AEROPLANES AND THE WAR

This war has done more, during the one year of its duration than any other cause in like period, to develop the higher mechanics.

Among the most notable developments have been those in airplanes, both aeroplanes and Zeppelins. Among the special purposes for which aeroplanes have been particularly developed are: scouting, courier service, map making, bomb dropping, and aircraft destruction.

For scouting, heavily built high-power and very speedy planes were constructed and arranged to carry only two men. They were sent out to locate the enemy and report immediately all important facts. Their trips were frequent but short. The planes for courier service were much the same, though usually designed for somewhat longer journeys.

For map making the planes were much the same as those for courier service and designed to carry two men, but they were equipped with special apparatus. It was necessary for the topographer or map maker to leave the driver follow exactly above the particular section which he was to plot. The noise of the engine would make it impossible for the two to communicate. Accordingly, a special telephone system is installed between them, with a transmitter secured in front of each mouth and receivers over the ears of each. So, as the topographer follows the country beneath him, he can give, easily and distinctly, as he goes, the necessary data to the driver. But it would be impossible for the driver to make full notes and draw details of maps of the whole section at the rate at which the machine travels. To overcome this, a phonograph is used. Instead of writing notes, the topographer dictates notes into the phonograph which duly records them. At the same time, he makes his map by hand. When he returns to headquarters, he puts the record on and reproduces the notes.

The bomb dropping planes are more powerful and designed for both longer journeys and greater carrying powers. They are fitted with a special bomb dropping appliance which may be operated automatically as the machine reaches certain positions directly above the objects in which the bombs are to be dropped.

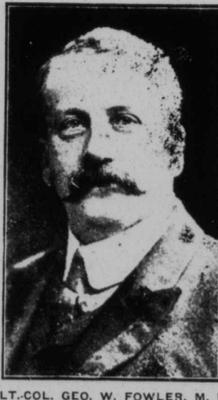

The planes equipped for destruction of other air craft are the most powerful of all and have their cars or baskets armored to deflect bullets and shrapnel. They are armed with one or more special high power air-craft guns, specially mounted to fire at almost any angle and in almost any direction.

Rumor says that Russia has developed an enormous tri-plane capable of terrific speed and carrying a crew of sixteen men and a very heavy load of bombs or explosives. It is said that this monster can travel at very high speed for very long distances, even when carrying its maximum load, and great things are promised for it.

The German submarine policy has been a fiasco and their wonderful Zeppelins have done no more than arouse curiosity as to when, if ever they will make a raid of any real consequence. On the other hand, the aeroplanes of the Allies have done wonderful work of many kinds throughout the war and, with the advent of Russia's rumored aerial giant we may look for something really startling.

I. C. R. Employee Died in Harcourt

Harry Wathen, Former Postal Clerk of I. C. R. Died Wednesday

Mr. Harry Wathen, who has been critically ill at his home in Harcourt passed away at half past three o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Wathen, who was in the 70th year of his age, was well known all over the Government system of railways. For some thirty-five years he was postal clerk on the I. C. R., running between Campbellton and Moncton, and only retired from the service a few years ago. He was a native of Kent County, and had resided at Harcourt for many years. He was a veteran salmon and trout fisherman, in which branch of sport he was a recognized authority. He was secretary-treasurer of the Adowwoosook Fishing Club almost ever since it was organized, and was held in the highest esteem by the members of that organization.

The late Mr. Wathen was a man of high integrity, and he enjoyed the confidence and respect of all with whom he came in contact in his business or social way. His genial disposition won for him many warm friends, and his death is being mourned with sincere regret along the I. C. R. where he was so well known.

The deceased is survived by one son, John A. Wathen, merchant, of Harcourt, and five daughters, Miss Trinda, at home; Mrs. S. M. Dunn, Harcourt; Mrs. W. G. Thorber, Millerton; Mrs. Williamson, Greenwick; Mrs. Fox of Toronto.

Sixteen Year Old Engineer Drowned

Frank Crosbie, Engineer on Tug Boat Arthur, Drowned at Chatham

A very sad drowning accident occurred on the river, opposite Chatham Wednesday afternoon, about 3 o'clock, when Frank Crosbie, the sixteen year old son of Alex. Crosbie lost his life. Young Crosbie was engineer on the Dominion Pulp Co's. small steamer Arthur.

