WILLIAM RATTENBURY.

Death of a Well-Known Pioneer of Huron.

A Portrait and Sketch of His Life—Interesting Reminiscences of Ancient Huron.

From the Clinton New Era. Much sorrow was felt, and sympathy expressed, when it was known that Sunday, the late Mr. Wm. Rattenbury, one of the pioneers, if not the pioneer of Clinton, was no more.

The late William Rattenbury was born in Devonshire, Eng., in the year 1806, the year in which Admiral Nelson was killed at Trafalgar. He came to Canada in his twenty-sixth year, and settled in Toronto, the "Muddy York," of early Ontario history.

At various times Mr. Rattenbury was employed by the Canada Company in the Huron District, helping to build mills, wharves, stores, etc., at various villages and settlements.

In May 1845, he bought out the hotel site, building and all, on the corner of Ontario and Victoria streets, Clinton, and there he opened a hotel, known as the Columbus Drug store.

During his long occupation of the hotel, he was noted for his ready and cordial manner to cater to the public wants, and in early time, many a poor man received accommodation in both lodging and meals.

Mr. Blake went on to say that the making of the Senate election—the right to amend our common constitution, the right to amend our mercantile treaties with other nations, the right to establish upon a firm basis our local and Provincial rights, the right to deal with the subjects of extradition and copyright, of the civil service reform and the superannuation abuses, with the Gerymander Bill, and the various other questions referred to in other questions in the catalogue, ought to be regarded as sufficiently numerous and important to satisfy the most eager demand for reform.

Mr. Blake declared that he believed that he was in the best sense of the word a practical politician, anxious to deal with practical politics, with these questions which are before the people of this country, and which are weighty enough and embarrassing rather than accounts of their numbers than from any paucity of important subjects, requiring the fullest consideration from the people.

The Reform Policy.

Mr. Blake's speech at Owen Sound ought to sufficiently satisfy those who refuse to look at the facts, and who cannot understand that a party may have a policy without it being set up in a series of resolutions, like so many sections in an act of Parliament.

The Tory party feels that the issues present are pressing upon us, issues which arise very largely out of the contrast between their pledges and promises, and their practices and their performances, are very dangerous issues for them.

THE OONTO WRECKED.

After Miraculous Escapes from Wind, Wave and Ice on Saginaw Bay, the Propeller Oonto Goes Down in the St. Lawrence River.

DETROIT, July 7.—Word was received in Detroit today by the owner, R. Van Slyke, of this city, that the steamer Oonto, which had such a terrible time knocking about the Charity Islands in Saginaw Bay all last winter, was wrecked last night in the St. Lawrence River.

The Oonto was built at Mapitowoc, Wis., in 1873. She was originally owned by the Goodrich Transportation Company, and from them passed into the hands of George E. Colwell, who sold her to R. Van Slyke, of this city, two years ago. She was in charge of Capt. J. W. Martin, of Milwaukee.

In 1884 the Oonto plied between Saginaw and Cleveland, and was commanded by Capt. G. W. McGregor. In the fall she was taken off the route and kept on Lake St. Clair and narrowly escaped going down. That winter she caught fire and was partially destroyed. She was purchased by Van Slyke in the spring of 1885, who had her repaired and placed on the route between Detroit and Lake Huron port.

"You've sworn that ye speak truth," she said. "God forgie ye if aught else has been up ye year, lips. But it's Gerald that has led to ye; he was aye feart at his brother, the gran' Lord Morven. Let him say what he like—he's deid now 's'ems tsk' it back—but I was his wife—altho' his dyin' breath he has tried to stave me off."

CHAPTER XXII

"THE LITTLE BIRD WITHIN THE LUTE." "I have altered my mind," said Dr. Airie, with an air of mild urbanity. "I advised your Lordship not to leave home for the present, did I not? I recind that statement. I think it would benefit your health to travel for a time."

It was the evening of the day on which the doctor had had his interview with Maggie Logan. He was seated with Lord Morven in the dining-room. The servant had left them—deserted was on the table; and these were the first words which the doctor had uttered for fully fifteen minutes.

The doctor bowed. "I am gratified by your confidence," he said. "As a patient, you are admirable. Not every man will place himself unreservedly in his physician's hands."

"I was not thinking of you as a physician," remarked the Earl sullenly. "You have, I suppose, your own reasons for wishing to get me away. Well, let me hear them."

"My reasons," said Dr. Airie, with an artistic assumption of well-bred surprise, "are based entirely upon the state of your health, my lord. You are unwell, unwell; in a perilously excitable condition. A sea voyage, a journey on the Continent, would be the best tonic and restorative that you could have."

Morven was silent for a moment. Then he raised his eyes with a gleam of hope in their sombre depths. "I will go to Switzerland," he said.

