Harold Bell Wright's Latest Novel,
"WHEN A MAN'S A MAN,"

is a fine big wholesome Novel of simple sweetness and virile strength, while the pages are crowded with the thrilling incidents that belong to the adventurous life of the unfenced land depicted, one feels, always, beneath the surface of the stirring scenes, the great primitive and enduring life forces that men and women of the story portray. In the Dean, Philip Acton, Patches, Little Billy, Curly Elson, Kitty Reid and Helen Manning, the author has created real living, breathing men and women, and we are made to feel and understand that there come to everyone those times when in spite of all, above all, and at any cost, a man must be a man.

MAGIC BAKING POWDER

WHEN LOVE Came Too Late.

CHAPTER V.
The Key to the Riddle.

"When did you get this?" he asked in a constrained voice.

"At a quarter past ten this morning. I considered it, and caught the eleven fast train, Mr. Bartley," he replied, meekly.

"And—and you think it is right?" said Bartley Bradstone in a low voice. "I'm sure of it, sir," replied Mowle. "I got it from a source which has never yet sold me. I'd stake my oath upon it, sir."

Bartley Bradstone went to the window and looked out, probably to hide the light of satisfaction which gleamed in his eyes. Then, after a moment or two, he turned to Mowle again.

"You were quite right to come down with this, Mowle," he said; "it is too important to be trusted to a wire."

"Thank you for your approbation, Mr. Bartley," said Mowle, servilely. "According to this," said Bradstone, touching the paper with his forefinger, "the person named—we will mention no names, Mowle, just take the initial V.—according to this information, V. is liable for something like forty thousand pounds. That's so?"

"That is so," assented Mowle, blinking, and rubbing his chin. "Rather more than less, Mr. Bartley. Nearer fifty. Of course it's a secret."

"How do you account for it?" asked Bartley Bradstone, thoughtfully, and watching his companion covertly and closely.

Mr. Mowle stretched his lips into the undertaker-like smile, and coughed.

"Seems singular 'and improbable, doesn't it, sir? Here's a gentleman, a tip-top swell, as we may say, one of the old county families, looked up to and respected as a sound man, and yet—" He rubbed his chin, and smiled again. "This is the key to the riddle, Mr. Bartley: Wild oats!"

Bartley Bradstone sank into a chair and nodded.

"Wild oats, sir! Mr. V. began it early, and kept it up as long as he could. Went to the Jews—and the Christians. I don't know which is worse," and he coughed again. Bartley Bradstone's eyes dropped with a faint shadow of consciousness.

"Borrowed right and left on post-obits and I O U S and reversions, and on anything or nothing. Quite the old story, Mr. Bartley. Sixty percent, interest, any interest they liked to put on, so that he had some money to play ducks and drakes with."

"That was before he came into the property," said Bartley. "Why didn't he pay it off then?"

"He did; some of it," replied Mr. Mowle. "He has been trying to clear it for years past; but this kind of thing's not easily got rid of, and these have been bad times for landlords. There are a good many in the same fix as Mr. V., but not so badly, perhaps."

"And he cannot pay it off now?" asked Bartley Bradstone.

Mr. Mowle shook his head.

"If my information is correct—and I'll answer for it—he certainly cannot."

"How is it that his condition has been kept so secret? No one suspects it here—in his neighborhood?"

"The gentleman who holds the bills are only too pleased to keep quiet while he pays the interest, of course; sixty per cent."

"Of course," assented Bartley, "and have you got a list of the names of these people?"

"Yes, sir," said Mowle, and he handed him a paper from his pocket-book.

Bartley Bradstone examined it, and whistled.

"Tough customers!" he said. "Sharks, all of them. Are you sure this is all?"

"I am quite sure," said Mowle. "I may as well tell you, sir, that my informant is the confidential clerk to Mr. V.'s solicitors." He paused a moment. "He owes us a hundred or two—"

"Us?" said Bartley Bradstone, with a frown.

Mr. Mowle coughed and glanced up nervously.

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Bartley; I should have said me! He owes me, just so."

Bartley Bradstone eyed him with suspicious displeasure.

"Look here, Mowle," he said. "That is rather an awkward slip of yours. I hope it doesn't occur with other people. They'll be asking who the 'us' is."

"No, sir; no, Mr. Bartley, I'm careful. I'm cautious in the extreme. Why, Mr. Bartley, if you think of the years I've kept the business dark—"

"I know, I know. I only warned you," interrupted Bartley Bradstone. "Once let a hint of our conversation get abroad, and—well, I think you know the consequences. I've still got that interesting little check you so kindly signed with my name."

Mr. Mowle's colorless face grew livid, his cadaverous lips twitched, and his bony hands closed convulsively.

"You've no reason to fear, Mr. Bartley," he said, almost inaudibly, his hands shaking.

"No, it is you who have reason to fear," retorted Mr. Bradstone. "I'm a man of my word, as you know, and I mean that if the slightest suspicion is aroused that you are working for me, I should check over to the police and send you to penal servitude."

Mr. Mowle nodded.

"I know you will, sir," he said, moistening his lips, "and I am cautious accordingly. I think you'll admit that, Mr. Bartley? For nearly twelve years I've worked for you, and thousands upon thousands have passed through these hands—he extended them—"and every penny has been paid for those who never hoped to be well again.

There is a marvellous healing power in Nerviline which it derives from the extracts and juices of certain rare herbs and roots. It always almost magically the awful pain that only rheumatics can describe.

Congestion is drawn out of the muscles, stiffened joints are eased and limbered up, the old time feeling of depression is cast off, and once again Nerviline brings the sufferer to buoyant vigorous lasting good health.

Every home needs good old Nerviline, needs it for earache, toothache, headache, neuralgia, lumbago, sciatica, stiff neck, chest cold and sore throat. Wherever there is pain, congestion or inflammation, Nerviline will cure it.

Rheumatism A Sneaking Disease Has At Last Met Its Conqueror

Throbbing Muscles and Swollen Joints Made Well.

BUB-ON NERVILINE.

Old age knows no foe more subtle, more unrelenting than rheumatism. At first only a grumbling pain is felt. But, alas, if settled in the joints and muscles, and finally tortures its victims.

