Legal Decisions.

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the Post Office—whether directed to his name or otherwise or whether he has collected or not—is responsible for the payment.

2. If a person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay up all arrearages, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.

3. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the Post Office, or removing and leaving them uncollected, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

A SONG OF REST.

O weary hands! that all the day
Were set to labor hard and long,
Now softly fall the shadows gray,
The bells are rung for evening.
An hour ago the golden sun
Sank slowly down into the west;
Poor, weary hands, your toll is done;
'Tis time for rest!—'tis time for rest!

O weary feet! that many a mile
Have trudged along a stony way,
At last ye reach the tramping stile;
No longer fear to go astray.
The gently bending, rustling trees
Rock the young birds within the nest,
And softly sings the quiet breeze;
'Tis time for rest!—'tis time for rest!

O weary eyes! from which the tears
Fell many a time like thunder rain—
O weary heart! that through the years
Beat with such bitter, restless pain,
To-night forget the stormy strife,
And know what Heaven will send its best;
Lay down the tangled web of life;
'Tis time for rest!—'tis time for rest!

—Florence Tyle.

Interesting Story.

THE DOCTOR'S HOME.

It was Ada who gave me the first idea of what was going on. Charlie had gone back to his regiment; but she was staying with me for a day or two. The twins had gone out fishing by themselves, and Polly and Ada and I were under the lime-tree in the garden.

It was a misty, gray-tinted day. The curve of sea that was visible from our garden was a dim, hazy blue. The boys would have good fishing, we said. Ada and I were sewing; but Polly was lying flat upon the grass, with her arms clasped over her head, and her eyes fixed on the boughs. Something ailed the child. She was white-faced and thin, and there was a look on her face that I could not understand.

I was looking at her, thinking this, when my little sister's face changed suddenly, and became more beautiful than I had ever seen it. I had heard nothing to cause those exquisite blushes, that wonderful bird-like awakening of happiness. There was the sound of a step in the lane—that was all. But Polly started up, and leant against the tree, playing with her hair; and a moment afterwards Vincent Castledean came into the garden.

"There are some flowers up at the Hall that I want to show you," his voice was for me, his eyes for Polly.

"Can't you make an effort to come, Miss Fannie? They are very rare. Thomson declares they will get any number of prizes."

No; I could not walk far, and there was a steep hill to climb to get to the Hall, and Ada was too delicate for much exertion; so Polly went away alone with him.

Vincent Castledean was a handsome man—very handsome. He had beautiful soft blue eyes that had a way of gazing pathetically at you, as if pleading for love.

I quite agreed with Ada when she said as much. But her next words came like a sharp trouble.

"He is so handsome, and Polly is so young. Do you think it wise to let her be so much together, Fanny? For they can never be married."

"Why?" I asked, in the first sharpness of surprise and distress. "There, Ada, I know your answer; but trust me, Polly understands. She will not give her heart where it will be counted as a trifle of no price. Of course they would never think of each other but as friends."

"Do you imagine Vincent Castledean is a man who would think of anything but his own pleasure? If it pleased him to make Polly fall in love with him, wouldn't he do it?"

"How absurd!" I exclaimed, angry with Ada for the thought she had suggested.

At any rate, Harry and Tom were white and excited that evening. They did what I never remembered before—they quarrelled with each other.

It was a fierce dispute about something concerning wind and tide; but there was a look of Cain in Harry's eyes as he kept at Tom. I managed to get the dispute from going farther than words; but the boys would not look at each other for the rest of the evening, and sat in different parts of the room, with haggard, miserable faces that made my heart ache.

Polly came into my room that night, looking very ghostly in her white dressing-gown.

"Harry has gone out upon the sands," she said catching hold of my hands in a frightened, pitiful way. "Oh, Fanny, this is terrible!"

"What is it?" I asked. "What is the matter with the boys to-night?"

"It is Florence Castledean. She is driving them mad with her pretty face. They are both in love with her, and she likes it. I wish they had never come here. I wish—"

"Polly, tell me truly!" I exclaimed, determined to know all the truth at once. "Isn't it worse than you have said? Has not Vincent fallen in love with you?"

"Oh, no, no!" she said, in pitiful humility. "He couldn't fall in love me. We ought never to have known them!"

"But you love him? Tell your sister, Polly. Do not let us spoil our lives with secrets?"

"Poor little Polly!"

"Could I help it!" she cried. "Oh, I love him dearly! But I shall get over it. I know how far he is above me. In a month or two I shall have forgotten him, for he is going away."

Poor little Polly, clinging to me, and speaking so pitifully, with quivering lips.

"He shall never see you again! He is a cruel, wicked man?" I cried.

"No; it wasn't his fault. How did he know I was so silly!"

And she broke down in a passion of angry tears.

