It was not until the sixth century that the whole of Christendom united in keeping Christmas on the same day. The reasons for this delay in instituting the feast are summed up by an authority who explains that, in the first place, no corresponding festival was presented by the Old Testament, as in the case of Easter and Pentecost; second, the day and month of the birth of Christ are nowhere stated in gospe history, and cannot certainly be deter mined; third, that the church lingered at first about the death and resurrection of Christ, the completed fact of redemotion, and made this the centre of the weekly worship and the church year; and fourth, that the earlier feast of Epiphany afforded a substitute for the

In common with many other church red-letter days, the cause that influenced the fixing of the Christmas festival at this period was the fact that most of the heathen nations of Europe regarded the winter solstice as the time

winter solstice.

It was Pope Gregory the Great who said: The heathen festivals must gradually be changed into Christian ones, and the Christian festivals must imitate those of the time before Christ." In this remark he revealed the genesis of the Christmas festival of today. The Saturnalia, the Juvenalia, and the Brumalia of Italy were transmuted into and sanctified by the establishment of the Christian cycle of Christmas observance. And if, in Latin countries, the heathen winter holidays have been turned into a celebration of the nativity, there is little doubt that the old Jul festival of the Teutonic races was the foundation for the German observance. The Jul festival, like the Saturnalia, was the greatest feast of the ancient Germans. It began on December 24th and ended on January 6th. It was the time dedicated to the greatest god of the heathens-Wodan. This

In seeking for light on the genesi of Christmas, one is led to dwell irresistibly on the initial Christmas, which gave to the world the Saviour of men. The story of that first memorable Christmas is probably the most beautiful of any recounted among men. Aside from its tremendous religious significance, as a beginning of a new era in the spiritual life of men, it is unequaled in its impression upon the poetic, imaginative, and romantic instincts. Imagation, it is safe to say, has never invented scenes so lovely and appealing as those of the holy night at Bethlehem. The shepherds keeping watch over the temple flocks by night; the angels breaking from the sky to herald the tidings of great joy; the sudden descent of a multitude of the heavenly host hymning the "Gloria in Excelsis"; the manger, the Mother and the Babe-in these things, with the star and the visit of the kings with their gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh, are revealed a transcendent panorama and an inexhaustible fount of inspiration, to charm and attract the hearts and minds of men in all ages.

Observing Christmas in Foreign Lands.

To Germany we owe the Christmas Tree and the maintenance of the best of the old-fashioned customs.

By JANE STEWART.

HE crowded streets and brilliant marts of Christmastide, the glowing Christmas tree, the interchange of gifts and greetings, and the services in the churches are the chief features of the Christmas ob-servance in Canada. While there are many to whom the perennial gift-giv-) ing is a burden, there are others to whom this is a source of great inspir-ation and delight because they get an opportunity to contribute to the joy of others.

Home Festival of Canadians.

Christmas has lived down its saturn-a'ian and heathen origin. Today the Ecliday is par excellence the home restival of the Canadian people, and its cbservance is always an infinite source of joy to those who have home centers in which to radiate; while it casts the genial glow of its pervasive happiness and warmth upon the loneliness of those who are set apart among the flotsam and jetsam of humanity and of those who are the peculiar product of scattered and shattered homes. Throughout Great Britain Christmas is the great week of the year. It is the one week when scattered familics are reunited, when scattered fami-its and old associations are revived, when friend greets friend with cheery expansiveness, in striking contrast with the characteristic reserve of the Eng-lish nature. Business is practically suspended in London for the five days succeeding Christmas eve. There is nothing left of the obsolete orgies which so offended the Puritan element in the times of Cromwell. It would be en unimaginable English monarch who would forbid any observation of the 20th of December. The example is set by the royal family of the ideal way in which to spend the happy, merry Christmastide, which the English peo-tile cherish. It is the custom of King Edward VII and Queen Alexandra to tass the holiday quietly at Sandringlass the holiday quietly at Sandring-ham, and there to give personal supervision to the distribution of gifts. Their majesties observe the best Fnglish traditions by attending service on Christmas morning at Sandringham church, which is prettily decorated with flowers and evergreens. The choir sings Gounod's "Bethlehem," and familiar hymns, such as "Hark! the Herald Angels Sing," and "O, Come All Ye Faithful." The religious service is followed by a quiet family reunion, a prototype of the gatherings in humbler homes throughout the Christmas in Italian Homes. On Christmas even in many Italian homes a family festival is held where the old and young to the third and fourth generations meet at a supper of fish, eels, nuts, cakes and fruit, or veg-etables. No meat is included in the magro, which is, however, a satisfying repast. It is followed the next day by the sumptuous dinner. graced necesthe sumptuous dinner, graced neces-sarily by a fat capon, and ended by pau giallo, a sort of coarse nut and fruit cake. It is the perennial holiday custom of the Italian tradesmen, as well as the German and Russian, to send to their patrons complimentary gifts at Christmas time. These tokens are recognized in Italy by the mancie, or small sum of money which is given in return.

In return. In France as in Italy, Christmas has not the same status in popular regard as in other lands. Yet Paris, it is stated, uses 50,000 Christmas trees each year, the result of German suggestion. Nearly all the Roman Catholic churches have a reproduction of the stable of Bethlehem, with all the prominent figures of the nativity. Before the Presepio, as this representa-tion is called, the mothers gather and urge their little ones to recite their hymns of praise to the Madonna and the Child. Roman children receive no gifts on Christmas day. The children of the evangelical churches have lovely Christmas trees, their green, aromatic branches laden with yellow oranges, silvered balls and strings of gilt paper, bright with lighted candles of red, white and green, the colors of Italy, But these tables are not inmited to the and with mimic snow. Cosmopolitan Character of Occasion.

The cosmopolitan character of the Christmas holiday is best illustrated in some foreign port where half a doz-en ships of different countries are an-chored side by side. On Christmas day the crew of the Russian ship, for ex-ample, will intone the stately chant of the solemn Russian hymn. At its con-clusion there is silence. Then the sail-ors on a Dutch vessel will chant the inspiring national air of the Nether-lands. The next ship, perhaps a British man-of-war, and its crew, lift their man-of-war, and its crew, lift their voices in "God Save the King." at Christmas. This was reserved for New Year's Day, which we called St. Basil's Day, and the gifts St. Basiliques. The young troubadours were again abroad on New Year's eve; but you must not think that they were any less eargerly awaited than when they first came. Their tune this time was livelier. They sang of St. Basil's life for about five minutes, and then verses-home-made, like their instruments-about the children and young ladies of the household. Many were made about me, but the one I liked best was one that said;

"When your mother was about to give you birth. She knelt before the ikons and prayed: 'May God give her beauty. Give her black eyes, Give her golden hair, And give her arched eyebrows.'"

Beyond the black eyes I have nothing to show that my mother's prayer was granted. But I looked on the song as most befitting me, and took much satisfaction in it. Another song, only second in favor, declared,

"Your figure is like a cypress-tree; Your complexion is like a June rose; Your eyes the color of heaven, And your heart a pure jasmine."

dropped,

I was always as little as a minute, and the cypress-tree reference to my height never failed to please me. The singers were again rewarded with a package of food in their bag and pennies in their hands, and went away after singing this last verse:

"Here, where we have sung, May not even a stone be broken, And may the master of the house live for a thousand years."

On New Year's Day, as I have said, presents were exchanged, and the gentlemen called on the ladies. A large table was set in the drawing-room, laden with salad, eggs, cold chicken and other meats, cakes, and wine; and every visitor to the house, whether rich or poor, had to eat in order that he might have broken bread with the family and be friends for the ensuing year. Each family, moreover, made it a point of honor to supply the poor of the neighborhood with coal, rice, and meat. The last time I witnessed Christmas in the East I was seventeen years old; yet the excitement of it gripped me as completely as it used to when a child.

A curious smile flitted over the coarse lips and passed. Then the lips tightened and the thought behind the bandage made its way to the surgeon's quick brain, and there was a long silence.

At last : "D'you ever hear tell, Doc, of a woman bein' hung?"

"Yes, Jim." And then :

"Doc, am I goin' shore?" This question the surgeon answered with another, bending low.

"Doc, this is Christmas, ain't it ?" "Yes, Jim." "Doc, you're shore, air ye, that no-

The man had been among men the terror of the hills for years, but on the last words that passed his gray lips his soul must have swung upward toward the soul of the Man who lived and died for the peace of those hills. "Doc, he said thickly, "you jus' tell the old girl Jim says, "Happy Christ-

How he used to shrink his livin'! sold the best an' e't the leanest: Cattle went an' cattle came—but of all he stood the meanest. Sold his childr'n colts for pennies, long before they even named 'em : But when they would grow up hosses, then the old man always claimed 'em. Made 'em borrow half their books, an' their other school-utensils— Even sent 'em to the quarries for to dig off splinter-pencils !

Never spent a single cent for to make his home more pleasant; Never crowned a Chris'mas mornin' with a blessed Chris'mas present; Oft his childr'n fell to cryin' 'cause they had to go without 'em— Till the sewin'-circle clubs used to sit an' talk about 'em! So we thought, one prosp'rous year, when the crops took on expansion, There should be one Chris'mas tree in the old man Starling's mansion.

So we started out to fix it: an'we canvassed 'mongst the neighbors, Takin' up a town-collection, on the sly, 'twixt other labors; Workin' on some people's pity, an' on some's imagination, An' on some's amused desire for to see the celebration; An' we gathered quite a fund, with a ''don't you tell it '' warnin', 'Nough to make the Starling childr'n happy one whole Chris'mas mornin'.

Mercy! how them childr'n acted, when the door was opened, fin'lly, An' revealed to them the presents—lookin', doubtless, most divinely! Whole thing didn't cost ten dollars: but 'twas heaven-like bewild'rin', An' worth more'n a hundred thousan', to them hungry-hearted childr'n ! Every close-earned cent I planted in that job, I state sincerely, Never yet has failed to draw reg'lar compound interest yearly. How the mother of the house watched the new administration— Hardly knowin' which to feel—pleasure or humiliation ! How the big boys yelled with joy, 'round among their presents hopping, When they come home from the woods, where their dad had kept them chopping! How we wondered if a storm in the old man's head was brewin', An' if wrathful shame would rise, when he see what we was doin'!

