Winter Care of Young Stock.

All farm stock which has attained maturity shows at once any neglect. and the loss that must necessarily attend such neglect is so apparent to even the most negligent farmer that, on the whole, mature farm stock is fairly cared for. Aged stock can-not be injured where young stock are most vulnerable. A young animal may be ruined in form and growth by a few weeks of short feed. Where a matured animal only loses in flesh, a that it takes much extra care to remedy the evil. It costs much more to start an animal growing than to keep it growing after growth has started. Calves were weaned several months ago, and possibly some have not recovered from the effects of weaning Farmers are too apt to regard the weaning of calves as of no consequence. When the "sign comes right" the calves are weaned, and very probably no especial pains are taken ly deprived. Some calves have been weaned and have not lost an ounce of flesh or been sensibly affected in result of more substantial food. But effects of weaning, especially late price calves. Such calves require peculiar care at this season. They should not only be fed sufficiently, but should be fed in such a manner that they will continue to grow. It is not enough that their mangers and racks are kept full of good hay. The best and sweetest of hay is not always enough for growing calves. The addition of the building, is not, however, the preper way.

If every member of the flock is not kept growing constantly, a few will fall behind others and become weak and crowded away from their food by the atronger members of the herd. If this is allowed to continue some will be lost during winter and others come out "spring poor." The proper way to raise stock is to raise good stock and give it the best of care, H. A. MUIRHEAD, Manager. J. M. RUDDOCK, Mechanical Superintender otherwise it will not be worth the cost of raising. Raise good stock, care for it properly, and it usually pays for the capital invested .- [Cor. Country Gentleman.

It is said to be shown by statistics Various explanations have been suggested. Dr. McLaughlin, M. P. P., says that girls study harder, and have a more delicate organization. The Montreal Star suggests as additional causes the skating rink, the low-necked dresses, and the closer confinement in badly ventilated houses. We beg leave to add, insufficient clothing in winter. Let fathers and mothers take the trouble to estimate the difference in the number and comparative warmth of the number and comparative warmth of the garments and wraps of their son and their daughter when the two go out for a walk or a sleigh ride some cold winter's day. Many girls have a silly prejudice against warm wraps ss inelegant. Just as if a Canadian girl enveloped in woollens and furs blooming with health were not a more interesting and attractive 56 KINC STREET, object any cold day than a poor shivering, chattering, pale-faced creature, with perhaps a single thickness of not very heavy material over her ordinary in-door attire. Talk about powers of endurance! We have seen many a Canadian girl abroad on a bitterly cold day trying to look comfortable with an amount of clothing in which the average young man would have about frozen to death in half an hour.