"To Miss Esilmont and Lady Lillias?" No," said the doctor slowly, "I do not think that you had better take that course. You would unsettle them. Lady Lillias would try to work upon your feelings; Miss Esilmont upon your judgment. It would be unwise. Besides, your young friend, Mr. Wiggins, is already on his way to Zurich. You had better not meet him until the affair is finally arranged."

"Arranged! But it is not yet begun."

"It is begun so far that he knows you will not oppose the engagement," said the doctor firmly. "I telegraphed to him yesterday to start."

"Lillias will not accept him."

"Give her time; give her time," said Dr. Airie. "A woman's mind is a variable thing. Wiggins is rich, generous, and madly in love with her. They will return betrothed, if not already married."

"What do you mean?"—The Earl turned round and faced Dr. Airie somewhat sternly. "I will have no under-hand means, no—no—deul play, Airie," he said, dropping his voice, but still looking steadfastly into the doctor's eyes. "If I go I shall expect to find everything on my return as it is."

"Exactly," said the doctor with a little smile. "I will carry out your wishes to the best of my ability, as I believe I have always done. But there are accidents against which one cannot always guard. A sudden chill, a feverish attack, an access of faintness—all these things are possible evils, and evils not easy to avert, if any untoward circumstance should, in your absence, render my care unavailing."

There was a long pause. Morven's eyes were fixed upon the ground. The doctor maintained an apparently careless demeanour, but watched his former pupil out of the corners of his serene blue eyes with some anxiety. He thought that Morven had paled a little when at last he lifted his head and answered gravely.

"I will trust all to you."

"You need have no fear," said Dr. Airie almost gaily. "If that is your feeling I can smooth you difficulties away with very great ease. Confess now, my dear Morven, that it would be a relief to you to have this little matter settled before your marriage. Let me feel that I am doing you a kindness in freeing you from a burden which circumstances have unhappily imposed upon you."

Morven shivered involuntarily, and broke out in an angry tone. "Freeing me! Settling the matter? You know you can't do it. If I trust to you, I trust you to act as you know I wish. The matter must be left to—"

"To Providence?" asked the doctor mockingly. "To time and chance," said the Earl, violently. "What else do you expect? Do you want me to murder my own—"

"Enough!" said Dr. Airie quietly. "Walls have ears. Never mention names. I understand you well enough."

"You are sure of that?" "Quite sure. The only thing of which I would remind you is that Miss Esilmont, as Lady Morven, will tolerate no secrets within these walls. If you think of baffling her curiosity, you are mistaken. Your only chance of safety lies in letting me act as I please with respect to the person of whom we speak. I will treat him gently; but he must be removed."

"Remove him then?" "Yes. Where?" "There are surely asylums—private asylums, perhaps—where a patient could be treated—Good heavens, Airie, have I not said I would trust it all to you? Do as you please, but spare me the details. I can't tell you how they torture me! I will go away tomorrow, as you suggest—it is perhaps the best plan—and you will keep me informed of all that I ought to know. I give you full authority."

His face twitched with strong emotion; he stretched out his hands as he spoke in a sort of wild appeal. Dr. Airie knew when to be silent; he saw in this case that he had strained his power to the utmost. He made no opposition, therefore, to Morven's abrupt departure from the room; but when he was alone he smiled to himself—an inscrutable sort of smile that he had made Lord Morven say all that he had wanted him to say, and he was well content.

And so it happened, rather to the surprise of the world at large, that Lord Morven went off to Austria, and did not join his sister and her betrothed in Switzerland. Both Beatrice and Lillias felt some astonishment at his conduct; he had declared to them so positively that it was impossible for him to leave the Towers that summer—but Beatrice remembered his refusal to grant her what she had asked him, and fancied that he shrank from meeting her after the repulse. Perhaps this thought softened her heart a little towards him—though it was not very tenderly inclined just then.

Meanwhile Mrs. Pirie harboured her various guests and lodgers under one roof, and heartily wished that she could see her way out of her troubles. For Maggie was a constant source of anxiety to her, and was perhaps, as Mrs. Pirie herself expressed it, "more plague than profit." Her interview with the doctor had left her in a depressed state of body and mind, which Mrs. Pirie (who had not been told what passed between them) could not understand. The girl's only care now seemed to be for her boy. She sat with him in her arms for hours at a time, not speaking, scarcely seeming to hear when she was addressed. Mrs. Pirie used to wonder what was amiss with her. She had been far fuller of life and spirit when she first came to Glenberrie.

