Giving and Taking. BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.
Who gives and hides the giving hand, Nor counts on favor, fame, or praise, Shall find his smallest gift outweighs the burden of the sea, and land.

Who gives to whom has nought been gives, His gift in need, though small, indeed, As is the grass blade's wind-blown seed, Is large as earth and rich as heaven.

Forget it not, oh, man to whom A gift shall fall, while yet on earth Yes, even to the seven-fold birth secall it in the lives to come.

Who broods above a wrong in thought Sins much; but greater sin is his Who, fed and clothed with kindnesser Shall count the holy alms as nought.

Who dares to curse the hands that bless Shall know of sin the deadliest cost; The patience of the heaven is lost cholding man's unthankfulness.

For he who breaks all laws may still In Sivam's mercy be forgiven; But none can save in earth or heaven The wretch who answers good with ill.

Some One in the Room.

Elijah Crowly, my husband, was own er and captain of a coasting vessel, doing a good trade; and we occupied an old fashioned and somewhat dreary house at Stepney. Elijah liked the place more than I did, and it was on his account that we stayed there so long. I thought it could make very little difference to him where we lived, for he was at home only two or three weeks out of every ten. was often alone two months at a time; and lonely enough it was sometimes.

"Get some one whom you like to stay with you my dear," the captain said, when I told him one day how unpleasant I felt to be alone so much. "Get any one you please, and before long I hope I shall be able to stay at home with you

I took his advice, and after some inbeen left a widow with no means, and had since earned her living by needle-work; and although I had intended that the woman who came every morning to do my housework should still come, I found Emily so handy and so willing that I soon discontinued the services of the other. She was so amiable and so virtuous, that I was satisfied that I had done the best that I could do

"You may be very sure I shall not,"
I rejoined. "if it has no more foundation

The captain remained at home this time barely two weeks. On the morning that he left to take his vessel for voice, and in a tone of easy insolence, another trip, just after he had taken up "Clever thought, marm; but bless your his hat to go, he called me into his chamber, and shut the door.

wire ran from my room to hers, so that I could summon her at pleasure.

I placed the lamp upon the bureau, shaded it, and returned and closed the door. Then I drew my easy chair to the middle of the room, put on my slippers, and sat down for a few minutes before retiring. And immediately I became vexed at myself to find that I was look-ing at the drawer that held the money, and that I was feeling in my pocket see that the key was safe. I felt no alarm; I had almost cured myself of my uneasiness; but it seemed as if that money, and the danger of its custody, would obtrude upon me. In the impa tience of the moment I turned my chair half round, and looked towards the op-posite wall. The shade that I placed over the lamp confined its rays within a small circle, beyond which the bed, the furniture, the carpet, and the wall paper were obscure. In the corner, to the right of the door, was an antique, highpacked chair, a favorite piece of furni ture. As I turned my own chair from the bureau, my eyes rested on this object; and I saw by the same glance that a human figure was sitting in it!

I could not at first make out whether it was a man or a woman; I only became conscious, as I sat in be wildering, dumb, terror, that I was confronted by a stranger there in that semi-darkness—by some one who had hidden in the room quiry, I found a woman who I thought would suit me. Her name was Emily Sands, and she was a pleasant-faced woman of about forty. She told me she was I well knew. No person who has never been pleased in such as terrifying never been placed in such a terrifying ituation as that can describe the sickening feeling which for a moment takes tocked up in a room alone with a ruffian, waiting, trembling, and expecting to lear him speak, or become the object of some violence. For although, as I have said, I could not distinguish whether it was man or woman; I did not doubt that it was the former. in the search of the best that I could do give matter.

"I hope so," he said doubtfully.

"And don't you think so?" I asked.

He took out the package, and held it up.

"That is the money," I said.

He had thrust the package into his pocket, and was about to close the drawer, when his eye was caught by something within it. He started, thrust his hand into the drawer, and, taking out an object that I was well acquainted with, he bent over and scrutinized it, holding it closer to the lamp. How I did wish that I could see the expression of his face at that moment! He held in his hand an ivory miniature of my hus-band's face, a faithful picture, made by

"Whose face is this?" the robber demanded, in a voice that trembled with

"I mean to; but I shall not have time. The money was only paid me last might. But no matter, the money will be safe where it is, and there will be no danger about it; or if you don't think so, you may deposit it yourself."

