TURKEY GIVES IN.

Berlin, July 30.-A Constantinople dispatch to the Tageblatt says that Turkey has decided to accept in their entirety the Armendan reforms demanded by the powers. The acceptance of these reforms, the dispatch says, is primarily due to the pressure brought to bear on the Government by Sir Philip Currie, the British Ambassador. IN RE COPYRIGHT.

London, July 30.-The Morning Post, In discussing the copyright question tomorrow, will suggest that Canadian publishers follow the example of the English and established branch officers in the United States, in which event Americans may possibly be induced to remove restrictions which offend their neighbors. Latest Developments in the Now Notorious Case.

More Bones and Part of a Skull Found in the "Castle."

Chicago, July 30.—The search for the vats in the basement of Holmes' Cas-tle was continued today. The tank which was uncovered on Monday was forced open, but nothing was found but a few inches of petroleum in the bottom of the vat. Old man Chappell's story that the tanks were used for dissolving human bodies was largely disproved by today's investigation. Search for other vats was continued, as it was believed that Chappelle might have been mistaken as to their location. In the course of the further excavation in Holmes' Sixty-third street building today the police unearthed parts

How Missionaries Fared in Recent Chinese Outbreaks.

Men, Women and Children Attacked by a Howling Mob in Chen-Tu.

Driven From Compound to Compound-A Friendly Chinaman's Assistance. -All Property Destroyed.

Kingston, Ont., July 31.—Dr. Kilborn, of the General Hospital, is in receipt of a letter detailing the recent outbreak in China. The message comes from his prother, Dr. O. L. Kilborn, located with the Canadian L. Kilborn, located with the Canadian Methodist mission at Chen-tu, Sze-Chuan, China. He has arrived at Shanghai with his wife and son, in company with Dr. stephenson, wife and family, the Rev. Geo. Hartwell, his wife and family, and the other Chent-tu missionaries. Two priests of the Roman Catholic mission also acompanied them. They all bear evidence of a very severe beating by the Chinese mob. TRYING EXPERIENCES.

Dr. Kilborn says, writing on June

1: "We have just pased through some very trying experiences. Myself and family and all other missionaries at Chen-tu have been nearer going to heaven than ever before. Twice we escaped as by a miracle from the very laws of death, but we are absolutely safe, and we praise God for all his leading. Probably some of us will go to Shanghai and others remain in the Province of Sze-Chuan. You see, we are stripped clean out. We have absolutely nothing but what we wore when we escaped from our home. We are eighteen adult Protestants, two Roman Catholic French priests, and eleven children in this yamen. That is all the foreign community of Chentu. Mrs. Kilborn and I left Klating by boat at daybreak of May 15. We took all we possessed with us, and arrived in Chen-tu well and safe on May 24th. On May 25th we began moving our goods into our new house and home, the one Dr. Hart formerly oc-cupied. May 28th is one of the great festivals of the Chinese order, and consequently crowds of lowdies were very easy to find. At 4:30 p.m. they mobbed us, the stones coming flercely against our back street gates. There were in the compound Dr. and Mrs. Stephenson, and three children, Mrs. Kilborn, myself and child, and Dr. Jackson, just arrived in Chen-tu, whose teeth I had just filled. Dr. Stephenson and I loaded our rifles, while the women and children went into the hospital compound, and all prayed for the arrival of the officer with his retinue to scatter the mob.

HELD THE MOB IN CHECK.

"By about 5 p.m. the two center gates fell in with a crash. We thought it was time to act. Dr. Stephenson and appeared on the opposite side of the court with our guns. Instantly the mob vanished from the gateway. saw our advantage, and fired shots in quick succession through the open gate into the air. Upon the street the at about 40 yards' distance on enther | The C. F. 2 Can't Get side from our battered gateway. Presently there arrived about a dozen yamen runners, and two or turee sol-We thought ourselves periectly safe, and sent word to our families to that effect. We neld the mob in check until about 6 o'clock; then we were induced by the runners to go inside while they scattered the people. The foreigners were scarcly out of sight before the yelling and stone-throwing began again. We waited half an hour, then made another sally. This time they retreated as before, though not quite so far, and their courage began to grow with gathering darkness. We held them for a while, but stones of good size began to come so thick and fast we both got struck. It was not long before we made a low and orderly retreat. By haif-pat 6 the gate was again in possession of the mob, and we had retreated into the hospital compound. Our big main building was of thick brick walls, and we thought of taking our station in one or the rooms, and trying to barricade and defend it. Providentially we gave that up. Not long after we left our dwelling compound to come to the hospital side the crowd rushed in and began smashing things. Crash and smash were heard with terrible distinctness, with the yelling of the excited mob. The din was something never to be forgotten. We, five with our children, out of the dispensary building, tried to find a hiding place in some dark corner of the compound but we knew from the awful sounds on the other side of the wall that hiding there was bur putting off the fatal moment. We tried to get over the wall into our neighbor's compound, but were told in very plain language that we were not to be allowed to come over; as a last resort began crawling under three or four enormous tree trunks, purchased for timber, and lying a foot or more from the ground. A WAY OF ESCAPE. "Just at this moment a Chinaman whom we had never seen before to cur knowledge came along, and said that the mob that had been counding at the gate of the hospital had scattered, and we must escape through that way to the street. This again was providential leading, but we did not know at the time that it might be a trap to catch us. We followed this man, and crawled one by one through the hole made by the stones of the rioters in the wall. It was getting quite dark, and there were really very few people on the streets. We ran into the yard of the little house immediately opposite. They turned us out with yells. We ran out toward the big open ground two or three blocks away—the parade We asked several of the groups of people who stood on their doorsteps if they would conceal us. Every time it was an emphatic 'No." On the very edge of the parade ground is a soldiers' barracks with 100 or 200 soldiers quantered there. We ran in there, but were turned out with yells and curses. We then hurried across the parade grounds to the city wall. helped one another up the inner parapet and stopped for a moment's rest. We did not know what moment during that chase on the street and parade ground we might be overtaken and struck down by the howling mob. We heard cries behind us on the street of 'Beat them,' 'Beat them to death, but none followed us upon the wall. The Chinaman was also with us who et us through the hole in the wall. He turned out to be a young man who had been treated in our hospital some time

THE WORK OF DESTRUCTION.
"While on the wall we saw the reflection of fire in our old home, and knew the work of destruction was still going on. After many hours of waiting we got messages that the other mission compounds were all right. We then made our way to the Chiese inland mission, where we were warmly received and fed. We thought, considering the quietness in the other mission compounds, that the principal riot was all over. When morning came we found how sadly mistaken we were. for word came that Mr. Hartwell's compound, directly across the street, was attacked and his new brick house committed to the flames. Mr. Hantwell and family had escaped over the compound wall to the house of a friendly neighbor. Finally all found their way to the compound where we were. All fully believed the mob would be upon us next. A decision was quickly come to to go to the magistrate's yamen before the streets in our vicinity should get crowded. We were about starting when a small officer arrived. He guar-anteed us full protection. The crowd was getting large and difficult to control when the officer ordered us to go to the yamens. We barely got out of the compound, by means of a ladder previously arranged, one by one dropping over the wall, when the mob began the rush on the outer gate of the compound. We passed through by narrow alleys, and with the aid of an official who had followed us over the wall. and pulled the ladder after him, we got into a small court where eight families lived. We turned a corner and found ourselves in a long alley which opened on the street where the howling mob

IN HIDING. "Quick as thought we dashed into a small crowded house of two rooms, and secreted ourselves in the darker back room, crawled upon the small, fithy beds, and drew the blue common curtains closely around us. We scarcely dared to breathe. For three long hours we listened to the crashing, smashing howling mob, not ten yards from our hiding place. Twenty-four dollars shut the mouths of the two men in the house, and promises to the remainder of the eight families fixed them all right. About 2 p.m. of that eventful day (the 29th) we began to breathe more freely. The howling din just over the wall quietly died away, and the hours slowly passed till dark. About p.m., under the cover of the friendly darkness, we passed silently out on the street, one by one, and before 9 p.m. we were safe with those who had arrived at the yamen in the forthoon. Later in the evening the members of the American mission came into the yamen from their quarters. By midnight all the Protestant missionaries of Chin-tu were safe. Together we praised God as we had never done before. His care and love had saved us when the hand of man failed. We realized something of how close we had been to death-a violent death at that-and how we had been saved. About 2 a.m. that same night two Roman Catholic prought Both had been pretty badly used, and a third was still outside."

Mrs. Hartwell and children will probably start for home in a month; also Dr. Stephenson, wife and family.

Early End of the Strike Probable-Many Contractors Concede the Scale.