The fact was that Maggie was stunted by the hopelessness of her position. She thought of doubting the story that Dr. Airie told her of Gerald's denial of his marriage. She did not know enough of law to see that publicity would be her best policy. Her one idea was to creep out of sight and hide herself and her child in some forgotten corner of the world—where no one would ever speak of her. And in this passive state she allowed Mrs. Pirie to stay and do what she would—even when it came to Mrs. Pirie's passing her off as the young widow of an imaginary seafaring man named Drummond who had been drowned in a voyage to America. Maggie uttered no protest. Mrs. Pirie was as studious to uphold the honor of her house in her own way as Lord Morven himself did in his.

It was her lodger, Bertie Douglas, who rendered it necessary in Mrs. Pirie's eyes that she should invent a history for Maggie. He was on the high road to recovery, but was still far from strong, and was treated much as an invalid by Anthony and by his landlady. The cousins had found themselves very comfortable in their lodgings, and had resolved to stay there for the present. The house was conveniently close to Bertie's estate, and, as he had received to take the management of his affairs into his own hands, he wanted to be as near the place as possible. Lockhart had lately been speaking more or less vaguely of going back to London; but he felt that at present his departure would be an unpleasant thing to Bertie, who needed help in various ways. So they both stayed; and in staying they became aware of the existence of beautiful Maggie Logan.

"A lady is staying in the house, I see," Bertie remarked one day to Mrs. Pirie, in a questioning tone. Anthony had gone out, and, in her absence, Bertie was not averse to a colloquy with his landlady.

"My niece, sir," said Mrs. Pirie briefly. "Bertie glanced at him, then shrugged his shoulders. "Guess," he said, with a half-laugh. There was a momentary embarrassment in his face, and some emotion which his cousin did not know how to characterize. Instead of guessing, therefore, Lockhart walked on with darkening brow and displeased demeanour. Bertie did not seem inclined to pursue the subject. He began to discuss some of his plans for the rebuilding of the house, and as he talked he turned his steps towards the lodge. It was tolerably evident to Anthony that he was purposely being led away from the Glenberrie ruins, possibly in order that he might not see anything of the person with whom Bertie had been in such earnest converse. This notion did not add Anthony's good humour.

But a little reflection tended to calm his irritation. Bertie had, of course, a right to act as seemed good to himself. Even if his actions were in other people's eyes rash, foolish, inconsiderate, nobody had any right to interfere. And if Bertie were only foolish—if he did nothing that could be called by a worse name than that of imprudence—Anthony did not care. After all, the shock that he had experienced in seeing Bertie in attitude expressive of greater affection, admiration, sympathy, or something of the kind than it was right that Bertie should show towards anyone but Lady Lillias Ruthven—this shock, he thought to himself, would scarcely have been felt by other people. It was the effect of Dr. Airie's sneering tone, of Dr. Airie's veiled insinuation. But for him, Anthony was conscious that he might not have thought twice of the clasped hands, the meeting eyes, the lips that seemed so perilously near! This was the consciousness that galled him more than all. To think that he was still only a puppet in Dr. Airie's hands!

This undercurrent of reflection went on in him while he was replying with his lips to Bertie's question, and apparently listening attentively to his plans. In reality he heard very little, and spoke almost mechanically; but in process of time his irritation of feeling calmed itself, and he could acknowledge that he had been hasty in his conclusions. It was while he was driving back to Mrs. Pirie's that he said in his customary manner.

"Mrs. Pirie's niece was up at Glenberrie, I saw."

"Yes," said Bertie and said no more. "It was she whom you were talking with?" "You saw me?" "I did."

Then there was a short silence. By a furtive glance, Anthony saw that the color had mounted his cousin's cheeks, and that his brow was contracted, as though he was not particularly well pleased. He pursued his advantage.

"Need I say that your suit would scarcely be furthered in Lord Morven's eyes by episodes of this kind?" "Of what kind?" "Need you ask?" "You are very ambiguous, Anthony. Suppose we defer this conversation until inside the house. The wind's too keen to make talking pleasant."

Anthony assented gravely. He fancied that this delay meant that Bertie wanted to arrange his thoughts a little, and make up his mind what to say before continuing the discussion. And he felt some impatience with him for not speaking out.

But Bertie's face hardly justified this supposition. It was a trifle perplexed and eager, but it wore no look of guilt.

more than a minute or two, and thus kept his own hands clean. This statement was possibly no more than a sort of jest on Anthony's part, but it had a grim sound of truth about it too.

"Allow me to assist you," said the doctor. He signed with his hand so meaningly towards an aperture in the wall near which they stood that Anthony could not refrain from casting a reluctant, contemptuous glance towards it. And when he had looked once he looked again. A startled ejaculation, for which he could have bitten his tongue out afterwards, escaped his lips. Yet—what did he see?

"A pretty picture, is it not?" Dr. Airie remarked sarcastically. "A very pretty picture. Ah, the spell is broken. They have moved. Well, you were just in time!"