At the time of the accident the tug was towing a scow of pulp across the river from the company's mill to the Canada Lock, at the lower end of the town. Captain P. McCreary and Crosbie were the only persons on the boat or scow at the time. It seems that Crosbie spoke to the captain about the tarpaulins on the scow and evidently went to make them fast. A few minutes afterwards the captain heard Crosbie calling out and on looking out of the wheel house saw him in the water about eighty feet astern. The captain immediately ran below, reversed the engines and cut the scow clear and backing the scow where he had seen Crosbie last. In the meantime some person on the company's other boat saw that something was wrong with the tug and immediately went to her assistance, but although both boats searched around for some time they saw no trace and evidently had to give up.

The body has not yet been recovered.

The funeral of the late Torrance P. Graham took place on Thursday, Sept. 23rd, at St. Andrew's Church. The service was conducted by the Rev. W. J. Bate, pastor. The floral tributes were many and beautiful including a pillow from wife and sons with word "papa."

Newcastle's Board of Trade Active on their lots. The Pulp Co. had paid $150,000 for lands that no lumberer would want and had every interest in keeping their pulp lands continually productive. Penalizing stumpage would destroy the Pulp business.

Monday's Meeting

The Board of Trade had the pleasure of the attendance of Hon. Geo. J. Clark, Premier and Minister of Lands and Mines, Hon. J. A. Murray, Minister of Agriculture, and Hon. John Morrissey, Minister of Public Works, at their meeting Monday afternoon. Hon. D. Morrison was chairman. A large number of members were present.

The Secretary, Mr. E. A. McCurdy, spoke of the Agricultural College wanted by the North Shore. The lumber industry could not be depended on to always last. We must look to the farming interests and give our boys a chance to get an agricultural education. J. D. Creaghan and Adm. H. H. Stuart spoke on the same subject. Hon. D. Morrison spoke about the great difficulty in getting land under the Labor Act. Some had been three or five years getting it. The government seemed to be under the impression that this country was good only for lumber. But we had good farm lands also. And our young men were forced to leave the country. The policy of the government was to let settlers on the land. One of our own boys was worth three immigrants. One of the complaints was that the Department employed a man who goes around with a spade here and there and reports that the land is unfit for settlement. They had better get a man who knows something about it. We knew some land was not good for settlement, but there was much that was good.

Premier Clark said that the chairman's statement was sufficient to bring it to the government's attention. The Agricultural College would be settled on its merits. It was the government's policy that the North Shore should have a College as soon as possible. It afforded him much pleasure to meet so many business men from the county. The Labor Act provided for locating settlers on land. It contained certain conditions by which land is acquired. The Premier stated that in the case of the lumberman cutting trees smaller than 10 inches in diameter, the penalty would be paid to the settler or the government. He cited the case of past had been that man had set fire on your land. He was being investigated, had left the country. True, the soil was examined when grants were asked. The aim was to set off localities for settlement and to determine what was good for farming. It was important that settlers should be settled where they could make a good living. One of the most frequent questions brought before him was this matter of settlement. The law provided that certain conditions must be fulfilled—certain clearings made—buildings erected—actual residence for three years, etc.—before he can get grant. Applications were largely dealt with by the Department. He had been informed that in every case of refusal the applicant had not complied with the law. He didn't think that any application had been refused where all the conditions of the law had been complied with. When soil was examined it was sent to Ottawa and analyzed. And when report was unfavorable settlement was discouraged. So far as he was concerned, no bona fide applicant for land would be turned down.

Hon. Mr. Morrison said that when one was in the way of getting a grant, along came someone and stripped his land of everything down to five inches. The applicant had the right to cut the ten acres he clears, and no one else had the right to cut on the rest of the land, down to five inches. Hon. Mr. Morrison brought up the case was that just before the issuing of the grant, the lumberman cut down everything to four or five inches. The applicant should have a most rigorous regulation the lumber. He knew of two or three Rogersville people who lost their lands by not living all the time on them. The object was to get settlers, and here the object had miscarried.