I soothed her and kissed her, and saw her safe in bed, and then—ah, our childish days were all over—home would never be home again—I went down to Tom.

moment. "It is my last evening too. I am going up to London to-morrow."

"Come in! Certainly! But wear out of all sorts to-day. Polly is ill."

His face flushed warmly. I could not help seeing that.

"Not really ill?"

"She has one of her dreadful headaches."

"He did not say any more for a moment, but stood tapping his boot with his cane."

"Is your sister going too?" I asked.

"Yes—no. That is, she is going up in a day or two. She will call and bid you good-bye to-morrow. But I have business which I must see about at once. I hope Doctor Acherly is well?"

A pleasant conversation we were having. We both felt extremely awkward and confused, I think, and I was thankful when he shook hands and went away.

The Doctor was late for dinner, and it was deep dusk when the meal was over. The twins never spoke a word to anybody. Oh, my darlings, shall I ever forget that last night? Can I ever forgive the woman who worked such woe for us?"

Ada had gone to her room very early. She was getting very frail and delicate; for it was the beginning of the end for her. My head was aching, too; so, when I had poured out a cup of tea for Polly, I told the twins that I should not come down-stairs again. They were sitting opposite to each other, and I kissed them both, first Tom and then Harry. I thought "Could I help it!" she cried. "Oh, I love him dearly! But I shall get over it. I know how far he is above me. In a month or two I shall have forgotten him, for he is going away."

Poor little Polly, clinging to me, and speaking so pitifully, with quivering lips.

"He shall never see you again! He is a cruel, wicked man?" I cried.

"No; it wasn't his fault. How did he know I was so silly!"

And she broke down in a passion of angry tears.

I soothed her and kissed her, and saw her safe in bed, and then—ah, our childish days were all over—home would never be home again—I went down to Tom.

No sound, no cry came from Polly's room—not the slightest movement could I hear.

Polly told me afterwards that she had a consciousness of my near presence all night. In the gray of the early dawn, just as the note of the first awakened bird sounded through the stillness, she opened her door. I rose up to meet her, and she threw her arms around me, and drew me into the room. She did not speak; she only clung to me with the full eloquent look of affection in her eyes.

We sat down on the window-seat, Polly resting in my arms, with her face on my shoulder, and her tender clasp about my neck. We never spoke a word, but sat there while the birds all woke up and sang loudly and shrilly through the dewy air, and the freshness and stillness of dawn passed into the busy stir and sunny radiance of morning.

The east had reddened and paled again, and the sun was up over the garden trees, and day had come fully to us, when Polly slipped from my arms, and stood erect on the floor.

"What an exquisite morning," she remarked, in her bright tones—not quite so bright as usual, though she tried to make them so—poor Polly! "We'll make the twins take us out to Hartland Point, Fan, and have a jolly day."

"So we will!" I answered, following up the suggestion at once, only too willing to count the past as nothing; and I sat by the window and chatted on common things, while Polly changed her dress and fastened up her hair.

"I shall wear my hair up," she said, putting her head on one side to observe the effect. "I am going to have done with childish things."

The twins did not come in to breakfast; but I did not feel uneasy. They were always very irregular in their meals.

About the middle of the morning Florence Castledean called to bid us good-bye. A Polly was the coolest of us all. I fancied Florence was struggling with some strong emotion, though she tried to behave as usual.

We parted like simple acquaintances. She murmured some indistinct wish about hoping to see us again; but I made no answer. I could only pray that I might never look on her fair, false face again.

She had not been gone a minute or two when I had another visitor.

At the bottom of the lane there was a small cottage, which was inhabited by an old woman who got her living by knitting. We were good friends, and I often went to see her; but it was rare indeed that she came to us. I went out to meet her in the garden path, and helped her to a seat under the trees, for she would not come into the house.

"My talk's to you, Miss Fannie. Where's Master Harry?"

"Not come in yet. Do you want him?"

The old woman laid her shrivelled hand upon mine.

"Pray Heaven he comes in safe! There was a look on his dear face that meant death this morn."

THE ACADIAN

WOLFVILLE, N. S., DEC. 10, 1886

OUR SIDE-WALKS.

The idea of having some system by which our side-walks may be cleared from snow and made passable for ladies and children during the winter is not a new one.

DANGEROUS.

On Saturday last an accident occurred which might have been attended with fatal results and laid the Municipality open to action for heavy damages.

Since the courts have decided that the municipalities are liable for any damage that may befall on account of any dangerous locality in close proximity to a public thoroughfare being left unprotected, it would be well for our councillor to bring to the notice of the council at their next meeting the dangerous state of this locality, as it was nothing short of a miracle that the horse on this occasion was not killed outright and the occupants of the carriage seriously injured.

ORDER OF UNITED TEMPLARS.

A total abstinence society called the Order of United Templars has recently been organized in the United States, by persons having a large experience in connection with existing total abstinence societies.

