of this Bill I feel is totally false and really very misleading. I would hope that he will state his preferences in this regard.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands is concerned about the welfare of women in this country and, I feel rightly so. However, I would like to say, in all fairness to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, that she does not have a corner on this concern for women and for the pensioners in this country. We listened to the comments of the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) stating her concern that the provinces pass along to the pensioners in their provinces the benefits of the increases in the guaranteed income supplement, that they not do what they have done in the past and reduce the welfare payments correspondingly. When we increase our GIS payments on July 1, they should not reduce their payments to those very same people by the same amount of $25. I believe it is the duty of all Members of this House of Commons to present to their respective provinces their concern that the provinces pass along the benefit of this GIS increase to the people in those particular provinces. I do not doubt that that will be the case. However, I want to emphasize the importance of Members of Parliament taking a stand on this very important question.

I would like to mention also that when we are talking about women and poverty, Mr. Speaker, we are not only talking about women over the age of 65. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands knows, as we all know, that there is a problem in other areas. The Hon. Member has said that the problem of income for pensioners is probably the most serious social question facing this country today. I do not disagree that it is a serious question. However, there are other serious questions.

Miss MacDonald: I said pension reform.

Mr. MacLellan: Pension reform is one of the most serious questions, that is true. I still disagree with the Hon. Member but I appreciate her clarification. There are other social questions of very great importance to our country at the present time which involve women in their role as single parents, as mothers and wives. There are unemployed women and men without jobs who, along with their children, are living below the poverty line. There is the problem of our young people who have been out of college perhaps for two or three years who have not yet been able to get that first job. Their problem will be compounded as they go through life because, through no fault of their own, they are picking up the stigma of being unemployed. And when jobs do become available, as they will, they will see those jobs offered to those who have just graduated from high school or university because, supposedly, these new graduates have not been unemployed, have not come in contact with what is seen in the minds of some employees as the stigma of unemployment. These are the social problems we face and they must be addressed.

Bill C-40 is an important step for pensioners. Hon. Members opposite say that the Bill should contain more, and at the same time they say we must get it passed as soon as possible. They know that if clauses are added, the Bill will, in their opinion, become more contentious, and the more they will want to debate it, the more they will pick holes in it in committee. I did not arrive here yesterday, Mr. Speaker. I have been here for five years and I have been watching Members opposite. I know the way they work.

This morning the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) said that 55 per cent of Canadian workers do not have pensions. Imagine if we tried to put forward in this Bill an ever so slight requirement for mandating of pensions in the private sector. Imagine the outcry from Members opposite. Imagine how long it would take to deal with this Bill. We want to get these provisions to the people in need, the pensioners, as soon as possible. In order to do that, we have to present a realistic Bill which will be passed, and that is what the Government has done. It does not provide all the answers; no one says it does. But it does provide answers to some very serious problems. We hope Members' opposite realize that and deal with it constructively. I recommend that they do not posture on this very important issue.

It was mentioned by the Hon. Member for York South-Weston that there are relatively new elderly citizens in our country who are not aware of these benefits. This Bill deals with this question in that it would make payments to pensioners retroactive for five years, whereas it is one year at present. This is very significant. Mind you, it may only affect 50 people a year, but it shows the concern of the Minister and of the Government for the well-being of even 50 people when provisions such as this are included in the Bill. In addition, the Minister has agreed to advertise these benefits in the ethnic press so that people of various ethnic origins can read in their own language about the benefits now available to them. Of course, we will then have allegations from the Opposition that the Liberals are trying to advertise what they are doing for the people of Canada. It will not be termed as a benefit to the people concerned; it will be termed as advertising for the Liberal Government. How are you supposed to do what the Opposition asks without being open to unfair allegations such as that?

The question of British pensioners, Mr. Speaker, is of concern to the Opposition as it is to the Minister. Pressure has been put on the British Government. The Minister is now considering following up this question as far as she possibly can.

Miss MacDonald: About time.

Mr. MacLellan: I think the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands knows very well how sincere the Minister is on this question. As Members opposite know, economic dossiers associated with questions of foreign countries are dealt with through the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). The Minister is prepared to bring this question into the economic dossiers through the Department of External Affairs in the hope that it can be resolved. Once again this indicates the consideration the Minister is giving to these very important questions.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands talked about the inability of people over the age of 65 to attend concerts and listen to music and so on. She knows there are areas in this country where concerts are not available except through radio and television. That underlines once again the fact that social issues must be looked at through the perspective of need and that all questions of social need in this country must be considered.

She also mentioned that we are bringing this Bill forward before a federal election. This issue was mentioned in the Budget of February 15. We all know what the polls were like then. They certainly were not as favourable to the governing Party as they are at the present time. Whoever assumed on February 15 that there would be an election this summer would have had to have been a clairvoyant of the highest order. What brings this matter before the House today is the seriousness of the question and the need to do something about pensioners, particularly those numerous pensioners living in poverty. It is a sincere attempt by the Government to do something, and the Government does not have to apologize at all for the way it has dealt with this very important question. It has moved as quickly as it possibly can, and we will see how serious Members opposite are in dealing with the question now that the Bill is before the House.

There are questions which are not going to be resolved. The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) mentioned a concern in his constituency. With all due respect to the Hon. Member, we are not going to put lawyers out of business. There will always be cases where an individual pensioner feels he or she is maligned and will have to seek legal counsel to deal with it. Had we gone into the detail that Members opposite wanted, Mr. Speaker, they would be the ones crying foul and saying that we should split up the Bill, that we should put forward these questions separately and apart from the others. They are doing this with the proposed amendments to the Criminal Code. That is the reason we do not have this Bill before the House at the present time. Members opposite cannot give serious consideration to the very important clauses in that Bill. The Government has moved this legislation with the interest of the Canadian public at heart. The Government feels that this very important question must be dealt with as soon as possible. We hope that Members opposite will agree, not only by their words, but by their actions as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some comments. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. MacLellan) made mention, not only of the position our Party is taking, but also of some of the comments I made earlier this day. I really do not know what else I can tell the Parliamentary Secretary. I know him well and I know he did his Parliamentary Secretary duty today rather than doing his personal duty or expressing his personal feelings. Generally, words said in the House are accepted as factual and we respect that. On behalf of our Party I and other Members of our Party have reiterated that we want speedy passage of this Bill. We have said that we intend to see second reading of this Bill completed today before we conclude Government Orders. I do not think the Parliamentary Secretary is in a position to say that that is delay of any kind. Surely if this Bill is so important, and I agree that it is, he cannot make the point that one day's debate in principle on pensions is in some way delaying the Bill.

I think the problem he faces is that we could have looked at a lot of pension reform if we had started debate on pension reform earlier, even if we had the Bill as early as May 10 when the Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) put the motion before the House to bring the Bill forward. That would have given us almost another month. However, that matter stands.

In terms of the committee, we have also said that the Member is correct when he says that Bill C-5 and Bill C-221 are before the committee. Those Bills have been scheduled. As a member of the steering committee, I say that as soon as the chairman, who is a Liberal, calls the steering committee together, I will be there. We will negotiate. Because of the point he had made, we are willing to schedule extra meetings outside the block system so that that this Bill can be discussed and dealt with. None of those are problems from our point of view. That is not the issue.

Mr. Cullen: What about Committee of the Whole?

Mr. Epp: The Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) says, "What about Committee of the Whole?" That is the whole point. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Health and Welfare mentioned the matter of spouse's allowance. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) mentioned another problem. There is the matter of the War Veterans Act. I think, in all fairness, that Members opposite must keep in mind that when this matter was mentioned in the Minister's budget on February 15 these issues were not in the Bill. In fact, the Hon. Member will notice that only on May 29 when this Bill received first reading were the issues made public. I give that commitment again to the Parliamentary Secretary. We want this Bill through.

Our dilemma as Canadians is that with the Canada Health Act we had the very same experience. We dealt with certain aspects of health. Every one of the witnesses who appeared before the committee wanted to use that legislative opportunity to look at the health system in the future in order to put into place methods and models whereby the health system could be enhanced. We are saying the very same thing about this Bill relative to pensions. When we make this point today we are talking about looking at the pension system and reforms. Unfortunately, time does not allow us. These are the last days of this Parliament. These are the last days of a corrupt, tired, weak Government. We agree with them. Let us get this Bill through and get on with the election.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Provencher for his remarks. In my speech I did not say that by not passing the Bill in all stages today he was stalling it. I said that we hope to proceed with it as quickly as possible. I could understand the delay if there were genuine concerns. Speaking generally, I said that it was our hope that we could deal with these concerns as quickly as possible, as he has reiterated to us they would do. I thank him for his remarks, except for the last remark about the tired Government. That I take very great exception to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there any further questions or comments?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Bank Act—Royal Bank's automobile financing plan. (b) Request for amending financing plan; The Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart)—National Revenue—Barrie hospital fund raising campaign—Refusal of tax deductibility. (b) Request that Minister resign; the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission—Vancouver television station's application to relocate transmission tower.(b)Impact on Public Broadcasting Service.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-40, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, for more than 40 years my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), has been the most eloquent, persistent and passionate exponent and advocate for better treatment for retired Canadians that this country has ever had. Because his advocacy was so frequent, I had seldom spoken on this subject. However, I have tried recently to fill, in a small way, the gap which was created by his illness.

We are discussing today a Bill which proposed to raise the guaranteed income supplement for those fortunate enough to receive it, or I could say those unfortunate enough to need it, by $50 a month in two stages. We in the New Democratic Party will support this proposal because it is a small step in the right direction. I want to make it clear that it is only a very small step. We should not delude ourselves into thinking that it is anything but a very minor, hesitant move in dealing with the problem which is growing in seriousness every year. Canada's pension system is in a shambles today. Hundreds of thousands of retired Canadians now live in poverty. The standard of living of most Canadians drops at retirement. If that is not bad enough, when one spouse dies the survivor usually suffers a further sharp drop in his or her standard of living.

The fact is that more and more Canadians live in poverty every year. It has been estimated that at least one-quarter of all Canadians over 65 years of age live in poverty. Over 60 per cent of single women over 65 years of age live in poverty. That is a national disgrace of which all Canadians ought to be ashamed. Even the retirement years of most of those Canadians who do not live in poverty are characterized by a sharp reduction in their family income by an average of 40 per cent or more.

Why are the incomes of the elderly so low? There are two reasons for that. The first is that Old Age Security and the guaranteed income supplement simply pay too little to meet the basic needs of the elderly. As of April 1 in my City of Winnipeg, a single pensioner receiving both the OAS and GIS would receive $825 a month. That is $291 below the poverty line as calculated by the National Council on Welfare. This Bill proposes to give the poorest of the poor another $50 a month. They will still be almost $250 a month below the poverty line.

Let me digress for a moment and talk about what is happening in most Canadian cities. The vacancy rate for rental accommodation is a fraction of one per cent or 2 per cent at the highest. Rents are going up very sharply every year. Since the cost of accommodation is a very major part of the expenses of retired people, they simply cannot get affordable accommodation. Furthermore, since they must pay more than they can afford to have a decent place to live, they must cut back on other necessities such as the amount and quality of food they eat. They must cut back on their recreational expenses or such things as travelling to visit children and friends. This has happened because too many Canadians believe that pensions should be considered in the same manner as welfare benefits are considered. This is also the attitude of the federal Government and of most provincial governments. There is also the opinion that a pension should be subject to an income or means test.

We in the New Democratic Party believe that an adequate retirement income is the right of all elderly Canadians, regardless of their economic status or wealth. Canadians have accepted that health care is a right and that education, at least up to the high-school level, is a right of all Canadians. We believe that pensions that provide a decent standard of living is the right of all senior citizens in Canada.

Let me review briefly the history of pensions in Canada. The old age pension was first introduced in 1926. Incidentally, it was introduced because in the minority Parliament at that time the Members of Parliament for Winnipeg North Centre and Winnipeg North made it a condition of their support for the Liberal minority Government of Mackenzie King that he introduce an old age pension plan in Canada for the first time. When that pension was introduced in 1926, it was $20 a month at age 70 with a means test. Since that time members of my Party, which was then called the CCF, and now members of the New Democratic Party have advocated the improvement of our pension plans, advocated doing away with the means test and advocated a universal old age pension that is payable to everyone at age 65. We are now saying that pensions should be paid to everyone at age 60.

It was not until 1952 that Old Age Security payments were made universal and paid to all Canadians at age 70. In the 1960s, Parliament enacted for the first time the Canada Pension Plan which was universal for all Canadians who work. They paid into a pension plan an amount based on their earnings so that when they retired at age 65 they qualified for payments under the provisions of that plan. It was acknowledged that it would take at least ten years for that plan to be phased in and allow full benefits to be paid, when it was enacted in the 1960s. Therefore, there was a special temporary program brought forward called the guaranteed income supplement. This was to be made available on an income tested basis for the poorest of Canadians and for the elderly whose wages or salaries were too low. This supplement would help them until the Canada Pension Plan provision came into full force.

It was said at that time that when the Canada Pension Plan was in full operation the GIS would all but disappear because most Canadians who work, of whom there is an increasing percentage, both men and women, would be receiving both the Canada Pension Plan and the Old Age Security benefits. It was thought that these two amounts would be enough and that the GIS payments would be reduced and would probably disappear. That has not happened. The GIS has grown in comparison to the other components of the pension system. In 1967, a single pensioner's guaranteed income supplement equalled just 40 per cent of Old Age Security payments. Now it is more than 100 per cent of Old Age Security. As a result of the increase we are discussing today, it will be raised to 120 per cent of the Old Age Security payment.

The guaranteed income supplement is now a permanent part of the pension system, despite the increasing number of Canadians who are receiving Canada Pension Plan benefits.

Today, in most Canadian cities a single person who has not participated in a private pension plan but who retires with the Canada Pension Plan benefits of $387 a month will still be eligible for partial income supplement payments and will still be living below the poverty line. This sad fact is true because the majority of working Canadians have no pension plan or if they do, it is inadequate.

We have been told that we cannot do better and that many businesses cannot afford to pay more. The fact is that virtually every western European country, including Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Holland and Belgium, has done much better. The universal government pension plans that are based on contributions made at work are providing a pension for the bulk of their people that permits them to live in dignity and comfort.

In discussing pension programs and this proposal in particular, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has said that the Government is doing all that it can. She said that the Government has not done better until now because it could not afford it, but that it is bringing this $50 increase to the GIS now because the Government can now afford it. The Government says we cannot afford to do better for our pensioners, for retired Canadians, who have worked all their lives to make this country the modern, prosperous country it is. This is a Government which says we can afford a tax system where more than 250 Canadians with incomes over $250,000, in the last year for which we have figures, paid no income tax at all. It is a Government which has brought forth a tax system in which corporations with profits of millions of dollars a year can avoid paying taxes or pay very little in taxes.

Let me give you one illustration, Mr. Speaker. In 1982, the Bank of Montreal paid no tax at all. It got a tax credit of over $20 million. We believe that that is not good enough. We believe that Canadians who have reached 65 years of age, and even those who have reached 60 years of age, should be able to retire with a pension if they want to. We believe this country can do, must do, and should do much better for retired citizens than it has done. We intend to continue to fight for federal action to ensure that every elderly Canadian has an income at least equal to the poverty line, that everyone in the paid work force has an opportunity to provide for his or her retirement through a fully portable, fully indexed contributory plan. That means that federal and provincial governments will have to bring in legislation requiring every employer to establish a pension plan and to help fund that pension plan through contributions by the employer and employee jointly, that everyone who has had little or no attachment to the paid work force as a result of child care and like responsibilities should have an equal share of pension credits acquired in the name of his or her contributing spouse through public or private pension plans, and that the federal Government should follow the lead of those provincial governments which have improved portability protection of part-time workers and ensured equal treatment of women and men, those provinces being Saskatchewan and Manitoba which have or have had NDP governments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments.

Mr. Dingwall: I have a comment, Mr. Speaker. Before the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) rises in his place to get involved in this debate, I have a few comments on Bill C-40 in relation to the comments made by the previous speaker.

The increases in the GIS for both July 1, 1984, and December 1984 are certainly ones which are needed. I can agree with the Hon. Member who has just spoken that they are long overdue. We ought to proceed very quickly to make sure that these provisions are passed through all stages and thereby implemented into law.

There is a certain aspect of the increase in the GIS of which we should all take judicial notice. I have raised this matter in the House previously, as has my colleague from Oxford. It concerns the effects of a previous Bill, Bill C-139, which ties in with the content of Bill C-40. Through Bill C-40 we are increasing the GIS. In Bill C-139 we have said that for the purposes of calculating the guaranteed income supplement we are now going to include workmen's compensation. For 10 to 15 years, the tradition in Canada was that when one was filling out his or her card for the GIS, it was not necessary to include any form of income received for compensation. That has been changed by the provisions of Bill C-139. As of today's date, compensation is included. The effects of Bill C-139, which I might add was considered by all Members of Parliament when it was passed some months ago, are to reduce substantially the income of those Canadians who I believe are in need the most.

I have a host of constituents not only in my own riding but in many areas throughout my province who are greatly affected by that measure. Although I welcome this increase in the GIS, I do not think it will compensate those individuals, previously receiving the GIS and the workmen's compensation, because their total income has been reduced substantially. I think of different organizations, such as the Pensioners' Union in the town of Glace Bay under the presidency of Mr. Peter Murray who has gathered a petition and has forwarded it to me in Ottawa. I am waiting for a second petition from the Town of New Waterford and its Senior Citizens' Club with regard to the provisions of Bill C-139. The total income of those Canadians has been reduced substantially as a result. Bill C-139 amends the Income Tax Act in Sections 81, 56, and 110. Those three sections of the Income Tax Act, when taken together collectively, have the effect that I have outlined.

Some individuals in my constituency have experienced reductions. I can think of Cecil Boutelier who has had a $37 a month reduction. Maybe with this $25 and $25 there will be a topping up. There are others who have a had a reduction of $90 a month. As the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has pointed out so well, I do not think one has to wear a political colour to agree or disagree, but the fact is that there have been substantial reductions. I think of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Murray.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I hate to interrupt the Hon. Member. I was prepared to recognize him for debate. He indicated that he was standing up in the ten-minute period allowed for questions and comments. There should be a limit to the time he speaks under that provision. Alternatively, he can be recognized for debate and could continue his remarks.

Mr. Dingwall: Do I have the consent of the House to continue for a short time, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): First I must ask whether there is anyone else who wants to put a question or make a comment to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who, I notice, has now left the House. I see the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). Is the Hon. Member rising for a question or a comment?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment and then ask a question, if the Hon. Member returns. I find it difficult to understand the comment of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton East-Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). There is no need to convert people on this side of the House in connection with classifying workmen's compensation as wages. Almost everyone of our speakers this morning, including myself, pointed out that this money is not wages, it is compensation, particularly for permanent partial disability and permanent total disability. It is not wages in any sense. The man lost part of his body for which he is compensated, and it should not be considered as wages. The Hon. Member does not have to convert us over here. I suggest that he should take the matter before his own caucus. That is where it originated and that is where it was passed.

I see the Hon. Member has not returned to the Chamber. He has had considerable experience with compensation. I was about to ask him whether or not he agreed with my interpretation of compensation, namely, that compensation for a permanent partial disability and for a permanent total disability is not wages. It is compensation because part of the body has been lost. We cannot emphasize that too much.

In answering questions the other day, the Hon. Minister showed that she just did not understand what compensation was. She included ordinary compensation as wages, which was right, but as a pension it is not wages and should not be considered in that category.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It would appear that the response to that comment will have to wait for another occasion. For continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall).

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have agreed with the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) that as he was to follow me I would try to be brief. Since I have been given the luxury of speaking at this point in time on Bill C-40, I should like to congratulate the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacLellan) for his diligence in ensuring that this piece of legislation was brought before the House of Commons. I think it will benefit greatly those individuals who are in desperate need.

Bill C-40 is a good Bill. I will vote for it wholeheartedly. I am sure Hon. Members on both sides will do likewise. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) said that we have not done anything in our own caucus. Unfortunately he is not a member of our caucus, so he does not know.

Mr. Taylor: Fortunately.

Mr. Dingwall: The door is open for Hon. Members if they wish to attend.

Mr. Taylor: No thank you.

Mr. Dingwall: I have a large number of constituents who have received substantial reductions in the moneys they previously received from the Government of Canada as a result of workmen's compensation being included in the calculation for the purposes of GIS. I could talk about Cecil Boutelier and a $37.77 reduction; Mrs. Michael Murray and her $134 reduction; Russell McLean and his $46 per month reduction; Mr. and Mrs. Bill Pittman and their $90 per month reduction. All those cases are ones of hardship and ought to be rectified.

I have listened to the Hon. Member for Bow River on a variety of topics in the House. In answer to his question, Hon. Members on this side of the House have echoed the same sentiments I am expressing this afternoon. However, I tell him and all Hon. Members opposite that when Bill C-139 was passed in the House, not one Member was on his feet arguing its provisions as they affected senior citizens and those in receipt of the guaranteed income supplement because it was a very technical inclusion. We could talk about Section 81(1)(h) as it affects Section 56(1)(v) and how it affects Section 110(1)(f)(ii). There are many sections tied into the Income Tax Act which Hon. Members did not recognize until notices were sent out to the individuals that compensation was to be included for the purposes of GIS. As a Member of Parliament representing such individuals in my constituency, I do not like the provisions of the Bill. I want to have them changed. I am seeking the support not only of Hon. Members opposite but of Hon. Members on this side as well.

Miss MacDonald: Come to committee and you will get your chance.

Mr. Dingwall: I am glad to hear the offer of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). I will follow it up with her. It is unjust that individuals in the greatest need can be hoodwinked by a piece of technical legislation which has been missed by all Members of Parliament. It was only raised in the House of Commons when individuals affected by the legislation filled out for the very first time papers as they had done for the last 10 years or 12 years. The situation is a serious one which all Hon. Members should look at realistically and carefully. We ought to do something about it.

There are Hon. Members on this side of the House, many of whom I cannot speak for, who talk about the concerns of senior citizens and those in greatest need. Likewise there are those on the opposite side of the House. Now is the time to put their money where their mouth is. We can change this injustice if there is the will in the House, an injustice which is affecting individuals all across the country.

I have named a few people, but I could talk about Mabel MacNeil of Reserve Mines, Dick Buckland of Glace Bay, Shirley Reid of Donkin, John MacNeil of New Waterford, David Maxwell of Sydney Mines and, as I mentioned, Peter Murray, President of the Senior Citizens' Club of Glace Bay. This issue should not be tossed aside lightly. Any Minister or any representative of any Minister who wishes to toss it aside is doing a great injustice to individuals in the greatest of need.

The Hon. Member for Oxford was kind enough to allow me to make these comments. He now wishes to speak, therefore, I will say in conclusion that I am hopeful that we can get together either with the Minister privately or in committee to try to change what I believe is an injustice. I want the record to show that the Hon. Member for Oxford has been very helpful in bringing this issue to the floor of the House of Commons. With some political will on that side and on this side, I am confident we will resolve it in favour of those individuals who have been dealt an injustice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions or comments.

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether there are any more of his constituents whom he did not name.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I have a very long list of names. I know the Hon. Member is not trying to be disrespectful to the individuals I have mentioned, as he is an honourable gentleman. The individuals I have mentioned have suffered a great loss. I do not want to minimize their loss, nor do I believe that he wishes to minimize their loss. In answer to his question, there is a great number of individuals whom I have not named. The ones to whom I have referred are some of the more glaring cases who volunteered to allow me to use their particular circumstances as examples for the attention of bureaucrats and politicians. There are a great many individuals in that circumstance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no further questions or comments, for continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday).

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, indeed it is a pleasure to follow the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). The issue before us today is not really a small one even though the number of people affected is a relatively small one. However, today could well be a momentous day in the life of the Parliament of Canada.

I have long awaited the time when there would be the kind of exchange that we have seen in the House today. In the past year and a half, not only have we been able to ask questions and give responses and comments following major presentations of 20 minutes or 40 minutes, a practice which I think enhances debate, but we now have an example of back-benchers being able and prepared to tell us what they really believe about an issue.

I give the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond full marks for having had the courage and the conviction to say what he believed should be said regarding a Bill that was handicapping some of the citizens in his riding as well as citizens in all ridings across Canada. I look forward to the time when there will be more debates like this, and I submit that if we had more debates of this nature and if back-benchers felt that they could say what they should say more often, we would have a much better attendance here in the House. People would be interested in hearing what others had to say if they thought that the others were speaking from their hearts, the way the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond just spoke.

I would like to point out that I would not be standing in the House of Commons this afternoon if it were not for the stubbornness and obstinacy of either the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) or her colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Many Hon. Members of the House, including the Hon. Member who just spoke, have brought to their attention the fact that there is a real problem with Bill C-139 as it affects old age pensioners who receive GIS.

Today we are debating Bill C-40, a Bill which, according to the Minister responsible, is intended to be of assistance to about 25,000 potential GIS recipients. However, this morning she forgot to tell us that a few months ago when Bill C-139 was before the House, benefits were taken away to a greater or lesser extent from another 25,000 GIS recipients. That is what the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond was talking about and that is the matter to which I would like to devote my few minutes this afternoon.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), who is the Party health critic, and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), have both explained very well and in some detail our concerns with regard to Bill C-40. As we have all acknowledged, all of us in the House are favourably disposed to this Bill itself. There is nothing particularly wrong with it, although some small points could be improved upon. However, we feel that as a substantive piece of legislation on pensions, this Bill is inadequate. Any criticism we have is directed to the inadequacy of this Bill and not because of a desire on our part to hold up the Bill. As the Hon. Member for Provencher has indicated, we had intended to see this Bill put through second reading this afternoon.

When I was listening to the debate this morning, I was very pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) rise and speak in no uncertain terms about the problem as he saw it with Bill C-40 and its attempt to help GIS recipients. He mentioned that the Government that brought in Bill C-40 is the same Government that harmed another 25,000 people through Bill C-139 a few months ago.

The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) touched upon the matter of the adverse effect of taking into account workers' compensation benefits on certain GIS recipients. As well, the Hon. Member for Beaches looked at the issue from the point of view of the work of the Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped which met for three years and reported by way of a document entitled "Obstacles". As he said this morning, we received a fairly sympathetic hearing from the Government, which agreed with the committee's feeling that there is room for a great deal of help for the disabled and the handicapped people of the country. The Government appeared to be sympathetic, and then, a few months later, it turned around and came up with Bill C-139, which took away benefits from those same handicapped people. Now, three and a half months after the Government told us it was going to do it, it is bringing in this simple piece of legislation, which offers some benefits to those single pensioners who are in need of extra help by way of GIS.

There is a feeling among Members of all three Parties that there is a deficiency in this Bill because of the way in which it fails to coincide with Bill C-139. As the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond suggested, I too would hope that when we get to committee on this Bill, we could prevail upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare to deal with this deficiency.

I suspect that it was not the fault of the Minister of National Health and Welfare that appropriate changes were not made earlier. I suspect that it was the fault of her colleague, the Minister of Finance, who does not seem to understand the difference between a compensation benefit that is paid to a worker who has been injured and remuneration for services rendered. This difference was well explained by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River, this morning and again this afternoon.

I listened very carefully to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacLellan) who spoke a few moments ago, and I believe that he spoke very well. I have come to respect that Hon. Member because he and I were the parliamentary representatives of a recent delegation to the World Health Organization in Geneva. We got to know each other better at that time and I have a great deal of respect for him. For the benefit of those who might not be aware of it, WHO is the World Health Organization, an organization which holds an annual assembly in Geneva which is attended by representatives from some 150 countries who discuss issues of health care that are of general interest to all represented countries.

While at that assembly, the Parliamentary Secretary and I got to know each other to the point where I think we gained mutual respect. As the Hon. Member for Provencher said a few moments ago, he is an honourable Member and a sincere person. I frankly feel sorry for him because he had to stand up and apologize for his Government. In his speech, and I am practically quoting him, he said that the Government did not need to apologize for Bill C-40. He is quite correct. The Government asked him to do the apologizing on its behalf. I think it is unfortunate that he was placed in that position since he is such an Hon. Member and a man of integrity and sincerity. I feel quite certain that he would agree with the feelings of his colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, that a change should be made with respect to the moneys that are received by pensioners who are single and in need of extra assistance.

I would like to say a few words to elaborate on what my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River, said so eloquently this morning. I am talking about the failure of the Government to understand the difference between compensation payments and remuneration. As far as I know, this issue first came to light on December 28 last when the secretary in my constituency office received either a phone call or a letter from a constituent of mine who was upset because he was being asked for the first time to report workers' compensation benefits when calculating whether or not he would be entitled to receive GIS benefits.

My secretary, Mrs. Whittingham, was not aware of this problem. She made literally dozens of phone calls to the OAS offices in the London and Toronto districts and to the Revenue Canada offices in the London and Toronto districts. After making these dozens of phone calls, she was still unable to find a single person who knew anything about this matter. Finally, after a couple of weeks, information began to trickle back which indicated that there had indeed been a directive issued in July, 1983, from Revenue Canada that the Workmen's Compensation Board payments were now considered taxable. Some officials were aware of that directive, but officials in other areas were not. My constituency office worked on that problem for about a month.

About four days before I raised the matter in the House, my colleague opposite, the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Burghardt) asked a question on this matter and received an answer that was quite insignificant. On January 31, I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question on this matter in the House. I received an answer that had been designed to answer another question. I do not fault the Minister personally, but it was obvious that even she had not been briefed by her officials regarding what was actually happening to these 25,000 people who were recipients of GIS and WCB benefits and would suffer a reduction in income.

On January 31, I asked a supplementary question of the Secretary of State. He as well was completely unaware of the issue, as was evidenced by the answer he gave. A few days ago, I again asked a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She was obviously embarrassed to answer the question. She apologized to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for answering in a way which would not please him. However, she had obviously been instructed by the Minister of Finance on how to answer the question and that she was to consider a compensation benefit through the Workmen's Compensation Board as being income that should be reported in the calculation of GIS benefits.

I would like to cite an example. It is one which I had in mind this morning and which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River used as an example. However, it bears repeating because it is the kind of example that convinces a person that the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, the Hon. Member for Bow River and others are right. I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare will see that. Moreover, I hope that the Minister of Finance will see it.

Let us say that a person is working in a plant and, through an accident, losses both eyes. That is very serious and will probably mean that that person will be disabled for the rest of his life as far as being employable is concerned. If our medical technology were sufficiently good, we would be able to replace those two eyes with two workable eyes. Or, if a worker lost a leg we could replace that leg. That day may come. But I would submit that if we were able to replace those two eyes, surely we would not charge that as income to the patient in the calculation of GIS benefits on a subsequent date. Surely we would not say that the replacement of those two eyes should be taken into account when that person is being assessed for GIS benefits. That is exactly what Bill C-139 did, and it has been overlooked again in Bill C-40.

The kind of benefits which we pay to a worker when we cannot replace the two eyes is known as compensation. That was the term used by my colleague from Bow River this morning. It is compensation. It is not remuneration, nor is it income. Society has no other way to recompense that person other than through a cash payment. We are not able to give two new eyes to that person. Therefore, in lieu of two eyes, that patient is given a sum of money. That is the next best thing we can do. That is compensation, not income from a disability plan to which a person may have paid premiums. It is not like income from the Canada Pension Plan into which that person has paid premiums. It is entirely different. That compensation attempts to provide the best which society can provide in this day and age—a recompense to that person for the loss of two eyes. That does not bring that person up to the level of people who have two eyes with which to see. That is what annoys me about the attitude of the Government vis-à-vis the handicapped. It has failed to recognize that handicapped people must be brought up to the level of the rest of us who are able-bodied. The Government is assuming that because a person gets a compensation payment for the loss of two eyes, somehow that person has received something extra which should be compared with a benefit that the rest of us who are able-bodied may receive. It does not make sense.

I would like to speak in the strongest terms to supplement what was said earlier by my colleague opposite, by my colleague from the NDP, the Hon. Member for Beaches, by my colleague from Bow River and by the Hon. Member for London West who asked a question of the Minister on January 27, as well as other Members in the House who have asked for the same approach.

I would hope that with support coming from all sides of the House, something will be done by way of Bill C-40, or by some other mechanism which the Government House Leader might devise. We must not deprive those 25,000 Canadians who are eligible for GIS solely because they are recipients of a compensation payment in lieu of the restoration of their limbs, eyes, nervous system or whatever, which we cannot do physically. The best we can do is to give them a sum of money. Surely that should not be taken into account in calculating GIS benefits. I trust that that will be heeded by the Minister.

I see that the Parliamentary Secretary is in the House. He did not address that question in his comments this afternoon. I thought he might have done it inasmuch as it was raised two or three times prior to his presentation. Obviously it meant that he did not have an answer to the question. I hope he will go back to the Minister, who I know is concerned about people, and impress upon her the need to do something about this.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that if you sought the consent of the House, we could call it five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposal put forward by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans). Is it agreed that we proceed to the next order of business?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore, it being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all orders and items preceding item 106 stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Public Service Employment Act

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING STAFF OF MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan) moved that Bill C-215, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act (staff of Members of the House of Commons), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it would be proper for me to indicate that while my name is on the Bill, the work which has been done in putting the Bill together has been done by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Blaker) who is also the Hon. Member for Lachine. However, as a Parliamentary Secretary I am informed that he cannot be the author of a Bill. Therefore, I will say a few words and will move a motion at the end of my remarks.

I am concerned about the people who work for Members of Parliament. They have given faithful service, are well-acquainted with the operations of Government, have worked long hours, and have gained a great understanding of the various departments and what government is all about. But, for one reason or another, when the Member of Parliament for whom they work ceases to be a Member at the end of a particular term or at any particular time when the Member is defeated or when he decides not to run in the election, they are out of a job. I am told that in every Parliament approximately 100 Members cease to be Members of Parliament for one reason or another. What this Bill says is that after approximately three years of service, these people should have the same priorities as a public servant. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that these priorities, in terms of moving into the civil service, are held by people working in Minister's offices and so on. We feel that those persons who work hard for Members of Parliament should have that same privilege after three years of service. I, therefore, feel this Bill is very important. I understand there is some disposition on all sides to let this legislation go forward. There may be some amendments which will be required but, certainly, we hope that this Bill will be accepted by all Parties.

In view of the fact that I was not the author of the Bill, although I was certainly involved in and very much in favour of it, and in view of the fact that the author of the Bill is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade, the Hon. Member for Lachine, I would ask for unanimous agreement of the House to allow the Parliamentary Secretary to speak for the next few minutes in my place so that the balance of my time would be given over to him. I believe that would require unanimous consent, but if that is possible I believe it would give a better understanding of what is in the Bill and would not necessitate the Hon. Member's speaking at a later date. If it is possible, I would yield the floor, as is common in the United States, to the Hon. Member, with unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The House has heard the proposal made by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae). The Chair should observe that the Hon. Member is recommending a procedure which is followed in the American Congress. This is the House of Commons. However, by unanimous consent the House is master of its procedure. Does the House agree to allow the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Blaker) to speak at this time?

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I believe it should go on the record that all things which happen in the Congress to the south of us are not always precedents we follow here. However, having said that, I would hope that when we form the next Government, Hon. Members opposite will be as willing to accept that our Parliamentary Secretaries speak in support of their Bills as we are prepared to consider allowing their Parliamentary Secretary to speak on this occasion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair gathers that there is unanimous consent. Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rod Blaker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my gratitude to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) who has very kindly presented this Bill in his name, because under the procedures of the House of Commons, a Parliamentary Secretary cannot do so. I also wish to extend my thanks to the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), who has recognized my difficulty in that I could not speak on this Bill without the consent of the House. It is my intention to be very brief and to indicate simply to Hon. Members of Parliament—and I see the Hon. Member from Hastings has just arrived, and I presume he will be speaking on this Bill as well—that this is a relatively simple proposition.

Certain staff members of the House of Commons now have the right in law to be considered—and I say "considered" not "hired"—by the Public Service of Canada in the event they are judged by the Public Service to qualify for a position. It is one of the benefits they might receive. However, if they, for some reason, do not appear to qualify in the eyes of the Public Service of Canada then they would not have an opportunity to be hired for a position. I believe the easiest way to explain this is by referring to the Explanatory Notes in this Bill. I would like to ask Hon. Members to consider the following wording:

> The purpose of this Bill is to provide equitable treatment to the staff of Members of the House of Commons—

And I would point out that this refers to all Members of the House of Commons—

> —(including the staff of the Speaker of the House of Commons) when their employment is lost as a result of Members ceasing to be Members, by according them the same priority to be appointed to the Public Service that employees in the following offices now enjoy:—

In a moment, Mr. Speaker, I will refer to staff members of Members of Parliament and how they compare to staff members of certain people in our House of Commons who do have the qualifications, rights and privileges to be considered for employment by the Public Service. I say again "considered". It does not mean a guarantee of employment.

May I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of all Hon. Members now sitting in the House of Commons to a very remarkable situation. The staff members of the Speaker of the House of Commons are not entitled to be considered for employment by the Public Service. I believe it is astounding that people who have given their time and service for three years and more to Members of Parliament or to the Speaker of the House of Commons cannot be considered to have a preferential right of consideration—and I underline the word "consideration"—so that if, as and when a Member of Parliament decides to leave, dies or fails to be re-elected—and that includes the Speaker of this House—they are not entitled to be considered as possible employees of the Public Service.

What we have, however, is a situation in which staff members of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) and, I believe, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), together with staff members of Cabinet Ministers, if they have completed a term of three years or more, are entitled to be considered, and again I use the word "considered", by the Public Service for purposes of employment. It does not mean that they are given a guarantee to be hired. It simply means that if a position opens up, these people are given preferential consideration within the Public Service.

I believe that each and every one of the Members of the House of Commons who is sitting here today knows that as much as we put our loyalty, our care, our concern and our commitment to the service of Canada, so, too, do our staff. That is what we are talking about. That is all there is to it.

Hon. Members on both sides have no right to be considered as automatic, potential or specialized employees of the Public Service. All I am suggesting is that the men and women who work for us and have done so for a period of at least three years should be given consideration for employment by the Public Service. The proper definition of that expression is that they must first qualify in the view of the Public Service. Second, if they do qualify, they should be given that small extra advantage whereby they might be appointed without competition. It would still remain the right of the Public Service to say, no, we do not need that particular type of qualification, that particular personality, or those particular abilities. However, I believe all sides, whether it be the Official Opposition, the New Democratic Party, or the Liberal Party, ought to recognize the kind of tremendous commitment these people have given to Members of Parliament and to the House of Commons, and we ought to say, yes, it should be possible for them to be considered for employment by the Public Service. That privilege is extended to members of the staff of the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition and the Cabinet Ministers. However, that privilege is not—as an example of what I would regard as governmental idiocy—extended to the staff of the Speaker of the House of Commons, which is a remarkable concept.

Simply put, the Bill would allow members of staff who have three years of service to be in a position where, should an opening arise—and I am rather careful about my language in that regard—should an opening arise in the Public Service for which these people would be qualified, as determined and judged by the Public Service itself, they would be permitted to enter the Public Service without benefit of an examination. That is all that is being asked. This is the same consideration given to the staff of the Prime Minister, the Cabinet and the Leader of the Opposition.

Before presenting this Private Members' Bill this afternoon I have had the opportunity of speaking to the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis) and the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). I do not know their decision, individually or on behalf of their Parties, but I believe there is a hesitancy on the part of the Government, which I find surprising. I have beside me the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Foster) and it may be that we will be able to get this Bill through all stages this afternoon if there is all-Party agreement. It may be that we could look to a motion for reference of this Bill to an all-Party committee. However, I hope and think that I have explained decently the kind of moral obligation we owe, not to our personal secretaries and staff, but to all the people who join elected Members to serve us with such loyalty and effort. We should try to give them a chance.

I should explain what the numbers are. They are so pitifully small that I wonder why anyone might object to this Bill. Basically, at every election we lose about 100 Members of Parliament out of 282. That means a staff component of about 300 people. The administration of the House of Commons tells me that we could not reasonably expect to see many more than 100 people who might not find a job again in the House of Commons. Therefore, I think we are looking at anywhere between 35 and 50 staff members of the House of Commons, once every four years, who may not have found a job but who can use their experience for the benefit of Canada in the Public Service. We are talking about piddling numbers of people, but we are also talking about recognizing their loyalty and their commitment, and their continuing ability to serve Canada.

I have asked, Mr. Speaker, that the officers at the Table have the forms ready for putting the Bill through all stages. I do not know the situation on either side of the House, whether this might be acceptable. If that does not work, then possibly we could send the subject matter of the Bill to committee. But again I say, and I think this is perhaps typical of me, that this is not a partisan Bill. This is a Bill to take care of people who have cared for us for many years.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the sponsor of this Bill has very clearly and concisely set out exactly what it does. He has given the details, and there is no need for me to repeat them. I want to say that the Committee on Management and Members' Services, of which I am a member, has recommended to the Speaker in the past month and a half a number of changes in the status of our staff. Those changes include the subject matter of this Bill. This is another way that some of us felt we might help to promote the subject matter of Bill C-215. That committee is not really a very partisan committee and Members on all sides felt that it was a worth-while topic indeed and something that should be done for our staff.

The House of Commons is created for Members of Parliament. Everything that happens around here, from the service provided by the ladies and gentlemen who take down our every word, to that given by the staff in the restaurants, the bus drivers, elevator operators and messengers, clerks, everything that is done here, is for the benefit of Members of Parliament. Yet I doubt there is a Member in this House who would not concede that without his staff he is not really capable of doing very much on his own. They are the ones that make it work. While some of us might be impresarios or prima donnas, they are the ones who do the daily dog work, put in the long hours for what is really minimal pay by comparison to their counterparts in other parts of the Public Service. They are perhaps not badly paid by comparison to the real world, but given the pay scale in the Public Service, they are not overpaid. What is so very important is that they really do not have much in the way of security. They are personal staff. I happen to have been extremely fortunate in that one member of my staff has been with me since the day I started on the Hill. I shudder to think sometimes how I would run my office without her. I know that many of the suggestions made in the past few months by the committee to the Speaker reflect the gratitude to the staff which I am expressing now.

I suppose it would be too partisan of me to agree that the Hon. Member's figures are almost exactly right, and that truly, come the next election, there may well be 100 less Liberals re-elected and, therefore, 300 members of Liberal staff who are looking for jobs. You will recall those were his numbers, not mine, Mr. Speaker. I only put a lable on them to make it just a little bit more accurate. However, I will not add that connotation to it.

Mr. Blaker: A point of order.

Mr. Ellis: You do not have a point of order, and you know it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on a point of order, I hope.

Mr. Blaker: I am not sure if this is acceptable under our rules, but I felt I had been misquoted and I want to explain something. I did not refer to any number of staff who might become unemployed as a result of changes of Liberal Members of Parliament. I indicated quite clearly that in every election the House of Commons has a change of approximately 100 Members. That applies to all sides, not any particular political Party.

Mr. Ellis: I merely made the clarification, Mr. Speaker. I am sure you heard me clearly. I just clarified where the 100 Members were going to come from in the next election. However, the Hon. Member has researched his Bill reasonably well and I do not think he has anyone specific in mind as to staff members on that side of the House.

Our Party is quite prepared to support this Bill. I have already indicated that this subject matter has been put before the Speaker in the past few months. I see no reason to stand in my place for 10 minutes, as one could, extolling the virtues of the Bill. If the Member can get the support of his Party to put the Bill through this afternoon, we are prepared to support it.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation at all in indicating to both the Liberals and the Conservatives that I have discussed this question with my Leader. We will look kindly upon hiring their staffs after the next election.

It is true that the staff of Members of Parliament are probably the most exploited group of workers in the country. They work long hours. They bring a lot of energy and dedication to the job. In the main, they are highly non partisan. In fact, it has been said to me many times that when a person works for a Member of Parliament the political affiliation is very rarely a factor on the Hill. Certainly that has been my experience with my staff.

As far as I am concerned, this particular Bill is a bare bones measure to give some protection to people who work for Members of Parliament. As some Members who are present in the House know, I would go much further than this. I would give them the right to organize and form a trade union to give them the kind of protection which every other worker in the country enjoys, and which we deny to the people who work for us. Having said that, I do not want to spend any more time on this. I would be quite prepared to give the unanimous consent of my Party to deal with this Bill this afternoon prior to the adjournment hour.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed feelings that I rise to discuss Bill C-215. I think the purpose of the Bill is admirable. I would like to join with the people who preceded me in stating that Members of Parliament owe a great deal to their staffs. We should be very concerned and interested in allowing for serious study and consideration of matters such as job security and career opportunities within the Public Service of Canada. However, I do think that the Bill requires some study. I would like to discuss some of the matters at hand rather than just say that I agree with it. I would like to look at the Bill a little more attentively and possibly agree with others that a committee of the House should look at it seriously with a view to recommending certain amendments to the Public Service Employment Act so as to include some of our personnel on the Hill.

Who among us could perform alone all the duties which our constituents and the House of Commons require of Members of Parliament and Senators? I have had the very good fortune of having excellent staff in the 11 years that I have been here. In many instances they have been the ones who have supplied me with the needed support, information and professional assistance to do a job which is, as all of us know, demanding and sometimes very tiring. We could not do it without the assistance of these dedicated people, both here in Ottawa and in our ridings. The riding assistants are very special to us. They play an essential role for the Members of Parliament in bringing forth for day to day consideration the problems and difficulties which constituents bring to our attention regularly.

Being on the staff of a Member of Parliament is indeed a demanding and time consuming job. In my office my assistants have no time limits. I have seen them work weekends, in the evening, and early in the mornings. There is no doubt in my mind that there is a great case to be made for the eventual possibility of these people finding themselves without a job come an election or another situation where a Member of Parliament resigns or, for health reasons he or she, must withdraw.

I would like now to review the contents of Bill C-215. The Bill proposes to amend the Public Service Employment Act to give the employees in our offices some of the privileges accorded to the staff of Ministers of the Crown. Of course, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) is included in this category. Section 37 states:

(1) A Minister may appoint his Excecutive Assistant and other persons required in his office.

(2) A person who is employed in the office of a Minister ceases to be so employed thirty days after the person holding the position of such Minister ceases to hold that position.

(3) A person who

(a) was an employee immediately before he became employed in the office of a Minister, or

(b) during the time that he was employed in the office of a Minister, qualified for appointment under this Act to the Public Service . . .

(4) A person who for at least three years has been employed as Executive Assistant, Special Assistant or Private Secretary to a Minister, or in any of those capacities successively, is entitled, for a period of one year from the day on which he ceases to be so employed, to be appointed without competition and, subject to section 30 and subsection (3) of this section, in priority to all other persons to a position in the Public Service, at a level at least equivalent to the level of private secretary to a deputy head, for which in the opinion of the Commission he is qualified.

I read that in extenso because it is interesting to look at the annual report of the Commission, which was tabled in this House recently to see what has been going on. I looked at the 1982 annual report. I find that no one used this section of the law. In 1983, 13 people exercised their rights and three did not, for a total of 16 who were eligible.

It is also interesting to note that this priority which they have is priority 2 in terms of the Public Service Commission. Those who have been on leave and are returning from a sabbatical or other type of leave have priority 1 under Article 7 of the Employment Act. Priority 2 refers to Ministers' staff. Priority 3 concerns people who have been laid off because of reorganization, privatization or decentralization. This is provided for in Section 29.

There is a statutory list of priorities. Of course, there is another list that is called administrative priorities. It deals with the reorganization, privatization, decentralization, and language training courses. It also includes people whose spouses have moved to another city. There may be serious consideration given to transferring the other spouse on a priority basis.

The Bill would give the Public Service Commission a priority list No. 2 for virtually any job. The Commission will be responsible for determining the qualifications that an individual must meet for a job. The aim of the Bill appears to be to provide some form of job security for our employees. I agree with that. I compliment my colleague on what I may call his philantropic objective. I do not say this pejoratively in any sense.

In response to the Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis), I would say that if the aim of the Bill is to give some benefits to the staff of Members who cease to be Members or who are defeated in an election, I can assure him that it would benefit those on his side of the aisle more than those on this side, because we intend to make sure in a few weeks from now that some of the benches on the other side are vacated.

Mr. Ellis: How many weeks?

Mr. Gauthier: A few weeks.

As I said earlier, the Bill proposes to amend the Public Service Employment Act. Currently, Section 37 of that Act gives priority for employment to the staff of ministers and the Leader of the Opposition. I understand that in the last year three or four people from that office benefited from that section. It also provides for priority in instances where a person was a public servant previously. It also provides priority should someone serve a Minister or one of the other groups for a period of three years or more. The Act specifies that such a priority, however, is only given in the instances of employment as a special assistant, executive assistant or private secretary.

When I first read the Bill which we are discussing today, I thought that it appeared similar to the current Section 37 of the Public Service Employment Act which I have been explaining. I thought it was an expansion of those protections and benefits. Upon closer inspection, however, I feel that the Bill would provide greater protection to our staff than that which is accorded currently to the staff of Ministers and the Leaders of both the Government and the Opposition in the other place and here. There is a fundamental difference. Bill C-215 does not explain how the amendment affects employees whose Member of Parliament may have vacated his seat for any reason. It simply states that, after three years in the employ of a Member of Parliament, Clause 4(1) of amended Section 37 would be triggered and the individual in question would be able to ask for priority consideration from the Commission. This is not actually the case in existing law. The Minister in question whose staff has been with him for three years, would have to be either relieved of his ministerial duties, resign from his duties, or leave the House before the clause in question would be triggered, and give his former staff the priority listing which was accorded by this statutory clause.

There is one additional problem which I hope the committee will consider when, hopefully, it studies this Bill. It is that the Bill applies only to the House of Commons. Perhaps we would want to extend this privilege to the other place as well where there are also very devoted people who work for Senators and who are, in my view, equally entitled to this kind of consideration if a Senator dies after three years or perhaps removes himself from office.

In closing, I will say that I view this Bill favourably. I think it is a good initiative. I suggest that there are difficulties with the triggering of the priority listing. If the staff of Members of Parliament are to be included, they should be included in the same way as the staff of a Minister, that is, that the staff should be allowed to exercise that priority if a Member leaves this place either of his own volition or as a result of being defeated. I believe that this should also apply to the Senate.

I would like to hear further comments in the committee with respect to the other amendments, which possibly could be made to improve the Bill.

Having said that, I would like to state very firmly that I think the Bill is appropriate and would give our staff more security and well deserved consideration in the near future.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not wish to abuse the time of the House or of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), but I think there was a misunderstanding. The Bill simply provides that the staff of members who have been staff for three years will come under the qualifications of Section 37 of the Public Service Employment Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair is uncertain about what the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is attempting to do at this time. Does he wish to put a question to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier?

Mr. Blaker: No, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure that I am qualified to speak on a point of order in this regard. I will give way to you and to Hon. Members. However, the Bill is relatively clear. It refers to the Public Service Employment Act.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on a very important subject today, that of giving some degree of job protection to the staff of a Member of Parliament.

Bill C-215 proposes to amend the Public Service Employment Act to provide staff of Members of Parliament the same priority to be appointed to the Public Service that Ministers' staffs now enjoy. An analysis of the wording of the proposed amendment to the Public Service Employment Act indicates that, if approved, it would provide priority for appointment, without competition, for all staff of Members of Parliament who were formerly employed in the Public Service, are qualified for appointment under the PSC Act or have been employed for at least three years in the office of a Member of the House of Commons.

Let us look at the existing order of priority for appointment to the Public Service. The Public Service Employment Act currently provides three levels of priority for appointment to the Public Service of Canada. Public Service employees returning from leave of absence have top priority; Ministers' staffs are second in the order of priority, and former indeterminate employees who are in lay-off status for one year following the lay-off have the least priority.

There is growing concern about the existing order of priority for appointment to the Public Service relating, for the most part, to the low priority for reappointment of lay-offs. Government initiatives over the past few years, including general over-all restraint programs, decentralization or discontinuance of functions and, specific program cuts, have resulted in increased numbers of indeterminate employees being added to the lay-off lists. At the same time, and for the same reasons, the number of job opportunities in the Public Service is declining progressively.

The situation is summarized as follows. At the end of March, 1984 there were more than 600 persons on lay-off lists, 13 Ministers' staffs remaining to be placed, and close to 800 employees were in surplus status prior to lay-off. The indeterminate job opportunities in the Public Service decreased by one-third in 1983. In addition, the number of such opportunities in the first quarter of 1984 is down 16 per cent from the same quarter in 1983.

In 1983, there were 800 surplus lay-off priorities in the National Capital Region. At the end of March, 1984 there were 300 persons yet to be placed. Based on estimates and past election history, a general election could add an immediate 190 to 200 more persons to these growing NCR figures should the proposed amendment be approved.

Until now the Public Service unions have been co-operative in implementing our work force adjustment measures. There is a risk, however, that by providing the close to 1,100 persons employed in Members' offices with a higher level of priority entry into the Public Service than that given to ex-union members who are on lay-off, we might jeopardize this co-operation. Resulting increased union resistance could, predictably, include demands for longer notice periods and extension of the period of lay-off status.

The stated intent of Bill C-215 is to provide staffs of Members of Parliament the same priority entry into the Public Service as is presently enjoyed by Ministers' staffs. It should be noted, however, that what the actual wording of Bill C-215 proposes is to provide Members' staffs with the same priority as that of senior members of Ministers' staffs. Technically speaking, the wording of the amendment to the PSE Act contained in Bill C-215 would provide a higher priority for Members' staffs than for any Ministers' staffs, including the senior members. Priority entry into the Public Service without competition after three years' employment in a Minister's office applies specifically to ministerial aides, for example, a Minister's executive assistant, special assistant and private secretary. Support staffs in Ministers' offices enjoy this priority only if they were formerly public servants, or if they qualified for Public Service appointment while serving in a minister's office.

Since Members' employees are primarily support staff people, their position vis-à-vis employees in comparable levels in Ministers' offices would be vastly superior if Bill C-215 were approved in its present form.

Section 37 of the PSE Act provides for the payment of salary to Ministers' staffs for a period of 30 days after a Minister ceases to hold office, which means that their priority for appointment to the Public Service can only commence after completion of this 30-day period. Since there is no similar pay provision included in the proposed amendment, the priority for appointment for Members' staffs would start 30 days sooner than for Ministers' staffs. This 30-day headstart could be an advantage following any general election, particularly for support level employees.

The primary concern of the Public Service Commission is, understandably, for protection of the merit principle.

Since 1918, when it was first introduced, the protection afforded Ministers' staffs only changed when the Acts, the Civil Service Act and later the Public Service Employment Act, were opened to over-all reviews. The last changes were made in 1967 and were part of an over-all review of personnel management in the Public Service and related legislation.

The amendment to Section 37 of the PSE Act proposed in Bill C-215 could be similarly reviewed. The provision should be considered on its own merit and not as an add-on to provisions designed and approved for another group of employees.

The best procedure for achieving changes to legislation governing personnel management in the Public Service is through detailed review of the situation at hand in both existing and in proposed legislation rather than by approval of an isolated amendment presented in a Private Members' Bill.

A Members' staff who have served a term of employment of at least three years should, in my opinion, have some protection. This would be moving in the right direction. These people who have worked for three years in an MP's office have gained a tremendous wealth of experience which would stand them in good stead for most government related positions.

This is a serious problem which needs to be addressed in an in-depth manner as quickly as possible.

I therefore recommend that this Bill be given top priority by the House. It is an urgent matter.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): I am happy to speak on Bill C-125. I know this principle has been widely canvassed and discussed in the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services. I believe it finds much support on all sides of the House.

We are especially appreciative of the work our executive assistants and other assistants do. They operate at a senior level, working with senior public officials through our committee system here in the House of Commons and in dealing with Ministers and so on. I do not think Members' assistants are accorded anywhere near the respect or prominence they should be. This is true as well of the wages paid them. An assistant to a Member of Parliament receives a certain level of pay. A person working for the staff of the House of Commons, say for the Clerk at the Table, will get 30 per cent or 40 per cent more in wages. I think Members are very conscious of this. They would like to see the same kind of assistance accorded to assistants of MPs as is provided to the staff of Ministers with regard to this provision in the existing Public Service Employment Act. The PSE Act provides that Ministers' assistants can have a priority entry into the Public Service after three years of employment. I think that is why the recommendation has come forward from the Members' Services Committee.

There are a couple of questions which should be considered. As far as Ministers' assistants are concerned, that special privilege is only accorded to executive assistants, special assistants, and private secretaries, as I understand it. Employees at a lower staff level can be accorded this priority after three years only if they have been in the Public Service previously to coming on staff with a Minister. There are a number of questions in that regard. I do not believe the Government has canvassed this Bill to the extent it needs it before giving it second reading. I do know that around the House of Commons there is a great deal of support and encouragement for this Bill.

I would like to suggest to the House this afternoon that perhaps, if there is agreement, we could send the subject matter of Bill C-215 to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates so that it can be more fully canvassed with regard to the implications for employment, its relationship vis-à-vis Members' staffs, and the relationship of the Ministers' staffs with the Public Service unions and so on. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-215, An Act to amend the Public Services Employment Act (staff of Members of the House of Commons) be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

● (1750)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Foster, seconded by Mr. Evans, moved an amendment thereto, that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-215, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act (staff of Members of the House of Commons), be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move the following amendment to the amendment, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That the said committee submit a report to the House of Commons within a period of 10 days.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) would be patient for a moment, the Chair will consider the subamendment.

Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Orlikow, moved an amendment to the amendment that the said committee submit a report to the House of Commons within a period of 10 days.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the amendment as Chairman of the Committee, and I will be very brief. I would like to ask for the co-operation of the Hon. Member and his Party and of the Official Opposition. If they can pass Bill C-24 through committee in a short time, I would be more than happy to deal with this matter expeditiously. The question is that we have 11 witnesses scheduled for tomorrow. We will be sitting all day tomorrow, possibly the day after the day after that on Bill C-24. If we can get through Bill C-24, the first item of business, we will consider this one after that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is really a matter of half an hour to protect a lot of people who served us well. The subamendment of the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) requires no more than half an hour of the time of the committee to look at it.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) that in fact the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates is seized with a very important Bill. I believe that every time slot is tied up for the next 10 days. I would be afraid that the Bill would not receive the proper consideration it needs.

I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who is Chairman of that Committee, would do everything possible to expedite the work in consideration of this Bill if we refer the subject matter to the Committee. To have it back in the House within 10 days is highly unlikely. Since the Committee will be tied up for at least 10 days in discussions on a very important Bill, and in view of the very important event which will be happening in the last three days of next week, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that we provide a little more time, perhaps 20 days, on the understanding that the Chairman of the Committee, who is a very active and capable Chairman, would report it as soon as possible. Otherwise, it is impractical to expect the subject matter to be reported back with the due consideration it needs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) seeking to be recognized to speak again?

Mr. Young: Yes, Mr. Speaker, just very briefly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That could only be done with unanimous consent of the House, because the Hon. Member has already spoken. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I was involved in discussions with other members of a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, and I can tell the House that this subject has been thoroughly aired within that group. It consists of Members from all sides. Also, there was unanimous agreement that this measure should be adopted by the House, because of the many arguments which have been used in support of the Bill.

In the spirit of co-operation, and since we have been told that the committee is tied up for 10 days, I would be more than delighted to accept a friendly amendment to extend my amendment to 12 days rather than 10.

Mr. Evans: Oh, come on!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course the Hon. Member is not making a formal proposal because there cannot be two subamendments before the House at the same time. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. Orlikow, moved an amendment to the amendment that the said committee submit a report to the House of Commons within a period of 10 days. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the subamendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

Mr. Ellis: There are only two Members rising.

An Hon. Member: Get up.

Mr. Ellis: Now there are only four. They cannot struggle up like that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

Mr. Evans: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Young: The amendment was carried.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps the House will allow the Chair to clarify the proceedings. The Chair proceeded with putting the amendment to the amendment to the House. The Chair then invited Hon. Members who support the motion to say yea and proceeded to invite Hon. Members who opposed the motion to say nay, and, in the Chair's opinion, the yeas had it.

Mr. Ellis: Very definitely.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my impression that we have now passed an amendment to the amendment, a subamendment. Now we have an amended motion before the House, and that is debatable, is it not? I was rising to debate the main motion as amended.

Mr. Blaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I had a different understanding. If you are agreeable, may I just indicate my understanding of what happened, because I was involved with the Bill. First, a subamendment—

Mr. Young: Rod, you are trying to talk it out.

Mr. Blaker: First, as I understand it, a motion has been made to refer the subject matter to the committee. I have not heard that motion being put to the House. A further subamendment suggested that the report be made within 10 days. I understood, on a voice vote, that the ten-day subamendment was rejected. I then understood—

Mr. Ellis: No, no.

Mr. Young: It was carried.

Mr. Orlikow: It was carried very clearly.

Mr. Blaker: Then I have a misunderstanding, my apologies.

● (1800)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, I would recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Evans), however, the Chair should indicate to the House that at this time, the hour provided for Private Members' Business has elapsed.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that a motion was put by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Foster) which moved that the order be withdrawn and the subject matter referred to the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee. No debate was held on that motion, and an amendment was subsequently put to that motion by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) adding: "and a report should be made in ten days". We voted on the subamendment to have the report made in ten days which changed the motion, and now that motion as amended is before the House for debate. I was rising to debate that motion as amended which was put by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not the world's best expert on procedure and there are two very fine advisers at the Table but, very clearly, the voice vote carried. If five Members stood, then the bells must ring. I did not count them, but if five Members did not stand, then the motion was carried. We will take it either way—with a bell vote or as having been carried.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I think what has happened is quite clear. There was a motion and the amendment was that the subject of the motion be referred to the committee. The amendment made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), was an addition to that amendment, the addition being that not only should the subject matter be referred to the committee but that the committee should report back in ten days. That matter was voted on, and that finishes the debate. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the subject matter of the original motion was referred to the committee with the instruction that the committee report back to the House in ten days.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must admit that there was some confusion in my own mind as to what Hon. Members were attempting to do. That matter clarified itself following the words of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. In my understanding, some Hon. Members rose, not to force the House to proceed to a vote, but to seek the floor to make further comments.

The Chair is in a position where it must normally put a stop to Private Members' Hour. That is obvious in the mind of every Member. We may only proceed with the consideration of the amendment as amended which is now before the House by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

BANK ACT—ROYAL BANK'S AUTOMOBILE FINANCING PLAN. (B) REQUEST FOR AMENDING FINANCING PLAN

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on May 11 I addressed a question to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) in the absence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) regarding a new plan of the Royal Bank of Canada to enter into the business of leasing of automobiles.

The big five Canadian banks are powerful and rich. They control virtually all of the financial services in Canada. They have been one of the most powerful influences in determining Canadian economic policies since the time the white man first came to this land that is now called Canada. Not only do they dominate the financial life of the country, because of their business relationships with all other sectors of our society—manufacturing, agriculture, resource development, retail and service industries—and because the directors of our major banks are also directors of virtually every major Crown corporation, they have a decisive say in every economic decision or plan made in the country.

Over the years banks have been permitted by the Government of Canada and by Parliament to expand into fields from which they had previously been prohibited. Until a few years ago, banks were not in the mortgage loans business and they were not in the personal loan business. However, now that they have been permitted to enter those fields, they play a dominant role. In recent months, some banks have entered into the stocks and bonds business; in competition with companies which have traditionally been in that business.

It was argued by the banks and their proponents that entry into these fields would create more competition and provide better service at lower cost to the consumer. That has not happened. What has happened is that bank profits have gone up substantially almost every year. The last year for which I have figures is 1982. According to The Financial Post survey on industrials, the net income of the Royal Bank was $357 million, the net income of the Toronto-Dominion Bank was $307 million, the net income of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce was $280 million, the net income of the Bank of Nova Scotia was $272 million, and the net income of the Bank of Montreal was $257 million. I would like to point out that 1982 was not a particularly good year for the banks.

When the Bank Act was last revised, after a great deal of debate and representations by the auto dealers, a new section was included. It was believed by the Government and Members of Parliament that the section would prohibit banks from getting into the business of leasing cars and small trucks. The Royal Bank has now implemented a plan under which customers can appear to purchase a car or truck. They borrow the money from the Royal Bank and after three years they can pay off the rest of the loan and take possession of the car or—and this is the important part—they can just return the car to the bank and the bank will take the vehicle over. The bank also makes arrangements with the insurance company so that they will not take it over. By making such an offer, the Royal Bank is able to appear to be facilitating the financing of the purchase of the car through a much smaller loan requirement than is usually required by the purchaser of a car. This is made possible because the bank agrees in advance to buy back the car at the end of the loan period, which is usually three years, at a guaranteed buy-back price. Neither the bank nor the customer has any way of knowing what the actual real price of the car will be after three years. However, it gives the bank the opportunity to appear not to be leasing the car. The bank claims that it is not a leasing plan. In fact, it is a loan with a balloon payment.

The bank, I suggest, is proposing to do through the back door what Parliament and Government, in enacting the last revised Bank Act, wanted to prohibit the banks from doing. I do not believe that the banks should be permitted to do this. I know that Parliament did not intend for the banks to be in the car or truck leasing business. If, as the Minister indicated, the advice of the legal officers of the Government is that what the bank is doing is in fact legal under the present provisions of the Bank Act, I would call on the Government to put into effect what it intended when the Bank Act was last revised. It should plug the loophole in the Bank Act so that the Royal Bank, or any other bank, is not permitted to get into the leasing of cars through the back door when it is not permitted to do it in the normal way.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Bank Act does allow banks to enter into some financial leasing contracts through subsidiaries, but specifically excludes them from entering into financial leasing contracts involving most motor vehicles. This exclusion reflected a number of considerations. Generally, banks are prohibited from dealing in goods under the Bank Act. There was concern that banks would be able to deal in goods through car leasing. There was also some concern expressed over the effect bank lessors would have on other lessors, such as car dealers. Thus, the Bank Act excluded banks from the business of leasing cars.

While the Royal Bank Buy-Back car loan program has features that are very similar to a leasing arrangement, the Department of Justice has concluded that in fact it is not a lease and that the Royal Bank is in compliance with the Bank Act. This reflects the fact that, unlike a leasing arrangement, the bank at no time owns the car. It is owned by the borrower. Further, the bank never deals with the cars. It is not involved with the physical purchase or final marketing of the car, although it appears to guarantee the price of the vehicle at the end of the time span of the repayment schedule, subject to several conditions.

From a strictly legal perspective, it would appear that the Royal Bank program is not a leasing program, but an innovative financing technique. In this regard, if one accepts the intent of the legislators that the Bank Act provisions are aimed at prohibiting banks from dealing in goods, the program would also be in accord with the spirit of the Act. However, if the Bank Act is aimed at providing protection to other lessors, the Royal Bank program will have to be examined carefully to determine if it is consistent with that objective. The issue clearly requires further study before any action could be considered.

NATIONAL REVENUE—BARRIE HOSPITAL FUND RAISING CAMPAIGN—REFUSAL OF TAX DEDUCTIBILITY. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, during question period on May 14 I raised an issue of considerable importance to the constituents of my riding. The response of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) was less than satisfactory, although it demonstrated very clearly that his attitude toward the taxpayers of this country has not changed at all, despite the controversies in which he has been involved and which have been raised in this House for the past half year.

Let me recall briefly the circumstances which led to my question, Mr. Speaker. Canadian artist Ken Danby had agreed to assist the Royal Victoria Hospital in Barrie with its fund raising drive by autographing 250 limited edition prints of a painting which he was commissioned to do for the Barrie recreation building. He would, of course, pay tax on the $20,000 commission that he was paid to do the painting.

The hospital wants to give one of these prints as a token of appreciation to each person who makes a donation of more than $500 to the building fund. In this way the hospital would raise a minimum of $125,000, if not a lot more, without resorting to any government assistance whatsoever at a time when we need such help in medicare. It is an innnovative way of raising money without having to go to the Government for any help at all. However, an official of the Minister's Department has ruled that if these prints are given to donors, tax deductible receipts cannot be issued for their donations. This will surely put a damper on an important and worthwhile fund raising project.

The Minister is well aware of the details, and when I asked him whether he would consider reversing the decision of one of his officials his reply was that I did not have all the facts and intimated that it was against the Act, and that I was, and I quote "stupid". Mr. Speaker, this is an insult to every constituents of Simcoe South. It is also a prime example of why the Minister has come under so much fire recently. Who is stupid, Mr. Speaker?

I telephoned the office of Revenue Canada today, the charitable and non-profit organization section, and spoke to a Mrs. Bennett. She assured me that at present there is nothing in the Income Tax Act which states that a donation cannot be deducted from taxable income if a gift is given to the donor in return. There are discussions going on about having this put into the Act in order to avoid much of the confusion which has arisen lately. However, at the present time, the Minister has the power to determine whether a donation will be allowed for the purpose of deduction from taxable income, even if a gift is received in return for the donation. The fact that the Minister is discussing this matter with his officials, and with the parties concerned, indicates that he has discretion in this matter. So it is up to the Minister to allow the fund raising scheme to go ahead. He has the authority to do so and nothing in the Act prevents him from doing so. Why does he not allow the Royal Victoria Hospital to proceed instead of stone-walling in the House and calling me stupid?

In Langley, British Columbia, tax collectors seized $37 from the bank account of an eleven-year-old boy because his parents could not come up with the money which Revenue Canada said they owed. The boy's father suffered a nervous breakdown because of the harassment by those officials. Who is stupid, Mr. Speaker?

• (1815)

In 1982, William Rowe, a St. John's lawyer, was appointed to report on the alleged heavy-handed techniques of tax officials in Newfoundland who were demanding that fishermen sell their houses to pay off assessments, and were threatening to garnishee the wages of fish plant workers. Rowe recommended that Revenue Canada clean up its act. He noted that the Department's search and seizure powers may be an infringement of the Bill of Rights. He called for a special task force to investigate these charges. The Rowe Report was neither published nor acted upon. Had it been, the present controversy could have been avoided. Who is stupid, Mr. Speaker?

The 1983 edition of Inside Taxation, a Revenue Canada publication, says that the mandate of the Department is to maintain public confidence in the integrity of the tax system by administering tax and related legislation fairly, uniformly and courteously. I ask you to talk to some of the people who have been inside Revenue Canada offices lately on tax matters. It states further that a self-assessment system can work only when taxpayers readily comply with the law.

Revenue Canada, Taxation, recognizes the importance of maintaining public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of such a system. How does the Minister meet these commitments? By adopting a hard line approach to the administration of the Act. This has left a trail of angry taxpayers who feel there is no such thing as justice and fair play when it comes to dealing with the Department. His aggressive and confrontational style has replaced reliance on dialogue and negotiation as an approach to problem solving. The Minister's response to mounting public criticism of his Department has been to ignore the problem. We have seen him operate this way in the House for six months. Who is stupid, Mr. Speaker? I ask you: who is stupid?

After defending the heavy-handed tactics of his Deputy Minister for six months, the Minister then fired him in an attempt to deflect criticism of the Department. Who is stupid? When the Opposition called for a full parliamentary inquiry into Revenue Canada, the Minister spent $1.5 million to hire Mr. Farlinger to conduct an in-house study, not a public inquiry. The Minister thinks that throwing a cloak of secrecy around his Department's operations is the way to satisfy public discontent. Ignore the problem and it will go away. Again, who is stupid?

Incidentally, 80 per cent of my constituents who responded to a questionnaire in my Spring Householder declared themselves in favour of our demand for a full public inquiry. We set up a task force and we listened to the people of Canada. In far less time and at much less cost than Mr. Farlinger we made 76 recommendations designed to make the tax system more fair, more accountable and more effective. Our task force set out to correct an injustice, one the current Government seems prepared to ignore. To make it even more ludicrous, Mr. Turner, who would lead the Liberal Party, supports the report of the Progressive Conservative Task Force in its entirety. Who is stupid?

The Royal Victoria Hospital affair is indicative of the Revenue Canada approach that so many Canadians have become so fed up with. Why does the Minister not intervene in this case, as he did in the case of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, and reverse the decision of his Mr. Robert Young? Why does he not encourage fund raising in the private sector? What does he have against private money at a time when we are spending billions of dollars on medicare? I know this is a concept foreign to this Government which likes to get its hands into every segment of the economy and society—state control. But it would be a great thing to do and it is so simple.

The Minister is also responsible for customs and excise. The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) brought up in the House today the matter of an American hockey team which came to Canada and exchanged pins. They went to Customs and were charged $72 in duty. They came up here to play hockey with Canadians and the Government made us look ridiculous in the eyes of our largest trading partner.

Being called stupid by that Minister, given the events I have described, does not bother me. Coming from him it is really not offensive. But my constituents deserve better treatment from his Department and from this Government. I hope Revenue Canada will smarten up in a hurry.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to respond to the Hon. Member in terms of who is stupid or who is not stupid. I do not think it is relevant to what we are talking about today. It is certainly not relevant to the matter which he has raised, and did raise, in his question of May 14, 1984.

• (1820)

I am responding to the question raised at that time by the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) concerning the Royal Victoria Hospital of Barrie Foundation and the Department's refusal to allow tax deductions for payments of $500 made to the Foundation by taxpayers in exchange for a copy of a print of a painting by the Canadian artist, Ken Danby. The Hon. Member also seems to feel that the Department's position discriminates against hospitals in their fundraising campaigns. This is just not so.

In the matter at hand regarding the Royal Victoria Hospital of Barrie, I would like to point out that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) is precluded by the confidentiality provisions of the Income Tax Act from discussing the particulars of the Department's dealings with this organization. However, in general terms, it is the Department's practice to encourage, to the greatest extent possible, the acquisition of funds by Canadian charities. I am sure the Hon. Member will agree with that. Nonetheless, the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, must apply the law as it currently exists in this respect.

There are restrictions, however, as to what may and may not be considered a gift for the purposes of issuing an official tax deductible receipt for purposes of the Income Tax Act. In other words, there has to be an interpretation. Although the Minister may have discretion, he must listen to the advice he receives from his officials. He is obviously going to be very concerned about the whole question of precedent setting.

To be entitled to a tax deduction in such cases a taxpayer must have made a gift to a registered charity. As the Income Tax Act does not define the term "gift", it therefore takes on the common law meaning; that is, a voluntary transfer of property without expectation of return, compensation or other consideration. Where a taxpayer receives an element of consideration in exchange for a payment to a registered charity no gift has been made and, accordingly, no tax deduction may be claimed. I would stress that the Department's position in this respect does not preclude registered charities from extending consideration to taxpayers in exchange for payments made. A charity may sell articles to a limited extent. However, as I am sure the Hon. Member will agree, there is a distinction to be drawn between payments made to a charity by a taxpayer in return for which no consideration is received, and those payments in return for which the payer receives something of tangible value. The former constitutes a gift for which an official tax deductible receipt may be issued. The latter can be considered as a payment for which consideration is received and thus for which no receipt may be issued.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

Mr. Speaker: Before proposing to the House the question on the Opposition motion, since today is the final allotted day, the House will go through the usual procedures to consider and dispose of the Supply Bill. In view of recent practices, do Hon. Members agree that the Supply Bill be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: With regard to the Supply motion today, I have difficulty because there are motions standing in the name of two Hon. Members. Before making a decision, if Hon. Members wish to argue the matter to assist the Chair in making a decision, the Chair would be prepared to hear argument.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, it almost seems to be growing into a tradition that you are put in the unfortunate position of having, on each of the allotted days, to exercise your discretion with respect to which of the two motions on the Order Paper should be selected for debate.

You will recall that last Thursday I put forward a variety of arguments in support of the contention that you exercise your authority under Standing Order 62(4)(c) to select for debate the motion then on the Order Paper standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). As it turned out, the fact that the debate was to conclude in a vote seemed to play the critical role in helping you reach a decision. On this occasion there will be no vote on whichever motion is selected for debate. For that reason I would like briefly to review some of the statistical detail which supports the selection you made last Thursday and militates in favour of a similar decision today. That is to say, to support the discussion of the motion standing in the name of my colleague from Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman).

As I mentioned at that time, there is a fundamental difference of opinion between the NDP and the Official Opposition with respect to the manner in which the fair distribution of Opposition days may be calculated. The NDP have argued in this House that the distribution of Opposition days should be calculated on the basis of calendar years. These references may be found at pages 29059 and 29060 of Hansard for November 22, 1983. Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition is of the view that Supply and not calendar years be used to determine the proper allocation of Opposition days. This seems only reasonable to us because the whole business of Supply relates to the Government's expenditure plans for the fiscal year. Surely if Opposition days are to relate to Supply, their distribution should also relate to the fiscal year.

Nevertheless, the NDP were successful on November 22 last in convincing the occupant of the chair that the protection of the rights of the minority in the House depended upon selecting the NDP motion. Thus the distribution of days was revised to conform to the calendar year distribution as suggested by the NDP. Since that time we have taken particular care to ensure that the distribution of Opposition days conform not only to the optimal distribution of days by calendar year, but also to the Supply year as well. With those objectives in mind the NDP have been given five of the 18 Opposition days held since the end of the fall semester. This works out to roughly 28 per cent of the Opposition days, although NDP Members—

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the Hon. Member to check whether it is five or six. Would the Hon. Member have a count to verify this?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that it is five out of the 18 days. If it is six, that just enhances my argument, of course. Using my figures it would be 28 per cent of the Opposition days although NDP members constitute only 25 per cent of all those who sit on this side in opposition in the House of Commons. If you were to select the motion of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West for debate today, the percentage distribution of those days would adjust so that the NDP would have taken 26.3 per cent of the Opposition days since the beginning of the year, or a higher percentage if they have indeed had six Opposition days.

Lest there be any suspicion that the argument with respect to the distribution of days by calendar year is being used to conceal an inequitable distribution of days by Supply year, I would like to point out that over the four Supply years which have taken place since the beginning of this Parliament, the NDP received 26 of the 100 Opposition days which were held in that period. Seven of these motions have come to a vote. In other words, the NDP constitute only 25 per cent of all Opposition members, but have received 26 per cent of the Opposition days and over 29 per cent of the motions filed under Standing Order 62(9).

It is important fully to understand this percentage distribution of days, if only because it seems to be the only point of agreement between the Parties. It is clear that equity is served if Opposition days are allocated to the Parties in proportion to their relative representation in the House. As I have already stated, the NDP constitute about one-quarter of the total Opposition. Indeed, the NDP House Leader acknowledged time and again last day that for every three Conservative Opposition days they should be entitled to one. By my calculation that makes a 75 to 25 per cent ratio. They are entitled to receive one-quarter of the Opposition days which occur each year. The Standing Orders provide that 25 days will be devoted to the consideration of the business of Supply in each year. When you divide 25 by four, one can see that the NDP's share of Opposition days works out to six and one-quarter days per annum.

Needless to say, we simply cannot divide the days in this manner. For that reason we have attempted to average out the distribution of days in such a manner as to ensure that over the life of the Parliament the NDP would receive their full allocation of days. Thus, in three out of four years the NDP would receive six days and in the fourth year they would receive seven. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the NDP received seven days in the last Supply year. Two of those days concluded in votes.

The Supply year concludes at the end of March in each year. Since that time the NDP have received two Opposition days. It is readily apparent to anyone that they have been under-allocated days in this semester if one judges solely on the basis of the working ratio of one-quarter to three-quarters which I have outlined. However, this under-allocation can be explained when one takes into account the fact that the NDP were successful last November in convincing the Chair that calendar years should be considered when calculating the allocation of Opposition days.

In order to meet both standards, we ensured that the NDP were given more than the number of Opposition days to which they were entitled in the last Supply year by allowing three NDP motions, including one votable motion, to come before the House for debate in the period which ended in March. While that Supply period was the final period in the last Supply year, it was also the first period in the current calendar year. Thus the NDP were over-allocated days by both measures.

This fact left us with a problem in the current period. If we were to give the NDP a sixth day before the end of this period, they would have exhausted their full entitlement of Opposition days for the entire calendar year by the first week in June. We would then have been faced with the problem of whether or not the rights of the minority demanded that the NDP be given a day in the fall semester without regard to the fact that they would have already used their full allotment for this year. If, on the other hand, we were to wait until the fall semester to allocate further days to the NDP, it would be possible to ensure an even distribution of days while offending neither formula.

Is there some iron-clad rule that states that the distribution of Opposition days must be mathematically correct in each Supply period rather than equitable over the full year? The precedents certainly do not support such a contention. Although based upon the one-quarter-three-quarter ratio that we have employed, the NDP would be entitled to precisely 3.25 days in the first semester, 1.25 days in the second semester and 1.75 days in the third semester. The actual allotments have been 2.75 and 2.25 days respectively. Thus it can be seen that the NDP have always been under-allocated days in the first semester, over-allocated days 50 per cent of the time in the second semester and always over-allocated days in the final semester.

In my submission, therefore, it would be perfectly consistent with the general pattern of allocation of Opposition days over the past four years if the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West were to be selected for debate today. Furthermore, that is the only option which allows the distribution of Opposition days to conform to both the Supply year and the calendar year systems of allotting Supply days.

However, there are two other good reasons for not selecting the motion put forward by the NDP. Both of these reasons relate to the procedural regularity of the motion. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) was placed on the Order Paper prior to the last Opposition day. At that time it was filed with the Table pursuant to Standing Order 62(9). Standing Order 62(9) reads as follows:

> In each of the periods described in section (5) of this Standing Order, not more than two opposition motions shall be no-confidence motions against the government. The duration of proceedings on any such motion shall be stated in the notice relating to the appointing of an allotted day or days for those proceedings. On the last day appointed for proceedings on a no-confidence motion, at fifteen minutes before the ordinary time of daily adjournment the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of the said proceeding.

The Opposition motion that was debated last Thursday was also filed pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 62(9) and was the second and final motion permitted under that rule for the current Supply period. Following that Opposition day, the motion filed by the Hon. Member for Churchill should, in my opinion, have been dropped from the Order Paper because it could not be proceeded with in the Supply period in which it had been filed.

Even if one is of the view that the motion could stay on the Order Paper until such time as a new Supply period was reached and the provisions for motions under Standing Order 62(9) revived, there remains significant doubt as to the procedural regularity of selecting this motion for debate today.

I recognize the fact that the Hon. Member for Churchill wrote to the Table requesting that the motion remain on the Order Paper so that it might be taken up and considered today. Indeed, I have the text of his letter to the Table and I would like to cite it in support of my argument. The letter is to Jim Cooke of English Journals, Room 128N, dated June 4,

1984, from Rod Murphy, MP, Churchill. The subject is "Re: Motion on Order Paper" and it reads as follows:

I submitted a motion last week which still remains on the Order Paper under 62(9). Following the decision of the Speaker on Thursday morning, I have decided I would like the motion to remain on the Order Paper. Please have it changed however to a 62(11). Thank you.

It is purportedly signed by the Hon. Member for Churchill. The Hon. Member clearly recognized the distinction between motions filed under Standing Order 62(9) and those filed under Standing Order 62(11), and in order to get around that distinction he attempted to play a shell game. Leave the motion on the Order Paper, states his letter, but change the notation with respect to the filing of the motion. What we have before us today is a hybrid motion. It was laid on the Order Paper on May 30, 1984, with the understanding that the House would be required to divide on it and yet it appears today, suddenly transformed into a motion on which the House cannot under any circumstance vote.

Well, Mr. Speaker, which is it? Is it a motion pursuant to Standing Order 62(9), or is it a motion pursuant to Standing Order 62(11)? There is no doubt that had the Hon. Member filed a new motion with the Table yesterday, it would have been debatable under the provisions of Standing Order 62(11) today. If, on the other hand, the motion were filed pursuant to Standing Order 62(9), no matter how long ago, it cannot be debated today.

Had the Hon. Member for Churchill written to the Table requesting that a motion similar in form to the one that he filed on May 30 be placed on the Order Paper pursuant to Standing Order 62(11), there would be two motions standing on the Order Paper in his name today. Had he asked that the original motion be withdrawn and that one similarly worded be placed on the Order Paper pursuant to Standing Order 62(11), there would be only one motion on the Order Paper today in his name. The Hon. Member could have chosen either of these options. Instead, he wrote to the Table and said: "I have an apple on the Order Paper; please make it an orange". Lo and behold, Mr. Speaker, a miracle occurred and the motion changed form, but it did so without going through the proper intervening steps, and I think this sort of short-cut should not be permitted.

Mr. Fulton: Who wrote this for you, Ray?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I can only say to the Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party that the last time they attempted to dilly-dally with the House Leader for the Official Opposition, their House Leader got mugged in Paris. The same thing may happen to them later on. I will not say that because I know they are a little sensitive.

Would this procedure, for example, be permitted in the opposite direction? Had the second motion under Standing Order 62(9) not already been dealt with in this period, and had the Opposition day fallen on a Friday, would the Hon. Member have been permitted to make his casual change? Surely he could argue that notice had been given of his motion pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 62(9) even if it had not been filed under that Standing Order. Why then not change the designation from Standing Order 62(11) to Standing Order 62(9)? It is only incidental that such a change would bring on a vote on a motion that had not previously been votable and would do so within a time frame normally prohibited by the Standing Orders.

For that reason alone, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the Hon. Member's motion is not in proper form to be debated today and that there is no reason for you to exercise your authority to select the motion to be debated.

If you do not find that argument sufficiently persuasive, Sir, I would ask you to consider the terms of the motion which the Hon. Member proposes to put to the House today. For the first three and one-half lines the motion is perfectly acceptable. It complains of a lack of Government action in an important area of public policy. This is very much in accord with the general object of the business of Supply. However, in the remainder of the motion the Hon. Member goes on to argue that a lack of Government action has put:

—the health and safety of Canadian workers at the mercy of long-standing Conservative resistance to such improvements in labour legislation.

Here, Mr. Speaker, we get into some pretty rocky procedural ground. As you are aware, Citation 423 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition states the following:

A motion should be neither argumentative, nor in the style of a speech, nor contain unnecessary provisions or objectionable words. It is usually expressed in the affirmative, even where its purpose and effect are negative.

It is clear that the motion proposed by the Hon. Member is argumentative; it is in the style of a speech and it contains both unnecessary provisions and objectionable words. Furthermore, its allegations are blatantly false. Once again, Mr. Speaker, it can be seen that the motion is not in order as to form, and I submit that the Chair is, therefore, not obliged to exercise its authority under Standing Order 62(4)(c), but need merely call the motion standing on the Order Paper in the name of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West, which does meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

For all of the reasons I have outlined, Sir, I would ask that you call my hon. colleague's motion for debate this morning.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intent to spend half an hour talking about procedures. I will simply say that we will trust the fairness and the judgment of the Chair to determine that we have followed the proper procedures and that the wording is acceptable, even though the House Leader of the Conservative Party says that the word "Conservative" is negative and objectionable.

I believe the procedures were followed, that we did give proper notification of change, that we are entitled, under the rulings that have been made in the past, to this Opposition day. I would rather spend our time debating the need for changes in the Canada Labour Code than wasting the time of the House in a procedural wrangle which has taken half an hour of the proceedings of this House.

Mr. Speaker: I thank Hon. Members who have contributed to this discussion. Their advice has been most helpful. However, the responsibility imposed upon the Speaker by Standing Order 62(4)(c) is for the Chair alone. Only last week it fell to the Chair to exercise the same duty and it will be its duty again, as I said the last time, to exercise its power of selection on the basis of fair play and impartiality.

One of the issues which has been raised is how we count Supply periods. Normally the Parties in opposition are in agreement on what they are doing. When they are in agreement, the Chair has no problem. However, when the Parties are not in agreement, the Chair must decide on what basis we will count the allotted days. In these circumstances I propose to count the three Supply periods ending on June 30 this year. That is the Supply period ending December 10, the Supply period ending March 26, and the Supply period ending June 30.

On the basis of this count, six of the allotted days have been awarded to the NDP. Also on the basis of this count, it amounts to 24 per cent of the 25 allotted days. Eighteen of the allotted days have been awarded to the Progressive Conservative Party, or 72 per cent. In terms of the numbers, a little over 76 per cent relate to members of the Conservative Party and a little over 23 per cent to members of the New Democratic Party. On the basis of a mathematical distribution, using this method of counting, I award this day to the Official Opposition. This would give them 19 out of 25 allotted days, or 76 per cent, within the three periods. This reflects very closely the percentage of Opposition seats in the House.

I also point out that the content of the two motions put forward by the Opposition Parties is sufficiently similar to enable both of them to have the debate they are seeking. I am not ruling on the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) concerning the style or the nature of the motion.

I reiterate the point that the Chair has been urging as recently as last week, that the House, perhaps through the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, should clarify its intent with regard to the allocation of allotted days. In the circumstances, I call the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman).

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—CANADA LABOUR CODE

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West) moved:

That this House condemns the government for failing to introduce amendments to the Canada Labour Code during the first four years of this Parliament, and by so doing, unnecessarily putting at risk the health and safety of Canadian workers, failing to address the concerns of women in the workplace, and inadequately addressing the issue of technological change.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the concerns of workers in Canada have not been met by this Parliament. They have not been met in the entire life of this Parliament. There were promises. From these promises grew some measure of hope. From that hope a large amount of fanfare and legislation was brought forward. I am confident that in all likelihood, as this legislation is discussed during second reading, the interests of workers of Canada will still not be met, and that it will fall to a new Conservative Government to create a new blueprint in the form of new legislation. Our blueprint will provide justice, equity, safety and productivity in a rapidly changing workforce.

My reaction to the legislation which may come before the House was certainly one of disappointment. It is not what Canadians want. What Canadians want today is jobs. They want almost any kind of job. There is a sense of desperation and fear in the workplace. That desperation and fear are not addressed in the House of Commons through the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) or through the many speeches we have heard in the House of Commons. The reality is that there are no jobs. I face that fear every day in my constituency office and in my constituency, as do other Hon. Members. We face it among our children. We face it among our friends. It is real and the Minister knows it. It is not addressed by any anticipated legislation before the House of Commons.

Canadians want jobs. They do not want make-work programs by governments. Canadians want new jobs through the development and creation of new wealth and power in Canada. That is where the jobs have to come from—the creation of new wealth, new opportunity and new power in Canada. They want jobs from an expanding and growing economy which will assure the security of job opportunity in the workplace. That is from where security comes—new jobs, the creation of new and more jobs. The kinds of jobs we must have should provide job security, not six-month security nor a make-work program. They must provide a real security which comes from an expanding and growing economy.

Along with this creation of new jobs and new wealth, we must look at the condition of those jobs. We want those jobs to be in safe places to work. We want the condition of those jobs to be that of justice, equity and sharing. The labourers and workers should share in the fruits of their efforts.

Instead, in Canada today we are faced with more and more workers trying to share less and less jobs at a time when business after business is going bankrupt, from the smallest to the largest. The engine of our productivity is damaged to the point where we wonder whether it can recover. Everyone is starting to fight to share a diminishing labour force or workforce, a diminishing capacity for jobs. This is the tone which we face in 1984. We must remember the human misery which is associated with this. It is the hurt to the mother, to the child and to the weak in society who are crushed by not having jobs. They are being crushed today in a way we have never seen before. This is the concern of Canadians.

What do we have in place? We have the offer of a blueprint or a hope. The blueprint is nothing but the extension of a few more social benefits. There are no real guarantees about a safer workplace. Also it has a definition of sexual harassment which supposedly is innovative but is totally ineffective.

The legislation which will come before the House is a disappointment. When it comes before us, that will be our opportunity to discuss the details of it. However, the failure of the House of Commons to address the needs of workers in the workplace is not dealt with in the legislation. That is of great concern to us on this side of the House.

It is appropriate that this motion has been brought before the House because both Opposition Parties have at least guaranteed that the subjects of labour, the workplace, the rights of our workers and the need of our economy for productivity will be discussed. I am pleased that the members of the New Democratic Party have, as our Party has for so many months, called for a debate on this subject.

It is obvious that the Liberal Government is attempting to play politics with these current amendments just by the way they were introduced. They were introduced late in the session, almost as an afterthought or last-minute election expediency. It attempts to buy labour votes with intention rather than introducing meaningful and substantive legislation. Substantive legislation could still be developed. The Government could take the base of what is provided and allow for debate in the House of Commons.

If the Government sees this labour legislation as a priority, let it bring it before the House of Commons for many days of debate. Let us measure its intent by the number of days it is willing to commit. Let us see how many days it will commit to second reading and how many days to committee.

This legislation is poor, weak and inappropriate. Representatives of labour and business are not satisfied with it. They find it wanting and inadequate. If we are going to add substance to it and make it meaningful, it must be talked about here in the House of Commons and in committee, and delegations must be heard.

The Minister has given a commitment when the legislation moves to committee that at least the major players, those with the major interest, will be heard. I hope that happens in this Parliament. Such a committee should sit. It should listen to the problems of labour, hear about the suffering of our workers and listen to the problems of management. I hope this will be allowed. It is important that it happen.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis), called for legislation, amendments and discussion in the House over six months ago. The Government claims that this legislation is the result of extensive consultation, yet many groups indicate they were consulted three years ago. The workplace is different from what it was three years ago. They want to be heard again. If this Government wants, it can commit the time for this matter to be dealt with extensively.

Unfortunately, the amendments seem to be little more than an extension of social benefits. They fall far short of the objectives of the proponents of any part of this question. Will this legislation create new jobs? I do not see any new jobs being created other than possibly in the bureaucracy. It will not create job security or increase productivity. It will not create any jobs for labour. If it will not do any of this, what will it create? It certainly is not the answer we are looking for.

This Bill was introduced late in the session in the hope that there would be little or no examination of the legislation. Any examination of it by any element of concern either in this House of Commons or in the country would find it wanting. This Bill was not produced in the interest of the workers but in the interest of the Liberal Party of Canada in its attempt to cling to power. That is what it is all about. That must not be allowed.

I am disappointed with the New Democratic Party. We again see a situation of confrontation in labour relations, and what does the NDP do? Instead of addressing the issue, that Party wants to play politics by throwing a slam at the Conservative Party or the Liberal Party.

The failure of our Parliament to create meaningful legislation that will develop the workplace is to the shame of all of us. Our people in the country are crying out for jobs. They want new creativity, new jobs and a better kind of job security. I do not know why elements of labour look to the New Democratic Party, which wants to play politics even with this motion. The New Democratic Party cannot lead the labour movement out of the wilderness and into the power of government. Everyone around them can see that the horse they are riding is on its last legs. The NDP cannot get into power in government. Even if they knew what to do if they got in, it would not matter.

The Liberals are and have been in power for many years. What is the result? Unemployment, rising interest rates, falling productivity are the result. That is the reality. If Canadians would judge this Government on this issue alone in an election, it would be swept out of power. It is a labour issue. It is an issue of workers in our society who are struggling. They are less and less successful every day. It remains for us to examine this legislation carefully. The hope lies in new legislation that will emerge from a new government with a new mandate.

We must not look at the politics in this issue. That is why I reworded the motion. I had seen the NDP motion and I was disappointed. Clearly the NDP motion forgot not only about the health and safety of Canadian workers, but the concerns of women in the workplace. My colleague from Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) will address the problems of women in the workplace later in this debate. I am pleased for this debate so that she can bring those issues and those concerns forward.

We adapted our motion to recognize the rapidly changing workplace, technological change and the necessity of job retraining. While the rest are arguing politics, we have had a task force come forward with positive recommendations which identify the reality of the workplace today. Of those working today, 90 per cent will require retraining. Where does this legislation address retraining or technological change? It does not address women in the workplace, nor does it address young people entering the workplace. They may never find their place. They are losing hope more and more. Some have gone from a part-time job to welfare, then off welfare and back into their homes. At age 19, 20, 25 or 29, they are sitting at home. It is a shame on the Government of Canada and on all of us that we have not been more positive and more creative. That is the challenge which is before us in the election that is to come.

Let us look at some of the areas which need to be addressed. All of us recognize that we must increase productivity and be able to sell our products in international markets. By doing that we will create more jobs and the cycle will be complete. We feel also that productivity is enhanced if the workplace is a healthful workplace. We feel that the legislation which has been brought forward is not adequate to meet the needs of the health and safety of workers. More productivity is lost as a result of industrial accidents than is lost in strikes and work stoppages. We focus on strikes as the problem; however, there is an equal problem in health and safety.

Mr. Kristiansen: Use the word "we" selectively.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I hear a member of the NDP saying "Use the term 'we' selectively". When I use the word "we", I do not mean "we" in terms of myself and the Conservative Party. I mean "we" in terms of myself, the Liberal Government and the NDP Opposition. All of us bear responsibility in this. We all bear responsibility for identifying the importance of health and safety in strong legislation that will give guarantees to our workers, thereby enhancing productivity and the standards and life-styles of Canadians.

We cannot allow the lives of our workers to be jeopardized by occupational health and safety accidents. After we consider all of the technology in the world, what really counts is the individual: How does he feel about himself, his work, and his opportunity? If he is not healthy and lives in constant danger and fear in the workplace, he will not be a productive worker. That is not the kind of society we want.

The number of person-days lost to occupational accidents and illness in the past ten years is double the days lost to work stoppages. The Auditor General was extremely critical in his 1983 report on Labour Canada management of their occupational health and safety programs. In view of that criticism and the criticism of the Opposition, I wonder why the Government has not been able to do better in the legislation which it has brought forward. In 1981 alone 82,000 workers were injured and 18 workers were killed in on-the-job accidents within the jurisdiction of Labour Canada. That is a very small jurisdiction. Those people were hurt, sent home and suffered because of on-the-job activities just in this jurisdiction. That is not good enough.

There is so much that needs to be said about this Bill. In the debate that follows, other speakers from our side will cover women in the workplace, technological change and other areas which are of concern. These areas must be addressed. That is why the Bill must be brought forward for as full a debate as is possible within the time-frame of this House of Commons. Is the Government ready to give one, two, three or four days of debate to jobs and labour in Canada to discuss the problem? Or does it just want to shove it under the mat or the election rug? Is it willing to go to committee to hear the concerns of Canadians? I hope so—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his time has expired. A ten-minute period is now provided to Members either to ask questions or make comments related to the hon. gentleman's remarks. Are there any questions?

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member, who I understand is the labour spokesman for his caucus, a question. I refer him to the proposition which the House Leader of the New Democratic Party put before the House and the Government House Leader on May 31, 1984, and I quote from the remarks of the NDP House Leader on that date, when he asked the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard):

> —I would ask you to seek unanimous consent for leave to introduce the following motion pertaining to the treatment of Bill C-34. If unanimous consent were forthcoming, I would be prepared to mvoe and to support that the Standing Orders be amended by adding immediately following Standing Order 79(1) the following:
> 79 (1a) The purpose of this Standing Order is to provide for the orderly and timely consideration of Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canadian Labour Code, and to be finally disposed of no later than June 30th, 1984;
> (b) When the House is considering the said legislation for second reading, at the end of one day's debate, all questions necessary to dispose shall be put;
> (c) That the said legislation shall be deemed to be returned to the House for report stage and third reading no later than June 28, 1984.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member who has just spoken, as the labour spokesman for the Progressive Conservative Party in this House of Commons, whether he and his Party would give unanimous consent to the support of such a motion so that, despite some of its inadequacies—and any legislation put forth by any Party will have some inadequacies—we may have legislation in both Parts III, IV and V of the Canada Labour Code particularly on occupational health and safety. This would be a vast improvement over the regime which exists today. As well, it will ensure that, regardless of whatever government is elected in the next election, hopefully fewer Canadian workers will die. Will he and his Party give support to such a motion to ensure that we have the legislation prior to the end of this Parliament?

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, if we could stop playing politics with this issue, from the Minister getting involved, to writing letters beyond the system to the Member proposing amendments to give the kinds of assurances without notice to myself as the official critic or to the House Leader of the Official Opposition or to the Leaders on the other side, if they really meant what they said, they would follow the process of negotiation that is established in this House through our House Leaders. We have honourable and competent House Leaders who are negotiating this process. I would urge them to meet at the first possible opportunity to negotiate among themselves in order that our House Leader can find in good faith if the Government does intend to give one, two, three, four or five days to the House of Commons to debate the legislation. Is it that important, or is it only important enough for five minutes' debate? How important is the time spent in the House of Commons to the Government? That is what I want to know. As well, I want to know what the Opposition is willing to sacrifice in the name of the workers of Canada in order that this legislation can proceed through second reading. It should have the measure of debate that it so justly deserves. Will it be given enough time in committee in order that we can do as the Minister suggested and hear the major players?

If the commitment from the Government is genuine, then we can meet these kinds of objectives. That is the way it must be met, by the meeting of minds within the structure. Otherwise we will end up with a lot of debate that is meaningless. The meaningfulness will come from debate. I urge that debate to continue at the earliest possible moment among our House Leaders.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to get drawn into this question and answer period, but the naivety and lack of actual background that obviously the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) has with respect to this matter has prompted me to make a brief comment. I would like simply to confirm that we have been attempting to have the legislation come forward. I find it exceedingly curious that a member of the New Democratic Party—

• (1200)

Mr. Fulton: Let us have some order. Is that relevant? Come on, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West mentioned the fact that there was a proposal put forward by his House Leader. They get very excited when I get up and try to give those Hon. Members a little assistance with respect to their perspective, because they get things all wrong. I assure you I am trying to help the New Democratic Party. I am trying to assist them in order to make sure—

Mr. Kristiansen: Then agree to the motion!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —that its failing place in public politics—

Mr. Fulton: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am prepared to help them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please.

Mr. Fulton: There are certain rules in this House, Mr. Speaker, and the House Leader for the Official Opposition obviously does not understand them. This is a question and answer period. If the Hon. Member wants to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), he should do so. If he just has a bunch of butterflies in his mind, I do not believe he should be seen to be in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The point is well taken in that questions or comments must relate to the remarks made by the Hon. Member who had the floor.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I know that is the case, but you allowed the question with respect to Bill C-34, which was referred to. The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West has indicated that we want to get on with this legislation, that we want to have the matter brought forward so that the interests of Canadian workers can be considered by the House of Commons. However, the reason we are not able to do that, Mr. Speaker, is that the New Democratic Party is preventing us from getting this matter before the House of Commons. It is that Party which has prevented us, in the negotiations, from getting on with this legislation.

Mr. Fulton: Point of order!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I simply say, Mr. Speaker, now that—

Mr. Fulton: You are the last one who should say that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) on a point of order.

Mr. Fulton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My understanding of the rules of this House is that this is a question period in order to allow Hon. Members of this House to ask questions of the person who has just spoken. It is not to allow someone who does not know what they are talking about to continue blathering on. Everyone in this country knows that it is the Conservatives who are stalling. The question which was put to the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West made that quite clear. The Tories will not get up and say that they will support the passage of this legislation in one day.

Mr. Taylor: You are out of order!

Mr. Fulton: It is clear that they are the ones who are stalling. And those are the kinds of questions we want to put. If the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West wants to stall the ten minutes, then that is how it should be recorded.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. First of all, the question of who stalled or has not stalled legislation is not a point of order in itself. It is a matter for debate. The Chair will leave Hon. Members to resolve this. Meanwhile, I would just ask Hon. Members to direct either their questions or their comments to the material which was delivered by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen).

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have not finished, Mr. Speaker. I was interrupted on a point of order.

Mr. Kristiansen: I believe I have the floor, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Point of order!

Mr. Kristiansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to redirect my question—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Point of order!

An Hon. Member: Sit down, Ray!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the point of order, I was in the middle of making a few comments. I have been interrupted twice by a very sensitive NDP member. I wanted to conclude by asking a question of my colleague, but I have not been able to make any comments or to ask a question because the New Democratic party is preventing me from having my say on the floor of the House of Commons.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, he rose on a point of order. Is that a point of order?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Those Hon. Members refuse to allow me the courtesy to make a comment. I was recognized—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. Can I ask the two Hon. Members who are standing and talking at the same time to sit down, please? The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West who is trying to make a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: All I was saying is that, if you will recall, I started off with my comments and was interrupted twice on points of order. I just feel that I should not be prevented from carrying on because someone from Skeena does not believe in free speech on the floor of the House of Commons. I feel I should be entitled to finish my comments—

Mr. Fulton: We just get tired of Tory drivel.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —and ask a question of my colleague. Is that permissible?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West finally going to get to his question? That would certainly help the Chair. The question period is coming to an end as well.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On the comment and question period, I want to simply ask—

Mr. Kristiansen: Is he on a point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —a question in this context. We know that the New Democratic Party has been holding up the presentation of Bill C-34 on the floor of the House of Commons, notwithstanding what those Hon. Members say to the CLC or if they are pretending to come forward with a notice of motion, for which they are unprepared. I simply want to ask my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West, is it not the position of our Party, which was stated by our Leader and by the labour critic for our Party, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West, that we are prepared to deal with this matter? Is it not the case that the Conservative Party has been pressing to have this matter dealt with so that we can in fact address the issues in question? Have we not asked on a number of occasions why this Bill has not come forward? Have there not been a number of Conservatives asking on behalf of our Party where the Bill is dealing with the Canada Labour Code? Would the Hon. Member be able to address himself to the question of why we have taken the lead on behalf of the workers of Canada, as opposed to the New Democratic Party which has done everything it can to prevent the legislation coming before the House and is playing petty politics with this particular Bill?

Mr. Wenman: In answering the question, I will say that I am willing to sit in the committee and hear—in a democratic manner, I might add, Mr. Speaker—those who want to be heard on this debate. I will start any day it is wished to have those hearings. Let us get on with it and hear what the people of Canada have to say about this legislation in a democratic way. Then we can possibly come to a conclusion.

If the Government decides to let the House of Commons go on long enough, if it decides to give enough comitment to the workers of Canada in order to allow for as much debate as possible in the House of Commons—because that is good and in the interests of democracy and the workers of Canada—and if it allows as much time as possible in committee so we can have our hearings, then I say that I am certainly willing to attend those meetings, to speak and participate in those meetings—as many as the Government wishes to have and for as long a period as it wishes. Then when it is brought to a conclusion, it will be brought to a conclusion in the House of Commons through negotiations of our House Leaders and not through motions which are out of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And petty politics.

Mr. Wenman: And not play petty politics in the House of Commons. Let us get on with the job. Let us talk about the workers of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons we presented a motion on this very important matter, not only today but last week, is that we recognize that this is a matter of very strong importance to the working people of Canada. We are not playing political games by bringing this motion forward. As a Party, over four years ago we set up a task force which toured right throughout this country from one end to the other. We went into the work sites and talked with the workers and management. We talked about the problems with the present Canada Labour Code.

The reason we took that route, Mr. Speaker, was that we recognized that the present Canada Labour Code, especially Part IV of that Code, did not provide adequate protection for the workers who come under federal jurisdiction. We also recognized that there were a number of workers who worked for the Government itself; those on the rail lines, those who worked under Atomic Energy of Canada and others, who were excluded from the protection of the Canada Labour Code.

With that in mind, we went right across this country. We came up with recommendations which we presented in a report called "Graveyard Shifts: Life and Death on the Job in Canada". It was a report of the New Democratic Party special task force on occupational health and safety in the federal workplace. We presented that report to the House of Commons and to the various Ministers of Labour who have held that portfolio over the last number of years. We talked, as I said earlier, with both management and with labour.

I believe we have an agreement in this country that the law as it presently stands is very inadequate. That is the purpose of our intervention, because we believe that those inadequacies must be addressed. Even though the proposals made by the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) through Bill C-34 are still not perfect, for the sake of the workers who come under the present federal jurisdiction, and those workers who will come under federal jurisdiction if Bill C-34 passes, we believe that the proposals presented by the Minister of Labour must be passed before this House has its summer recess, and must be passed before a federal election occurs.

There are a number of reasons why we believe that is necessary. Labour legislation always seems to be passed prior to a general election. The last time that happened was in 1978. What that means is that if this legislation is not passed now, and it does not matter whether there is a Liberal or Conservative Government after the next election, this legislation or its equivalent will not be introduced into this House of Commons.

Last week we proposed to the Government and the Official Opposition that we agree to a one-day debate on second reading, and then send it to committee for study, but we want to know that by June 29 the legislation will be brought back to this House and dealt with prior to our summer recess. As the occupational health and safety of our Party, I can guarantee that we sill sit morning, afternoon and night to make sure that as many representatives as possible of industry and labour can make their presentations before the committee.