Hon. J. A. Murray said he had acted Minister of Lands and Mines for nine months. The difficulty he had found was that applicant would go on land before it was examined, and then felt sore when the examination proved unfavorable and the application was refused. When application is approved, the land is taken from the Dominion fund. The day after that no lumberman had the right to go on the land. Hon. Mr. Morrison—He does go on. Hon. Mr. Murray—Then he is a trespasser. Hon. Mr. Morrison—This applicant, not having a grant, has no remedy at law. Hon. Mr. Murray said that it was difficult to keep trespassers off land, but there was a continuous effort to preserve the land for the settlers. Every complaint would be looked into and adjusted. The Premier said that evidently there was lots of misinformation abroad in reference to the administration of the Labor Act. The latter part of the day was necessary provided that when it was necessary to leave the land to earn a living.

the man could do so for four or five months a year. If the Rogersville man had not exceeded his limit and had complied with all the conditions he could have held his land. Lumbermen have the right to cut all logs of the grant down to a log 10 ft. long and 9 inches at top end. Hon. Mr. Morrison—But they do worse than that. The Premier said that if a body of men could be got who could prevent every violation of law made them the government at once. His experience was that it was impossible to follow every violator. If the government were given evidence that amounted to proof, they would cut, the one who cut it would have to pay double stumpage and other costs. In so far as it is possible for the Department to prevent this, it will be prevented. If attention is called to it, and any penalty provided by the law will be imposed. The government hoped to see the lumber of the province that the lumber industry would never fail. The government was considering a survey and classification of the Crown lands. They felt that would be one of the best things ever done and would greatly benefit both lumbermen and intending farmers. He was looking forward to this movement, which would take some time to complete. They expected popular sympathy in this move. The classification of lands would largely remove grievances and grants. They would know then just where the agricultural lands were. He thought many complaints were based on false information. He and his Department would do their utmost to see that justice should be done. J. D. Creaghan said he was very glad to learn of the Government's intention to classify the Crown lands. The feeling was abroad in the North Shore that the lumbermen were antagonized by the lumbermen. His interests should be identical. He mentioned two villages that had been depopulated because the lumber would not stay on the land. Some effort should be made to rehabilitate those farms and have natives settle on them. He himself thought he owned a piece of land in Tabusintac. It had been continuously occupied since 1845, until it was included in Snowball's license, and when he (Creaghan) had lately gone to the Crown Land office he had been told he had no title and would have to buy the land at public auction. He knew he had no chance bidding against a lumberman. If one wanted a piece of land near a house the latter would buy it up if possible. The settler on whom his rights depended had no grant, but had lived on the land for years. It should be possible to buy government land reasonably. He would like to buy some land, but did not like to be at the mercy of lumbermen.

Hon. Mr. Morrison asked what was the policy of the government selling fifty acre woodlots to farmers with no wood. It was contemplated that such lots could not be sold. The Premier said that a bona fide farmer without any wood on his own land might get a wood lot from the government if there were no lumber on the lot. It was not the government's policy to sell any lumber lands to anybody. Isolated Crown lands might be sold. Men often came to Crown Land office would be settled on its merits. It was the government's policy that the North Shore should have a College as soon as possible. It afforded him much pleasure to meet so many business men from the county. The Labor Act provided for locating settlers on land. It contained certain conditions by which land is acquired. The Premier stated that in the case of the lumberman cutting trees smaller than 10 inches in diameter, the penalty would be paid to the settler or the government. He cited the case of past had been that man had set fire on your land. He was being investigated, had left the country. True, the soil was examined when grants were asked. Straight Talk

To Merchants Who Do Not ADVERTISE

OF ALL the countless millions of merchants in every line of business throughout the universe, who yearly spend from hundreds up into the thousands of dollars to the various classes of newspapers, journals and magazines for advertising space, there are yet many more who do not spend a dollar a year for advertising in any form, and many still who do not use the newspapers, but who use other forms of advertising.

Every town or city has its percentage of merchants who belong to one or the other of these four classes who do not advertise. The Advocate will take these four classes one by one and endeavor to convince those who are doing business in Newcastle why they should change their views regarding advertising, and take out space in this paper. Briefly they are as follows:

