POETRY.

The Sweet Old Song.

It was only a broken chord of song
That sang itself, the living day,
Over and over in my heart,
And always the same sweet way—
Always beginning low and soft,
Like a tenderly spoken "Love, good night!"
And ending in glad and joyous strains,
Like a morning psalm when the world
is bright.
And the hours of the day were woven in
By the mystic thread of the haunting
song,
That somewhere out of the vanished
past,
Sent forth its witchery clear and
strong;
Something akin to the song of birds
When the sky is flushed with the coming dawn!
Yet sad as the thoughtful hour which comes
When the last red light of the day is done.
Beautiful echo that drifted back
From the far-off shore of long ago,
Over the wide and rugged waste,
Where never the winds of gladness
blow,
Bringing the odor of wildwood flowers;
The laughing song of the mountain lill;
The green, glad fields where the cowslips
grow,
And the gleam of waters calm and still.
Sitting alone in the twilight still,
Whose mantle covers the earth with gray,
My heart is touched, and my eyes grow
dim,
As the glow of the sunset fades aw
And I feel the presence of the unseen
guests
That out of the shadowy regions
thru
And I know they have crossed from the further shore
On the slender thread of the sweet old
song.

SELECT STORY.

At the World's Mercy.

BY FIGURINE WARDEN.

CHAPTER XVIII.—Continued.
But, in my weak state of mind, I could not bear it; and the next day I was again by my darling's grave. Towards evening, as I sat there, quite still and hopeless, I heard a footstep in the churchyard. I had not curiosity enough to turn my head to see who had entered. At last a man stood by my side. I rose slowly and looked at him. It was Eugene Barsch.
"Why have you come?" I asked almost unconsciously.
He did not answer at once. He was looking at me so tenderly, so pitifully, that I was moved out of my sympathy, but only into anger that any man but my lost Hubert should dare to look at me so.
"Here you come to torment me again now?"
"No," said he gently. "I came to try to comfort you; and I will leave you this moment, if you please. Remember, your grief is truly mine. I would have given the world to save him."
This was true. I remembered what he had done; and in misery and shame I leaped against the headstone and burst into weak tears.
"Yes, yes; and you did save him—for a little while. Indeed I am ungrateful to you," I sobbed, letting my handkerchief fall.
He picked it up. I was quivering all over from weakness, and he supported me and tried to dry my eyes. But the action was the very same as that of Hubert on that winter afternoon on the common; and I shrank away from his touch.
"Don't—oh, don't! He did that, and you have no right to comfort me. You are not loyal!" I burst out, wounded, and in my selfish anger trying to wound back.
"I am free now," said he gently. "I did not mean to hurt you. Only I know you are doing yourself harm and wasting away under your sorrow, and for your own sake and his sake I want you to be brave, and to face the world again, hard though it is, I know. And—and," he went on, his face giving way that little, "I want you to remember that there are—perhaps not very many, but just a few people in the world who are ready to do all they can to shield you and care for you; and, if the world cannot be a happy place to you any longer, at least they would smooth the rough path for you as much as possible."
He stopped. I was touched at last! I said mournfully—
"You are very, very good to me, and I am very hard and selfish; but I will try to thank you when I get better."

I am not quite well yet, I think. My head is weak, and I don't quite know always what I am saying. And you are quite right; I ought to try to rouse myself—and out to think. And now they are going to take me away. Oh, don't let them take me away! I suddenly ended, springing towards him. I was overwrought, and my head was going round again.
He caught me, and supported me until I had recovered enough to walk back to Hawtens, leaning on his arm. He stayed to dinner there, but did not obtrude upon me, and scarcely spoke to me again except to bid me good bye.
Soon after this Elsie came, and the sight of my darling sister comforted me a little. She could not come with me to Switzerland, having to go to the seaside with her pupils; but Mr and Mrs Godfrey were so kind that I felt almost as if I had indeed been their daughter.
We were away from England four months, Tom accompanying us as far as Paris, where he settled down to his business again. I had one source of quiet happiness in the new harmony between Mr and Mrs Godfrey. The real feeling and sympathy the latter had shown at the illness and death of his son had endeared her to her husband, and the shock seemed to have made suddenly old.
As for me, I loved them both, for Hubert's sake and for my own, and I think my affection was a link between them. If it had not been for the presence of these loving friends, I think I should have gone mad among those awful Swiss mountains, the sense of desolation in my heart.
For the first time since Hubert's death, I had a feeling of gladness when we got back to Hawtens once more. I could not leave the house until the afternoon of the next day; then I stole out in the chilly November gloom, and made my way to Hubert's grave. The summer flowers on it were dead now; it was choked up with the decaying leaves that the wind had swept into heaps among the gravestones; it looked abandoned, neglected—so soon. I knelt down beside it, and my tears fell quietly upon the damp leaves as I cleared them away, and upon the Christmas rose that I had brought with me to plant there.
I did not feel now as I had felt four months before. I knew now that it was not Hubert, but my own Hubert, that lay there; but the knowledge made my loneliness more complete. Not there; certainly not there; then where was he? I did not know.
When the dark was drawing in and the dusk creeping over the churchyard, I kissed the stone once more, and left it. In the porch I met Eugene. I had not seen him since our return.
"I knew you would be here to-day," said he.
I was silent; a horrible feeling was creeping over me that I could not escape from this man, that I was surely becoming his prey.
"You are trembling with cold," said he, and before I could resist, he had placed round my shoulders my own fur mantle, which he was carrying. "I called at Hawtens before coming here. They told me you had gone to plant something on the grave."
My tears began to fall again.
"Yes, yes, and to sweep the leaves away—it was all choked up. But the dead must be hidden away and forgotten, and 'Place aux vivants'" said I bitterly.
"It seems hard. But remember, Guinevere, the dead suffer no longer, while the living—" He paused, looking down at me sorrowfully.
"The living shall take care of themselves," said I.
"Yes, it is not better to be taken care of, Guinevere?" he asked softly.
"You think I must marry you now," I broke out bitterly, stopping, and looking up at him.
"No; but I know that life will have no value for me if you do not," said he earnestly, but gently.
"You are desiring yourself. What love do you think I have left to give you? Do you think, if you were to put a wedding-ring upon my finger, it would act like a spell to make me forget Hubert and how down to you with the respectful worship a husband expresses to me?"