We also agree that there should be amendments made during the committee process. There are areas of the legislation which need some improvement. But for God's sake, Mr. Speaker, let us not let any more people die. Let us not let any more people be unprotected by the Canada Labour Code. Let us not leave unprotected by the Canada Labour Code those hundreds of thousands of federal Government employees. Let us not ignore the people who work on the rails and on drilling rigs similar to the Ocean Ranger. Let us not ignore their concerns. Let us make sure before we leave that all three Parties in this House stop playing political games and pass legislation which, despite its inadequacies, is certainly an improvement over the legislation that many people in this country have to work under today.

We can give examples of the problems which exist currently. We can talk about federal Government employees across the river in Hull who work in places where the ventilation is imperfect. We can talk about the problems of people who work on video display terminals and their increased absenteeism from work, which is documented. We can talk about the people who have died in grain elevators because there are not enough federal Government inspectors. We can talk about my home communities of Flin Flon and Snow Lake, mining communities, which fall under federal jurisdiction and do not even know that there federal labour people should be up there inspecting their work sites. We can bring up all those things in debate.

What I would really like to bring up at this time, Mr. Speaker, and will continue to emphasize, is that the only way those people will have any chance of improving their health and safety is if we in this House commit ourselves to passing this legislation prior to our summer adjournment. We can do it. Just last Friday we passed three pieces of legislation in one afternoon. When it comes to our own raises, this House has been known to act very quickly. When it comes to legislation which is near and dear to the hearts of some people in this House, we act quickly.

Bill C-34, the amendments to the Canada Labour Code, is very dear to the health and safety of workers and we would like to see that legislation passed as soon as possible. We are committed to meeting with the House Leaders of the two other Parties. We are committed to dealing in the House or behind the curtains to make sure this legislation passes. Again I call on both Parties to make that same commitment this afternoon during debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Questions or comments? Debate.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to take part in this debate, following comments by the representatives of the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party, both of whom appear to acknowledge the importance of this legislation, Bill C-34, whose purpose is to amend the Canada Labour Code.

I do not want to get involved in a partisan discussion, nor do I want to try to establish that one or the other party is to blame for the fact that these long awaited amendments to the Canada Labour Code have not yet been passed in the House. I must say I was very sorry to see the two motions of non-confidence proposed today, one by the Progressive Conservative Party and one by the New Democratic Party. It is not terribly important to know what we should or should not have done in the past, or whether we are one, two, three or four years late in amending the Canada Labour Code. The important thing is not to look back but to look at what we have before us today, a number of long awaited amendments that will considerably improve the Canada Labour Code—that I am sure—amendments that will help Canadian workers in their job environment, amendments wished for by all the major labour organizations in Canada. These amendments, because they are not excessive and strike a balance in the vast range of labour legislation in Canada, have been accepted by both labour and management.

Mr. Speaker, I am therefore prepared to assume that the Progressive Conservative Party labour relations critic is acting in good faith and I am also prepared to believe in the good faith and good intentions of the labour relations critic for the New Democratic Party. I therefore hope that the Parliamentary House Leaders, both on the Government and the Opposition sides, will be able to reach an agreement within the next few days so that Bill C-34 can be adopted as soon as possible.

I have received copies of some correspondence which I would like to quote. These are public documents, since these telegrams were sent to the Leader of the Government, the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party. Nevertheless, for the purposes of our debate today, I would like to have them read into the record.

I shall first recall, if I may, a letter sent a few days ago to the Leader of the Government in the House (Mr. Pinard) by the President of the Canadian Labour Congress, Dennis McDermott, who said, and I quote:

● (1220)

[English]

I am writing to express my support for Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Financial Administration Act.

While no piece of legislation is perfect, the proposals contained within this Bill are on balance most welcome. The task of consolidating health and safety within the federal jurisdiction is a large one and Cabinet is to be congratulated on bringing the process this far.

My concern is that these amendments may remain simply proposals and not be enacted into law. Both the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party have publicly expressed support for Bill C-34. I urge you to give the health and safety of Canadians working within the federal jurisdiction the highest priority and pass this Bill before the summer recess.

I can think of no more fitting conclusion to this session of Parliament and era of Government.

Yours sincerely,

Dennis McDermott
President

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, after reading this letter, I wrote to the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and the Leader of the New Democratic Party, urging them to tell their respective House Leaders to consult with the Government House Leader, in order to expedite the passage of this Bill through the House. I am waiting for a reply from the two Opposition leaders. I do not expect to receive a reply personally, but I hope that the Government House Leader will receive a positive answer from the Opposition House Leaders.

Another letter was sent to us recently by the Director of the Rehabilitation Institute of Ottawa, and I quote:

[English]

As an association working with disabled citizens in Ottawa Carleton, we are very pleased that our Government is proposing to change the Canada Labour Code, to ensure that any handicapped person employed in an occupation under the Federal Government will receive at least the minimum wage.

This amendment is long overdue and we encourage all members to pass this agreement as speedily as humanly possible. Thank you very much for your efforts to do this.

Yours sincerely,

Mary Anne van Gaal
Director of Services

This is a statement by a very important group in our society. I think it is clear that the objectives of this Bill are receiving considerable support from Canadians as a whole.

We also received a telegram from Montreal a few days ago, during the proceedings of the recent convention of the Canadian Labour Congress, and I quote:

[English]

Re amendments to the Canada Labour Code. I have sent a telegram today to the Prime Minsiter asking him to give us a firm undertaking for a set procedure under a rigid time table to see the amendments to the Code passed into law during the current session of Parliament. Delegates to the 15th constitutional convention of the Canadian Labour Congress here in Montreal have expressed very strong anxiety that the amendments to the Code be passed into law forthwith—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have received a host of letters and statements in support of this Bill, asking all three parties in the House to adopt the Bill as soon as possible. I do not intend to read through all this correspondence. We can of course lay it on the Table and perhaps expand on its contents when the Bill passes the second reading stage, if the Opposition parties ever agree with the Government to refer the Bill to the Standing Committee. However, I would like to mention the press release issued by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, dated May 24, in which the Council supports the proposed legislation and urges the Parliament of Canada to pass this Bill as soon as possible, and I quote:

The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women supports the amendments to the Canada Labour Code proposed by the federal Minister of Labour, André Ouellet, and hopes that the legislation will be adopted very shortly.

I think it is important to stress the major amendments proposed to the Canada Labour Code. These amendments are connected with Part III and deal with labour standards. It is in this part, more specifically, that the Government wishes to make major amendments to give women better protection on the labour market.

We are proposing a series of amendments that cover child care leave, which will mean that a mother who must obtain a certain amount of leave because she is going to have a baby will not be penalized as a result of this noble and important task she fulfils in our society. Consequently, the proposed amendments are concerned first of all with the period of continuous service required to be eligible for pregnancy leave. This period will be reduced from one year to three months. As a result, any employee who has been working at least three months for a company that is governed by the Canada Labour Code or who is working for the Canadian Government, will be eligible for pregnancy leave after three months' employment. This leave of absence which under the present legislation was seventeen weeks will now be increased by a period of leave in addition to the seventeen-week pregnancy leave. We are adding a leave of absence of twenty-four weeks for child care, which means that the mother who has a child and wants to take care of that child during the first months, during the time right after birth when the child needs its mother most, these mothers will now be able to take a leave of absence of forty-one weeks. In our modern society, however, it has now been recognized that both parents may participate actively in taking care of the children, and increasingly, fathers are sharing this responsibility.

That is why we have decided, with respect to the additional twenty-four weeks allowed for child care, to allow either parent to take the leave of absence. For instance, the mother could take the first twelve weeks and the father the remaining twelve of this additional twenty-four week period.

We also recognize the fact that whether a baby is born into the family or adopted, it needs special care. Consequently, pursuant to the proposed legislative amendments, this 24-week child care leave would be granted whether the child is natural or adopted.

More significant still, we have introduced a whole series of amendments to improve the job security of a mother who is temporarily forced to quit her job as a result of pregnancy. That is why we have strengthened the leave conditions and the guarantees that the mother will resume employment without losing the benefits to which she would normally have been entitled had she remained at work.

Considering that in our new and contemporary society there are ever more women in the labour force or a sizeable number of them who work on a part-time basis, we wanted to make sure that the annual paid leave of part-time employees will be covered just as if they were working full-time. Certain anomalies will thus be eliminated so that all part-time employees will be eligible for annual paid leave calculated on the basis of their working time.

I should like to refer briefly to the amendments related to sexual harassment. We acknowledge that any working individual is entitled to full respect for his or her dignity as a human being and that he or she must not come under any undue and unacceptable pressure in our modern society, nor should he or she be subjected to blackmail with respect to promotion or preferred treatment. That is why the Canada Labour Code will contain a very specific definition of sexual harassment. Employers will be expected to make a mandatory policy statement on sexual harassment, and indeed to make sure that sanctions and penalties will be imposed should there be evidence of sexual harassment in the work place. We feel that such provisions flow from the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and we believe that those amendments to the Canada Labour Code will guarantee that all Canadian workers, men and women alike, will be better protected.

A series of amendments to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code have to do with work safety. We think that those amendments are very important because, for the first time, the Labour Code will cover all workers and all Government employees, a measure which had been strongly advocated by all major Canadian unions and more particularly by Canada's Labour Code will henceforth apply to transport and offshore resource-based industries as well as to all people who work aboard aircraft and ships or who belong to the Public Service of Canada. What will be interesting is that, wherever there are more than 20 employees, we shall require that there be work safety and health committees; these committees will be mandatory, and the Act will specify the responsibilities of both employer and employees in the area of work safety and health.

It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that there are too many accidents on the job and that lives are lost and serious injuries occur in the work place because of negligence. If we could cut down significantly the number of days lost because of work-related injuries, we would all benefit from it. I therefore submit that the amendments we are proposing to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code will be a step in the right direction to ensure that employers and employees will assume their responsibilities in a more serious way where work safety and health are concerned.

Finally, we will be proposing a series of amendments to Part V of the Canada Labour Code to ensure that the work of the Canada Labour Relations Board is done more efficiently and is better coordinated with regard to the objectives set when the board was appointed. Certain amendments are to be proposed to the provisions on technological change to ensure that the workers are better informed by their employers of their plans to implement technological changes.

In closing, I would like to remind the House that the Government is suggesting the mandatory deduction of union dues, which has long been requested by the unions. I therefore believe that this series of amendments is justified and long overdue, and I hope that all the Members of this House will soon be approving them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. Are there any questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen).

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to what the Minister had to say. He went on at great length to describe his concern about health in the workplace and to make sure that there would be no time lost through accidents. I think his phrase was that we would all be the richer if there was less time lost on account of accidents.

I have walked around Parliament Hill. The Department of Public Works is very busy doing construction work to make sure that these buildings are maintained. I have watched them working with diamond-tooth saws. They are breathing in clouds of pulverized stone and concrete and not one of them is wearing a mask. Has the Minister walked around the Hill to see how many of those workers are wearing hard hats?

If the Minister is so concerned about health in the workplace and time lost because of accidents, why do we not have the most minimal, even 1900 health standards enforced on the Hill for construction workers? If he is really concerned about workers in the workplace, why does he allow employees of the Government to breathe in those clouds of dust and become walking silicosis cases? If it is necessary to pass legislation to enforce this kind of minimum health standard, surely there is no heart left in the Government. I would ask the Minister to respond to that.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to give my hon. friend a lecture on labour affairs, but I would at least hope that, as a Member of the Parliament of Canada, he should know who comes under the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code and who comes under the jurisdiction of the various provincial Departments of Labour. Construction workers come under provincial jurisdiction. In all Provinces, construction workers come under provincial jurisdiction except for the workers in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, who are covered by the Canada Labour Code.

I have taken note of the comments made by the Hon. Member. I shall immediately advise the provincial authorities in Ontario that there could be negligence on the work site right here on Parliament Hill to make sure that elementary precautions are taken. However, I want to inform the Hon. Member right now that these construction workers are not federal Government employees.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Minister (Mr. Ouellet) on this legislation which will amend the Canada Labour Code and Financial Administration Act, namely Bill C-34. These amendments concern pension, health and disability benefits and occupational safety and health standards. However, after reading the Bill carefully and listening to the Minister, I find there is one point on which I would have liked to hear his comments, although it may not be directly related to the Canada Labour Code. I am thinking of an instance where I received many representations from employees of a transport company which had received a certain amount of money from the federal Government to ensure its survival. Unfortunately, employees who had been with the company for fifteen or twenty years received no protection whatsoever with respect to their salaries or pension plans, despite the federal subsidy.

I would like to ask the Minister, even if this falls under provincial jurisdiction, whether, when the federal Government agrees to provide subsidies, it could ensure that the employees concerned have some protection, not only for their salaries but their pension plans as well, and whether it could perhaps add an amendment to give them that protection under this legislation. When we see employees with twenty years of service who worked all their lives for a company, who have families and then overnight, the company goes bankrupt and shuts down . . . The employee is the big loser: he not only loses his salary, he also loses his pension plan. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we could look for ways, perhaps in consultation with the provinces, to make sure the employee loses neither his salary nor his pension plan.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that the whole issue of Government subsidies to the private sector should be examined, especially in the present situation, by all three social partners, that is, employers, unions and governments. Personally, I would like to see as one of the conditions for Government subsidies that a company would have the obligation to consult its employees and, if possible, obtain their support for improving, expanding and modernizing its facilities.

Very often if not always, subsidies granted companies have not been particularly welcome to workers who were then displaced by machines. The Government was supposed to be helping the company modernize its facilities, which often meant that a number of jobs would be lost.

I think I understand the Hon. Member, who would like to see greater social responsibility among companies that receive Government subsidies. I think that in future, we should strive for more direct involvement of employees in a process where the federal or provincial governments are helping companies with substantial funding to modernize their facilities or to get established in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows, I have asked him and his predecessors a number of times over the years when this legislation would finally be introduced into the House of Commons. I am glad to see it is here. I would like to see it passed and become law.

After hearing the official spokesman for the Conservative Party talk about long and lengthy debate and long and lengthy hearings, would the Minister not agree that the best way to ensure the passage of this legislation, that the best way to ensure those workers will gain the protection of a vastly improved Canada Labour Code, that the best way to make sure there is at least some minimal mention of technological change, and that the best way to ensure some improvement in maternity leave benefits, would be for a House order which would guarantee the legislation would come back to this House for final vote prior to the June recess?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Minister has one minute in which to answer the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes.

[English]

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, the Minister was very selective in tabling his correspondence. Would he table all correspondence he has received recently that relates to opinions expressing either concern or support for the legislation? I am sure that would help all of us.

It is not a matter of whether the Bill will or will not be passed or what changes are made or may be suggested to it; the important decision to make is whether the Government is committed to providing time for debate in the House of Commons. If so, how many days can the Minister gain? How much time can the Minister gain from his House Leader in the House of Commons in order that the Bill get to committee? And when it gets to committee, is he looking to allow—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. This puts an end to the period allotted for questions and comments. We are now resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is a shame the Minister did not have time to answer the question posed by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). Partly what we are engaged in today on an Opposition day is a debate about who is to blame. This Parliament has sat for well over four years now. For the first time, just recently we have seen some proposed amendments to the Canada Labour Code. The Member from the New Democratic Party said he has been pushing for amendments to come forward for quite some time. I think that is probably true. Certainly the previous critic for the Conservative Party, the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis), has pushed for years for amendments. Given the kind of unanimity found in the Opposition Parties that amendments to the Canada Labour Code are necessary and desirable, that the health and safety of workers are at risk and need to be protected, it is very curious that we suddenly see a proposed set of amendments so close to a federal general election.

Sitting here and listening to the debate it is very clear, given the fairly long-standing lead of the Conservative Party in the Gallup poll, that both the Liberals and the New Democrats, the socialist alliance which we have faced year in and year out in this country, have got together in a fashion designed, hopefully for them to erode the popularity of the Conservative Party of Canada and to replace it with popularity for either the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party.

I wonder whether or not we are looking at these amendments in the month of June, 1984 from the right perspective. Normally when a piece of legislation is before the House, it is the obligation of Members of Parliament to vet it, to see that it gets to committee, to hold hearings and to decide whether or not it is worded as well as it can be, whether or not it deals with the real problem, whether or not it is designed to provide a real solution. That is the normal practice. However, standing here today I am wondering whether this legislation is being brought forward solely for the purpose of electoral gain. I am wondering whether or not there is any motivation lying behind the legislation which deals with the health and safety of workers, the concerns of women and the concern for technology.

Last week the New Democratic Party brought forward a motion which was very similar to the one we are debating today. The first two or three lines of it were identical, but the last two lines read "at the mercy of long-standing Conservative resistance to such improvements in labour legislation". In that motion they attempted to indicate that the Conservatives were against labour legislation to protect health and safety.

Not only is that false, it is particularly vicious. I do not know a single Member of the House of Commons of any political persuasion—an independent or a Party member—who is not concerned about the health and safety of working Canadians. Surely every Member of Parliament is concerned about that. Given that concern, why have we not had this legislation before us? Given the fact that it has been introduced in the House and has received first reading, why do we require an Opposition day urging the Government to bring it forward for consideration, movement to committee and passage? The only explanation I can come up with is that there are some political shenanigans at work here.

When I look at the beheviour of the New Democratic Party, I see that some of its members in high profile positions, such as the heads of major labour unions in the country, have written to the Minister urging him to pass this piece of legislation. I hear members of that Party urging its passage as well in the House of Commons. On the other hand there are secret meetings between House Leaders in which they are supposed to reach agreement. They are not reaching agreement. I see NDP members filibustering other pieces of legislation such as the one dealing with mortgage insurance. I wonder whether we have a little shell game going on. They say that we need the legislation and that they want it, but if we dig underneath their motivation, perhaps we find that it serves the interests of NDP members to go into the next federal general election without the passage of this Bill. They need to be able to put out brochures and to say in their speeches that in four years of Parliament we did not provide improved health and safety regulations in the Canada Labour Code, that we did not provide protection for women or deal with technological change in the Code. The two mainline Parties, in particular the Conservatives, do not care about such things.

If we had been in government, there would have been changes to the Canada Labour Code. In the month of June, 1984 we should look very carefully at the behaviour of NDP members. Are they really the Party in this Chamber which has the most to gain in electoral terms if this piece of legislation does not pass? If that is true, what kind of behaviour would we expect? We would expect to find filibuster behaviour in terms of other pieces of legislation designed to choke the House and to ensure that before it adjourns there is not sufficient time for this particular piece of legislation to pass.

That hypothesis can be confirmed by those who happen to be addicts of Hansard and like to look at the pattern of speeches of Hon. Members and the amount of time spent. If that is the case, I guess today is kind of an exercise in hot air. Certainly the New Democratic Party House Leader and its Leader have the power to hold up this piece of legislation for the remaining 23 or 24 sitting days before the House adjourns. They can do it unobtrusively, by filibustering other pieces of legislation and not attacking this one directly, so that they can create an impression with the general public that they really want it passed when in fact they do not.

I wish to draw to the attention of the House that it is the Conservative Party of Canada which in the year 1984 has a Leader with a lifetime of experience with the labour movement. It is the Conservative Party of Canada which has a Leader which labour movement leaders and labour union leaders respect, know and understand. The labour union movement understands the importance of and need for health and safety regulations. It is the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada which has that kind of Leader. We do not have an academic from McGill law school such as the one who is leaving the leadership of the Liberal Party, someone who never got his two feet on the ground. Will he be replaced with a Bay Street lawyer who is part of the Canadian Pacific board of directors and receives $15,000 per meeting? Will he be replaced with the petit gars from Shawinigan? Will we create a Prime Minister out of the current Leader of the New Democratic Party, another academic, a historian? Will we have after the next federal general election a government which is committed to the people?

That is to what a Conservative Government would be committed. We are committed to assisting people to maximize their talents, to maximize their energy and to maximize their creativity. That cannot be done from an academic, airy-fairy, ivory-towered perspective. That can be done by a Leader and by Members who have their feet on the ground, have lived in the real world, have been employees, have been labour union members, have been managers and investors. Those kinds of people, pragmatic and practical people, are what the country needs at all levels of the economy if we are to grow, eliminate poverty and have a fair deal for women. It is only the Conservative Party of Canada which provides the mix of talents, background and experience which the country needs.

I see that it is almost one o'clock. Since I have a few minutes remaining, perhaps I could continue after the luncheon break.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

REDRESS SOUGHT FOR JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my riding includes many hundreds of Canadians of Japanese ancestry who saw their homes, automobiles, and fishing boats confiscated during World War II. I have thus followed with considerable interest the renewed debate over compensation for these Canadians.

I disagree strongly with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who, some weeks ago, said that we should not try to correct the injustices of the past. Every injustice is technically a thing of the past the moment it is committed, but that does not absolve a Government from its obligation to right such injustice. I was also skeptical when the Prime Minister told the House that the Charter of Rights would prevent future Governments from taking such actions, in view of the fact that the Charter of Rights does not recognize the right to own and enjoy property. I thus asked the Library of Parliament to study this specific subject.

It is clear from the findings of the Library of Parliament that the lack of a property rights clause in the Charter of Rights seriously undermines its effectiveness in preventing the arbitrary confiscation of property by Governments. Some have said that because the War Measures Act overrides the Charter, a property rights clause would not help, but the Library of Parliament study indicates that a property rights clause would definitely discourage the illegal confiscation of property. I thus call on the Government not only to take steps to compensate Canadians of Japanese ancestry for this confiscation of their property, but also to add a clause to the Charter of Rights to ensure that future generations will have the right to the use and enjoyment of property.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

HISTORIC EVENTS

FOUR HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF JACQUES CARTIER'S FIRST VOYAGE TO CANADA

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House and all Canadian men and women to a series of events which will commemorate the 450th Anniversary of Jacques Cartier's first voyage to Canada. Mr. Speaker, you are certainly aware that the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) is now in Saint-Malo, the French port from which Jacques Cartier sailed on his historic voyage. It is on July 26, 1534, on the shores of Gaspé, that American Indians welcomed for the first time this courageous navigator and his men. There, in several towns and villages, ceremonies will take place this summer to commemorate this major event in the history of our great and beautiful country. A most spectacular show will be the getting together of the tall ships which is scheduled to take place in the Bay of Gaspé June 17 to 20. An equally awe-inspiring display will take place on July 24 to commemorate the 450th Anniversary of Jacques Cartier's arrival in Gaspé.

Through its job creation programs, the subsidies provided by the Hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal), as well as those provided by the Hon. Minister for Supply and Services (Mr. Charles Lapointe) who is responsible for these 1984 celebrations, as well as the assistance of several other departments, the Government of Canada is contributing over $1.5 million to the success of these celebrations. Celebrations on such a large scale have never taken place there. We are therefore looking forward to seeing you all in the Gaspé area, the cradle of Canada.

TOURISM

IMPOSITION OF TAX ON UNITED STATES TOURIST LITERATURE—CONSEQUENCES FOR CANADA

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, a 9 per cent sales tax is imposed on tourist material imported to Canada from the United States. It now appears that this will have serious repercussions on the tourist industry in Canada, especially in the area of our promotion in the U.S.A. Since Revenue Canada has decided to uphold its decision to impose the tax, it now appears that a Bill may be passed in Congress to impose a similar tax on Canadian literature entering the United States.

It would seem appropriate that the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Smith) should make strong representations to his Cabinet colleagues with a view to repealing the tax imposed on literature entering Canada. Otherwise, similar legislation in the United States will not only nullify the effect of our legislation, but cause financial hardship to those who make their living by promoting this country in the United States. If these people decide to pull out, there could be a great loss of tourist business in Canada. This will push the unemployment figures higher. Tourism is labour intensive. We need an atmosphere that is conducive to creating jobs, jobs, jobs for Canadians.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT PRISONER OF WAR COMPENSATION FOR DIEPPE VETERANS BE REVISED

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, considering the various representations made in the past by the Dieppe prisoners of war who were kept in chains for 18 months and were subjected to every kind of bad treatment, such as undernourishment and unsanitary living conditions, and who were held in captivity for 36 months; considering that a number of them demonstrated on Parliament Hill at noon today, the 40th anniversary of D-Day, when Canadian troops landed in Normandy; for all those reasons, I think that the Government should review the scale of compensation automatically paid to former prisoners of war in Europe, which now ranges from 10 to 20 per cent, and increase to at least 30 per cent or more the compensation paid to former Dieppe prisoners of war who were involved in a very ill-conceived military operation which proved to be the worst fiasco of World War II.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO IMPACT OF ALCAN PROJECT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, earlier this year the Department of Fisheries and Oceans held meetings in various locations in British Columbia to hear the views of the public on Alcan's Kemano II Project. It was clear beyond a reasonable doubt that the affected public want a full public inquiry. This has been reported to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) by his own officials.

Last week, following discussions with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, he agreed with me that a full public inquiry under the Federal Inquiries Act is warranted. His officials have contacted me regarding the drawing up of terms of reference, structure of the inquiry itself, costs of the inquiry, level of intervenor funding, access to intervenor funding, expected duration of the process, and implementation of the inquiry. They have now asked publicly for suggestions for a chairperson.

In light of the fact that the Province of British Columbia has offered an unreasonably inadequate process to evaluate the benefits, impacts, and alternatives for power supply to new aluminum smelters which are widely supported in northern

B.C., it is the responsibility of the Minister today to rise in his place and announce the implementation of a full public inquiry into Alcan's hydroelectric project.

We in this House recognize that there will be some costs for an inquiry, but these are small when compared with the effects of the major diversion of water which will take 88 per cent of the Nechako, lower the Fraser River by three feet at Hell's Gate, join the Fraser and Skeena Rivers, and have major impact on fish stocks. The Minister must act, and I trust the Minister will announce the Kemano inquiry today.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR AID FOR RESIDENTS OF ASBESTOS, P.Q.

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, the Johns Manville Asbestos mining company announced that more than 225 workers would be laid off beginning next September 1. A few years ago, this mining company was providing work for over 2,700 people.

Next September, only 950 people will be working for the J.M. Asbestos Company. This disastrous situation has two underlying causes: first, the world market for asbestos is weak, and second, the Johns Manville Asbestos, a private company, having to compete with other asbestos companies owned by the Quebec Government, has been operating in spite of substantial deficits.

The town of Asbestos, which is a very important community in my constituency, has lost in excess of 1,500 very well-paid jobs. As this is a one-industry town, the results are simply terrible and tragic.

The Quebec Government having completely ignored this community, I urge the Canadian Government to take action and help the people of Asbestos.

Twice already, our Government has intervened, first by designating the region and later on, by providing assistance under the NEED program and by way of Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Once more, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully but firmly request an immediate intervention by the Government to help the Asbestos area and spare us a second Schefferville.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

LOCATION OF JAPANESE CAR ASSEMBLY PLANT AT ALLISTON, ONT.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, the residents of the Town of Alliston and the riding of Simcoe South are smiling proudly today in the wake of the announcement that Honda Motors will be building its new assembly plant in Tecumseth Township. As the Member of Parliament for this dynamic riding, let me welcome Honda to Alliston, and let me congratulate it on its far-sightedness in choosing this location for its $100 million venture.

My good friends, Oak Gray, the Mayor of Alliston; Reeve Alan Glasford of Tecumseth Township, and the Hon. George McCague, MPP for Dufferin-Simcoe, are the type of progressive, forward thinking gentlemen who will ensure that both Honda and the surrounding communities will achieve the utmost benefit from this initiative.

When Honda goes looking for the 350 employees to run its plant, it will not have to go far. The labour force in Simcoe South is high calibre, dedicated, and equal to the task of operating one of Canada's newest and most modern industries. The area's network of transportation is second to none.

It is especially gratifying for me to watch Alliston, the birthplace of my mother, continue to grow and prosper. Mr. Speaker, to Honda Motors, let me say this: Kangei no i wo hyoshemasu.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DECLARATION MADE BY QUEBEC SOCIAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the statement made by Dr. Laurin, Quebec Minister for Social Affairs, concerning the Old Age Security pensions and other pensions for Quebec senior citizens, I wish to say that during a visit to Manoir des Îles in Laval, I would like to officially register on behalf of the government of Canada objection to Dr. Laurin's request for a transfer of, any program either through tax points or transfer payments, to the Province of Quebec. Considering the attitude of that province's Premier towards senior citizens who, in his opinion, are against Item No. 1 of the PQ's platform dealing with Quebec's separation, Mr. Speaker, seniors citizens are urging us to oppose any change to the Old Age Security scheme or the Guaranteed Income Supplement or any other Quebec pension plan.

METRIC CONVERSION

EFFECT OF ORDER IN COUNCIL ON TEXTILE IMPORT TARIFF COLLECTION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the metric madness of the Government of Canada continues to create havoc with the business community. By an Order in Council passed on May 17, but not communicated to anyone, the Government attempted to convert some of the customs tariff items in the 50,000 tariff series from imperial to metric. Canada Customs found out about the regulation on May 25 and, without telling the industry, tried to enforce the regulations on May 30 and May 31. There was havoc. The regulations have since been suspended. Fortunately, or unfortunately, the regulations only covered part of textile imports.

As a consequence, computer programs designed to convert imperial to metric cannot be used by customs brokers and others in attempting to comply with the regulations.

When will the Government wake up to the fact that business, indeed people generally, should have the right to measure things the way they want to measure things? When will the Government stop trying to change a measurement system without notification, and without understanding how that system works in the real world? In short, when can we have an opportunity to elect a Government which is prepared to co-operate with business?

The Order in Council affecting the 50,000 tariff series should be revoked forthwith.

CRIMINAL CODE

PORNOGRAPHY—SEIZURE OF VIDEO TAPES AT ART FESTIVAL

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the confiscation of video tapes by police at an international video art festival is the sort of thing which gives all of us who are concerned with violent pornography, a bad name. This is not to suggest that artists should be above the law. No one should be. However, it is to say that the police and departments of the Attorney General should exercise some common sense in deciding who are the real culprits and who deserves to have the full force of the law brought against them. There is real, serious, violent, and dangerous pornography out there. I continue to receive complaints from women's organizations that the complaints they take to the police are not being acted on.

The police, of course, are hampered by the loopholes in the current law, and that is something we could be doing something about here in Parliament. The Criminal Code amendments have still not been brought forward for second reading. It has been nearly a year since we had the draft legislation. It will require serious action on the part of Parliament to amend the Criminal Code and the Broadcasting Act to deal with pornography. It will also require vigorous enforcement. Let us hope that will be wise and well directed enforcement on the part of provincial authorities, and not a witch hunt against merely technical infringements of the law.

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—STATISTICS CANADA ANALYSIS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I would like to point out to the Minister that the Canadian dollar at noon today, in terms of the U.S. dollar, stood at 76.89 cents. It is just about down to the historic low, the lowest value the Canadian dollar has ever had in terms of the U.S. dollar.

I would also like to refer the Minister to the current economic analysis of Statistics Canada which was issued yesterday. It was stated in that analysis that the Canadian economy grew more slowly in the first quarter of this year than in the last quarter of 1983, and that low rates of growth will likely persist. Statistics Canada came to the conclusion that external demand, which provided most of the strength in recent quarters, has lost vigour; that real net exports have declined; that the already weak growth of domestic demand has persisted, and that the slowdown will continue beyond the first half of 1984. It is stated that growth has slowed to a pace which is insufficient to reduce unemployment. These are the conclusions of Statistics Canada, an official government agency.

Will the Minister tell the House, in view of the fact that his Budget has been a complete failure and that the economy is deteriorating around us, what plans the Government has to stop the further unravelling of the Canadian economy? The Minister is presiding over the dissolution of the Canadian economy. What plans has he to overcome these conclusions and these facts which I have just read to him from the report of Statistics Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my colleague could not only have read from the Statistics Canada publication; he could have read from the Budget Speech which I delivered in this House on February 15, at which time I indicated that there would be a slowdown in the rate of growth which we had known in the last year, particularly in the last quarter of last year. At that time the rate of real growth was close to between 6.5 per cent and 7 per cent. That was such a high rate of growth it could not be sustained over an extended period of time, and one should expect a slower rate of growth.

What is important to note, however, is that the economy is continuing to grow and that a more moderate rate of growth is something we will be able to sustain over a longer period without the resumption of inflation. That will ensure that we will have, indeed, stable growth over an extended period. I have stated this repeatedly, and I have stated it in the Budget. My friend should not be very surprised. This has been forecast and foreseen for quite a long time.

MINISTER'S PLANS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Even supposing that the Minister had forecast what he said he forecast, that does not help the 1,500,000 unemployed Canadians who are now being told that domestic demand remained—and I quote from Statistics Canada—"about 2 per cent below its pre-recession peak". They are being told that growth has slowed to a pace insufficient to reduce unemployment. Unemployment cannot be reduced because of the reduction in domestic demand. They are being told that there is a deterioration of labour market conditions. They do not want to hear the Minister say he forecast this. What is the Minister going to do about the misery which he forecast? That is what the Canadian people want to know.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in the Budget a number of measures which I invite my friend to take into account. Second, I invite the Hon. Member and his Party to support those measures when they take the form of legislation before the House, in order to ensure that this legislation is passed quickly so it will benefit the Canadian people.

I indicated, indeed, that the level of unemployment would remain too high, from our point of view, that it would take time to come down, and that we expected it to come down gradually. The economy, as I said, is still growing, and we are going to pursue a steady pace of stimulation of the economy as was contained in the Budget. I invite my friend to support the measures we have put before the House. That would be a first step on the part of the Opposition, rather than just crying at the wailing wall.

● (1420)

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not put before the House any measures which will help this situation. In the February Budget he said he was delighted that he was not going to be affecting the economy. He has proposed no measures that this House can adopt which will help in this situation.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CALL GENERAL ELECTION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, Statistics Canada points out a weakening in housing starts, domestic auto sales, and exports, and that we can anticipate a slowdown in all interest rate sensitive industries. In area after area disaster stares us in the face. When will the Minister stop watching the shell game going on with the seven Liberal contenders? When will the Government start to govern, or call an election so we can do something to stop this?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can hear my hon. friend whistling in the dark. I think that having had a taste, fortunately very short, of a Progressive Conservative administration, Canadians lost it very quickly. Since then, the Progressive Conservative Party has chosen a new leader whose record is quite clear: Schefferville is a case in point. If this is the alternative which the Progressive Conservative Party is suggesting for the economic future of Canada, I think that Canadians generally and Quebecers in particular will have no difficulty making up their minds. When the election comes, Mr. Speaker, we shall put forward for all voters to see not only what we have achieved so far, but also what we are planning to do to ensure an uninterrupted economic recovery, contrary to the "return to the past" sort of backward policy of the Progressive Conservative Party which is reflected in the Schefferville situation.

DECLINE IN HOUSING STARTS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to ask the Minister of Finance if they are going to present 11.4 per cent unemployment to the Canadian people, but what I really want to ask him about is housing. He will know that 2.3 jobs are produced for every housing start, that is, jobs for backhoe operators, carpenters, plumbers, forest workers, and jobs in factories which produce such things as kitchen sinks. There are also jobs in building supply stores, and listings for real estate agents. Housing starts are directly linked to mortgage interest rates, and housing starts are down and mortgage interest rates are up. What prospects does the Minister of Finance see for employment in the housing industry in the next six months?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the previous questioner said that the Budget did not contain measures, and the Hon. Member is now talking about housing starts. I remind the Official Opposition that there is before this House a Bill which provides for mortgage interest rate protection. It has been submitted to the House for consideration and early approval. It has the support of all organizations in the housing field in Canada, including the Canadian Construction Association and the Canadian Consumers' Association. But what do we see? We see the Opposition dragging its feet on a Bill supported by everyone in Canada except themselves.

Mr. La Salle: Not us!

Mr. Lalonde: They are just dragging their feet on a Bill which has the unanimous support of every organization in the country. Who is dragging it out? The Opposition.

Mr. McDermid: Who?

Mr. Lalonde: The Opposition is dragging it out.

Some Hon. Members: Nonsense.

Mr. Lalonde: If they were sincere in their concern for the housing industry and home owners, they would make sure that we get approval of this Bill which will be of significant benefit to Canadian home owners.

Mr. Lewis: First, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Minister that it is the NDP who are against this Bill, not the Progressive Conservatives.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Second, the Minister went to the banks and the trust companies. If he went to representatives of the real estate industry at the level of CREA and OREA, the local real estate boards, he would know that they are unanimous in saying that this Bill will not strengthen the industry; it is only a safety net.

REASON FOR DECLINE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not agree that the real reason housing starts are down and the housing industry is in a slump is the extended period of unemployment for the past four years under this Government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the Hon. Member's question probably lies in a small comparison. Housing starts in the United States went down 26 per cent last month, more than in Canada. The Hon. Member likes to brag every once in a while that the U.S. has had a significant decline in unemployment. I would think he would have to look a little bit further than just the unemployment figure for an explanation of the question he has raised.

Mr. Lewis: We will not get it from you, that is for sure.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT TAX INCENTIVE PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR CHANGE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday I asked the Minister if he would confirm that under the Government's R and D tax benefit program it was possible for a large corporation to obtain millions of dollars in benefits without doing any R and D. Essentially I suggested this was possible because of paper transactions, and I cited the case of Imperial Oil. The Minister denied it. Well, this morning I contacted Imperial Oil, talked to people in their tax department, and they have confirmed that what I said is the case.

Will the Minister admit that he was wrong yesterday and acknowledge that a company like Imperial Oil, under this program, can obtain not a thousand, not millions, but hundreds of millions of dollars in benefits without doing the R and D itself? Secondly, will he change the program to make it impossible for any company to gain a windfall from this program and make it impossible for R and D funds to be used for anything other than R and D?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know, and I am sure he does, that you cannot have the R and D performed before the credits have been acquired. Those credits are acquired to perform research and development. If no research and development take place, those companies are going to be liable to pay the taxes they would otherwise have to pay under Part VIII of the Act.

Mr. Broadbent: No, no.

Mr. Lalonde: I invite my friend at least to consult a lawyer or accountant if he cannot find the facts for himself.

IMPERIAL OIL CORPORATION—ELIGIBILITY FOR BENEFITS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister not only gave us a wrong estimate in his Budget when he said this would only cost $100 million, and it is going to cost $1 billion, but he is now suggesting he does not know what he is talking about. I say that with care, because I have looked into it with care.

Is the Minister telling the House that it is impossible for Imperial Oil to obtain millions of dollars in benefits under this program without doing the R and D itself? Or is he saying that Imperial Oil has to do the R and D to get that benefit?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): The Hon. Member is hard of hearing, or something, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blaikie: We cannot believe what we are hearing.

Mr. Lalonde: I have indicated that before you perform the research and development you have to acquire the credit. That is what the companies are doing. They are acquiring the tax credits on the basis of R and D that they will perform. If they do not perform research and development then they become liable for the equivalent amount of the tax credit from which they would have benefited. This is quite clear.

Mr. Blaikie: Answer the question.

Mr. Lalonde: I have answered the question.

Mr. Blaikie: No, you have not.

Mr. Lalonde: Well, open your ears, my friend. I am sorry. If you cannot understand that, then there are lots of things in life you will not understand.

Mr. Blaikie: I do not understand Liberals.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Minister is factually wrong. Imperial Oil can get a tax benefit even if the R and D he is talking about is performed by another company. The Minister should check his facts, because that is the case.

• (1430)

PAYMENT IN ADVANCE OF WORK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Under this program there is another deficiency, namely, that the taxpayer is providing millions of dollars before the R and D is actually done, in terms of the benefit. Certain officials of the Department of Revenue have acknowledged that the taxpayer may be left holding the bag because the R and D may never be done. Will the Minister change the program to ensure that, before any benefit goes out to any company, it must do the R and D?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Definitely not, Mr. Speaker. The recommendation made by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is a ridiculous one.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE CONFIRM STATISTICS CANADA PROJECTIONS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance.

In view of the forecasts published yesterday by Statistics Canada—and in spite of everything that the Minister of Finance can promise Canadians and all the encouragement he can give them about our economic prospects, the fact remains that, according to Statistics Canada, as the Minister will have to recognize, the rate of unemployment, which was 11.3 per cent in September 1983, now stands at 11.4 per cent. In spite of all the commitments and promises made by the Minister of Finance, unemployment is still about the same.

Would I be pressing the Minister too much if I asked him to confirm to the Canadian people that we shall have to live with an unemployment rate exceeding 11 per cent during the next few months or years? If his answer does not tie in with what I have just stated, we would like him to prove what he says.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the forecasts voiced by the Hon. Member for Joliette would match the projections conceived by a Progressive Conservative Government. I can tell him that our own projections are contained in my Budget and clearly show a gradual and regular decrease in unemployment during the forthcoming months and years. It is quite possible in fact that, with a Progressive-Conservative Government, unemployment could well exceed 11 per cent.

REQUEST FOR DETAILED INFORMATION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, it is rather surprising to hear the Finance Minister's reply in view of the fact that, during the last fifteen years, the number of unemployed has jumped from 300,000 to close to two million taking into account all the people that have been dropped from the unemployment rolls.

The Minister of Finance keeps referring to Schefferville, but he does not say that there have been thousands and thousands of shutdowns. In Canada we have had thousands of plant shutdowns because of a lack of adequate policies.

I would like to direct my question once more to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that it has been established that his projections were inaccurate over a long period of time, and since Statistics Canada tells us that unemployment will remain at around 11 per cent even though the Minister says the opposite, as a result of the performance of the Government, can the Minister confirm that the rate of unemployment in Canada fall down below 11 per cent within the next six or twelve months? If not, will he be honest enough to stop lying to the Canadian people as he has being doing for too long?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentions thousands of shut-downs. He could have referred to a single one, the one which boarded up half of the North Shore communities because of the action of the Leader of the Official Opposition when he was in business! He could have said so many things about the situation in Schefferville, which is now a ghost town because of the decisions made when his Leader was a big man in the private sector. The record is clear in this regard.

On the other hand, I would remind the Hon. Member that, since 1968, for instance, Canada has created four million jobs. The labour force has increased by 40 per cent in Canada, and this is the highest rating among all industrialized countries, including the United States, for which the figure is about 30 per cent. The Hon. Member will realize that, of all the industrialized countries, Canada has created the largest number of jobs during the past fifteen years. Canada ranks first among all industrialized countries!

The record is therefore clear in this regard. However, as I have stated myself stated, unemployment is still too high. We have taken direct action to promote job creation in Canada. We have promoted investment and job creation by the private sector. We shall continue to do so and our objective is to bring down unemployment in Canada as quickly as possible, especially in Quebec, since the Hon. Member must be more familiar with the situation in that Province.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for St. John's East.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is with regard to the use of the unemployment insurance fund to train the unemployed. In the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I will defer my question.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LAY-OFFS AT URANIUM CITY, SASK.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, who talks about shutdowns of towns. When he was Minister of Energy he not only shut down a mine, but the whole town of Uranium City, Saskatchewan. The heartless act of the Minister of Finance put four times more people out of work than were put out of work in Schefferville. These people are still suffering.

The Government, through the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, has complimented our Leader with respect to the humane way in which he, as president of that corporation, treated the people who were unfortunately laid off in that town. With all the resources of the Government behind the Minister of Finance, what is he going to do to bring justice to those thousands of people who have been laid off at Uranium City? Is he heartless, or is he going to do something for those people?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that, when the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs wrote that letter, he was referring to the way the federal Government had made public funds available to the people who had been laid off as a result of the decision of that company. And if half the North Shore is still shut down today, we know who can be held responsible for that!

[English]

With regard to Uranium City, the Hon. Member knows—and I invite him to look at the record—that the Eldorado Mining Company has introduced the most generous scheme of any—

Mr. Mulroney: Oh no.

Mr. Lalonde: —company in Canada in terms of helping the people in that case where the mine had to close because it was absolutely uneconomical to operate.

Mr. Mulroney: Absolutely.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BRAINWASHING EXPERIMENTS FINANCED BY AMERICAN CIA—EXPRESSION OF APOLOGY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is with regard to the problems of the nine Canadians who were involved in brainwashing experiments conducted in Canada funded by the CIA. In January the Minister indicated that the United States Government had apologized for these experiments and that our Government was prepared to take the case to the International Court of Justice at The Hague if satisfaction was not obtained. Satisfaction has not been obtained.

The confidential apology received from the United States is useless to the nine people concerned, and an insult to Canada, particularly since the actions of the CIA were a violation of Canada's sovereignty. Is the Minister prepared to make the details of the apology public and to tell Canadians what officials from the U.S. State Department or the CIA expressed regret, and what they said? If not, why not?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question of the expression of apology or regrets has been covered already in the House and in correspondence. My predecessor, the present High Commissioner to London, addressed letters to Members of the Opposition when he was in this post. In them he stated that there had been an expression of regret by officials of the United States for the actions which had been taken at the Allan Memorial Institute. Furthermore, there is at least one member currently serving in the Department who recalls the oral transmission of these regrets to Canadian officials. I will be prepared to send that detailed information to the Hon. Member.

I do not think there is a written statement by an American official. There were expressions of regret. It was upon that fact that the former Minister made the assertions in letters to Members of Parliament at the time, several years ago.

• (1440)

REQUEST THAT CASE BE REFERRED TO INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the United States Government has thus far stonewalled all efforts to obtain compensation for the CIA's Canadian victims. There is no satisfaction in sight. Will the Minister now follow up his commitment to take the matter to the International Court of Justice at The Hague? If so, will he indicate when he might take such a step?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows that members of the Department are under standing ministerial instructions to pursue this case with vigor with the United States authorities. I can assure him that I have taken a personal interest in the case. I have followed it up as urgently as could be done in the circumstances, and will continue to do so. We have consistently taken the view that the actions of the CIA in funding the research constitutes an infringement of Canadian sovereignty. We intend to press the case forward with the United States diplomatically.

The Member has raised the question of the International Court of Justice. That is a serious proposal which he has made, and it is an action that could only be undertaken after very serious consideration.

LES ÉVÉNEMENTS HISTORIQUES

LA TRAGÉDIE D'UN GRAND VOILIER, LE MARQUES

M. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Monsieur le Président, ma question s'adresse à l'honorable ministre des Approvisionnements et Services et ministre responsable des Fêtes 1984. De grandes fêtes sont organisées du 17 juin à la fin d'août en Gaspésie pour célébrer le 450e anniversaire du premier voyage de Jacques Cartier, et les grands voiliers doivent séjourner dans la Baie de Gaspé du 17 au 20 juin. Suite à la tragédie du grand voilier Marques, près des Bermudes, est-ce que l'honorable ministre peut dire à la Chambre s'il prévoit des retards dans l'itinéraire prévu pour l'entrée de ces grands voiliers dans la Baie de Gaspé le 17 juin?

L'hon. Charles Lapointe (ministre des Approvisionnements et Services): Monsieur le Président, je remercie l'honorable député de sa question et également de l'intervention qu'il a faite au début de la reprise de la séance.

J'aimerais profiter de l'occasion, monsieur le Président, pour offrir, au nom du gouvernement canadien, nos plus vives condoléances aux familles des disparus dans le malheureux naufrage qui s'est produit près des Bermudes.

J'aimerais rassurer l'honorable député et mes collègues de la Chambre en disant que les événements nautiques prévus à Halifax, à Gaspé et à Québec, se produiront aux dates prévues et j'espère, comme l'a mentionné mon collègue, le député de Gaspé, que les Canadiens viendront en grand nombre sur la Côte-Est canadienne durant l'été, soit à Halifax, à Gaspé et à Québec, pour célébrer le 450e anniversaire de l'arrivée de Jacques Cartier.

LE RÔLE D'UN NAVIRE DE LA MARINE CANADIENNE

M. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax-Est): Monsieur le Président, je voudrais poser une brève question supplémentaire au ministre de la Défense nationale. Tout d'abord, voudrait-t-il bien féliciter l'équipage du navire The Assiniboine pour l'aide qu'il a apportée? En outre, nous dirait-il si le navire canadien a abandonné ses recherches ou s'il entend les poursuivre?

L'hon. J.-J. Blais (ministre de la Défense nationale): Monsieur le Président, je reviens à peine de la côte ouest où j'ai assisté, hier, aux funérailles du général Pearkes. Je débarque à l'instant de l'avion et je ne suis donc pas en mesure de renseigner le député. J'obtiendrai les renseignements demandés immédiatement et les lui transmettrai, je l'espère, avant la fin de la période des questions.

LES FINANCES

LA CONTRE-VALEUR DU DOLLAR—LES TAUX D'INTÉRÊT

M. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga-Sud): Monsieur le Président, ma question s'adresse au ministre des Finances. La dernière fois que le dollar est tombé à 76.80 c. c'était en juin 1982. A cette époque-là, le taux d'escompte était de 18.25 p. 100. Le ministre des Finances connaît pertinemment le lien étroit qui existe entre les taux d'intérêt et la situation de l'emploi. Jusqu'où les taux d'intérêt vont-ils monter? Atteindront-ils leur niveau de 1982?

L'hon. Marc Lalonde (ministre des Finances): Monsieur le Président, je tiens tout d'abord à dire au député de Saskatoon-Ouest que j'ai oublié de préciser une chose dans ma réponse . . .

Des voix: Oh, oh!

M. Lalonde: Je veux ajouter que la société Eldorado Mines est allée de l'avant et a investi 500 millions de dollars dans l'extraction de l'uranium à Key Lake, en Saskatchewan . . .

Des voix: Règlement!

M. Lalonde: . . . afin de créer des emplois pour certaines des personnes qui avaient perdu leur emploi à Uranium City ce que, j'en ai bien peur, la société Iron Ore n'a jamais fait. En fait, la société Eldorado participe à l'exploitation de la plus grosse mine d'uranium du monde. Je pourrais également ajouter . . .

M. le Président: J'invite l'honorable ministre à répondre à la question.

M. Lalonde: Oui, monsieur le Président. Je ne fais pas de pronostics sur les taux d'intérêt.

ON DEMANDE AU GOUVERNEMENT DE DÉCLENCHER DES ÉLECTIONS GÉNÉRALES

M. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga-Sud): Monsieur le Président, si le gouvernement l'ignore, les Canadiens savent par contre que si le cours du dollar baisse c'est parce que les investisseurs manquent de confiance dans le Canada à l'heure actuelle. Les Canadiens ont exprimé leur manque de confiance dans des sondages et le reste, en disant qu'à leur avis le taux de chômage augmenterait au cours de l'année. Ils pensent également que l'inflation va s'aggraver. Le manque de confiance est également apparent chez les investisseurs canadiens qui placent leur argent aux États-Unis où il y a de l'espoir, des débouchés, des emplois et des endroits où investir. Que fera le gouvernement? Se contentera-t-il de profiter des avantages que lui confère le pouvoir qu'il ne mérite plus ou déclenchera-t-il des élections? Que fera-t-il?

M. Crosbie: Déclenchez des élections, Marc.

L'hon. Marc Lalonde (ministre des Finances): Monsieur le Président, j'invite les conservateurs à se préparer à des élections qu'ils perdront de belle façon.

Des voix: Bravo!

M. Stevens: Allons-y.

Mr. Lalonde: However, as the Hon. Member knows, such a decision is taken not by the Minister of Finance but by the Prime Minister.

As far as the question of lack of confidence is concerned, I suppose the biggest lack of confidence that there is in this country is the lack of confidence that the Conservatives are showing in the country itself and the lack of confidence that they show in themselves.

In effect, if my friend looks around, he will have to explain why it is that the European currencies have been losing ground against the U.S. dollar month after month over the last two years.

Mr. Crosbie: What about the Canadian dollar? You are the Canadian Minister.

Mr. Lalonde: He will also have to explain why the Canadian dollar over-all has been gaining ground, over the last two years against the European currencies. He will have to reflect upon these facts again and find an explanation.

EMPLOYMENT

LOCATION OF MANPOWER OFFICES IN DUNNVILLE AND WELLAND, ONT.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Finance. My concern is jobs in Haldimand-Norfolk. The municipality of Dunnville has a population of approximately 11,000 and is textile and agricultural based. Dunnville is located 30 miles west of Welland, which is in a different constituency and is a large industrial centre. Yet Dunnville's Manpower office is a suboffice of Welland.

If Dunnville's unemployment figures are included with Welland's figures, it does not qualify for any programs that are related to textiles or agriculture.

We now have two more industries closing in the Dunnville area. Will the Minister take steps to separate the Dunnville employment office from the Welland office so that the residents of Dunnville can qualify for the job-creation programs that relate to their needs and not the needs of Welland?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry. May I ask the Hon. Member to repeat the question?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: What is going on over there?

Mr. Crosbie: You are shell shocked.

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member make his question short?

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I will try to make it short. The Minister was obviously too busy campaigning.

I pointed out the problem experienced by Dunnville in my constituency. Its Manpower office is a sub unit of the Welland office. Dunnville is textile and agriculturally based, but is tied into the population of Welland which is a large industrial area and does not qualify for any of the assistance programs related to textiles or agriculture.

Since we now have two more plants closing in the Dunnville area, which will put unemployment up to approximately 25 per cent, will the Minister take steps to separate the Dunnville Manpower office from the Welland Manpower office so that the residents of Dunnville can qualify for the job-creation programs that relate to their needs and not those of Welland?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, it is no surprise that I was unable to answer the first question which is the same as this one, because this issue is not a matter of my responsibility. It comes under Manpower and Immigration and the issue could have been addressed to the Acting Minister of Employment and Immigration or to the Parliamentary Secretary. This is how questions in the House are handled. They should be directed to the correct Minister.

NEED FOR EMPLOYMENT IN DUNNVILLE

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I pointed out at first that I was going to ask my question of the Minister of Employment and Immigration but, in his absence, I would put it to the Minister of Finance because employment is involved with finance. Without the dollars you cannot have programs. Therefore, I will put my question to the Acting Minister.

We are concerned that the history of this Government has been to put one million Canadians out of work. My people in Dunnville are concerned about jobs; they are concerned about employment, and they are concerned about making money to put food on the table to feed their families. What is this Government going to do to create employment for the people of Dunnville, and for textile and agricultural areas like it?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have taken as notice the Hon. Member's question concerning his riding. As to the situation which now exists in the textile and agricultural industries, the Career Access program administered by the Department of Employment and Immigration is providing financial assistance to help the unemployed train for other jobs. For the people in the textile and clothing industries, early retirement schemes implemented as a result of Bill C-172 being passed provide a measure of assistance. However, Employment and Immigration programs are made available through Canada Manpower Centres. I hope my hon. friend is referring the people who are seeking help to these centers which have money to help them. Concerning the particular situation of the two communities mentioned, I will inquire and reply to him at the next opportunity.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

COMMITTEE'S STUDY OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Last week, and again yesterday and today, the Minister attempted to ram his security Bill through the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, using closure. In view of the profound threat which this Bill poses to the fundamental civil liberties of all Canadians, allowing sweeping new intrusive powers, the targeting of law abiding Canadians, with no parliamentary oversight, why will the Minister not reconsider his position and agree—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is concerned about a question relating to a matter currently before a committee and a proceeding before a committee. The Hon. Member knows it is not in order to ask questions in the House on a matter which is before a committee at this time. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Burnaby on a supplementary question. Can he ask a question that is in order?

An Hon. Member: No.

REQUEST FOR SERIES OF PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the legislation in question, will the Minister agree to hold public hearings across Canada to allow those Canadian individuals and organizations that are so concerned about this massive assault on their civil liberties to be heard, rather than attempting to ram the Bill through the Justice Committee, using closure?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the question which arises is when does the time come for Parliament to make up its mind about an admittedly difficult but very important issue for the country.

An Hon. Member: It is not for you to judge.

Mr. Kaplan: The Hon. Member fails to take account of the number of briefs that have been received, the dozens of witnesses who have testified before the parliamentary Committee, the Senate Committee, the two Royal Commissions which considered the matter over a 15 year interval, and of the conclusions reached by many, many objective observers that it is time to get on with this now. The question now is how long one single Member of this House can prevent the parliamentary process from working.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO LIBERAL PARTY LEADERSHIP CANDIDATE

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. The Minister will note that a couple of days ago John Turner decided to clarify his position on acid rain. He said: "I would move to the President and say, 'how about a treaty to protect our air as we protected our water?' " That is what he said. If it is that easy, what has the Minister been doing all these years? Why don't you get on with it?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Hon. Member that we should be charitable about statements made by people who are not Members in this House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: That is the best answer the Minister has ever given.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, one of my colleagues just said that is the Minister's best answer ever.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BRIEF CANDIDATE

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister is very charitable, but would he do the following for the rest of us who have been working on this issue for some time? Would the Minister offer a briefing for Mr. Turner just to explain, first, what acid rain is and, second, what some of the problems are?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this may be only a partial answer to the Hon. Member if I tell him that I have been doing something about it as recently as yesterday on a visit to Chicago. This allowed me to put the Canadian viewpoint on acid rain to Americans, on the America Today show and to a conference held by the American Outdoor Writers' Association. I met last night with the Chicago League of Women Voters and I again put our position to them. I think by intensifying efforts of this kind and trying to reach the American voter, developing an alliance with Americans who see the issue the same way as we do, that eventually we will be able to convince the Washington administration of its importance.

Mr. Fraser: And what about Turner?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—REFUSAL OF EXIT PERMITS—ETOBICOKE HUNGER STRIKE

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs. Three of my constituents are on a hunger strike in front of the Polish Consulate in Etobicoke because the Polish Government is refusing to grant exit permits for their spouses and their children to allow them to join their families in Canada. Can the Minister tell the House what his Department is doing to speed up the reunification of all divided Canadian and Polish families, in addition to these three specific cases?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that one of the major objectives of the CSCE has been to facilitate family reunification. There have been a number of cases with which we have dealt with Polish authorities. The additional cases which the Hon. Member mentions today serve our careful attention, but I must say we have had some success with the Polish authorities in these cases and we will continue to press them for further co-operation. I thank the Hon. Member for raising the matter because it will provide an occasion to make a further representation to these authorities.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON WOMEN'S ALTERNATIVES FOR NEGOTIATING PEACE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Friday the Minister appeared to agree to help fund Canadian participation in the proposed International Conference on Women's Alternatives for Negotiating Peace. However, his reply was so shrouded in conditions that it is in doubt. Will the Minister tell the House of Commons now what precise amount of financial support the Department of External Affairs is prepared to provide?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the Right Hon. Member the precise amount, but I did want to indicate, in the message which I sent, a positive attitude toward the request.

Mr. Dick: That means no money.

Mr. MacEachen: When we have further details we will attempt, both within the Department and in other government Departments, to fund as much of that program as is possible. I want to tell the Right Hon. Member that, even though there were conditions, the main purpose is to be supportive of the request.

PROVISION OF SEED MONEY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Could the Minister tell us whether seed money will be provided immediately, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): In this case, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the term seed money is quite appropriate. I think what is required is financial support, not seeds.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO ALCAN PROJECT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who has now agreed to the need for a full federal public inquiry into Alcan's Kemano II project. His Department has completed the drafting of the terms of reference and is now searching for a chairperson for that inquiry. Will the Minister rise today, formalize the call for that inquiry, and give us some idea of a date when it might begin?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Department as outlined by my predecessor is that when there is a major project which could have significant impact on the fishery, there is a full investigation. Concerning the Kemano project, the policy of the Department is that we want a full-fledged inquiry. What is the most practical way of achieving that? Should it be only one inquiry under the B.C. Utilities Commission or should we have a separate one? Of course the two should not duplicate the work. This is what we will try to achieve through proper consultations with the province. As for the principle, as the Hon. Member said, I am ready to recommend a full-fledged public inquiry.

PETITIONS

MS. McDONALD—CHINESE HEAD TAX

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present today on behalf of a number of people who are members of the Chinese Elderly Persons Association of the Woodgreen Community Centre regarding the discriminatory nature of the Chinese head tax.

Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to issue an apology to Chinese Canadians for the treatment they received and to begin negotiations for proper compensation on the head tax.

Introduction of Bills

MR. WEATHERHEAD—PENALTIES FOR IMPAIRED DRIVERS

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 597 students of Cardinal Newman High School in the City of Scarborough, Ontario. The petition strongly supports the proposed changes in the Criminal Code of Canada as set out in Bill C-19 presently before the House, which would impose stiffer penalties for impaired driving. Therefore the petitioners urge the House of Commons to pass the relevant clauses of Bill C-19 relating to impaired driving as quickly as possible.

MR. SCOTT (VICTORIA-HALIBURTON)—LAW RELATING TO DIVORCE

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and pleasure to present a petition signed by a number of my constituents from the Oakwood Pastoral Charge of the United Church of Canada. These petitioners believe that the family is the cornerstone and basic building block of society and therefore oppose any means of making divorce quick and easy. They feel that any action taken to reduce the cost and pain of divorce is bound to increase the frequency of divorce and work to destroy the family—the very fabric that holds our society together.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

AMENDMENT RESPECTING OFFICE OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-244, an Act to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (tenure of the Prime Minister).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Yurko: Mr. Speaker, the entrenchment of the office of Prime Minister of Canada in the Constitution of Canada has become imperative. The purpose of this Bill is to list the minimum qualifications required to become Prime Minister of Canada. It also provides for a maximum tenure of 10 years in office for a Prime Minister and for the power of the Governor General to swear in the Prime Minister and to remove him or her if he or she can no longer meet the conditions of this office.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 96 and 682.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—PUBLIC RELATIONS EMPLOYEES

Question No. 96—Mr. Howie:

How many persons engaged in public relations, media relations or publicity are employed by the Canada Post Corporation?

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): The Canada Post Corporation informs me as follows: A total of 48 employees are engaged in public relations, publicity or media relations. Twenty are employed at head office and 28 in the divisions.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—STAMP ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Question No. 682—Mr. Clark (Yellowhead):

Did the Stamp Advisory Committee of the Canada Post Corporation reject the proposal to issue a postage stamp in 1984 to commemorate the 100th anniversary of women attending McGill University and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): The Canada Post Corporation has indeed informed me that the Stamp Advisory Committee recommended against the proposal to issue a stamp to commemorate the centennial of women attending McGill University because McGill was not the first Canadian university to admit women students and the Committee therefore considered it would be inappropriate to mark this anniversary with a stamp issue.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, we said no.

Mr. Speaker: I point out to the House that the net effect of refusal to let them stand is that all questions will disappear from the Order Paper. Is that the wish of Hon. Members?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: That will be the effect of refusal to let them stand.

Mr. Evans: If they do not stand, they disappear.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the Hon. Member for Burnaby that the remaining questions should disappear from the Order Paper?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): No.

Mr. Speaker: Then the Hon. Member should consent to let them stand. He can make up his mind.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, judging from the speed with which the questions are answered, we might as well let them disappear; but certainly that is not our intention.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the Day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY—S.O. 62—CANADA LABOUR CODE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wenman:

That this House condemns the government for failing to introduce amendments to the Canada Labour Code during the first four years of this Parliament, and by so doing, unnecessarily putting at risk the health and safety of Canadian workers, failing to address the concerns of women in the workplace, and inadequately addressing the issue of technological change.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby on a point of order?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member did not have the floor in regular proceedings.

Mr. Harquail: You cannot do that. The Speaker had already called Orders of the Day.

Mr. Speaker: I draw to the attention of the House that there are certain Supply items which according to the Standing Orders must be dealt with today. In the circumstances, the Chair cannot entertain a motion for the House to adjourn when the House is under the provisions of the Standing Orders relating to Supply. I call the attention of the Hon. Member to Standing Order 8(3).

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, that Standing Order does not preclude a motion to adjourn until such time as the votes on Supply are to be put.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is seeking to move a substantive motion, and he cannot move it without notice. In such a case he would have to give notice of such a motion. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has the floor.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have five or six minutes left. The motion which we are debating today has as one of its statements—

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby rises on a point of order again.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that surely a motion to adjourn is by no stretch of the imagination a substantive motion. Rather, it is a procedural motion which should be dealt with as all similar procedural motions are dealt with.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member rose on a point of order in the first place. He cannot move a motion to adjourn on a point of order. That is the first irregularity. The second irregularity is that the House is under a disposition relating to Supply today. Therefore the type of motion which he is seeking to move cannot be moved without notice. The Hon. Member may wish to confer. That is the decision of the Chair. In the circumstances, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) indicated in part that we were condemning the Government for its failure—

Mr. Fulton: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have a further point of order from the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). Is it a different point of order? If it is a different point of order, we will hear the Hon. Member for Skeena.

• (1510)

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I stand to be corrected but my understanding was that the first mention of the motion by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) was not on a point of order. He rose before the House had resumed debate on the order of Supply.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary West had been recognized and had the floor. The Chair recognized the Hon. Member for Burnaby on a point of order. The Hon. Member seems to have difficulty understanding. Once conditions are applied to a motion to adjourn until a certain hour, which would have to be the circumstance today, it then becomes a substantive motion of the House and requires notice. The Hon. Member cannot move such a motion without notice. In view of the provisions relating to Supply today, an ordinary motion to adjourn is not in order and cannot be received by the Chair.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, earlier this day when I began my few comments, I mentioned that labour union leaders across the country and certainly members of labour unions that fall under the Canada Labour Code should watch the behaviour of the New Democratic Party. They indicate strong support for passage of the amendments to the Canada Labour Code Bill, but their behaviour is one of obstruction and delay.

You have to ask yourself whether it serves the interest of the New Democratic Party to deny members of labour across this country the right to health and safety which will be guaranteed by the passage of these amendments. Do we find a political filibuster for political purposes, for purposes of trying to win a few more seats in the next election? Do they really care about the health and safety of workers or do they just care about winning seats? Certainly the behaviour we witnessed in the last few minutes would lead one to the latter conclusion.

I began my after-lunch comments by indicating that the Hon. Member from Fraser Valley West, as part of his motion, condemned the Government for its failure to address the concerns of women in the workplace and for inadequately addressing the issue of technological change. I have before me one page of a study done by the European Management Forum, EMF, a research organization in Geneva, Switzerland, and I want to put a couple of figures on the record.

Their survey of some 22 nations indicated that when it comes to equality of opportunity for women in the workplace, Canada ranks thirteenth in the world. The number one nation is Norway and the number two nation is the United States in providing equality of opportunity in the workplace. I do not think it is good enough for a nation like Canada to rank thirteenth in the world when it comes to opportunity for women in our workplace.

The next question dealt with equal pay for work of equal value for men and women. Where did Canada fall in that criterion? Canada was nineteenth out of 22 nations surveyed, OECD nations, western industrialized nations. On the issue of equality of opportunity, it was thirteenth out of 22 and nineteenth out of 22 on the issue of equality of pay.

We have a Government and a lot of members of the Liberal Party of Canada who serve in this Chamber who believe that their record when it comes to women's issue is a good record. Those 1984 statistics tell us that in the last 18 or 19 years in which that Party has been the federal Government of this country our progress is abysmal. We are going backwards, not forwards, when it comes to equality of opportunity for women.

If we simply look at figures coming out of the Department as they relate to the issue of departmentally-funded training, we get some startling answers. The preliminary data for the 1983-84 budget year show that for critical trade skills training—the flagship of the federal Government of Canada and its commitment to training for the future—96 per cent of the funding went to males and 4 per cent went to females. In the preceding year on clerical training, you get the converse, 92.2 per cent of training dollars going to females and 7.8 per cent to males. It is the clerical jobs that are being replaced by the computer.

We in this nation are busy pouring money into training programs for occupations that are disappearing. We are putting that money in the hands of the women of this nation. In the meantime, we are trying to put some money into occupations of the future, the higher-paying, longer-range occupations. Ninety six per cent of that money is being spent on males and 4 per cent on females. No member of this Chamber should feel very good about that kind of record. We have not only created the problem of lack of equality of opportunity, but we are perpetuating the problem into the future through the spending patterns of the Liberal Government.

When the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West moved his motion today to condemn the Government for its failure over a four-year period to protect the health and safety of workers, to provide equality of opportunity for women and to move on the issue of technology, what the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West is asserting is fact. Over this four-year period of time, at the very least, the Government has failed in all of those three critical areas. When our standard of living has fallen from second to fourteenth, it is in large part because the Government did not believe in and was not willing to invest in people. Thus we are not creating the kind of wealth we need to take care of the disadvantaged in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the motion before the House today, a motion that ignores the very tangible efforts and progress of this Government in the field of occupational health and safety.

As the House is aware, the Bill tabled by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) on May 15 of this year, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Financial Administration Act, contains a number of major amendments that will affect the three parts of the Canada Labour Code, dealing with, occupational health and safety, labour standards and industrial relations.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, protecting the health and safety of Canadian workers which is the purpose of the legislation before the House, is a major concern of this Government. The present provisions of Part IV have been in existence since 1968. However, although provisions are effective where they apply, many workers, especially those employed in connection with the operation of aircraft, ships and trains, do not receive the full protection afforded by Part IV. The Bill tabled by the Minister on May 15 of this year corrects that situation.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the proposed amendments on occupational health and safety contained in Bill C-34 is to cope effectively with the challenge of a constantly evolving social and technical environment for Canadian workers and employers. The new legislation is the result of numerous and intensive consultation sessions with employers and workers. Indeed, it was not drafted on the spur of the moment.

The proposed legislation clearly reflects its main purpose, which is prevention, in other words, prevention of accidents on the job and occupational diseases. The 1984 revision of the Act is aimed at increasing the participation and responsibilities of workers and employers, at every stage of the prevention process. It provides for more active participation by workers and employers and for the control and implementation of measures dealing with health and safety. It also provides for setting up more effective lines of communication in the work place, so that the "voice of concern" for health and safety can be heard and corrective action taken.

Mr. Speaker, the new provisions concerning health and safety representatives and labour management committees are only two examples of this increased participation and responsibility. The proposal to establish an Advisory Council on Occupational Safety and Health clearly indicates this government's commitment to guarantee not only that all parties will be heard, but that they will have a significant role in the overall process of developing policies, regulations and programs. In all work places employing more than 20 persons, labour and management will sit together on Safety and Health Committees. In small offices and workshops, workers will have an opportunity to be heard through an official representative.

Members of the National Advisory Council will be selected from labour and management. Their responsibility will be to advise the Minister of Labour. Essentially, the revised act emphasizes the fact that safety and health problems should be solved by the main people involved, namely the workers. The former general statements of employer and worker responsibilities have been replaced by a concise outline of specific responsibilities which have been added to those established in 21 different sets of safety and health regulations. Those consolidated statements of responsibilities will focus on the legal obligations of all persons now covered. They will be easier to understand, more uniform and clearer.

That change will also provide for the establishment of future regulations that will also be more readable, more succinct and more economical to produce. The amended enforcement sections clearly show that this government is seeking compliance through a practical and enlightened approach. The government is aware that the vast majority of employers and workers are ready and willing to meet their obligations to maintain occupational safety and health. On the other hand, Labour Canada is constantly striving to develop policies and programs to ensure that all people involved are aware of their legal obligations and the way they can meet requirements.

Mr. Speaker, in consultation with the Department of Justice, a policy of compliance with the amended Act has been developed. The main objective of that policy is to obtain a high percentage of voluntary compliance with the Act, through fair and equitable provisions. This in no way means the enforcement procedures in the Act, including the availability of stiffer and higher penalties, will not play an important role in the enforcement of the Act, but enforcement is only one way of securing compliance. In most cases, enforcement procedures will be used only when attempts at obtaining voluntary compliance have failed.

The amendments to the clauses of Bill C-34 dealing with compliance should reduce the field of government intervention in the regulation process and will induce a higher degree of voluntary compliance. The supervisory activities of the occupational health and safety committees and the involvement of the members of the Advisory Council in the drawing up of legislation should promote voluntary compliance and reduce occupational hazards.

The improvements in the compliance policy will provide various procedures to deal with offences. The safety officer may accept a written assurance of voluntary compliance for a minor offence but, if necessary, he will officially set in writing the corrective steps needed or he will try to obtain a court order to remove the conditions posing an immediate threat to occupational health or safety.

Mr. Speaker, as a general policy, legal proceedings will only he launched for offences which are effectively crimes or serious violations of the law.

In a general effort to decriminalize the Code and to provide for more appropriate penalties the amendments to sections on penalties have greatly reduced the number of offences liable to imprisonment. Under those amendments, an emprisonment penalty can only be imposed in the case of offences related to deliberately dangerous acts in contradiction with safety and health standards prescribed under the legislation.

Some steps have clearly been taken to standardize the enforcement of the Code, as shown by the amendment which will effectively provide the protection of the law to workers who up to now were neglected as a result of legislation "subject to any other Parliament legislation".

Amendments to the sections that specified which workers are covered by the Canada Labour Code, and to the Financial Administration Act will from now on protect, either directly or indirectly, members of the federal Public Service working in transportation or on offshore oilrigs, and who were not covered before. This means that Part IV of the Code will now apply to approximately 300,000 more workers than before. The provisions which protect those who must do dangerous work were amended to specify the rights and responsibilities of those involved and to guarantee that fatal hazard or chronic illness situations will not be excluded from the motives which the worker can invoke to request legal protection. Experience has shown that the use of the phrase "imminent danger" was imposing restrictions hindered protection afforded to workers. This is why the word "imminent" has been deleted and the definition of hazardous work and normal occupational danger clarified.

In 1978, when the right to refuse to do hazardous work was introduced for the first time, there was concern that workers might abuse this right and that the employer could be faced with work stoppages resulting from the irresponsible or malicious use of the protection afforded. Experience has shown that these fears were unfounded and that the workers have used this right quite responsibly.

It is in the light of this experience that changes were made to the right to refuse to do hazardous work. The concept of acceptable risk or occupational danger was maintained in the provisions, but the wording is now clearer.

Refusal to work when the life or the health of someone else may be jeopardized is forbidden and restrictions to the exercise of this right have been imposed in the case of certain workers in the area of transportation to protect public health.

It is essential to a healthy economy and the welfare of Canadian workers that we constantly strive to improve all areas of occupational safety and health.

All Canadian workers, their employers and government agencies that deal with safety and health must be given the tools to do the job. In this way they will be in a position to efficiently communicate, under proactive programs to safely keep up with this decade's rapid technological and social change.

Mr. Speaker, thinking of the horrendous frequency of labour accidents, it is clear that corrective measures are an absolute necessity. When we look at the number of accidents and illnesses suffered by Canadian workers, we realize that strong steps must be taken to lessen this suffering. When the other aspects are added, productivity losses and very expensive compensation, the need for such measures becomes more acute.

Needless to say, simply amending the Act will not satisfy that need. However, the changes proposed in Bill C-34 will greatly help employers and employees better understand, share and take their joint responsibilities in the area of occupational accident prevention.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments to Part IV of the Code are both significant and timely. As I said at the beginning of my comments, they clearly show this government's commitment and innovative approach to resolve a major problem.

I hope that all members in this House will show wisdom and objectivity and see to it that those amendments are passed into law.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie).

Mr. Fulton: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I move that the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) be now heard.

Mr. Dick: We agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Well, the Chair should have the motion in writing, first of all. Order.

Mr. Fulton, seconded by Mr. Blackburn moves that the Hon. Member for Kootenay West be now heard. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Carried.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this is an interesting day. In speaking to the Opposition motion which is before us, and to refresh our minds, I will remind the House that there were two motions presented initially for consideration, one presented by the New Democratic Party and the other presented by the Progressive Conservative Party. The Speaker, in his wisdom, decided to put the motion to the Progressive Conservative Party. We have no disagreement with that, of course. We are always willing to co-operate in order to expedite the business of the House and there is no business on which we are prepared to be more willing to bend or to compromise than on a motion which attempts to advance the timetable for measures relating particularly to the occupational health and safety of Canadian workers, be they men or women. That is the purpose for which we were elected.

I do not believe that anyone in reading the record of this House of Commons over the period of the last four years could have any doubt as to the position that I myself and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party have taken. As far back as three and a half years ago we were putting questions to the Government and being assured, in the words of the former Minister of Labour—that is three Ministers of Labour back—that we would have these amendments to Parts III, IV and V placed on the Order Paper "in the near future". That was approximately three years ago. I believe the date was June 1, 1981, if I am not mistaken. Here we are in the "near future" by Liberal definition—a very Liberal definition—and we still have not begun to debate second reading on the motion. We in this Party have been prepared to adopt almost any course of action. In fact, my House Leader, just a few days ago, on May 31, moved a motion to which I referred in questioning an Hon. Member of the Conservative Party earlier today, that we in the New Democratic Party would be prepared to move and to support that the Standing Orders be amended by adding, immediately following Standing Order 79(1), the following:

> The purpose of this Standing Order is to provide for the orderly and timely consideration of Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, and to be finally disposed of no later than June 30th, 1984.
> (b) When the House is considering the said legislation for second reading at the end of one day's debate, all questions necessary to dispose of it shall be put;

(c) That the said legislation shall be deemed to be returned to the House for report stage and third reading no later than June 28, 1984.

The subject matter of the legislation before us is so important and so vital to the lives and livelihoods of millions of Canadians that there is little, if anything, that our Party would not do in order to expedite its movement through second reading to committee and through third reading, in the hopes that it could be proclaimed before this Parliament is prorogued.

Approximately 1,500 Canadian workers are killed on the job every year. Approximately 20,000 Canadian workers are disabled on the job every year. During the time in which we conduct our debate today there is a very good chance that more than one worker will die and a certainty that many will be disabled. We have already waited some three years—that is almost the gestation period of an elephant—for these amendments to Parts III, IV and V of the Canada Labour Code. We cannot perceive of any reasonable excuse which anyone could have for not wishing to expedite these matters.

I would like to make a few rather personal comments on the legislation before us and on the kind of problems we face, especially in the industrial work places of Canada. I am at least one Member of this House for which this is not an academic subject by any stretch of the imagination. I do not know how many other Hon. Members have had the dubious privilege of having to sweep their workmate's brain off the pavement, or how many other Hon. Members here have had to go on more than one occasion to visit a newly widowed woman to tell her that her husband and your friend has been killed just within the last few minutes. I am sure everyone here will understand that it is not a pleasant task.

I also think back to a story I heard a year ago here in the City of Ottawa, or perhaps it was across the river in Hull. The young son of a woman who works for an Hon. Member of this House, a member of the Conservative Party, was killed in an industrial accident in this area. He was a young boy who had been given absolutely no training for the task which he was required to do. He fell or slipped into a piece of grinding machinery used for grinding up garbage, and as an old German workmate of mine used to say in our sawmill at Kootenay Forest Products, "One day comes home the hamburger". It is not pretty. Anyone who has seen the remains of people we have known and loved being poured into a box will agree it is not the kind of experience that makes one very patient with the kind of political horse trading—some of it for very dubious purposes—which seems to be taking place around this piece of legislation.

I am certainly not suggesting that anyone here would knowingly want to continue a regime which has encouraged the continuation of practices in industry which lead to so many fatalities and injuries every year. I know better than that. No one here wants that to happen. But sometimes by doing nothing we contribute to that continuation. While I know that none of us individually want to be responsible or see ourselves as being responsible for that kind of situation, there is a vast difference in the attitudes of governments of different political stripes when it comes to the emphasis placed on matters relating to life and death in the workplace.

I want to take Members back to a situation that existed prior to 1972 in the Province of British Columbia because it is relevant to our personal and political scale of priorities in regard to this issue. Since the 1930s there was legislation in British Columbia called the Factories Act. Many of us, including those in leadership positions in the labour movement and even people who worked for the Department of Labour in that province, were not aware of the existence of that legislation even though it had been on the books for almost 40 years. I and a few of my workmates found an old moth-eaten copy one day and we said, "Hey, this looks pretty good. It has some protective clauses here requiring lighting and ventilation in the workplace, the number of washrooms required per 100 employees and a whole host of things that could make many industrial workplaces much more civilized institutions." We asked some questions, but no one knew anything about it. We phoned the Department of Labour in Victoria, but no one had ever heard of it. Then, after the change from a Social Credit coalition government in early 1972 to an NDP administration we found that there were only two inspectors who were responsible for enforcing that legislation in the entire province. They must have been hiding in a closet somewhere for 35 years, but they were supposedly responsible. We immediately started hiring extra people to enforce the law, and we asked these two people how they ever accomplished their job. They were hired not only to inspect all existing industrial installations and factories in B.C., but to inspect every new work site before it went into operation. We asked how the two of them ever did that for the thousands and thousands of factories and workplaces throughout that province. They said, "Oh, we did telephone book inspections". The new NDP provincial Minister of Labour asked them, "Do you mean you just phoned the companies and asked them if they were obeying the law?" They said they did not have time for that. They just looked up the names of all the companies in the telephone book and transferred them to report forms.

That is the kind of farce that we will see again under people who continually call for smaller and smaller government and less and less regulation when it comes to the workplace. People who do that, whether it is by accident, design or ignorance, are guilty, Sir, of murder. They are guilty of murder, or at least manslaughter. Those of us who have gone through the excruciating pain of having to tell a woman that her husband was just murdered at the workplace by a regime which not only allows but encourages that neglect to take place do not have much patience with governments or politicians of any stripe who continue to allow that kind of ignorant action to take place.

We are now seeing the same thing again in the republic to the south of us, and the same things that used to prevail in British Columbia and is again happening under another government of a Conservative stripe calling itself Social Credit in

B.C. I find it interesting that the gentleman, who is now the labour critic for the Progressive Conservative Party in this House, was formerly a Social Credit MLA in British Columbia from 1966 to 1972, because we can look to that province to see what kind of provincial labour code changes we are now getting.

While even Members of the Government as well as Tories and New Democrats realize that the legislation in Bill C-34 before us could be improved, at least we know that it is moving in a more healthy direction to protect the lives of working people than the regime which exists today. It is poles apart from what exists now, but the legislation in British Columbia is moving in exactly the opposite way.

Mr. St. Germain: You are in Ottawa.

Mr. Kristiansen: I wish some of my Conservative friends, who are trying to remind me that I am in Ottawa, would remember that they also come from British Columbia, and that they would learn some lessons from it. I know where I come from. I know what kind of workplace I come from and I know what kind of province I come from. I know that I and hundreds of thousands of their voters as well as my voters are fed up and disgusted with the kind of regressive policies we are seeing followed right now by that coalition of Liberals, Tories and Socreds who call themselves a Social Credit Government in the Province of British Columbia. "Catch the Spirit" was their slogan in 1983. Catch the bloody spirit when you take a look at the things happening in workplaces paid for and managed by their friends every day.

So many investigations have been carried out by that conservative government to the south of us in the last little while that it has become evident that that government is also moving to the right in terms of occupational health and safety and away from any civilized conduct in labour relations. The kind of activity investigated by committees of Congress has been disgusting, and I would like to mention one example. In The New York Times of Monday, April 9, 1984, it said:

> Labour Department lawyers representing OSHA told the subcommittee staff at first that the documents were Mr. Vance's "personal property,"—

Mr. Vance was an officer of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration in the U.S. who was under investigation for some rather dubious deals between the OSHA and certain contractors who, members of Congress suspected were getting a rather easy ride from the government. It continues to read:

> —not subject to a request or a subpoena addressed to Mr. Auchter or his boss, secretary of labour Raymond J. Donovan. The Labour Department reconsidered and informed the subcommittee that the department's lawyers were withdrawing that defence.
> The requested documents still were not produced, and Mr. Vance subsequently told subcommittee investigators that he had stowed his office logs in the back of his pickup truck on a hunting trip and that his dog vomited on them. He said this had made the documents so 'disgusting' that he disposed of them in a rural Virginia dump.

That is also the disgusting nature of the apologists for that government in British Columbia, which tolerated manslaughter or murder in the workplace in past years and which is now engaged in moving toward a regime of industrial relations that will again welcome those kinds of practices.

I am sure some Members will suggest later on in this debate that I am being wild in my accusations. I do not make personal accusations because it is not individual acts that we are talking about. That problem is often a curse in the area of industrial health and safety. It is not an individual problem. The fact that some people feel that we must learn to live with and tolerate industrial death and injury is the problem. There is a collective perception that this is something which just happens along the way to earning a living, and if people do not like it they can quit. This is the same type of philosophy espoused by some of the people from the Fraser Institute in relation to prostitutes being beaten up by their pimps. The Fraser Institute is the outfit that advises the Government of British Columbia. They say that if prostitutes do not like being beaten up, they can always quit. That is management's right. Those are his words taken from his recent book. That is the kind of philosophy which prevails there, in spite of the fact that we have made great advances as a civilization.

Earlier in this debate I heard a Conservative Member saying that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) understands the problem because he has respect for a lunch bucket, or whatever the rest of that garbage was. There is a difference between someone who has worked for wages in industry for a little while to work his way through school, and someone who is destined to work in heavy blue collar industry for the balance of his or her working life. It is the same as the difference between someone doing a weekend sentence for impaired driving and someone who is serving a life term in prison. Your attitude toward the institution is different. If you realize that you are there for life you take the problems which exist there a little more seriously. You learn very early that the idealistic conceptions of the law being fair are hogwash. The spirit of the law in North America or Europe was never designed to protect the lives or rights of working people in their workplaces. Initially, they were set up under the Magna Carta so that the barons would have a few more rights and the king would have a few less. It has not really changed that much.

I hope that some of the changes in Bill C-34 will provide for a regime which is a little more civilized, so that people who go to work and their spouses together will have a better chance of seeing their families at the end of the day. The toll is still too high. There are 1,500 people a year who are killed on the job in Canada and 20,000 a year who are disabled. That is more than we have lost in most combat situations in which the Canadian Armed Forces have been engaged. It is time to end it. Anything we can do to promote an end to that kind of regime and to get this welcome but limited legislation passed will be done. We will do all we can to co-operate with it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) on a question.

Mr. Wenman: The reality is that we could have three or four days of full debate in the House of Commons when everyone could talk about the problems of workers in Canada. We could have 10 days of debate in committee. The Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Federation of Labour, business and other workers' groups could appear before us. We could come back and have two or three more days of debate here and probably wind up this debate. Would the Hon. Member agree that the problem is one of the political will of the Government, which has 16 more government days? It is a matter of how the Government wants to use them. If the Government wants to use them for a good debate on the problems of the workers of Canada, it can do that. Does the Hon. Member agree with that?

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West for his question. I agree that that is the prime responsibility. About two weeks ago in the House, prior to first reading of the Bill introduced by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouelllet), I asked him why it had taken three years up to that point to bring forth the legislation. After four years of acting as if they were Conservatives they start talking like Liberals in the last few months before an election. That is typical of that bunch over there. While this legislation is welcome, I do not think that lets the Government off the hook. I agree with my Conservative friend that the Government is ultimately responsible for the delay which has now got the House into a bind.

It is easy for road-blocks to be put in the way, either on purpose or by chance. The Government is responsible for leaving it to the last minute of the eleventh hour. In recognition of that responsibility, I hope that the Government will say to my Party and to the Official Opposition that one day of debate, if that, is enough on second reading. We in the NDP would agree to one speaker from each Party. We would agree to move quickly through committee with a time deadline in order to ensure that we could have a one-day debate, or a debate with one speaker from each Party at third reading, on the understanding that the Government will accept its responsibility and undertake that this legislation will go to the Governor General and be proclaimed before this House is dissolved. We do not want to spend another four or five years before deciding whether Canadian workers should stop being injured and killed in the numbers to which Canada has regrettably become accustomed during the past generations.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member also agree that if we were to have a debate in the House of Commons and move the Bill to committee to hear representations from the CLC, the Canadian Federation of Business and other groups, we could improve this legislation? If not, why not?

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, it is always possible to improve. I can assure the Member that after two or three years our NDP task force has all kinds of suggestions for improvements. But we also recognize that, whether by accident or design, we are facing deadlines. We think that lives are more important than politics. We are quite willing to settle for half a loaf and put aside hearings, if necessary, in order that less people will be injured and die. The Government is to blame for leaving it so late. We are angry about that. Damn it, let us get on with the job because people's lives are at stake.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there further questions? The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that labour movements such as the Canadian Labour Congress and its affiliates have lobbied quite extensively for this legislation. Consultations between the Congress and the Government would indicate that extensive hearings before a committee would not be required. Even though they may not be satisfied with the total Bill, it is acceptable to them in its present form. Would the Member clarify that?

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, the answer is, yes, that is my understanding. Many representatives of unions across Canada as well as the officers and staff of the Canadian Labour Congress have been in close consultation with the Government. I know there have been consultations with my own colleagues in the New Democratic Party. I suspect as well that there have been some consultations with members of the Progressive Conservative caucus. They have expressed their willingness to forgo the opportunity to appear as witnesses, even though they would very much like to do so. They consider it urgent that this legislation, limited though it is, pass as quickly as possible. They are willing to surrender perfection for the sake of saving lives.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie).

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), for his excellent motion today regarding safety in the workplace, and especially for addressing the concerns of women in the workplace and for pointing out that the Government is addressing the issue of technological change inadequately.

Let me also take this opportunity to congratulate the Ontario Construction Association for its television advertisements on construction safety. These messages appear on television regularly and give a very vivid message which shows that many workers are not adhering to safety rules and regulations, which in turn causes many accidents. Being a former foreman of the Manitoba Telephone System for many years, I was involved in safety training and I found that it was a continuous job to train apprentices and even some of the old hands in using their safety glasses, hard hats and other equipment.

I think everyone has the responsibility to report any unsafe conditions in any industry. If the NDP knows of all of unsafe conditions in the workplace, wherever they may occur, there is a responsibility to report it to the Government or to the Workmen's Compensation Board.

I have been reviewing the material prepared by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West in the summary of the proposed amendments to the Canada Labour Code. I believe we have a reincarnation of the Hon. Michael Starr who was the Labour Minister in the Diefenbaker Government and Canada's most successful Labour Minister, who brought co-operation and harmony to labour and government.

Let me comment on some of the items in his document. He points out that the proposed changes in the Bill to amend the Canada Labour Code are the result of two years of extensive consultations with labour organizations and employers' associations and are intended to ensure that the Canada Labour Code continues to meet the rapidly changing realities of today's workplace. I am sure that we all agree with that, especially with respect to safety, which is the subject we are debating today.

Furthermore, on April 16 of this year, my colleague from Fraser Valley West presented a motion in the House under the Business of Supply on an allotted day in regard to technological change and the Government's delay in dealing with that issue. Therefore, our Party does not have to apologize to anyone for not being interested in labour problems or dealing with advances in the future. We are all labour. Before coming here we have all had to work in different occupations. Regardless of whether one is in the Conservative Party or the New Democratic Party, we are still all of us labour.

There is another area I would like to discuss with regard to a Private Members' Bill of mine with respect to an amendment to the Canada Labour Code. I would suggest to the Government that it give serious consideration perhaps to introducing a government Bill dealing with the issue I will raise in a moment. It would certainly be much faster than having to wait for my Private Members' Bill to be dealt with. It is in regard to injury to personal feelings and the different manner in which some industries and Crown corporations treat their employees. There is a double standard in their dealings with their employees.

I would like to read the explanatory note of this Bill into the record. It states:

> This amendment to the Canada Labour Code would ensure that the administration of a collective agreement would not have a discriminatory or detrimental effect on the employees covered by that agreement in comparison to other employees not covered by the agreement.

Let me give some examples of how this affects people in Air Canada. It concerns Air Canada's golden handshake policy in which it applies a double standard when rewarding its management for long and faithful service. For instance, in 1977, 356 management people took advantage of this benefit. At the time, the union raised a grievance at the headquarter's level, contesting the fact that the early retirement program only applied to management personnel and not to employees covered by the IAM collective agreement. That is clearly a double standard that is causing great concern among many of the machinists at Air Canada. The grievance was denied by the company on the basis that no surplus situation existed with respect to people covered by the IAM collective agreement.

Since that time, the membership of District Lodge 148 IAM-AW has been concerned with this discriminatory policy. As a result of a resolution passed by members who were present at the 1981 convention, District Lodge 148 executive board set up a one-man committee to look at all aspects of Air Canada's golden handshake program. It provided early retirement for many senior officials in Air Canada. Twenty-one million dollars was set aside in the golden handshake program. Instead of using some of that money to keep machinists on at that particular time, they were being laid off.

Further meetings between the company and the union on this issue took place in 1982. At a meeting in September of that year, the company talked about a VSP for IAM members, but it would be substantially less than one being offered to management. That is why I presented my Bill, which would call for the same compensation for employees at retirement or lay-off, whether he be a white collar worker or a blue collar worker.

I do not want to hold up passage of the Bill. I think there has been excellent debate. We are all in agreement that the Government must take immediate action before we adjourn at the end of June. I understand that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) wishes to enter the debate, and I want to give him that opportunity. I am sure he can discuss the British Columbia question in an excellent manner.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The House will now proceed to debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in my response to the Opposition motion concerning Bill C-34, I would like to stress a very important point. The major changes to the Canada Labour Code cover not only occupational health and safety but also labour relations and labour standards. I would like to speak more specifically to the latter today, since it is a subject that was not necessarily discussed by our colleagues opposite.

Although all the amendments proposed are important, two of the changes which relate to labour standards are fundamental: the guarantee of a work place free of sexual harassment and the availability of leave of absence for child care to fathers and adopting parents. These innovative provisions are meant to cope with serious social problems. Before presenting the proposed amendments, the Government asked for the opinions of all parties that would be concerned by the legislation.

In December 1979, Mr. Speaker, the Government submitted all amendments to the parties concerned. Consultations went on until last March, and the result is a series of carefully balanced amendments which reflect the concern of the principal groups involved.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to what I consider to be the major changes proposed in Part III, and I am referring to those that cover the leave of absence for child care and sexual harassment in the work place.

Over the last thirty years, a very substantial shift has occurred in the labour force in Canada. From 1951 to 1980, the proportion of women in the labour force rose from 22.2 per cent to 40.1 per cent. In 1980, Canada broke through a critical barrier when the women's participation rate went over 50 per cent. In other words, the percentage of women actively engaged in the country's economy simply doubled in barely 20 years. From a social standpoint, this massive influx of women in Canadian plants and offices has to be one of the most lasting and notable changes in this day and age. It has forced all Canadians to reassess their personal views based on tradition and compelled Governments to redesign and redraft their public policies.

Some 15 or 20 years ago, there was no need to account for an employee's family responsibilities when drafting employment policies. Once married, most women would quit working and devote themselves to their home and the education of their children. Husbands were supposed to give all their attention to their own career to ensure the financial security of their families. The reasons behind the disappearance of work distribution on the basis of sex are many and varied, and they are due to economic, educational, demographic and psychological considerations on which I would like to comment briefly.

From an economic viewpoint, it is obvious that two salaries were needed by the many families that wanted to raise their standard of living. Unfortunately, it is equally obvious that, in a good many families, the husband's take-home pay is hardly enough to maintain the family income above the poverty level. Indeed, a recent study revealed that the number of families living in poverty would increase by 51 per cent if women did not have any income. Another factor which did contribute to boost female representation on the labour market is that the educational standards of men and women at all levels have been rising.

Statistical data and plain common sense indicate that there is a genuine and solid link between the level of education of women and their rate of participation in the labour force. With respect to demography, higher divorce rates, fewer marriages and the upward trend in the average age of newlyweds are all factors which had an influence on the economic activities of women. In that respect, it should be noted that, even though the participation rate of women of all age groups has increased considerably, that increase has been even more striking in the 25-to-34 age bracket. In 1981, almost two thirds of women of child-bearing age were on the labour market.

Finally, let us not forget that psychological factors are just as significant as all other factors combined. Many women like the independence which comes with gainful employment. Whether we like it or not, independence spells respect in industrialized democracies and a regular pay cheque is the guarantee of that independence. In addition, it would seem that women exert more influence in the family decision-making process simply because they can get a job and earn a salary. As women are more and more present on the labour market, they quite naturally demand equal pay for work of equal value. Along with many others, the federal government launched a number of programs to advance the status of women. Unfortunately, as was admitted by Kathleen Newland, of the Worldwatch Institute, progress toward a new and fair distribution of jobs in the area of paid work force is hindered by the persistence of the former and unequal distribution of household tasks. In other words, even though men no longer exert a domination over paid jobs, women have found themselves, quite against their will, with a real monopoly over non-paid household tasks.

The results are obvious. As long as men do not assume a larger share of the work within the household, women will be unable to benefit from attractive work opportunities on the labour market. Also, according to Ms. Newland, employers will continue to treat women without any consideration as long as they presume, and rightly so, that women will be the ones who will quit their jobs, even temporarily, in order to look after their young children, take time off in order to nurse a sick child, refuse to work overtime because of their domestic responsibilities and follow their husband when he is transferred.

As a great number of women workers know too well, the interruptions in their career caused by pregnancies and child rearing have a tendency to reduce their seniority, to have a negative influence on their promotion opportunities and to hinder their eligibility for fringe benefits.

All these considerations are powerful arguments for the reforms to Part III that are included in Bill C-34. In short, these amendments are the result of considerable effort on the part of the federal Government to help workers covered by the Canada Labour Code to reconcile their domestic and professional responsibilities. For example, at the present time, women employees must have been employed for 12 months in order to be eligible for maternity leave. It is proposed to reduce this eligibility period to three months, reflecting the far reaching changes which have dramatically modified the structure of the activity rate. As we are all aware, the birth rate in Canada has been plummeting ever since 1960. In fact, since 1972, it has been below the population replacement rate. In other words, as long as women continue to show a deep commitment to their career, it will no longer be necessary to require of them a long eligibility period. Under the current legislation, only pregnant employees are entitled to this type of leave. Natural fathers and adoptive parents cannot be granted leave of absence for child care responsibilities. In order to encourage the sharing of domestic chores and break the unappreciated "monopoly" which I referred to earlier, the Government is providing for a 24-week long leave without pay for child care responsibilities for both natural and adoptive parents. In a major amendment, the Government has provided that no employer shall require a pregnant employee to take a leave of absence, unless she is unable to perform an essential function of her job and no appropriate alternative job is available for her.

The Government is moving this amendment because the courts have ruled that no provision in the Labour Code could stop an employer from requiring a pregnant employee to take a leave of absence from her employment. They felt that it only precluded the employer from refusing a leave of absence. It was therefore necessary to define more accurately the intent of the legislator to ensure that no employer could unduly require a pregnant employee to take a leave of absence without pay.

As to the reinstatement of an employee, the purpose of the new clauses is to remove certain discretionary powers which the employer has now by requiring him to reinstate the employee in the position that employee occupied before the leave of absence commenced. Whenever possible, the employer must reinstate the employee in a comparable position with the same wages and fringe benefits and in the same location.

The government intends also to reinforce the fringe benefits protection scheme under the Canada Labour Code by demanding the uninterrupted accumulation of retirement, sickness, disability and seniority benefits while an employee is on leave of absence.

There is also a provision concerning the right to notice of employment opportunities. Many employees are aware that lost opportunities during a leave of absence for family responsibilities are often tremendous and hard to make up for. It is therefore imperative to legally prevent the dire consequences of an employment stoppage for child care purposes on one's opportunities for promotion. Under the new provisions, every employee must be informed in writing of every employment, promotion or training opportunity that arises while on leave of absence. The employee will then be in a position to decide what is to be done during that leave of absence and to keep in contact with his or her place of work.

In my opinion, the last three amendments concerning reinstatement, accumulation of benefits and notice of employment opportunities are of utmost importance, for they demonstrate at last to women employees that they will no longer be penalized for assuming as mothers, their indispensable role to society. It is clearly unfair that this role should affect so negatively nearly all aspects of their professional lives, including their revenues, fringe benefits, promotion opportunities and experience.

I am delighted that the Minister chose to include those provisions in the Labour Code and I hope that all parties will agree to have those amendments passed quickly by the House. I hope as well that the amendments pertaining to sexual harassment will gain wide acceptance. We Canadians have been tended to consider sexual harassment as strictly a human rights issue, and employees who were so victimized in the work place quite often just did not know how to react.

Until last year when the House adopted amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act, the legislation did not contain any specific reference to sexual harassment and very few employees were aware that such behaviour could lead to legal action on grounds of sexual discrimination. Even though recent amendments to that Act leave no doubt as to that, there are persons who are often reluctant to use those means.

The investigation of a complaint under the Canadian Human Rights Act lasts more than a year, and its success depends on the ability to adduce evidence that will convince an ordinary court of law. Unfortunately, that kind of evidence is not always easy to gather in cases of sexual harassment. Even though a complaint may be settled by one of the Human Rights Courts, probably the settlement of one such complaint would not be a deterrent, since in order to reduce those cases, the shamefulness and unacceptability of such conduct would have to be publicly recognized. Therefore, with the current amendments, a definition of sexual harassment would be introduced in the Code to clarify what is meant by such a conduct. In my view, this will significantly help reinforce the fact that sexual harassment is a degrading behaviour, an insult to human dignity and an unacceptable conduct when a person's occupational life is affected. Further, after consulting the employees or their representatives, employers would have to develop a policy prohibiting sexual harassment and make each of their employees aware of its contents.

In order to put an end to such harassment, the active co-operation of employers is needed because they can not only increase the level of people's awareness, but also take immediate disciplinary action after a specific incident. They can control sexual harassment in the workplace just as they control hazardous behaviours.

Mr. Speaker, the reforms put forward in Bill C-34, involving as they do not only Part III, but also Parts IV and V, are progressive and timely. Further, the extensive and therefore stimulating consultations that were held with labour and management representatives proved they were both practical and workable. I am confident honourable members will support these major government initiatives, and they will do so as soon as possible.

• (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a period of ten minutes for questions or comments.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) tell the House why, in view of the fact that negotiations on Parts III, IV and V of the Canada Labour Code have been taking place for some three years since the time when the then Minister of Labour on June 1, 1981 said that they would be coming soon, it was only in the last few days that Bill C-34 was given first reading? Certainly we in this caucus were aware that negotiations were progressing along the road to completion some months ago. Why has the Government, for whatever reason, placed us in the House of Commons in the position of being required to expedite the hasty implementation and proclamation of major reforms to the Canada Labour Code in order to get results before the prorogation of Parliament? If it thinks that the objective is important, why is it placing us in the position of having to forgo some of the realistic opportunities for amendment and discussion which should be the right of Parliament and of the people of Canada?

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Member that those dispositions are before the House now. If we had had the collaboration of his caucus earlier and free time in the House, I am sure we could have come forth with those modifications sooner. The consultation was a long process. We wanted to ensure that the proposed amendments would result in a consensus. It appears that is so. Most Hon. Members seem to agree with the amendments. I think it is sooner than soon. In a way the Hon. Member has to realize that there is always an end to a session. Whether it is this Bill or any other one, Bills are always proposed at the end of a session. We are hoping that the consultations beforehand were sufficient to obtain support. All of us would have liked to have had this legislation before now, but maybe it was not ready then or the spirit was not there. Now we have the political will we will be happy to pass the legislation right away.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Other questions, comments? Debate.

[English]

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, it took the Government four years to bring this forward. Who does the NDP criticize? It criticizes the provincial Government of British Columbia. I find that to be totally irresponsible. Members of that Party want to adjourn the debate. They are being obstructive in the House for political expedience on a matter affecting the working man whom they profess to protect. The working man would be in a lot of trouble if it were up to the NDP.

We are entering an age of new technology and labour relations. We must be as sure as possible that we have the correct labour code to deal with the problems at hand. We on this side of the House are not trying to delay the Bill. We are trying to bring forward the best legislation for the working men and women of the country. Labour and labour-management relations have been a big part of my life. I was a union president and had to sit across the table from management. I was told that there was everything but safety and wage increases for my membership. Later, as a contractor I remembered the lessons of my union days. I had respect, consideration and a good sound communication with the men who worked in my organization.

Fairness should be the hallmark of all labour-management relations. That must be the thrust of labour-management relations and, if I may say so, we require a new labour-management code to establish a new standard of behaviour for both sides. A civilized labour atmosphere is indicative of an advanced civilization.

The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) moved a motion concerning the health and safety of Canadian workers, women in the workplace and technological change. Initially I should like to address the area of technological change, its impact upon the youth of the country and the unemployment which has resulted because it was not addressed by the Government opposite. The primary concern of all of us should be the 1.5 million to 2 million unemployed Canadians. The biggest issue facing Canadian today is that of jobs. That should be the concern of every Bill which comes before the House.

We cannot be sure of the real numbers of unemployed, but there are many out there. Unemployment affects nearly every household. It affects my household. I have trained, educated unemployed youth in my home. Canadian workers are out of work not because they do not work hard, not because consumers do not want to purchase the goods and services produced, but because of the disastrous management of the economy by the present Government, the growing national debt and high interest rates. All these factors have diverted attention away from attacking the real problems at hand. Our technology has not advanced with the rest of the world.

Earlier this year I had the privilege of attending the OECD Conference in Paris. Countries with the most civilized labour relations have the least problems. They have addressed the question of technological change. Japan has addressed the problem. It has a labour code and code of ethics which attacks the problems at hand. This Government has done nothing to mitigate the crisis of unemployment. Although the Government denies it is a crisis, especially for the young, there are between 600,000 and 1,000,000 million youth unemployed. If we really check the figures, it would probably be closer to 1.5 million. Because of this despair and frustration, some youth have totally given up looking for jobs.

The Labour Code has not done anything with regard to technological change. The Government has seen fit to shirk its responsibility. Our youth are totally ill-prepared. The Government does not adequately address the issue in Bill C-34. It would be nice if it did. Our Party will not delay Bill C-34 because it does not deal adequately with this issue, but Canadians have the right to know the inadequacy of that Bill. That is why normal debate should take place.

We cannot make the point often enough that even though we have high unemployment, 40 per cent of Canadian firms report difficulty locating workers with necessary skills. That is hard to believe. A lack of foresight and planning and proper labour legislation has brought about this situation.

Has the Government notified Canadians of technological change? Has it prepared for the over 30 per cent of Canadians who are considered functionally illiterate? There are sources that have done studies such as the one entitled, "Global Stakes, the future of high-tech in America". It lists the number of professionals per ten thousand people. In North America there are 40 trained accountants, in Japan there are three. There are 20 lawyers in North America compared to one in Japan. However, there are 25 engineers in North America and 35 in Japan. They do not have low unemployment and are not meeting technological change because they do not know what they are doing. They know what they are doing. They are training and giving the guidance that is required of government.

Government training and educational programs in this country are totally inadequate. Because of its inadequacy, the Government has been forced into programs that do not necessarily apply to the problems. This has resulted in a band-aid and make-shift situation that is costing billions of dollars and is not attacking the problem the way it should. Programs are consolidated and then splintered. All the while the problems continue to stare us in the face. The priorities are missed. Our apprenticeship programs in this country are far behind those of other countries. We have the lowest apprenticeship enrolment in the western world.

Co-operative education and literacy training receive the smallest financial support. Co-op education is one area that has a direct effect on solving the problems. There the technology is taught in direct relationship to the needs of business. Co-op education is working on the job part-time and attending classes for the remainder of the day.

I said before that 30 per cent of our population is functionally illiterate. With education as necessary as it now is, what does the Government do? It introduces Bill C-12, which has the net effect of reducing funding for post-secondary training. We in the Opposition have put forward amendments. We oppose the Bill in its present form. It should have more social direction and aim. We want money to go to the technological institutes and the training schools. What does the Government do? It ignores us.

Bill C-34 should address the problem of training, phasing our youth into the labour market without jeopardizing trade unions or the viability of business. Bill C-34 and our Labour Code should lead the way, setting the precedent for all other labour Bills.

In Canada we run and hide from technology. We are a trading nation. Over 30 per cent of our GNP is tied to foreign trade. Incredibly, 1968 we traded more than Japan. Today their trade is more than double ours. We must face up to technology and ensure that the transition is fair. The worker on the job must be given ample time for change. Why was the Labour Code not brought forward sooner? Does it contain those provisions? No. We must address the jobs of the future if we are going to have a productive society and a reduction of unemployment levels.

Before an election and just before the end of a session, we see a labour code. The Member on the Government side pointed out that some Bill had to be brought down before the end of a session. I agree. However, why such an important Bill? It is a basic right to have good, sound working conditions. Why jeopardize that by bringing in the Bill so close to the end?

Earlier this year the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) said that something should be done about this. He asked where this legislation was. The Government has shirked its responsibility. It is using a labour situation as a political football to try to embarrass the Opposition and to blame someone else for its shortcomings. The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) spoke about safety. He made it sound as though his Party were the only Party concerned about safety. He wanted us to believe that he is the only one who has ever worked in the trenches. A lot of people in the Official Opposition have worked in the trenches, and I am one of them.

Mr. Kristiansen: On your way through.

Mr. St. Germain: Not on our way through, not for one minute. My entire family have been involved in construction for all of their lives. I know what safety is. I have been head of a labour union whereas most of you guys in the NDP have never even had a job.

• (1640)

Mr. Kristiansen: Most of which guys?

Mr. St. Germain: You fellows in the NDP.

Mr. Kristiansen: That is a lie.

