Selling Farm Produce.
Take two packages of almost any kind of farm produce, of the same kind and quality, and have one put in a sack and the other in a barrel, done up in the most presentable condition, and the other put up with care in an ill-looking package, and the nice looking one will sell not only at a higher price, but will sell ten to twenty-five per cent more.

Care of Young Pigs.
In order to succeed well in rearing pigs, special care, in many respects, is needed. One who has no disposition to look after minor details in the management of the sow and her litter, had better keep in the background and allow some trustworthy person to take care of the litter, or at least pig rearing at all. From the time the pigs are farrowed until they are weaned, they must have the best care that can be given them. This, by no means, consists in having an attendant with them all the time, nor in petting and handling them, nor in constantly feeding and fussing with them. Many a litter has been reduced or lost altogether by the well-intended but misplaced kindness of the keeper. They do, however, require to have a good, clean pen, where they can sleep in comfort without exposure to the excess of heat or cold; dry, moderately warm and ventilated in winter, cool and airy in summer. In such quarters the sow should have been kept several weeks before farrowing. Here the pig will afterwards be reared, and he should be fed as soon as they have learned to eat, at regular hours during the day, so long as they are with the sow. At weaning time the sow may be taken away, and the pig placed in new quarters and compelled to rely entirely on the food provided for them.

Blood value in Breeding.
In a paper contributed to the Country Gentleman, Hart Comstock formulates a theory so eminently sound, that it will be recognized and endorsed by breeders who have, without prejudice or any superficial examination, given the problem thorough study. Some great animals fail to produce offspring, either the first remove, or the second, or the third, or the fourth, or the fifth, or the sixth, or the seventh, or the eighth, or the ninth, or the tenth, or the eleventh, or the twelfth, or the thirteenth, or the fourteenth, or the fifteenth, or the sixteenth, or the seventeenth, or the eighteenth, or the nineteenth, or the twentieth, or the twenty-first, or the twenty-second, or the twenty-third, or the twenty-fourth, or the twenty-fifth, or the twenty-sixth, or the twenty-seventh, or the twenty-eighth, or the twenty-ninth, or the The Adopted Daughter.

CHAPTER XI. A TRAGEDY SCENE.

Blanche Longley hastened to her sitting room, with a look of satisfaction, after her interview with her brother, and touched a bell to summon her maid, as she flung herself upon a sofa covered with a pink and white silk cushion.

"What do you mean, Leon?" she demanded, when her attendant made her appearance. "You know perfectly well that I don't like so much light in my room. It spoils the complexion."

"If you please, Miss," said Leon, "it's breathing up for a man, and the sun's all gone behind the clouds, and it's almost dark, and the beginning to sprinkle."

"What do you mean, Leon?" she demanded, when her attendant made her appearance. "You know perfectly well that I don't like so much light in my room. It spoils the complexion."

"Oh, to tell me all!" cried Amber impatiently. "Don't keep 'mystifying' me with a great deal of nonsense. Dear Blanche, do tell me all."

"I will then, Amber. I can not refuse your appeal," responded Blanche. "And perhaps it will be better for you to know the whole truth at once. He reminded me of the pride of his race. He reminded me of the pride of his race. He reminded me of the pride of his race."

"I will then, Amber. I can not refuse your appeal," responded Blanche. "And perhaps it will be better for you to know the whole truth at once. He reminded me of the pride of his race. He reminded me of the pride of his race. He reminded me of the pride of his race."

beauty, not that I am repulsive. You must not speak against him. If I could believe him true, or anything else, I would be his—the noblest, purest, and best of men—I might unthinkingly love for him. But to me he must always be the one man in the universe. I dare say," she added, with a mournful smile, "I shall talk much as a girl of sixteen might be expected to, but I was brought up among elderly people, and an old for my age. From those confidences, Jasper, you will see that I am in earnest in refusing you."

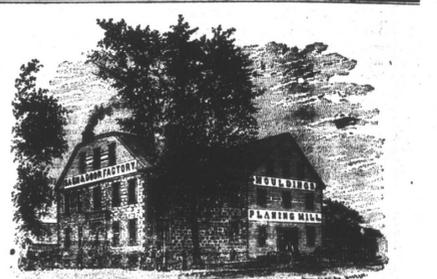

"There was a gentle dignity in her manner that convinced her companion that if he hoped ever to win her hand it could only be by waiting until her present great sorrow had worn off of her keen edge. He therefore resumed his seat, and said, in a tone that was full of sadness:

"Your word is law to me, Amber. But if I may not be your accepted lover, let me be your friend. If you are in any trouble or danger, apply to me. I will be as a brother; make me useful to you."

"I have done so already. See! I am all ready for my departure, and am not going back to the Hall again. I will not live upon the bounty of one who has treated me so wickedly and so cruelly. I will not live with him and his wife—no, never, never!"
