Into Polar Regions After Two Murderers

(Canadian Press Despatch) Halifax, N. S., July 3.—To carry British justice into Arctic wilds, Inspector Baytes, R.N.W.M.P., is now in Halifax fitting out an expedition that will spend at least two years in the frozen north and will traverse thousands of miles within the Arctic circle in order to bring the Eskimo murders of Radford and Street, the two missing explorers, to trial. Baytes and three others will leave Halifax in the course of a few days. From here they will go in the auxiliary schooner Village Belle, once the Queen of the Cape Horn sealing fleet, to Baker Lake, at the head of Chesterfield Inlet, the farthest navigable point they can reach, and from there they will start on their search for the missing men. The Village Belle will take provisions for over two years, and will winter in Port Churchill awaiting the return of the policemen.

Sunshine vs. Drink

Lady Somerset Has Solved a Big Problem

English Nobleman's Farm at Duxhurst has Proof That Inebriates When Taken to the Country and Given Healthful Work Under Good Conditions Can Put Away Slavery to Alcohol

One of the great reform works in England, confined to women alone, but the principle of which equally applies to men, is being conducted by Lady Henry Somerset at the little village of Duxhurst. It is the reclaiming of women lost in the desolation of woe brought on by strong drink. The most disgusting and revolting sight on earth, Lady Somerset thinks, is a woman drunk. In her dissolute being, humanity seems to have sunk to its lowest. A man, drunk, is bestial. A woman, by so far as she rises above man in her dimer hours, sinks, when she is drunk, so far beneath him in her depravity.

Only the eye of faith could have seen, as did Lady Henry Somerset, the possibility of redeeming those lives from destruction. Hundreds of rosy, healthy, happy, respectable English women are shedding abroad the light they gained from Lady Somerset's village at Duxhurst, who once had sunk to the sex's lowest depths of depravity.

Fifteen years ago Lady Somerset advanced the novel idea that addiction to intoxicants had a physical cause. Up to 1899 cases of drunkenness were considered by the English penal authorities moral delinquencies. The work houses were filled with cases of women who came, were discharged, came again and again. Law was powerless to secure their reformation.

Prison was a recognized failure. The authorities began to take cognizance of the argument that the drink habit might have a physical basis as well as a moral basis. Then it was that Duxhurst, the Somerset country village, was opened. Since that time hundreds of women have been reclaimed to society through it. Hundreds have returned to its picturesque rural lanes and cottages years after showing every indication of prosperity and sobriety.

There are two or three cardinal principles connected with Lady Somerset's village life to which she attributes the success of its 15 years. In the first place, complete isolation from the scenes of their former conflicts and failure she considers essential. Then she believes that an occupation as widely removed from the patient's former occupation as possible is less likely, from the power of association, to bring back the memory of the former struggle and the former falls. She firmly believes that outdoor gardening is a great reclaiming agent. The open air, the results of labor so sure, the beauties that gradually dawn to those who work in gardens among flowers seldom fail to turn the thoughts of the most depraved to higher, better things. There is a dairy where the women make delicious butter, a laundry where they wash the snowy linen of the institution, rooms where they weave and make lace.

"Institution" is hardly a fair name, either. There is nothing institutional about it. There is no big building, divided into wards, with guards and sentinels; there are no high spiked fences, no sentinels, no punishments. There is nothing to suggest an institution. The aim has been to restore to the normal, lives that have become abnormal. To this end, there are a number of picturesque English cottages, vine-covered and attractive in a beautiful English setting, amid the hedgerows and the exquisitely green turf. In each cottage is a motherly cottage sister, who looks after those beneath her roof.

The normal life and the pleasant occupations really have accomplished what prisons have failed to do. Some of the women are taking care of domestic animals. What the gardens have done for others the care of the pets has done for them. Women are by nature protectors of the weak. Many who have gone to Duxhurst with their tender instincts almost crushed under have been restored to their own better selves, their natural feelings of tenderness being reawakened by the dependency of the animals under their care.

Government Fruit Commissioner Interviewed

(Middleton Outlook, July 3.)

We were pleased to have a call on Monday from Donald Johnson, Fruit Commissioner of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa who was spending a few days in Middleton, the seat of Fruit Inspector Vroom.

This was Mr. Johnson's first visit to the Annapolis Valley and he came to learn first hand the extent of the reported frost damage to the Nova Scotia apple crop. He also came to attend the annual meeting of the United Fruit Companies of Nova Scotia to make the acquaintance of our fruit growers for the purpose of rendering his office of more service to them.

Inspector Vroom took Mr. Johnson, in his auto as far east as Windsor and west to Annapolis Royal. The Commissioner expressed surprise to find the orchards so well cared for and so thoroughly sprayed. He was also surprised to find so large an orchard area in one fruit district. In comparing the figures he found that while the whole Province of Ontario has but 8,500,000 apples and British Columbia 2,000,000 the Annapolis Valley fruit belt alone has 2,300,000.

On his trip through the Valley Commissioner Johnson, found a fine apple prospect with very little evidence of frost damage on the higher lands, but with his hurried investigation he would not like to express an opinion regarding the crop prospects on the lower lands, indeed until near the end of this month the July drop it would not be safe to speak with certainty.

The Annapolis Valley reminds Mr. Johnson much of the Niagara fruit district. In the latter district the fruit growers do not depend exclusively upon apple growing as they did formerly. They have gone into small fruit and vegetable growing so that in the off years in the orchard the farmer is not wholly without revenue. The conditions seem so similar here that the example of Niagara farmers might be followed with advantage.

Asked regarding apple market prospects Commissioner Johnson, said his advice were that a succession of frosts had almost ruined the crop in the British Isles and the yield would probably be the smallest in 25 years. From the north western states of the United States the early reports promised a larger yield than last season, but later news stated that the drop was heavy and the yield would probably be lighter than last year.

Should these predictions be fulfilled New York and Ontario apples may go west this season and the Nova Scotia crop go into the English market with little competition and at good prices. As but a third of the apples trees in Canada are yet bearing the question of new markets is one that should have attention. Hitherto we have had practically but one market, that of Great Britain. But the German and other European markets are deserving of more attention as is the Australian and South American markets. Already this year over 100,000 bushel boxes of British Columbia apples have been sold in Australia and the Nova Scotia fruit growers have an equal opportunity in this market.

Mr. Johnson was also pleased to see the start already made in co-operation in the Valley. Co-operation revolutionized the fruit industry in California, Washington and Oregon and it should prove equally beneficial in Nova Scotia. A few months ago Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture raised the fruit department which had been a subordinate branch of the Dairy division to an independent division and placed Mr. Johnson at its head. The impression of those who met Mr. Johnson here was that Mr. Burrell has made a good selection in his fruit commissioner.

Minard's Liniment Co., Limited. Gentlemen,—Last August my horse was badly cut in eleven places by a barbed wire fence. Three of the cuts, (small ones) healed soon, but the others became foul and rotten, and though I tried many kinds of medicine they had no beneficial results. At last a doctor advised me to use MINARD'S LINIMENT and in four weeks' time every sore was healed and the hair had grown over each one in fine condition. The Liniment is certainly wonderful in its working.