Not a shame !—he stood an' grinned, sayin', "Ain't this new an' funny ! Thank you, neighbors : these here trinkets ought to fetch a sight of money. But you've made a small mistake—or a big omission, rather : I don't find no present here for the fam'ly's sufferin' father !" Then Mose Griggs, a half-growed giant, with consid'ble fun behind it, Says, "You turn around a minute, an' I'll see if I can find it."

So old Starling turned around, something for himself expectin', An' received a gift that long mingled with his recollection. He was in the sittin'-room, when the gift was to him handed, He was in the dinin'-room, when upon his back he landed. "If you use these presents here in the way your talk discloses, I'll give you another trip—to'rds the sittin'-room," says Moses.

Mad enough he was, to fight! but our laughter interceded, An' convinced the man at last, that he'd got the gift he needed. An' next year, at Chris'mas-time, he took some expense an' bother, An' the childr'n all got presents from their stingy rich ol' father. Meanwhile he embraced religion, which same caused it, some supposes: But I al'ays set great store on the gift he got from Moses. mber, 1907.

A son or daughter who stains and degrades a good name, honorable among men, is capable of wounding more deeply, of hurting more sorely, than either friend or foe. But forgive-ness is another matter. Though we telt the life-blood trickling from the deep wound as we went forward to un-bar the door it could not seem possible that we should not forgive.

The Story a Great Picture Tells.

A famous poet-painter of England has told an awful story in a great picture which, with all my heart, I wish we had here before us. He has painted the famous Blackfriars bridge which crosses the Thames in London. The hour is that desolate time in the which crosses the Thames in London. The hour is that desolate time just at the glimmer of a winter dawn, when iew are abroad—the hour when human vitality is at its ebb and the majority of the dying leave this world. The faint light in the east has not power to illuminate the river, dark with the foulness of the city it traver-ses. But it is easy to discern the two figures who are the only human beings in sight. A young, frail woman creeps toward the edge of the bridge, peer-ing hopelessly down into the cold treachery of the gliding water. You know at a glance that in homeless wretchedness she is going to throw herself down and end the hopeless struggle of her life. A vigorous young man is making his early way to the great city, only half seeing the road he travels. With a strong, compassion-ate grasp he snatches the poor dying creature back and holds her from her purpose. Their faces tell a strange chapter in human experience. Once, not so long ago. she had been his purpose. Their faces tell a strange chapter in human experience. sathering of the family to keep the fcast. And as we lovingly linger over the dear names of those who, however separated by the dividing paths of their individual destinies, yet turn with yearning love toward home, a hunger and thirst of the heart arise which it is hard to appease. Father and mother crave for the sight of the dear faces, which, though every hour changes with life's experiences, remain ever to them those of the little children once so eagerly bright with the hope of Christmas joy.

Fathers and Mothers Who Will Not Porgive.

And there are moments of inexpress-ible pain, when grief points to the va-cant chairs whose owners have passed and have reached the shore where we believe life is one long festival of sorrowless activity. We cannot at times like these casily lift our spirits to their clear atmosphere, and are tempted to stretch out our selfish arms to draw them once again within arms to draw them once again within our reach. I see here before me now faces of men stern with repressed fceling, and of women down whose cheeks tears fall, some with meek pstience, some with sobs of comfort-less resistance.

Courage, dear people, courage and faith! Lift up your hearts and share a joy which you cannot give them even in your closest embrace. What, after all, is the touch of your fond hands and the gladness of the Christ-mas ferst at home compared with the mas feast at home compared with the centinual presence of Him whose very name gives all the light to Christmas here—who can compare with the knowledge they could only receive at the hands of Death? They have not lest us! With eager expectation they wait our coming and every Christmas-tide brings us nearer to them. These are our blessed ones and they are not far off—the unseen world which they inhabit envelops ours-they are near. Of all the vacant places around our board by long odds those which Death has emptied are those which give us least cause for grief. A far sadder thing exists among us.

To my deep sorrow I know of homes into which the children born under the roof are forbidden to enter: there are fathers and mothers who, should they hear the familiar voices of their child-ren—their children, they to whom they gave life-calling outside the door, would rise and bar it against them. his is the extremity of hardness far exceeding the official inflexibility of an executioner, and truly a strange po-sition for a frail and erring man or woman to hold toward the creature who is flesh of their flesh and bone of their bone. A sort of pause succeeds this thought in our bewildered minds: there is an element of incredibility in it. The voice of a child crying, "Let me come home," and the father who be-gat the child and the mother who brought such a child into this world answering: "I am done with you; you have sinned away your rights; you no longer have a home.'

To Err is Human, to Forgive Divine.

And, strangely enough, this is the action of what are known as "good Christian people"! It is frequently a father, who kneels twice a day and unwittingly draws a just judgment down upon him as he prays, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us," who hears and denies the appeal. "Father, forgive me and let me come home," falls on a deaf car and on an unmoved heart. What if "He who so loved the world that He sent" into its misery and darkness "His only Son" to call all the great family or man to keep the perpetual Christmas feast of His forgiveness around the manger-bed in Bethlehem should take this man at his cruel word and treat him according to his prayer! Is there no danger that a gate he hopes measure be shut against him forever?

How Best to Keep the Christmas Feast.

What time so fitting, so compelling to our forgiveness as His festival of love? An unforgiving heart cannot keep a true Christmas! It is a mere pretense without the Christ-child, and He by His nature and mission, by His deep, searching words, has made it impossible for Him to enter where reientless hardness bars out a penitent child.

If, having lost her honor, a poor girl carries the burden of her unborn child until it, poor unwelcome itt e one, is laid in her arms-she has already shown that her heart is not dead, her soul still undestroyed. Should she with penitent entreaties come back to you carrying her burden of mingled love and shame, will you refuse her en-trance? Where shall she go to hide her bowed head if it is not to those who gave her life? Shall she add murder to the pitiful stain that has blackened her life? She brings a little innocent creature to you to be saved, to be kept clean-a lamb to be offered to God.

The "new-born King" when He came to His day of teaching said: "It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones." spring also; remember this, father and mother who cannot forgive. Of those children whom Jesus took into His arms and blessed, do you suppose He stopped to ask if they were born ot righteous mothers? Oh, let the little clinging arms clasp about your neck and bless yourself and your home by rescuing mother and child together.

Only the Merciful Shall Receive Mercy.

I do not say that you can do this casily or with joy—it is only by the mighty grace of God that such things are done—but with these returning wanderers will surely enter the Christmas blessing and the benediction of Christmas peace. Your banished child may seem to be hidden out in the trackless wilderness of the world; the grief she has brought, the spot on your fair fame, may seem to be forgotten, because she is not seen at your door, but this is a false idea. Her presence under your roof will not deepen the shadow, and your forgiveness will make such a brightness in your soul that you will feel the deep significance of every promise made to the merciful. The grief has come to stay; silence

The grief has come to stay; silence and absence do not lighten it. Even the world will think less of the sin which drove your child forth than to the beauty of that forgivness that brings her home. Alas, sins such as these of which we speak to-day leave a mark that cannot be effaced. We walk humbly all the days of our lives after its misery has entered our doors; where is has so defaced our dear ones there sorrow dwells, but sorrow which blossoms into loving forgiveness. is ieady indeed for Christmas joy. That is what brought Christ to earth—that is why we keep the feast!

One of the Saddest Sights I Have Ever Seen.

Passing late at night through a wide square in a great city, not long since, I looked with sad eyes at the forlorn men sitting upon the benches. There were few old men. They held no converse—they were silent, sullen, comfortless. Where a man smoked a pipe it gave one a sense of relief: that man had something left he could enjoy, even if it were but a whiff of tobacco. The mass seemed dull, unclean and beyond the power to think.

What sent them there to sleep this uncasy, unrefreshing sleep? Where had they been born, these young men with their unshaven chins drooping down upon their breasts, trying to forget that they were alive? I felt like going from one to the other, touching them upon their drooping, despondent shoulders, calling them back to consciousness, and asking: "Have you no home Have you no father, or mother?"

for lost boys—I felt as if I must make some loud cry which would reach forth to the pleasant country places where these besotted, half-fed, halfclothed creatures had once been happy children. I longed to reach the ears of people who had sent forth "unmanageable" lads to drift about and slowly go under in the terrible vortex. When at last we have to give account of our stewardship what shall those answer who have relinquished all care for the souls and bodies God trusted answer who have relinquished all care for the souls and bodies God trusted to their keeping? What must be the thoughts of a dying man or woman who has sent an erring child away from home in irreconcilable offense? How many of these dissolute men might have stood upright and begun life anew had father and mother reached forth a forgiving hand?

Remember the All-Loving Father.

This is a meeting of fathers and mothers, and all my heart is stirred with warm desire to move at least one here present to call home a missing child to sit once more at the Christmas board, rescued from banishment for the sake of Him who came to us a little child; but I pray you let the sense of what the great festival means itach out and touch every parted friend or kinsman where anger and pride keep alive an unforgiving spirit. L^c hand clasp hand again, and heart trust heart—blot out the remembrance of injuries real or supposed. The first

Christmas began a new era-gave birth to a new humanity. Let us remember, the great, all-loving Father who for us has made a new creation, and set before us the holy mother-maid with Jest's in her meek arms as evidence of His forgiveness of us, His erring children. As I left the drowsy misery of the

As I left the drowsy misery of the half-sleeping men strewn like wreckage about the great park I caught sight of a little boy of perhaps ten years old, who had climbed to a high window-ledge in front of a theatre. His little feet and legs were bare, his trousers were ragged, his little red and white shirt dirty and torn: he was asleep with his head on a bundle of newspapers. Had some homeless mother gone to her death and left him? Was there in some quiet country place a grandfather who might have loved and sheltered him? Would he grow up to live by theft and crime, or end his young life soon by exposure? Poor little evidence of what an unforgiven sin can produce! I longed unforgiven sin can produce! I longed to take him home with me. Our hour for council is over: what have we accomplished? The dawn of Christmas is near; will it be a true feast of forgiveness for any of us? There is sure to be joy and a welcome in Heaven for "one sinner that repenteth." Shall one of our homes reflect this joy on earth on the birthner in explaining why the evergreen was chosen for this great festival day. A Scandinavian legend tells of the "service tree," which spring from the blood-soaked earth where two lovers were killed by violence, and that mysterious lights, which the wind could not extinguish, were seen at Christmas in the tops of the forest trees. In old Egypt there was a common custom of decorating the houses at the time of the winter solstice with branches of the date palm. The date palm was the emblem of immortality and also of the star-lit firmament. This tree puts forth a shoot every month and a branch of it containing twelve shoots was a symbol of the year compieted.