- 1. The Merchant who does not believe in Advertising. The merchant who at some time or other did advertise and stopped because he failed to get the desired results, is a rare being; but where a case of this kind has occurred, if the truth were really known, it would be found that the fault was not with the newspaper, but because of lack of the proper attention that should have been given to his advertisement. Writing advertisements, while a profession in itself, is also one that can be recompensed by any wide-awake merchant who will give the time and study required. The great reason why some merchants do not believe in advertising is because they have never made the start, and therefore not knowing for a certainty the results that will follow, are too timid to take the plunge. There are others in this class who do not believe in advertising because they have the idea that in giving the papers so much of their yearly earnings they are just making the newspaper man rich and are getting no returns. If this is a true reason, (but it is not) then the same may be said of the patrons of that store—they are making that merchant rich. "But," the merchant argues, "we are giving you value for your money." So does the newspaper. And every inch of space costs the paper not lower than seven and one-half cents to produce. If the merchant who does not believe in advertising would join the great majority of those who do, and give strict attention to his ads, changing them weekly, he would soon experience an indirect increase in his business that would amaze him. He should use The Union Advocate because it is the best advertising medium in Northumberland County.
- 2. The Merchant who is hard to convince. The merchant who is hard to convince that advertising pays, usually does believe in it, but he has not the courage to make the break. To him we say, follow the majority. He should talk the matter over with the ad. man, get interested, and learn all the points of the game. The trouble is, the man in this class does not understand just how results come from newspaper advertising. He should figure out just how much his business will stand for advertising and set aside that amount for one year's advertising, as a try-out. The next year, ten to one, he doubles that amount. He should feel that his business is just as big as the man's across the street who does advertise, and if it should not be, he should make it so by advertising.
- 3. The Merchant who does not believe in Newspaper Advertising. The merchant in this class is generally a hard one to convince. As a rule his notion is a hard rock one, and he does not want to be convinced. He has tried many other forms of advertising with good results, but he loses sight of the fact that by refusing to patronize the local paper, he is withholding the support it is entitled to from him, because of the fact that in every effort the local paper puts forth for the up-building of its home town, a percentage of the results obtained by that effort goes towards the up-building of that merchant's own business. For that reason there should be co-operation, and in co-operation there will be increased business for both merchant and newspaper.
- 4. The Merchant who does not want Increased Business. Luckily, in Newcastle, there are few who belong to this class. There are, however, some, but we believe they fall, as yet, to understand just what their true position in a town as a merchant should be. They may be content with the small percentage of the town's trade they are receiving, and do not wish to add the increased expense that increased business would naturally bring. But we cannot believe that their ambition stops here. There is no man with so much money but what he wants more, and if the merchant who does not advertise because he does not want any increase in his expenditures or business would read this ad. over carefully, and then each week read over the ads. of his competitors, he would soon find himself getting interested, and then his true worth as a merchant and citizen of the town would begin to dawn upon him. He would then realize how important it is for him to become a power in the town, to make his business a spoke in the wheel of progress, and lend his assistance in the guidance of the town's affairs. In order to bring himself up to this position he must co-operate with his local paper. The merchant who is content to remain in this class is a hindrance to the welfare of any town. Now, just a few words to the merchants here who make up the above four classes. It is your duty as a citizen, if not wholly as a merchant, to patronize your local paper. If you contemplate advertising, you must understand that it is purely a business proposition with you, and up to you to adopt the paper that has the largest guaranteed bona-fide subscription list. That paper in Northumberland County today is The Union Advocate. If you have any doubt, the lists are open for your inspection, and you are invited to come and see them. Talk the matter over with yourself and figure out how much you can afford to spend for Xmas Advertising. Xmas is not far off, and is not too far for you to get in on the ground floor and get settled in a good permanent position now. A phone call will bring our representative to your store in five minutes.

THE Pillar of Light

By Louis Tracy

"This is a nice thing," he cried, when he came within speaking distance of the girl in the boat. "I manage to have the admiral out of three days' leave and I rush to Penzance to be told that Constance and you are off to the Gulf Rock for the day. It is on tomorrow, Enid."

"By Jove," he agreed. "That would be jolly. Look here. Wait two minutes until I scribble a line to the master."

"Nothing of the sort, Jack," interposed the other girl quietly, taking from his arm the waterproof cloak he was carrying for her. "You know Lady Margaret would be very angry, and with very good reason. Moreover, dad would be annoyed, too."

"The old girl is going out this afternoon," he protested. "And she expects you to go with her. Now, Jack, don't let us quarrel before we have met for five minutes. We will see you tomorrow."

"I hope you had no mishap," she said, and Constance dutifully echoed the inquiry. "Both girls knew well what a serious thing it was for a youngster to run his first boat ashore."

"I was not all. He did not mention that, during a torpedo attack on a busy night, he ran up to three battalions of men, and they were all killed."

"It sounds unconvincing," said Constance. "You must supply details to-morrow. Enid, that horrid pun of yours ruins this word."

"Are we also to supply luncheon?" chimed in Enid.