To-day the disease may be in the muscles of the back, thigh, shoulder or neck—to-morrow in the joints of the hand, toes, arms or legs it may work with redoubled fury.

Whether the pain is constant or occasional makes no difference to "Nerviline."

Because other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged. Nerviline has cured the worst of cases. It has brought health to those in the deepest despair. Has ended years of awful suf-

Simple Wash Cures Eczema.

A great skin specialist who has compounded for his patients a marvellously effective cure for Eczema, Bad Leg and all other forms of it, has recently given his valuable preparation to the world. It is known as D. D. D. Prescription for Eczema, a simple external wash, easy to apply, a reliable home remedy.

D. D. D. gives instant relief from skin distress the moment it is applied. It penetrates the pores and kills the germs which are the root of skin disease. Nauseating stomach drugs are worthless for the disease is in the skin, not in the blood. Greasy salves are dangerous for they clog the pores and add the growth of germs. D. D. D. washes out disease, cleanses the pores, then soothes and heals the skin.

accounted for: And no one—no one, Mr. Bartley—has ever heard me mention your name, or suspected that you were my master."

Mr. Bradstone nodded.

"It's well for you they haven't," he said, coldly. "It is more important than ever that our connection should be kept dark. I don't like the risk of your coming here even."

"I've been very careful," said Mowle, meekly; "I didn't give the servant my name. I said I brought a note from your London tailor."

Mr. Bradstone nodded.

"Yes, and you're right in going back to-night. Now take my instructions."

Mr. Mowle took out his pencil, and looked up at his master with a dogged intensity.

"Buy Mr. V.'s debts," said Mr. Bartley Bradstone, coolly, but with his eyes downcast.

Mr. Mowle did not start, but his eyes blinked, and he turned them upon Bartley Bradstone.

"You quite understand—I made myself clear, I hope, sir—that Mr. V. couldn't possibly pay if he were pressed?"

"Yes, I understood," said Bartley Bradstone. "I don't suppose he could. All the same I want these bills and I O U S. All of them, mind; don't let one escape."

Mr. Mowle nodded.

"I shall have to pay, sir," he said, succinctly.

Bartley Bradstone sighed.

"Yes, I expect so, confound them! Do the best you can; but buy them, and as soon as you can. When you have got them all, let me know. That's all."

Mr. Mowle closed his book.

"Very good, sir," he said, shutting his lips. "I won't detain you longer, sir. Everything is going on all right, as you saw by the last statement."

Mr. Bradstone nodded, and opened the door.

"You've got a little time to spare. You may as well see the house," he said, carelessly.

"Thank you, sir; thank you, Mr. Bartley, if it's not giving you too much trouble," croaked Mr. Mowle obsequiously, as he followed him.

"This is the hall," said Bartley Bradstone, waving his hand. "Notice this window, Mowle. It cost me five hundred pounds."

Mowle blinked at the window, and cast a fashy eye round the oaken panels and the men in armor.

"The drawing-room," said Mr. Bradstone. "Decorated by Marks. I paid him four hundred pounds. Had the furniture designed by Fox."

"Beautiful! beautiful!" murmured Mowle.

"And this is the dining-room. Sorry you can't stay to dinner, I'd have shown you the plate."

"Superb apartment," croaked Mowle, peering in with his shoulders bent meekly.

"Library you've seen. Here's the billiard-room. Electric light, you see."

"I see, sir. Delightful."

"Come upstairs. First corridor. My rooms," and he signed to a footman to open the door.

Mr. Mowle peered into the luxurious bedchamber and dressing-room, and his gaunt eyes took note of the silver toilet set and Brussels lace draperies.

"Fit for a prince!" he croaked.

"Guest chambers No. 1 and No. 2 and 3. There are fourteen of them, all like this," said Mr. Bradstone.

"Delightful! quite delightful!" murmured Mowle. "Fourteen, Mr. Bradstone?"

"Fourteen," assented the owner. "Reading-room and ladies' boudoir, gray and yellow satin. Piano, Colard & Collard grand. Pictures by Long and Leighton."

"Splendid. Fit for a queen, Mr. Bartley!" exclaimed Mowle, staring about him.

"Statuary gallery," said Mr. Bradstone. "Sleeping Nymph," two thousand pounds. "Hercules," by Boehm, a thousand pounds. Group, by Gleichen. Down there is the palm-garden—fountain of scented water. My own room."

He passed into a small room, luxuriously furnished, with cabinet, pictures on the walls, and a large iron safe in the corner.

"Books, guns, and all that kind of thing," he said, waving his hand. "Safe by Milner." He looked round, and, seeing the footman was out of hearing, added, with a smile, "That's where your little check is, Mowle."

Mr. Mowle's face went livid, and he passed his hands over each other as if to warm them. "Don't, Mr. Bartley, don't!" he murmured, hoarsely.

Bartley Bradstone laughed.

"Oh, it is as well to remind you," he said, coolly. "That door leads to the stables. This way, and he led him across a courtyard covered by a glass roof. "Here you are; twenty-four stalls. I hunt, you know."

"Yes, sir."

"Yes. That's my best horse. Gave two hundred and fifty for him."

"Beautiful creature, sir."

"Yes. Carriage horses—six of them. And here's your dogcart. Sure you won't have anything before you go?"

"Nothing, thank you, sir," replied Mr. Mowle. "Thank you for showing me over, Mr. Bradstone. It is a truly beautiful place, and fit for a king. Beautiful! I'll see that your kind orders are properly executed, sir. Good-day."

Mr. Bartley Bradstone nodded. "Good-day," he replied, and, his hands thrust into his pockets, he returned to the house to dress for dinner.

Mr. Mowle climbed into the dogcart, and was driven rapidly away. At the end of the avenue he laid his hand upon the arm of the groom.

"One moment, young man," he said. The groom pulled up the impatient horse, and Mr. Mowle turned and looked back at the house.

"And to think that I made it all!" he muttered. "You—your beast!?" Then he said aloud, "Thank you; drive on now, please."

(To be Continued.)

What Are You Doing for that Eczema?

"Nothing; I've about given up trying to cure it."

"That is not wise. Do as I did and you will probably be cured in a short time. I used Zylex and Zylex Soap with it and my Eczema began to improve at once. A couple of boxes cured. You can get Zylex at your druggists."

