CHAPTER X.

THE TAMING PROCESS.

The plates were colored, in the natural and elegant style of those days: this lion was a bright crimson, the mane was blue.

She knelt beside the chair—as girlish and unaffected as a child—and begged him to show her some more.

He turned over leaf after leaf, reading scraps of the letter-press and explaining the pictures.

The book was a description of foreign sport.

In one part there was a long description of the Cape, the natives, cattle raising, and hunting.

This interested Grace more than all the rest, and the captain at last, quite unequal to keep pace with her eager curiosity, turned the book over to her and sat watching her with half closed eyes as she bent over it at the table. It was a strange coincidence.

There was the son, Hugh Darrell, riding over the prairies, hunting the leopard and the antelope, and here was the girl who had supplanted him, reading, with flashing eyes and longing heart, of the very spot of ground and the identical pursuits he was engaged in.

Surely there is no such thing as chance!

Fate holds us all in its hands and moves us as easily as the showman pulls the strings of the puppets.

The captain watched and plotted. He was taming and subduing the savage; but at the same time, unconsciously, he was arming her with the knife to cut his web to pieces.

The following morning the captain's horse was brought round and he appeared excited and spurred for a ride.

"Where is Miss Grace?" he asked, entering the room of Mrs. Lucas, who was superintending the removal of the breakfast things.

"Here I am," replied that young lady herself, from behind the curtains.

"Oh, here you are!" said the captain. "I am going for a ride. Will you come with me?"

She did not hesitate this time.

"Yes," she said. "I want to see how your horse goes."

When she ran out in her habit she saw that he had her horse, and not her pony, saddled, but did not say anything. Placing her well-made foot in his hand, she hopped on his back like a bird.

The captain's horse was a thoroughbred and looked it.

"Why did you tell them to get Pussy for me to-day?" Grace asked.

"Because I had no fear of you running away," he said.

She tossed her head.

"Oh, indeed!" she retorted. "You think a wonderful deal of that horse of yours!"

"I do," he said, quietly.

"I don't," she retorted, sharply. "I believe Pussy would race him."

The captain shook his head.

"I think not," he said, with the smile that always irritated her.

"We'll try," said Grace, and with a smart slash of the whip and a sharp jig of the spur she was off.

The captain waited until she had taken a good start and then spoke a quiet word to his horse and the race commenced.

Grace had a good start, and was well mounted, but Hugh's good old horse was more strong than quick, more brave than light, and the captain's thoroughbred steed-chaser crept up on her after the first hundred yards.

Grace looked back with a bright flash on her face and waved her whip saucily.

"To the barn," she said, pointing to one two fields off.

"Right," he answered. "Mind the gate and the fence!"

"Do you mind?" she retorted, and he saw her use the whip again.

They were going at a good pace now, making straight for a gate and a stout fence a little further on.

For the moment, as Pussy rose at it, he thought she had taken it short and his heart beat quickly. Should the horse fall and she be thrown! There was only she between him and the Dale!

But it was not the first time by a hundred that the old horse had cleared that gate, and she came down on the soft turf like a pebble and was off again.

Grace looked back in time to see the captain leap over like a feather and spurred on again.

Then came the fence, higher and more difficult to negotiate.

Again the captain looked with the same thought flashing through his brain.

But Pussy rose up with plenty of space, and there only remained the field. Now was the time to put it on. He just touched the silky neck and away went the steed-chaser.

Grace heard the sudden spring and looked around just in time to see the captain's horse fall all of a heap on the other side of the fence and the captain himself pitched head foremost into the field.

She uttered a cry of alarm and turned back.

"Are you hurt?" she cried, leaping down and standing beside him as he pulled himself together.

"No," he said, "not a bit!" but his face was white. "Have you ridden past the barn? If not, you have not won!"

Here his lips twitched and he put his hand to his arm.

Grace looked alarmed.

"Oh, you are hurt!" she said, laying her hand upon his arm and speaking more softly than he thought she could.

"Oh, I am sure you are! Do sit down—here on this mound—I'll go—I-I don't know what to do. Shall I ride home for Uncle Harry?"

He shook his head.

"No, Grace"—it was the first time he had spoken the name without the prefix, and the girl noticed it—"no, Grace, wait a moment. Will you bring the horse? He is up, I see, and more hurt than I am, I dare say." He spoke just as languidly and coolly as ever; and Grace led the horse—who did not seem at all injured—to its master.

He looked at it, but kept his arm at his side.

"Ah," he said, "you ought to know a bird by this time, old fellow."

"Was it a bird?" asked Grace.

"Yes," he said; and dropped his eyes beneath her anxious gaze. "A bird rose under his nose as he went to take the fence. Poor fellow, it's the first time he has missed in many a day."

It was a falsehood, but he carried it off well.

It was not a bird that had caused the tumble, but a thought—a thought so vile, so hideous, so cruel and so dark that his brain whirled, his hand failed him as the idea entered his head, and he pulled the horse at the critical moment.

"Oh, don't pity him," said Grace.

"Oh, my dear, you must introduce us!"

And she walked up to the captain, who had already uncovered. Grace looked puzzled.

What might Rebecca mean?

She didn't know; but half guessing, went up to Reginald and said:

"This is Miss Rebecca Goodman, whom I've told you about. She's got the rare picture books. She says she'll give you some cold water, so come in at once—make haste."

The captain smiled and, dismounting, bowed to Rebecca.

"Miss Darrell has only half done her duty," he said, in his languid way. "My name is Dartmouth—Reginald Dartmouth. I have hurt my arm—a mere nothing—a simple sprain."

"Oh!" said Rebecca, interrupting him and looking distressed—she would have wept over a canary with a sore throat—"pray come in; a sprain is so painful! George, take the horses round. This way, Mr. Dartmouth."

And she led the way into the drawing-room and rang the bell.

"Sit down, Mr. Dartmouth. Grace, put your whip aside, Mary—to the servant—bring in some cold water and a basin, and a bottle of elixir fluid."

The captain smiled and rose.

"I could not think," he said, "of giving you so much trouble. Had I guessed you would have been so much inconvenienced, believe me, I should not have yielded to Miss Grace's advice."

WILSON A NAVAL EXPERT.

WASHINGTON, May 12. A confidential cablegram from President Wilson to Rear-Admiral Sims in London, sent during the war, was read to the United States Senate Naval Investigating Committee today by Secretary Daniels. It disclosed the fact that the American President was not at all satisfied with the way the British Admiralty was directing the work of the British navy and also indicated that Mr. Wilson could not understand why the Naval experts of Great Britain were reluctant to allow American naval experts at Washington to tell them just how things should be done. Mr. Wilson intimated that he considered the British naval men too prudent and expressed surprise that "the British Admiralty had failed to use Great Britain's great naval superiority effectively against the submarines." He called on Admiral Sims for comments and suggestions based on independent thought and without regard to the "judgments of any one on that side of the water." The Admiralty was "helpless to the point of panic" in the face of the submarine situation, was Mr. Wilson's opinion, as expressed in the message. "Every plan we suggested they rejected for some reason of prudence." The American President added: "In my view this is not a time for prudence but for boldness, even at the cost of great losses." In conclusion President Wilson asked Admiral Sims to advise him as he would give advice "if you were running a navy of your own."

Woodford Affidavit Case Takes on New Aspect.

Leading English Counsel States That the Transaction Comes Within Corrupt and Illegal Practices Act--What Will the Minister of Justice Do?

It will be remembered that, on the day of the first session of the House, Mr. W. R. Warren, Minister of Justice, stated that he had wired an English legal firm asking if the English Corrupt and Illegal Practices Act applied to Newfoundland, and that the answer was "No." The action of the Minister of Justice, in wiring for this opinion, was made for the purpose of ascertaining if the notorious Woodford affidavit case came within the scope of the English Act mentioned. Of course, if the Act applied to Newfoundland it did. If not, the Affidavit Case did not, and it would have to be handled under some other law. Since then Sir Michael P. Cashin, Leader of the Opposition, instructed Howley and Fox, Solicitors, to obtain the opinion of another authority on the same subject--if the English Act applied to Newfoundland. Howley and Fox did so, and in wiring the English legal firm which acted as their agents, gave more explicit particulars than had the Minister of Justice. The wire of the latter, and the reply thereto, follows:

From Attorney General to Legal Advisers in London.

Telegram. 3 April, 1920.

Take counsel's opinion whether sub-section four, section forty-one, English Corrupt and Illegal Practices Act, Eighteen Eighty-Three, applies Newfoundland. Wire reply.

WARREN, Attorney-General.

REPLY.

10 April, 1920. Telegram.

To WARREN. Attorney-General. St. John's. Counsel advise sub-section four, section forty-one, English Corrupt and Illegal Practices Act, 1883, does not apply to Newfoundland, being impliedly excluded by reasons of section 186 to 189, Newfoundland Election Act, 1913. BERRIDGE.

The correspondence between Sir Michael Cashin and Howley and Fox and the latter and their English agents, follows:

From Howley & Fox to Sir Michael Cashin.

April 23rd, 1920. Sir Michael P. Cashin, K.B.E., City.

Dear Sir.--We beg to acknowledge receipt of your favour of this date, enclosing copy of cable correspondence between the Attorney General and his legal advisers in London on the subject of the applicability of sub-section 4, section 41, of the English Corrupt and Illegal Practices Act, 1883, to Newfoundland. A public peace resolution was launched to-day by Senator Hitchcock, of Nebraska, administration spokesman, who declared in addressing the Senate that the measure was futile and inconsistent and inimical to the treaty of Versailles.