New York, July 30.-The end of the strike is apparently in sight. All day the settlement committee of the Brotherhood were busy with the contractors, signing the new agreement, which displaces the piece work system and in its place creates a weekly scale of wages. More than 60 contractors have signed the new agreement. These are the leading contractors of the city, and they employ from 15 to 50 work-men each. As a result nearly 2,000 tailors will resume work at their benches

Young Girl Shot Dead by Her Jealous Lover.

Montreal, July 30.-A horrible tradedy was enacted here this evening, result-ing in the death of a young girl named Corrine Corsenni, 22 years of age. The girl was shot dead by her lover in a fit of jealousy. The snooting took place at a private house, No. 19 Bonsecour street, where the girl lived. Isaac Gauthier, 28 years of age, a cigarmaker, had been paying attention to the girl for some time, and this evening made her a visit. Words ensued between them, and finally Gauthier pulled the revolver and shot the woman four times, the bullets taking effect in the head, chest and arms. The girl expired before she could be removed to the hospital. Gauthier was promptly arrested. He

of Their Crops. The section of Pictou county, N. S., known as McLennan's Mountain, was visited by a tornado on Sunday. It was the worst storm ever known in that section. At one time there was a cloudburst, and a raging torrent of water rushed down the hillside, carrying destruction in its path. Trenches ten feet deep were cut into the hillsides, and every water course in the vicinity was turned into a torrent, tearing up the ground and doing much damage. The lightning struck several houses, doing slight damage. The mountains rise on the other side of the valley to the height of about 200 feet. The water rushing down the slopes was soon a foot deep in the interval. It choked up the narrow entrance, and then rose until there were four feet of water across an area of twenty acres. The crops on several farms were ruined, and losses will foot up many thousands of dollars. An old mill and a number of bridges were swept away. For an hour the storm raged with unarated fury, and fifteen inches of hailfell, some of it being found on ground 26 hours afterwards, notwithstading the fact that a hot sun shone on . At least a foot of water fell over an rea of a mile to a mile and a half.

> Mr. Samuel McBride Performs It With a Silver Trower.

Speeches by Dr. Carman, Sir John Carling, Dr. Williams and Articles Placed in the Stone-Addresses of a Bright and Congratulatory Nature-A Magnificent Edifice.

The corner stone of the Metropolitan Church (old Queen's Avenue) was laid with impressive ceremony yesterday afternoon by Mr. Samuel McBride, the only surviving member of the original trustee board of the old church. It was a proud moment for Mr. Mc-Bride, and it was a proud moment also for the hundreds that sat and stood around throughout the whole service. The stone adorns the northwest corner, and within a yard of it was erected the speakers' platform. Behind this, on each side and in front of the stand, were placed seats enough to accommodate 1,500 people. All of these were filled, and several hundred men, women and children were content to stand. The day was cold-a regular Western Fair day-and the sky was over-cast. But as if to impress upon the churchless congregation assembled, the adage about the darkest cloud having a silver lining, the sun at times would burst forth, flooding the mass of people with golden light and diffusing them with grateful warmth. Magnificent trees surround the building, and the heavy foliage formed a splendid barrier against the strangely unseasonable and harsh north wind of a July day. Taken altogether, the scene was a brilliant one—a pretty picture in a frame of maple. Gray hairs predominated on the platform. Directly in front sat the members of the trustee and quarterly boards, and all about

PART OF THE OLD CHURCH. And high above it all, its broad arrow pointing proudly northward, the bruised and battered weather-vane of the old church raised its head. It was not at the summit of a costly pile, as it had been from July 16, 1854, to Feb. 2, 1895. Instead it surmounted an imcomptu pedestal about twelve feet high. Clinging to it was a section of the top of the old tower, about four feet long, fire eaten, rusty and full of holes. The iron rod that supported the weather-vane was patched and bandaged in many places with strong telephone wire. It wobbled quite feebly, and put more than one forcibly in mind of the fateful February night when it was slowly forced to bend before the flery element after having so long defled the other elements of destruction. Had the old weather-vane a voice, what words it might have unfolded, what stories it could have told, what scenes described! As it is, it is an interesting and treasured relic, and will yet stand proudly out against the sky on the top

Each spectator was supplied with a printed pamphlet containing the history of the church, as compiled by Mr. A. B. Powell. As a work of reference it is quite useful. It contained a glance over the 50 years of progress of the parent tree of Western Ontario Methodism-old Queen's Avenue-giving an account of the men at the helm during that time, and a short history of the long line of pastors who have been in charge. A somewhat similar outline was published by the "Advertiser" at the time of the fire.

As the proceedings began with the singing of the doxology, the orchestra of the church made its presence known by accompanying the singing. Mr. J. W. Fetherton led the musicians. The pastor then read the address laid down in the Discipline, and afterwards the audience sang a hymn, a verse of which read:

"Grant that all we who here today Rejoicing this foundation lay, May be in every deed thine own, Built on this precious corner stone."

A prayer by Rev. A. L. Russell followed, and the same preacher afterwards read the first Scripture lesson. Another hymn was sung by the auditarian and Pow Sungarian Comments. ence, and Rev. Benjamin Clement read the second Scripture lesson.

REV. DR. WILLIAMS.
"Allow me," said the president of the London Conference, "to express my congratulations to the trustees and the congregation of the Queen's Avenue Methodist Church upon the progress already made towards the construction of so magnificent a building as that which we expect will shortly crown this corner, and which will adorn and beautify and add to the attractiveness and importance of your magnificent Forest City. I wish to congratulate my esteemed friend, Mr. McBride, upon the opportunity he has of placing himself upon record in such an honorable, delightful, brotherly and Christian way, as he will in connection with the laying of the corner stone of this place of worship. The erection of a place of worship like this is the perpetuation in this particular form of a principle that is as old as time-the great principle of the atonement. I don't know in how many forms that principle has been illustrated and placed before the age. In every form of religion in connection with temples they recogmind of men in every country, in every nized and illustrated and made known the glorious fact that in the hearts of men there is the inwrought conviction that without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin. And the universal conviction of our sinfulness, as so expressed, has brought us into connection with the need of so wonderful an atonement. HIS GREATEST PRESENTATION of that principle the Lord Jesus Christ has made manifest in the Gospel as we have it in the New Testament Scriptures, and as it is preached from Sabbath to Sabbath in every Methodist pulpit throughout the land. I am glad indeed to be able to say that the Methodist Church has no reservations. Everything in her list of truths she is ready to place before the public and to make known, without any mental reservation, without any hesitation, and without modification. And there is in this theology something that seems to make it absolutely cer-tain that there shall be no modifications in these grand doctrines to the end of time. There may be councils for other purposes, there may be arrangements in regard to administration, and rearrangements in regard to administration but the great purpose of the Methodist Church, the purpose spread Christian holiness throughout the land, and throughout the world, is one which must last to the end of time. It can never be modified, it can never be recalled, it can never be for-

REV. DR. SANDERSON.
"I am glad to meet you on this occasion," said the venerable ex-pastor of Queen's Avenue, and the recognized of Queen's Avenue, and the recognized if not official head of the church during its recent troubles. "We have had trials during the past months," he continued. "As a church you have felt them. I have felt them with you, But after the coldness of winter comes the warmth of summer, and after the darkness of night comes the light of day. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. We have had our sad experiences; we are now entering upon our joys. And I take tms magnificent audience and this grand occasion as an omen for good in the days and years that are to come for the church that has been passing through scenes of great and grievous trial. In the midst of all God has been with us. I have comforted myself many a time by the quotation of this verse of one of our beautiful hymns, with which most of you, at any rate, are familiar:

Ye fearful saints fresh courage take, The clouds ye so much dread are big with mercy, and shak break. In blessings on your head.

"Prayers have gone up and pierced the cloud laden with mercles, and bless-ings from above—showers of blessing—

are coming down upon us. REV. DR. PO'TS.

The first portion of Dr. Potts' address was of a historic and reminiscent nature, the second part prophetic. He referred to the time when the old North Street Church was the largest Methodist church west of Montreal. wondered how many there were in heaven today who were won to Jesus Christ within the walls of that old church; how many in London, in Canada, and in the United States who first were introduced into the Kingdom of Christ and into the Household of Christ and into the Household of In Faith in that grand old church? In the new church the same Gospel doctrines would be preached, the same exhortations given, and the same glorious promises would linger in the ears of pards wide, worth 25c, our ate the Sacrament and the peculiar meetings which have made Methodism triumphant in the isles of the sea and on every continent in the world-the class meeting and the prayer meeting. They would have the same grand work of converting sinners to perpetuate.