It has also been suggested that this may be a revival of the pine trees of the Roman Saturnalia, a December feast, during which pines were decor ates with images of Bacchus.

ates with images of Bacchus. The most plausible explanation, however, is that its earlier significance arose from the pagan worship of trees, and that later, Christian ideals gave a leftier meaning to its use. When the apostles preached the gospel in pagan lands, instead of interdicting the idol-atrons feasts they permitted such fasatrous feasts they permitted such fes-

It is the sign of an endless life, for its leaves are ever green. See how it points upwards to heaven. Let this be called the tree of the Christ-Child; gather about it, not it the wood, but in your own homes; there it will shelter no deeds of blood, but loving gifts and rites of kindness.

Some writers on ancient customs tell us that among the early pagan superstitions of the Germans was the belief that the world was a great tree whose top flourished in Paradise and furnished food to a goat upon whose milk fallen heroes restored themselves. This tale was well-known in Germany long after the introduction of Christianity, and much of its symbolic char-acter was transferred to the celebration of the birth of Christ "the resur-rection and the life." Tim.

"God bless us every one!" said Tiny Tim. If you will take down an old volume of Dickens and read again the inimit-able tale called "A Christmas Carol," you will learn all about Tiny Tim. You may have forgotten the story in which he appears. There are so many books in the lubraries now, and so many au-thors with whom we must have a friendly acquaintance, that some of us are in danger of overlooking the friend-liest good comrade in literature, and the sweetest message in modern romance may pass us by unheeded and unheard. One of the pleasant things to do in the weeks that lead us on to Christmas is to read Dickens over again, in his Christmas stories. It is always a part of my Christmas treat to do this and I wish it might be part of yours. "God bless us every one!" That crystallizes the whole spirit of Cnristmas. I am sure the best talk I can give you this month and the one you will find most suggestive will be on the line of helpfulness in little every-day ways. I will tell you of some things girls have done and some that girls may do to bring Christmas cheer to themselves and others.

There is an old mansion on Second Avenue in New York, still wide and ample, with lofty ceilings and broad stairs; though several families live in it, where in the old days it was occupied by only one. It has become an apart-ment house and Christmas trees are lighted on every one of its floors and lighted on every one of its floors and three or four Christmas parties are going on, in the different homes, at the same time. A young girl who lived in this house observed one cold winter, not so very long ago, that she had neigh-bors, a square or two away, who were very poor and very forlorn. As she walked along one crisp December mornwalked along one crisp December morn-ing she picked out the little children, boys and girls, who seemed to her most destitute. Asking their names she went to their homes and talked with their mothers, inviting finally twenty small guests, ten boys and ten girls, to come to her house on Christmas morn-ing. On Christmas morncome to her house on Cnristmas morn-ing. On Christmas Eve a bundle of generous size was left by a messenger at each of the tenement doors, base-ment, garret, or whatever it happened to be, addressed to the guest of the morrow. It contained a new frock, new snoes, a warm jacket and hat for each little girl, and a new suit and reefer for each little boy, with a stout pair of shoes to complete his outfit. Radiant in their brand-new toggery, the chil-dren appeared the next day on the very stroke of ten, and then they had a party. party.

Young ladies played games with them, and made music for them; they had nice things to eat, and every child was presented with a doll or a pair of skates, the final touch being a package containing a present for each to carry to the mother at home. It was a rich girl who did this lovely thing out of her large allowance. Not many girls could afford so much, but a group of friends, or a Sunday-school class, or the members of a grammar school or High School senior grade, might adopt the idea.

"God bless us every one!" said Tiny Fim. If you will take down an old volume of Dickens and read again the inimit-able tale called "A Christmas Carol," you will learn all about Tiny Tim. You may have forgotten the story in which "There are so many books" have eighty birthdays. A friend who made some visits just before Christmas said to her, "Jenny, what do you want more than anything else in the world?" "If," said Jenny, "I could only have a doll, like the other children, but they say I'm too big!" Jenny had her Christmas doll.

What the Parsonage Children Did.

What the Parsonage Children Did. In a tiny parsonage in the suburbs of drem, They crowd the home, as birds by the nest. It is a home where there is yery little money, and it is not easy to hake the money go round. But the thidren always have a Christmas tree, they go to school on a trolley car, and one kind conductor has taken special of the platform, once carrying Midget in his arms through a snowdrift to the sidewalk. So Midget thought of this scheme to make him happy at Christ-won Christmas presents and spent the birder of the coductor. Papa found out where he lived and the chidren where suspected where they came from. To be perfect, there should be some a trumpet before them.

Christmas in the Old Ladies' Home.

Homes that begin with a capital H try to be homelike, but they sometimes fail. In a peculiarly well-ordered "Home for Aged and Indigent Women" the beds were soft, the rooms were airy, and the wholesome cleanliness fairly shouted at one. Nothing could have been more comfortable, except that some of the old ladies missed cer-tain little comforts they had always had before they came there. An old English woman, for instance, was lost without her cup of five o'clock tea, but when she went to the klitchen for it, though it was not forbidden, she was made aware that the cook did not like to have her fussing about. The Board of haa-agers had trouble enough to keep fifty old ladies from quarreling, and they could not order anything beyond three agers had trouble enough to keep fifty old ladies from quarreling, and they could not order anything beyond three meals a day. Two or three girls, whose motners were managers, seat as a Christmas treat to the old ladies some-thing that each had at some time ex-pressed a wish for. To one, knitting wools and needles; to another a packet of tickets for rides on the electric cars; to another a subscription to a favorite magazine; to still another a good sup-ply of writing-paper, envelopes and pens, and to my English friend a pound of good tea, a little tea-kettle with an alcohol lamp, a teapot, cup and saucer. There was real festivity in that shelter of lonely old age on that Christmas Day. of l Day.

Christmas from College to Alley.

Christmas from College to Alley. One of the gayest evenings I ever spent was in a New England college for women, just before Christmas. The faculty parlor and the parlors of all the houses on the campus were over-howing with finery, ribbons, laces, embroideries, muslins; and dolls, big and little, sat stiffly up to be measured, or looked proud and pleased when their dresses were finished. You know how superior most dolls appear, calm as queens, or as the Sphinx, no matter. These learned college people, from the president to the most frivolous fresh-man, were dressing dolls for a College Settlement in a great city. One feature that appealed to me as very practical which were needles, thread, a thimble, and material for a 'doll's trousseau from fannel petticoat to picture hat, so that he little mothers might make new cothing for their dollies, and incident-ally get some knowledge of sewing for themselves.

ally get some knowledge of sewing for themselves. I saw with my own eyes the rapture those Christmas dolls brought to a good many little hearts and homes. The ecstatic faces, the mother-love shining in the bright eyes, the hugs and kisses lavished on their treasures would have repaid over and over the efforts of the young women who took time from hard work over books to get ready the Christmas box for the Settlement. One doll had not gone to a child in years. High up in a dark, ill-smelling, crowded East-Side rear tenement, in a small room, seldom visited by the sun, there was a crippled girl of twenty. The fall that had injured her limbs had hurt her head. She will never be more than eight years old, even if she should

Nothing will usually come amiss, for when the man goes to prison the home loses its breadwinner.

Season Tickets for Concerts or Lectures.