GENEVA, May 12. Austria and probably Hungary may be admitted to the League of Nations at its first general meeting this summer, it is learned from a high source, Germany, Bulgaria and possibly Turkey will be made members at the second session, the date of which has not been fixed.

ish Corrupt and Illegal Practices Act of 1883 to Newfoundland, and requesting us to obtain the opinion of some first class English Counsel on the question.

We have, accordingly to-day cabled our agents in London as follows:--

"See Chapter sixty-three, Consolidated Statutes, Newfoundland and Election Act Nineteen Hundred and Thirteen and ruling Supreme Court Newfoundland, published in 'St. John's Herald, newspaper, March twenty-third, obtainable Royal Colonial Institute. Take opinion Sir John Simon or other leading Counsel, whether sub-section four, section forty-one, English Corrupt and Illegal Practices Act, Eighteen Hundred and Eighty-three, applies Newfoundland. Wire reply. Wire total cost and shall transmit same by cable immediately."

You will please note that in submitting this question for the opinion of Counsel, we thought it desirable to include a reference to the decision of the Supreme Court as handed down on the 23rd March last.

This decision was not referred to in the cable sent by the Attorney General on the 3rd April; and the opinion of Counsel given to the Attorney General in reply appears to have been determined without knowledge or consideration of the unanimous ruling of our Supreme Bench.

Yours very truly, (Sgd.) HOWLEY & FOX.

May 12th, 1920. Sir Michael P. Cashin, K.B.E., City.

Dear Sir.--Referring to your request that we obtain opinion of English Counsel on the subject of the applicability of sub-section 4, Section 41, of the English Corrupt and Illegal Practices Act, 1883, to Newfoundland, and to our letter to you on this subject dated April 23rd last, we have now to inform you that we have today received a reply by cable from the English Solicitors whom we wired. The reply reads as follows:-- "To Howley and Fox, 'St. John's, Newfoundland. Counsel advises sub-section 4, Section 41, applies Newfoundland. Writing." (Sgd.) LEGAL."

"Legal" is the registered cable address of William A. Crump & Son, Solicitors, 17 Leadenhall Street, London, E.C. 3.

From Tacubaya a few miles southwest of Mexico City, the presidential candidate rode on a prancing bay stallion through crowded streets as far as the National Palace, where, halting the procession for a few moments General Obregon mounted to the balcony of the hotel fronting the palace and delivered a short speech explaining the ideas that caused him to force President Carranza to evacuate the capital.

Lord D'Abernon on Prices.

Discussing the financial crisis throughout the world, and in England particularly, Lord D'Abernon said some interesting things with regard to the commonly urged expedients for re-establishing the currency. Lord D'Abernon, as Sir Edgar Vincent was British, Belgian, and Dutch representative on the Council of Ottoman Public Debt, and subsequently president. He has also been financial adviser to the Egyptian Government and Governor of the Imperial Ottoman Bank.

Lord D'Abernon said: "No large and permanent relief is to be anticipated from any probable increase of production, desirable as this undoubtedly is. Taking prices as a whole, it is doubtful whether profiteering has added 5 per cent. to their level, and it is doubtful whether control of prices makes as much as Device for Saving Life at Sea.

A "calling-up" system, which is mainly intended still further to advance the object for which the wireless is required to be installed in ships—the saving of life at sea—has been devised by the Marconi Company, according to a London paper. A ship in distress will in future be enabled automatically to ring alarm bells on board any vessel within range to come speedily to her assistance. In the past, in order to ensure that signals should be heard, it was necessary for an operator always to be on duty wearing the usual telephone headphones. If he left his post for a few minutes only, an important call might be lost, because the sound produced in the telephone by wireless signals, received under normal conditions, was inaudible at a very short distance away from the apparatus. That being so, it was essential to have on board ships equipped with wireless installations at least three operators, who divided the day and night into shifts of duty. The present Marconi calling system enables a ship to call up all ships within range, even if no operator or watcher is on duty, in those other ships, in the same way as the ringing of the bell of the ordinary telephone indicates that a message awaits delivery. It is probable that the use of the calling apparatus will be confined to ships in distress. This will ensure greater general and immediate attention being given to emergency calls, such as "S.O.S." and "T.T.T." the ice warning. Without entering into a technical description of the system, it is sufficient to say that when the emergency arises the automatic key will be pressed, and, in a fraction of a minute, all the alarm bells on ships fitted with the receiver, and within range—any distance up to 80 miles—will be set ringing, after which the transmitting operator can send particulars as to the ship and its position. Even if, by some mischance, these particulars cannot be supplied, the warning message itself will indicate the location of the vessel in distress.

False Diagnosis.
"The paper currency of the world, having been increased six-fold during and since the war, and having increased infinitely more in some countries than in others, has violently disturbed prices, exchange, and cost of living. For some unexplained reason, the Governments of the world appear unwilling to meet in conference on the subject, or even to have it examined within their own borders with the publicity, impartially, and authority required. They are inclined to take refuge in false diagnosis and in the empirical treatment of symptoms, instead of recognizing that one factor is dominant—namely, currency—and that in the reform and control of that factor lies the only remedy."

Hunting the Sperm Whale.

A graphic account of the hunting and killing of a sperm whale is told by one who took part in it. Starting from the west coast of Scotland the whaler made for Rockall, a lonely granite pinnacle that juts out of the Atlantic about two hundred miles west of the Outer Hebrides. Why the whales go there is a mystery, but in early summer schools of them may be found in the neighborhood. The look-out soon spots a "blow," that is the fountain ejected by the whale as it comes to the surface to breathe. Away goes the whaler in pursuit. After some intense manoeuvring the whaler gets into suitable position, the skipper takes aim, fires his harpoon gun and a harpoon is embedded in the monster's body. The whale disappears taking yards of hemp line with him. Presently he rises to blow again, and immediately a second harpoon is fired at him and he goes down with yards of cable rattling overhead. About fifty minutes later he floats on the surface of the water, quite dead. Immediately the sailors fall upon him. Air is pumped into the carcass to make it buoyant, his flukes are trimmed off, so that he will float with-out revolving like a propeller, while in tow, and the whaler makes for Scotland again, with a host of screaming birds in her rear. This particular whale realized five thousand dollars. It was a full grown sperm, about sixty feet long.

The Tiger of the Sea.

A most striking and attractive animal of the ocean, or killer-whale, which, on account of its savage and ferocious nature, is known as the tiger of the sea. It is about 20 to 25 feet in length, the skin a polished jet black marble-like surface, devoid of the slightest parasite, smooth and glistening in the sunlight; black above, pure white beneath, a contrast so sharp that when leaping in mid-air with the ventral surface turned toward the observers, they appear like white whales, while from the opposite side the spectators see a figure of inky blackness. Rising from the smooth back is an enormous dorsal fin that stands out like a great scimitar cutting the waters, a totem by which the orca can be recognized from far away. Beneath the eye is a clear oblong white or lavender spot appearing like a huge grotesque organ of vision; and as though to emphasize its oddity, the orca has a vivid pronounced crescent-shaped saddle of creamy maroon color just in front of the tall fin and partly encircling it. Generally the animals move in a line four or five in succession, the fins resembling diminutive black sails, conspicuous and menacing. Such a school is a family party—a very large male, several females possibly, and two or three young. It is not impossible that a procession of the creatures is responsible for some stories of sea-serpents.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

A NEW USE FOR SHOES.

Anent my little article on the golden age for shoe lovers, a letter friend suggests a new use for shoes — talking character by them.

"Don't you think," she writes, "that shoes are next to hats in expressing personality?"

"At a college Halloween party several years ago I read palms for fun (to oblige a young cousin) and a good part of that palm reading I did by shoe reading. As each girl approached I glanced at her feet and in a moment I knew the man who were working their way and the ones who stood for prestige and cash. Then, of course, besides that could tell traits of character by the condition of the shoes.

When Shoes Show Extravagance and Vanity.

A sleazy silk stocking and a cheap shoe show right away that the owner is making a futile effort to imitate riches, and I put her down as extravagant and vain.

"If a white shoe shows signs of dirt on it I make a mental comment of carelessness.

"Rundown heels, missing buttons, etcetera, are the result of a loose fit in one's make-up.

"We Americans sit cross-legged so much that a tap shows up on a shoe pretty plainly, and if a mended shoe worn with an elegant costume it notes a bread-and-butter struggle.

How Shoes Show Occupation.

When a person habitually wears his shoes to one side I know his occupation keeps him standing up a good deal, and the tired body will force the shoe over.

A dainty walker and dancer almost always interfers or wears one ankle against the other.

"A forcible character walks heels and toes and wears them both down.

"A small or slender foot probably has a heritage from aristocratic ancestors who rode a good deal. Vice versa, a large flat foot might indicate a sanny or soldier's forbears."

Shoes and Ancestry.

Evidently that explains the idea of a slim foot is aristocratic, but really must take issue with the universal truth of that. I have a suspicion that the size of the person has something to do with the size of the foot, as well as the habits of his ancestors. Isn't it natural that a slim person should have a slim foot to match, no matter what his ancestors did? In my own case, I wear a double A, but as far back as my ancestors are known unto me, I feel sure they walked more than they rode.

So ends the study of character by feet. You may find it interesting to look over your friends' (and perhaps your own) feet in the light of these revelations. Perhaps you will find some further suggestions to make.

Two South Sea Countries Are British Dominions.

BUT THEY DIFFER ENTIRELY.

The proposal made by Viscount Jellicoe that a powerful Far Eastern fleet be created, toward which Australia would be expected to contribute 20 per cent, and New Zealand five per cent, again calls attention to the growing importance of a far away corner of the world.