"We shall have a new building," continued the doctor, "but we shall not have a new Bible. We shall have the old Bible, perhaps with a new light from the central spring of divine revelation. We may not only have new light from it, and new comfort from it, and new counsel from it, but we shall HOLD TO THE OLD BIBLE from the first verse of the first of Genesis to the last verse of the last chapter of Revelation. And so while we shall have a new building, we shall not have a new Bible. (Applause.) And I am glad to say—and I say it with absolute confidence—we shall have a new building, but we shall not have a new building. The most previous thing in theology. The most precious thing in Methodism is the interpretation of the Living Word of the Living God. We shall have a new building, but we shall not have a new worship. We shall have the same old worship of prayer, the same old prayer of confession, the same old prayer of supplication, the same old prayer of intercession, the same old prayer of thanksgiving, the same old prayer of adoration. We shall have a new building, but we shall not have new praises. We do not want a new 'Te Deum Laudamus.' -We praise Thee, O God, we acknow-ledge Thee to be the Lord.' We shall sing the grand old hymns of Charles Wesley and John Wesley; and, indeed, we may accept a Ray Palmer and others from time to tyme. But we shall have the staple of hymnology—the hymns that have made Methodism triumphant all around the world. CHRISTIANITY NOT DECAYING.

"Christianity never saw a more appropriate day than today. Pastors may propriate day than today. Fastors may die, but the church never dies. Christianity dieth not. Christianity has no sign of decay. They tell me that Christianity is a spent force. They tell me that there is decay in our Christianity. In the name of Heaven, the signs of decay? Is it where are the signs of decay? Is it a sign of decay to build churches? Is it a sign of decay to support missions Is it a sign of decay to multiply missionaries? Is it a sign of decay to build and endow institutions of learn-ing whose main object is to teach the principles of Christianity? Is it a sign of decay to see the young manhood and the young womanhood of the church banding together as never be-fore for Christ? Why, sir, if these are signs of decay, God send us more such signs of decay. (Appiause.) I wonder what sort of eyesight they have who can see signs of decay in the Christianity of this last decade of the nineteenth century!

"No, no! Christianity never saw brighter day than the thirtieth day of July, 1895—(applause)—and next year will be brighter, for the path of Christianity is as a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day of resurrection and of glorious immortality." SIR JOHN CARLING.

Sir John Carling's address was full of interesting reminiscences. He remembered that 60 years ago, when he was a small boy, Methodist ministers came, not by electric cars or steamboats or railways, but on horsebackto preach the gospel, not in churches, but in the houses of farmers. He remembered that the only Methodist Church in London was a very small one McBride. Over 55 years ago he remembered hearing the late Dr. Evans, a man who stood high as a Methodist minister, preach in a church on the corner of King and Talbot streets. It was a small congregation, but the same enthusiasm and spirit characterized Methodists then as now. He was delighted to know that in London they were progressive and kept pace with the times. It spoke well for Methodism that they were competing so successfully with other churches in erecting magnificent edifices for their congregations. "We have a favored country," said Sir John. "We have our colleges and schools. There is no better school system than in the Dominion, and whom have we to thank for bringing forward such a measure that has been of such great advantage to the people of Canada? The late Rev. Dr. Ryerson, who, when I was a boy, traveled through here on horseback, preaching the gospel. (Applause.) We owe a the gospel. (Applause.) We owe a debt of gratitude to him for introducing a school system that has been of such benefit to the people of this coun-We go through the concessions and side roads of the country, and we see churches on one corner and schools on the other. A few years ago missionaries had to travel in primitive style through the vast prairies of the Northwest, but now they may ride in steamboats and cars as comfortably as in any part of the world. We are a progressive people and a Christian people, and the Methodists represent a large and zealous section of the Christian community REV. DR. CARMAN. After the singing of a hymn the chairman called upon Rev. Dr. Carman, the venerable and eloquent general superintendent of the Methodist Church. Dr. Carman remarked that Methodism had been strangely stricken in this section, and he had prayed for divine comfort to come down on the people in their affliction. It looked as if his prayer had been answered, to see this splendid sympathetic gathering. He liked the last speaker's reference to a glorious school system for the Dominion. He liked it because of its liberality and its fidelity to the British Crown, and to the genuine interests of this great country. They were laying a foundation stone today. He expected by the grace of God, by the gravitation of matter, and the weight of brick and stone, to erect a building on that foundation which the winds would not shake, and which the blasts of time would not stir. It brought to his mind the relation of this people in their worship to the rearing of a stable and glorious Christian commonwealth. But there was danger of drifting. He noticed in a report of a meeting in Toronto the other day the presentation of some thoughts about "the coming man" and a little about the new woman too-(laughter) -and the thought was "a cosmic man." Cosmology was a very nice thing, said the speaker, but he wondered why it was necessary to find anything aside from the Christian man. What could the cosmic man accomplish in the world without this foundation? The speaker on that occasion said that the time of the theologies was about ended, and that he never knew of anybody being converted by a theological sermon. A sermon without any the-ology would be a strange affair. He never heard of anyone being converted without some theology, some dogma. Some people said the world was getting so sweet and sugary—so sugary almost as to get slippery—that people did not want the old tried things of the past. They said this was a loving age, and there was a nice illustration of it the other day, when the Queen sent a message to the Spanish navy and bade them welcome to Plymouth Hoe, the scene of the disastrous defeat of the Spanish Armada. (Hear, hear.) There the English navy, under Lord Howard of Effingham, a Roman Catholic and a faithful, loyal subject, stood for those very principles that we were to maintain today. Had not the God of the armies of the sky stood by the fates of loved old England, possibly we would not today be so pleasantly situated here. The doctrines of justifica-tion by faith and sanctification by the Holy Spirit they would not yield. Bankers, lawyers, merchants and mechanics might say that they cared not for creeds, but each had a rigid creed of his own, nevertheless. The doctor humorously recited a banker's creed, as follows: "I believe in cash. It is the public credit, crystallized, incarnate, instinct with producing and exchanging efficacy and beneficence. I believe in banks born of public convenience, and saving and administering the grace and poyer of cash for the public good. I be-lieve in the right circulation of money and its proper application to improve. ment and comfort. I believe in this blessed trinity of cash, coffers and circulation (and as far as this world is concerned it is a good doctrine) for the development of resources and the uplifting of the people. I believe in the nonest body and brotherhood of trade in manufactures, art and agriculture. I believe in repentance for past misdeeds-some of you will say that is all very well for the McKinley Bill-(laughter)—the removal of obstructions and the resurrection of a new life of industry and exchange. I believe in good security in gold, as iron, and silver, as stones. I believe in the gold dollar-(laughter)-and in the increasing felicity and everlasting glory of our great and noble commonwealth.' (Applause.) The doctor asked what was the use of the commerce of the country that was not built on such a creed. I wouldn't open a corner grocery store, run an ice cream social or manage a tobacco pipe store with-out a creed," said the doctor. "I pity the man who undertakes to run any-thing without a creed. God help us that we may be true to the spirit and practice of the Father.'

LAYING THE CORNER STONE. The real business of the day was then reached—the laying of the corner stone by Mr. Samuel McBride, the oldest living trustee of the church. As Mr. McBride stood up he was presented by Rev. Mr. Daniels with a beautiful silver trowel, ivory handled. It was not engraved, as the church has not yet been definitely named, but space was left for the inscription within a pretty design of maple leaves. The stone, a huge, shapely block of Scotch granite, lay suspended by the derrick ropes, ready to be lowered to its solid bed, facing Dufferin avenue, near the Wellington street corner. On its face were carved the words: "Corner stone, North Street Church; laid 1852. Destroyed by fire Feb. 2, 1895. This stone laid July 30, 1895." Within its crevice was placed a large tin box containing the following list of articles, which was read by Mr. A. B. Powell: Copies of the "Advertiser," Free Press, Home Journal, Echo, Toronto Mail and Empire, Toronto Globe, the Christian Guardian, Methodist Magazine, Farmers' Advocate, copy of the Discipline, copy of hymn book, copy of Bible, copy of minutes of Conference, copy of report of missionary committee, history of Queen's Avenue Church, names of quarterly and trustee boards and building committee, names of pastor and assistant and superannuated ministers, members of Parliament board of aldermen and school board, chairman of Board of Education, police magistrate, police commissioners, copy of General Conference souvenir of last meeting held in London, coins of the realm-5, 10, 25 and 50 cent pieces, and Canadian coppers.

Mr. McBride then descended to the ground, and when the block was lowered, handled the trowel with a practiced hand, and, tapping the stone thrice, declared it well and truly laid amid MR. McBRIDE'S ADDRESS.