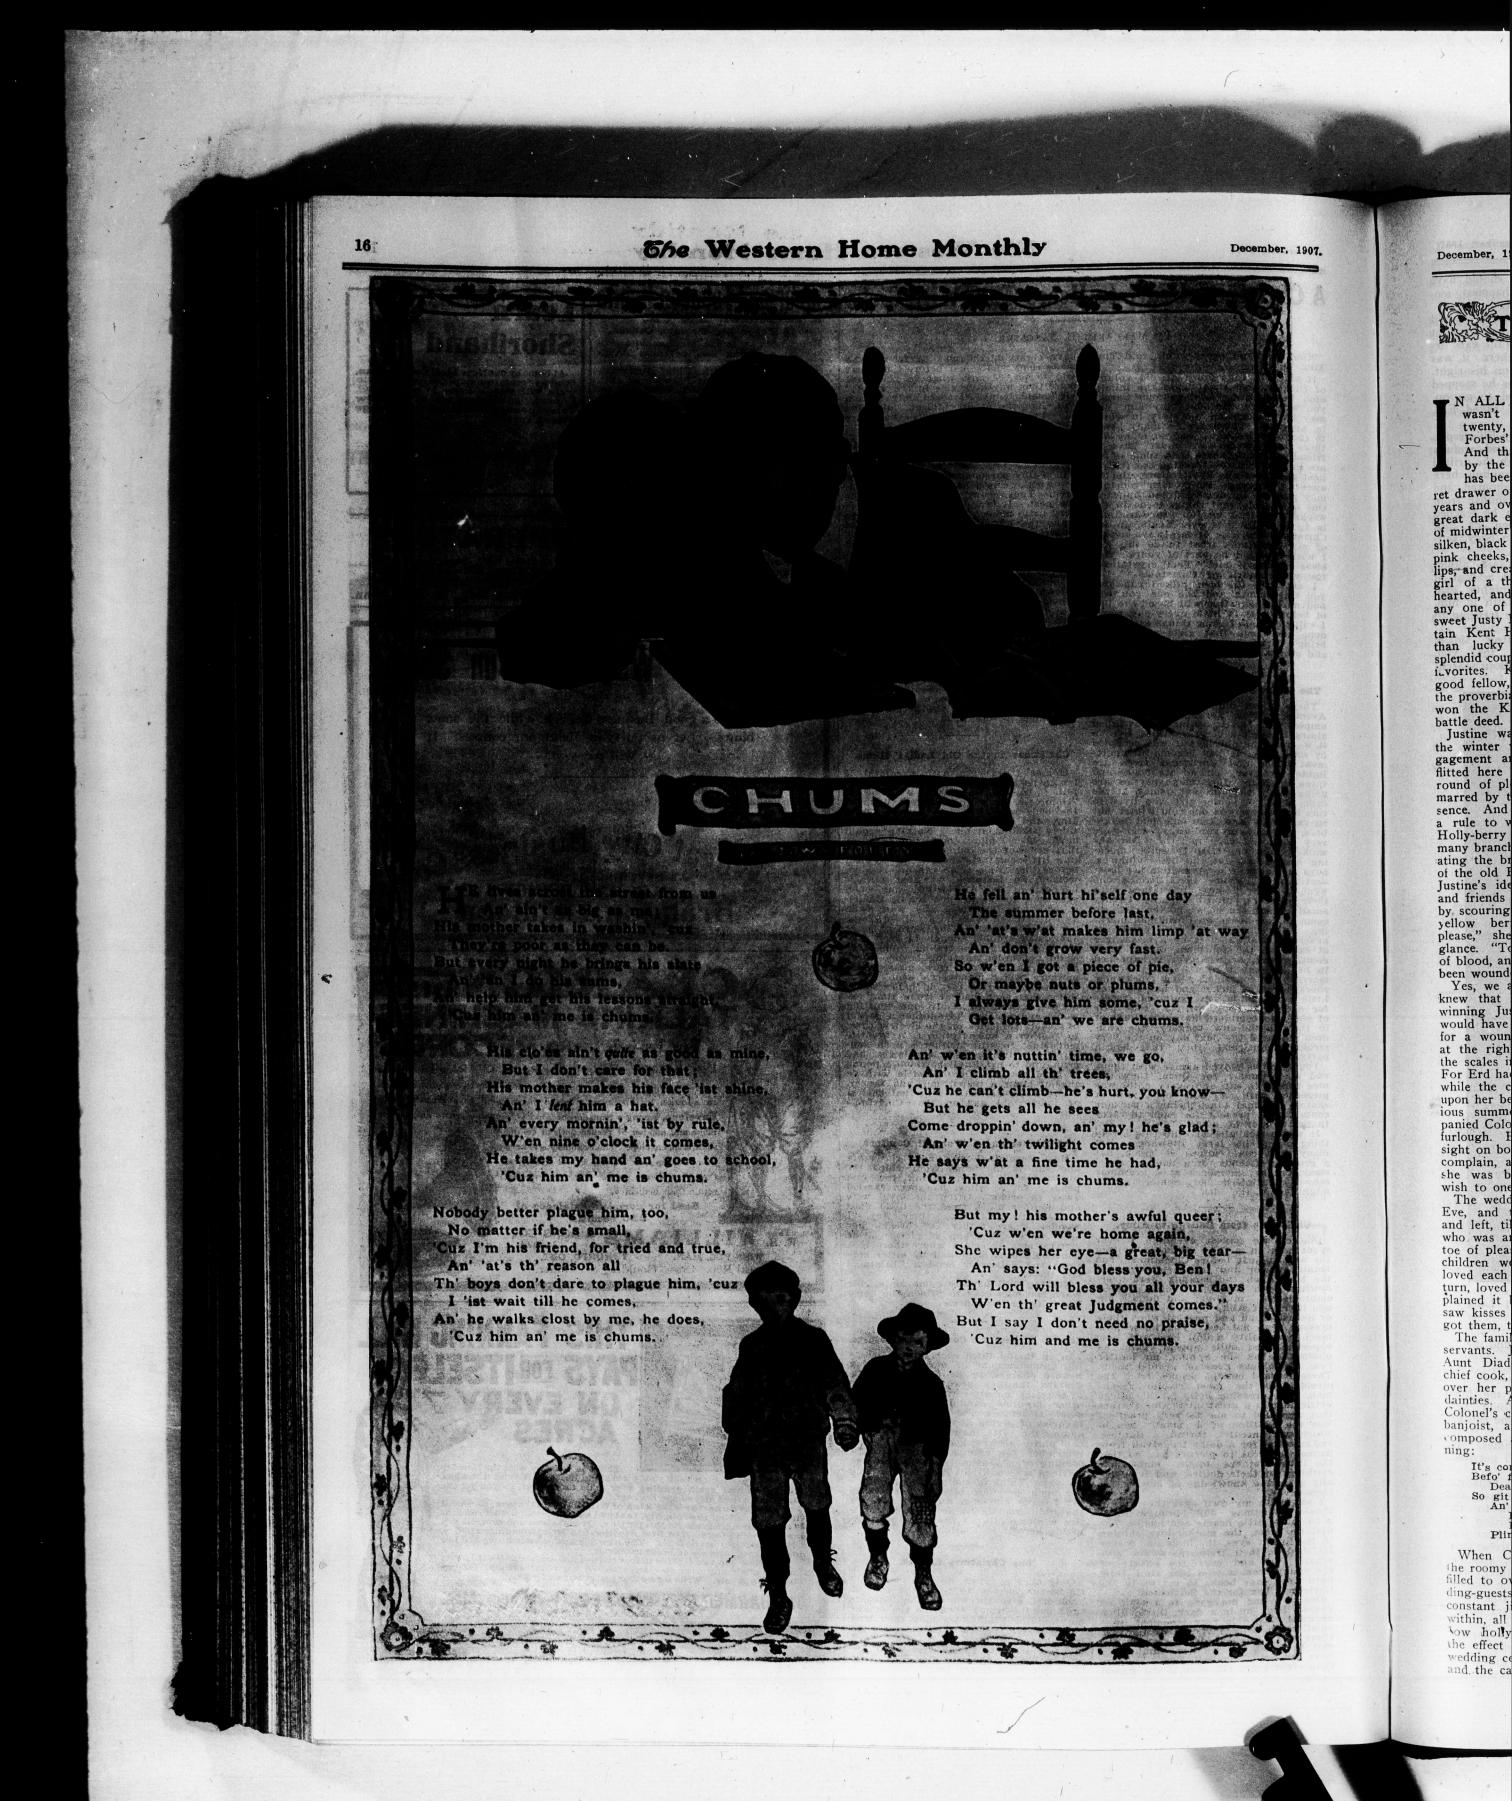

In an inland town each winter brings the announcement of most fascinating lecture courses, or delightful concerts. Certain families always have tickets to these as a matter of course. Certain other families cannot afford even a single ticket now and then. Among the luxuries of giving at Christmastide and among the gifts in which several girls can unite, always keeping it a secret remember, few things surpass this, the sending of a season ticket by mail to a friend who will hail it as manna from the sky. Think of the sadness of wast-ing such precious bits of pasteboard, yet I have known a season ticket for the Philharmonic to lie unused an en-tire winter while its possessor was en-joying herself in Florida. In an inland town each winter brings

The Christmas Chance.

Only once a year do we have the Christmas chance to play the role of good angel to the lonely, the discour-aged and the world-worn. To the neigh-bor and the brother we may then lend a hand. We may be children again, in the blessed kingdom of the Child, and make all children happy. So we all re-peat reverently the prayer of Tiny Tim: "God Bless Us Every One!"

the Holly-berry Wedding

By Mrs. Findley Braden

wasn't a handsomer girl of twenty, at the time, than Colonel Forbes' second daughter, Justine. And that is easily proved, too, by the old daguerreotype which has been hidden away in the secret drawer of my office desk for forty years and over. Why, dian't Justine's great dark eyes sparkle like the stars of midwinter? And who else had such silken, black curls combined with rosepink cheeks, perfect teeth, cherry-red lips, and creamy throat and arms? A girl of a thousand, talented, merryhearted, and a life-prize, surely, for any one of her many admirers, was sweet Justy Forbes. And at last Captain Kent Hermiston was the more than lucky winner. They made a splendid couple, and both were general i vorites. Kent was a thoroughly good fellow, and he was as brave as the proverbial lion, for he had already won the Kearny Cross by a nervy battle deed.

Justine was gay and happy during the winter weeks of their short en-gagement and, like a snowbird, she flitted here and there, on a constant round of pleasure, that was still half marred by the captain's continued absence. And this brings me straight as a rule to what was long called the Holly-berry Wedding, because of the many branches of holly used in decorating the broad hall and long parlors of the old Forbes homestead. It was Justine's idea, and brothers, cousins, and friends helped her to carry it out by scouring the woods for holly with yellow berries. "No red berries, please," she said, with an imploring glance. "To me they seem like drops of blood, and you know that Kent has been wounded twice."

Yes, we all knew that; and I also knew that Erd Cleland's chances for winning Justine's warm, white hand would have been much greater if pity for a wounded soldier had not come at the right moment to weigh down the scales in Kent Hermiston's favor. For Erd had loved her from childhood, while the captain had never set eyes upon her beautiful face until the previous summer, when he had accompanied Colonel Forbes home on a brief furlough. But it had been love at sight on both sides, and so Erd didn't complain, as he might have done, if she was being married against her wish to one who was not worthy. The wedding was set for Christmas Eve, and the invitations flew right and left, till everybody in the county who was anybody was all on the tiptoe of pleasant expectation. Even the children were interested, for Justine loved each one of them, and they, in turn, loved Justine. One little girl explained it by saying that she always saw kisses in Justy Forbes' eyes, and got them, too, without asking. The family joy also extended to the servants. Justine's old nurse, black Aunt Diademy, who had long been chief cook, laughed and cried together over her preparation of the wedding dainties. And Ben Blackadder, the Colonel's coachman, who was a great banjoist, and something of a poet, composed a really good song, beginning:

N ALL New York State there | New York that he would arrive at seven. Justine had obligingly promised the children a first private view of the bride, and so they trooped up to her room in happy pairs, with many "ohs!" and "ahs!" when they reached the open door, where pretty Myrtace Forbes, an older sister, was fastening the long wedding-veil. For Justine was radiant in ivory satin and real lace, and Kent's gift, a beautiful pearl necklace, was clasped about her round white throat. There were yellow holly-berries in her black braids and among the soft folds of lace on her bosom.

"You can look, but you must not touch," said matter-of-fact Myrtace to the eager children.

"But we want to kiss her !" pleaded one

"And I shall kiss them all !" decided Justine.

So, quite regardless of wedding finery, ten happy minutes followed that actually ended with a romp, in which the six bridesmaids joined.