Anthony turned from him abruptly and went out into the air—away from the blackened walls, away from the man whom he distrusted and despised, away from a scene which filled his heart with sickening dismay.

In a few minutes Bertie joined him with a light word of surprise at his long absence. Anthony turned and surveyed him curiously. Bertie's cheek was flushed, his eyes were a little brighter than usual. There was rather an elated look about him. Anthony frowned at the transformation.

"What have you been doing with yourself?" he asked, somewhat sharply. "Wandering about—reading—talking," said Bertie lazily, yet with that look of subdued animation in his eyes, for which at that moment Anthony could have hated him. "What else should I be doing?"

"To whom were you talking?" "Bertie glanced at him, then shrugged his shoulders. "Guess," he said, with a half-laugh. There was a momentary embarrassment in his face, and some emotion which his cousin did not know how to characterize. Once or twice he even smiled a little—not a smile of amusement, but rather of wonder and grave surprise. It was this smile that irritated Anthony more than anything.

A Genuine Love Story. This story, told originally by Spurgeon we believe, will, we are confident strike a chord in many a loving heart. A young clergyman and his bride were invited guests at a large party given by a wealthy parishioner. In all the freshness and elegance of her bridal robes the young wife shone among the throng, distinguished by her comeliness, and vivacity, and rich attire; and when, during the evening, her young husband drew her aside and whispered to her that she was the most beautiful woman in all the company, and that his heart was bursting with love and pride for her, she thought herself the happiest wife in the world. Ten years later, the same husband and wife were guests at the same house, where was gathered a similar gay company. The wife of ten years ago wore the same dress she had worn on the previous occasion, and, of course, had been altered and remade, and old-fashioned and almost shabby. Toi, and one, and motherhood, and pinched circumstances had taken the roses out of her cheeks, and the little wring out of her form. She sat, apart from the crowd, careworn and "pensive." Her small hands, roughened with domestic toil, were unglad, for the invalid's salary was pitifully small. A little apart the ten-year-old husband stood and looked at his wife, and as he observed her faded dress and weary attitude, a great sense of all her past, leaving faithfulness came over his heart. Looking up, she caught his earnest gaze, and noticed that his eyes were filled with tears. She rose and went to him, her questioning eyes subtly asking him for an explanation of his emotion; and when he tenderly took her hand, and placing it on his arm, led her away from the crowd, and told her how he had been thinking of her as she looked ten years before, when she was a bride, and how much more precious she was to him now, and how much more beautiful, for all her shabby dress and roughened hands, and how he appreciated all her sacrifices and patient toil for him, and their children, a great wave of happiness filled her heart, a light shone in her face that gave it more than his youthful beauty, and out all the company there was not so happy a couple as this husband and wife, their hearts and faces aglow from the flaming up of pure sentiment that transpired, and ennobled and glorified all the toil and privations they had endured. Home Rule. In Great Britain the question of Home Rule is commanding attention. To the man with a cold in the head or chest the safest way to ensure Home Rule over a cold is to have on hand a bottle of Dr. Harvey's Red Pine Gum. For sale at J. Wilson's Prescription drug store. (4)

Humbugs. One of the professors in Harvard University, I believe, was a great bugologist. He had all sorts of bugs the world over sent in frames, and he studied bugology until he knew all about it, and had thousands of specimens of different sorts of bugs. And the machinere students took the legs of one bug, and the body of another, and the wings of another, and the head of another, and put them all together, just like nature puts them together, and carried the bug in to the old professor, with his thick glasses on, and laid it on the table and said: "Professor, what sort of a bug is that?" The old professor looked at it, and turned it around, and looked at it, and looked at it again, and said he, "Gentlemen, this is a humbug." And that is just what we mean by a religious humbug. He has got the head of a Christian, and the feet of a dancer, and the tongue of a tattler, and the appetite of a drunkard and the laziness of a shirk, and you just put him all together, and he is the finest specimen of humbug you ever saw.—Sam. Jones.

AYER'S SUGAR-COATED CATHARTIC PILLS

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable. For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion; a few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightley, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else to regulate my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia.—G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked by Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John G. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became so raw, I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in the bowels. By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and in less than one month, I was cured.—Samuel D. White, Atlantic, Georgia.

I have long used Ayer's Pills in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days since, and I commenced giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored.—Theodore King, Richmond, Va.

BOTHWELL'S RAMBLINGS.

A Ramble Goderich and Visits the Pacific

The following is composed of extracts from a letter to relatives here from Harry Bothwell, who is now travelling in British Columbia in the interests of a Montreal firm:—

THE BARRIAD,
 Victoria, B. C., June 25, 1886.
 I arrived here a little sooner than I expected, and wired the home to that effect today. A telegram message from home costs $1.30 for ten words. I left Minneapolis on Thursday at 4.35 p.m., and although I had purchased my Pullman ticket in the morning, I had to take an upper berth, all the lower ones having been gobbled up by St. Paul. I found the upper very comfortable, though, and better ventilated.