"I listened, ashamed of my own selfishness. He continued—
"If you think I have come too soon, remember that I am offending your ears with no lover's speeches." I shuddered. "I only offer the care and kindness of one whom you know, and in whom you can trust just a little, to comfort you and wish you gradually back to life again. Will you let me?"
I made an effort to gather my thoughts together, and stood for some minutes thinking.
"I have been very selfish, very ungrateful. But I must tell you the truth. The thought of marriage is hateful to me; but, if you indeed believe the wreck of my life to be necessary to your happiness, you may have it if you will. Wait; I have not forgotten that it was you who gave my—Hubert back to me. But I am afraid your cheerful hopes of winning from me than I can ever give now; so I beg you to—pause and consider what I have just said. If you decide to risk it, and take me, why— you may have me. But not now—as he took my hand. "Tell me some other time; not now, I pray you—1 cannot bear it. Let me walk on alone. Good-bye." And I hurried away from him, almost hating him for his readiness to accept my grudging consent.
At the beginning of the New Year he came, still in the same mood, and we kissed hands I let him take, and we were engaged. The engagement was to last for an indefinite period—I had insisted upon that; whereupon I sank into indifference. A few days afterwards I went to see Elsie. As I travelled up, I reproached myself for my promise to Eugene, picturing to myself the poor child's disappointment that we were not to pass the rest of our lives together, after all; and my remorse made me half-reluctant for the meeting. But she was not at home. I went straight on to the South Kensington Museum and into the Art Library, where she spent much of her spare time. There was something going on in the Museum, and the library was almost deserted. However, I fancied I heard sounds from the other end of the room, and I walked it. Upon the end table was a huge book, placed nearly upright, and some one was behind it. I walked up softly and looked round the book. There sat Elsie, and close to her, with his arm on the back of her chair and his head almost touching hers, was Tom! I gave a little cry of astonishment, and they both looked up, Elsie red and confused, Tom cool and amused. He jumped up and gave me his arm, and we went out, Elsie walking on the other side of me.
"I thought you were in Paris, Mr Godfrey," said I.
"So I was last night, when it occurred to me to run over and have a peep at the Museum," said he.
And then, both at once, they began to give me an explanation, which would have been anything but clear if the sight I had seen had not explained itself.
"But, Guinevere, you don't understand; it is all a mistake," said Elsie. "I have told him I won't marry him. Do you think I am going to leave you all alone?"
"No, I have been beforehand with you," said I, smiling. "I am engaged to Eugene Barsch."
"Are you?"—from both.
"Now, Guinevere, you must insist upon your younger sister's having me. It was I who persuaded her to give up all thoughts of the stage, so I have the best right to her. And, Elsie," asked Tom, "do you want to be left an old maid? You had better have me, and then our wedding shall be first."
Elsie's wedding was first; they were married two months later, just a week before Lady Kate gave her land to the eldest son of a Lancashire millionaire.

Not long afterwards Eugene came to tell me that his father was just dead, and that he must go to live in the big lonely house in Berkshire; and I knew that, if my promise was to be worth anything, I must fulfil it now. Soon afterwards, without veil, bridesmaids, or breakfast, I was quietly married to him. I had written to my mother, who had taken up her residence permanently in France, and to my brother who came to my wedding, and made a most favorable impression upon Mr and Mrs Godfrey, by his pretty manners. He is now in Mr Godfrey's office, getting or rapidly, and already establishing a reputation for dressing well.
My husband and I lived very quietly at first; but, as the house had a reputation for hospitality to be kept up, I gradually shook off my distaste for all society, and soon found myself in the full current of the life of "the world."