"Usually, in our mental geography, Australia and New Zealand are conveniently grouped, yet one of the first surprises awaiting the tourist from the northern hemisphere is to find that Australia and New Zealand may not be regarded as two islands of like appearance, differing mainly in size; near neighbors which may be treated as a unit," says Herbert E. Gregory.

"New Zealand is nearly twice as far from Australia as Bermuda is from New York, and is not only east but also south.

"Four days' travel across a chilly sea is required for the traverse from Wellington to Sydney, and after exchanging chill midsummer climate of the New Zealand lake region for the heat of Adelaide, one readily accepts the evidence of the map that the Southern coast of the Australian mainland has the latitude of central New Jersey, while the southernmost of the three islands which comprise the Dominion of New Zealand occupies the position of Southern Newfoundland.

"In climate and vegetation the two dominions are as unlike as Norway and South Carolina. New Zealand is a land of mountains, gorges, rivers, and floods. The higher peaks of the South Islands are eternally snow-capped and the glaciers of its southern Alps rival those of Switzerland. The surrounding seas are too cold for coral. Among the mountains of the North Island volcanic fires are still active, and the geysers and hot springs are little less impressive than those of the Yellowstone Park. The aboriginal inhabitants of New Zealand, at the time of their discovery by Captain Cook, were the most advanced of all the South Pacific races, while the aborigines of Australia are the lowest in intelligence of all human beings.

"Australia is in no sense inferior to New Zealand in geographic interest, but lofty peaks, profound canyons, and active volcanoes are lacking; its rivers are unimpressive and its permanent lakes small and few in number; it is a continent composed of plains interrupted by ridges and mountain knobs."

IN THE OLD TIME.

When I was young a shilling was pretty hard to get; for hours a man went drilling in pools of honest sweat, before he'd fairly earned it, and when he drew his tin, 'twas seldom that he burned it or idly blew it in. At Christmas time he'd holler and make some kopecks fly; and he would spend a dollar the Fourth day of July. And when the three-ring circus came lumbering to town, with grafts and fakes to work us, he'd happily blow a crown. Then, having had his riot, he to his work returned, and, strictly on the quiet, he picked all he earned. And when life's winter found him, it didn't find him broke; he'd comforts all around him, and greenbacks in his poke. But now such sane endeavor, such sense, we vainly seek; the Fourth is with us ever, and Christmas once a week. The money's coming easy, with equal ease it goes; the troller, flip and broxy, just blows, and blows, and blows. With all wise rules disgrusted, he blows his wad to-day; cheer up! we'll soon be bustled! a panic's on the way!

World's Largest Bible.

The world's Bible, to which reference has already been made in our columns, weighing three quarters of a ton, is at present being carried from place to place, making a tour of the entire globe.

A specially constructed motor was made for the purpose of carrying and displaying this great book.

This motor-car has an attractive pupil and platform, and equipped with the great Bible and its showman, is the principal feature of a world-wide publicity campaign for the popularization of the Holy Scriptures that will presently visit Canada.

The book is remarkable in other respects than its size, for every one of the 12,000 texts from Genesis to Revelations are hand-written and signed by individual Christians as a testimonial of their faith.

The idea was originated by the founder of the Bible Crusade, Mr. William Henry Fry, a grandson of the great English Quaker philanthropist, Mrs. Elizabeth Fry, and is part of the plan to make the year 1920 "Bible Year" throughout Christendom.

The volume now rests on a blue velvet-covered platform under a canopy of Union Jacks at the showrooms of the Oxford University Press, the constructors, at Amen-corner, London.

Standing on end the book is more than 5 feet 2 inches high and nearly 3 feet 6 inches wide. When opened flat it measures 7 feet 10 inches across.

Twelve large goat skins were required for the binding, which is in rich red levant morocco leather of the finest quality. The front cover is surrounded by the arms of the counties of England and Scotland inlaid in blue morocco and decorated with gold.

A panel of royal blue morocco containing the royal arms in the centre of the front cover is inlaid with the heraldic colours. The book contains 175 sheets of stout paper boards. It is sewn with twine in the old-fashioned way round six stout hempen ropes (each rope containing seventy strands of hempen), much thicker than the ordinary clothes-line. Four of these ropes are laced into millboards half an inch thick, which form the foundation for the leather covering.

In order to hasten the handling of the book during the various processes of binding, a staging was erected, from the cross-beams of which depended an iron chain and pulley block, without which it would have required six men to manipulate the volume.

No fewer than 4,476 copies of the smallest Oxford Bibles could be contained within the compass of this enormous book. About 2,000 of the texts are at present complete. Their writers vary from bishops and other Church dignitaries to laymen and women.

Why Dancing is Popular.

Moral, and elderly, people are declaring a judgment of death against the dancing craze which has taken possession of society since the war. "I do not think they will succeed," says Sir Phillip Gibbs, the English war correspondent. "There is some natural, primitive and healthy instinct behind this call to the dance. It is, perhaps—almost certainly—the reaction of youth against the tragedy of war and the pervading gloom of years when sacrifice was demanded by the gods. It is the dance of life following the dance of death, and a joyous proclamation of youth's divine right against unnatural discipline."

A Two-Edged Sword.

Labor always possesses the inherent right to strike for better conditions and extra remuneration. The strike is in fact but the one means at the disposal of workers to protect them from oppression and injustice, and wielded judiciously, its power is invariably ample to secure redress and fair play. But the strike weapon has two edges. It cuts both ways. In obtaining an increase of wages it also boosts the cost of living to a proportionate rate, and the extra monies obtained from employers is only spread over a greater area of operations and drawn again out of the pockets of all who have to buy—which is everybody. Strikes are non-productive. They do not advance the output of any country. Rather do they retard it. Whilst labor is idle the city, or town, or country, dependent on all the results it can give, is not only at a standstill—it is retrogressing, and the effect is felt elsewhere. The world lives and moves not by independence, but by interdependence. Each nation depends on the other, and strikes thus interfere with not only the progress of the place which suffers them, but stamps its mark upon spheres far distant.

Strikes have been universal for some time past. The whole planet is in a state of unrest, and labor problems are by no means the least of the difficulties with which economists have to contend. But there never has been a walk out of labor yet that could not be settled by arbitration. No matter how serious or complex the situation, from either the employees or employers point of view, sane counsel and wise guidance can overcome and adjust it. There is no doubt but that the germ of strikes is cosmopolitan. It has no particular country, but is indigenous to all, and it affects all. So acute has it grown that public opinion stands amazed at the recurrence of labor troubles, and is doing all that can be thought of to combat this social disease. The public always suffers, always comes out at the small end of the horn after a strike, and the public, being after all in the majority, has begun to think that it were perhaps well to get accustomed to the joys of labor and to be up and doing in its own behalf. As the outcome of this new trend of thought, there has been born a desire and purpose to do battle against modern conditions imposed by strikes, and consequently the public have entered the lists of labor to perform tasks which labor has refused to undertake. In such cases the public has won. The consumer cannot always stand for being crushed between the upper millstone of the high cost of living and the nether one of the high cost of labor. He has certain rights, though for a long period of years he has almost admitted their abrogation, but not entirely so; and now he begins to assert himself, and if some one else will not do the work, he is preparing to enter the arena and perform it himself, in order that he may enjoy undisturbed those inalienable rights conferred upon him by the Creator, and allowed by civil authority.

The accompanying leading article from that very conservative journal "The Financial Post," points the exact relationship of the laborer and the consumer. It maintains the principle that while wages go up, so also must the cost of living be responsive, and shows exactly how public opinion has been born anew, and not inclined to sit down and receive quiescently all the strokes that are being administered by the labor organizations, particularly when the castigatory whip is applied undeservingly and unnecessarily.

CONSUMERS MUST PAY WAGE ADVANCES.

"Through experience—which is often painful—strikers are learning to respect public opinion. For the most part the sympathies of the people are with the workers in their demands, but when those demands become unreasonable or when an effort is shown to usurp democratic rule and institutions the people are inclined to take a determined stand for the rights of society. It was the public who won the railroad strike in Great Britain, it was the citizens of Winnipeg who defeated the O.B.U., and it was the spirit of volunteers, including members of the organized unions, that crushed the recent effort in the United States.

"The leaders of the sane, conservative Labor element recognize the power and rights of the public. More and more they are realizing the necessity of having the people with them and more they are appreciating their difficulties in lining up public opinion, as the impression that the constant advance of wages and reduction of hours in addition to lost production during the strikes themselves are a direct factor in raising prices to the consumer. The simple economic principle that production regulates consumption and that demand sets prices through competition is beginning to dawn upon the mass of the people as the jazz music of the protracted celebration of the ending of the war loses its fascination.

"The appreciation of labor leaders of the need of holding public sympathy is indicated in the new theory that workers should make a condition of the advanced wages demanded that these should not be borne by the public in increased prices for products. That any large number of people of common intelligence could be expected to believe that there is a way to absorb the increased cost of production without affecting the cost to the consumer is an absurdity, and yet the suggestion made by the packing-house employees in Toronto to this effect finds reflection in the observations of Tom Moore, President of the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress. At Ottawa he referred to strikes in the future 'to prevent manufacturers and employers from charging exorbitant prices for commodities.'