Storstad Officer Blamed for Empress of Ireland Disaster

Storstad Officer Disobeyed Orders In Remaining in Charge When Fog Shut In

Quebec, July 11.—The whole blame for the disaster to the Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence on May 28, when the O.P.R. liner sank after being rammed by the collier Storstad with 1,014 souls on board, was placed upon the shoulders of Alfred Tuftenes, the first officer of the Storstad, by the Dominion Wreck Commission, which investigated the disaster, and which delivered its findings in the court house here today. The commission found that Tuftenes was wrong and negligent in changing the course of his vessel in a fog. Captain Kendall, of the C. P. R. liner, was blameless, and his actions up to and after the disaster approved of by the commissioners.

The report further argued that the accident was not caused by special characteristics in the St. Lawrence River route, and might have happened under similar circumstances in any other river. An interesting part of the report were the suggestions made for safeguarding life at sea in future. It was found that port holes were open, and that the vessel sank so rapidly that watertight doors could not be closed and it was proposed that in future all port holes, and as many watertight doors as possible, be closed in a fog. The use of rafts that would float away when a vessel went down, and a change in the system of taking on pilots at Father Point, were also suggested.

The court room was again crowded by Quebec people, and many Canadians and Americans now on a visit to the city. The dramatic touch lent to the enquiry at which Captain Kendall and the officers and men who had escaped from the vessel were present, were lacking, as they had returned to England. Mr Tuftenes was also absent, but Captain Anderson, of the Storstad and his wife, were in the court room.

The report of the Royal Commission of the sinking of the Empress of Ireland was read by Lord Mersey this morning. Taking up the question of blame, the report says: "We think that Captain Kendall would have been better advised if he had given the Storstad a wider berth, so as to have passed the Storstad at a greater distance on his beam, than he originally intended. We do not think however, that his stopping which was really done for greater caution, can be said to have been an unseamanlike act, nor do we consider his failure to give the wider berth as a contributory cause of the disaster."

PORTING THE HELM

Dealing with the porting of the Storstad helm the report says the Commission is unable to accept the view that it was done to counteract the effect of a current and as an act of prudent navigation. "We are of the opinion" the report proceeds, "that chief officer Tuftenes of the Storstad was negligent in omitting to call the Captain when the fog was coming on. The captain is the man who ought to have been there."

Mr Tuftenes says that he thought there was no danger, anyway it was his duty to obey the order which he had received to call the captain when the fog came on.

"We can come to no other conclusion than that Tuftenes was wrong and negligent in altering his course in the fog as he undoubtedly did and that he was wrong and negligent in keeping the navigation of the vessel in his own hands and in failing to call the captain, when he saw the fog coming on."

The session closed with the remark that the disaster is not to be attributed to any characteristic of the St. Lawrence route. The recommendations of the Commission include the closing of all watertight doors in foggy weather and wherever practically, all watertight doors and port-holes, below the water levels, should be closed at sunset and kept closed until sunrise. Also that rafts be placed on deck in such a position that they will float automatically as the ship sinks.

Provincial Exhibition, Halifax, September 12th to 19th

Departing from the usual custom of opening on Wednesday the Provincial Exhibition will open on Saturday. This change has been made for two reasons, viz., in order to provide a circuit for exhibitors and to accede to the request of the Exhibitors of Live Stock who claim the time their exhibits have been kept at the Fair is too long.

Preparations are now well underway and the prospects for a good fair are assured. Many changes will be made in the Manufacturers' Building and some very interesting exhibits are promised.

In the Agricultural Building the Dominion Experimental Farm will put on an educational and demonstrational exhibit along the lines of Field Husbandry, Chemistry, Botany, Horticulture, Bee-keeping, etc., which should prove interesting to all engaged in Agriculture.

The Fisheries Building has been taken in charge by the Fisheries Committee of the Board of Trade with Mr. F. W. Bissett as Superintendent, and this means a successful show in this industry.

The amusement end will be changed somewhat from the past and the old "Fakirs' Row", so called, will be transformed into a tent show consisting of animal acts, Deep Sea Divers, Motor Drome, Wild West and many other attractions.

The Grand Stand Attractions will be of the very best obtainable, while the Horse Race Programme will be equal to any in the past.

The Evening Show will close with a splendid Fireworks display put on by the reputable firm of the International Fireworks Co., Jersey City.

Had Brilliant Idea but They Were Thwarted

U. S. Citizens Bring Persian Sheep to Canada Only to Find the Custom Forbid.

(Montreal Telegraph, July 4th) After travelling many thousand miles to Persia from the United States and spending over ten thousand dollars in hopes of bringing a flock of Persian sheep to this country to found a Persian lamb farm, three citizens of the United States, were very much disappointed when arriving in Montreal on their way to Texas the eight sheep which they had with them were not allowed by customs authorities to land even for transportation, or to depart to any other country. Messrs. John Abajian, M. K. Maljanian and M. G. Vertanian are the three unfortunate men whose work, which lasted for many months and cost them so much, came to an abrupt end when the sheep were ordered to the butcher's axe yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Abajian related how after many adventurous trips throughout Persia in order to select sheep that were free from disease and that were of the best kind had been made. Thirty of these animals were bought and embarked at Batoum for Hamburg. As neither the captain of the ship nor the authorities made any objection the owners hoped to bring the sheep to Montreal, whence they would transport them to the United States. At Hamburg the expense of keeping the flock was so great that all but eight were sold.

Bridgetown Pastor Weds

WARREN-DYKEMAN

The Baptist church was the scene of a pretty wedding last evening, when Miss Sadie M., daughter of the Rev. A. T. and Mrs. Dykeman, was married to the Rev. Gordon U. Warren, B.A., B.D., pastor of the Baptist Church at Bridgetown, N. S.

Promptly at seven o'clock the bride accompanied by her mother and escorted by the ushers, Messrs. W. S. Rice and H. W. Hicks, two old friends of the family, came up the aisle of the church to the strains of Lohengrin's "Bridal Chorus." At the conclusion of this selection, as the bridal couple were standing beneath the beautiful bridal arch, the choir rose and sang the wedding hymn, "The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden." A very simple, but impressive service was conducted by the Rev. A. T. Dykeman, father of the bride, and the nuptial knot was tied. The organist, Miss Amy Phillips, played Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," as the party were leaving the church.

After the ceremony, a reception was held in the parsonage to which all the church members had been invited.

The bride looked very pretty, dressed in charmeuse silk with overdress of silk-embroidered net. She wore a bridal veil with lilies of the valley and carried a large bouquet of roses, carnations, lily of the valley and asparagus fern. Her travelling costume was of navy blue with blue trimmings and hat to match. The bride's mother wore a dress of black silk with jet trimmings.

