Miramichi Advance. CHATHAM, N. B., AUGUST 6, 1896. Dominion Party Politics in the Provincial Administration.

The outspoken sentiments of Hon. Chief Commissioner Emmerson at Newcastle on the proposition of certain agitators of mischievous strife over Dominion issues in the field of local politics, will meet with general approval throughout the province.

They are not serious. Mr. Pitts, the right hand man of brother Stockton who leads the Opposition, is a cheerful kind person, even in the midst of political adversity.

It is gratifying to know that our local Government has been taking a marked interest in agricultural matters, especially in dairying during the last few years, and it is also satisfactory to realize that its efforts have not been without a fair measure of success.

Several members of the Chatham Board referred to this service and said it was very satisfactory and reliable and that they received freight by it one day earlier than by the I. C. R.

John Arthur's Ward; OR THE DETECTIVE'S DAUGHTER.

CHAPTER XXVII. NOT A BAD DAY'S WORK.

The first thing that Doctor Vaughan did on returning from Bellair was to look an interview with Henry, the dark-skinned Londoner.

It was a mixed motive that had first prompted Henry to expose the cause of a leprosy, Frenchman's name, a motive composed of one part inward wrath, long courted, against the haughty and over-credulous Londoner, and one part pity for the young girl who, as he expected, would tell him, as she had done before, the woman who had usually been entrusted by his master.

He had expected to assist her to escape from the place, to enjoy his master's charge, and to see the matter and those who had been the cause of her distress, and to see the matter and those who had been the cause of her distress.

upon as the last one to entrust with the investigation relative to the Edward Percy. He gave his man no clue to the present whereabouts of his subject, but set him back ten years or more, sending him to visit the scenes of school epics, and bidding him trace the life of the man, with the aid of such clues as he thought best to give, up to that time.

Next, he visited another Agency, and placed a man upon the track of London Davlin.

Then he called a carriage and drove straight to the residence of old Samuel Verge. It was early in the day, a professional visit or for a visit of any kind.

Nevertheless, Doctor Vaughan was not without delay, to the presence of the master of the house.

Old Samuel Verge sat in his large, softly-cushioned armchair, in a gorse-colored flowered dressing gown.

He was glowering over his dainty dishes which had lately contained a dainty breakfast. Evidently he fancied it as the doctor had called in anticipation of a serious morning attack, or to check off his greedy appetite.

Chickadee maliciously as Clarence entered the room, and greeted him with: "Oh, that's all right, you were ahead of me this time, didn't you? I say, now, did you think I would be worse this morning?"

Clarence surveyed his patient with considerable amusement. "You won't suffer from a hearty breakfast. It is the supper that you must look out for. But my call this morning was not to eat, but to talk about a lady."

"About a lady! Of course, of course; you know I'm a doctor, and a doctor's man must be able to talk about a lady."

"That's precisely what I want to know. The fact is, my business is rather peculiar. I want to know if you have any information about a woman named Clara Weston?"

"I have not heard of her name, but I will inquire about it for you. I will inquire about it for you. I will inquire about it for you."

"I have not heard of her name, but I will inquire about it for you. I will inquire about it for you. I will inquire about it for you."

was becoming careless, very careless. Sometimes Miss Arthur was inclined to think that her recent looks of woe and her hair were pulled quite unnecessarily, while her head was under the hands of the hair-dresser.

With many an apology, Elaine fled the door and closed it behind her, leaving the hair-dresser to his work.

Being assured, when the hair-dressing was done, that she had accomplished the task without incurring so much as a single twinge of pain, she laid open the door for her mistress, cooling her satisfaction and leaving behind her a satisfied smile.

But alas for the poor spinster! Before she had been half an hour in the society of her beloved fiancé, her unfortunate habit of tossing and wriggling her head brought down the angry architect to her.

A sudden twist turned up the corner of her glossy 'crown of glory' from Miss Arthur's head, and Mr. Percy's face, and we draw a veil over the confusion of the unhappy spinster.

"The lady having retired to her dressing-room to relieve her feelings and to rearrange her hair, she was struck in which the lady did the historian and the old maid appointed guardian of the family, and she had exhausted her strength of wrath and the other her account of the incident.

Then a truce was patched up, which lasted for several days. During this time, the verger of the house, when speaking of Mr. Percy, said that he had seen him several times, and that he had seen him several times, and that he had seen him several times.

By and by, drawing back the curtain, she saw the woman who had been the cause of her distress, and she saw the woman who had been the cause of her distress.

And she saw the woman who had been the cause of her distress, and she saw the woman who had been the cause of her distress.

And she saw the woman who had been the cause of her distress, and she saw the woman who had been the cause of her distress.

And she saw the woman who had been the cause of her distress, and she saw the woman who had been the cause of her distress.

John Arthur, in some degree, had declared his intention of raising a physician. But Clara objected so strongly that he had refused. Before leaving, however, Clara sought him, as he was sitting in what she called his 'study,' and said to him: "I will not be a doctor, but I will be a nurse."