"Labor is the great factor in the cost of all articles and commodities. Raw materials, literally speaking, are few and even now of small value. Minerals in the ground and trees in the forest are worth little as such. From the time the mine is opened or the first ax swung, there is a procession of succeeding stages of expenditures for labor—and transportation, salesmanship, etc., represent labor as well as the work of mechanics. Take the case of the packing-house employees for instance. There could be no better opportunity to prove the fallacy of the theory. Even supposing that the packers could control prices to stock-raisers and profits of retailers they could not meet such a proposition. As recently pointed out by Armour & Co., the profits of packers on all commodities over a period of years have averaged only about 3 per cent. Reducing this margin—even eliminating it al-

"The vicious circle of advancing prices will not be broken until it is recognized that higher costs and reduced production are the dominating factors in deciding what the consumer pays. Labor cannot hope to evade its responsibility as a dominating factor in the situation by talking of fixed prices to protect the public from the consequences of higher wages."

The Real Objectors.

We understand that the Importers Association are not primarily to blame for removing the 24th May from the General Holiday list, the suggestion having been originally made to them by the Trade Association, who also asked that the "Kings Birthday," June 3rd, be also taken off the schedule. The Importers consented to the former, but refused the latter, and it appears now that they are being held responsible by the public for adopting this unpopular move. When the correspondence between both Associations, ament this matter is published, it will be at once seen that the Trade body did not approve of Empire Day, though their resolution as published yesterday shows that they have since veered round to most popular sentiment.

Flour Not to Rise.

Flour is not due for an advance in price, according to leading flour men of Ontario, even though the grain board has lifted the regulations fixing the price. There is enough flour in the country at present, they say, to prevent an increase in price. They are far from satisfied with the grain board's action. They wish a chance to export their flour, and until they get it they do not think that the flour conditions will change. W. C. Omand, a Toronto flour broker, said that he did not think the price of flour would go up; neither did he think the price would come down.

THURSDAY, May 13. "What everybody says about a Tooth Paste must be true!" If this is really an axiom, Peppodent Tooth Paste is certainly the finest of them all. We hear nothing but praise of it, and many people are beginning to use it. Judging by the number of Coupons that have come to hand during the last few days, too, many others wish to try it. At any rate, there is quite a move on in Peppodent. If you are in doubt, watch the Telegram during the next few days, and when the Peppodent ad. appears, cut out the coupon, present it and you will receive free of charge or obligation, a tube of Peppodent, sufficient for ten days use. Celebrated 81st Birthday.

Mr. David Smallwood celebrated his 81st birthday yesterday and was the recipient of the warm congratulations of his numerous friends around town. Mr. Smallwood, who is hale and hearty, being as lively as men many years his junior, is the oldest Newfoundlandier bearing his name. The Telegram expresses the wish that his friend's may be able to congratulate him many times yet.

ORE SHIPMENTS BEGIN.—S. S. Borussia sailed yesterday from Bell Island with a cargo of ore for Sydney. This is the first cargo to be shipped for the season.

Confusion Worse Confounded!

'Longshoremen's Union Turn Down General Strike, But Members Still Refuse to Go to Work--The Whole Proceeding Illadvised--New Offer to Be Submitted to Employers--Meanwhile Steamers in Port Are Undischarged.

Promptly at one o'clock yesterday all the Longshoremen of the city knocked off work, and at 3 o'clock held a mass meeting in their Hall. The subject of discussion was "Strike or no Strike," and after many of the men had expressed themselves, a secret ballot was taken and counted. The result showed 400 odd against a strike and 200 for. Many men did not vote, and only about a third of the membership roll balloted. The steamer workers went solidly for the strike, and some of the fish handlers. This morning the former did not go to work, while some of the latter, also, stayed away. Delegate Coady interviewed several employers, and at 12 o'clock the steamer men met and discussed the situation. After some deliberation a compromise of 65 cents per hour for day and 80 cents per hour for night work, was suggested. A division was taken, about 75 per cent. going in favor of the meeting thereupon ended. The delegate was instructed to make the offer to the ship owners and agents, and report back.

STILL UNADJUSTED. Up to press hour there had been no adjustment of the Longshoremen's strike situation, the majority of the men disapproving of the suggested schedule of 65 cents per hour for day work and 80 cents per overtime. The delegate, Mr. Coady, and Vice President Flavin, have been granted an interview with the Furness Withy agents, the result of which will not be known until late this afternoon. After the return and report of the delegates to the Executive, another meeting of the steambot workers will be held for discussion of the situation. It is to be hoped that wise counsel will govern whatever decision responsible members will arrive at.

The Rosalind has not yet left Halifax, though her departure with half a cargo consigned here is imminent. The Schem from England, with badly needed goods on board is in port, and if matters are not settled speedily, the ship will also leave with her cargo undischarged. Continuation of a policy such as is being pursued will eventually cripple the marine prestige of St. John's and incidentally will lead to conditions which will make for future hardship and want in family life.

Fish Regulations Should be Rescinded.

MR. WALTER MONROE ARRIVES BACK FROM EUROPE—BELIEVES THAT THEY HAVE SERVED THEIR PURPOSE.

That the Codfishery Regulations had served their purpose and should now be rescinded and that there should be no further restrictions in the trade, was the opinion expressed to-day by Mr. Walter S. Monroe, who returned from Europe by the Rosalind. He does favor legislation regulating the cull of fish, but is against interference with fish prices as it kills competition. In the case of regulation of cull he believed that the exporter at present in the country were concerned, he thought that they would be disposed of. The cause of surplus stocks on the other side was the inferior condition of the fish sent. In Liverpool he found that the business people who had always dealt with local merchants, strongly opposed the regulations, as they prevented the handling of shipments to Greece, etc. Although matters were not looking any too bright, we shall doubtless come through all right, and things would be satisfactorily straightened out.

Reports Patch of 50,000 Seals.

100 TAKEN BY LIGHTKEEPERS. A message to the Department of Marine and Fisheries from Tit Cove, says: "This side of the bay is clear of ice. Gull Island reports considerable ice outside. The lightkeepers, their wives and daughters captured one hundred old seals last week, out of a patch estimated to contain fifty thousand. The people killed the seals on the ice by baiting them."

Time and Talents.

Time and Talents is a society for girls. Its object is social service; its motto, "By Love Serve One Another." The idea of the society is that girls use what talents they possess, in their spare time to benefit those less fortunate. In 1889 a group of women met together to see how the call to Christian fellowship and service could be expressed to reach girls living sheltered lives in their own homes. The result was the formation of Time and Talents, the first of such societies for girls, and the expression of the strong desire to bridge the gulf which separates those whose lives are all toil, from those who possess leisure, freedom and fuller opportunities in life.

Time and Talents does not dictate definite work for anybody. It leaves the choice to each individually. It is immensely catholic in its suggestions of help and in its interests. It is nearer a Masonic movement for girls than anything else, and has a strong interdenominational basis. The members of T. and T. derive as much benefit themselves from its influences as those with whom, through the society, they come in contact. There are branches all over the world and their one common possession is the T. and T. Settlement for factory girls in Brompton, London, England. A Newfoundland branch of T. and T. has just been started. It is a small membership at present, but it hopes to reach to the furthest coasts of Newfoundland and to be another link between Newfoundland and the Old Country.

An example of the work already undertaken is the adoption of a "god-child" by the branch. This means that those members to whom the idea appeals, undertake to keep in clothes, summer and winter, a girl of a needy family of the middle class where the income is inadequate to send the children well dressed to school or work. If so desired by the parents the address and surname is kept strictly private except from the President and Secretary, the individual members knowing their "god-child" only by her Christian name.

Several individual members have undertaken correspondence with lonely old men and women in England, each member undertaking to write at least monthly a cheery, interesting letter and to send a magazine to the one with whom she has been put into communication. One of the women with whom a T. and T. member is already corresponding, has been for many years a governess in Russia; most of her relations have been killed by the Bolsheviks, and she is practically alone and unknown in London now.

Another local interest for which T. and T. members have made themselves responsible is to teach games regularly to the orphan girls at Exon. In compliance with an appeal in the Secretary's annual report last week, a few T. and T. members have formed themselves into a Games Club to go out to Exon regularly to teach the children games twice a week.

Two particularly lonely outport priests, one Church of England and one Roman Catholic, have been put into touch with a centre in England from which they will receive church literature, etc.

The annual subscription of T. and T. is $1.40 (5/6 approx), which includes the quarterly magazine—The Road—a review full of varied interest, by no means only to girls, and containing competitions—literary, musical and sketching. Amongst the contents of the April number is an article on Careers, others entitled The Need of the World, Called to be Citizens, The Dance of Death, After the War; another, A Letter to the Lady in the Moon from Earth-born; and An Open Letter to the Modern Girl, beginning: "My dear Joan (or whatever your name may be). In some ways you are a perfectly splendid person, but in others I venture to think you rather a foolish one," and ending "Your candid friend." The "Bookshelf" is a series of excellent short reviews on books of all sorts including under special headings, A Few French Books, the World of Romance, being notes on novels and their writers, etc. This magazine can be taken by anyone, not necessarily a member of T. and T. and costs 12 cents.

Any girl who feels she would like to become a member of Time and Talents in Newfoundland will be very welcome. She should write either to the President, Miss Armored Harris, Government House, or to the Secretary and Treasurer, Miss D. White, Bishops' Court, St. John's, to whom she should also send her subscription, $1.40, and she will shortly receive a List of Needs—i.e., suggestions of help from which she can select the "need" that most appeals to her, though membership does not compel work from anyone or require more than they will voluntarily give.—Com.

Henry Fielding and His "Beloved Celia,"

(Thornton Hall in John O'London's Weekly.)