Mr. St. Germain: The Labour Code covers only 10 per cent of the workforce. But as there were 82,000 workers injured and 18 workers killed in 1981, as the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West pointed out, this area deserves careful attention. Why so late? Again it is a political Bill and the NDP would like to make it a larger political football than it is already.

Mr. Kristiansen: We just want to pass it.

Mr. St. Germain: This is a legal precedent-setting piece of legislation. It is not worthy of this Government to wait so long to introduce it. The Government is slipping it in just before an election.

If you were a worker, Mr. Speaker, affected by the Labour Code and apprehensive about technology and displacement, would you be reassured by the Government opposite? I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you would not be. Would you be happy with the Government for ignoring your concerns for so long and now rushing the legislation through? I cannot overemphasize that fact. The Government has not weighed carefully all the planning or all the contingencies, and it has been especially negligent in the past in anticipating technology. It has not anticipated technology to the slightest degree. The Government has not recognized nor has it rectified safety and health hazards. This is a very, very serious area that we as an entire House should address together. As the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West has pointed out, he is prepared to expedite this particular piece of legislation.

I would like to comment briefly on the labour and management relations and the lead role that the Bill should play in that area. The mishandling of the Labour Code by the Government is part of a bigger problem—its attitude toward labour and its poor handling of those relations. The Government in Ottawa must take the blame for much of what is wrong between labour and management today. Not once has it come up with a reasonable idea or given great consultation to labour and management in working together. It has consistently dodged and ignored the basic requirements. It is of absolute necessity that we establish and start working toward good, sound labour-management relationships. This area should be included in the federal Labour Code.

We must start looking at work sharing. However, here again work sharing can only be achieved with a sound economy. I have had discussions with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) regarding youth unemployment. I pointed out that work sharing is inevitable. However, we must have a responsible and sound economy if we are going to enter into this particular area. We must improve technology and distribute profits equitably. If we do not improve our technology, we will not be able to compete in the world of tomorrow. That will compound the unemployment problems which we now have. If we are going to move toward work sharing and a more equitable distribution of wealth, it can only be achieved if we maintain a high level of technology.

I would like to speak very briefly about women in the workplace. With the rising rates of divorce and the rising rates of unemployment, there are substantial numbers of women who are being told that their jobs have been terminated. However, their responsibilities for the needs and support of their children have increased. The average income of a man is approximately $35,000, whereas for women it is about half that figure, that is, $17,000. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) will be speaking today on this subject. However, I wanted to mention the fact that I am concerned about the plight of women. I think that all governments should be concerned. As well, I think that the Labour Code should address this very, very important item as well as those of technology and safety.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a period of ten minutes for questions and comments. For a question, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a couple of questions to the Hon. Member who just spoke. He talked about the fact that 30 per cent of Canadians are functionally illiterate. That is true. He criticized the federal Government for not dealing with this very important defect in our education system. That criticism is one which has been made by many other Members on both sides of the House. He also talked about the fact that we have one of the lowest numbers of apprentices of any of the modern technological societies and that our technical education is deficient. All of that is true. For all that, the federal Government must share a very large part of the responsibility. But I would like to ask the Hon. Member: Does he not realize that under the Constitution and the provisions of the British North America Act, education is the responsibility of the provinces?

What has happened is not just that present and past federal governments have failed to deal with the problems. If I could digress for a moment, I would like to say that in the Diefenbaker years great strides were made in the setting up—because the federal Government helped fund them—of technical schools which later became community colleges. The fact is that not only has the federal Government failed to do what it should have done, but virtually every provincial government has failed. What we have seen in the last few years, particularly during the last few years of the recession, is that not only has the federal Government cut back on what it should be spending on this kind of education, but almost every provincial government has cut back also. No province has been more ruthless and more determined to make the cutbacks and to put those cutbacks into effect than the Hon. Member's own Province of British Columbia with its Social Credit Government. I would like the Member to comment on that point.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I understand the problems of the federal-provincial agreements on education. However, I honestly feel that the lead role must come from this Government. If the Hon. Member has been watching, traditionally the Government opposite has not been able to work with the provinces. If the leadership is not to come from here, and the other ten children are faltering along the way, I think that it is our responsibility as a senior government to provide the leadership which is required. Inevitably we will be footing the bill. We pay for UI and we share a major cost of welfare. I am fully aware of what the Hon. Member is saying. I am not here to protect any province or any provincial Party. I am here to represent people at the federal level as I was elected to do. That leadership is our responsibility. We will not gain anything by throwing bric-a-brac at the provinces. The only way in which we will achieve anything is by working together with the provinces and showing them, if they have shortcomings, where those shortcomings are. Criticism is fine as long as it is constructive.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain). He wondered aloud why the New Democratic Party, and I think myself in particular, should have spent equal time—although he suggested that it was all the time—attacking the provincial Government of British Columbia instead of attacking the federal Government for its irresponsibility in delaying the introduction of this legislation. I thought I had done that, Mr. Speaker, not only today in commenting on the miserable record of the Government in the last four years in this regard, but certainly I did so in the House of Commons a few days ago when I believe I used the phrase of CLC President Dennis McDermott, "sleazy Liberals", referring to these people in the Government who act like Tories for four years and then sound like Liberals for a couple of months. And after saying that this legislation would be brought forward "in the near future", the Government delayed it for three years, and we have finally received it in the last minute of the eleventh hour.

The Hon. Member was wondering, however, why I spent some time talking about the Conservative Government of British Columbia, and I would point out that it is composed of Socreds, Liberals and Tories. All one needs to do is to look at the signs which my Conservative opponent in Kootenay West had up on his lawn during the last election. They were Socred signs. They go to each other's nominating conventions. They are the same people. There is an old phrase with which I am sure the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) is familiar, that is, "If it acts like a duck, walks like a duck and quacks like a duck, chances are it is a duck".

I ask the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody this: In view of what has been happening in the current Labour Code amendments before the Legislature of the Province of British Columbia, in view of the number of right-to-work amendments to the Labour Code introduced by members of his own caucus in the House of Commons, and in view of what the Conservative administration of the United States has done in order to destroy individual workers' rights and attack the U.S. occupational safety and health administration, why should workers in Canada not say, "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush, and regardless of the debate on C-34, regardless of the fact it could be better, let us get this legislation passed now so that fewer of us will die or be injured in the future"? Why should they not say that? I am used to cutting cards with the devil, but I will not hand the deck of cards over to him to do with what he wants. Who knows what the next election will bring.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that as much as the Hon. Member will not recognize it, there were some people who were traditionally NDP, and perhaps still are, who voted for me, otherwise I would not have been able to win the election.

With respect to the Hon. Member's question, there is no doubt that if we cannot get amendments in a fairly short period of time, without delaying this particular Bill, our Party will accept what is there, as much as we would like to see many more amendments to the particular Bill. However, the fact remains that there is still one very big problem we are facing. I believe that the safety of the workers is the most important aspect of this Bill, but I believe also, with respect to technological change, that we are getting very close to the point where we are not going to have any workers because there are not going to be any jobs. This is why we in this Party feel we should be addressing this particular aspect, as well as the matter of women in the workplace who are playing a more predominant role, and rightly so. I believe we must act when we have the chance, and the chance only comes once in every four years, and perhaps less frequently than that, and who knows who is going to be elected next. I am sure that we in our Party are going to be elected, and if we are, there will not be any problem. The Hon. Member can rest assured of that. We will look after all these things in a proper manner for the benefit of the working man. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that we will be expediting this Bill. We will not delay it unnecessarily.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There is time for a short question.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, I have a very short question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know whether or not it is in fact the position of the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody that he and his Party would not support this Bill going through in one day?

Mr. St. Germain: The three House Leaders, Mr. Speaker, to my understanding, have been in negotiation with respect to this.

Mr. Fulton: But where do you stand?

Mr. St. Germain: Where do I stand? I will be working to improve the Bill as much as we possibly can within a reasonable period of time and we will try to have it passed before June 30.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That is the end of the ten-minute period for questions and comments. We will continue debate.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will not be very long in my remarks because I would like to listen to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) for at least 20 minutes or 25 minutes on a subject in which she has always been interested. My colleagues have addressed mainly the contents of the Bill which was introduced by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) on May 15. This legislation proposes to amend Parts III and IV of the Canada Labour Code. In addition, a number of the clauses contained in Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and Financial Administration Act, would amend Part V of the Code, the provision governing the conduct of industrial relations in federal jurisdictions. Like the other parts of Bill C-34, Mr. Speaker, these amendments are the product of lengthy and complex consultations with unions and employers under this legislation, and that of provincial jurisdictions.

I would like to discuss for a few moments the proposed changes to Part V of the Canada Labour Code, that is those changes dealing with industrial relations and the collective bargaining process. Labour relations legislation establishes the rules and procedures for collective bargaining, unionization and certification of bargaining agents. It establishes the rules of conduct between labour and management by setting out their obligations and responsibilities. It is vital that labour relations legislation be balanced, workable and generally acceptable to the industrial partners. Much has been written about the adversarial nature of collective bargaining and it would be utopian to hope that full consensus could be reached between labour and management on labour relations legislation. However, it is essential to secure the greatest degree of consensus possible and to have the benefit of advice from industrial relations practitioners on this very complex subject. Such advice was sought from the Canadian Labour Congress and other labour centrals and every major federal employer in Canada.

In 1972, the Government introduced what I would call radical amendments to the Code governing the introduction of technological change during the term of a collective agreement and more changes are needed to make that completely fair. Prior to 1972, under the management's rights theory, employers could sign a collective agreement with a union for two or three years and then immediately introduce technological changes which could drastically affect the working conditions and livelihood of the employees, thus radically changing the terms under which the bargain had been made. Such tactics resulted in considerable labour unrest and, indeed, a major wildcat strike on Canadian National Railways, which brought that entire transportation system to a halt.

The technological change provisions of the Canada Labour Code introduced in 1972, prohibited employers from introducing any technological change adversely affecting a significant number of employees during the term of the agreement, unless proper notice was served on the bargaining agent and negotiations took place. The legislation put the onus on the parties, through collective bargaining, to incorporate procedures and provisions in their collective agreements to deal with technological change. Failing this, a union could apply to the Canada Labour Relations Board for authority to reopen the agreement where technological change was introduced without notice and negotiations. As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, this was considered by some people to be very radical legislation at the time, and even today it has only been copied by three provincial jurisdictions. In the Bill recently introduced, the Government is further strengthening the technological change provisions by calling for 120 days advance notice of technological change. That is more than is done by any other jurisdiction in Canada.

There are other technical improvements to these sections, with the objective of further encouraging the parties to deal with technological change through collective bargaining. Whether we like it or not, our society—indeed, all western societies—will continue to change, and change rapidly. Developments in technology, which are occurring at a breathtaking pace, virtually guarantee us that. But as I see it, our job as policy makers and legislators remains basically the same, that is, to ensure that everyone, always and everywhere, receives equitable treatment. I believe that one of the ways we can do this is by preserving the basic integrity of the collective bargaining process.

As Members know, collective bargaining is the principal method by which workers and employers determine wages and working conditions. In my view, it is one of the most important social inventions of our time, and one which has served this country well. But despite its social utility, collective bargaining has been under sustained attack. As the Minister of Labour pointed out in his speech, governments of all stripes concerned about rising prices and costs and disruptions to the economy have intervened, perhaps too often, in the collective bargaining process. The long-term effect of such interventions has not really been fully considered. For my part, I am hopeful that the need to intervene in the process will diminish as governments, unions and employers come to realize more strongly what is at stake. We are not simply talking about a dispute resolution technique; we are talking about our faith in the capacity of democratic decision-making to work effectively.

I would like now to turn to other amendments contained in Bill C-34, which I believe contribute to the smooth functioning of this process. They have been drafted in response to suggestions made by those who actually negotiate under the provisions of the code. With respect to the Canada Labour Relations Board, the Government proposes to make a number of administrative changes, the purpose of which is, as they say, to unclog the system and thereby remove some of the frustrations felt by those who must deal with the board.

As Members probably know very well, there is nothing so irritating as dealing with an overworked bureaucracy which is further encumbered by its own regulations and red tape. I am pleased that the Government is proposing changes to the fair representation clause of the Code. At present this clause requires that unions fairly represent all bargaining unit members. This is not an unreasonable obligation considering that individual members and minorities within larger groups always require protection. However, there is a need to balance the right of the individual with the rights of the union. In recent years, grievance arbitration systems have become obstructed. To remedy this, the amendment proposes to adopt the proscriptive language used in other jurisdictions, which simply stipulates that unions must not act in a manner that is arbitrary, discriminatory or in bad faith in the representation of the employees. In addition, the amendment will apply only to administration of the collective agreement, not to the negotiating process.

The Government also proposes to make compulsory the so-called Rand formula. Employees in a defined bargaining unit are not required to join the union as a condition of continuing employment. However, because non-union members obtain the benefits of union activity, they are required to pay the union an amount equal to union dues. At present the code permits the parties to negotiate the union security and dues check-off regime that will apply. This permissive approach has been a cause of conflict during many negotiations over first collective agreements.

I want to end my remarks today by commending the Government on both the content of its labour reform package and the process by which it put the package together, albeit it took an incredibly long time. In my opinion, the amendments are fair, progressive and in line with the economic and social realities of the 1980s. This should not be entirely surprising considering that the Minister and his officials met with some 40 labour organizations and employer's associations representing all sectors under the jurisdiction of the Code. I am extremely pleased with the reactions to the amendments. Generally they have been quite positive. Members will know, for instance, that the CLC expressed approval. The Public Service Alliance has termed the Bill a firm step in the right direction. However, the business community has not been as supportive as some of us on this side of the House, but I believe it will come to realize the social necessity for the reforms and adapt accordingly. As I suggested earlier, it is in the employer's own interest to have a collective bargaining system that functions smoothly and a workforce that feels its legitimate needs are being met. It is my sincere hope that all Parties will agree to speedy passage of these amendments through this House.

I just wanted to refer to a remark made by a previous speaker concerning the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen). I want to assure the House that for many years this particular Member of the NDP was one of the forerunners in organizing unions in the forestry sector throughout Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member or his Government be prepared to agree to a proposition that there be one speaker from each Party or one day of debate on second reading of this Bill, and set a timetable for the Bill in committee with an assurance that we would have it reported back with an agreement for either one day of debate on third reading or one speaker from each Party? Immediately following passage in the House it could be proclaimed before Parliament recesses. He may not be able to do that, of course, and the Government may not be able to make the decision because a new Prime Minister may have to make it. But we would like some assurance that in any negotiations which take place later today or tomorrow, no other conditions tied to any other legislation will be forthcoming from the Government. Obstacles will not come from this Party, certainly at this point, and I would like that assurance from some Member on the other side. What the Conservatives will do, God only knows, but the Government has our assurance, and I would like an assurance from over there.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I know for a fact that the Minister responsible for this legislation wants it through at the earliest possible moment. However, I think there is going to be somewhat of a problem at committee stage. There are various interest groups in Canada which will want to make representations concerning this legislation. I do not think that in this particular case it is the unions which will want to do so because they have supported the legislation as a step in the right direction. I think the problem Members will encounter will be that the business interests will want to be heard publicly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being no further questions or comments, the House will proceed to debate.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I listened to what the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) had to say and I commend him for his interest in these amendments, as well as those others who have spoken on this very important Opposition Day debate. I want to commend as well the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) for having brought the motion forward, because it is important that we debate these amendments to the Canada Labour Code.

The Hon. Member who just finished speaking mentioned that it had taken a very long time to bring these changes forward. That is true. I was thinking of this when I was looking at the record going back over the times in committee when we raised this question again and again. It was struck by just how long these amendments had been in seeing the light of day. I looked at my records and I discovered that this issue has been raised for the first time in the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration on May 21, 1981, over three years ago. It was raised at that time by my colleague from Don Valley West who was then the Conservative Party's critic on labour matters. In responding to his question as to when the new amendments might be expected, the then Minister of Labour, who is the present Minister of International Trade (Mr. Regan), said the following, as reported in issue No. 5 of the committee report:

• (1710)

This review, which in my opinion has been painstaking and comprehensive, will shortly emerge as a package of amendments to the code and will substantially involve employment safety, conditions of employment, improving matters of specific concern to women and minority groups, and dispute settlement.

He went on to say:

At this particular stage, I would seek the indulgence of the honourable members if I do not go into the exact details of the package. The appropriate place for this, of course, will be its introduction in the House which I hope will be in the near future.

That was the then Minister of Labour speaking in May, 1981 in response to questions and entreaties from the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley), a Conservative Member of Parliament. I went through more of the records of that committee because I sat on it at that time and had been involved in discussions. I recall the numerous times the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) raised the question of when these amendments could be expected to be brought forward. In the House earlier this year and in committee last year the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) raised the question of when these amendments would be introduced in the House. I mention the number of times this issue has been raised on an ongoing basis by Conservative Members in committee and in the House of Commons to indicate our very real and irrefutable interest in having these amendments to the Canada Labour Code brought before the House, debated, examined and passed within this Parliament.

All one must do to determine the long and irrefutable quest of the Conservative Party in this issue is to look at the official records to see how often it has been raised by Members of this side. I recommend this exercise to Members of the New Democratic Party as well so that they can see the number of times this issue has been raised by Members of this Party at times when often their Members were not in attendance.

Mr. Fulton: Tell us about it.

Miss MacDonald: It should come as no surprise that it was a Member of the Progressive Conservative Party who moved this motion on this Opposition Day condemning the Government for acting so slowly to protect employees under federal jurisdiction. That proposal has been cited on a number of occasions today. I stress the point that the amendments which are proposed in Bill C-34, which we have yet to debate at second reading stage, apply to only 10 per cent of the labour force. They apply only to those employees who come under federal jurisdiction and the Public Service. It is an area in which the Government could move. It could provide leadership. The demonstration of that leadership by the Government could lead to improved labour conditions throughout the country. No doubt, it could at least help to avoid unnecessary management labour problems.

One really must castigate the Government for its failure to exercise the leadership in this field which it should have been showing three years ago when the then Minister of Labour promised to produce these amendments in the House in very short order. The Conservative Party supports the provisions of Bill C-34, the amendments to the Canada Labour Code, despite its late introduction and its obvious imperfections.

We are supporting no area more strongly than the changes affecting women in the federally regulated workforce. I would like to concentrate a few remarks on that subject. The number of women in the paid labour force has risen dramatically in recent years. Women now constitute approximately 40 per cent of the labour force. It is estimated that six out of every 10 new entrants into the labour force in the next decade will be women. This increasing number of female employees makes it essential that they be more adequately protected from sexual harassment, particularly since women are moving into areas which have been considered non traditional employment for women. At least for a period of time they will be overwhelmed numerically in these areas by their male counterparts.

The proposed amendments to the Canada Labour Code will remove any doubt that may exist that harassment is a form of discrimination. The amendments will emphasize that any complaints of harassment under the Code can be referred to the Human Rights Commission and can be dealt with under the Human Rights Act. The importance of this action cannot be underestimated. There is no doubt in my mind that harassment is a totally inexcusable affront to a person's dignity. It could impede a person's performance and progress in the workplace.

The passage of this Bill and the improvement to it would provide a definition of sexual harassment. That has been one of the problems up to the present time. There has been a lot of confusion as to what that term meant. Just as important as the definition which will be introduced is the fact that employers will be required to develop policies and programs within their places of business to combat sexual harassment on the job. Employers are in a position to recognize problems at work and to take immediate corrective steps to control harassment. Therefore, their participation is essential.

That in itself is not suddenly going to resolve the problem in this field once and for all. It must be recognized that the amendments do not present a magic solution to the problems with regard to harassment. They are a step in the right direction, but only a step. They must be accompanied by a change in attitude. That cannot be legislated and cannot be brought about overnight. It must be done through education and example. That will take time. If these amendments had been introduced, passed and in place four years ago, that would have been a good step toward eliminating the sexual harassment which still exists. That was four years that was wasted when we might have had them in place.

Another amendment that is included in the proposed Bill and which is of great significance to women, is the improvement of child care leave provisions. The present requirement of 12 months continual employment prior to being eligible for maternity leave has been reduced to three months. In addition, there is a proposal for a further 24-week period of unpaid leave so that employees, whether female or male, have an opportunity to assume the responsibility of caring for the child, whether natural or adopted, during that 24-week period. When an employee is away on leave, during that period, his or her pension, health and disability benefits as well as seniority continues if the employee so desires. I think that is a very positive step in the right direction.

Finally, child care leave would be at the discretion of the employee. No employer could dismiss, suspend, lay off or demote an employee due to pregnancy or child care leave. There can be little doubt that these amendments relating to child care and maternity leave are progressive and would greatly benefit both women and men.

I think it is important that we have this debate and get the Bill before us and into committee so that we can also try to do something about its shortcomings. There is one aspect of the Bill which I believe has not really come to grips with the problems in our workplace, that is with regard to the propsed amendments relating to part-time workers. There are about 2.6 million part-time workers in Canada today, almost two million of whom are women. They are currently ineligible for benefits, such as pensions, medical plans, disability insurance. On average, they receive approximately three-quarters of the wage of full time employees. Furthermore, in most cases they are not protected by unions.

Despite this situation, the only mention of part-time workers in Bill C-34, this present legislation which the Government has introduced, is to eliminate an anomaly which precludes some part-time workers from qualifying for general holiday pay. That is all that the Government thought to say about part-time workers, almost two million of whom are women without benefits of any kind.

If these amendments to the Canada Labour Code had been introduced sooner so they could have gone to committee for the necessary study and so that we could have heard representations to try to get the Government to change its mind about part-time workers, I believe that these two million people whom I am talking about could have anticipated better treatment in the workplace.

As the report of the Commission of Inquiry on Part-Time Work—better known as the Wallace Commission—illustrates, the field of part-time work is an incredibly complex one. I mention this because I feel certain that we will need time to study amendments in this field. We want to see improvements made.

More important, we need to work out a definition of what a permanent part-time worker is. That is not included in the amendments and has not been dealt with. Therefore, there is no way of working toward the prorating of wage rates and benefits until we have some such definition.

No one in this Chamber is unaware of how important committee study of legislation can be. That is why I say that I am sorry that the Government has waited so long to bring this legislation forward. I do not think it can be given the adequate time and attention it should have in committee in order to improve the working conditions and the way in which part-time workers are treated.

The National Action Committee on the Status of Women stated in a letter to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) on April 27 of this year:

> The National Committee is concerned with establishing compulsory standards in the Canadian Labour Code which will ensure that all women exposed to V.D.T.s and working in sectors under federal jurisdiction are guaranteed decent working conditions.

This is another area we could have studied in detail in the committee if we had the time. I do not believe that we will have the time now.

The problem that arises is that women will be worse off because the Governmet did not allocate that time or make provisions for it by bringing in all of these amendments earlier. This comes back to the way in which we see so many matters of this nature treated, always being done at the last moment and always being done so that some group is deprived of adequate and fair treatment. All too often, that group of people are women.

In the few minutes that remain to me, I would like to raise briefly the matter of technological change in the workplace. It has been said over and over again that in the next decade technological change could bring about the displacement of almost one million women from their present jobs. It is a horrendous possibility to even think about.

The proposed amendments will attempt to strengthen the existing provisions with respect to technological change by increasing advance notice of changes from 90 to 120 days, by increasing information available to employees and by providing means of redress against employers who do not follow the first two requirements.

While this may be considered a positive step, it is really unfortunate that these proposals have not been complemented by programs under the jurisdiction of other Ministers, particularly under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Notice of technological change does not mean that job loss will not occur. It simply means that people will have 30 days longer to think about it. Unless more comprehensive and more easily accessible training programs are made available, women will end up paying the heaviest price for technological change. That is a subject that has not been addressed by the Government except in a very meagre way. It is a tremendous challenge that is before us. The particular amendments that have been introduced in Bill C-34 only touched the surface. They do not go to the heart of the matter at all.

Once again, we see that women, whether the part time paid labour force or those who are affected by technological change, will be the ones who suffer the most, because there is not a sufficient and comprehensive look at the way in which change in the labour force will affect us in the years ahead. There is no doubt in my mind that had the amendments to this Bill been brought in three years ago when the then Minister of Labour promised them, we could have moved much more quickly to improve the lot of women in the future. As our Party has said, the amendments will be supported when they come before the House, but it is really an inexcusable treatment by the Government that it should wait until the dying days of Parliament to introduce measures as important as these to change the Canada Labour Code.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the hon. lady a question. Where was the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party in 1959 when the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers took on the huge national corporation, namely, Canadian Pacific Railway? The issue was technological change. There were no Conservatives or New Democrats on the picket line. I was on the picket line. Where were your members?

• (1730)

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has a longer memory than I.

Mr. Turner: I was there.

Miss MacDonald: He may well have been there in 1959, Mr. Speaker. I congratulate him if he was. But what has the Hon. Member been doing in the last 10 or 15 years while his Government has been in office?

Mr. Turner: Where were you?

Miss MacDonald: There have been no changes brought to the Canada Labour Code in that period of time.

Mr. Turner: There were no Conservative Party members, Mr. Speaker. I was on the picket line. I was in Sudbury, Toronto, and Windsor. I operated part of the strike on the CPR. There were no Conservatives nor New Democrats there. Where were they then? They are talking about the issue now.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to see the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Turner) getting into the debate. I have no great argument with him. In a sense, he is one of the House officers. He is perhaps the one who can best tell us why it was that the then Minister of Labour in May 1981 said that these Canada Labour Code amendments would be before the House in short order. He did not bring them forward at that time, and here we are having wasted three years when these amendments might have been in effect.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, may I answer the question of the Liberal Whip who just asked us, New Democrats and Conservatives, where were we in 1959. I do not know where other Members were, but I was busily engaged in 1959 helping to raise money and organize protest rallies—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I must insist that the questions be directed to the Hon. Member who just delivered a speech.

Mr. Kristiansen: Comments or questions, I believe, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I am sorry to advise the Hon. Member but comments are supposed to refer to the speech delivered by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, in listening to the comments of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) I could not help but reflect upon the attitude of Conservative and Liberal members over the years. For instance, in 1959 I was busily engaged in organizing protest rallies and raising money trying to protect the rights of woodworkers in the Province of Newfoundland who were facing legislation that, for the first time in Canadian history and almost the only time in international history in the free world, outlawed an entire union from the Province of Newfoundland. That, Mr. Speaker, was done by a Liberal Government. We had never in the history of the United States, Canada, or western Europe, to my knowledge, other than for Adolf Hitler and perhaps for Il Duce in Italy, seen the kind of legislation that totally banished an entire free organization from any political jurisdiction in North America or anywhere in Europe. A Liberal Government imposed that on us. For the Liberal Party to try now to play hero when it is responsible for the most vicious anti-labour legislation that ever existed in North America, sounds a little hollow—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please, I must again draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that he is supposed to be directing his remarks to the Hon. Member who has just spoken. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald).

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I truly do appreciate the great interest of members of the Liberal Party and of the New Democratic Party in the past. I understand they are rooted in 1959.

What I was trying to do in my comments, Sir, was to direct the attention of the House to the very real problems that will be faced by Canadians in an advancing technological age in the next decade, to look forward and to see how it is we can introduce good amendments that will make it possible for people to have more beneficial working situations in the years that lie ahead, not look back to 1959.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there any more questions?

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I believe that if the floor is not asked for, as the proponent of the motion I may conclude the debate. Is that right?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): At this stage the Hon. Member can ask a question, if he so wishes, of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Wenman: No, Sir. I was rising to debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): I see the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) rising.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue the question of technological change with the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). She mentioned that this change is very definite. The change has been going on gradually. The Government's program has met some of the retraining needs but not all. The difficulty with the Government's program is that there are not enough slots for training. In my riding, young people particularly, men and women, go to the employment office and are told that there are no slots, no places. This is pretty frustrating. The Government sets up a program and it is not set up big enough to include the majority of those who want to retrain. I would like to have the comments of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands on this.

Just before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask where the Liberals were in 1918 when the UMWA and I were fighting the OBU.

Mr. Ellis: Where were you, Charlie?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has raised one of the major problems that we face. We must all take it very seriously. Adequate consideration has not been given to the training and retraining of persons either entering the workforce or presently in the workforce to allow them the opportunity to enter into new types of work, and take new kinds of advancement. I mention that, Sir, because I had said during my remarks that what the Canada Labour Code needed was complementary legislation from other Ministers, particularly from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts), so we could deal with this question of more adequate training programs throughout the country. What he does not seem to realize is that not only do we have great numbers of young people coming out of school and universities going into the workplace, but we have the possibility of something between 3 million and 4 million people in the workforce who will require retraining in order to take advantage of the technological age. That is a massive job of organization. The Government has not really begun to turn its mind to what has to be the biggest challenge of mobilization which the country has ever faced. I compliment the Hon. Member from Bow River for raising this question and for saying that the Government must get on with giving higher priority to it, and we all must do so as Members of Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): That concludes the ten-minute period for questions and comments. Continuing with debate, the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant).

● (1740)

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be taking part in the debate on amendements to the Canada Labour Code, in other words, Bill C-34. I must admit that after what I just heard, I feel a bit uneasy. Someone shouted across the House, a little earlier: "Where were you in 1954?" Later, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) said: "Where were you in 1917?" Well... As far as I am concerned, I am afraid I am a little too young to react to these comments.

Nevertheless, I think we should look to the future instead of looking back. I also listened, of course, to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) who made some excellent suggestions, some very laudable ones, and her intentions were laudable as well, and I am thinking of her suggestion that the Bill should have included Canada's two million part-time workers... And of course, employees who spend the whole day in front of a video display terminal... There is some concern about the impact this could have on their health. There is also technological change, which will mean, inevitably, that many people will have to be laid off or recycled in some way or another. As I said before, these are all excellent suggestions made by the Hon. Member who usually has good suggestions about Bills the Government is introducing.

However, it is clear that if we wanted to examine draft legislation very thoroughly, we would never see the end of it. If we want to make Bills perfect in every respect, we would have to examine them for a very long time. I think the Government has decided to act, while keeping the option of amending these Bills again later on. I think that if we consider the statements made by a number of labour and management leaders, it is high time the Canadian Government took action.

I would like to refer here to a statement by Mrs. Shirley Carr, Executive Vice-President of the Canadian Labour Congress, who said during an interview on the CBC—she was still Vice-President at the time—that the amendments could not have been tabled many months ago because they did not contain everything they asked for. It is also interesting to note that on the same occasion, a representative of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Mr. Gil Levine, stated that "The labour movement in Canada is pushing for adoption of the amendments proposed by Mr. Ouellet, despite their limitations, because we believe that with a new Government, Liberal or Conservative, and especially under a Conservative Government—Mr. Speaker, I am still quoting Mr. Levine—it will be years before these improvements are felt."

Mr. Speaker, it is clear to me and probably to most Members of this House that the amendments were tabled at the right time and that they are more than welcome. This proves that the Government has not neglected its responsibility in the area of labour legislation.

As the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) has already indicated, these legislative proposals have resulted from the excellent co-operation shown by the many labour organizations and employer associations during the extensive consultations which led to this Bill.

I believe that these amendments will emphasize the fact that the Canada Labour Code has always paved the way for further labour legislation and has often been used as a model by the authorities concerned.

I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that the amendments meet the new requirements of the eighties and are a step forward in the evolution of labour legislation in Canada.

As you know, the Canada Labour Code is the body of rules which regulate work standards, occupational safety and health, as well as the general framework for labour relations in the areas under federal jurisdiction, which employ something like 600,000 workers in Canada. These industries include those which, by their very nature, extend beyond national and provincial boundaries, for instance in the areas of transportation and communications, some 40 Crown agencies and corporations, as well as the banks and industries which Parliament has stated to be of national interest. This includes, for instance, the uranium mines and the Western grain handling industry.

With respect to the amendments to Part III, I would like to remind this House that these deal mostly with workers whose responsibilities are related to child care and with the problem of sexual harassment in the workplace in Canada, while the amendments to Part V are designed to promote a greater commitment on the part of workers and employers to matters of occupational safety and health.

Finally, various sections in Part V have been amended to reinforce the provisions of the Code which deal with collective bargaining. Mr. Speaker, could you tell me whether my time has expired?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 62(10), to interrupt the proceedings and to put every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply. In consequence, the first question is the following:

SUPPLY

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 1, DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Hon. André Ouellet (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Vote 1, in the amount of $125,773,000 under the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—Operating expenditures, in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985 (less the amount voted in Interim Supply), be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Gray) which was agreed to on the following division:

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I believe there have been consultations between the Parties and there is an inclination to have the vote as recorded on Motion No. 1 apply also to Motions Nos. 2 and 3. If we have unanimous consent for that proposition we can then move on to Motion No. 4 and Motion No. 5, to be voted on separately by separate votes.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any Hon. Members who did not vote previously who wish to be recorded as voting on this occasion? There are none.

By unanimous agreement, the vote which applied to Motion No. 1 will also apply to Motion No. 2 and Motion No. 3.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 5, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMIC AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Hon. André Ouellet (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Vote 5, in the amount of $3,488,000 under the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development—Northern Pipeline Agency, in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985 (less the amount voted in Interim Supply), be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

[Translation]

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 1, DEPARTMENT OF THE SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Speaker: The next question is as follows:

Hon. André Ouellet (for the President of the Treasury Board) seconded by Mr. Pinard, moved:

That Vote 1, in the amount of $18,995,000 under the Department of the Solicitor General—Administration, in the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985 (less the amount voted in Interim Supply), be concurred in.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Shall we dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ALLIED LANDINGS IN NORMANDY

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, forty years ago today, at dawn, about 14,000 young Canadians landed on the beaches of Normandy with their British, American and French allies, as part of the most impressive amphibious operation in history. They came from all parts of this country. Many belonged to military units with such evocative names as: The North Nova Scotia Highlanders, the Régiment de la Chaudière, The Fort Garry Horse, The Regina Rifle Regiment... Canadians at home celebrated their victory and, at the same time, mourned the fallen. On the first day, 1,000 soldiers were killed in combat.

The success of D-Day paved the way for the celebrated campaign in Northwestern Europe which, less than a year later, would make it possible for the Allies to meet Soviet troops in Germany. It is then that one of the most violent periods in history finally ended. But at what price! During the war, the Canadian Forces lost 48,000 troops, of whom 12,500 lost their lives in this campaign.

Today, when commemorating D-Day, we can look back with satisfaction on what has been achieved during the last forty years. The sacrifice made by those young Canadians gave our country the right to make itself heard in the councils for peace that shaped the postwar world, as well as in councils which today discuss the same vital issues, those of world peace and security. In Western Europe, the conquerors and the conquered have come to terms and are now working together within the European Economic Community, for instance, and, another example, with their North American allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. After being the scene of two horrendous armed conflicts in this century, Western Europe has known nearly forty years of peace, an unprecedented phenomenon.

[English]

Any tendency towards self congratulation must, however, be muted. Around the world today, four million people, we are informed, are engaged in 42 wars, rebellions, or civil uprisings. Horrifying as these figures are, they are dwarfed by the hundreds of millions who are suffering from hunger or who are being denied basic human rights, inequities which themselves can give rise to war.

Bitterest irony of all, the relations between the two major architects of the Second World War victory, the United States and the Soviet Union, are as bleak as they have ever been. East and West have arsenals sufficient not only to devastate one another, but, as a well-known American scientist reminded us this week, potentially to destroy the human race itself in a catastrophic "nuclear winter". Yet there are no serious nuclear arms negotiations going on at this time, and little progress is being made in other forums such as the Stockholm Conference or the Mutual and Balanced Force Reduction talks in Vienna.

The differences between East and West are, unfortunately, real, and require us to take part in a strong defensive alliance for our own security. But we must constantly look beyond defence. The search for peace must be a constant preoccupation of our Government and of each one of us singly. We have to explore constantly how East and West can work together in the pursuit of common goals, to avoid war, contain crises, to increase mutual confidence, to achieve balanced disarmament and arms control, to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons and to promote the prosperity not only of our own country but of the Third World which looks to us for help.

Today leaders of allied countries, Members of this House, and Canadian veterans have returned to the beaches of Normandy. They have done so to commemorate the valour which young people displayed there 40 years ago. It is fitting, Mr. Speaker, that we in this House, and Canadians across the land, pause for a moment to recall their sacrifices and to rededicate ourselves to their legacy, the legacy of peace and freedom.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, this is a day unique. Forty years ago today I never thought for a moment that I would be standing here in this place and participating in the way in which I am about to, in commemorating the 40th anniversary of D-Day. Other Members are absent, notably the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), who is in Normandy today where he was on the beaches 40 years ago today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton), who is there today, was flying over the beaches on that day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) was languishing in a German prisoner of war camp.

How his heart must have sung when he received the news of the landings.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: There are others here today who participated in that march to freedom, but because the Acting Prime Minister has put on the record four of the notable regiments that took part, I think it is only fitting that the entire 11 regiments which participated that day so long ago be part of the permanent record of this commemorative day. In the Seventh Brigade were the Royal Winnipeg Rifles, the Regina Rifle Regiment, and the Canadian Scottish Regiment. In the Eighth Brigade were the Queen's Own Rifles of Canada, the Regiment de la Chaudière, and the North Shore (New Brunswick) Regiment. In the Ninth Brigade were the Highland Light Infantry, the Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry-Highlanders, and the North Nova Scotia Highlanders. In support were the Cameron Highlanders of Ottawa, a machine gun regiment, and finally, the First Canadian Parachute Battalion.

• (1410)

I, like the Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton), was in the air. There were others at sea crammed into between 5,000 and 6,000 ships. From our vantage point it appeared that we could have walked across the Channel without getting a foot wet.

No words can underline the impact of the events which took place on this day 40 years ago. Referring to the Battle of Britain, Churchill said: "Never . . . has so much been owed by so many to so few." Similar words could be used to define the dynamics of the D-Day landing in Normandy. All the world knows that it was one of the largest and most complex combined operations ever seen, the like of which we had not seen before and hope never to see again.

It brought to bear the power and versatility of the air, combined with the dogged effectiveness of a mighty naval screen, and the mobile punch of armour, infantry, and heavy artillery. It showed the world something of the organizing genius, the mobilizing capacity, and terrible fire-power of freedom. D-Day was the opener for the Normandy campaign against a well-armed, highly skilled, determined, and versatile enemy. But nothing could withstand the power and resolution of the mighty Allied forces motivated by the restoration of freedom.

There is more than a memory of war, or the clash of mighty armies, or the nostalgia of times forgotten to justify keeping alive the memory of the generation which took its stand on the Normandy beaches. As a member of that generation who fought in that company, as did other Members, I can say that we shall not see their like again. I had just passed my twentieth birthday and was in an RAF Lancaster bomber squadron which provided an air umbrella for the protection of Canadians and all Allied forces participating in the landing on 40 to 45 miles of beach.

Young men and women took their part together. Women performed a silent but dedicated role on every front. There were no back seats in 1944. The young men of that generation ranged the skies in search of an enemy whose power had been crippled and broken in the preceding months. They manned ships, tanks, and guns. They stormed the bloody beaches and bore in to grip the enemy in the lanes and hedgerows of the Norman countryside. They drove the enemy house by house through the inferno that was Caen—which lasted for 31 days.

This was a mighty gesture by a free people, worthy of a few moments' remembrance in the House of Commons so that future generations will not forget what they did there—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1415)

Mr. Nielsen: —and above all, so they will not forget the goals for which they fought and died, the motivation that led young Canadians to contribute in the way that they did, many to the ultimate sacrifice. As young as most of us were, we knew our goal, and that goal was the restoration of freedom—the retention of freedom—that, if not achieved might have seen the Swastika flying over Canadian soil.

D-Day reopened freedom's door for Western Europe. It marked the end to the long incarceration of their hopes, their freedom, and of their dignity. Canada's part in that great drama was a worthy one, a proud one, and Canadians were well aware that the welcome they received was meant to underscore the rebirth of freedom for people who had learned its true meaning through its loss.

The bitter and hard fought Normandy fight has meaning today because it reasserted the rights of western freedom. Regrettably, there are vast sections of Europe where human rights, dignity, and freedoms are not respected.

As we join with free peoples everywhere in paying tribute to the generation which gave its youth and its hopes in order that freedom should live, let us not forget the obligation imposed upon us by their commitment and their sacrifice. Our first obligation is to keep faith with them by remaining alert to defend the goals for which they died. Do not let anyone say "It cannot happen here". It will not happen here only if we are constantly vigilant and continually at work against the prospect in whatever form it appears.

Perhaps equally important, we must work and strain so that the conditions which made their sacrifice necessary will not again exist, and moderate and reasoned measures will so prevail that the bright wings of peace will never again be tarnished by the rumour of war.

I would have liked, Mr. Speaker, to have said those things that came from my heart, in our other official language, French. I, like many of my colleagues, fought alongside Canadians of all stripes from all parts of our country. If I could do it fluently in French, I would do it in French.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: But as my colleagues from French Canada are aware, in emotional times such as these, the language of one's mother tongue expresses them more adequately.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, forty years ago this morning, what Field Marshall Rommel predicted would be the longest day of the Second World War began on the beaches of Normandy. The Allied invasion of Europe, otherwise known as D-Day, or Operation Overlord, had begun.

Today, not only on behalf of my caucus but also, may I say, on behalf of a generation yet unborn on the day of that invasion of the beaches, I would like to pay tribute to those Canadians who were there on that historic morning, and to those who followed them. Let us remember with gratitude and with praise the courage of all and the sacrifice of the many, and join our hearts with the families, friends and comrades of those who died, who were maimed, or who were captured. We will remember them.

It is important to remember. A society that cannot remember, that has no respect for history, that lives only in the present moment without concern for past or future, is a society doomed to shallowness and to destruction. But remembering must be a way into the future as well as into the past. Therefore, let us not be captive to images of war which our memory of that great invasion naturally brings to mind. For in the next war there will be no soldiers and sailors and airmen going off to war, some to die, some to return, all to be remembered for their sacrifice and bravery. There will only be the instantaneous destruction of hundreds of millions of human beings, men, women, and children, and the complete breakdown of civilization as we know it, not to mention of the planet itself, due to the heinous environmental damage that a nuclear war would cause.

Therefore, let us be captive instead to the images of individual courage, national planning, international co-operation and human community which all went into the success of the invasion and the war effort in general.

As individuals let us match the courage and self sacrifice which we so rightly honour today with a willingness to sacrifice our own lives for the cause of peace and human future. For war is not the only opportunity to fight for peace. We can fight for peace in peacetime, each in our own way, by being true to our deepest insights about the tragedy and futility of war, and acting on them.

As a nation let us put our hearts and minds together once again as we did at that time, and build a purposeful economy designed to serve the common good and the hopes for the future which so many who served had when they came back, and which so many young people today have for themselves and their families.

As a member of the international community let us recall what nations are capable of when they work together for a common goal, and never cease in our efforts to get the world to redirect the vast resources, both material and human, now sinfully directed to mutual overkill, from death to life, in a common struggle against poverty, disease, pollution, and the roots of war.

Finally, let us all remember that beyond our identity as Canadians we have an identity as human beings, all members of the same human family, with a common home, the planet earth. Let our loyalty not only be to Canada but also to all our fellow creatures and creation itself. Let us long for and work for the day when we shall all truly beat our swords into ploughshares, our spears into pruning hooks, when nation shall not rise against nation, nor shall we learn war any more.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I want to join briefly with my colleagues and thank them for the testimony they have given on this most memorable day. All over Canada sentiments will be advanced much like the sentiments that were expressed by the Minister for External Relations (Mr. Pepin), by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), and by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). People will recall this most dramatic day in their lives, and they will remember the events of 40 years ago when they were young, tough, and courageous. They will remember D-Day.

Soldiers, airmen, and sailors will all have memories of that crucial day when Canada and its allies stormed ashore to secure a foothold on fortress Europe.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, our soldiers, our airmen and our sailors will all have vivid memories of that crucial day when Canada and her allies stormed ashore for a foothold on fortress Europe.

[English]

The sailors of the destroyers Algonquin and Sioux will see in their mind's eye their guns firing on the Juno Beach defences. The airmen of the RCAF will see again the cratering of German gun positions, or the fighter sweeps to keep the Luftwaffe at bay. And soldiers from a dozen regiments, English and French, properly identified in the House this afternoon, will perhaps live again the tension before battle, and call to mind friends who did not make it as they slugged through the German defences.

[Translation]

But June 6 does bring to mind more than the anniversary of the most important landing in history, a landing in which 15,000 Canadians took part, Mr. Speaker. It was as well the day when was launched what was later to be called the war of liberation, the rescue—by singularly dedicated troops—of the European civilization which the Nazi invaders were on the verge of obliterating, the beginning of the end of the human disaster that was World War II.

• (1425)

[English]

I am sure Hon. Members will join with those who have spoken this afternoon in a vote of thanks to all those young men who risked their lives to expunge the evil from Europe. I would ask all Hon. Members to remember as well the women who worked to make the battle a success, and the women who lost sons, brothers, and husbands. For them too, D-Day is a traumatic memory.

For all of us, D-Day will long live in its full glory as an epic day which epitomizes the sacrifices that democratic peoples are willing to make to preserve the values of civilized society. I particularly draw attention to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), because those sacrifices were made for generations to come. I cannot bring before the House the sort of testimony which the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) can bring. I was but four years old at the time. However, I can say that we have lived upon the bounty which has resulted from that level of human sacrifice.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might observe a minute's silence in memory of those who fell.

[Whereupon the House stood in silence for one minute.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would there be unanimous consent to extend the Question Period until thirteen minutes past three?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of this question yesterday I would like to direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. He will know that yesterday the Canadian dollar fell to its lowest value in history in terms of the U.S. dollar, to 76.79 cents. The previous low was on June 29, 1982, when it fell to a value of 76.80 cents. At that time the Government had to raise Canadian interest rates five percentage points higher than the U.S. rate to stem the flow of funds to U.S. dollars. That is what had to be done to stop the devaluation of the dollar.

Today our prime rate is 12 per cent and the U.S. rate is 12.5 per cent. The Minister of Finance said that he was not spending his nights worrying that the dollar was 81 cents in March. Is the Government worrying now that the dollar is under 77 cents? Would the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether the Government will act to protect the dollar? If so, how? Will the Government put interest rates up past the present 12 per cent?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member opposite knows very well that it is not our practice to speculate on interest rates or indeed on the fluctuating value of currencies.

• (1430)

The Hon. Member also knows very well that during the past few days the value of the United States dollar has strengthened not only against the Canadian dollar but against most other major currencies. At the same time, however, I would note for the Hon. Member that the Canadian dollar has also strengthened against most other major currencies. In fact, if the Member wants to engage in his almost minute by minute speculation about the Canadian dollar's value, today it has strengthened again. The basic consideration is the strength of the Canadian economy, which has meant that Canadian interest rates during the past year and one-half have been very close to and in a few cases less than those in the United States. That is a development in our economy that I am sure the Hon. Member opposite would want to join with us in welcoming.

OUTFLOW OF CAPITAL

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, it is useless to expect a frank and clear answer from the junior Minister of Finance or from anybody on the government side. We cannot get any firm declaration of the Government's economic policy with respect to the dollar and what it is going to do.

In the first quarter of this year we had a huge capital outflow. Direct investment of $500 million left this country. Unidentified outflow was $1 billion. That is added to the $34.8 billion in capital that left this country in the last three years, 1981, 1982, and 1983. Does the Minister agree that the real reason the dollar is sinking is because of these huge capital outflows? If he does not agree, what does he say is causing this constant devaluation of the Canadian dollar? How does the minister propose to stop these outflows and this devaluation which has reached the lowest point ever in our history? Even the 1930s did not match it.

How does the Minister propose to stop these outflows and get the economy back on track again other than by the resignation of the Government? We know they will not contemplate that.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks about government policy with regard to the value of the Canadian dollar. He knows that on many occasions in the past we have indicated in the House that the value of the Canadian dollar is related to interest rate movements in the United States. If interest rate pressures in the United States are upwards, Canadian dollars will flow from Canada into the United States seeking short-term higher returns. That in turn means that Canadians buy U.S. dollars, driving down the value of the Canadian dollar. It is perfectly straightforward. The Hon. Member knows that. What the Bank of Canada does, and the Hon. Member knows this as well, is to moderate such movements. The Bank of Canada will continue to moderate such movements.

Instead of raising all sorts of dark forebodings, as the Hon. Member so often indulges in, he should recall that it is the basic strength of our economic recovery which has enabled the Bank of Canada to moderate the fluctuations in the Canadian dollar exchange rate and the Canadian interest rate. It is also that basic strength which has enabled Canada to have interest rates that, in many cases, do not exceed and in some instances are lower than those in the United States. The fundamental proposition the Member should bear in mind is that the Canadian economy is strong and the recovery is strong.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have asked two serious questions which affect the future of this country and everyone who lives here, and have had nothing but specious quacks from the Minister of State for Finance. There is no strong recovery under way. The dollar is sinking. This country and its economy are in danger.

I will direct one final supplementary to the Minister, and let him try to answer without giving the recorded broadcast which they have about U.S. interest rates. Our cash reserves today are minuscule. We have a foreign debt of about $130 billion. Our foreign exchange reserves, with all the money we borrowed, are $3.67 billion. The capital base of this country is eroding. The Government has caused these problems. It has been in office for the four years while they accelerated. What is it going to do about the problem? What program is going to be brought in to stop this rot before it goes any further and no one can stop it?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to be getting more and more excited with his own rhetoric. The fact is that we have an economic recovery of substantial proportions in Canada today. The Member will know that in the final quarter of 1983 economic growth was continuing at a pace of about 7 per cent. It has, as we fully expected, and as we have stated on a number of occasions, moderated during the first two quarters of this year. That was to be expected. It is a more sustainable rate of growth, as the Hon. Member knows.

With regard to the question of interest rates in Canada, the Member knows perfectly well that those interest rates are largely influenced by developments south of the border, not here in Canada. When the Hon. Member describes the Canadian economy as being in some sort of perilous condition which has given rise to higher interest rates, he is talking through his hat. He is talking nonsense, and he knows it.

The fact is that interest rates in Canada are to a substantial degree a function of interest rates in the United States. Nevertheless, with the economic recovery in which all Canadians have shared, with our success in bringing down inflation, Canada is now in a more productive and competitive position. One result of that is not only has our export trade reached record levels, but we have been able to maintain interest rates which are comparable to and in some instances lower than those in the United States.

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. I want to refer to the latest Statistics Canada report which, in reporting that the recovery is slow, states, and I quote:

—the upturn in business investment in plant and equipment that usually appears in the second year of growth is not evident in the preliminary forecast of the survey of public and private investment in Canada.

Strong business investment automatically creates new jobs. Since the United States is experiencing a record investment boom, as is clearly demonstrated in the fact that its unemployment rate is 7.8 per cent compared to our rate of 11.4 per cent, can the Minister give any substantive reason in the face of these recent high interest rates why this poor unemployment record in Canada will not deteriorate further in the future?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that the level of unemployment in Canada is in part determined by the additional workers joining our labour force. The labour force in Canada has grown over a number of years at a faster rate than in the United States and, indeed, than in most industrialized countries. We have created more jobs in Canada, and at a faster rate, than most other industrialized countries. Yet the fact remains that there are larger numbers of people joining the workforce.

With regard to the private sector, the Hon. Member should know that corporate profits have increased substantially during the past year. The liquidity position of corporations has improved enormously. We see capacity utilization continuing to increase. I do not doubt that we shall see the benefits of increased investment in plant capacity during the course of this year, which will bring benefits in terms of employment as well.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, that is another example of the Ministers talking with their rose-coloured glasses on, and not dealing with reality.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I am sure he is aware that the Minister responsible for the co-ordination of economic policy for the Government, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development, said recently in his leadership campaign that the Industrial and Regional Development Program simply is not working in creating jobs. Does the Minister agree with that statement? Does he agree that this program should be changed and that it should be replaced in all or in part with tax reductions or tax incentives that are clearly designed to create that new employment we desperately need when there are 1.5 million people out of a job today?

• (1440)

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will follow the lead of our respected Prime Minister and his response to one of the Hon. Member's colleague who asked the same question, and indicate that I will be tolerant as well. Also, when my colleague, the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development was asked that question, he indicated that perhaps Hon. Members would be wise to read the entire speech and not take what was said out of context.

GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM

REMUNERATION OF DOME PETROLEUM CHAIRMAN

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Earlier today as various Members paid tribute to those who served on D-Day, we heard of the sacrifices that were made for Canada and for freedom. For the last three or four years the Minister of Finance and government Members have been asking Canadians to make sacrifices in the name of rebuilding the economy. It seems that one group of Canadians is not a part of this equation.

It was reported the other day that in 1983 the Chairman of Dome Petroleum earned $7,600 a day. That is the amount of money that the average UIC recipient would receive in an entire year. Does the Government plan to ask people like Jack Gallagher to make sacrifices so that we may build up the Canadian economy, as it has asked the average working Canadian?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I also read this article and my memory of it is that the particularly high salary that that particular gentleman received on that particular day was due to particular circumstances. In other words, if I recall correctly, he was leaving the company and that led to a settlement, which explains at least in part the high salary that he was receiving.

It seems to me that my hon. friend should bear in mind special circumstances when he is passing judgment on matters of this kind. The tax system in Canada provides for higher and higher payments as the income of an individual gets higher and higher. It is a progressive system. Consequently, everyone gets to contribute to the development of the country as a whole, according to his capacity.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, one could make some comments about the progressive tax system and how upper income earners are making their contributions. I will leave that for another day.

SALARY INCREASES FOR CORPORATE EXECUTIVES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I agree that the case of Mr. Gallagher was only one case. However, I would like to remind the Acting Prime Minister that in the past year the average wage settlement for the average Canadian was below 5 per cent, which is the rate of inflation. However, we found that the 1983 salary increases for top corporate executives in Canada were in excess of 12 per cent. That is double the rate of inflation. These are the same people who are asking their employees to take salary and wage cuts, or to keep their increases below the rate of inflation. How long is the Government of Canada prepared to accept this type of hypocrisy? What does the Government plan to do about it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, in the answer to the previous question I tried to indicate to my hon. friend that he must not introduce his questions in this particular way. Quite often there are valid explanations for particular cases. The Hon. Member did not apologize for his question because he is too proud for that, but he seemed to recognize that his question was not well posed and was not one from which conclusions could be extracted.

A similar thing applies with respect to different categories of people and their improved compensations. As a former Chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, I have a bit of experience with these matters. I did learn that it is unwise, to say the least, to judge the income increases of groups of people on the basis of one year. One must look into the situation of a number of years past and study the factors which might have influenced the compensation given to a group of people over a period of time. That is the kind of advice I would like to give to my hon. friend.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Acting Prime Minister that we are speaking of the corporate elite of Canada. We are speaking of the executives of the major corporations of Canada who received across-the-board salary increases of an average of 12 per cent while their own employees were asked to take wage and salary cuts, or to keep their increases to an absolute minimum. Many of these individuals were earning salaries in excess of $500,000 to begin with.

Because the Acting Prime Minister understands the role of the Anti-Inflation Board, a Board on which he was a member some years ago, and because he recognizes the role of corporate leadership, does he think that this is the kind of leadership we can expect when people are being asked to be more realistic about their demands? Is this the kind of position that the Government supports? If not, what is it going to do about it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I was just trying to indicate to my friend that the question as posed was not a fair one. He must not judge a person's improvement in income on the basis of a single year. It may be that a group of people will receive an increase of 12 per cent this year but received increases of only 3 per cent, 4 per cent, or 5 per cent in past years. It may very well be, and I believe it is the case, that a group of people will receive a 5 per cent increase this year but received increases of 7 per cent, 9 per cent, 12 per cent, or even 20 per cent in previous years. In order to judge the fairness of income increases given to different categories of people in Canada, one must study the situation in some depth. That was the kind of advice I was trying to give to the Hon. Member.

PENITENTIARIES

ESCAPE OF EDMONTON PRISON INMATE WHEN ON UNESCORTED TEMPORARY ABSENCE

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and is in regard to one Balentine Leschenko who, a few days ago, disappeared from the third unescorted temporary absence which was given to this man who was an inmate of the Edmonton maximum security prison. Mr. Leschenko was serving time for robbery and armed robbery. As recently as August, 1983, the Parole Board denied him an unescorted temporary absence on the basis of a need for further demonstration of good behaviour. In view of the fact that this particular prisoner has escaped or attempted to escape on two or three occasions, can the Solicitor General tell us exactly why that prisoner was out on an unescorted temporary absence, keeping in mind the fact that he will not be eligible for mandatory supervision until February 26, 1991?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this is one of those cases that falls under the jurisdiction of the National Parole Board. The individual concerned had served some 12 years in penitentiary. He was eligible for parole some five years ago. For five years the Parole Board had been reviewing his case and finally came to the conclusion that, in its judgment, he should be allowed out on unescorted temporary absences. He took two such absences without incident. On the third absence, he violated the rules. I cannot say that the Parole Board did not act within its discretion. When considering the criteria that were presented, it decided to allow this inmate to begin a process of resocialization after spending 12 years behind bars.

ROLE OF NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Solicitor General could first let the House know whether or not Lechenko has been apprehended. As well, the House would be interested to know what experience the particular members of the Parole Board had who decided that it was all right to let this prisoner out on an unescorted temporary absence. What does the Solicitor General have in mind to do about the fact that, at the very least, it seems to be a strange exercise of judgment, given the fact that this man is only 33, his offences include armed robbery, and his past record is one of attempted escape and escape?

• (1450)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as to the success record of the National Parole Board in granting unescorted—

Mr. Fraser: I am talking about these parole officials.

Mr. Kaplan: I do not know the particular parole officials who sat on this case. The National Parole Board hears nearly 45,000 cases a year. I will look into the matter. However, I can tell the Hon. Member, and it is a matter of public record, that members of the National Parole Board are drawn from a very broad cross section of people, including former policemen, people with experience in the correctional service, educators, people with journalistic experience, and some former Members of Parliament. So far as their success goes in deciding on the granting of unescorted temporary absences, I can tell the Hon. Member that in 1981 they had a 98.99 per cent success rate on temporary absences granted. In 1982 they had a 99.36 per cent success rate. There were only 13 failures out of over 2,000 cases. In 1983, out of 2,761 unescorted temporary absences, the success rate was 99.49 per cent, so I thank the Hon. Member for his supplementary question.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT MEMBERS FROM COMMITTEE MEETING

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, the latter not being in the House at this time. The Standing Committee on Agriculture met last Thursday. Five members of our Party were there along with one member of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre. Only one government Member showed up. We had to adjourn and could not pass the amendments to the agriculture stabilization act out of committee. Would the Parliamentary Secretary tell the House whether he is prepared to ensure that more than one government Member will attend the committee meetings so that if we in our Party show up and Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party show up, we can pass the Bill out of committee? Could we have a commitment that when the committee meets we can pass the Bill through, clause by clause, in order to get it back to the House as quickly as possible so we can get some money into the hands of the western farmers?

[Translation]

Mr. André Bachand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that at the next meeting there will be enough committee members present for clause-by-clause adoption of the Bill.

[English]

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, for the information of the Parliamentary Secretary, my office was informed by telephone that we are going to meet tomorrow afternoon. I will tell him when the meeting is, and I hope he will show up.

REQUEST FOR EARLY PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I believe he has responsibility for amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act. When the Bill comes out of committee, and hopefully we can do that tomorrow, will the Minister use the influence of his good office and suggest to his House Leader that we get this Bill passed next week? The Minister of State for Finance stands and talks about all the things we cannot do. Here is one thing the Government can do in terms of putting some money into the pockets of western farmers.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Their own money!

Mr. Mayer: Can we have a commitment that the Minister will do what he can to get that Bill on the Order Paper so that we can pass it through all stages in this House by the end of next week?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DENIAL OF PENSIONS TO VETERANS REMAINING OVERSEAS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. As the Acting Prime Minister knows, Mr. Speaker, Canadian veterans of the last war who elected to live overseas following discharge from the service are now being denied war veterans allowance pensions because they refuse to return and reside in Canada for one year. Would the Acting Prime Minister tell the House why a Canadian who fought for his country in the last war, who is a veteran in every sense of the word, is being denied a benefit which every other veteran receives, simply because he refuses to return to Canada and live here for one year? Why is that the case? And why does the Government not correct that kind of injustice?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am really not familiar with the particular aspects of this question. I have found in my some 20 years in politics that 93 per cent of the time there is a good explanation for these situations. I will try to find it, and my friend and I can then pass judgment on the adequacy of the reason.

RESIDENCY REQUIREMENT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. According to a press report yesterday, the executive director to the Minister of Veterans Affairs said: "The only reason those veterans must return to Canada for one year is so that the Department of Veterans Affairs can get to know them". That is the most illogical argument I have ever heard in my life. It seems to me that if that is the key argument used by the Government to refuse to pay those pensions, it is one which seriously requires re-examination. I would ask the Acting Prime Minister to use his good offices to do that.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): I will, Mr. Speaker.

VIA RAIL

RESTORATION OF EDMONTON-VANCOUVER SERVICE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. My question arises out of his promise this past weekend to restore the Edmonton-Vancouver VIA Rail passenger service partially. In April of this year the Minister said that the only way this service could be restored would be through a cost sharing arrangement involving the federal Government, the provinces, and the municipalities. Can the Minister assure the House that this condition is not attached to his commitment to restore this service by the fall of 1985?

Could he also tell the House why the President of VIA Rail, when he appeared before the committee last week, completely contradicted the Minister of Transport when he stated that there was no commitment to restore this service? Does the Minister have a breakdown in communications with the President of VIA Rail, or are we to assume that the President of VIA Rail was less than frank with the committee?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the first question, let me explain that I have never said there must be a cost-sharing. I said we were trying to recruit the involvement of the provinces and the municipalities, that we would provide the rail service and we would want them to complement that by investing in promotion, market development, tourism development and other parts of the economic side of that package. We have received very useful co-operation from the municipalities. I am still waiting for an equal commitment from the provinces.

Because of the major economic importance to the Province of Alberta and British Columbia, to say nothing of the entire country, in encouraging the development of new tourist traffic, we have gone ahead to reintroduce that line. The task force which was established under the leadership of Mayor Decore and Mayor Harcourt will continue to develop the role and responsibility of the municipalities and provinces. We have, therefore, been able to generate that kind of local level responsibility and commitment, and I am hoping the provinces will also show signs of being good partners in this kind of arrangement.

As far as the statement made by Mr. Franche in front of the committee is concerned, he, of course, was not in a position to make that kind of commitment in front of the committee because, Mr. Speaker, it is the Minister of Transport who makes policy on VIA Rail.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Minister mentioned the task force. May I then ask him why he pre-empted his own task force in making his decision before the task force brought down its report, particularly in light of the fact that I understand his own task force was recommending that the reinstatement take place in the spring of 1985? And why is the Minister delaying the restoration of that service until the fall of 1985? May I ask the Minister also whether any similar consideration is being given to the restoration of the VIA Atlantic service which was dismantled in the same fashion as the western transcontinental service?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, once again, I thank the Hon. Member for the opportunity to clarify the situation which he has tried to put forward. The fact of the matter is that we have been working very closely with the task force, and the reintroduction of the Edmonton-Jasper-Kamloops-Vancouver line is in total accord with its recommendation that it be initially a three-day service. We have fully conformed to the kind of proposals the task force has made.

With respect to the question of timing, we have given ourselves until the fall of 1985 because there are some variables which we cannot control, such as the deliberations by the Canadian Transport Commission. It would certainly be my intention to try to have the service in place by the spring of 1985. We are working towards that, and if we can get full co-operation of the CTC and others, I am quite confident we will have it in operation by that time.

• (1500)

As to the third part of the question, we have had a number of discussions with Members from the Atlantic area concerning the economic justification for improvements in service. As the Hon. Member knows, we have reintroduced the Moncton-Edmundston line as a demonstration of our interest in serving that part of the region. We will maintain and continue that same kind of innovative approach in consulting with communities and enlisting their co-operation.

TORONTO-PETERBOROUGH—REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW ABANDONMENT OF SERVICE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, well over six months ago the Minister of Transport and his personal staff promised the people of my constituency and the local councils that if they got together, co-ordinated their efforts, the Minister would meet with them and serious consideration would be given to reinstituting the Toronto-Peterborough VIA Rail passenger service which was so stupidly cut off by the Minister's predecessor. Just last week the Minister's departmental officials admitted in the Committee on Transport that absolutely no consideration has been or is being given to the reinstitution of that line which could be economically sound and for which there is a good demand. Why will the Minister not meet with them and at least review that silly decision?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would speak up a little bit so we could hear him on this side of the House.

There have been consultations and discussions. We have looked at the proposition, and I suggest he go back and talk to his friends in the Ontario Government to get an answer on why there has been no reconsideration of that line.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DIEPPE VETERANS' REQUEST FOR PENSION INCREASE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday we witnessed the fact that veterans, in this case Dieppe veterans, felt that so little attention was being paid to their case that they had to march on Parliament Hill. Although no government Members showed up, they did this to call the attention of the Government to the fact that they have a special case for having their pension classification increased from 20 per cent to 40 per cent. In recalling D-Day of 40 years ago, we know that the Dieppe raid had a lot to do with the success of D-Day. I call on the Acting Prime Minister to use today as a golden opportunity to announce that the Government is going to meet the request of the Dieppe veterans and increase their pensions.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that my hon. friend uses this day to ask questions which the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who is in Normandy today, would have been in a position to answer on those days when he was here. I will bring it to his attention and I am sure he will want to provide an answer when he gets back.

Mr. Blaikie: This is not exactly a new item. It has been before committees of the House of Commons and the Senate. All Members of Parliament have received communications on this, including the Acting Prime Minister, and I am surprised that he just wants to duck the question and not indicate where he stands on this issue.

DELAY IN DEPARTMENTAL APPEAL PROCEDURES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister is talking to the Minister of Veterans Affairs maybe he could also make some representations on behalf of the many veterans who get an incredible run-around from the Department of Veterans Affairs. It takes years and years to have an appeal heard. There is often an automatic rejection, and then another four years go by in appeals. It often seems that it is the Government's bureaucratic policy to wait for veterans to die off so it will not have to pay the pensions coming to them. Perhaps he could make that representation also so that justice can finally be done and these delays can be stopped.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, on matters of this kind I have had an opinion about my hon. friend's Party for a long time. That opinion is simply that whatever the Government does for any group of people, veterans, or married women, or unmarried women, and what not, they always come back and suggest a lot better. Their intellectual contribution in the last number of years to the development of social services in Canada has simply been to add another ten when there was 100, or another 20, or another 30. That has been their intellectual contribution to the social services of Canada. Consequently I am not surprised by today's request because it comes every day from that Party.

VIA RAIL

TORONTO-PETERBOROUGH—STATUS OF DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I have here the current householder of the Minister of Transport in which he says:

> My job as an MP is to listen and serve your interests. That is not "porkbarreling". This is just good, honest representation.

How does the Minister justify reinstating a VIA Rail line in his own riding while at the same time standing up in this House and telling the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland that he has met with the heads of municipalities in the Peterborough area? That is simply not the case. Would the Minister stand in his place and retract that statement? His own office said there was a letter in transit; the letter has never been received. There was a commitment to hold a meeting, and the meeting has never been held. This is the third time the Minister has unintentionally misled this House.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to note that the Hon. Member has substantially improved the quality of his reading material recently. I hope that practice will continue, because he may learn a lot more about the qualities of a good MP. I would be glad to send him past copies so he can have a full library.

The fact of the matter is that there have been a series of meetings held, and discussions have been ongoing. As I explained to the Hon. Member previously, the reasons have to do with the kind of discussions we have had with the provincial government.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Peterborough on a supplementary. Would the Hon. Member bear in mind that there are many Members on his side seeking to be recognized?

Mr. Domm: Thank you very much for the supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

NEWSPAPER REPORT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, it was the Minister's office that advised the Peterborough Examiner on May 11 that a letter had been sent outlining the Minister's position. As of today that letter has not been received. Therefore, would the Minister advise this House why he is not only, intentionally or otherwise, misleading this House, but at the same time misleading all the heads of all the municipalities in the region of Durham-Northumberland, Peterborough, and Peterborough-Hastings?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should point out that I am responsible for VIA Rail, not for the Canada Post Corporation, so I cannot give him a full explanation for the delay. At the same time I will check and make sure that we have a more rapid delivery.

MARINE TRANSPORT

ATLANTIC CONTAINER EXPRESS SUBSIDY

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister, concerning the $7.3 million subsidy the federal Government has agreed to pay to Atlantic Container Express to carry cargo from the Port of Montreal. In February of 1982 the Government paid a similar subsidy to a related company, Newfoundland Steamships, at a cost to the taxpayers of $5.9 million. How can the Minister justify an expenditure of $13 million in public funds for a transportation service that the former Minister of Transport said did not require a subsidy? There were two carriers performing the service without a subsidy.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would refer the Hon. Member to the possibility of holding some discussions with his two colleagues who represent the St. John's area. They have felt, as have many people in that area, that this is important to the development of the marine shipping program and service to that area. It is part of the review we are doing, and if his colleagues from that area are prepared to say that they want to see the elimination of that service and a reduction of some 40 per cent of the potential work in that port, then I would be quite glad to have those representations from the two Hon. Members from St. John's.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, if he does not know, I can tell the Minister that there were no representations from St. John's, Newfoundland, to continue this service, because there is no benefit to Newfoundlanders in subsidizing freight from the Port of Montreal when there is a perfectly adequate railway service through the ports of Nova Scotia, including North Sydney.

REASON FOR SUBSIDY

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister not admit to Parliament that the reason for the subsidy is because Terra Transport is providing services at below cost? The Government had to provide this subsidy to equalize the subsidization. We are getting into one big subsidization which is really intended to benefit friends of the Government.

● (1510)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it is going to come as a wonderful piece of news to the people of St. John's, Newfoundland, that their two Members of Parliament are not interested in any kind of program which would keep some 40 per cent of the port activity going on in St. John's. I am sure that will make front page news in St. John's tomorrow.

FISHERIES

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CRAB FISHERY

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I see him on this side of the House. He is getting a little practice, because this is where he will be after the next election. My question is with regard to the crab fishery and the absence of licences for P.E.I. fishermen for the crab fishery. I have discussed this in committee. I have raised it in the House. I have mentioned it to the Minister and have written to him. Is there any assurance coming from the Government that P.E.I. fishermen will indeed be awarded crab licences for the crab fishery on P.E.I.?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, if the resources will ever allow for an incremental fishing effort in the Gulf, the first priority will be for P.E.I. fishermen.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ANNOUNCE ISSUANCE OF LICENCES

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I understand that there may be some licences forthcoming for the fishermen of P.E.I. I was hoping that the Minister would announce that now, rather than waiting to announce it during the election campaign. Would the Minister announce today that there are indeed licences going to be issued to Island fishermen in the crab fishery?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am shocked by the way the Hon. Member treats that topic. As he knows, we have a consultative committee in which all the participants in the fishery do participate. There is a consensus that as soon as there is a positive scientific report by the biologists which would allow for increased fishing efforts—which report is widely distributed to all participants—the priority will be given to P.E.I. fishermen. I hope the Hon. Member realizes and understands that fishing allocation is done by rational and fair criteria.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

RENAULT AND AMERICAN MOTORS AMALGAMATION APPLICATION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. For a number of years there has been an application before the Foreign Investment Review Agency with regard to the amalgamation of Renault automobile manufacturers and American Motors which have a plant in my constituency. This application has been before FIRA for many years. Can the Minister give us any indication when there might be a decision on that application?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Soon, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBLE IMPACT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, this has been going on for a number of years. I have had that answer for a number of years from those who have held that portfolio. Can the Minister assure the House that, when that decision comes down, the jobs of the workers in the Brampton plant will be protected and that there will not be any decrease in employment because of the decision which the Foreign Investment Review Agency makes? Can we have that decision soon? The workers are concerned about what is going on there at the present time.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that all I have heard for four and one-half years from the Conservative Party on the other side is about the free market. I am very surprised to hear someone on the other side talk about protection. If the Hon. Member has some patience, I think he may have some good news in the future with respect to that application.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

FISCAL VIABILITY—IMPACT ON PREMIUMS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Health and Welfare. In their discussions regarding pensions yesterday in Toronto, the provincial Ministers of Health agreed in principle on a number of points and on the general broad outline of pension reform. We welcome that. On the same day that the provincial Ministers were meeting, there was a report tabled in the House regarding the Canada Pension Plan. There has obviously been some disquiet about the fiscal ability or soundness of CPP. Does the Minister agree with the authors of the report that, in order to keep CPP viable, increases on premiums would have to be in the order of 11 per cent of salary?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, unless the Member is talking about a period of over 50 years or something like that. I do not have my dossier with me. I think he knows very well that it was not the Health Ministers who met yesterday in Toronto. It was officials and people from other Departments in charge of the funding of pensions, mainly from Finance.

Everyone in Canada knows that the rate of contribution will have to be increased because we kept it very low for 16 or 17 years. That is valid for la Régie des rentes du Québec as well. The increase will not be of the amount the Member mentioned, and it will not be all at once. People are talking of a fraction of a percentage or one or two points at a time over the years.

THE MONARCHY

QUEEN'S SUMMER VISIT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister, if I can get his attention. My question is with regard to the proposed Royal visit to Canada this summer. Her Majesty the Queen will be visiting New Brunswick, Ontario, and Manitoba. Will the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that, if there is a general election this summer, under no circumstances will the Government of Canada request that Her Majesty not come to Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think we have enough real problems without trying to resolve, in anticipation, the hypothetical ones.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, June 5, 1984, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * * *

Mr. Crosbie: Question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for St. John's West on a question of privilege.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, in his reply to a question asked of him this afternoon, the Minister of Transport suggested that there had been a representation from Members from St. John's with respect to a subsidy given to Atlantic Container Express Limited. That is completely untrue and incorrect. I have never made any representation to the Minister. He has never explained the purposes of this subsidy to me. I am opposed to it with the present information—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The Hon. Member has made his point, I believe. It is not a question of privilege, but he has made his point.

Mr. Crosbie: The Minister is acting duplicitously, Mr. Speaker, and I protest.

PETITIONS

MR. MITGES—ACTION AGAINST PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition from many citizens from my riding of Grey-Simcoe who are deeply concerned about the extensiveness of pornography in our country as portrayed in magazines, movies, and videos. They are also concerned about the moral ethics of people in our country which allow room for depictions of violence and degradation and the exposure of children to degradation, violence and pornography. The petitioners would like to see concrete changes made to the Criminal Code to eliminate once and for all these examples of abominations from our country.

MR. MALONE—PREFERENCE FOR PRAIRIE CABLE TELEVISION IN HANNA, ALBERTA

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of some 600 signatories from the community of Hanna in the constituency of Crowfoot, Alberta. The signatories are asking that preference be given to Prairie Cable Television in their community which would give them the option of a service which is local, retain a business within their community, and allow for a broadcasting system that is sensitive to the needs and aspirations of the community. These signatories hope that the Minister of Communications will lend particular attention to their call due to the fact that it is an almost unanimous petition from the whole community.

MR. LEWYCKY—RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from some 152 people in my constituency who express concern for the rights of the unborn. The petitioners point out that annually there are over 60,000 abortions and that living aborted babies are being used for commercial experimentation. These petitioners from Dauphin, both the town and the rural area, from Winnipegosis, Grandview, and Gilbert Plains, urge the Government to pass legislation to recognize unborn babies to be truly living persons having the same rights as all citizens.

ARCTIC WATERS ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Question No. 629—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there an Arctic Waters Advisory Committee and, if so, what (a) are its terms of reference (b) is the (i) name (ii) background or expertise (iii) term of appointment of each member (c) remuneration, such as salary or travel expenses (i) do the members receive (ii) did the members receive to date (d) other funding, if any, is provided by the Government?

2. During the fiscal year 1982-83, did the Committee meet and, if so (a) how often (b) how often is it required to meet (c) what matters did it consider (d) what reports and/or recommendations were published?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes, there is an Arctic Waters Advisory Committee (AWAC) chaired by a Yellowknife Regional official of the Northern Affairs Program (NAP), Indian and Northern Affairs Canada (INAC).

(a) Terms of Reference. While there are no formal structured terms of reference, the mandate of the Northern Affairs Program, INAC through the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act (AWPPA) is to ensure that the natural resources of the Canadian Arctic are developed and exploited only in a manner that takes cognizance of Canada's responsibility for the welfare of the Inuit and other inhabitants of the Canadian Arctic and the preservation of the peculiar ecological balance.

AWAC provides interdepartmental, multidisciplinary advisory function to NAP, INAC on all project proposals and regulatory issues pertaining to the mandate of the Department. AWAC also provides a forum for review, discussion, and comments on project proposals and activities by the Territorial Governments and native organizations.

(b)(i) DEPARTMENTS	(ii) AREA OF EXPERTISE
Northern Affairs Program, Indian & Northern Affairs Canada (INAC)
Water Resources	—impacts on water
Land Resources	—real estate, terrestrial impacts
Environment & Conservation	—environmental assessment
Minerals and Economic Analysis	—geology

Committee for Original Peoples Entitlement (COPE)	—Native issues
Baffin Region Inuit Association (BRIA)	—Native issues
Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration (COGLA)	—Safety, oil and gas exploration

(iii) There is no term of appointment for the members.

(c) Special allotments are not provided by the NAP, INAC for salaries. Disbursements incurred while attending a Committee meeting are at the expense of the individual's department or organization.

(d) No other direct funding is provided; however, certain secretariat costs, such as office supplies, stationery, et cetera, are covered by Indian and Northern Affairs Canada (IANC).

2. (a) AWAC met six times in 1982-83.

(b) The normal incidence of meetings is bimonthly. However, more frequent meetings can be scheduled if issues warrant.

(c) Normal matters at AWAC meetings have included review, discussion, and assessment of offshore oil exploration and drilling programs, metal mining exploration, and assistance to other regulatory bodies where Arctic waters may be affected and any other projects related to the mandate of NAP, INAC and AWPPA.

(d) AWAC does not publish reports. However, recommendations assembled at Committee meetings are forwarded to NAP, INAC for inclusion in the final departmental position on environmental matters pertaining to the Arctic marine waters north of 60°.

Order Paper Questions

DVA—FUNDS AVAILABLE TO CHILDREN OF VETERANS

Question No. 771—Mr. Towers:

Does the Government make funds available to children of veterans who attend post-graduate schools, secondary schools, technical schools or universities and, if so, is there any plan to increase the available funds and, if so, in deciding on the level of increase was consideration given to the current cost of tuition fees and related expenses?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes, the Department of Veterans Affairs does make funds available to children, of certain deceased veteran disability pensioners, who attend post-secondary institutions, including post-graduate schools.

Benefits are provided under the Education Assistance Act for post-secondary students enrolled in universities in Canada and those in technical institutions which have as an admission requirement, completion of secondary school or equivalent.

Assistance is provided to the eligible student in the form of a maximum monthly living allowance of $380.19 and a maximum grant of $800 per academic year which is applied to tuition and other related costs. Monthly living allowances, in accordance with the regulations, are adjusted annually to the corresponding change in the Consumer Price Index.

The maximum grant level of $800 for tuition and related expenses is currently under review by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. LeBlanc that Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to speak at length this afternoon on Bill C-37. However, in view of the fact that the Order Paper is very crowded, in view of the fact that the Government is prevailing upon the Opposition to get the Bill passed as quickly as possible, and in view of the fact that we are also anxious to get Bill C-34 in for second reading, I am prepared to sit down and invite you to put the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is as follows: Mr. LeBlanc, seconded by Mr. Caccia, moved that Bill C-37, an Act to amend the National Housing Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Carried?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): No! All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. LeBlanc), which was agreed to on the following division:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate has passed Bill S-14, an Act to implement a convention between Canada and the United States with respect to taxes on income and on capital, to which the concurrence of the House is desired.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INTEREST ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Interest Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Interest Act, arises from February's Budget. Members may recall that the Budget outlined a number of proposals to improve the security of home owners. In fact, two Bills now before the House are in response to that initiative. Bill C-37, which we approved in principle yesterday, amends the National Housing Act to provide for the introduction of the Mortgage Rate Protection Program while Bill C-36 proposes amendments to the Interest Act.

One of the key elements in the Government's housing initiatives is these proposed amendments to the Interest Act. Those amendments will, first, strengthen the rights of mortgage borrowers by providing consumers with better disclosure of the terms of their mortgages. The amendments will also establish a statutory right for borrowers to prepay their mortgages with maximum penalties that strike a balance between the needs of both borrowers and lenders. Second, the amendments will increase the flexibility of the mortgage market. Third, they will provide a broader choice of mortgage instruments by permitting the development of new mortgage instruments.

Canadians have experienced a period of high and volatile mortgage rates. Conventional mortgage rates rose from just over 13 per cent in early 1980 to a peak approaching 22 per cent in the latter half of 1981. Since then, rates have returned to more traditional levels. In adapting to that unusual environment, available evidence suggests that the majority of borrowers renewed their mortgages for terms of less than two years or chose to take variable rate mortgages. We hope, however, that those experiences are now well behind us.

The steep decline in interest rates led many borrowers who had renewed their mortgages at high rates for longer terms to seek assistance from the Government in having their interest rates reduced. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) have also received numerous complaints about the level of prepayment penalties that some lenders have demanded from consumers who wish to renegotiate or prepay existing high-rate mortgages. Some lenders have shown an unwillingness to allow any prepayment.

The Government is sympathetic to the plight of those who have experienced difficulty in often trying circumstances. As Members know, the Government has demonstrated that it is prepared to take exceptional action in exceptional circumstances. It has introduced a number of measures to assist borrowers who are hardest hit and least able to cope. A joint government and industry task force was established to ensure the problems were identified as quickly as possible and dealt with in a flexible and responsive way. The co-operation of mortgage lenders in responding to problems in a flexible manner was essential and was forthcoming in most instances. Also the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan has provided assistance to over 21,000 home owners.

• (1115)

The proposed amendments to the Interest Act now before us are one prong in the Government's efforts to improve home owner security. These proposals represent a comprehensive and balanced approach to this important problem and will minimize the risk of Canadians once again finding themselves in similar situations to those of recent years.

I should now like to discuss the proposed amendment contained in Bill C-36 in rather more detail. One comment that has been expressed on numerous occasions in letters and in other representations to the federal Government concerns the lack of information and understanding that borrowers had about the terms of the conditions of their mortgages. Bill C-36 proposes that mortgages be divided henceforth into two categories: first, mortgages over the prescribed amount of $150,000; second, mortgages equal to or less than $150,000. Mortgages in the second category, which encompass the vast majority of residential mortgages, will be subject to comprehensive disclosure requirements that will provide consumers with essential information on the terms and conditions of their mortgages, including prepayment rights and privileges. Lenders will have to fulfil these disclosure requirements when the mortgage is initiated and upon subsequent renewals. To permit "comparison shopping", lenders will be encouraged to disclose this information in advance.

The Interest Act requires that mortgage lenders disclose the rate of interest calculated yearly or half-yearly, not in advance. There is little disagreement among consumer groups, financial institutions and the public at large that most individuals do not understand this method of disclosing interest rates and cannot compare mortgage rates to other consumer loan rates. Lending institutions have suggested that the method of disclosing mortgage rates be modernized to reflect current lending techniques as practised in consumer and commercial lending. The lending institutions have suggested that mortgage rates be disclosed as an annual percentage, as is done in the United States.

The main reservations that have been expressed about adopting a new method of disclosing mortgage rates focus on the potential for a one-time disguised increase in mortgage rates that could result from incorrect rounding of interest rates. In particular, while the Consumer's Association of Canada is generally supportive of modernizing the method of disclosing interest rates, concerns have been expressed about the rounding problem. As a result I suggest that the method of disclosing mortgage rates be examined at the committee stage of this Bill.

The proposed amendment in the Bill now before us attempts to balance the various facets of the mortgage market to ensure its continuing flexibility and responsiveness to the needs of borrowers and lenders. In this regard, the adoption of simple solutions could do more harm than good, making matters worse.

At various times there have been calls on the Government to set the prepayment penalty for all mortgages equal to three months' interest. While this proposal would allow borrowers to be relieved of their high mortgage obligations at relatively low cost, it remains a simplistic solution to a complex issue and can indeed do harm to the total mortgage market.

The adoption of this type of penalty in the majority of cases does not provide an appropriate balance of risks between lenders and borrowers, as it would interfere with the ability of financial institutions to match their assets and liabilities. Especially during periods of volatile interest rates, distortions in the mortgage market will occur. It is expected that all borrowers would find themselves more exposed to volatile interest rates and with fewer options available. This could both increase their costs and reduce their security by precluding the ability to lock in mortgage payments for reasonably long periods.

In recent years there has been considerable confusion in the minds of consumers about their prepayment privileges under the Interest Act. While the public's perception at times has been that a three-month interest prepayment penalty for longer-term mortgages is available on all mortgages, in reality mortgage contracts have a variety of prepayment penalties. Some contracts are silent on the subject and in those circumstances penalties are at the lender's discretion.

As I have already noted, some borrowers have complained about the level of proposed prepayment penalties and their ability to prepay the mortgage under any circumstances. The amendments contained in Bill C-36 propose that for mortgages of $150,000 or less borrowers have the right to prepay their mortgages upon the payment of the principal outstanding, any accrued interest and the prepayment charge. The method of calculating the maximum prepayment charge that a lender can impose is set out in the legislation. However, borrowers will not be prevented from negotiating more favourable prepayment conditions. It should be noted that the value of the prepayment charges will depend on a number of variables, including the outstanding principal, the amortization period, the decline in interest rates and the time remaining to the end of the term of the mortgage.

The basic principles underlying the proposed prepayment formula are that it should be a reasonable balance of the interest of both parties and that it should not interfere with the vitality of the mortgage market. When mortgages are prepaid, lenders must relinquish their claims on existing mortgages and replace them with other mortgages. If current mortgage rates are lower than the contract rates, then lenders could experience losses. Accordingly the prepayment formula provides compensation to lenders for the losses incurred due to the prepayment and will thereby ensure a continuing supply of funds to the mortgage market. The proposed maximum for the prepayment penalty will be the present value of the difference, over the balance of the mortgage term, between the interest stream at the rate provided for in the mortgage being repaid and the currently prevailing market interest rate for mortgages of the same term. For partial prepayments, the charge shall be proportional to the amount of principal being prepaid.

In the event that interest rates remain unchanged or increase, there would be no prepayment charge. Due to the wide ranging debate and until recently the unspecified nature of the maximum prepayment penalty, some lenders have been inserting clauses into their mortgages and renewal agreements that require the borrower to waive his or her rights to future prepayment privileges. Bill C-36 proposes that borrowers cannot waive their statutory rights to disclosure or prepayment privileges.

Section 10 of the Interest Act provides borrowers with the right to prepay mortgages which have been in effect more than five years upon the payment of a penalty equal to three months' interest. The existence of Section 10 has contributed to the disappearance of long-term mortgages because lenders view it as an unequal distribution of risks between borrowers and lenders. There have been periodic requests for government action to encourage the development of a long-term mortgage market, and, accordingly, the Government is proposing initiatives to this end. As one step, Section 10 will be repealed to eliminate this legislative barrier to the development of very long-term mortgages and to make uniform the prepayment penalties for residential mortgages. The repeal of Section 10 would not apply retroactively to existing mortgages. No existing mortgage borrowers will be adversely affected by this change.

The repeal of Section 10, combined with the proposed present value prepayment penalty rules, is necessary if the longer-term mortgage market is to be revived. The new prepayment formula will help to ensure that mortgage funds are available to meet the market demand, while the repeal of Section 10 will remove an important barrier to longer-term mortgages.

The flexibility of the mortgage market can be improved by increasing the number of alternative mortgage instruments that are available to consumers. Variable rate mortgages have been available for a number of years and naturally gained in popularity during the recent period of high and volatile mortgage rates. While variable rate mortgages are available, lenders have expressed some concerns about their legality with respect to the Interest Act. Bill C-36 proposes to clarify the legal status of variable rates in mortgages. Because the borrower, rather than the lender, bears the risk of interest rates changing, there would be no penalty for the prepayment of a variable rate mortgage.

Index-linked mortgages are another mortgage design that could add to the flexibility of the total mortgage market. While index-linked mortgages can be useful in certain circumstances, they are not appropriate for all borrowers. While not promoting this instrument, the Government is amending the Interest Act to permit their development if market forces dictate.

Bill C-36 proposes that the amendments apply to new mortgages on a date set by proclamation. The proposed amendments will not be applied retroactively to existing mortgages, but those mortgages will become subject to the amendments as they are renewed.

The February Budget asked lending institutions to adhere to the spirit of the proposed amendments. Many institutions have done so. We hope that they will continue to do so. Bill C-36 also contains some house-keeping amendments on judgment debts that were asked for by the provinces and will be proclaimed on a province by province basis.

At the time of the February Budget, it was announced that federal Officials would be consulting with provincial counterparts on the proposed Interest Act amendments. Consultations were also held with a committee of financial institutions and the Consumers' Association of Canada. I am pleased to report to the House that the general response to the proposed initiatives was decidedly positive. In particular, provincial consumers' affairs officials and the Consumers' Association have generally endorsed the proposals, noting that they go a long way towards improving consumer information and protection in the mortgage field.

In conclusion, Bill C-36 is a progressive piece of legislation that deals with real consumer problems caused by a lack of information and inflexibility in mortgage arrangements. The proposed amendments will improve the flexibility, vitality and functioning of the total mortgage market. The experiences of home owners during the past few years suggest that this legislation is urgently needed. I hope that this Bill can be debated quickly and sent to committee. The positive response that the proposed amendments have received from all interested parties would indicate widespread public support for Bill C-36. I trust the House will approve the Bill before the end of this current session.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard a speech by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) who knows absolutely, completely and totally nothing about the mortgage industry other than what he has been told by his friends is the big trust companies, the big insurance companies and the big banks. It reminds me of the fact that he has now set up a task force which is examining the powers of the big insurance companies, the big banks and the big financial lenders. He does not want to consult with the public. He gets this information from the foxes and then designs a henhouse for the foxes. The people of the country will be hurt dramatically by this legislation.

● (1130)

May I point out, Sir, that Section 10 of the Interest Act provides that no mortgage held by an individual can be held for longer than five years and the individual can escape his obligations under the debt instrument upon payment of three months' interest by way of bonus. This particular Bill creates a situation that is absolutely disastrous to a personal borrower who is borrowing on a term that is in excess of five years.

In the Minister's press release he gives the illustration of a mortgage of $50,000 with an interest rate of 12 per cent amortized over 25 years. In the press release he has indicated that the interest rate has presumably dropped to 9 per cent and that the term of this particular mortgage has two years yet to go. He shows that the penalty to discharge that $50,000 mortgage would be $2,538.23. Three months' interest by way of bonus would be $1,500. That is his illustration.

I asked the Department of Finance to give me the true figures with respect to someone who was unfortunate enough to sign up for a mortgage at an interest rate of 18 per cent back in the days of the Government's high interest rates which are returning again. I asked what would happen if that unfortunate person wanted to pay off his mortgage because interest rates had dropped to 13 per cent. I suggest to you, Sir, that on a two-year term rather than a three-year term or a five-year term, the penalty would be excruciatingly higher than three months' interest by way of bonus; substantially higher than six months' interest by way of bonus; probably higher than one year's interest by way of bonus. This is the kind of help that the Government wants to give to home owners. Government Members ought to be ashamed of themselves. The Minister ought to be ashamed of himself. I do not know how he can come to the House and even suggest that this Bill is designed to help home owners.

Let us take a look at the Interest Act. From my preliminary investigation I have found that we have had an Interest Act dating back to at least 1840 which has contained virtually the same terms and conditions. This Bill is in almost exactly the same form as that Act. I would suggest that it is probably in the same form as that which has been in existence since July 1, 1880. The present Interest Act is at least 100 years old and is probably much older than that.

The concepts contained within the current legislation are concepts regarding dealings between parties, lenders and borrowers, on mortgages for real estate, concepts that are a part of the common law of the country. Those concepts are well understood by people throughout the country. They are not concepts that are new. They do not involve the horrendous nonsense of the present value of future payments of money. I do not know how anyone could explain to Aunt Mamie, who may be lending money on a mortgage, the present value of future payments when she is forced to discharge the mortgage in accordance with regulations yet unpublished, yet unthought of and yet undetermined.

It is true that a vast amount of the money in mortgages on real property or real estate in the country is money that has been put up under the auspices of financial intermediaries like the trust companies, the banks, the credit unions and the insurance companies. However, I would suggest that when dealing with the numbers of mortgage documents that exist, not necessarily in total dollar amounts, private mortgages and small trust mortgages represent more mortgage documents than the number of mortgage documents held by the large financial intermediaries. The law that is before us is a law of general application. It is a law that requires the concept that the lender is in business to lend money on mortgages for real estate not only today but 100 years from now. Aunt Mamie will be dead and buried and her estate will be long wound up by that time.

This country is a vast one. It is not made up of only Etobicoke North and Mississauga South. It is a country of small towns right across the land in which retired people, small groups of people and private merchants lend money to finance their neighbours' properties. We cannot change dramatically the terms under which interest is calculated and under which the bargain is struck without some long-term public input and without some real investigation. Such changes require a full debate and full consideration by the House.

This Bill is a bad Bill because it has been scrutinized only by the big banks, the big trust companies, the big insurance companies and the big credit unions. It has not had the scrutiny of the small town lawyers, the small town credit unions, the small finance companies, the local merchants and the people who put up money and make the country grow in the small towns and villages right across Canada. This Bill will make it virtually impossible for those people to understand the kinds of privileges that Parliament would like to see given to those who lend money on the security of real estate.

If, for example, this Bill indicated that if there were three years to go on the term of a mortgage, the bonus would be six months' interest and if there were less than three years to go on the term of a mortgage, it would be three months' interest, we could understand that and we could live with that. Even Aunt Mamie and her lawyer could understand that. However, the present value of futures in a money market somehow determined somewhere by regulations here in the ivory towers of Ottawa and presumably on the top floor of Place Bell tower is the kind of nonsense that has been spewed out by the Government for the last four and a half years and the reason why the people of the country will toss it right out.

Let us deal with the question of lending money on real estate. Somewhere along the line the Government quietly snuck in a change. The Interest Act spoke of lending money on the security of real estate. There is a great deal of difference between what is real estate and what is real property. They snuck it in with that change. Therefore, if the mortgage is a first mortgage against the title to real property, presumably the Interest Act applies. If the mortgage is a mortgage on personalty or the equity in real property, or a mortgage against a mortgage, or a loan against a mortgage, or a loan against a mortgage on real property, it is a loan on personalty secured against real estate and the Bill will not apply. No longer will there be any protection against the hideous contracts that might be forced on the general public by the foxes that the Minister seems to support.

The Minister says that the Bill is to protect and help people. How did people get in trouble in the first place? I would refer the House to a document produced by Arthur Andersen and Company for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation respecting the objectives and overview of mortgage rate insurance. That was another disaster which the House dealt with yesterday. We will speak again on that when the Bill goes to committee. The document reads:

> Two characteristics of a mortgage are: (i) the length of the period upon which the monthly payments are based; and (ii) the period during which the mortgage interest rate is fixed. When mortgages were initially introduced, and for a long period thereafter, the interest rate on the loan was fixed over the life of the mortgage. The borrower was secure in that his monthly payments were known and fixed during the entire period. The lender had either been able to borrow funds for a period that matched the life of the mortgage or was fairly certain that any changes in funding costs would be nominal. In essence, as long as interest rates remained relatively constant, lenders were prepared to offer fixed rates for the life of the mortgage.

When was that? Arthur Andersen says that it was prior to the 1970s. It was only in the 1970s that it became difficult under the present Interest Act to get a mortgage that extended beyond five years. Why? Because the governments of the day operated the country so that interest rates were relatively level. There were no massive gyrations in interest rates. The country was managed sensibly, honestly and carefully.

We are now told that that condition cannot return. Somehow we will never be able to get to a point where lenders will lend for 10 years, 20 years or 25 years as they once did. We will have to put up with variable rate mortgages, or indexed mortgages or mortgages that somehow run for short periods of time.

This country does not need to put up with that kind of mismanagement. This country should have an election soon to allow Canadians to get a set of managers who will manage the country so that interest rates will not go the way interest rates have gone during the past decade.

What is the concern? It is that because financial intermediaries want to finance with short-term money. They want to protect themselves when they lend long term, they want to ensure that they can have matching in terms of their receipt of deposits and in terms of their payment out of interest to depositors. Those people want matching and they could have matching if we had a sense of stability in the country. But rather than attempt to create a sense of stability, we had yesterday a Bill to ensure high interest rates, and today a Bill to ensure that those who borrow from mortgage companies will pay, if they want to get out of their contract, the present value of future money. This is again to ensure high interest rates and to insure against the effect of instability. There is no need for that.

We are faced with what has often been referred to as Hardin's Law. It says that once there is a bad law, to correct the effects of that law, three more laws must be passed to correct that situation.

An Hon. Member: Which are equally as bad.

Mr. Blenkarn: As my friend says "equally as bad". Of course, it implies that we must have three times three more laws, nine bad laws to cover the three bad laws which were passed to clean up the first bad law.

Let us go back to basic principles. The Interest Act has been with us for well over 100 years. It represents the basic contract that has proven itself to be a sound contract on which those who lend money and those who borrow money know where they stand. Section 10 of the Interest Act is designed to prevent lenders from tying up borrowers for longer than five years. In other words, it would give borrowers an out at the end of five years upon three months' interest to pay off the lender's claim. There has been no problem with that. That did not prevent long-term loans. But it did prevent someone gouging, harming or injuring a borrower. It was and is a form of consumer protection which we understand, know, are used. There is no need for any change in that condition.

This Bill is before us today because of the situation which developed as a result of the Government's high interest rate policy and its national energy policy which attempted to Canadianize every oil company in the world. The lack of confidence which this Government has inspired throughout the world in our economy, through the NEP and through the crude application by the Government of the Foreign Investment Review Act caused the need to keep interest rates in Canada about 6 per cent higher than those in the United States, from August 1981 to June 1982.

We are now faced with the same type of problem. We are faced with a falling dollar. Because Canada is deemed not to be a sound risk and in order to ensure that people will lend to Canada, more interest has to be paid in Canada than anywhere else to get money into Canada. That was the condition then which led people to talk about finding some way of allowing borrowers to get off the hook on mortgages.

The problem of 18 per cent and 20 per cent mortgages when interest rates fall to 12 per cent and 13 per cent arises from the fall-out of the National Energy Program, the Budget of November, 1981, of FIRA and the inept management of the economy that led to the fleeing of capital from the country. That condition can and will be changed, but to change the basic lending laws because of a government is the wrong thing to do; we must change the government.

Throughout late 1982 and 1983 people were forced to take mortgages at 18 per cent and 20 per cent. They then found they could not sell their homes with these kinds of mortgages, particularly when mortgage money was available at 12 per cent to 14 per cent, so they wanted to pay off these high mortgages and refinance at a lower rate. The mortgage company had borrowed the money at the higher rate, but they said: "If you will pay our costs, we will let you off." All this Bill does is to try and institutionalize that condition; it does nothing for anyone. The penalties authorized in this Bill are so horrendous that it makes the three months' or six months' interest penalty these people would probably have to pay look pretty cheap. What is offered here is ridiculously expensive and very hard on people.

It was not as if borrowers did not know what they signed for; they knew they were tied to their mortgage contract for five years. It was the penalties they had to pay to get out of their contract that created the problem the Government is trying to react to. But it is not reacting to the problem, it is only institutionalizing a settlement which many companies made, not a very fair settlement as far as their borrowers were concerned. Our view is that there should have been a broadening of Section 10 of the Interest Act to cover more people, and make sure that the existing three months' penalty applied in more situations.

Representations were made by some of the leading companies which are now the friends of the Minister. They suggested that borrowers at 18 per cent to 20 per cent could always get out of the mortgage, even though it was a closed mortgage, with a three months' interest penalty. "That is our policy," is what some officials of Canada Trust said. But rather than go after the trust companies and the banks, rather than put the heat on, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) could easily have done, and force them to comply with what they said they would do, the Government let the large institutions get away with those misrepresentations. Rather than insist that the companies comply with the representations they made and solve the problem, the Government has come in with this statute which is really designed to make sure that the large institutions can somehow reap their pound of flesh.

Mr. Malone: Forever.

Mr. Blenkarn: They will never be stuck again. That is a poor response to the problem.

I now want to deal with the portions of the Bill which attempt to deal with disclosure. In my province of Ontario, some 15 years ago we passed a Mortgage Brokers Arrangements Act and made the provision that mortgage brokers, lenders, had to make full and proper disclosure to the borrower. They had to be licensed, and if there were fees involved there was to be full disclosure. The disclosure form sets out the amount of money owing on the mortgage at maturity. I am told that is now the case in most provinces. Then, all of a sudden, the Ministry of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in Ottawa finds disclosure to be an important constituent matter. Well, it has always been an important constituent matter. The existing Act requires disclosure of the interest rate; it requires that the mortgage be calculated half yearly, not in advance, and there is all sorts of case law which indicates what that means. Indeed, the lenders have published tables which indicate how much principal and interest are included in a blended payment over a period of time, calculations going to the tenth decimal point. This matter of disclosure has been covered for a long time, and it is not necessary that we in this House legislate that kind of disclosure. It is already available and working well in the provinces.

What are we going to do, ask everyone who lends money on mortgages to fill out not only the provincial forms but federal forms as well? What kind of bureaucracy are we trying to create? There is absolutely no need for the disclosure provisions proposed by the Minister in the material sent out to Members of Parliament and members of the press. Indeed, the proposals set out are poor in comparison to the existing provisions in the Province of Ontario. Therefore, why create additional paper work? You must remember that when a lender has to comply with more and more red tape, he must be paid for doing so. In other words, all his costs are paid for by borrowers, not by the Government. The money does not come from the Minister's generosity, it comes out of the pockets of borrowers. To add unnecessary red tape to the lending of money implies greater payments for the borrowers of money. There is no justification whatsoever for these provisions in the Bill.

I spoke earlier about the future value of present money being the concept on which the discharge of a mortgage prior to its maturity would be worked out. I suggest that Clause 11.2(1)(a) is unconstitutional because it affects property and civil rights by implying that by regulation the Government is somehow allowed to reduce the principal amount of money on a mortgage. That is interesting. Aunt Mamie has lent you money on a mortgage. All of sudden, by regulation passed pursuant to the discharge of the mortgage, the regulation can provide that the principal money you owe can be reduced by regulation. I am afraid that will certainly be brought before the Supreme Court of Canada and will certainly be thrown out.

While the Government has power to deal with interest rates, it has no power to deal with the principal amount owing on a mortgage. The Interest Act, the Mortgages Act and all of the other statutes do provide that no interest may be chargeable or that interest may be reduced to 5 per cent under certain conditions. But nowhere in statute law has the federal Government the power to indicate that the principal amount of the debt may be reduced. On that basis this proposal should be referred by the law officers of the Crown to the courts before it is passed by the House.

This Bill essentially guts the entire Interest Act which has been in effect since at least 1880. The last Act my researchers and I looked at was 1840. It was not quite the same but very similar. This Bill eliminates and changes Sections 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 of the present Interest Act. It also dramatically changes an anachronism which has been there for a long time dealing with interest charged on judgments in western Canada.

That shows how old this statute is. It has special provisions for the charging of interest on judgments in western Canada. They have been there since 1880. The Act has never been changed. Western Canada has since developed into provinces. It is a dramatic change in the statute.

Mr. Malone: Colonies.

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend from Crowfoot says colonies. It was a colonial piece of legislation. This Bill changes that. With reference to those provinces the Interest Act will be changed. That is probably good.

I am essentially saying that this Bill abolishes the provisions with respect to the calculation of interest on mortgages. That statute is now part of the common law of Canada. It is a statute which lawyers and people generally in the country understand. It has no reference to regulations made by Orders in Council. The statute is clear, readable, understandable and interpreted by courts. In place of that statute is being put a whole new raft of social engineering. The Government says it has consulted the banks, trust companies and so on. However, it must consult the House of Commons, the people of the country, before it makes massive changes to the common law of the country.

This Bill should not be passed in a hurry. It should be thoroughly understood by every Member of Parliament. The proposed regulations ought to be tabled in the House. The calculation system which is proposed with respect to the early discharge of a mortgage ought to be clearly understood. It should be simple and capable of being understood by the simplest country lawyer, myself for instance. I see the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) here. It should be capable of being understood by him too. We have before us a measure which changes the system; that vitally affects the lending of money on real estate and how the interest is to be charged. We should not pass this Bill. This Bill is poorly thought out. It does not do what it is supposed to do. It does not really solve any social problem. It imposes greater penalties on borrowers. It is not a good statute for the general application of mortgage interest in Canada.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I presume that the ostensible purpose of the provisions of this Bill is to try to overcome and obviate the difficulties experienced by many people who purchased homes in 1981, 1982 and 1983. When they got their mortgages they had to make arrangements to pay monthly interest rates of 18, 19, 20 and 21 per cent. A year later they found that interest rates had dropped by 6, 7 and 8 per cent. They were stuck. When they tried to do something to reduce the exorbitant monthly payments which they were finding extremely difficult to meet, they found that they could not get out without the payment of a penalty which they had never expected and, in fact, had never been led to believe they would have to pay when they discussed the situation with their bank or mortgage company.

We are going to oppose this Bill because we believe the Bill is overly complex. It is not clear from the Bill what the Government intends. The rhetoric of the Budget emphasized that more disclosure of mortgage interest information would be made available. We believe that the major benefits of the Bill which the Government is proposing will not be to the people who were caught in the situation where they had to agree to pay exorbitant interest rates to get their mortgage. The major beneficiaries of this Bill will be the banks and mortgage companies.

The prepayment rights and penalties sections of this Bill may sound good, but it is a nothing proposal. The Government wants to allow borrowers to have the right to prepay at any time. However, the penalty for doing so would be the full amount of interest due between the day one prepays and the day that the mortgage term expires. In other words, the person who has the mortgage would pay all the interest in any case. The Government would like to see that the borrower does not have to pay for the privilege of paying all of the interest sooner, but this represents no break to the borrower. For example, if one is locked into an 18.5 per cent mortgage of $50,000 for five years and has three years until the term expires but would like to renegotiate, the prepayment penalty would be $7,855 which represents 36 months of payments at 12.5 per cent rather than 18.5 per cent.

In the period between 1981 and 1983 I, as I suspect every other Member of Parliament, was receiving calls from constituents who found themselves in a situation where they had agreed to take a mortgage at a very high interest rate but a year later the interest rate on mortgages had come down very sharply. One could not blame them for wanting to renegotiate their mortgage so they could pay the much lower interest rate. When they went to the bank they discovered that the bank was imposing new rules and procedures. They then went to their Member of Parliament. We made representations to the banks and mortgage companies but were unsuccessful. We made representations to the Minister of Finance who told us that these matters could be cleared up by referring them to the appropriate Minister. He said he would look after it.

Some of us took all of those steps but with no results. Our constituents were stuck with these very high mortgage rates. Let me put on the record one illustration of what happened to one of my constituents. It is a good illustration because it is typical of what was happening right across the country. I will read a few sentences from the letter which was sent to me by this constituent explaining what happened. This occurred in 1982. This constituent says:

> I took the mortgage out as of July 1st, 1982, at 183/4 per cent—
> I asked (the manager) what would happen if the rate dropped considerably. He told me that I would be charged a three-month penalty, that they take my mortgage payments times three, and that would be the penalty to discharge my mortgage. He told me it would cost approximately $2,200—
> He also told me that I would be saving approximately $3,000 by doing this.

This is when the person wanted to renegotiate the mortgage because the interest rates had come down by 6 per cent or 7 per cent. This constituent went to her lawyer because she was not certain that she understood everything. Her lawyer spoke to the branch manager who confirmed the situation, but when they tried to pay the three-month penalty so they could get a new mortgage at the much lower rate, they were suddenly told by the local branch manager that the instruction had come from the head office that the penalty would be almost $5,000. The poor bank could not afford to do it any cheaper.

In order to make certain that I had a clear understanding of what had happened, I got in touch with the local branch manager. He confirmed what my constituent had told me. I then wrote to the head of the Toronto-Dominion Bank and outlined the situation to him. I asked him to explain why this had happened. I suggested that the bank could really show some consideration for this constituent.