Fashions and Fads.

All belts are narrow. Collars are very high. Continental hats are smart. Artillery gray is a new shade. Vests of colored lace are fashionable. Rolled collars mostly roll very high. Velvet hats are faced with straw. Blue taffeta is used to trim blue mohair.

Mahogany red is coming back in the fall.

Outrich banding appears on evening coats.

A charming long coat has a chasuble back.

Rabbit fur is the favorite of fur trimmings.

The frock of jersey is seen a great deal.

Splice coats promise to be longer this winter.

Hats are simply trimmed, but brilliant in color.

Soft white satin hats are liked for sports wear.

Contrasting furs will be used in coats and capes.

The dressy separate skirt is returning to favor.

Summer frocks of taffeta are trimmed with fur.

FLURY RECAPTURED BY THE FRENCH.

PARIS, Aug. 4.—The French have captured the village of Flury, in the Vosges sector, according to an official announcement. A number of prisoners were taken.

The recapture by the French of the village of Flury, which had been held by the Germans for more than a month, has caused great elation in France. It is the first fruit of the French slow and methodical offensive and marks an epoch in the months' battle for the great fortress on the Meuse. The Germans appear to be less and less capable of doing anything on their old overwhelming offensive and the initiative, military men think, is about to pass to the French for good.

Minor operations last night in French on the Somme front resulted in the gain for them of some ground west of Pozieres, the War Office announced to-day.

French troops in the region of Verdun, twice during Friday captured the Thiaumont work from the Germans, holding it the last time in face of counter-attacks, according to a French official issued to-night. The village of Flury, under German counter-attacks the French took on Friday afternoon, in a bayonet attack, re-occupied the greater part of the village.

REFUSED TO PAY FINE

LONDON, Aug. 4.—The City of Brussels has refused to pay the fine of 5,700,000 marks imposed by the Germans in consequence of the demonstration which took place in the Belgian capital on July 25 on the National Fete Day. A dispatch from the Hague to the change Telegraph Co. says that serious crisis is expected.

Dear Mother—Just a line to say I am well. I came through the big battle without a scratch, thank God, but some of my chums were wounded. The corps commander addressed us. He said we were second to none in the world. He told us to tell our people we were a credit to our country.

Remember me to all my friends and tell them I am well.

Consoling Letter

From a Priest to a Heart-Broken Mother.

Mrs. C. Prowse, Colonial Street, whose son William took part in the big drive with "Ours" on July 1st, and was fatally wounded, has just received the following letter of consolation from Father Woodlock, the chaplain:—
No. 1 General Hospital,
B.E.F., Etretat, near Havre,
July 18th.

Dear Mrs. Prowse,—It is my sad duty to write you news of your son's death from wounds received in the battle of the Somme on July 1st. He arrived in this hospital a few days after he was hit and lingered on for a fortnight, but in spite of all that could be done to save him, he peacefully expired to-day (Tuesday, 18th inst.). All the time he has been with us he has showed wonderful dispositions of patience and faith and love of God, and he received the last sacraments devoutly. He had on his breast the specially indulged crucifix, which will be forwarded to you in due course. He will be buried to-morrow (July 19th) in the Catholic Cemetery by the church here with full military honors and all the last prayers of Holy Church will be recited for one who was a truly devoted Catholic. I am sure that his reward has already commenced, but I shall offer up mass for him to-morrow. With much sympathy and a prayer that God will help you bear your heavy cross,
I remain, yours,
Rev. Fr. F. WOODLOCK,
Chaplain.

Private J. L. Prowse, a brother of William, was also in action on July 1st, and was wounded and is now in the 3rd London General Hospital and reported to be progressing favorably.

SATURDAY, August 5, 1916.

THE BATTLE OF VERDUN.

France has good cause for jubilation in the recapture of Fleury, and if nearby Thiaumont falls to her also, it will mark a triumph as great as any that has been achieved on the Somme. This is truer, too, from the German than from the French point of view. Such stress of its importance has been laid on the battle of Verdun by the German Staff that its name has almost an hypnotic influence on the German people. The Somme offensive has been represented as something quite subordinate. Let them take heart in the face of inconceivable Franco-British advances there: when they are held up definitely (which will be soon), the attack on Verdun will be resumed with its former strength and courage and pushed to its inevitable success. This is precisely the consolation that the German nation has had administered to it during the past month, and like the good obedient nation it is, it has taken the crumb of comfort and kept silence.

Now it was long ago abundantly evident to the French that the Germans never would take Verdun, unless the former chose for tactical reasons to abandon it to them. They have not so chosen, because Verdun is one of those instances in which what is called the moral effect of a certain event can be balanced against, and may outweigh, the purely tactical one. The moral effect on the French, who thoroughly understand the position, of the abandonment of Verdun would to-day be inconsiderable; but that upon the Germans of severe reverses to their arms there would be far-reaching. Undoubtedly the French success has been due largely to the diversion at the Somme, but it must be remembered that this was one of the first aims of that offensive.

We shall watch closely developments at Verdun. If the Crown Prince's forces are driven back here, and Douaumont in succession, it will truly be the beginning of the end. The achievements of the British and French before Bapaume and Peronne have been tremendous, but their real extent can be measured only by the command of either side and expert military men. The German layman can see from his map the trifling distance we have gone and feel reassured that it marks the failure of a final effort. But this cannot apply to Verdun. Even the German layman knows that here the Germans are attacking, and the loss of Fleury is not a step towards the taking of Verdun. We are among those who believe that the end of the war will be hastened when the whole German nation realises its true position. Nothing will bring about that realization more effectively than clear and convincing proof that the campaign against Verdun, the war within the war, has failed.

Our Resolution.

It was impossible for anyone who attended yesterday's meeting to come away unmoved; it will be impossible for anyone to read unstirred the text of the speeches there delivered, though voice and gesture and impressive setting be absent. Yet it may not be thought superfluous or invidious if we point out briefly the essential meaning of it all.

Yesterday was an anniversary, the celebration of the greatest event in the history of the Empire. But it was not to review the past but to look forward to the future that we were summoned together. The citizens of St. John's, and of every village and hamlet in the island, met to pass a resolution. It was well worded. We recorded our "inflexible determination to continue the struggle to a victorious end." These are words of action. The resolution was made; it must be kept.