We crossed the Red River at Fargo during the night, so that I didn't see it. By forenoon on Friday we ran across Eastern Dakota prairie, quite different to Iowa prairie, where they have plenty of trees planted, while in Dakota there is not a tree to be seen for hundreds of miles.

At Bismark, where we crossed the Missouri River over a tremendous bridge, we had to turn our watches back an hour for "mountain time." Soon after this we entered what is called the Bad Lands of Dakota, and no words of mine can describe the dreary desolation of the scene. Next the long climb up the Rockies, culminating at Mullan Tunnel, nearly 3,000 feet above the level of the sea. The scenery here was grand in the extreme. But the crowning piece is along the Columbia River, which the road follows for two or three hundred miles, with cliffs a thousand feet or more sheer up on one side, and the rushing river down below on the other. Taking it all together we had a very scintillating crowd on the "Miles City," the name of our car, and before we were on our way we all knew where each other were bound for, and pretty nearly everything else there was to know.

The most beautiful sight on the whole Northern Pacific is without doubt the Falls of Mtuomah, a small stream emptying into the Columbia River. The water makes a single leap of 800 feet. Here the train stopped for twenty minutes, to allow the passengers time to view the scene, the foot of the falls not being more than 100 feet from the track. Standing at the foot and looking up, the water didn't appear to be more than a yard across, where it plunges over the cliff. At the bottom it is, however, 100 or 200 or 25 yards. I shall never forget this bit of nature as long as I live.

The same views are to be seen until within a few miles of Portland, a city of 30,000 inhabitants, five or six thousand of whom are Chinese. I visited from curiosity the Chinese theatre there, and of all the wild, absurd, preposterous and ridiculous sights I ever saw that took the cake. I must wait until I get home to tell you about it, for I am quite unable to give you any idea on paper.

Leaving Portland on Tuesday the 22nd, at 11 a.m., by rail, for Tacoma, I had the pleasure of looking for hours at two of the grandest mountains in North America, namely Mount Hood, 14,000 feet, and Mount St. Helens, 8,700 feet. Both are snow-capped all the year round, and although sixty miles away, Mt. Hood looms up clear and distinct and seemingly not ten miles distant. But the king of them all is Mount Tacoma, 14,444 feet above the level of the sea, its peak piercing the clouds, and far away above them. Of this mountain the traveller gains a magnificent view from the train and from the boat after leaving Tacoma.

The trip on Puget Sound, and across the straits to San Juan was to me tedious and uneventful. We left Tacoma at 7 p.m., distance to Victoria, 100 miles. The boat was not large, so I had to put up with two others in the same stateroom. There was a party of Boston people, the Raymond excursion party, numbering between thirty and forty. They seem to enjoy themselves thoroughly. We have also a "Bunch of Keys Comedy Co.," going to Victoria to play for three months. I shall leave this town for my next letter.

This hotel is the best I have been in as far as the table is concerned, not excepting the Rossini House, of Toronto, or the Palmer of Chicago.

A teacher took an apple from the hands of his little boys during school hours. After a while the teacher ate the apple, while the pupils were busy with their sums. The lad noticing this, began to cough. "What is the matter with you?" inquired the teacher. "Oh, please, sir," answered the little boy, "the apple has gone down the wrong way."

BUTTER AND CHEESE

Ontario Agricultural College: Bulletin II.

Points of Attention for the Patrons of Cheese Factories and Creameries.

The business of Dairying when intelligently and carefully followed insures to the farmer a safe and steady income. The Province of Ontario is favored with all the natural advantages needed for the production of cheese and butter of the finest quality; and as the permanent success of the dairy industry depends upon the quality of the product, every dairy farmer is or should be interested in its improvement. To help in that direction is the purpose of this bulletin. In producing and supplying milk to cheese factories and creameries the following points require attention in order that the best results may be obtained.

GENERAL RULES.