If ever man was fashioned by Nature to attract the eyes of woman it was surely Harry Fielding of the handsome face and stalwart figure, the clever tongue and courtly graces. He had scarcely put off his Eton jacket when we find him over head and ears in love with the orphaned daughter of a Lyme Regis merchant, whose charms were none the less alluring because they were richly glided; and so forcefully did he conduct his wooing that the young lady's guardian found it necessary to pack her off to Devonshire to avoid the catastrophe of an abduction.

The Toast of New Sarum.
This seems to have been the first of a long and rapid sequence of love affairs, most of which were more excusable in hot-blooded youth than creditable, before the hare-brained, happy-go-lucky young dramatist found an anchorage for his sickle heart in Miss Charlotte Cradock, one of three beautiful sisters who were the pride and toast of New Sarum.

When and how the young Lothario, of the empty purse and clever head, first met his Salisbury charmer we do not know. It was probably as early as the year 1730, when Fielding had not long returned from his studies at Leyden and was living from hand to mouth in London on the meagre profits of his comedies and farces. Certainly in one of his love-poems of that year the prize of beauty is awarded by Venus to the New Sarum sisters; and in another poem of the same year, "Advice to the Nymphs of New Sarum," he waxes eloquent over the charms of "Celia," the poetic equivalent for Charlotte.

Thus it is fair to assume that at the time he was playing Lothario in London his thoughts, if not his heart, were taking wing to the little Wiltshire town which enshrined the three beautiful "nymphs"; and that Celia was to him queen of the trinity.

A Headlong Plunge.
Celia, in fact, seems to have been the inspiration thus early of his love-verses, which he frankly declares were the "Productions of the Heart rather than of the Head." In one poem addressed "To Celia" Cupid says:

I in a dimple lay perdue,
That little Guard-Room chose by you.
A hundred loves, all armed, did grace
The Beauties of her Neck and Face;
Thence, by a sigh I dispossest,
Was blown to Harry Fielding's Breast.

For five years he seems to have dallied with his Celia while he was alternately starving and feasting, and playing hide-and-seek with his creditors in London. Then, when he could wait no longer, he plunged headlong into matrimony, reckless of the future and blissfully happy in the present.

Of his bride's beauty and fascinations there can be no doubt. He pictures them himself for us in Sophia Western—"the luxuriant black hair, which, cut to comply with the modern Fashion, curled so gracefully in her Neck; the lustrous eyes, the dimple in her right cheek, the chin rather full than small, and the complexion having more of the Lily than of the Rose." The only flaw in Celia's beauty was, in fact, a small scar on the side of her nose, the result of a driving accident, of which Mrs. James says, "I know not whether it did not rather add to than diminish her beauty." And to her physical charms she allied a clever tongue, a wide range of accomplishments and great amiability.

Spending Charlotte's Dower.
Thus in the year 1735 we see Fielding and his beautiful bride installed in a glorified farmhouse by the Stour, with a staff of liveried servants, dispensing regal hospitality to the neighboring squires and their ladies on an income which could scarcely have exceeded £200 a year, with Charlotte's dower of £1,500 to draw on. His door was flung wide open to the whole countryside; one extravagant entertainment followed another. And there can be little doubt that the rafters of the old farm by the Stour rang often to hunting choruses, and that not seldom the "dusky Night rode down the Sky" over the prostrate forms of Harry Fielding's guests.

Love and Poverty.
It was naturally not long before such prodigality had dissipated the last penny of Mrs. Fielding's dot; and we see the improvident dramatist turning his back on the scene of his short-lived revels to face London and poverty with the wife he loved. "He loved her passionately," Lady Louisa Stuart tells us, "and she returned his affection; yet led no happy life, for they were almost always miserably poor and seldom in a state of quiet and safety. Sometimes they were living in decent lodgings with tolerable comfort; sometimes in a wretched garret without necessaries."

Married His Wife's Maid.
Eight years of such patient devotion as few wives have given to their husbands and—"Celia" passed peacefully away, leaving the man she had loved and served so well disconsolate.

late. "His grief," we are told, "was so vehement that his friends began to think him in danger of losing his reason." And in his grief he found his greatest consolation, strange as it may seem, in the unattractive woman, Mary Daniel, who had been his wife's devoted servant.

Thus it was that, four years after his beloved "Celia" had left him broken-hearted, he led Mary Daniel to the altar of St. Clement Dunes; and to the day, seven years later, when he drew his last breath at Lisbon, no man ever had a more loyal wife than the plain-featured maid whom he describes in one of his last letters as "the tenderest mother in the world."

The Importers' Association.

AND EMPIRE DAY.

Jas. Hustins, Esq.,
Secretary Lodge Dudley, S.O.E.

Dear Sir—In reply to yours of to-day's date, the Importers' Association is endeavouring to arrange a meeting for to-morrow (Thursday) afternoon. If the many letters in the newspapers are an index of public opinion, it would appear the Importers' Association is being unjustly blamed for being unpartriatic.

Empire Day in Newfoundland, as well as all over the Empire is kept as a Bank holiday, but in Britain it is not usually observed as a COMMERCIAL Holiday. In Canada it is not a holiday throughout the Dominion. In Newfoundland it has only been a commercial holiday for six years.

In 1913 the members of the Importers' Association decided to close their stores on May 24th, and I have every reason to believe this would have been continued this year were it not for the fact that a letter was received from the Trades Association who represent some forty of the large mercantile firms and factories. This letter set forth that the holding of May 24th and June 8th, as commercial holidays was a hardship to the trade, and especially affected adversely the outfitting for the fishery. The Trade Association asked that both of these days be discontinued by the Importers' Association as Commercial holidays.

In view of this request coming from such an important source it was decided to discontinue May 24th, and to have a holiday on St. George's Day April 23rd instead, a letter having been received from the S.O.E. asking that St. George's Day be made an annual commercial holiday.

The result of the meeting of the Importers' Association will be made in the papers as soon as possible.

Yours truly,
R. A. TEMPLETON,
Hon. Secty. of the Importer's Association.

Canadian Strikes in 1919

There were more strikes, labor disputes and general industrial turmoil, with consequent time lost in Canada during 1919 than in any other year in the country's history. This is revealed in a report compiled by the Labor Department at Ottawa and just issued.

Including eight carried over from 1918, there was a total of 298 strikes and lockouts in Canada during 1919. The number of employees involved was 138,938, and the number of working days lost was 3,042,189. The previous record in working days lost was in 1911, when the record stood at 2,046,650 days lost.

There were several outstanding strikes which contributed largely to the total time lost. Among these were the general sympathetic strike in Winnipeg from May 15 to June 26, involving (according to Labor Department figures) 22,360 employees and a time loss of 924,562 working days; the strike of coal miners in district 18 from May 24 to the end of August, involving 6,265 employees and a time loss of 462,879 working days; the general sympathetic strike at Amherst, N.S., from May 19 to June 16, involving 771 employees and a time loss of 17,466 working days; the strike of miners at Kirkland Lake, Ont., from June 12 to October 16, involving 625 employees and a loss of 56,176 working days, and the strike of the building trades in Montreal, from September 2 to November 24, involving 2,000 employees and a time loss of 113,000 working days. The Winnipeg strike also resulted in considerable time loss through sympathetic strikes outside of the city.

Classified by clauses, 223 of the 298 strikes recorded involved wages. Twelve strikes involved union recognition. Altogether there were fifteen sympathetic strikes. The record shows that 157 strikes terminated in favor of the employees and 85 in favor of the employers. Twenty-three were compromise settlements and 30 indefinite.

Musical Self-Examination.

Among the many observations left by Johann Sebastian Bach are the following. They make a stimulating basis for a self-examination: "No one should play who cannot think musically."

How do you know that you are thinking musically? Can you get the full meaning of a new composition without trying it on the piano? Can you imagine the melody played by different qualities of sound—by the violin, the flute, the organ, the oboe, the clarinet?

"I am what I am because I am industrious; whoever is equally industrious will be equally successful." Do you know that Bach during the greater part of his lifetime worked at his music from early morning to late at night? Do you realize that, notwithstanding this steady application, if he had not constantly intensified his effort he would not have produced one-half of his masterpieces that stand to his credit?

CHAPTER II.
FURTHER SCENES EN ROUTE.

In the wreck of the "Appennine" we saw one class of marine disaster, but in the one which next met our gaze we beheld a class of disaster which really was a tragedy. To see this object, we had to use our glasses, and even then the view was not the best, and besides the evening was closing in upon us. But we could not pass such a spot without being interested; hence our thoughts; and yet what we saw was not much; it was only a dark object; but it was touchingly pathetic. What was it? It was that portion of the once proud "Florizel" which stands over water; and which apparently will long remain as a reminder of what never should have been. The object was black, and in the distance it looked like some huge rock at whose base the sea was playing. But it was more than a rock, and the memories which it suggested were deep with pathos, and bitter with grief. We remembered the splendid ship as she used to sail from our port, and as she sailed on that fatal night in Feb. 1918. We remembered the friends who had entrusted their all to her; and we remembered the horror which the morning hours brought to them, and to our city. Could this piece of battered iron, rusted and washed by the sea, really be the Florizel? Was this the scene of so much gaiety at evening and of so much sorrow at morn? Was this the spot where perished so many of our prominent citizens? We had been told of the endurance of these people and of their fight for life. We had heard of the anger of the sea; and also of all the efforts which the good people of the locality had made to rescue them; and as we looked at the derelict, the tragedy seemed to be revived, and to be re-enacted. This portion of the ship which we beheld, was that to which men and women in desperation and despair, had clung, and hoped against hope. From this seawashed hulk had ascended the last prayer of lips, which, under ordinary conditions paid the same homage at their churches. Their altar now was the hard deck, washed and swept by the angry waves. Their comfort lay in the remembrance of the words of their spiritual advisers, which all men seek in the presence of death. The material things had banished, the real had suddenly become the unreal, and the need of something stronger than the arm of flesh was felt. Amid the darkness they waited, under the torrent of the night waves they shivered, and in suspense they saw their chances of rescue swept away. They were only clear of their doors, and the farewells and good byes were still ringing in their ears. Their lips were still warm with the kisses of their loved ones, and the smiles of a few hours had chased them through the night.