Mr. McBride returned to the speak-ers' platform and made a few remarks, humorous and reminiscent. He acknowledged the honor conferred upon him. He was aware that he had been chosen for the position, not from any merits of his own, but because he was a skilled workman. It was well in a job like this to secure a man of some experience and ability, so that was the reason he stood as high as he did today. His children and children's children could look back on the work which their forefather did. He had been honored many times by his fellows, but this was the crowning honor. He was at the top step of the ladder, and wanted to go down so that others could arise to the same height as he occupied today. He hoped this building would last for ages, and that no midnight fiend would with his torch be able to enter its doors and send it up in smoke and down in ashes. Mr. Mc-Bride humorously remarked that his wife had pinned a flower on his coat, and that Mrs. (Dr.) Eccles had given him a sprig of ivy off the church at Wurtemburg made famous by Luther, before he came to this gathering, and these honors had strengthened him to stand before it. Forty-two years ago, in 1853, he was called upon as a practical mechanic, to finish the old North Street, or Queen's Avenue Church, and he went to the top of the steeple to do the work. He did not know that he wanted to go to the top of the new spire, which would be 147 feet high, but if he felt as active as he did 42 years ago he would try it. (Laughter.) He would be glad when it was finished, as he would rather worship in a church than in a theater. The speaker said he began to play a part in the church's affairs in 1841, and had seen its work spread for 54 years. It not only grew, but branched out until it was now the mother of twelve or thirteen churches in London. (Applause.) When he saw the ruins before him (pointing to the turret of the old church), he could look back with a degree of pride. There was the top of the spire that they saved out of the fire, and there was the scroll that they took off the pole. (Laughter and applause.) He had put the tin on the top of the old spire, 145 feet high, and it had remained there, as placed by his hands 42 years ago.

Dr. Carman—That shows you are good workman. (Laughter.) Mr. McBride, concluding, said that the Queen's Avenue Church was noted for its liberality, even as far as Japan, and its record was good. He hoped its scattered machinery would soon be united and in working order, and if any pebble got in it it would be the fault of those who put it there.

Mr. Thomas McCormick, seconded by Dr. Eccles, moved a hearty vote of thanks to Rev. Dr. Carman and the other speakers, which was enthusiastically carried, and the happy ceremony ended with the benediction.

THE BRITISH FLAG AT BOSTON.

To the Editor of the "Advertiser": A report was circulated here the other day that at a joint meeting of Canadians and Americans at Boston, the Americans had offered an insult to the British flag. It turns out that instead of insulting the British flag they accorded it rather peculiar honors.

These efforts to keep up a bad feeling between the two countries are chiefly the work of persons who fancy that by affecting hatred and contempt of Yankees a man can make himself an English gentleman. But the cost is defrayed by the industrious people of Canada, especially by the farmers, in the shape of exclusion of their products from the American market by hostile tariffs, the natural fruit of international hatred.

We may be able to respect displays of anti-American sentiment when we can find a Canadian who has refused to better his condition by the acceptance of a place in the United States. I was myself abused some time ago by a Canadian fire-eater in language of the utmost violence for my American proclivities. Not long afterwards I learned that my assailant, who was a clergyman, had been called to a preachership in the United States, and, no doubt after prayerful meditation, had accepted the call. Yours faithfully,

GOLDWIN SMITH. Toronto, July 29, 1895.

DR. MURRAY AND THE SOUTH

Our former townsman, Dr. John Murray, chief of the famous Challenger expedition, made a wise suggestion at the Geographical Congress in London, Eng., this week. His own experience, as the head of a British Government expedition for investigating the secrets of the mighty deep, led him to propose that the inquiry into the wonders of the Antarctic Ocean should be indertaken by the navies of the world, and not by private enterprise. The investigations of expeditions with limited equipment and financial backing are not likely to be conclusive, whereas a joint naval Investigation could, once for all, solve the disputed problems.

The maps have long shown the northern shore of a great continent in the Antarctic Ocean, and Dr. Murray is among those who believe in its existence. But there are those who hold that if there is land there it is merely a succession of volcanic islands. It is not yet positively known that land exists, and travelers have told us that a wall of ice, 300 feet high, guards the apparently impenetrable secret of the solution of the southern pole. If there is no land south of this ice belt, then must the conclusion be reached that the great mass of the land on the planet is huddled around the north pole, or at least, is situated north of the equator. For the present, the southern hemisphere is chiefly known as a dreary waste of uninvestigated waters. As to the land, if there is any, it is all speculation. The subject is worthy of the attention that has been given it, if for no other reason than to further the investigation of atmosperic influences. If an Antarctic island continent exists, as Dr. Murray believes, there will probably be discovered on it fauna and flora of a type tot-

Dr. Frederick A. Cook will start from New York on October next on a private expedition towards the south pole. His arty will sail in a steam whaler of bout 300 tons, with full preparations and equipment for spending the winter on the Antarctic continent, should a landing be made upon it. Sledges, nowshoes, Esquimau dogs, etc., will be taken along, in the firm belief that, hould open country be found, or a nooth expanse of snow, a journey may e safely made to the pole itself. This expedition, daring though it promises be, is not likely to accomplish much. ould continue their investigations at general interest, might help to conhat there are many more defensible ans for employing men and ships han firing big guns at one another. | notified. Mr. Sutherland, M.P., Makes an Unassailable Defense.

Leader Haycock Non-Committal - Dr. Ross Puts a Pertinent Question-The Resolutions Adopted.

Among those who attended the meeting of the Patrons and Prohibitionists of North Oxford in the town hall, Woodstock, last Saturday, were the following: John Rice, Curries; E. J. Pearson, Kintore; Albert Pullin, Sweaborg; S. P. Fraser, East Zorra; Donald Muterer, North Oxford; Wm. Patterson, West Zorra; E. Tree, East Zorra; R. H. Calvert, Woodstock; J. Richardson, Tavistock; Rev. S. H. Nicholson, Innerkip; Walter McCormack, Inner-kip; Wm. Leonard, East Zorra; Henry Whitehead, Woodstock; Daniel Brown, jun., Woodstock; Joseph Hutchinson, Blandford; James Cowan, Woodstock; Donald Sutherland, Nissouri; Charles Crawford, Ingersoll; Rev. Mr. Straith, Innerkip; Jos. Rippon, Woodstock; Wm. Lampman, Eastwood; Wm. Goodger, Jos. Kent, J. Gould, East Zorra; Abraham Bean, Bright; C. W. Budd, West Oxford; John McLeod, Embro; Alex. McIntosh, Braemar; Robert William-son, Centerville; E. Topping, Woodstock. The gathering was a very mixed one, consisting of Patrons, Prohibitionists, straight Liberals, and a sprinkling of Conservatives.

REV. DR. McKAY'S SPEECH. From the excellent report of the speeches, given by the Sentinel-Review, we learn that Rev. Dr. Mackay, in opening the meeting, said they had been called together to choose a man to be their standard-bearer at the coming Dominion elections—a man who would be independent of and free from the shackles of the present political parties, and push questions which they considered of vast importance, irrespective of party. They were doing nothing new or strange in meeting as Patrons and Prohibitionists. In Manitoba, Quebec and New Brunswick the Patrons and Prohibitionists had united, and in Ontario the forces would have been united before this only that the matter had to be submitted first on the part of the Patrons to their individual lodges. He had had an interview recently with the editor of the Farmers' Sun, and Mr. Wrigley had assured him it was a foregone conclusion that the lodges would report in favor of a union of the Patrons and Prohibitionists. "We may go on talking temperance and preaching temperance until doomsday," continued the speaker, "but we shall never get prohibition from either one or the other of the parties. Until we make it an ionical in the compared was make it an issue in the campaign we will never get men to push it into Parliament. We don't want men to represent us who will do the best they can for the brewers as well as for Prohibitionists; we want men who will be able to say. 'The liquor men fought my election, and I am here in Parliament to fight for them."

At this stage Mr. Sutherland, M.P. entered the hall and took a seat at Mr. Mackay proceeded to say that he had no personal charge against Mr. Sutherland, but he wished to point out that that gentleman was present when he and others had an interview at Oittawa with the temperance men of the House in order to endeavor to get one of them to move a prohibition resolution. Mr. Charlton, Mr. Patterson, Mr. Coatsworth and others were at the interview. Mr. Coatsworth said: "I am personally a Prohibitionist, but I am here as a Conservative, and I am not going to vote what would virtually be a want of confidence motion in my party." Mr. Mills said that the Privy Council had not decided whether they had the power to pass a prohibition law.

"That," said the speaker, "I have no hesitation in calling a piece of pure pharasaical cant." Mr. Charlton said he was a Reformer and must work and vote for those who returned him to Parliament. could not get a man in the House," shouted Mr. Mackay, "and there is not a man in the House today, Flint in a luded who will move a prohibition cluded, who will move a prohibition resolution in such a way as to get a vote upon it. MR. SUTHERLAND ALL RIGHT,

E. J. Pearson, of Kintore, then spoke in regard to the position of the Patrons. In the course of his remarks he said that while they could say many good things for the representative of North Oxford, yet they had felt that their interests would be better served if they elected someone to carry out their wishes irrespective of party tactics. He did not wish to detract from the credit which was due to Mr. Sutherland, for he had many good qualifications, and he regretted that as the representative of the Patrons he had to place himself in opposition to that

LIVELY ADDRESS. J. L. Lindsay, R. Williamson, Abra-ham Bean' and E. S. Eden were appointed a committee on resolutions, and while they were at work Joseph Rippon mounted the platform.