- 1. Milk from healthy cows only should be used, and not until at least four days after calving.
2. Any harsh treatment that excites the cow lessens the quantity and injures the quality of her yield.
3. Cows should be allowed an abundant supply of wholesome, suitable food and as much pure water as they will drink.
4. A supply of salt should be placed where cows have access to it every day.
5. Cows should not be permitted to drink stagnant, impure water, nor to eat cleanings from horse stables, leeks, turnip tops, nor anything that would give the milk an offensive taint.
6. All milk vessels should be thoroughly cleaned; first being well washed, then scalded with boiling water, and afterwards sufficiently aired to keep them perfectly aseptic.
7. Cows should be milked with dry hands, and only after the udders have been washed or well brushed.
8. Milking should be done and milk should be kept only where the surrounding air is pure and free from all objectionable and tainting odors. Milking in a foul-smelling stable or yard imparts to milk an injurious taint. Sours which should never be fed, nor should hogs be kept in a milking yard, or near a milk stand.
9. Tin pails only should be used.
10. All milk should be properly strained, immediately after milking, and that purpose a detached strainer is preferable to a strainer-pail.
11. In preparing milk for delivery to a cheese factory it should immediately after straining be thoroughly aired by pouring, dipping or stirring. This treatment is as beneficial for the morning's milk as for the evening's, and is even more necessary when the weather is cool than when it is warm.
12. In warm weather all milk should be cooled after it has been aired, but not before.
13. Milk kept over night in small quantities—say in tin pails—will be in better condition than if kept in larger quantity in one vessel.
14. When both messes of milk are conveyed to the factory in one can, the milking of the morning with the evening's milk should be delayed till the milk-wagon reaches the stand.
15. While the milk is warmer than the surrounding air it should be left uncovered, but when colder it may with advantage be covered.
16. Milk-pails and cans should be protected from the rain, and milk-stands should be constructed to shade the cans from the sun.
17. Only honest milk with its full cream and full share of strippings should be offered; violation of this requirement leaves the patron liable to a heavy penalty.
18. In preparing milk for delivery once a day to a creamery where the whole milk is received, the treatment should be similar to that recommended for cheese factories.
19. For creameries receiving cream only, the milk should be well aired but not cooled before setting.
20. Milk should be set for the separation of the cream where no impure air will reach it.
21. Cream rises best with a falling temperature, and the separation of cream from the milk is promoted by cooling, after setting, to at least 40°.
22. When the cream is used for butter-making at the farm the foregoing treatment and conditions may be observed with profit.
23. Good ventilation for a milk house, milk-cellar or dairy-room, is most essential, and may be provided for by leading an air drain under-ground, for say 200 feet. Through it a supply of pure, fresh, cool air may be admitted. The foul or warm air may be allowed to escape through ventilators or windows in or near the ceiling.
24. Cream should invariably be removed from the milk before the milk is sour.
25. The cream for each churning should be gathered into and kept in one vessel.
26. The whole of the cream should be well stirred every time fresh cream is added.
27. In summer, cream should not be left longer than three days before churning.
28. The best churning temperatures are between 57° and 60° during the summer, and between 60° and 64° during the winter.
29. Butter can be more thoroughly washed free from butter-milk while in the granular condition than after it is gathered or pressed into a roll.
30. Only the best pure salt of medium and uniform fineness of grain should be used, and from three-quarters to one ounce of salt per pound of butter will be found satisfactory for the summer.
31. The utmost cleanliness in milking, in vessels, in utensils and in all surrounding must be observed to preserve the flavor and body of milk, cream, butter and cheese from contamination.

A DAIRY CLASS.

A desire has been expressed for the formation of a Dairy Class, to be trained in butter-making at the Ontario Agricultural College during the forenoon, and to receive general instruction in dairying in the lecture room during the afternoon. September would be the most suitable month. Farmers' sons and daughters and others proposing to attend will please address the Dairy Department, O. A. C., Guelph. No fee will be charged. Let applicants write soon.

Enquiries on matters pertaining to the dairy industry of the Province, addressed to the undersigned at the Dairy Department, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, will receive attention.

BILL NYE'S LETTER.

What the Public Owes to Veritas and His Numerous Co-Workers

My name is Veritas. I write for the papers. I am an old man and have written my kindly words of advice to the press for many years. I am the friend of the public and the guiding star of the American newspaper. I point out the proper course for a newly elected member of congress and show the thoughtless editor the wants of the people. I write on the subject of political economy. Also on both sides of the paper. Sometimes I write on both sides of the question. When I do so I write over the name of Tax-Payer, but my real name is Veritas.

I am the man who first suggested the cure at the Jim street street crossing, so that the water would run off toward the pound after a rain. With my ready pen—ready, and trenchant also, as I may say—I have, in my poor weak way, suggested a great many things which might otherwise have remained for many years unthought of.

I am the man who annually calls for a celebration of the fourth of July in our little town, and asks for some young eloquist to be selected by the committee, whose duty it shall be to read the declaration of independence in a shrill voice to those who yearn to be thrilled through and through with patriotism.

Did I not speak through the columns of the press in clarion tones for a proper observance of our nation's great national day in large gothic extended gaps the nation's stately banners would remain furled and the greasy pig would continue to crouch in his lair. With the aid of my genial co-workers Tax-Payer, Old Settler, Old Subscriber, Constant Reader, U. L. See, Fair Play, and Mr. Pro Bono Publico, I have made the world a far more desirable place in which to live than it would otherwise have been.