Eventually, I received a reply from the Vice-President of the Toronto-Dominion Bank, William Clarkson. I will read part of his letter into the record:

> The mortgage which Mr. and Mrs. Silvari contracted for in May 1982 is a standard C.M.H.C. mortgage which, in effect, provides for no prepayment other than 10 per cent of the original amount of the mortgage on each anniversary date, for the first three year term. After three years has elapsed, the mortgagor has the privilege of payment paying the full amount of the loan on payment of an amount equal to three months' interest at the contract rate.

Later he said:

> Because of the large number of mortgage customers involved, it is quite simply beyond our resources to cushion the impact of high interest rates for our borrowers, nor could we do it selectively as it would be impossible to set criteria that would be fair and equitable to all. We regret that, because of the circumstances outlined, we are unable at this time to modify the amount of the payment required to renegotiate the terms of the Silvaris' mortgage.

The banks are all the same. They made over $1 billion in profits last year on which they paid very little taxes because of the very generous way in which the Liberal Government of Canada treats the banks. These poor banks, which need so much assistance, are the most powerful business organizations in the country. Not only do they control the financial services but because of their interlocking directorships they control virtually all large businesses and corporations in this country. The poor banks could do nothing for my constituent or any of the other Canadians who were caught in this very tough squeeze.

I took the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) at his word when I and other Members on this side of the House, both NDP and Conservative, appealed to him publicly in the House to do something. We were assured by the Minister that he would and could do something about it. He inferred that in some way we had not done our jobs as we should have. I am sure that Liberal Members of Parliament were getting similar complaints from their constituents and were taking them up with the Minister of Finance not publicly but privately. I am sure they were getting the same kind of assurances.

I wrote to the Minister of Finance and took him at his word that these matters could be straightened out so that those who were caught in this squeeze could get better treatment and a small modicum of justice. I sent the Minister the particulars of the case which I have just illustrated, including the correspondence from my constituent and the replies I got from the Toronto-Dominion Bank. What did I get from the Minister of Finance? He explained that the banks, of course, had loaned people money for their mortgages and that they had reinvested the interest they received in fixed-term investments and were therefore stuck. In his letter to me, his offer of assistance to these people who were really caught in this unconsionable squeeze was as follows:

> In certain cases, if a homeowner is facing financial hardship as a result of renewing his or her mortgage at high interest rates, the federal government will grant up to $3,000 under the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan. This plan falls within the jurisdiction of the Honourable Minister responsible for Housing. If you believe that your constituents might be able to benefit from the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan, may I suggest that they contact the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

● (1220)

That, of course, was of no help to my constituents. This Bill drops the present requirement on prepayment of a mortgage of five years or longer of paying a penalty of up to three months' interest. Whom does that benefit, Mr. Speaker? It does not benefit the borrower; it benefits the banks and the mortgage companies who lend the money. Section 10 of the Interest Act provides that after five years mortgages can be repaid with an interest penalty of three months. This provision is now to be eliminated, presumably so that the long-term mortgage market can be revived. I do not believe we will ever see a long-term mortgage market again. The days are gone when one could get a mortgage for 20 or 25 years at a rate which would not change over that period.

This is an interesting proposal if only because both Opposition Parties, and I am sure privately some back-bench Liberal Members of Parliament, have been calling for the standardization of the three-month interest penalty. This change is being introduced "to ensure that mortgage funds are available to meet the demand".

The Government brought forward Bill C-36 with the suggestion that it will help people buy a home and take out a mortgage in order to finance the purchase of that home. This Bill helps not the person who is buying a house, who arranges to pay for the house by getting a mortgage from a bank or a trust company; if it helps anybody, this Bill helps precisely the institutions which have used the high and fluctuating interest rates on mortgages we have had in recent years as well to gouge the person who arranges a mortgage.

Because this Bill benefits those who have instead of those who have not, because this Bill benefits the lender rather than the borrower, because it is doing exactly the reverse of what it should be doing, we intend to oppose it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) for debate.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-36 which is before the House to amend the Interest Act has much broader ramifications than might have been indicated by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) when he was presenting the Bill to the House of Commons.

Interest rates are at the heart of the housing problem both in terms of the home owner because of the problems of mortgage interest rates which face a home owner, and the problems of providing an adequate supply of housing since construction of housing units is affected by interest rates, these are both aspects of the equation.

Let me review very briefly the history of mortgage rates in Canada. We went through a long period, 1951 to 1972, when interest rates were below double-digit figures; that is, they were below 10 per cent. On one or two occasions, however, mortgage interest rates did rise to 10 per cent during that time. But since 1972, almost 13 years, Canadians have been faced with double-digit mortgage interest rates and people seeking to finance a home have been forced to pay 10 per cent or more. Unfortunately, at certain periods within that time frame Canadians have paid interest rates like 21.46 per cent and 19.22 per cent, the latter in 1982. Now in April, May and June, 1984 Canadians are facing mortgage interest rates rising to 14.25 per cent. There is no indication that those rates will not rise over the next six months. Hopefully they will not rise to the high which occurred in September, 1981 of 21.46 per cent.

High mortgage interest rates are the problem, Mr. Speaker. How do they affect Canadians? They affect them in very specific terms. The cost of a $90,000 mortgage at 18 per cent is $1,346 a month. Contrast that with a more reasonable mortgage interest rate of 10 per cent. On that same $90,000 mortgage, the payment would be $847 a month. This means almost $500 a month more to the person who happens to be unfortunate enough to face a mortgage rate of 18 per cent when he should be entitled to a mortgage rate more in the area of 10 per cent.

Let us now look at a mortgage of $50,000. At 18 per cent the monthly payment would be $747. That same $50,000 mortgage at 10 per cent costs $476 a month. A person pays $271 a month more at 18 per cent. Now, whether you enjoy a home carrying a $70,000 mortgage or a home carrying a $50,000 mortgage, in proportionate terms you have the same problem. A mortgage payment on a $90,000 mortgage is increased by $500 at 18 per cent and on a mortgage of $50,000 is increased by $271 at 18 per cent. You can see, Mr. Speaker, how that difference in mortgage payments at the higher level dramatically affects the budget of a Canadian family. How many Canadians are in that position? In 1983 there were approximately 5.3 million home owners in Canada, the great majority of whom had mortgages on their homes. We are talking about a tremendous number of people who are affected by this problem of mortgage rates.

It is with those people in mind that we have to approach a Bill like, Bill C-36 and examine it in that context. I want to direct my remarks in response to the Minister. The Minister mentioned as a highlight of this Bill the matter of full disclosure. That is a deception of serious proportions. Bill C-36 with respect to disclosure of mortgage provisions adds nothing to the existing law that will benefit any Canadian. In 1966 the Province of Nova Scotia enacted the first Consumer Protection Act in Canada. Other provinces followed very quickly thereafter. The thrust of those provisions in legislation like the Consumer Protection Act was to require mortgagees and other lenders to disclose in exact terms the rate of interest charged and other conditions of the loan. Canadians have enjoyed the advantage of that kind of protective legislation for almost 20 years. When the Minister boasts that he is introducing in the House of Commons legislative provisions intended to protect Canadians in terms of the conditions of mortgage loans, he and his Government add nothing to the protection already provided to them under provincial legislation.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) pointed out that the Interest Act is ancient legislation. While consumer protection legislation does not have the same antiquity, it has certainly been in force for a sufficient length of time to have established that in consumer loan transactions, including mortgage transactions, lenders are at present required to disclose in a very careful way the terms and conditions of mortgages.

I want to point out the downside of the new provisions. There may even be a disadvantage to the additional provisions which the Government proposes in Bill C-36. As has already been pointed out by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, there is a price for these disclosure provisions and that price is paid by consumers. It can be set up any way, but the ultimate cost of all goods and services provided in Canada are paid for by Canadian consumers. Although it may appear on the surface that the lender is bearing some of the costs of the disclosure provisions, we can rest assured that those costs will be paid in the long run by consumers.

If the Minister's additional protective provisions add to the cost of the mortgage transaction by increasing the paperwork and increasing administrative services required to conform to the new law, then it will be an additional cost burden which will eventually be paid for by consumers. I caution the Minister to review that aspect of Bill C-36 and ensure that, in carrying out the pretence of additional protections and benefits for Canadian consumers in the mortgage market, the Government is not simply adding to the costs which consumers eventually will have to bear.

A second remark made by the Minister in his introductory comments was that Bill C-36 was urgently needed. I do not think anyone would argue about the seriousness of the mortgage problem in Canada in respect of Canadian home owners and those seeking to acquire homes. However, I want to point out that the Minister and his colleagues in government have a very strange attitude toward the urgency. On December 8, 1983, in the Speech from the Throne, the Government proposed a package of mortgage protection for Canadians. Again in the Budget Speech of February 15, 1984 reference was made to a package of protection for Canadian home owners faced with mortgage problems. It is only now in June, 1984 that we have come to deal with the legislation intended to implement this promise made to Canadians in December, 1983.

I ask the Minister how he views this as responding to an urgent need. It took over six months to fulfil the promise made in the Speech from the Throne in December, 1983. If the Government did not know what kind of legislation it contemplated in its protective package, why did it make that promise in the Speech from the Throne? Why did it not simply say that it would consider some protective measures and bring them forward at a later date? Instead, Canadians were led to believe that they would receive immediate protection. I remind Government Members that many Canadians who are faced with mortgage renewals would look very carefully at promises of assistance and watch longingly and with a great deal of concern for these legislative remedies to be presented to Parliament. I am sure those Canadians will not be very pleased with the Government's version of immediate action in response to what it admits is an urgent situation.

Also in his remarks the Minister mentioned an industrial task force to deal with mortgage interest rates and solutions to the problems created by the Interest Act. While I agree with consultation between government and those involved in the industry, this decision on the matter of mortgage interest rates and what is a fair price for cancelling a mortgage transaction is a decision which has to be made by the Government of Canada in the interests of all Canadians. It may well be important to consult with loan companies or companies engaged in the mortgage business, but the Government has to take into account the welfare of Canadians in making that decision. It cannot rely upon representations and discussions with institutions in the mortgage industry which have, after all, a vested interest. They must put forward the interests of their own clientele and investors.

However, I remind Government Members that housing is one of the most important needs of Canadians. The availability of mortgage funds to provide housing is part and parcel of the response to that need. The Government cannot simply come up with a formula which is satisfactory to lenders and put it forward as the proper solution to the problem. The Government must consider what Canadians need in the way of housing and in the way of assistance to provide themselves with adequate housing, and make the decision on that basis. While consultation with industry is important, it does not forgive the Government for making a decision which may be consistent with the advice it receives from those in industry but is not consistent with the welfare of Canadians who are seeking to maintain their homes or those who are seeking to acquire homes. That is the test which must be applied to this legislation. Does it help Canadians in maintaining their homes? Does it assist Canadians who are seeking to acquire homes?

In that respect one must conclude that the legislation fails. Why does it fail? It fails because it introduces a complex formula or method of dealing with a very simple problem—what is the proper and fair way to discharge an existing mortgage when the debtor under the mortgage has to make the difficult decision that he or she can no longer afford to carry the mortgage and must cancel it? They are either forced to sell their homes or to move to another place and acquire new homes.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South has very graphically and clearly discussed this aspect of the problem. However, I want to make the plea on my own behalf that the proper method to deal with the problem of the cancellation of mortgages is a simple formula, one which is fair to the lender and fair to the mortgagor but which at the same time reflects the vital need of all Canadians for adequate housing. If there are to be errors made in the construction of that simple formula, then they have to be made on the side of home owners.

Along with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, I propose that there be a simple penalty based upon monthly interest payments. Whatever may be selected, from one month to six months, it should be the basis for the amount charged when a mortgage debtor seeks to cancel a mortgage transaction. A fair level would be three months; that is to say, a mortgage debtor who seeks to cancel a mortgage would pay a three months' penalty. It is difficult to know whether that figure should be six or one, but three appears to be reasonable. If there is going to be any error, it should be on the side of the home owner who has no method of recovery for losses as opposed to the mortgage lender who has other methods to recoup any losses that may be suffered.

If that sounds too arbitrary and unfair, let me explain it. With mortgage penalties for cancellation of mortgage transactions, as in all other transactions involving consumers, what we have to attempt to achieve through legislation is a balance of rights. We have to balance the rights between lenders and borrowers in a fair way. As I have said, if there are going to be errors made, they should be made in favour of the borrowers rather than lenders, because in the long run that is in the interest of all Canadians. In seeking to balance those rights, the Government has the obligation to make the decision. It cannot slough off that legislation obligation on a committee composed of government, consumer and industrial representatives. It is a decision that has to be made by the Government.

It is clear in Bill C-36 that the Government has avoided taking its responsibility. In response to the consultations it has held, the Government has come up with a method that is simply a failure to make a decision. The method chosen by the Government, alleged to be flexible, is simply to enact regulations from time to time to set up the formula. That is not making a decision: it is avoiding a decision.

It is very difficult to take the legislation as a serious attempt to resolve the problems that exist under the current Interest Act with respect to the cancellation of mortgage transactions. The Government knows there is a problem. As Members have said time and time again, the problem comes up as mortgage interest rates escalate. The Government must realize that some action has to be taken. Its answer was to present a Bill which does not provide a solution. That does not provide an answer; it merely finesses the whole problem to regulations that will be made at some future time.

Even though the Government proposed these legislative enactments seven months ago, the regulations are not available. Nobody knows what the regulations will be. Canadians are being asked to accept a pig in a poke, legislation that does not answer the question or respond to the needs. Everyone will have to wait for future developments to find out whether the effects of the legislation are fair or adverse. That is not acceptable. It is appropriate that Members of this House of Commons underline the failure of the Government to respond to this evident need. We should underline the failure of the Government to come up with a solution that Canadians can examine and then determine for themselves whether it meets the test of balancing rights between mortgage lenders and mortgage debtors. The Government is copping out, failing to make a decision. It leaves Canadians in the dark as to what the attitude is with respect to the vital matter of mortgages, mortgage interest rates and the cancellation of mortgage transactions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has practised law both in Ontario and in Nova Scotia. Can he explain the type of disclosure required in the Province of Nova Scotia with respect to those who lend money on mortgages, mortgage brokers and so on? What type of disclosure is required in Nova Scotia? In his speech, the Hon. Member mentioned that the disclosure provisions are not required, that provinces have disclosure provisions and this is a duplication of a kind of disclosure already required.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has struck a very interesting chord in his question, particularly as it relates to the Provinces of Nova Scotia and Ontario. As I indicated, Nova Scotia was the first province in Canada to enact consumer protection legislation. That occurred in 1966 when the legislature of the Province of Nova Scotia enacted the Consumer Protection Act. It should be admitted that the provisions of that Consumer Protection Act were based on a report that emanated from the Government of the Province of Ontario, a Progressive Conservative Government that had examined the problem concerning consumers in relation to loan transactions, particularly mortgage transactions. It recommended that certain disclosure requirements be enforced through law.

Nova Scotia acted upon that kind of advice and that of other legislative committees that had studied the matter and formulated the Consumer Protection Act. That Act has been in force since 1966, with amendments intended and designed to meet needs as they arose over that period of time.

To deal directly with the Hon. Member's question, the Consumer Protection Act of Nova Scotia, and I am certain there is similar legislation in every other province, requires that a lender advise the borrower of the exact interest rate that will be enforced throughout the life of a loan, and that includes a mortgage loan, so that the borrower knows exactly the rate of interest, the basis for calculating that interest and the amount. The concern of most consumers and most mortgage borrowers is the amount they will have to pay on a monthly basis. The consumer protection provisions require full and proper disclosure of the exact amount that will have to be paid throughout the life of a loan. In addition, there is a requirement that the mortgage borrower be advised of the rate of interest in exactitude. That means the ancillary provisions and whether it is calculated annually, semi-annually, cumulatively and so on. All of that information must be given not only to mortgage borrowers but to all borrowers of funds in consumer situations.

In addition, there are other specific requirements that relate to all loan transactions. The borrower must be informed of the place of business of the lender and other vital statistics. The matter is completely covered. To the extent that it is not covered, I am sure simple amendments to provincial legislation would cover any other areas that might give rise to problems.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) for a very interesting and excellent address. He is not only highly trained but is a highly experienced barrister.

I would like to get his view on a matter. When interest rates were at their highest, I had a number of cases concerning my constituents. One problem in particular comes to mind at this time. A family suddenly came into sufficient money to pay off their mortgage. If I recall correctly, the interest rate was 18 per cent. They went to the trust company which held the mortgage and reminded it of its promise that they could pay off the mortgage with a two-month penalty. The trust company said that could not be done, that there would be a two-year penalty because the money had been invested in a long-term investment. Therefore, the family was told they had to pay a two-year penalty in order to get out of the mortgage.

• (1250)

I thought that was outrageous. I referred the matter to the Minister of Finance because he had indicated in the House that he wanted these kinds of cases brought to his attention. I brought it to his attention and he sent me a letter containing a list of all the trust companies and telling me to write to them myself. That was not very helpful.

I did write to the mortgage companies and they were able to do very little for my constituent. They continued to say that they had invested in long-term investments. I reminded the mortgage companies that many of their investments were short-term investments and perhaps the majority of them were short-term investments. I would like to hear the comment of the Hon. Member for Halifax West regarding what a reasonable penalty would be when a family is able to pay off its mortgage. What would be fair to both the mortgagor and the mortgagee?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), has described the classic case and asked the classic question. I know that he believes as I do that a lender should be entitled to fair compensation for the cancellation of a transaction, but he should not be entitled to a windfall profit arising from the good fortune—or the misfortune—of the borrower. When answering that question in terms of the law that we enact, we must try to achieve a balance between those two rights.

I can best answer the question of the Hon. Member for Bow River by going back a bit in time to see what the developments in the mortgage market in Canada have been in relation to the Interest Act that is now before us and in relation to Section 10 of that Act. For many decades, the classic mortgage system in Canada was that a mortgage was held for a 25-year term. In more recent times that was reduced to a five-year term after which time the mortgage interest rate was renewed. That term has now been reduced to as little as one year.

The reason I mention this bit of history is that for many years the mortgage provision in the Interest Act was that if a mortgage ran for more than five years—and most mortgages ran for at least 20 years—that mortgage could be paid off after a five-year term with a payment equal to three months' interest. I believe I am correct about that but the Hon. Member for Mississauga South can correct me if I am not. In other words, the so-called penalty was based on the monthly interest rate in relation to that mortgage. However, there was no provision for mortgages with terms of less than five years. That is to say, such a borrower was left to the provisions of the mortgage or to the good offices of the lender. That is the situation in which the constituents of the Hon. Member found themselves. There was no clear provision in law with respect to their rights when paying off the mortgage.

In those circumstances, many mortgage lenders claim that they have taken money from their investors and promised to pay them a rate of interest over a long period of time, like five years, and they then take the attitude that the only fair thing is for them to receive all of the revenues that they would have received had the borrower kept the money he had borrowed for that entire period of time. Of course, that is an extreme position and it is a ridiculous one. Unfortunately, that was the position taken by many of Canada's foremost lenders, including the banks and large mortgage companies. That is why we as legislators must step into that situation and make our judgment with respect to what is fair. The thrust of my position is that the Government should make that judgment. Such penalties should be based upon a monthly interest payment and I think the penalty should be no more than three months' interest.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The House will now proceed to debate.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, when speaking today on Bill C-36, the amendments to the Interest Act, I will go backwards. I shall begin with the last provisions in the Bill which is before us, being Clauses 4 and 5 which deal with the interest payable on judgment debts.

I am pleased to see that the amendment regarding judgment debts is before us today. In effect, what it does is remove an anachronism that has existed since 1880 or even longer. At that time the Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan did not exist but were contained within the Northwest Territories. Ever since Confederation the eastern provinces had within their legislative authority the ability to specify the interest payable on judgment debts. It makes no sense to have one law affecting eastern Canada and a different law affecting western Canada.

I would hope that the western provinces and the western territories which, as a result of the passage of this Bill, will have the authority to stipulate in their own legislation the interest payable on judgment debts will take upon themselves the responsibility to do so as soon as possible. However, when doing so I would hope that they would keep in mind that as much as possible interest payable on judgment debts should be uniform across Canada.

Although I agree that it should be within the authority of the province or territory to set these rates, it does not make much sense if the rate is 5 per cent in one province, 7.5 per cent in another province and 10 per cent in another province. I think that the provinces and territories should get together and try to come up with a uniform rate if that is at all possible. As well, when changes are made the provinces should act in concert to keep those rates reasonably uniform across Canada.

Again working from the back of the Bill forward, the next prime issue contained therein is that dealing with disclosure. This deals with what, by law, should be disclosed within a mortgage document. Items dealing with disclosure were contained in Section 6 of the old Act. This is certainly not a new concept.

Today we heard that many provinces go much further than the federal Parliament when requiring disclosure of certain terms and conditions with respect to mortgages. The point has been made that most mortgage lenders are already obliged to comply with the provincial requirements and that some difficulty and additional expense might be imposed upon them by making it necessary at the same time for them to comply with federal legislation. Although those additional expenses would be minor, I would imagine that the difficulties could be worked out so the lenders could easily comply with both provincial and federal disclosure requirements.

In reading through the proposed changes to Section 6 of the Act which are contained in Clause 2 of the Bill before us, what strikes me is some of the new things that will have to be disclosed. In 1880, the year the present Act was passed by the Parliament of the day, if someone had suggested that at some point in the future of Canada we would be thinking about mortgages with terms and conditions dealing with changes in principle because of inflation, the legislators of that day would not have had the foggiest idea what he was talking about.

In those days the term of a mortgage was generally a period of 20 years or more. There was an element of stability to mortgages. The terms and conditions were reasonably simple. They were such that someone who homesteaded a farm in Alberta or Saskatchewan, although those provinces did not exist at the time, would understand along with legal counsel in the small settlements what they were all about.

I see that it is very close to one o'clock. I might call it one o'clock, Sir, and continue this afternoon.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—ACTION BY MAYORS AND REEVES

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of this House the fact that a delegation of mayors and reeves from the Fraser Valley of British Columbia is presently in Ottawa. Mayor John Agnew from Mission, Danny Griffin from Maple Ridge, Danny Sharpe from Pitt Meadows, John Jansen from Chilliwack, Paul Inkman from Harrison Hot Springs, Lloyd Foreman from Boston Bar, and Brian Appleby from Dudney-Allouette regional district are here to discuss and co-ordinate a plan of direct action to resolve catastrophically high levels of unemployment. It bears emphasizing again that in the area of Mission-Port Moody and Fraser Valley East average unemployment stood between 14 per cent and 15 per cent. However, with the shake and shingle mill shut down, the rate stands at an alarming 47 per cent to 52 per cent. If one takes into account the native population, the rate climbs to an astonishing 58 per cent.

A Fraser Valley College private study pointed out that the job situation is devastating. There could be as many as 15,000 young people in that area looking for jobs this summer. The problem of unemployment must be dealt with swiftly. I appreciate the commitment given by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) and I now look to him to flesh out the particulars of the LEAD program and the reforestation assistance program. This is an opportunity to show that the Government can respond to Canadian citizens who are really in need. I urge all Ministers and officials who are meeting with this delegation to do their utmost to help in trying to resolve this terrible unemployment problem.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RUMOURS REPORTED IN ANGLOPHONE PRESS ABOUT MEMBER FOR MANICOUAGAN

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, last week, the North Shore gave one of its sons a royal welcome. The North Shore knows the meaning of hospitality. However, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to mention that last week, the English-speaking press said that the Member for Manicouagan, despite his affinity and friendship with the Leader of the Official Opposition, might switch to provincial politics or at least leave his seat vacant.

From my seat, I would like to point out that there has never been any question of any agreement with the Leader of the Official Opposition, and if the latter or someone else from the Progressive Conservative Party wants to run on the North Shore, out of loyalty and solidarity with workers and ex-workers, there will be a race! Chances are we may see another contest between David and Goliath. In both cases, I think workers and ex-workers will decide who is going to represent them on the North Shore, considering the economic problems this region is experiencing at the present time.

ENERGY

CONSTRUCTION OF HEAVY OIL UPGRADER IN LLOYDMINSTER, SASK.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, yesterday was an exciting day for the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan. The long awaited announcement was made that Husky Oil Limited will build a heavy oil upgrader in Lloydminster with a capacity to produce 42,000 barrels of synthetic refinable crude oil per day. This giant leap forward for Canada's energy self-sufficiency, long overdue, will bring a renewed vitality to the petroleum industry in western Canada. It will have a significant economic impact.

Some $1.2 billion worth of Canadian manufactured goods will be purchased over the next five years. It will provide much needed employment opportunities through some 18,000 person years of employment during construction, and 3,600 permanent jobs thereafter. Husky, a truly Canadian enterprise, must be congratulated for its commitment. Because it has persevered, Canada will benefit.

Lloydminster is unique. It is the only city in Canada whose main street is the border between two provinces, those of Saskatchewan and Alberta. The Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) and I have the honour of representing that community. The Bi-Provincial Upgrader so named by Husky, comes to my riding as a result of the spirit of co-operation and the climate of confidence established by Husky Oil and the Progressive Conservative Governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan, the management of Husky Oil, and the Ministers of Energy, the Hon. Paul Schoenhals, the Hon. John Zaozirny, and the Hon. Jean Chrétien—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time, unfortunately, has expired.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—DENIAL OF EXIT VISAS—HUNGER STRIKE AT CONSULATE IN MIMICO, ONT.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, March 27, 125 demonstrators marched in support of three hunger strikers who have been camping outside the Polish Consulate in Mimico, a part of my constituency. For the last 16 days they have survived on water. After 18 days of this, permanent damage to their bodies may occur. They are starving in protest. They cannot bring their families into Canada because Polish authorities will not recognize the visas held by their spouses and children. These measures are drastic, and although the hunger strikers have been told it is blackmail and unfair pressure, they will continue with their protest.

One of the strikers, Grazyna Trzesicka, has attempted 11 times to reunite her family in Canada over the past two years, and 11 times she has been refused. Both Zygmunt Augustyniak and Wladyslaw Sliwa, whose applications were being considered by the Polish authorities, went on this hunger strike after a six-month delay for consideration was imposed, and after a "no" answer was finally given. All of the hunger strikers have been told that the decisions are final with no consideration whatsoever being given, and no appeal will be considered.

When applications for exit permits are refused, the remaining family members are often told they must bear the consequences for their relatives who emigrated illegally. This collective responsibility on the part of family members exists in all communist countries. We, as Canadian citizens, are quite fortunate. We have a choice. We have rights. We have a voice.

These hunger strikers have not seen their families in a long, long time. It is most unfortunate that people have to resort to these—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF ALLIED LANDINGS IN NORMANDY

A PARLIAMENTARIAN'S RECOLLECTION

Hon. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I trust you will forgive me for mentioning something today that I perhaps should have spoken about yesterday. However, I would like to associate myself with the tremendous words of those who spoke yesterday about the events of June 6, 1944. Some of my friends were reminded that I was here on that occasion and said that perhaps I should say so now.

I would like to have this opportunity not only to add to those tremendous words that were spoken yesterday, but also to say that I am very conscious of the speeches that were made in this Parliament on June 6, 1944. As I said, I happened to be here. It so happened that Mr. Coldwell, our leader, was absent that day and it fell to me to speak on behalf of our Party. All of us who spoke that day in 1944 were concerned for the support of those who carried on the war, and our hope was that it might soon be won. As you know, we did succeed the following year, but we were also concerned about those who lost their lives or their health in that war.

I am glad that other Members have spoken in the last few days about the veterans' pensions which need to be increased for some of our veterans, especially for those who were injured during the war. I urge that something be done about that now. It is good that we have done so much in the field of veterans' pensions, but there is more we could be doing, and I hope we will. Again I thank Members of 40 years ago and those of today for the things that have been said on this important event.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF INSPECTION SERVICES TO ASSIST MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, in this House we frequently hear talk about the need to improve national productivity in order to get our economy moving again. If we are looking for an example of how to improve productivity, I believe that the building inspection operation of CMHC provides a good example. Not only did it complete 600,000 inspections valued at $23 million in 1983, but it also defrayed CMHC's overhead and indirect costs to the tune of over $5 million. I believe that virtually everyone recognizes the competence and professionalism of CMHC inspectors.

• (1410)

It has also increased its productivity by over 50 per cent in the past two years. I would therefore like to congratulate the Minister and the Corporation on their success. I would like to make a suggestion. Since housing is becoming more complex, and since many of the more than 4,800 municipalities in Canada simply cannot afford a resident building inspector, I would like to suggest that the Minister offer the building inspection services of CMHC to small municipalities. There would be many benefits from such a move.

1. Competent inspection services would be available in areas where none presently exist.

2. We would be seen to be doing something for small municipalities at a time when they are particularly strapped for financing.

3. We would be assisting provinces to implement the National Building Code, something we have been trying to achieve for years.

4. We would be providing protection against property deterioration and rising costs to our constituents.

5. We would be enhancing and promoting the expertise and efficiency of the CMHC inspection operations—

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL WEEK

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, this is Canadian Environment Week and is thus a good time for reflection on our environmental track record. I am disappointed that the Minister of the Environment has chosen to say that this is a week of celebration. I agree we must give thanks for our environmental assets, but we must also take time for sober observation of the current state of affairs.

Recently Canada has experienced many environmental problems. Attempts to redress these problems, however, have often been hampered by the inefficiencies of and lack of real action by the current Liberal administration. Take for example the recent reports of the Royal Society of Canada and the sub-committee on acid rain which reviewed the quality of Canada's acid rain program. The Royal Society found that, although the program includes much excellent research, there were major problems, such as a lack of over-all planning and too little co-ordination of effort, particularly in research. The acid rain subcommittee found words but no real action.

We must set our environmental priorities and tackle the job directly and efficiently. Our main concerns now are with the clean up of acid rain, the elimination of toxic substances, the safe and permanent disposal of hazardous wastes, and the revitalization of the forest sector. We must do our utmost to clean up our own back yard. At the same time we must convince the United States to do likewise.

Our approach must be positive and action oriented. The results of today's efforts will determine the environmental future of all Canadians. So far, the Government has very little to celebrate.

RAILWAYS

WESTERN GRAIN FREIGHT RATES—COST TO FARMERS

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, western Canadian farmers are in danger of buckling under the weight of a projected 58 per cent increase in the cost of moving grain. As a result of the Liberals' Crow Bill, each western grain producer will pay, on average, between $500 and $1,500 more to move grain in the next crop year. That is an extremely heavy burden for a sector already enduring extremely trying times.

The cause for virtually the entire increase coming up in August is the cap on the amount of western grain shipments subsidized by the federal Government. Because prairie grain shipments will exceed the 31.5 million tonne cap in the current crop year, the producers will have to pay the full freight rate on more than 3 million tonnes of grain in the coming crop year, an additional $60 million in total. As well as being the cause of a dramatic freight increase, the cap is also a disincentive to improved western grain production. Surely a disincentive to food production is in no one's best interest.

It is my understanding that the Minister of Transport has directed the Special Grain Transportation Committee to review this matter. I urge the Minister to ensure, not only that the issue is studied soon, but that the opinions of groups representing western grain producers are reflected in any decision taken. The Crow Bill and other Liberal Government policies have caused financial hardship for far too many prairie farmers. I call upon the Government to put the needs of western Canada first for once, by abolishing the volume cap on subsidized prairie grain shipments.

MULTICULTURALISM

CONSTRUCTION OF UKRAINIAN VILLAGE IN MANITOBA—NEED FOR ROAD BUILDING FUNDS

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, on May 3, 1984, my office corresponded with the Ministers of Employment and Immigration and Transportation concerning an urgent request for special funding for a project that is of the utmost importance. To date, no adequate response has been given.

Selo Ukraina is a project which seeks to preserve Canada's Ukrainian culture and heritage through the construction of a Ukrainian village located just outside Dauphin, Manitoba. Selo Ukraina is to have the distinction of being officially opened by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II on July 25, 1984. This has brought with it some weighty logistical problems and unforeseen financial burdens.

Selo Ukraina must construct three-quarters of a mile of access road some two years before its projected budget and development plan. The existing access road will simply not be adequate to handle the anticipated flow of traffic, and does not satisfy the fundamental security requirements associated with the royal visit.

Given the immense potential for growth arising out of the national and international visibility engendered by the royal visit, I am once again requesting the aforementioned Ministers to give consideration to federal funding. The impending visit of Her Majesty gives great urgency to this matter and necessitates the Ministers' immediate and sympathetic attention.

THE ECONOMIC SUMMIT

CALL FOR ENLARGEMENT OF MEMBERSHIP

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the dominant issues in Canada today are jobs, economic growth, and investment. We tolerate an unemployment rate of 25 to 30 per cent amongst our youth. Our economy staggers somewhat drunkenly, while the economy of the United States is booming at a growth rate reaching 9 per cent. Never before in history has so much foreign money been coming back to the United States, being drawn to that country by high interest rates, sound investment potential, and future stability. This dynamic U.S. economic resurgence is precipitating increasing hardship throughout the free world. Free world leaders are concerned.

On this very day the leaders of France, Germany, Italy, Britain, Japan, the United States, and Canada are meeting at an economic summit. Their agenda has two dominant items—U.S. and world interest rates, and world debt levels. However, this meeting is missing some essential parts. The Arab nations which produce much of the world's trade in oil are not represented. Why was a country such as Saudi Arabia not invited to attend? The world of debt is primarily represented by South America and Mexico. A representative like Brazil should have been invited to attend this summit meeting. This exclusive club of seven must grow if it is to solve the world's economic malaise.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

BANK OF CANADA RATE—EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. As a result of the weekly Thursday auction, the Bank of Canada rate is 11.77 per cent. That is so despite massive intervention and buying by the Bank of Canada of its own Treasury Bills. This represents an increase of 23 bases points over last week and clearly indicates that prime rates will rise again.

There have been massive increases in interest rates since the Budget. There is real disquiet in the country. There is real lack of confidence, particularly as this increase in interest rates has not really improved the value of the Canadian dollar one bit. Therefore, will the Minister suspend the debate we have today, and on Motions after the Question Period outline to the House what proposals the Government has to stem the fall in the Canadian dollar and to bring some confidence back into the economy of the country? What proposals has he, other than massive increases in interest rates such as those which took place in 1981 and 1982 when the same condition was in effect?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite, as in the case of his colleague, the finance critic for the Opposition, constantly engages in a doom and gloom outlook for the Canadian economy which I, for one, certainly do not share. On the contrary, we see some real evidence of growing strength in the Canadian economy.

I shall deal with the question which the Hon. Member raises. The fact is that interest rates in Canada are, to a significant degree, a function of interest rates in the United States. In the United States the combined upward pressure of private sector borrowing and a substantial structural deficit in the U.S. economy drives up U.S. interest rates. Canadian money flows out of Canada on a short-term basis looking for greater return in the U.S. market.

In those circumstances, the same thing occurs in Canada as occurs in all industrialized countries. We see either a moderation in the value of the Canadian dollar versus the U.S. dollar, or an increase in Canadian interest rates to retain an attractive investment opportunity for Canadian and foreign money in Canada.

Let us be clear on what is happening. The situation in Canada is occurring generally throughout the industrialized world. The Member opposite must know that short-term interest rates in most industrialized countries have been increasing in the face of increases in the United States interest rates. Equally, the Hon. Member must know that the exchange rate value of major foreign currencies vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar has been reduced. For example—

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if both the questions and the answers could be shorter. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South, for a question that is hopefully a little shorter.

INTEREST RATE LEVELS—MINISTER'S BUDGET STATEMENT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, he took an awful long time to say nothing. He has not told us why the American economy is bustling while we have more unemployment today than we had in 1981. He has not told us why fewer people in Canada are working today than in 1981.

I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister, who has a lot of nothing to say. He will recall that the Minister of Finance said in his Budget that if nominal and real interest rates were to rise significantly above current levels, the recovery itself would be at risk. Nominal and real interest rates have risen by between 2 per cent and 3 per cent since the date of the Budget. The economy is at risk. What proposals does the Minister have, other than the guff he has been giving us, that will give the country some confidence?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the economy is not at risk. The Hon. Member opposite is talking nonsense. The fact is that we have seen, in recent months, an increase in U.S. interest rates. That has a twofold effect. It has meant that the U.S. dollar has increased in value against the currencies of all major western industrialzied countries.

Mr. Andre: Why don't you do what they did, and get Canadians back to work?

Mr. MacLaren: It has also meant that interest rates in Canada and other industrialized countries have been trending upward as a result of that pressure. Canada has joined with other industrialized countries in seeking, with the United States, a solution to the problem of high interest rates within that country. These high rates have had their natural spill-over in Canada. I am surprised that the Member opposite does not recognize that basic economic fact.

Equally, I am surprised that the Member opposite does not recognize that in recent months, indeed for the past year and a half, we have had major achievements in growth in the Canadian economy. I speak, for example, of the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has some concern about the length of answers. A further supplementary to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, clearly the Government has no plans. All we get from the Minister is a mouthing of the same old inconsistencies and lack of hope. He is here to apologize for the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance is going throughout the countryside looking for a new job.

Mr. Speaker: With all due respect, the Hon. Member should ask his supplementary. This is a second supplementary.

REQUEST FOR CALLING OF ELECTION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the only solution is to direct my supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance cannot bring any proposals before the House to give the people of the country some confidence, and in view of the fact that the Minister of State for Finance just mouths old prepared answers from some bureaucrat, will he cast around his backbenchers to see if he can find someone else who can come forward and act as a Minister of Finance and give the country some hope? If he cannot find anyone else, will he at least do the country a favour and call an election?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has some misgivings about the nature of the question. The ministerial responsibility of the Acting Minister of Finance is limited in respect of the questions offered.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as is usual on his side of the House, the Member opposite engages in a lot of gloomy forecasts. Clearly he offers the Canadian people none of the reassurance and optimism which are a necessary element in our economic outlook. The fact is that we have been able to maintain interest rates in Canada at a level which, for the past 18 months or so, has been running level with or below that in the United States, which is a remarkable achievement in the Canadian economy. Indeed, today the prime rate in Canada is lower than that in the United States. That is in part the result of our very real achievement in, for example, the growth in our export trade. The Member opposite overlooks the fact that our trade balance in April improved by $1.8 billion.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the Hon. Minister has made his point.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO PROVIDE JOBS

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. It deals with the unemployment rate, and more particularly the youth unemployment rate.

Earlier this morning the Social Planning Council of Metro Toronto released a study which indicated that, indeed, youth unemployment was not some 18.5 per cent but some 26.5 per cent.

In the last few days the Corporation of Dieticians of Quebec indicated that many unemployed youths in that province were driven to desperate measures simply to seek enough financial remuneration to buy food. It is obvious that government programs are not working. Will the Minister immediately introduce some substantive programs to deal with this very, very serious problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, we have indeed read the report, which does not contradict the data we are going to release today in a report on youth in Canada. In fact, the official statistics released by Statistics Canada are those used internationally by OECD members. If there is any difference, it is because they do not allow for "hidden unemployment" among young people who have given up looking for employment. Thus, as Minister of State for Youth, I accept these figures. However, I think the Hon. Member should realize that $150 million have already been added to the $1.1 billion earmarked for youth. We earnestly hope that the measures suggested in the report that will be tabled this afternoon will be approved by Opposition Members, so that we can act as soon as possible.

[English]

MINISTER'S SPEECH IN MONTREAL

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I am not clear whether the Minister, in her response, is taking the position that she is agreeing with the study of the Metropolitan Council—the Acting Prime Minister is shaking his head no.

Mr. Pepin: Nobody does completely.

Mr. Wise: If the Minister of State for Youth is disagreeing with the fact that indeed the true number of young Canadians between the ages of 15 and 24 who are unemployed is some 788,000, then why did the Minister, shortly after her appointment, travel to Montreal and speak to a meeting in Montreal indicating that the true figure of those people who were unemployed in Canada would well exceed 700,000? Answer that question.

[Translation]

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I think the exact figures we are releasing were provided by experts at Statistics Canada. Last month, according to StatsCan, 463,000 people were unemployed; 106,000 had given up looking for employment and 250,000 were working part time and had no steady job.

We therefore accept the figure of around 800,000 which appears in the study by the Social Planning Council. We do not necessarily agree with the rest of the report. We are only referring to the figure of 800,000.

THE ECONOMY

OUTFLOW OF CAPITAL—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the Economics 101 lecture we got from the Minister of State (Finance). Following his homily, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. The Liberals promised in the 1980 election campaign, a low, made in Canada interest rate policy. As the Minister of Finance has told us that in effect there is nothing the Government can do now, that our interest rate policy, according to that Minister, now will be set in Washington, and considering the Americans in the late 1960s and 1970s took action to stop an outflow of capital from their country and were concerned about doing something about jobs and employment for their people, will the Acting Prime Minister tell us why we cannot take some independent action to protect our dollar, to keep down interest rates, and produce jobs in Canada?

• (1430)

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the fact is the Hon. Member opposite asked whether we are pursuing an independent interest rate policy. The Member opposite should realize that to the degree that we have been able to close the traditional gap between U.S. interest rates and Canadian interest rates, we have done so, we have indeed succeeded in closing that interest rate gap. We have done so despite the fact that over a number of years Canadian interest rates have tended to be well above United States interest rates as much as four and five percentage points.

Due to the basic strength of the Canadian economy in terms of a reduction in inflation, in terms of an increase in our export trade and in terms of greater productivity in the Canadian economy, that we have been able to maintain interest rates in Canada at the level of, or in some instances, as today with regard to the prime rate, below those of the United States. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Hon. Member opposite that he consider whether in those circumstances we have not delivered on our undertaking.

Mr. Epp: Order.

Mr. MacLaren: With regard to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, we have, in fact, provided the environment in which we can maintain a degree of independence in our interest rate policy. But if the Member opposite thinks for a moment that with the free flow of capital, the free flow of people and money between our two countries, we are able to immunize ourselves, when 70 per cent of our export trade is with the United States—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacLaren: —from interest rate pressures there, he is very much mistaken.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it would be hard to get a greater combination of complacency and nonsense than that which we have just heard from the Minister.

UNITED STATES PRECEDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if the United States in the 1960s and the 1970s, to pick up on the last phrase of the Minister of State for Finance, took steps to stop the free flow of capital, because that is what the Americans did, because the Americans had a Government then that was interested in American jobs—if they could interfere with the free flow of capital to keep interest rates down and produce American jobs, why cannot the Government of Canada, committed to Canadian interests, do the same thing for the people of Canada?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite does not know what he is talking about.

An Hon. Member: Do you?

Mr. MacLaren: The United States in those days was an exporter of capital.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT IMPOSE CAPITAL OUTFLOW TAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to send over to the Minister a copy of the legislation which the Americans introduced and kept on the books for almost a decade to cover such situations.

I want to be specific in my question and I ask the Minister to be specific in his answer. The estimated cost to Canadian business caused by today's almost one-quarter of a per cent increase in the rate could run in the neighbourhood of $200 million, which means that Canadian business will not be investing. We already know Canadian business investment intentions are down, which means that we will not get the jobs we need. Why will the Government not levy a special speculator's tax on capital flows beyond a certain level, against people who are acting contrary to Canadian interests, so as to keep capital in this country?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Member opposite simply does not understand the nature of the economic relations between Canada and the United States. The fact is that not only does 30 per cent of our gross national product depend on our export trade, and therefore 30 cents of every Canadian dollar—the earnings of every Canadian are affected by our export trade. And 75 per cent of that is earned in our trade with the United States. Is the Member opposite proposing that we somehow close our borders, or that we put a cap on, or that we limit the flow of money between our two countries—that we artificially close our borders and say to people moving between our two countries, investing between our two countries, buying the products between our two countries—

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question.

Mr. MacLaren: —"That's it. We are now closing the borders" because of some hypothetical or theoretical desire to maintain some level of the Canadian dollar? The Hon. Member opposite is surely more sophisticated than that. He must know better than that. He spoke earlier of Economics 101. He would do better to take a course in Economics 100.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns the report produced by the Social Planning Council of Toronto. This report reflects the fact that the Government ignores some 250,000 young people who are under employed or are discouraged workers. They simply do not exist according to the Government. They are lost statistics. But each lost statistic, Sir, is a young person who perhaps works only two hours a week mowing a lawn, because that is the only work he can find. The system rejects him; the computers do not record him. Why is it that that young person, and the 250,000 like him, have no place in this country to turn under the Government's misdirection of the economy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am really very surprised because the Minister of State for Youth has just said that she recognized—she spelled it out—the problem. Obviously the hon. lady's question was prepared this morning because the Minister of State for Youth just said that there were statistics, conventional statistics, provided by StatsCan. These were the ones that were comparable to other world statistics. She recognized, secondly, that some young people have given up looking for employment.

Mr. McDermid: What do you mean, some?

Mr. Pepin: She recognized, thirdly, that some young people were under employed. She has just said that. Why is my hon. friend asking a question which indicates that she was not listening at all?

Mr. McDermid: There is a problem. What is the solution?

PLIGHT OF UNLISTED UNEMPLOYED

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): What the Acting Prime Minister has not done is to look at the statistics themselves to see that the Government only reports there are half a million young people looking for work. He does not take into consideration, and the statistics the Government releases do not take into consideration, that there are 250,000 more who are underemployed and discouraged workers. That is what the Government does not show in its statistics. Why is that difference made? Why does the Government not recognize that the plight of these people is just as great as those who may be listed in the unemployment statistics? Why does the Government make a difference between these two groups of people? The Government does this every month when it is reporting the statistics.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I read the article too. The Secretary of State for Youth has indicated what I think is the common sense approach. The conventional statistics, the ones that are used in Canada, in Great Britain, France, the United States and what not, bring in a degree of certainty in the estimating of unemployment among young people. The other type of statistics bring up questions such as why people have given up looking and are rather psychological. The reason may very well be "because I have looked for two or three months and I haven't found one." The reason can also be "because I am lazy".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: Yes. Consequently the Minister of State for Youth just made the argument that there was a degree of certainty in the conventional way of establishing statistics on unemployment and there was more social psychological consideration in the estimation of other types of statistics concerning youth.

An Hon. Member: He dismisses them because he says they are lazy.

ALLOCATION OF YOUTH EMPLOYMENT FUNDS ON A CONSTITUENCY BASIS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Acting Prime Minister is not trying to tell us that there are 200,000 lazy young Canadians who do not want to work, because that is what he said.

Mr. Lapointe: You are stupid.

Mr. McGrath: No, the Minister is stupid for saying that in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1440)

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth. She said today that in her estimation there are 800,000 young people unemployed. She also indicated that she had about $150 million which she could use in a discretionary way to address that problem on a constituency basis.

When her Estimates were before the committee on May 29, her Deputy Minister, in response to whether or not Statistics Canada data were relevant, said:

> I think it is a fact that data officially compiled by Statistics Canada do not permit us to have reasonable assurance of data based on the local situations.

How then does the Minister allocate the money she has at her disposal on a constituency basis, if she cannot rely upon Statistics Canada data?

[Translation]

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I believe my hon. friend is referring to a question about the formula being used to allocate subsidies to various ridings under the Summer Canada Program, subsidies which this summer should create 81,000 jobs for our young people at a cost of $200 million. I have answered this question, Mr. Speaker, and my Deputy Minister has provided the detailed information. The formula which is being used could not be based only on Statistics Canada data, because such data are not compiled on a constituency basis. We are using, therefore, a mixed formula which nevertheless takes into account local situations; it is being applied across the board to 281 ridings in Canada. Because there is no official Statistics Canada formula, we are using a statistical formula which applies to all ridings, whether Conservative, NDP or Liberal.

[English]

FORMULA FOR DETERMINING ALLOCATIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, let me help the Minister in her education. We do not have Statistics Canada data by constituencies. According to the Deputy Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the allocations are applied according to the labour rate surplus. The Minister knows, or should know, that the labour rate surplus is based upon unemployment insurance recipients. Young people do not qualify for unemployment insurance. How, then, does the Minister determine which constituency gets what amount for Young Canada Works?

[Translation]

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, we have indeed acknowledged that the formula is neither the one determined by Statistics Canada, nor the one used by Statistics Canada to assess the number of young unemployed, which the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands referred to earlier in her question. We recognize, therefore, that the official agency is not providing us with the necessary data, but that we have developed a formula which take into account the local realities. My hon. friend did not suggest an alternative; we are therefore left with the one we have at this time, which I suggest is fair for young Canadians and all ridings throughout Canada.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

TREATMENT OF NATIVE VETERANS—FRAUD ALLEGATIONS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. For some years native Indians and their organizations have been attempting to convince the Government that many of the benefits which they received after the First World War and Second World War were the subject of fraud, in many cases by officials in the Department of Indian Affairs. Yesterday a study was released which confirmed that many of the claims of native veterans over the years were indeed factual. Would the Minister advise the House whether he and his Department would be prepared to investigate officials in the Department of Indian Affairs with a view to determining whether the allegations raised by that study are indeed factual? If so, will he initiate prosecutions against those Indian Affairs officials?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not had that study drawn to my attention. I must say that it is not easy for me to see how my Department or I would be involved if it is a matter of the substance of the programs that would come under the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. If it is a matter of a prosecution for fraud, it would come under the appropriate provincial Attorney General. Of course the investigation would also be under the direction of that Attorney General. As the Hon. Member relates the facts, I am not sure how my Department would be involved.

REQUEST THAT INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION BE CONDUCTED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. There have been numerous studies made by committees of the House, including the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped, Veterans Affairs, and others, which have indicated that there is a real need for some independent investigation of the allegations raised by native veterans. Would the Acting Prime Minister undertake to make a recommendation to Cabinet that funds be allocated for such an independent investigation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question. The efforts which Canada has made in this area are well known. We had a committee on this particular subject. However, I will look at the particular aspect raised by the Hon. Member.

BILINGUALISM

POLICY FOR AMATEUR SPORTS NATIONAL ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. Raymond Dupont (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. In a previous statement, the Minister announced that his Department was ready to help the management of 22 sports organizations to improve their services in both official languages.

Now, the Minister has just announced the bilingualism policy for national amateur sports associations subsidized by the federal Government. Will the Minister tell this House to what extent the services provided by these associations will be improved for the benefit of French-speaking athletes?

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I merely want to say once again that, where the basic principles are concerned, it is obvious that the Canadian Government has had no change in policy, namely that we want to make sure that all of their services will be provided in both official languages within a year from now. It has been decided that 22 national organizations would provide such services this year, and on account of that, they will receive 50 per cent of all their subsidies from the Federal Government.

With respect to the Canadian Olympic Association, which is not involved in this policy, I had the simple choice of requiring that the Association follow this policy or of not financing it and keeping our athletes from going to Los Angeles. Because such is my role, I much prefer to help our athletes, whether they are French-speaking or English-speaking, take part in the Olympics, and for the moment, I have absolutely no wish to involve the Canadian Olympic Association in that policy.

However, next year, the Canadian Olympic Association will be subjected to the new policy just like all the other organizations. My greatest wish is that all our Canadian athletes, whether they speak French or English, might take part in the Los Angeles Olympics; this is why the Canadian Olympic Association is not among the 22 federations I have selected.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN SUBCOMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who, I presume, is expecting a question today. He is aware that the subcommittee on acid rain tabled a report in the House this morning. I would appreciate his comments on whether he approves of the recommendations outlined by the committee after literally thousands of hours of study, briefs, and so on.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, let me express my recognition and appreciation of his substantial contribution over the years on the issue of acid rain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: I say this because I know he was extremely active, long before I was given this assignment.

As to the recommendations contained in the report to which he referred, I am studying them. As the House is aware, it was published three hours ago. All recommendations are of significance, and I will study them thoroughly. On those on which there is a possibility to move in the immediate future, I will certainly do my best. Those that are practical in the long term will be put in the system, and for those that are impractical, I will provide members of the committee with a due reply.

● (1450)

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PLACE RECOMMENDATIONS BEFORE CABINET

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Minister. I am aware that he has to sell Treasury Board and Cabinet as a whole. I hope he will zero in on some of those very important recommendations and see that Cabinet looks them over and makes a decision now. So far, all we have been doing is talking. The Government has not done anything to show the United States that we mean business. Will he ensure that some of those recommendations are brought before Cabinet and put into effect immediately?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, for the first time in Canada we have a dateline, 1994. The percentage of reduction, as a commitment of both the provincial and federal Governments, is 50 per cent. Therefore we have done more than talk. We have a plan of action. Second, we have met as a working group with the provincial Ministers. Third, we have registered, and will continue to register, and I know that the Hon. Member and his colleagues are active as well, with the Washington administration our desire that they join us in the plan of action that we have outlined, and for which we have obtained the support of nine nations in Europe. That is more than just words; that is action.

THE CANADA COUNCIL

REPORTED TELEPHONE CALL TO DIRECTOR FROM DEPUTY MINISTER

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. The Acting Prime Minister may be aware that an article in this morning's Globe and Mail by the immediate past chairman of the Canada Council, Mavor Moore, stated:

> According to several members of the Canada Council living in various parts of the country, the Deputy Minister of Communications, Robert Rabinovitch, recently telephoned the director of the Canada Council, Timothy Porteous and instructed him that public criticism of the Government's plan in Bill C-24 by himself, or the staff or even members of the Council's board, would not be tolerated.

That squares with the testimony we heard on Tuesday from Brian Anthony, executive director of the Canadian Conference of the Arts, who said:

> We have been led to believe that it would be inappropriate for any agency to risk its good standing and well-being at this moment by speaking out against Bill C-24.

These are very serious charges. This is a very serious matter. What steps will the Government take to rectify this situation and remove the atmosphere of intimidation and fear that now surrounds Bill C-24?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Minister of Communications emphatically denies that he exerted any pressure or intimidation on the executive director of the Canada Council. He denies that. The conversation he had with the said gentleman was at the request of the Minister, with the consent of his own Minister, and consequently quite within the rules of his function.

The Canada Council will be before the committee this afternoon, at the request of the Minister, who suggested that they should appear before the committee on the discussion of Bill C-24 and these questions can be raised there.

The Government intends to respect the tradition of autonomy which exists for cultural agencies in Canada, but there is also a tradition of accountability that must be reconciled with the tradition of autonomy. These subjects are very important and will be discussed this afternoon before the committee.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGATIONS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the gravity of the situation may not be clear to the Acting Prime Minister. The atmosphere of fear and intimidation of which I speak has been with us for a number of weeks. There are a number of groups which have failed to come forward because they fear the consequences for their own funding. Since it involves not merely the Canada Council but, as Brian Anthony pointed out, and he speaks for many arts organizations across the country, given the intimidation, these organizations are considering having to take "a dive" because they fear the intimidation from the Government, will the Acting Prime Minister undertake in this House to investigate other allegations which have been made with respect to cultural organizations beyond the Canada Council which had been intimidated as well?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I really do not know to what allegations my friend is referring. Certainly the Canada Council was not intimidated. Obviously this morning's article by Mavor Moore is one where his own autonomy and independence explodes in public. If there are groups in Canada which feel intimidated, they will have an opportunity to express that fear. The committee is one place where they can do so.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF ENLISTMENT APPLICATIONS

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Defence. In view of today's report of tragically high and increasing numbers of unemployed young people, can the Minister tell us if there is a corresponding increase in the number of applicants to join Canada's Armed Forces? If so, will the Minister again review the petition signed by 109 Members of the Liberal caucus and presented to the Prime Minister in the fall of 1982?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are very much aware of the plight of the young unemployed. Of course there is a repercussion of that plight in terms of the number of applicants who are coming to the Canadian Armed Forces in order to seek to enlist. We have recognized that. With the assistance of the hon. lady, in the last year we introduced the Youth Training Employment Program, YTEP. This year the allocation for that program has been increased as a result of funds made available to us through the Ministry of Employment and Immigration. We have increased the number within the YTEP program by 1,000. I recognize the number is not that which the hon. lady would wish. It is not the number I would have wished. However, with the amount of money available, those were the plans that were put forward and accepted by the Government.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—CONFLICT IN THE PUNJAB—SAFETY OF CANADIAN NATIONALS AND RELATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of International Trade. As the Minister knows, armed conflict is growing in the State of Punjab in India. In particular, about 300 are reported to have been killed yesterday. Travel in and out of the Punjab has been discontinued, and communications interrupted. We in the New Democratic Party are concerned for the many Canadians who are worried over the safety of their relatives in the Punjab. Has the Minister any information on when communications will be restored or whether, in the meanwhile, Canadians can inquire through the Canadian Embassy about the safety of their relatives in the Punjab?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has said, the situation in the Punjab is a very troubled one indeed, and a great many lives have been lost. We are aware of some 50 Canadians who are in the State of Punjab at the present time and of some others who may be travelling in the area. We are not at this time in contact with all of them. There has been a curfew in effect, and communications between Punjab and Delhi have been interrupted. We have no reason to believe that any Canadians are in immediate danger, but we are making all appropriate efforts to obtain and maintain contact with those Canadians.

INTERRUPTION IN COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has answered a question I did not ask, but I was going to ask it next. I would like to return to my original question which goes beyond the one he answered. There are Canadians, not those travelling in the Punjab, but those who have relatives there who are anxious and would like to make inquiry, and are prevented because communications have been interrupted in the State of Punjab by the Government of India during a state of emergency. Is it possible for Canadians with relatives there, not necessarily travelling but living there, to inquire through the Canadian embassy about the safety of their relatives?

• (1500)

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly possible to make those inquiries. Our High Commission will certainly do its best to provide information when it is available. It is our feeling that, when the curfew is lifted, Canadians who do not have urgent reasons for being in the Punjab should leave that area.

Until communications are re-established with the Punjab, we are in the position of not being able to give any detailed information about Canadians who happen to be there at the present time. The Hon. Member can be assured that our competent consular officials are available to provide any assistance that may be needed just as soon as communications are established.

POOLS

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—CONTRACT INFORMATION

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. He will know that today the press has reported what the retailers have been saying for some time, and that is that sales for sports pool tickets are going terribly, and that in fact some retailers are saying that the game has struck out.

Will the Minister finally table in the House the list of people who have contracts with the sports pool, so that we may know who the distributors are and whether in fact they have two-year severance pay contracts, and so that the people in the real world of amateur sport will know whether or not, if this pool fails, it is only Liberals and their friends who will benefit from its existence?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am glad the Hon. Member is asking this question while I am in the House, because as a rule he seems to wait until I have left to ask his questions. Mr. Speaker, I should like the House to know that the Canadian Sports Pool Corporation has now 70 permanent employees who have been hired following interviews by an independent organization, the Chairman of the Corporation or a group of people.

The Corporation has also some 300 term employees, chosen among all those who had replied to ads placed in local papers by the regional directors of the Corporation. I can state emphatically that there has been no patronage. Distributors have yet to be appointed!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary question.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE LIST OF CONTRACTS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well that the regional directors and agents have been informed that distributors are now to be given five free tickets for every 20 they buy. The thing is a disaster. If the Minister is so convinced of the innocence of the situation, will he undertake to table the full list of contracts so that Members of the House of Commons can discover the real truth?

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Olivier (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite refuses to understand. I must repeat, therefore, that 300 term employees have been hired following a series of ads placed in local newspapers throughout Canada. Whether these people were Conservative, Liberal or NDP supporters, has not and will not be taken into account.

I should like to ask the Hon. Member the following question: Has Air Canada, the CNR, or any other agency such as Loto-Quebec or Wintario ever tabled their list in their respective legislative assembly? That is my question. When he gave $500 million to the provinces, was it a gift he was making to his Progressive Conservative friends in exchange for the $35 million which may not make it possible for us to assume the full costs of the Olympic Games in Calgary? This man is trying to destroy a scheme which could possibly finance these games. He is working against the Western people and against amateur sport in Canada, not to mention medical research, etc.! The underlying philosophy is that a national government should be able to help its athletes.

COMMISSIONER OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

APPOINTMENT OF MR. D'IBERVILLE FORTIER

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, after consultations we have reached an agreement and therefore, by unanimous consent, the following motion could now be passed. I move, seconded by the Minister for External Relations (Mr. Pepin):

That, in accordance with Section 19 of An Act respecting the status of the official languages of Canada, Chapter 0-2, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, this House approves the appointment of D'Iberville Fortier, Esquire, as Commissioner of Official Languages of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister have the unanimous consent of the House to introduce his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the usual inquiry to the President of the Privy council, the Government House Leader, regarding his intentions with respect to Government business for tomorrow and until next Thursday, with the understanding that next Friday the House will not be sitting because of certain events that will be taking place in the City causing most of us to want to get out of town fast!

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, in so far as the business of the House is concerned, the first item of business tomorrow will be a Bill that is about to be introduced today in relation to the Cree and Naskapi. The Government will be prepared to allow this Bill to be passed through all stages tomorrow. We are willing to hear from one speaker per Party, but if my colleague would prefer to have more, we would not mind. However, we would like to see this Bill passed through all stages tomorrow. If this happens before the normal hour of adjournment, the back-up legislation will be Bill C-39, the War Veterans Allowance Act, and the second back-up Bill will be Bill C-10, resuming debate on the Divorce Act.

On Monday the first item of business will be Bill C-34, the amendments of the Canada Labour Code, and in this instance we would like to see the Bill sent to the Standing Committee of the House by or before the end of the day. The back-up legislation on Monday will be Bill C-31 dealing with freshwater fish.

Beginning on Tuesday and until Thursday inclusive, the business of the House will be Bill C-36, assuming that it is not disposed of today. If it is, we will resume debate on Bill C-25 regarding the CDIC and then Bill C-10 again regarding the Divorce Act. However, business for next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, like all business, of course, is subject to change, and there is most likely to be a change if Bills are reported from committees.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate hearing the outline of the business of the House. With respect to the proposed Bill relating to the Cree and Naskapi, there were consultations between representatives of the Cree and Naskapi and myself and our spokesperson, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown, with respect to that Bill. At that time my understanding was that they were in consultation with the group affected. They asked for our co-operation by having the Bill dealt with through second reading and sent to committee for one day's consideration. I have seen the draft Bill. It is one that has been worked on for a great deal of time and one of which we are supportive.

Dealing with the observation made by the Government House Leader that at this point in time we could somehow deal with the Bill through all stages, while I am not saying that we are opposed to that proposition, I am wondering how he now comes to that conclusion when my very clear understanding of my direct discussions with the representatives was that they would prefer to have a second reading debate, one day in committee and then have the Bill come back to the House for an expeditious resolution. Is the Government House Leader in possession of information or facts of which I am not in possession? I am quite prepared to discuss the timetable if that is the case. I do not want to waste the time of the House. However, I am sure that my ears did not deceive me when I had discussions with representatives of that group. I would be interested in knowing precisely the basis on which the Government House Leader now suggests that we go through all stages in one day.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the information which I have comes from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who spoke with me this morning. He informed me that the request which was made by the interested people was that the Bill be passed through all stages tomorrow. But if that is not the case, I am sure that the interested people will contact me or the Hon. Member before the House starts debating the Bill tomorrow.

I take note of the generous offer of the Hon. Member that, if that was the wish of the interested people with respect to the Bill, his Party would be prepared to allow the Bill to go through all stages tomorrow. If that is not the case, of course, we would be prepared to allow the Bill to go to committee. However, the proposal for the time being is to pass the Bill through all stages tomorrow.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to reiterate that we, of course, are supportive of the Bill and want to ensure that the matter receives the proper attention of the House. There is no question that if the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has had subsequent discussions, I will make it my business to communicate with Chief Billy Diamond and other representatives of the Cree and the Naskapi to ensure that the right thing is done. In view of the fact that there have been discussions with respect to this matter, I would appreciate if in future the Government House Leader could give me an indication of those subsequent discussions. I thought that the matter had been made quite clear in the course of discussions which had taken place up to this point. So that there will be no misunderstanding, we are not fooling around and wasting the time of the House. I do not want to play games and I know the Government House Leader does not want to either.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to keep the confidence of the Hon. Member. He is right in saying that maybe I should have told him, but I took it for granted that he knew. The Minister informed me that Mr. Diamond and others had told the Hon. Member that they preferred that the Bill go through all stages tomorrow. There might be a misunderstanding, but the Hon. Member is right in saying that yesterday we had discussions on this matter. I will not refer to the details of the discussions, but it was understood that the Bill would go to committee at the request of the Hon. Member. Our proposal yesterday was to pass the Bill through all stages. I know the Hon. Member is speaking in good faith. I will ensure that whatever the people who are interested in the Bill want, it will be done accordingly tomorrow. In other words, we are proposing to dispose completely of the Bill tomorrow; but if the interested people do not want that to happen, the Bill will be sent to committee. It is no more complicated than that.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear that the Government has decided to call Bill C-34 respecting amendments to the Labour Code for debate on Monday. I would like to indicate to the Government House Leader that we would be prepared to have the Bill go to committee with one speaker in the House. Also, to repeat the offer of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain which was made last week, we would be prepared to enter into a House order to ensure that the Bill is reported out of committee and back into the House, dealt with and passed by the end of June.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if the Government House Leader has had conversations with the Minister of the Environment regarding the possibility of continuing the Sub-committee on Acid Rain. If he has not, I hope he will look very favourably on the idea of continuing this important committee because of the seriousness of the problem. I know he did when the previous committee fulfilled its mandate. However, I suppose that the mandate of the committee has been completed at this time.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I will consider very seriously the request made by the Hon. Member. I will talk to the Minister of the Environment about it. I listened to his answer today, but I will have to discuss it with him and report back to the Hon. Member as quickly as possible.

In so far as Bill C-34 is concerned, we have an understanding among ourselves to have one speaker from the NDP and two from the Conservatives. We were not specific in so far as our Party was concerned. However, Monday is available and the spirit is to allow the Bill to go to committee on Monday. This will be possible so far as we are concerned, but if the Conservative Party wants more than one speaker, that is fine. If the NDP wants more than one speaker, that is fine too. If we want more than one speaker, we will also do so. But we want the Bill to be sent to committee before five o'clock on Monday, and we will not do anything to prevent that from happening.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I want to pose a question to the Government House Leader. I respect very much the negotiations that have always been carried on between the Government House Leader, the House Leader of the Official Opposition and the House Leader of the NDP. I raise my question because of the fact that the Government House Leader has really laid before us the legislative program not only for the rest of this week, but indeed the entire program for next week. That is subject to change, of course. As well, I appreciate the fact that the Government House Leader has indicated that there are a number of Bills which are presently before committee.

On May 17 I posed a question to the Government House Leader. At that particular time there was co-operation among all Parties to pass the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Bill which would double advance payments to farmers for commodities falling within the Canadian Wheat Board. We supported that Bill and co-operated with the Government. Indeed, the Bill passed all stages in one day.

I would remind the Government House Leader that as a result of that we have a situation in which advance payments legislation applies in one part of the country and provides $30,000, $60,000 and $90,000 to producers of grains within the Canadian Wheat Board. Indeed, that was a result of the passage of Bill C-23. However, in other parts of the country—Ontario, Quebec, Atlantic Canada and B.C.—the existing advance payments crop legislation, which I believe was passed in the House in 1976, maintains the same levels. Those are the old levels of $15,000, $30,000 and $45,000.

The Minister took my remarks seriously. He indicated that he would have discussions with the Minister of Agriculture. I do not want to quote the Minister, but he indicated that he would have a conversation with the Minister of Agriculture and, indeed, if anything could be done it would be done. It is now June 7 and we have a legislative program which deals with this week and next week, but there is no mention of that Bill.

The second problem might well be more serious than the first problem, and I raise this question in all sincerity. There exists in southwestern Ontario a very serious problem in the tobacco industry. The tobacco farmers have been led to believe that a national marketing board would be established to negotiate on their behalf and to market the 1984 crop. Indications were given to various board members and growers as early as the Agricultural Outlook Conference which was held in December that the necessary amendments to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act would be introduced into the House in February. The Minister of Agriculture, in so many words, led people to believe that the Act would be introduced in the House by March 15.

I questioned the wisdom of those statements at that time, but I thought that if the Minister wanted to hold out false hopes he could do so. I would have preferred him to have been more honest, more forthright and more realistic to the board and to the growers. Indeed, they were led to believe that the amendments to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act would allow the board to establish a national board and that it would be introduced in the House today. It has not been introduced in the House today and I doubt very much whether it will be introduced.

I would like to impress upon the Government House Leader that it is a very serious situation which applies—

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member, but if he has a question relating to House business, the Chair invites him to put his question.

Mr. Wise: I will follow your advice, Mr. Speaker. I could go on and talk about this very serious problem for hours. However, I would be happy to have some private discussions with the Government House Leader. I believe the Minister of Agriculture is away for some time on official duties. I just want to impress upon him the fact that commitments have been made, deadlines set, and the commitments are unfulfilled and the deadlines are passing. It is a serious problem. When can we expect the introduction of the necessary amendments to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act which would allow the growers to decide whether or not a national board is in their interest?

Mr. Pinard: The Hon. Member raises two concerns. His first concern has been brought to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture. As Government House leader I deal with Bills on the Order Paper; obviously in this instance the Bill has not yet been introduced and I do not know if it will be introduced in the next week, before the end of June or when the session resumes next fall; I cannot tell the Hon. Member. But if ever we introduce a Bill on this important matter, I hope that it will be disposed of very quickly, probably with one speaker per Party, and that we will consider the speech for the Conservative Party will have been delivered today by the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And it was a heck of a good speech, too.

Mr. Pinard: On the second concern, the Bill will be introduced once the policy has been approved by Cabinet. I must tell the Hon. Member that the representations he has just made to me were also made by what I call the interested people, and by many Liberal Members last week, the week before and months before. Those representations are well known to me and I will make sure the Minister of Agriculture knows exactly what has to be done.

Once again, there are only three weeks left before the summer adjournment and some Bills will have to be disposed of. If a Bill was to be introduced to deal with this matter, obviously it would have to be dealt with very quickly. There again, I hope the Hon. Member would agree to refrain from speaking again since he has done so today.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Government House Leader that we will be prepared to deal very quickly with legislation affecting tobacco growers once the Government brings it forward.

Is the Minister aware of any intention by the Government or the Minister of Agriculture to introduce amendments to the Agricultural Stabilization Act which will allow for the creation of a tri-partite stabilization program in the red meat industry? The Minister is on record as saying he had it approved in principle by Cabinet back in April and he wants agreement with some of the provinces by July 1. He will not be able to do that unless we have amendments to the Agricultural Stabilization Act. Is there any intention to bring that legislation forward so that we can deal with it very quickly before the end of this month?

Mr. Pinard: I will take good note of the representations made by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, can the House Leader give us some indication whether the Minister of State for Multiculturalism intends to bring down legislation concerning the multiculturalism Act proposed in the Speech from the Throne? I did not hear the House Leader comment on that, so can he indicate whether we can expect to see it before the House rises on June 29?

Mr. Pinard: Most likely, Mr. Speaker.

HOLIDAYS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING CANADA DAY AND DOMINION DAY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-245, an Act to amend the Holidays Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in moving first reading of this Bill. Constitutional independence of Canada was achieved on April 17, 1982 by the proclamation of the Canada Act. This day will, therefore, under this Bill, be celebrated in the future as Canada Day. It will also restore July 1 as Dominion Day, as July 1 marks the beginning of the Dominion of Canada as it was known in 1867. This historical fact is so important that it is appropriate to retain July 1 as Dominion Day.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CREE-NASKAPI (OF QUEBEC) ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Yvon Pinard (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-46, An Act respecting certain provisions of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement and the Northeastern Quebec Agreement relating principally to Cree and Naskapi local government and to the land regime governing Category IA and Category IA-N land.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The President of the Privy Council, on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister on my right would like to have the unanimous consent of the House to revert to Tabling of Documents, because she forgot she had something to table.

INCOME TAX

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CONVENTIONS RESPECTING DOUBLE TAXATION

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)) moved the first reading of Bill S-11 (from the Senate), an Act to implement conventions between Canada and the Republic of Tunisia, Canada and the People's Republic of Bangladesh, Canada and the United Republic of Cameroon, Canada and the democratic socialist Republic of Sri Lanka, an agreement between Canada and Kenya, conventions between Canada and the Arab Republic of Egypt, Canada and the Republic of the Ivory Coast, Canada and Sweden, for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time, at the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 800.

[Text]

CIDA—GRANTS TO INTERNATIONAL DEFENCE AND AID FUND FOR SOUTHERN AFRICA OF OTTAWA

Question No. 800—Mr. Stewart:

1. In (a) 1983 (b) 1984 to date, did the Canadian International Development Agency grant any money to the International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa of Ottawa and, if so, in each case, what amount was granted and for what purposes were the funds granted?

2. Is the International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa a registered charity?

Mr. John Evans (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canadian International Development Agency and by the Department of National Revenue as follows:

1. CIDA contributed the following amounts to the International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa of Ottawa as follows:

(a)—1982-83 (through the Public Participation Program of the Non-Governmental Organizations Division) $9,000, for development education projects.

1983 (through the International Non-Governmental Organizations Division to the international association of IDAFSA based in London, England), $3,000, which was the final payment for an earlier project run by Christian Care in Zimbabwe to help settle former political detainees and their families through training in chicken farming, vegetable gardening as well as small settlement grants.

(b) 1983-84 (through the Public Participation Program of the Non-Governmental organizations Division), $22,000, for development education projects.

1984 (through the Non-Governmental Organizations Division) $47,025, of the total CIDA commitment of $49,500. was contributed for Self Help and Development Projects in Zimbabwe.

2. No.

[English]

Mr. Evans: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, this question of mine comes around about as regularly as the Thursday question on House business. I would like to point out that I have had question No. 368 on the Order Paper for over three years. It requires a simple answer. I fully believe that the reason it is not answered is that the answer would embarrass the Minister of National Defence, who has been deceiving the House and the country about the increases in the National Defence budget.

As this question is over three years old, Mr. Speaker, I put another question of a similar nature on the Order Paper bringing it up to date. My first question, No. 368, asked for the returns from 1971 to 1979-80. I have tabled a new question on the Order Paper, No. 840, which requests the returns from 1970-71 to 1983-84. I think that in the interest of the tidiness of the Order Paper it might be appropriate, if I can get unanimous consent of the House, to cancel that question about which there has been procrastination for over three years.

Mr. Speaker: By agreement, can the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) withdraw his question from the Order Paper?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INTEREST ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Interest Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, if I recall correctly, when I left off speaking immediately before lunch I was discussing some of the new wording in what will be the new Section 6 of the Act. It deals with the possibility of fluctuating principal amounts within mortgages. Presumably the principal amount will be re-assessed periodically in light of the inflation that has taken place. This new section also contemplates fluctuating interest rates on mortgages. With the advent of computers and everything else we have today it is not unlikely, and we can foresee such circumstances, that the interest rate on a mortgage may fluctuate on a daily basis. Taking into account today's increase in inflation, the principal may be re-adjusted at the same time.

In the mortgage business, whether it is mortgages for residential houses or for industrial and commercial purposes, surely we should have stability. We are getting further away from the stability which we had until the present Government came into power. Instability in financial matters has characterized the Liberal administration of the last many years. Everything appears to be in a constant state of flux. It is very difficult for one to plan financial affairs when the Government appears to be unconcerned with financial and economic matters.

The preoccupation of the Liberal Government under the current Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has certainly not been with economic and financial affairs. These have been neglected and relegated to the back-burner. The Government, and Parliament as a consequence, has been concerned with philosophical ideas concerning constitutions. We have had great debates on bilingualism. We have engaged in all manner of social engineering, but we have neglected financial stability for the nation. That is one of the reasons we are in the sad and sorry state we are in today.

Today in Question Period the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. MacLaren) stated that there is nothing Canada can do about interest rates in the country. They are all a function of what someone else does in some other part of the world, the United States in particular. I do not buy that idea. I think that Canada is capable of conducting its own affairs and engendering a stable economic climate in the country. Instead of tagging on to someone else with regard to interest rate matters, this would allow us to set the trend, or at least to have that degree of stability which we need in Canada if we are to encourage residential, industrial and commercial borrowing for the purpose of new capital construction in Canada. We should have control over our own state of affairs in the financial field.

I will address another aspect of this Bill. Why do we need legislation of this kind? Why can we not just leave it up to the market and negotiations between borrowers and lenders? The reason is that there is always an unequal balance of power between the lender and the borrower. Anyone who has had experience in negotiating a mortgage, especially in the case of a residential mortgage, knows that you do not engage in real negotiation. You may try to shop around a little to get a better rate. That is about the best you can do. The mortgagors are almost invariably obliged to sign a standard printed document which is drawn up by the mortgagees, almost invariably in their favour. They have the benefit of all kinds of legal counsel. The drafting is done to protect the interests of the lender. Were it not for Parliament and legislation such as the Interest Act, the borrower would have very little to protect him or her.

It is up to Parliament, through legislation such as this, to protect the interests of the borrower and also to provide a fair and equitable system for both the lenders and the borrowers. It is a disappointment that the present Government does not seem to share this sense of equity. It appears to be more concerned with the interests of the financial institutions. We will see this when we discuss the provisions in greater detail. The Government seems to be much more concerned with the interests of the financial institutions and not concerned at all with the interests of the borrowers.

It is desirable, if circumstances change and people have the financial wherewithal, that they be able to discharge a mortgage as soon as possible. Many people would want to do that if interest rates are either high or low. It might make very good financial sense when interest rates are high, but most people, whatever the rate of interest charged on that mortgage may be, would want to be free and clear of it. They would want to obtain their financial freedom.

The House will recall the mortgage burning ceremonies that were popular at one time. This was done once the mortgage had been discharged and people had that burden off their back. It is a common objective and something we should encourage by making provisions to enable people to discharge their mortgage in advance of the original date set in the original mortgage.

In enabling this to be done, and to be fair to the lender, there must be some form of penalty imposed if an early payment is to be made. If the principal is reloaned by the lender at a lower rate than that prevailing at the time of the negotiation of the original mortgage, there is a reduction in income or earnings by the mortgagee, that should be taken into account. Of course, there is the overhead cost of making new loans. That also must be taken into account.

Our aims, when designing a prepayment scheme, should be threefold. First, there should be an element of fairness to which I referred before. Second, there should be simplicity and clarity which I do not think exists in the Bill before us today. It should be something that everyone can understand, and it should not contain long, weird and wonderful financial formulae. It should be written in such a way that everyone can understand it. There should be certainty about it. That certainty does not exist in the scheme that has been proposed by the Government.

The traditional way of doing this has been to assess the penalty in terms of the number of months of interest payments. The provisions of the old Act with respect to certain mortgages was that the penalty that was payable if one wanted to pay off the mortgage was some three months' interest. This was understood by everyone. It is sure, simple and understandable. It might not be absolutely equitable under every circumstance, but in order to get that simplicity and certainty perhaps it is necessary to give up a little of the fairness.

I hope that we can again approach the question of prepayment penalties in the same way. I see no necessity for changing from the traditional, simple, reasonably fair and sure system. But apparently this is not the Government's approach. If there is an easy way of doing something and a difficult way of doing something, you can bet your bottom dollar that the Liberals will take the difficult way. Just look at their approach to this Bill. Primarily, they have a great desire for regulations. If action can be taken through regulations, in secret and behind closed doors, that is what the Liberals will do. Practically everything concerning prepayment of mortgages is to be done by regulation with that aura of secrecy about it. You can also bet your bottom dollar that when the regulations do see the light of day, they will probably be 25 pages in length. I guarantee that no ordinary Canadian will be able to understand what those regulations mean. They will be complex, and the Liberals love complexity because they can hide behind it.

I cannot see any advantage to the mortgagor at all under the government proposals. Let us explain those proposals in general. When a mortgage is to be surrendered or paid up, one takes the present value at the old rate, which will normally be higher than the new rate, and computes the present value of the rate under existing interest rates on the day of surrender. The second is subtracted from the first, with the resulting sum of money which is to be payable by the mortgagor to the mortgagee. This system was described by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) as a henhouse designed by foxes. That is certainly what it is. It is entirely in favour of the financial institutions. It is not fair to the mortgage borrowers of Canada.

It is complex and difficult to understand. When the rates go up, the borrower is obliged to pay the going rate. When the rates go down, the penalty is assessed in such a manner as to wipe out any advantage the borrower might otherwise have had with a decline of interest rates.

This Bill is so clouded, so obscure and so unfair that I can only conclude that it has been drafted by one of the Liberal candidates for the leadership, that is, by Mr. John Turner. That is where I suspect this Bill originated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). The press releases delivered by the Government indicate that mortgages of $150,000 or less will have this maximum penalty on their predischarge. Has the Hon. Member been able to find any reference to $150,000 in the Bill? I have gone through the Bill and cannot find any such reference. It seems to me that the Government, in presenting this Bill to the press and to others, has deliberately misled the public and the House with respect to any prepayment arrangements. Would the Hon. Member care to comment on that?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I too have read the Bill. I can find no such reference in the Bill. It is possible that the Government may wish to address this in the regulations. If that is indeed the case, we do not know if the figure will be $150,000 or whatever else it might be.

However, this just goes to illustrate some of the comments I was making in my formal presentation. It illustrates the obscurity with which the House has always been faced by Members on the Government side. It is what one might call government by press release. On how many similar occasions has something been made known in a press release and then the content of that press release has never in fact materialized?

A subject which is not really related but one about which I am very concerned at the present time involves press releases in 1980 and 1981 put out by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). He stated that many millions of dollars were going to be made available for training opportunities at the time of the construction of the Norman Wells pipeline. These moneys have never seen the light of day. That is just an indication of how the Government manipulates by press release and does not come forward with legislation in what it professes.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, in the same press release the Government gives an example of the kind of penalty that would be charged to a consumer. Suppose a consumer takes out a five-year $50,000 mortgage at the rate of 12 per cent which is to be amortized over 25 years. Suppose that, with two years remaining in the term of the mortgage and a market rate of 9 per cent, the consumer wishes to repay it. The maximum penalty could be assessed, it was worked out, to $2,538.23. I went to the Ministry of Finance and asked people there how they worked it out. I gave them a $50,000 mortgage at 18 per cent, the current market rate being 13 per cent, with two years to go. They told me I should ask the Minister. Has the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) any idea how the Ministry of Finance could conceivably come up with this computation, on the mortgage suggested, of $2,538.23, or is this another illustration of deliberate misrepresentation by a government that refuses to put up any speakers in debate so the Government can not in any way be questioned as to the nature and terms of a Bill?

• (1550)

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I must say I fully subscribe to the observations made by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I do not know how that computation was made. No one really knows how it was made because there are no regulations which give the complex formulae to be incorporated in the Bill. It is impossible for anybody really to know at the time of public debate in the House of Commons on this Bill how it will affect him or her and what penalties will be assessed upon the early discharge of a mortgage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate? Questions? The Hon. Member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Tousignant), for questions or comments.

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on what was said by the Hon. Member opposite. Quite frankly, I must admit I was amazed at the contradictions in his comments, and at the way he contradicted the policies of his own party. When the Hon. Member said that:

[English]

"We should have control over our own affairs".

[Translation]

Every time this Government has wanted to take control of its own affairs, those people over there were shocked, they shouted and they let the bells ring! I am surprised at such statements. When the Hon. Member says that the Government wasted its time on constitutional matters and on language issues... Mr. Speaker, I am speechless! Are these people going to tell Canadians in an election campaign that what was done for this country, the very essence of being Canadian... are these people going to say this kind of thing publicly in their election campaign? I am absolutely dumbfounded! While the Government approached these issues responsibly and bravely, they could and would never have done so! And at the same time, the Government conducted the affairs of State. Yes, we did have an economic slowdown, as did all other countries. If the Progressive Conservatives had been in power, Mr. Speaker, it would have been a disaster! People with no experience, who would have lost control completely! And now they are telling us that we ignored the economic issues.

When I hear the Hon. Member opposite saying that—

[English]

"The interest of the Government is more with the financial institutions".

[Translation]

Imagine hearing such words from a Member on the opposite side of the House! How can we believe statements that contradict the very policies of his Party, a Party that is dedicated to the interests of the big financial institutions? And now they are saying that the Government is in bed with big business!

Mr. Speaker, if that is how he looks at things, perhaps the Hon. Member opposite should cross the floor and sit on this side of the House, because he is certainly not going to feel comfortable with Members of his own Party. Mr. Speaker, these people are speaking out of both sides of their mouths at once, and just to kill time, too! Other Members were saying that nobody was speaking on this side of the House. We do not have to be convinced, we already are. And we do not have to make all kinds of false accusations, like the Members opposite are doing.

Mr. Speaker, we know this Bill is a good Bill. We know that Canadians are anxious to see it pass, and we do not really have to try to convince our friends opposite.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Témiscamingue was recognized for a question or a comment. The Hon. Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), to whom the comment was addressed, is not in the House now. In any event, the Hon. Member may make a general statement pertaining to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic even though the latter is not here. There is only one minute left in the period allowed for questions.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was of the opinion that the Hon. Member had risen to speak in debate, and we were quite pleased to see him rise in debate. It is about time that this House of Commons had a Member of Parliament from the other side speak in debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member does not respect the House. I was commenting on the speech. The Hon. Member also can comment on that speech. He does not have to stand up and make another speech or ask questions of me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I will help resolve that matter. The time allotted for questions has expired. We will now proceed with debate. The Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling).

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, the Interest Act has been around for a long while. It was passed in its original form in 1880 and portions of it were around prior to Confederation, I am told, as early as 1840.

The part of the Bill which has attracted a lot of interest is Section 10. The Bill purports to amend Section 10 and make some changes, with which we are not very impressed. Section 10 in its present form purports to allow a person to prepay a mortgage on the payment of a three-month interest penalty after the mortgage has been in effect for five years. Essentially, that is what Section 10 does. The penalty was put in there to reimburse the lender or the mortgagor for expenses he may have to meet as a result of prepaying the mortgage after the five year period. A number of my colleagues who have been in the legal profession for a number of years and bankers and others who have dealt with mortgages whom I have consulted have told me that this was not always the case. I discussed this matter with an old-time bank manager, and he said that they did not always collect that three-month interest. If the client was a good customer of the bank, in many cases the bank waived that interest. Many of my friends in caucus who are in the legal profession have told me the same thing, that it would depend upon the individual, the circumstances, the amount, and the terms. But in many cases if the person was going to remortgage with the same institution, the three-month interest was waived.

What we are doing now is sort of institutionalizing this matter. We are saying that the penalty is now going to be the interest differential between the new rate and the old rate. That is the part that has upset many of us. I should point out at the outset that the Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has had a look at Bill C-36, particularly at Clause 11.1. Clause 11.1 reads:

● (1600)

Sections 10 and 11 do not apply in such circumstances as are prescribed by regulation.

This enabling power does not indicate in general terms when the operation of Section 10 and Section 11 will be suspended. Given that the power being delegated is effectively that of amending an Act of Parliament by regulation—and that is what it does—I do not think that we as a responsible political Party can allow that to happen. We did not come to Parliament to pass legislation which would be subsequently amended by Order in Council. That is not the purpose of Parliament. The Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments has raised this matter. It will be pursued within that committee. Certainly we will pursue it if the Bill is passed on to committee for consideration, the calling of witnesses and all that that entails. The major portion of the Bill before us, the section which the Government wants to amend, is under attack.

I should like to refer to the conduct of some people in the mortgage business over the past few years. On numerous occasions I have risen in the House on this entire matter. I directed questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), to the Minister responsible for housing and to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola). I asked them what they would do about interest differential charges. In my wildest dreams I did not believe that they would institutionalize them or that they would put them in a statute and say that the mortgagor must pay the interest differential charges. I just could not believe that would happen, but that is the way I read this Bill.

The reason I become interested in this subject matter is that numerous constituents wrote to me about it. As I said, I raised it with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Minister of Finance and others. They replied by indicating that they were very upset and concerned about it and that something should be done. The Minister of Finance said that he had spoken to the financial institutions. He did not like the way in which they were operating and indicated that there should not be an interest differential charge. He said that a three-month interest penalty was adequate, and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said the same.

I also brought to the attention of the House the fact that 750,000 Canadians across the country were trapped into mortgages with interest rates as high as 22 per cent. I also brought to the attention of the House the fact that 30 per cent of the homes were on the Hamilton real estate market—and I do not know about the other markets—in late 1982 and early 1983 as a result of foreclosures because of high interest rates. I was looking for confirmation of the comments of the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Minister responsible for housing and CMHC. In their compassionate way they implied that they would do something for home owners, for people caught in high interest rate mortgages. When I saw this legislation, I saw nothing for them at all. All they are doing is saying to the mortgage companies that they can charge penalties on the differential in the interest rate between the new and the old rate. In effect, that is what they are saying, and they made it law. I cannot believe that we should sit here and allow this to happen.

I had hoped that they would come before the House and say that they would make Section 10 of the Interest Act work. Half a dozen of the large trust companies are the main offenders, but everyone else follows suit. There is a herd instinct when it comes to making a buck. I thought they would say that if those fellows wanted the legislation regulating trust companies to be amended and to be allowed to enter into other fields of finance, to expand their operations, to be given more leverage and to obtain everything else they were requesting, they would have to abide by the rules of the land. I expected them to say that trust companies would have to abide by Section 10 of the Interest Act and by the provincial statutes in place in Ontario and Manitoba which cover the same circumstances as Section 10. That is what I expected to see, but I do not see it at all. I am disappointed that that initiative was not put forward by one of the three Ministers who have been questioned over a period of time on this matter.

In order to understand the full impact of what has been happening, we should examine how these people found a way around Section 10 of the Interest Act. We should see the way in which they manoeuvred and manipulated. First, they attacked the five-year period in that section. When a person went in for a mortgage renewal, they were led to believe that the renewal document was in effect starting the clock on the five-year period all over again. That is what people were told; that is what was implied. They were told that they did not have a five-year mortgage because it was renewed last year, which started the clock on the five years over again. That is crazy; if persons renewed their mortgages evey three years, they could never get to five years. Someone inevitably tested the matter in the Supreme Court of British Columbia. That court ruled that a renewal of a mortgage is just that, that it does not start the five-year clock all over again.

An Hon. Member: Is that right?

Mr. Kempling: Yes, that is what the court ruled. What did the trust companies and some of the large mortgage operators do?

Mr. Gamble: They pulled out their hair.

Mr. Kempling: No, they found a way around it. They included a clause in their mortgage renewal contracts which indicated that the signing of that document started the clock all over again. It was like redating the mortgage back to year one. When we asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs about that, her reply was: "A contract is a contract is a contract".

If institutions and corporate bodies can take a statute of the Parliament of Canada and statutes of the provincial legislatures and circumvent them in that manner, and nothing happens to them, what will happen to legislation in general? For example, what would happen if someone wanted to sell me a set of automobile tires but did not comply with the Motor Vehicle Safety Act? For the sake of discussion, suppose that I was told that I could purchase these tires but that I would have to sign a document which waived my rights to any protection under that Act? If it happens under one piece of legislation, it could happen under others. What has incensed me and angered me about the whole matter is the manner in which some of these people have cavalierly walked over mortgagors in this country. I am sure we still have 600,000 people with high interest rate mortgages who went along on the basis that the three Ministers would provide some relief from their difficulties, and they will receive nothing at all.

In essence, the Bill before us says that they can prepay their mortgages but, according to the proposed change to the statute, they will now have to pay the interest differential total for the full term of the mortgages. The five-year period is now something of the past. The reason given for the five-year period being waived is that it will encourage long-term mortgages. Have Hon. Members ever heard anything more ridiculous than that? The Government will not encourage long-term mortgages by taking away the rights of individuals.

I should like to refer to another portion of an average mortgage renewal document. It was drafted on the corporate side by a guy who really knew how to use weasel words. In the mortgage renewal document he says: "You waive your rights under Section 10 of the Canada Interest Act or any similar provincial statute that is now in place or may come into place in the future, or in other words forever, so that we can charge you the full interest for the full term of the mortgage".

What was their objective? I can tell you what it was. Anybody who thinks about it will realize what it was. Interest rates were going up. The highest mortgage rate that I saw during that tragic period was 22.5 per cent. Some trust companies, and if they did not do it they were foolish, looked over their mortgage portfolio and said: "My God, if these mortgages are paid to term, we have hit the mother lode. It's bonanza time. Our objective has to be to somehow or other get the mortgagees to hold these mortgages to term and, if we can, it's going to be a windfall in profits". You just have to look at their balance sheet for 1983 and 1984 and you will see it all there. They hit the windfall and they hit it big. They hit the mother lode. They designed a tactic. When the mortgagees came in to renew, they gave him 30 days' notice. They sent the notice by mail. With the mail delivery we have in this country, they lost ten days. Only 20 days were left. They told the mortgagee that if he wants to pay it out, they have to pay the interest differential charge. The average that came through my office was an $8,000 or $9,000 penalty. They were thunderstruck by this and tried to find another trust company in order to get a mortgage. Time was shorter and shorter and, eventually, they had to sign. They had no alternative; either lose the house or sign. That is the way they operated. That is the way they forced many of these people to hold their mortgages to full term. They would not comply with the law of the land. This Government did not have the courage or the guts to make them stand up and do it. They yielded and bent to them. I can see the fine hand of some of the lobbyists written into the pages of this Bill.

We in this country should be moving to see that everyone who wishes to own a home, and has the reasonable expectation of being able to pay for it, should be able to have that wish. No other segment of our economy responds quicker than the house-building industry. Just look at the spin-off effect in the appliance industry and other parts of our economy such as lumber, transportation and the various trades involved in house construction. We see the tremendous engine it is to keep our economy going.

This Bill will not do anything to help homeowners. I am not impressed, particularly when our Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments pointed out that we are delegating to the Governor in Council the right to amend an Act of Parliament without reference to Parliament. That is something we have to stand against, both now and in committee. Unless it is amended, we will fight very hard in committee to see that it does not go through.

My colleague from Mississauga South pointed out the situation. It was set forth in the information release put out by the Government. I might just read it into the record. It reads:

> As an example of what a maximum penalty would be, consider a situation in which a consumer takes out a five-year $50,000 mortgage at an interest rate of 12 per cent which is to be amortized over 25 years. Suppose further that with two years remaining in the term of the mortgage and a market interest rate of 9 per cent he wishes to prepay the mortgage. The maximum penalty which he could be assessed would work out to $2,538.

My colleague called the Department of Finance. He said that it did not seem right to him, and asked what the penalty would be on a $50,000 mortgage with three years to go if the interest rate were 18 per cent and were going to be remortgaged at 13 per cent. They replied that they could not figure out how the interest rate quoted in the Government information bulletin had been figured out. They had no idea how to calculate the request that he put to them for a 5 per cent drop in interest rates on a $50,000 mortgage with three years to run. They just could not do it. If I read carefully the reference they made, the error was that the $2,538 referred to in the Government release is principal and interest over three months and not just interest only. If it is interest only, it means they are paying $800 a month in interest. I cannot imagine that.

I am getting near the end of the time allowed me in this debate. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your courtesy. I just want to say that I certainly do not approve of this Bill. I cannot believe that we are going to pass it in its present form. If it does go by, it will certainly be with a lot of debate. When it gets to committee, we will have a lot to say.

INTEREST ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Interest Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The House will now proceed to a 10-minute question period for comments and questions, if need be.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Speaker, I was intrigued by the remarks made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), when he was referring to the amendment of Section 11.1 through Clause 2 of this Bill. The observations that he made are indeed frightening for anyone who understands the significance of the passage of legislation in the House and the consequences that flow from that passage when it is tampered with by regulation that will obliterate the very clauses in the Bill that the House passes.

My colleague mentioned the effect of an amendment by regulation to Section 11.1. I would point out to him that the real effect of that is something more than a simple amendment. It is indeed a repeal. I am delighted that the Hon. Member has referred to this issue because we are being confronted with the repeal of sections which would be renumbered Sections 10 and 11 of the Interest Act.

If we believe in the process, then Parliament, assuming that the Liberal majority in the House has its way, will provide under Section 10 of the Interest Act that interest is not payable on a variable principal increase in a mortgage amount. We are also told that in the event that Clause 11 passes, interest will not be paid which would otherwise be payable on a fluctuating rate of interest under a mortgage document. However, once Parliament has done all of that, the Governor in Council may, with the snap of his finger, repeal both of those sections.

We in this place have on many occasions witnessed the regular delegation of the authority of the House to the Governor in Council. Until today, I had yet to see the ability to repeal absolutely by Order in Council the Bills that this House passes. That is exactly what this offensive provision would do. I am indebted to my colleague for drawing this matter to the attention of the House. He may indeed wish to make some observations with respect to both of these provisions and deal with them at some greater length.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for recognizing the impact of Section 11.1. Quite correctly, one of the great dangers in a parliamentary system is that the power of the Parliament is eventually eroded away. This is one of the ways in which that is done. Bills are drafted and sections of old statutes are amended and these amendments are couched in the language of the drafting officers to the extent that the average individual does not understand what he is reading and becomes confused after a period of time. Consequently, a Bill passes and no one pays that much attention to it, particularly when it passes on a Friday afternoon or near the end of a session.

Parliament and the country are in danger when we pass Bills that are not debated. As well, we are in danger when we pass Bills that we do not thoroughly understand. That is when the people of the country lose power and that is when the Parliament of the country loses power. That is something against which we must fight at all times.

The enabling power that this clause will give to the Governor in Council means in effect that he can dictate to whom this section will apply and to whom it will not apply. He can put things in and take them out. As recognized by my colleague, the important thing is that we are giving the Cabinet and the Governor in Council the right to amend an Act of Parliament without further reference to the Parliament of the country. That is something against which we are going to fight and we will see that it does not happen in this Bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) told me that he lived at one time in Dundas, Ontario, a relatively small town. He said that, in most cases, people who lived in Dundas never went to a trust company or a mortgage company for a loan because, in fact, most of the trust companies and mortgage companies in Dundas did not lend. When seeking a loan, those people went to see their local lawyers.

As someone who was a very prominent citizen of that town at one time, I was wondering if the Hon. Member could tell me whether or not he thought that the people who went to see their local lawyers would be prepared to understand or would be able to understand the following, and I am quoting from the Government's press release:

> To account for the fact that the lender can reinvest the penalty at prevailing interest rates, the future values of the interest differences must be brought back, or "discounted", to present value terms. This "present value" of the differences will equal a lower figure than would result from simply adding them up, and it is this lower figure that will constitute the maximum penalty that can be imposed.

I was wondering if the Hon. Member thinks that an ordinary person who was a client of a law office in Dundas that was lending money on mortgages could understand that.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his kind references to my former place of residence. One of the tragedies of the mortgage field is that the local lawyer was the source of much of the funding of mortgages in the past, but that field has virtually dried up for the lawyer. The lawyer ends up doing a legal service for a mortgage company, a bank or a trust company and receives a stated fee.

With all due respect to the people I know who live in Dundas and in the areas around Dundas who practise law, I do not think that they have the necessary staff to comprehend the meaning of that statement. It will be so confusing to them that they will feel that they cannot be involved in that field any longer. It is a tragedy that the mortgage field is being narrowed down to include only larger institutions and banks and trust companies.

The private mortgage field built this country, and up until probably the mid-1950s the bulk of mortgage money came from private small lenders and local lawyers. These people are now being excluded and the mortgage field is being pushed toward the big money market. I think that that is a tragedy and something that we must stop and even reverse.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to debate.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to enter the debate on Bill C-36—

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Several matters have been raised. I was wondering, Mr. Speaker, if you did not see anyone from the government side rise to speak. I would have thought that someone from the government side would have wanted to speak in order to answer these allegations of incompetent draftsmanship—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That is hardly a point of order. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) caught the Speaker's eye.

Mr. Keeper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously my colleague on this side of the House is more optimistic than I about what could happen on that side of the House.

● (1630)

Bill C-36 is a significant piece of legislation, not because it accomplishes anything, but because it deals with a very important subject that affects all of our lives. Interest rates are not just something that we read about in the Globe and Mail. Interest rates are something which affects us in our daily lives. They affect the amount of disposable income which we have and our capacity for owning a home. Owning a home is something which Canadians have traditionally considered a right. It has been natural for Canadians to assume that they have the right to own a home. However, interest rates have threatened the common assumption which we have shared as a community. This legislation, which will amend the Interest Act, does nothing substantial to protect the right of Canadians to own a home or to protect the right of Canadians to an adequate income.

This debate is crucial. The way in which interest rates have fluctuated over the last several years has made Canadians very insecure. As well, this fluctuation has put a damper on the economy and on investment. Therefore, when the Government comes before the House with a piece of legislation affecting the Interest Act, we would expect it to be substantial and to deal with the meat of the question. We expect it to have a true impact upon interest rates and to restore some sense of security in the minds of Canadians with regard to their capacity to own their own home or to invest in economic activity and to have a job.

I would like to mention specifically the areas which I find questionable in the legislation. Before I deal with that, I would like to mention that at one time in Canada there were long-term mortgages. Long-term mortgages went out in the mid-seventies because the Government introduced a legislation which allowed for the disappearance of long-term mortgages. It would be wise to remind Canadians that long-term mortgages are still available in the United States. Therefore, it is possible to have an economy and a mortgage system in which there are long-term mortgages and an opportunity to provide to people who borrow money in order that they might own a home.

The legislative action of previous governments in Canada has added to the insecurity of people concerning mortgages, interest rates and owning their own home. The reason I mention this and the reason that it is relevant to the discussion today is that the same situation is happening. This piece of legislation deals with interest rates. It will increase insecurity and make it more difficult for people to own their own home, rather than enhance the possibility of Canadians owning their own home.

I would like to draw to the attention of the House some specifics. One of the proposals before us is the notion that people who have a mortgage should have the right to be able to prepay that mortgage at any time. Well, the big "but" that goes along with this so-called right is the fact that the person would have to pay a penalty, which would include the full interest rates due between the time when the person chose to take the action and the end of the term of the mortgage. It is a nothing proposal. It is a right which has no substance. It is a rhetorical right. It will not help people in terms of coping with interest rates and their insecurity with the fluctuation of interest rates.

It is important to remember that it has been some time since interest rates hit 18 per cent and people were trying to get out of their 18 per cent mortgages and into the 12 per cent mortgage category. Yet today the interest rate market is so unstable that people are once again beginning to worry that interest rates will sky-rocket the way they did a few months ago. I would think that a government which cared would have brought in legislation to answer the concern which people have with regard to the stability of interest rates as they affect their mortgages.

The legislation eliminates the interest rate penalty of three months that a person would be obliged to pay to get out of a high interest rate mortgage and into a mortgage that is at a lower rate. Members on this side of the House have called upon the Government on many occasions to standardize the three-month penalty. We wanted to limit the penalty which people would be obliged to pay if they were to get out of a very high interest rate mortgage and into a mortgage which reflected the market interest rate of the day. Rather than people being forced to continue to pay very high interest rates after interest rates have come down, it is important that the penalty which people are obliged to pay under this system be limited. Therefore, we called for a standardization of the penalty. What did we get from the Government? We got an elimination of the three-month penalty. It is augmenting the insecurity which people face when they borrow money in order to pay for their home. Of course, the Government has a rationale for doing this. It wants to ensure that there is mortgage money available for people to borrow.

It is good to have mortgage money available, but surely there is some place in our economic thinking for the notion of a just return on money or a just interest rate. Surely it is not acceptable to Canadians or to their Government to allow for the market to set interest rates at any level. Surely there comes a point at which governments say, "No, you have gone too far. You are entitled to a fair return on your capital, but you are not entitled to rip off Canadians and you are not entitled to increase the insecurity that people live under in this country».

Rather than helping people deal with interest rates, this Bill in fact increases the insecurity in the lives of ordinary Canadians today. Unfortunately, there are more ways in which this legislation adds to the insecurity of ordinary Canadians. This legislation intends to legalize some very dubious mortgage—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe that there has been a communication. Would the Hon. Member please resume his seat.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

INTEREST ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacLaren that Bill C-36, an Act to amend the Interest Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, before we received the message from the Senate, I was attempting to put on record my thoughts with regard to the amendments to the Interest Rate Act. It is important to put on the record how we view the Government's amendments to the Interest Act. As I said before, the fundamental problem with the amendments is that they tend to increase the insecurity of Canadians rather than assist Canadians to face their responsibility to carry debt under the mortgage system which exists in the country. I was giving a number of examples before we were interrupted. I will mention some other reasons that I think this legislation increases the insecurity of home owners trying to pay off mortgages, rather than assists home owners to face that responsibility.

This legislation legalizes some pretty dubious mortgage instruments. One of these instruments is called the variable rate mortgage. Lenders have been able to make this kind of mortgage available under existing legislation, but this legislation makes the variable rate mortgage clearly legal. The problem is that the variable rate mortgage leaves home owners with mortgages in a very insecure situation. They do not know how much their monthly payment will be. Home owners do not know whether they will be able to afford to stay in the home they are in. How can people feel secure under those circumstances? Surely the function of an economy is to provide some security for people. Surely the function of government is to direct the economy to provide security for people.

The legalization of variable rate mortgage simply adds to the insecurity of the average citizen. It legalizes the terrorizing of home owners by financial institutions. If the Government had wanted to bring in interest rate amendments which would be of interest to ordinary Canadians, it would have brought in amendments which would have added to people's security rather than to their insecurity.

Another specific item in these amendments is something called the index linked mortgage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order. The Chair regrets to interrupt the Hon. Member but the clock shows five o'clock.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

THE CONSTITUTION

AMENDMENT RESPECTING LANGUAGE RIGHTS IN MANITOBA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier), seconded by Mr. Tousignant, moved:

That this House resolves that Her Excellency the Governor General be authorized to issue a proclamation under the Great Seal of Canada amending the Constitution of Canada, pursuant to Section 43 of the Constitution Act, 1982, as follows:

[English]

Shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair will try to read this long motion before we reach six o'clock.

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the reading of the motion put on the Order Paper of the House of Commons, on May 22, 1984, this resolution has already been made public and has been with us for nearly a year; I think it would be a waste of time to read it, as it is quite long and already is on the record of this House. As I was saying, there is no need to read it as it would take much of the time which could be better used to debate the motion.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The Chair is in the hands of Hon. Members. We need unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the motion. I would just like to inform Hon. Members that the motion is fairly lengthy and may take probably as much as 50 per cent of the time. However, if I am requested to read it, I will do so.

PROCLAMATION AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION OF CANADA

1. The Manitoba Act, 1870 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 23 thereof, the following sections: Official Languages of Manitoba

"23.1 English and French are the official languages of Manitoba.

Equality of both language versions

23.2 (1) The English and French versions of Acts of the legislature of Manitoba enacted in both languages are equally authoritative.

Definition of "Act"

(2) In this section and sections 23.3 and 23.6, "Act" has the same meaning as it has in section 23.

Act enacted after December 31, 1985 to be in both official languages

23.3 (1) Subject to section 23.6, any Act of the legislature of Manitoba enacted after December 31, 1985 is of no force or effect if it is not printed and published in both official languages.

Saving provision

(2) Notwithstanding section 23, but subject to sections 23.4 and 23.5, no Act of the legislature of Manitoba enacted before January 1, 1986 is without force or effect by reason only of its having been printed and published in only one official language.

Public general statutes to be in both official languages

23.4 (1) Any public general statute included in the Revised Statutes of Manitoba, 1970 and any public general statute enacted on or after January 1, 1970 of a kind normally included in a general revision is of no force or effect if it is not printed and published in both official languages on or before December 31, 1993.

General revision of public general statutes

(2) Any general revision of the public general statutes of Manitoba enacted after the coming into force of this section is of no force or effect if it is not printed and published in both official languages.

[English]

Delay period for revision

(3) A general revision of the public general statutes of Manitoba shall be printed and published on or before December 31, 1993.

Delay period for re-enactment of certain Acts

23.5 (1) Any private Act or public municipal Act, or any public general statute not of a kind normally included in a general revision, that is referred to in the schedule, or any amendments to or Act substituted for any such Act or statute, is of no force or effect after December 31, 1993 if it is not re-enacted in both official languages on or before that date.

Delay for re-enactment of certain regulations

(2) Any regulation enacted before January 1, 1986 that would, if enacted on or after that date, be of no force or effect under subsection 23.3 (1) if it were not printed and published in both official languages is of no force or effect after December 31, 1993 if it is not re-enacted in both official languages on or before that date.

[Translation]

Exception for amending Acts

23.6 Notwithstanding section 23, no Act of the legislature of Manitoba enacted before January 1, 1994 that only amends one or more Acts of the legislature of Manitoba that are in force notwithstanding the fact that they were printed and published in only one official language is without force or effect by reason only of its having been printed and published in only one official language.