The keynote of it all was struck when the Acting Premier, Mr. J. H. Bennett, abandoning his manuscript, spoke from his heart and said, "a fortnight ago we sent 500 men across to fill the ranks; very soon we shall send 500 more. We shall send 500 more after that, and shall continue to send them until no more are required." That was not merely the spirit of the country; it was our resolution in concrete form. There is only one place and manner in which it can be kept. This is at Recruiting Headquarters and in the full ranks of the Regiment. From the day a volunteer passes, a soldier of the King, from the Recruiting office, he fights Britain's battle. It has been said that the war will be won by Great Britain's last million men. Let Newfoundland be represented among them as numerously and as well as she was among the first. Thus, and thus alone, will we deserve the name that was won for us last month at Beaumont Hamel.

(From The Daily News.)

Says the London Chronicle of July 18th:—"Lieut. Hubert Herder, Newfoundland Regiment, killed in the first state of the big offensive on July 1, was one of the soldier sons of the proprietor of the 'Evening Telegram,' St. John's. Two other sons, Arthur and Ralph, were wounded in the same attack, when the Newfoundlanders suffered badly. Miss Herder, a sister, is a war nurse. Hubert was already wounded, but was keeping his place at the head of his men, when he received his second and fatal wound." Three of Mr. Herder's sons went to the front, another was unable to qualify, a fifth is helping to train, and a daughter is doing her part. Well may the Empire thank God for such families.

Kreso, "the Reliable Disinfectant," is prepared by Messrs. Parke Davis & Co., at their laboratories at Walkerville, Ont., and is put up with their usual care and in the manner that has come to be expected of a firm of their standing, and is pre-eminently valuable as a deodorant, disinfectant and antiseptic. It may be used with confidence for all purposes for which such preparations may be employed. It is useful in the household, in the stable, on the farm, in the sick room. When diluted in the proportion of 1 in 100 it makes a good strong fluid for general use. We can fully recommend Kreso as an all-round disinfectant. Price 30 and 50 cents a bottle (8 and 16 oz. respectively).

THE KING'S MESSAGES

LONDON, The King George to-day telegraphed Heads of the Entente Allies. "On the occasion of the second anniversary of the commencement of the great struggle in which my and her gallant Allies are engaged, I desire to convey to you my resolution to prosecute the war until our united efforts have attained the objects for which we in common have taken up arms. I feel assured you are in accord with me in my determination that the sacrifice of gallant troops have so nobly made shall not have been offered in vain, and that the liberties for which they are fighting shall be fully guaranteed." King George sent a loving message to King Albert of Belgium. "I desire to assure my confidence that the united efforts of the Allies will liberate Belgium from the oppression of her oppressors and restore her fully to her former position of her national independence. I desire to convey my sympathy in the grievous which Belgium is so unjustly and which she has borne with admirable fortitude."

BRITISH OFFICIAL

LONDON, A British official communique issued this evening says: It was to-day. TO-DAY'S Messages. NOON. THE KING'S MESSAGES. LONDON, To-day. King George to-day telegraphed the Heads of the Entente Allies States "On the occasion of the second anniversary of the commencement of the great struggle in which my Country and her gallant Allies are engaged, I desire to convey to you my steadfast resolution to prosecute the war until our united efforts have attained the objects for which we in common have taken up arms. I feel assured that you are in accord with me in the determination that the sacrifices our gallant troops have so nobly made shall not have been offered in vain; that the liberties for which they are fighting shall be fully guaranteed and secured." King George sent the following message to King Albert of Belgium. "I desire to assure you of my confidence that the united efforts of the Allies will liberate Belgium from the oppression of her aggressors and restore her fully to the enjoyment of her national economic independence. I desire to convey my deep sympathy in the grievous trial to which Belgium is so unjustly subjected and which she has borne with such admirable fortitude."

BRITISH OFFICIAL. LONDON, To-day. A British official communication issued this evening says: It was quiet to-day. In the trenches which we captured last night west of Pozieres we are in close touch with the enemy. A large number of German dead is lying all around these trenches. We captured over 100 prisoners. The enemy's artillery maintained a barrage southwest of Pozieres nearly all day. He also shelled the southern position of Mametz Wood. Near St. Eloi the enemy exploded a small mine, which only damaged his own wire; he fired another near Auchy on his own side of the Crater. This seems to indicate some nervousness among his miners. A patrol of four of our aeroplanes engaged seven enemy machines in a fight which lasted 45 minutes. Three enemy aeroplanes were driven down while two of ours are missing. WELL DONE, CANADA! DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS. SMALL KIDNEY DISEASE. BRONCHITIS. RHEUMATISM. GRAVEL. MIGRAINE. NEURALGIA. DIABETES. BARKER'S 23 THE PROMISE

Welcome to the Soldiers Coming Home To-Day.

Our heartfelt greetings to you we give. You are welcome back to your native strand, Britons are proud of the place we live. Of the gallant soldiers from Newfoundland. When the call was given to England's sons To defend the land of the brave and free, You bravely left us to fight the Huns On the field of Flanders across the sea. We bid you welcome, not in disguise Is the feeling shown you by us to-day; We are proud of the valor of our brave boys And we prayed for you often when far away. There's Greene and Donnelly and poor Fitzgerald, You know the courage that was shown by them; The fame of our boys is around the world, And now comes Gladney with the D.C.M. So a welcome we tend you both one and all! It comes from hearts that are good and true; May God's choicest blessings upon you fall And your native land that you're coming to. JAMES MURPHY. August 5th, 1916.

Our Volunteers. Section and company drill was gone through on the Barracks yesterday. Several men were given leave to go to their homes in the outports. This afternoon those at the Barracks will receive the soldiers returning by train. To-morrow morning the usual parade will be held, one of our Brigade bands taking part.