We are pleased to note that several Nova Scotians figure quite prominently at the meetings, and fill some of the most important offices.

dent of Wolfville, was elected Grand Master; Mr J. D. Wright, also a former resident of this place, is chairman of committee on appeals; H. Fraser, of Pictou, is chairman of the finance committee; and Jas. McDonald, of Lockport, is Grand Marshal.

The organization embraces all the principles of other temperance societies, together with a mutual relief system second to none in the United States; and from the manner in which it is extending its operations, and the principles it embraces, it is bound to take a prominent place among the temperance organizations of the day.

AN IMPORTANT WORK.

We have received a small pamphlet entitled "Scientific Dairy Practice, or Profitable Dairy Agriculture for Canadian Farmers," written by William H. Lynch, and published at Ottawa, aided by the Dominion government.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MEETING.

The first of a series of gospel temperance meetings, under the auspices of Acadia Lodge, I. O. G. T., was held in the Baptist church on Tuesday evening.

ATHENS OF THE PRESENT.

(Extracts from a letter by a lady.)

ATHENS, Oct., 1886.

I was the only lady in the saloon and met with much courtesy from the Greek and Turkish passengers—perhaps prompted thereby by one of the rules of the steamship which, translated, reads: "Passengers having a right to be treated like persons of education, will, no doubt, conform themselves to the rules of good society by respecting their fellow-travellers and paying due regard to the fair sea."

MARINE NOTES.

On the evening of Friday, the 3d inst., the schr. Atwood, captain Holmes, sailed from Port Williams, lumber-laden for Boston.

XMAS PRESENTS for 1886!

Main Street, Wolfville, Dec 10th, 1886

Read Carefully.

Burpee Witter's Dry Goods store and Millinery Department presents as unusually attractive appearance this season.

The West window of the main store is filled with Grey Cottons from the Windsor and Gibson mills. The Gibson cottons are equal in quality to the best American unbleached cloth; and as they were bought previous to the advance in cottons will be sold at the same price as last season.

The East window is tastefully dressed with Black and Colored Velveteens, Dress Goods, Wool Shawls, etc.

The first thing that attracts your attention at the West counter is the large stock of Corsets. No lady can fail to get suited here for every size is kept in stock from 18 to 36, and the prices range from 50c to $2.25.

GENTS' FURNISHINGS.—Particular attention has been paid to this department. A new stock of Shirts, Collars, Neckties, Gloves and Handkerchiefs has just been opened. Latest styles; low prices.

Ladies' Gossamers, Wool Hosiery, Oxford Yarns, Ladies Under Vests, Men's and Boys' Underclothing fill the other shelves at this counter.

The Black and Colored Dress Goods occupy a large space at the East counter. Mourning Goods are made a specialty. There are now in stock 25 pieces of Black Cashmere, Otoman, Crape and Canvas Cloths from 15c to $1.75 per yard; and all the latest styles in Colored Dress Goods from 10c to $1.00.

The Cloth Department is overstocked! and in order to reduce the stock a discount of 10 percent will be allowed on cloths of every description including some very desirable Mantle Cloths just opened. Gentlemen requiring cloths for a new Overcoat or Suit should look through this stock before making their purchases, as positive bargains will be given for cash.

In the Clothing and Carpet Rooms upstairs will be found a large stock of Men's, Youths' and Boys' Overcoats and Ulsters, Men's and Boys' Suits, Hump, Wool and Tapestry Carpets, Floor Oil Cloths, Trunks and Valises, Oil Cloth Goods in Wagon Boots, Horse Covers, Coats and Pants, Aprons etc.

Large Discounts will be made on Men's Overcoats.

WANTED!—200 lbs Good Table Butter every week. Eggs and other Merchandise Produce taken as usual.

Choice Miscellany.

Why Maids Will Wed.

A good wife rose from her bed one morn And thought with nervous dread Of the piles of clothes to be washed...

It had rained in the night and all the wood

Was wet as it could be. There were puddings and pies to bake And a loaf of cake for tea...

The farmer went back to the field

And the wife, in a smiling, absent way, Sang gathches of tender little songs She'd not sung for many a day...

The night came down—

The good wife smiled to herself as she said: "Tis so sweet to labor for those we love, It is not strange that maidens will wed."

Ambition.

"What is ambition?" To answer this question let us take an illustration. We see a boy just starting out upon the rough journey of life...

Now this is one instance of ambition and we may take it as a sample, although every man has a different object he is in pursuit of...

Now we will suppose we all have ambition, we long to do something to help our fellow men...

The earth's surface, or some new discovery in astronomy, or again to solve some historical mystery...

Then there is the trouble of laziness. There are times when we feel tired and fagged out; an hour's amusement will cure it...

Now, young men, I am a young man myself; I want to say a few words to you. No matter in what grade of society you may be...