"Sister Justy," said little Linnie Forbes, at last, "what makes Captain Hermiston so late?"

Justine smiled. "He is to come at seven, dear."

"But it was seven by the hall clock when we came up the stair, and I've been listening to hear the door-bell ever since."

Justine sighed. "He has been detained somewhere, of course. And the journey has been long and tiring, for Kent is still but a convalescent."

"But he promised to eat philopena with me before the wedding, and now he may not come at all." "Nonsense, child!" cried Myrtace, in dismay. "Captain Hermiston may be a few minutes late, but he always keeps his word, and never disappoints." "Yes," added Justine; "Kent is a man of his word."

of his word."

But the minutes flew by-ten, twenty, and even thirty of them. Colonel Forbes was impatiently pacing the long hall with Dr. Austin, the rec-tor of St. Mark's. "Hermiston is late, for once," he said, simply. "But sup-per shall be served, and the ceremony can come after, so no time will be lost

When the clock struck eight, Doris Crossmore, the prettiest of the bridesmaids, and Justine's closest friend. "Hats, and Justifie's closest filend, hastened to her side, in sympathy. "Has Kent come? Is there any word, Doris?" she asked. "No, Justy. But he will surely be here at last, so do not worry."

When Christmas eve finally came, the roomy old house at Marshden was filled to overflowing with merry wedding-guests. Outside, there was a constant jingle of sleigh-bells, while within, all was light, warmth, and yelthe effect was really wonderful. The wedding ceremony was to be at eight, first. There is a late train and the captain had telegraphed from and he may come on that."

She had laid her wedding-veil aside, and was standing at the window, with bright, tearless eyes fixed on the snow-covered lawn. "Yes, Doris, Kent is bound to come sooner or later; I haven't a fear on that score. And I am going down to supper, too, because I want everyone to be glad and happy, and do full justice to Aunt Diademy' splendid cooking. Call mother and the girls. They have waited too long already.'

So she had her way, and smilingly headed the wedding party that went in gay procession to the dining-room. Kent's vacant chair at the head of the long table spoke volumes, but his name was not mentioned, save when the Colonel announced that Captain Hermiston had been unavoidably detained.

Dancing followed supper, at Justine's request, and nine o'clock came with startling rapidity, for there was still no sign of the missing bridegroom. Anxiety was plainly written on the countenance of every guest. Justine had stolen away to the library, and there Erd Cleland found her, white-faced and speechless. "Courage !" he whispered. "I shall bring Captain Hermiston back to you if I have to go clear to New York to find him. But I'll ride over to the station first. There is a late train, you know, pealingly "You have been kind and good, from my babyhood up. Tell me that you, too, still believe in Kent Hermiston. Surely he does not intend to-desert me !" the last two words coming with an effort.

"No, no !" Erd answered, quickly. "Something may have happened, but the Captain is as true as steel, and I would stake my life upon it. I made sure of that long ago, or I would never have let him win you from me, as he did, Justine.'

She came a step closer at his words. "Yes, Erd; you have always loved me, and I have always known and pitied you for it. Perhaps-if Kent and I had never met-I might have learned to love you, just for your goodness to me. But after that I soon knew I could never love anyone but-him. And when he placed this ring upon my finger I was so happy !"

"And you shall be happier still Justine," he said, gently putting aside her cold, detaining hand. "Good-night, and good-bye ! I may not soon return, for Hermiston will probably get here ahead of me'

it be a groan? Anxiety had brought strange fears, and perhaps his ears deceived him. But no, there it was again, and in the ravine on his right. Gray Elf heard it, too, for he stopped short and actually refused to go on. "What is it old fellow?" asked Erd, patting his head.

A loud whinny was Gray Elf's reply. So he quickly dismounted and carefully made his way down through the drifted snow by catching at a sapling here and there. "Hello !" he shouted, and another groan was the response from a ledge just below, which he reached with a single leap. Then his foot touched—what? A human body, outlined in the moonlight.

"It's the captain !" he said, aloud, as the moonlight showed a coat of army blue. "And I'm mighty glad Justy and I kept our faith in him. Wake up, Kent ! You are freezing to death here" death here."

But he went slowly at first, for his thoughts were yet with Justine. If the captain was playing false he would soon know it, and there would soon be a speedy reckoning.

Justine's pale, drawn face followed him as he hurried on. He could still see her sad, appealing eyes, and white, quivering lips. And how he pitied her for what she must yet be sufferingher intense heartache, dread uncertainty, and awful humiliation.

But what if something had really happened, as he had suggested, in ready sympathy. He had liked Hermiston from the first, although they had always been rivals. His voice and smile, and even the glance of his eye, was kindness personified, while his gentle, protecting way with all women, old or young, augured well for Justine's future happiness, as bride and wife. And the captain loved Justine, even as she loved him, so he surely had some excellent reason for thus slighting and

"No; I've tried that fifty times. But give me your arm and we'll get back to the road somehow."

The ascent was slow and toilsome, yet it was accomplished at last, and Gray Elf carried them both to the coionel's in a jiffy. Hermiston had fainted, and Ben Blackadder bore him into the hall. But restoratives were applied with quick success, and the guests made way for Justine, who knelt at his side with tender touches and loving words. "I knew you would come, Kent ! Erd and I never doubted that.'

The quartette was composed of two young misses of perhaps fifteen or sixteen years of age, with two children-one a fair-haired, blue-eyed sprite, who had exclaimed as above; the other a more grave and thoughtful boy, whose longing eyes were fastened wistfully upon the elegant set of draughting tools referred to.

away. "There goes one of the objects of your charitable wishes, Annie. Do you suppose he heard what we were saying?" Nellie asked.

"Perhaps he did, poor man. He surely looks as if there was not a soul on earth to care for or love him."

lower haunts of the city, there sits a shivering, cowering form.

He is miserably clad, and the frosty air, piercing through the holes and crevices of his mcan abode, causes him to shiver, and his teeth to chatter audibly. His features are pinched, and have a hungry look; his hair is long and uncombed, his beard tangled and unshorn. His hands are bony like the claws of some huge bird of prey, and are clasped about his knees, upon which his sharp chin is resting, while which his snarp chin is resting, while his sunken though keen and piercing eyes are fixed absently upon the few expiring embers in the fire-place be-fore which he is sitting. The room is devoid of furniture, save a bed of straw and a meager blanket in one corner, a stool and rickety table in another.

The occupant of this comfortless apartment is the apparently povertystricken old man whose deep-drawn sigh had interrupted the conversation of the two young girls as they stood before the gayly-decorated shop-win-

"No one to care for or love me-no "No one to care for or love me" he kept one to care for or love me," he kept mumbling to himself, as he sat rocking back and forth upon the floor before the dying fire.

"Love is better than gold," the child said; "is it ? is it ?" he muttered in a startled way, while his piercing eyes went roving about the room with a suspicious look, as if he feared some one from without might be observing him.

This wretched object had happened to be strolling along the street just as that little company had stopped before the window. He had caught the bright-eyed Lillie's exclamation and eager wish for a "pocketful of money." He had marked the wistful tone, the longarawn sigh; he had noted the grave, thoughtful, but longing look of the intelligent lad, as the much-wished-for draughting tools were pointed out, and he had heard, and been startled, by the generous wishes for the poor, and suffering, and needy, as expressed by the gentle Annie.

Her earnest face haunted him; her wish that she could "make everyone in that great city happy, if but for twenty-four hours," rang in his ears; her sigh of regret "papa had lost his situation during his sickness, and there was no money to buy even a few little gifts for the children," troubled him.

"But we love each other, and love is better than gold;" those words had made him groan aloud.

"Love ! love ! love !" he cried, in harsh, cracked tones, but the words ended in almost a sob. "What is love? What is happiness?"

he said, clasping his bony hands over his moody brow, and shivering with excited feeling.

"I do not know; I have forgotten," he moaned, helplessly, and answering his own question.

A dismal silence hung over the wretched place for the space of half an hour, then the shivering old man arose from his crouching position. The fire had gone entirely out, the toom was fearfully cold and dreary, his hands were stiff, his feet were numb.

remnant of a candle, and its dim, flickering light made the dismal apartment bony fingers into the shining mass, seem more cheerless than before.

"No one to love me-no one to care for me," he moaned, shuddering again. as he looked about him and seemed to realize his desolate condition. 'Love is better than gold, is it ? But,

ah ! gold is-beautiful !"

Muttering thus he groped his way toward the corner where his miserable floor. He then got down upon his knees, threw back the coarse blanket. removed a portion of a loose board rom the floor.

by the uncertain light, there appeared to be nothing but a promiscuous collection of filthy rags.

Lifting out a portion of these, the man drew forth a bag, which seemed heavy even in his eager clutch, and its contents gave out a slight jingling sound.

It was securely tied at the top with a strong string; his fingers trembled with eagerness, his eyes lighted with a greedy look, and his lips curled into a wintry, avaricious smile as he unfastened the knot and caught the gleam of gold within.

He struck a match and lighted the remnant of a candle, and its dim, flickthus making the music he loved best to hear of all the musical sounds on earth.

His nightly task thus completed, he blew out the flaring candle, and crept, shivering and hungry, into his miserable bed.

"Father, you know that I love Frederick Atherton; you know he's a good, true man, and yet you would destroy the happiness of your only child!" A young girl of twenty stood pleading there before her father, a harsh, moody-looking man of forty. She was, as she said, his only child, and al-most the only bright or beautiful thing his home contained, although he could count his worldly possessions by the thousands. His wife had died a decade of years before, and for ten sum-mers and winters this lovely girl had cheered his life with her love.

Two years before she had pledged herself to a friend of her childhood, a good, true man, as she had said, and whom she loved fondly, devotedly; but who had only his great heart, and two strong, willing hands to give her in

"Sir, love is better than gold; it will take me years perhaps to win a fortune —the best of our lives will have passed ere that, and our love become blighted with the grand with the grand of gran." and withered with the greed of gain, the young lover returned sadly. But the hard man shook his head.

"No poor man can marry Gertrude Minot," he said, relentlessly, and the faithful lover went away disheartened and miserable.

