NED GORDON MEETS IAN M'KENZIE-A NEW CHAPTER XVII.

IMPORTANT CONVERSATION, WHICH INDI-CATES THE RESULTS LIKELY TO ARISE

CATES THE RESULTS LIKELY TO ARISE FROM IT—NEW DANGERS AREAD.
The two men who advanced to meet Ian M'Kenzie had nothing preposeessing in their appearance. They were tail and powerful men, with firmly knit limbs, and with a dark, scowling look, and heavy lowering brows, which were partially hid by their bonnets, being drawa far down over them. One of snem was dark and swartby, while the hair of the other was of a fiery red, and both were dressed in kilts and fully armed.

They saluted Ian as soon as they came near enough, and then one looking earnestly at him exclaimed—"What! Is the Chief of the M'Kenzies wounded? Has his sword been drawn in combat?"

The words were spoken in Gaelic.

The words were spoken in Gaelic.

"It has," was the laconic reply of Ian.

"And where are the companions o our Chief?"

"They havefallen fighting for me."

With flashing eyes the men half drew their claymores from their scabbards as they eargerly asked—

"And who was it that attacked you? Where have they gone, or do they still live?"

"He lives," replied Ian, calmly; "and I wish you two men to sweep him from the earth. I was coming directly to you, and it is fortunate we have met."

"He' exclaimed the two men, in evident amazement. "Was it one who slew our kinsmen and wounded our Chief?"

"It was one," was the reply; "and you know him. You remember the Is w' lander who struck me down in the lut the night your Chieftain died? You ramember him who enabled the son of M'. Leod to escape from us when we along with others pursued him down Glen Letterowe?"

"We do—we do."

"Then he has again cross my path. A cursed accident again gave him an advanover me, and I had for the moment to brook defeat. But the honor of the M'. Kenzies must be sustained, and no Low-lander must be permitted to lay a hand on them and live. They must be avenged—one and all of them—from the Chief himself to the humblest clansman."

"Our kinsmen shall be avenged," was the reply of those he addressed.

"Well, I have a proposal to make, to which I desire your attention. I wish to rid me of this whelp—will you do it?"

"We shall—we shall. Where is he now?"

We shall-we shall. Where is he

"We shall—we shall. Where is he now?"

"He has gone to G'asgow, and he goes from there to Edmburgh."

"To Glasgow and Edinburgh," exclaimed one, in surprise. "And how shall we overtake him? Is he on foot?"

"No; he is mounted and accompanied by a woman—his saster. "But listen to me. Hir purpose in Edinburgh I need not state fully to you; but let me say it is to, if possible, to injure me. Whe! I wish but do is this—follow him to Edmburgh, or rather be there before him. You can easily disguise yourselves as drovers or shepherde, and make his acquaintance: He may tell you his purpose; if he does, I have no objection, but I wish you to use every effort to prevent him accomplishing what he deeries. I also wish you to decoy bim to some quiet place, and then—you understand—your dirks can do the rest. Will you do this for me?"

The men were silent.

The men were silent.

There was a pure and stardy manliness about Lord Derby's recent speech on self-enture which commends it to Young Canada as well as to Young England, the tests up one cherished opinion of the masses when he declares that eleverness is not the instead understand the masses when he declares that eleverness is not the instead understand the masses when he declares that eleverness is not the instead understand the modern than the modern than the modern who rose to fill some of the highest offices in England, and who filled them well too, and who yet were constantly ridiculed for slowness of comprehension, and he goes on to speak of those first-leasumen at the universities who are now struggling hard for mere bread and a roof. Touching on the mental rest-leasumes, the inquiry, the doubt of the times, he says most simply and naturally what it will not harm the modern Canadian to read again and again. "Right and wrong, home, duty, and country, hencevolence toward men and responsibility toward the uescen power by which human actions are guided and controlled—these are not fille phrases. They are realities which correspond with the deepest wasts and feelings of our nature; and no man will feel himself utterly cast down who can say in his heart what the wisest and best of the human race have preclaimed in the whole tenor of their lives. Whether I am happy or unhappy is not my chief affair; what most and first concerns me is find my work in-life, to recognize it, and to do it."

American Aristocracy.—Aldrich, in his new story in the Atlantic, gets off a pretty good thing on aristocratic circles as follows: "One is pained to find that the most exclusive folks have frequently passed their early manhood in selling tape or West India goods in home opathic quantities. This is not an immoral thing in itself, but it is certainly illogical of these people to be so intolerant of those less fortunate people who have not yet disposed of their stock."

The TENDOLOGIST OR INDESTRAL

The Tecnsologist, on Industrial.

Monthly, for 1874.—The January number of this standard journal, issued by the Industrial Publication Company, 176
Broadway, New York, has reached us, and, as sual, it is filled with valuable and interesting information. The table of contents gives a list of nearly fitty important articles, not including mere current items of information. The table of contents gives a list of nearly fitty important articles, not including mere current items of information, of which there are seven or eight columns. Of these articles nineteen are illustrated, the illustrated, in colors. In looking over its pages, one is struck with the clearness and simplicity which characterize the descriptions of new machines and processes; the earnestness and vigor of the editorials, and the spiciness of the new stems. Those of our readers who are interested in industrial progress, ought by all means to examine this periodical, which may be obtained of any news agent, or direct from the publishers.

There is much of beauty and artistic excellence in the February number of the "Addine." The promise held out for the New Year, in the January number, of a golume of surpassing worth and taste, is sustained in this issue. A dozen beautiful pictures embellish its pages, more than half of which are original American views. Mr. W. M. Cary has a spirited full page picture of "Antelope-Hunting on the Plains;" the hounds are in full pursuit of a herd of deer, which are coursing like the wind over the foot hills at the base of the Rocky Mountains. Mr John Hows has a series of five pictures, which he drew last summer in the lovely region of the famous Juniata River in Pennsylvania. Mr. J. Davis contributes a characteristic sketch of the village "neer-do-well," An Idle Dog," Specht has a fine picture of Scotch grey-hounds, "Gentlemen of Leisure. "Cinderella." afterf Lejenne, represents a pretty maident sitting by the open fire place. The other illustrations are a large and handsome picture alled "The Oli Bible," by G. Wagmul

Amongst other good articles is John Stuart Mill: an Autobiography, telling the story of a precocious and isselated childhood, and its effect on the whole future life of the man. It will have a peculiar interest for those who have the guidance of yrouthful minds, though no one should pass it by. An account of the "New Years" Political Aspect" is also interesting, in view of the English general election. The increased size of the type is a decided improvement, making the page larger and hand-somer, and still more closely resembling the original. bling the original.