The church had been prettily decorated for the occasion. The pulpit had been removed and in its place had been arranged an abundance of cut flowers, and potted plants, with a background of fern and creepers, converting the platform into a veritable bank of flowers. A bridal arch had been made of white lilac, surmounted by a large fern, and beneath was suspended a golden bell.

The presents were very numerous and both useful and costly. The groom's present to the bride was a substantial check, as was also the present from the parents to the bride. The groom presented the ushers each with a pearl stickpin, and the organist with a beautiful gold bracelet. During the evening the Rev. Mr. Warren received several congratulatory telegrams from members of his church at Bridgetown, also one from his associate pastors of the District Quarterly, of which he is secretary.

The bride and the groom are well known throughout the province and have the best wishes of all their friends for a long and happy wedded life. They were classmates at Acadia College and were graduated together. The bride has spent the last two years away from the province. She was principal of a school in Vancouver, resigning that to accept a position on the faculty of the Moulton Ladies College of Toronto, as teacher of science.

Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Warren left on the nine o'clock car for Sydney, where they took the early morning express to spend their honeymoon in Prince Edward Island and points in the province, spending several weeks at Smith's Cove, after which they will make their home in Bridgetown.

The general public even along the line of the D. A. R. do not realize, perhaps, the enormous amount of work and the large expenditures that are being made on the road by the Canadian Pacific. The whole road is being modernized and already at least $2,500,000 have been expended. —Hants Journal.

Strong Pleas For Federal Government Aid

In the Campaign That is Being Waged Against Tuberculosis

(Halifax Chronicle July 14th.)

Strong pleas for Federal Government aid in the campaign against Tuberculosis, and the unanimous expression of opinion that the welfare of the child was the most important phase of the anti-tuberculosis warfare were the features of yesterday's session of the fourteenth annual convention of the Canadian Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis which opened yesterday morning at the Technical College today. Over forty members of the Association representing far points of Canada were present. The morning session was given to the reports from the Provincial Associations, the afternoon session to several remarkably fine addresses and the evening to a big public meeting at which a large audience was in attendance.

DR. KNOPF'S LECTURE

The feature of that meeting was the public lecture, "The Modern Warfare against Tuberculosis as a Disease of the Masses" by Dr. Adolphus Knopf, of New York.

Although Dr. Knopf's address was technical and profound in its analysis of the great problem of combating tuberculosis yet it was presented with a simple eloquence that must have appealed to all present whether lay or medical workers in the campaign against the great white plague.

It was a remarkable presentation of the problem dealing with almost every phase of the question and was not only a valuable contribution to the work of the convention at Halifax, but to the medical profession and the work of the Anti-Tuberculosis campaign wherever it may be read.

Mr. D. Schurman on the Black Fox Industry

Mr. D. Schurman, of Charlottetown, Secretary of the Samsom Silver Black Fox Co., and Mrs Schurman, are in Bridgetown visiting Mr. Hannington, Granville Street East. They will spend "Cherry Sunday" in Bear River and will visit old friends in the Valley. Mr. Schurman is enthusiastic in the fox business, and has unbounded faith in its future. Even when it goes on a pelt basis he believes all companies will pay a good dividend which are not over-capitalized. Furs of all kinds are higher in price today, and in greater demand than ever before, and more millionaires to buy them. The automobiles have increased the demand to a vast extent. Next to big leaves fur was man's first clothing, and the more expensive they become the more he wants them for a covering. Few persons buying stock ever ask about the capitalization. When buying they do not know whether the foxes are valued at ten thousand or thirty thousand dollars per pair. The best foxes are selling at Twelve thousand five hundred per pair and should not be capitalized at over fifteen thousand. Mr Schurman is of the opinion that at no distant time there will be no fur bearing animals in the world except those bred in captivity. Formerly trappers were satisfied with capturing the individual animals for their pelts. Now they are after the mothers and her litter for breeders, and the end is inevitable. Mr Schurman is naturally very much gratified over the success of the "Samsom" this year. In the report given the press so far the "Samsom" heads the list with 120 per cent dividend.

Cash Investment of the Railways During Six Years

During the six fiscal years 1908 to 1913 inclusive, the steam railways of the United States of Class I invested in their road and equipment cash to the amount of $4,010,385,303. Railways of Class I, so designated by the Interstate Commerce Commission, are those with annual operating revenues of over $1,000,000. They include about 90 per cent., of the mileage, receive more than 96 per cent of the revenues, and handle more than 98 per cent. of the traffic.

This cash investment of the operating railways of Class I of the Eastern District during the six years was greater than the amount of capital securities issued by them during this period, and was 19.3 per cent of their capital securities outstanding June 30, 1913; of the railways of the same class of the Southern District it was 21.1 per cent. and of the railways of the same class of the Western District it was 23.6 per cent. of the aggregate of their capital securities outstanding June 30, 1913. That is, the cash actually expended by these railways during the last six years upon their properties used in transportation amounts to more than one-fifth of their total capitalization at the close of the last fiscal year. This is at the rate of $668,397,551 per year.

These figures are obtained through a compilation made by the Bureau Railway Economics from the reports of the railways to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and have not heretofore been collated.

Dogs from Canada

The dogs which Sir Ernest Shackleton will take with him on his Antarctic expedition are a cross between a wolf and a Scotch stag hound, and have been bred in Northern Canada. The lightest of them will turn scale scales at 60 pounds, whereas the heaviest dog with the last Shackleton expedition weighed 35 pounds. They have been selected by the experts of the Hudson Bay Company, and will be under the charge of one of the most experienced drivers from Canada, who was chosen by the commissioners of the Northwest Mounted Police.

The latest appointments to the expedition staff are Sir Philip Lee Brocklehurst, who was with Shackleton in 1907 and 1908 and who made the first ascent of Mount Erebus, and his brother, Lieutenant Courtney Brocklehurst, of the 11th Hussars. Hundreds of applications for positions with the expedition have been received.

Race Poisoning

The liquor question has been looked upon mostly as a moral question until of recent years the great railroads and other employers of labor began to refuse to employ men who drank.

Of late years, however, the great scientists have thrown a light upon it that has stirred the world into great activity and that should cause every lover of his country to shudder at what is ahead of us if we don't wake up.

It began in this way: The great nations began to observe that the recruits to the armies were getting smaller and that an increasing number had to be rejected on account of some bodily infirmity. Royal Commissions were appointed to look into the cause or causes. These Commissions all reported the same thing, that the principal cause of this degeneracy was the drinking habits of the people. The German report ended by saying that if the beer-drinking habits of the people were not reformed "in a few generations there will not be Germans capable of defending the Fatherland." Recently the Commission appointed by President Roosevelt, in the United States said that if this drink question was not settled inside of ten years some more verile race would write the epitaph of this republic. The German Emperor has recently said that the great battles of the future will be won by sober nations.

This is a phase of the question that is not yet fully known—that alcohol is causing degeneracy of the people who use it freely to such an extent as to threaten their extinction. It is now pretty generally conceded that it was whiskey rather than the Japanese that defeated the Russians.