But the brave, true spirit of the girl broke forth after he had gone, in the words recorded above. "Happiness !" her father returned, scornfully, "what makes happiness ?" "A true and faithful love," said

Gertrude Minot, proudly. "Love ! Talk as much as you choose of the silly sentiment, but love will soon grow cold and die when fed on husks. Let Fred Atherton win a suit-able home for you, and then he may take you where he will," was the heart-of prosperity or adversity, I shall share it with him," the brave girl returned, unfalteringly.

Foolish child ! what will you eat ? what will you drink ? and how will you be clothed ? was the angry query.

"I do not fear for the future; we are both young and strong. Fred can command a fair salary now, with the prospect of promotion bye-and-bye, and together we will win a competence, and an honorable position in life."

"Not a penny from my coffers shall vou ever have if you brave my displeasure thus." Anthony Minot cried nearly beside himself with anger and disappointment.

"I would rather my life should be beautiful with the love and care of a good man, than to have heaped up for me all the treasures of India. Father, I shall marry Fred on Christmas Day," was the dauntless reply of the beautiful maiden.

Anthony Minot swore that it should not be so, but the fond girl was firm, for she knew she was right and he was wrong; and when the fair Christmas morning broke, draped in its spotless robes as if to honor the deed, Gertrude Minot went forth from her father's house a banished child, to take upon herself the vows which were to make her the cherished bride of Frederick Atherton.

CHAPTER II.

Sixteen years have passed since Anthony Minot discarded from his home the only gleam of sunshine it contained.

Within an humble home, in a quiet street of the great city, there dwells a happy family of five—father, mother, and children three—a son and two beautiful daughters. The father has lain for weeks strick-

The father has lain for weeks stricken with a consuming fever, while the patient, sweet-faced woman whom he calls wife, with a love as measureless as the heavens, has watched and tended him back to life. The countenance of each shines with contentment and affection which show, despite their humble surroundings, that their lives have been full of beauty and peace.

"Fred, what can we do for the children at Christmas?" asks Gertrude Athcrton of her husband, who, now convalescent, reclines upon a couch by the bright fire in the open grate.

The crimson curtains are closely drawn over the windows; the table in the centre of the room is laden with books and a new magazine, upon which the shaded light shines temptingly, and the whole apartment has a look of coziness and home-like comfort that is exceedingly attractive.

A door on the opposite side of the December, 1907.

"It will be just sixteen years on Christmas Day since you and I began the world together, Gertrude," Mr. Atherton said, reaching out and clasping one of her hands. "I had hoped," he added, with a sigh, "to have won the fortune your father demanded before this, but fate seems to have ordained it otherwise, and we are still as poor as we were upon that dow."

poor as we were upon that day." "Poor, Fred !" cried his wife, lightly, and with a little musical laugh; "why, dear, there is not a richer woman in all this great city to-night than I, and I would not exchange our peaceful home, our bright children and your dear love, for untold gold."

"Contentment crowns you queen," said Mr. Atherton, smiling fondly into her bright face.

"Think of the beautiful years we have spent together, Fred. There have been some trials, 'tis true, but most of the time we have been happy; our hearts, notwithstanding our maturer years, are still green and fresh with a love and confidence that can never grow old; our interests and tastes have been the same; we have cultivated our minds, striving to grow wiser as we grow older, and have reared our children in principles of truth and honor—don't regret that we have not accumulated sordid gold, for it might have warped both heart and intellect, making us grasping and avaricious."

"And you have no regret, then, that you cast in your lot with a poor man?" "Not one. I remember your telling father—poor father ! I wonder where he has been all these years—when he was so opposed to our marriage, that 'love was better than gold,' and, Fred, dear, have we not proved it so?"

"Indeed we have, my precious wife, and if God will grant us health, I trust there is much more of comfort and happiness in store for us," Frederick Atherton said, deeply moved by his wife's devotion.

"Where are the children?" he asked, a moment after.

"Ned and Lillie have gone to bed, and Annie went to the chapel with Nellie Hutchins, to rehearse the Christmas carol," replied Mrs. Atherton.

"Dear Annie, what a thoughtful child she is ! I wish we could give her the piano she has so long coveted," the father said, wistfully, with a sigh. "And Ned the set of draughting tools

And Ned the set of draughting tools he wants; while Lillie thinks that only the very largest doll in Madam Pritchard's establishment would make her perfectly happy," Mrs Atherton returned, with a smile, yet her husband's sigh was softly echoed in spite of her assumed cheerfulness.

The noise of a door abruptly closing startled them at this moment, and Mrs. Atherton rising, passed out into the kitchen to ascertain the cause of it.

room leads into the kitchen, through which Annie, the eldest daughter, passed a few moments ago, leaving it slightly ajar; a fact which though seeming so simple in itself, was yet productive of great results, as the future will show.

"I fear we cannot do much, dear; there is only money enough left to defray the current expenses of the coming month," Mr. Atherton said, in reply to his wife's question, a shade of sorrow falling over his pale face.

"It was extremely unkind in Hague & Fales not to reserve your position, when you have served them so faithfully for so many years," returned his wife, a flush of indignant feeling staining her cheek. "Everyone for himself' is their mot-

"Everyone for himself' is their motto, and we cannot help the matter now. I had hoped to be able before this to seek another position, but my strength comes so slowly. I have been a sad burden to you dear, during the last two months," and he heaved a regretful sigh.

The fond wife bent over and touched his white forehead lovingly with her lips, which trembled with tender feel-

"Dear Fred, do not say that; if you must call yourself a 'burden,' say that it is one of blessedness, for had you been taken away from me, the world would never have looked bright to me again," and the sweet, fond tones quivered in remembrance of the dread she had experienced during those last weeks.

There was no one there, and she returned to her chair by her husband's couch.

"It must be that Annie left the outside door ajar when she went out, and the wind has drawn it to," she observed, as she took up the new magazine to read to her companion.

But outside a strange figure was hurrying from the door into the darkness, as if he had been some burglar detected and pursued !

Christmas morning was clear and frosty, but bright and beautiful, and every face in the humble home of the Athertons glowed with happiness and affection.

The "Merry Christmas!" rang as sweetly and cheerfully through those small but home-like rooms, as through the loftiest apartments in the city, while their simple gifts, distributed at the breakfast table, and each one a token of tender love, gave more real pleasure than many of the costly trifles heaped upon the petted darlings of wealth and luxury.

Mr. Atherton seemed so much stronger and better this morning that he delighted his wife and children by saying that he thought he should be able to attend the services of the day at the church only a square distant; and at the appointed hour the bright group were in their places, their hearts beating gratefully and reverently, if not for an abundance of this world's

December, 1907.

The church was decorated in the most beautiful manner, and the services were impressive, while the Christmas carol, sung by twenty-four youths and breath as they entered, for in one maidens, made the grand old arches ring with sweetest melody, and thrilled every heart with its rich notes of gratitude and praise.

In the very last pew, under the gallery, there sat a stranger. He was a small, shriveled, wiry-looking man, but very nicely dressed in finest broadcloth, with seal-skin collar and gloves. His hair was somewhat thin and gray, but closely cut and carefully arranged, and his full beard had evidently been trimmed by a practiced hand. He paid no heed to the services, but his keen and piercing eyes were fastened intently and hungrily upon the Atherton pew, where with reverent hearts and peaceful faces sat the father, mother, and two lovely children. Annie was with the choir, and ever and anon her clear, sweet tones could be detected by the loving ones below.

The services were over at last, and the crowd poured forth, seeking their happy homes, where comfort and joy awaited them.

As Mr. Atherton stepped upon the pavement, his lovely wife upon his arm, some one touched his elbow.

Turning, he saw a man in livery, who, touching his hat respectfully said : "There is a carriage waiting for you, sir.' "There must be some mistake," returned Mr. Atherton, courteously; I have ordered no carriage." "This is Mr. Atherton, is it not?"

asked the coachman.

"Yes, that is my name." "Then it is all right. I have received orders to convey yourself, wife and three children to your home," said the man. Although somewhat surprised at this reply, Mr. Atherton thought it might be the kind attention of some wealthy member of the church, who had seen him there, and, knowing his feeble condition, had considerately commissioned his coachman to take him home.

His face lighted with gratitude and pleasure; a brighter smile curved the lips of his wife at this delicate atten-tion, while Ned and Lillie almost danced for joy, in spite of the sacred ground they were upon.

"How happy I am !" said Annie, a rich flush on her cheek, as they were borne along in the smoothly rolling carriage; and, indeed, each face bespoke the same feeling, and each heart echoed the simple words.

own home, and the mettled steeds assumed a brisker pace. "Perhaps whoever has been so kind as to loan us the carriage, has told the coachman to take us the 'longest way round,' knowing that we do not get such a treat often," he answered, smiling, and enjoying the delight of his children.

peted hall, to a pleasant and attractive drawing-room, and courteously invited them to be seated. The children exclaimed under their corner there stood a tall Christmas tree, decorated in the most beautiful manner, and laden with mysteriouslooking packages, in all sorts of shapes and sizes. "Mamma! do look! what a beautiful piano!" exclaimed Annie, pointing to a handsome Steinway, which stood temptingly open at one end of the room. Not a person had as yet come to greet them, and Mr. and Mrs. Atherton felt, to say the least, extremely queer. "What does this mean, Fred?" Mrs. Atherton asked, with a face that was perfectly blank from astonishment.

"I am sure I am as much in the dark as you can possibly be, dear. Let us wait patiently—perhaps Santa Claus himself may appear next," he returned, smiling, but with a puzzled expression in his eyes. And sure enough it appeared as if he was right, for a gentleman enter-ed the room a moment later, and ap-ed the room a moment later, and ap-proached slowly toward where the husband, and wife were sitting.

He seemed to have just come in from the street, for he still wore his overcoat, and his rich seal-skin collar was drawn closely up around his face.

Mrs. Atherton caught her breath quickly as she saw him, and leaned eagerly forward, as if seeking to obtain a better view of his features.

The old man stopped before the perplexed couple, removed his seal-skin collar and turned his face to the light. Gertrude Atherton arose to her feet and stretched out her hands with a low, joyfuł cry. "Father!" her trembling lips artic-ulated, and she fell into his arms, sobbing like a child.