But this piece of wreckage which we beheld was all that remained of the once proud ship, and it was the gateway to eternity of nearly a hundred souls. This thought seemed to draw us to the scene, and we seemed to see in it the tragedy of the storm, and the failure of human judgment. The same tragedy could have overtaken our good ship, and our happy company of some two hundred persons could have fallen into a similar catastrophe. With these thoughts upon us the sun went down in a halo of glory, and the first night at sea held us in its embrace. Thus we lost sight of the land and also of those reminders of local tragedy. The music of the saloon, and the songs of the passengers seemed to defy the dangers of the deep, and ere the revelry died out, we began to learn a little of our company, and of the qualities of our ship. The company was truly congenial, and the ship was indeed a home on the ocean.

And so we lay us down to sleep, and soon the morning broke upon us, and the music of the breakfast bell called us from our state-rooms. Like clans gathering for the fray the passengers responded, and amid the clatter of the hour the waiters did their duty. The morn was ideal, the ship sped steadily on, and the ocean murmured a lullaby as she passed. What a sight we beheld when we gained the deck. How different it all was from the land. Around us lay a vast expanse of water. Calm it was, and placid to look upon, and it almost seemed that accident could not occur. At such times we feel like laughing at danger, and like mocking its power. We only seemed to see the sunshine and the calm. Our's was safety. Our fellows of the Florizel had paid toll to old Neptune, and the good ship "Appennine" had assisted the ice-floes; but to us fell the beauties of the summer, and the grandeur of a sleeping sea.

It was thus we began the first morning of our tour of six months, and as every phase of our holiday was full of interest, and every face we met told its own tale, we cannot do better than devote our next chapter to the traits and characteristics of the personnel of our fellow passengers. Man's greatest study is himself; for there is nothing in the universe equal to him, and those who have learned to study their fellows, have found the solution that makes life easy to understand.

Walsh Regrets He Did Not Know of It Five Years Ago.

Says Tanlac Would Have Saved His Wife Years Of Suffering.

"The last thing my wife said to me before leaving home this morning was, 'Be sure and don't forget to bring me another bottle of Tanlac.' This will be the fourth bottle that she's had, and I never spent money to such good advantage as when I bought this medicine, and my only regret is that I did not know about it five years ago," said Patrick Walsh, who lives on Killebride Road, Waterford Bridge, St. John's, Nfld., when at Connors' drug store recently.

"For many years my wife had been in poor health and for the past five years she was in a bad way. She had no appetite to speak of and the little she ate gave her indigestion. The gas would form to such an extent that it pressed against her heart and also got so weak at last that she could hardly get around and was quite unable to do her housework for this long time past. She became very nervous so that she couldn't sleep at nights and complained of headaches a lot. She also had pains in the small of the back and if she tried to carry anything she felt as though her back would break in two. She tried all sorts of medicines but nothing ever gave her much relief until she tried Tanlac.

"When we read that Tanlac was helping so many suffering people we decided to give it a trial, and I came down here to Connors' and got a bottle. It is just wonderful the difference it has made in her. She now has a good appetite and can digest her food properly without any trouble from gas and palpitation of the heart. She is so much stronger and more energetic that she can get around and work as well as she did twenty years ago. She sleeps well at night and her nerves are ever so much stronger and steadier. She says she feels just fine now and we both shall always be grateful for what it has done for us."

Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors; by Reg. Sullivan, Pouch Cove; Soem Island Store, Sound Island; Dennis Flynn, Avondale.—adv

Dear Sir,—I cannot refrain calling the attention of the Public, to the stand taken by Mr. Michael Murphy—hair dresser—when asked to enter the "Profiteer Arena"—with the thousand and one sharks now bleeding the buying population of this little city with impunity.

House of Assembly.

The House met yesterday at 3 p.m. Mr. Jennings presented a petition from Twillingate asking for a break-water.

QUESTIONS.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Hon. Minister of Justice if the Royal Commission promised to be appointed some few days ago to inquire into "The Woodford Affidavit" is yet in existence, if so kindly give the names of Commissioners and when they may proceed to business.

Reply—The Commission is now being drafted. The Commissioners are Chief Justice Horwood, Mr. Justice Kent and Hon. R. K. Bishop. I see no reason why the Commissioners should not go to work during the coming week.

Mr. Walsh asked the Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if Thomas Connors, Fishery Warden at Peter's River, St. Mary's Bay, has been dismissed, and if so, why? Have any charges been made against Mr. Connors, if so, that a copy of said charges be placed on the Table of the House.

Reply—Appointments are only made yearly.

Mr. Walsh asked the Hon. Minister of Public Works if a contract has been made to continue the Motor Ferry Service from Branch to St. Joseph's in St. Mary's Bay. Were tenders asked for said contract, if so that a copy of all tenders be placed on the Table of the House.

Reply—Two tenders are in and are now before the Government.

Mr. MacDonnell asked the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs what price per hundred copies is being paid for the foreign news sheets mailed from the P. O. Department to out-port post offices not having telegraphic communication.

Reply—Minister of Posts and Telegraphs not present. Answer will be tabled later.

Mr. MacDonnell asked the Hon. the Premier to lay on the Table of the House, all or any, correspondence between the Government and any parties in relation to the construction of a motor highway on the West Coast, in district of St. George's.

Reply—Correspondence now being copied, will be tabled soon as ready.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs to Table a statement showing the number of men left this country since May.

Reply—Number returned so far 175.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Minister of Finance and Customs to Table a statement showing in detail the expenditure of loan six millions raised.

Reply—Information is being prepared.

The House went into Committee of the whole on "Survey of Foreign going and Labrador Vessels" Bill.

Hon. Mr. Coaker explained the Bill and invited suggestions with a view to making it as perfect as possible. Lloyd's surveyor and the officials concerned in his Department had already gone over the Bill in detail.

Sir John Crosbie, Mr. Fox and Mr. Higgins offered suggestions which were accepted by the Minister. Sir John thought that something should be done to regulate the carriage of "freighters" by vessels sailing to and from the Labrador. The conditions on these vessels were beyond description in some cases and he thought that the Minister should grapple with the situation as some day there would be a calamity and we all would be sorry for not dealing with the situation before.

His Honor the Speaker agreed with Sir John Crosbie and also asked the Minister to look into the matter at once. The trouble is people are willing to take great risks to get to Labrador, risks which they should not be allowed to take, but great as the risk is going down it is nothing to the risks they take coming home. In his opinion these people should be legislated against for their own protection. Vessels going down on the Labrador are not fit to carry cargoes of humanity. It seems that when a vessel is condemned for everything else she is requisitioned to carry cargoes of humanity to the Labrador. If this thing is not remedied a terrible tale will one day be told. The people should be protected against themselves.

Mr. Goss defended the class of vessels being used in the Labrador fishery. He did not think the situation could be improved upon very much. People could not afford to send new vessels on the Labrador, and he often thought that he couldn't afford to send the old ones down as it cost so much for fit outs.

Mr. Fox recommended something to be done on the Bay of Islands, Battle Hill route. Conditions there were terrible. Mr. Scammell and Mr. MacDonnell also backed this up and told of conditions on that Coast as it related to carriage of freight and passengers that were almost unbearable.

Mr. Fox and Sir John Crosbie also advocated the insertion of a clause in the Bill by which no ship could receive a Customs' clearance, without first showing a certificate of seaworthiness from the Surveyor or his deputy. This was accepted by the Minister and Section V, amended accordingly. To Section IV, were added the words "This Section shall apply to fishing and coastwise vessels engaged in the Labrador fishery." This means that every vessel going to the Labrador must be surveyed and given a certificate of seaworthiness before being allowed to proceed.

Sir John Crosbie asked the Prime Minister if some Legislation was not to be introduced with regard to the Coastal Service to which the Prime Minister replied that it was hoped to have some Legislation before the House closed. Sir John said he had a lot of things to discuss in connection with this matter. The Prime Minister replied that Sir John would get an opportunity when the estimates were being gone through and when the particular vote came up.

An Act to Amend the Judicature Act and an Act to confirm a contract in connection with the Pulp Mill near Bonne Bay were then put through Committee without amendment.

The Grand Bank Harbor Bill was given second reading and the House adjourned until 3 o'clock to-day.

Visit of King Edward VII. to Oxford.