Artistic Craftsmanship. On exhibition in Messrs. Gray and Goodland's window, Water Street, are several ornaments of fretwork design made by Mr. W. H. Goodland, and will be on sale at the Garden Party and Fancy Fair in aid of the C. of E. Organized next Wednesday at the Government House Grounds. Included in the number is a fine pipe rack, two tiny flower vases of exceptionally beautiful design, one small lady's dressing mirror and one wall stand. The material and finish is of white marble wood, with coloured trimmings, equal to any and surpassing most of the best imported articles. The work is a credit to Goodland, and ranks him as one of our foremost artistic craftsmen. Considering that the price they will reach is to keep the fatherless, a good round sum should be realised.

Here and There. RETREAT FOR CLERGY.—The retreat for the R. C. clergy to be conducted by the Jesuit Fathers, who recently arrived in the city, will begin on Monday morning next at St. Bonaventure's College and will last a week. CHILDREN'S BAZAAR.—Yesterday the second anniversary of the declaration of the war by Great Britain, Misses Edith Small and Edna Spurrell held a children's bazaar at Pownall well Road and realised $17.66, which amount they handed over to the Cot Fund. MOTOR ACCIDENT REPORTED.—It was reported around town this morning that a motor accident occurred in the vicinity of Topsall last evening in the nature of a car jumping a bridge. Enquiries were made but no details could be gathered, nor was there any official confirmation of the report. GLENCOE PASSENGERS.—The Glencoe left Placentia at 8 p.m. yesterday with the following passengers: Mr. Dale, M. Dippon, C. G. Boyle, Miss Wood, Miss Reddy, Mrs. Roberts, Miss Tulk, Mrs. Percy, Mrs. Williams, and two children, Mrs. Parsons, and three children, Miss Brown, Mrs. Vincent, Mrs. Tulk, V. Tulk and four second class.

BOAT PICKED UP.—As the result of the big storm a few days ago, Mr. Frank P. Fowlow, Bell Island, picked up a large open boat which was cast up on the beach by the heavy sea. It is painted white on top with a red bottom and is supposed to have broken loose from its moorings at Topsall of Kelligrews. Mr. Fowlow is only too pleased to return the boat to its owner. OUR COAL IMPORTATIONS. From the beginning of this year up to the present date 62,628 tons of coal, we hear, have been landed at St. John's, as compared with 32,523 tons for the corresponding period last year, or in other words for the seven months past of this year the coal importations are virtually double the importations for the past seven months of 1915. All things considered, at the present rate of going there is not likely to be any shortage of stocks with abnormal prices ruling next winter.

Victory Certain, Says Gen. Joffre.

The French Commander-in-Chief, in an Order of the Day, Declares that the Moment is Approaching when Under the Strength of Our Mutual Advance, the Military Power of Germany will Crumble. Paris, August 1.—The Bulletin des Armes, the official journal of the soldiers of the French army, will publish to-morrow copies of letters written by President Poincare, David Lloyd-George, British Secretary for War and General Sir Douglas Haig, Commander of the British troops in France, together with an order of the day issued by General Joffre to the French Army on the occasion of the second anniversary of the outbreak of the war. The order of General Joffre follows: "Soldiers of the Republic: Your third year of fighting has begun. For two years past you have been supporting with unflinching strength the weight of an implacable conflict. You have caused all the plans of our enemies to fail. You vanquished them on the Marne, you checked them on the Yser, and you beat them in the Ardennes and in the champagne, at a time when they were vainly seeking victory on the plains of Russia. Then your victorious resistance, during a battle of five months, broke the German effort in front of Verdun. "Thanks to your stubborn courage, the armies of our Allies have been able to manufacture arms, the weight of which our enemies to-day are experiencing over the entire front. The moment is approaching when, under the strength of our mutual advance, the military power of Germany will crumble. "Soldiers of France, you may be proud of the work you already have accomplished. You have determined the issue through to the stars; victory is certain." (Signed) JOFFRE.

The Bombardment of Berlin. Sub-Lieutenant Antoine Marchal, who monoplaned from Nancy almost across Germany, dropped over Berlin copies of some very sensible remarks made will be held, one of our Brigade bands taking part. "The principal reasons why the Allies are 'bound to win,' made the 'world's record' of 807 miles without a stop, and would have reached the Russian lines, only some sixty miles further, had not his spark-plugs mutilated, deserves all the credit and renown which his exploit will bring him among sportsmen, all the decorations the French Government will bestow upon him, and the Austrians are sure to treat him well. Not so much the boldness of his flight through a hostile country as the remarkable humanity and good sense of his system of bombardment invites The Times to approve him and admire him, and the clever Frenchmen, whoever they are, who suggested that system. "We could bombard the open town of Berlin, and thus kill women and 'innocent children, but we are content to throw only the following 'proclamation,' begins the Sub-Lieutenant's bomb. Will the Germans remember that? Will the Allies remember that and never proceed again to those so-called 'reprisals' by which they have sometimes allowed themselves to participate in the savagery which they resent in their enemies? There is absolutely no military value in random massacres from the air, unless it be to beget a fiercer hatred and a sterner resolution among the nationals of the victims. The aerial propaganda is at least harmless. One can even imagine that for many German people, who may ponder such words as these in the monoplane manifesto: "We wish to make a repetition of the present carnage impossible, and that object will be attained if, in Germany, the people possess the right to decide questions of war and peace for themselves." The Zeppelins could carry a big cargo of German propaganda to England and France, but what German argument would appeal to a democratic people directing its own destinies?—N. Y. Times.

Shyness 'After All.

RUTH CAMERON.

What a painful thing shyness is! And how many tricks of manner that the casual observer would take for manifestations of disagreeable qualities, such as forwardness or ungaciousness or pride or an unamiable disposition, are nothing at all but signs of shyness.

We naturally associate shyness and diffidence with a retiring manner and few words.

Yet the worst sufferer from diffidence I ever knew is a noisy and incessant talker.

You Would Think She Was Forward And Proud.

She talks about herself, she reveals things that she ought to have kept secret, she makes inept remarks, she pitches her voice too high, she contradicts people, she laughs too much. Naturally she has a reputation for being forward and pushing. As a matter of fact, she is so diffident that she cannot control and handle herself, and this apparent forwardness is nothing at all but nervousness resulting from that diffidence. Afterwards she often suffers agonies of regret for her own awkwardness and seeming presumption, and cries half the night over some inept thing she has said.

In the preface to Fanny Burney's diary there is an interesting passage, bearing on this point.