This view of the matter has naturally created great alarm in the old countries and most of the Governments are taking measures to spread the truth by means of hand-bills, posters, lectures and other ways.

That is something that has been neglected by the authorities in this country. Give the people the truth and trust them to protect themselves and their children.

H. ARNOTT, M.B., M.C.P.S.

St. John Exhibition

The dates of the St. John Exhibition are from September 5th to 12th and from reports received from Exhibition Headquarters, this year's Fair promises to be especially interesting. All available space was spoken for and booked remarkably early and several applicants are now on the waiting list in the hope that re-adjustments can be made which will permit of giving them space. The demand has been so great, that not one foot in the main buildings has been sold for the use of anything which is not a bona fide exhibit with the sole exception of food concessions. It is the intention this year to concentrate all the amusements in the Midway and before the Grandstand and to have these on an even better scale than heretofore, so the main buildings being reserved so as to be truly representative of the Manufacturers, Farmers and Business Houses of the Maritime Provinces. From present forecasts the Exhibition will this year reflect in a comprehensive manner the optimism and progressiveness that has taken such strong hold during the last few years of the people in these Provinces.

St. John has a reputation to sustain with regard to its Exhibition and seems determined that the one to be held this year, from September 5th to 16th will maintain this reputation.

The Race War

(The Weekly Witness.)

The Hindus are going to make another attempt to break through the Canadian immigration laws. The next trial is going to be skillfully conducted with the best legal advice. If they win, they will put the Canadian Government in an awkward position. The Hindus who have been spending weeks in captivity on the "Komagata Maru" in the harbor of Vancouver are kept from landing by two separate Canadian enactments. The first of these is an order-in-council passed by the Laurier Government that no immigrants shall be allowed into the country unless coming by uninterrupted journey from the country of their origin. If this breaks down, reliance is placed by the lawyers for the Government on the Borden Order-in-Council, that no laborers shall be allowed entrance into Canada through British Columbia ports over a period which has yet some months to run. If neither of these contentions is successful, the immigration authorities have still some minor contentions which they hope will serve their purpose. With these restrictive measures in force, there seems little chance of the Hindus on the "Komagata Maru" forcing a landing; though they are pushing their case in the courts, and intend to appeal if the decision goes against them, until they get a final decision by the privy council.

A wealthy woman in Calcutta and a leading Parsee of Bombay, named Jamsetjee, have hired a Norwegian steamer to make a continuous cruise from Calcutta, which she left on June 22nd, with four hundred Hindustanee for Canada. The trip so made will overcome the Laurier Order-in-Council, demanding a continuous passage. As all of these four hundred passengers have been carefully selected for physical fitness, each man being free from disease, and provided with the requisite amount of money, and as some, if not all of them, are not laborers, just as some of those on the "Komagata Maru" are not laborers, it appears to be an impossible task to reject them under any of the contemptible subterfuges at present in use for the exclusion of the Asiatic. The attempt will then force the Canadian Government either to abandon its stand or to draw an honest hard and fast race distinction, such as it has never attempted before. If this is a slow ship, as it probably is, she will reach Vancouver some time in the latter half of August, which is before Parliament will be in session. The telegram announcing her departure from Calcutta says that those who have put up the money for the trip intend to organize a Canadian immigration scheme on a large scale if this attempt is successful. What is going to be the end of it all is hard to guess; but the arrival of this ship will mark one of the most important steps in the solution of a great world problem of the aggregation or co-mingling of the types of mankind. It will surely be the part of statesmanship to come to some more dignified attitude towards our fellow-subjects than is denoted by the paltering methods of exclusion now appealed to.

Mechanical Work Promoted by Music

An interesting development in connection with the loud-speaking telephone is its use for distributing music during working hours in factories, warehouses, and other institutions where men are engaged in work of a monotonous character. It has long been known that work requiring mechanical skill without the necessity of mental concentration can be promoted by supplying the workers with some kind of pleasant amusement that will not take the attention from the work, and the loud-speaking telephone appears to make this possible on a scale not thought of heretofore. In some of the factories of Tampa, Florida, the reading of books and periodicals to the workers during working hours has long been an established custom, and in many of the factories expert readers are employed for this purpose. The value of diversion of this kind in promoting work is also recognized in the United States navy, where the practice is to have the band play while the ship is being coaled. Amusement of this kind, however, is not to be confused with the "heave-ho" of workmen and sail-makers laboring in coaling ship, as these are designed simply to secure union of action among the workers. —Popular Mechanics.

A Fellow's Mother

"A fellow's mother," said Fred the wise,
With his rosy cheeks and merry blue eyes,
Knows what to do if a fellow gets hurt
By a thump or bruise, or a fall in the dirt.

"A fellow's mother has bags and strings,
Bags and buttons and lots of things;
No matter how busy she is, she'll stop
To see how well you can spin your top.

"She does not care—not much I mean—
If a fellow's face is not quite clean;
And if your trousers are torn at the knee,
She can put in a patch you'd never see!

"A fellow's mother is never mad,
But only sorry, if you are bad,
And I'll tell you this, if you are only true,
She'll always forgive you, whatever you do.

"A fellow's mean who would never try
To keep the tear from her loving eye,
And the fellow's worse who sees it not
That his mother's the truest friend he's got!"

—Margaret E. Sangster.

King Alfonso and the Circus Giant

Madrid.—King Alfonso took a great interest at a recent circus performance in this city, in a French giant named Eugene Arceau, who is aged 19, stands 9 feet 6 1/2 inches high and weighs 19 stone.

The king sent for the giant to come to the royal box. There he made him hold out his arm horizontally while he himself stood beneath it.

"Why, by the side of you I might be a child," exclaimed King Alfonso. Arceau sleeps sometimes for 36 hours on end, it is stated, and when he awakens finds that he has gained as much as 4 inches in height. Doctors expect him to reach a height of 10 feet by the time he is 25.

An Afternoon at the Lighthouse

(By W. A. Craik)

To most people there is something very fascinating about a lighthouse. Perhaps it attracts attention because it suggests adventures by sea, thrilling stories of wreck and rescue all the aroma that attaches to tales and ships and sailors. Or it may be that it is the element of romance in the lives of the men who tend the light that appeals to the fancy. Whatever it is, there seems always to exist a bond of interest between the traveler on shipboard and the lonely lighthouse on the rocky coast.

Almost everybody must know in a general way something about lighthouses. That they are usually tall buildings of wood, stone or iron erected on some dangerous rock, bearing aloft a light to serve as a guide to mariners during the darkness of night, is matter of common knowledge. Beyond this, however, the acquaintance of most people with the interior, the mechanism and the operation of a lighthouse, is presumably but slight, so that the story of a visit to one of the most important lights on the east coast of Canada should not come amiss.