It is strange that the position I now hold should have been the height of my ambition as a young girl—still stranger perhaps that I, bred to the schoolroom, should have fallen into the life so easily. I have become successful as a hostess; I give my whole energies to a career the triumphs of which are my ease and my pride. I have discovered that I have unwittingly gained a reputation for bitter epigrams, that I am spoken of as "grave Lady Barach." Yet I am not unhappy. My husband is kind and tender, sympathizes with my successes, is grateful for my share in his; but he is not quite content. He wants—wants for something more. It hurts me to see the patience with which he still hopes for the full, unreserved love which I cannot give him, though I know my life, as well as his, would be brighter if I could. I know he is worthy of all that a woman can give; I try hard to please him, amuse him, sharing his interest in life and upholding them when I can. I do give him all that is in my power now; and I am only twenty-five. Perhaps some day I shall be able to give him more; and I pray Heaven that I may.

THE END.

Domestic Hints.

If you fear that your new print frock is going to fade, put a little vinegar in the rinse water.
Breathing through the mouth during sleep is a common cause of nightmare and distressing dreams.
Someone recently propounded the theory that girls with pretty names sooner become engaged than those with common appellations.
It is stated that a pail of water containing a handful of hay, if placed in a room where there has been smoking, will absorb all the odor of the tobacco.
It is said that if a few ants are scolded and left on the runs, the rest will be scared for a time. This is a simple plan, and worth a trial when the pests has invaded a house.
From November to April children grow very little and gain no weight; from April to July they gain in height; but lose in weight, and from July to November they increase greatly in weight, but not in height.
Married men are generally of two kinds: those who tell their wives everything, and those who tell them nothing. It is evident that the relative merits of the two systems depend upon the relative merits of the wives in question.
Begin the day well by rising early. The universal experience of the wisest men of all ages is in favor of the habit of getting up early in the morning. The practice is closely connected with the length of life. It is also connected with happiness and activity of life.
A good remedy for excessive perspiration is carbolic acid, one part; burnt alum, four parts; starch, two hundred parts; French chalk, fifty parts; oil of lemon, two parts. Make a fine powder to be applied to the hands and feet, or to be sprinkled inside the the gloves or stockings.
Mothers would do well to follow the sensible lady who catches her children when in play how to be useful. When her little girls play at "sick dolls," she teaches them how to make real linseed poultices, and how to cook invalid cookery on their own toy stoves, and lessons taught like this in play will never be forgotten after life.

Children usually perspire a great deal, and when this is the case the nurse should be instructed to see that the clothes taken off at night are wrung out that they may be dry for the next morning. This is particularly necessary with regard to stockings, especially in damp weather, when there is no chance of their drying naturally. There are few people who are not fond of preparing a dainty one. Mix the juice of a lemon with a tablespoonful of water, and beat up with it the yolks of eight eggs and the whites of four. Sweeten to taste and add a pinch of salt. Put the mixture into an omelet pan and fry carefully. Brown it lightly in an oven. A Hudson's Bay Post. Life at a distant Hudson Bay post, far from a railway, may seem a very quiet and uninteresting one to dwellers in busy towns; but, quiet as it is, the particular post in the district is the centre of all life and animation for all white men, half-breeds and Indians within a range of many miles. There they come to hear the news and bring the backwoods gossip. At any hour of the day one or two Indians or half-breeds may be seen listlessly hanging about the store or shop smoking, but talking little. Perhaps they want to sell some skins—or very likely they are only looking. Often they come to see the manager simply in the hope of getting an advance of money or of stores on credit, precious to going on a prolonged hunting trip, when, if refused the first time, they will hang about for days, persistently and petulantly returning to the charge. But this advance is often allowed, repayment being taken when the furs come in in the spring. The Indians look upon the manager of a Hudson Bay post very much in the light of a father, and if he is a good hearted fellow, as he usually is, he in return comes to regard almost in the light of his children, and to know the characteristics of each one of them. But, like a father with his children, he knows what is good for them, and often in many ways has to deny them to protect them against themselves.— Blackwood's Magazine.

Often they come to see the manager simply in the hope of getting an advance of money or of stores on credit, precious to going on a prolonged hunting trip, when, if refused the first time, they will hang about for days, persistently and petulantly returning to the charge. But this advance is often allowed, repayment being taken when the furs come in in the spring. The Indians look upon the manager of a Hudson Bay post very much in the light of a father, and if he is a good hearted fellow, as he usually is, he in return comes to regard almost in the light of his children, and to know the characteristics of each one of them. But, like a father with his children, he knows what is good for them, and often in many ways has to deny them to protect them against themselves.— Blackwood's Magazine.