Some Manifestations of Shyness. "Her diffidence," says the commentator, referring to Fanny, "ran in the family. Dr. Burney's polished manners concealed it; Fanny suffered from it through life; it has made her cousin Edward less known as a painter than he well deserved to be; and the two apparent exceptions—Fanny's sister Charlotte and her cousin Richard—may have been, one, somewhat flippant, the other a coxcomb by design, out of a well-known turn taken by excessive diffidence."

Pride is another quality for which shyness is often taken.

There was a girl in college whom we all shunned because she was so proud.

And So We Punished Her.

"It she thinks we aren't good enough for her," we said, "we won't bother her."

I have since found out that the chief thing she desired in college was friendship, but that she had been brought up almost entirely among older people and did not know how to meet younger people on their own ground.

The resulting diffidence we took for pride and treated her accordingly. Those who suffer from diffidence and shyness have enough to contend with without any harsh judgments from others.

The Rossley Company Returning.

This talented troupe and first theatrical company ever taken out of St. John's, Nfld., will leave Sydney on Friday next for home. Every member of the company will be returned to their homes by the Rossleys. The girls are all in the very best of health and spirits and have had the treat of their lives. They have not been hard worked, as they have only played in three towns where there were daily matinees, New Glasgow, Yarmouth and St. John, N.B. They had a return engagement at New Glasgow having played in the Academy of Music twice in twelve weeks. There has been the greatest care taken of every girl, and on a glance at them on their arrival in St. John's will prove the Rossleys have more than lived up to their word, and when one thinks Mrs. Rossley had had for nearly six months twenty girls to look after, that lady has certainly not been on a pleasure trip. Mr. Rossley has a return engagement at every Theatre they played in.

When the Rossleys and their company started out in February they were unknown, theatrical managers knew the Rossleys but not what their company were capable of. They have made a splendid reputation for themselves; now every manager wants the company back again; clergymen, press and public have welcomed the Rossley Company. The troupe have had lots of invitations to motor parties, boating parties and picnics by the finest people in the country; hotel proprietors all speak well of the good conduct and general behaviour of the girls while in the hotels. These months of travel has been a great education to the youngsters; they have met many Newfoundlanders who were delighted at the appearance of the company.

The girls are a credit to Mr. and Mrs. Rossley and their trustworthy matron, an English lady of refinement. Orth and Buckhardt who had Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir,—In making a collection for "The Cot Fund," we heard complaints from some persons that they were always giving but never saw any acknowledgment of their money.

I do not think they could have been members of the W.P.A., as they could have heard the collections read at every meeting. We have compiled a list and ask you if you will kindly publish it in your paper, so that those who have complained will see that their money has been acknowledged and properly spent.

Yours truly,

TITLES.

Titles, like automobiles, are so numerous nowadays as to be no longer distinctive or singular. The great reverence that we used to feel towards a Sir or Lady So-and-so has almost died out, and perhaps many titles to-day arouse in us feelings rather opposite to reverence. Not acts of valour to-day but "pull" and money too often lead to a title. Nobility of character generally goes under the name of John Smith which remains unadorned to the end of the chapter. However, this by the way. We were chatting the other night about newspapers and someone spoke about the wonderful line of news which appears now and again: "Everything quiet in police circles last night!" There were several other criticisms and principally one against the attaching a husband's title to his wife. As for instance, Mrs. Dr. So-and-so, Mrs. Hon. So-and-so. This was termed absolutely wrong and I believe it was called an Americanism! It does seem rather unnecessary. It cannot be a distinguishing mark, as we never see Mrs. Thasmoth Brown, Mrs. Grocer Smith, Mrs. Chemist Green, or Mrs. Banker Blue. My friend's criticism seems reasonable.

BADGES.

This subject leads to the subject of badges or armlets, which seems to have become a standing joke. As the editor of this paper has pointed out, the time has arrived for badges also for returned, unfit-for-service men, and I hope the Committee on Badges has considered this. Personally, as regards armlets or badges for those who have not seen service, I do not know exactly where the Committee is going to begin and where it is going to end. There are those who have volunteered and been turned down, all worthy young men, but what about those who have families or others dependent upon them, who have refrained from volunteering for this reason, though anxious to go? Perhaps the Committee is hesitating on this account. It is a ticklish proposition. I notice that a badge is being designed (in England I think) for women-workers in the war. In this case also it is not only those who work at munitions or in Red Cross Societies who deserve them. There are mothers and wives who work quietly but nevertheless just as effectively for the Empire. The tribute which Archbishop Roche pays them is a just one. After all, in a time like this it seems so foreign to the main work to speak about rewards. It is as if there were whole hosts of people who are not deserving of reward. I may as well say that I am no believer in flag-waving, in badge wearing, or empty titles. A man is what he is, and nothing can alter that. Of course I recognize that the armlets for those who were not accepted as volunteers are intended in some way to shame those who have not volunteered. As far as this goes

I scarcely think that it will accomplish the object in view. A personal canvas of these young men would prove far more satisfactory.

MONEY ORDERS FOR VOLUNTEERS.

A volunteer was mystified the other day because he could not obtain a money order after six o'clock at a Post Office. I understood that it was impossible for him to get leave during the day and he could not see how he was to get the order. I should think the Postal authorities ought to be able to arrange for the extension of the time for closing the money order offices. And in addition, if a postal official were sent down to Headquarters for the few days when the volunteers are getting paid, it would be very convenient for them to buy money orders without leaving the barracks, and also be an invitation to many to spend money away instead of perhaps spending it easily in St. John's. I think the Postal Service would do well to act on this suggestion and assist the volunteers in this way.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS.

In view of the seriousness of this disease and of its "spreading capabilities" might not the Council instruct the Public Health Officer to publish a memorandum of its character and cause, and give us some information that will enable us to prevent its making a home here.

CO-OPERATION.