Travellers who cross that tempestuous corner of the Atlantic which lies between Nova Scotia and the New England coast from Yarmouth to Boston, or who passed around the shore of Nova Scotia from Halifax to St. John, may have observed on a rocky promontory near the mouth of Yarmouth harbor a lofty lighthouse. It is known to sailors as Cape Forechu light, and, apart from certain powerful beacons on the Straits of Belle Isle, it is one of the most modern and powerful lights maintained by the Canadian Government.

Leaving Yarmouth on a small steamer which piles between the town and a summer resort lying near the mouth of the harbor, I was presently landed within a mile or two of the lighthouse, whence I was compelled to complete the journey on foot. Passing around the shore of False Harbor, a treacherous indentation of the sea lying between Cape Forechu and West Cape, the road runs along the base of the great hummock of land that forms the westerly side of the entrance into Yarmouth Harbor. At its extremity this hummock is pared down into a long, narrow finger of rock that runs down under the sea, while just before it equally sheers off, the lighthouse has been erected on the higher ground.

The tower is octagonal in shape, with its sides painted alternately red and white. It stands eighty-one feet high from the base to the tip of the vane above the lantern, while its height from high water mark is 138 feet. In spite of this elevation, Atlantic storms have driven waves right up to the lantern, while it has been no uncommon occurrence in bad weather for the tower to be time and again deluged in spray. Even a temporary examination of the rocks around the lighthouse discloses the effects of the action of the waves upon the granite. The surface of the rock is scored and broken, great pieces are gouged out, and some of it is honey-combed just like a sponge.

The lighthouse-keeper's house stands quite near the outer on the landward side, a neat wooden building, protected at the back by a ridge of rock and in front looking right down into a sheltered corner, where great heaps of stones have been swept by the sea. It was curious to find a plot of grass lying between the lighthouse and the keeper's cottage in it to notice some glorious sweet peas in bloom. This was the only bit of vegetation until one reached the higher ground beyond the cottage.

The keeper was standing at the door of his dwelling when I finally reached the top of the ridge, and when I had explained that I would like to look over the lighthouse, he gladly consented to accompany me. Crossing the open space that intervened between the house and the tower, he opened the door of the latter and led me into the lowest apartment of the lighthouse.

Great wooden beams rose on the sides and in the centre, supporting the upper works. Dozens of large cans of oil in wooden cases stood piled on the far side. The place smelt strongly of oil and paint, but was scrupulously clean. On the left a stairway ascended to the next floor. We climbed up the steps, passed chamber after chamber, each narrower than the one below it, and at last stepped out through an iron trap-door into the base of the lantern. The tower had now narrowed in to perhaps a width of twelve feet. We were still shut in, but just above us the windows of the lantern let in a flood of the afternoon sunlight.

Occupying the centre of the lantern and leaving only a small space between it and the wall was the huge mechanism of the light. One's old notion that the light consisted of a number of oil lamps placed in front of polished reflectors was now entirely shattered. Here was something much more complicated and ingenious than an old-fashioned oil lamp. Inside the enclosed space there was concealed powerful clockworks operated by a heavy weight, the winding up of which formed one of the light keeper's daily tasks. These works turned the entire body of the light, causing those flashes that make the illumination so much more brilliant and effective.

In order to understand the idea better, the lightkeeper led me up still higher. We are now in the very top of the lighthouse. All around were heavy plate glass windows set in solid metal frames. Though very little wind was blowing, there was a steady roar of sound, a noise which is audible even on the stillest day and which becomes positively deafening in a storm. The view from this height was glorious. One could see far out to sea, across a wide expanse of brilliant blue water. Then to eastward lay the entrance of the harbor and beyond it the hills of Yarmouth County, dotted with whitewashed cottages, green fields and woods. Northward stretched the ribbon of the harbor, with its many indentations, and in the distance the houses and towers of the port. Westward one looked across False Harbor to the wooded height of West Cape and on to the waters of the Bay of Fundy.

This was the prospect looking out from the lantern. Inside one's attention was attracted by an enormous glass contrivance that rose from the level of the floor to a height of ten or twelve feet. In general shape it was almost spherical, but bulging out midway between its base and top there were eight big bullseyes. These were formed of a central concrete piece of thick glass about a foot in diameter, with eight concentric rings of glass surrounding it, each lapping over the edge of the other, the last forming a big circle several feet wide. The eight bullseyes were filled in at top and bottom and joined together by other horizontal circles of glass that completed the sphere. The whole contrivance is called a beehive, which is, perhaps, the most expressive name for it that could be devised.

Having seen the beehive, it was easier to grasp the principle of the light. In the centre of this great glass globe a fixed and powerful light is placed. It can be reached from the floor beneath through an opening in the bottom of the hive. When it is lighted and the clockwork set in motion, the bullseyes begin to revolve. If they were stationary, the light would, of course, stream out in eight straight fixed lines, but as they turn, the rays swing round and round in the horizon. The speed of revolution is such, that, to any one standing still within the field of the light, a flash would come every 2½ seconds, or twenty-four flashes to the minute. This involves a complete turn of the beehive every twenty seconds, or three times round in a minute.

The light itself is made from gas generated from oil. It looks precisely like an ordinary mantle burner, though on a much larger scale than those in domestic use. The generator stands in the lower part of the lantern, whence the gas is led up into the light by a pipe. The beehive revolves in mercury, of which a large quantity is required.

It takes three men to watch the light and attend to the other duties connected with the lighthouse. For instance, a most important service is required in keeping the foghorn ready for instant use. Down below the lighthouse stands a group of buildings devoted to this purpose. They contain boilers, in which steam is always up, so that should a fog roll in, as is often the case, the siren may be turned on at once. The horn, like the lantern of the lighthouse, works automatically, and the blare of sound bursts out across the water at regular intervals.

Life at the lighthouse is lonely enough. Though ships pass by at frequent intervals, no vessel stops save the supply boat once a year. In summer visitors often come down from the town; but in winter the keeper and his assistants are practically cut off from the world. They have their exciting times, too, when bad storms rage around the lonely cape and the waves buffet the tower, but the sturdy wooden lighthouse has withstood their attack for seventy-five years and is doubtless good for many more.

The night after my visit to the lighthouse I sailed out of Yarmouth Harbor on a steamer bound for Boston. As darkness crept over the great silent ocean I watched for the first gleam from the tower on Cape Forechu. At last it came a clear, sharp flash, driving straight across the waves. Then out over the heaving waters of the mighty Atlantic flash followed flash with clock-like precision. From the deck of the receding steamship the gradually diminishing sharpness and brilliance of the gleam conveyed a sort of melancholy and protracted farewell. With the passing miles the light became less and less distinct, grew into a wavering effulgence on the horizon and at last died out entirely leaving only stars and sea and the quivering mass of the liner flowing steadily westward.

Such was the light that guards a dangerous corner of Nova Scotia coast. Night after night its rays sweep over the sea as a never-ceasing warning to the mariner. On clear nights it is visible as far away as forty miles, while ordinarily it may be described for forty miles.