Children usually perspire a great deal, and when this is the case the nurse should be instructed to see that the clothes taken off at night are wrung out that they may be dry for the next morning. This is particularly necessary with regard to stockings, especially in damp weather, when there is no chance of their drying naturally. There are few people who are not fond of preparing a dainty one. Mix the juice of a lemon with a tablespoonful of water, and beat up with it the yolks of eight eggs and the whites of four. Sweeten to taste and add a pinch of salt. Put the mixture into an omelet pan and fry carefully. Have ready four whites of eggs whipped with 1 lb. fine sugar to a high froth and flavored with vanilla or lemon. Place the omelet on a dish and heap the frothed eggs over it. Brown it lightly in an oven. A Hudson's Bay Post. Life at a distant Hudson Bay post, far from a railway, may seem a very quiet and uninteresting one to dwellers in busy towns; but, quiet as it is, the particular post in the district is the centre of all life and animation for all white men, half-breeds and Indians within a range of many miles. There they come to hear the news and bring the backwoods gossip. At any hour of the day one or two Indians or half-breeds may be seen listlessly hanging about the store or shop smoking, but talking little. Perhaps they want to sell some skins—or very likely they are only looking. Often they come to see the manager simply in the hope of getting an advance of money or of stores on credit, precious to going on a prolonged hunting trip, when, if refused the first time, they will hang about for days, persistently and petulantly returning to the charge. But this advance is often allowed, repayment being taken when the furs come in in the spring. The Indians look upon the manager of a Hudson Bay post very much in the light of a father, and if he is a good hearted fellow, as he usually is, he in return comes to regard almost in the light of his children, and to know the characteristics of each one of them. But, like a father with his children, he knows what is good for them, and often in many ways has to deny them to protect them against themselves.— Blackwood's Magazine.

A Racking Cough

Cured by Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.
Mrs. P. D. HALL, 217 Genesee St., Lockport, N. Y., says:
"Over thirty years ago, I remember hearing my father describe the wonderful curative effects of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. During a recent attack of La Grippe, which assumed the form of a catarrh, soreness of the lungs, accompanied by an aggravating cough, I used various remedies and prescriptions, while some of these medicines partially alleviated the coughing during the day, none of them afforded me any relief from this spasmodic action of the lungs which would seize me the moment I attempted to lie down at night. After ten or twelve such nights, I was Nearly in Despair,
and had about decided to sit up all night in my easy chair, and procure what sleep I could in that way. It then occurred to me that I had a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took a spoonful of this preparation in a little water, and was able to lie down without coughing. In a few moments, I fell asleep, and awoke in the morning greatly refreshed and feeling much better. I took a teaspoonful of the Pectoral every night for a week, then gradually decreased the dose, and in two weeks my cough was cured."

The Great Blood and Nerve Remedy
Wolfville, Aug. 30th

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., AUG. 31, 1894.

Vice Regal Visit.

Although it was not known here till late on Saturday that their excellencies, Lord and Lady Aberdeen, would stop for a few moments at the depot of Wolfville, on Monday, as they passed en route to Yarmouth, yet the word seemed to have been pretty well circulated, as on citizens turned out en masse to meet them. The information that the Earl and Countess would receive a delegation from the town was too short to admit of any appropriate preparation. This explains the absence of anything in the shape of decorations. Of all those who assembled to see our Governor General and his lady, none made a more creditable appearance than the procession of school children. As the train steamed into the depot the band struck up the National Anthem, and continued playing till the train came to a standstill, when the Earl and Countess stepped upon the platform and were received by Mr. J. W. Bigelow, who introduced them to Mayor Bewick and other members of the Town Council, as well as to some members of the Ex. Com. of Fruit Growers' Assn. Town Clerk Dixon read an address on behalf of the Mayor, on behalf of the town council, and Sec'y Parker read one signed by J. W. Bigelow, on behalf of the Fruit Growers' Society. Mr. Bigelow presented them with certificates of life membership in the Fruit Growers' Association. The Gov. Gen's reply was necessarily brief as the train could only be detained a few minutes, but it was a very happy one. He thanked the Mayor and Mr. Bigelow for the courtesy shown them as representatives of the Queen, and said there was no sentence in the address that he and Lady Aberdeen appreciated more highly than that which extended an invitation to visit this place again. This invitation he gladly accepted. He had heard much of this 'Land of Evangeline' which Longfellow had immortalized in verse as Sir Walter Scott had many parts of Scotland. He had also heard of the great educational institution located at Wolfville, and had with him as travelling companion a distinguished graduate of Acadia in the person of Hon. Atty.-Gen. Langley. He was glad to learn that this college was fitting men to occupy the highest positions in the State. It was a pleasure to them to be made members of the Fruit Growers' Association as he took a deep interest in fruit culture and had himself embarked in the enterprise on his farm in B. C. His farm was too far away to come into competition with the farms of this valley, and so he could join hands across the continent with his fellow-laborers in this work. He regretted that he could not speak more fully in reply to the addresses as they demanded a more extended permit, and said in closing that this feelings could not be better expressed than with these words: 'they were happy to meet, sorry to part, and I hope to meet again.' Mrs. Amy Witter presented Lady Aberdeen with a basket of fruit. As the train moved out the customary three cheers were given for their excellencies who acknowledged it from the rear platform of their car.