On Wednesday, May 12, 1897, the late King Edward VII, then Prince of Wales, visited Oxford, where, during his earliest manhood, he had been an undergraduate of Christ Church College, as his grandson, the present Prince of Wales, became one there at Magdalen College, in October, 1912, and in his collegiate conduct, his attendance at University sermons, and in all respects set a perfect example to all undergraduates as he has done since in the European war against Germany. The royal visit had two special objects, to open the new municipal buildings, and the Sarah Acland Home for Invalids. The former buildings include the town hall, the business apartments of all the city officials, and an assembly or banqueting room, the city magistrate's court, the police court, with a residence for the chief constable, and also the Free Library, one of the oldest in England, it having been opened in the old town hall on June 1, 1854. Besides the newspaper room and the lending library on the first floor, it has in the second floor a large, lofty room, with a portion allotted to women; with books of the best sort for imparting knowledge of all subjects, and thus providing a way to learning for townsmen, as Oxford elsewhere does for gowmsmen. The Acland Nursing Home had been erected at 25, Banbury Road, at a cost of £5,000, and was so named as a memorial to Sir Henry Acland on his resigning the Regius Professorship of Medicine in Oxford University, serving in place of one that, with that same purpose and name, had in 1879 been founded at Wellington

Square. At this Acland Home thirty nurses have at one time been employed, whose salaries can rise gradually from £35 to £40 a year. The charges for in-patients vary from four guineas upwards per week. In connection with Oxford University itself, this institution is most important, as before the war there were in 1912 only five short of 4000 undergraduates, all away from their homes, besides 307 Fellows of Colleges. The Prince also inspected the Oxford shire Yeomanry, who bear the title of the "Queen's Own Oxfordshire Hussars."

LONDON GOSSIP.

LONDON, April 6, 1920.
LONDON'S EASTER.

Despite more or less dull weather conditions, Londoners enjoyed their Easter immensely, finishing up with a tremendous rush for theatres and music halls on the Monday night. It is noticeable, however, that the carer seats in all the houses of entertainment were difficult to sell and could only be traded off when diligent entertainment seekers found there was nothing cheaper to be had. This seemed to indicate that the motor car crowd were well out of town for Easter. Whilst enormous numbers of people enjoyed their Easter in London, equally enormous numbers of Londoners must have gone to the seaside and the country, judging by the way the departing trains, run in duplicate and sometimes triplicate, were packed. The Premier, Lloyd George, departed for his beloved Criccieth with his daughter, Megan, and a private secretary, Captain Evans. Great patronage this year has been extended to the various schemes for battlefield trips. The abnormal rush in this department compelled one great tourist agency to suspend its bookings. Railway officials told us that Easter has broken all records, and which it will be gathered that the way it was a very busy time. A student of the dress of the holiday crowds, male and female, speaks of as being much improved, especially in style, with a very welcome absence of eccentricities. The presence of father with the children was also a great feature, whether at the Zoo, Madame Tussauds, the Tower of London, or any of the other fifty places in London to which parents feel compelled to take their children.

PASSING OF ROSHERVILLE GARDENS.

People who remember the habits and customs of Victorian days and who know their Dickens, Albert Smith and George Augustus Sala well, will receive something of a shock in the news that Rosherville Gardens, Gravesend, are to be sold. In the old days they were one of the greatest of the typically London holiday resorts and were, in fact, the last relics of the phase that knew Vauxhall Gardens and Cremorne Gardens. Various spasmodic attempts up to about twenty years ago were made to revive the faded glories of Rosherville. The place to spend a happy day, but by that time the stucco temples had cracked and the alcoves were filled with rubbish. There was a hopeless, fly-blown note about the place, so the visitors were driven to drowning their sorrows in shrimps, water-cress and stout. A suggestion is made, however, that in these latter days when railway fares have risen so there might be an opportunity for another Imre Kiralfy to make something of the site as a big entertainment centre on modern lines.

RUSH ON NEW PLAYS.

Quick change is apparently the note in London theatrical circles just now. Every week sees an abnormal number of new productions and most of them prove to be very short lived. What long runs there are began before the war finished; nothing now staged appears to have anything more than a most remote chance of continued life. This week no fewer than eight new productions have been arranged for the West End theatres. These began with "Paddy, the Next Best Thing" at the Savoy on Monday and finished with the return of Marie Lehr to the Globe in "Birds of a Feather" on Friday. This latter play is by H. V. Esmond, who will take the leading part. This Friday production was an eleventh hour arrangement, rendered necessary by the withdrawal of Esmond's other play, "Grierson's Way," which apparently failed to attract at the Ambassadors. An interesting feature of this week's big batch of productions is that they introduce three new American actresses to London. The admirers of Miss Gladys Cooper will regret to hear that she has already been compelled to leave the revival of "My Lady's Dress" owing to serious illness. The play was only staged on April 2nd.

A RADIUM DEAL.

In the clubs they have been talking over a very interesting deal in radium. During the hostilities the War Office expended large sums on this rare earth for the purpose of illuminating gun sights and officers' watches at night. A great deal of this was left unused when the war finished. Difficulties arose as to the disposal of these amounts, when Dr. Addison stepped in and induced his Ministry of Health to give the War Office £75,000 for what remained. It is now proposed to use this radium for life-saving purposes and donate it to the Medical Research Committee, who will use it for the treatment of cancer. Very fair success is said to have been achieved already from treatment by radium. If all the surplus Government material was disposed of as fortunately and advantageously as this radium there would, methinks, have been fewer complaints in the newspapers.

HOUSING SHORTAGE.

Talking with an official of the Ministry of Health about the present position of the housing difficulty in this country he told me that outside London the most acute shortage is in Yorkshire, with Lancashire a close second. Liverpool, he says, wants 10,000 more dwelling houses immediately. The whole matter of this terrible deficiency has, of course, been complicated by many things. First, there has been the no doubt transient shortage of skilled labor occasioned by so many building trade workers drifting to other kinds of work during the war. These men are not disposed to come back unless they can see some certainty of equally well paid employment. Then there has been the shameless profiteering in building materials, from slates to drainpipes. Rings and trusts have arisen here, as apparently everywhere else, during the war, and private builders and public authorities are alike being held up to ransom. Land can be obtained fairly easily, although at much higher than pre-war prices, and architects there are in profusion badly in want of professional work. The particular scandal in and around London is the continuous erection of large and important factories capable of employing thousands of workers with never a dwelling house being built to accommodate these employed. Dr. Addison's department would like to see a regulation made whereby the public authorities would not pass any plans for a factory unless at the same time the factory owner agreed to lay down so many dwelling houses for his workers.

LONDON'S SPLENDID VAN HORSES

At the annual London Van Horse Society's Parade in Regent's Park last Monday there was a remarkable gathering of lookers on but a distinct falling off in the number of horses shown. Only about 340 paraded, as against nearly five times that number before the war. There is something of the onward rush of the commercial motor wagon behind this, no doubt. At the same time there was no falling off from the best standards of cleanliness and smartness both of animal and harness. As in previous years, the drivers and the carmen brought members of their families with them in their vehicles, and for the children it was a glorious time. Although the van horse parade is not a blood stock show, some of the horses are beasts of a remarkably high quality. Out of the 340 entries, 205 first class prizes were awarded for cleanliness of animal, cleanliness of harness, and smartness of turn-out generally. For the first time in the history of the parade, however, one competitor was refused admission. The judges were all well-known horsemen, some sporting men and some breeders, and Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, distributed the prizes. Lord Lambourne recalled the van horse of the sixties in the last century. He was then an ill-cared for animal and a sad and frequently disagreeable sight. It struck as a rather sad note, however, that the same of perfection in the London van horse is being reached at a time when he is rapidly passing away, but this appears to have been the history of most things concerned with locomotion. The stage coach reached its finest development just prior to the definite coming of the rival railway. Many other cases might be cited.

Fads and Fashions.

Hats trimmed with wreaths of way-side flowers are the latest novelties. A frock of taupe charmeuse is delicately embroidered in bluebird blue. A straight short blouse of white kid is embroidered in leather-colored silk. Pleated satin ruffles edge the aprons, front and back, of a voile frock. Collars and cuffs of orange organza are being worn with dark serge frocks.

A Weird Fraternity.

One of the most remarkable of fraternities is that of the Misericordias, which is said to have been instituted in 1244 and survives to the present day in many cities and towns in Italy. The members, who are recruited from all ranks of society, wear when on duty a costume of cheap black material that completely disguises them, the face being hidden by a sort of hood with two holes for the eyes. They bury the friendless dead, and also discharge the functions of an ambulance corps, dealing with accidents as they occur, and carrying the sick or injured to the hospitals. The funds needed for the work are derived from membership fees, supplemented by alms for which the members made mute appeals at the doors of churches, holding out a little box to receive them.

PALE ANAEMIC CHILDREN NEED VINOL

It Makes Puny, Thin, Ailing Children Strong, Robust and Rosy

Physicians Recommend It and Druggists Guarantee It

Rapidly growing children need a great deal of vitality. They not only grow fast but play hard and work hard at school and often are tired, thin, pale, worn and listless when they should be strong, robust and rosy.

If mothers could only realize how VINOL will build up strength for this, pale, delicate, ailing children, create a hearty appetite, soiled flesh and muscle tissue, rich, red blood, and make them strong, robust and rosy, they would not rest until they had started their little ones taking it.

It is the medicinal, body building extractives of fresh cod's livers, sided by beef peptone and tonic iron, three of the oldest and most successful tonics known to medicine, that act so quickly in VINOL, and you know what you are giving your little ones.

If VINOL fails to benefit them, your druggist will return your money.

The eyesight of Viscount Grey, England's noted statesman, is improving daily. He writes: "We have great advantages in many ways over our predecessors. There are more opportunities for enjoyment. There is on the whole less poverty; and yet we are living in an age of discontent. All efforts should be made to bring happiness to the people. Real pleasure is the enjoyment of recreation, not too much or too little."

During the war Field Marshal Sir William Robertson and a works company were quartered in a Lincolnshire village, the men being in furnished billets. A dispute arose with one of the "landladies" and the officer, considering that she was in the wrong, refused redress of her alleged grievance. "Oh, very well," said the dame, folding her substantial arms, "I'll just write to Willie Robertson. Him and me were children together and he'll not see me put upon."