Tomorrow the reopening ceremony takes place, commencing at 2:30 p. m., and the service has been timed to coincide with the One Hundredth Anniversary of this Church. In the absence of the Rev. V. E. Harris, Diocesan Secretary, who was to have occupied the pulpit, the preacher will be the Rev. E. Underwood, Rector of Bridgetown. After the service a Lawn Party and old-fashioned tea-meeting will be held near by. Altogether the proceedings promise to be exceedingly pleasant and profitable. The public generally are cordially invited to attend and should the weather prove unfavourable the programme will be carried out the next day.

The Boyer-Vincent Stock Company played a two-night engagement at the Primrose Theatre last week to appreciative audiences. Although the company as an aggregation is a new one on the road, yet a number of the individual performers have played here with other companies. The drama "A Hidden Crime" was played on Friday evening, and "The Hall Breed" on Saturday night. Both plays were well presented, the entire Company gave due justice to all the situations. There were no waits during the play as a series of specialties were put on, all of which were generously enjoyed. The company carries its own scenery.

AFRAID SHE WAS DYING

Suffered Terribly Until She Took "Fruit-a-tives"

ST. JEAN DE MATHA, JAN. 27th, 1914.

"After suffering for a long time with Dyspepsia, I have been cured by 'Fruit-a-tives'. I suffered so much that I would not dare eat for I was afraid of dying. Five years ago, I received samples of 'Fruit-a-tives'. I did not wish to try them for I had little confidence in them but, seeing my husband's anxiety, I decided to do so and at once I felt relief. Then I sent for three boxes and I kept improving until I was cured. While sick, I lost several pounds, but after taking 'Fruit-a-tives', I quickly regained what I had lost. Now I eat, sleep and digest well—in a word, I am completely cured, thanks to 'Fruit-a-tives'."

THE BOY

(By Frank H. Sweet)

For some reason Deborah and Amplias Hicks did not occupy so high a position in their neighbor's estimation as, in their own opinion, they were entitled to occupy.

What farmer was more thrifty, more saving, more careful than Amplias? Whose stock in the neighborhood was so carefully sheltered from the winter winds? Who had so many water-tight little out-buildings for the protection of all that was theirs? Whose apples were better picked, or lasted longer than theirs? Who could show more maple sugar at sugar time? Whose household goods had lasted so long, or looked so well preserved, as those cared for by Deborah? Whose farm was kept in better shape, or managed more profitably than theirs?

But their neighbors declared that Amplias was close; that Deborah was stingy; that they were hard to live with; that their one daughter, Letitia, had married that good-for-nothing Charlie Cane simply to get away from the paternal roof.

Gossip said that the two nephews who had lived with them had grown sour-looking in their service, and that, being weary of life, they had finally run away one night to nobody knew where. Public sympathy had not been with Deborah and Amplias in the matter.

Amplias thought he understood the reason. His neighbors were mainly jealous of his good fortune.

But the nephews were gone, and a boy to do chores, or a girl to take hold in the house, would not be unhandy. Besides those worldly calculations, which seemed commendable to both, was a desire, unacknowledged by either, to do something for their one child, Letitia.

So, after much pondering and change of mind, they sent a letter to Letitia, saying that they would take and do well by her oldest girl or her oldest boy.

Hard work and disappointment had changed the pleasure-seeking Letitia of bygone days to something so calculating and sharp and unyielding that even Deborah and Amplias would have shrunk from such an exaggeration of themselves. The answer that reached the farmhouse was short and decisive:

"Mary can't go because I need her. John can't go because he is beginning to earn wages, and we need the money. But little Amplias can go if you want him. He is seven and not overgrown, and might fetch up on the farm."

The first decision was prompt. They did not want the sickly seven-year-old.

Deborah was disappointed. She had found a use for her imagination and had already pictured to herself an industrious girl seconding her in all the work of the house.

Amplias, too, had had his dream, and had gone up and down with the cultivator with a vision of a stout boy hard at work over in the next field, and he had pleased himself by planning to leave that stout boy, in the distant future, his precious farm.

Surely the sickly seven-year-old was out of the question.

But the more they thought of it, and the more Amplias became impressed with the fact that the child was named after him, the more they were inclined to alter their decision.

"He could do chores enough to earn his salt," said Amplias, waveringly, halting in his hasty dinner.

"He would fret for his brothers and sisters, like as that," was the weak rejoinder.

"He would take your time from your work, being sickly?" questioned.

"He might grow strong up here. I wonder if he favors you?"

"He might get up the cows, and fetch water to the field, and gather the cobs, and such like. I done all such when not more'n five."

Gradually, they came to the conclusion that little Amplias must come, but it took so long to do so that when Amplias drove over to Bethel to meet the boy at the station he had to go in a sleigh. He knew that his grandson was only seven, yet when he saw the conductor take off a little scrap of a boy, he never thought of the child being his property. The conductor spied him.

"Here's your boy!" he shouted.

"Labeled for Amplias Hicks, Stoneborough." Amplias made some remark, but his "Ho, ho, ho!" died in his throat as he looked down at the child gazing so gravely up into his face.

"You my gran'per?" asked the boy.

"Jep, 'spect I am," and Amplias tried to laugh, but he couldn't. He felt more awkward than ever before in his life. He never had been accustomed to noticing children, and he did not know a child ever looked so—so little, so meditative, so wise. The boy's great solemn eyes threw Amplias into a perspiration.

"You little Amplias?" he asked nervously. "Come we must be getting home to Deborah."

He strode off toward the sleigh, and the boy followed. Expecting in some way to find the boy beside him, Amplias got into the sleigh, but there was a great gulf of deep snow between it and the platform where little Amplias stood, gravely watching.

"I got a bag," he said, holding up a check in his little, bare, red hand.

So Amplias had to get out and fetch the bag, and this time he lifted little Amplias into the sleigh. Something about the slight, trustful weight made his face turn scarlet. He looked down sideways at the boy and saw that he was shivering. Then old Amplias tucked the robe around little Amplias with a curious sense of protecting something.

The boy did not seem to grow warm on that long, cold ride home. He just sat and shivered uncomplainingly, while Amplias lashed his horse in a most un-Hicks-like fashion.

"Here, Deborah," he said, carrying the boy to his wife. "He's nigh about froze. Ginger him up or something."

Deborah had not expected anything so little as this. She held the child on her lap by the hot stove in the warm, comfortable kitchen. She took off his thin little overcoat, and his thin little scarf, and the poor little cap tied down over his ears. She took off his worn shoes and cottony clothes, and rubbed him hard, and turned him and baked him before the fire.

She bathed him in hot water to warm him, and filled him with hot ginger tea, which he took obediently until the tears stood in his eyes. When she saw those patient tears something blurred her own eyes, and she saw more than one little boy uncomplainingly drinking his scalding ginger tea.

She wrapped him in the heavy shawl which she had been warming, and held him in her lap—and cried.

Yes, she, Deborah Hicks, who hadn't cried for years—for she boasted that she wasn't the crying kind—felt such a love and pity surge up in her heart for that bit of a boy—almost her own boy—that she cried as if her heart would break.