Speaking in general terms, the burden of sorrow which is everyday piling up by reason of the war, is at the same time being lightened to some extent, by the sympathetic "fellow-feeling" which draws the sufferers together. In many cases the knowledge that someone next door has also lost a son or a brother draws one from one's own sorrow to sympathize with that one. Fear, Suffering, Death—these seem to bring us all on a level. It brings within speaking distance the aristocrat, the millionaire and the poor man. How good it would be if we began just here, (remember it is not a low level) and judged everyone of our fellows from the level of sympathy even when Fear, Death or Suffering was absent? One great good that can come out of this war is co-operation. It is the key-note of the war. It is the "one clear call"—let us get together. The test will come after the war. Shall we be strong enough to continue the co-operation? As we now co-operate with men and money to win the war, shall we co-operate after the war in carrying out the ideals of brotherhood that we speak so much of now? Shall we be content to let "wealth accumulate" while "men decay"? Shall we be content to let the mere accident of money take away the opportunity of any child to become educated; not only in a book-sense, but in every sense of the term? Shall we be content to let the possession of money dictate the terms upon which a man shall pay for the means to live, and determine his station in the world? If we look around and notice some who have made wealth and are living in luxury and also notice others who have not wealth, we can easily see that somehow the world has not partitioned the prizes in proportion to ability or industry, but rather in some way in which luck was the ruling element. The world seems as one in making a gamble of all its work. The food we eat, the clothes we wear, the land on which we walk, and the houses in which we live, all provide the playthings of this great game of chance. It is this gambling in business that we need less of. It has been necessary for the British Government to nationalize many industries. It is probable that if the financiers of England do not recognize that their businesses should be run more in the public interest than heretofore, the people of England, after the war, will demand more Government control, and they will get it, because they will have the power as the real victors of the war. The words of W. T. Stead ought to sound a warning: "No necessary work can long be left neglected, and if millionaires will not distribute their own wealth and use their great position with great souls and great hearts, they will find that they will come to be regarded by the hungry and thirsty Demos much as compensation reservoirs are regarded by the cities which have constructed them. These great fortunes will come to be regarded as the storage service upon which mankind may draw in seasons of scarcity and draught. That is the use which society will make of its millionaires, if millionaires do not anticipate the inevitable by utilising their millions for the public good." That this matter of co-operation will have to be considered after the war is shown by the sentence in Mr. Asquith's recent speech, when he speaks of the "reformation after the war of a policy of social and industrial matters, intended to secure a fairer distribution among all classes of the result of modern industry." Mr. Asquith always uses his words carefully, and he would never have used these unless he had felt that "distribution" has not been fair.

The Cause of Appendicitis Not Definitely Known

The commonest cause of appendicitis is constipation. Every doctor says so. When you require physic, don't use a cheap drastic pill—get Dr. Hamilton's Pills, which are made from the private formula of one of the greatest physicians. Dr. Hamilton's Pills strengthen the stomach, regulate the bowels and prevent any tendency to appendicitis. In one day you feel the tremendous benefit of Dr. Hamilton's Pills. By purifying the blood and cleansing the system they prevent headaches, lift depression and drive away weariness. No medicine so successful as Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Kaiser Issues Passionate Appeal TO THE GERMAN PEOPLE.

Declares that the Iron Hurricane Rages Against the German Troops, and That the Hour of Destiny for the Fatherland Has Arrived. London, July 27.—A letter from Kaiser Wilhelm passionately appealing to the German people to stand firm and unwavering no matter how the tide of battle flows, has been printed in all the German papers. The letter was circulated by the semi-official Wolff News Agency. Dated from the front in the west, the letter says: "The battle is raging huge beyond all previous imagination. Reluctantly, perfectly equipped with all they want, Russia's armies again have broken again our bulwarks in the east. This has eased the situation in Italy. France has experienced a regeneration in this war of which she hardly believed herself capable. She has dragged her dilatory English ally into joining the offensive on the Somme, and whatever inward worth the British army has, it has an abundance of artillery. "The iron hurricane rages against our brave Germans. At the Somme, negroes and white men come upon us in wave after wave, in ever fresh storms, wild and sullen. Everything is at stake. The ice cold haherdashers on the Thames yearn for our holiest things. The health and life of our women and children are menaced. Even neutrals must bear punishment. Only the depths of the ocean are open to us. "What, German people, is your duty in this hour? The army wants no exhortations, it has fought superhumanly. It will fight until final victory. But the people at home—this is their duty. To suffer in silence, to bear their renunciation with dignity. Those at home are not doing these things. Not all are alive to the tremendous seriousness of the times. Are our people at home, the same people as at the beginning of the war? The writer fears not. "Let us remember that this is no ordinary rupture of ordinary life. It is the hour of destiny for our Fatherland, an hour which will influence us for centuries. We must unite in opposition to the entire world. We must co-operate in the struggle. "Any man or woman who hares his or her head or suffers despondency to enter his soul, is guilty now of treason. Every word of complaint or discouragement is a crime against our fathers, our sons and our brothers. Let us show the greatness of the German nation. "Do not jeopardize everything by petty squabbling. It is no time for internecine strife. But it is time for holding together. In this hour the best blood of the nation, mature men and budding youths, are presenting their breasts to the iron hail of the English, Russian and African hordes. Everything is at stake." This is in strange contradiction to repeated assertions from German sources that the British offensive has reached its high water mark. It is taken here to show conclusively that Germany is thoroughly alarmed.

To-day's show at the Crescent Picture Palace is one of the best week-end shows in a long while. Maurice Costello and Leah Baird are presented in "The God's Redeem" a story of the reformation of crooks, produced in two reels by the Vitagraph Company. "Locked In" is a gripping drama by the Selig Company. "The Desert calls its Own" is a powerful western feature, and "Count Em" is a lively Vitagraph comedy featuring Hughie Mack and Anita Steward. On Monday "Giadola" an Edison feature in four remarkable acts.

Little Lectures by NURSE WINCARNIS (Lecture No. 2)

"Nerves"

Our nerves are similar to an intricate network of telegraph wires. Controlled and nourished by a portion of the brain—known as the nerve centres—the delicate thread-like nerves radiate in all directions throughout the body. So long as the nerve centres are capable of continually supplying nourishment to the nerves, the nerves will remain strong and healthy. But directly the nerve centres become weakened by overwork, worry or anxiety, they are unable to transmit the necessary nourishment, and the nerves become worn out and "on edge." Then it is that a sudden sound makes you "jump"—you get irritable—you suffer from neuralgia—you are restless and depressed. In this condition there is nothing to equal

Because, being a powerful nerve food, Wincarnis gets right to the root of the trouble, and by creating a supply of new nerve force, stimulates and re-vitalises the whole nervous system. Try Wincarnis for "Nerves." It is wonderful. Over 10,000 Doctors recommend it. Begin to get well FREE. Send the Coupon for a free trial bottle—not a mere taste but enough to do you good. Remington UMC
All round favorites
Good sportsmen never "blame the birds" if they miss, but they want to be mighty sure that their gun and shells are right, before they start. That's why Remington UMC Pump Guns and Shells are "away up front." They back you up with clean shooting, hard hitting and freedom from all bother.