My co-laborer Mr. Tax-Payer is an old contributor to the paper, but he is not really a tax-payer. He uses the name in order to conceal his identity, as I use the name Veritas. We have a great deal of fun over this at our regular annual reunions where we talk about all of our affairs.

Old Settler is a young tenderfoot who came here last spring and tried to obtain a livelihood by selling an indestructible lamp chimney. He did well for several weeks by going to the different residences and throwing one of his glass chimneys on the floor with considerable force to show that it would not break.

He did a good business till one day he made a mistake. Instead of getting hold of his exhibition chimney, he picked out one of the stock and busted it beyond recognition. Since that he has been writing articles in violet ink relative to old times and publishing them over the signature of Old Settler.

Old Subscriber is a friend of mine who reads his paper at the hotels while waiting for a gratuitous drink. Fair Play is a retired monte man and Pro Bono Publico is our genial and urbane undertaker.

I am a very prolific writer, but all my work is not printed. A veal and corrupt press at times hesitates about giving currency to such fearless, earnest truths as I make use of.

Farming in the Moon.
"I tell ye, it's nonsense," said Farmer Ben.
"This farming by body and rule,
And sendin' the boys to learn that stuff
At the agricultural schools:
Notation of crops and analysis:
Talk them to a young fellow:
But yer head'n't be tellin' yer science to me,
For I believe in the moon!
"If ye plant yer crop in the growin' moon,
And put up the line for crows,
You'll find it will bear, and yer wheat will too,
If it's decent land where it grows.
But potatoes, now, are a different thing--
They want to grow down, that is plain;
And don't ye see, you must plant for that
When the moon is on the wane?
"So in plantin', and hoein', and hayin' time,
It is well to have an eye,
On the hang o' the moon--ye know ye can tell
A wet moon from a dry.
And, as to hayin', you wise ones now
Are cuttin' yer grass too soon:
If you want it to spend, just wait till it's ripe
And mow in the full of the moon.
"And when all the harvest work is done,
And the butcher's time come round,
Though your boys may be leavin' the very best
And eat as they see fit,
You will find your back will shiver and shrink
When it comes on the table at noon--
Stried to rasp--if it wasn't killed
At the right time of the moon.
"With butter, lard, and oranges now,
Folks can talk till all is blue;
But don't ye be swollerin' all yer hear,
For there ain't nothin' half so true.
They are tryin' to make me change my plans
But I tell 'em I'm no such coon:
I shall keep right on in the old way,
And work my farm by the moon."

A professional beggar died recently in

discovery should occasion no surprise, as it is well known that many of the beggars in that city are worth more than those who bestow alms on them.

A slim young man in the height of fashion was violently sneezing in a street when a companion remarked, "Aw, deahful cold." "Aw, deah fellah, left me alone in the lower hall tother day, and in sucking the ivory handle, so deahful cold, it chilled me almost to death." If Charles had used Dr. Har-

THE PAPERS TOO HARD.

Tough Work For Candidates For Entrance to The High Schools.

The following letter from the principal of Goderich High School, will be read with interest. We append the papers referred to: Sir,—Will you kindly allow me space for a few words with reference to the papers on Orthography, Orthoepy and English Grammar at the recent H. S. entrance examination. I am glad to know that you are going to publish them, and thus let teachers and parents see to what absurd and unfair tests candidates are subjected.

If in addition to the passage for dictation a list of words for spelling is to be given, care should at least be taken that these words are such as fairly prepared candidates must have seen and had occasion to use repeatedly. Now will any sensible person say that such words as rhetorical, nucleus, doughy, &c., form part of the average entrance candidate's vocabulary, or that it is fair to keep pupils out of the High School simply because of their inability to spell such words? As a matter of fact not one of 130 candidates spelled rhetorical correctly, and it is quite evident from the attempts to spell something like the second, that about half of the words on the list were quite unfamiliar to the majority of the candidates.

Then what shall be said of the judgment or fairness of an examiner who, with scores of common words frequently mispronounced to choose from, thought proper to put on his list foreign proper names like Notre Dame or Ardennes. As to the Grammar, the result shows what any experienced teacher would have predicted, that owing to the unfamiliar language of the questions the paper was not a fair test of the candidate's knowledge of the subject. Very many did the pupils fail in very many cases to grasp at the meaning of the questions, but even where they apparently had some conception of what the examiner wanted, their faculty of expressing themselves was not equal to the task imposed on it.

I write this in the fullest sympathy with public school teachers and pupils, who have, in my opinion, been very unfairly judged, and next week I shall ask you to publish the third class Grammar and Literature papers, to show that High School teachers and pupils have been treated even worse. H. I. STRANG.

