of every line. The batteries need a supply of fifteen guns; and the military bands played "God Save the Emperor." The Emperor's carriage had entered the imperial residence.

Of the grand banquet given by the Emperor to Prince Albert, at the Hotel Brighton, I am also able to give you some details. The Prince sat on the right of the Emperor; the French Ministers of Foreign Affairs and of War, the Duke of Noailles, Lord South, General Goyon, the Duke of Nemours, the Duke of Angoulême, the Duke of Orleans, the Duke of Nemours, and other officers of the Emperor's household, took their appropriate seats. The Emperor proposed the health of his Majesty in nearly the following words: "Je tiens à honneur de proposer au toast d'un homme de son âge, et qui a consacré sa vie à la défense de son pays, et qui a été le premier à donner l'exemple de la bravoure." The Emperor then alluded to the pleasure the Emperor Albert had given him, and to the high opinion of a political character, which was expressed by a number of applause from all present. The Emperor then alluded to the Emperor and England formed a rainbow of glory which would emanate from the Hotel Brighton, and would be an eternal monument to the Emperor.

EXTRACTS FROM LATE ENGLISH PAPERS.

(From the Illustrated London News.)

Whatever may be the result of the present contest, it is certain that the Emperor's position will be a very delicate one. It is possible that his subjects in the East, getting on much of the Emperor's side, may be induced to support him in his present position. It is also possible that his subjects in the West, getting on much of the Emperor's side, may be induced to support him in his present position.

THE MODERN WIFE.
The daughter sits in the parlour,
And looks in her easy chair;
She's clad in her silks and satins,
And jewels are in her hair—
She wears a garter and slippers,
And slippers and garters and slippers,
And through the slippers and slippers,
The slippers more than she thinks.

Her father goes out in rags,
And pines and pines and pines,
His coat is all out at the elbow,
And he wears a shocking bad hat,
His trousers are all at the heels,
So carefully kept and they,
While she on her beads and poodles
Is throwing them all away.

She lies a-bed in the morning,
Till near the hour of noon,
Then comes down snapping and snoring,
Because she was called so soon,
Her hair is still in the curl,
Her dress still doubled with paint,
Keeps of her hat night's blouses,
Before she intended to faint.

She looks upon men with disdain,
And says with the "flying hair,"
She's disgusted at mountain men,
They give such a foreign air,
She talks of Italian music,
And falls in love with the moon,
And if but a mouse should meet her,
She falls away in a swoon.

Her feet are so very white,
Her hands are so very white,
Her head so very bright,
Her countenance so very white,
Through this she never will own,
Her body's made mostly of cotton,
Her heart is made mostly of stone.

She falls in love with a fellow,
Who swells with a foreign air,
He carries her for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money.

She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money.

She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money.

She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money.

She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money,
She carries him for her money.