My husband took little thought of possibilities, and I presume that he never once thought of money from the time he left the house until he returned. As for myself, I was not so easily satisfied. I had heard enough of house plunderings and outrages of that kind to make me afraid to keep this large amount with me. The evening wore rather long, and Emily and I sat together in the dining-room after the table was cleared, she reading aloud, and I listening, as was our custom. When the clock struck ten she haid down her book; and I took my lamp, and bridding her good night, went up to my room.

One Way of Carving a Turkey. There is nothing a young unmarried man likes better than to go to dinner at the house of a married friend and to be asked to carve the turkey. He never carved a turkey in his life, and with an old maid on one side of him, watching him closely, and on the other side a fair girl for whom he has a tenderness, he feels embarrassed when he betowards one of the thigh-joints. He can't find the joint, and he plunges the knife around in search of it until he makes mincemeat out of the whole quarter of the fowl. Then he sharpens his knife and tackles it again. At last, while making a terrific dig, he hits the joint suddenly, and the leg flies into the maiden lady's lap, while her dress-front is covered with a shower of stuffing. Then he goes for the other leg, and when the young lady tells him he looks warm, the weather seems to him suddenly to become 400 degrees warmer. This leg he finally pulls loose with his fingers. He lays it on the edge of the plate, and while he is hacking at the wing he gradually pushes the leg over on the tablecloth, and when he picks it up it slips from his hand into the gravy dish months, is it advisable to use and splashes the gravy around for six square yards. Just as he has made up his mind that the turkey has no joints to his wings, the host asks him if he thinks the war with Turkey will soon be over. The girl next to him laughs, and he says he will explain his views upon the sub-ject after dinner. Then he sops his brow them to the maiden lady, and then helps the young girl to a plateful of stuffing, and while taking her plate in return knocks over the gravy dish. Then he sits down with the calmness of despair and fans himself with a napkin, while the servant girl clears up and takes the turkey to the other end of the table. Charceal and Lime for Fewis.

Permit us again to urge all breeders of poultry who wish healthy fowls, to be liberal in supplying their fowls with charcoal. It is one of the best preventives of disease among fowls that can be named. Even if the fowls are not confined, but especially so if they are, charcoal pounded into bits or pieces about the size of a grain of corn, or a little finer, should be put around in small piles where the fowls can have trifle and where the distance from town trifle and where the distance from town or city is so great as to prevent it from and killed him instantly. Apply manure from the barnyard in liberal quantities about the trees, and if this cannot be had, break up the land and sow peas upon it, and plow these under while green and succulent, repeating the operation until the soil is rich. An application of twenty-five bushels of lime per acre would also be beneficial; but the green crops will be the most likely to help the trees. Pruning may also be done if the branches of the trees look scraggy and unhealthy; but you cannot improve the size or flavor of the fruit much, without the aid of enriching materials applied to

Ancient American Cliff and Cave Dwel

There have been just added to the South Kensington Museum, London, six models that incompetent persons can no longer successful, taking a large number of pris-(the gift of the United Soates Government), illustrating the cliff houses, cave dwellings, and lowland settlements met with through the district where the States of Utah, Colorado, Arizona, and New Mexico join. They are reduced to different scales, the cave dwellings being of smaller scale than the lowlands, since with the former the surroundings are given, while with the latter they are not. The district which may be called that of the San Juan. basin was surveyed in 1875, and last year some attention was paid to the ruins of ancient dwellings that had been previously noticed. The area examined was 6,000 square miles. The general aspect of the country is that of a semi-desert. Yet there is an bountiful evidence that at one time it supported a numerous population; there is scarcely a square mile in the whole 6,000 examined that would not furnish evidence of occupation by race totally distinct from the nomadic savages who hold it now, and in every way superior to them. The ruins of the region are those of stone structures but the remains are not so perfect as to show to what extent wood and adobe were used. The only known traces of the people beside their dwellings are flint and stone implements, tied bundles of sticks, fragments of matting, pottery, and pictures cut into the walls. A number of burial places were noted, but of the grave examined few yielded further evidences of occupation than small quantities of charcoal and bits of painted pottery. As regards the buildings, the parallelogram and the circles are the predominant forms. A greater part of the ordinary structures are square or rectangular; while attached to each groupe, and sometimes without in dication of contiguous buildings, are the ci cular ruins frequently resembling towers. The models; which are colored, give a good idea of the structures .- London Building News.