Communications between public and certain institutions

23.7 (1) Any member of the public in Manitoba has the right to communicate in English or French with, and to receive available services in English or French from,

(a) the head or central office of any department of the government of Manitoba;

(b) the head or central office of

(i) any court,

(ii) any quasi-judicial or administrative body of the government of Manitoba,

(iii) any Crown corporation, or

(iv) any agency of the government of Manitoba established by or pursuant to an Act of the legislature of Manitoba;

(c) the office of the Chief Electoral Officer; and (d) the offices of the Ombudsman for the Province of Manitoba.

Idem

Idem

(2) Any member of the public in Manitoba has the right to communicate in English or French with, and to receive available services in English or French from, any office not referred to in subsection (1) of an institution described in paragraph (1)(a) or (b) where

(a) there is a significant demand for communications with and services from that office in that language; or

(b) due to the nature of the office, it is reasonable that communications with and services from that office be available in both English and French.

Section 23 not affected

(3) Nothing in this section abrogates or derogates from any rights guaranteed by section 23.

Enforcement of rights under section 23.7

23.8 (1) Anyone whose rights under section 23.7 have been infringed or denied may apply to the court for a declaration to that effect and, where that court finds that those rights have been infringed or denied, it may make a declaration to that effect.

[Translation]

Declaration and court order for plan

(2) Where the court makes a declaration under subsection (1), it may order the institution concerned to submit to the court a plan for changing its administration to ensure that the rights under section 23.7 are respected by the institution, and the institution shall forthwith submit a plan for the approval of the court.

Submission of plan to court

(3) Where a plan is submitted to the court pursuant to this section, the court may approve the plan as submitted, or may order the institution concerned to submit to the court a new or varied plan for the approval of the court.

When a plan is approved

(4) When a plan submitted to the court pursuant to this section is approved by the court, the institution concerned shall forthwith make such changes in the administration of the office concerned as the plan requires.

Definition of "court"

(5) In this section, "court" means the Court of Queen's Bench for Manitoba".

Coming into force of section 23.7 and 23.8

2. Section 23.7 and 23.8 shall come into force on January 1, 1987.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there may be a disposition, now that we have heard the resolution, to dispense with the reading of the schedule to the motion since the essential ingredients of the motion have now been presented to the House and we can proceed with the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Is there unanimous consent that we dispense with the reading of the schedule?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the resolution you have just read and which I am moving today is identical to the one introduced by the Attorney General of Manitoba on behalf of his Government in the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba on July 4, 1983. The Manitoba resolution would have initiated the process of amending the Constitution of Canada and particularly the Manitoba Act of 1870 in relation to linguistic rights in that province. The Manitoba resolution reflected the provisions of an agreement made on May 16, 1983, between the Governments of Canada and the Province of Manitoba, with, of course, the participation and agreement of the Société Franco-Manitobaine. The compromise reached was the result of negotiations undertaken by the Manitoba Government to find a political solution to a major legal problem.

The Manitoba Government anticipated the possibility that the Supreme Court of Canada, in ruling on the Bilodeau case, could invalidate all provincial legislation passed in English only during the last 90 years in flagrant violation of Section 23 of the Manitoba Act of 1870. This section provides, among other things, that the acts of the Province of Manitoba are to be printed and published in French and English. The Supreme Court had indeed already stated in effect in its Forest and Blaikie rulings made in December 1979 that this obligation extended to the passage of legislation. Thus, according to the Manitoba Government, the purpose of the negotiations was to avoid the actual possibility that the Supreme Court would declare nul and void any unilingual legislation and require the writing and passage of both the French and English versions of each legislative text passed in English only during the past 90 years.

The Manitoba Attorney General, Mr. Penner, in his speech upon introducing the motion proposing the constitutional resolution on July 4, 1983, said the following:

[English]

—we have heard, and I'm sure we will hear again, 'well, you should have fought it in the Supreme Court of Canada' . . . I would remind those who urge that course of action that the Government of Manitoba . . . took that stance of 'fight it' in the Forest case in the Supreme Court and lost, and went on to instruct Counsel in the Blaikie case, in the Supreme Court, on the same issue, and lost. That's what our record is, zero for two, in the Supreme Court, on these very same issues—

So we sought an agreement—not a dishonorable thing to do—the kind of thing that one does day in and day out when faced with a particularly complex or difficult issue before the courts—

—Our initial position, that is the initial position of the government, was simply this: Give us the time that we feel we need; eight years, ten years, 12 years and cut down the requirement of translation from 4,400 to about 400 laws; that was our proposition. We put it on the table—nothing more. It was rejected. Why, said the other parties, what are you talking about; that's ridiculous. That much at least we could get from the Supreme Court of Canada. We'd rather take our chances before the Supreme Court of Canada than "settle" on this basis. You're asking us to give something for nothing. There is no quid pro quo; no this for that. You can't be serious. We then raised the question, well what is the quid pro quo? What is this for that? What is the agreement to be based on, and essentially it was that there should be some constitutional guarantee for French language services that were already being delivered by the government and that then became the key negotiating issue.

[Translation]

Constitutional expert Stephen Scott, when testifying before the Committee of the Manitoban legislature which was considering the agreement, told members who objected to the inclusion of certain bilingual services, and I quote:

[English]

The shortest answer to this objection is of course that the constitutional amendment will dispense with the duty to translate an immense volume of legislation covering close to a century and will also give the province a considerable further breathing space. It is surely not unreasonable for something to be offered in return, particularly to those whose rights have been denied for so long a period. There is indeed no reason why they should accept a one-sided settlement which simply gives the province an indulgence and gives them nothing at all—

Manitoba in effect says this in the agreement. "For nearly a century the constitutional obligation to legislate bilingually has been violated, even after that obligation was reaffirmed by the Supreme Court of Canada. We ask these breaches to be executed and our laws to be declared valid, and also a further breathing space for future compliance. In exchange, we offer bilingual services from central provincial agencies, and from others, where the circumstances make it reasonable."

Surely this says, "It is true that we have been in breach of our obligations, but we will now make good and settle in a way which will compensate you fully".

Surely this tells all Canadians that our constitutional system can cure historic injustices and potential legal crises. It invites Canadians to rely in confidence on their constitution and in the good faith of their provinces and country. It renews and strengthens our federation.

[Translation]

The agreement of May 16, 1983 and the proposed constitutional amendment contain a number of points, Mr. Speaker, which may be summarized as follows:

First of all, it is stated that any Act of the legislature of Manitoba enacted after January 1986 is of no force or effect if it is not printed and published in both official languages. Unilingual Acts enacted before January 1986 shall remain in effect until 1994, and this applies also to any Act enacted after January 1986 as an amendment to a unilingual Act. Any public general statute included in the Revised Statutes of Manitoba, 1970 and any public general statute enacted after January 1970 is of no force or effect unless printed and published in both languages before 1994. A general revision of public general statutes shall be printed and published before 1994.

In addition, certain private Acts, public municipal Acts or any public general statute referred to in the schedule to this amendment, are of no force or effect unless printed and published in both languages before 1994.

Mr. Speaker, the net result of this agreement is to reduce the task of translating 4,400 unilingual Acts to that of translating the 400 Acts judged to be most relevant. An orderly and realistic time frame for translation had to be established, to preserve the validity of unilingual legislation in Manitoba for ten years. In exchange for this compromise, the constitutional amendment would enshrine the right of the public to use French or English to communicate with certain Government institutions and with the legislature of Manitoba, and to receive available services.

The historical and constitutional crisis would thus be resolved, and by meeting this challenge, the legislature of Manitoba and the parliament of Canada would be establishing the basis for dealing in a just and equitable manner with minority rights in the rest of Canada. To quote once more constitutional expert Stephen Scott, testifying before the legislature of Manitoba:

[English]

Franco-Manitobans are, it is true, relatively few in number. But the province of Manitoba was created by the Parliament of Canada on the basis of legislative and judicial bilingualism; and the violation of these guarantees, for more than ninety years, can be, has been, and is, cited by French-speaking Canadians elsewhere as proving that our Constitution—our country—cannot keep faith with its citizens. Surely if we are to have a country founded on respect for the rule of law—of any country at all—we must leave no basis for such beliefs.

[Translation]

For the same reasons, Mr. Speaker, the constitutional agreement of May 1983 received the solemn and unanimous support of this House in the form of two resolutions on French language rights in Manitoba, adopted here in the House on October 6, 1983 and on February 24 of this year. Mr. Speaker, I shall recall, if I may, the most important and most relevant passages of these resolutions. First of all, on October 6, and I quote:

Whereas it is in the national interest to support continued efforts by the Government and Legislative Assembly of Manitoba to fulfil effectively their constitutional obligations and protect the rights of the French-speaking minority of the province;

(1) the House endorses, on behalf of all Canadians, the essence of the agreement reached by the Government of Canada and the Government of Manitoba, with the participation of the Société Franco-Manitobaine, on May 16, 1983, to modify the Manitoba Act, 1870;

The House invites the Government and Legislative Assembly of Manitoba to take action as expeditiously as possible in order to fulfil their constitutional obligations and protect effectively the rights of the French-speaking minority of the province.

This passed unanimously.

On February 24, 1984, there was another resolution, and I quote:

Whereas the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba, after several months of debate, is being prevented from bringing the constitutional resolution to a vote, and therefore from fulfilling its constitutional obligations;

(1) the House urges the Government of Manitoba to persist in its efforts to fulfil the constitutional obligations of the province and protect effectively the rights of its French-speaking minority in a spirit of tolerance and civility, amity and generosity;

(2) the House urges the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba to consider such resolution and legislation in an urgent manner so as to ensure their timely passage.

Mr. Speaker, it also passed unanimously.

One of the Supreme Court's roles is first and foremost to uphold the Constitution of the land and to ensure that its provisions are adhered to. For that reason, the Court did not hesitate in 1979 to declare void chapter 3 of the Quebec Charter of the French Language, which violated Section 133 of the Constitutional Act of 1867. The Court in Blaikie then found that section 133 of the British North America Act required that official status be recognized to both languages, English and French, in Quebec's and Canada's legislation and courts. For that reason, the Supreme Court found unconstitutional the 1980 Act titled "An Act to Provide that the English Language shall be the Official Language of the Province of Manitoba." That Act, which purported to make English the official language of the province by abolishing the use of French in Manitoba's legislation and courts was rendered inoperative by Forest. The practice which had prevailed over 90 years and the political difficulties caused by the Supreme Court's ruling did not intimidate the Court which supported the Constitution.

The role of Parliament and other legislative bodies, on the other hand, is to solve political problems. It is not the Court's responsibility to repair the damage done by politicians. The court must uphold the constitutional means for politicians to correct their errors themselves. Therefore, the solution of Constitutional changes, under fair and equitable terms, came to the mind of the Manitoban legislators. What is called in the British legal tradition "the rule of law", the principle of lawfulness, could then be asserted not only by the courts but by the political authorities.

The Right Hon. the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), during the debate on the first House of Commons resolution, had this to say on October 6, 1983, and I quote:

I admire the Supreme Court for saddling politicians with this problem, since it is its role. The Supreme Court must tell us what the Constitution says, without worrying about the political, social or economic problems that may arise as a result of a Supreme Court judgement on a legal matter arising from the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, at that point a solution appeared to be in sight. However, an aggressive minority in the Manitoba Legislative Assembly, vehemently opposing any form of development of linguistic rights in the province, blocked everything. That group of opportunistic, petty politicians, disregarding the Constitution and the agreement between the federal and provincial governments, over and above the two resolutions passed by this House adjoining them to proceed, refused to believe that the Supreme Court would dare invalidate the unilingual legislation involved.

However, the Supreme Court will hear the Bilodeau case and the Reference on Linguistic Rights next week, and as I said, the Court could soon declare null and void all the acts and regulations involved. In fact, according to some Constitutional experts, the Court might even explicitly state that nothing short of a Constitutional amendment would be accepted to fill the legal vacuum that would result from such a court ruling.

The Court could state that the Manitoba Legislative Assembly, that would sit de facto, would be only authority empowered to pass the resolution required by the amendment procedure which is delineated in Section 43 of the Constitution Act, 1982. Barring such a constitutional amendment, the Court might not see the need for preserving the unilingual legislation, even for a short time. This way, the Supreme Court would encourage the respect of the rule of law and the Constitutional process, while sending the ball back into the political arena.

At that point, Mr. Speaker, the problem would reach its full scope. Manitoba would be deprived of laws other than those enforced before 1890. A constitutional amendment would become extremely urgent for that province. Like Quebec on December 13, 1979, when the National Assembly sat all night to re-enact all previous unilingual legislation in both languages, Manitoba would have some catching-up to do. However, because of the absence of any legislation in French over a period of ninety years, Manitoba could not pass an omnibus bill as Quebec has done. It would make more sense for Manitoba to adopt its constitutional resolution according to Section 43 of the Constitutional Act, 1982 a resolution that is before the House today—and this time without any obstruction from the Conservative Opposition, of that I am sure, since its room to manoeuver would be reduced to nothing as a result of the judgment of the Supreme Court.

A constitutional amendment that concerns the use of French or English in a province must, according to Section 43, be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada and only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the Legislative Assembly of the province in question. Must we wait, Mr. Speaker, until the unilingual fanatics realize that the Supreme Court has invalidated all the statutes and that Mr. Pawley and Mr. Penner were right? Must we wait any longer before we act as responsible and intelligent parliamentarians? Would it not be wiser to adopt this resolution as provided in Section 43 of our Constitution and in accordance with the terms of the agreement between the Government of Manitoba, the federal Government and the Société Franco-Manitobaine?

I would emphasize that unless a resolution of the Parliament of Canada is accompanied by its provincial counterpart, it can have no legal effect on the Constitution. So there is nothing unilateral about adopting this resolution in the House. There is no question of any imposition by the federal Government. We would adopt, in its entirety, a resolution arising out of negotiations conducted in good faith, a resolution that received the unanimous support of this very same House. Twice, we encouraged and urged Manitoba to adopt this resolution. Within this context, the resolution is a precautionary measure being offered to Manitoba, and the province may consider and eventually adopt it if it is deemed appropriate.

However, the resolution goes beyond the legal and political sphere. It is a re-affirmation of principles that are part of the very fabric of our Canadian way of life. As the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) said so eloquently during the debate on the first resolution on language rights, on October 6, 1983, and I quote:

The purpose of this resolution is one which has touched the soul of Canada for decades.

● (1720)

[English]

Years ago this House approved the principle of official bilingualism for Canada. Simply put, it means that English and French Canadians shall have equal rights and equal opportunities across Canada. It is a noble principle, one which is capable of enriching the life of this nation.

I continue to cite the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Mulroney). He said:

This resolution is about fairness. It is about decency. It is an invitation for co-operation and understanding. It speaks to the finest qualities in this nation.

[Translation]

The Leader of the New Democratic Party also supported this motion, and he said:

[English]

—what we are doing today in unanimously supporting this resolution goes beyond support for the details of a particular Bill in a single province on a given date. We are now acting in the spirit of those who created Canada in 1867, who out of necessity and by imagination created our fundamental duality. We are supporting a spirit of tolerance and a respect for diversity which should always be the hallmark of Canada and of Canadians. Never again should any Canadian say—

[Translation]

"In am a stranger in my own country."

Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out at the beginning of my speech, the resolution I have just proposed in the House is indeed the resolution tabled by the Attorney General of Manitoba, Mr. Penner, in the legislature of Manitoba on July 4, 1983. In concluding, I would therefore like to quote Mr. Penner's last words, because they are very appropriate today:

[English]

Let us tell Manitobans, you have nothing to fear. Let us tell Manitobans rather, you have everything to gain. You will have not only paid history's debt in a reasonable and an economical way, you will have done something, we can say to ourselves and to Manitobans, you have done something for Canadian Unity that will live long in the history books, long after we have left this place of noise, strife and turmoil.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to adopt this resolution.

● (1730)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the resolution that is before the House today is a distinct departure from the motions which have been passed in the House on two previous occasions. The resolution before the House today is a constitutional amendment, which is possible under the provisions of the Constitution Act, 1982, but one which, if the process were accepted, would violate the federal spirit of Canada. It does not reflect in process of time the situation in the Province of Manitoba, either in the Legislature or among the citizens of Canada at this time. It is my intention this afternoon to point out to the House why this approach is wrong, why this approach is divisive and why this approach will not lead to solutions which we all seek.

Constitutional amendments must be approached with care. They must be clothed by the vision of the future. They must be tempered by the awareness of history, and they must be constantly governed by a commitment to fairness. I suggest that the resolution before us today and the manner in which it has been introduced by the Hon. Member does not meet those criteria.

Put in simpler terms, constitutional amendments, if they are to have legitimacy, must be seen by the public as doing the right thing. I say to the Hon. Member today that the approach he has taken does not meet the criterion of doing the right thing. Why not? All Members in this House, Manitobans and most Canadians, are aware of the debate that has taken place in our province, in the Legislature and in our homes over the last months. The matter has been thoroughly discussed in my province. What is important is that, despite those discussions, a process is now entrained which should not be tampered with or modified by any intervention in this House, that is, that this matter will be before the Supreme Court of Canada on Monday next, June 11.

Those hearings will begin at that time. No one in the House can determine what will be the decision of the court. No one in the House should use his parliamentary position to predetermine any modalities that the court might recommend or that the province of Manitaba might take in the Legislature. The Supreme Court decision could necessitate major changes to the very resolution before the House today. It is my submission that that kind of approach is improper and obviously does not appreciate the reality of the situation.

The Member who has introduced this resolution suggested in a letter to my Leader that it would be advantageous for the House to express once again its opinion on this subject through a constitutional amendment, something we have never done before, and that this would be helpful to the court as it begins its hearing. My concept of executive powers, of legislative powers and the division of legislative powers and judicial powers is very clear. I do not believe that we should use Parliament, when we know that this matter is before the courts as of Monday, to try in whatever form—if in fact we could, and I suggest we might not be able to—to send signals in any way, to give impressions or to leave opinions on the record of which the court would then be apprised. The court is independent and should be left as such.

What we have before us is an amending process. I remind Members of the House and Canadians generally that those of us from western Canada who sat on the special joint committee studying the constitutional resolution argued literally for months that a constitutional amendment, that is the process by which our Constitution would be amended in the future, should reflect the reality of Canada and that a constitutional amendment proposal such as produced by the Government, which would entrench for all times that certain provinces and, therefore, certain Canadians would have a veto power and, therefore, others would not, was not a reflection of the reality of Canada and in fact would make those of us who did not live in those provinces or those who come after us second-class citizens.

Our Constitution today has three amending formulas. The burden of our argument was that we should not have imposed on us from the outside constitutional changes which we ourselves must determine. I remember the long debate regarding language and culture and a specific amending formula under Section 43 which was introduced that would allow the provinces—I know that for a long period of time the debate was relative to the Province of Quebec—to determine that aspect of any amendment relative to their constitution and language.

In fact, one province, New Brunswick, availed itself through its premier of that provision. I suggest to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that he misinterpreted my Leader's comments. My Leader said in the House of Commons on October 6, 1983, as recorded at page 27819 of Hansard:

> In the final analysis, it is up to Manitobans themselves to decide.

In Winnipeg, on March 29, 1984, he said:

> So tonight, I am not going to tell Manitobans what to do or how to do it. I have no such right.

This is what the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier is trying to do today, to impose a solution, a constitutional amendment. This is not in the spirit of Confederation. It is an imposition which is not acceptable to us.

Amendments to the Constitution, as we discussed constitutional amendments at the time, was that constitutional amendments were to be legislated from one legislature to another. I recognize that private Members have the opportunity now to bring in constitutional amendments as individuals, but I suggest we should go very carefully on that route because we have not had either precedents or experience because of our previous situation where amendments finally had to be made to the British North America Act in Westminster. We do not have those precedents. I suggest also, in view of the sensitivity of this issue, that this is not the time to establish that precedent.

On the matter of money Bills, no Member of the House other than a Member of the Cabinet can introduce a Bill relative to the royal prerogative. We all understand that approach. Today I would think that common sense would dictate that constitutional amendments should not be introduced through the process the Member is using in the House today.

There are additional reasons why this constitutional amendment is unacceptable. It is interesting to note that when the Member rose in his place to introduce it, he said that when it was introduced in July, 1983, it was exactly the same amending resolution as was introduced by the Attorney General of Manitoba. To that he was correct, but he was wrong in terms of the time frame today. Through that long process of debate, that original amendment was modified by the New Democratic Party Government that introduced the first resolution that is before us today and amended it. Therefore, he is introducing today a resolution which is not supported even by those who proposed it initially, that is, the New Democratic Party of Manitoba. In fact, there were three modifications to the resolution. I will not take the time of the House to go through the various differences between the first resolution which we have before us today and the one that was eventually not approved by the Manitoba Legislature. Simply on the matter of constitutional clarity, I would think that we would not want to consider a resolution which has already been changed by the province on at least three different occasions.

If you look at the schedule, which we did not ask you to read, Mr. Speaker, you will note that a number of corporations and societies are listed therein. If the relative Bills passed in the Manitoba Legislature were not changed or translated, those societies could in fact cease to exist. I received a letter dated September 19, 1983, from Mr. Ernest A. Wehrle. I spoke to him today and received permission to put his letter on the record of the House. Mr. Wehrle is writing on behalf of the Historical and Scientific Society of Manitoba and the St. Boniface General Hospital. He said:

> Our concern is with the wording of proposed Section 23.5(1). Its legal result, if the named private organization(s) were not re-enacted by December 31st, 1993, would be to extinguish the legal existence of the organization(s), and cause the assets of the organization(s) to pass to Her Majesty the Queen, in Right of the Province of Manitoba.
> The risk, however slight, is an unfair and unacceptable one because the named organizations have no control over the process. It will be the failure of the Legislature to act, and not the failure of the organizations to act, which would cause such a severe penalty.
> The Manitoba Legislature might deliberately select certain organizations for elimination, or it might happen as a result of a constitutional or international crisis. Present assurances from the government, or from political parties, are not binding upon a future legislature.

I spoke to Mr. Wehrle today because the Attorney General rejected that proposal in 1983. Then, after consultation, the Attorney General said that we were right and he in fact brought in an amendment to Section 23.5 which, after looking at today's resolution put forward by the Hon. Member, one could see has not changed. Again, it is after the fact. I would think that the Hon. Member should consider very carefully the effect of his resolution should it be accepted here in the House.

Canada is a federal state. This fact dictates that the propriety of the matter demands the proper etiquette between federal and provincial governments by allowing a provincial government to legislate within its own sphere of authority. It has always been contemplated that a constitutional amendment for and on behalf of a people in a province would be initiated in that province and, following passage of the provincial request, the federal Houses of Parliament would then deal with the matter.

I would ask the Hon. Member if he has consulted with the Province of Manitoba lately regarding the acceptability of the resolution. Did he consult with other members of the legislature? Did he consult with those in Manitoba? Did he consult with Franco-Manitobans? I can give you the answer, Mr. Speaker, because I asked that question today and the answer is no. Yet he has the temerity to enter the House and take this kind of action.

I could put forward other arguments regarding possible decisions of the Supreme Court. However, I do not think that they would help us in our deliberations today because the court will decide that matter. The issue before us all is that there is surely no longer any doubt that there must be one resolution after the next establishing the principles of language rights. I would ask the Hon. Member if he is sincerely trying to find a solution to the problem or if he is trying to create a political opportunity for himself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: I would suggest that it will not lead to understanding. I know that the exercise that the Hon. Member has put before us today will not lead to a solution.

I would like to tell you about something that has deeply troubled me, Mr. Speaker. I have looked forward to an opportunity to make the following comments in the House: Those of us who come from western Canada have always and will always regard ourselves as being as Canadian as those who come from other parts of the country. The Manitoba debate as it has become known has raised in the minds of some and on the editorial boards of certain newspapers the question of whether or not we in Manitoba and perhaps in western Canada as a whole understand the country. Our roots are deeply embedded in the soil of Manitoba.

As one who represents a riding which contains Canadians of English descent, a great number of Canadians of Francophone descent and many Canadians of multicultural descent, I say to Members in the House that we came to Canada and specifically to Manitoba with our cultures, our languages, our hopes and our dreams. These have become the realities of western Canada.

I would make the point that it was a necessity and a reality for those of us whose language was neither French nor English that English became the language of common communication. That is reality. I cannot change that and I do not want to change that. That is the way it is in the area in which I live.

I would also make the point that there is no solution to this problem in Manitoba or in the rest of the country that will be good for the unity of the country if we are to use these kinds of methods to try to develop solutions. Tolerance is not enough. What we need is understanding.

I say to my friends opposite that I want to understand them. All that we as western Canadians ask is that they understand our realities as well. We will build a better country if we understand each other. Let us put behind us the use of resolutions on language or cultural matters. Let us not try to indicate that such a resolution might be to the advantage of one group, because we will not build a country that way. Canada is a great country. We are diverse, and that is our reality. That diversity can also lead us to greater understanding and it can and should be a model to the rest of the world.

I say to my friends opposite that I believe that a solution to the Manitoba situation will come just as I saw a solution come yesterday to the problems of the Canadian municipalities association which is now meeting in Winnipeg. That solution was based on understanding, on dialogue and finally on agreement. Let us follow that route and not the one chosen today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few minutes to speak on this issue today but I am happy to be afforded an opportunity to say a few words about it.

• (1750)

In general, I support what this Bill is attempting to do. I appreciate, as I imagine the mover of the Bill appreciates, that there was no chance that it would pass today. Nevertheless, it has given Members of the House another opportunity to speak on this matter. I congratulate both the mover of the Bill and the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) for addressing it from their points of view. As Members know, I speak from a political position in the sense of a political future in this House. I would like to add to that the feeling which I have regarding what has taken place in our country, particularly in Manitoba.

I believe that one of the major factors in the debate has been fear of the unknown. When there is fear, there is distortion. I grew up in a world which was not unlike Manitoba. I grew up in Saskatchewan. When I was a child, I literally lived in a language laboratory. If I had known what it was and if I had been open to it, I could have learned seven languages within two miles of where I was living. Unfortunately, at that particular time in history, my parents—who were Irish, from Quebec and completely bilingual in French and English—felt that there was something wrong in passing on to their children the ability to speak bilingually. I do not know why they felt that way. Thank God that is no longer true. On my way home to Saskatoon the other day, I rode with the president of the French schools in Saskatoon. He cannot speak a word of French. His four children are in the schools because he wants them to be bilingual. Somehow or other the fear that my parents were able to instil into our generation will not, I hope, be instilled into the next generation.

When I was about seven or eight years of age, there was an old French Canadian farmer who had come from Quebec and had become bilingual. He spoke with an accent, but he spoke English very clearly. He told me that I should learn another language. He told me that a language is a very light load to carry. That was great advice because a language is a very light load to carry. There is nothing to be afraid of in being able to understand another person who speaks another language. No one in Canada is forced to learn another language. They do not have to learn English nor do they have to learn French. However, it is very nice to be able to speak two, five or ten languages. What is really required is a change in mentality. That may come in the next generation, although I believe that the confrontation which has taken place in recent history in Manitoba would not bring that about. There seems to have been a lack of will to reach an understanding.

On November 15, 1976, I was returning to Canada after spending a year doing research with the International Development Research Centre in India. I was not aware of the fact that there was an election taking place in Quebec that day. I had been in India where there are 23 states. The states of India are basically divided by language. Although there are 400 languages or more, India has built itself into 23 states, basically with the same language groups. India does its official business in English and Hindi. With this massive number of languages and the massive division, this country, with a population of 400 million or 500 million, is able to function. However, upon returning to Canada, coming through customs I found that an election was taking place which was basically being fought on the language issue. I said at that time, "What has happened to our country?" I did not understand why we were not able to accept each other with only two languages when a member of the Commonwealth is able to live with a diversity which is incomprehensible to Canadian minds.

I think it is extremely important to have an openness. There should not be the fear of someone forcing a language on anyone. I think we must be consistent in accepting the historical realities of our country and that the rights of minorities are guaranteed. Minority rights were established in 1870. The English were probably in the minority at that time.

I am sorry the Manitoba Government was not able to solve the question earlier this year with the help of the federal Government and others, but I do hope sincerely that it will be solved in the near future.

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to be able to participate in the debate today, particularly because I was able to have the opportunity of hearing the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) who spoke so eloquently. I have heard him speak before on matters pertaining to the Constitution of this country. But, I might say that that is the best speech he has given. It was an outstanding and eloquent speech regarding his own province.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: I only have two or three minutes and I do not know that I need to embellish the arguments which were made by the Hon. Member for Provencher. However, I wanted to make a contribution which would remind us of the process we went through when we dealt with the much larger constitutional amendment. Like the Hon. Member, I was a member of the Constitution Committee.

During that time we heard people from across the country. We talked about the amending formula, and we talked about the importance of ensuring that the regions of the country, as well as its different cultures, felt a part of it all. At the end of the process, one of the most interesting things happened. We insisted that the matter be sent to the Supreme Court of Canada, before it proceeded to the United Kingdom. We insisted for months that that happen, and ultimately that is where it went.

After some weeks, the Supreme Court came down with its decision. It was probably the most Canadian judicial decision which I have had the pleasure of reading. To anyone who has not had the opportunity or has not taken the opportunity to read it I may say that it is not merely a judicial decision, it is probably one of the most impressive statements of what is in reality the Canadian political and constitutional process. It ended up by making a key judgment. It said that the Government's constitutional package was legal, but that it was not legitimate. I do not think that there is another country in the world which would understand that statement. In most countries, including the republic to the south, if it is legal it is also legitimate. However, the Canadian political process for 250 years, and certainly since 1791, has always included an understanding that legality by itself does not confer legitimacy. What does confer legitimacy is the process of involving consensus.

Consensus in this country is a process which allows laws to be legitimate. That, of course, is what the Hon. Member missed entirely in his motion. The motion which the Hon. Member brought forward to the House today is unwise. It is not only unwise, it is trouble-making. It acts in a way which is totally outside of the constitutional process of the country. Therefore, it seems to me that the important thing to understand, if one is sincerely interested in ensuring the equality of the two founding languages, is that Canadians for generations have insisted that it be done according to a process. That is offended by my hon. friend when he brings forward this motion—

• (1800)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the hour provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—REFUSAL OF VISITORS' VISAS TO APPLICANTS DENIED LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on May 18 I addressed a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) about the practice of having visitor's visas automatically refused to applicants who have recently applied unsuccessfully for landed immigrant status. I asked the Minister to ensure that the practice be altered, and that instead a system be set up whereby each application would be assessed individually on its merits. I received a letter from the Minister who pointed out that there is no such policy. I am very well aware that there is no such policy but the practice exists. In his letter the Minister says that:

> Neither the Commission which establishes policy in this area nor the Department of External Affairs, which is responsible for the issuance of visitor visas, has any policy or instructions to automatically refuse visitor visas to unsuccessful applicants for permanent resident status. If, in fact, such a practice currently exists at any office abroad, it has originated with local officials and is not sanctioned by me or Commission management.

The Minister goes on to say that he is not aware that any overseas post has enforced such a policy. He says:

> If you have any information to the contrary, I would be pleased to receive it.

I regret that the Minister allows staff whose work is so sloppy to draft letters for him. He of course knows perfectly well of some examples on which I have corresponded with him. I can give three examples, all of which have been the subject of correspondence between myself and the Minister. One is a case in the Philippines. The application of a woman for landed immigrant status had been delayed for many years. Finally, when she was accepted, her children were over 21 and were no longer eligible to accompany her. When she had been here for some months the children wished to visit her and they were refused visitor's visas.

There was a similar case in Islamabad. A man had been coming to Canada as a visitor each year. He spent his holidays with family here. He applied for landed immigrant status and when he next applied for a visitor's visa it was refused.

I could go on with other examples but the point is that the officials do have this practice of automatically refusing visitor's visas to people who have recently applied for immigrant status. It may not be the Department's policy, but it is certainly a practice at many of our overseas offices. I suspect it has become the practice because it is simpler to assume that anyone who has recently made an application for landed immigrant status is trying to get into the country with the intention of staying. It is simpler to then refuse the application than to sit down with the person and see what the exact circumstances are.

• (1805)

It is this laziness or passivity that I am objecting to. I say this with some sympathy for the officials. I understand that immigration officers generally have a very difficult job. I would rather see them exercise some judgment in that job than try to protect themselves with simple rules. I appreciate that if an officer overseas is required to exercise judgment, there will be times when that judgment is wrong. I would rather see some tolerance of error and have the occasional person come to Canada who is not a bona fide visitor, than have this blanket system which is harsh, impersonal, and does not fit with the goals of our Immigration Act which is meant to be human, responsive, and respectful of people.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for taking the opportunity provided by the late show to raise this question concerning the refusal of visitors' visas to applicants who have been denied landed immigrant status.

Mr. Speaker, I can say very briefly that further details can be added to the reply given by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) to the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) on May 18 last. Pursuant to Immigration Act Section 9, every visitor shall make an application for and obtain a visa. Still in accordance with Section 9, the decision rests with the visa officer who considers each case.

Accordingly, it would be against the legislation to refuse automatically visitor visas in some circumstances, for example when the same applicant has recently applied unsuccessfully for landed immigrant status. There is no such policy. I must add that the law requires the applicant to prove his good faith, and that was the basis of the Minister's answer to the Hon. Member. A recent application for permanent residence might indicate that the applicant intends to stay in Canada permanently.

However, in many instances, a visa can be granted to someone who applied for an immigrant visa if the application is still being processed or has been rejected. The Hon. Member may rest assured that each application is dealt with objectively, as it should be. I understand she would like the officials of the Department to be more humane or sensitive when reviewing the applications.

As the Minister indicated in his letter to her and as I said today, each case is reviewed objectively according to the law, and the Department of Employment and Immigration does its best to respond adequately to applications from immigrants. Canada has one of the most open and liberal immigration policies of any country, and I feel confident the Hon. Member will be reassured by my brief answer.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—OIL DRILLING IN LANCASTER SOUND—GOVERNMENT POLICY INQUIRY. (B) MINISTER'S ADVICE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Caccia) a few days ago was a very simple one. All it sought was a simple statement of Government policy with respect to Lancaster Sound. I wanted to know whether the Government was going to proceed with oil and gas drilling there. Needless to say, I did not get a very satisfactory response.

• (1810)

What prompted my question, and why I felt it was necessary to ask what was government policy, was the public squabble that had been going on for quite some time between the Minister of the Environment on the one hand, and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) on the other.

I am always at a loss to understand why it is that the Liberal Government insists on washing its dirty linen in public. Let me give a few quotations from the media. The first one is from the CBC MacKenzie Regional News on May 4. The item reads:

> The Federal Environment Minister is urging a permanent ban on oil and gas drilling in the Lancaster Sound area in a proposal to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

An article in The Gazette on May 3 states:

> A permanent ban on oil and gas drilling in the wildlife-rich Arctic region of Lancaster Sound is being urged by Environment Minister Charles Caccia.

Caccia urges the ban in a private letter, details of which have been obtained by Southam News which he wrote six weeks ago to Northern Development Minister John Munro.

A CP Wire service release on May 9 stated the other side of the argument being pursued by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows:

The environment is just one of many concerns blocking a quick decision on whether to allow exploratory oil drilling in Lancaster Sound, the eastern entrance to the Northwest Passage, Indian and Northern Affairs Minister John Munro said Wednesday.

But Munro, whose department will make the final decision, is in no hurry to approve drilling in the region for a number of reasons, despite the millions that have been invested there since oil companies were granted exploration permits more than a decade ago.

What we have here is a case of one Minister leaking correspondence to the press to make public his departmental point of view and to put pressure on yet another Minister. We have the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development publicly rebuking the Minister of the Environment by saying that his concern is not of any particular importance because there are a number of things that have to be taken into consideration.

The Lancaster Sound issue needs resolution. So far we have seen an attempt by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to slough it off, make no decision at all and just hope that the matter will go away. All the people involved in the argument deserve from the Government of Canada a clear statement of policy, whether or not it plans to allow drilling to take place. The developers who have already spent millions of dollars want to be able to plan for the future. They want to know the terms and conditions, if any, which will attach to the authority that they may or may not be given to proceed with drilling.

On the other hand, those who oppose and would not like to see activity of that nature take place in that location deserve from the Government of Canada the knowledge of what in fact is government policy.

I think that the Government has forgotten what is the function of the Cabinet. Each Minister goes around publicly stating his side of the argument. Surely decisions should be made in Cabinet. That is the place and time where Ministers can come together, sit and discuss these matters and come to a proper decision. The function of Cabinet is to make important decisions where there may be conflicting views from each department. Once that Cabinet decision has been made, then we should and ought to have—and have had in the past—Cabinet solidarity where, regardless of which Minister of the Crown one asks, one gets the same answer. It should not be one answer from the Minister of the Environment and another answer from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The argument on this issue which is going on in public ought to go on in private. The Government of Canada ought to speak with one voice. It ought not speak with many voices.

In closing, I urge the Ministers of the Crown to put aside their public squabbles, and I urge the Government to get its act together and come up with one firm policy statement on the Lancaster Sound issue.

• (1815)

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Lancaster Basin represents a westward extension of sedimentary deposits occurring in Baffin Bay, for which seismic data indicates a sedimentary sequence six kilometres in thickness in the Sound. Although no wells have been drilled in Lancaster Sound or adjacent areas, some hydrocarbon potential is inferred from a small active oil seep in Scott Inlet a few miles to the north. Recent Geological Survey of Canada estimates place recoverable oil potential in Baffin Bay/Lancaster Sound at 55 million cubic metres and a 50 per cent probability.

There has been interest in exploiting the petroleum resources of Lancaster Sound since the late 1960s. A federal Environmental Assessment Review Office panel recommended deferment of exploratory drilling until the Government had addressed the issue of the best uses of Lancaster Sound, and the proponent had demonstrated the capability to deal with the physical hazards to drilling in the Sound and preparedness to mitigate effects of a blowout.

In response to the recommendation for a Government regional use plan, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development undertook in 1980 a preliminary analysis of potential options for the use of Lancaster Sound and the surrounding region.

Since that time, Consolidex Magnorth Oakwood, a consortium which has succeeded Norlands Petroleum as the permit holder for the land in question, has published a resource management plan for Lancaster Sound hydrocarbon development, and has submitted an official letter of application for drilling to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro).

Before any decision can be made relative to the issuance of exploration agreements, a number of important steps must be taken involving several federal departments. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development must conduct a land use planning exercise and partake in native rights consultations. The Department of the Environment must ensure that all appropriate environmental safeguards would be employed. The Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration of Energy and Resources must investigate all aspects relative to the technological and economic feasibility of any proposal, be satisfied that proper safety measures would be taken, and that any proposal would meet the appropriate Canada Benefits criteria.

May I simply say that while the federal Government is currently studying various options, no development will take place in Lancaster Sound. Such development could only take place once decision makers had conducted multi-dimensional analyses that confirm that development projects could be carried out in a safe and timely manner and would be beneficial to the people of Canada, particularly those in the region.

Adjournment Debate

ENERGY—REMOVAL OF ONTARIO RADIOACTIVE WASTE. (B) RESPONSIBILITY FOR PERMANENT STORAGE

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, on May 25, 1984, after waiting for three weeks for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) to appear in this House during question period, and finding that he did not, I raised a question with the Minister responding for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. That question related to the transportation of some 4,000 tons of low level radioactive waste from the Malvern subdivision in Scarborough to a location in the City of Scarborough on Reesor Road very close to the border of my riding of York-North, the intended sight being a few hundred yards from Steeles Avenue which separates the Town of Markham and the City of Scarborough.

I am rather surprised that the Liberal MP for that area has not taken a more active part in protecting the interest of his constituents, for what we are concerned with here is the relocation of some 4,000 tons of material which contain radium 226 in quantities which are from 20 to 280 times the normal level of that material in natural deposits in the Toronto area.

In addition, the material which is about to be transported contains substantial contaminations of arsenic. It is intended by the federal Government, which has under the terms of the agreement with the Province of Ontario dated November 3, 1983, acknowledged its responsibility for the permanent storage of the material, to locate this very substantial quantity of contaminated material on about two acres of land near the little Rouge River. The material is to be placed in a large plastic bag or a large plastic wrapper on the surface of the ground which geologically consists of sand and gravel-sand substance. This will permit the leeching of the contaminants from this material into the Rouge River system.

The people in that area, some of whom live as close as 1,000 yards to the intended site, obviously will be subject to this contamination. Radium 226 in its decomposed form becomes radon 222, a known carcinogenic gas which will produce lung disease and other lung ailments of the cancerous nature in human beings. It is absolutely astounding that with the available evidence the Government still proposes temporarily to transport but a few miles to where it will be located some material which is dangerous to human beings, and to store that material on a ground level site near a river—the people in the area derive their water supply from wells—and cover it with a plastic bag, with no more concern for the general public in the area than is disclosed by its conduct here.

Fortunately a group of citizens retained the services of a firm of solicitors and have commenced an action in the Federal Court of Canada. They apparently have obtained an interim injunction precluding the movement of this soil in the fashion the federal Government would contemplate.

My concern is very simply this. Recognizing, with the abundance of material filed in that court action, the dangerous nature of the material—and indeed, had it not been dangerous, the federal Government would never have agreed to remove it from its existing site—how could the Government ever contemplate storing it on that site in that fashion?

When I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), answering for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources about the issue, he said that a number of Conservatives had opposed the storage of the material in some other location. Atomic Energy of Canada is in the process of producing and licensing the use of radioactive materials in Canada. There has to be some place where that material can be stored. If the federal Government cannot find a suitable location for low level radioactive waste, what in the name of heaven will it do with the uranium bundles at hydro projects? Where will they be stored? It is very clearly time that the Government awakened to its responsibilities and stored this material where it will not result in injury to the inhabitants of the immediate area.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the work to date of the Low Level Radioactive Waste Management Office has concentrated on the cleanup of historic wastes in Malvern and Port Hope, Ontario and in Surrey, B.C. I would like to specifically address the Malvern case.

About 4,000 tonnes of slightly radioactively contaminated soil, for which no permanent disposal site exists, is currently located on residential properties in the Malvern subdivision of Scarborough. In 1983, the Canadian and Ontario Governments signed a Memorandum of Understanding under which the federal Government assumed responsibility for removing the soil to permanent disposal when a disposal site could be established. Ontario, preferring that the removal of the soil from Malvern take place without waiting for the establishment of a disposal site, agreed to co-operate with the federal Government by identifying a temporary storage site for the soil, and agreed to incur the additional costs involved in taking the additional step through storage prior to going to disposal.

The Hon. Member has made an attempt to dump the whole problem on the federal Government. I must remind him that the provincial governments have a very great responsibility in this particular field. Indeed, there was a lot of opposition to the disposal site that was selected. I think the Hon. Member is well aware of those Conservatives who opposed that, along with the general public.

The federal Government, with Ontario's agreement, named the Low Level Radioactive Waste Management Office of AECL as the agency to carry out the work. The Malvern removal has been delayed because of an interim court injunction obtained by a group of residents near the temporary storage site.

The federal Government is now actively addressing all aspects of the management and disposal of radioactive wastes in Canada. It has been doing that for some time. The Hon. Member must be very much aware that this is a very emotional topic for the general public. It is very difficult to find a satisfactory site. Much work remains before a complete operating system is in place and the co-operation and support of provincial and municipal governments, industry and the public is crucial to reaching that goal.

For the past five years, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has been managing a major research program into the permanent passive disposal of irradiated fuel waste deep in the stable crystalline rock of the Canadian shield. The preliminary research results from this program support the view that nuclear fuel waste can be safely disposed of in this manner. A lot of research has gone into this field. I do not want the impression left that anyone has been dragging his feet on this issue.

This research is a joint program which is being performed under the terms of the Canada/Ontario Agreement of June, 1978. Under this agreement, Ontario Hydro is responsible for the work required on storage and transportation of irradiated fuel. A further federal-Ontario agreement in August, 1981 defined the evaluation process leading to acceptance of the disposal concept proposed.

In closing, I would just like to say that the Hon. Member mentioned the Liberal Member from the area. I can state that he has been very communicative on matters relating to his constituency.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock in the morning, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—PRAYER FOR RESTORATION OF PEACE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, all Members of the House will have read of or watched on television the recent bloodshed in India. Hundreds of people have been killed, and an estimated 11,000 refugees have streamed into the small town of Ambala in recent days to avoid violence.

In my own constituency there are many Canadians of Indian origin, with an estimated 2,000 alone from the Punjab. Constituents of both Sikh and Hindu faiths from the Punjab and elsewhere are understandably acutely concerned about the safety and well-being of innocent family members in India. The same must be true in numerous constituencies across Canada.

The overwhelming majority of Sikhs, both in Canada and throughout India, where their contribution to that country has been simply enormous, condemn terrorism of all sorts. They are a law abiding and patriotic people who are internationally renowned for their peaceful and non-violent characteristics. They are also people of high principle, excellent character, and dedicated religious convictions. My prayer today is that further bloodshed and violence can be avoided in the world's largest democracy. What happens there in the next few days and weeks will touch all thoughtful Canadians, and all Members here must hope that peace and reason can be restored permanently to the Punjab.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, all of us in this Chamber can remember 1977 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said to the young unemployed of Canada: "My heart does not bleed for you". In that same speech to young people at the University of Toronto he said that if they do not like it in Canada, if they do not like it here, let them find another country.

Yesterday in this Chamber the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Pepin) said to the young people of Canada that if they cannot find a job the reason may be because they are lazy. That is a shameful comment from the Acting Prime Minister, just as the previous comments by the Prime Minister were shameful.

The Conservative Party and I believe most Members of the House do have hearts that bleed for the young people of this country who cannot find jobs. We want Canadian young people and university graduates to stay in this country and contribute to this country. We do not believe that the problem is that young people are lazy.

I come from the Province of Alberta where four years ago, when the Government was elected, the unemployment rate was 3.5 per cent. With government policy and government programs, today it is 12 per cent. That is the problem. Laziness is not the problem; government policy is the problem.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DECLINE IN MANITOBA UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this morning's figures on unemployment show an increase in the seasonally adjusted number of unemployed Canadians across the land. However, under the NDP Government of Howard Pawley, Manitoba has the lowest unemployment rate in Canada.

Historically Manitoba does not have the lowest unemployment rate, but what is happening in Manitoba now proves that with the right Government something can be done about unemployment in Canada.

• (1110)

Let me read the figures to you, Mr. Speaker. Last year at this time Manitoba had 51,000 unemployed. One month ago that figure was down to 43,000, and last month that figure was down to 39,000. In Manitoba the unadjusted unemployment rates have dropped from 9.9 per cent to 7.5 per cent, and the seasonally adjusted unemployment figures have dropped from 10 per cent to 7.8 per cent.

Through its job fund the Manitoba New Democratic Party has created in excess of 17,000 jobs. For the most part those jobs have met real community needs in recreation, education, and other required facilities. This has created employment in the short term, and it has created permanent facilities for the people of Manitoba. The Government has also looked toward creating jobs in the long term. One example is the number of hydro agreements that are being negotiated at the present time which will create thousands of long-term jobs with training opportunities for—

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

NEW INVESTMENT IN GENERAL MOTORS PLANT AT ST. CATHARINES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, only four years ago many reputable industrial observers were preaching the permanent decline of the North American automobile industry.

Under the protection of quotas on imports of Japanese motor vehicles, the North American automobile industry obtained a breathing space in time within which it could modernize and introduce high technological improvements into its manufacturing operations.

The announcement made yesterday by General Motors to invest a further $255 million in its engine plant in St. Catharines indicates a vigorous, competitive approach by the industry itself, and a determination that the products manufactured by General Motors will be highly world competitive both in quality and efficiency.

With the introduction of new mechanized moulding systems and computerized sensors, General Motors can achieve lower per unit production costs. In doing so General Motors will maintain a stability of employment in our local community where the matter of jobs is the top priority and concern. General Motors will give confidence to other Canadian manufacturers in this highly technical and competitive world, and Canadians generally will receive the beneficial fruits of the G.M. example.

MINES AND MINING

NEED FOR FULLY TRAINED RESCUE TEAMS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, tribute ought to be paid to those thousands of Canadians right across the nation who volunteer their time and effort in training for mine rescue work. Despite precautions, mine disasters can always happen and, when they do, it is essential that fully trained mine rescue teams be available so that loss of life can be minimized.

Competition between teams in regional, provincial, territorial and national events not only adds interest to the training but hones the teams into higher degrees of preparedness and effectiveness. For this reason competitive events should be encouraged. But it is saddening to learn that, for the second year in a row, the Dominion Mine Rescue Competitions scheduled to have been held in Yellowknife have been cancelled. In expressing our appreciation for all those involved in mine rescue work let us record our dismay that the Dominion competitions will not be held this year, and our hope that sufficient funds can be found to enable the event to be held in 1985.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

UNANIMOUS ADOPTION OF BILL C-46 SUGGESTED

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the House will be asked to consider a very important Bill concerning the Naskapi and the Cree. After the James Bay Agreement, Bill C-46 proposes to give practically complete autonomy to the various reserves. It confirms the responsibility of the Cree and Naskapi for governing their territory, for the organization of their band councils and for the by-laws that will be enforced directly by the local government authority.

Mr. Speaker, I should be delighted if the House could adopt this Bill unanimously this afternoon, especially since it would mean a step forward for the Cree and Naskapi, who have shown that they appreciate the values of native tradition. I think this Bill will give all native peoples in Canada more confidence and encourage them to show white people they are able to govern themselves.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

CUTBACKS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA SOCIAL SERVICES—TRIBUTE TO WORK OF VANCOUVER CRISIS CENTRE

Mr. Svend Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in these harsh economic times, social services are particularly hard pressed to meet the demands placed upon them, particularly in the Province of British Columbia. In that province there have been savage cutbacks in health care, education, child care, child abuse teams, services to young people, the elderly, and the handicapped. Unemployment is at record levels, particularly among young people. With broken families, record levels of single parent families, and cutbacks in welfare, social service agencies are particularly hard taxed.

One volunteer agency has been serving the Greater Vancouver community for 15 years today, with tremendous dedication and energy, that is, the Crisis Intervention and Suicide Prevention Centre of Greater Vancouver. It has provided hope to the hopeless and, I venture to say, has saved many lives. Today, on the fifteenth anniversary of the founding of that Centre, I want to commend the thousands of volunteers who have been prepared to lend their time and to listen, and the flying squads as well.

I had the honour of serving as a volunteer with the Crisis Centre. This week is Crisis Centre Week, from June 4 to June 10, as proclaimed in Vancouver. I am sure I speak on behalf of all Members of Parliament when I congratulate the Crisis Centre on its fifteenth birthday. I wish the Centre many more successful years, and I urge the federal Government to provide badly needed federal funding for crisis centres across the country.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MAY UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES—COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, who is away on public business, in the absence of the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Pinard: Where is Brian?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He is in your riding.

Mr. McGrath: —in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, in the absence of the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development, in the absence of the Minister of State for Youth, I direct my question to the Marie Antoinette of the Cabinet, the Minister of State for Finance.

Today, on schedule, unemployment figures were released showing that once again our unemployment rate has increased from 11.4 per cent to 11.7 per cent. Yet in the United States, for the same month, its unemployment rate went down from 7.8 per cent to 7.5 per cent. Indeed, its unemployment rate has gone down from 8.4 per cent in November to 7.5 per cent, whereas during the same period of time ours has risen from 11.1 per cent to 11.7 per cent.

There is no growth in employment in western Canada. There is no growth in employment in the Atlantic Provinces.

Yesterday the Minister said that on interest rates we were tracked with the U.S., that we had to follow U.S. interest rates. Why does he not explain to us why we are not tracked with U.S. unemployment rates? Why is it that its unemployment continues to go down and ours continues to go up?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I was so bemused by the idea of being Marie Antoinette that I was somewhat distracted from the Hon. Member's principal question. The short answer to his question is that the growth in the labour force in Canada has gone forward at a faster rate than in other major industrialized countries. Comparison with the United States would suggest that if the growth in the Canadian labour force had been similar to that in the United States there would have been one million fewer people entering the workforce in Canada, and the unemployment rate in Canada today would have been about 4 per cent, instead of the 11 per cent which we are encountering today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLaren: What has happened in the past month is that a large number of additional jobs has been created in the Canadian economy. Some 23,000 jobs have been created, additional to those which have been created since the recession, but additional workers have joined the labour force. Some 68,000 new workers have joined the labour force, so that the seasonally adjusted rate has indeed increased by some 45,000.

I am sure all of us on both sides of the House share a concern about that increase. We, for our part, will continue, both through direct government intervention and funding and through indirect support for the private sector, to work toward a decrease or reduction in that level of unemployment.

• (1120)

SIZE OF LABOUR FORCE—COMPARISON WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister just does not know what he is talking about. He does not seem to care because we are talking about people, people who are not too lazy to work. They want jobs, and this Government cannot provide them with jobs.

Let the Minister explain to us how it is that since November the U.S. labour force has grown at a faster rate than the Canadian labour force. The figures show a 1.6 per cent increase in the U.S. labour force as opposed to a 1.2 per cent increase in the Canadian labour force. Their unemployment rate has continued to decline. Ours continues to increase. Let him explain this, that we are still 122,000 jobs behind since the commencement of the recession in August, 1981, whereas the United States has not only picked up all lost jobs but is four million jobs ahead. How does he explain that?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have already commented on the Member's point with regard to the United States. He and I know that since the recession began in November, 1982, we have been creating jobs at a faster rate in Canada than in most other industrialized countries. We have equally seen a substantially greater increase in the Canadian labour force than has occurred in the United States or in other OECD countries.

Let me cite for the Member, who should know, that there are now 40 per cent more Canadians working today than in 1968, compared with the other six summit countries where there has only been a 13 per cent increase in the labour force. In Canada we have experienced a substantially higher increase in new workers joining our labour force than any other industrialized country.

Obviously none of us rejoices in the current level of unemployment. It is a concern for all of us. It was indicated to the Member on earlier occasions that we on this side of the House have worked consistently to bring about the circumstances in which jobs can be created. The inflation rate in Canada has been sharply reduced. The productivity of Canadian industry has improved greatly. Our export trade reflects that achievement, both in terms of lower inflation and in terms of higher productivity. I do not doubt that the circumstances are there for additional private sector growth as well as public sector support for greater employment opportunity in Canada.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will explain that statement when he gets outside the House.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. There is still presumably a Government in this country, Liberal leadership race notwithstanding. In the midst of this deepening economic crisis, what action can we expect from the Government to treat this matter with the urgency it deserves? Can I get an assurance from the Acting Prime Minister that regional Ministers, political Ministers in the Government are not holding back millions of capital works funds for an election slush fund when there are 800,000 young people unemployed?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the inference of my friend's question is that the Government is not trying sufficiently. I have figures here which indicate the extent of investment by the Government in job creation and job training at this moment; for example, $1.246 billion for job creation and $1.266 billion for training. The results are beginning to show. For example, job creation in 1984-85 will result in 265,000 jobs and 281,000 in job training. I could go on. Applying it to youth, there is $634 million for job creation and $493 million for job training.

My friend has to accept that a major effort has been made by the Government. This is not something which will be done in the future; the investment has been made. The results cannot be obtained in one week. There is a continuing process in the effect of these investments that have been made by the Government. As well, I am sure that he will agree that there is a need for the co-operation among different elements of society.

● (1125)

When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced the remarkable Husky project a few days ago, a big project which will create 3,500 jobs, he underlined the importance of co-operation between the federal Government, the provincial Governments, and the private sector. Similarly, when the Minister of DRIE announced the Honda project the other day, he emphasized the importance of international negotiations. I am sorry to say that this is a process out of which results take time in coming.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister did not give the Hon. Member for St. John's East the assurance that regional political Ministers are not holding back funds that should now be put into the unemployment program.

UNEMPLOYED FEMALE HEADS OF FAMILIES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday the Minister of State for Youth admitted that the unemployment crisis really does touch some 800,000 young people in the country and, by the same criteria, touches some two million Canadians across the country. Included in that figure of two million is the highest number of unemployed women who are heads of families ever recorded for this month. These women have homes to keep and families to feed. I would like to ask the Minister what programs the Government has to bring these women into the mainstream of the labour force of the country. I do not want him to tell me that these women are lazy, or that their children do not need food and clothing.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite knows that the growth in the labour force in Canada has included a greater number of working women and a greater number of young people than in previous years. She knows as well as I do that during this year we in Canada created some 71,000 new jobs on top of those that we had already created since the beginning of the recession, bringing the total to some 441,000 new jobs. Of those additional jobs, the participation rate for young people has recently increased. The basic purpose of the Government is to create circumstances under which every Canadian can find a job.

We on this side of the House are going to continue to work to provide direct funding for retraining and training programs so that women, for example, can participate more effectively in the job market. We are going to continue to provide tax incentives in the R and D area to ensure a greater degree of technological improvement in our industries. We are going to continue to provide more financing for exports so that the economy benefits from the jobs created as a result of our sales abroad.

I could cite for the Hon. Member opposite a whole range of specific policies which are in place, but she knows of them as well as I do. We will continue to pursue those policies so as to create the greater opportunities she and I both seek.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, what the Minister does not realize and does not come to grips with when citing those statistics is the fact that since 1980 the number of unemployed women who are heads of families has doubled. It is of little comfort to them to be told that the labour force has grown.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the Minister's attention to another area of real crisis, and that is the area of youth unemployment. The Minister said that the Government's programs were working. There are 800,000 young people out there to show that those programs are not working. If the Government's programs are working, can the Minister explain why there is a higher rate of unemployment for young people who are between the ages of 20 and 24 in Canada than in any other country in the industrialized world?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I will deal with the last point before I attempt to address the other question. In fact a recent report on unemployment issued by the OECD would suggest that, when comparing the performance of other industrialized countries in dealing with youth unemployment with that of Canada, Canada has not been doing badly at all. Our youth unemployment rates are not very different from the OECD average.

• (1130)

Partly in response to the direct programs provided by the Government for youth training and youth participation in the labour force, and a variety of programs which, in the fiscal year 1984-1985 are estimated to cost over $600 million, we will see the participation of some 185,000 young people. That is, of course, additional to the jobs which will be created by the private sector, thanks in part to the programs in place from the last two Budgets. I believe the effect of those combined elements is that the youth participation rate, according to the latest statistics, has gone up. We have seen a greater youth participation in the job market than we have since the beginning of the recession.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE NEW EMPLOYMENT INITIATIVES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. I want to begin by saying what a bankrupt Government we have. Yesterday we learned that we have almost 800,000 unemployed young people. The national figures which came out today show a great increase in national unemployment.

Yesterday the Government called the unemployed lazy. Today there is not a senior economics Minister of the Cabinet in the House for Question Period. It is this Government which is bankrupt. It is the Government which is lazy, not the unemployed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Since there is one Government in this country which set unemployment as the top priority more than a year ago, and that is the Government of Manitoba, and since it has now the best record in this country by bringing down unemployment by 2.5 per cent in one year, I want to ask the Minister this: will the Government demonstrate the political will—which is what the Government of Manitoba has—to create jobs, so that every man and woman who wants to work can do so? Will the Government now admit that its policies are wrong and bring in new initiatives before we recess for the summer?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have always thought that my hon. friend was an honest man. I do not believe he is particularly attractive politically—neither am I—but I always thought my hon. friend would respect the truth. By quoting me as having said yesterday that unemployed young people are lazy, I believe he was breaking down the basic ABC of academic propriety. I am quite sad about that.

What I said was that in establishing the statistics of unemployment there were different degrees of certainty. In other words, we were certain of the conventional way of establishing unemployment figures among the youth, if you follow the four weeks' searching and availability criteria of Statistics Canada. I said, with respect to what is called the "hidden unemployment", that there were differing degrees of uncertainty. In some cases a person would have given up after trying hard. In other cases some people might not have tried hard enough, simply being lazy. If the Hon. Member reads Hansard he will find it is all there. I would be grateful if he did me the favour of reading what I said.

As the Hon. Member for St. John's East said, it might have been unwise of me, but you cannot teach an old dog new tricks. If you like academic debate, you bite into it. I would have thought that my old friend would pay me the respect of reading what I said and not distort it.

With respect to Manitoba, I am very pleased to see progress being made. However, again, if one wanted to be totally honest about it, one would have to look at the extent of the support which the federal Government has given to the Government of Manitoba in recent months.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: In my description of the performance of the Government I did not even mention a moment ago the $2.4 billion which the Government has invested in Canadian growth in recent months through what is referred to as the SRCP program.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, there is somebody on the other side of this House who is making a noise.

Mr. Pepin: With respect to the total argument, I tried in my previous answer—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has concern at this point about the ability, within the framework of a question and answer period, to deal with the matters which are raised, and the time it is taking in the exchanges. The Hon. Member for Oshawa has just put one question. He has two supplementaries. This will be the third question and we have used, at this rate, close to half the Question Period. The Hon. Member for Oshawa on a supplementary question.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has said that you cannot teach an old dog new tricks. The regrettable truth about this Government is you cannot introduce an old Government to new ideas. That is the problem with the Government.

DECLINE IN MANITOBA UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SET SIMILAR TARGET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Since the Minister has said that a broader understanding of the Manitoba situation would include references to what the national Government has done in terms of its spending program, I want to say to the Minister that that spending program has gone on all across the country. In western Canada, Manitoba has the lowest level of resources of all the provincial Governments. The other provinces made the mistake of electing Conservatives. Their economies are becoming worse. Manitoba's economy is becoming better. That is the reality.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are strong in every seat you now hold. We know that.

Mr. Broadbent: The people on my right, in more ways than one, should know that. If the Government duplicated at the national level what Manitoba has achieved in one year, that is the 2.5 per cent reduction in unemployment, and if the Government set targets for unemployment the way it did for inflation, very soon we could have full employment in this country, which all Canadians desire. Will the Government set those targets to produce the jobs we need?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that my hon. friend is finding reason for satisfaction somewhere in Canada, particularly in his present situation. The Hon. Member's point on targets is always debatable, as to whether one is desirable or not. However, the Government has a target, which is to help in the creation of the greatest number of jobs possible. As the Minister of State for Finance said a moment ago, the objective is for all Canadians to find gainful employment in Canada. That is the target.

GOVERNMENT'S ECONOMIC PREDICTIONS—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN POLICIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I put to the Minister that the Minister of Finance and other economic Ministers have indicated that there would be an improvement in 1984. The situation was supposed to get better. Unemployment levels were supposed to go down, not up. Investment was supposed to go up, not down. Everything the Government has projected to take place in our country which was supposed to be positive, has turned upside down. Will the Government please come to an understanding of the reality of this country, as our Canadian citizens see it? Will it see the truth? Will the Government see that its policies are not working, change them, and bring in some new policies in order to get Canadians back to work? That is the issue.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, anyone who has been sitting in the House for a number of months has witnessed the diversity of efforts put forward by the Government in order to remedy the situation of unemployment in Canada. We have tried a collection of programs, some of them attractive to the private sector, others attractive to different groups in society or different regions. We have tried to adapt our programming and strategy to the demands, general, local, professional, and what not.

Miss MacDonald: And you have failed.

Mr. Pepin: I could line up a whole list of programs for the summer. There was a program, for example, to employ people in the forestry area this summer, and so on. We have really tried to adjust, and the argument I was making a moment ago is that it takes time for these measures to show their effects.

The Minister of State for Finance, in my view, expressed a very interesting argument, which I believe is true, and that is that the reality of gainful employment as it grows attracts to the market a number of people who may have given up in the past. This in turn increases the labour participation. Again, this is an academic explanation for a real situation, and my hon. friend, who is an academic, should be attracted by the efforts we are making, not only to create programs but to try to understand the situation. My hon. friend should be interested in the argument made by the Minister of State for Finance this morning. It shows that in some ways by doing better you do not help yourself statistically speaking.

ALBERTA UNEMPLOYMENT RATE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, when the Government was elected one province in the country had an unemployment rate of 12 per cent or higher. Today seven out of 10 provinces have such an unemployment rate. I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister to concentrate on Alberta. When the Government was elected that province had one of the lowest unemployment rates in the whole world. Today it has a record high unemployment rate.

Does the Government think that unemployment has been caused by lazy workers, by some other country's policy, or is the unemployment rate in Alberta caused by bad federal policies affecting energy, agriculture, and transportation? Is bad federal policy the reason?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend is addressing me personally, I did concentrate a lot on Alberta. I tried hard to do a number of things which would have been useful for Alberta, at least in the production of meat.

Mr. McDermid: Thank God you stayed out of Ontario.

Mr. Pepin: I was looking frantically for support from the other side of the House at that time when it would have been so appreciated. I just want to underline the fact that the situation in Alberta is a complex one. You cannot pin down the difficulties of Alberta to a single program. I gave a personal experience. It would have been useful to me on February 1 last year to have the support of Alberta Members on the other side of the House, and I did not get it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You have ruined western Canada.

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is incredible. Does the Deputy Prime Minister not believe that when you put a program such as the National Energy Program in place and chase out $17 billion worth of capital, it takes jobs out of the country to some other country? Does the Deputy Prime Minister not believe that when you raise the rates on the Crow for farmers, you are going to put farmers into bankruptcy? Are those not federal policies which could be changed, which would produce jobs in the country? Will the Government change those policies?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to remind my hon. friend, who may have forgotten—his memory is very, very short on these matters—that one of the greatest supporters I had for what I was trying to introduce in the House in February of 1983 was the Government of Alberta.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance and his mouthpiece, the Minister of State for Finance, boast that the economy is in recovery. Yet in the Atlantic region there are 8,000 more people unemployed this year than last year. The unemployment rate in the region has soared to 15.2 per cent. Industries, like Canada Packers in my own province, and others right across the region, are closing their doors. If that constitutes recovery, what in the name of Heaven constitutes recession? How bad does the situation have to get in the region before the Government will take that situation seriously?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Member opposite has indeed drawn our attention to a serious unemployment problem in his region. We know that.

Mr. Forrestall: It is about time somebody did.

Mr. MacLaren: All regions in Canada have experienced a degree of unemployment which is worrisome, and which causes us on this side of the House real concern. The Member opposite would want to recall that since the beginning of the recession Canada has achieved a remarkable record in job creation. We have also experienced an unprecedented growth in our labour force which is substantially greater than that experienced by any other industrialized country in the OECD. The Hon. Member overlooks that fact that, to a substantial degree, the continuing high level of unemployment, both in the Atlantic region and generally across Canada, is a function of the degree to which more people than before have joined the labour force in Canada.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ASSIST IN DEVELOPING ATLANTIC REGION ECONOMIC STRATEGY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Earlier in the Question Period the Minister cited projects into which the Government had poured money, including projects in the Atlantic region. Granted, the Government has supported such things as the Atlantic Regional Veterinary College in my own region. However, does the Minister not realize that the benefits from those ad hoc, short-term, make-shift programs are being negated by the Government's narrow-minded fiscal and monetary policies? If he does, will he not at least sit down, or recommend to the Minister of Finance that he sit down with the four Ministers of Finance in the Atlantic region to put together an over-all strategy for the region on a crisis basis? Will he do something concrete, rather than giving the House of Commons and the people of the Atlantic region a lecture on macro-economics?

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, if the Member opposite wants me to be a little more specific, I shall. He has raised the question of special recovery projects in the Atlantic region. They have gone forward and been successful. They have created jobs. They have created the circumstances in which further private sector growth can occur. The Member opposite should realize that the spending of more than 60 per cent of the funds in that program has been completed. Ninety-six per cent of the projects are under way and they have brought a direct benefit, both to his region and to Canada generally.

In addition, as we cited earlier, the Government has provided retraining programs and other job creation programs which have had a beneficial effect in his region as well as nationally. Perhaps more important than the shorter-term projects which I have cited, and which the Member opposite drew attention to, is the fact that in Canada in the past year and one-half we have brought down inflation. We have increased productivity. We have increased our export trade. We have created the circumstances in which greater productivity and international competitiveness will occur. That is where the jobs will be created. They will be created there, and in the small business sector which will benefit from the tax incentives and the tax changes we made in the recent Budget. That is how jobs will be created in Canada as we work through this temporary high increase in people joining the job force.

Miss MacDonald: Temporary for four years.

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG WOMEN

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in the absences of the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, the Minister responsible for Employment and Immigration, and the Minister of Finance, all of whom, I suspect, are out trying to get a job for one particular man as Leader of the Liberal Party, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Last month 31,000 more women were unemployed. What is the Government going to do? It is a very simple question and I want a straightforward answer. What is the Government going to do to create jobs for women?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a great diversity of programs. The programs announced a few weeks ago by the Secretary of State for Youth include a diversity of jobs. There is nothing in the list which says that these jobs are only available for males. These jobs are available for females as well as males. The totality of the programs, the training programs that—

An Hon. Member: How about better daycare facilities?

Mr. Pepin: We are going to have a study on the daycare facilities.

An Hon. Member: They have been studied to death.

Mr. Pepin: We have to study the problems that daycare presents because there is divided jurisdiction in this matter between the federal Government and provincial Governments. In my view it was a coup not to have a contrary reaction from the provinces to the very announcement that there would be a study on the subject. To my way of thinking, that shows that the country is becoming more sophisticated in these matters than in the past.

To return to the question of women, all the efforts that the Government of Canada is making now are, of course, available to women. The rising degree of participation of women in the labour force is a clear indication that they are getting the message too.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that as far as the job creation programs which he has just spoken about are concerned, the participation level by women is less than that of the participation of women in the workforce. In other words, the job creation programs the Government is creating for short-term jobs is not creating jobs for women in the proportion that they should be receiving.

• (1150)

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO CREATE JOBS FOR WOMEN

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been in power for four years. Now is not the time to study daycare; now is the time to be acting. The Affirmative Action Program in the Public Service has not worked for women. Affirmative action in the private sector is not working for women. The affirmative action compliance for government contracts is not working for women. What will the Government do to create jobs for women?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): What my hon. friend says, which is traditional, standard, par for the course, is that it is not the time to think, not the time to do research, to study, but that this is the time to bring in programs. When we do bring in programs they say that we did not think about them sufficiently, that the individual program is wrongly devised, does not tackle the issue as it is. They say if we had done more study we would have devised a better program. That is the routine stuff that regularly comes from the Opposition. I answered the question in the first part.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS' HIRING PRACTICES—RECALL OF PENSIONERS

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In western Canada there is a shortage of employees in the CNR. The CNR has gone back to hiring people whom it pensioned off two and three years ago. It is not hiring this year's students. It is not hiring unemployed young people this year who are knocking on its door looking for jobs.

Would the Acting Prime Minister get in touch with the CNR to find out why it is not hiring young people, not hiring students, and why it is hiring people whom it has pensioned off, who have retired and are supposedly no longer in the workforce?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is one of the problems that we have. Because of the uncertainty that exists in Canada and in the whole of the western industrialized world, businessmen who run the plants hesitate to hire new people. Consequently they offer extra hours for which they pay more, and bring back people who have already been trained. In my view that is a reaction that is caused by the uncertainty that exists.

Perhaps my hon. friends on the other side, and all of us collectively, could move the country to a certain degree of optimism, to say "Bravo, such a mine has opened yesterday. Bravo, Husky just decided on the biggest energy project in the last five years" or, "Bravo, the Minister of DRIE has attracted a Japanese automobile company to Canada". Unfortunately the country is listening too much to opposition Members and not enough to government Members on these matters. If there was a bit of an optimistic mood in the country, maybe the economy would grow a bit better.

I have tried to provide an explanation for the phenomenon of recalling former employees, for example, in order not to have to train people. That is a saving from the point of view of the industry which is unsure of the future.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA AND ALBERTA

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In spite of his rhetoric, the facts are pretty clear. Today's unemployment statistics show that in British Columbia the seasonally adjusted rate is 15.6 per cent. It is 12 per cent in Alberta. These are the highest figures since statistics were first recorded back in 1946.

As a result of its grain transportation legislation, the Government promised to create 157,500 new jobs in western Canada. Instead, contrary to what my friend across the aisle said, the railways are laying off people rather than hiring new people. Why are the railways laying off people? Where are those new jobs that were promised as a result of the dismantling of the Crow?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I can at least make an observation. A moment ago we heard a spiritual explosion from a member of the New Democratic Party on the beauties and merits and fortune of Manitoba. Now we are told that the West is not doing well. It is obvious that my friends have read the announcement of today's unemployment levels extremely well. We have not heard from anybody from Nova Scotia yet. We have not heard from anybody from Quebec yet, because the figures are good there. We only hear from the provinces where the figures are not as good as they were in the past. Be that as it may—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is no laughing matter.

Mr. Pepin: No, but it is an interesting remark, I thought. If you don't like it, lump it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is not interesting. It is a lazy remark. You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Pepin: One of the effects of the western rail transportation legislation is to produce a great element of growth in western rail transportation, leading to the best transportation system in the world. However, because of some of the slowdown in some sectors, it has been found unjustified to keep going at the rate at which plans were made. I am sorry about that. It contributes again to difficulties that we have temporarily, as the Minister of State for Finance said.

Mr. Mazankowski: I hope that the Minister is not implying that it is not proper for Members on this side to represent the concerns and interests of their own provinces and regions. I think one would have to take offence at that. The fact of the matter is that it is the Government's policies over the last four years that have created the mess we are experiencing in western Canada today.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT POSITIVELY

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Program has cost western Canada at least 50,000 jobs. The Government's high interest rate policy is bankrupting farmers and costing more jobs. Now the Government is failing to hold the railways to their commitments as far as investment and the creation of jobs are concerned. Today there are 378,000 people unemployed in Alberta and British Columbia. It is the highest number of people unemployed since 1946.

When will the Government start taking some positive action rather than just spouting the empty promises that we have heard over the last four years, and particularly over the last six months?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I really cannot answer the question because I cannot accept the premise. The Government is not failing in its responsibility with respect to western rail transportation. Where did my friend get that idea? We are fulfilling all of our responsibilities. There are new federal and provincial government programs being developed all of the time. Just in British Columbia, which is part of the West too, what do you see? You see a Port of Vancouver that is booming. You see the Port of Robert's Bank quadrupling. You see the Port of Ridley Island with a billion dollar new investment.

Mr. Mazankowski: There are fewer jobs in transportation today than there were last year.

Mr. Pepin: Of course our friends on the other side select the nasty part of the news every day and then come here and blow on it in order to create the impression that the Government isn't doing anything. Of course our job is a difficult one because when we praise what is happening in Canada and describe some of the good things, of which there are plenty, we are thought by the other side to be propagandists. But we are really describing the reality, and the Speaker stops us.

INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

DESIGNATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA ACCORDING TO UNEMPLOYMENT CRITERION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Government's economic policies have managed to turn British Columbia from a rich province into a have-not province, suffering the highest level of unemployment since the labour force survey was established in 1945.

Would the Minister reconsider his decision which he communicated to me in April of this year that we did not have enough unemployment to qualify for anything but the lowest level, Tier I, of his Industrial and Regional Development Program?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I do not agree at all with the Hon. Member's premise with respect to this Government's responsibility for the unemployment situation in British Columbia. The Acting Prime Minister today just outlined a few of the major transportation agreements and discussions, and financial contributions that the Government of Canada has made in British Columbia. He did not even talk about Northeast Coal, he didn't talk about Expo '86, he didn't talk about a number of other projects in which the Government of Canada has invested hundreds of millions of dollars into the economy of British Columbia in the last couple of years. That is why I disagree with the premise of the Hon. Member's question.

With respect to the tier designations, once a year right across the country, on a statistical basis with Statistics Canada people, we do an evaluation which takes account of disposable income, unemployment, and the fiscal capacity of the respective province to make sure that we have a comprehensive, equitable, and fair index across the country. There is no political input into that process whatsoever. Consequently, we will be doing that for this year.

If the figures that the Hon. Member indicates are correct, obviously there will be some changes. I think we have already redesignated four or five census divisions in British Columbia from Tier I to special Tier I as a result of the higher unemployment figures in the last year and a half alone.

• (1200)

NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFIT RECIPIENTS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has defined the way in which the Government will determine whether a region will have Tier I or Tier II, or a special Tier I. It is the ratio between unemployment insurance beneficiaries and the working age population. Does the Minister not realize the reason we do not have more unemployment insurance beneficiaries is that they have exhausted their time available to draw UIC and now cannot draw it any more? Consequently we will never be able to reach the level he demands. The simple fact is we have a higher rate of unemployment than ever before. It is now higher than two of the four Atlantic provinces. I would like to thank this Government a lot for that. How desperate does our unemployment need to be before we will be treated fairly?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the IRDP program was passed unanimously in this House. It was agreed by members of all three Parties that for the first time we had an equitable index which compared the most vital economic statistics in the smallest census regions in the country. The formula that was applied is as equal for the Hon. Member's constituency as it is for every other single constituency in the country. I cannot think of any index, at least I do not know of one that has ever been developed by any Government or by the private sector, that is more equitable or more fair than this particular index.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the 34,000 increase in unemployed young people since last month, a man of his generation and mine must know that condemning the unemployed for being unemployed is the biggest lie since Hitler blamed the Jews for the Depression. My question, on behalf of the youth in my riding, and throughout Canada, to the Minister is: will he stop his lying, stop deliberately misleading the Canadian people—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member, I am sure, is aware that it is unparliamentary to accuse a Member of this House of lying. I ask the Hon. Member for Spadina to withdraw the expression he used.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister is well aware of the effect of what he said and well aware that what he said was false. I will only withdraw the accusation if he withdraws the remark he made yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: It is a basic principle of the House that a withdrawal cannot be with qualifications when a reference is made to another Hon. Member lying. This has been established in the case of a senior Member of this House not very long ago, the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I will have to ask the same consideration of the Hon. Member for Spadina.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am convinced the Minister knew that what he was saying was false when he said it.

Some Hon. Members: Out!

Mr. Heap: I will not under those circumstances withdraw it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pepin: To tell you the truth, Mr. Speaker, I do not care one bit.

Miss MacDonald: You don't care about young people?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister for External Relations made an intervention which the Chair did not hear. Does he care to repeat it?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I said that I was not preoccupied by the insult thrown at me by the Hon. Member. I have learned to judge the quality of an insult by the quality of the person who makes it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member for Spadina to withdraw the word he used, which is clearly unparliamentary.

Mr. Heap: I believe thoroughly that what I said was true and that what the Minister said was false, Mr. Speaker, and I will not withdraw those words.

Mr. Cousineau: Throw him out.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all Hon. Members of this House are concerned about the decorum of the House. Our rules have been established through the years and apply to every Member. Sometimes the Chair has a little more difficulty in some situations than in other situations, but the Chair appeals to the Hon. Member in the interests of decorum and in the interests of the House to withdraw his unparliamentary word. I ask the Hon. Member to withdraw the reference to lying.

Mr. Heap: With respect, Mr. Speaker, in view of the gravity of the Minister's accusation yesterday I will not withdraw.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Judge not and be not judged.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Heap, I have to name you for having disregarded the authority of the Chair.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, we are all very much aware of the practice in our parliamentary system under similar circumstances. The practice is very clear. I do not have to move a motion to expel the Hon. Member. Beauchesne stipulates very clearly that the House Leader may do that. In the past we have always supported you, Mr. Speaker, and it is clear that today we intend to do so. But I want you to know that we do this because we feel that a minimum of respect is required in this place and it is a shame for any Member to abuse the rule in the way the Hon. Member for Spadina just did. It is even more insulting that what he is doing is jeopardizing the passage of the Cree and Naskapi Bill today. He knows that, and his Party knows that very well.

Mr. Kristiansen: Order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, because we are to have a recorded division it means that we may not be able to deal with the Cree and Naskapi Bill, which we have reached agreement to pass through all stages today.

Mr. Nielsen: And the veterans' allowances, too.

Mr. Pinard: It is too bad that the passage of this Bill may not take place, Mr. Speaker. I see the people interested in it are in the gallery. Thanks to the NDP we may not be able to pass it today.

Therefore, I must follow the tradition of this House. I move:

That the Hon. Member for Spadina be expelled for the remainder of this sitting day.

Mr. Cousineau: What an example to Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: It is moved by Mr. Pinard, seconded by Mr. Munro (Hamilton East), that the Hon. Member for Spadina be expelled for the remainder of this sitting day. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Pinard) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

In accordance with the motion which has been adopted by the House, will the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) please withdraw from the Chamber?

And Mr. Heap having withdrawn:

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has been given notice of two matters of privilege at this point.

Points of Order

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—PROCEEDINGS IN STANDING COMMITTEE ON JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which stems from the actions which were taken in the last three days in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs by the Chairman of that Standing Committee. In my view, those actions very seriously undermined the integrity of the parliamentary committee process as well as the rules of order of this House.

On Wednesday last the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs was considering Bill C-9, and at that time the Chairman of the Standing Committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member please resume his seat? It is a well established principle of the House, and I quote Citation 76 of Beauchesne's, that:

Breaches of privilege in committee may be dealt with only by the House itself on report from the committee.

The House has not yet received a report from the committee. At this stage, until such report has been received, the Chair cannot entertain a matter of privilege in relation to a matter that has transpired in committee.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I have been given notice of a second matter of privilege but the Hon. Member who has given me notice is the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) and he is not present in the House. I recognize the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) on a point of order.

POINTS OF ORDER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to the statements made by the Government House Leader prior to the last vote in the House. At that time he pointed out that the Cree-Naskapi Bill would be coming up this afternoon. We recognize the importance of that Bill and I rise—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member please cite the Standing Order that he feels has been violated? The Hon. Member cannot enter into debate at this point. He raises a point of order. Would he please state his point of order?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move to Orders of the Day at this time. I have asked for the unanimous consent to make a motion—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member was recognized on a point of order. He cannot move a motion to proceed to Orders of the Day at this point.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) on a point of order. He has already been heard on a matter of privilege which was not privilege.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I move that the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin)—

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion cannot be entertained on a point of order.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): I move that the Hon. Member for Regina West be now heard.

• (1240)

Mr. Speaker: For the purpose of clarifying the rules, to move that a Member be heard there must be a motion before the House and a debate. At the present time there is no motion before the House. Two Members have to rise, in which case there is a dispute as to which one is recognized. The Hon. Member under these circumstances cannot move such a motion. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I move that this House now hear the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen).

Mr. Speaker: For exactly the same reason which I have just given to the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), the Hon. Member cannot move such a motion at this point. There is no motion before the House. A motion that someone be heard cannot be entertained when there is no motion before the House. Is the Hon. Member for Burnaby again rising on a point of order?

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): No, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: In that case, I will move to Presenting Reports from Standing and Special Committees. The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance).

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the First Report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

TRANSPORT—THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to present the third report of the Standing Committee on Transport to which, pursuant to Standing Order 69(13), the Committee requests a comprehensive response.

[Editor's note: For above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I will now call upon the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), there being no other motions. The Hon. Member for St. John's East has given the Chair notice of his intention to propose a motion at this time.

UNEMPLOYMENT

INCREASE AMONG YOUNG CANADIANS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have served notice under Standing Order 30 to ask leave at this time to adjourn the House on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have just finished the semester for the Supply period. There are no more Supply days left, no more allotted days.

Today the country was struck with bad news. There is a deepening economic crisis in the country as reflected in the unemployment figures released today. They show a marked increased in unemployment. We now know that there are 800,000 young people unemployed. We know that as of yesterday interest rates are rising. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to sit here all weekend because we believe the matter is one of urgency and should be treated as such. We hope Your Honour will do the same.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for St. John's East has given me the proper notice under Standing Order 30 of his intention to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the critical high levels of unemployment, particularly among youth and women.

As the Hon. Member is aware, applications for emergency debates on the unemployment situation in Canada have been filed with the Chair in the past on many occasions. As my predecessors have consistently ruled, and as Madam Speaker Sauvé did on December 3, 1982, problems of a chronic nature are not proper to be discussed under this Standing Order.

Order Paper Questions

I would refer the Hon. Member to Section 16(a) of Standing Order 30 which reads as follows:

—the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration;—

I would draw to the Hon. Member's attention the provisions of Standing Order 46(4) which now allows committees to consider reports of the various Government Departments permanently referred to them. I believe the report of the Department of Employment and Immigration and the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission was referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration on September 29, 1983. I am sure the Hon. Member for St. John's East could find ways to have the matter he has raised considered during the Committee's discussion of the report.

In addition, questions on this matter may be addressed to Ministers on any day during the Question Period. I would draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that he took eight minutes in his exchange during Question Period this morning. The second Member, who put a question on the same subject which included youth unemployment, took five and a half minutes during Question Period this morning.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How about the answers?

Mr. Speaker: The third question dealt with the same matter. In fact, during the Question Period today I believe all but one question related to the problems of unemployment. Most of those questions touched on the matter of youth unemployment. I offer this as an example of the opportunities which are available to Hon. Members to call the matter to the attention of the House.

For these reasons, I regret that I cannot accept the matter as being proper to be discussed under the provision of Standing Order 30, although it is a matter of considerable importance.

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the Hon. Member was ready to stay here over the weekend, I would like to invite him to a golf game tomorrow.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the invitation. I have to attend to the many demands of my constituents who are unemployed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CREE-NASKAPI (OF QUEBEC) ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize for interrupting, but I seek the unanimous consent of the House in order that the Bill can be referred to the Committee of the Whole as opposed to the Standing Committee. We would like the Bill to be passed with one speaker per Party today for all stages.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that yesterday this matter was first raised with me by the Government House Leader. I consulted with Chief Billy Diamond and other representatives of the Cree and Naskapi with respect to this matter. I had a formal discussion and received a letter from them in which they acknowledged that their original hope was that the matter would be referred to a standing committee. That was the basis upon which I proposed in the course of the House Leaders' meetings that we should deal with the Bill.

Therefore, I was surprised yesterday to hear the Government House Leader suggest that we would not go along with having all readings and all clauses of the Bill dealt with on the floor of the House of Commons.

I would like you to know, Mr. Speaker, that under the circumstances, and with regard to our very traditional and long friendship with the Cree and Naskapi in northern Quebec, we are prepared to do what is necessary to assist this very important part of the population. After further discussions, we have agreed, of course, to let the matter go through all stages today.

Mr. Murphy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also wish to indicate that our caucus will support the proposal of the President of the Privy Council.

• (1250)

Mr. Pinard: I wish to thank all my colleagues in the House for providing this unanimous consent. I would just like to add to what my colleague said by saying it is true that the Cree and Naskapi would have preferred the Bill to go to committee. However, ultimately they wanted the Bill to be passed through third reading on June 8 at the latest. Today is June 8 and that is why this consent was required. I am sure that every Hon. Member will appreciate that.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-46, an Act respecting certain provisions of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement and the Northeastern Quebec Agreement relating principally to Cree and Naskapi local government and to the land regime governing Category IA and Category IA-N land, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Murphy: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Murphy: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to apologize to the Minister. We certainly are not trying to prevent him from debating this Bill; we wish to proceed with it immediately. However, I have a question with regard to House business. Is it still the intention of the Government House Leader to deal with Bill C-34, the amendments to the Canada Labour Code, as the first order of business on Monday?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I understand why the Hon. Member sees fit to ask me this question at this time. I answered that question yesterday. We are very serious. We want the Canada Labour Code to be passed as early as possible. I wonder if the New Democratic Party has second thoughts about it.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to join with my colleague, the Government House Leader, in thanking the House Leader of the Official Opposition, the Opposition critic,

Hon. Members of the Official Opposition as well as my colleagues in the New Democratic Party for agreeing to passage of this Bill through all three stages today. I believe it is an excellent example of non-partisanship that all three Parties are equally concerned with the passage of this Bill, and each Party is supporting it with equal enthusiasm.

I am extremely pleased to be able to address this House on matters pertaining to Bill C-46, which has been more commonly known as the Cree-Naskapi Act. As most Members of this House are aware, the legislation concerns the assumption of the authority and responsibility by the Cree and Naskapi of Quebec for their own forms of local government. This legislation is the end result of the work of many dedicated people. I speak of those representatives of the Cree and Naskapi and those representing Canada who have steadfastly worked toward consensus in the matter of self-government for these Indian peoples.

It is nice to see in the galleries of the House today the Grand Chief of the Cree tribe, Billy Diamond. He and his people have worked strenuously and hard over many years. This is our way of showing we are backing their leadership.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Working in concert, over a long period of time, they have fashioned together a resolution to the myriad problems surrounding such a complex subject. The thoroughness of the discussions and negotiations and the reasonable approach taken to the solution of divergent views were in the very best tradition of the democratic process.

When the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement and the Northeastern Quebec Agreement were signed, there was an obligation placed on the Government to recommend to Parliament special legislation relating to local government and lands administration on the lands held by Canada for the use and benefit of the Cree and Naskapi. Indian self-government, over the past few years, has been a subject in which I have taken a very special interest. The way of the future, I am convinced, is for Indian Nations to have increasing control over their own affairs. I would like to continue my review of this proposed Act with this interest in mind. In negotiation respecting the Cree-Naskapi Act, self-government was a central theme, indeed central to all discussions and negotiations that have taken place since the signing of the agreements.

The Grand Council of the Crees have described negotiations leading to the proposed Cree-Naskapi Act as a follow-up to the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. They have emphasized the importance of this legislation to Cree self-government. There was no implication that this legislation should be a mode. On the contrary, they have made it clear they explicitly rejected assumptions that this proposal would be used as a model for self-government legislation, although other Indian Nations would, of course, be free to adopt appropriate elements. These views were recorded in the special committee report on Indian self-government in Canada.

The federal response to the parliamentary committee's report made reference to the Cree-Naskapi Act this way, and I quote:

> In accordance with the principle of flexible accommodation of different government arrangements, the federal Government is moving ahead with the Cree-Naskapi legislation pursuant to the terms of the James Bay and Northern Quebec and Northeastern Quebec Agreements.

The nature and scope of the legislation has been largely pre-determined by the Agreements. In addition to the provision and establishment of local self-government, the Agreements provided these groups with specified land rights; hunting, fishing and trapping rights; establishment of native-controlled health and education authorities; measures relating to policing and administration of justice; continuing federal benefits; and cash compensation.

As Hon. Members will have noted, the contents of the Bill are designed to provide and to ensure both a legal and financial basis for the Cree and Naskapi assuming authority and responsibility for their own forms of self-government. The legislation is so written as to take into consideration the special and distinct needs and aspirations of these particular groups of Indian people.

I would like to address, for a moment or two, some of the aspects of the legislation. Perhaps the most important objective of the Indian people is the recognition and protection of their rights through constitutional provisions. The rights of the Cree and Naskapi obtained from the Agreements, many of which are repeated in the Cree-Naskapi Act, are given such protection by Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

Second, the Cree and Naskapi bands will have full powers of local government so they can govern their land in the way which they consider best for them.

Third, the role of the Minister of Indian Affairs will be drastically reduced in the supervision of local government as it exists in the Indian Act. My role as Minister is to be responsible to Parliament for the legislation in that I must affirm that the provisions of the Act are being met with respect to the role of band governments as the first level of authority over its members, and the requirement of the band governments to act in a responsible manner for and to their members. In speaking of this, the special committee recommended that the legal capacity of Indian governments be clarified so that they may operate within their own spheres of jurisdiction, interact with other governments, make contracts, and take legal action. Bill C-46 has provided for this by giving the bands status as legal corporations.

Issues such as land base, ownership of natural resources, both renewable and non-renewable, access to lands, and the application of certain specific provincial laws are part of the agreements and are incorporated into this new legislation. These differ somewhat from the aims and desires of other Indian nations but it must be realized that co-operation with the provinces is an essential requirement for effective Indian government.

Regarding the funding to support the proposed Act, I will mention the establishment of accounting criteria to be met by each Indian government. It has been incorporated into the proposed Act and will detail the provisions for accountability of band governments to their memberships.

Finally, the proposed legislation anticipated the recommendation to reject the Indian Act membership criteria as a basis for establishing political participation in Indian government and relies instead upon a membership provision proposed by the Cree and Naskapi under the comprehensive Agreements. In its final report released on November 3, 1983, the special committee on Indian self-government specifically supported the initiative of the Cree-Naskapi Act in that it is intended to address the needs of these bands. I wish, Mr. Speaker, to thank sincerely all of the members of that committee and Mr. Penner, its Chairman, for its support.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the hopes and aspirations of the Cree and Naskapi and the results of months and years of discussion and negotiations are before us in this Bill. I call on my fellow parliamentarians to follow through as quickly as possible on our obligation arising out of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to participate in the debate on the Cree-Naskapi Act, known as Bill C-46. This particular Act has been long awaited. It has been under negotiation for approximately eight years now. There have been extensive consultations between the Cree, the Naskapi and the Government. Thanks to the leadership and driving force of Grand Chief Billy Diamond of the Cree, the chief of the Naskapi, their very efficient staff, along with the negotiators and staff of the federal Government within the Ministry of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, these consultations have come to fruition. I want personally to extend my congratulations and thanks to them.

I would also like to thank the Minister for the very kind remarks which he made this morning publicly as well as privately. I appreciate that. I congratulate the Minister for honouring his commitment to have this legislation tabled in the House before the end of the session. I congratulate him because it is the only commitment he has been able to keep so far, and this just made it under the wire at that. One of the candidates running for the leadership of the Liberal Party said that you should not go to the locker room before the game is over. I can assure you that the Minister has not gone to the locker room, he was in the House this morning and presented the Bill. I do not think he has gone to the locker room, although he may have this afternoon because he is not here, as yet.

We had a misunderstanding over the last couple of days regarding this Bill. It was decided that it would receive first and second reading, go to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and then return to the House for third reading. This was agreed upon by all Parties and the standing committee. The chairman of that committee insisted that this should happen to this Bill. Neither the chairman nor the vice-chairman was available this week. I am sorry that they were not available so that this Bill could be examined in committee after that agreement was made. This is a fairly extensive Bill. I feel badly that the negotiations which were agreed to were, by necessity, changed rather quickly. I hope that in the future when we are dealing with legislation such as this, when agreements are made they will be adhered to.

This Bill is a very significant Bill. It is composed of some 120 pages and some 200 clauses. It deals with a significant portion of the unfinished business stemming from the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. It institutes Section 9 of that Agreement. It enables the Cree and Naskapi to become the local government authority on Category IA and Category IA-N land. This encompasses an area of approximately 1,300 square miles in the Province of Quebec.

This historic Act, which I believe it is, will apply to eight Cree communities in Quebec and the Naskapi of Quebec. Because I believe this is a historic time for the Cree and the Naskapi, permit me to read into the record the bands and the names of the present Chiefs of those bands: the Great Whale River Band, Chief Robbie Dick; the Chisasibi under the leadership of Chief James Bobbish; the Wemindji under the leadership of Walter Hughboy; the Eastmain Band, Chief Ted Moses; Rupert House, Chief Bill Namagoose; the Nemaska Band under the leadership of Chief Lawrence Jimekin; the Waswanipi under the direction of Chief Abel Kitchen; and Chief Mathew Coon-Come of the Mistassini Band. Of course, there is the Naskapi of Schefferville and their Chief, Joe Guanish.

There are two other people who should be mentioned. They have been very much involved in the negotiations and in encouraging the development of this Bill. They are Philip Awashish, who is the Executive Chief and one of those who was involved in the original negotiations on the James Bay Agreement, as was Chief Ted Moses. Another individual who should be mentioned is Johnny Jolly, who has been the main Cree co-ordinator over the last eight years and has done a marvellous job as well. I felt it fitting that their names should be read into the record because of the significant contribution they made.

The bands covered by this legislation will have significantly greater power than those falling under the Indian Act. In effect, this legislation will be the mechanism by which the Cree will control their own lands and their own affairs. The Indian Act will virtually no longer apply to the Cree bands or the Naskapi bands, with the exception of certain sections. Many of the concepts of the principle of Indian self-government are reflected in this legislation.

The James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement, signed on November 11, 1975, was an important first step in agreements of this nature. However, we are all aware of the problems that were encountered with the implementation of that Agreement and we must not let the same type of thing happen in this instance. As we know, there was a Bill presented in the House in 1977 which received Royal Assent, I believe, on October 31 of that year and which confirmed the James Bay Agreement of 1975. That Agreement established a unique relationship between the bands and the federal and provincial governments. I think the present Bill will further that unique relationship.

Although the proposals in this legislation are not—I should emphasize this—a result of the report on Indian self-government and this should not be considered a model for self-government, I am sure everyone will be watching this particular piece of legislation and its implementation with great interest.

Under the present legislation the bands will be incorporated and membership will continue to be defined as in Section 3 of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. The present legislation will further cover those Indians who were not previous Cree beneficiaries but became so between 1975 and 1984. This Act confers upon the band the power to make by-laws of a local nature for the good government on category 1A lands of the inhabitants of those lands, and in areas concerning the administration of band affairs and the internal management of the band; the regulation of buildings and other structures for the protection of public health and safety, health and hygiene, public order and safety; by-laws for the protection of the environment, including natural resources, and for the prevention of pollution; for taxation for local purposes; by-laws for roads, traffic and transportation; and parks and recreation, just to name a few.

Bands will also have the power to make by-laws with respect to land and resource use and planning, zoning, subject to the approval of the electors, for hunting, fishing and trapping, and the protection of wildlife. Band elections, meetings and referenda are also provided for and the powers of the chief, committees of council and band bodies are set out.

The powers and responsibilities of the bands in the area of financial administration are spelled out. The Bill sets out the budgetary requirements, such as record keeping and disclosure requirements, for the bands. Audit requirements are spelled out as well as provisions for the procedures to be used in cases of serious financial disorder. Each band must have a budget for each fiscal year. Residents and access rights on 1A and 1A-N lands are detailed.

Although ownership in these lands is still vested in Quebec—I believe it is called naked ownership in the law—the bands have exclusive rights to the uses and benefits of these lands. They can use them as if they are their own. The mineral, subsurface and mining rights are retained by Quebec, but only with the approval of the band and with compensation to the band can any material be extracted from these lands. The band will have the exclusive right to forestry resources, subject to provincial approval.

With this legislation, a Cree-Naskapi commission is to be established. This commission will review the implementation of the Cree-Naskapi Act and report to Parliament. As I understand it, the commission will have the power to investigate complaints in any area covered by the Bill. The chairman of this commission is to be designated by the Governor in Council and the members of the commission are to be appointed by the Governor in Council on the advice of the Cree regional authority and the Naskapi bands. I feel very strongly and hope that some of this commission would be made up of Cree and Naskapi and probably the elders of those bands.

All this is to say that this is a very extensive, comprehensive piece of legislation which will allow the Crees and the Naskapis to preserve their traditions and at the same time allow for their political and economic evolution.

The Crees of Quebec have been managing and administering their education, social and health services very successfully for a number of years. These matters were vested in regional bodies, the Cree Board of Health and Social Service of James Bay and the Cree School Board. I am confident that they will handle the balance of their responsibilities with equal competence.

The unique relationship between the Governments of Quebec and Canada and the Cree and Naskapi people is one that has taken a great number of years and long hours of negotiation to arrive at. Some 20 pieces of provincial legislation have had to be amended or introduced in the Province of Quebec and the federal Government has finally introduced this Bill, as it was permitted to do. All the hard work and long hours have resulted in a workable agreement and legislation that has been agreed to by all interested parties.

I think it is fair to say that this is an example of how, through negotiation and hard work, we can arrive at a suitable agreement which will allow our aboriginal peoples to take control of their own lives once again. I think it is also a signal to the aboriginal peoples of this country that the Party which I represent is dedicated to continuing the process of returning responsibilities for their future to the Indian First Nations across this country. I want the public record to show today that, despite some of the concerns and opposite opinions that have been expressed across this country, our Party is dedicated to negotiating with the Indian people their rights of self-government. I look forward to this process hopefully coming forward in the not too distant future.

• (1420)

While I shall have some questions during the Committee of the Whole procedure, I want to say that our Party is proud to support this Bill and we will assure its passage this afternoon so that we can celebrate what I think is a very historic Bill in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to speak on this very important Bill which is before us today. It has been called the Cree-Naskapi Act. I believe it is an important piece of legislation. It is the only piece of legislation upon which this House has acted which grants more in the way of legislative rights to the native people of Canada, at least to one group of native people within Canada.

I would like to point out it is unfortunate that the Indian Act as it is now written makes it necessary for us to have to pass particular legislation in this area. Native people throughout this land face a very restrictive piece of legislation in the Indain Act. Other groups within society do not have to appeal to the Parliament of Canada for their own self-government, to determine their own education authorities and to have the necessary facilities for their health and economic development. It is unfortunate that the Indian people of this land have to come to Parliament for that kind of authority. The House committee on Indian self-government has said that we should be moving in this area, that this House should be passing legislation and this nation should be passing constitutional amendments to ensure the rights of native people to self-government.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, we must also move on the very important area of providing adequate funding to native people. One of the items discovered by the committee on Indian self-government was the complete lack of adequate funding for education, for self-government, for health and for economic development. Many of the conditions in which all native people find themselves are completely unacceptable to the majority of Canadians.

In the Province of Manitoba, on a different matter, it is interesting to note that the Department of Indian Affairs spends on the education of Indian children only two-thirds of the money which the Province of Manitoba spends on the education of people in other parts of northern Manitoba.

What we have is not only a need for legislation for the Cree-Naskapi people, but a need for this Government to bring about constitutional change, changes in the legislation affecting Indian affairs and changes in the actual funding of money that goes to the native people throughout this land.

James Bay Agreement

In my Province of Manitoba there have been attempts by the bands to come to an agreement on band funding, a funding formula which would provide the necessary money for the bands to carry out educational and health services so they can administer their own self-government within their communities. That agreement has not been forthcoming. Over two years of work have been done by the chiefs and the budget committee of the chiefs of Manitoba to try to get this Parliament to act and get the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) to come to some agreement with them on funding. Similarly, the tribal councils in Manitoba have had a problem moving in this direction.

Mr. McDermid: All tribal councils have.

Mr. Murphy: Tribal councils throughout Canada have been trying to get some agreement so they can have the necessary funds to act. Some tribal councils have some funding. Other tribal councils, like the Island Lake Tribal Council in my riding, have no adequate funding with which to act.

While I am glad to see this legislation before us today, and I will be speaking in favour of it, it is only one piece of legislation in a long list of legislation promised by the Minister of Indian Affairs. He has promised legislation on self-government, on amending Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act. He has promised funding for recreation, for tribal councils and for the proper administration of band councils for the needs of the people. None of that has taken place.

I see the Minister is in the House and I would like to make that point again. We must have him act not only on this promise but on a whole litany of promises that he has made to the native people over the last four years. This House has only two and a half weeks to go before the summer recess. I do not think we have enough days left to meet even half the promises which the Minister has made. I do wish, if time permits, that he would stand up and explain to us whether he has any other legislation affecting Indian people that he plans to introduce before this House recesses. If not, he should let the bands know. He should tell the bands and the native people what he is going to do to provide funding for health care, for education and for proper band administration over the next little while.

With regard to the legislation before us, I want to congratulate the leadership of the Cree and Naskapi people for getting this legislation into the House. Even though it has taken seven to eight years for this House to act, they are one of the few groups in Canada which have got legislation before it. I believe what they have achieved is only rightfully theirs. As I said, it is something in terms of administration which all other Canadians have already. It is a major achievement for the leadership of the Cree and Naskapi people. Our critic, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) has been very active in this House and in the committee on Indian affairs. He has spoken about the needs of the people.

I am glad to see this legislation today. I do not want to slow down proceedings. I hope we can pass this legislation, as we have promised, in the next short while.

[Translation]

Mr. René Gingras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly anxious to say a few words about the Bill before the House this afternoon, because this legislation affects the Cree in my riding.

First of all, I would like to say it gives me great satisfaction to be working as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro).

With great enthusiasm—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary will forgive me but—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should have informed the House that if the Parliamentary Secretary speaks at this time, he closes debate on second reading.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, we basically agreed that we would have one speaker per Party. The Parliamentary Secretary has committed himself to giving a very short speech. I know the Cree and Naskapi are in his riding and that he is very interested in this legislation. That is fine with us and we will proceed to Committee of the Whole when he finishes, which I hope will be very soon because we do have some questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Gingras: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is right, but I would not wish to close the debate before taking these few moments to say that I appreciate the work that has been done on all sides of the House, and especially the work done by the Minister. I would like to stress particularly the work done by two great chiefs, Joe Guanish and my friend Billy Diamond, who represent the Cree in my riding.

We are writing a new page in the history of our country. I am very pleased to be among those who will have helped to give the native people in my riding more justice and equity.

So as not to delay the debate any further, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, in concluding, that I thank the Chair and the Opposition for allowing me to say a few words in connection with this Bill.

• (1430)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Corbin in the chair.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Rather than go through the Bill clause by clause, since we have some 218 clauses and just going through them could keep us here all weekend, perhaps we could have the unanimous consent of the House to discuss the Bill under Clause 2. If this is permissible and we obtain the unanimous agreement of the Committee of the Whole, we could cover all aspects of the Bill and then approve it on a total basis. Would that meet with the approval of the committee?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, I think that is a wise suggestion. I understood that we would not debate it at this stage, after the three speakers, but perhaps the division on Clause 2 could apply to all other clauses in the Bill. Perhaps we could agree to that and that would solve the problem.

Mr. McDermid: That is the same thing.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Chairman, I am always very cognizant of what the Government House Leader says. My ears perk up whenever he makes a statement. I listen carefully and I want to make sure that the record is straight and clear. Certainly, if there was ever any undertaking given about not speaking during the course of committee stage, it never came from my lips. We had intended to ask certain questions. It is a very voluminous Bill, but we will pass all stages this afternoon. It was always contemplated and intended that we would have some questions and answers, especially since the Minister is present. It is a pleasure to see him back for a day.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Thank you.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We thought that during the course of the afternoon we would be able to ask a few questions, with the benefit of senior officials from the Department. However, I can assure the Government House Leader that we will expedite the passage of the Bill and that this matter will be dealt with today.

Mr. Pinard: I think that is fair. I never intended to muzzle my hon. colleague. I always like to hear him sing on Friday afternoon. Nevertheless, my proposal could still apply.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Absolutely.

Mr. McDermid: Yes.

Mr. Pinard: Questions could be asked on Clause 2 and once the division has taken place on that clause, the same vote could apply to the other clauses of the Bill. We could discuss the Bill under Clause 2, that would be fine. Once again, I never intended to prevent Hon. Members from asking questions, except I understood that one speaker per Party would be enough. Provided we have the Bill passed this afternoon, it is fine with me.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of my caucus I should like to indicate that we are quite willing to follow the procedure as outlined. We will deal with all clauses of the Bill under Clause 2, and the vote on Clause 2, could apply to the other clauses.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: I would like to rise on a point of order very briefly concerning House business. I should just like to inform the House that on Monday we will be dealing with Bill C-34 but, contrary to what I indicated yesterday, starting Tuesday morning, Wednesday, Thursday and so on, we will be dealing with Bill C-9.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Surprise, surprise!

CREE-NASKAPI (OF QUEBEC) ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-46, an Act respecting certain provisions of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement and the Northeastern Quebec Agreement relating principally to Cree and Naskapi local government and to the land regime governing Category 1A and Category IA-N land—Mr. Pepin (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development)—Mr. Corbin in the chair.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. In the Alberta legislature we quite often followed the practice of taking the title, Clause 2 and the preamble together, and unless a member asked for any other particular clause, agreement was given to passing them all. In that way no one had a comeback to say later that he did not have a chance to speak on Clause 24, Clause 28 or whatever.

The Chairman: There being no further points of order, the Chair will take it for granted and make it an order that the discussion on Clause 2 will encompass discussion on all other clauses, and when the question is put on Clause 2, it will apply to all remaining clauses.

On Clause 2—Definitions:

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, I have a series of questions which I should like to direct to the Minister this afternoon. The Cree and Naskapi represent about 25 per cent of the Department's regional office in Quebec. Because of the fact that the area involved is isolated, perhaps the figure is slightly higher. I should like to find out from the Minister whether, with the passing of this Act, any person-years will be decreased within the Department. What kind of monetary saving from a departmental point of view will take place? This concerns the entire area of self-government and the taking over of responsibility for their own affairs by the Cree and Naskapi, which they have so ably demonstrated they can do. What in fact will happen within the Department? Will the person-years be reduced?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I just want to say to the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown that we very much hope after a few months to reduce the personnel of the Department. That is my desire and it is the general aim of the Department.