"Fertish thought, I have lived on sandwiches and bottled beer for a week. There! Or you go."

"He gave the boat a vigorous push and stood for a while at the foot of the steps, ostensibly to light a cigar. He watched Constance slipping the rudder whilst Enid hoisted the sail and old Ben piled a pair of oars to the boat into the fair way of the channel."

"They neared the harbor lighthouse. The brown sail filled and the Daisy got way on her. Then she sped round the end of the solid pier and vanished, whereupon Lieutenant Stanhope walked slowly to the Promenade, whence he could see the dimming speck of canvas on the shifting sea until it was hidden by Clement's Island."

"At last, the devotees of twist and shag resting their tired arms on the railing, were able to exchange comments."

"Brace of fine galls, them," observed the acknowledged leader, a broken-down "captain" of a mine abandoned soon after his birth.

"Fine," agreed his nearest henchman. Then catching the gleam of the treating figure, he added:

"But what does that young spark want, turning their pretty heads for them, I should like to know?"

"They didn't seem particular stuck on 'im," ventured another.

Now, wouldn't near a wrong word about him, and always called him "cap'n." A prettier sort of a captain! But then, they all knew what an old slow-coach Jones was. They did; Pones's pints were retailed on the premises for money down.

Then there was Spence, Iamo Jim, who lived at Marazion; he told a fine tale about a fight with a hawk before Bran drenched the boat in which was the blessed baby—that very girl, Enid, they had just seen. Was it true? How could he say? There was a lot about it at the time in the local papers, but just then his own mind was given to the thoughts of enlisting, as a British expedition was marching across the desert to the Charthorn—and cause Gordon's death.

No; Brand and the two girls had not dwelt all the time in Penzance. The light-keeper was all over the kingdom, you know, but he had hit upon some sort of foxtrotal fad—Brand was always a man of fads; he once told the speaker of the grant of the Polvera Mine wanted work—and the Gulf Rock was the best place for trying it. At his own request the Trinity people sent him back there two years ago. Some folk had queer tastes, hadn't they? And talking so much had made him dry.

Then the conversation languished, and the old obvious remark of any importance was not forthcoming. Meanwhile, the Daisy sped buoyantly towards the southwest. All she was brood in beam and staunch from thwart to keel, it was no light undertaking to run fourteen miles out and home in some such craft.

But old Ben Pollard knew what he was about. He made Pollard cast the pillar of the distant Gulf Rock opened up beyond Carn du was it necessary to turn the boat's head seawards. Then, as the rain fell close to the Runnelstone, they need not during two-thirds of the time be more than a mile or so distant from one of the many creeks in which they could secure shelter in case of a sudden change in the weather.

Therefore there was nothing for it but a straight run of six miles to the rock, behind which lay the Selly Isles, forty miles away, and well below the boat's horizon.

So when the moment came for the final decision to be made, Pollard cast an anxious eye at a great bank of cloud mounting high in the north. There was an ominous drop in the temperature, too. The rain he anticipated might turn to snow, and snow is own brother to fog at sea, though both are generally absent from the Cornish littoral in winter.

"Ben," cried Enid, breaking off a vivid if merciless description of a new salspice who had joined the artistic coterie at a swyn, what are you looking at?"

He scratched his head and gazed fixedly at the white battalions sweeping in aerial conquest over the land. "She do look like snow," he admitted.

"Well, what does that matter?" "Without waiting for orders, Constance had ceased to helm a trifle. The Daisy was now fairly headed for the rock. With this breeze she would be there in less than an hour."

"It had to be," grumbled Ben. "We will be at least as serious snowfall," said practical Constance. "I can make the land again no matter how thick the weather may be."

Ben allowed himself to be persuaded after five or six minutes' argument that they were free agents at that moment.

"It had to be," he would say. "It was in the mind to carry it off, but I just couldn't. All I could do was see snow in the air. Not once in a blue moon." And who would dispute him? No West-country man, certainly.

At a distance of five miles or so small fishing craft is as life another as two little boats to the eye of Gulliver. In a word, it was a matter of habit and nearness to distinguish them.

As it happened, Stephen Brand did happen to note the Daisy, and his course was straight to the reef, during the short interval when his telescope might have revealed to him the identity of her occupants, he was suddenly called by telephonic means to the room to the kitchen. When next he ran aloft in a wild hurry to signal for assistance, he found, to his despair, that the Land's End was actually biotted out in a swirling snow-storm, and the great plain of blue sea had shrunk to a leaden patch whose visible limits made the reef look large by comparison.