"There are two sides to every question" were the words with which Mr. Rippon started out. It appeared to him that there was no getting away from the fact that they could not do anything without "party." It would resolve itself into party whichever way they went. What they wanted to find was the way they could work the largest good for the largest commun-

"I always go on the theory," continued Mr. Rippon, "that I will never forsake one until I find another that is going to do me as much good. I don't see why we should turn around and put out one and take in another-one that we have tried for one that we have not tried." These were considerations, he argued, that they should bear in mind. They had heard from speakers that their present representative was a good man, but because he was not as slippery as others they wanted to depose him. "Mr. Sutherland does not argue for prohibition, but he votes for it," said Mr. Rippon, "and he is better than those who argue and don't vote." They must, he pointed out, get a sufficient number to work with them on their lines before they could carry any measure, no matter how honest they were. "We want unity," he continued, "but instead of getting unity I am afraid we are going to split. It would be far better for us to stop where we are or it will get worse." He did not think that meeting was a fair representation be-cause the Prohibitionists had not been

been a want of attention in calling the parties together. He himself had not been notified as well as others that he

Mr. Rippon's next words caused a hubbub and brought his speech to an end, "I am not sure," said he, "that the best Patron you can get can do as much as Mr. Sutherland. The very best man you can get out of the Patrons today has not got the weight of that finger to him in Parliament." At this there were loud whistles and hisses from the audience and cries of "Put him out" and "Sit down," during which Mr. Rippon resumed his seat. Dr. Ross, of Embro, here got off a "Is it a Patron meeting or a

Prohibitionist meeting,' Voices-Both. Dr. Ross-It sounds awfully like a Patron meeting the way we hear the geese hissing. (Cries of Qh! Oh!)
THE PATRON LEADER.

But Dr. Ross had caught a tartar, for the next speaker was Mr. Haycock, the leader of the Patrons in the Local Legislature, a gentleman who showed himself during the last session of Parliament to be master of repartee.

"One gentleman has expressed the opinion," said he, "that this meeting was very much like a Patron meeting because he heard the geese hissing. I want to say to that gentleman that he ought to feel at home in this company." (Laughter.)

Mr. Haycock, the Patron leader, remarked that the Conservative and Reform parties had been successful in keeping the agricultural community fighting against each other while the corporations and manufacturers and that class of people had been reaping the reward of the labor of the agricul-

"What we want to do," asserted the speaker, "is to unite these farmers and send to Parliament men to represent the toiling masses of this country instead of men to work in the interest of party. We have had too much politics altogether."

As Patrons they had, he said, been greatly misunderstood. There were a great many people who imagined that they banded together merely for commercial purposes-for buying cheap sugar and tea and tobacco. If there was a Patron within sound of his voice who went into Patronism with none but mercenary motives, the sooner that Patron went out of the organization the better. It was true, however, that they were banded together for the purpose of fighting combines, but they had no antipathy to or quarrel with the merchants of the country.

The object of the Patrons was to create a better feeling, a more independent spirit among the people of the country. One of the speakers who had preceded him had said they ought to work to do the greatest good for the greatest number, and he thought there was no use for a third party. Taking that first principle in political economy and considering the further fact that the agricultural community of this country and the toiling masses represented 70 per cent of the population and 75 per cent of the wealth, if they were simply going to legislate in the interest of the agricultural community they would still be carrying out that principle. That principle became the stronger when they remembered that on them depended the balance of the community. They knew there was a boodle fund made up of subscriptions from manufacturers, contractors, railway corporations and the liquor monopoly, with the knowledge that they would get their money returned with a good percentage of profit. were kept fighting this class of people would hold the balance of power and do as they liked. The manufacturers and corporations had succeeded in placing between the two parties a cavern of political bigotry too wide and too deep to get over.

"We don't want any turncoats among the Patrons," said Mr. Haycock. "What we want a man to do is to throw away his old coat and put on a new pattern

THE MEMBER'S STRONG POSI-

TION.

Mr. Sutherland. M.P., was then called upon. He had, he said, been honored with an invitation to attend the meeting called to nominate a Prohibition or Patron candidate, or both, as re-presentative for the riding in the coming election. He noticed that the audience was very mixed. There were present a number who were not voters in the north riding at all; there were also a number of Patrons whom none would suspect of belonging to the Prohibitionists, and there were a number of Prohibitionists who would not consider themselves associated at all with the Patrons. He very deeply regretted Dr. Mackay's reference to the Hon. David Mills—a man who stood as high as any man in the country, both in politics and educational matters. When Mr. Mills said that he would vote for the amendment because it was a mat-ter under litigation, everyone knew the gentleman would know that it was a candid and honest opinion of his own, and he was surprised that Dr. Mackay should have accused him of hypocritical or pharisaical cant. He did not think it was right for a man occupy-ing Dr. Mackay's position to get upon a platform and point the finger of a platform and point the finger of scorn at a public man, against whose honesty of purpose even his political opponents had not one word to say.

Dr. Mackay—I did not speak of Hon.
David Mills as a hypocritical cant, but I did say, and I say again, that the plea he put forward was a false plea, and he knew it to be false.

and he knew it to be false.

Mr. Sutherland—To the clerical mind there may be a difference, but we lay people cannot understand how a man, guilty of using pharisaical cant as an argument, can be distinguished from a man who practices pharisaical cant.

ACCUSED OF NO WRONGDOING. Mr. Sutherland also condemned the hissing of Mr. Rippon, than whom, he said, there was not a man in Woodstock who had lived a more honorable and who had lived a history and who had been a more upright life, and who had been a more consistent temperance man. Mr. Haycock had given them a good deal of incock had given the given formation regarding the misdoings of the present Government. He agreed with all that that gentleman said in reference to the same. "But," he asked, "who gave Mr. Haycock that information? Was it not the men who subjected themselves to the bitterest opposition in the House of Commons in position in the House of Commons in their determination to do their duty to their constituents? Have they not ferreted out these things, relying upon the farmers to support them? But what do we find? We find those men opposed by Patron candidates. In constituencies where the Reform vote is large we find the Patrons bringing out Reform-Patron candidates. What is the object? Is it not done to split the vote and will it not have the effect of supporting the very Government that has been guilty of this pushes property. been guilty of this mismanagement? I am far from being a saint, but I will say this, that I have acted according to my conscience and done what I believed to be right. I came here today expecting to hear these gentlemen ac-cuse me of some bad action, of some wrong vote, of opposing some good measure or supporting a wrong one, and I hear nothing of the kind. I say that truth and honesty ought to prevail, and if I am again a candidate for the North Riding of Oxford, I will come before you just as I did sixteen years ago and say what I have to say can-didly on those questions. While I have my faults and weaknesses I will neither be a coward nor hypocrite. (Applause.)

A DISINTERESTED REPRESENTA-

Continuing, Mr. Sutherland said: I agree with Mr. Haycock that the people should unite together to support what they believe to be right in their own interests, but do the farmers of this riding say I have been false to my trust, that I have ever voted for a measure that is against the interests of farmers? Have I not advocated to the best of my ability what I believe to be in their interests? Did I ever go to a man and say, 'come to the con-vention and support me?' It was against my interests to go into political life from the first. It has been against my interests to be in political life, speaking financially and otherwise, while I appreciate the confidence placed in me by my friends and neighbors.

"JUDGE ME BY MY ACTS."

"With regard to the prohibition movement I have little to say," went on the member. 'I find the most prominent Prohibitionists differing as to methods. I never believed in a representative man going to this sect or creed or denomination or class of peo-ple to try and hoodwink them and get elected by any one class of the community. I believe a man should be judged upon his merits—I am perfectly willing to be judged by my acts. While a young man in this town, knowing and believing as I do that the evils of intemperance should be checked by certain legislation, I threw my influence in the town council to bylaw to separate the sale of liquors from other goods. But I don't find my Prohibitionist friends giving me any credit for that.

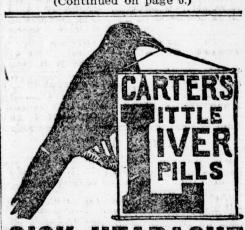

In those days a man who opposed the liquor trade had an unenviable position. Where were some of those, then, who, now it is fashionable to advocate prohibition, talk loudly? I made no bledge in regard to this when I went to Parliament, except that I promised to use my best judgment and conscientiously vote according to my convic-When the question came up in the House I voted on the side of tem-perance and prohibition. I did not come back and brag about it. If I have erred at all, it has been on the side of temperance. No person can point to a single vote in the House that I gave in opposition to that. "I have always advocated the separation or church and state, and I still think so. We find some of our clergymen, for instance, throwing obstacles in the way of a settlement of the National school question. It is not right that because a man holds a public position his people should be turned against him by misrepresentation and falsehood.

Dr. Mackay-What is the misrepresentation and falsehood?