It can be said that the Cree and Naskapi, even before this legislation, were already exercising a de facto type of Indian self-government, knowing that this was the spirit of the James Bay Agreement, knowing that both levels of government agreed, and knowing that there was almost unanimous support in the standing committee for this, as expressed by the Hon. Member, his colleagues and Members of the NDP. We stretched the Indian Act to its outer limit in this particular case in order to accommodate the self-governing practices of the Cree and Naskapi. We must keep that in mind when we say that much of the personnel of the Department, unless almost specifically invited by the Cree to involve themselves in some area, was not preoccupied with matters of the Cree and the Naskapi because they were self-governing in many real ways.

Mr. McDermid: I do not want to put words in the Minister's mouth. He may want to correct what I have to say. Is he saying that when the Cree took over their own responsibilities as far as education, health and social services were concerned, in fact there was a reduction in man-years in the Department for the Quebec region? I think that was what the Minister was alluding to, that that has already been done and, therefore, do not expect any further reduction in manpower staff.

• (1440)

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, not only will there be further reduction, but the case is even better from the Hon. Member's view. During the last few years we have been reducing personnel quite dramatically. I will get the figures for the Hon. Member. For example, we closed the Val d'Or office completely in my colleague's constituency. Before all this occurred it was a very active and significant office. We have been cutting down all along and intend now to accelerate the process as a result of that.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, if that is the case, could it not be reflected in the manpower of the Department which over the last few years has in fact increased? Although the Val d'Or office was closed, those jobs were not lost. Those person-years were shuffled to the regional office and to the head office in Ottawa. What should have happened did not happen.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I will carve out for the Hon. Member how this applies to Quebec in particular. Over the last four to five years we cut the personnel of the Department in absolute numbers by 1,200 people. That is the over-all reduction in staff. I suppose a rough rule of thumb is that if you take Quebec on the basis of its Indian population, you are probably talking about 200 people. I will get the specific figures for the Hon. Member.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, I have one final question on this point. We cannot then expect any further reduction in manpower, or can we? Will there be a further reduction because of the responsibilities that are being assumed by the Cree and Naskapi which, I might add, will be better administered because things will be done by themselves on a local basis?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I cannot give a precise number. I can give an undertaking that there will be a reduction in Quebec. In Quebec there are now only 12 personnel involved with the Cree and Naskapi. It can be seen that we are paring down. If we pare down much further, in terms of the Cree looking for certain responses that they want, they will complain if there is a further reduction.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, I will go to another subject which is important, namely funding. It has not been discussed in the debate so far. As the Minister well knows, there were some implementation problems with the James Bay Agreement from time to time. Can the Minister enlighten the Committee on the funding agreements? How will this be carried out? He might also wish to talk about the funding and how it will be guaranteed over the next number of years.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, counting operation and maintenance, it will be roughly $11 million a year, at least for this fiscal year under the Act. It is now $3.7 million. We anticipate through undertakings to the Cree that under the provisions of the Act there will be a further $8 million, making a total of $11 million a year.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, could we have some of the details? Is that given in a lump sum or a certain percentage at the beginning of the year? How will that happen? Will it be directed through the Quebec offices or directly to the Cree and Naskapi? Will the Minister go into a little more detail so that I can assure myself that the mechanisms set up will not be heavily bureaucratized and unduly hold the process up?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, this level of support is basic. You build on it each year. It is subject to negotiation each year, but it cannot drop below this level. I understand the first payment will go out in the next week or so. It will be a direct payment from the federal Government to the Cree.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, therefore the Minister does not envisage that the Quebec regional office will be in any way connected with this, that it will be pretty well handled from the federal office. The Minister said the first payment is going to be made. What is the agreement between the Department and the Cree and Naskapi on percentages as to how this will be funded? There must be some agreement as to how much of the total budget for the year will be given to them at the start of the year for their operations. How is that going to operate?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I am told that the moneys are paid directly to the Cree by the federal Government, that 75 per cent is up front and there is a holdback of 25 per cent until the accountability features of the Act are met, naturally, and then they flow. It is a one-time payment.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, will there be any new structures created within the Department to deal with the Cree and Naskapi or will it be business as usual with people in the Department?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, there are no new structures to be created in the Department. We already acceded in a sense almost independently of this Act at the request of the Cree secretariat to handle their concerns and channel them into action, in terms of negotiating things through the bureaucracy and getting a result without undue delay. That secretariat has two or three personnel. We intend to continue it because they are rather insistent that we do so. We acceded to their demand, much to their relief. That secretariat is already there, but we do not anticipate any new ones.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, my final questions are with regard to the commission to be set up. The Minister might expand a bit on what the commission intends to do, the estimated cost per year of the commission, what its powers are to be, if it will have any powers, and how it will report to Parliament. How does the Minister envisage that that will be carried out?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, perhaps the best way to handle this would be to refer to Part XII of the Bill. It sets out the membership, that the commission is responsible for the implementation of the Act and the terms of the members. The over-all mandate of the commission is to be responsible for the implementation of the Act and to prepare reports to Parliament. The duties of the Commission are clearly set out rather concisely on page 78, Clause 165. It states:

> The Commission shall
> (a) prepare biennial reports on the implementation of this Act, . . . investigate any representation submitted to it relating to the implementation of this Act, including representations relating to the exercise or non-exercise of a power under this Act and the performance or non-performance of a duty under this Act. . . .
> (3) The Commission may refuse to investigate—

That is the operative section in terms of the duties of the commission. As far as the cost is concerned, the cost of the Commission is estimated to be $1,597,000 to be spread over four years plus an upward adjustment for the Cree-Naskapi commission to be funded through contribution agreements with terms and conditions to be negotiated. May I repeat that figure? It is $1,597,000 over the four-year period of 1984-85 to 1988-89.

• (1450)

Mr. McDermid: That is funded separate from the agreement by the Department; is that correct?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That is over and above the $11 million to which I referred earlier.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, my next question deals with the appointment of members of this commission. Without naming specific names, perhaps the Minister could relay to us his philosophy regarding the make-up of that commission and who he would see as sitting on that particular commission.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, those are Governor in Council appointments. However, the agreement is quite clear, although it is not reflected here or in any other Act, that we will consult with the Cree and there will be an agreement with them about who will be on the commission. As we deal with a commission like the CLC or various other bodies of that kind which deal with their own affairs, we would consult with them and try to arrive at an agreement as to personnel. The appointments would then go through as Governor in Council appointments.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, the Minister will excuse me for asking that question but I did wawnt to get that answer on the record. From time to time some of the appointments that are made by the Government to some of these boards and commissions are questionable. The Minister for External Relations is questioning me with a puzzled look. However, he knows very well what I am talking about. I wanted to get the Minister's answer on the record to ensure that consultations would take place with the Cree and Naskapi regarding that commission.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I am glad the Hon. Member did that because he has now served the interests of the Cree by getting the assurance on the record of Hansard. However, it is also contained within the Bill itself. Clause 158 which can be found on page 76 of the Bill reads in part:

—a maximum of three individuals appointed by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Cree Regional Authority and the Naskapi band.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask one question of the Minister. Could the Minister briefly outline what the major difference will be, once this Act goes into effect, between the self-government provided for in the Bill and the self-government of a municipality?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, may I say that that is a very tough question because it calls for a very detailed and long answer. I will do my best to answer the question in a short time.

The powers given to the Cree-Naskapi are more extensive than those given to a local government, and I think if the Hon. Member would look at the Bill he would be inclined to agree with me about that. Clause 45 of the Bill deals with those powers.

I will simply read through some of my quick notes. They have the power to pass by-laws respecting the administration of band affairs, the internal management of the band, the regulation of buildings and other structures, the sanitary conditions of public and private property, the regulation of waste disposal, the establishment and operation of fire departments, the prohibition of the sale or exchange of alcohol, the possession and consumption of alcohol, the protection of the environment, the prevention of pollution, taxation for local purposes, the regulation of roads and transportation and the regulation of hunting, fishing and trapping.

Part of the whole essence of the Bill is the administration of lands and those powers are very extensive. I would say that in that area alone the powers are much more extensive than those given to municipalities. I would say that the bands have the responsibility of a government of a local municipality plus, and I would underline "plus".

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, I have one short question to ask. I realize that we wish to pass this legislation quickly. I am sure the Minister agrees with me that the housing, education, health, water and sewage conditions on most reserves throughout Canada are completely inadequate. I wonder how he sees this piece of legislation helping to bring those conditions in these regions up to a standard that is closer to the national norm. How does he see that happening through this piece of legislation?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, we are looking for the appropriate section of the Agreement now. The Hon. Member will recall the urgings of the Cree and Naskapi during the hearings of the standing committee. They felt, and legitimately so, that we were not living up to the spirit and intent of the Agreement. In the Agreement we said that as we went down the road, we should improve the infrastructure substantially for the Cree but that statement was not couched in wording that could cast a specific legal obligation.

In living up to the spirit of the Agreement, we made some $61 million in additional funds available. Much of that money was designed for the type of infrastructures just identified by the Hon. Member for Churchill. We tried to live up to that spirit.

I suppose one could say that the entire Agreement required the federal Government, as part of its obligations under the Agreement, to pay a greater degree of attention to and put a greater call on its financial reserves for the Cree, and perhaps that is the situation across the country generally. However, the Cree have every right to that special attention as a result of the Agreement that was negotiated. Much of that money has been spent and more of it is to be spent. Most of the $61 million has already been paid out, as the Hon. Member will recall from hearing that review announced.

The most relevant section of the James Bay and Northern Québec Agreement is Section 28.1.1 which reads as follows:

28.1.1 Programs, funding and technical assistance presently provided by Canada and Québec, and the obligations of the said governments with respect to such programs and funding shall continue to apply to the James Bay Crees on the same basis as to other Indians of Canada in the case of federal programs, and to other Indians in Québec in the case of provincial programs, subject to the criteria established from time to time for the application of such programs, and to general parliamentary approval of such programs and funding.

• (1500)

The allegation was that we were not doing that with them, we were not spending the same degree of program moneys for the Cree as we were for other Indians, because we charged against that anything they had won under the Agreement. Of course, we had to agree with them that that was fair.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, my question is of that general nature. If I understood the Minister correctly, we are granting—and I hate to use the word "granting" because I believe that they should have self-government—but, because of the stipulations of the Indian Act, we are passing another Bill which will grant them self-government. But we are not really sure if they will have adequate funding for health care, education, water and sewage and housing, which will enable them to provide an adequate government for their people. Are we not, in that case, building in failure by not providing adequate funding at the same time?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the Hon. Member knows the Cree leadership as I do, but I do not think they would have been urging us and pressuring all of us to pass this Cree-Naskapi Act if they had not thought that they had reached a pretty successful set of negotiations with the federal Government as far as funding is concerned. That might be unduly depreciating to their bargaining abilities. That is a dangerous type of depreciation, believe me.

The funding has been negotiated. I referred to the $11 million, which is a base. Price increases, inflation and so on will come to bear in succeeding years. It is subject to renegotiation. It cannot go below that level. The elements of the funding position have been agreed upon between the parties.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, does the Minister believe that the level of funding is adequate to provide the people of that area with adequate education, water and sewage, services and housing? Does he really believe that that money—considering how far behind they are in terms of health care, education, etc.—is adequate?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, if you look at the Tait report and the $61 million which has been negotiated and then you look at this fund, then I say, yes. The answer is yes, I do. In terms of comparability and taking into account the area and so on, yes, it is adequate. My hope would be that we could do the same—quite frankly, we do not have the money; it would undoubtedly be hundreds of millions of dollars—elsewhere in the particularly stark and depressing areas of the country. Billy Diamond and the Cree leadership are fully aware of that. It depends on what one compares it to. If we compare it to the funding in other areas in which Indian people live, it is far more adequate than some are receiving, I am sorry to say.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I have a very brief question. The taxing authority which is to be granted to bands under Clause 45(1)(h) will not be effective until such time as the Governor in Council has issued regulations. The Minister is undoubtedly aware of this. Could he tell us what progress has been made with respect to these regulations?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I would like to say through you, Mr. Chairman, to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, that we must sit down and have further discussions with the Cree as to what those regulations should be. We have not had very much time. We have been under a lot of pressure lately, not only with this legislation but with Indian self-government. We will not pass the regulation until we have had thorough consultations with the concerned parties. Obviously those regulations are designed to ensure uniformity and fairness. Those are the two principal criteria which we try to ensure in any type of taxing law.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I take it then that no work as yet has been done on the regulations as required under Clause 45(4). Clause 45(6), contemplates the collection of taxes in a form other than money. Could the Minister please tell us what he means by a form other than money?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, this is a feature that the Crees themselves wanted to include in the Bill. It would give the band administration the flexibility to levy taxes against one of their members. If that member had some substance or article other than money, and it was acceptable to the band in payment of taxes, they would have the flexibility to accept it as payment.

Mr. Nickerson: Does that clause contemplate the payment of taxes in labour? Are we going back to the old seigniorial system?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, after listening to statements made by the Hon. Member in the House, I dare say that I think the Cree are probably as progressive as he is, and perhaps more so. I do not know whether the Hon. Member is accusing them of running a feudal state, but I suppose it is possible. The person is not required to render a community service or labour. If he offers it in lieu of payment and the band wants to accept it, I guess they have the right to accept it.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I have a further question which deals with expropriation of the so-called lands IA and IA-N. The Province of Quebec as well as several other public bodies are to have expropriating authority. Could the Minister tell us what public bodies other than the Province of Quebec will have powers of expropriation over these lands?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, if the Hon. Member would look at page 56 of the Bill, Part VII sets out the parameters for this type of expropriation. It flows directly from the agreement entered into between the Government of Quebec, the Cree and the Government of Canada. Those powers of expropriation are stipulated in that part. "Other public bodies" obviously refers to entities and institutions such as Quebec Hydro. The degree and the parameters to which they can exercise their expropriation powers are set out on pages 56 to 58 of the Bill.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Chairman, I can read Part VII as well as the Minister can. In reading Part VII, the immediate question which jumps to mind is: What are these other bodies which have powers of expropriation? The Minister has informed us of one, namely, Hydro Quebec. Would we be correct in thinking that the James Bay Corporation or some other corporation might have the same power of expropriation? We are looking for a list of the bodies which have expropriating powers now.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, if the Hon. Member would look at Clause 118(b), it reads:

—any public body having the power of expropriation under the laws of the Province and specifically authorized by Quebec to carry out the expropriation in question.

• (1510)

That was agreed to. This just reflects what has already been in the agreement for some time.

Mr. Nickerson: You do not list the bodies.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): The agreement did not list the bodies. Therefore, the Act does not list the bodies. But I do not believe it would stretch anyone's imagination to know that it is boards such as Quebec Hydro and government agencies of that kind in Quebec as in other provinces which are given these powers. I will be pleased to supply the Hon. Member with a list of these types of public bodies if he is not already aware of them.

Mr. Nickerson: It is evident, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister does not know the answer to that question. If he would be kind enough to make a list and have that list circulated at a future date, I am sure we will be most grateful.

My final question, Sir, deals with the applicability of the Income Tax Act to residents of these lands, people who would be beneficiaries. Am I correct in assuming that income tax would not be payable by people resident on these 1A and 1A-N lands who are otherwise beneficiaries under the Act?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, they have to be Indian. They have to be Cree. They are covered here, obviously. And they have to be Indians living in 1A land. It does not apply to 1B land.

The Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Pursuant to the unanimous agreement expressed earlier, I will now put the question on Clause 2, and its resolution will apply to all clauses up to Clause 218, inclusive.

Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clauses 2 to 218 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin, for the Minister of Veterans Affairs, moved, seconded by Mr. Ouellet, that Bill C-39, An Act to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act and certain other Acts in relation thereto, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion? The Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet).

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell (Cardigan)), who is in Europe to take part in ceremonies commemorating the landing of Allied troops in Normandy, I have the pleasure of presenting this Bill which, I hope, will receive the approval of all Members of this House.

The amendments we intend to propose today will be of considerable benefit to veterans and their families.

Mr. Speaker, the changes we are proposing today will have a short and long-term impact on thousands of Canadians. The proposed amendments will provide, starting this year, for additional assistance to veterans who are in greatest need. They will release the necessary funding so that the Department can meet the needs of aging veterans.

Mr. Speaker, all these objectives can be achieved provided we have sound and careful management. I believe we can achieve a great deal by implementing programs that are not only desirable in human terms but also less costly than other options. The Government is therefore proposing amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act. The amendments, however, go beyond the purview of these two Acts. The most significant expenditures approved by Cabinet concern the Aging Veterans Program. These expenditures were not approved by the House because only a change in the regulations was required.

Nevertheless, I think it is important to provide details on improvements in the Aging Veterans Program, because they are so important and because we feel they are definitely preferable, as far as the program's effectiveness is concerned, to all the measures proposed today, which, we hope, will be adopted. That is to say, we could improve the program offered to veterans, a program that is in their interest and also in the interest of Canadian taxpayers, in such a way that, with amendments, it will be possible to harmonize two programs administered by two separate departments.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs would certainly have preferred to be in the House himself today to propose increases in the benefits paid to more than 40,000 recipients of War Veterans Allowances and Civilian War Allowances. Those people are under 65, but right now they do not receive as much federal assistance as do the recipients of those allowances who, because of their age, are eligible for old age security benefits and the guaranteed income supplement. Parliament acknowledged the unfairness of the situation as early as 1980 when Bill C-40 was passed. As a result of the adoption of the Bill introduced today, parity between both groups of recipients will become a reality in April 1986, after a series of annual increases. In the opinion of the Government, parity must be achieved immediately. We recommend that, as of July 1 next, recipients under 65 now receiving the single rate allowance be entitled to $20 more a month, and that married rate recipients be entitled to $25 more a month. This way, all veterans allowance recipients will be on the same footing regardless of age.

I am convinced that Hon. Members will support this Bill. It is obvious that recipients under the aid program for veterans less than 65 years of age do need additional financial assistance, particularly the 26,000 veterans now receiving the single rate allowance and the 13,000 widows who need that additional assistance. There is no need to emphasize that the veterans allowance is the main source of income of those people. It has been estimated that earlier parity will cost $16.8 million. Such expenditures are in keeping with the Government's commitment to give priority to the most needy.

The Minister is proposing other amendments to the Wars Veterans Allowance Act and to the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act. It is a matter of technicalities in most cases and, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will not go into that. However, I should like to say more about one of those amendments to the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act which will enable merchant marine personnel who served in Korean waters between 1950 and 1953 to apply for allowances.

Under the existing legislation, civilians who served aboard Canadian or Allied ships in Korea are not eligible for the civilian war allowances. That is unacceptable since civilians with similar service in dangerous waters during World Wars I and II are already eligible for such veterans allowances. That is why we want those servicemen or persons who were in Korea to be eligible as well.

Hon. Members will appreciate that department officials must adapt their administrative procedures concerning veterans affairs to those of the Department of National Health and Welfare so as to implement more equitably the old age security and guaranteed income supplement programs.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments will certainly entail considerable savings while making it possible for allowance recipients to maintain their special relationship with the Department of Veterans Affairs which serves them and, of course, to continue to avail themselves of the services of officials who represent and defend them within the Department of Veterans Affairs. I would like to mention that these changes will make the program easier to understand and more accessible.

I want to remind Hon. Members that, in all programs designed for senior citizens, simplicity is a major factor. In addition, Mr. Speaker, a great many allowance recipients, at present and in the future, will benefit financially from this new formula. Let me explain how we shall be able to provide better services while greatly reducing the red tape involved.

At the present time, an allowance recipient who also gets the guaranteed income supplement and old age security pension must file a separate statement of income, first with the Department of Veterans Affairs, and then with the Department of National Health and Welfare. These two Departments process the statements separately, even though they contain virtually the same information. This overlapping of efforts must be eliminated, and the sooner the better. This is why the amendments we are suggesting will eliminate this duplication. Beginning April 1, 1986, all allowance recipients who get both the old age security pension and the guaranteed income supplement will present a single statement to the Department of National Health and Welfare. These veterans will therefore have one form less to fill in, which means that Government interference in their lives will be reduced.

The data collected under the two programs can then be directed to the Department of Veterans Affairs by way of transfers between the data banks. We are at the age of electronics and computers, and I believe that these can be used in the best interests of Government administration.

I want to emphasize that allowance recipients will not be cut off from the Department of Veterans Affairs. The Department will continue to assess eligibility according to length of service and the War Veterans Allowance Board will continue with its important process of examining and hearing the appeals independently. In addition, the Bureau of Pension Advocates will offer for the first time its services to those who apply for allowances and also to recipients, which will enhance in my opinion the relationship between these veterans and their Department.

Mr. Speaker, the major changes will include a switch to the calendar year for the allowance programs, as is already used for the old age security pension and the review periods for the administration of the guaranteed income supplement. This change will benefit most recipients of veterans' assistance. At the present time, the Department uses the current calendar year to determine income while the Department of National Health and Welfare refers to the income reported by the taxpayer for the previous year. By using the same method as Health and Welfare Canada, it is estimated that $2.5 million more will be paid out to needy veterans. It should also be noted that the formula used to determine the guaranteed income supplement is not as involved as the one used by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, only allowance recipients who are eligible both for the old age security pension and for the guaranteed income supplement will file a statement of income with Health and Welfare Canada in 1986. Those who are under 65 years of age will continue to provide all income-related information to the DVA. In order to bring both programs into harmony, the forms used in connection with the War Veterans Allowances Program will be simplified to meet GIS standards. All War Veterans Allowance recipients, whatever their age, will enjoy the benefits of the new income filing methods.

• (1530)

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, War Veterans Allowances recipients will get the best of both worlds. They will continue to have their casual earnings and interest income exempted, something other GIS recipients are not entitled to.

To implement these changes will cost some $3 million in subsidies and contributions, in addition to $3.5 million in operating costs. These expenses are a careful use of public funds, because they will result in major savings in the forthcoming years. We expect for instance that when the War Veterans' programs, Civilian War Allowances programs, GIS and OAS programs have been brought into harmony, by 1988-89, the administration of all these programs will require 157 fewer person-years.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, these changes will allow the Department of Veterans Affairs to re-direct its funds, in order to meet better the increasing needs of veterans for health and social services.

I would like to say to the House that there are many more amendments of a housekeeping nature. When one refers to Bill C-39, one can realize that an effort has been made to improve the entire administrative mechanism and to ensure the satisfactory operation of the services made available to veterans.

I should also add that the Department of Veterans Affairs, once some savings are made, will be ready to extend the program to aging veterans. It is perhaps the most important aim, the priority of the Department and its minister at this time. Indeed, as the expenditures related to the administration of allowances are reduced, thanks to administrative and technological changes, we will be in a position to earmark more resources to assist ageing veterans to live with dignity and self-dependency.

The Hon. Members will remember that an innovative program was created in April 1981 under the principle that aging individuals wish to remain as independent as possible as long as possible. Every indication is to the effect that most veterans would rather receive some assistance which would allow them to live at home rather than in a hospital or a nursing home.

The assistance provided under the program can be very simple or very complicated. The problems vary as much as the services made available by the Department. Some veterans need the care of a nurse or a physiotherapist at home. Others will have to be treated at a clinic or will merely need to have snow removed at their door in the winter or the grass cut in the summer. In some cases the handicapped may need a wheelchair ramp.

The whole range of services to assist aging veterans is, and will be in the years to come, a continuing priority for the authorities of the Department of Veterans Affairs. Over 2,000 veterans have already welcomed enthusiastically the benefits of this program. I need only mention the enthusiastic and determined support of all veterans' associations. The only cloud, as it were, is that the program does not reach enough veterans.

Today I can announce, on behalf of my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, that many veterans will become eligible for the benefits provided under the Aging Veterans Program over the next five years. The program's range will be broadened in four stages. First of all, starting October 1, 1984, it will be available to veterans of 65 or over, receiving a disability pension and a veterans allowance. It will also be offered to veterans over 75 who are receiving an allowance, but not a pension.

Second, starting January 1, 1986, all other beneficiaries under this program between the ages of 65 and 74 will be eligible.

Third, after January 1, 1983, applications will be accepted from veterans who are 65 or over and receiving a disability pension but not receiving assistance from Veterans Affairs because of the benefits provided under the Old Age Security Act.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, on January 1, 1988, the program will provide assistance for veterans of 65 and over, who are not receiving a disability pension but who did service in a real war theatre and can not receive assistance from Veterans Affairs because of the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Speaker, the program will be offered to a greater number of veterans. It will also offer a wider range of services. It will provide transportation services for eligible veterans. This new benefit is very important to people who would otherwise be confined to their homes. The program will provide up to $600 annually to defray transportation expenses of veterans who must leave their homes occasionally to go shopping or to carry out any of the transactions that are customary in the course of our lives and which these veterans, having reached a certain age, are no longer able to do alone. Consequently, the $600 per year for transportation will certainly be very useful. Moreover, we will improve on present services, namely home care, out-patient care and institutional care.

All things considered, expanding the Aging Veterans Program will cost about $101 million. This is a very substantial amount, but I believe that all the Hon. Members will recognize that such expenditures are fully justified, not only in human terms, but also in terms of financial responsibility for the Government of Canada.

What are the alternatives to the Aging Veterans Program? In 1981, 67,000 veterans were over 76 years of age. This figure will double within the next few years. You do not have to be an expert in gerontology to understand that many of these people are not as self-sufficient as they used to be. There is also no doubt that the need for chronic care beds will increase dramatically during the next fifteen years. We believe that, with respect to the care given to older people, there is too much emphasis placed on institutional care in the health and social service field and not enough on the services which can be provided to these people in their own homes. I believe that, in due course, we shall have to shift the emphasis to home services away from institutional care.

Mr. Speaker, expanding the Aging Veterans Program also offers another avenue which will be much less costly for the taxpayers. Government officials have estimated that, in 1991, $57 billion will be spent under the Aging Veterans Program to provide assistance to about 14,000 veterans. In other words, if the same amount were used to help veterans in hospitals, we would be able to help only 1,200 of them, while we shall be able, under this new program, to provide assistance, not to 1,200, but to 14,000.

Mr. Speaker, over and above the financial benefits provided by the program for the Government and the Canadian public, I believe that older people much prefer to be helped in providing for their own needs under the program we are proposing today.

During the debates on the Canada Health Act, a large number of Members of Parliament from both sides of the House have urged the Government to consider new methods and approaches to the whole issue of health care. The high cost of hospitalization has often been mentioned throughout the debates. Federal and provincial authorities were urged to find alternatives. In my opinion, it can be said the Department of Veterans Affairs has indeed been a leader in that field. The Aging Veterans Program meets their obvious needs, as it does those of elderly Canadians as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I am sincerely convinced that the people who are concerned about the aging Canadian population and who are already making plans for the day when the majority of Canadians will be over 60 or 65 years old will review with interest and attention the results of that program administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs. Veterans will grow older faster than the rest of Canadians. By helping them today, we are preparing ourselves to help other Canadians, and a good many of our existing social programs were set up in the first place to help veterans and their families. I think that the Aging Veterans Program is in keeping with that tradition, and what we want to do today for those veterans is what we shall be doing tomorrow for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the program I have just described is probably the last of a long series of measures Canada will have to take to fulfil its commitment towards veterans and their dependents. Our country looked after its veterans when they returned from the war zone. It cared for their war wounds. It helped them reintegrate civilian life, it gave them support when they were raising their families. Today, those veterans and spouses in many cases are or will soon be senior citizens. Canada has an opportunity to help them at the end of their lives. We owe them that much, it is a challenge we should meet.

Mr. Speaker, the War Veteran's Charter is a document that was prepared prudently by members from all parties in this House. It was supported from all sides. I am convinced the House will be happy to enact proposals that will add a noble chapter that will do credit to all members in this House, because I am confident they will unanimously support the bill.

[English]

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat puzzled as to how the House can get this Bill through this afternoon. We shared time on the two Bills that were here, but we had not foreseen that the NDP would waste so much time getting the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) thrown out of the House on a trumped up case of using unparliamentary language. That was time we could desperately use now to get this Bill through.

I would like to thank the Minister for his presentation of the facts about the Bill. No doubt his speech was prepared by senior departmental officers. Listening to it I found that it came through well and I believe some of the detail he has filled in will be useful to have on the record. Bill C-39 is the first piece of veterans legislation to be introduced by the current Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Bennett). It is a shame that his other duties have precluded him from being here to speak on the final veterans Bill which this Government will ever pass. Part of the Bill is niggling in its attitude and a lot has been left out. If we were trying to get this Bill through the House in the normal course with its being referred to committee, we would have had an opportunity to move many amendments that we would like to have made to it. But in the interest of getting half a loaf rather than none, we are willing to forgo that part of the proceedings.

This Bill includes a number of provisions which address serious inequities in the way in which veterans of different age groups, veterans' widows and orphans are dealt with under the current legislation. One of the good things is that the Bill gives veterans access to the legal assistance which they need in order to initiate appeals to the War Veterans Allowance Board, giving war veterans allowance recipients some of the resources available to veterans disability pensioners. The Bill includes a number of housekeeping measures which amend the Act in order to initiate the action which will integrate the War Veterans Allowance Program with the Old Age Security Program for all veterans over 65, and to do this by 1986.

The Minister's announcement of this legislation was coupled with an announcement that the Aging Veterans Program was to be made available to a larger number of veterans, and that some additional types of costs would be covered under the program. This is commendable, but we had expected considerably more. We expected to see some attention to the issue of eligibility for war veterans allowance for those who volunteered to serve their country but were not sent overseas. We hoped that the Minister would finally take action which would have permitted those needy Canadian veterans living outside the country to apply for war veterans allowance without incurring the expense of returning to Canada for a token 12 months. Those who can afford to come back to Canada for 12 months usually do not need the war veterans allowance as badly as those who cannot afford to come home for the year. We believed the Minister would remain true to his promise to increase the interest income deduction for veterans so that they would be able to save what they can without losing part of their allowance as a consequence.

This legislation does not accomplish any of these things. The Minister has made much of the fact that Bill C-39 will finally rectify an injustice which the Government formally recognized but did little about in 1980. Veterans under age 65, both married and single, have been receiving substantially less under the War Veterans Allowance Program than have their comrades who are over 65. In 1980, the Government decided to reduce the shortfall, which amounted to over $1,000 per year for married recipients, by the princely amount of $12 per month for these veterans each year for seven years. Now, after requiring these veterans to suffer through five years of these paltry increases, and a full year after the Minister promised to eliminate the shortfall, the Government has seen fit to do what should have been done in the first place—bring the WVA ceiling for veterans under age 65 to the same level as that which applies to their comrades over 65.

We have been calling upon the Minister for three full months to clarify his policy in regard to the GIS supplement increase. He has been unable to give a straightforward answer in the House or in committee. Now, less than a month before the first GIS increase of $25 is to be put in place, the Minister has finally announced his plans to pass on this increase to single veterans.

Many of the amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act contained in this Bill are intended to make the provisions of the Act more equitable. One will reinstate the right of a widow to an allowance if a second marriage breaks down, without concern for the length of the second marriage or the reason for the termination. This is a commendable initiative on the part of the Minister. Traditional family structures are being challenged in our society and, as unfortunate as that trend may be, it is imperative that it be recognized and provision made for its victims.

A question arises with respect to this aspect of the legislation. We would like the assurance of the Minister that all veterans' widows will be eligible to take advantage of this provision, regardless of when a second marriage took place or was dissolved. In other words, we would like to know that those veterans' widows who are currently ineligible for reinstatement of their allowance because of the circumstances associated with the termination of the second marriage, will be eligible for reinstatement of their benefits on the day on which the Act comes into force.

The Bill provides, in addition to its duties under the Pension Act, that the Bureau of Pensions Advocates shall provide a counselling service and assistance to applicants for allowances and recipients with respect to appeals to the War Veterans Allowance Board. The Minister has recognized that WVA recipients are by definition unable to afford their own legal counsel in order to undertake appeals to the board. There is no indication that he has taken into account the fact that the Bureau of Pensions Advocates is encountering great difficulty in fulfilling its obligations to disabled pensioners who have been its clients in the past. To add to the mandate of the bureau, while at the same time failing to increase its resources, will result in the same sort of backlogs in the allowance appeals system as veterans are currently encountering in the pension appeal system.

The Minister will know that this matter has been raised in committee. The representative of the Bureau of Pensions Advocates was unable to indicate that the resources of the bureau had been increased. The Minister must ensure that neither disability pensioners nor WVA recipients are forced to wait months until their claims are adjudicated.

Another provision of the Bill will make it possible for a couple forced to reside apart by circumstances such as the need for hospitalization to receive WVA at twice the single rate. In fact, the Minister made public reference to the fact that he had implemented this very reasonable policy as long ago as May, 1983. Now he has introduced the legislation to put it in place. What has been the policy over this period and under what authority has the Minister been acting, one might ask?

Another provision in the Bill removes all reference in the Act to the level of interest income which can be earned by a recipient without a reduction in his allowance. Yet, in May, 1983, in speaking to the Pacific Command of the Royal Canadian Legion, the Minister stated that the proposal for an increase in the amount of allowable interest income was under close scrutiny. More recently, on March 14, 1984, the Minister made a definite statement in this regard. In answer to a question which I put to him in the House, the Minister said:

> With respect to increasing the interest reduction, as I have indicated to the Hon. Member, I will be proposing a number of legislative amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act as a follow-up to the study which was conducted over the past number of months, and a provision to increase the interest earnings deduction will be one of those proposals.

This Bill does not live up to the promises of the Minister. The interest earning deduction is not increased. The Bill simply deletes reference to the limit on interest income from the War Veterans Allowance Act. Henceforth, the limit will be set by regulation, and there is no indication that the Minister intends to increase the limit when he draws up the necessary regulations. We cannot be sure what the Minister's intentions are because, although these regulations will have to be in place when the Bill comes into force, the Minister has not made their contents known to the House.

The Minister has gone on at length about the increased flexibility which will be available to him when he is able to adjust the interest income limit without having to introduce legislation. Parliamentarians would be much more in favour of according the Minister the control he would like, if we had some reason to believe that he will be more prepared to amend regulations in the future than he has been to amend legislation in the past.

While we had been led to expect more from the Minister in some areas, the provisions of the Bill devoted to changing the way in which the Act is administered and to integrating the War Veterans Allowance Program into the Old Age Security Program for veterans over age 65 were unexpected.

The responsibility of the district authorities in adjudicating initial applications for WVA is to be transferred to the Minister or, more realistically, to officials of his Department in district offices. This represents a fundamental change in the principles governing the application and appeal system of the program, and it has a potentially negative impact upon the interests of veterans. The right of veterans to appeal negative decisions made by administrators is an integral component of the program and must be protected from political or bureaucratic interference, and it is not. Similarly, the rights of all veterans across Canada to a consistent interpretation of the Act must be safeguarded by both the Minister and the War Veterans Allowance Board.

One of the most serious and urgent issues associated with the War Veterans Allowance Program is completely neglected by this legislation. Specifically, no effort has been made to clarify or broaden the criteria for eligibility for the War Veterans Allowance Program. A couple of months ago I drew to the attention of the Minister the inconsistency in the decision of the War Veterans Allowance Board concerning the admissibility of travel to Prince Edward Island as service in a theatre of actual war. I suggested that it was time the whole concept of service eligibility was reviewed. After extensive discussion of this issue in committee, I had hoped to see some initiative in the Bill which would have clarified the matter once and for all. I would like to see all those who volunteered for overseas service and who served for a year or more made eligible to apply for the allowance without regard to where or in what capacity they served their country. Another omission from the legislation is any consideration for the needs of Canadian veterans living overseas.

In omitting to deal with these matters in this so-called overhaul of the program, the Minister is negligent in the performance of his duty. It is his duty to represent the interests of all Canadian veterans, including those who are unable to represent themselves. The Minister accompanied his introduction of this Bill with the announcement of a phased-in extension of eligibility under the Aging Veterans Program to recipients of war veterans allowance. I am pleased the Minister will be making the program more accessible to WVA recipients, but I should like to see this done immediately, without the four-year phase-in. All needy veterans over age 65 should be eligible now.

There are inconsistencies in delivery at the local level. The Minister cited administrative limitations as the reason for the decision to phase in the extension of the program to those veterans who need it most. We expect, therefore, that the Minister will take steps to ensure that a comprehensive policy manual will be designed to enable his officials to administer the program with a full understanding of its principles and a consistent application of the relevant regulations.

In his announcement which accompanied the Bill, the Minister made reference to the eligibility of disability pensioners who receive WVA or are unable to receive it because of their old age security benefits. One assumes that those disability pensioners who now receive assistance under the program will continue to be eligible. However, the Minister gives no indication that he is prepared to assist other disability pensioners to maintain self-sufficiency in their own homes.

Many elderly disability pensioners are not eligible for the Aging Veterans Program at present because their difficulties are not directly related to their pensioned condition. Disability pensions are deducted dollar for dollar from the war veterans allowance, so that single pensioners who receive a pension at the 60 per cent level are ineligible for WVA.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I see that we are approaching four o'clock, at which time we would normally adjourn government business for the day.

• (1600)

As my colleague from Victoria has pointed out, we are anxious to see this Bill go through all stages this afternoon, notwithstanding the delay we have been faced with on the business of the House. There have been some discussions. I have certainly discussed this with my colleague who is bringing forward a Senate Private Members' Bill in Private Members' Hour. There might be a disposition in the House to not see the clock to allow us to proceed through all stages on the understanding that, at the conclusion of this legislation, we proceed to Private Members' Hour, at which time, I understand, the Bill being presented by my colleague will also receive the approval of the House in all stages this afternoon.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, that is the understanding that has been discussed, that we would not see the clock and that we would continue. Certainly the Government is of the view that this Bill should receive all three readings today and be passed into law. We would ask that you not see the clock but that we proceed with all stages of the Bill now before us. Upon completion of the Bill, we will proceed to Private Members' Hour and deal only with the Senate Private Members' Bill. Upon completion of all stages of that Bill, we will adjourn the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, we agreed with the proposal made by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Member who just spoke on behalf of the Government. We are prepared for the Chair not to see the clock until we have completed both Bills.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is sometimes difficult for the Chair not to see the many clocks in the Chamber. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its wisdom and generosity. I was speaking about the difficulty of disability pensioners. I can perhaps sum it up by saying that if their disability is 60 per cent, they are unable to get on the war veterans allowance, which in turn means that they cannot get the assistance allowance of up to $6,000 per year which might permit them to remain in their own home, as they could if they were on war veterans allowance. It is a kind of Catch-22 situation. The disability keeps them from getting WVA, which in turn keeps them from getting the assistance that would allow them to maintain their own homes, which would be cheaper for us all in the long run.

The Minister made reference in his announcement to the upgraded services to be offered under the program. A transportation allowance can now be paid to a maximum of $600 per year. What the Minister's announcement does not make clear is that all other maximum payments under the program remain fixed at the levels that were established in 1981. Statistics Canada figures for March, 1984 indicate that the dollar now has a purchasing power of 82.5 cents in comparison with the 1981 dollar. Veterans cannot pay 80 cents on the dollar for the home care or home modifications which they require.

There are some shortcomings in the Pension Act as a result of this which I would like to point out. Much has been made of the fact that this Bill amends the War Veterans Allowance Act to make it consistent with the Pension Act with regard to the treatment of dependent children and the right of veterans to legal counsel. No effort has been made to address other inconsistencies in these two pieces of legislation.

Under the War Veterans Allowance Act, the widow of a deceased veteran who had been receiving WVA at the married rate may continue to receive the allowance at this rate for a full year following the death of the veteran. This permits sufficient time for a bereaved spouse to recover from the emotional shock of her loss. Many fixed expenses, particularly housing, cannot be easily adjusted in the space of a month. Other contractual arrangements which have been made for the care of the veteran can only be terminated without notice by the payment of a penalty.

The Pension Act, which governs the payment of disability pensions and other special allowances to veterans suffering from medical conditions related to their service, does not recognize the needs of newly bereaved widows. Under these provisions, any pension or allowance received by a disability pensioner ceases to be payable on the first day of the month following the death of the veteran. If the Minister were to have addressed the inconsistencies in these two Act, he should have amended the Pension Act to ensure that the widows of disability pensioners receive the same consideration as the widows of war veterans allowance recipients.

We would like to see the full disability pension of the veteran continued for a year following his death in those cases. Similarly, we would continue the attendance or the exceptional incapacity allowance received by some of the most severely disabled veterans for a full year following the death of the veteran.

Another amendment of the Pension Act which we would have liked the Minister to have included in this package, and this is very important, would entrench the principle that the 100 per cent rate of disability pension should reflect parity with the average wage of five unskilled categories of public servants or the increase in the consumer price index, whichever is greater.

In 1972, there was mutual agreement by a joint government-veterans committee established by the Minister of Veterans Affairs that the disability pension at basic single rates would be tied to a composite of five unskilled categories of public servants' rates of pay. Since then the Government has passed legislation increasing the basic rate effective July 1, 1973 and July 1, 1978, aligning it with the average of these five categories. However, this is not enshrined in the legislation and the veterans have to come cap in hand to get it each time that they have fallen behind, often quite a distance; it has been up to $600 per year.

As far as the Dieppe veterans are concerned, we had hoped the Minister would include a provision in the Bill to increase the allowance payable to those Canadian veterans captured at Dieppe who were imprisoned for years under extraordinarily harsh conditions. We would like it raised to 40 per cent of the full disability pension. The Minister, and many other Members of this House, are aware of the studies by Mr. Justice Thane A. Campbell in 1953 and Dr. J. Douglas Hermann in 1973 which described the conditions endured by the Dieppe veterans. Now the Dieppe veterans are forced to demonstrate on Parliament Hill in an effort to make their needs known to the Government. The Progressive Conservative members in this House recognize the needs of these veterans and condemn the Minister for his failure to address this important matter.

We on this side of the House welcome this legislation. It is long overdue. It rectifies a number of serious inequities in the War Veterans Allowance Program. It neglects a number of other equally serious problems which we would have expected to see dealt with in a piece of legislation touted by the Minister as a major overhaul of the program.

This Bill does nothing for the veterans receiving disability pensions or for their widows. It completely disregards the serious problems which I have identified today and which other members of my Party have brought to the attention of the Minister in committee. The Minister's announcement made no reference to these disability pensioners. He did not even clarify their status with respect to the Aging Veterans Program. His silence on the subject of the long delays which these veterans are encountering in the pension appeal process is quite deafening. However, we are not prepared to delay passage of the Bill despite our reservations about its shortcomings.

We would have had a dozen amendments had there been time available. However, we are worried. We can see the calendar as well as the clock. This Bill must get through before the end of June. There are few days left. For that reason, I do not intend to present any amendments to the Committee of the Whole stage.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Minister and the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) about the need to get this legislation through even though, as the Member for Victoria said, it is not good enough and does not go far enough. In light of the calendar, it is better to have this amount of the loaf than nothing.

I will touch on only two or three items. Before doing that, I draw to the attention of the House, and I know this will be greeted with agreement and approval, the contribution made since 1942, when our veterans were the Armed Forces, both in Canada and overseas being fought for, stood up for and advocated by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who is in the Chamber today. He has spent many years working on behalf of the veterans of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1610)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to touch upon two or three points regarding the matter of war veterans allowances for those veterans who do not reside in Canada. I have never been able to understand the departmental reasoning behind requiring such veterans to return to Canada for one year in order to remain eligible to receive benefits. We received one answer to that question as recently as June 6.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), raised a question regarding veterans being denied the benefits received by every other eligible veterans simply because they cannot return to Canada and live in Canada for one year. Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, the executive director to the executive assistant of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) as quoted by the Hon. Member for Beaches, said that the only reason these veterans must return to Canada for one year is so that the Department of Veterans Affairs can get to know them. I would presume that the Department of Veterans Affairs got to know these veterans before it gave them a war veterans allowance.

Once a veteran qualifies for war veterans allowance, the country in which he lives is of no significance. Canada has reciprocal agreements with many other countries for old age pensions, guaranteed income supplements and Canada pensions among others. The place of a veteran's residence should have absolutely nothing to do with his ability to receive the war veterans allowance. I would be quite happy to stay here another 10 minutes so that the Minister could quickly draft an amendment to add to the Bill so that we may discuss it when we go into Committee of the Whole in a few minutes' time. Such an amendment would put an end to that kind of nonsense.

A problem that I have run into ever since I came to Parliament in 1968 and a problem that all other Members face is the length of time it takes for the Government to make decisions. It does not matter whether or not the decisions to be made deal with disability pensions, war veterans allowance or widows' pensions. It takes a great deal of time. I once dealt with a case that took four years to resolve. The Government finally agreed with the case as it was presented in the first place and the veteran received $28,000 in back benefits. However, it took four years for that to happen.

The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) wrote to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) on May 28, 1984. I must say in passing that I sincerely regret the Minister's inability, for whatever reason, to pilot his Bill through the House because it is so darn seldom that this ever happens and it takes so darn long to have a veterans' Bill put before the House.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West, wrote to the Minister on behalf of a veteran, Mr. Joseph Wrangler, who has been pursuing his settlement since 1952. That is more than 30 years. This veteran recently received a letter from the Bureau of Pensions Advocates in Vancouver, which was dated February 13, 1984. However, he received that letter on May 15, 1984. One immediately wonders about the efficiency of Canada Post, but it turns out that the delay was not the fault of Canada Post.

When the representative of the Vancouver office was questioned about why the letter took three months to reach Mr. Wrangler, his reply was that inexperienced staff were causing a backlog. The submission to Ottawa and the letter advising of it did not get mailed from the Vancouver office until a full two months after it was written. That is surely no way to serve veterans, whether their cases are justified and legitimate or not.

The Hon. Member for Victoria brought up the question of the means test and the matter of interest income. If a veteran is entitled to a disability pension or a war veterans allowance or if his spouse or orphaned dependants are entitled to such benefits, those benefits should be exempt from any kind of means test. If, as rarely happens, the recipient of such benefits is extremely well to do, he will hopefully be paying a lot of income tax on all of his other income, regardless of its source. Surely such benefits which are paid to recipients by the Government of Canada should not be subject to means tests.

An interest income amounting to $500 a year is not extremely uncommon these days. If a veteran who is receiving benefits is able to save money and earn a few hundred dollars a year in interest, I submit that he should be able to keep that income without having anyone looking over his shoulder and hitting him up for payments under the tax system.

The benefits of a veteran who is drawing either a disability pension or war veterans allowance should have nothing to do with his benefits under the old age pension or GIS. The benefit that is received from the Department of Veterans Affairs should not be deductible from the GIS. Again, a recipient of benefits will pay tax on those portions of income that are taxable. Should a beneficiary of the Department of Veterans Affairs happen to be well to do, he will be paying taxes for other reasons.

I do not know whether or not the war veterans allowance should be integrated with the GIS and old age assistance plans. At first blush, I do not think that they should be integrated. Prior to coming to Parliament, I experienced such an integration where I was employed. We thought we would be able to receive the benefits of both a company pension plan and the Canada Pension Plan. We thought that they would be stacked, and they ended up being integrated, so we received a little bit of each instead of all of both.

It seems to me that any benefits that veterans are entitled to receive should be exempt from deduction from any other benefits like old age assistance, pension, guaranteed income supplement or Workmen's Compensation Board payments. Of course, incomes earned outside of those kinds of benefits will be taxed in the normal manner.

Although the Government has yet to act on it, we support, as do all Members of the House, the increase to the pensions received by the Dieppe veterans, and particularly those who were held in shackles as prisoners of war for months and months. We believe that even 40 per cent of the pension would be little enough. We are only asking that that benefit be raised from the present 20 per cent to 40 per cent. We can do no less than that for those veterans.

Finally, I would like to mention that just two days ago ceremonies were held and tributes were paid in this House, all over Europe and particularly in Normandy, regarding D-Day. It is not only D-Day that we were commemorating. It is a large number of other occasions, whether it was Hong Kong, Vimy Ridge, Dieppe, Normandy, Monte Cassino, Sicily or wherever. For those who did not come back, we must see to it that what they did was not done for nothing. We must see to it that those who did come back are entitled to more than what we are presently providing. Even though we are doing relatively well compared to other countries, it is nothing to brag about. Mr. Speaker, as sure as you are sitting there and I am standing here, if those who did not come back were here now, they would be saying on behalf of those who did come back that we must do more than what is done by this Bill.

If you walk, Mr. Speaker, among the gravestones of a cemetery of Canadian veterans, you will see that, whether they be 17, 18, 19, 21 or 22 years of age, they come from all parts of the country. There are English, French, Indian, Ukrainian and other names of the soldiers buried side by side. The first thing which went through my mind is that we must see to it that what they did was not done for nothing. Whether it is for peace or for the welfare and good order of our country, and most particularly the welfare of our veterans who did come back, we can do no less than that. This is the fourth, fifth or sixth occasion in 16 years on which we have dealt with amendments to veterans legislation. Every time it has been chintzy governments who have held back. They could find a lot more money to spend on a lot of other things. However, they always held back, chiselled, or would not do what Members from all sides of the House would have supported in record time.

I would like to comment briefly on the subject of our Indian veterans. Anyone who lived in rural Canada where there were Indian reservations knows about the activities over the decades of some, if not most, of what were then called Indian agents. Most, if not all, are now gone. The Indian veterans were inadequately treated, compared to the rest of the veterans, but treated even worse once they returned to the reserve. I know that there are not many involved, but even if there are only a few hundred, it seems to me that there is room for special consideration to make up for what was either prevented from happening or should have happened a few decades ago.

I hope we can deal with this Bill in the next few minutes. We will support it. It would be difficult, if not impossible, for the Hon. Member for Victoria or myself to move any amendments, because that would call for the spending of money and we are not allowed to do that. I just wish that the Minister who presented the Bill on behalf of the Minister of Veterans Affairs would bring in one or two minor amendments that would improve the legislation. If that could happen, the Government would be surprised how quickly the House would give its approval.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Corbin in the Chair.

Mr. Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1—

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Chairman, I hope this is the only time that I will rise during this stage of the Bill. I am sorry to have to put the House to so much trouble over one simple question.

Clause 1(10) of Bill C-39 amends the definition of the terms "widow" and "widower" in subsection 2(1) of the War Veterans Allowance Act. Subsection 2(3) of that Act describes those who may be deemed to be the spouse or the widow of a veteran as one who has been residing with a member of the opposite sex to whom he is not legally married.

There may well be cases in which a veteran has a legal spouse, for whom he has a legal or at least a moral responsibility, but has been living with another individual who is deemed to be his spouse under the definition of the Act. Clause 9 of the Bill amends Section 15 of the Act to enable the Minister to intervene in cases in which the recipient of an allowance is not maintaining any person for whom he has a legal responsibility.

What is the situation with respect to the payment of a widow's allowance in those cases in which the veteran has left a legal widow for whom he was responsible before his death as well as a deemed widow as described in the Act? I think there has been an omission which will mean that some veterans will have left behind two widows, and there would be a responsibility on the part of the state for both of those widows under the Act as it now reads.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Department is entitled to pay only one allowance. The general practice has been that the money would normally go to the person who spent the longer period of time with the veteran. In other words, if the second marriage had only been for a period of one year, and the first marriage had been for a period of 25 years, it is clear that the first widow would receive the allowance.

In cases in which the two widows have lived with the veteran for an equal number of years, that obviously creates a more difficult problem. However, in most cases I understand that the majority applies and the allowance would be given to the person who had spent a longer period of time with the veteran.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Chairman, I have no further questions.

Mr. Benjamin: Supplementary to the question just raised and the Minister's response, I know of a case which has been referred to the Department in which a veteran's widow, who is drawing benefits, has had her benefits split in half between herself and a previous spouse. The previous spouse is called "a divorced widow". I have checked with a couple of lawyers and have found that there is no such thing as a divorced widow in law. Before the veteran died, he had remarried, so how can the first wife be a divorced widow? Surely the second wife is the widow. But 10 or 12 years after the fact, after his death, the benefits drawn by that veteran were divided equally between a "divorced widow" who had already received a full property settlement, half of all the property, and $80,000 in cash settlements, and his real divorced widow. This is 12 or 14 years after the fact. How many divorced widows can a veteran have? It is not that they can do much about it after they have gone up to the great Flanders Fields, but how many divorced widows can a veteran have? Where does this end? There may have been some veterans who married and remarried three or four times and so there would be three or four widows. You are either divorced or are a widow, but you are not both. In this case the veteran remarried and, after some 10 or 12 years of marriage, he died, and his benefits are going to someone he would not have even seen for 15 years. Where does the Department get the jurisdiction or justification for that? It seems to me that if that veteran, or any others like him, had the funds to take you to court, they would probably win.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman, obviously, if the Hon. Member is accurate in his facts and if the lawyers of the person could go to court and win, I am sure that they would go to court and win. I do not see this, therefore, as a case which is the rule. It is probably very unique and an exception. I even wonder if it is under this Act, if it is not under the Canada Pension Act. I would like to know more of the details of the case before giving an opinion. I appreciate the Hon. Member's point, but I would just like to find out if it is really a living case or a hypothetical case.

Mr. Benjamin: It is a living case.

Mr. Ouellet: If it is a living case, we will follow through on it and will see what can be done.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the circumstances in which the Minister finds himself today, but perhaps his officials could be of some assistance. There are a number of senior citizens in Canada today who have come to our country from other countries which were allies of Canada during the Second World War. There are not a great number of these people. However, these people find they have to live in Canada 15 years before they can receive the pension which would otherwise be available to Canadians who served in the same circumstances. Many of these people find themselves in very impoverished circumstances. I am wondering if any thought has been given to changing the law so that these people can get their pensions sooner? Has any thought been given to the question of how many people would be involved in this particular group? I do not think it would be very many. Also, has any thought been given to what the additional cost would be to the federal Government to extend the benefits to these people after a shorter period of time of residency in Canada?

Mr. Ouellet: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that the Hon. Member will be happy to learn that the period is ten years residency. It is no longer 15 years.

Mr. Peterson: I made a mistake. It is ten years. You are quite right.

Mr. Ouellet: Obviously, I will pass on his representations to my colleague who will look at the possibilities of further reducing the period of eligibility.

Mr. Peterson: The Minister is quite right, Mr. Chairman. It is a period of ten years now. I appreciate very much his support for this representation and I look forward to working with him and his officials in the future in order to be able to accomplish something constructive in this area.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, like many Hon. Members, I suppose, I find myself in an awkward situation. I had hoped that this Bill would go through the normal process rather than be passed in one day without what I consider to be a very adequate committee study. I believe, like many Hon. Members of Parliament, that we do have individual situations where we would like to get the Government to move on some amendments. Obviously, if we are going to go with the procedure which was outlined earlier, we are not going to have that opportunity.

I also find it unfortunate that the Minister of Veterans Affairs is elsewhere and not in the House at this time. I know where he is and I recognize the importance of those celebrations, however, I do believe that there are a number of veterans and their families who are not receiving full justice from the House of Commons because of the procedure which we are following today.

My own father was one of the people who, I believe, was mistreated by the Department in the past. Both of my parents worked for the Deer Lodge Hospital when it was a Veterans Affairs institute. I used to visit them quite often and I got to meet many veterans who certainly felt that the Government did not have their best interests at heart. I regret that we are passing this legislation so quickly. This is the type of legislation which affects a number of people who very often do not have their concerns raised in the House of Commons.

However, I have a specific question. It is my understanding that people who served in the British Merchant Marine do not qualify for any veterans' assistance in Canada. I was wondering whether the Minister, or his officials who are before us today, could respond to that.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman, in response to the Hon. Member I would like to say that indeed the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) is in Europe with an important group of veterans. He is participating in the ceremonies in Normandy. I am sure he would have liked to have been here in the House today to participate in the debate on this Bill. However, I believe that he and all the other veterans who are in Europe will be very happy to learn that Parliament today passed Bill C-39. This Bill will go a long way in helping a number of veterans and their families.

In relation to the Hon. Member's comments, I believe the answer to that is, no, they are not included. I will indeed ask my officials to review this matter and see what could be done in this regard.

Mr. Murphy: Again, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the Minister's response. It is unfortunate that we do not have the "real" Minister—if I may use that term—here today. I recognize where he is and the importance of the occasion. However, I do believe that with a bit of effort the Government could have arranged its business in such a way that this Bill could have received fairly speedy passage on a day when the Minister was here and when we could have had some opportunity, perhaps, to convince the Minister of the need for amendments such as the one which, obviously, I would want to make in this particular case. I understand that people who served in the Canadian Merchant Marine do qualify for Canadian pensions. I understand that people who served with the British Army and Navy also qualify for Canadian pensions. It is obvious that people who now live in Canada who served in the British Merchant Marine had a very dangerous time of it. Obviously they should be given some consideration. The fact that we are dealing with this legislation quickly and without the Minister here means that we cannot make that type of presentation to the Minister and propose the necessary amendments which, I suspect, the Minister might have even favoured had he been here at this time.

• (1640)

Mr. Ouellet: I share the view of the Hon. Member that the timing of the passage of this legislation is probably a little awkward. I am sure that the Minister of Veterans Affairs would have wished to be here. The Hon. Member is one of the Three Wise Men who decide on the schedule of the House. He sometimes acts as House Leader for his Party with our own House Leader and the Opposition House Leader. Bill C-34, which deals with Labour Code amendments, will come before the House next Monday. It could have come today and Bill C-39 could have come before the House next week. That would have probably satisfied myself and would certainly have satisfied the Minister of Veterans Affairs. That is not the case. I am here today on behalf of the Minister and will be here Monday for my own legislation.

In relation to the specific question of the Hon. Member, I want to remind him that any allied veterans who have resided in Canada for 10 years can qualify. I hope this has not escaped him. Indeed, any allied veterans who have lived in Canada for 10 years can qualify.

Amalgamation of the Wesleyan Church of Canada

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

THE WESLEYAN CHURCH OF CANADA

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Jack Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings) moved that Bill S-15, an Act to provide for the creation by amalgamation of the Wesleyan Church of Canada, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, be referred to a Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased and indeed proud to be the sponsor in the House of Commons of Senate Bill S-15, which is an Act to provide for the creation by amalgamation of the Wesleyan Church in Canada. The purpose of the Bill is to provide a legislative framework under which two churches, the Pilgrims Holiness Church of Canada and the Wesleyan Methodist Church of America in Canada, may amalgamate their corporate structures. I should make the point in passing that ecclesiastically, these churches have been joined for some time. What I as sponsor and the principals of the two churches are requesting of the Commons today is the legislative completion of their bonding.

I want to put on record a brief explanation of the two churches which are requesting this legislation. It is interesting to realize how the teachings of two English church priests, John and Charles Wesley, have spread. Last weekend in Belleville I took part in the one hundredth anniversary of the United Church of Canada which also amalgamated portions of, or branches of, the church which they helped to form.

The Wesleyan revival that swept England under the leadership of John and Charles Wesley in the years following their conversion to Christ in 1738 were extremely interesting. Both Wesleys were ordained priests of the Church of England. It was not their intent to originate another denomination. However, the major portion of those touched by their teaching were from the lower working class without any formal religion and mostly illiterate. Largely rejected by the Church of England, the Wesleys and their followers formed Methodist societies, a name derived from their methodical approach to the instruction of their converts. The Methodist societies maintained some connection with the Church of England until the death of John Wesley in 1791, after which they organized under the name of the Wesleyan Methodist Church.

At that time England was experiencing the beginning of the Industrial Revolution. Some historians have gone so far as to credit the moral, political and social reforms that arose from the Wesleyan revival with saving England from the blood-bath that was the French Revolution. Even then, when they sent out missionaries from England initially to the American colonies, they represented the lower-class people.

● (1650)

In 1839, a large anti-slavery group within the Church made representations against slavery at the general conference and was expelled from the conference by the bishops. This group formed the Wesleyan Methodist Church of America in 1843. They then stepped further away from the episcopal government of the Church to adopt a more congregational government.

The men and women who originally formed the Methodist Church of Canada, which ultimately became the founding of the United Church of Canada, came with the arrival of the United Empire Loyalists. In addition, English missionaries arrived representing the Wesleyan Methodist Church of England. The congregation that is involved in this private legislation today, was the third wave of Methodism to arrive in Canada, the Wesleyan Methodist Church of America in Canada. Its missionaries arrived to carry out their evangelical duties in the Ottawa Valley in the 1890s, and the resulting Church was incorporated 50 years later by a private Act of the Parliament of Canada.

The Pilgrims Holiness Church of Canada is an heir to the Holiness Movements associated with early Methodism in the Wesleyan Church of America and its growth in the pioneer camps. Out of the Holiness Movements arose many independent churches and groups. The growth of their number increased inversely with the decline in emphasis on holiness in the Mother Church. Later, many of these independent churches and groups, all Methodist in doctrine and tradition, were to convene and merge for their mutual supporting growth. One denomination that emerged was the International Holiness church based in Agusa, California, a Church whose doctrine continued to emphasize the evangelical and holiness aspects of historic Methodism. In Canada, the International Holiness Church fathered congregations principally in western Ontario. These were incorporated by letters patent under the Companies Act of Canada in 1920. The International Holiness Church in the United States has since become the Pilgrims Holiness Church. The Canadian Church became, in 1928, the Pilgrims Holiness Church of Canada.

In 1968, the Wesleyan Methodist Church and the Pilgrims Holiness Church voted to merge both in the United States and in Canada into one Wesleyan Church. The ecclesiastical merger was consumated immediately, but for various reasons the legal perfection of the merger in Canada has had to wait until this year, and indeed until this day. The Bill, which I am pleased to sponsor today, is the legislative measure necessary in order to allow the merger to take place in law.

I am all the more pleased at being asked to sponsor this piece of legislation as the Reverend Walter Jewel, President of the Wesleyan Methodist Church of America in Canada, the Pilgrims Holiness Church of Canada, and District Superintendent of the Wesleyan Church of Canada, has been a personal friend of mine for many years. I knew Walter Jewel many years before he became the Reverend Walter Jewel, and I have cherished him as a friend ever since. I am pleased to tell the House that his dedication to his tasks and in the service of his constituents is far greater, in my opinion, than that of any Members in this House, including myself.

While it is unlikely that any Members of this House have had an opportunity to deal with this Bill in any depth, I want to spend a few moments on the details perhaps to forestall any questions that might arise.

For some moments last week there was brief concern that a church in New Brunswick bearing the same name might raise a conflict, but that church has now indicated in writing that it will not only allow the name to be used, but indeed will dissolve its charter and become part of the new church. I should also point out that the Bill does not amalgamate the two corporations but, rather, allows them to amalgamate. Within a certain period of time they have to file their amalgamation with the Ministry of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in a form acceptable to the Minister. Because of this, by-laws have been pre-cleared with the Department so that there will be no delay in this regard.

It was pointed out in the Senate committee, where I attended earlier this week, that, historically, theologically, and organizationally, the two Churches are exactly the same. They operate under a common book of discipline which carries over 44 districts in continental North America and approximately 130 congregations with 8,000 adherents. The final authority of the Church really rests with the local churches since it is a representative type of government and elected from the bottom up, rather than the top down. From Canada now they do send missionaries abroad working through the International Fellowship of Wesleyan Churches in approximately 34 countries.

Once again I want to say how pleased and honoured I am to have been asked to sponsor this Bill in the House of Commons, and I ask my colleagues to join in giving this Bill passage through all three readings this afternoon so that Reverend Walter Jewell, who is in the gallery this afternoon, may take it to their quadrennial general conference which convenes next week and report there the final legal joining of these two Churches in Canada. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Given that we completed Bill C-39 earlier this day, I should inform the House that that has some impact on the order of business for Monday. The business for Monday will now be Bill C-34. The back-up Bill will be Bill C-10.

• (1700)

Mr. Murphy: I presume that Bill C-10 is the Divorce Bill. Now that we have just performed a civil marriage between two churches, we will be dealing with divorce in the latter half of Monday. Is that correct, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, if that is the offer of a deal, then certainly if the Hon. Member wants to handle Bill C-10 in all stages during the latter half of Monday, we are prepared to go along with that.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, originally the back-up Bill that was to be brought in on Monday was the Bill dealing with the financing of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board. Is it still the intention of the Government that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board Bill be dealt with during this session of Parliament?

Mr. Evans: That is the information I have, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The time for consideration of Private members' business has now expired.

It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Financial Administration Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of tabling for second reading the proposed amendments to the Canada Labour Code. I must emphasize that these proposals are the result of close and, I would say, very successful consultation with labour organizations and employers' associations.

Mr. Speaker, the Canada Labour Code is the main body of federal legislation that governs the very important business of work. The Canada Labour Code has always shown the way for all other labour legislation in this country, and other official authorities have always used it as an example in drafting their own legislation. Some 600,000 workers are subject to the provisions of the Code, and I am referring to the provisions on occupational safety and health.

Mr. Speaker, we acknowledge the responsibility we have as the leader in this field, and in doing so, we are aware of how important it is to present legislation that considers the obligations of employers and the rights of employees, the need for modern labour standards and the incredible rate at which the job environment and the labour force in Canada are changing, the possibility of letting the collective bargaining process take its course but also the legislated intervention that is available to us. However, Mr. Speaker, the balance we are seeking cannot be imposed, either through legislation or any other means.

I repeat that the amendments we are proposing today are the result of close consultations, during which these proposals were discussed at length with labour and management representatives. The amendments were prepared in co-operation with experts in the field. They have been the subject of discussions, negotiations, revisions, and finally, I would say, of an agreement. Mr. Speaker, all this took time. I do not think it was time wasted, because I believe that today, in the House, we have a piece of sound legislation in which the interests of all Canadians are served to the best of our ability. We have, I repeat, been able to balance the interests of workers with those of employers, at a time when it is imperative for our economy and Canada's industry that all parties should work together.

Last Tuesday, on June 5, I gave a fairly complete summary of the main clauses of the draft amendments to the Canada Labour Code. I do not intend to repeat today all the points I have already explained. A transcript of my comments may be found in Hansard of June 5, 1984, on pages 4363, 4364, 4365 and 4366, where Hon. Members will find a detailed description of the amendments to three parts of the Canada Labour Code, namely Part III, Part IV and Part V.

• (1115)

Without wishing to repeat the explanations I gave last week, Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend some time this morning on the proposed amendments to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, which deals with occupational safety and health, one of the major concerns of the labour world today, which requires urgent action. According to the preliminary data for 1982, in Canada more than fifteen million work days were lost because of accidents on the job and occupational illness, which is more than two and one-half times the number of days lost owing to strikes and lock-outs. The amount of compensation paid was nearly $2 billion in 1982; this does not include the indirect cost, estimated at an astonishing $7.8 billion, which, Mr. Speaker, is hardly something for this country to be proud of. Aside from the obvious human suffering, it is clear that the impact on the economy and productivity is enormous. Since regulations and inspections provided by the Government to improve occupational safety and health have their limitations, it is becoming increasingly necessary to obtain the active co-operation and direct participation of labour and management in the regulatory process.

Mr. Speaker, with this legislation the Government hopes to give both management and labour an opportunity and the requisite motivation for increasing their involvement in occupational safety and health programs set up in the work place itself. We earnestly hope to create a climate in which all participants will work together to resolve occupational safety and health problems.

Mr. Speaker, we are committed to making some very real progress in this area. First of all, we believe that all workers under federal jurisdiction should enjoy the same rights with respect to occupational safety and health. At the present time, the federal Government's legislative authority is based on a large number of Acts, which engenders uncertainty and creates considerable differences in the type of protection offered to workers. Repeatedly various groups have tried to put an end to this fragmentation, and I am thinking of the Special Committee of the House of Commons on Regulatory Reform, the Economic Council of Canada, and a number of labour organizations.

To correct this situation, the Bill before the House today provides that occupational safety and health provisions will apply also to all employees under federal jurisdiction. Mr. Speaker, this means that about 300,000 more employees will now be protected under Part IV, if the Bill is adopted. In fact, what we are proposing is that Part IV of the Canada Labour Code should now cover all employees in marine, air and railway transport and all employees working for interprovincial pipelines or on offshore oil rigs on the east and west coasts and in the North.

Needless to say, the existing procedures for ensuring safety of operations and public safety remain unchanged. Furthermore, the federal Government proposes to amend the Financial Administration Act, in that as far as occupational safety and health is concerned, the federal Government will no longer be a self-regulating employer. For the first time, the Government of Canada, in its capacity as an employer, will be subject to the rules imposed by Parliament on other employers. Consequently, Canadian public servants will enjoy the same rights as employees in the private sector.

Although they are important, the proposed changes are, I feel, only the first step towards creating a climate of cooperation at the national and local level, with a view to preventing accidents in the work place and occupational illness.

At the national level, involvement in developing programs will be increased through the creation of an advisory council, composed mainly of union and management representatives. Its mandate will be to advise the Minister of Labour on policies, the administration of the Act and the development legislation.

At the local level, direct involvement in the compliance process will be achieved through joint safety and health committees. A few committees are already in place. To broaden representation and consultation in this area, the Bill before the House today provides for the establishment of committees in all businesses where twenty or more workers are employed. The committees shall be composed of an equal number of employer and employee representatives. In cases where the nature of the work is relatively risk-free and it is possible to prove there is no risk of accident or illness, exceptions may be considered.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that these compulsory committees will have a very important role to play in encouraging employers and employees to recognize their responsibilities and to make an effort to prevent accidents in the work place.

In small businesses with fewer than twenty workers and where committees are not compulsory, we still want a representative to be appointed who will act as liaison officer between employees and the employer. With more or less the same powers and responsibilities as the committee, the representative shall ensure that employees participate as required in resolving occupational safety and health issues.

Another amendment to Part IV concerns the right to refuse to work in case of imminent danger. When in 1978, it was suggested that workers be given the right to refuse to do work that might put their safety or health at risk, there was some concern that there might be abuse. That I think explains the very conservative wording of the Act.

However, experience at both federal and provincial levels has shown that workers have exercised this right responsibly. However, the wording of Part IV, and especially the expression "imminent danger", has created some ambiguity as to the kind of work one might refuse to do. For the sake of clarity, we are proposing in this Bill to delete the qualifier "imminent" while the word "danger" will be defined in the Definitions section of the Act.

Furthermore, provisions concerning normal occupational risks and cases where public safety takes precedence over the exercise of this right have been reformulated to be compatible with the expanded application of the Act.

The provisions concerning enforcement, as well as the administrative policies with respect to those provisions, have been revised to improve compliance with Part IV and thus prevent accidents in the work place and occupational illness.

Those legislative provisions have been drafted so as to take into consideration the Canadian Government's policy to decriminalize federal laws. In keeping with that policy prepared under the auspices of my colleague, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. MacGuigan), the Government undertakes to limit its recourse to the Criminal Code.

Therefore, Part IV will promote among employers and employees voluntary respect for the law and the joint settlement of issues. If need be, the provisions concerning respect for the law will also be reviewed so that they will be used more properly.

We firmly believe that work safety problems will be solved and accidents at work considerably reduced through good will and joint responsibility of both employer and employee. No matter what kind of legislation we have, it stands to reason that accidents cannot be eliminated through laws, but we feel that the approach we recommend in this Bill is good and will enable Canadians to reduce absenteeism through improved work safety.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that all the amendments I have just mentioned concerning Part IV as well as others to Parts III and V are the result of long consultations with unions and businessmen. Their purpose is to promote even more the spirit of cooperation and the sense of responsibility among all parties concerned.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments to the Canada Labour Code have been the subject of several interventions in the House last week and we have heard quite a few comments about them both inside and outside the House. Many people are waiting and hoping that the amendments will be adopted. I think it is fair to say that the amendments we are proposing are not only desirable and necessary, but that they are also quite appropriate. We can only conclude that they have drawn wide support both inside and outside the House.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in strongly urging Hon. Members to adopt them as quickly as possible so that they will become part of the Canada Labour Code.

• (1125)

[English]

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, it is with regret that in studying this Bill we have come to the conclusion that it does not adequately address the concerns of Canadians regarding health and safety, and that it fails to address the concerns of women in the workplace. As well, the Bill provides no hope for the unemployed youth of this country and fails to recognize the rapidly changing nature of the workplace, particularly with respect to technology. If it fails in these four basic objectives—health and safety, technology, women and youth—it is not much of a Bill. That is my opinion of the Bill. That is my assessment of the Bill in its broadest terms.

• (1130)

This Bill is not a blueprint for labour, for business, for productivity or for Canadians. It is unsuccessful and a disappointment for Canadian workers and Canadians as a whole. It does not project the kind of future for our workplace we must have to meet the basic aspirations of all Canadians. It seems to me that what we are discussing today is a labour amendment code, and "code" is a very significant word because, surely, it suggests a type of guideline, a statement of values which points in a direction towards those values. A code should lead and be a strong statement of principle and direction; it must arise from current conditions in the workplace today and point towards conditions as they ought to be. I suggest it does neither.

This Bill is brought before the House of Commons, before the people of Canada, at a time, Mr. Speaker, when labour, our working Canadians, are concerned. They are concerned about jobs, about the creation of new jobs, and that those new jobs will be secure. In other words, those who are on the unemployment rolls want some hope of a secure job, not a six-week, 11-week or 12-week make-work program. It is not the hope of the unemployed that they survive for six weeks or 12 weeks. Their hope is that they can find a secure job which projects towards long-term, permanent employment.

Is this Bill pointing in the direction of giving job security to Canadians? I do not believe so, and it is a disappointment that it is not. Canadians are reaching out for jobs now. They want some leadership from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet). Instead they will get a minor extension of social benefits, a wishy-washy definition of sexual harassment, and little else, Mr. Speaker.

Canadians want job creation and job security. To get that job security we have to be assured of stability in the workplace, minimal work stoppages and strikes. How do we do that? We do that when in fact labour feels it is being treated in a just and equitable manner and when management feels that labour is trying to increase productivity at a time when productivity is decreasing. These are the kinds of conditions which have to exist and we must have a code, a guideline, which encompasses major labour code amendments. We have 1.5 million unemployed Canadians today, according to statistics, but that really represents only those who are looking for work. It does not represent—as has been revealed in the House of Commons—those on welfare, those who have ceased to look for work, who have just given up—

Mr. Darling: It does not even represent part-time workers.

Mr. Wenman: —and those part-time workers. The Minister made the excuse that our youth are lazy. What a pathetic condemnation! Our young people are not lazy. In fact, the current generation have a new work ethic instilled into them. There may have been drop-outs in the 1960s and 1970s but our new generation has concern and conviction. They want jobs and are willing to work hard at those jobs. That is how the majority of our young people feel today.

By the Minister's own statistics there are 800,000 young people with no jobs and with no hope of finding one in our country today. Labour is very concerned about that problem. How do we create a labour code, a guide, which will give hope to those young people? There must be a guide and direction for the labour force which will exist in the next five years and ten years.

In his speech the Minister did not talk about that, Mr. Speaker. He failed to put forward a guideline toward hope and opportunity for our young people. That is not to say that the opportunity cannot be there; but you have to create through the Labour Code those conditions in order to increase the capacity to produce through a working and expanding labour force.

Right now the labour force is chasing after a declining amount of work. So instead of the hope that somehow we are going to have an expanding economy, a larger pie with more jobs, we have a labour climate whereby labour itself is saying that the pie is getting smaller, more people will have to work fewer hours, and we will have to recognize that fact. But that is not the answer. The answer is that we must increase our productivity to create more wealth and power. Since this Government has come to power, Mr. Speaker, Canada has dropped its share of world trade by about 3 per cent, and 1 per cent of world trade represents a half million jobs. Three per cent represents 1.5 million jobs. That decline in world trade, that failure of this administration, is a major reason why we do not have an expanding economy and enough jobs.

There should be some hope in this Bill that we will have a safer workplace where there are not so many injuries with the accompanying loss of production hours. We should provide adequate social benefits so that people feel they are receiving justice and equity in the workplace. If we can create those kinds of conditions we will enhance productivity and inspire our workforce to meet that challenge. We can, in fact, accomplish those kinds of things, and if we can give confidence to our workers so that they believe it, and if we can regain our share of world trade, then we will be able to create the kind of labour climate where management can increase its profits, where labour can increase its wages and social benefits, and where our nation can again take its rightful place in the world economy. And I am not only suggesting that we can do just as well as we did before this Government came to power. I feel we can do more than just as well; I believe we can do better.

Our workforce is better educated. Unfortunately, it is not better trained to understand the reality of changing technology. Technology should be boosting this nation through research and development but it is not. The impact of technological change is a burden on our society instead of lifting it into the next century. This is where it really starts—the vision of more jobs in an expanding labour market, better working conditions, better wages and more profits for all elements of the workplace. But there is not hope, not from this Government. It has created the conditions I have described today. To quote from the Vancouver Sun:

> At 30 years of age, Richard Bell of Castlegar can't remember the On-To-Ottawa trek by unemployed workers in 1935, but he has heard a lot about it from some of his neighbours who did make the long journey. Bell, himself an unemployed carpenter, is the spark plug of a new expedition by the jobless—this time dubbed the Off-To-Ottawa trek—that is preparing to leave Vancouver June 8.
> Their goal is to arrive in Ottawa June 14 in time for the Liberal leadership convention, to convene a "gathering of the unemployed" to lobby the politicians for a jobs program.

They are coming here to lobby us for a jobs program, Mr. Speaker. That is what this is supposed to be leading to and setting the tone for. Canada will soon go to the polls and the number one campaign priority will be, as the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney) noted, "jobs, jobs, jobs" and the economic climate which first has to be created to allow jobs to happen. The Minister and his Government have failed to give that inspiration and leadership in the form of legislation. To go out in the country and meet with the leaders of our union and business communities, to inspire them to achieve what can and must be ours; to create a positive attitude through labour, management and government working together in a co-operative manner building towards those national goals; that is what the Government should be doing.

I can go into considerable detail, and I will cover some of those areas in a moment, but I want to say that I am pleased the Bill has come to second reading. There seems to be general agreement that it should go to committee where we can hear from those concerned. It has been suggested that everyone seems to go along with this. Well, what is seemed to go along with is something that is very little. I think when we get into committee we will find in this Bill many loopholes and areas which need change. Perhaps through that democratic process there will be some changes to make this legislation somewhat more acceptable. But there is not the time to develop the direction that Canadians need to underpin any code.

The Minister suggested that everyone thinks this Bill is a good one; therefore we should proceed quickly and pass it as it is. I do not think that is necessarily so. I, too, have received telegrams, not just the two in favour, and I think those should be recorded. I have a telegram here from Shirley Carr of the Canadian Labour Congress. She is an important spokesperson for labour in Canada and I recognize that importance by reading her telegram first:

> I have to bring your attention most urgently to the following emergency resolution passed unanimously today by the 2300 delegates at the 15th biennial convention of the Canadian Labour Congress in Montreal.
> Whereas Bill C-34 . . . was introduced in the House of Commons on May 15th, 1984 and;
>
> Whereas the NDP have consistently supported the adoption of this health and safety legislation before the end of the session, and;
> Whereas the Government and the Official Opposition have failed to promote the passage of this legislation before the end of the session . . . to give the health and safety of Canadian workers the highest priority and commit themselves to adopt Bill C-34 before the summer recess.

I can agree with that last paragraph, Mr. Speaker, all the way through. We should try and pass such a bill. It is with some regret that we have to have the partisan format, and I would plead with the CLC to make labour issues less and less of a political issue and more and more of a national issue. I am not going to get into the partisan criticism implied by the telegram except to express regret for that part of the telegram while I agree with the substance.

I have another telegram, this time from Don Montgomery, regional action co-ordinator, Public Service Alliance of Canada. It reads as follows:

> On behalf of twelve thousand members who work throughout southern British Columbia for the federal Government and are members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada we urge you and your colleagues to pass Bill C-34 without further delay. It promised us legal health and safety protection. There are only a few days left in this session. We do not want to be denied this protection which we badly need. You have previously received the Public Service Alliance of Canada "black paper" and we are certain you will agree the health and safety of Canadian workers should not be a partisan political issue. Put aside party politics and adopt Bill C-34.

I think that is a positive telegram, in keeping with the spirit which should exist here today, and I commend those who sent it. But the Minister only read the supportive telegrams. He failed to read the others; I know he has them because I have copies of what was sent to him. The first is from Mr. Masters, chairman of FETCO, who said:

It is our understanding that Bill C-34 will be before a parliamentary committee in the near future and FETCO members in the airlines, trucking, marine, longshoring, rail and communications sectors would all like to be heard before the committee concerning the principles of Bill C-34. It would be appreciated if you would advise us with whom to communicate on this issue.

I hope we will hear these groups as they have requested and in the manner they have requested, and I will certainly be recommending that to the committee. The next telegram comes from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which says:

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business is extremely concerned about reports that you plan to pass the proposed amendments to the Canada Labour Code without referring them to a parliamentary committee for public input. Given the devastating implications for job creation and productivity contained in several of the measures, business representatives and other concerned citizens must be given the opportunity to comment on these measures. After all, the proposed amendments were only tabled on May 15th.

We spoke of the late timing and tabling of this Bill in an earlier debate. The telegram continues:

The debacle of the November 1981 Budget illustrates the problems created by proceeding with legislation without adequate public input. Your press release announcing the proposed amendments, describes the proposals as "the culmination of extensive consultation", but we were never consulted.

I would appreciate your undertaking that these serious measures will receive the usual careful parliamentary committee review.

It is signed by Jim Bennett, Executive Director, Legislative Affairs, Canadian Federation of Independent Business. I want to hear his views, Mr. Speaker, because he is concerned that there are devastating implications for job creation and productivity. I know the workers of Canada want job creation; they want to increase productivity because they recognize the benefits which flow to society as a whole. I know that they want these things. If there are devastating implications, as is indicated here, I hope they will in fact be heard so we could make our own judgment as to these devastating implications.

The next telegram comes from R. M. MacIntosh, President of the Canadian Bankers' Association. The telex states:

—the chartered banks consider Bill C-34 such a major piece of legislation that it is imperative that employer and employee groups be given every opportunity to comment at the committee stage.

As a major employer of over 150,000 Canadians, vitally concerned with the implications of this Bill, the chartered banks seek your assurance that full consideration will be given to our request to present a brief and to others wishing to appear before the committee to express their views.

I have another telegram from Roy A. Phillips, President of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. It states:

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association has reviewed and analyzed Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada labour Code. Because the Bill proposes substantive amendments to the code, which will have significant implications for private and quasi public employers, it should be subject to thorough assessment and analysis by members of Parliament and by interested and affected parties, before passage. Therefore, CMA urges that following second reading Bill C-34 be referred to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration for detailed study. Interested organizations should be invited to appear. CMA requests the opportunity to present our views to the committee regarding the following matters:

—The cost, extent, application and feasibility of proposed new labour standards,
—The extension of compulsory arrangements under occupational health and safety and the expanded right to refuse dangerous work, —Impact on collective bargaining and individual rights, and ways in which stability could be improved.

It is imperative that these groups be heard, whether it is labour or various sectors of the business community. For that reason I have read all of the telegrams that I have received into the record. I know that the Minister has received many more. I read them into the record to emphasize that it is important that we get an input from the public.

On that basis, I am hopeful that these measures will pass second reading stage today so that we may proceed to the committee stage. Hopefully we will hear their true concerns about these measures at committee stage and that, time permitting, this legislation can come back to the House of Commons for a final decision.

I and my Party look forward to these measures going to the committee. We look forward to hearing the representations of all interested parties and to hearing their views on improving this legislation. As far as we are concerned, we are willing to meet as often and as long as necessary to complete such hearings. I look forward to discussing with the chairman how these matters may be dealt with.

I have further considerable information on various aspects of this Bill that I was going to put on the record. I have already talked about youth unemployment to some degree. In addition, there are the ramifications of technological change. The Conservative Party has not simply talked about these major concerns but has studied these concerns as a result of the establishment of a task force which investigated and reported concrete steps that the House should be taking in recognition of technological change and the necessity of retraining. My colleague from Calgary led that task force. He will report on the implications of technological change and what must be done to meet those changes. This is an important aspect of this legislation that must be discussed in committee. I will leave it to my colleague to discuss the ramifications of these technological changes.

Another extremely important aspect of this legislation concerns women's issues in the workplace. The Canada Labour Code is of great concern to the women of this country who are often the first victims of cut-backs. Women are presently a great resource in the Canadian workplace. As our population ages we will increasingly need that resource in the workplace. Therefore, retraining and working conditions for women is an important issue not only to women but to the entire nation. It is extremely significant to recognize their input and to give them special consideration and concern.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), who has been a strong advocate, a strong leader and a strong voice in understanding and expressing these concerns, will demonstrate that care today. She will demonstrate the importance of women in the workplace and describe their great potential. We must recognize the potential of all our workers, be they young workers who face no hope and no jobs, middle-aged workers who perhaps are only forty years old but have been unemployed and fear that they will never be employed again, or older workers who recognize that they have much left to give from their experience.

Will there be places in our labour force for these people? How will we adapt our workplace? These are issues for which leadership should be coming from the Minister and the Government. However, it is that failed government and failed leadership that have resulted in our current unemployment levels and the desperation that exists in the labour force of Canada. That desperation has not been addressed by this legislation and has not been addressed in Parliament.

I do not want to delay the House for long today because I want to move this Bill to committee where we can hold hearings. I appreciate that the Bill has been brought forward by the Government but I wish that it had been brought forward sooner. Of course, we will deal with it now as best we can and in a manner that is just, equitable and fair to Canadians and the Canadian workplace.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in opening debate on Bill C-34 on behalf of the NDP, let me reiterate what we have said a number of times in the House. We are in favour of the passage of this legislation prior to the June recess for two obvious reasons. First, there is no guarantee that we will be back after the June recess.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: With NDP, I can believe that.

Mr. Blenkarn: The NDP will not be back.

Mr. Murphy: I can understand the humour that certain Conservative spokesmen feel toward this labour legislation but it is a very serious piece of legislation to us.

Mr. Blenkarn: It's you.

Mr. Murphy: While the jackal to my right continues to heckle, I will continue with my serious speech.

As I was saying, the passage of this important legislation is necessary because it will protect workers' health and safety. It will protect the lives of workers in Canada. We recognize that with less than three weeks before the June adjournment, with every possibility of an election either this summer or fall, this legislation must pass in the next two and a half weeks.

The offer that has been stated a number of times by our House Leader, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), is that we would deal with this legislation at second reading in one day. We would refer the matter to committee for extensive study, with public presentations from management and labour, but we would guarantee the legislation coming back to this House for final disposition before the adjournment on June 29. That is the essence of the House order. It allows for public participation, amendments and discussion. It guarantees that this House will deal with this important legislation. I again ask members of the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party to stand up in this House and say that they will guarantee that this legislation will pass prior to the June recess.

• (1200)

As I said earlier, this legislation deals with health and safety. It deals with people's lives. For the last four years Canadian labour spokesmen and workers have been waiting for this legislation. It is unfortunate that we are dealing with it on June 11, 1984. This legislation should have been introduced over a year ago. We should have had time for extensive study, discussion, and extensive work on improving the legislation. Sadly, that is not the situation. By dealing with this Bill on June 11 we are forced into a situation of dealing with it quickly or not dealing with it all.

The Conservative member who just spoke talked about all sorts of discussion, about the need for jobs, the problems of youth and the need to be concerned about work stoppages. I heard also from the Conservative spokesman about the need to improve productivity in Canada. Those are all valid concerns but they should not be used to prevent the passage of legislation which is so essential to Canadian workers.

I would be the first to admit that the proposed legislation is not perfect. Later on I will discuss some of the problems that exist in the legislation. I would also be the first to say that there are amendments which must be made to improve this legislation. Again, I will deal with that later on. There are, however, some improvements in this legislation. There are some guarantees in this Bill which will protect the lives, the health and safety of Canadians. That is very important, Mr. Speaker. This House for political reasons or for reasons of various special interest groups should not delay passing it.

One of the improvements that we see, and it is a minor amendment to the Labour Code, is that from now on handicapped people will not be subject to less than the minimum wage. The all-Party task force on the disabled many years ago reported to this House and asked for that change to be made. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), our spokesman on that all-Party task force, has often risen in this House to ask for that change. We believe it is a change that reflects both the necessity of handicapped people to earn a reasonable income and it also reflects the fact that there should be justice for all in our society. To allow the disabled to be paid less than the minimum wage is an act of injustice. I am glad to see that improvement in this Bill.

I am also glad to see the improvements for child care for both the mother and adoptive parents in this Bill. Those are social needs for which we have waited some time. Again, I hope that House will be in a position to act before the summer recess to ensure those improvements become part of Canadian law.

We are also pleased to see the amendments which would bring the Public Service of Canada under the federal Labour Code. We find it ironic that Liberal and Conservative Governments in the past have excluded federal Government employees from the protections of the Labour Code. Spokesmen for various Liberal and Conservative Governments have said: "We have Treasury Board directives which protect federal Government workers." That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker. These people deserve the same legislative protection as the workers, and that legislative protection is much more extensive than Treasury Board directives which can change at the whim of any government. People who work for the Government of Canada and for the people of Canada deserve to have the same legislative protection. The same thing goes for people who work on ships, on trains and for the airlines. The same thing should apply to those who work for Atomic Energy of Canada and the various elements of the uranium and nuclear industries. Those workers deserve legislative protection and they deserve to be able to go to the Minister of Labour to ask that Canadian legislation be enforced, that inspections take place and that their lives, their health and safety, be protected by the laws of Canada.

One of the problems this Bill does not address is the need for adequate inspection by representatives of the Department of Labour. In numerous committees of this House the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) and others have been asked why there are so few inspectors in Labour Canada. They have been asked why it is impossible for inspectors from Labour Canada to get to most worksites under federal jurisdiction; why miners in communities like Flin Flon and Snow Lake who come under federal jurisdiction almost never see a representative of Labour Canada acting as an inspector. Why, Mr. Speaker, is that the case? Why has the Government of Canada refused to provide adequate inspections to enforce the Labour Code as it stands at the present time? The improvements before us today will require even more inspectors, making visits more often to the worksite. If we do not have federal Government inspection, regardless how good the law is, regardless of what improvements we pass into law, we will not meet the needs of safety and the health of workers in the workplace.

Let me give you some idea of the problems we face in Canada, Sir. I want to take some information from Labour Canada's own figures for 1981. There were 830 fatalities in workplaces. Total work injuries amounted to 1.21 million out of 9.34 million workers, or 12 per cent. There were 585,000 people who suffered disabling injuries. The total cost, benefit payments and indirect costs, was over $9.2 billion.

The union issued a "Black Paper" for the Public Service for 1982-3. Despite the misunderstanding many Canadians have, it is not safe to have a job working for the federal Government in Canada. There were over 20 fatalities in 1982-83. There were 31,000 reported injuries and the cost in workmen's compensation alone was $40 million.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, there are many needs and many reasons for passing legislation to protect both workers who come under the Labour Code at the present time and those who do not. This House on a number of occasions has talked about the Ocean Ranger incident, the tragic loss on February 15, 1982, of 84 lives. One of the reasons that tragedy occurred was the failure to solve the jurisdiction problem between the federal Government and the provinces. Another reason for those deaths is that the federal Government did not bring the operation of drilling rigs under the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code.

A report has been made public in the United States on the Ocean Ranger. Of course, in Canada we are still waiting for the investigation to be completed and for the report to be issued, even though it is well over two years since the incident took place. The major reasons for the accident cited in the American report was the lack of adequate training for the crew with regard to safety and operational procedures in dangerous times. That lack of training in terms of safety and that lack of knowledge in terms of operating in treacherous waters caused 84 deaths.

I could give other examples, such as the death of a worker in a silo. There had been inadequate inspection by the federal Government which resulted in Paul John Jovanov being buried alive and dying of suffocation. I could talk about lead smelter operations with poor ventilation. Workers are subject to acid fumes, dust and smoke. Again there has been lack of protection because of inadequate inspection and inadequate enforcement. I could talk about workers on federal Government sites. They work in a sealed environment with a lack of air exchange. They are suffering from respiratory problems, nausea, headaches, eye and ear irritations, and quite often have a high rate of abnormal births. I could talk about people who work in CN maintenance shops. They work with lava-like lead with only heavy canvas gloves and aprons for protection. I could talk about the increased use of video display terminals and the resulting eye strain, back fatigue, birth defects and miscarriages. There has been a failure to implement or suggest any legislative controls in terms of radiation screens, hours of work on VDTs and continuous exposure within a small area.

Recent statistics also show that over the last two years VDT users were absent from work three times as much as non-users. That study was conducted by the New York Mount Sinai School of Medicine. There are a number of examples of people dying and suffering from health problems. Also they are faced with safety problems, with miscarriages and with abnormal births. This has been caused by a lack of adequate inspection, adequate legislation and adequate standards within Canada.

We require legislation to be in place. It must be followed up with adequate regulations and inspections. As I said earlier, the best legislation in the world is of no value if it cannot be enforced. It is of no value if we do not have standards by which to measure the legislation.

I should like to deal with some other aspects of the Bill for a few minutes. There is a need for improvement in the legislation. We will make a number of amendments at committee stage. One area in which the Government is moving very slowly and inadequately is in the matter of sexual harassment. The proposed amendments only compel employers to attempt to keep the workplace free of sexual harassment. We would like some federal guidelines to explain what is and what is not acceptable behaviour. We would also like to see the Human Rights Commission automatically investigating charges of sexual harassment, and when there is an organized workforce, we would like to see the union involved being granted the right to represent workers in those hearings. We believe that sexual harassment is a growing problem, a problem which is being recognized more in the workforce each year. The proposals under the Canada Labour Code are completely inadequate in terms of dealing with it.

There are other areas of weakness in the legislation. One proposal would allow the Minister to exclude from the legislation workers in various areas of the atomic energy field. We recognize that in certain areas it may be of benefit to workers in that they may come under stronger provincial legislation. If that is the case, we can accept the purpose of the amendment. However, knowing the history of the Government and of the Atomic Energy Control Board, I would worry that some workers in the industry will be kept out of the Canada Labour Code, not because of better provincial legislation but because it is inconvenient for AECL, the mining company, or whatever agency is the employer, to grant adequate protection to workers.

I should like to cite some evidence of my concern. Just a few months ago the Atomic Energy Control Board held hearings which resulted in increasing by five times the amount of radiation to which women workers would be exposed. It increased a number of other levels affecting workers as well. We had to fight to make those meetings open to the press, even on an occasional basis. I rose in the House three times to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) to intervene in order to open the hearings of the Atomic Energy Control Board, even for the presentation of labour briefs. The board was reluctant but finally the hearings were opened on a limited basis. This control agency, the Atomic Energy Control Board, was rather reluctant to hold public hearings on matters of safety.

How can we allow the Minister the right to exclude workers in the atomic energy field, especially with these recent precedents before us? If he wants an exclusion of workers coming under provincial legislation because that legislation might be stronger, that makes sense. However, if he wants a blanket right to exclude workers in that field, it is unacceptable to us.

We are very worried about the Minister being allowed to exempt employers from the requirements of health and safety committees if he feels that the workplace is safe. As much as I have some respect for the Minister of Labour, I do not believe he knows which workplace in Canada is safe and which is unsafe. One of the purposes of setting up those committees is to guarantee that the workers and managers get together to look at potentially dangerous sites. For the Minister, presumably on the basis of some lobbying by management, to say that a particular industry is a safe one and does not require a joint committee is a dangerous exception. We will certainly oppose it at committee stage.

Similarly we are upset that the Minister talked about excluding ships from workplace safety committees. I think we all would agree that working on board ships can be just as dangerous as working on land. Those committees should exist on ships, and I do not think the Minister has the right to say that ships will not be included as far as workplace safety committees are concerned.

In the area of technological change, we see a very minor amendment. The amendment proposed by the Minister indicates that where there is a significant number of employees, the required notice period shall increase from 90 days to 120 days. The definition of "significant number" is left to the Labour Relations Board. That is not good enough. Employees right across the country should know what types of units will be used to determine whether or not this amendment is in effect.

We are concerned that the definition of technological change is very narrow. It might be possible for many companies to claim that technological change is not really taking place and, therefore, they do not come under the purview of this legislation. We are concerned that by laying off workers in small numbers over a period of time, employers will not have to be concerned about the proposed amendment. In the past when certain employee groups tried to negotiate technological change amendments, they have been unsuccessful. Many employers have resisted it. With that in mind, it is important that there be much stronger amendments to the legislation.

In closing, there are changes that must be made but the legislation is important. We want to hear from representatives of both the workers and the employers. We want to see this legislation acted upon before we adjourn. I reiterate the offer made by our House Leader, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, that New Democrats will agree to pass this Bill on second reading in one day. We will meet morning, noon and night to hear representatives of workers and employers to study this legislation.

We will be introducing amendments as we go through the committee process, but we would like the other Parties in this House to guarantee that this legislation and any amendments to it will be disposed of prior to the June recess. Without that, more lives will be lost, more people will suffer injury, more children will be born with abnormalities. The House of Commons will have failed those people and their unborn children. We will have not met the concerns of people who have a right to expect us to act for their safety and, indeed, their very lives.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words on the Canada Labour Code amendments, Bill C-34. I am particularly encouraged by the amount of agreement there seems to be in the House to deal with this Bill before the end of the current session. We have been waiting for this Bill for a year or two. We are delighted to see it on the table, to see the number of amendments that it makes and to see the encouraging sign that the Opposition, although not totally satisfied, seem to want to move the Bill to committee for more detailed study. Hopefully we will see it pass before the end of the current session at the end of June.

One clause which I find encouraging and on which we have had a number of representations from various groups is the consolidation of the various areas of occupational health and safety within the Department of Labour. It now not only includes uranium mine workers, those in the transportation industry and in banks, but as well employees under federal jurisdiction involved in shipping, trains, offshore drilling and so on. Through complementary amendments to the Financial Administration Act it will apply on an equivalent basis to public servants with regard to occupational health and safety.

I wish to indicate my support for the improvements to the right to refuse work, strengthening the provision where the question of imminent danger is removed. Collective bargaining health and safety committee can function as the committees for occupational health and safety without being structured under some new basis. This brings the Bill into line with legislation in the provinces, including the Province of Ontario.

As the Member for Algoma, I have been lobbying very hard for several years to have this legislation brought into effect. Within the next week an agreement will be reached between the United Steel Workers, the Elliot Lake Uranium Mines, the mining companies themselves, the Atomic Energy Control Board, the federal Department of Labour and the Ontario Department of Labour to enshrine under an order of the Atomic Energy Control Act the Ontario occupational health and safety regulations. When that agreement is reached it will represent a most historic event.

There has been a jurisdictional problem there for several years. It was not clear exactly who had jurisdiction. Up until about 1978 we thought the Province of Ontario had jurisdiction. In a ruling at that time the law officers of the Crown said that conventional health and safety was under federal jurisdiction, as is the question of radiation. Therefore, this jurisdictional problem has existed since that time. An agreement was reached between the concerned bodies. The Ontario occupational health and safety legislation will be referenced to the Atomic Energy Control Act. Therefore, uranium miners in Elliot Lake will operate under equivalent provisions to those in other mining operations such as Inco and Falconbridge in the Sudbury basin. This Bill makes provision for that kind of an agreement. Clause 80.1 provides, and I quote:

> The Governor in Council may be order exclude, in whole or in part, from the application of this Part or any specified provision thereof employment on or in connection with any work or undertaking that is regulated pursuant to the Atomic Energy Control Act.

That provision provides the needed flexibility for referencing of the Ontario occupational health and Safety Act. It dovetails more conveniently all the other provincial government jurisdictions dealing with boilers and other regulations relating to the operation of the mine. There is good provision for this in Bill C-34.

The Bill provides some improvements relating to technological change. That is important in this fast-moving period of technological change. It is fast moving, making jobs obsolete. It is therefore important that these provisions be in the Bill.

A lot of the responsibility for technological change will remain with the employer. There has to be some give and take regardless of the agreements that are reached, such as collective bargaining agreements. They must take into account changes that occur over the two or three-year period of a collective bargaining agreement. A recent example in my constituency is where Canadian Pacific Railways brought in the manual block system, replacing train order people with a radio system so that train orders could be issued by radio operators rather than the train order operators, as was done in the past. This, of course, is a technological change and we do expect technological changes to occur. In the long term, I suppose it makes for a more efficient system. At the same time we would expect large companies like the CPR to operate like good corporate citizens.

The case that was brought to my attention was that of McKerrow where there were three train order operators who had put in an average of 37 to 40 years of service with the CPR. In April of this year their jobs in that location were made obsolete. Even though these operators had 37 or even 40 years of service, they had only reached the age of 58 and their collective bargaining agreement did not provide for an early retirement before reaching the age of 59. In one case the operator was shifted to a new location requiring the family unit to split up for the next year. When people with less than two years of seniority are bumped, their jobs may not be secure in the future.

In this case, three people are losing their jobs because of technological change. They have an opportunity to work in another location but if they do not take that oppportunity their pensions will not become effective at age 59 or 60, as is provided in the agreement, but in fact will become effective at age 65. They have the choice either to move away after 38 or 40 years of service or lose their pensions for seven years. It is an archaic arrangement and a company as large as CPR should not treat its employees like that. I find it unbelievable.

If any Member of the House had an employee working for him for 38 or 40 years who happened to be one year short of being eligible for pension, the Member would do one of two things. Either he would keep the employee on for safety considerations to oversee the operation of the new technological change—and in the case to which I referred, it is very important that dispatchers be secure—or the Member would allow the employee to take his retirement one year sooner. Surely anyone would expect a company as large as the CPR to operate on that basis.

I find it unbelievable that the CPR would force these families to split up and move to another location for such a short period of time or to forgo their pensions for seven years. I think it is important that this matter has been raised in the Bill and it is important that the Government is moving on it. I think it is equally important that the representations that have been made by the union, by the employees themselves, by myself and by other Members of Parliament should not fall on deaf ears but that the CPR should take on its corporate responsibility in a much more positive way, rather than shucking off employees who have put in so many years of good service.

There are a number of very important changes in this Bill about which I will not go into any great detail. I have already mentioned the consolidation of the various federal responsibilities for occupational health and safety. I believe that the provisions regarding major projects are very important because, as we come out of the recession, major projects are being undertaken all across the country. The Blair-Car report and the provisions flowing from that report are very important. The provision of the union dues check-off and the use of the Rand formula which is much more enlightened and forward looking is important. I will not attempt to deal with all of the provisions in the Bill because of time constraints.

Surely the Bill contains important provisions relating to women in the workforce. It contains provisions for leave for childcare responsibilities and for dealing with the question of sexual harassment. There are provisions dealing with the guaranteeing of incomes for handicapped and disabled persons and there are provisions related to people not being demoted, suspended or disciplined for being away from the job because of sickness or injury.

All in all, I believe there are a number of important provisions in the Bill which commend themselves to the House. In committee I am sure Hon. Members will want to make amendments to strengthen the legislation. I believe this Bill is a good start and I am pleased to see that there is much support for having this legislation implemented. We have waited a number of years to see the Bill brought before the House and I would certainly hope that it would be adopted by the end of this month and then implemented so that the employees across the country who work under federal jurisdiction could benefit from it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a 10-minute period for questions and comments. Does anyone wish to put a question?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask some questions of the representative of the Liberal Government who just spoke. He mentioned the experience that he and I have had when trying to get some clarification regarding which jurisdiction the workers in Algoma fall under. We have tried to find out whether they fall under federal law or provincial law or under regulations pursuant to the Atomic Energy Control Act or the Labour Code. He said that he felt very positive about the amendment that is proposed here.

Would he not agree that, for the purposes of those in Elliot Lake, it would be better to say that the Minister could exclude them from coverage under the Canada Labour Code only where they fall under the legislation of the province as agreed to? I am afraid that we are going to end up with another situation in which many workers will be excluded from the Canada Labour Code without falling under the provisions of adequate provincial legislation.

While the Hon. Member is on his feet, perhaps he could explain on behalf of the Government why the Government feels that people who work on ships should not receive the benefit of health and safety committees. It seems to me that the 50, 60 or 100 employees on a ship are working under dangerous conditions just the same as anyone who works on land. If the rest of the provisions of the Act are to apply to these people, why should they not be entitled to the benefit of health and safety committees?

As well, perhaps the Hon. Member could explain to me why the penalties being imposed under this piece of legislation will actually make it easier and cheaper for an employer in fact to violate the law? The most obvious example of that is that the financial penalties for violating the Act to be imposed on both the employer and the employee will be exactly the same. It seems to me that a penalty of $2,000 or $3,000 that is imposed upon an individual can be quite severe but a penalty of $2,000 or $3,000 that is imposed upon Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting or another company like it would obviously be only a token penalty. It may well pay these companies to continue to ignore the law.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that any Government would exclude any group of workers by order under the provisions of the Occupational Health and Safety Act. The Hon. Member is concerned that that might occur, but I do not see any problem with the amendment. I am speaking off the top of my head because I have not looked at the amendment, but I do not see that as being a problem. The important provision is that this law provides for cases such as the one which has been experienced in Ontario in which there was a jurisdictional problem.

● (1240)

Writing regulations over the years which related to the Labour Standards Code became very, very involved, cumberson and difficult. However, the United Steel Workers, in Elliot Lake, the two mining companies, the Ontario Department of Labour, the federal Department of Labour and the Atomic Energy Control Board reached an agreement. There is a provision to exclude them under this Bill which will allow them to continue that agreement. In saying that, I would like to pay tribute to the tremendous efforts which were made both by the steelworkers and by the companies. Without the goodwill that has existed over the past four or five years, there would have been many more difficulties. The agreement is clearly a model of the way in which labour relations should be carried out in the future.

With regard to the question of the Hon. Member which related to health and safety on ships, I believe the provision indicates that there would be one individual appointed rather than a committee. Arguments could be made that a committee would be better than a safety officer, but I think that those are details which should be dealt with in the standing committee rather than in the House. Perhaps representations could be made to the Minister as to whether or not it should be a committee or a single individual. Obviously, it depends on the size of the ship. I believe that the current law requires 20 employees for a committee situation. It would depend on the situation, the size and so on.

I must say that I am pleased with the agreement that has been reached. It will be beneficial with regard to the jurisdictional problem of uranium miners. This Bill will dovetail in with that and make it possible to implement that kind of agreement. We hope to see that agreement reached during the next week.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have two points which I would like to raise. Having been raised in a coal mining area, I believe I have a fairly good background with respect to safety and health committees. I am glad to see that the Bill provides for them. The only thing which bothers me is the fact that only half of the safety committee is made up of employees. The employees are the ones who take the brunt, and the employer is the one who pays.

Many coal mine operators realize that every accident which is prevented saves them a great deal of money. At one time mining was the most hazardous industry. I know of a mine operator who offered three $100 prizes for those employees who did not have an accident. They placed the names in a hat and the $100 prizes were given to some very needy families. This was an incentive. Through the safety committees and that incentive, accidents in the coal mine were cut by more than half. Those safety committees were composed of employee, along with the fire boss who was the representative for the employer.

One other example which indicates that an incentive will work is that of an international trucking firm which is located in Calgary. It realized that every accident which was prevented saved the company money. At the end of the year, all those who did not have an accident would receive an expensive jacket. As well, the company provided a banquet to honour those who had not had accidents. The safety record of that firm is still outstanding. The incentive was there. People went the extra mile not to have an accident.

In this Bill there does not appear to be any particular incentive. One could say that the incentive is that employees will not be injured. But if there is another incentive which could be provided in the Bill along with the safety committees, I think it would help to reduce accidents and to prevent accidents. That is really what we are trying to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there any further questions or comments? For continuing debate, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, when the Parliamentary Secretary was addressing himself to Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Financial Administration Act, he said that this particular piece of legislation had been in the works for the past year.

Mr. Foster: For several years.

Miss MacDonald: He says now that he said several years, but I think he did say for the past year. I would like to point out to him that there have been a number of us who have been urging the Government for a much longer period of time to bring forward this important piece of legislation. In fact, when looking through committee records and debate in the House, I saw questions that were raised with the Government on this issue. I came across a committee report from May 21, 1981, which was over three years ago. At that time, in committee the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) asked the then Minister of Labour, who is now the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan), when members of the committee could expect amendments to the Canada Labour Code to be brought forward. For the information of the Parliamentary Secretary, I would like to read the response of the then Minister of Labour. With respect to the review of the Canada Labour Code, he said:

> This review, which in my opinion has been painstaking and comprehensive, will shortly emerge as a package of amendments to the code and will substantially involve employment safety, conditions of employment, improving matters of specific concern to women and minority groups, and dispute settlement.

He went on to say:

> At this particular stage, I would seek the indulgence of the Hon. Members if I do not go into the exact details of the package. The appropriate place for this . . . will be its introduction in the House which I hope will be in the near future.