It was indeed Anthony Minot, the stranger, who, sitting in the rear of the church during the Christmas ser-vices, had kept his eyes fixed so in-tently upon the Atherton family. After his only child had braved his displeasure and gone out into the world as the wife of Frederick Atherton, the lonely and heart-sore father had sold his homestead and possessions, and disappeared from his native place. This had been a great trial to his daughter, who still loved him fondly, and she had heard nothing from him during all the six-teen years of her married life. He had always been a stern, hard

He would not forgive her, and yet Y He would not forgive her, and yet he could not lose sight of her, and, disposing of everything, he had secretly followed the happy husband N' and wife to the city where they had located. Here in his loneliness and isolation he became moody and mis-anthropical; his love of gain develop-ed inordinately, and he fell to hoard-ing his rapidly accumulating wealth. He established himself in miserable lodgings, living in the most niggardly manner and scarcely clothing himself decently. He put his money out at usury, at least a portion of it, and hid every dollar thus gained as fast as it came into his possession. Every year this mania grew upon him, sinking him lower and lower in the social scale, until he became the miserable miser we have already described, living in that wretched attic, where nightly he drew forth his hidÿ den treasures and gloated over them —his bags of gold and silver, his bundles of bills and bonds. J. Ű Anthony Minot was indeed a miser of the most miserly sort. For several N. years he lived this life, when on a certain day, as he was prowling about the streets, he chanced to and with every appearance of having overhear the conversation of those

After a drive of twenty minutes they turned into a quiet pleasant street, and the carriage stopped before a plain but substantial-looking house.

The driver sprang from his seat, let down the steps, opened the door, and then stood waiting for them to alight.

"You have mistaken the locality-this is not where we reside," said Mr. Atherton, flushing slightly, but without moving from his seat.

'There is no mistake, you are expected here, returned the coachman, as if he had received previous orders, and thoroughly understood the role he was to play.

At this moment the door of the dwelling before which they had stop-ped opened, as if some one within had been awaiting their coming, and was eager to welcome them.

Entirely at a loss to understand the meaning of this strange adventure, Mr. Atherton reluctantly alighted, and, followed by his wife and chil-dren, ascended the broad granite steps.

He knew the girl, for he had kept watch upon his daughter's family during all these years. He knew she was happy, although possessed of little of this world's goods. He knew and he could see and hear all that she was living a complete and use-ful life, beautifying her husband's Softly, stealthily pathway, and training her children to honorable manhood and woman-where he could see the inmates, and hood. She was proving every day that "love was better than gold," while he was hoarding up his riches, leading a lonely, loveless existence, He was bowed with shame, he was leading a lonely, loveless existence, and living in abject poverty, with untold wealth in his possession. But that thoughtful, earnest wish of his granddaughter, who was so like her mother in form and feature —those gentle words, "If I could only know that for the twenty-four hours of Christmas Day not a soul of all the multitude was suffering, was unhappy, hungry or cold, I think I should never wish for anything again as long as I should live!"those words had pierced the crust of misanthropy and avarice which had bound him for so long and set him to examining his heart and his life. That wish had included him; for was he not unhappy, cold and hun-gry, and miserable? The child, al-though perhaps unconscious of his existence was withing that he might though perhaps unconscious of his existence, was wishing that he might be happy, was sorrowing because he was lonely, with no one to care for him or love him; she was longing, too, for some of the gold he was hoarding, that she might carry out her generous impulses. Then she had spoken so sorrowfully, yet re-signedly, of her father's sickness and loss of position, and of her little home-made gifts, and her efforts to make the day pass pleasantly to the make the day pass pleasantly to the dear ones at home.

each other, that a sense of his own desolateness had overpowered him, and melted him almost to tears. He had caught her last words, in reply to Nellie's allusion to him as being one of the objects of her charity. "Yes, poor man! he surely looks as if there was not a soul on earth to care for or love him."

In a moment all his wretchedness, his meanness and wickedness in hoarding his glittering treasure rose before him, condemning and humiliating him, as he had never been humiliated before. He had been living in misery and poverty, both of body and soul, warping his nature, be-numbing his intellect, and offending the God who would one day require at his hands the talent lying unemployed and buried in a napkin. He groped his way back to his miserable attic, where he drew forth and looked upon his treasure once more. The sight of it for the time seemed to eradicate all his better impulses, and to arouse again all his miserly instincts; he resisted the whisperings of conscience, hid his gold again, and once more crawled into his miserable bed to sleep.

Their patience in trial, their confidence in and affection for each other, their sorrow for what they could not help, together with their hopefulness for the future, melted his hard heart. He heard their tender wishes for their children's happiness, and the regretful sigh that they could not gratify them; he saw the smile of his Gertrude as she declared that there was not a richer woman in all the great city than she, with her loving husband and dear children;

The abruptly-closing door, as he departed, had been the sound that had startled Mrs. Atherton, who, all unconscious of the invisible guest She had alluded with such infinite she had had, thought no more of it, content to their tender affection for and returned to her husband's side.

> The four days that remained before Christmas were busy ones to the homeless, desolate man, who for sixteen long years had known nothing either of love or care. No one would have recognized in the nicely-dressed individual — his grizzled, tangled locks trimmed and carefully combed, his beard neatly shorn—the miserable miser of that wretched attic.

He bought a good, substantial house, in a quiet, pleasant street. With the aid of competent men he furnished it with everything which could contribute to comfort and beauty—soft carpets, bright and warm, lovely pictures, ornaments and books. He bought a fine piano for the brown-eyed Annie; the most complete set of draughting tools that could be found in the city, and the identical doll that had been the pet Lillie's delight in Madam Pritchard's elegant show window. Everything that could be done in the little time that remained before the great, glad festival of the year was done, and when at length the carriage, which he had provided to bring the family from the church to their new home, arrived, the old man, his heart overflowing with love, and tenderness, and gratitude, had to go away from the window where he had been watching for them, and sob out by himself the burden of his joy. His happy Gertrude spoke no word of reproach for the past, no word of blame for his harshness to her, and it was the happiest moment of his life when, with a tender, loving smile, she beckoned her children forward, and bade them greet their grandfather. It seemed as if their kisses were the sweetest caresses his lips had ever known, and their bright faces and sparkling eyes the loveliest picture he had ever looked upon. Space will not permit a description of the sumptuous dinner awaiting them, nor of the house over which he conducted them when the meal was ended. "This is to be your home in the fu-ture, you young blessings," Anthony Minot said to the happy children, when shone through the windows, seemed they had returned to the parlor again,

I am no better than they make 'em. I have blue eyes, brown hair and am fairly good looking. "Lonely One." often the fault lies with the husband. Another thing which has struck me very forcibly, as it has done a good many more of your readers. A Few Observations on "Woman."

Regina, Nov. 15th, 1907. Editor.—I am an interested reader of your magazine and find the correspon-dence pages quite bright and enter-taining. Some of the writers possess a fair amount of foresight and others are far too anxious to obtain a husband or wife. It appears to me that a number of young women have only one ambition and that is for each to get married just as soon as she can find a young man who is fairly decent, one whom she thinks she may be able to respect

she thinks she may be able to respect and perhaps love, in time. A great fault with young mar-ried women, after they have been mar-ried a short time they become untidy and careless with their household work. A man enjoys seeing his wife look tidy after her work is done, but some women argue that woman's work is never done, but they forget man works hard when he is at it.

hard when he is at it. It is a woman's duty to try and ap-pear cheerful and tidy, and to make her home as attractive as possible, but some women will look on the black side of everything, so greeting her husband with a melancholy appearance, she will find he will soon seek comforts and pleasure clearbare which is not to he asure elsewhere. which is not to be comment is not necessary. One point which is essential to the completion of a happy home is a woman who is a fairly good plain cook and it is not necessary to be a professional as some seem to fancy. I have more than often observed most young ladies and several gents do not forget to impress upon you they are considered good looking, but this is a great mistake with our fair sex, as that does not always attract men unless, you possess the other qualifications that go to make a good wife. A girl of a nice disposition and perhaps of plain appearance often wins a man over where beauty has failed and then it is quite a common thing to hear friends say: what can he see in her, but when you have become acquainted and you have accepted the invitation to spend on a their little home. then you have become acquainted and you have accepted the invitation to spend an evening at their little home, then you discover that he was marrying, not her beauty but her abilities and her pleasant disposition. Photography is another of my favorite hobbies, but since I have been in this country I have done none of it of it.

I am a Western bachelor of 32, of temperate habits, and own some good property. I would like to hear from some good girl of suitable age matri-monially inclined. Anyone who cares to write can find out more about me. I live on the coast of British Colum-bia; it is a very healthy country and has a very mild climate. Wages are good. There is plenty of fine scenery and the inside route from Vancouver north between Vancouver Island and the mainland is a fine place to cruise. There are islands and bays on all sides and it is a most pleasant place to cruise in a launch. The islands are covered with a heavy growth of fir and cedar, hemlock, etc. Deer are very plentiful and there are several varieties of fish that are easily caught with hook and line. It is an ideal varieties of fish that are easily caught with hook and line. It is an ideal country to camp in in the summer time and a good country to get work in at the best wages. Common laborers get $3.00 to $4.00 per day. Either girls or men who want work can find no better place to come to than Western B .C. The climate is mild in the winter, very little or no snow in the valleys, and it very seldom gets below the freezing point in the winter. The summers are cool and plenty of bright

Two Girls of One Hind.

Two Girls of One Mind. Moore Park, Man., Aug. 15, 1997. The filter.—Will you make room in your valuable paper for two of the pretilest girls in Moore Park? We live on a farm and have everything up-to-data. We are 5 feet, 8 inches in height, very slender, and as graceful as a swan. One of us is fair and the other dark. We are splendid housekeepers now, but will improve with age, as we are not old by any means. We can sing, play plano, dance, skate, ride horseback and can do almost anything under the sun that any refined lady can do. Our ideal man must be tall and plenty of money. No farmers or counter jumpers need apply for us, as nothing less than a banker, lawyer, con-ductor or an engineer can get us. We would like an auto as a mode of conveyance, but if our ideals prefer ing team of drivers, that will suit us just as well. We might add in closing that we are just as well. We might add in closing that we are of a very kind and loving disposition and will make any of the above said gentlemen happy who takes us for a partner in life. If any of the gentle-men mentioned care to write. our names will be with the Editor and we will be pleased to answer letters from the same, but will not. under any circum-stances, answer letters from the other kind mentioned. "Two Squashes."

can cook a good meal. I have some freckles but they are all on my neck. I can recite and play lovely on the jew's harp. I am working in a cheese factory but that will close down this fall, so I want to get married soon. I should like to hear from "Plow Boy," "Fancy Frank," or a "Temperance Man." "Lottie."