Mr. Sutherland—I was speaking generally. All statements made about public men should be true. JUDGE THE LIBERAL PARTY BY ITS RECORD.

"We have a leader who is worthy to be the successor of the Liberal leaders in the past—a broad-minded man worthy of the confidence and support of the people of this county. Reformers of Oxford should look over the history of the Liberal party and consider the reforms that have been brought (Continued on page 5.)

HYMAN'S TEAM WINS AGAIN. Chicago, July 30.—Chas. S. Hyman's Canadian eleven scored another victory on the cricket field today, the de-feated team being from the Wanderers' club, on whose ground the game was played. The game on both sides was better than yesterday's. The teams were more evenly matched and stronger at the bat and in the field. Laing's superb batting, 51 and not out, was the crowning feature of the contest, and it can be said to his credit that he pulled victory from apparent defeat for his team by his clever handling of the bat. He made a specialty of leg hits to the boundary lines. The score was 161 to 159, but the Canadian record could have been made much bigger but for the agreement to stop playing at 6 o'clock if no more runs were needed to win. The field work of both teams was snappy at critical moments. Two of the Wanderers-Bradley and Lennon—were strong at the bat, securing 30 each. The weather was cold and raw, but the attendance was large. Tomorrow the Canadians play the St. George eleven. Score:

The Circus Here.

Barnum and Bailey's Great Show Draws Thousands.

The Erection of the Tents a Systematic Marvel.

The Process Described-A Magnificent Pageant.

Four special trains, bearing the vans and wagons, tents, horses, elephants and circus paraphernalia, of the Barn-um & Baily Greatest Show on Earth, arrived here shortly after midnight.

There was a crowd of people at the railroad yards to see the cars unloaded, and throngs of curious citizens followed the wagons to the circus grounds to see the tents put up. It is a sight well worth seeing, too. The great ex-panse of canvas which forms the circus proper, covers nearly four and a half acres of ground. Its seating capacity is nearly 17,000 persons, and there is no other single tent in the world to compare with it in size. The army Williamson, b Goldingham..... 12 beavers, and within an hour and a half Extras..... 10 there arises a city of tents, covered with gaudily lettered banners of all the colors of the rainbow. By 9 o'clock everything was completed and the circus people ready to receive visitors.

The musical director of the big show this season, at last, is Prof. Carl Clare, and his military band of 50 pieces led the parade through the streets. Fol-Icwing the band came a corterie of gentlemen riders costumed as fox hunt-section, and another band of twenty musicians is seen and heard. The horses drawing this chariot are concededly the finest ten-horse matched team in the world. Then are seen the open animal dens. There are cages of lions, leopards, hyenas, wolves, cougars, pumas, panthers, royal Bengal tigers, and grizzly bears, each with trainers. The magnificent band chariot "Euterpe," with another band, comes next. In advance of a corps of lady riders of the Hippodrome, all richly costumed and mounted upon the finest horses. Hippodrome riders, standing riders, chariot drivers, both ladies and gentlemen, monster elephants carrying howdahs, in which are seen genuine native Burmese and Slamese, tab-leaux chariots, representing nursery rhymes, a caravan of twelve educated performing elephants, a group of camels and dromedaries, etc. Another por-tion of the parade is devoted to tableaux wagons, upon which are representatives of China, Japan, India, Africa, Algeria, Morocco, Spain, Portugal, France, Germany, Belgium, and other nations, each preceded by riders dressed to represent the monarchs of each country, and body-guard of soldiery, correctly uniformed. The "greatest show on earth" was in the city today, and the greatest crowd in years was here to see it. As mentioned in the morning edition, it arrived in the Grand Trunk yard shortly after midnight. With the peep of day 866 men and 550 horses began the work of unloading the 68 cars and transporting the paraphernalia to the show grounds—a mile and a half away, over the hill on Richmond street at Cheap-

The animal vans, tent wagons and tableaux floats are all transported from place to place upon flat cars of unusual size. These carry from three to five of the wagons. There is a tramway running the full length of the trains, and on this the wagons are run. The openings between the cars are covered with Iron plates, so that a wagon at one end of the train may be wheeled its entire length and unloaded at either end. As fast as they were unloaded they were taken by the drivers with their teams of splendid horses and hauled to the grounds. The elephant cars are built like furniture freight cars, except that they are very much larger. The elephants, of which there are 24 big fellows, carried with the show, each have a box stall. When the doors were opened there was a chorus of delighted shrieks and trumpetings from the great beasts, and they seemed glad to be able to see daylight once more. A huge gangplank was run up to the car doors and then the biggest elephant in the herd was loosed. He tested the platform very carefully, first with one foot and then with another, and finally backed down it to the ground. He trumpeted his indorsement of its stability to the others in the car, and one by one they emerged in similar manner. When the entire 24 were unloaded and ranged up in line like a company of soldiers, they marched off in columns of twos, with military solemnity and precision. The tents are located by the boss canvas man, and in a short time a marvelous transformation scene takes

First comes the driving of the stakes, no slight task, since each stake is four or five feet in length. There are over a thousand of these stakes to be driven, which means two hundred and fifty each gang places the stake, taps it two or three blows to make it stand alone, and then, with a nod, signals the gang to begin striking. The seven men stand in a circle around the stake, their sledges ready. Each man swings his sledge through a full circle, the heavy hammers coming down on the iron head of the stake in regular and rapid succession. Each man strikes about one succession. Each man strikes about one blow a second, so that the stake receives seven blows a second. So skill ful are the men that they never mis a blow, never interfere with each other and never vary from the measure set

Poles are erected and the canvas spread, after which the wild beasts are domiciled. As soon as the menagerie tent is ready, the cages are drawn inside and set in a close circle. There is a place for each, and no variation occurs from day to day in the way they are placed. All are heavy, some of them weighing five or six tons, and as they stand close together, end to end, it is impossible to use horses in placing them; and as many as twenty men would perform the task only with diffi-culty. An easy method has been found by setting the big elephant "Babe" to push the wagons into place. Three men, with "Babe's" assistance, accomp-lish the whole business in half an hour, and "Babe" seems to greatly enjoy her part of it, using for the work the upper part of her trunk.

By 8 o'clock everything was ready for the performance, and between 800 and 900 men had breakfast in the hotel tent. At 9 the parade started. The procession was over a mile in length, and when the steam piano, which brought up the rear, was at he intersection of Richmond street and Park avenue, the front portion of the parade had wound its way down Maple street, through Talbot, and was passing Park avenue again on Dundas street.

Farmers for miles around ceased their work although at their busiest season and came to town. Whole families were trooping down town between 7 and 8 o'clock to wait in the cold for the show, and then to follow it up to the grounds and witness the free side show.

The mode of death chosen was drowning, and the demented victim only succeeded in accomplishing her object after a fierce struggle with her daughter, who was no match for her in strength, who also had with her her infant

The unfortunate was Mrs. Ann Canly allotted term of human life. Advancing years had impaired her intellect and dimmed her powers of reasoning, and once or twice of late she has wandered away for periods of twelve and ten hours. The last time she was found three miles away from The woman lived with her son, Jeremiah Cannom, and her married daughter, Mrs. Baynell, a short distance east of the Meadow Lily Mills, and near the bridge crossing the Thames at the Hamilton road. The farm abuts the river.

A STRUGGLE WITH A MANIAC. Yesterday morning the two men went to work as usual and left Mrs. Baynell alone with her babe and her mother. Mrs. Bagnell is a very little woman and weak, while her mother was very strong for her age. "I want to go out," the old woman said to the younger. The latter had been frightened by her mother's recent wanderings, and told her emphatically that she must remain in.

But the old woman would insist on going, and struggled hard. The little woman saw the light of madness in her eyes, and fought until her strength gave out, when the elderly one ran out into the yard. Snatching up ner six-months-old child, Mrs. Bagnell followed, entreating her mother to return. Horrified she saw her turn towards the river, but with all her inward dread she did not believe that the mother would make away with herself. A barb wire fence was in the way, and

This the daughter saw with sinking heart, and in her terror she screamed for aid. The mother was at the water by this time, and wading out while the frail woman in the field cried and entreated and screamed.

Suddenly, when the water reached her knees, the woman turned. A gleam of hope flashed through the younger one's breast. She was coming back! Then she knelt down in the water, and the daughter's prayers again mingled with her screams. Her terror chained her

Slowly she began to retreat towards the bank on her hands and knees, and again the daughter's spirits rose and she went forward to assist her. But the old woman was merely groping for a deeper spot to cover her head, and as she realized that she was nearing the bank again she turned away, and headed for the middle of the Thames. And once again the little woman's hopes were shattered. She knew the time for action had come, and she again in desperation she rushed from the spot to summon help. A couple of hundred yards down the stream was a lone fisherman. He heard the screams about the same time as did Eugene Carroll, who lives on the other side of the road. Mrs. Bagnell met Carroll and told him of her mother's predicament, but when he got to the river the water had closed over the head of the suicide. She was quite dead when recovered, some time afterwards, down the stream a little way, in about four feet of water.

