The Popularity of the Prince of Wales — The Hard Fate of the Hapless Helena.

London Correspondence of the Boston Post.

While Albert Edward is not regarded in all respects as a model Prince, he is, I believe, heartily and well-nigh universally liked. It is quite remarkable how well he has developed, after all. He is certainly the least dull of Victoria's sous nd he has come to understand well at ast the social exigencies of his rank. I think the turn of the tide of public opi- Established in St. nion in his favor occurred when he refused to attend the wedding of his sister Helena. The match between this pretty and amiable Princess and that inveterate old roue, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein Augustenburg, was a general scandal. It was perfectly well known that this enterprising infant of forty or fifty already had a wife and a family of children somewhere on the Danish peninsula, and although this connection was what is called a "morganatic" one, Eng-lish people did not like the idea of consigning a well-liked young girl to the LONDON HOUSE. mercies of a man they could not but re-gard as already married. Death by Drowning-John Cochran's Corpse -A Mystery for the Coroner?

This morning about 9 o'clock the body of a man was seen lying in the mud near the Ballast Wharf, by some boys. They communicated the information to police man Briggs, who at once had the body removed and placed on the wharf. The body was found about twenty feet from the bow of the ship W. H. Corsar. The remains were identified as those of John Cochran, a ship carpenter. When found his coat was partly off and thrown over his head, either done by him while endeavoring to get his coat off, or else in his dying struggles. He lay on his back, and at his neck there was quite a pool of blood, as if he had struck on his neck, or it had been chafed by the stones on which the body lay. The policeman and others-for there was soon a large crowd at the scene-lifted the body and placed it on a batch borrowed from the vessel. A wagon was procured, and the remains were taken to the Dead House.

A TOUCHING SCENE. As soon as the body was recognized a nessenger was sent to the brother of the leceased, who lives near the Marsh Bridge, and he arrived just before the body was put into the wagon. His grief was great and the kind words spoken by was the last time he had seen his brother, and as he recognized him in the cold and ifeless form before him, he burst into

THE DECEASED was a ship carpenter by trade. His mother lives on the Quaco Road, and for some months he had been employed at Maitland on the W. H. Corsar. He was paid off some days ago-his wages being between three and four hundred dollars. Since Wednesday he has been boarding at McPartland's with one or two others mployed about the snip. HOW DID IT HAPPEN?

It is hardly known how, or exactly when, the man fell. Yesterday he was on board until after dark. Two sailors who boarded with the deceased left the ship, and thought that Cochran was with them. He went to the ladder, but whether he came down with them or not they cannot be sure. The deceased wore a gold chain, a watch, and a Masonic pir, all of which are on the body. He was possessed of considerable money but whether he had it on his person or not is AN INQUEST

Then, without moving his limbs, he began to whistle and chirrup softly; and the birds, after much listening, questioned each other in melodious notes, and, deciding that he was not an enemy, returned to their homes, and peeped at him through lace work of moss and twig. All this was very delightful to the Prince; never in his life had he spent so pleasant a day. The earth, the air, the clouds, the tree in which he sat, were filled with marvels, and his mind became attuned to the grand works by which he was surrounded. The day grew drowsy, and the hum of insect life sounded in his ears like a hymn. Suddenly his reverie was disturbed by a great commotion below. "They have been looking for me," said the Prince, chuckingly.

As they stood debating and stretching out their fingers in all directions, one of the party who was especially obnoxious to the Prince, and who, being much heated, was wiping his bald head, suddenly shrieked very loudly, and clapped his hand to his head. The others thought he had been attacked by an idea, and they waited for him to deliver, holding out their hands and inclining their bodies in the attitude of persons who ex Sewing Machines of all descriptions, Sho and other Light Machinery carefully repaired, INSTORE: It affords me much pleasure to be able to sup-ply a want long felt by the citizens of St. John, and I trust that the public by their patronage will enable me to sustain an already increasing The Largast and Best Selected Stock Reindeer. But something more tangible had caused his alarm. The Prince, finding a marble in the pocket of Robin s trowsers, had dropped it on the time server's bald pate. The unfortunate attendant looked down for the cause, and then looked up to heaven, and in this way the Pri-c. was discovere'.

"Come down, you young rufflan! How dare you sit in the Prince's tree?"

"For so they had dubbed it from the day he had first tried to climb it. He had, in a measure, made it sacred in their eyes by his notice, and they had even debated the advisability of hedging it round with gilt palings, as being immeasurably superior to the other trees, and as being a kind of historical landmark.

"Go away, you old stupids!" the Prince called out in reply, making his voice very rough, so that they should not recognize it. "Don't you see that I am enjoying myself?"

They shook their fists at him, and he shook his at them. He was prodigiously elated. The birds hopped out of their nests, and observed the disturbance. They chattered about 11, and gave opinions. The younger ones, with youthful enthusiasm, would have sided with the Prince, as their sympathies were with him, but the older and wiser birds said, "No; let us stand askle and arbitrate."

"If you don't come down," bawled the Prince, as their sympathies were with him, but the older and wiser birds said, "No; let us stand askle and arbitrate."