That was in May of 1981. He asked the indulgence of Members to await the introduction into the House in the near future of the details of the amendments. He must feel that the indulgence, patience and forbearance of Members can be stretched to the ultimate limit. That is what the Government has done in the past three years with regard to amendments to the Canada Labour Code. It has delayed them in the face of questions, urgings and pleadings which have been raised by members of the Official Opposition over and over again.

The result is that we have before us, in the dying days of Parliament, a very complex set of amendments to the Canada Labour Code. These are amendments which are of great interest to labour organizations, business firms, women's groups and people who want to examine them in detail. I think I can say at the outset that this is the major criticism which we have with this particular piece of legislation. It has been delayed so long that it allows so little time for substantial examination, study and improvement in committee.

Improvements do have to be made to this legislation, Mr. Speaker. There is no question about that. We have stated that, as we did the other day when we introduced an Opposition day debate so that we could urge the Government to bring this legislation forward. We are concerned about it. We want to see it get into committee. We want to see it passed. However, we also want to see it improved.

This Bill does go some way toward improving the rules and regulations which govern work standards and occupational health and safety as well as the general framework of labour relations for industries under federal jurisdiction, such as transportation, communications and banking. It also includes employees of some 40 Crown corporations and all employees in the Public Service. Those workers come to approximately 10 per cent of the Canadian labour force. That is how many will be directly affected by this legislation.

However, the importance of the legislation is just not in the number of people who will be affected. It is also vital in that it has the capability of a demonstration effect. It will show what can be done in those areas of federal jurisdiction to improve the situations in which people work, and it will set an example for industry, not only in the private sector but with respect to people who are employed in provincial jurisdictions. If that demonstration effect is carried out, then actions will really speak louder than words. However, as I said, Mr. Speaker, these actions have been a long time in coming.

Not only is this Bill slow in being brought forward, but in looking at the various amendments which are being put forward I would say that it is much stronger in dealing with some issues than it is with others. There are certain areas in this Bill which are notably weak. I have, as I mentioned the other day, particular concern about the way this Bill deals with issues which are of particular concern to women. It does take into cognizance the fact that there has been a tremendous growth of women in the labour force, a growth which has happened in all areas of the labour force. Women now account for over 40 per cent of the present labour force and it is interesting to note that it is predicted that in the decade ahead of us at least six out of every ten new entrants to the labour force will be women. It is important that we come to grips with some of the issues which affect women the most.

One of the issues which is dealt with in this particular Bill is the increased possibility of sexual harassment. That becomes more of a possibility as we see women entering into non-traditional sectors of the workplace. It is, therefore, vital that we not only come to grips with this issue but that we try to define the problem in a way in which it has not been seriously addressed in the past. If we can come up with the proper definition and the proper processes of carrying that definition through, it will be then more possible than it has been in the past to have cases of sexual harassment referred to the Human Rights Commission and dealt with under the Human Rights Act. The importance of coming to grips with this issue, Mr. Speaker, cannot be underestimated.

What is needed is to provide a formal process for action against sexual harassment and to also include employers in anti-harassment programs, because they are on the front lines and are able to develop and implement appropriate programs. Therefore, employers have to be involved in this whole area.

I want to point out, however, Mr. Speaker, that it goes beyond what we can set down in terms of definitions, and even legal processes, because sexual harassment is an affront to a person's dignity. There is no question about that. It not only diminishes the individual herself but it can also have a tremendous impact on the way in which that person is able to perform her work. It has an impact on the conduct of work and on the way that an individual is able to behave. That in turn has a very direct correlation to a person's promotion and the way in which a person is able to be advanced in the workplace. All of these factors are interrelated. That is why it is so very critical.

I would say to the Minister that these amendments are a good first step, but they are only a first step. I want to add a note of caution because there is no single definition or single set of legal processes which will eliminate this problem overnight. It is going to take education and it is going to take time, we know that. That is why I wish these amendments had come in three years ago when they were first promised. We would then be that much further down the road toward the elimination of sexual harassment. However, it is a very critical issue and I want to see it dealt with.

Another area which the Bill addresses to some extent, and one I am happy to see being raised, is the area of proposed amendments to the child care provisions. The present requirement of 12 months' continual employment prior to being eligible for maternity leave is being reduced to three months. In addition, there is a proposal for a further 24-week period of unpaid leave, so that employees, whether male or female, have the choice to assume the responsibility of caring at home for a new child, whether natural or adopted, during those first critical six months. Also of note is that the 24 weeks may be split between the two parents. I feel that is a truly fair provision which reflects the dual responsibility of parents in the raising of children. It is only fair also that when an employee is away on child care or pregnancy leave, pension and health and disability benefits, as well as seniority and opportunities for promotion, continue if the employee so chooses.

Finally, Sir, the childcare leave would be at the discretion of the employee, and that is a good move. No employer could dismiss, suspend, demote or lay off an employee who chooses to take leave. There can be little doubt that these amendments relating to childcare or pregnancy leave, as well as those I mentioned relating to sexual harassment, more adequately reflect the role of women in the workforce. It puts an end to the present set-up which not only fails to protect women but, I would say to you, Sir, in fact penalizes them for having children or, indeed, even for being female. Therefore, I see these amendments as an improvement. However, what is unfortunate is that similar progressive amendments are not proposed in other areas of the labour force which are undergoing tremendous change.

I see that it is one one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and I will continue with that matter later.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

TRIBUTE TO LEADERSHIP

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, almost one year ago today the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. Mulroney) was elected Leader of this Party. As a Canadian from western Canada, permit me to offer three reasons why I believe most voters in all four western provinces will elect his candidates in the upcoming election, whenever it comes.

First, he has already articulated our major economic needs—an energy policy which unites provinces, industry and consumers in common cause; freedom of choice for grain producers instead of compulsory and over-rich payments to the CPR and CNR; opening Canada for business again, particularly in increased exports to America and Pacific rim nations; and retraining Canadians.

Second, under his leadership an outstanding group of men and women have already won fiercely contested PC nominations throughout the West. There is at best now the possibility of a PC victory in every western constituency in the upcoming election, given the NDP drop in support.

Third, my leader has the competence, personal integrity, experience, candidates, and programs to get our economy moving again at high employment levels. The current flurry of pre-election activity by the Liberals in the West and elsewhere can only remind people of the man who abused his wife for years until the day she won a large lottery, and he then arrived with a box of chocolates. In short, the voice of the West will only be heard effectively—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—EMPLOYMENT MEASURES ADVOCATED BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, during the 16 year tenure of the Liberal Party, youth unemployment has escalated almost beyond belief. In one short year as a Member of Parliament, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Mulroney) has compiled innovative policy to take young people off the streets and put them back to work. The Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party has good reason to celebrate his first year in the House of Commons. Through his genuine concern for Canada's youth, the bedrock of our society, he has exposed the sham which has become the Liberal Government. There are over 800,000 young people looking for employment. Read it and weep, Mr. Prime Minister, whoever you will be.

While the Liberals propose to apply a mustard plaster to cure the symptoms of fever run amuck, this Party is prepared to treat the cause of the illness. Our Leader has pledged this Party to follow six main principles to aid Canadian youth before it is too late. They include greater co-operation at all levels of government, a more creative approach to the UIC, local action and community self help, accent on the individual, challenging the private sector, and the dissemination of timely and relevant information. There is not time now to explain each measure in detail, but rest assured herein lies the answer that the Liberals have been vainly seeking for 16 years. The Progressive Conservatives have it, and are ready to use it.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I read with interest an interview with the Leader of the Official Opposition which appeared in the weekend Ottawa Citizen. He was asked would he rather run against John Turner or Jean Chrétien. The article says:

"It's really six of one, a half dozen of the other", he says without any hesitation.

"I believe people want a fundamental change and they know they are not going to get it with either of them."

He was then asked:

But are Mulroney and Turner not saying a lot that is identical?

His response was:

"John Turner has said absolutely nothing he didn't take from me. Just look at my book, my speeches, my leadership campaign.

It's all there. Word for word."

Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Official Opposition is correct, then how can the public expect to get a change if Mr. Turner is copying verbatim what Mr. Mulroney is suggesting? It seems the only question left unanswered is not which is Tweedle-dum, but which is Tweedle-dumber?

MINES AND MINING

MINERS MEMORIAL DAY—TRIBUTE TO CAPE BRETON COAL MINERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, as a Member from a coal mining area, one that is proud of its coal mining tradition, I wish to say we approach Miners Memorial Day, June 11, 1984, with a sense of pride and a sense of sorrow. On this date we are reminded of the history of coal mining in Cape Breton and of the role coal mining has played in the shaping of our community. Mining on the Island dates back to 1720. Many technological advances have evolved since then. While mining methods have changed over the years, the unique qualities of the miner, which can be best described in one word, courageous, have not.

The struggle of the miner has not been without adversity. We remember the fight to bring in the United Mine Workers of America and the infamous strike of 1909-1910; the six years of protest culminating in the strike of 1925, and the tragic death of William Davis, killed 58 years ago.

We also remember the No. 12 Mine explosion of 1917, more recently the explosion in 1979, and even more recently the fire at No. 26 Colliery some months ago. Over the years there have been triumphs and disasters. At this time we remember the contributions made by all miners and their families, and honour those who lost their lives.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, like most Canadians I am growing weary of the Liberal Government's favourite indoor sport of plucking feathers off the American eagle. We have had the gratuitous "I'm all right, Jack" statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), and the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) flippant remarks at Uplands Airport on the weekend.

The U.S. is our closest neighbour, greatest friend, and most significant trade and defence partner. Were it not for the disastrous policies of the present Canadian Government, we as a people would be able to take advantage of the downstream benefits of the economic recovery in the U.S.—the boom in manufacturing and productivity, the recapture of lost jobs, and the addition of hundreds of thousands of new jobs. Instead of constantly bad mouthing the U.S., the Government should begin to practise better diplomatic relations and economic ties.

Our Leader has been giving this message and advice to this Government for the last 12 months, but apparently neither the Prime Minister nor any of his Cabinet have been listening. It is a downright shame. Canadians deserve better. We need jobs.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

TREATMENT BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, during the life of this Liberal Government the CPR has been the recipient of special favours. Here are two of many examples. During public hearings on the abandonment of the Rosedale-East Coulee branchline before the prairie section of CTC, I asked the railway to give me the depreciation figures on this branch line since its construction. The railway refused, but the CTC chairman ordered the CPR to provide me with the figures. I wanted this information as I am convinced that the CPR has depreciated this branch line several times. I waited in vain, and finally the CTC wiggled out of the order. The Liberal Government condoned the CPR's hiding this information from the public.

• (1410)

Again, prior to the Crow debate Dr. Gilson recommended that the shortfall be paid to the farmers so they could pay the increased freight rates. The Bill provided for the freight increases for the farmers, all right, but the Government gave the total shortfall to the railways, with the CPR getting the lion's share. Then the other day the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) had the gall to misinform the public by saying that this year the Government had given more than a billion dollars to the farmers. He should have said "to the railways".

But the CPR is still not satisfied. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has put Ian Sinclair, past President of the CPR, into the Senate, and now there are forces within the Liberal Party at work to make John Turner, a CPR director, Prime Minister of Canada. The Liberal Government and John Turner put the CPR first, but with the PCs and Brian Mulroney, the people are first.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER CANADA EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise to impress upon the House and the Government the urgent necessity for more funds to be allocated for job-creation purposes in high unemployment areas. I am talking about student employment.

The funds allocated to government Departments for the employment of students usually only affect urban areas because that is where the government Departments are. Private enterprise producers summer jobs mainly again in urban areas, because that is mostly where a private enterprise exists.

The only possibility for student employment in high unemployment rural areas is the direct job-creation program, Summer Canada Employment Program. If the Government is going to take action, it must be done now. Next month will be too late.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NON-ADVERTISING OF LOCAL SERVICES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, last week in the communities of The Pas and Thompson, the CTC held hearings on an application by CN to remove station agents and destroy stations in various communities in northern Manitoba. From the presentations that were made to the CTC it became apparent that one of the ways that CN and VIA discourage local business is by advertising only the toll-free numbers in the local telephone directories.

For example, in the community of Ilford, CN is listed with one 1-800 number and VIA is listed with one 1-800 number. Pikwitonei, CN has one 1-800 number, and there is no VIA number listed. In Thicket Portage both CN and VIA have 1-800 numbers. In Wabowden both CN and VIA have 1-800 numbers. In Cranberry Portage there are eight CN numbers and two VIA numbers, all of which are 1-800 numbers.

The point is that CN, with the support of VIA, is trying to take away the jobs of the local station agents but at the same time, in order to justify taking away those jobs, it has deliberately not advertised the existence of local facilities and local staff for a number of years. Such lack of service and lack of aggressiveness by CN and VIA just prove that the railways are trying to destroy the service that they are supposed to be providing.

AGRICULTURE

COMPENSATION SOUGHT FOR CROP LOSSES IN LANAUDIÈRE REGION OF QUEBEC

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, for the third time, I wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that, on September 13, 1983, the Lanaudière Federation of the UPA told the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) about the seriousness of the problems caused by the drought in area last summer.

In October 1983, the four areas concerned, that are represented by 12 to 15 federal Members of Parliament, including myself, again advised the minister of the seriousness of the situation. All the formal and informal discussions which followed that meeting clearly showed how desperate it was. However, the federal Minister is now refusing to provide financial assistance to these farmers who are in a desperate situation.

In his reply to Mr. Garon on May 11, the Minister of Agriculture stated that he did not believe such an intervention as requested by his Quebec counterpart was justified in view of the existence of an adequate crop insurance system. In fact, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues from Quebec, on the other side of the House, are perfectly aware that the crop insurance plan does not protect the farmers and does not provide replacement value or compensate for hay of lower quality.

In spite of all that, the Minister is refusing to provide direct assistance to the farmers even though this assistance would be justified and has already been provided in other areas in Canada; he is still saying that the crop insurance plan could correct the situation, which is absolutely—

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately, the time allotted to the Hon. Member has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EMPLOYMENT

FUNDING OF JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Rossi: And the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Leader of the Opposition is in my friend's riding, making sure that he will not be back after the next election.

I want to address my remarks to the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns the horrendous unemployment statistics that were announced last Friday and which are a cancer on our nation that will not go away. My question is addressed particularly with respect to the fact that we now have hard evidence to the effect that moneys for employment opportunities, to be invested in capital projects, are being withheld by regional Ministers for political purposes, not to be announced until the time of an election this summer or next fall. We did not get an assurance from the Acting Prime Minister that this practice would stop.

I can give the Minister some examples of moneys that have not yet been expended but which could be used right now when thousands of high school students across the nation will be coming into the workforce. There is a $40 million fund with respect to the Special Employment Initiatives Program. There is money not now being released? Why is the Government persisting in carrying out its political activities on the backs of the unemployed of the nation?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I think that a few of my colleagues and myself gave all the necessary explanations on Friday. We listed all the programs which had been implemented for some time in all sectors such as the creation of jobs for the young and not so young, the training program, another one for young people in the fisheries sector and in the environment sector. We listed all those programs, and complete lists are available to the Hon. Member.

Obviously, I have never heard anything about regional Ministers allegedly delaying the implementation of those programs. I think they are more sensible than that. It is in our own interest to create jobs and promote job creation as rapidly as possible. I cannot imagine where the Hon. Member has heard such remarks. As to the western grain stabilization program which we adopted in the House 15 days ago, it will be implemented without delay one year and a half before it was due to come on stream if we had not amended the act.

[English]

RELEASE OF FUNDS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. I already mentioned this to the Acting Prime Minister, who apparently is not interested in the unemployment crisis we are now facing, and who gives trivial, philosophic utterances in a lazy way.

We have hard evidence to the effect that moneys that could be used for job creation are being held back by members of his Cabinet for political purposes, not to be announced until this summer, at a time when we are facing an unprecedented crisis in terms of unemployment. Now that the Prime Minister is back in Canada I want to ask him if he will not now advise and instruct his regional Ministers to release that money in the interest of the employment opportunities that should be available in our country, and in the interest of those who are seeking work and so desperately need work.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member says that he has hard evidence of Cabinet Ministers holding back funds, I suspect that what he means is that he has no hard evidence. He is just making it up.

I have looked into this matter since my arrival. I know that the Hon. Member raised the question, or that one of his colleagues had raised the question. Over the weekend I looked to see if there were the slightest grounds for suspecting that there was any evidence. Not only did I not find any hard evidence, I find the contrary evidence. I find that Canada Works constituency funds are almost totally committed already, and the fiscal year is only beginning. Summer Canada funds of $201 million are 95 per cent committed, and the balance is being approved at the moment as I am talking.

• (1420)

Career Access Funds are being committed at a steady rate of $3.2 million a week. Funding under Section 38, Canada Works Initiative, is being spent at the rate of $1.7 million a week.

I go through all the programs, Mr. Speaker, LEAD, Career Access, employment creation grants, contributions, everything is being spent. Nothing is being held back. When the Hon. Member says he has hard evidence, I suspect he is either just starting a rumour, flying a kite, or using the usual rhetorical approach to untruth.

SPECIAL EMPLOYMENT INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the recitation on the part of the Prime Minister, maybe the Prime Minister will be able to stand in his place in the dying days of his office and give us the assurance—unequivocal assurance—

Mr. Cousineau: Cheap shot.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: These are facts. The Prime Minister is leaving his office. I think one of the final things he should do is make sure that something is done in terms of the Special Employment Initiatives Program of $40 million. His Minister of Employment has stated on the record that he cannot understand why the regional ministers have not yet given specific direction with respect to that matter and it is being held back. His Minister of Fisheries and Oceans told the Newfoundland Minister of Fisheries that he cannot get the Newfoundland regional minister to pay out the moneys or instruct him with respect to moneys for capital projects until, obviously, the time of the next election. Why have the western grain transportation funds not yet been expended in western Canada?

Where are these moneys that are so desperately needed now for the purposes of finding employment for the unemployed of our nation? Will the Prime Minister give us an unequivocal assurance that he will check to make sure these moneys are not being withheld, because we do have the facts? We've got the goods on him this time.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Hon. Member talks about facts, he talks about hard evidence, but he gives none, Mr. Speaker. He just talks about having the goods. We have allocated $1.2 billion plus in this year to create jobs, to fight unemployment, apart from all the job creation which comes out of the announcements which have been currently made, for instance, the American Motors Renault announcement and the Husky upgrader announcement. There are jobs being created, but in so far as direct fund spending for jobs is concerned, Mr. Speaker, all the Hon. Member is saying is that some regional Ministers are telling departmental Ministers: "Look, if you are going to spend money in my province, tell me how you are going to spend it and we will discuss it."

The fiscal year is only three months begun. I tell the Hon. member that, far from holding back, we have in some areas spent 95 per cent or 100 per cent of the funds. It seems absolutely proposterous, pure invention, pure fiction to suggest that we would be holding funds to spend in the next election. The Hon. Member may presume to know when the next election is. I do not.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I know it has to be very soon.

Mr. Trudeau: I know that if this Government stays in office, or my successor decides not to have an election very soon, I know he will be running out of money for the constituency fund. As I say, the Canada Works constituency funds are almost totally committed. What will he spend next fall and next winter? I do not know, Mr. Speaker. I think the problem then will be that the Hon. Member will be saying: "Increase the deficit. Spend more. You spent too much last spring. You spent too much last summer creating jobs". They will change their line, but then consistency is not the forte of the Hon. Member.

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS PROGRAM—SCHEDULING OF EXPENDITURES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister in reply to my colleague mentioned all of the programs except one. This is the program on which I want to focus his attention. It is called the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program. For example, for this fiscal year it has a budget of $1.1 billion. We know from a cabinet document of last October that scheduling of expenditures under that program since the April 12 Budget was falling far behind. This is the area where funds are being withheld.

Given the extent of the unemployment problem, given the fact that it is immorally reprehensible and politically indefensible to hold back these funds when they could be providing jobs now, will the Prime Minister give us an assurance that all of the expenditures under this program will be released by the regional political Ministers?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was here when the Budget was read. Indeed, he is right that there was less money spent last year than had been foreseen under the capital recovery projects. But this means we will be spending substantially more money this year than had been planned or anticipated, as he mentioned, to the tune of some $1.1 billion. That expenditure is going on at the present time in every province.

No funds are being withheld. No funds are being held in reserve. On the contrary, we are monitoring regularly in Cabinet the progress of expenditures in that regard. We have instructed our officials to make sure that the planned expenditures would be incurred and that the capital recovery projects would proceed this year in an expeditious way so as to spend more than we had anticipated, as I said, to the tune of some $1.1 billion.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have another question which I will direct to the Minister of Finance. Can he give us an unqualified assurance that programs under the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, including Small Craft Harbours, programs under Public Works, and programs under the Post Office, all of which come under the category of special recovery capital projects, are not being withheld or held up by regional Ministers in their political capacity? Perhaps he can also give us some indication of just exactly how much money is left in that program.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly give the Hon. Member that assurance for the good reason that these funds have never been in the purview of regional Ministers to withhold. The Minister of State responsible for economic development is in charge of that program. There is a special team of officials who are supervising this program. As I told the Hon. Member, the Cabinet committee responsible for economic development is reviewing the progress of expenditures in that regard on a regular basis. Any funds about which there might be some delay of expenditures might be the result of a reallocation of funds because a project which had been approved is not proceeding as fast as anticipated, and things like that. These are the only types of circumstances where I could see some foreseen expenditures not occurring.

As far as the exact figure is concerned, I am afraid I do not have it with me today but I will inquire of the Minister of State for Economic and Regional Development and his officials.

If that Minister is not in the House tomorrow I will be very happy to provide the Hon. Member with the information.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT—SUGGESTION ONTARIO HYDRO USE WESTERN CANADIAN COAL

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment. The Prime Minister might know that last Thursday the acid rain subcommittee released its second report during this Parliament. It reiterated its concern over the acid rain emissions which continue to fall all across the country. In particular the committee suggested that although the federal provincial environment ministers have set a target by 1994 of a 50 per cent reduction in emissions, in fact emissions in most of the major areas have increased.

Would the Prime Minister direct someone in the Cabinet or have the Government undertake discussions with the Government of the Province of Ontario, the purpose of which would be to try to convince the Province of Ontario that it would be better, both from an emission point of view and from a creation of employment point of view, for Ontario Hydro to purchase coal from western Canada, which has a lower sulphur content, than to purchase coal which Hydro presently uses and gets from the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take this to be a specific representation to the Minister of the Environment. I will make sure that he is informed of it. That being said, the Minister of the Environment himself has deplored the lack of progress in the fight which the Governments and the private sector must carry on to improve the quality of our environment.

I can assure the Hon. Member, having just returned from a discussion of this subject in Europe, that the Europeans are concerned with the same situation there, and in a much more serious way because of the more limited space. Their countries and ours are looking forward to the international meeting in Munich, I believe in a few months, where we will try to tackle this subject in a co-ordinated way between countries. The Hon. Member is making a specific representation which concerns the Government of Ontario. I will make sure that our Minister is informed of it.

AUTOMOBILE EMISSIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in a related area where the Government of Canada has sufficient jurisdiction to move unilaterally on the question of emissions from automobiles, why has it not moved to put into effect the recommendation of the acid rain subcommittee which would have seen a two-thirds reduction in the emissions from automobiles and would have brought Canadian-made automobiles into line with the standards already in place in the United States? Why has the federal Government not taken steps in that regard, given that the Minister of the Environment said some six months or seven months ago that a statment on that question would be coming within a couple of weeks?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment upon the couple of weeks which the Hon. Member mentioned. I know that the problem of emission reduction in automobiles, in factories and so on, is always discussed with great enthusiasm, and justifiably so, by environmentalists. It is the Ministers responsible for employment, job creation, and investment who always make the point that we have to proceed at a slower pace if we do not want to force certain companies to go under and if we do not want to put workers out of a job.

I remind the Hon. Member that before the OPEC crisis, or even before the recent recession of slowdown in the economies of the industrialized world, there was much greater enthusiasm for rapid fighting of the problems of air pollutants and water pollutants. Now we are seeing Governments everywhere, provincial, federal, and in other countries, trying to balance this with the need to keep jobs going and the workers at work. High unemployment figures would be affected adversely if we were to close down some plants because they had not moved as quickly as we would like in reducing their levels of emissions.

UNITED STATES STANDARDS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, given that in the first instance the course of action we proposed, the use of coal from western Canada, would be both beneficial economically and from the point of view of acid rain emissions and would not in any way jeopardize any manufacturing operations in Canada, it would seem that that would be a logical undertaking. However, I think the second point is more important. How is it that the United States was able to enforce automobile emission standards at a level considerably below those in place in Canada? Why is it that we in Canada cannot require Canadian manufacturers of automobiles to meet the same standards as they are required to meet when they manufacture within the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member returns to the use of coal. He indicated in the phrasing of his question the first time that it was a provincial matter, a matter for Ontario Hydro. It is true that it is likely to impinge directly upon manufacturing jobs in Ontario. If the cost of the coal is higher when we include transport, if it means bringing coal at greater expense, presumably it would mean increasing the hydro rates in Ontario, and presumably it would mean that it would cost that much more for companies employing workers to break even. I do not know the answer. I am not a negotiator for Ontario. I told the Hon. Member that it would be brought up. I guess the same kind of answer would have to apply to the matter of automobiles.

I hope the Hon. Member is not holding up the United States as an example in its approach to combating environmental pollution. He shakes his head in the negative. I am reassured, because I can assure him that much of the fight of the Minister of Environment of Canada is with the United States to get it to respect certain provisions of the Great Lakes clean-up agreements and to proceed with a little more zeal in fighting the problem of acid rain. The Hon. Member pointed out the problem of automobile emissions. I am not involved in that particular aspect. I will also refer it to the Minister of the Environment.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last week the Minister of State for Youth conceded that there are some 800,000 young Canadians who are directly affected by unemployment. That crisis has been with us for three years. After three years the Government and the Minister of State for Youth have the temerity to put forward what is described as a guide in seeking the development of a comprehensive youth policy in Canada. After three years the Government offers a guide. Those 800,000 Canadians do not need a guide. They need action. The policy they want is jobs. What steps is the Minister of Finance prepared to take to see that action takes place for young people this summer, so that there will not be 800,000 unemployed young Canadians?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly not do what the last Conservative Government of which she was a part did, that is, abolish direct job-creation programs which were helping young people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I can assure her that this Government will not do what her Government did during the short time it was in office. In the meantime, in terms of job creation and job training for youth only, in 1983-84 we expect to have spent $634.9 million on job creation alone, and some $493.1 million on training for young people. By far this is much more than has ever been spent in any particular year in this country on job support for young people—by far, by hundreds of millions of dollars more than has ever been spent. Obviously I do not have to repeat the reference to the experience of the Government of which she was a part that killed, as its first step, those programs of help for the unemployed.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance goes through a recital, and every time he opens his mouth he shows that the policies of his Government are not working. Otherwise, why would the number of unemployed continue to mount month after month?

The Government can only come up with guides and general statements, and it now says that it needs more time to develop policies to meet the crisis among the young people. Young people are running out of time. Since the Minister's Government has taken three years to come up with what it says is a guide to a youth policy, how does it feel the young people of the country will react when they are told they are the ones who are lazy? They do not take three years to get things done.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that this Government did not wait to respond to the concerns of young people. If she would only go back to the 70s, for instance, she will recall that the Government created the Company of Young Canadians early in that decade. In fact, it was even during the 60s that we created that company, which the Progressive Conservatives attacked systematically and continuously at the time.

Afterwards, we developed the Katimavik Program. We also developed the Young Canada-World Program. We did this during the 70s long before the Hon. Member's short stay in Government when they tried to kill off these programs. What we did during this period was to allocate year after year more money to help young people through direct job creation and training programs designed especially for them.

As I stated earlier, this year we shall be allocating $1.1 billion to solve the problems of young people as far as unemployment and training are concerned; this is hundreds of millions of dollars more than any federal Government has ever spent to help young people.

Far from delaying the implementation of policies to help young Canadians, the Government has been at the forefront of youth assistance in all areas, for instance in the federal contribution to post-secondary education, where year after year, the federal Government has contributed well over the increase in funding authorized by provincial Conservative Governments for this very important sector of the Canadian economy.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT HELP THE YOUNG UNEMPLOYED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. For ten years I have heard the Minister reminding us of the interest his Party has shown in youth. My question is straightforward, and that is what young Canadians want to hear. In Canada, 800,000 young people are still looking for jobs. Could the Minister of Finance inform the House, in all honesty, whether he intends to introduce programs that could be implemented within the next few weeks or is he merely going to remind us that, unfortunately, 800,000 young Canadians are unemployed? I know the Minister of State (Youth) expressed her concern for these thousands of young Canadians. Could the Minister of Finance suggest today some kind of corrective action or special assistance for these young people? Otherwise, I would urge him to stop reminding us about what he has done in the last twenty years.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance) Mr. Speaker, I did not have to go back twenty years to inform the House about what we have done. I referred to programs that are in effect at this time. Unfortunately, the Hon. Member does not seem to want to be bothered to find out about these programs. Canada Works, Summer Canada, Career Access, the federal Government's program to provide for a very substantial financial contribution to post-secondary education, the additional $500 million being spent by the federal Government on direct assistance to on-the-job training for young people—all those programs exist. If the Hon. Member wants a list, I should be glad to send him a copy. He will realize that the Canadian Government has continued to set a very high priority on resolving the youth unemployment problem. It has been one of our highest priorities and will continue to be a major one. It is an extremely difficult problem which will take time to resolve. We are entirely aware of this, but we are working on it instead of indulging in the kind of rhetoric we are hearing from the Progressive Conservatives. Once again, when they were in power for a short nine months, the first initiative taken by their Government, which included the Hon. Member, was to eliminate youth assistance programs.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROVIDE DETAILED AND SPEEDY INFORMATION

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Youth). For the information of the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State (Youth) has both acknowledged and deplored that it was normal nowadays that young Canadians did not have enough money to eat. She also said last week that it was necessary to correct, as soon as possible, the imbalance between "haves" and "have nots". In the circumstances, it is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of State (Youth) confirms the view that the Minister of Finance has not fulfilled the expectations of Canada's youth. Could the Minister of State (Youth), who has mentioned programs that might be introduced this fall, inform the House today, to give young Canadians something to hope for, what her intentions are or exactly what kind of programs she intends to introduce, and, I hope, as soon as possible?

Hon. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think my comments contradict what the Minister of Finance said. With the Minister, I realize that the federal Government has done a great deal for youth. However, I think we should do more, and I believe that the steps my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has taken together with her provincial counterpart, Mrs. Marois, namely to add $59 million to help young drop-outs and young people on welfare, are an example of the co-operation shown by the federal Government. We are negotiating with other provinces, and at this time I can give my hon. colleague the assurance that if Ontario and other provinces are willing to increase benefits for young people in order to give them additional training or let them do community work or seek additional training in the private sector, we are prepared to co-operate. Quebec's example shows that we are willing to help young people, but the provinces must do their share.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

NATURE OF PROGRAM—NEEDS OF THE UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week the Leader of the Opposition, in commenting on unemployment insurance, said the following:

> It defies common sense to spend billions and billions and billions of dollars to keep men and women idle—

That reflected the Tory philosophy that it is unemployment insurance that keeps people unemployed rather than the state of the economy. I recognize that the Prime Minister is not responsible for the words of the Leader of the Opposition.

I would also like to quote the Minister of Employment and Immigration who said that his proposal for changing unemployment insurance would be as follows:

> It would mean people drawing unemployment insurance would be required to use their unemployment insurance payments as a means of participating in training and retraining programs.

Will the Prime Minister agree that those who are unemployed are not so unemployed because they love that prospect, or because of an insurance program from which they are now benefiting, but are unemployed because of the state of the economy? Will the Prime Minister also agree that many who draw unemployment insurance need that money to provide adequate food and shelter. They do not have extra money for retraining programs at this time.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked a rhetorical question and made a very valid point. I will make sure that it is conveyed to the Leader of the Opposition so that he will take heed of the Hon. Member's suggestion.

MINISTER'S RETRAINING PROPOSAL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, perhaps for the remainder of this week the Prime Minister could also convey that message to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The problem with the proposal made by the Minister is that many young people, women, and native people do not qualify for unemployment insurance at the present time. If we are going to make training and retraining a part of the UI package, many of those people will find it even more difficult to get into community colleges and other training programs. Will the Prime Minister agree that it would be much better if those programs were adequately funded instead of requiring people when they are unemployed to use their UI money, which is meant to cover their legitimate costs, such as food, shelter and other normal expenses to maintain a home?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it would be even better if there were a much lower rate of unemployment. In cases where the unemployment fund is used by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, under the provisions of the Act, it is done in consultation with the unions and the companies when it is decided to use some unemployment funds with governmental supplements in order to provide work-sharing, for instance. This is provided for under the Act. It is authorized by Parliament. In many cases it is wanted by the workers themselves. It is only in those cases that we proceed with it.

The Hon. Member is making a valid general point that an unemployment insurance scheme is an insurance scheme and the funds should be used essentially to provide an interim income to those who are unemployed through no fault of their own. In my first answer I supported that point, but I tell him that there are some ways in which unemployment funds can be used with the consent of the participants in the fund to provide jobs, for example in the work-sharing scheme.

EMPLOYMENT

RIDING ALLOCATION FORMULA FOR DISTRIBUTION OF JOB-CREATION FUNDS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who will know that Conservatives create jobs. When we were the Government, jobs for young people went up by 7,000 a month. Under his Government, Liberals lose jobs; 5,500 a month on average since the Liberals again took over. That is the difference.

I ask the Minister of Finance to recall that in 1980 when he took over as Minister of Energy, Alberta had the lowest unemployment rate in the country and one of the lowest in the world. With his policies, in four years he has created record high unemployment rates. He brags about employment creation programs and the money that goes into direct job creation. Can the Minister of Finance tell us why direct job creation money is being allocated to ridings today on the basis of unemployment rates from 1980 and 1981 rather than those of 1984?

• (1450)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that, since the beginning of this year, 74,000 new jobs have been created in this country. Last month alone, 23,000 new jobs were created. My friend could reflect upon those figures which indicate that there is indeed a significant amount of job creation taking place.

Dealing with the situation of his own province, I would like to remind my hon. friend that, as recently as last week, we announced a significant participation in an upgrader project in Saskatchewan which will have the joint participation of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Both provinces will be benefiting significantly from this particular development.

As far as the energy situation in general is concerned, I must remind my friend of the situation around the world, and particularly of that in the United States. Perhaps he would like to check the figures for Oklahoma, Texas, and a number of other states, to see what has happened over there in the last two years regarding the decline in activities in the energy field. He would learn, for instance, that in Canada oil well drilling is increasing proportionately more than it is in the United States. He will also learn that, in the last year, the share of the revenues going to the industry in Canada was the same as it was in 1979, and it was a share that was larger by several billion dollars. In the last year the industry in Canada has benefited significantly from the energy programs of the Government.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, not one of the those states in the United States has an unemployment rate of 12 per cent. Today there are more people working in the United States than there were four years ago. In this country there are fewer people working now than there were four years ago. The fault lies with the Government, not with lazy Canadians.

REQUEST THAT FORMULA BE CHANGED

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, could I have an answer to my question? For direct job creation the Government uses a formula that is composed of labour surplus rates based on statistics that begin in April, 1979. We are talking about unemployment in 1984. The formula gives a bias to Liberal ridings for election purposes and creates second-class unemployed and first-class unemployed. Will the Government change the formula so that unemployed people who live in Conservative ridings have an equal chance to get a job? All we are asking for is an equal chance.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with the imputation that the Hon. Member has put behind his question, I do not believe that it even deserves an answer. I see Hon. Members of the Opposition rising constantly, brandishing figures from Statistics Canada and saying: "This independent agency has come forward with these figures." They then use the figures to attack the Government. Now the Hon. Member is saying that Statistics Canada is an organization with a Liberal bias. Members of the Conservative Party had better make up their minds about what they want to do and what they do not want to do.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister. As we all know, the Prime Minister has been admirably representing Canada overseas.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: I will give the devil his due at times. However, today we have been trying to get across to the Prime Minister and the Government the importance of the youth unemployment situation. There are 800,000 young people who are unemployed. They are trying to find jobs, but they cannot find jobs. I wonder if, in his possibly last days, the Prime Minister would not make it a high priority to look at the youth unemployment situation, particularly at this time when so many young people are entering the job market from the high schools and universities. I am sure he is aware of the seriousness of the problems being faced by these young people.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is a very, very serious question, and I believe that many of today's previous answers have indicated that the Government is very much aware of this problem and is acting to alleviate as much as it can the unfortunate plight of the young unemployed. In the first answer I gave today, I believe that I indicated that 95 per cent of the funds allocated for Canada Summer Works have already been allocated. The Hon. Member can see from that that the Government is not only aware of the problem but is acting on it.

SOLUTION INQUIRY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Prime Minister's concern. I wonder if the only solution to this widespread problem would be for young Canadians to wait until our Leader, a man who has the solutions to these problems, takes over?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would only say God help them if that is the only solution.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

TAX CREDIT INCENTIVES FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns research and development tax credits. In typical fashion, using a crisis management mentality, the Minister introduced a quick-fix solution which has now created a zoo. The Dean of Engineering at the University of Victoria has called it a morally bankrupt situation. "We are seeing the phenomenon of people running around with bags full of money that must be gotten rid of within one year". In fact the only research that is being done is being done by accountants and tax lawyers. Will the Minister admit that a gross miscalculation has occurred, and will he change the situation immediately?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in an answer to a question which was asked of me last week or the week before, I stated that the Minister of National Revenue and I were monitoring the situation. I said that, if we were to discover any particular abuses taking place, we would take immediate steps to remedy those abuses and prevent the creation or continuation of any loopholes. Last week the Minister of National Revenue announced in a press release that special monitoring was taking place to ensure that the law would be fully respected. My officials have also been instructed to follow this matter quite closely.

I would not encourage the Hon. Member to conclude from the fact that there are larger amounts of tax credits being claimed that this is a defeat, or that something wrong has happened. On the contrary, we want to encourage research and development. If more research and development takes place and if more tax credits are being claimed for this purpose, the Hon. Member should applaud. He should rejoice in the fact that there have been more expenditures for research and development because that is what the country needs. That is my approach and my philosophy in this regard.

I would like to see more R and D in the country. On the other hand, I obviously do not want the tax system to be abused by the use of credits for phony or purely paper operations. We are monitoring this situation and, if steps need to be taken, we will not hesitate to announce them.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, of course we all want to see more R and D, but I think it is becoming obvious that the only R and D being done is being done by tax accountants and tax lawyers.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DISALLOW CERTAIN PRACTICES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, May 11, while in Ottawa, the Minister himself called for a high degree of selectivity. Surely his tax credit scheme has no selectivity whatsoever. As quoted by The Globe and Mail of Friday, May 11, 1984, the Minister warned that:

> —badly conceived or excessively generous tax incentives could produce not only diminishing returns but some net damage to the development of a strong and sustainable investor commitment to R and D.

Surely what we are seeing happen to the tax credit system today is doing damage to R and D. Will the Minister assure the House that at least the provision of the tax credit that allows for a quick flip and a double flip, thus enabling investors to make a quick buck at the expense of the taxpayers, will be disallowed?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for quoting me. He has indeed quoted me directly and correctly. These are the principles that are guiding me in the implementation of this particular program.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

INVOLVEMENT WITH CONSUMERS DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister who is responsible for Canada Post. In the past few weeks I have received several letters from constituents regarding Canada Post's latest venture into competition with the private sector. They and I are concerned about the deal that Canada Post has made with Consumers Distributing. What is the expected income from this venture, and why did Canada Post choose this way to raise money?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised by the question the Hon. Member has just asked, because I indicated more than two weeks ago when I replied to an Hon. Member from this side that Canada Post had already announced it would end its pilot-project by the end of this month. The Corporation has also issued a press release to this effect, and I am sure that when he checks his mail, he will find this press release.

TAX CREDIT INCENTIVES FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—REQUEST THAT SYSTEM BE CHANGED

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to a previous question and is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister ought to know by now that we were concerned about the research and development tax credit when the Bill was introduced. It now appears as a benefit to stock brokers. He has given them employment. There is no protection to ensure that the money that is raised will in fact go into R and D. If a company goes bankrupt, the investor gets the tax credit, and the broker gets a fee. No research and development is performed and the country gets ripped off. Will the Minister change the system to create a refundable tax credit which will be refundable to the company doing the R and D work, if in fact the work is done, and paid by the Government to the company if it has no taxable income?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are so many questions like this. I will take this as representation for the content of the next Budget.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 64(1), I wish to table in both official languages a notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Fisheries Act. CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-246, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act (official languages).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill calls for the insertion of the word "language" as a ground of discrimination in the Canadian Human Rights Act. At the present time English-speaking Canadians, including 70 ethnic groups in Canada, are being denied employment and promotion because of severe language proficiency tests. These individuals have no method of filing a complaint because the word "language" is not in the Canadian Human Rights Act. The word "language" is in the United Nations Charter and it is also in the Quebec Human Rights Act. It should be inserted into the Canadian Human Rights Act. It has been recommended by the retiring Language Commissioner, Mr. Max Yalden, that the word "language" be inserted into the Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

1. In the year 1983, were any personnel released from the Canadian Armed Forces and, if so, how many?

2. In the same year, did any personnel seek voluntary release from the Forces and, if so, how many?

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, 5,212.

2. Yes, 2,062.

Order Paper Questions

AGRICULTURE CANADA RESEARCH CENTRE, LONDON, ONT.

Question No. 655—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Will the Department of Agriculture expand the Agriculture Canada Research Centre in London, Ontario at the University of Western Ontario and, if so (a) on what date will it be completed (b) at what cost?

2. What is the projected cost of moving to such a facility?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The Department of Agriculture has received preliminary approval to design a new office-laboratory for the Agriculture Canada Research Centre in London, Ontario. The proposed office-laboratory will replace leased facilities on Richmond Street and serve as an adjunct to the main facility located on the campus of the University of Western Ontario. The proposed office-laboratory is estimated to cost $11.2 million and is tentatively scheduled for completion in May of 1987.

2. The cost of moving to the new facility is estimated at $40,000.

RCMP SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 669—Mr. Knowles:

1. On March 31 of (a) 1981 (b) 1982 (c) 1983 what total amount was at the credit of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account?

2. In the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82 (c) 1982-83 what (i) average rate of interest did the government pay for the use of the money in the Account (ii) total amount of interest was paid into the Account (iii) total amount was paid out of the Account?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): In so far as the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is concerned:

1.	(a)	March 31, 1981	$1,032,985,638
	(b)	March 31, 1982	$1,212,155,986
	(c)	March 31, 1983	$1,391,538,970
2.	(i) (a)	1980/81	6.36 per cent
	(b)	1981/82	6.36 per cent
	(c)	1982/83	6.36 per cent
	(ii) (a)	1980/81	$ 58,765,937
	(b)	1981/82	$ 67,990,342
	(c)	1982/83	$102,510,707
	(iii) (a)	1980/81	$16,251,967
	(b)	1981/82	$19,029,722
	(c)	1982/83	$20,221,166

Mr. Evans: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ouellet that Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Financial Administration Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking prior to the noon break I had commented on a number of changes which are proposed in Bill C-34, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Financial Administration Act. I would like to take the time remaining to comment on matters which are in the purview of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) and which have either not been dealt with or may have been very lightly touched upon in the Bill.

The Minister of Labour has two very significant reports before him. One is the report of the Commission of Inquiry into Part-time Work. That report was submitted to the Minister in April of 1983, over a year ago. However, there is almost no mention in the Bill of part-time work, the relationship of part-time workers to the Canadian labour force, and amendments which are required in that area. The other report is entitled In the Chips: Opportunities, People, Partnerships. That report deals with the question of micro-electronics and employment and was submitted to the Minister in 1982. Those are two very major areas of work standards yet they have not been touched upon in this Bill.

I would like to cite some reasons which will indicate why I am so concerned about these areas. There are 2.5 million or more part-time workers in this country. Approximately two million of those workers are women. These figures are predicted to grow steadily in the years ahead. However, if we look at part-time workers and the benefits accorded to them, we will see immediately that most of them are not eligible for benefits such as pensions, medical insurance and disability insurance. On average they receive about three-quarters the rate of income paid to full-time employees.

However, it is not until one realizes how important are the wages brought into a family by those who work on a part-time basis that we see the desperate need for reform. In the report of Labour Canada's own Commission of Inquiry into Part-Time Work, that fact is very clearly established. There is a reference on page 105 of that report which I would like to cite. It reads:

> The myth that women are working merely for pin-money, to buy a few little extras for themselves or their families, was firmly denounced by many briefs to the Commission . . . Numerous studies have shown that the vast majority of women work in order to supplement their family income and that their salaries are an important part of that income. Nor could the Commission's research find evidence to support the pin-money argument.

The report goes on to cite some very interesting statistics which show that most of the women who work part-time account for almost one-quarter of their family income. It drew on statistics from a 1979 study which was produced by the National Council of Welfare entitled Women and Poverty. It showed that if the incomes of those female spouses who work part-time in the labour force were to cease, the number of families living below the poverty line would increase by 51 per cent.

• (1510)

The Government has a full study on the difficulties of part-time workers. This Bill does not touch on that aspect of labour relations at all, Mr. Speaker. I regret that it did not touch upon it, nor will we have time in committee to study the very real changes in the structures and patterns of work which we see developing.

A second area which is not reflected in this Bill is the dramatically changing face which technology is introducing into the workforce. Here again, as in the case of part-time workers, women are going to be the ones most directly affected, certainly in the initial stages. While this Bill does make health and safety conditions mandatory and tightens up the rules protecting workers from present dangers, it does nothing to address the very real concerns in the workforce now about the potential new health and safety hazards which are emerging as a result of the implementation of video display terminals. That is something which preoccupies a great many people. It is addressed fully in the report which was submitted to the Minister of Labour but he did not deal with this issue when he brought these amendments before us.

I will close by saying that the concerns which many people have in this regard are reflected in a letter by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women to the Minister. It states, and I quote—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. I regret to have to interrupt the Hon. Member but her time has expired. There is a period of ten minutes for questions or comments.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would ask the Hon. Member if she would please read that letter to me because I believe it should be on the record. At the same time perhaps she could explain why there was no mention at all of part-time workers, technological change and changes to the Labour Code during the Throne Speech of 1979 when she was a senior member of the Conservative Cabinet.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I always find it so interesting that the New Democratic Party continues to dwell in the past. One of the things about technological change is that it is happening now and will be happening in the future. It really is something to which we have to direct our minds on an ongoing basis. I do not know where the Hon. Member was in 1979 and, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I guess I do not very much care. However, I do care about the fact that this is an issue which has emerged with frightening clarity in very recent years and which is not being dealt with at this time.

I would like to respond to the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order, please. I do not know how long the letter is, but—

Miss MacDonald: It is only a few lines.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): All right.

Miss MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I quote from a letter which was written on April 27 of this year by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women:

> National Action Committee is concerned with establishing compulsory standards in the Canada Labour Code which will ensure that all women exposed to VDTs and working in sectors under federal jurisdiction are guaranteed decent working conditions.

That could have been brought into the legislation, Mr. Speaker, but that proposal was not included.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member is aware that the provisions of this Bill dealing with technological training presumably only apply to an employer who is bound by a collective agreement. It does not seem to apply at all to people who have no collective agreement. Does the Hon. Member feel that that is an adequate response to technological change?

Miss MacDonald: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not by any means. The question of technological change addressed in collective agreements only covers one part of the labour force. Because of the concerns which people have about the impact of technological change, it has to apply to everyone. I realize that the amendments in this Bill only apply to 10 per cent of the labour force. Nevertheless, if we had directed this Bill totally to those persons who are under federal jurisdiction, to that 10 per cent of the labour force, it would have been a demonstration to those in the private sector and to those under provincial jurisdiction to do the same thing. The federal Government has a responsibility to lead by example and that has not been done adequately in this Bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will note that Clause 29 of the Bill which amends subsection 150(1) of the Act only applies to employees who have a collective agreement. Surely if they have a collective agreement, they could, by private contract in the collective agreement, deal with technological change. I am wondering, then, why that clause is there. It seems to me that the people who need assistance are those who have no collective agreement and have some real desire to have notice of technological change. However, this Bill provides only for people who have an agreement and I really cannot see why they would need the clause in the first place.

Miss MacDonald: Well, I believe they would need the clause. I would really want to see it included because in many cases when collective agreements were being negotiated—unfortunately so much of the technological change is happening with increasing rapidity—people did not even think to include this matter in the discussion and negotiations which took place. I would want to see these questions raised with the Minister when he is before the committee and to know why it has not gone further than it has.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Are there any further questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments today with respect to this proposed piece of legislation. I was struck this morning by the June 5 press release from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) in which he announced the creation of a $5 million fund to support research into human and social impacts of technological change in the workplace. I would guess there is no Hon. Member in this Chamber who feels more strongly than I do that it is time this country made a greater commitment to the examination of how new technologies are affecting the workplace. However, the timing of this press announcement is peculiar. It is dated June 5, 1984, at a time when there is a lot of speculation that we will be into an election by the end of June, 1984.

I was struck by the fact, Mr. Speaker, that in his press release the Minister of Labour indicates that it is a response to the piece of research which was done by his Department called In the Chips. That was a report, Mr. Speaker, which came into this Chamber well over two years ago. So it has taken the Minister of Labour well over two years to respond. He has responded with a $5 million pot of money, but if one reads the press release carefully, one finds he does not tell us whether the $5 million is to be spent in one year, two years or over ten years. So we really do not know how large it is. However, we know it is a nice shiny white paper, with a nice red border, and it makes the Minister of Labour look good, like he cares, that he really wants to do something.

This whole Bill, Mr. Speaker, is somewhat in that category. I cannot help but think back over the debates we have had over the last month or two in this Chamber. We had the Special Employment Initiatives Projects, which came up again today in question period, a $300 million slush fund which Liberal Members were spending in their own ridings, 147 ridings, when there are actually 282 ridings in this country. We heard about the use of those slush funds to create first-class and second-class unemployed persons in this country. The Government has money for direct job creation, Mr. Speaker, but if someone wants to participate in that program, if someone wants to try for one of those jobs, he had better live in a Liberal riding. That is where most of the jobs are. It probably would not hurt if you were a friend of the Liberal Member of Parliament as well. That might be of some assistance in getting those jobs.

I cannot help but think also of the millions of dollars spent on advertising recently. In the south shore, in Quebec, pictures of eight Members of Parliament, all Liberals, were printed on three-colour glossy paper expounding on the marvellous things those Members of Parliament have been doing. Well, that expounding has been done with taxpayers' dollars. Not donated dollars from the Liberal Party of Canada but taxpayers' dollars. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Roberts) had his picture in a really nice 16-page insert. In fact there were two, one for youth and one for women. It was a nice picture of the Minister who just happens to be a candidate for the Liberal leadership. Those people are sitting at home, they have not had a job, and they are feeling pretty depressed. Then they get the brochures and it looks like an opportunity. You can almost feel the growth of hope in those people. But it is a scam. When they show up at the Canada Manpower Centres they find out the budget has been spent and these training programs do not really exist. That is a very cruel thing to do to the unemployed of this country.

In the last two or three months we have seen far too much electioneering on the backs of those who are to some extent down and out, the unemployed, and the labour unions who are in trouble. We heard earlier today that the money for the Special Recovery Capital Projects Program has not been allocated. It has been held back so there can be announcements during the 50-day election period. Of course, the money does not get spent and the jobs are not created until later, but you make it sound as if you are creating jobs today. That is what the Government is going to make it sound like but the jobs will not be there.

Four years ago the Government indicated that the need for amendments to the Canada Labour Code was urgent. Today, June 11, 1984, we are finally debating those amendments in the House of Commons, more than four years later. The last two times the Canada Labour Code was amended by this Government, the amendments were brought in during the last 30 days of the life of the Parliament. There seems to be a conspiracy going back over decades where labour legislation is discussed in the last 30 days of a Parliament, in the middle of a leadership race when it is difficult to get information on anything except leadership candidates. The attitude is that we should be discussing labour legislation in private. Well, it is a subject they do not want to discuss in public. I suggest that the Conservative Party of Canada wants labour legislation discussed in public because we have been doing our homework. There is no resource in this country of more interest to the Conservative Party than the resource called people. If we are going to have a decent standard of living in the future, then it is hard-working and creative, well-trained people who are going to provide that kind of a future.

The introduction of technological change in the workplace is a topic which is becoming more and more popular. Recently a couple of us in the Conservative Party completed a task force report and this is a summary of our findings on technological displacement and the issue of manpower training and retraining. It took us quite a few months and a lot of hard work. One of the things we discovered is that, regardless of the country you are taking about, when there is co-operation between management and labour, when they work together to see that new technology is introduced in a humane, caring and productive way, then you have gains in productivity and economic activity and a larger share of the market-place.

This is good for the people involved, the company, the employees, indeed for society. But when you do not have that, and witness the Government of Canada's record where new technology was introduced without consultation and concurrence of labour, the major example being the post office, what do we get for it? An increase in employees instead of a decrease. An increase in inefficiency instead of a decrease. Why? Because people are not machines; people are very special. When they want to co-operate, when they want to work, when they are involved, they can make it work. But when they are not, they can make it not work. They are very clever at making it not work. They will beat the machine every time if that is the challenge you set for them.

In that context it is particularly disappointing to look at those changes to the Canada Labour Code. We are on the verge of a new era. Management-labour relations have to deal with rapidly changing technology. But what is the Government of Canada's response? What is this Minister's response? He changes the word "ninety" to "one hundred and twenty". That is how much thinking the Government of Canada has done about this new phenomenon. Let us have 120 days' notice instead of 90 days' notice. Well, we have a fair number of years' experience with the Canada Labour Code and the section dealing with new technology. It is not hard to draw conclusions based on that experience. The provisions are too vague, the definitions are too narrow. They do not work. Do we find in these proposed amendments anything that would change the vagueness, anything that would change the narrowness? Sadly, we do not. What is next, Mr. Speaker?

● (1530)

From the unions' perspective, the conditions leading to the reopening of bargaining are somewhat strange and tough. The union must prove that the employer plans to introduce new equipment or material, and—not or—that there will be a change in the manner in which work is carried out, and—not or—that the particular change is directly related to the introduction of new equipment. That is the strongest of the three conditions.

Such conditions can only create an adversarial climate. How does a clause such as that move us closer to a sense of co-operation and togetherness? It will not take place in this instance.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Ouellet) should know that section 152 is totally inadequate for the modern age. Section 150 contains such phrases as "substantially and adversely affect" and "significant numbers of employees". What do those phrases mean? I do not believe that anyone in the House could tell us what those phrases mean, yet they are absolutely critical phrases with respect to interpreting the section of the Canada Labour Code that deals with technological change that is to come.

This legislation is disappointing. I suggest that there will be many witnesses who, at committee stage, will tell committee members that those sections of the Canada Labour Code should have been changed long ago. Section 149(2) of the Canada Labour Code should have been amended, but was not. That section deals with the issue of reopening an agreement that had been signed. If one looks at the labour relations in this country over the last few years and recognizes the speed with which new technological changes have come into being, it is easy to recognize that although employers and employees bargain in good faith and sign contracts, there suddenly may be a technological breakthrough six months later that has a massive impact potentially on productivity. Yet there is no adequate mechanism for reopening those contracts to allow employers and employees to work together to introduce that technology.

One positive measure in this legislation concerns lengthening the notice clause from 90 days to 120 days. It is unfortunate that it is not 180 days, because time is required to devise solid plans and to work together to implement those plans.

Just a few short years ago we had the second highest standard of living in the world. We have dropped to fourteenth and are continuing to slip. One of the reasons for that drop is that there is too much conflict between the federal Government and provincial governments and between management and labour. We must embark on an era of co-operation and develop an attitude in this country where we work together to accomplish our goals.

That is the fault with the amendments to the Canada Labour Code. They were not brought to us in a spirit of togetherness. Some of us even wonder if Members of Parliament were made aware of these amendments before some major employers were made aware of them. These amendments were introduced at a time when probably we have less than three weeks in which to complete examination of these measures and pass the legislation through the House before the summer. It will require the co-operation of all three Parties of the House and a willingness to work extra hours to hear expert witnesses in this country to even have a chance to amend this legislation so that it addresses more effectively the job that needs to be done.

Our Party is willing to embark on that exercise. I hope other Parties are as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member did not get into the health and safety aspect of the Bill. I am sure that he has had an opportunity to read Clause 20 which deals with amendments to Section 82 of the Act. Although there are two pages of requirements prescribed for employers, I thought the requirements for employees were particularly horrendous. Was the Hon. Member aware that an employee is required, under penalty of fairly large fines, to ensure that he uses safety materials and equipment in the manner prescribed, presumably, by regulation, and to follow prescribed procedures with respect to health and safety? Furthermore, he is to co-operate, again in the manner prescribed by regulations under the Act, and to report in the manner prescribed every accident or other occurrence?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Order. I must refer the Hon. Member to our rules and suggest he should not be discussing the clauses of the Bill at this stage. Second reading is for discussion in principle. If he has concluded his question, I will allow a reply in principle.

Mr. Blenkarn: With respect to the principle, should there be such detail of regulations as is indicated by this Bill? Is the Hon. Member satisfied with a Bill that contains that number of regulations all of which impose penal requirements if the regulations are not complied with?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) asked that question. We are dealing with occupations here which come under the Canada Labour Code and which have traditionally been occupations that are generally held by the poorly educated part of the Canadian population.

We have said that 30 per cent of the adult workforce in Canada is functionally illiterate. It is 40 per cent or 50 per cent with respect to some of the occupational groups that come under this Act. Therefore, I hope that Members of the House would carefully consider that fact if we are to include complex measures in the Canada Labour Code that require individual employees to obey the law or face prison or a big fine.

It was stated earlier today that the penalties which apply to individual employees are no different from the penalties that would apply to major employers. There is no difference in size or kind. Do we want that principle?

I do not know if Hon. Members are aware that the Auditor General's last report criticized Labour Canada's approach to occupational health and safety. There are two or three pages of criticism. When I read the Bill, I did not find that this legislation provides the kind of protection that the Auditor General suggests. When we examine this Bill in committee, I hope Members will bring their copy of the Auditor General's report to review what it says about occupational health and safety and the practice of the Department of Labour. Perhaps when the officials from the Department of Labour appear before us, we can look carefully at their performance to see how some of these clauses came into being and to ask why they believe it is fair and just to penalize an individual employee who perhaps has a grade 4 or 5 education in the same way as someone who has a Harvard M.B.A. I wonder where the justice is there?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I raise the issue about individuals being fined the same as corporations. Does the representative of the Conservative Party agree to making amendments at committee stage to increase the fines to corporations? We will then not be in the ridiculous situation where a corporation may be fined $2,000, which is the same amount as that imposed on an individual. This obviously is not a deterrent to a corporation, but it is for an individual.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the only justification for a fine of any kind is that it acts as a deterrent. Any fine that is not adequate should either disappear or the act not be fineable in the first instance, or else the fine should be large enough to serve as a deterrent. That is the basic principle under which all of us should operate.

The Hon. Member might be interested in the efforts we made in the energy committee after the Bill was split following the bell-ringing to have fines apply equally to federal civil servants as to people in the private sector for the same kind of behaviour. The Government and the NDP would not let us have those principles. Those are the kinds of principles for which we fought before and for which we will fight again.

Mr. Gamble: Bearing in mind the Speaker's admonition against particularity with respect to my question, has the Hon. Member had any regard to the potential extension of the multi-employer rules now to be changed by regulations, which might have a rather unfortunate consequence with respect to some independent contractors who might now be caught in the net of being designated as employees losing the tax advantages which they otherwise might have in connection with travelling and other expenses relating to the conduct of their own business, Mr. Speaker? Is this something we might discuss and hopefully remedy?

Mr. Hawkes: I am glad that issue has been brought up, Mr. Speaker. One of the insidious things that has occurred, and we see it in almost every piece of legislation that I have faced since 1979, is that the Cabinet is given power to make regulations by Order in Council. One of the characteristics of a regulation is that it is done in secrecy. It just appears. It is like instant law. It affects arrangements that people have sometimes spent thousands of hours and dollars making. You just get the secrecy. I hope that collectively we can remove the regulatory power as much as possible in every piece of legislation, and certainly I hope we can do so here. The rules of the game should be clear to all participants, and we should not have mechanisms in law which allow the rules to be changed in the middle of the night without a chance to object and bring some wisdom to a situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): If there are no further questions or comments, we will continue debate.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): The question is as follows: Mr. Ouellet, seconded by Mr. Pinard, moved: That Bill C-34, to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Financial Administration Act, be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

DIVORCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, May 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacGuigan that Bill C-10, an Act to amend the Divorce Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): When the House adjourned on the last day of debate on Bill C-10, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) had the floor.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, at four o'clock on May 11, a month ago, I was talking about the situation which the law required under the present divorce Bill. I was talking about the concern we should have with the need to establish blame, that it should not be carried on. Proving blame, adultery, cruelty, or whatever hardly promotes amicable relations for arranging maintenance, custody, and for visiting children when there are children involved. The key to this Bill and the reason we are not supporting it is that it is so deficient in the area of maintenance.

Just before I leave the matter of establishing blame, I would like to read into the record a statement made by The Catholic Women's League of Canada in a brief which the League presented in May 1983 wherein it backs up this particular position. It reads:

> ... the accusations and counter-accusations of the present adversarial system seem to do a great deal of harm to the familial relationship which often times must survive the dissolution of a marriage because of children. Accordingly it is our submission that the best interests of all parties concerned, including children would be best served if the only ground for divorce were permanent breakdown of the marriage.

The second portion of this Bill has to do with the one-year waiting period. This used to be three or five years depending upon the circumstances. Some groups have even suggested that we eliminate it totally and have no waiting period, that the application for divorce should just go ahead. Some groups, such as the National Association of Women and the Law and the Canadian Bar Association have opposed this one-year term. We also have a large group of people concerned, probably reasonably so, about the possibility of an approach to marriage and divorce which you could call divorce on demand. This one-year waiting period is a compromise. I think it is an acceptable compromise for most people between the feared divorce on demand and the five-year requirement which is in the present structure.

The other area, which I think is probably the most important part of this Bill and is a real deficiency in it, is its lack of dealing with maintenance. The points I will be making will no doubt be reiterated here many times by many speakers. Because we are pointing out the shortcomings, with which I hope the committee will deal when the bill gets there, it will not hurt to repeat the deficiencies and to keep on repeating them until the Government thinks it thought of them and makes the appropriate changes in the Bill.

This divorce Bill could have very negative economic consequences for the recipients of maintenance orders. As we know, most recipients of maintenance orders are women. The Bill sets out self-sufficiency as the goal of a person after divorce. While this would be a very desirable goal in theory, in reality it is unattainable for many people and almost impossible for a large group.

We should deal with the particular deficiencies of the Bill as we go along. The first is the time limit on orders. The Bill would place time limits upon maintenance orders which could not be varied after they expire. This would cause much hardship for people receiving maintenance who are unable to adjust during the time limit established. The Bill will establish the principle of short-term maintenance orders.

The best way to approach this matter is by presenting some examples. There is the case of a 55-year old woman who has been deserted by her husband. They live separate and apart for one year and then apply for a divorce. This particular woman has been a homemaker for 30 years and has no marketable labour skills. Under the Act she will be required to become economically self-sufficient. She might be awarded short-term maintenance for the purpose of job training or retraining, depending upon the situation, for time to search for a job and for readjustment. She is given two years of maintenance and, if she has been unable to obtain a job or keep a job, after that period she is on her own. She can return to the court for an extension only if the time period has not expired. Suppose she obtains a job but loses it just after the two years is over. Then she is out of luck entirely. Therefore, we must strongly oppose this time limit.

As the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women put it, who knows exactly how long it will take a woman with young children or an older woman who has never been in the labour force to become economically self-sufficient? The Council included that in a press release dated January 20, 1984. What are the prospects at this particular time for any unemployed person to find a job, given the present state of the economy? Therefore, short-term maintenance becomes dangerous when it is coupled with awarding lower amounts, which is also encouraged by the Bill.

I would like to list in my remaining time some of the other shortcomings in the Bill. For instance, the objectives of maintenance and enforcement features are woefully inadequate. We will oppose this Bill now because of its shortcomings. When it goes to committee, we hope something will be done about them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments. As there is no one wanting to put a question, for continuing debate, the Hon. Member for St. John's East.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this is probably one of the most important Bills to come before Parliament. Certainly it is without question the most important one in this session, in my opinion. I say that because of the negative impact it can have in its present form upon Canadian society, especially upon the keystone of society, namely, the family unit.

There are those who would say that the Bill is merely an ongoing reform, that it is the result of the processes of law reform, that it merely responds to that process and that what we have before us today is merely the results of the processes of the Law Reform Commission and Canadian law societies. Essentially, we have before us today a lawyers' Bill. It was drafted by law officers of the Crown within the sanctuary of the Department of Justice. In its present form, it largely ignores the responsibility of Parliament to maintain the family unit as the most important and indeed the bedrock of Canadian society. Some wise person once said that war was too important to be left to the generals. I can paraphrase that statement by saying that divorce and family law are too important to be left to the lawyers. If we are not careful, vigilant and prudent, we could, by the passage of this Bill, be opening the floodgates for divorce in the country, thereby undermining the security and sanctity of the family in Canadian society and, equally important, the rights of children.

I remember another Bill in a previous session of Parliament. It was in 1969. It was a Bill to amend the Criminal Code with respect to its provisions dealing with abortion. The purpose of it at that time was to provide the legal basis for therapeutic abortions. We were told that it was merely a reform of the law which would give some legal justification, some de jure justification, to a de facto situation. At that time the de facto situation was the 300 or 400 therapeutic abortions which were performed yearly in Canadian hospitals. At that time we did not know very much about abortion nor did we fully understand the implications of what we were doing by that Bill. The Bill was passed and it has been subsequently overtaken by events. For example, it was overtaken by medical science, the Charter of Rights and the whole question of the right to life, specifically the rights of the unborn child. The unborn child is now treated by medical science as a separate person through the medical science of fetology and out of the womb surgical procedures. Little did we know 15 years ago that we would be opening the floodgates to a massive denial of the legal and constitutional rights of the unborn.

In 1969, there were 300 therapeutic abortions a year. That has increased to over 70,000 in 1983. In one year in the City of Toronto, I believe it was 1981, there were more abortions in that city than there were live births. I use that argument because it perhaps best expresses my concern about what we are doing here today.

Today in Canada four out of every ten marriages end in divorce. We can anticipate that this number will increase quite significantly and drastically with the no-fault definition of marriage breakdown as contained in this legislation. This has been a good debate. I look forward to the time when the Bill goes to committee. I say it has been a good debate because I have heard some excellent speeches on both sides of the issue. There were relevant speeches in terms of dealing with this question in a just way.

Let us take the question of maintenance. In my opinion—and other speakers have addressed this problem—the Bill does not deal adequately with the question of how to enforce maintenance. What is more, it ignores, with respect to maintenance, the basic rights of children as set out in the United Nations Charter of Childrens' Rights and their basic fundamental right to be raised in a healthy family environment.

The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) put forward a suggestion with regard to maintenance and our inability to enforce maintenance orders. He put forward the need for federal-provincial co-operation and the need to establish a central registry with regard to the implementation, enforcement and collection of maintenance orders. That is a very positive suggestion, one that addresses one of the basic weaknesses in this legislation.

I remember seeing a study over U.S. television recently dealing with the question of poverty. It dramatically showed the plight of women in the United States trying to cope with raising their children alone, having been abandoned by their husbands. One thing stood out, and that is, that in each case of the women interviewed, all of whom were living in poverty, the courts had legally provided for their maintenance. We are talking about a number of jurisdictions in the United States. In each case society was powerless to enforce the court order. Thus, the children were not only deprived of a normal double parent family, but were in fact physically deprived of the basic requirements of a healthy upbringing by being forced to live in poverty. In our society today, women are among the poorest of the poor, abandoned women, women who have to look after single-parent families. They have no provisions for their future. They are not covered, for example, by the Canada Pension Plan.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) made a strong case during the course of his speech on this Bill for mandatory mediation. I suppose you can make a case for no-fault divorce, but surely we should recognize the importance of marriage. Before granting a no-fault divorce there should be a process of mandatory mediation. That should be fundamental in the whole concept of no-fault divorce. At the Hon. Member suggested, it has been tried in other jurisdictions and it has been shown to be practical and successful in keeping down the rate of divorce through reconciliation, bringing couples back together. It is a proposition that has been put forward by a number of groups in Canada, including the Roman Catholic bishops of Canada, the Pentencostal Assemblies of Canada, just to mention two.

They have identified the lack of compulsory mediation as one of the basic shortcomings of this legislation. If there is to be no-fault divorce, and I have difficulty with that, there has to be mandatory mediation. This at the very least would be society's way of stressing the importance of the marriage contract and its commitment to protect and preserve the family unit. One submission on this Bill came from St. Andrew's-Wesley Church in Vancouver. I quote from their submission. It reads:

> You do not divorce your children. Divorce severs the connecting relathionship only between the parents. The relationship between the child and each parent is sacrosanct and unless harm can clearly be anticipated it should continue on in perpetuity to the continuing benefit of the child.

It then goes on to recommend that this Bill include a provision of legal presumption and the need for continued joint parenting. We are talking here aout the rights of children who are overlooked in this legisation and are overlooked in the divorce courts of this country. We as parliamentarians have an obligation to address that problem. Dr. Julien Payne, Professor of Family Law at the University of Ottawa, put it this way:

> To all intents and purposes, therefore, current judicial practices (in Canada) confirm that the legal divorce process severs not only the marital bond but also the child's bond with the non-custodial parent.

Hence we have the single parent family, the lack of enforcement maintenance orders and poverty among single-parent families, largely headed by women. This Bill fails to address that problem by not providing for mandatory mediation. Unless we take steps now in this legislation to protect the rights of the children, and we would be recognizing these rights by putting in a provision for mandatory mediation, thereby recognizing the rights to which we are signatories under the United Nations Charter of the Rights of Children, we will be seriously undermining the family unit in this country. That is a move we will live to regret.

Who will speak for the children of broken marriages? Who will speak for the young people who will now be able to try it out for a short period of time, knowing they can go through the relatively simple process of no-fault divorce? What about the consequences of these short marriages? Who will look after the children? The family is already threatened from all sides in our North American society. Inflation and the pressures of the consumer society have resulted in the phenomenon of both parents being forced to work, both parents having to enter the workforce to cope with rising costs and the need to keep up with the Jones, leaving the children largely unprotected and uncared for, vulnerable and susceptible to the commercial pressures of the mass media.

Surely as responsible legislators, society expects us to protect its interests by incorporating in this Bill whatever provisions are necessary to recognize children's rights and the importance of the family unit. It is interesting that in the materialistic godless societies of this world, as perhaps best exemplified by the communist regimes of this world, they are doing exactly that. In the Soviet Union, they are taking steps to reduce the incidence of abortion. They are also taking steps to cut down on the incidence of divorce because of the impact it is having on Soviet society. Within the People's Republic of China, they are taking steps to preserve the family unit by overturning one of the Maoist principles which would provide for one of the parents, the mother, to remain at home to care for the children and the family. Surely we as a society that is based on the Judeo-Christian concept have a responsibility equal to that of those societies which do not recognize any kind of Judeo-Christian principles, or any principles for that matter save those that are in their best interests.

● (1610)

As I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, I believe that this is probably the most important Bill with which we will have to deal. I think it should be dealt with as an important Bill. When the Bill goes to committee, the committee should receive briefs and hear witnesses from all segments of our society. I do not think that the question of children's rights is adequately understood or has been adequately addressed in the country. I do not believe that the importance of the family unit has been adequately addressed in this legislation. For that reason, I believe that this Bill falls short of meeting the traditional requirements of this basically Judeo-Christian society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a 10-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, my colleague has had many, many years of experience in this House and I would appreciate hearing his personal views about whether he believes the law results in a change in action by society or whether the law follows a change in action by society. We saw what happened when we changed the law with respect to abortions and we saw what happened when we changed the law with respect to divorces. To what extent does he think that the law is a leader in that? Alternatively, does he think that the law simply follows the customs and moralities of the day? What does he think we should do to affect that, if anything?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I have always been concerned about some of the recommendations that are coming forward on an ongoing basis from the Law Reform Commission. I do not know who that commission is in touch with because it is certainly not in touch with the society in which I live. For that matter, it does not reflect the cares and concerns of that society.

In this particular case, I believe that we are dealing with a lawyers' Bill. As I said during the course of my remarks, divorce is a social problem that is far too important to be left to the lawyers. That is why I believe that, legal arguments nothwithstanding, we should look beyond this Bill to the impact that it will have on the family unit and the impact it will have on the rights of children, impacts which are not fully understood and not addressed in this Bill.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I believe I spoke on the first day this Bill was presented. Since that time, a good deal of correspondence has been received from various parts of the country on both sides of the question. I would like to ask my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), whether or not he has received any particular reactions. Perhaps he could inform the House of the reaction of the many religious groups in the Province of Newfoundland.

Perhaps I was the first one to say so, but during my speech I said that I felt, as does my colleague, that as this is really a matter of the morality of the country, the House Justice Committee should undertake extensive hearings across the country to hear the views of the people and not just the views of the lawyers. It has been said that this is a lawyers' Bill which is responding to a certain element in society that is looking for quick, fast, glib divorces.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I believe that this Bill is out of step with the mainstream of Canadian society. That is perhaps best reflected by the concerns that are put forward on an ongoing basis by various groups in society, not the least of which are the churches. I referred to two such groups. I referred to the Canadian Catholic Conference of Bishops, a group which speaks for the Roman Catholic Church on a national basis, and I believe that their adherents represent about 40 per cent of the population of the country. I also referred to the Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada. I believe the question has been addressed by many synods of the Anglican Church in Canada. I know it has been addressed by many of the member churches of the United Church of Canada.

It seems to me that this Bill is merely responding to the lawyers who seem to be saying to Canadian society that they know what is best for us. I do not think that they do in this particular regard. I think we as legislators have a responsibility to put this legislation before the mainstream of Canadian society so that we can hear from the churches and from the groups that must deal with family breakdowns, battered wives and the poverty that is symptomatic of a single-parent family. We as legislators have a responsibility to make sure that the committee that will examine this Bill on second reading will travel extensively throughout the country.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for the quality of his remarks on this Bill and for his obvious concern, of which I think all Members know and for which I think all Members respect him.

I would like to put a question to him that is perhaps a double-barrelled question. First, I agree with his position regarding abortion and I wonder if he would comment briefly on whether or not the Act itself, an Act that was passed in the House before I came here, has not been subverted to a large degree by the provincial Attorneys General and the so-called hospital abortion committees that have basically become a rubber stamp for abortion in many hospitals? The fact that that can happen may well be a fault of the law, but it is also a fault of the people.

I would ask the Hon. Member what his suggestions might be vis-à-vis divorce in Canada in order to prevent the kind of knock-down, drag-out, dirty battles that often occur in divorce court, which make relationships between the divorced partners so bitter that there is little chance of their ever speaking a civil word to each other again and thus causing a great deal of trauma for the children of the marriage.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the non-adversarial elements of the no-fault provisions in this Bill are the only positive things I can find in it. Because of those provisions, there is a serious chance that the two parties can be reconciled. That is why I believe the no-fault provision which eliminates that adversarial approach should be complemented by compulsory mediation.

I am only concerned that this legislation does not adequately address the importance of marriage and the family unit. If we go the same route with this Bill as we did with the abortion Bill, then, putting the two Bills together, we as a Canadian society are in deep trouble. If we cannot take steps to support the family and to support the rights of children, then we, Sir, are in deep, deep trouble.

I believe that we as legislators and parliamentarians have a responsibility to address this problem, and I welcome the question of the hon. gentleman. I remember the time when I put forward a provision to provide for the rights of children. I had the support of the Hon. Member and he was one of the few people who understood what that measure was all about. He understood the rights of children in a society to an adequate upbringing, which means the right to double-parent families. To me, that is a basic right. As well, when a divorce is granted, children still maintain certain basic rights with regard to both parents. That speaks for the inadequacy of the maintenance provisions of the Bill, and the need for compulsory mediation. We as a society, notwithstanding the fact that we consist of 10 jurisdictions, can get together on everything but we cannot seem to get together on an adequate enforcement of maintenance, orders. I do not think that there is one Member in the House who has not experienced a family who has been abandoned by the male partner. It has left the woman as a single parent, with no income and no means of providing the children with the kind of environment that is necessary for the healthy upbringing of the children. Not only that, we create problems which that woman will face in the future because she has no retirement benefits and will not qualify for the Canada Pension Plan. She will end up as one of the statistics in Canada—the poorest of the poor, who are usually women.

● (1620)

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) that I agree with his proposal that the Bill should go into the country under the auspices of a parliamentary committee to be examined and to allow for a good deal of public input. The Bill deals with the basic unit of society—the family.

I would remind the Hon. Member that he did not address the first part of my two-pronged question. I wonder if he sees any reasonable time frame which might be applied to the kind of public hearings about which he is talking?

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman could repeat the first part of his question. I now recall that I did not deal with it adequately.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, the question referred to the role that the provincial Attorneys General and the hospital abortion committees play in the granting of the right to an abortion.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I did address that by referring to our inability to standardize procedures in the country, given the fact that there are ten jurisdictions dealing with maintenance and the enforcement of maintenance orders. We failed miserably in that regard when the abortion Bill was passed in 1969.

I understand exactly what the hon. gentleman means. The abortion provisions of the Bill, which was passed in 1969, mean different things to different people. In the Province of Quebec they are wide open; in other provinces they are interpreted differently, and, indeed, they are interpreted differently from hospital to hospital. That is a problem which we can no longer ignore. It is a problem which we will have to deal with sooner or later in Parliament.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): This is the conclusion of the ten minutes which is allowed for questions and comments.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro)—Fisheries (a) Possible impact of United States Oil Lease Program on West Coast Fisheries. (b) Environmental Hearings in Alaska; the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm)—Crown Corporations—de Havilland Dash-8 Aircraft—Financing of Sales; the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell)—Public Service Commission (a) Office of Equal Opportunities for Women. (b) Equal Pay for Equal Work.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

DIVORCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacGuigan that Bill C-10, an Act to amend the Divorce Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise on debate the principle of Bill C-10, which is an Act to amend the divorce legislation. I do so with some trepidation because it is one of the difficult areas of social legislation which we see so often in Parliament. It turns out, in actual fact, to be different from what Parliament had basically intended.

We need only go back to the Divorce Act of 1968 and review the speeches which were given in the House at that time. It was clear that the intention of the Government was to make it easier, for those couples for whom divorce was inevitable and the marriage had truly failed in a commonsense understanding of those terms, to obtain a divorce. Yet, once that piece of legislation was passed, the divorce rate in the country absotutely sky-rocketed and is still going up. The very fabric of the family has been affected adversely by that piece of legislation. It is so much easier for people today to back out of a marriage and start up with someone new, rather than to examine their own conduct and to attempt change within the marriage which would keep the marriage intact and the children under one roof with two parents.

I am sure the abortion law was another example of Parliament's passing social legislation. At the time I recall that there were something in the order of 3,000 abortions a year. Many of those abortions happened in the backrooms of medical quacks and, as a result, women were dying. Clearly we did not want that to be the law of the land. We wanted to change that and make it more reasonable. Yet, as a result of changing it, there are over 70,000 abortions per year. Most people, from a common sense perspective, feel that that is out of line and that again it is easier for people to have an abortion than to carry on and have the child. Once we meddle in one area, we find that we must touch other areas. I do not think that is what we intended and what we want.

Here we are again, 15 years later, addressing the divorce legislation. As earlier speakers have indicated, I hope that we will be wise—if the Bill gets through second reading—and require the committee to travel extensively in order to give Canadians an opportunity to express their views. I am not convinced that many Government backbenchers want this Bill to pass second reading. I know from my discussions with them that they too are receiving an enormous amount of letters from their constituents which indicate that the whole area is out of control and that there should not be any further changes. In my own case, I have received approximately 90 letters from all sorts of groups, as well as from organized lobby groups.

Bill C-10 raises many questions which must be debated and answered. The first one is: Why do four in ten marriages fail? Is it because of the divorce law which was passed in 1969? Is it because of pornography? I think that is a probable factor. Is it because of the abuses in the economic system which have led to massive unemployment? The standard of living in Canada was once second in the western economy. We are now approximately fourteenth. This is a result of an enourmous failure on the part of the government of the day to maintain our rate of change. It thought that by creating Crown corporations, by taking over areas which were not competitive on a world-wide scale, and by subsidizing tem, we could keep them going. It is true. We did keep them going for an extra 10 years or an extra 15 years, but at an enormous cost. Our standard of living in this country has dropped. As rich as we think we are, we have gone from second to fourteenth in comparison with the other western industrial powers. What a tragedy that is. We are still a small population with vast resources. As well, we are an educated population. If it were not for the fact that governments promise people something for nothing, we could still be number two. We will be number two again after the next election when there is a new Cabinet.

Is the increasing divorce rate the result of urbanization? Perhaps our churches and our social agencies have failed us. I know that my own church, the United Church of Canada, has a high management structure which has advanced to the point where it believes that the institution is much more important than the people who are at the grassroots level. The institution now believes that it knows what is best for the ordinary people who belong to the church. It does not listen to what the people are saying. It has given up on the salvation of mankind and turned into a political lobby group. It wants to grab political power and forget the salvation of mankind. That is what has happened in the United Church, to the regret of a great number of us. It will affect the membership in the church dramatically. Therefore, I believe that the church has failed us. The highest leadership of the church, as has happened in the past, is out of line.

I am sure that it is failure also at the individual level. Particularly in the last 15 years, there has been a continuous bombardment by government offering us something for nothing. There were all sorts of programs with low taxes because we were borrowing the difference. We had the benefit of those programs. Therefore, we had a lot more disposable income with which to buy big cars, big houses, land and businesses. Now the taxes are starting to match the programs, because you can only borrow so much. Even as a country ultimately you have to balance your books. That is why we are in trouble. So we have failed individually to take on the responsibility because we got sucked into the belief that we could get something for nothing.

● (1630)

I suppose that, rather than looking at why four marriages in ten fail, we should consider it remarkable that six marriages in ten continue in spite of all the enormous pressures which are put upon us as a result of urbanization and changing from an industrial society into an information society. We have just been through an enormous transformation from a rural society into an urban society. We have gone from a collectivity to individuality in terms of individual freedoms and rights, such as the right to free speech, freedom of conscience and the right to go out and do your own thing. That has been one major change in our society. We have gone from the collective factor, which used to control people in the small towns and villages, to an urban setting where people, as a result of the anonymity of the cities, feel an enormous freedom to live the life style they want. However, at the same time we have given up the responsibility of looking after ourselves and our families, which we accepted when we lived in small towns, villages and farms, and have reached a point where we now let the governments do it for us. We look to the government to provide education, daycare and to look after our individual failings. I think that is why four marriages out of ten fail. In fact, I am amazed that more marriages do not fail. Perhaps that is a tribute to the basic stability of Canadians. I think we should find out what makes those six successful marriages in ten work so that we can make appropriate changes. Only then perhaps will the figures show eight successful marriages out of ten or nine successful marriages out of ten.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, there is a loss of a sense of community and a loss of a sense of individual responsibility. People have the attitude that it is easier to get out and start anew with someone else rather than to make the changes within themselves individually and within their family.

With respect to the global scale, our Canadian rate of divorce is 2.9 per 1,000 of population. It is about the same as in Australia, the United Kingdom, Sweden and Denmark. So this shows it goes beyond whether we have left wing governments or right wing governments. It is the fact of the enhanced growth of government itself which has affected us. The United States, of course, has a much higher rate at some 5.3 per 1,000.

The institution of marriage is still strong, Mr. Speaker. As shown by statistics, some 84 per cent, particularly men, are remarried within five years. If I might be permitted a personal comment, Mr. Speaker, having practised law for some ten years in the City of Lethbridge, I found that there was not one case, to my recollection, of a reconciliation after either a man or a woman had come into my office and laid out the fee for divorce, whether it was contested or uncontested. There was not one incident, Mr. Speaker, where I, as a lawyer, acting in that capacity, was able to effect a reconciliation, even though I had to bring to their attention the fact that there were mediation facilities available in the community. By the time they had come into the lawyer's office and put their money down, they simply were no longer interested in reconciliation.

I also found, again from my own personal observation, that the problem was not with the women. The problem was with the men. Men could not come to terms with the "new woman", the woman who genuinely wants to be equal, who genuinely wants to make a contribution, not only in the home but feels it is important to get out into the community. The educational dimensions of women have grown enormously. I found that the problem was within men, because most of them had been raised in a family where the wife stayed home, looked after the children and was totally dutiful and respectful to the husband, accepting his views on practically everything, including the vote. The woman today is not prepared to do that, and men have to come to terms with that fact. I found that the problem was in trying to convince men that the wife was not being abnormal in her expectations of living within the family; the problem was in the man expecting the 1980s women to be like the woman of the 1940s or even the woman of the 1960s, and I feel the whole question of abuse grew out that problem. Women were not prepared to accept their traditional role, and men, responding in their macho way, felt they had to force the woman into line, which led to wife battering, and, of course, we should not tolerate that at all. Men will have to come to terms with the role of the new woman and accept it. We can never go backwards. Women are not going to go back into their old role. Therefore, men had better get on their side.

This Bill, Mr. Speaker, is like a lot of other Bills. Some parts of it are acceptable, other parts are much less acceptable, and on some parts we have totally different views. Some parts of the maintenance legislation are good, but they do not go far enough. There is another dimension in Canada to which the provinces have never adequately responded, that is, that Canadians are a mobile people. Because we are mobile, we should be able to expect as a right that the maintenance laws of one province will be respected in other provinces. I believe Canadians should have that as a right.

With respect to medicare, I always thought it was practically criminal that the provinces had not put in the proper mechanism so that a Canadian could go anywhere and receive medicare. I sat on a task force in 1980 which made that recommendation, as did earlier task forces. The provinces have never brought it in, and I feel they have to accept criticism because of that.

With respect to custody counselling, a no-fault, out of court procedure where both sides are in full agreement and the questions of custody and maintenance are settled, I found in my practice that there was a very deep anger and frustration bordering almost on a destructive hatred of the system when two responsible adults, who had agreed that the marriage was at an end—most often the children by that time had left home—and who wanted to dissolve their marriage in a positive and constructive way, were forced into the court system which was both adversarial and expensive. They found that to be wrong. Therefore, the part of this Bill which permits no-fault, out of court procedure when there is a genuine agreement is good. The problem, I believe, is that the Cabinet has gone too far by saying it should be no fault divorce in all cases. That does not adequately cover all situations. We should have no fault divorce for those cases where the parents agree and they are mature and responsible about it. In other cases, where the rights of children are being affected and in still other cases where there is genuine fault, I believe that should be recognized. Again, Mr. Speaker, we will find dozens and dozens of cases in each of our individual lives where the wife has in fact put the husband through university. The wife has gone out and got a job or she has stayed home and raised the children and now, at the age of 45 years or 50 years, finds herself turfed out by the husband, so to speak, who has fallen in love with a younger woman. It is not right that that man should be able to receive a no-fault divorce and put that 50-year old woman into a position where in three years she has to become totally self-sufficient, and within that same three years the man is off the hook. That is not acceptable because that woman, under these conditions today, does not have the opportunity within three years to become adequately trained to that she can step into a $50,000 or $60,000 a year position. On behalf of my constituents I say that I am simply never going to agree to that being the law. It is not fair. That woman should be entitled to at least a fifty-fifty split on assets and she should be in as strong a financial position as she was before the divorce. There are many cases where the wife is not at fault. She has done everything properly, continues to love the man and wants to live out the rest of her years with him, but because the man is out in the workforce, exposed to younger women all the time, he gets himself into a position where he has two women rather than just his wife.

Another dimension of this Bill that I find very troublesome and unacceptable is that the man who is 55 can turf his wife out, expect her to be self-sustaining within three years, and himself get a divorce within one year. The only way in which the women can get a half decent financial settlement now is, if the husband boots her out, that he has to wait at least five years before he can remarry. That has been a powerful instrument in the hands of the wife and her solicitor in order to obtain a settlement which is fair to the woman and takes into account the effort and years she has put into the marriage and the family. To just change it holus-bolus affects that, and without other changes in the Bill that itself will not be satisfactory.

On the other hand, there is sometimes a need for a provision where a divorce can be obtained quickly. A wife, sometimes because she had been totally on her own, most often as the result of the man having ignored her over a number of years, becomes involved with another person and becomes pregnant. I suppose I had ten or fifteen cases of this over ten years. The wife would come in, pregnant by another man, and she needed a divorce quickly so that the child would be legitimate. Most often we were able to do this by going before a judge who would grant the divorce. Under this legislation, that woman would be forced to wait a year before she could remarry and the child would be born illegitimate, to be legitimized at some later time. We should have a way of handling this because, wherever possible, we want to have children born within the contract of marriage.

Another area where the law needs to be changed, and I am amazed that it was not in this Bill, is that of endorcing maintenance and custody orders. In over 85 per cent of divorces, custody is given to the mother. In my own Province of Alberta, the last statistics I saw indicate that one third of the maintenance orders were fully paid, one third were only partially paid and one third were not paid at all. Yet if this Bill becomes law, husbands could move to another province where they could apply to have the maintenance varied downward, and often they would succeed. The wife would be in Alberta, her husband would be either behind in his payments or not paying at all, so how will she be able to afford to go to another province just to get the order varied? What if she lives in Alberta and her husband lives in Newfoundland? It is not right, Mr. Speaker, and we cannot let that Bill go through as it is.

It was my intention to speak about the many lobbying groups who have presented their views. I have over 90 letters, several from churches and many from non-religious groups. Some act on behalf of men, some on behalf of women. We have had some good briefs on this subject, and I think that if we put our minds to it, when the legislation gets to committee we could improve it substantially.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Herbert): There follows a ten-minute period for questions and comments.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that, in his experience as legal counsel, the couples who sought his advice had gone past the point of reconciliation. I notice that the Bill goes into some detail on reconciliation and counselling. I wonder if, in the opinion of the Hon. Member, it is a waste of time to incorporate all that in the Bill and whether it could best be dropped, because all it is is a recommendation to the lawyer dealing with these cases.

Mr. Thacker: I feel strongly about that, Mr. Speaker, because I think it is superfluous. It is designed so that we politicians can stand up and say we are trying to do everything we can to save marriages. But it did not work in the 1968 legislation and it is not going to work in the 1984 legislation. It has to be done at the local level. First, it has to be done in the individual family involved, where they make a commitment to try to make the marriage work. Then there are church groups, and also we have social counselling agencies available who make it known throughout the community that they will assist people in this area. But to try to make it mandatory—and again I speak only from my personal experience—will not work because by the time they get to that point it is usually over. You have to get to them much, much earlier. If we are going to make anything mandatory, let us make it at another stage, when people are young and perhaps could benefit more from understanding the realities of marriage and living with other people and the economic problems, rather than when they are 35 or 50 and think they need a divorce.

Mr. Hudecki: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he has a very definite protocol to follow in attempting to bring about reconciliation. It has been my experience that with many lawyers it is simply a very factual meeting with the couple concerned at which they go through the usual procedure.

I am also in sympathy with him concerning his thoughts about considering practically all divorces to be no-fault. A delegation of women came to me and said that they feel that if such divorces go through and the children remain with the mother, as they usually do—and she is most often the innocent party—they will, in time, acquire a suspicious attitude toward that innocent person. They will begin to feel that he or she must have contributed to the divorce and, as they get older, they will become concerned about the support they really got from the innocent person. Who really should make the judgment as to whether or not it is a no-fault divorce, or whether one is the innocent party and the other one is the guilty party?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I think that question should be left to the parties themselves. Parliament should pass legislation which will give them the power to decide. We could have a no-fault provision where the couple could agree. But we could also have a provision covering fault, so that a wife, if a satisfactory settlement cannot be negotiated, can proceed under those provisions. She will have the right, then, to go before the judge and give her evidence as to what happened throughout the marriage that led to its decline. It very seldom saves the marriage, but at least, if she feels she is innocent, the courts can make that ruling. I think that does have an effect on the court's order for maintenance, custody and a property settlement. Let us put in the mechanism where it can go either way and leave it to the individuals rather than lawyers or some government agency to make that decision on their behalf.

● (1650)

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, my question deals with any possible relationship between the number of abortions that are performed and the ease with which divorce might be obtained. I think even those people who favour easy abortion look upon it as being something that is rather undesirable.

I notice that the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) reflected on this subject a little in his presentation. Does he see any relationship between the rate of abortion and the ease with which divorces might or might not be obtained?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, that is a tough question because it goes back to what one's personal experience has been. I have had very limited experience with abortions as affected by the law. However, the ones that I have come to know have to do with people who simply felt that they were in such a desperate position that they could not see themselves carrying through. Even women who feel the need for this for social reasons do not lightly decide to have an abortion. There is usually a good reason behind it.

Therefore, I really could not give an adequate answer to the Hon. Member's question about tying abortion to divorces. I think there is a relationship between the law and whether it is invoked, but I am not sure about a relationship between abortion and divorce. With great respect, I cannot answer the question.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I did not originally plan to participate in this debate today, but I think the Bill is too important to let it go without saying a few words about it. I have enjoyed listening to the speeches so far today. I thought that the Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) made a valuable contribution to this debate. Many of the things said by the Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) were very important. It is unfortunate that he had to mix in some partisanship in a matter as important as divorce. I do not think that partisanship should play a role. I cannot understand how the size of a government deficit or, in fact, the size of the government relates to a divorce rate.

Having disposed of those extraneous issues, I would like to make a few brief comments. First, I do not believe that there is any doubt in any thinking person's mind that marriage is the most important institution in our western society and perhaps in any society. It is the glue that binds together the basic unit of society, namely, the family. For many centuries, the marriage contract was held to be virtually inviolate. It has been so almost until the time of Henry VIII who, in British tradition at least, made divorce somewhat easy to get because he took the law into his own hands.

However, I believe the issue is so important to society in general that it must be discussed very thoroughly. I believe that an opportunity must be made for those people and groups in the country who wish to have input into this matter. I am afraid that if we do not do that and do not write this law very carefully, we will end up with the same kind of disaster that was produced with the provisions under the Criminal Law respecting abortion.

The Act, as I recall it, states that an abortion may be obtained with the approval of a hospital abortion committee when the life or health of the mother would be endangered by the continuation of the pregnancy. Yet today, in some hospitals, there are more abortions than there are live births. That is an obvious flouting of the law, because no one in this day and age can claim that, in a majority of the cases, the life or health of the mother would be endangered by the continuation of the pregnancy. Pregnancy is not a disease, it is a natural phenomenon. While there are certainly cases when the life or health of the mother could be endangered by the continuation of the pregnancy, it does not occur in the majority of pregnancies. To claim otherwise is total nonsense.

Obviously I speak not as a woman but as a man. I do not happen to be a woman and cannot speak as a woman. Of course, I have never had a child in the sense of giving birth to it, but between my wife and I we are rearing five children. It is not always easy. Neither are most aspects of life always easy.

I do not want to see this Bill become the kind of boondoggle that, in my opinion, the abortion provision under the Criminal Code has become. I believe the fault lies basically with the provincial attorneys general, almost all of whom have completely disregarded their responsibility under the Canadian Constitution in that regard.

I am concerned that we are not now putting enough emphasis on premarital counselling, as the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills said. We write laws saying how we can get out of a marriage, but we do very little, if anything, with regard to the law about how one can get into a marriage. Some churches are making an admirable effort in providing premarital counselling. In the Roman Catholic Church, for instance, in the Archdiocese of Ottawa, premarital counselling is now mandatory except in special circumstances. I believe that that is a move in the right direction. I hope that all churches will do that. Perhaps all of the churches could spend more time on the issues of the day, talking about the morality of the issue, rather than worrying so much about how it will affect the collection. Clause 5 of the Bill reads:

> Subsection 7(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> '7. (1) It is the duty of every barrister, solicitor, lawyer or advocate who undertakes to act on behalf of any petitioner or the spouse of any petitioner on a petition for divorce under this Act . . .

—to instruct them on the provisions of this Act concerning the effecting of a reconciliation. Is that the job of a lawyer?

Mr. Lambert: It was a requirement of the other one.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I know that it is a requirement, but is that what it should be? The clause goes on to say that in the absence of any prospect of reconciliation he must notify them of the mediation facilities known to him. Maybe we are putting the cart before the horse. Perhaps the law should require the couple to go to the mediation service before they go to a lawyer, and maybe the mediation service should be recommending a lawyer, instead of the other way around. I think we are putting the cart before the horse, and I will have more to say about that later.

PENITENTIARIES

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF BOARD

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be empowered (1) to study means of providing greater public involvement in policy-making for the Canadian Penitentiary Service (2) to determine the feasibility of amending the Penitentiaries Act so as to provide that the Commissioner of Penitentiaries be appointed by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of a board, to consist of five members serving for five-year terms which would each terminate in a different calendar year, appointed by the Solicitor General of Canada, the said board to be responsible for, subject to the direction and control of the Solicitor General of Canada (a) the development of policy (b) presenting an annual report to Parliament through the Solicitor General of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity today to present this motion which in effect is to refer the subject matter to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. This House is not being called upon to make a final decision on the wisdom, the validity or the usefulness of this motion, but I hope the House will see the wisdom of having it referred to committee for study. I say that for two reasons. First, we are in the process in the House now of trying to institute some reforms whereby our committees have more and greater opportunity to deliberate on issues which may not necessarily be referred to them solely from the Government. This is one attempt to do that. Second, my whole motion today arises out of the unanimous report of an all-Party subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which, in 1976 and 1977, studied the subject of penitentiaries in Canada. Under the chairmanship of the present Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), it came up with a report that was unanimous. Among the various recommendations in that report, of which there were 65, recommendation No. 24 dealt specifically with the topic of the motion before us today. I want to emphasize that this motion and subject of it was a recommendation made unanimously by the subcommittee. It is not one of a partisan nature for two reasons, first that this issue is basically non-partisan politically and, second, that we are attempting to encourage the House to have its committees become more involved in studying matters that they feel are more important. I hope the House today will agree that the motion be referred to the standing committee for consideration.

It would be germane to make some comments regarding the background which led up to the subcommittee's report in 1977 and see how similar the situation was then to the situation we see in Canada today vis-à-vis our penitentiaries.

In the early 1970s, we in Canada were deluged with a number of violent incidents in our penitentiaries across the country. These included riots, strikes, murders, hostage takings, suicides, and so on. This culminated in the rather nasty hostage-taking in the B.C. penitentiary where Mary Steinhauser was killed in the course of a riot and in an attempt to rescue her. Following that, various attempts were made, one of them by the Official Opposition to have a public investigation. By agreement it was worked out that an all-Party subcommittee of this House be struck to study the matter. We spent a number of months studying Canada's various penitentiaries. We heard many, many witnesses. We came up with a report which was hailed far and wide as being an excellent report.

Mr. MacGuigan: Hear, hear!

Mr. Halliday: I hear the Minister of Justice say hear, hear. He should indeed be proud of that report, as I know he is. I suspect that the Minister of Justice is equally disappointed now as he was then that recommendation No. 24, which is really the embodiment of this motion today, was not put into practice nor taken serious account of by officials in the Solicitor General's Department. I think the essence of the subcommittee's report can be summed up in its recommendation No. 1. Its report to Parliament in 1977 at page 2 reads:

Recommendation 1 A crisis exists in the Canadian penitentiary system. It can be met only by the immediate implementation of large-scale reforms. It is imperative that the Solicitor General act immediately on this Report as a matter of the utmost urgency.

This indicates that we need large-scale reforms. The issue which this motion today addresses is one of those large-scale reforms. It is disappointing to think that it was not, in my view, properly addressed and actually instituted by the appropriate officials.

One might ask what reception this report received. I intimated a few moments ago that it received rather good reception both across the country and in other countries of the world. I think it is best voiced by the chairman of that subcommittee in a paper that he wrote in 1980, several years after the report, entitled The Role of the Standing Committees on Justice and Legal Affairs of the Canadian House of Commons 1966-1978. Let me quote from his article as follows:

Although the impact of the Subcommittee's report on the press and public was immediate and strong, the hardened professionals in the CPS—which is the Canadian Penitenitary Service.

—approached it rather gingerly and the Minister—

—the present Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox).

—even though from the outset favourably impressed by the report, was limited by the attitudes of the system.

"Limited by the attitudes of the system." That to me is the deplorable thing with which we have been faced ever since that report was received by Parliament.

Let me move on to discuss specifically something about recommendation No. 24 to which I have alluded. I think it would be appropriate if I were to read that recommendation, Mr. Speaker. It does embody my motion before the House today and indicates that it is a motion calling upon the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee to study, hopefully with the intention of asking the Government to put into effect, recommendation No. 24. At page 77 of the subcommittee's report we find:

Recommendation 24

The Commissioner should remain the chief administrative officer of the penitentiary system but he should be appointed by and responsible to a Board of five members (appointed for 5-year terms on a staggered basis by the Solicitor General) which would have sole responsibility for the making of policy. The Board must not have an attached bureaucracy additional to the Penitentiary Service. It should report to the Solicitor General and should be required to make an annual report to Parliament through the Solicitor General.

I want to address a few of the issues raised by this recommendation and indicate some of the points that should be discussed at this time.

● (1710)

Recommendation No. 24 of the all-Party subcommittee recognized that there was a need—and I submit that there is still a need—for greater public involvement in policy making in our criminal justice system, that it should be more visible to the public. I should like to refer to a quotation which substantiates that need. I refer to a 1977 publication entitled Community Involvement in Criminal Justice. It was a federal Government study and it reported on the role of the private sector in criminal justice. It dealt on page 117 with the influence of professionals on effective decisions in the upper echelons of government, in particular in the criminal justice system. In part the study at that page reads:

It is probably safe to say that the majority of important decisions in the criminal justice services, except major political decisions, are taken by an elite group of professionals. Not only is there an emphasis on professionalism, but the deliberations of those professionals are often not open to public scrutiny.

Hence, as I said a moment ago, the need to have this brought to the attention of the public and the need to have input other than that of departmental professionals. It continues:

The movement toward professionalism is now well advanced, which is understandable in view of prior criticisms that the justice services were not sufficiently professional. The thrust to professionalism is not likely reversible. That is as it should be, provided there is a balance against the exclusiveness that comes with professionalism, an exclusiveness which sets up firm obstacles to citizen involvement.

It indicates that we need to be wary of the present and continuing situation with excessive amounts of professionalism at the top, without adequate input by the community in an appropriate manner, input which is visible at the same time to the people.

In arriving at recommendation No. 24, the subcommittee realized that we needed an opportunity for line staff, for the staff in our institutions and penitentiaries to contribute to the policies of those institutions either at the local level or at the national level, as is the case in this motion. By the same token, there was a need to remove the imposition of policy from the top and to place it with those at the bottom. Often policies were derived and formulated by people who were not necessarily raised in the system or had not experienced the total implications of what went on at the institutional level. Those are some of the important matters with which the subcommittee wrestled in reaching its recommendations.

Finally, I should like to discuss an implication which has bothered me for a number of years. I have raised it before the standing committee from time to time. I am referring to the fact that it is interesting to compare a number of public institutions in the country with the special institution about which we are talking today. I am referring to our criminal justice system and the penitentiaries and jails which form part of it. If we study public institutions, we see that the militia or the army might be considered exceptions. Other than that, the only public institutions which do not have the benefit of adequate, effective and meaningful public input are prisons, penitentiaries and jails. They are governed by departmental people. I will conclude my remarks in a few minutes by discussing the adverse effect of that. There is a century-old sessional paper which deals with the matter.

We have schools, universities, hospitals, libraries, police commissions and various other public institutions which offer some kind of service. They all have public boards or committees to which people are either elected or appointed or both. They set most of the basic policy. In many cases fundamental policy is established by, for example, the department of education. Certainly I am quite familiar with the workings of the educational system in the Province of Ontario. Certain basic policy is established by that provincial department. As long as local school boards remain within those parameters, they set the policy for schools within their jurisdiction. The point I am making is that that does not exist within the penitentiaries system. The only effective input is on the part of citizen advisory committees, which are purely advisory. Any well-intentioned person who wants to have an idea implemented does not feel comfortable if he is on an advisory committee, unless he feels his recommendations or advice are being implemented by the particular institution and its management. This is the last of our public institutions to have public involvement at the planning level. The time has come to do something at the federal level, hence the need to refer the motion to the standing committee.

I could refer to many examples to suggest that something must be done. For instance, a very good article appeared in Le Soleil on April 28, 1984. I will not take the time of the House to read it now, but it pointed out that in the first few months of this year there were five homicides in the Province of Ontario. That was more than ever before. As reported in The Whig-Standard of Kingston on January 34, 1984, a Crown prosecutor from that area indicated that from his perspective penitentiaries appeared to be totally out of control. Another example would be Dr. Robert MacMillan, regional coroner for eastern Ontario, who released a study. He was asked to study the situation respecting the various riots, killings, deaths and homicides which had taken place in the Kingston area. In his recommendation No. 11, in a document of some 18 pages, he wrote:

> That the federal team appointed to study violence and homicides in the prison system have a member or members not directly linked or employed by the federal Government included in the review team.

There is a review team studying this matter now. I believe it is either the Vantour or the Stewart Commission. In both cases they are conducting in-house studies. We require that problem to be evaluated or assessed by at least some people, as Dr. MacMillan suggested, who are outside the federal system.

I could also refer to the Archambault riots on July 25, 1982. It is obvious that we are in need of some very major reforms in our penitentiaries and in our criminal justice system. Hence the need for this particular motion to be before the House today.

During the past few years I have been a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I have raised this matter with four successive Solicitors General following the report in 1977. Each and every one of them, representing two political Parties in the House, adopted the same arguments and reasons for recommendation No. 24 not being implemented. They were virtually ludicrous arguments. There were no substantial bases for them. I was dismayed that senior officials in the correctional services of Canada obviously had such control over their Ministers that each and every one of them, when it reported on the implementation of our report, suggested in the very same words the very same reasons for not implementing that recommendation.

This disturbs me because it indicates that the Minister was not really making a decision. He was ratifying or rubber-stamping a decision which was made by his senior staff in the correctional services of Canada. That is the essence of the problem in the entire system. We do not have independent people such as those proposed in the motion before the House today who are nominated and appointed by the Solicitor General to determine the policy of the correctional services.

I want to conclude with a brief reference to a Sessional paper published in 1880 by the Parliament of Canada. It dealt with the report of two gentlemen commissioned by Parliament to look into the riot at St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary in the 1870s. It is amazing that in 1875 the Penitentiary Act, which made some major changes, put the responsibility for the management of prisons into departmental hands. According to the two Commissioners, Mr. Miall and Mr. Tache, that was the major error. We are still living with that error. I just want to read the concluding sentence of their 19-page report. It reads:

> It is, therefore, with full confidence in the rectitude of our view, that we recommend to your consideration the advisability, we may say the necessity of abrogating the Act of 1875 and its amendments, and the restoration of a Board of Directors of Penitentiaries, constituted after the manner, and possessing the powers of that which existed prior to the recent unfortunate innovation.

That was referring to the Penitentiary Act of 1875.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I have had the privilege of sitting on the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for fifteen years, and for many of those years I have had the pleasure of sitting on the Committee with the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday). I have witnessed his diligence and his interest in legal questions, despite the fact that he is not a lawyer himself, which proves that one can be interested in these issues without necessarily belonging to the legal profession.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the arguments put forward by my honourable friend, and I appreciate the fact that he said the point raised was not a political one. I appreciate this because if our views differ, it will not mean I have political reasons for disagreeing with the interesting views he has expressed and maintained with considerable determination for many years.

Mr. Speaker, the penitentiary system is a subject of considerable interest which too many people approach in a very simplistic fashion, which consists in saying that when a criminal has broken the law, all we have to do is put him in a penitentiary for as long as possible, and the problem is solved. I think my hon. friend has raised a number of questions that would bear discussion here in the House, about riots and suicide in our penitentiaries. These are very serious problems which we want to solve, but the solution is certainly not incarceration.