The jury returned the customary verdict. Dr. Flock presided. Mr. Obadiah Cannom, Covent Garden Market, is a step-son of deceased. Mrs. Bagnell is prostrated by the horrible scenes of

It is true the Prohibitionists say that the position of the Liberal party is not satisfactory on the prohibition question. And yet you are asked to throw your present member overboard and join a party that does not actually refer to prohibition. I can adopt and stand before any audience in the county of Oxford either the Patron or the Liberal platform, for there is no im-portant or material difference in them on Dominion questions.

"The whole question, therefore, for you to consider." said Mr. Sutherland, in conclusion, "is as to whether there is an endeavor to try and hoodwink the electors, to create a division in the Liberal party-to try and make them think that they are uniting to advance a certain reform when they are really not doing so." (Applause.)

Dr. Mackay—I would like to explain in answer to Mr. Sutherland that in Manitoba, the Northwest, Quebec and New Proposition of the Patrons have de-New Brunswick the Patrons have de-clared themselves for prohibition, and Ontario is going that way as fast as their constitution permits them to. In Oxford nine-tenths of the farmers and Patrons are prohibitionists.

STRAIGHT AT MR. HAYCOCK.

Someone called for Dr. Ross, of Embro, and amid cries of "sit down" and "let him speak," the doctor mounted the platform. He made straight for Mr. Haycock, and exclaimed:

"Are you prepared to vote against your party in favor of prohibition?"
"Patrons are allowed to vote as they see fit on any question outside that of Patronism," replied Mr. Haycock.
Continuing, Dr. Ross said: "Would Mr. Haycock dare vote for prohibition unless his unless his masters. Mallory & Co., gave him permission? I came here to support Mr. McDonald, but since hearing the gush of Mr. Haycock I will refuse to be coerced by an irresponsible party. Patronism is little more than Jesuitism." (Cries of "Time" and Nothing daunted, the doctor continued: 'I hope that if Mr. McDonald is elected to Parliament he will hisses.) show himself to be a better politician than Mr. Haycock has." Amid laughter. Dr. Ross shouted: "Don't be deceived by this modern Jesuitism. Put Particulars have reached the city of this unclean thing away from your midst." A STORM OF OPPOSITION.

The report of the committee on resolutions was called for. The secretary read a resolution con-demning the present member's attitude in the House on the last prohibition measure, but it raised such a storm of opposition that it was not put to the

Dr. Ross, of Embro, said he had been a life-long Prohibitionist and he had come there that day with the intention of supporting a candidate, but he had heard so much guff, lies and misrepre sentation that he could have nothing to do with them. The resolution before them contained a lie and misrepresentation ingeniously hidden.
Rev. Mr. Pickering remarked that

Dr. Ross had made a serious charge and he thought they ought to have some explanation. Mr. Sutherland in reply said that he had voted against the amendment the same as Mr. Flint and all other Prohibitionists in the House had done. They could see by the temperance pa-pers that all who voted for the amendment voted against prohibition. They had no opportunity of voting on the original motion. Dr. Mackay—I have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Sutherland would have voted for prohibition. Any person who voted against the amendment could have conscientiously voted for prohibition the next moment.

Mr. Sutherland—I can produce the only resolution on prohibition on which a straight vote was taken since I have been a member of the House, and which I supported in the House in 1884. Dr. Mackay replied that this was ancient history and objected to its being read. However, Rev. Mr. Straith unfolded the document handed him by Mr. Sutherland and after scanning it assured the meeting that it contained ample proof that Mr. Sutherland did vote for the measure in 1884. In his brief address which followed. Mr. Straith gave all due honor to Mr.

Sutherland for supporting the measure but claimed that Mr. Sutherland should have voiced the sentiments of the people of Oxford the last time the measure was brought up.
RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED. Two resolutions were then adopted.

The first one expressed shame at "the weak and cowardly conduct of both the political parties at Ottawa in dealing with the question of separate schools," and condemned the "general extravagance and corruption of our Dominion Government." The second read as follows::

"Whereas the people of North Oxford, along with their fellow electors throughout the Dominion, have, by an overwhelming majority, demanded pro-

"And, whereas the late vote in Par-liament clearly shows that it is utterly hopeless to expect prohibition through ither of the present political parties; "And whereas in the nature of the case the political parties will continue to ignore the temperance question so long as temperance men will continue to ignore their convictions at the ballot-box, and vote merely for party;

"Therefore we unite as Patrons and Prohibitionists in North Oxford in electing to Parliament a man of character and conviction, who will make the prohibition question an issue in the campaign, and who, when elected, will press this question in Parliament and demand its settlement, regardless of fealty to party. And with this conviction we do now nominate Mr. Hugh McDonald as our standard-bearer in the coming campaign."

It should be stated that only about half of those present voted on the resolution. Mr. McDonald briefly stated his views. He favored tariff for revenue only, and thought Manitoba should not have forced upon her any school system not wanted by the people. He thought Liberals were just as bad as Conservatives, and he pitched into Sir Oliver Mowat. The meeting was then brought to a close abruptly.

The Sting Within. It is said there is a rankling thorn in every heart, and yet that none would exchange their own for that of another. Be that as it may, the sting arising from the heart of a corn is real enough, and in this land of tight boots a very common complaint also. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor is a never-failing remedy for this kind of heartache, as you can easily prove if afflicted. Cheap, sure, painless. Try the genuine and use at home with him. Goldingham is an-which he varies with great judgment.

Wadsworth, the youngest man of the team, displayed excellent form with the ball, bowling fairly fast and having plenty of resource. Grew is a slow, deceptive bowler, with an excellent break from leg. He has the record for getting men stumped out in Canada, and yesterday he lured two of the best local men to this fate. At the bat the visitors nearry all performed well, playing good, aggressive cricket.

Goldingham used his neight to great advantage. The game put up by Laing delighted the spectators. He plays everything hard. Terry kept wicket in excellent form, and showed himself to be far ahead of any chicago stumper.

Though he did not stay long at the bat, he hit with great freedom, and, while he was in, the fielders had no cause to complain or idleness. Wadsworth hit freely during his stay, but he is not by any means a safe bat. Collins towered above all his comrades.

He weighs in the neighborhood of 280 pounds, and his speed is of the ice-wagon order. He was, unfortunately, run out, and did not give the spectators

a chance to see his tremendous hitting powers, for which he is celebrated throughout the Dominion. He will surely be heard from auring the week. Boy's proved himself a careful cricket-but otherwise played well and is a useful man on any team. Walker is a man of medium height, and plays left-hand-

Capt. Hyman generously placed himself in last, though his ability as a bat would merit a much higher position in the list. Taken altogether, the Can-adians constitute a powerful batting team, and the local clubs that are to meet them have a busy time in store. In the field the visitors played a snappy game, making fine stops and returning the ball smartly to the wicket."

The Times-Herald says: "The Cana-

Harry B. Wilkins, a printer, well known in London, died last night at the City Hospital. He was a native of this city, and left about four years ago for Columbus, Ohio, to work at his trade. There he contracted consumption, and becoming too ill to follow his vocation, returned to London a few months ago. The local typographical union proposed sending him to the printers' home at Colorado Springs, but it was feared he could not endure the journey. He suffered lately from hemorrhages, and an attack on Tuesday night caused immediate death. Mr. Wilkins was only 33 years of age and unmarried.

He Did Not Propose to Become a Municipal Council-The Work to Proceed. (Special to the "Advertiser.") Toronto, July 31.—The City of London won today in the application made by Mr. B. C. McCann for an injunction to restrain the city from giving the contract for street paving to the Barber Asphalt Company, Justice Rose in the Court of Common Pleas holding that without evidence of fraud he could not Chicago Papers Speak Highly of the interfere with the City Council in the exercise of its discretion in the awarding of contracts.

Mr. G. F. Shepley, Q.C., of Toronto, appeared for the plaintiff, while Mr. T. G. Meredith appeared for the city. The argument was by no means long The Chicago papers devote much continued. Mr. Shepley opened the case,

In Laing they have the best bowler in Canada. He is fully six feet in height, and of powerful build. Bowling with a high delivery, he sends in the hell with terrific speed.

Justice Rose stated that he did not think it was his duty to become a municipal council and so exercise the council's discretion in awarding the contract. In the absence of authority giving him jurisdiction, he felt that he had no jurisdiction to exercise that discretion or to review the City Council's exercise of their discretion. If it were a case of fraud which was asked to be restrained by the court the case would be different, but unless there were evidences of fraud he could not see how he had any authority or right to interfere with the bona fide exercise of the discretion of the Municipal Council in the performance of the duties imposed on them. Mr. Meredith argued that there was no allegation, much less evidence, of fraud, and he read from Mr. McCann's deposition passages going to show there was no fraud, but simply prejudice, charged against the City Council.