Opening of the Public Schools.

The Public Schools of the town opened on Monday last, and filled the rooms to overflowing—Miss Burgess having no less than seventy-two. Miss West's room was also filled beyond its seating capacity. Miss Scott has the same, the pupils she had last year now taking the 7th and 8th grades instead of the 6th and 7th. We are glad that Miss Scott has advanced a grade in her work and have no doubt the same progress which has characterized her work in the past will be apparent in the future. Under the new arrangement Miss West will have two grades and will thus be enabled to work at much better advantage than formerly. In the advanced department the 10th grade which has been started for the first time this year, has ten pupils, all of whom, Mr. Godfrey says, seem determined to succeed. The 9th grade has the goodly number 16, which promises a good 10th grade for next year and as no doubt if the pupils comprising this grade are energetic and industrious, all of them will be able to obtain a D certificate at the close of the present school year. In Mr. Godfrey's School Board have secured a first-class man for principal, and we can feel assured that the good work done by Principal Gosman in the past few years will be continued. We bespeak for our schools the interest and support of the community.

Union Agricultural Society.

Wishing to excite greater interest in the forthcoming Provincial Exhibition, the Union Agricultural Society have invited Prof. Geo. Lamson, Ph.D., LL.D., Provincial Sec'y for Agriculture, to address their quarterly meeting on Tuesday evening, Sept. 4th, at Union Hall, Church St. Prof. Lamson is well versed in exhibition matters; he is a member of the Honorary Committee and also Hon'y Sec'y of the Board of Commissioners; and has also been appointed a member of the Cattle, Sheep and Horticultural Committees. He is a pleasing and instructive speaker, and will give much interesting information upon exhibition topics. The meeting will also be addressed by R. W. Starr, Esq., our Nova Scotia correspondent, and other prominent gentlemen. The public are cordially invited to attend the meeting which will commence at 7:30 p.m.

The Times.

Contained. After my friend and I got well started on our way, he said that, since we would not have time to see many of the scenes and characters of the play of which he had made mention, he would describe to me a number of the others as we pursued our journey. Among the persons mentioned I recognized some acquaintances of mine, a few of whom are to be found in all the towns of our province, yea, even in Loupville the beautiful. One remark which my friend made was, I thought very good. He said that what was wonderful about most of the characters was the fact that they thought every one else did the same things as themselves, and they constantly spoke of their own doings as those of the world; which he said, much reminded him of the old story of the frog who, happening to get in the shade of a burdock leaf, croaked out that the sun was blotted from the sky and darkness enveloped the whole universe. Then he added with a smile, "to those who wear green spectacles all things appear green."

At this point, dropping his prose style, he started in verse to describe the characters as stated. And there lives the man, by no means simple. Who may be styled, The Universal Index. Because his learning gives but the title Of every chapter, and is no requital For all the pains one takes in glancing over. Much like a mouse this scrap-devouring bore. That in a pantry loves his teeth to try, And nibbles here and there, now cheese, now pie, Now mouldy crusts, now appetizing cakes. First gnaws the wrapper then the jelly takes. Then bits of putty to his molars cling, But never yet hath he devoured the whole of anything. Doctors and lawyers we will not hunt down.— The hackneyed butts for all small wits in town.— Of them we'll say just this and nothing more: That lawyers sometimes lie and doctors sometimes care. But there's one man to be half-scourged, half-pierced, Who says "My evil habits can't be quieted, I've tried and tried," cries he, "and always fail, And all my will can do is no avail." "But there's just where he's wrong," my comrade said. "Half-hearted trials never yet have sped. A poor wretch struggling in a miry soil, Wearies and sinks with slight repeated toll. But, gathering all his strength, one mighty bound Clears the morass and lights on solid ground. So, gainst temptations and the woe of life Who listless battle, perish in the strife. He shall not fall but be a conqueror ever. There yet are fluttering forms of varied dyes Who may be termed nice Fashion's butterflies; Or gay and thoughtless, are like bubbles free. That rise and lightly float on every sea. Flashing with rainbow rays they glitter bright, But hollow are their forms as if false their light. The mighty waves of human action rear sublime, and onward countless thousands bear, Which with a foam break break and disappear. Unchanged, unchecked in their resistless roll, The billows hasten to their destined goal." Then there's the Dude; whose aim is e'er to be successful, With pockets may be, surely not with head full; But nobler things deserve our watchful ken. Than Darwin's models of primæval men. Another fellow lives whom thou hast met, The man who smokes the odorous cigarette, And puffs till both in clouds of azure move. While she who thinks it manly through and through Says sweetly "I don't mind, I like it, smoke George, do. Also! such manners must we not condemn?" When men debate themselves and girls encourage them. Next him the novel-reading maiden zero Who pines in waiting for some handsome hero To whisper love in some cool shady bowery. And with mild Pansy wastes full many an hour, Or sees true inspiration blaze and play, In the dull platitudes of Bertha Clay.