With the mechanical precision of habit he set the big bell in motion, his heavy boom came rattling through the falling snowflakes to the ears of the two girls and old Ben. The latter, master of the situation now, announced his intention to "bout sail and make for Mount's Bay."

"He don't ketch me tryin' to slip close to Gulf Rock when 'ee can't see a boat's length ahead," he said, emphatically. "I be sorry, ladies both, but 'ee know how the tide runs over the reef, an' 'tee easy to drive to the wrong side of the light. 'Fellers try again to-morrow. On'y the women'll spile. All the rest—"

"Crash! A loud explosion burst forth from the dense heights of the storm. The Daisy, sturdy as she was, seemed to shiver. The very air trembled with the din. Pollard had his hand on the dial to swing it to starboard when Constance put the tiller over to bring the boat's head up against the wind. For an instant he hesitated. Even reversed in the ways of the sea, was startled. Both girls positively jumped at the sudden bang of the rocket was so unexpected.

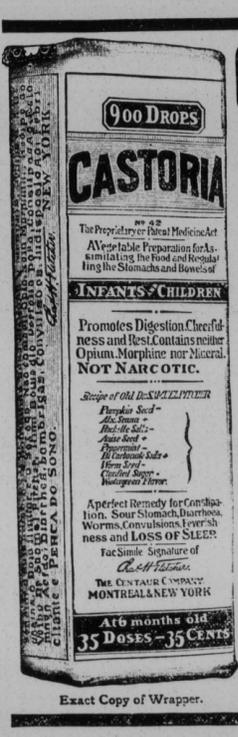

"Mister Brand must ha' zeed us," pronounced Ben. "That's a warning to we to go back."

The words had scarce left his lips when another report smote the great silence, otherwise unbroken save by the quiet plash of the sea against the bows and the faint reverberations of the distant bell.

"That is too urgent to be intended for us," said Constance. "We were just the way when the snow commenced."

"I did not notice any vessel near the rock," cried Enid, tremulously. "Did you, Ben?"

Pollard's slow utterance was not quick enough. Before he could answer, a third rocket thundered its over-powering summons.

CASTORIA For Infants and Children. Mothers Know That Genuine Castoria Always Bears the Signature of J. C. Ayer & Co. In Use For Over Thirty Years CASTORIA hat you two girls aboard as any two men in Penzance."

At another time the compliment would have earned him a torrent of sarcasm. Now it passed unheeded. The situation was bewildering, alarming. There were three keepers in the lighthouse. The signal foreboded illness, sudden and serious illness. Who would it be?

In such a crisis charity begins at home. Constance, with set face and shining eyes, Enid flushed and on the verge of tears, feared lest their own beloved one should be the sufferer.

To each of them Stephen Brand was equally a kind and devoted father. He never allowed Enid to feel that she was dependent on his bounty. Only the other day, when she hinted at the adoption of an art career as a future means of earning a livelihood, he approved of the necessary study but laughed at the reason.

"With your pretty face and saucy ways, Enid," he said, "I shall have trouble enough to keep you in the nest without worrying as to the manner of your leaving it. Work at your drawing, by all means. Avoid color as the bane of true art. But where Connie and I live you shall live, until you choose to forsake us."

No wonder these girls thought there was no other man in the world like "dad." Their delightful home was idyllic in its happiness; their only sorrow that Brand should be away two months out of three on account of the pursuit in which he passed his hours of leisure during recent years.

Neither dared to look at the other. They could not trust themselves even to speak. There was relief in action, for thought was torture.

The doleful Daisy actually forced through the waves. The spasmodic clang of the bell came more clearly each minute. Pollard, kneeling in the bows, perceived that the gloom of the swirling snow. He listened eagerly to the bell. With right hand or left he motioned to Constance to bring the boat's head nearer to the wind or to permit the sail to fill out a little more.

Enid, ready to cast the canvas loose at the first hint of danger, consulted her watch frequently. At last she cried:

"Twenty minutes, Ben." "What a relief it was to hear her own voice. The tension was becoming unbearable.

"Right y' are, missy. No need to slack off yet. 'Tee clearin' a bit, 'f we heave to alongside the rock in less'n no time."

The fisherman was right. His trained senses perceived a distinct diminution in the volume of snow. Soon they could see fifty, a hundred, two hundred yards ahead. On the starboard quarter they caught a confused rushing noise, like the rushing of a millrace. The tide had covered the rock.