The point raised by my hon. colleague is an interesting one, and perhaps I may be allowed to repeat it, even if you yourself, Mr. Speaker, read the motion at the beginning of this period, and even if my hon. friend repeated it as well. I think it would be interesting to repeat the motion because it contains some very important points. The motion moved by the Hon. Member for Oxford states that the Government should consider the feasibility of providing for greater public involvement in policy-making for correctional services by amending the Penitentiaries Act to include, and this is interesting, a board of five members appointed for five years, who would be responsible for appointing the Commissioner of the Correctional Service. Developing policies and presenting an annual report would be a major undertaking. That would be the normal thing to do if the proposal were to be accepted. This annual report would be submitted to Parliament by the Solicitor General, and this would also seem the normal thing to do. I believe that what the Hon. Member for Oxford wants is something of a wish that can be entertained by both sides of the House. I think we agree that the management of the Correctional Service now lacks, if I may say so, originality occasionally. Increased public input might be desirable wherever it meets the objectives of a responsible government. Of course, needless to say, we do not have the same political system as in the United States, where the ministers are selected by the President; in Canada they are elected and are part of a responsible government, which means that they are eventually held accountable to the public for their actions.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Oxford has said, this recommendation was contained in the report of the 1977 Parliamentary Subcommittee. Since then, the Hon. Member and other Members have urged implementation of this recommendation, which was Recommendation No. 24. However, as indicated by the Hon. Member for Oxford, in spite of his persistence and perseverance, it seems that there are major obstacles to the implementation of this recommendation which is, at first glance, quite interesting since, as stated by the Hon. Member, it calls for greater accountability and an increasing participation by the public, which we would all appreciate.

The Parliamentary Subcommittee came under the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I remember that, at the time, while having to attend other committee meetings, I had attended some of the meetings of the sub-committee and found its proceedings quite interesting. I would say that this sub-committee displayed a single-mindedness devoid of political partisanship, and this was quite pleasant. I think that, as a result, its members felt that their responsibility was committed, not as party affiliates, but as parliamentarians faced with a serious problem, that of prisoners and their sometimes perplexing actions, whether they are riots, suicides or internal problems. We often look for solutions by increasing public involvement. However, I respectfully submit to the Hon. Member for Oxford that this might not necessarily be the best overall solution. The sub-committee was made up of members from both sides of the House and they submitted their report.

Following its investigation, the sub-committee made 65 recommendations, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Oxford, aimed at improving the Canadian penitentiary system, which was in need of new ideas and adjustments. As of January 1, 1984, of these 65 recommendations, 47 had been accepted and implemented as submitted or in an amended form; nine had been accepted but called for implementation at a later date; seven had been rejected including, unfortunately for the Hon. Member for Oxford, Recommendation 24; and the last two belonged to a special category over which the Correctional Service did not have full jurisdiction, but which the Service still considered as these recommendations were nevertheless interesting. I am sure that the Hon. Member for Oxford, who is a reasonable man, realizes that the report as a whole was not only the subject of a study but that, unlike other reports, it was not simply shelved. Many of its important and essential recommendations have been implemented, but not all of them—for reasons we deem fair and reasonable—and the debate continues. I am sure that the door is not completely closed since the problem has not been solved and one should never definitively exclude any solution.

The point to remember, Mr. Speaker, is that 56 of the 65 recommandations made by the parliamentary subcommittee have been accepted and implemented unchanged or in a modified form by the Correctional Service since 1977.

As much as possible, the Solicitor General of Canada and the Correctional Service have tried—and I think that their effort deserves praise—to implement all the recommendations of the parliamentary subcommittee but, as I said, recommendation No. 24 which the Hon. Member for Oxford is raising today in his motion was among those that were rejected. In his response to the parliamentary sub-committee report in August 1977, and it may be important to mention that response of which the Hon. Member may be aware but which I draw to his attention in any event, the then Solicitor General of Canada pointed out that this recommendation was one of the most significant changes advocated by the subcommittee and that its implications were so wide-ranging and difficult to assess that he had asked for time to consider that recommendation more thoroughly. However, he did raise a few questions after reviewing the recommendation for the first time. I would like to recall some of them to show that on such important issues we do make serious studies, and this question has to be considered quite carefully because it is very important, as the Solicitor General of Canada pointed out. For one thing, the then Solicitor General indicated that, if the recommendation was aimed at a greater participation by senior officials in the policy-making process, steps had already been taken to have the staff play a more active role in policy planning. Still, the means suggested by the subcommittee to do that had to be considered more carefully. In other words, the idea itself was accepted, but at the time the ways and means did raise a few questions. According to him, a five-member commission responsible for drafting policies, without full support nor its own analysis and research facilities, would be seriously hindered in its approach. It is a debatable argument, but I think it has some merit and that we ought to speak to that issue in this debate.

• (1730)

On the other hand, the Minister had pointed out that the federal Government wanted to set up commissions and Crown agencies that would be more responsible to the Minister and therefore to Parliament. This recommendation seems to point in the opposite direction. Perhaps that is the argument which, to my mind, seems to be the most peremptory and the most serious. When, as parliamentarians, we have responsibilities for which we must answer to the House and the public, it would be too easy to avoid them, it would be too easy to shirk them by passing to others responsibilities which are ours and which, difficult though they may be, we cannot refuse to assume when the time comes.

Finally, the Solicitor General of Canada had then specified that it did not seem to him that the recommendations would help solve one of the deficiencies deemed to be vital by the subcommittee, namely the lack of an adequate definition of authority and the resulting confusion for the person who controls the system. On the contrary, it seemed to him that the recommendation could exacerbate rather than solve the problem.

I recognize that this is a point of view, Mr. Speaker, and that the Hon. member could reply that it is not right for us to view the situation is this light. I recognize that he would have the right to say so, but from my own assessment, I find this argument well-founded and I believe that it justifies the reluctance we have on the Government side at this stage to follow up on the recommendation of the Hon. Member, which is, I repeat, quite interesting.

Later on, an interdepartmental task force led by the Assistant Deputy Minister, Policy Planning and Program Evaluation, was appointed to assess some of the recommendations, including No. 24 which is the subject of this motion. The task force shared the Solicitor General's concern, namely that a commission such as that suggested by the sub-committee would considerably erode the concept of departmental accountability. In fact, that brings us back to the central argument of departmental accountability and the responsibilities which have been laid on us by the people we represent.

Indeed, the task force concluded that the Correctional Service policies are so politically important that an erosion or a loss of departmental accountability could have serious effects on it. I have a feeling that the Hon. Member for Oxford recognizes the thrust of this argument and would admit that it would be a difficult decision to make at this stage when the problems are acute and the recommendations, although interesting, could not provide a guarantee that the problem would be solved.

Finally, when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in March 1978, the Solicitor General took a definite stand and rejected Recommendation No. 24. The reasons he gave were as follows: First, it is the Government of Canada which is responsible to Parliament for the policies carried out by the Canadian Penitentiary Service. Second, a five-member board which would be appointed to make policies for the Canadian Penitentiary Service, would feel cramped in its approach, with little or no support, and limited to its power of enquiry. Third, the Department of the Solicitor General, through its Deputy Solicitor General, is already responsible for providing the Solicitor General with advice on the policies the Department should apply. Fourth, the tendency of the Federal Government is now to make Crown corporations more accountable to departments and, therefore, to Parliament. Fifth, it is not certain that a board such as the one described by the subcommittee would help solve the major problems identified by the said subcommittee, namely, the lack of well-defined powers and the confusion as to who should control the system. That recommendation could in fact exacerbate the problem rather than contribute to its solution.

The Hon. Member for Oxford should be commended for providing us with the opportunity of an in-depth study of his motion allowing us to put forward a series of arguments which, although they may not convince him, will at least indicate that we have not considered lightly the issue he has raised. Personally, I should be delighted to discuss it further with the Hon. Member for Oxford, whom I hold in high esteem, and to work with him in harmony both in the House and in committee to seek a solution to the problem faced by all these men and women who are deprived of their freedom and who must live for shorter or longer periods of time behind bars.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) for all the previously stated reasons. I have had more than one occasion to observe the dedication and sincerity of the Hon. Member in his work as a Member of the House of Commons. I would like to begin my remarks by congratulating him on bringing forward this motion today.

I am sure, however, that the Hon. Member will understand that the proposition which he brings to the House is in some respects in conflict with what is in existence now, certainly with respect to the position of the Government of the day. While I agree with the thrust of what the Hon. Member for Oxford is attempting to achieve, I would like to bring forward other salient aspects of the subject matter.

I agree with my colleagues that there is a direct relationship between the Hon. Member's motion and recommendation No. 24 in the report of the Subcommittee on the Penitentiary System in Canada. However, I have decided to explore the link between this motion and recommendation No. 26 of the same report which proposed that the CSC be treated as a separate employer within the meaning of the Public Service Employment Act. Acceptance of recommendations Nos. 24 or 26 would ultimately transfer the correctional service of Canada into a non-departmental body.

Recommendation No. 24 states that a board would be charged with the responsibility of formulating correctional policies. The board would have no line authority, but would appoint the commissioner to supervise the operations of the service in accordance with the policies it establishes. It would report to the Solicitor General and would submit an annual report, through the Minister, to Parliament.

While recommendation No. 26 states that CSC staff should be exempt from the Public Service Employment Act, it also adds that the CSC should be similar to the RCMP in its discipline and professionalism and that employees could be discharged for misconduct or incompetence.

At this time, I think a brief history of the origin of the subcommittee should be given. The House of Commons agreed on October 21, 1976, to the motion of the then Solicitor General that the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs inquire into the penitentiary system in Canada. On October 26, 1976, the committee referred the subject to an all-Party subcommittee which was fully representative of the House of Commons. I might add that I had the honour and privilege to serve on that committee with the present Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) as its Chairman. Of course, the distinguished Member for Oxford was also on the committee and made a very significant contribution to the committee's work.

The mandate of the subcommittee was to examine the background of the correctional service of Canada—maximum security institutions, the purposes of imprisonment, correctional staff, the organization and management of the penitentiary service, justice within the walls, socialization, pre-release and parole programs and inmates' work, and educational and other training programs.

The fifth and final progress report on the implementation of the 65 recommendations of the subcommittee was made public by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in June of 1981.

In recommendation No. 26, the subcommittee suggested that if the CSC were to take responsibility for its own staffing and firing, the thrust of the recommendation would be better fulfilled. It would enable faster staffing action and would reduce vacancies. It would also facilitate the employment of higher calibre people and would help create staff professionalism and a desired esprit de corps.

The CSC appointed a task force in June, 1978, to study the personnel recommendations of the report of the parliamentary Subcommittee on the Penitentiary System. That task force completed its work at the end of June, 1980. Since that time, the recommendations of the task force have been the subject of extensive consultation between the CSC, the Union of Solicitor General Employees, officials of the Treasury Board Secretariat and other interested government departments. Consequently, steps are now under way to bring into effect certain mechanisms, such as a distinct correctional employees operation group and a provision to allow for the early retirement of correctional employees who suffer from the results of the high levels of stress that are common in the correctional environment.

Many positive changes have already taken place in the area of personnel management in the correctional service of Canada. I will outline some of these changes. They include a detailed code of conduct which sets out the standards upon which staff conduct is judged and the process by which disciplinary action is taken. It includes a nationally-managed CX recruitment program designed to ensure the selection of high calibre recruits. This program has been developed and implemented. The changes provide the selection criteria for CX recruitment, which have been modified. The minimum educational standard for correctional officers has been upgraded to Grade 12 or the equivalent. The university qualification for CXs to obtain WP positions has been removed, thereby developing a career path for security staff. Greater emphasis has been placed on manpower planning and training from a national perspective. As well, a 13-week full-time induction training course, followed by a 24-month probationary period, has been introduced for all new correctional officers. Live-in unit officers also receive an additional four-week course on case management, counselling techniques and group dynamics.

The CSC has implemented the policy of official language service to inmates consistent with that which is available to the general public, in the spirit of the Official Languages Act. It has also created one of the first language ombudsman positions in a federal department or agency to protect language rights and to develop programs for second language acquisition in the workplace.

Additionally, the CSC has introduced a supplementary income benefit plan for survivors of employees slain on duty. This benefit plan guarantees income maintenance for survivors of employees to supplement any payments received from Canada and Quebec Pension Plans and Workmen's Compensation. It has also implemented a program of rehabilitative assistance to employees of the service who became victims of acts of violence in institutions.

Furthermore, the CSC has developed a policy to integrate female correctional officers in male institutions. The long-term goal is to reach a representation of 13 per cent in medium and minimum security institutions by 1987. The integration is presently being done in medium and minimum security institutions. As of January, 1984, the number of female correctional officers in male institutions has been 255, or 5.6 per cent. On May 20, 1980, Ms. Mary Dawson was appointed Warden of Warkworth Institution, thus becoming the first woman to head a major federal institution for male inmates. On November 9, 1983, Doctor Pauline Lamothe, who began her career as a psychologist at the British Columbia penitentiary, was appointed the first female executive director of a regional psychiatric centre in Canada.

• (1750)

In order to ensure the highest level of communication with its employees, the CSC conducted a survey in the fall of 1983 through the Gallup poll to examine the attitudes of staff and the effectiveness of internal communication. The survey revealed that over one-third or 37 per cent of the employees interviewed are very satisfied with their employment, and almost three quarters, or 71 per cent, described it as rewarding. Commitment to the job was felt strongly by 70 per cent of those surveyed, and almost three-quarters of the respondents, or 72 per cent, perceived their function as a career.

The CSC has also developed and implemented a CSC awards program for staff, including the Commissioner's Citation for Bravery and Meritorious Service, the Service Commendation, the Certificate of Appreciation and the Long Service Awards.

For these reasons, as well as those expressed by my colleagues, I feel that the Solicitor General, through the Correctional Service of Canada, is fulfilling his mandate and is meeting the objectives of the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Oxford as well as the recommendations of the subcommittee on the penitentiary system in Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will say that we were all very pleased to have the opportunity to work in this committee and to deal with this most urgent and serious question at that time back in the late 1970s when we had very serious riots in the major institutions, the maximum security institutions in Canada. We were delighted with the reception which the recommendations in the report received and the fact that the Solicitor General of the day, and subsequent Solicitors General, have taken the recommendations very seriously. The majority of those recommendations have been implemented, acted upon or studied. Some action has been taken. I believe it is very gratifying to know that our work has not been in vain but indeed has made a substantial contribution to our society.

For all those stated reasons, once again I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Oxford for his diligence in bringing this matter to our attention.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my intervention with respect to this motion will be very brief since I do not want to talk it out. I want to give the Government the opportunity of allowing it to be sent to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I agree with the basic trend of the motion. I also appreciate the fact that it is in line with the recommendations made in the 1977 report.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that in my constituency there are two federal institutions, one maximum and one minimum. They are probably two of the best run institutions in Canada. Part of the reason they have gained that reputation is that, to a geat extent, they have opened up their operations to the public. I believe what the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) was attempting to do was to suggest that this kind of openness is necessary, particularly in those areas from which we isolate ourselves easily.

That is particularly true in the area of the correctional service. Most of us tend to isolate or to separate ourselves from the whole approach to correctional institutions and say it is the responsibility of someone else. However, living in the community of Prince Albert, I know that the more open the organization is to public scrutiny, the better it is going to be.

Besides the advisory committee in Prince Albert, which operates very well and thoroughly in the community, the Prince Albert maximum institution has a large number of volunteers who go in and work on a one-to-one basis with the inmates. The projection of those people into the prison community has made a considerable difference, when the inmates leave the institution, to their acceptance into the community, and has contributed to the continued and long-term rehabilitation of the prisoners coming out of those penitentiaries. This applies not necessarily only to the Prince Albert institution, but to institutions all across Canada. I feel, therefore, that what we need to do as a Parliament is to take a look at those recommendations from the 1977 report which were not acted upon, and most of which, if you look at them closely, deal with the whole area with which the Hon. Member for Oxford dealt. I believe if we were to open up and give to the public a better insight into why decisions are made and how the decisions are made, we would have better institutions, because, in large part, our attitude toward correctional institutions is caused by fear of the unknown. If we can eliminate that fear by increasing the knowledge of the public generally, we will have a more open situation. For example, if one looks at the statistics of the Prince Albert maximum security institution, one finds that there were more complaints by inmates in Prince Albert than in any other institution across Canada. The reason for that, I believe, is the openness which is encouraged. Rather than being a criticism of that institution, it is a praise of that institution, because it has allowed the inmates to feel free to come forward with their complaints and to have their complaints acted upon.

Therefore, I support the position of the Hon. Member for Oxford in his attempt to open up the institution for more insight by the public.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the idea behind the motion brought forth by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) is one which has been in existence for a number of years. You will know, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Oxford was a member of the Subcommittee on the Penitentiary System in Canada. This motion stems, as he has stated to you, from recommendation No. 24 of the report of the subcommittee. However, in my mind, it contains one important addition. Recommendation No. 24, in itself, did not contain any reference to providing for increased public participation in policy-making by having the Commissioner of Corrections named by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of a five-member board. This statement, however, seems to be the basis of the motion of the Hon. Member. He obviously feels strongly that by having his motion passed, the public participation in the penitentiary system will greatly increase.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I have decided to examine and enumerate for you what the correctional service of Canada has accomplished to increase public involvement in policy-making, not only within institutions but also during the pre-release and parole periods of an inmate's incarceration. I hope to show you what the Hon. Member proposes will not serve to enhance public involvement.

Public participation in the correctional service of Canada is at an all-time high. This has a great deal to do with another recommendation of the 1977 subcommittee report. Recommendation No. 25 states that the penitentiary system—

FISHERIES—POSSIBLE IMPACT OF UNITED STATES OIL LEASE PROGRAM ON WEST COAST FISHERY. (B) ENVIRONMENTAL HEARINGS IN ALASKA

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, on May 18, as recorded at page 3869 of Hansard, I tried to find out from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) whether the concerns of his Department had been taken into account in a diplomatic note delivered to the U.S. State Department in Washington the week before. As far as we can make out, because, we have not seen the text of the note, it was protesting quite rightly certain Maritime claims that the U.S. authorities appeared to be making in northern B.C. waters.

As I say, I agree fully that the note on the sovereignty aspects of that particular problem was due to be delivered to the U.S. and I am glad it was. But without being too precise, the Minister brushed off my question as virtually inconsequential by stating that decisions, presumably relating to the note delivered by our Government, are decisions that involve all Departments. That barely deals with my concerns. Mr. Speaker. It was a clever answer, but it literally did not address itself to the question I had put to the Minister. I have still to be satisfied that the other matter which concerned me at that time had been taken into account. Perhaps I should explain.

The U.S. Department of the Interior announced a call for tenders to explore for gas and petroleum in certain waters off the Alaska coast. In one of their publications, comparable to our Gazette, called the National Register, they describe it as the Gulf of Alaska. That covers a great area of territory to the west of the Panhandle, out into the Gulf and down into the A-B Line which defines the boundary between Canada and the United States. The schematic charts published with this call include one area designated as the Gulf of Alaska which infringed, in its southern boundary claims, into waters which are not, in Canada's eyes, U.S. waters at all. That I believe was what the note was all about.

There is another aspect to which I was drawing attention, and that had to do with environmental concerns. I am not sure that the note dealt with them. What the Minister was evading, I suppose is the correct word, was any notion that the environmental concerns in that area had been dealt with in that note. Fish sometimes go through other people's territory to get to the high seas, and fish bred in Canada go through the Panhandle out into the Gulf of Alaska. If there is drilling, exploration and contamination in that area, and Canadian fish are going through that area, either upstream or downstream to the breeding grounds or out to sea, there is a hazard to Canadian resources. That is what I wanted to know from the Minister. I hope that the spokesman for the Minister will be able to assure me that not only the sovereignty claim but also the environmental concerns that I was seeking to express were taken into account in that particular note.

• (1805)

There are three rivers which are salmon breeding rivers in that area. They come out through what is known as the Panhandle there. The fish in the Stikine, the Nass and the Taku Rivers all have to come out through the Panhandle as well as fish possibly even from the Skeena.

I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary who will reply to this question if he can assure me that the note that was sent to the United States on the sovereignty issue also dealt with the issue of the environment and the safety of Canadian fish. If so, I am deeply reassured. I hope he will be able to let me know—perhaps not tonight—that the text of the note will be made available to the House. It is a very important issue.

There is a related issue that may very well come up in the not too distant future. It concerns another territorial claim to the east of the 141st meridian which divides the Territory of Yukon from Alaska, extended out to the Arctic Ocean. However, I am not dealing with that tonight, only with the environmental issue in the Gulf of Alaska.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, from my viewpoint, herein lies the benefit of having this portion of debate set aside for clarification. First, there is no grounds for him to use the word "evading". Let me make that point very clear for the Hon. Member. There is no evasion on the part of anyone.

The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) has raised the issue of the possible environmental and fisheries impacts of the United States lease program in the waters off the Alaskan Panhandle. The Hon. Member is making reference to the recent publication in the U.S. Federal Register of the United States' intention to offer oil and gas exploration leases for certain areas on the Continental Shelf on the West Coast. I should point out, however, that the leases in question do not cover the area within Dixon Entrance itself, but are located to the west of the Entrance. As there is no agreed Maritime boundary between Canada and the United States in the Dixon Entrance and adjacent waters, the Government of Canada considers it unacceptable for the United States to propose to issue leases in any of these waters.

As a result, the diplomatic note which was sent dealt solely with the jurisdictional issue. The environmental aspect of the proposed program is thus not an issue at this time. It would appear to me that making representations in the diplomatic note with respect to environmental and fisheries concerns could be taken as acquiescence on the proposed leases.

Canada did not make representations to the Department of the Interior when it was holding environmental hearings in Alaska on the Environmental Impact Statement that was prepared for the lease area. We are, however, obviously concerned about the potential threat from oil and gas exploration in this area to Canadian fish and fish habitat, including the fish destined for Canadian rivers that pass through Alaskan waters. The Hon. Member can be assured that we will continue to monitor the situation very closely. This is especially important as the Government of Canada and the Province of British Columbia have recently announced their intention to conduct an environmental assessment and review of the proposal to renew oil and gas exploration in the waters off British Columbia, north of Vancouver. Part of the area under review by us is immediately adjacent to the proposed U.S. leases.

I would assure the Hon. Member that for those areas under Canadian jurisdiction, Canadian environmental laws and regulations will apply. I am fully aware of the potential threat to fish and fish habitat of offshore oil and gas exploration. I am sure that the Hon. Member is aware that offshore exploration has been ongoing for over ten years in both the Beaufort Sea and on the east Coast of Canada. My department participates in all aspects of the environmental assessment and review of these projects and co-operates fully with the provincial and federal agencies responsible for the management of offshore activities to ensure that adequate protection measures are in place for fish and fish habitat.

CROWN CORPORATIONS—DE HAVILLAND DASH-8 AIRCRAFT—FINANCING OF SALES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): For approximately three months now we have been exploring in this House through questions, statements and adjournment debates why there is so much delay in the sale of aircraft by de Havilland to Time Air of Lethbridge, Air Atonabee of Peterborough, and Norcan Air of Saskatoon. We all realize in this House how important $100 million worth of aircraft sales by our Crown corporation de Havilland would mean to the future of that organization.

We started out by exploring the possibility of some interest assistance that might be made available to de Havilland in order that it could offer competitive interest rates on the sale of aircraft to Canadian companies that wish to purchase them. We were advised in the House on April 16, 1984, by the Minister Responsible for the Canadian Development Investment Corporation, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) that there are regulations on domestic and international trade which are set under the General Agreements on Tariff and Trade. This matter was pursued in an adjournment debate and later in a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). It was felt at the time by the Prime Minister that GATT did not affect sales of domestic aircraft here in Canada, so there would be no exclusion to the offering of assistance, if assistance were deemed necessary by the Government.

Pursuing that to the next stage, I rose in the House of Commons on May 14, 1984, and asked the Prime Minister if anything could be done in order that we could compete with the company in Ireland that has offered aircraft to Atonabee with interest rates of 7.5 per cent. At that time the Prime Minister said that any further subsidies to de Havilland would be costs. What is the sense of investing hundreds of millions of dollars in de Havilland so it can build an aircraft to sell around the world if we are not prepared to be competitive here in Canada with offshore domestic airlines that come into Canada with interest assistance programs.

Then I picked up the Globe and Mail on Thursday, June 7, 1984 to read about the Dash-7 sale to Indonesia. I found out that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Regan) said the federal Export Development Corporation has signed a financing agreement worth $20.25 million U.S. to support the sale of the planes and spare parts to Indonesia. If we can offer financial assistance programs to Indonesia so that it can buy Dash-7s manufactured by de Havilland, why can we not offer similar financial packages to Canadian companies that wish to purchase Dash-8s to use them here in Canada? It clearly is not an infringement on GATT agreements.

If we can build an aircraft here in Canada—this is an industry badly needed, and there are 2,500 jobs at de Havilland alone, plus another 10,000 jobs in spin off supply industries—what a shame it is to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in this Crown corporation and not offer an interest assistance package in order to sell the aircraft locally, use it domestically and prove its worth to the rest of the world.

• (1815)

There is not much sense in offering a financial assistance program to Indonesia of $20.25 million through the Export Development Corporation, as reported in the Globe and Mail on June 7, while at the same time procrastinating in the sale of $100 million worth of de Havilland Dash 8 aircraft to the three Canadian companies—Time Air, Air Atonabee and Norcan Air.

Why is it good that Indonesia receives a financial package? We are not building monuments in Algeria; we are selling aircraft. Why should Indonesia receive this assistance program, while at the same time we are not prepared to offer a similar program to these domestic airlines which are ready to purchase the aircraft if an interest rate package is put together?

In conclusion, I should like to read a paragraph from the 1983 annual report of The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited:

> There are two aspects in particular affecting the ultimate profit or less of the Dash-8 program. The first relates to the cost of lending money to purchasers of the aircraft. The second relates to cost of production. In each case, the Dash-8 is facing stiff competition. Because competitors are largely supported by their governments—

We in the Opposition are asking that the Liberal Government be competitive with offshore governments selling aircraft in Canada.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the Hon. Member will agree about our competitive abilities, not only in international trade matters but at home. I think we have been very effective when it comes to competition at all levels, not just in terms of commerce and the marketplace. In recent times, I am sure he will agree that our competition has been very effective according to the statistical figures which are released from time to time.

The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) appears to be worried about de Havilland's ability to meet the competition for commuter aircraft. He worries that de Havilland is asking too high a price and that it cannot offer competitive financing because of our arrangements under the GATT.

Let me deal first with competition. The Hon. Member has claimed that the Shorts 360, a plane built in Northern Ireland, is a comparable product which sells for $2 million less than the Dash-8. The Shorts 360 is not comparable. It is not pressurized, which means that it cannot fly above 10,000 feet. For example, most of the weather in Ontario where Air Atonabee flies requires a plane which can climb above 10,000 feet in order to avoid turbulence. The Shorts 360 is also slower than the Dash-8. As I said, the plane is not competitive; it does not have the capacities of the Dash-8.

Let me also clear the air on another point. The price offered by de Havilland does not keep rising, as has been claimed in recent news stories. The standard practice in the industry is to set a price in a particular year and to add an escalation clause. This is the practice followed by de Havilland. The price is set in 1982 dollars with escalation for inflation. The basic price itself has not changed.

The Government is fully aware of the concerns raised in public by regional air carriers. Their comments simply show what de Havilland is up against. We will not negotiate sales contracts in public. I can say, however, that the Government is working very hard to address these concerns.

The Government has told de Havilland that it will provide assistance to enable it to meet competition from Brazil or Britain or wherever. The exact form of that assistance is in the final stages of discussion within government, but the commitment is solid. Hon. Members will be aware that the form of assistance eventually arrived at will have to accord with Canada's international undertakings and that we musts be very careful on that count. We are a trading nation, and international trade is governed by rules which on the whole benefit Canada greatly.

The Hon. Member for Peterborough quoted the Minister responsible for CDIC, and thus de Havilland, as saying that we might meet Britain's term of 7 per cent financing. I have checked the transcript and found that what Senator Austin said was:

> What we want to do is well at market interest rates and at prices that recover our costs of production.

● (1820)

He also noted that we are indeed competitive on the cost of production side. Perhaps the Hon. Member did not hear him correctly.

Let me reiterate what this Government has said many times. We will not allow de Havilland to be driven from the marketplace due to predatory financing practices by its competitors. The Government is committed to de Havilland and to the Dash-8.

We all agree that we not only want this company to be successful but to provide jobs in Canada. We must also support the point of view that we should arrange to purchase these aircraft within Canada within the terms of our production.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION—OFFICE OF EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN. (B) EQUAL PAY FOR EQUAL WORK

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, on February 20 I raised with the Minister responsible for the Status of Women the concern of women that the Office of Equal Opportunities for Women in the Public Service Commission was to be closed on April 1. Despite the Minister's unequivocal statement that the office would not close, it did in fact close its doors on May 1, 1984. This office was important because it provided information, training advocacy, counselling and referral services for women, especially for 95,000 clerks and secretaries, the lowest paid public servants.

Political pressure from this side of the House and intense lobbying by many womens' organizations followed. On May 14 the Public Service Commission opened a Women's Program Centre which will be integrated into its Operations Directorate. While many of the essential functions of the EOW will remain, the office will be under intense scrutiny to make sure that the watchdog and advocacy function is maintained. This will be very difficult in an integrated structure.

In the west, cuts have already begun. The EOW office in the prairie region has been unilaterally reorganized so that the EOW officer there will now spend only one half of her time on direct equal opportunities work—one quarter of her time for each of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. This is completely unacceptable, particularly in light of the Minister's statement on February 20 that "regional equal opportunities offices are not under review."

Both the Minister and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) attempted to sidestep responsibility for equality for women in the Public Service by saying the PSC was outside their jurisdiction. These are the same people who tell us we should worry more about women in the private sector and the inaction of provincial governments.

New Democrats are advocating economic equality for all women. If the federal Government cannot ensure equality for its women employees, it is in no position to provide leadership to the provinces and the private sector. It seems that the Liberal motto is: Practice what we preach, not what we do.

One of the most glaring deficiencies in the Public Service affirmative action program is its focus on women in senior management positions. What about the majority of women workers who are concentrated in clerical job ghettos? When will the Government act to provide measures such as bridging positions and comprehensives skills training for these lowest paid Public Service workers? Women want to see action and concrete programs, not more paper promises, such as were made in committee by the Minister last week. I am very concerned that there is no target date in the new Womens' Program Centre for the extension of the Womens' Career Counselling and Referral Bureau Services to clerical and secretarial staff. This service is now available only to senior women.

The time has long passed for the Government to rectify the inadequacy of its affirmative action program. The Minister recently said that by the year 2000 the program would produce the kind of results that are necessary. She tells women to wait over 15 years for equality when this same Government's Official Languages Act produced equality for Francophones in the Public Service within three years. Why can she not do this for women? Where is her credibility?

The record is dismal. Four years after the implementation of a pilot project, women held fewer than 6 per cent of management positions, but fill over 80 per cent of the administrative support jobs in the federal Government. Approximately 63 per cent of those who have been laid off due to privatization and reorganization have been women. Things are getting worse for women rather than better under an ill-conceived Liberal program.

• (1825)

I question the Minister's understanding of the fundamental principle of affirmative action which is systemic discrimination. Both the Minister responsible for the Status of Women and the President of the Treasury Board have insisted that there was no intention to have layoffs affect women more adversely than men. However, the exact point of affirmative action is to ensure that unintentional discrimination is also removed. Claiming that there is no deliberate discrimination is no answer. Any practice which has a discriminatory effect, intentional or not, impedes women's struggles for economic equality. I urge the Government to revise its own affirmative action program as a model for other employers to provide concrete opportunities for women. The time to do this is now.

Mr. Michel Veillette (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may be aware of the Public Service Commission's announcement of the establishment of a Women's Program Centre on May 29, 1984. The centre will be part of the Operations Directorate, Staffing Programs Branch. I am confident that the Women's Program Centre, a centre which evolved out of the Office of Equal Opportunities for Women, will exert even greater influence on the operational processes relating to the recruitment and staffing of women.

I am particularly pleased that the commission will be offering a series of 16 noon-hour sessions that will be of particular interest to women in the administrative support category. These sessions begin this month in the National Capital Region. In addition, one-day information sessions on such subjects as part-time work, job sharing and the impact of microtechnology on women public servants are planned for later this year. Increased career counselling services will also be available through the commission's regional offices. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that these programs are specifically designed for women at junior and intermediate levels of the Public Service.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): The motion to adjourn now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.28 p.m., the House adjourned.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have been handed by the Clerk copies of notes which seem to indicate that this paper amounts to a ruling by Your Honour with respect to the admissibility at this stage of certain amendments that were dealt with in committee.

Mr. Speaker: I anticipate what the Hon. Member is saying. This is a preliminary expression from the Chair on the basis of which I hope the House could proceed today. The Chair would be prepared to hear argument with regard to these matters and to render a final decision. Also, the notes do not relate to all the amendments; they relate only to part of them.

Mr. Fraser: I take it then that Your Honour will be speaking to the House with respect to these notes, at which time Your Honour would ask for a response, if any response was forthcoming. Is that the procedure?

Mr. Speaker: The normal procedure has been for an indication of what is the intention of the Chair—and I am trying to give my intention—then to hear argument, if there is argument concerning it, and to make a final decision later. This is the procedure the Chair has followed when faced with a situation such as this.

As Hon. Members are aware, there are a large number of report stage motions on the Notice Paper relating to Bill C-9, an Act to establish the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, to enact an Act respecting enforcement in relation to certain security and related offences and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof or in relation thereto. I have had an opportunity to examine a number of the motions, and I am prepared to make a preliminary statement at this time.

First, Motions Nos. 1, 2, 10, 12, 16, 17, 20, 22, 25, 26, 28, 30, 33, 35, 36, 38, 40, 42, 45, 48, 52, 60, 64, 66, 69 to 73 inclusive, 75, 77, 80, 82, 85, 87, 88, 90, 92, 95, 98, 99, 101, 103 to 108 inclusive, 110 to 113 inclusive, 116, 119, 121, 124 to 129 inclusive, 131 to 138 inclusive, 140, 142 to 151 inclusive, 156 to 159 inclusive, 161 to 166 inclusive and 168 to 174 inclusive, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), each seek to delete a separate clause of the Bill as well as the schedule. The cumulative effect of affirmative votes on these motions would be to kill the Bill and thus, in the opinion of the Chair, they must all be disposed of together. Therefore these motions will be grouped for debate with a vote on Motion No. 1 disposing of all of the remaining motions to delete the clauses and schedule of the Bill.

Second, Motions Nos. 3 and 4 propose to add new features to the Bill by means of a substantive amendment to the interpretation clause, which is out of order. I refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773 (10), which reads:

> A substantive amendment may not be introduced by way of a modification to the interpretation clause of a Bill. Journals, May 21, 1970, p. 835.

Third, Motions Nos. 5 to 9 inclusive should be debated together. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 5 will dispose of Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9. However, a negative vote on Motion No. 5 will necessitate separate votes on Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9.

Fourth, Motion No. 11 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) seeks to change the purpose and principle of the Bill as agreed to at second reading by bringing the service under the control of the RCMP. Since the Bill is proposing to create an independent service not under RCMP control, such an amendment would be irregular. Motion No. 11 is out of order because it is contrary to the principle of the Bill. I refer the Hon. Member to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(5), which is as follows:

> An amendment which is equivalent to a negative of the bill, or which would reverse the principle of the bill as agreed to at the second reading stage is not admissible.

Fifth, Motions Nos. 13 and 14 should be grouped for debate, and an affirmative vote on Motion No. 13 will obviate the need for a vote on Motion No. 14. A negative vote on Motion No. 13 will necessitate a vote on Motion No. 14.

Sixth, Motions Nos. 15, 76, 84, 117 and 175 attempt to introduce an entirely new concept and principle into the Bill—a parliamentary oversight committee—a concept not in the Bill as introduced or read a second time. Such a committee was also mentioned in Motion No. 4, previously ruled out of order, and is a new idea which was not contemplated in the Bill as agreed to at second reading. Thus it is clearly beyond the scope of the Bill and I must rule each of these motions out of order.

Seventh, Motions Nos. 18, 21, 27, 29, 44, 53, 65, 74, 81, 83, 91 and 115, all standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, are consequential to Motion No. 11 and, since Motion No. 11 is out of order, I must find each of these motions similarly out of order.

I regret to rule out Motion No. 49 on the same grounds. The motion combines two distinct and separate ideas: the first parts are consequential to Motion No. 11, while part (d) provides for a mechanism for reporting unlawful activities of employees of the service to the attorneys general of the provinces. Parts (a) through (c) must be ruled out of order. Unfortunately, since it is part of the same motion, part (d), which itself would have been in order, must also be ruled out of order. In such circumstances, the Chair must be guided by the principle that if any part of a motion is faulty, the entire motion is out of order. May I refer the Hon. Member to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 428(2), to that effect.

• (1115)

Eighth, Motions Nos. 19, 23 and 24 are to be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Ninth, Motions Nos. 31, 32 and 34 should be debated together but voted on separately.

The Chair will rule on the remaining 42 motions as soon as possible.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, so that there is absolutely no question with respect to the statement you have just made, I should say at the outset, without having consulted with my colleagues, that my initial reaction to your ruling is that it is very, very restrictive indeed and I think it casts serious questions on the ability of the Chamber to operate in a free and democratic way because of its very narrow interpretation. I simply want to give notice that I would like the opportunity to make a full presentation to you, Mr. Speaker, and I understand that I may do so.

I would simply say that we will be questioning vigorously and in depth some of the propositions that have been put forward by you in your preliminary statement. If we are to follow the procedure set out in this statement, particularly when debating a Bill which affects the civil liberties of Canadians as this Bill does, there would be serious consequences in that we would be restricted in our ability to present reasonable amendments. I make that preliminary statement so that there will be no question at all about the concern that we in this Party feel with respect to this legislation and particularly with respect to our ability to have a free and unfettered debate on a matter which is of such serious consequence to Canadians generally.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I first want to say that the preliminary ruling does in fact cover a substantial portion of the Bill. As you can appreciate, Sir, the ruling is difficult to digest at the moment. It must be cross-referenced and studied before we will be able to make any kind of reasonable response.

With that in mind, I am sure you can appreciate that it would be extremely difficult to proceed with any kind of reasonable or intelligent debate, Sir. For example, the rulings on the motions cover so many of the clauses of the Bill as to make it extremely difficult to find where one could legitimately make any intelligent proposals. I would therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: A concern that I have with regard to this is that I made a preliminary statement which is a matter of order and the Hon. Member was recognized on a point of order. I cannot accept a motion to adjourn on a point of order. There will be apportunities for the Hon. Member to move his motion but he was recognized on a point of order. Therefore, I cannot accept a motion to adjourn on a point of order.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, my fellow Parliamentary House Leaders have had a chance to express their immediate reaction to your statement on the admissibility of the amendments. The reaction on this side of the House differs from that of my hon. colleagues. First of all, it should be understood that the Standing Orders of the House apply at all times and must always be applied in the same way. The same principles shall apply, whatever the subject of the Bill before the House.

I noticed that my colleague, the Parliamentary House Leader for the Progressive Conservative Party, was upset because the subject is national security and involves imposing certain restrictions on freedoms which would otherwise not be restricted. This is irrelevant. His objection has no legal grounds. We have Standing Orders. We have a body of parliamentary jurisprudence. We have parliamentary principles that must be applied, whatever the subject of the legislation before the House.

• (1120)

In the circumstances, our immediate reaction is very positive, because we find that the Chair has strictly applied the rule of relevance and the basic principles of parliamentary procedure. The point was to find out whether the content of the amendments in question corresponds to the principles you have mentioned, and I have no reason to doubt the results of the thorough study that was made by the Chair, with the help of House officials.

I heard the Parliamentary House Leader for the New Democratic Party say he found it difficult to digest, because in its preliminary ruling, the Chair set aside a number of items. It is not a matter of volume. It is not a matter of numbers. If the Opposition had proposed 5,000 amendments, and 4,900 were ruled out of order for one of the reasons or on the basis of one of the principles the Chair mentioned just now, the fact that 4,900 amendments were ruled out of order would not have been any more difficult to digest.

Basically, what the Chair is doing is to apply the principles of parliamentary procedure. Because the Opposition, and more specifically the New Democratic Party, decided to propose a series of amendments that are so obviously meant to be dilatory, and I am thinking more specifically of the amendments the Chair regrouped under item 1, which I think was an excellent idea and a very good thing for Parliament, since they were proposing to eliminate every clause from the Bill, one by one, thus requiring 93 amendments and 93 votes—This is childish! This is ridiculous. It contradicts the very philosophy of Parliament. It is certainly evidence of systematic obstruction by the New Democratic Party at the report stage of Bill C-9. I think the public is intelligent. I think Hon. Members generally are as well, and from the notices that have been given for amendments to Bill C-9, it is clear that the New Democratic Party prefers obstruction to making tangible improvements to the Bill. We have just witnessed that this is so. The Parliamentary House Leader of the New Democratic Party is trying to take advantage of the first opportunity that comes along, even if it is unlawful, irregular and against Standing Orders, to prevent Parliament from sitting. A stroke of genius! The New Democratic Party, a third party, wants to prevent Parliament from sitting!

It seems to me that the very basis for intelligent behaviour in an institution like ours is to allow debate. It is not to gag Parliament by letting the bells ring, by preventing us from trying to improve a Bill that has been given very thorough consideration for a very long time by Hon. Members and by the Senate. I shall not elaborate, since the House is aware of the considerable time and effort spent by Hon. Members on both sides of the House, especially by Members on the Government side and Members of the Official Opposition, in trying to improve this Bill. However, when we see the purely obstructionist approach being taken by the New Democratic Party at this time, when we read the amendments it is proposing, and in view of what the Parliamentary House Leader of that Party has said he intends to do, which is to prevent the House from sitting by moving that the House adjourn, personnally, I must say it is ridiculous and an insult to the intelligence of this House, and furthermore, at this particular time in Parliament, it is an insult to the Canadian people. I hope they will reconsider.

My hon. friend is smiling! I think if he had heard the nonsense his hon. friend the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) said on the Standing Committee, he would be laughing at his hon. friend and not at the parliamentary system. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Chair be firm in its application of parliamentary principles, and that it should not let itself be unduly influenced by the dilatory tactics of a third party that is looking for a bone to pick just before the election, and I also suggest that the Chair apply its ruling as it deems appropriate here in the House, in accordance with parliamentary procedure.

Mr. Speaker, you are aware that the Standing Orders of the House give the Chair full discretion at this stage. The Chair is not obliged to call on the Hon. Member—It is not the first time I have raised this point. I have also raised the matter before your predecessor. The Standing Orders that deal with the report stage give the Chair full discretion to determine the order of amendments, how they are regrouped, and which amendments are admissible or not. It is in a spirit of generosity. I presume, that the Chair is allowing the Hon. Members concerned to express their views during a limited but reasonable period of time, whereupon I assume the Chair will make a final ruling.

I only wish—Since the issue is so straightforward, it is not a matter of volume and it should surprise no one, whether the Chair rules fifty or 100 amendments out of order, when we know how easy it is to overload a Notice Paper and to give notice of vast numbers of amendments that are not admissible. I hope the Chair will hand down a final ruling later today on all items and for all amendments, so that we can proceed as soon as possible with the debate on this Bill.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that as far as the Government is concerned, we want the House to have a reasonable period of time for consideration of the report stage and third reading of this Bill, provided the Opposition, and particularly the New Democratic Party, does not abuse its rights during the debate. Up to now we have had the impression that, because of the number and nature of the proposed amendments which the Chair is about to re-group for the purpose of debate, purely dilatory tactics were involved. Considering the intention of the Parliamentary House Leader of the New Democratic Party to propose the adjournment of the House to prevent the House from sitting, we must assume that it is indeed their intention to prevent Parliament from sitting, to prevent intelligent consideration of this Bill and to indulge in all kinds of obstructionist tactics to prevent consideration of a Bill they do not support, but which is supported by the majority in this House.

[English]

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that at an appropriate time today there will be some detailed discussion of your ruling—or your preliminary ruling, as I understand it. I note you are nodding, Mr. Speaker. However, I must say, Sir, first of all, that during committee there was never an allegation made by the other Opposition Party, by the Government or by those of the media who were observing, that the Progressive Conservative Party was using any kind of delaying tactic in the committee.

Mr. Pinard: I did not say that.

Mr. Fraser: The House Leader for the Government calls across that he did not say that, but I believe it is important that that be placed on the record. I take the Hon. House Leader as indicating he is not saying that, and he is not saying that on behalf of the Government.

Mr. Pinard: That is right.

Mr. Fraser: During committee, Mr. Speaker, a number of amendments were brought forward by this Party. All of them were very much related to the submissions which were made to the committee by the number of witnesses who appeared in front of the committee. At the time those amendments were made there was no ruling that they were out of order or that they should not be considered.

I am not going to pre-argue the case. However, I do want to draw the attention of the House, for instance, to Motion No. 3, which is a motion in my name. I will just deal very briefly with the amendment in Motion No. 3 to paragraph (d) of the main Bill. Paragraph (d) of the main Bill—so that the public listening to this can understand it—concerns the power of the security service to use intrusive surveillance, that is, wire tapping, search, and so on, to survey Canadians who have not committed any crime at all. This particular clause probably engaged as much time with respect to the remarks of witnesses who came in front of us as any other clause. I know the House Leader for the Government did not have the opportunity of studying completely the discussions which took place at committee. If amendments of that importance cannot be put at this stage, then one has to wonder what we were doing in committee.

• (1130)

I could go on, and I do not want to stretch your patience—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member, but what the Chair has suggested is that the motions deleting one clause after another and the schedule could all be grouped as the first item for debate. This would give the Hon. Member for Vancouver South an opportunity to examine what I have said and make detailed argument later. I hope that would suit his convenience and that of other Hon. Members.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I want to correct a misunderstanding. I accept, of course, that it could not have been moved at that precise moment, but my attempt to seek a short adjournment had nothing at all to do with delaying the Bill. In fact, it was an effort to expedite proper consideration of the Bill.

I do not want to go into the groupings themselves, but given that you have suggested there are some 30 to 35 different amendments which could be grouped together and disposed of at the same time, and because in each instance the hope of this Party would be to have each of them deleted, it is entirely possible that the force of the argument in each individual case would be sufficient to justify consideration of the deletion of a particular clause without affecting the remaining clauses. The reason I raise this is because it requires some time to look at whether or not there is an interrelationship between one clause and the other. We just do not have that kind of time right now; the debate has to start at some point. Presumably it would start on the amendment to Clause 1, or the proposal to delete Clause 1.

Mr. Pinard: He just made a suggestion.

Mr. Deans: Presumably it would start on one of the clauses put forward for consideration during report stage. You can appreciate that for us to be able fully to understand, cross-reference and interrelate each of the clauses and determine the full force and effect of your preliminary ruling right now would be virtually impossible. I know the Table officers were not able to do that within ten minutes of having received the various clauses we proposed should be amended. I am asking only that the House not sit until two o'clock in order that we can sit down and consider carefully the effect of the proposals. Otherwise you will be seeking submissions later in the day, I hope, perhaps in the morning, on your preliminary ruling and we still will not have time to consider the preliminary ruling.

Given the importance of this legislation and that it will have such profound effect on the lives of Canadians now and in the future, given that it is far reaching in its implications, it is surely not too much to ask that an hour be allocated to all Members concerned for the purpose of reviewing the preliminary ruling in order to determine where the debate might start today, so that we can proceed. As it now stands, if one was to accept the Government House Leader's proposal, you are left with very little alternative but to stall the Bill in order to gain time to make sure the arguments being put forward are real, sensible and intelligent. What we are asking for, and we ask the Government House Leader to consider it carefully, is, would it not make more sense in the over-all scheme of things for us to have an hour and 25 minutes, as I read it now, to consider the Bill, the proposed amendments and the preliminary ruling, and then come back and make our brief submissions? Then we will perhaps have decided collectively where the debate on the Bill can reasonably begin this afternoon.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to put in your mind one thought which has not been covered this morning, your point number four dealing with Motion No. 11 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), which you say seeks to change the purpose and principle of the Bill by retaining it within the RCMP. You have to remember that if that had all been debated fully and voted on at second reading, your ruling might be more in order. The fact of the matter is that it was closed off at second reading. Those principles were not discussed and voted on by the House as amendments at that stage. Therefore, it would seem proper to do it at this stage because Parliament is the place where these things are to be debated.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is, of course, guided by strictly procedural considerations at this point. The Chair is faced with the fact that one Hon. Member of this House has moved in his own name at report stage the deletion of every single clause and the schedule. It appeared reasonable for the Chair to commence with grouping these motions, bearing in mind that the clauses have been considered clause by clause in committee and we are now at report stage. That might be the starting point of debate. But the Chair is, of course, the servant of the House. The Chair would be disposed to call a motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) deleting Clauses 1 to 96 inclusive and the schedule as the basis for debate. It could commence on that basis. This appeared the most reasonable way of proceeding in the view of the Chair. What is the wish of Hon. Members? Any further comments?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, your preliminary ruling was handed to myself and my colleagues as I entered the Chamber. There is no question that we will want to make full and complete representations with respect to this preliminary statement you have made. Rather than prejudge the matter and see what happens, I would prefer to move along in what would be the normal way if there had been no preliminary statement made by Your Honour. That is to say, it seems to me that we can discuss Clause 1, which, in the tradition of both the House and committee concepts, means a rather wide-ranging and full debate with respect to the principles of the total Bill. If that met with approval, I think we can make some progress in the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Can the Chair make an observation in response? The motion as proposed by the Chair would certainly permit that. Grouping all the clauses of the Bill would permit the most broad general debate on any clause or any aspects.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Of course, Mr. Speaker, but you will know that we are severely limited in our interventions to ten minutes per Member on each amendment proposed at report stage. If you were to make a final determination of grouping all those motions for debate, we would find ourselves in the position of having a ten-minute speech. I will let the NDP defend their own tactics but it seems to me that in order to have this matter dealt with on a fair and equitable basis we should not prejudge anything. If we have to deal with ten-minute speeches, we should deal with Clause 1 and Clause 2, and so on, and we will have our chance to make representations to the Chair later in the day. At that time you will have to make the decision and we will have to see what we do about that.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Burnaby in just a moment. I just want to say that the Chair is proposing this to start debate. If there is good and sufficient argument that the motions should not be grouped, that individual clauses should be considered, the Chair would be prepared to reconsider. For purposes of procedure the Chair is proposing at this point that all the motions which relate to deletion should be grouped. This would permit a very general opening debate. The Chair would be prepared to accept argument with regard to the specific sections or combinations.

• (1140)

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the remarks of the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) and those of the House Leader for the Official Opposition. The difficulty with proceeding, as has been suggested by the President of the Privy Council and his colleague, the House Leader for the Official Opposition, is that, as the House Leader for the Opposition has noted, if the Speaker's preliminary ruling with respect to Sub-paragraph (1) is to stand, we are then precluded from any further comment on the over-all thrust of the legislation.

The purpose for moving a series of motions to delete various clauses was certainly not that there should necessarily be debate on each individual motion to delete. I would draw to the attention of the Chair that a number of these clauses deal with specific, broad elements of the legislation. The amendments to delete encompass a variety of different subject matters. They deal with the structure of the review process, the powers which are accorded to the new agency, and a series of other broad areas. Each individual motion to delete should not be voted upon or discussed separately, but rather they should be grouped under the broad subject matter to which they refer.

When we come back at two o'clock to make comments with respect to the Chair's preliminary ruling, I will be pleased to make some suggestions with respect to that. That was the purpose of the motions. We were somewhat limited in terms of the time within which we had to submit amendments, as is always the case. Rather than erring on the side of not having submitted sufficient amendments to cover the broad subject matters, I think it makes more sense to consider grouping the motions to delete which are referred to sub-paragraph (1) under the broad subject matters to which they refer. There may be six or seven broad subject matters.

The difficulty with proceeding now on the basis of the Speaker's preliminary ruling on Motion No. 1 is that we still do not know whether that will indeed be the case. I would also note some very serious concerns which have already been expressed with respect to the restrictive nature of the Speaker's preliminary ruling. With respect to the substance of the Speaker's ruling, the suggestion that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 5 would dispose of Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 flies in the face of the substance of Motions Nos. 6 through 9. Motion No. 5 is a motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) which would restrict, to a certain extent, the definition of "threats to security" in the Bill. The subsequent motions, which were moved by a different Member, would deal with an entirely separate question. Even if Motion No. 5 was to be adopted, that would not in any way dispose of Motions Nos. 6 through 9. Similarly in the case of Motions Nos. 13 and 14 where we have unrelated subject matters—

Mr. Speaker: The Chair would be prepared to hear detailed argument later and invites Hon. Members to consider the specific groupings before commenting in detail on them. At this stage the Chair is suggesting that for the purpose of opening debate there be a general grouping of all the clauses which are moved for deletion. The Hon. Member for Burnaby appears to be suggesting that some of these clauses are more important than others. I invite him to make his comment. I invite him to spell it out. I invite him to indicate to us exactly which, in his opinion, have greater priority than others.

Certainly on the face of it, when one individual Member of the House, having participated in committee and having voted clause by clause in committee, presents amendments at report stage dealing with the deletion of every single clause and the schedule, the Chair has to bear in mind the time of the House and certain priorities. The Chair is suggesting that we could begin the debate by grouping all of these. If the Hon. Member has suggestions for further refinements or further groupings and reasons for that, the Chair is quite prepared to hear him.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, our dilemma is simply this. You indicated clearly at the outset of the proceedings today that this was a preliminary statement. I am not standing here to defend the amendments put in by the NDP. The difficulty we face is that this is a matter which is going to require some study and preparation for us to be able to present a reasoned argument to you. With respect to the amendments put in by my colleague from Vancouver South, we will be wanting to make some specific presentations to you.

With all respect to you, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to proceed with this debate this morning, I would think that we should not rush into any grouping at this point in time. We are going to discuss this whole question and allow the NDP an opportunity to make representations as to the way they view their amendments. Let us not presume anything at this point in time. I think that is counter-productive. We should go ahead as we would normally and debate Motion No. 1 until whatever time is satisfactory to you. We can each make our representations. In the meantime some of us will give attention to your preliminary ruling. After you have had the benefit of our representations you may decide to make a final ruling. That would be the appropriate time to consider the question of groupings.

I think it is counter-productive to decide now to debate Motion Nos. 1 through 96 as if they were one motion. I suggest to you that we should proceed in the normal fashion which will allow us a little time to prepare our arguments. After hearing us you will have an opportunity to make your final decision with respect to any grouping. It seems to me we would make more progress if we followed my suggestion of proceeding in the normal fashion this morning.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the sole purpose of my intervention at this stage is to reiterate that the Speaker's ruling does have very serious consequences in terms of how we approach this legislation and the substance of the legislation. Rather than proceeding as my colleague, the House Leader for the Opposition, has suggested, it would be appropriate to take the time to study the Speaker's preliminary ruling. As I have indicated, I have some very serious concerns with respect to the suggestion that any references to a parliamentary review would be out of order. That flies directly in the face of what has been discussed, both in the House at second reading in principle when it was ruled in order, and in committee. We will certainly have something to say about that.

I suggest that we be given an opportunity to consider the ramifications of this ruling. We received it as we entered the House. At whatever time the Speaker considers appropriate we may make more intelligent representations with respect to the question of groupings rather than, as I suggested, dealing with all of the motions to delete and grouping them under the broad subject matter to which the motions to delete refer.

Mr. Speaker: It would be helpful to the Chair if there could be argument against the first proposal. The proposal is that all the motions for simple deletion be grouped for debate at this point. In the course of that debate the Chair would be quite prepared to hear argument as to why the groupings should be different. So far the argument has not been persuasive to the Chair. I think it is almost unprecedented for one Member of the House to move at report stage the deletion of every single clause and schedule of the Bill.

Mr. Pinard: Stupidity.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has not been able to find any precedent on the matter. The Chair is very much concerned to proceed on the basis of a clause by clause debate at report stage. Section 79(10) of the Standing Orders reads as follows:

> The Speaker shall have power to select or combine amendments or clauses to be proposed at the report stage and may, if he or she thinks fit, call upon any Member who has given notice of an amendment to give such explanation of the subject of the amendment—

● (1150)

At this stage, for the purpose of commencing the debate on a preliminary basis, the Chair proposes to call all of the clauses as proposed for deletion by the Hon. Member for Burnaby and the Schedule, Clauses 1-96 inclusive, and to hear argument.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, briefly, without in any prejudicing what may well follow, given that in fact the clauses starting with Clause No. 1 running with some intervals to Clause 96 deal with somewhat different subject matters, and given that the argument for deletion would be different in each case—in other words, the argument for deletion may well be sustained by a vote of the House in some instances and may well not be supported by the House in other instances—and given, as I have indicated earlier, that we need some time to resolve it, may I ask whether you might consider a further split? Call Clause 1 separately, leaving the others grouped as they are now so we can look at them and consider them. All that we have then done is added another round of debate. We are not, therefore, asking that you open up the whole matter for debate on every single clause, but that you call Clause 1. We will proceed with the debate on Clause 1 presumably and then look at the appropriateness of the relationship between the other clauses.

If that were to be done, then we will not have jeopardized the possibility of reasoned argument and the validity of the move to delete the other clauses up to and including Clause 96. In that way we would not have to debate in a ten-minute period why each and every clause is an inappropriate inclusion in this Bill. If that were done, I do not think that you would in any way have undermined your preliminary ruling. I do not think that, with the exception of one additional round in the sense of debate, you would have added significantly to the length of time that will be taken in consideration of the Bill. And you would have bought some time for those of us who want to be able to review the other clauses to see whether or not the preliminary ruling is a ruling that can be supportable either in whole or in part.

I think that is not an unreasonable request to make, Mr. Speaker, and it might at least facilitate getting us off the discussion on the preliminary ruling. It might facilitate our getting off this discussion. We might get on to another one. It might not be a very satisfactory discussion but nevertheless we will no longer be discussing your preliminary ruling and we will come back to that discussion at another time.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the preliminary ruling on the motions to delete, I want to indicate once again the difficulty of debating at this stage the suggestion that the motions to delete all be dealt with as a package and in fact voted on as a package with the suggestion that a vote on one would dispose of all remaining motions. I point out to the Chair once again that the purpose of proposing—and I recognize the somewhat unprecedented nature of the proposal—the motions to delete the clauses in question was to ensure that there would be an opportunity for full and adequate debate with respect to the different areas of principle in the Bill itself and with respect to the different major areas of a structural nature in the Bill itself.

I recognize the suggestion is a preliminary one, and that each Member has in effect ten minutes to discuss all the major structural elements. I would note, however, that a deletion of one element of the legislation does not necessarily mean that the whole of the legislation falls, by any stretch of the imagination. There is, for example, the initial section which includes motions to delete with respect to the structure and establishment of the service itself. There is another section which is entirely separate with respect to certain duties and functions of the service after having established the nature of the powers and the responsibilities of the Director. There was yet another provision with respect to the role of the judiciary, Mr. Speaker.

I had thought the officers of the Speaker might have grouped the motions to delete. I certainly did not expect that they would be dealt with seriatim but that they would be grouped in a manner which would facilitate debate on the broad subject matter, to which the several headings of subject matter refer. I am quite prepared to assist the Chair by coming back with a suggestion with respect to grouping the motions to delete under the major heads of the Bill. As I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, to suggest that all 96 clauses can effectively be dealt with as a package, I say with respect, is not doing justice to the nature of this Bill.

I will certainly undertake, as I have indicated, to attempt to prepare a grouping of the motions to delete under the broad subject matter to which they refer. Pending that, we will proceed in the normal course of events with Motion No. 1, as is generally the case, the broad principle of the legislation at report stage. Certainly at three o'clock, 3:30 p.m., or four o'clock, whenever Your Honour deems it appropriate, I will be pleased to make representations with respect to grouping the motions to delete as well as with respect to some very serious reservations on the proposals concerning other elements in the preliminary ruling.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, very briefly I want to raise one other point I should have raised earlier. You have made reference on a number of occasions to the fact that all of the motions to delete stand in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby. The reason for that is, of course, because he is this Party's critic for this particular Ministry. It was at our request that all the amendments stand in his name.

I hope by virtue of placing the amendments on the Notice Paper in the name of one Member that we are not jeopardized from having the appropriateness or correctness of the motion considered independently. We could have filed them under 31 names if that would have made it any easier for the over-all consideration of the Chair; but we felt it was appropriate for the critic to do that, just as the Minister would probably feel it appropriate that he should move the amendments he would like to see made.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I just want to say that I see there is not just one member of the New Democratic Party whose intelligence has been put on hold—they are all in it together, if they approve this kind of obstruction. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is making a big thing of the fact that different principles are involved in requesting the withdrawal of a clause or group of clauses. He seems to forget that the report stage is not the only stage at which the Bill is debated. This legislation was debated in the House of Commons for weeks on second reading, which is the most important stage of the Bill, when the principles are discussed. The Bill was examined, clause by clause, for weeks in Committee. There will be the report stage, and then third reading as well. The Hon. Member is giving the impression that the report stage will be his only chance to take the Bill apart and to speak to the Bill. This is absolutely ridiculous. This is not what parliamentary procedure is all about, and it is not what is meant by the report stage of a Bill. It is a very recent development, to have Hon. Members proposing a host of amendments at the report stage in the House.

Traditionally, the debate on the report stage of a Bill was very brief. Today, what we are seeing is simply that the House is being given notice of systematic obstruction. It is just that.

In any case, I feel the suggestion that we start immediately with Clause 1 is very practical, and I have no objection to the House proceeding with consideration of the Bill, if the Chair agrees.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Chair wishes to express its concern with what we are facing at this stage. Second reading is debate in principle. It is not for the Chair to pass judgment on how effective, thorough or complete such a debate was. Committee stage is where clause by clause analysis takes place. It appears that the intention of the mover of these amendments is to bring about clause by clause discussion by the full House at this stage. He has said so. He wants the principle of every clause discussed; that is why he moved deletion. That apparently is what he said, from the Chair's understanding of his remarks.

It appears as far as the Chair is concerned that this is a violation of the basic principle of legislative process. Why do we have referral to committee, if clause by clause discussion is not done in committee? Why bother with referral to committee, if the intent is to force a full clause by clause discussion in the House at report stage? Nevertheless, in the interests of proceeding, the Chair is prepared to call Motion No. 1. However, the Chair will serve notice that it will do its duty in grouping. The Chair will not stand by and have a full clause by clause review at report stage.

● (1200)

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

That Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 1.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Robinson (Burnaby), seconded by Mr. Heap, moves that Bill C-9 be amended by deleting Clause 1. I am calling this for the convenience of Hon. Members. I serve notice on the House that there will be a grouping of these deletion proposals at a later stage; but for purposes of debate now, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I should make it very clear that I have no objection whatsoever to a grouping of the deletion motions as is appropriate. At no time in the course of my intervention this morning did I suggest that we repeat clause by clause study at report stage. I suggested that there were a number of broad subject matters which are appropriately grouped together. That does not mean, by any stretch of the imagination, that each clause would be dealt with as a separate unit.

At this stage we are embarking upon our study at report stage of what is one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before the House in many decades. The implications of this Bill with respect to the fundamental civil liberties and privacy of Canadians are grave indeed.

Having had an opportunity to review the amendments which have been dealt with at committee stage I suggest the Government has indicated through its response at committee stage to a series of amendments proposed on matters of fundamental principle to strengthen this legislation that it would make legal what heretofore has been illegal. It could be in terms of narrowing the mandate, a mandate which is certainly excessively broad and would permit targetting the use of intrusive techniques against literally hundreds of thousands of Canadians who have engaged in no violation of the law whatsoever. It could be in respect of amendments to narrow the sweeping range of intrusive powers which can be used under the terms of the Bill, new and unprecedented powers which in essence say to the new security service that, despite the findings of the McDonald Commission on a whole series of laws, be they federal or provincial, breaking and entry, fraud, arson, kidnapping, breach of the Income Tax Act or the Post Office Act, and having clearly documented the abuses which unfortunately occurred in the past and despite the institutionalized contempt for the law which the McDonald Commission found, the Government's response is that it would simply make legal what has heretofore been illegal.

In the area of the powers, amendments which were proposed by Members of this Party significantly narrowing the scope of intrusive powers under the Bill were rejected one after another by Government Members. The new security service would still have the power, as this legislation is presently drafted, to use all the most intrusive techniques imaginable, whether it be breaking and entry into a private home, removing any document or indeed anything from that home, accessing confidential income tax records, breaking into a doctor's office to look at confidential medical or psychiatric records or accessing the mail. First-class mail for the first time would be legally subject to being opened. The only exemption provided in the Bill are census records. I have noted more than once the irony of the fact that even a church confessional will be fair game under the terms of the legislation. The only thing which will be sacred in the country if the Bill is passed will be the offices of the Chief Statistician of Canada.

We gave the Government an opportunity to narrow the terms of the legislation with respect to the powers accorded to the new service, powers which go far beyond those recommended by the McDonald Commission. Indeed, they go far beyond those recommended and in place today for the FBI, which in the case of so-called domestic subversives must utilize a criminal standard.

In the other major area of the type of scrutiny or the nature of the oversight of operations of the new service, once again the Government has rejected out of hand suggestions for strengthening this review process. Indeed, one major area of improvement in the Bill would have permitted access to all documents in the possession of the security service by the Security Intelligence Review Committee. That amendment was passed on the casting vote of the chairperson of the committee. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) says that he does not accept that amendment. He intends to bring forward an amendment in the House to restore that clause, a clause which would effectively gut the minimal review process in the Bill of any meaning or substance whatsoever.

There are three broad heads to this legislation. In each area we have attempted to strengthen the Bill. We have proposed amendments in committee that would narrow the effective scope of the mandate that would ensure that law-abiding Canadians engaged, for example, in the support of liberation movements in Central America, or a church group which chooses to send money to the African National Congress in South Africa, would not potentially be the subject of the intrusive techniques under the Bill.

We tried in committee to narrow the powers which would be available to the service. Certainly, as we proceed with report stage and the amendments which I have tabled on behalf of my Party, we will be indicating the extent to which we believe the powers proposed in this legislation constitute any serious threat to the fundamental civil liberties of all Canadians.

We have proposed that there must be a role for Members of Parliament to play in the oversight process. It must be an effective role to ensure that the new civilian security service, which is shrouded in such secrecy, does not in fact become a political instrument in the hands of the government of the day.

Those are the fundamental areas of concern with respect to the legislation. I should indicate that in raising these questions we are reflecting the deeply-held apprehensions, indeed the fears, of a broad cross section of Canadian society. It could be the Canadian Council of Churches representing 12 major church groups across the country. It could be the Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Canadian Labour Congress, environmental groups or peace groups. It could be civil liberties groups, such as the Canadian Civil Liberties Associations which has made very strong representations on this legislation. Its general counsel as late as this morning indicated that the Bill in its present form, as adopted by the committee, poses a very profound threat to the civil liberties of all Canadians. It could be la ligue des droits et libertés in the Province of Quebec, a broadly-based group of men and women concerned about the threat which this legislation poses. I see Quebec back-benchers laughing at that suggestion, indicating that the concerns of la ligue des droits with respect to this legislation should not be taken seriously. Certainly I know that it has members throughout that province. Indeed, as recently as last Friday it held a press conference in the City of Montreal to express its anger at the manner in which the Government is attempting to proceed with this legislation.

It flies in the face of the sensibilities of Canadians who insist that we do not want a new secret agency that would have unprecedented powers, powers unprecedented in any western industrialized country. It would spy on the lives of innocent Canadians. As I indicated earlier, it would spy on Canadians by looking at their income tax records, by examining their medical records and by breaking into their homes, businesses and offices.

During the course of report stage and certainly during third reading, we intend to set out very clearly for the record our profound reservations with respect to this Bill. We have seen abuses historically of civil liberties. In 1970 we saw the proclamation of the War Measures Act in this country by the same Government which now comes before us and asks us to trust it with the powers it is seeking in this Bill once it passes. Its record does not warrant the trust it is seeking from Canadians. In the course of continued debate over the next few weeks and months, we will certainly be making clear our reasons for fundamentally rejecting the premises of this Bill.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have to say first that I am disturbed at the implications of the preliminary ruling of the Chair. I am concerned that amendments that this Party put forward at committee will not be allowed to come before the House. I want it very clear on the record exactly what some of these proposed amendments are that we would bring in and which were brought in at committee stage.

The first amendment deals with whether it is appropriate under the circumstances to remove the security service from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. If we have the chance, that will be argued in some detail. At committee stage, one thing that was argued as a consequence of questions which were asked of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) was whether a case had been made by the Government for the removal of the security service from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It was pointed out in committee that both the Mackenzie Commission and the McDonald Commission looked backwards to events of many years ago, events in the late sixties and early seventies. If Hon. Members care to look at the record of the committee hearings, they will see that I put this question to the Solicitor General at that time, and I quote:

> The fact is, Mr. Minister, that for many months now—for many years in fact—since the revelations in the House of Commons in 1977 and the action which was taken consequently, the Security Service has been working as part of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Commissioner has been reporting to the Solicitor General effectively, competently and in a manner in which I am sure you would agree meets with your approval. You testify that this has been done in a manner which meets the appropriate sensibilities of the Canadian public. Is that not so?

That is the question I asked of the Solicitor General. The negative of all that was the reason that it was proposed that the security service be removed from the aegis of the RCMP. I asked the Solicitor General whether the security service under the RCMP for many years has been reporting effectively, competently and "in a manner in which I am sure you would agree meets with your approval". I said "You testified that this has been done in a manner which meets the appropriate sensibilities of the Canadian public. Is that not so?" That was my question. The Solicitor General replied:

> Yes, that is so.

The indication of the preliminary ruling of Mr. Speaker means that we could not vote on that issue, the argument being that it is somehow foreign to the main principle of the Bill. It is very curious that that is not what the Solicitor General spoke about as being the main purpose of the Bill at second reading. If I get a chance later, I will refer to that.

The motion to amend Clause 4 put forward by myself on behalf of my Party deals directly with whether or not the Director of the security service should be appointed at pleasure. That means that he is appointed by the Government.

Surely the Government should have the authority and the right to remove the Director for whatever cause the Government thinks is essential in the security interests of Canada.

Our amendment in committee to Clause 6, one of the amendments my friend from Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has in front of the House at the moment, will be supported by us because our own is not there. That was an oversight. It is exactly the same. It involves the necessity for the Minister, not in a permissive way but in a direct and mandatory way, to issue directives directly to the Director. That would be an improvement to the Bill.

The amendment that we have moved to Clause 12 would make it necessary that when the duties and functions of the service are being considered, they would be those strictly necessary for the security of Canada. With regard to Clause 19, on the question of the release of private information we moved an amendment that only private disclosure should be made on the discretion of the Minister, not just the Director.

On Clause 20, we have moved that the federal Attorney General should report to the provincial Attorneys General with respect to relevant illegal activity as a consequence of knowledge gained by the security service.

On Clause 21, we moved in committee and will want to move again that warrants not be issued unless on reasonable and probable grounds. It is a better definition for the onus required on the part of the security service to obtain a warrant than merely on reasonable grounds.

We have also moved amendments to limit the warrants with respect to Canadians who have not yet committed any crime. That refers to sub-paragraph (d) of the definition section. We have further moved amendments that warrants should only last for 60 days before renewal, which is the amount of time specified in the Criminal Code, not a year as set out in this Bill. We have moved amendments to tighten requirements in the affidavit.

With regard to Clause 22, we have moved an amendment with respect to the renewal of warrants and eliminating renewal of warrants in cases coming under Sub-clause (d), which is the domestic clause covering legal activities of Canadians.

On Clause 24, we have moved an amendment to clarify the role of innocent third persons who are ordered to do things by somebody who has a warrant, thereby clarifying the liability that innocent third persons might otherwise incur.

On Clause 31, we have moved that the Inspector General have access to Cabinet documents relevant to directions to the security service. That is absolutely essential if the Inspector General is to have any overview.

On Clause 38, we have moved that all security agencies in Canada should come under the review committee established by this legislation.

● (1220)

On Clause 39, we again made the amendment that would allow the review committee to see Cabinet documents, because it is quite incredible that a review committee would not have access to documents that may actually change policy or give specific orders to the security service.

Regarding Clause 55, we moved to establish a parliamentary review committee which, if the preliminary ruling is to hold, is an amendment with which somehow the House of Commons cannot deal.

With regard to Clause 61 of Part IV, we moved an amendment which would give the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, acting under the direction of the federal Attorney General, the duty to consult with municipal and provincial police forces. That seems to us to be only common sense.

With regard to Motion No. 2 which the preliminary ruling would rule out, we made a number of amendments which deal with that area of the Bill that has created the most concern for the witnesses who came before us. Those amendments are designed to clarify the language of Clause 2 in order to make it quite certain that those activities which are to be investigated are activities which are against the security interests of Canada and not simply the interests of Canada. We dealt specifically with Sub-paragraph (d) of Clause 2 in order to make that clause much more acceptable to those Canadians who are concerned about the intrusion of surveillance on Canadians who have not committed any crime and who are operating only within this country.

I know that my time is limited at this stage of the debate. However, I would like to put this on the record because the amendments which we are putting forward are important amendments, particularly when taking into account the words of Mr. Alan Borovoy, the general counsel to the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. He spoke about this legislation as it was reported out of committee because it was not amended in committee. The Government did not want any amendments. As reported in yesterday's Globe and Mail, Mr. Borovoy said that the legislation creating a new civilian spy force is "one of the greatest threats to civil liberties Canada has seen in many years". As a consequence, we think these amendments are important. They are not too excessive and I would hope that they would be heard.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some sadness at report stage of this Bill because we are again faced with a situation in which NDP members are helping the Government achieve one of its goals while loudly protesting what the Government is doing. NDP members are actually helping the Government because they are going to force the Government to put time allocation on report stage and third reading stage and we will not have the opportunity to debate the great issues raised by this Bill. Once again the Liberal Party West is helping the Liberal Party East to bear down on the Canadian people and oppress them under their thumb, which is exactly what they want. They want an all-powerful central state that will press down upon the people and turn them into serfs.

Without a shadow of a doubt, Bill C-9 is the second most important Bill we shall debate in this Thirty-second Parliament. I believe the Bill that was most important was, of course, the Constitution Act of 1982. That Act implemented fundamental changes in our country, the effects of which will be felt, generations and generations. Bill C-9 does exactly the same thing. It is creating a change to our culture.

I speak as a westerner, and westerners have a very deep attachment to the RCMP. That is true not only of westerners. In my travels through Ontario and the Atlantic provinces, I found that the people there also have a very deep attachment to the RCMP. The force has a long tradition of stability, of discipline and of fraternity and loyalty to the country. The big danger that many people fear is that a new civilian agency may not be able to achieve those qualities. That is a very honest and legitimate point about which people are concerned and that is what we should be debating. However, the tactics of members of the NDP end up blocking that proper debate and consideration of the Bill by the citizens.

Let us not forget that at second reading of this Bill it should have been appropriate for Opposition Parties to put in amendments so that some of these grand issues could have been discussed. That was not done because the Government moved closure. We have not had the opportunity to let the citizens witness a full discussion of this matter. The same was true in committee as well. We were faced with closure and attempts to block us off.

At the committee stage of this Bill in which several Members participated, we heard from some 24 or 25 witnesses. Over 50 briefs were presented to us and were read and considered. We sat day after day. We had long debates on these clauses. It became clear to us that there is no broad consensus across this country as to whether this Bill is totally good or whether it is totally bad. The witnesses raised some very honest and legitimate points to which they recommended changes. We put those changes forward and the Government rejected them.

Surely committee stage exists so that a small group of Members of Parliament may hear witnesses give hard evidence and come up with changes that reflect that evidence. The amendments put forward by the Progressive Conservative Party reflect the hard evidence given by well meaning, educated, intelligent Canadians who gave us the benefit of their views. On one occasion, even Government Members accepted one such amendment after having heard the evidence.

Government Members accepted the amendment which proposed that the review committee would have access to Cabinet documents. The amendment was accepted at committee but we find that the Cabinet will not accept what the citizens want and is not prepared to accept the wisdom of a committee on which a majority of Government Members sat. Those Government Members indicated that the review committee should have access to Cabinet documents. Never having heard any of the witnesses, the Cabinet will not accept that and will force an amendment through at report stage that will delete that important change that was brought about as a result of hearing the evidence. Why do we have a committee stage, Mr. Speaker, if Cabinet members are not prepared to accept the evidence that is brought forward and the changes that are recommended?

My colleague has described our amendments to the House. Our first amendment would have the effect of leaving the security service with the RCMP. That is a very legitimate amendment. We looked at the Mackenzie report in some detail. The Mackenzie report of 1969 recommended the creation of a civilian security agency because it felt that the RCMP would not be able to adapt to the modern technologies required to become an intelligence service. In actual fact, since 1969 the RCMP has become a very sophisticated agency. In terms of intelligence, it has done a very excellent job for this country by intercepting KGB agents. As well, when looking at its commercial crime operation, its handling of drug cases and its handling of the Mafia, one sees that the RCMP is capable of being just as sophisticated as any civilian agency could ever be. Therefore, the report of the Mackenzie Commission falls. It carries no weight or evidence and would be rejected in a court of law because the subsequent history of the RCMP has discounted it.

The same is true of the McDonald Commission. All of its reasons for taking the security service away from the RCMP fall under the weight of the hard evidence that we heard from the people. The last reason the McDonald Commission gave for separating the agencies was that it would enhance the image of the RCMP if it was not involved in security. That is nonsense, Mr. Speaker. Members of the RCMP were not the ones who were to blame for the incidents surrounding the 1970 FLQ crisis. They received instructions from the highest office of the land to find out what was going on. It is true that they burned barns and that was wrong. It is true that they broke into offices and opened mail and that was wrong. However, they were doing those things on the instructions of the highest political office of this land. Where were the politicians when the situation blew up? They were running and hiding behind fences and barns themselves. They were not prepared to take the heat.

Mr. Kaplan: There were no such instructions.

Mr. Thacker: There sure were. Canadians do not believe for a moment that the RCMP was doing that on its own. Yet it was left out to hang on the clothes line and it took all the heat. We do not accept that. The amendments that we have put forward would provide a proper chain of accountability so that the RCMP and the security agency would follow the political masters and the political masters would take the heat if something was done wrong. It is a fraud and a cover-up of which I will not be a part.

● (1230)

Other amendments which were put forward by our Party dealt with domestic subversion. In particular, under the new definition in Clause 2(d), the description of domestic subversion is cast so widely that it can honestly and truly be abused. If one sits down with ordinary citizens at their kitchen table and asks them what they think a security service should be able to do, they have no trouble at all dealing with foreign KGB agents, foreign espionage, foreign countries and people who come into Canada to subvert our country. However, when we are talking about our own citizens who want to support groups in other countries through their church groups, and who want to be able to join marches, whether it is anti-Cruise or whatever, or speak out against the Crow legislation, they want to be able to do that without feeling intimidated. Clause 2(d) is written so widely that even church groups will be very nervous in what they do. The effect of that is to cast a chilling climate of fear and apprehension. It is a form of intimidation.

When I spoke with the Western Canada Concept group and tried to convince them that this country was worth saving, that in itself would have been sufficient to be classified as domestic subversion. Under the wording "intended ultimately" to hurt this country, the security service could target me and put on extra special surveillance. They could intercept my mail, telephone conversations and put tails on me. Those are intimidating acts for Members of Parliament. We all speak with groups every day. We were trying to narrow the definition of that clause in order to eliminate the chilling effect and the potential intimidation.

I will speak to each of these clauses individually as they arise. However, over-all I would say that I am concerned. I hope that as a result of the mindless obstructionism and opposition of the NDP, the Government does not over-react and move time allocation before there has been an opportunity to discuss half a dozen of the major issues upon which Canadians want to express their views. I also hope that Canadians will receive a response.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that this legislation is before us in such a destructive form. However, I am happy to speak against Bill C-9. I notice that the previous speaker was frightened that, by some magic he did not explain, a few NDP speakers would prevent the Conservative speakers, who have three times as many chances as we do to speak, from making their points. I notice that they have not fully used their opportunity this morning, so I will proceed instead of one of them.

The previous speaker also made a very sensible point.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know why the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) would say that the Conservative Party has not fully used its opportunity this morning. We have spoken just as much as, if not more than, any other Party in the House. The fact that we extend to the NDP the courtesy to speak after two Conservative speakers in a row does not warrant his comment. The innuendo is that we are not seriously taking part in this debate. I do not think it advances his cause or anyone else's cause and I resent it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): May I suggest that the remarks which have been made by both hon. gentlemen have little to do with procedure or manner of debate. Of course, what one Member says may not please another Member, but there is little the Chair can do in that case.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I will continue with debate as I was doing legitimately, not illegitimately as was the previous speaker under the pretence of a point of order. The point which I was making when I was cut off by that frivolous point of order was that the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) made a good and valid point when he spoke about the great uneasiness of the churches in Canada over the likely effects of this Bill in its present form.

One of the major church congregations in the riding of Spadina, which I represent, has in fact commented on this very forcefully through a publication entitled Bloor Street Leap. It is a publication of the Outreach Committee of the Bloor Street United Church. They are very, very gravely concerned about the affect of the Bill. They suggest a possible scenario which could perhaps take place any time after this week if the Government succeeds in driving this Bill through the House.

For example, they suggest that if the World Outreach Committee of the Bloor Street United Church was pursuing its normal concern for refugees from Latin America, it might find the following scenario. The committee votes to give a sum of money to a relief organization in El Salvador. Suddenly one day it is visited by people who identify themselves as agents of the CSIS, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. Its representatives are quizzed about why the organization is sending money to El Salvador. They are asked if it is sympathetic to rebels who are against the Government of El Salvador. They are also asked if it is perhaps opposed to the democratic process, which some members of the Canadian Government and some members of the Official Opposition think is represented by the present Government of El Salvador.

The term "political subversion" is thrown around. The Outreach Committee could be told by an agent "We've been watching you". As the previous speaker implied, that would be quite a shock to members of any church congregation in Canada. Under the circumstances, the Outreach Committee would assume that it was engaged in a lawful and humanitarian action. However, now that action may well be judged as being a threat against the security of Canada.

What the Committee is saying on the basis of its study of the Bill, which has been guided by a brief prepared and presented by the Canadian Council of Churches to the parliamentary committee and which was made available throughout the church, is that it considers that to be a realistic scenario which the Bill could possibly effect upon the religious activities of its congregation.

The Outreach Committee pointed out the vagueness of the definition of a security threat as follows:

> Foreign-influenced activities within or relating to Canada that are detrimental to the interests of Canada and are clandestine or deceptive or involve a threat to any person—

It is very, very concerned about the vague wording of that clause. The United Church of Canada has activities in many parts of the world, not only in countries which are controlled directly by NATO.

In the Bloor Street Leap the Committee suggests:

Suppose a visiting foreign government minister, whose country has for many years been the recipient of Canadian church mission work, requests a private meeting with Canadian church officials.

That might be interpreted as meaning that the church was thereby being influenced by a foreign power. Inasmuch as the meeting was private, it could be interpreted as being clandestine. The Committee is speaking of the kind of activity which happens from time to time in Canada and is carried on by churches for purposes about which they are quite open, but which might under this legislation be viewed as worthy of intrusion, phone bugging, mail opening, the planting of informers, or even an agent provocateur. The proposed surveillance of lawful activities has the Bloor Street United Church and other churches worried. The Bloor Street United Church quotes from the Canadian Council of Churches' brief, which reads:

—how much of the day-to-day life and work of the church could be held to be foreign-influenced?

The church was an international organization before Europeans ever heard of Canada or North America. For 2,000 years the church has been sending messengers and representatives to every country it could, keeping up contact and mutual influence with the people of those countries. This legislation could be taken as grounds for attacking the very foundation of the historical growth of the Christian church.

● (1240)

The Bloor Street group says further on, and I quote:

Even a partial increase in surveillance could do harm to the network of voluntary participation that Canadian churches have established throughout the world.

The group points out, on the basis of the brief of the Canadian Council of Churches and its own study, that there is no definition in the Bill, not event a listing or even any mention, of possible limits to surveillance. In other words, it is saying, what is to stop this new force from carrying on, and even extending, the kind of illegal activities which were the subject of the McDonald Commission?

The religion of which I am a representative, ordained as such, was founded by a person who was executed for treason. He was also accused of blasphemy, but that was not the charge for which he was executed. He was executed for being, in effect, a threat to the security of the Roman state, the most militarized power on earth. The United Church of Canada is seriously concerned, nationally and in its congregations, that the militarized thinking of this Government is now being turned into a threat to the basic liberty of Canadians. The alternative of the United Church, Mr. Speaker, is that Christians must respond against this militarized thinking with the assertion that freedom, not war, is the chief condition of humankind, and I quote:

To this end, a critique of national security doctrine, based on the Gospel, has been developed.

"Whereas national security doctrine urges the individual to renounce freedom by seeking security from an evil world under the protection of lords and tyrants . . . the Christian Gospel urges love of enemy, refusing to give absolute value to security and finding the only absolute value in love."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has elapsed. Debate.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on this particular Bill and on this clause. The points which have been raised have been interesting. The purpose of legislation in a democracy, as I understand it, is to endeavour to reflect the thinking of the greatest possible number of people, both in the legislation and in the administration. When that is done, there is more than one thing accomplished. When the legislation is in line with what the mass of the people of a country think, then it is going to have the support of that mass of people. When legislation is not supported by the majority of a population, then there are difficulties. Things then go under cover and things are done because people feel that the law is stupid or, as someone once said, that "the law is an ass". I do not believe we should put our people in that position. When we pass legislation which is contrary to the thinking of a vast number of our people then we are really looking for some difficulties.

I believe that is what we are doing with regard to this legislation, particularly if the ruling of the Speaker is confirmed—and I hope it will not be—and we are unable to discuss security under the RCMP at the report stage of this Bill. The Bill deals with security, and the fact that it does deal with security, I believe, should leave open all types of security for discussion, not just the particular one recommended in the Bill. Otherwise it is useless discussing principles on second reading of a Bill. If you cannot change any of the principles, you might just as well save your time and energy. Surely things can be changed in a Bill. If it cannot be changed after second reading, then we are introducing a new scenario in which I feel every parliament would have to be very careful of what it passes in second reading. Every second reading might have to be opposed. Even then there would be no chance of making changes.

Surely, we have to be sensible in our legislation. When legislation is passed in principle on second reading, it does not mean that the important parts of the Bill cannot be changed. That is the way I understand the making of legislation. In every legislature in the country, and probably in every Parliament in the British Empire, Bills are passed in second reading and then a very important principle of that Bill is changed by the majority of the people. If that cannot be done, we are not

As my seatmate, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), mentioned earlier, my people very strongly want the RCMP retained as the security force in this country. It will be a blow indeed to democracy if we are unable even to discuss that at report stage of this Bill, as was suggested this morning in the interim or temporary ruling of the Speaker of the House.

I would like to advance two or three reasons why I believe the legislation should deal with every type of security, including the RCMP. It should be the consensus of this House, by a majority, as to which one is the best for the country. If there are only two security services, which one is better for the country? That is the proper approach to take, not to say we cannot discuss an item as important as the RCMP being the security and intelligence service of this country. It would be a sad day indeed if that were the decision.

I would like to talk first about the point I have already mentioned, that under our democracy a government should reflect in its legislation the thinking of the people to the greatest possible degree. I am convinced—perhaps others are not—that the majority of the people of Canada want to retain the RCMP as their security force. That statement, I feel, is the strongest argument, if it cannot be challenged, and I do not believe it can be. The rank and file of our people in Canada are not illiterate. They come to conclusions because of what they see and what they hear and on what happens. They have watched this matter of security over the years and they are satisfied with what the RCMP have been doing.

Another reason, though, which is probably almost as valid, is that the RCMP is noted for protecting the rights of Canadians against undue interference with their civil liberties. If I find my civil liberties are being attacked, I can go to the RCMP and I know I will find a friendly officer who is going to make sure that, to the greatest possible degree, those civil liberties are going to be protected. That is their life. The RCMP came into being to fight unlawfulness, not lawfulness. They fight against those things that are unfair, whether it was for the Indians in the early days, new immigrants, or Canadian women and children. Those who are doing things that are wrong are the ones who are afraid of the RCMP because they stand for doing the right thing, things in accordance with the law. Therefore, when we change our security service we are saying in effect that the RCMP has not been doing its job. But that is not the case.

• (1250)

The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) paid tribute to the work that the RCMP have done and are doing in the security service. If they are doing well, why do we want to throw out the known for the unknown? We do not know how this new body is going to react to various things in the country, how it will fit in. What is it going to do in regard to civil liberties? That is the worry of many of the speakers in this House today. When we say we should keep the RCMP in this area, we are basing that on the confidence the people have in the RCMP.

I wanted to deal with another point, Mr. Speaker, concerning the spy situation but I see that my time is running out. However, I want to urge Members of the House to realize what we are doing. We can build on the force we have. Surely we do not want to throw that out and start building something brand-new which may be built on a faulty foundation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Debate.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure everyone that the Opposition have as much time as possible to make their points. As indignant as I am about some of the things I have heard today, because they are simply not valid criticisms of the Bill, I will not take the time required to deal with each of them. Let me just say in summary that, having sat and listened to the far-fetched concerns and fears, all of which were raised on second reading when we heard 57 speeches on the subject of this Bill, and in committee where we spent dozens of hours and hundreds of briefs were received and dozens of witnesses heard, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the Government feels there are good answers to all of the suggestions made.

The suggestions are that this Bill goes further in the direction of violation of the privacy and civil liberties of Canadians. Far from it. We are dealing at the moment with an area of activity presently within the security service of the RCMP. We are moving it into an organization which can be put under much better controls and safeguards than is appropriate for a police force under the Canadian system of government. I know some Hon. Members opposite recognize that. I note that the Calgary Herald urged the Conservative Party, in its editorial of June 2, to stop the long bid to keep national security under the wing of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and get on with the task of scrutinizing the Bill to ensure that Canada gets the most efficient security service consistent with the maintenance of civil liberties.

The Calgary Herald, for one, backs separation and it is not alone. There are many, many observers across the country who have studied the Bill. They are not saying the Bill is perfect, and that is not the Government's case. The purpose of report stage is to try and improve the Bill. But we recognize that this Bill represents a step forward in further securing the privacy and civil liberties of Canadians. We are subjecting our security service to a more careful and effective outside scrutiny and control than it has ever had before. I am delighted that we have reached report stage and are talking about clauses rather than seeing the spectacle that we have had in the past of delay for its own sake by an Opposition Party, the NDP, which has firmly declared, apart from what they are saying about clauses and due debate, that they are going to be doing everything—to quote the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson):

> —going to be doing everything within our power, using all of the parliamentary devices at our disposal, to ensure that this does not in fact become enacted before the end of the session.

That is what we are witnessing and we might as well recognize it.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), in his usual way, tells just part of the story. Of course, we have said we are going to oppose this Bill, that we are going to try and stop its passage. But we have said it for very good reasons, reasons which are supported by the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, most of the major churches, by organizations such as Operation Dismantle, and by the provincial Attorneys General. We are in very good company.

The reason we are opposing this Bill is not because we are opposed to legislation which would give Canada the security service it needs and must have; we are opposed to the Bill because it does not do that. This Bill gives the security service the kind of power it had in the past. It legalizes the security service doing things which the McDonald Commission proved so conclusively it should not have done. It will permit the security service to continue to keep files on hundreds of thousands of Canadians, which it has done. The McDonald Commission told the people of Canada that the security service had files on 700,000 people. Would the Solicitor General, as conservative and as ready as he is to accept every fairytale told to him by the security service, say to this House that there was ever any need for the security service to get information and have files on 700,000 Canadians? Has anything changed?

Let me tell the Solicitor General what my own proposal experience has been. I have been an elected representative in one forum or another for 40 years. The things I have said and done are on the public record. After we passed the Access to Information Act I made a request to the Solicitor General and the RCMP to see my file and the things I supposedly have done which they have in their records. I was turned down because that kind of information is excluded under the Act. I made the same request to the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation and I got what they had in their records about me. Therefore, if we are suspicious about this legislation, of what the Solicitor General will try to get through the House, I think we have every right to be.

Let us remember that we Canadians are pretty self-satisfied, we are pretty arrogant; we look at things which have happened in the U.S. and we say they are terrible. "Look what the FBI did! Look what the CIA did! Is it not terrible? It could not happen in Canada." It was not until a former corporal in the RCMP, a member of the security service, got involved, for reasons which have never been explained, in an attempt—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Guilbault): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but it being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION

RATE INCREASES IN EXCESS OF GOVERNMENT RESTRAINT PROGRAM GUIDELINES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, once again the Liberal Government has proven that it is not to be trusted and that its solemn declaration of intention is without substance or meaning. In his past Budget speeches the Minister of Finance stated categorically that prices charged by Government agencies would be subject to the 6 and 5 per cent guidelines. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development confirmed this with respect to the Northern Canada Power Commission, the federal Crown agency which has a monopoly on electrical energy in much of northern Canada. From January, 1983, to January, 1984, electrical consumers in Fort Simpson were subjected to price increases in excess of 40 per cent, far exceeding the stated guidelines.

If the Minister's words are to be honoured, NCPC must reduce its rates in Fort Simpson and rebate its customers. Otherwise, we will all know that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who would aspire to the leadership of his discredited Party, is a man who says one thing and does something entirely different.

D-DAY

REFLECTIONS ON ALLIES' SACRIFICES

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on June 6, 1944, with the command "O.K. We'll go", General Eisenhower unleashed the most massive, hazardous, and bloody seaborne military operation in history, the allied invasion of Normandy. The intensity of the struggle against the Nazis was described in 1941 by Watson Kirkconnel, a McMaster University author and professor, who wrote as follows:

> Hitler's Germany is an atavistic return to barbarism, has renounced the ethic of christianity, the scientific pursuit of truth, and civilized insistance on law and has subjected all of these to tribal violence for its own savage sake.

With the D-Day invasion of Normandy the allied forces began the attacks which, combined with the Eastern Front offensive of our wartime ally, the Soviet Union, finally did succeed in defeating the fascist system of Hitler.

Now, forty years later, the question arises—did the sacrifice of life, limb, and material goods restore world order and bring about peace? However, the gallant men who gave their lives in Normandy for the cause of freedom, if alive today, might well wonder if their sacrifice was in vain. The lack of freedom behind the Iron Curtain would, I am sure, be a source of great sorrow for them.

We had a common goal during World War II—to defeat the forces of fascism. We now have another common goal—mutual survival, a goal which I hope one day will improve relations between East and West so as to reduce the threat of another world conflict.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF HAMILTON SUB POST OFFICE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, in expressing my very serious complaint about the Post Office, may I take this opportunity, on behalf of all Members, to wish Canada Post's President, Mr. Michael Warren, a comfortable and complete recovery from his unfortunate mishap during the weekend.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Perhaps Mr. Warren's officials will take note of the imminent damage about to be done to a constituent of mine, Mr. Allan Beattie, who is Post Master of sub Post Office 41 at the Westcliffe Mall on Hamilton Mountain. This thriving little post office has been operating out of Westcliffe Home Hardware for approximately 12 years with no complaints. Mr. Beattie feels he has provided an excellent service for his many loyal customers in the area. Suddenly Canada Post is shutting him down, effective June 30.

The Post Office has an agreement with the sub post offices that Ottawa can close them down on 30 days' notice without explanation. Mr. Beattie was given 60 days' notice without explanation.

To make matters worse, Canada Post wants to locate its full Post Office in the same Westcliffe Mall in larger quarters at expense to the Canadian taxpayer. There is no space available in the Mall anyway.

I have learned that the reason Allan Beattie is being hit is because the union feels these small stations are competition for it. I have real sympathy with organized labour in many cases. Indeed, I am a union member myself. However, I draw the line when a loyal and hard working entrepreneur is pressured out of a valuable community service because of a militant postal union. Mr. Warren and Canada Post officials, please take note, and rescind this ridiculous closing.

HOUSING

NON-ATTENDANCE OF GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVE AT TORONTO CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING MEETING

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, recently the Co-operative Housing Federal of Toronto, in co-operation with three other non profit developers of co-operative housing and the Co-operative Housing Foundation of Canada, held a public meeting to discuss the future of co-operative housing in metro Toronto and the Government of Canada's proposed reduction in funding for co-op development. Approximately 800 people attended the meeting, hoping to hear an explanation of the federal Government's reasons for reducing its support to co-ops. Unfortunately, although he had been invited three weeks earlier, the Minister did not attend the meeting and chose not to send anyone in his place. His telegram expressing his regrets arrived the day after the meeting.

Members of the audience were left wondering what the Liberal Government's position is on co-operative housing. In the face of the Minister's failure to explain why he has cut the co-op housing budget by 65 per cent locally and 45 per cent nationally, I have to question whether this sector enjoys the Minister's support.

In the House the Minister stated that co-ops are not serving the Government's target groups as well as other forms of non profit housing. I find this an extraordinary and unfounded claim. It is deeply insulting to co-ops in Metro Toronto and across Canada which have a proud record of serving the disadvantaged alongside moderate income members. The Minister ought to know that Toronto and Canada need more co-operative housing units this year. If the Minister has concerns about the effectiveness of the co-op program relative to other—

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER STUDENT JOB FUNDING—COMPARISON BETWEEN RURAL AND URBAN AREAS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, many rural high unemployment areas are being discriminated against by what I call an urban bias in federal and provincial government job-creation programs. Under the program for summer jobs sponsored by government Departments, students are hired mainly where the government Departments exist, in urban ridings. I suppose that is the only way it can be. However, Summer Canada or community group sponsored projects are funded to the same degree in urban and rural ridings. This means that urban areas, as a rule, receive twice the allocation of summer student jobs funded by government. Private enterprise summer jobs are also heavily concentrated in urban areas.

This despicable, clear as the nose on your face, outright discrimination against high unemployment rural areas is prevalent as well in Canada Works allocations because of a $3 million cap on riding allocations. If your unemployment rate is 15 per cent you are treated the same as if it were 50 per cent, and you only receive $3 million.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that although this system has operated for years in the federal and provincial Governments, those in a position of authority appear not to have the interest to do something about it.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

INVOLVEMENT IN SALE OF SPORTS POOL TICKETS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, a Canada Post press release dated April 19, 1984, says in part:

—Canada Post has introduced a series of service improvement programs that dramatically improved the speed of delivery between major cities—

Yesterday I received a letter from Canada Post, Ottawa, dated June 6. It took five days for the letter to reach my office. What did the letter say? The letter said that:

Canada Post has decided to begin selling sports pool tickets on a trial basis in approximately 300 post offices in Alberta.

What will Canada Post be doing next? It is already experimenting with the mail order service with Consumers Distributing which it plans to evaluate thoroughly. Now it plans to go into the gambling business by selling sports pool tickets.

The reason we have the Canada Post Corporation is to deliver the mail, not to compete with businesses that pay taxes, or to sell lottery tickets. Why can't we have the type of mail delivery we had a few years ago? It takes eight to 10 days, and sometimes as long as 12 days, for a letter from my constituency to reach me.

● (1410)

At some post offices in Alberta, Canadians have to stand in line for lengthy periods to get their mail. Now the post office staff is to be given another chore, namely, to sell lottery tickets. Canada Post should be told to improve its mail delivery service.

The odds on winning a lottery are about a million to one. Will the odds on getting our mail be the same? The people of Canada have a big enough gamble now to get their mail without starting another gamble in our post offices.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

FUND ALLOCATIONS FOR CO-OPERATIVE AND NON-PROFIT HOUSING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I join my colleague in protesting CMHC cutbacks for co-operative and non-profit housing. There has been a 45 per cent over-all reduction in the number of units compared to last year. In B.C. units are down from an inadequate 2,200 to 1,800. Only a very small percentage of this allocation will go to co-op housing. I have also had complaints that allocations are based on favouritism since allocations are now made by staff in the Minister's office rather than by CMHC professionals.

There are thousands of low income people in my riding alone who are living in downtown Vancouver rooms or cheap hotels who urgently need decent, affordable housing. Profit making developers are renovating or replacing older accommodation in preparation for Expo '86. Few units are being allocated from CMHC for those being displaced.

Despite the very favourable federal land deal which was given to B.C. Place development, the Board of B.C. Place refused to include affordable housing, which was to have been part of this deal. The Minister should intervene to insist that such housing must be included, and CMHC should have extra allocations to replace downtown housing. This was done in Montreal, and Vancouver deserves similar treatment.

Finally, I want to register our Party's complaint again that the Minister responsible for CMHC refuses to adhere to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act of Canada for co-op housing. This, in effect, is a union busting policy—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has, unfortunately, expired.

POOLS

CANADA SPORTS POOL CORPORATION—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to use this opportunity to express my utter disgust at the way the Government of Canada is treating Canadians through the sports pool.

I have reached the point where I do not believe there is any misuse of public funds below which the Liberal Party would not sink.

We now know reliably that sports pool ticket sales have fallen to less than 200,000 from the original 500,000. The point that has to be made in this House of Commons to Members opposite, and to those who stand to lose, those the Government was told would be affected in medical research in amateur sports, throughout this country—because the Government was told this pool would fail at the beginning—is that decent thinking Canadians believe the Government of Canada set up the sports pool entirely to break its arrangement with the provinces, entirely to put all Liberals on the payroll of the Government of Canada, in full awareness that the sports pool would fail, and that Canadians would have to shell out funds to people who have two-year severance contracts.

I believe that the House of Commons has an obligation to express to the Government its utter, utter disgust at the way the Government has treated people through the sports pool.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN INITIAL GRAIN PRICES

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It is most important at this time that farmers receive increased prices for their grain. They are facing very difficult cash flow problems. The Wheat Board tells us that grain exports from the West Coast since the beginning of the crop year have totalled ten million tonnes, up a million tonnes from the same time last year. And the asking price for grain at Vancouver and at Thunder Bay has increased considerably. Will the Minister consider increasing the initial price of grain to help out farmers with the very severe cash flow problems which they face at this time?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think first the Hon. Member should acknowledge the very major achievement in being able to move a record volume of grain this year which is in part due to the initiatives we have taken to expand the capacity. It is an achievement which his Party objected to and fought against in this House. I think the fact that we are able to sell and move more grain in an efficient way is testimony to the wisdom of that course.

As far as the question of further advance payments is concerned, as the Hon. Member knows, this House is presently seized with a number of initiatives to improve the financial position of the western farmer, in particular the question of the western grain stabilization payments, which I hope we will have an opportunity to dispose of within a matter of a few days. I think we are responding very much to the cash position which the farmers face. We hope the House will co-operate in allowing us to complete that motion within the matter of this week.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that when it comes to western grain stabilization payments, initial or interim, this Government continues to play politics with the farmers' money.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: And I want to emphasize the farmers' money.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister reconsider the answer he has given the farmers, consider the difficult situation in which they find themselves, and return to the farmers their own money by increasing the initial price of grain, when it is within the Minister's jurisdiction to do so?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised at the question raised by the Hon. Member. Up to this point in time he was generally recognized as knowing something about the way the grain industry works. The tone of his question shows that he is not paying attention to what is going on.

The farmer is receiving and will be receiving, Parliament willing, a substantial increase in the payments from the western grain stabilization fund. This will go a substantial way to meeting some of the cash problems.

As far as any initial payment is concerned, we would have to take into account the recommendations and findings of the Wheat Board and the other bodies to determine what the level of that would be. I think what the Hon. Member should recognize first is that we are selling and moving record volumes of grain because of the expansion of the grain handling system in western Canada, which his Party opposed and fought against, and which this Government had the wisdom to promote.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are a joke. All you know about is pork.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious the Minister does not understand what is happening and he is confusing the western grain stabilization payments with the initial price of grain.

CASH FLOW SITUATION OF FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the level of the grain price since January has been considerably higher than the initial payments paid to farmers have been. We are asking the Minister to consider the very serious cash problems which farmerrs have, and either make an interim payment or raise the level of the initial price so farmers can receive a greater portion of their own money with which to pay their bills and to meet their obligations. Will the Minister of Transport show some confidence in the farmers of this country, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have shown that confidence by going ahead with major plans to promote the expansion of farming activity in western Canada, unlike Members of the Opposition who show a total lack of confidence by not being prepared to support those kinds of initiatives that would allow us to expand the system.

As far as the initial price is concerned, as the Hon. Member knows, that is not an income protection plan. That must reflect market conditions. In the Board's judgment it is far too early to make any determination of those market conditions until there is further reporting, perhaps into the mid-July period. That is the kind of judgment we have to make without putting at risk the kind of pool situation which the Wheat Board must face. I do not think anybody in this House would want to jeopardize in any way the financial stability or accountability of the Wheat Board, which is what the Hon. Member seems to be recommending.

EMPLOYMENT

SPECIAL RECOVERY CAPITAL PROJECTS PROGRAM—ROLE OF REGIONAL MINISTERS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is further to the question asked by the Hon. Member for St. John's East yesterday when the Minister answered that Special Recovery Capital Projects funds "have never been in the purview of regional", or political, "Ministers to withhold." We know that regional Ministers have been holding up many of these Special Recovery Capital Projects in anticipation of an election. Does the Minister still stand by his statement of yesterday that these SRCP funds have never been in the purview of regional Ministers to withhold?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Definitely, Mr. Speaker.

USE OF FUNDS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a Cabinet document which indicates the contrary, that regional Ministers are responsible for delays in the Halifax Federal Building, the Nova Scotia Nautical Institute, and the Maritime Forestry Institute. The most despicable example is the one in Gaspé, which has a very serious unemployment problem. The document indicates that there have been excessive delays on behalf of Ministers and concludes by indicating that projects in New Brunswick are still untouched because "the regional Minister for New Brunswick has yet to advance proposals". Would the Minister confirm, now that the evidence is before him, that the Government is using this very large porkbarrel fund merely to hand out patronage in advance of an election?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to say that the Hon. Member is all wet.

INCOME TAX

RATE APPLICABLE TO UPPER INCOME EARNERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday he agreed to look into some of the alleged abuses associated with the corporate tax credit scheme which is in place for R and D. Today I want to ask him a question concerning abuses of the personal tax system.

The Minister will know that in 1970 there were only three people with incomes over $100,000 who paid no income tax. As a result of the loopholes introduced over the years, in 1981 that increased to 1,500 people with incomes over $100,000 paying no income tax. However, as if that was not enough, in 1981 the Government reduced the tax rate to upper income earners across the board. How does the Minister justify decreasing the tax being paid by upper income earners at a time when it is being raised for low income earners?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I invite my friend to take note of all the measures which we have taken in the last few years, in the last few Budgets, including the most recent one, to help low income people. The latest one was the $50 increase in the Guaranteed Income Supplement for the single elderly. I refer him also to the increases which we have provided in terms of the Child Tax Credit, as well as the very significant increases in the amounts of money provided for direct employment and direct employment support for those who are unemployed. It is by billions of dollars that we have come to the support of low income people in the last couple of years.

As far as his question is concerned, he knows—and I have explained it to him or to his colleagues several times—that it is not correct to refer to people earning $100,000 per year paying no income tax as if it were a permanent feature. It may very well happen that in a particular year an individual with a high income would not pay taxes because indeed he would be entitled to claim, like anyone else, losses in previous years. The Hon. Member knows the rules provided under the Income Tax Act in that respect. There is a law which applies in the same way to all citizens. He knows that if one has losses in a particular year, one can claim those losses against income in another year.

Mr. Riis: I do not think the Minister answered my question directly. He will know that reducing the tax rate to upper income earners cost Canadian taxpayers about $1.5 billion each year.

REQUEST THAT 1981 TAX RATE BE RESTORED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister have any plans to restore the tax rate to what it was back in 1981, and therefore collect $1.5 billion more? Or, does he expect low and middle income Canadians to pick up the balance? Does he plan to restore it? If he does not, why not?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to challenge the assumption of $1.5 billion being collectable in this particular way. The marginal rate was reduced in 1981, but the Hon. Member should remember that a number of loopholes were closed at the time, increasing the taxes on higher income people. Indeed, a number of these measures are still in effect, and the Hon. Member knows it.

Mr. Riis: Yes, I am well aware, as the Minister has indicated, that tax loopholes were closed in 1981, only to be reopened by the present Minister of Finance.

TAX PAID BY LOW INCOME EARNERS