The Delineator for October is called the Autumn Number and contains an unusually large number of articles on interesting subjects. In addition to the regular fashion matter there is a special article of much value to mothers called Fitting Out The Family for Autumn and Winter. There are also articles for the housekeeper on Seasonable Cookery, Hints on Serving Peaches, Apples and Plums, and The Use of the House, Life and Work at Mount Holyoke College are well treated by a recent graduate, the second paper in the Kindergarten Series opens up the study in an interesting way, and there is a practical contribution on Millinery as an Employment for Women. The relations between Mother and Daughter are concluded in less number, and in how to Live Wisely the subject of Illness and What Not to Do is ably discussed. Instruction in Artistic Handcraft is given in Venetian Iron Work and the Use of Creps and Tissue Papers, and entertainment is provided in a Halloween German and a Christmas them Party. Around the Tea Table is as gossip as usual, and there are papers on Knitting, Netting, Tatting, Lace Making, Crocheting, etc. The subscription price of the Delineator is one dollar a year, single copies, fifteen cents each. Amherst Races.

There were eight starters in the two-year-old race. "Orion" owned by E. B. Etter, Amherst, won. Time, 2:47 1/2. There were four starters in the four-year-old race. E. B. Etter's "Sir Richard" won. Time 2:38 to 2:38 1/2. "John Almon," owned by E. L. Willis, St. John, after a hard contest won the three minutes race. Time, 2:34 1/2 to 2:39 1/2. The "free-for-all" was a great race and was won by "Pilot Jr." who did such fine trotting at Yarmouth a few days ago. Best time 2:21. A. C. Bell's "Israel" was in this race but did not seem to be in good condition, though he won one heat. The time, 2:21, the fastest ever made on a Maritime race track. It is seldom that a periodical receives so apt a name as "Toilettes" which in itself, carries the suggestion of cleanliness and elegance. In its case the title harmonizes completely with the character of its contents which are pre-eminently refined, beautiful and useful. The styles of the hour are faithfully pictured each month so feature being wanting to make the magazine an indispensable adjunct to the work-table of the dressmaker as well as a necessity in the home. The September edition has many specialties in walking, evening, boating and other costumes desirable for the month. It can be obtained from all Newsdealers or direct from Toilettes Publishing Co., 125 West 23rd St., New York. Single copies 20 cents. Yearly subscriptions $1.50.

"Here is a brief statement from "Country Roads" in regard to preserving highways, which will instantly address itself to every farmer and freighter: "Front wheels and rear wheels should not track; make the rear axle longer than the front; tracking wheels produce deep ruts; you never saw ruts at a turn in the road." This hint will show farmers how they may drive over their fields in the spring without destroying as they go. A rutted wagon track in a meadow or pasture never disappears until the ground is plowed.

Baptist Convention.

The Baptist convention of the Maritime Provinces was organized at Bear River on Saturday. The following officers were chosen: President, Rev. J. H. Saunders, St. John; Vice-presidents, Rev. J. C. Brother Peter, House of the Angel Guardian, Boston, Mass., writes: "My only desire in adding this testimonial to the great number you have already received in favor of K. D. C., is to induce sufferers from indigestion to try this remarkable remedy which, I believe, will be lasting. Makers of such a valuable medicine are doing much good to humanity. Free Samples of K. D. The farmers of Prince Edward Island appear to be cultivating a dairy industry with good results. They have been brought to a perception of its advantage. When oats and potatoes commanded good prices, the forehanded farmers in the island were inclined to despise the petty returns from their surplus butter, and, as a rule, did not keep many cows to produce surplus butter. As for cheese, they had no idea of making it for the market. Now the great profit to the farmer is from his dairy products. USESKODA'S DISCOVERY, The Great Blood and Nerve Remedy.

The Addresses to Lord and Lady Aberdeen.

FROM THE TOWN COUNCIL.
To His Excellency The Right Honourable Sir John Campbell Hamilton Gordon, Earl of Aberdeen, Baronet of Nova Scotia, Governor General of Canada.

May it please your Excellency:
We, the Mayor and Town Councillors of Wolfville, for ourselves and as representatives of the Citizens, do most cordially welcome your Excellencies to our town. First, to your Excellency as the representative of our beloved Queen whom may the Great God abundantly bless, and secondly, personally as one whose lofty aim of life is to use your high rank, great intellectual powers and untiring energy in benefiting your fellow-man, and assisting to solve the perplexing social problems of the day; and also to the Countess who so ably aids you in every good work.

This our land is famed in history as one of the earliest settlements of the French Acadians and of their struggles with our race for its possession; immortalised in poetry, as the land of Evangeline; and provisionally, as the garden of Nova Scotia; and educationally, as the seat of Acadia University and Ladies' Seminary.