Little Amplias stared at her.

"Don't cry," he said finally; "I like to live here with you."

She gave him a big hug and laid him like a bundle on the old soft lounge. She turned her hot biscuit in the oven, poked the sizzling slices of ham in the frying pan, stirred the fried potatoes, poured boiling water into the teapot, and when old Amplias came stamping into the back shed from the dark, smoky world outside supper was smoking on the table.

Little Amplias watched everything with hungry eyes.

"Got him warmed up?" asked Amplias, as soon as he came in. "Ain't he the littlest thing you ever saw?"

Deborah had a suspicion that Amplias felt pretty much as she did. But perhaps his feeling would be gone by tomorrow, and she had already begun to wonder how she could get clothes for the boy. She and Amplias had virtuously and sternly resolved not to waste any money on him, and not to try to dress him "fashionable"; that is, not to buy him any clothes unless they were forced to do so. It seemed to Deborah now that nothing could be good enough for that little boy.

She had some flannel in the house, and she meant to make him good, warm underclothes. But he would need stockings before she could possibly knit them, and shoes, too.

She never had seen Amplias seem so interested in anything human as in that boy. He could hardly eat for looking at him. As for little Amplias, he devoured his ham and eggs and potatoes and biscuits and drank his milk with a gusto that would have seemed an ill-omen to Amplias and Deborah the day before, but which they looked on now with the greatest satisfaction.

Nothing was said, for the Hicks household was not a talkative one, until little Amplias looked at his grandfather, and philosophically remarked, "If I eat like this, I'll soon be able to do all your work."

"I don't want you doing no work," was the gruff reply. "You're to play."

Deborah tried to look unconscious. Her husband was a very brave man to renounce his lifelong opinions so publicly.

The next day, Amplias declared that he must drive to Bethel to buy a strap, and he insisted on taking little Amplias with him.

Deborah sewed her fastest while they were gone, scheming in the meanwhile about shoes and stockings. Her schemes, however, were in vain, for when Amplias came home he broke in with:

"There, Deborah, little Amplias must go warm! See the great bargains! I was always a master-hand at buying."

There was a thick cap, and a heavy overcoat, and a warm suit, and a pair of stout shoes, and a whole bundle of other things. Little Amplias strutted around with a grave joy in his philosophic eyes that was almost intoxicating to the unaccustomed givers.

WHEN BUYING YEAST INSIST ON HAVING THIS PACKAGE

On Sunday, Amplias suggested that they should drive to Lympus to meeting to show off little Amplias and his new clothes. It was somewhat novel, proceeding, in view of their relations with their neighbors.

A great many curious eyes were turned on them in that country church; and after meeting was over, Amplias and Deborah were so anxious to exhibit their new possession that they were really cordial in their demeanor, and more conciliatory than for months past.

"Lawsy," said one good woman, "Amplias Hicks actually seems to set store by that child—and him such a sickly, puny, white-faced slip! I didn't know that Amplias would put up one minute with anything that couldn't work! My, it would make me jump out of my skin to have them great, solemn eyes staring at me the way they do at Amplias!"

Deborah and Amplias had declared to each other resolutely that Letitia should "lie in the bed she made," and that she need not expect help from them after casting in her lot with shiftless Charlie Cane. But in some way, after little Amplias came, they began to talk about sending Letitia a bit of a box.

That box grew and grew until it turned into a barrel of potatoes, a barrel of apples, a barrel of comforts, and other things made by Deborah's industrious, hard-worked fingers, and a barrel of flour from their own wheat. With the freight paid—though that was a tug—they went to Letitia, and the first warm, loving thoughts she ever had had of her home since she left it, came to her when she stood before those homely country-looking barrels.

The bitterness of her reminiscences seemed to drop from her. After many an effort she wrote a short note. Cold and unfeeling it would have seemed to some, perhaps, but there was something in it that made Deborah think for many a day of the little Letty of years ago, and made Amplias wish he had also sent some maple sugar and a few beads and cat-bags, and even a little money.

Little Amplias became the most important member of the Hicks household. He began to fill out his clothes better, and wasn't quite so "peaked." As time passed, he was even guilty of laughing in a solemn way quite frequently, and he dozed his grandfather's footsteps from shed to shed, and sniffed his grandmother's good cooking with his appreciative little nose, to the increasing satisfaction of them both. He slept in a little trundle-bed, not in the attic room prepared for him before his arrival, and was tucked in warmly and safely several times a night without a thought being given by the tucker to the trouble he made.

Then came the accident. Little Amplias was very ambitious to help his grandfather, and had grown to be very useful in his willing way. He was manful and always confident of his ability to be of assistance in everything. Amplias would laugh and slap his knees and "Ho, ho, ho!" at night as he told Deborah what little Amplias had said or done.

But one day the boy was trying to open the stock-yard gate for his grandfather, when the wind took it out of his weak grasp. It knocked him down, and the weight slipped and struck him.

Amplias did not think that his grandson was much hurt until he picked up the little, pale, still child and finding he did not move or seem to breathe, carried him—oh, so gently—to the house, wondering dully that the boy could be so light and little. Then he drove furiously to the doctor, while Deborah worked with a heavy heart over the moaning boy.

That was a terrible week. The "Ho, ho, ho!" all died away in Amplias. The cattle looked at him in a dazed fashion—they didn't know their strange master. He was too restless to stay in the house, and too restless to stay out of it. He hated the doctor. What business had the doctor to say, that little Amplias would be a cripple as long as he lived, and would not live long at best; that he could not have lived long, in any case, for he had no constitution? Why he was going to leave little Amplias the farm! "Money's nothing, Deborah!" he said, desperately. "I'm going to have a Boston doctor if it takes the farm!"

And he did; but it was a bitter disappointment to him. The verdict was the same. The child would never be anything but a cripple, and there wasn't one chance in a thousand that he would live through his fourteenth year.

Then toys came into that house—there never had been such a thing as a toy in it before—and a music box and many things that Deborah and Amplias had scorned in the good old days.

Deborah got slips of flowers from her neighbors, and wasted her valuable time over a window full of bright blooming plants. She and Amplias urged people to come to see them, for company, pleased little Amplias; and the neighbors began to feel that they would meet their friends in a pleasant way in the evening in the Hicks living room.

Deborah, in her recently-acquired sympathy with suffering, found time to make clothes for a weel of a baby; and Amplias began to know where his pocketbook was when other people were in need.

They did not realize that they had changed, but other people were wide-awake to the fact.

"The change that's come over the Hickses on account of little Amplias is astonishing."

"The Lord visited them with a heavy hand; but the loving-kindness of it is shown forth in their renewed hearts," said the minister, gravely, and his listeners nodded in solemn assent.

Even little Amplias heard remarks of that kind as he lay in his trundle-bed, and he pondered over them in his philosophic fashion.

One night, when Amplias thought the boy was asleep, he broke out in bitter bewailings of the accident to Deborah.