Mr. Bright has been having rather a lively time with Bishops. In a speech at Roehdale, with the old ring of earnestness and strength so characteristic of the man and an eloquence worthy even of his palmy days, he boldly attacked the Established Church, and among other illustrations of its baneful influence, pointed to a speech of the new Bishop of Truro, and the intimation it gave of his purpose to suppress Dissent. The next day came a still more emphatic repudiation of the statement from the Bishop himself, and that was followed by a manly letter from Mr. Bright, making the amende konorable in a way which ought to have ended the controversed, and which appeared to us for beyond anything which justice or courtesy required. It has been followed, however, by a series of Lomilies from a class of writers who are eager to prove their, own wisdom and moderation by administering chastisement to an extreme man like Mr. Bright, "who is becoming, don't you know, quite an agitator again."-The Congregationalist.

Constantinople and the Turks. A Constantinople correspondent writes: The climate of Constantinople is not so sarm in summer as that of New York, nor as cold in winter. But the south winds here, if they continue any length of time, are very oppressive. Neither is the air so exhilarating as that of America. The manners and customs of the Turks are altogether different from those in America. Here, men go about with bare arms and necks—there the ladies. Here all women waar trowsers and ride horse-back (or rather donkey-back) a-straddle, while many men are here a-straddle, while many men are never seen in petticoats. The American lies in bed with his feet covered and head bare, but the Turk cannot sleep without bundling up his head, and also drawing over it the bed-spread, and at the same time leaving his naked feet entirely exposed. A few days ago I went into a palace which is owned by the sultan. I found that the walls were of the simplest character throughout, while all the ceilings were gorgeously painted. With Americans it is usually the reverse. New Yorkers wash their hands before dinner (or at least ought to); the Turks wash after the meal. Among Americans the males and females of the family dine together and at the same table. Here they always dine apart, the males before the females; for the latter, being looked beings, any unnecessarily close contact would be considered highly degrading to their manliness. The Turk, however, possesses one grand redeeming quality: He is scrupulously clean, washing himself, particularly his feet, several times a day.

Eclipses for the Year 1878. There will be four eclipses this year,

A Cowhiding by Women. On Monday, says a late issue of a Salt Lake (Utah) paper, one of the young ladies employed at Mr. Colebrook's millinery establishment received an endearing note from W. A. Rooks, who is Cotton-Made well known in this city, inviting her to meet him yesterday evening near St. Mary's school. The girl, knowing his propensities, plotted with four others of her companions to go and give him a dose of "black snake." They went, but it was near the American Hotel where they found their man. Four of the girls, armed each with a good cowhide-whip, secreted themselves in the alley near by, to witness the meeting. He came, and at a convenient time they also came from their hiding place and began a vigorous slashing and belaboring with the whips. He was hit, we understand, once on the head, and once on the legs, when he drew a pretty little white-handled pocket pistol on his femi-nine tormentors. He didn't use it, however, but turned and fled, and the speed at which he ran would have shamed an the office of our morning contemporary, there to tell his straightforward tale The excited and indignant ladies followed him into the newspaper office and | Beef Cattle-Extra..... again insisted upon giving him a thor-ough cowhiding; but he had taken refuge behind the counter, where he quietly submitted to the fearful tonguelashing which was administered by one of the girls. She read him a list of his misdeeds, and presented a pretty good indictment of Rooks in general. The girls assert that they had been insulted several times by the fellow, and they took this occasion to settle an old score against him.

The propriety of giving condition medicine to horses, cattle and sheep was discussed and admitted by many of the agricultural societies throughout the State last fall, and we believe that in every case but one they decided in favor of Sheridan's Cavairy Condition Powders. Good judgment.