Mr. Shepley did not argue the existence of fraud, and it was agreed to let the matter stand over for an hour or two until he could make sure as to this point. After taking time to look into the matter, Mr. Shepley announced that although he did contend that the City Council had shown bad judg-ment, he did not allege fraud or corruption, and the injunction was accordingly refused.

The above verdict was no surprise to the mayor, aldermen or city officials, but they were gratified to think that the paving could now be proceeded with and the street railway operations be

The Secret Out.

"It was frightful, but I did not know how frightful till I come to think. Then I almost gave way to my terror and agitation, and when that scream came down from upstairs-

She stopped; they did not wonder; at such a horrible experience who would not shudder?

Her husband for the first time realzed all she had been through, and he reached out his hand in sympathy, although there was yet much to be explained before he could feel reconciled to a past so full of mysteries and sha-

"And how?" asked the detective, with nothing but formal respect on his part, "was the body disposed of? When pext we hear of it, it was in the keeping of a Dr. Molesworth, who, as we have been informed, was not one of your wedding guests."

Mrs. Cameron did not flinch. She looked, if anything, more winning and candid than before. 'Dr. Molesworth was the man who had expected to marry her. He had gone to the hotel for that purpose, and had not found her; so he came where he suspected her to be. He was not one of my guests, but that did not keep him from the house. He came in at the front door and stood in the hall, and I happened to see him, and immediately knew what he was after. So I rose and went out-I was then receiving congratulations-and accosting him without delay, told him that the person he wanted was in my room and bade him go upstairs and I would follow. For I not only saw that he was in a state of feeling that bordered on frenzy, but I also saw that if the matter was to be hushed up and the body got out of the house without disturbance, he was the man to do it; and I relied on him and went up after him and explained what had occurred and showed nim the dead body of his bride, asked for help and got it. I don't know that I should call it help now," she added in a low voice, "for it might have been better for me if I had called the whole house to see that dead girl.

and so escaped the days and weeks of deceit that have pressed upon me

She acknowledged that she had. "You must have seen that Dr. Molesworth testified to having found the girl on a stoop in Twenty-second street?"
"Yes, sir. It was agreed between us that he should tell some such story as that. It seemed wisest to us at the Since she had killed herself it would not hurt her and it would relieve me from endless complication, to have it thought she had committed the deed in the street. So we thought then; with how little judgment let this moment itself testify."

The detective fixed his eyes upon her and opened his lips to put another difficult to say what was in his mind, and turned it into the simple suggestion, "You must have known Dr. Molesworth well, Mrs. Cameron?"

A flush, hot and vivid, answered him from the doctor's face, but her cheek did not alter, and it was with much composure that she said:

"I had learned much of his disposttion from my conversations with the woman he expected to marry. As for his face, I had seen him at Mrs. Olney's, where I have been more than once. I had even had some talk with him. It was the situation which made us friends at once."

"I understand," asserted Mr. Gryce, but his looks did not bear out his words. "Your conduct is not so unexplicable," he went on; "women think much of appearances and are not apt to weigh the consequences of their impulsive efforts to preserve them. But a man usually halts long before he enters into a scheme that must end in perjury; and Dr. Molesworth committed perjury, Mrs. Cameron.'

She dropped her chin upon her breast and the presence of a growing dread began to show itself in her face.

"Not only that," the detective continued. "He engaged to do a fearful thing when he promised you to get a dead body out of the house alone and without discovery. Have you thought how much nerve and determination it would require? What self-sacrificing devotion it would need to lead a man not only to take the risk of such an act, but to subject himself to the horrors of it? I find it difficult to reconcile what I have seen of Dr. Molesworth with such devotion to a lady so little known to him. I would sooner think-" He paused; she looked at him breathlessly "that he had his own reasons for keeping the matter quiet," he pointedly added.

"Perhaps he had," she simply replied. cannot tell all that passed in his mind. I can only tell you what we portunity to ask him." "And do you think he will tell me?" "No," she returned boldly; "not while he doubts whether I have spoken of the matter or not. He has too chivalrous ideas of duty.

"What, when his life is at stake?" "His life!" was on the point of being arrested for murder when this testimony of Celia's came in. "I suspected it, or rather I knew that he was under the surveillance of the police, for he told us so in an interview he had with the doctor about a case of his." And you were going to allow him to go to prison upon a charge you knew was pertfectly unfounded?" "Mr. Gryce, I was but two weeks married. I knew my husband hated deceit, and I lacked the courage to acknowledge that I had become entangled in it. Then I trusted to Dr. Molesworth discovering a way out of his difficulty, and was so sure that he would, I never even thought of his being in any danger of his life. It is also only fair to myself to say, that had he been brought to trial I should have relentlessly sacrificed myself. It was my hope that he would not, which kept me silent so long." She was pleading her cause well and vet her shadowed brow and paling lip showed she was conscious that it was a failing one, and that the doom she had so long dreaded was rushing upon her.

"I accept your explanations," quoth the detective, "and it only remains at present for you to inform us where Miss Farley got the drug with which she poisoned herself." "I cannot tell you that," came in fainter tones from Mrs. Cameron's "Was it from her bag, her pocket, or the folds of her dress, that she took the phial which held it?" Genevieve miserably shook her head. Mr. Gryce looked troubled; he hesitated a little, then suggested kindly, Genevieve faintly acquiesced. "And did not see where she took it from?' "I cannot answer."

You saw her carry it to her lips?"

Dr. Cameron strode one step and stood beside his wife. "Why cannot you answer?" he asked gently.

she felt for a chair "Becauseand sat down. "Because you will not believe what I say."

"I will not believe what you say? She turned her syes, which had been fixed upon vacancy, on his face. There was unfathomable love in them, but there was unfathomable despair also. "I think you would," said she, "and yet it is very incredible."

"The true things are often the incredible," observed he. She smiled, but in a hopeless sort of way, and in an altered tone murmured:

"Very well, then; she got it out of a "A box she carried?"

"No; one she found in the room." (To be continued.)

A neighbor advised me to try Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, stating that his wife had used it for a throat trouble with the best results. Acting on this advice. I procured the medicine, and less than a half-bottle cured me; I certainly believe it saved my life. Aged Henry Smith Survived the Insect's Attack Only a Short Time.

Paterson, N. J., July 30. - Henry Smith, aged 72, a retired painter living in the village of Haledon, was crossing the lawn adjoining his house on Sunday night toward a windmill, which he was going to stop, when a wasp stung him on the left hand. He suffered severely from the pain, and called out to his nephew, asking what he should do for relief.

The young man told him to apply a handful of wet earth. Smith did so, and started back towards the house, holding the mud to his injured hand. As he reached the house he tottered and fell into the arms of his nephew. Before medical aid reached the house Smith was dead. Dr. T. Y. Kinne, of this city, who was called, says the wasp's sting penetrated a nerve that communicated directly with the brain.

The north-bound Empire State Express, which is one of them, runs the entire distance at 50 3-4 miles per hour, including stoppages, or 52 1-2 miles per hour excluding them. Our West Coast Scotch Express achieves respectively only 47 and 51 miles per hour between Edinburgh and London, which is just 400 miles. ### A DIAMOND ROBBERY.

The Experience of Mrs. Phil McLeod, of London, and Her Friend.

Mrs. Murray Finds $1,200 Worth of Her Sparklers Missing—Had Lots of Them.

Detroit News, Tuesday: There was a great scurrying of detectives at police headquarters this morning over the story of a diamond robbery laid before Capt. Baker by a young woman who claims to be a daughter-in-law of ex-Superintendent of Police Murray, of New York, but who is registered at the Hotel Normandie as Mrs. Williams, of Mount Clemens.

Mrs. Murray, or Williams, was accompanied by Mrs. P. H. McLeod, of London, Ont., the wife of Phil Mc-Leod, whose millionaire father died lately in Woodstock, and who is following the races.

It appears that the two women, accompanied by Jack McAuliffe, the pugilist, and other friends, have been having a gay time in Mount Clemens. Yesterday they came to the Windsor races, and last evening the whole party crossed over to Detroit.

This morning, Mrs. Murray, otherwise Williams, took an inventory of her nu-merous diamond rings and other jewels, and was shocked to find about $1, 200 worth of the sparklers missing. After breakfast she paid a visit with Mrs.
McLeod to police headquarters, where the detectives were dazzled by their lavish display of diamonds, the two wearing about $4,000 worth in their ears and on their fingers. Capt. Baker's men got a description of the supposed thief and sent a dozen detectives out in various directions. A flashily dressed young man was nabbed in front of the Hotel Ste. Claire, and brought to police headquarters, but Mrs. Murray, otherwise Williams, said he wasn't the