The Remington UMC Pump Gun
Velvet-smooth action. Hammerless, bottom ejection, solid breech, 6 shots, SAFE. Probably the most popular gun in use to-day for either field or trap work. For smokeless shells there's the "Arrow," the aristocrat amongst shells—the "Nitro Club," the popular "speed shell," both steel lined, and the "Remington," popular for field or traps. The famous "New Club" just suits the black powder user.

The dealer who shows the Red Ball trade mark of Remington UMC can supply your every ammunition need.

Loss of the S. S. Samuel Blandford.

Yesterday the Telegram reported that the s.s. Samuel Blandford, Capt. Wilson, bound here with a cargo of Anthracite coal from New York to Job Bros. & Co., Ltd., her owners, was wrecked to the westward, this information being supplied by the Colonial Secretary. Later in the afternoon Mr. R. B. Job had a message that the ship had struck the "Keys" at St. Mary's and had become a total wreck, the crew escaping in boats to St. Joseph's. Mr. Job then wired for particulars. Mrs. Wilson, wife of the captain, received this message from her husband: "Samuel Blandford struck St. Mary's Keys; all hands well, at Salmonier." Last night the owners of the ship received the following from Salmonier: "Struck the Keys and got off; before we could reach land, stokehold flooded; we left her. Leaving here Saturday evening." The crew will reach town by to-night's train when no doubt details of the loss of the vessel will be learned. A message received this morning stated that she was submerged and starting to go to pieces.

The ill-fated ship was forty-four years old, being formerly the "Newfoundland," was one of our best known sealing vessels and made history in this colony long to be remembered. In the year 1872 she was built and launched at Montreal to the order of Mr. Andrew Allan, then the principal of the Allan Line Co., who used her as a yacht. Subsequently she was engaged as an Allan boat, running the mail service between Halifax and this port. A few years later she took part in the prosecution of our sealfishery, but she was not very successful. In the spring of 1914, when still the s.s. Newfoundland, she figured prominently in a terrible disaster when 77 members of her crew were frozen to death. After that she was purchased by Capt. Davis, of Greenspond, from her then owners, Messrs. A. J. Harvey & Co. In 1915 she was forbidden to prosecute the sealing voyage, being pronounced unseaworthy. She was fitted up and used as a freight carrier by Captain Davis, who, after having the ship 11 months in his possession, during which time he made handsome profits, sold out his interests to Job Bros. & Co., Ltd. The new owners had the ship dry docked and reclassified. Thousands of dollars were spent, rebuilding her above the water line, including the building of a new deck and the attention to her engines. When finished she was re-named the "Samuel Blandford," in memory of the late veteran and successful seal hunter of this country. Last spring she prosecuted the sealfishery with much success. The loss of the ship at this particular juncture, when the tonnage problem is such a vital issue the whole world over, is not only great to the local marine and mercantile fleet, but will be keenly felt by her owners, as it may be mentioned that the ship not long since came out of dry dock at New York where more improvements were made to her at additional expense. She was bound here coal laden when she left her homes in St. Mary's Bay.

Why— Just hike up to the ball game, Mingle with the bleacher boys, Just root hard for your favourites, Yell and make a lot of noise, Do some fanning with your neighbors, And before the game's half through Boy Run Over and is Badly Injured.

Clarence Day, aged 9 years, of 42 Mallock Street, now lies at the General Hospital as a result of an accident he met with yesterday evening. A few minutes before six o'clock he was run over by a passing express team on Hayward Avenue. A wheel of the vehicle went over the boy's left leg. He tried to stand up but was unable, and eye-witnesses of the accident rushed to his aid and brought him to his home about one hundred yards away. He was there examined by Dr. Campbell who found that young Day had sustained a compound fracture of the leg below the knee, while the flesh was lacerated; and a slight fracture of the thigh as well. The little fellow suffered much agony, but bore up bravely. The physician ordered the victim to Hospital whither he was taken in the ambulance. The young patient will be incapacitated for some time.

Sure, consult Dr. Duncan. You're suffering from hallucinations. After a short rest in the "Brain College," as Demon Dug would say, you'll have a more cheerful view of life.

DEDUCTION.
I rose and gazed out my window; It was only a short fleeting glance, But I heaved a deep sigh as I looked at the sky.

For I knew there was never a chance, I arose and gazed out of my window, And the sunlight shone ray after ray And the heavens were blue, so I instantly knew

That there wasn't a ball game to-day. "Bug" writes:—"How the Wanderers are not beaten beats me. Any team that can bat and do some fast base work will put it all over them. Their line up is admittedly weak, don't you think so?"

You're right, Bug; their team is weak—weak like Samson. TAKE HIM OUT.

The umpire stood behind the plate And got a cushion on his pate. He saw some stars both pink and green.

Then stopped a bottle with his bean. At that I heard a rooper say "Warm up an umpire right away." And then another bleacher wit Yelled "sure, this guy is gettin' hit."

In reply to "Fan" we have to state that there is no law against an umpire reversing his decision, should he find he made it incorrectly, except the natural law of umpires, which Don't forget the Orphans on Wednesday next.

A Word about Carpet Squares!

We have just opened the finest display of Wilton, Axminster and Tapestry Carpet Squares that have ever been seen in the Island.

These Carpet Squares are remarkable for their exquisite colors and perfect design. Beautiful old Blues and deep Brown tones are blended in a fine Wilton that is very pleasing and restful to the eye. Another—a Tapestry in quaint Grey Tints has a lovely Pompadour border of roses in subdued colors. Yet another in lovely Old Rose and Reseda.

There is also a quantity of handsome Axminster Art Squares suitable for Den, Dining-room and Library.