Corporal Francis Paghamagabow, a redskin Indian, of Parry Sound, Ontario, is officially credited by the Canadian army with having shot 379 Germans during the war. The corporal, who was a hunter and trapper in Canada before he enlisted, served as a sharp-shooter with the Canadian expeditionary force, and it is stated that he never missed. He was awarded the Military Medal with two bars. Some airmen who were engaged in bombing raids over the German lines claim to have killed thousands of men, but it is considered likely that Corporal

Paghamagabow holds the record among infantrymen.

Why Prices Are High.

(Daily Mail.)
On several occasions Lord D'Abernon has emphasised the inflation of currency as the connecting link between high prices and industrial unrest. In our columns this week he again emphasises the pivotal fact that in each country prices have risen in proportion to the amount of paper put into the currency. It is not so much that goods have risen in price as that money has fallen in value.

In Great Britain we have watered our currency less freely than other European countries. We have taxed ourselves more heavily in proportion to our borrowings, and the tendency of the Government to resort for fictitious relief to the printing-press shows at least some signs of being checked. Every country is suffering from financial disease. Every coin is worth less than it was before. There can be no remedy save by international conference and international action. Lord D'Abernon complains that "for some unexplained reason" the Governments of the world appear unwilling to meet in conference on the subject. The explanation is, probably, that State treasures find it hard to escape from the slippery descent which has a printing-press at the top and the Bankruptcy Court at the bottom. But this dwindling of money's value cannot be allowed to go on. Wages and prices will not stop rising until the value of money stops falling. That—apart from the question of increased production of goods—is the currency problem in a nutshell.

HOW YOU CAN TELL GENUINE ASPIRIN

Only Tablets with "Bayer Cross" are Aspirin—No others!

If you don't see the "Bayer Cross" on the tablets, refuse them—they are not Aspirin at all.

There is only one Aspirin, that marked with the "Bayer Cross"—all other tablets are only acid imitations. Look for the "Bayer Cross"! Then it is real Aspirin, for which there is no substitute.

Aspirin is not German but is made in America, and is owned by an American Company, all rights being purchased from the U. S. Government.

Genuine "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" have been proved safe by millions for Pain, Headache, Neuralgia, Colds, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Neuritis.

Pliable Uppers, Weatherproof and Wear-Resisting, Tough Tire-Tread Soles. Hard to wear out.

You know from experience what happens to ordinary boots when used in fishing. You've seen how salt water seems to take the life out of the rubber and how the rubbers crack and the soles wear through in a surprisingly short time.

The "EXCEL" is a different and better kind of boot. It has been made especially to stand up under the unusually hard use a fisherman's boot gets.

The rubber and fabric in "EXCEL" boots are of the very highest quality. But it is the special method of curing, under tremendous pressure, that makes the "EXCEL" so wear-resisting. The pressure forces the layers of rubber and fabric together so that they are actually "one-piece", without losing the least bit of the life of resiliency of the rubber. Salt water has practically no effect on "EXCEL" boots. The UPPERS remain pliable and weatherproof, and resist the drying-out action of sun, heat and cold far longer than other boots, consequently they don't crack anywhere so quickly. The SOLES are almost wear-proof, because they are made like an Auto Tire, with 8 plies of rubber and fabric welded by tremendous pressure into a "tire-tread" sole that rivals an automobile tire for toughness and durability.

These are exclusive features of "EXCEL" boots.

The picture at the left, of an "EXCEL" boot, with every detail of construction visible, shows how "EXCEL" boots are reinforced at every point of strain. There is not a single feature but what has been proved necessary and desirable by tests of severest use. Your own experience will tell you that a boot with these features simply must be a better boot.

Study this picture. Learn these features. Remember them when you compare "EXCEL" boots with ordinary boots. And remember, too, that very important point which the picture cannot show, namely, that "EXCEL" boots are cured under tremendous pressure which leaves the rubber pliable, weather-proof, and wear-resisting. It is only by the use of this tremendous pressure combined with highest quality materials that the best results are obtained.

Below are listed seven special features which make "EXCEL" boots superior. Read them carefully so that when you need boots you will know how to get the best value for your money.

Seven Special Features that make the "Excel" Best.

FEATURE No. 1—The entire boot is cured under heavy pressure, forcing all parts together in "one-piece", and retaining the full life and resiliency of the rubber.

FEATURE No. 2—An 8-ply double sole of tough, durable rubber, made like an Auto Tire, running all the way under the full moulded heel. This sole and heel are so wear-resisting that they are commonly called the "tough on rocks" sole and heel.

FEATURE No. 3—A heavily reinforced boot which will withstand the hardest kind of wear.

Most reliable dealers sell "EXCEL" boots. Be sure to look for the name "EXCEL". Substitutes and "just as good" boots will not give you "EXCEL" service. If your dealer does not have them in stock, write us for name of nearest dealer.

FEATURE No. 4—Six plies at the instep relieves strain and prevents wrinkling or cracking.

FEATURE No. 5—Reinforced five-ply leg for extra wear. Just the right amount of strength to stand up, yet not be uncomfortable.

FEATURE No. 6—Four-ply top, very pliable.

FEATURE No. 7—Heavy duck lining, and a heavy insole prevent dampness and keep feet dry and comfortable.

New Direction Finder Aid to Shipping.

The dangers of navigation around the entrance to the Gulf of St. Lawrence have been reduced to a minimum by the recent installation of the wireless direction finder, or wireless compass, at Chebucto Head, N.S., Canso, N.S., and Cape Race, Newfoundland, and sea captains who have to navigate their ships in all weathers through these dangerous waters are loud in their praises of the innovation.

The D. F. stations, as the wireless installation which unerringly gives a ship its true bearings at sea, are called, were erected by the British Government towards the close of the war, and have now been taken over by the Canadian Government, which has issued a notice to mariners calling their attention to the existence of the stations and giving them instructions for obtaining bearings from them.

The apparatus is particularly valuable in foggy weather as it enables a ship's master to obtain his exact location and bearing without sighting the sun or taking a bearing in the same way.

To ascertain the position of a ship it is only necessary for the ship to call the nearest station, giving her call letters, followed by the query "Where is my position?" The call is acknowledged by the D. F. station, which instructs the ship to send wireless dashes of a certain wavelength. The ship's bearing is then computed at the station and flashed to the vessel's wireless operator, the whole process occupying but a moment or two.

So successful has been the operation of the three existing Canadian D. F. stations that many ship-masters have recommended that additional stations be installed on various sections of the Canadian Atlantic coast. The Shipping Federation of Canada, through its secretary, Mr. Robb, has circulated the leading steamship companies operating on the eastern Canadian seaboard on the question of the value of the direction finder to their ship-masters, and in every instance a very favorable reply has been received.

Forget Might-Have-Beens.

Women are prone to self-torture when things go wrong, blaming themselves for circumstances over which they had absolutely no control and wasting time in vain regrets for the might-have-beens. This day and age tolerates no such narrow point of view. We lessen our efficiency when we lose faith in ourselves. We must profit by our mistakes. It is not nearly so often the pleasant experiences that benefit us as the unpleasant ones.

Men, on the other hand, usually take a broader view of failure than we do. They waste no time in regret and retrospect, but keep a firm grip on their courage, when we lose heart so easily, it is no use to go back to dig up what has already been done. Nothing can undo it. Accept things as they are and life will give you many a surprise.

To suffer in silence, to refrain from answering the bitterest of calumnies places us on a vantage point vastly superior to those who would injure us and discounts what they may say. Gossip only becomes serious when we countenance it by denial. Silent contempt speaks louder than the most vociferous contradiction. Nothing is harder to bear in silence than vilification, yet that it is the part of wisdom to do so is illustrated daily. There may come a time in our lives when saying nothing will seem to be an acknowledgment of guilt and then will be given an opportunity to reply to calumniators. But the ordinary little backbitings of every day life are best met in steadfast silence. In replying to them we are apt to lose our temper and our dignity, which is both foolish and futile.

Musical Prodigies.

Most musical prodigies are boys, in spite of the law that girls develop mentally faster than boys. Girl prodigies on the violin are almost unknown. Very few of the great divas have been known as child wonders, although there is a memorable method by which young girls can be taught to sing in imitation of great artists.

Half the prodigies that most people have known have turned out to be mediocrities. The wonderful boy soprano Kavenagh, of Chicago, who toured Canada in the early '90's, did not come to the front when he grew up. The equal prodigy of the violin, Franz Von Vecsey, has become a passably good player, but has not been heard since he left for abroad fifteen years ago.

Now and then a child conductor visits Canada and creates a slight sensation by leading a band of grown-up men. There is a boy preacher down South who is said to be a marvel of eloquence.

But we must go slow in the matter of prodigies, and at the same time not be too sceptical. There is no reason why the divine gift of music should not express itself at an early age if it is ever going to do so. Very few musicians amount to much unless they start young.

A New Development in Light Sixes

Before we began experimental work on our new six-cylinder motor three years ago, we made a very thorough investigation of the light six field.

We found out just what qualities car owners desired in the power plants of their motor cars and then we designed an engine to meet these requirements.

The wisdom of our method is attested by the unanimous approval given our five-passenger "Glenbrook" model. With its first appearance, it immediately won the enthusiastic support of motorists.

And, by its dependable and economical performance, it has so clearly demonstrated its high character as an investment value that our production schedule is already proving unequal to the demand.

The "Glenbrook" is a truly remarkable development in five-passenger cars. Won't you arrange for a demonstration while our dealer is in position to meet your requirements as to delivery?