The great stretches of cultivated land and numerous orchards in view from the railway and far beyond on each side of it are almost invariably owned by the tillers of the soil and yet there is room for many more such.

Our people are proud of their country, loyal to their Queen and contented with the laws made for their governance. We hope that this first visit of your Excellencies to the Maritime Provinces may ever be a pleasant reminiscence in your term of government of this great Canada of ours.

We regret that your Excellencies cannot spend more time with us at present but trust that at a later date you may enable us to renew our welcome and make you acquainted with the scenic beauties of our fair land.

E. P. BOWLES, Mayor.

FROM THE FRUIT GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.
May it please your Excellencies:
That we, in behalf of ourselves and the Fruit Growers Association of Nova Scotia have the honor to address you.

This association was organized some thirty years ago, and during this time has done much to advance the fruit growing interests of the province. The society has now a roll of about 600 members representing nearly every county in Nova Scotia, and during the past year, with the aid of the local government, has established a school of Horticulture—the only such school in Canada.

Believing you are personally interested in fruit growing in the Dominion, and also remembering the lively interest manifested by your excellencies in our fruit exhibit at the world's fair at Chicago, we venture to hand you herewith certificates of honorary life membership in the association and trust you will do us the honor to accept them. We also take this opportunity to heartily bid you welcome to Nova Scotia and to the land of Evangeline. Permit us to remind your excellencies that you now stand at the eastern entrance to the Annapolis Valley celebrated somewhat, and justly so we think, as a favored fruit growing district, where almost every variety of fruits indigenous to temperate climes may be successfully grown. From this region have been gathered, in the main, the fruits shown at many of the principal fairs in different parts of the world, during the last quarter of a century, and which in every case have won distinction for Nova Scotia. The shipment of apples from Kings, Annapolis and Hants counties to England has become an important item in the exports of the country, and we are jealous of the fact that Nova Scotia apples hold a high place in the London markets.

We hope your excellencies may find it convenient during your residence in Nova Scotia to spend at least a short time, among the orchards of this fruitful valley and thereby obtain a view of the country not afforded by a flying trip over the railway.

Should you decide to return to Wolfville any day that may best suit your own convenience, the executive committee of this association will be pleased to have the honor of meeting your party and driving to some of the many points of interest in this home land of Evangeline.

Signed on behalf of the association.

Next meeting in Temperance Hall
Thursday, Sept. 13th, at 3.30 p. m.
The meetings are always open to any who wish to become members.

Gospel Temperance meetings, conducted by members of the W. C. T. U., are held every Sunday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock, in the vestry of the Methodist church. All are welcome.

The Press as an Evangelist.
Press work in the temperance reform
is nothing more nor less than temperance evangelism by means of the printed page. Thus the press becomes an evangelist, and no better definition of "the work of an evangelist" can be found outside of Paul's letter to Timothy, wherein he bids the young man, "Preach the word; be instant, in season, out of season;
reprove, rebuke, exhort with long
suffering and doctrine."

For twenty years the W. C. T. U. has been winning to itself "the power of the press," and leading it to do the work of an evangelist—to preach the temperance word in season and out of season, reproving,
rebuking and exhorting with patient,
long suffering, and presenting day after day, month by month, year in and year
out, the unswerving doctrine of temperance and purity.

As a result of this work it is the testimony of great numbers of temperance adherents that they became such through the potent influence of some periodical,
story, incident, argument or short sentence, even, pointed with a temperance truth.

Since facts are ever more satisfactory
than generalities, it may be well to glance
briefly at the actual temperance work being done through the press.

Take up one of the issues of the local paper to which a W. C. T. U. press superintendent has contributed, and in quite into the varying mission of this column, which has been the result of such painstaking "the periodical," according to its circulation, tens of hundreds, thousands. Some of these, or turning its pages over, sight such keynote words
as "temperance," "reform," "total abstinence," and forthwith pass, not considering the waste which precedes time over such matter? Others read, but carelessly, and forget it all in an hour. One reads with a passing interest, another takes the truth and distills it into a weeping of sorrow, to be flung at a temperance acquaintance, privately called a crank.

This one has another matter at the editor
for admiring such heresy to the severer
course of a request to have his paper
"stopped at once." But others—and blessed be it to know they are legion-
read, mark, learn and inwardly digest,
and temperance brown and nerve are fed thereby.

Here is a quiet-faced mother, who marks the paragraph and sends the paper to her absent boy or girl, who is only too glad to read every word of home, and allows the "little preacher" with a good grace, since mother sent it.

A wife folds her paper so that porticu-lar articles is uppermost and reads it carefully where her husband must see it.
A worried young editor in a country
office spies out the bright bit of temperance sentiment or news, runs his shear,
about it, and the next week it goes out through his paper to a gaily circle of readers.