"His life is ruined—the wick's all to be burned out in seven years. Doctor said to-night, out to the road gate, that little Amplias is les' settin' weaker and weaker, and that the chances are that he'll drop asleep some of these days and never wake up again—and him gettin' so strong and chipper before that gate acted so. Wish I'd never had a gate on the farm! Deborah, we've never known what it was to live before little Amplias came. And just as we're finding out, he's to be taken from us!"

"It's a judgment on us for our hard ways," sobbed Deborah. "I've laid awake nights feeling it in my bones."

"What good is it if we must lose him? Money, nor the farm, nor nothing, is nowhere compared to that little feller with me!" And Amplias groaned, with his head in his hands.

Then came a clear, wise little voice from the trundle-bed:

"You needn't to mind, gran'per and gramma. I think I like it better this-a-way. You needn't to mind about me. It would be awful resting to fall asleep and not wake up no more."

He paused. The old people lay still, waiting for the child's voice in the dark.

"And I guess that was a good gate," went on the small philosopher, "for Theophilus Bangs told Sam Beech that Deborah and Amplias Hicks were a sight Christianer and wonderful nice people since little Amplias was hurt, and he guessed it was a good thing. And I'm awful glad if it's a good thing, for you're so good to me. And don't you mind any more."

So it happened that, long after a small white stone bearing the words, "Little Amplias, Son of," had been put at the head of a tiny new mound in the graveyard, people in all the country round looked to Deborah and Amplias Hicks for sympathy in affliction and in time of trouble.

Some there were who remembered the story, and occasionally told in reminiscent fashion how Deborah and Amplias used to be "terrible hard and close, and that-a-way, before little Amplias came."—Forward.

You Get Bilious Because Your Liver is Lazy

You get a bilious attack when your liver refuses to do its work. The bile does not flow. You become constipated. Food sours instead of digesting. You have that "bitter as gall" taste. The stomach becomes inflamed and inflated—turns sick—vomiting, and violent headache.—The best preventative and cure for biliousness is Chamberlain's Tablets. They make the liver do its work—strengthen the digestive organs, and restore to perfect health. 25c. a bottle.—All Dealers and Druggists, or by mail.

John Brigh used to tell how a barber who was cutting his hair once said to him: "You've a large 'ead, sir; it is a good thing to 'ave a large 'ead, for a large 'ead means a large brain, and a large brain is the most useful thing a man can 'ave, as it nourishes the roots of the 'air."

Tom McPherson, a Scotchman who does carpentering for a living, asked his foreman for a day off, which was readily granted. Later the latter was informed that the workman had taken the holiday to get married, and upon his return to work questioned him about it.

"Aye, sir; I was awa' gettin' marrid'."

"That's fine," replied the foreman. "I hope you got a rich, good wife, Tom. Well, I maun say she is God's handiwork, but she is nae His master piece, answered the bridegroom with the air of one determined to do perfect justice and yet adhere to the truth.

A little boy was once overhead saying to his pet rabbit:

"How much is seven times seven?"

There being no response from the rabbit, the boy said:

"How much is four times four?"

Still there was no response.

"Now I will give you an easy one. How much is two times two?"

Still the rabbit refused to respond.

"Well," said the boy, "I knew father was fibbing, when he said rabbits are the greatest multipliers in the world!"

A clergyman, taking occasional duty for a friend in one of the moorland churches of a remote part of England, was greatly scandalized on observing the old verger, who had been collecting the offertory, quietly abstract a half-crown before presenting the plate at the altar rails.

After service he called the old man into the vestry, and told him, with emotion that his crime had been discovered. The verger looked puzzled.

"Why, sir, you doan't mean that old half-crown of mine? Why, O've 'ed off' with he the last fifteen years!"

"Bill," the post gasped, staggering into his friend's room.

"Why, what's wrong?" the friend inquired, startled as he grasped hold of the tottering man.

"Wrong!" the poet muttered. "Ye gods! I wrote a poem about my little boy. I began the first verse with these lines:

"My son! My pigmy counterpart."

"Yes! Yes."

The poet drew a long breath as he took a newspaper from his pocket.

"Read!" he blazed suddenly. "See what that criminal compositor did to my opening line.

The friend read aloud:

"My son! my pig, my counterpart!"

The late Captain Charles Barr, the famous yachtsman, was almost as famous for his neatness as for his seamanship. As the story goes, Captain Barr one summer took a cottage in the country. It was a marvel of neatness—velvet lawns, bright flower beds, red fences—and the cottage was snow-white, with green shutters. An old shipmate was invited down in August over Sunday. On Saturday night, after their wholesome supper of hot brown bread and baked beans, the two friends sat smoking good cigars. The visitor, on finishing his cigar, tossed the butt down on the grass. "What did you do that for, George?" said Captain Barr. "Look at it smouldering down there. Don't it look nasty on the nice green grass?" George turned red. "I don't think anybody would notice a little thing like that," said he. "George," said Captain Barr, "It's just these little things that makes neatness and order, and neatness and order are a big success." George, who had never been a very successful man, smiled sarcastically. He said nothing. But a little later he got up hurried down the neat white path and put out of the gate. He was gone over a quarter of an hour. "Where the dickens have you been?" said Captain Barr, uneasily, on his return. "Only just down to the hollow," said George, "to spit in the river."

Peep again in your oven.
See those loaves, those pleasing loaves you've made.
How fat—rounded—substantial.
No, they won't fall when colder.
Because the Manitoba strength that is in FIVE ROSES will hold them up till eaten.
This sturdy elastic gluten has kept them from dropping flat in the oven.
No unightly holes 'twixt crust and crumb—never.
All risen evenly—to stay risen.
Never heavy—sudden—eggy—indigestible.
Yours are the FIVE ROSES loaves—
Crinkly and appetizing of crust.
Golden brown and tender.
Snowy of crumb—light as thistle-down.

Concrete Tanks and Troughs Never Rot or Leak

THE most practical tanks, whether for water or sewage, are built of concrete. They never rust, rot, dry out or leak. They never need new hoops or paint. They last a lifetime and seldom require repainting, which makes them the cheapest tanks that can be built.
Clean, Sanitary Watering Troughs are just as necessary as the animals that drink from them. The farmer's best interests are being served when his stock is insured a plentiful supply of clear, clean water from a trough that is permanent and sanitary.
 "What the Farmer can do with Concrete" is the name of a handsome free book that tells all about concrete tanks, watering troughs and other uses of concrete that will save every farmer many dollars. Write for it to-day.

 A few days ago Mr. Sylvester Bent was compelled to meet a foe in a very fine cow, which began to fail some weeks ago, of some disease of which no one knew anything about. It finally ceased to ruminate. Knowing it could not live and thinking it might be something contagious he killed it and dissected it. For cause he found the passage through which it swallowed its food twice its normal size and filled with a cancerous, fungus substance, and its heart was only shell; lungs not affected; no blood in vitals. No farmer here ever had such a disease take any animal of his herd before. If any one knows of this surely fatal complaint will be kindly publish the same.