GRAMMAR.

NOTE.—A maximum of 5 marks may be allowed for neatness. Values 8+4 1. Make lists of (1) the names, (2) the asserting words, (3) the modifying words, and (4) the connecting words in the following sentence; and, if there are any words in it that you do not place in one or more of these four lists, state what they do in the sentence:— James, my eldest brother, who wished much to speak to me, says that, alas! he has to go but that he will return tomorrow.

1-8 2. What is meant by Syntax? Explain, where possible, the syntax of the italicized words in the sentence in the foregoing question. 10 3. Construct sentences to show that each of the following may be used with the value of different parts of speech, and name in each case the part of speech: well, when, seeing him go, who was there.

3-3 4. Explain, in your own words the meaning of "gender," "inflection," and "object;" and illustrate by reference to each example of these terms in James, these are two of the fish that your brother caught with his rods. 8 5. Name the different classes of pronouns; and explain, in your own words, the meanings of the names you give them, illustrating your answer by reference to the following: them, thou, I, who, each, himself, some, this.

8 6. Write out the first and second person singular of all the indicative tenses of the following verbs, that express actions wholly past: lead, seek, give, receive. 7. Correct where necessary, the following, giving the reason in each case. 2 (a) Wanted. A young man to take charge of a pair of carriage horses, of a religious turn of mind. 2 (b) The brightness of her arms and apparel were conspicuous in the foremost ranks. 2 (c) I do not thank any one to blame for taking due care of their health. 2 (d) During the last century no prime minister has become rich in office. 5 (e) It is not fit for such as me and you to sit in the same place with the rulers of the land. 5 (f) A squirrel can climb a tree quicker than a boy. 8. (a) From the golden dream of a new age, wrought peaceably and purely by the slow progress of intelligence, the growth of letters, the development of human virtue, the Reformer of Wittenberg turned away with horror. (b) If I dreamed, that saw his maiden grasp On his palmer's brocaded reins, That the blood of the old Plantagenets Was running in his veins!

Edward, Sarnia and Detroit, returned home on Saturday last. Haying operations are in full blast here, and the crop so far has been secured in splendid condition. The fall wheat is coloring fast and will soon be fit for the reaper. There is a unanimous desire among the people for rain, it being nearly a month since we had a shower. The warmest day we have had so far was Tuesday, 6th inst., when the mercury ran up to 93° in the shade. (Showers fell on Tuesday and Wednesday.)

The Lochalah boys went up to Paramount on Monday afternoon of last week and played a match game of base ball with the boys of that stirring little burgh, defeating them in a score of 17 to 3. The Paramount boys, however, succeeded in getting the better of our lads in a game of foot ball, which was played immediately afterwards, the score standing at close of the game, and to which all did ample justice.

Crew. The sound of our bell will be missed for six weeks. Joseph Hackett has rented his farm to John Kilpatrick.

Robt. Hasty and Wm. Shackleton have two of the best fields of fall wheat in the township. Our boys were badly defeated at the base ball match on Saturday. Of course the Belfast club had larger men and more practice. Our club can beat anything of its size in the county. They speak highly of the way they were treated by all the members of the Belfast club except two, one of whom tried to steal one of their bats, and the other called them names. They expect the Belfast club will play a return match and act like gentlemen.

Ben Miller. The cherry crop was a large one in this section this year. Prices ruled lower than ever before.

Charles Walters is painting his recently purchased house, and will soon have it ready for habitation. Thos. Elliott, who has been in possession of the general store at this place for the last nine months, has disposed of his stock and interest to Thos. Gedhill, who has taken possession.

The committee appointed to consider the matter of remodelling the parsonage has reported in favor of raising the roof so as to make a two story building, and putting an addition to the west end. The old bridge here has been almost entirely torn down, and teams must ford the river, while a foot bridge accommodates pedestrians. The "trooly loll" workmen had a holiday on the glorious Twelfth.

A large surprise party, consisting of the members of Zion choir and the S. S., assembled at the residence of N. Morrish last Wednesday evening, and presented R. D. Morrish, who goes to Teeswater to study the drug business, with a beautiful photograph album and a cup, accompanied by the following address: MR. R. D. MORRISH.—Dear Friend,—It is with feelings of deep regret that we, the young people of Zion congregation and S. S., hear that you are about to remove from our midst, and we take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation of the aid you have rendered in the service of song for several years and also the service you have rendered as secretary of the S. S., and as a token of friendship and regard we present you this album and cup; and it is our prayer that wherever you go you may be long spared to sing the songs of the Lord. Signed on behalf of Zion congregation and S. S. MAGGIE VANSTON, MINNIE TREBLE.