A minister of the gospel sees that this interesting incident of those startling
statistics will enrich his coming sermon
and on Sunday he reads the good seed in many earnest hearts.

Another W. C. T. U. press superintendent, whose "copy" is due in the little office away out on some frontier of the reform, blesses her sister worker a thousand times as she seizes the fresh items
and sets it in her columns.

A TRAVELLER'S EXPERIENCE.

The life of a Commercial Man Not
All Sunshine.

Constant Travel Roughing it on Trains
Weakens the Most Robust—The Experience of a Halifax Merchant While on the Road.
Acadian Recorder, Halifax, N. S.
Mr Percy J. A. Lear, junior partner, of the firm of Blackadar & Lear, general
broker, 60 Bedford Row, Halifax, N. S., comes from a family of commercial travellers. His father, James Lear, was on the road in Lower Canada with dry goods
for twenty-three years, and few men
were more widely known and esteemed,
and the general Percy himself has just returned from the ranks of the drummer, after a varied experience as knight of the grip, which extended over seventeen years and embraced almost every town and village in Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific. He is an extremely popular young man, a leading member of the Oddfellows' fraternity, an officer in the 68th regiment of militia, and a rising merchant.

"How comes it that you are so fat and ruddy after such a term of hustling railroad life and varied diet, Mr Lear?"
questioned the reporter.
"Well," was the answer, "it's a long story, but one worth telling. I weigh 190 pounds to-day, and am in better health than I ever before enjoyed in my life. Two years ago I got down to 135 pounds. Constant travelling, roughing it on trains and in country hotels broke me all up and left me a nasty case of kidney complaint and indigestion. My head was all wrong, my stomach bad,
I was suffering continual pains and dizziness, and my urine was extremely thick and gravelly. I began to get scared. I consulted several physicians in Montreal, Winnipeg and other cities, but their treatment did not give me a particle of relief. One day I bought a box of Dr Williams' Pink Pills, and I made up my mind to give them a good trial. They seemed to help me, and I bought a second, third and fourth box, and they cured me. My stomach was all right, the dizziness left my head, no more lassitude, and all traces of my kidney disease disappeared. I was a new man, and gained flesh immediately, and have never been troubled since. I consider my case astonishing, because kidney complaint, especially gall stones, is hereditary in our family. It helped to hurry my father, to an early grave, and an uncle on my mother's side, Dr White,
of Sydney, Australia, has been a chronic sufferer from gall stones, from boy-hood. I was so impressed with the virtues of Dr Williams' Pink Pills, that I took the trouble to send Dr White two boxes all the way to Australia. Since my discovery of the benefits of these wonderful little pink coated "examinators of disease," I have recommended the remedy far and wide, and I could enumerate dozens of cases where they have been efficacious."

An analysis shows that Dr Williams' Pink Pills contain a condensed form of all the elements necessary to give new life to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for all diseases arising from an imperished condition of the blood, or from impairment of the nervous system, such as loss of appetite, depression of spirits,
anemia, chlorosis or green sickness,
general muscular weakness, dizziness, loss
of memory, locomotor ataxia, paralysis, scalding, rheumatism, St. Vitus' dance, kidney and liver troubles, the after effects of grippe, and all diseases depending upon a vitiated condition of the blood,
such as scurvy, chronic erysipelas, etc.

They also act upon the female system, leading to the blood and restoring the glow
of health to the arid yellow cheeks.
In the case of men they effect a radical cure
in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excess. Sold by all dealers or sent by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing the Dr Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont. or Schenectady, N. Y. Beware of imitations and substitutes alleged to be "just as good."

Cured to Stay.
Dr E. A. Rye disappoints the Doubter—
He once had Diabetes but he is no more—Attending to His Big Practice.
Portland, Ont., Aug. 29.—The account
which appeared in many Canadian papers
a few months ago of Dr E. A. Rye having been cured of diabetes by Dodd's Kidney Pills, attracted widespread attention at the time. Many doubters, though, protested that the cure was not a permanent one. The best proof that these doubters were wrong is the fact that for a year back, Dr Rye has been attending to his practice, which was attended by a large one, in this village and the surrounding country, and has never had any return of the disease. His health is first-class and the doctor is not compelled to take any of the precautions as to diet or otherwise, that are always ordered for people threatened or troubled with diabetes.

SHE WOULD NOT BE PATIENT.
SHE SIGHED FOR HEALTH.
Found it in Paine's Celery Compound.
There is no virtue in patience when illness torments the body. It is a crime against Heaven and our fellows mortals to allow disease to gain the mastery when help and cure is at our very doors.

DOCK BLOOD PURIFIER
CURES
I was sick one whole year with Liver
& Kidney disease, confined to my bed.
Two doctors attended me and at last gave me up to die in this extremely critical condition. My mother begged me to try Dock Blood Purifier, as it was like a drowning man grasping for a thing. I tried every thing before, I used and got a bottle sent of which I used
me and I am now well and Dock Blood Purifier saved my life.