"Luff et is!" roared Ben, suddenly. "Steady now."

Out of the blurred vista a ghastly column rose in front. Smooth and sheer were its granite walls, with dark little casements showing black in the weird light. The boat rushed past the Trinity mooring-buoy. She held on until they heard the sea breaking.

"Lower away!" cried Ben, and the yard fell with a sharp rattle that showed how thoroughly Enid had laid to heart Pollard's tuition.

Constance brought the Daisy round in a wide curve, and Ben got out the oars to keep her from being dashed against the reef.

Enid's eyes were turned towards the gallery beneath the lantern. "Lighthouse ahoy!" she screamed, in a voice high-pitched with emotion.

There was no answering clang of the door leading from the room on a level with the balcony. Not often had the girls visited the rock, but they knew that this was the first sign they might expect of their arrival being noted if there were no watchers pacing the "promenade."

"Must na bin a' accuset," said Ben. "That signal means 'Bring a doctor.' An' 'ere ain't a blessed tug in harbor, nor won't be till the tide makes."

"That will mean delay," cried Enid. "Five or six hours at least, missy." The main door at the head of the iron ladder clamped to the stones swung back, and Brand leaned out. He had no greeting for them, nor words of astonishment.

"When will the tug reach here, Ben?" he asked.

The fisherman told him the opinion he had formed.

"Then you girls must come and help me. Jackson scalded his hands and arms in the kitchen, and Bates was hurrying to the store-room for oil and whitening when he slipped on the stairs and broke his leg. We must get them both ashore. Ben, you can take them?"

"Ay, ay, sir." "Now, Constance, you frist. Hold tight and stand in the skip. Your boat cannot come near the rock."

He swung the derrick into place and began to work the windlass. Constance, cool as her father, whispered to the excited Enid:

"Let's divide the parcels and take half each."

"Oh, I should have forgotten all about the parcels," said Enid stooping to empty the lockers.

Constance, without flickering an eyelid, stepped into the strong basket with its iron hoops, and, having arranged some of the phreoric paper bags at her feet, told her father to "hoist away."

She arrived safely. Enid followed her, with equal sangfroid, though a lift of forty feet whilst standing in a skip and clinging to a rope is not an every-day experience.

"Thank me," said Ben, as Enid, too, was swung into the lighthouse, "but they're two packed 'uns."

The great bell tolled away, though the snow had changed to sleet, and the lightning beyond the Land's End were dimly visible, so its warning note was no longer needed. The sky above was clearing. A luminous haze spreading over the waters heralded the return of the sun. But the wind was bitterly cold; the fisherman watching the open door, with one eye on the sea lest an adventurous wave should sweep the Daisy against the rock, murmured to himself:

"'Tis a good job the wind's 'f the nor'ard. This sort o' thing's a weather-breaker, or my name ain't Ben Pollard."

And that was how Enid came back to the Gulf Rock to enter upon the second year of her life.

Once before had the reef taken her to its rough heart and fended her from peril. Would it shield her again this time? The answer was in the shadow whose shadow even now loomed out of the deep. What was the bell saying in its wailful monotony?

Enid neither knew nor cared. Just then she had other things to think about.

CHAPTER IV. THE VOICE OF THE REEF. There comes a time in the life of every thinking man or woman when the argosy of existence, floating placidly on a smooth and lazy stream, gathers unto itself speed, rushes swiftly onward past familiar landmarks of custom and convention, bolts furiously over resisting rocks, and ultimately, if not submerged in an unknown sea, finds itself again meandering through new plains of wider horizon.

Such a perilous passage can never be foreseen. The rapids may begin where the trees are highest and the meadows most luxuriant. No warning is given. The increased pace of events is pleasant and exhilarating. Even the last wild plunge over the cascade is neither resented nor feared. Some frail craft are shattered in transit, some wholly sunken, some emerge with riven sails and tarnished embellishments. A few not only survive the ordeal, but thereby fit themselves for more daring exploits, more soul-stirring adventures.

When the two girls stood with Stephen Brand in the narrow entrance to the lighthouse, the gravity of their bright young faces was due solely to the fact that their father had announced the serious accidents which had befallen his assistants. No secret monitor whispered that fate, in her bold and merciless dramatic action, had roughly removed two characters from the stage to clear it for more striking events.
