NOTICE.

TO CONTRIBUTORS THROUGH OFFERTORY ENVELOPES.

The envelopes have become numerous enough to require a good deal of time in the opening. It would lighten the labour materially if each contributor would mark on the outside of the envelope the amount which is contained in it. The name is not necessary, as the register is kept by the numbers.

The Collection in the Cathedral Congregation for the Missionary Society this year was $574 or about $75 more than last year.

The Bishop held a general Ordination on St. Thomas' Day, 21st, December, when the following were ordained: Priests, Rev. George Isaac Bray Johnson, and Frederic Louis Barber; Deacons, Arthur C. Cummer, and Francis Henry Cary, and Robert H. Ferguson for the Bishop of Niagara.

Our attention has been called to a recent newspaper article headed "Financing a Cathedral: poor and rich giving," which, except in size and amounts, so closely parallels our own case that we think it will interest the readers of the MONTHLY NOTES. It is as follows:

Ten millions, it is estimated, will be spent on the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral of St. John the Divine before the great structure on Morningside Heights, New York City, is finally completed. More than $2,000,000 has already been used up in the 13 years during which work has been carried on, and in spite of the progress which the building committee consider satisfactory, little more than the outlines of the choir, one colossal arch, and one of the seven "Chapels of the Tongues" are as yet visible to the casual sightseer.

The revenues of the diocese of New York, derived chiefly from small assessments levied on Parish Churches, are barely sufficient to defray the necessary expenses of administration. The trustees of the Cathedral have to rely solely upon voluntary contributions to complete their project. The gifts which have made possible the work already done and which are making possible the erection of the rest of the structure range in size from the $600,000 given last winter by former Vice-President Levi P. Morton to the two and one-dollar bills which come from less distinguished persons. A large number of contributions are from persons living in Haarlem, from whose streets the outlines of the growing Cathedral on the heights stand out against the sky.

In 1902 the Cathedral League was organized to provide systematic means of carrying on the work. Each member of the league agrees to pay towards the erection of the Church a hundred dollars, either in a lump sum or in ten annual instalments of $10 each. The membership of the league has increased steadily, until it is now nearly 600 and in the last two years it has turned over to the Cathedral treasury $15,000. Such a sum looks small alongside of Mr. Morton's $600,000, John Jacob Astor's $100,000, and $300,000 from the Cole Estate for the endowment fund, and other gifts of six figures, but the trustees are determined that there shall be no excuse for thinking of St. John's as a rich man's Church. The article in the league's constitution opening its membership to any person "in sympathy with the erection and proper maintenance of the Cathedral," is no empty formula. One of the earliest and largest contributors to the undertaking was a well known Presbyterian, who gave $100,000 of the $750,000 paid for the site, and from time to time Presbyterian clergymen have sent smaller sums. The membership of the league itself is still practically confined to New York City, but every year two dollars comes to the Cathedral treasury from a little Vermont Town. The most striking evidence, perhaps, of the wide appeal of the Cathedral is furnished by the list of subscribers to a fund for the erection of a porch for one of the transepts. The fund was started by women, and the contribution of one of them, $2, is immediately ahead of a $5000 gift of and two annual subscriptions of $5000 each.

The great bulk of the contributions to the Cathedral are made without any restrictions whatever. In such cases half the money is spent on the building and half goes to the endowment fund in order to provide an income for the maintenance of the vast structure and the prosecution of the many and varied activities of which it is to be the centre. The wisdom of this course is apparent when one remembers that at present the revenues of the organization which is growing up around the piles of granite on Morningside Heights are derived entirely from the collections at the services.

It may be pointed out that the selection of the site for New York Cathedral was strikingly similar—proportionately—to the selection of the site of St. Alban's.