Irish Inquires for "Eandsome Maiden."

Millet, Alta., Aug. 13, 1907. Editor.—I am very much pleased to be a subscriber to your magazine. I think it is the best I ever read, espec-ially your correspondence page, which is quite interesting to us bachelors. Will you please forward me the name and address of the girl who signs "Handsome Malden." In your August number. She said it is with the editor. "Irish."

Wants Her Fat, Fair and Forty.

Calgary, Alta., Aug. 27, 1907. Editor.—Being a subscriber, and a good old one, I venture to ask your as-sistance to help put me in communica-tion with a good woman. I find the letters in the correspond-emos columns interesting, some amus-ing, especially letters from those that figure as educated, refired damsels dic-tating their terms if they become the wife of a poor rancher in a new coun-try. try.

wife of a poor rancher in a new coun-try. "Peggy McCarthy's" letter in August is a true sample of this new woman specimen. Some of those dainty dames deserve the garret cat and parrot. Edu-cation, accomplishments, grace of form and feature are all thistledown in the shake, compared to the girl that can render you some assistance out and in for a few years until you get a little bit into shape. We read that the Creator gave Adam a helpmate. How much help could a wife give a young chap starting on a farm who objected to do a chore boy's work occasionally? A man coming home from town late, the cows to col-lect and milk, himself and the pigs ravenous, it will require something more than a tune on the plano and a tale about feeding the dear little chicks to soothe the breast. Dolls in glass cases and the doukhobors hitching their wives to the plow are the two ex-tremes and if any husky maiden fair, fat and forty cares to accept the happy medium, I shall be glad to correspond with her with a view to matrimony. "Roble Ranteltree, Calgary."

Farmer's Daughter Likes Canadian Jack.

Gilpen, Alta, Aug. 22, 1907. Editor.—I have been reading the let-ters in the correspondence columns for some time and certainly find them very interesting. I am a young girl of 17 years of age, 5 feet 1½, inches in height, weigh 165 pounds. I have brown hair and brown eyes. I don't mind milking two or three cows. I am a real good cook and I live on a farm. I like Canadian Jack's letter of June 19th, of Baldur, Man. If he would please write first I will write him. "Farmer's Daughter."

Throws Out Her Lines.

Alberta, Aug. 25, 1907. Editor.—I have been a reader of your valuable paper for some time. I think that a woman was not made to be a slave, and that if she keeps the house in good order that is enough without working out of doors and if a man vorking out of doors and if a man thinks enough of his wife he will not let her do so. I also think that some of the young ladies are hard on the young bachelors.

best. I have always had a lively time and do not think it is for money that most of the girls leave old friends, but for the one who can give them the best time, and I hope they use discre-tion in character. I should like to cor-respond with a respectable young man, should this ever be published, as I hope it will. "Mira."

Twenty-Five and Sensible.

Twenty-Five and Sensible. Cordova, Man., Aug. 30, 1907. Editor.—I have read with interest the letters in the W. H. M. and have de-cided to join the rest. I think that your paper is doing a great work for the bachelors of this country. There are several bachelors around here who would make lovely busbands for a good woman. I don't agree with those girls who say the boys all drink or use tobacco. I know several young men who do not either drink or use tobacco, and have read good homes.

A how several young men who do not either drink or use tobacco, and have real good homes. I have been reading some of the let-ters in the last paper and see several letters from girls about sixteen and nineteen. I should just like to say, fair sisters, be careful what you are doing. I do not believe that girls should get married until they are twenty-one years old. I live in a f d part of the country and can keep house as well as any one, I have been told. I am counted fairly good looking, but have lots of faults. I don't think there are many without faults. I am not over twenty-five and have a good home. I would not marry any man I did not know well, but would not mind answering a few correspondents if any one thinks it worth while writing to me. "Melba No. 2."

Brandon, Aug. 28, 1907. Editor.—I am a reader of your mag-azine and find some of the correspond-ence very interesting as well as help-ful.

I would like to correspond with some nice young ladies between eighteen and nice young ladies between eighteen and twenty-one years, who would write first and exchange pictorial post cards. Now I will tell you something about myself. I am 6 feet tall and have blue eyes and brown hair, have a farm and nice little home. I will now close, hoping this will find its way into the magazine. Alberta, Aug. 16, 1907. Editor.—I have been an interested reader of the W. H. M., especially the correspondence column. I like "Boston Boy's" letter and agree that some of the girls are hard on the bachelors, even though they do not ask for our sympathy. For myself I always wonder how Winnipeg, Oct. 21, 1907. Editor.—I am one of the numerous readers of your excellent magazine. Lately I have taken great interest in the columns devoted to correspondence.

Now, I am a city girl, engaged in business, but I hope that fact won't make the bachelor farmers curl their lips. I have reason to think that I am just as well domesticated as any country-bred girl.

I cannot say that I have any special accomplishments although I sing and can play the piano a little. My age is 19, I am tall, with a good figure, brown hair, hazel eyes and a clear complexion. If any bachelor wishes to write to me he can do so, although I won't say I am matrimonially inclined (just yet). I only say that he must be tall and dark and must be a total abstainer.

I turned my attention to teaching, which I found to be neither very re-munerative nor healthy. I had the pleasure of being the model young man of the neighborhood and was always chosen leader of all religious and literary work, which was very nice as far as it went. There was very nice as far as it went. There was not the build-ing up of a home in it. My atten-tion was then attracted to the wonder-ful opportunities of Western Canada, which, I find was not exaggerated in the least, with its wonderful soil and its invigorating climate and free land. All a man has to do is to apply a little brain and brawn and his realization of a home is in easy reach as far as ma-terialism is concerned. I am a disciple of such literary men as Emerson, Philips and Spencer. Of course, I miss my old literary associates, but we can't have things always as we want them. My intentions now are to build up one of the happiest and best homes in one of the happiest and best homes in Canada, for my idea of home life is very high although my ways and habits are very plain and common. Should this meet the eyes of any of the fairer sex of similar ideas who are not averse to the duties of a farm life, I would be pleased to hear from them.

Would get her an organ or piano if she desired one or any other musical instrument she could play. I am 1½ miles from post office and 6½ miles from the railroad. Strathcona, Alta, Oct. 12, 1907. Editor.—Having been a reader of the W. H. M. since I came to this country and taking great interest in the corre-spondence, I hope you will give a small space to this letter.

I am a young man, 22 years of age, about 5 feet 6½ inches in height. I think I am fairly good looking but nothing to be proud of and I am afraid not an ideal man. I want to try and find out why all the young ladies want the farming bachelors and not give us a thought in the towns. I am a bricklayer and have not seen good as the farmers. I am here to try and build a home in the West and would like to corre-spond with some young lady who would not object to writing to bricky. I am not on the lookout for a wife and when I am I do not want someone who can milk cows, feed pigs and in fact do the work of a hired man like some of your farming hachelors who some of your farming bachelors who write in the W. Sturgeonville, Oct. 28, 1907. Editor .--- I am a subscriber to your paper and am much interested in the columns given to correspondence. I think it is an item of credit to your valuable paper and should do much good in finding life partners for "we lone bachelors."

In reading the July number today 1 was much attracted by the letter of "Blonde No. 1," and I would like very much to correspond with her. I notice it is the custom for all young men to describe themselves, although I can't do this very aptly. I will try it and you must pardon if it is not satsfactory.

I am about 6 feet high, dark, and am considered by most people as good-looking. I have a valuable homestead and could provide a wife with a good home. I should want a jolly companion as I am very fond of company and a good time. "Jolly Pete."

your July number from the lady call-ing herself "Trixie," from Manitoba, which is, in my opinion, a very sensible letter, and I wish you would forward the enclosed letter to her as she certainly holds my views on the matrimedial cuestion. Why should the matrimonial question. Why should a young man waste the best years of his life striving alone to make a living when he could, if he only tried, pick out a congenial companion to make his life both brighter and happier while he is making a home for a future generation. I do not claim to be rich, but I have good prospects and look at the bright side of life, for we ought to be cheerful at all times, always preferring a smile to a frown. I am not ugly. I am 26 years of age and look and feel younger; am of fair complexion, blue eyes, 5 feet 10 inches tall and weigh 150 pounds. Am very fond of music and like the refinement of the fair sex. Meaford, Ont., Oct. 11, 1907. Editor.—Through the many various ways of becoming acquainted with one another we find that correspondence is a very pleasant one. I am a subscriber of the W. H. M.

and like to read it very much. If there is a little room in some corner for this, my thoughts, I would like to see it appear some time.

Please forward the enclosed letter to "Canadian Rose." I think her letter is very suitable for me and especially the last sentence.

I am a young man of 5 feet and 10 inches, weigh about 158 pounds and have fine health. I am strictly temperance and am a member of the society of friends. I am on the sunny side of 20 by over 2 years. I would be pleased to exchange photos with any pretty I would be pleased to hear from a few thousand dollars in the bank.

We've All Got Our Faults.

Didsbury, Alta., Oct. 25, 1907. Editor.—I have for some time been an interested reader of the correspondence page in the Western Home Monthly and would like to have a word to say also. I think the place where "Woman's Friend" lives must be very different from here. Here there are more girls who are no good than there are men. Most of the men around here are nice, Most of the men around farmers. sober and hard working farmers.

I was well pleased with "Square Deal's" letter. I think if he comes up to the mark as well as his ideal he would be a first rate gentleman, as his ideal will surely be (if he finds her) a first rate lady. I do not like the members of my own sex who are always after the bachelors for their faults. We all have faults and if we would pay more attention to our own and leave others alone we might get along better.

"One of the Clan."

Tenby, Man., Oct. 21, 1907. Editor.—I have been reading your valuable paper since New Year and like it very much. I especially enjoy reading the correspondence columns.

I live near a very small village consisting of one store, post office, a school and several houses. I am 17 years old, am 5 feet 2 inches high, weigh 120 pounds, have fair hair and blue eyes. I have always lived on a farm and like the country. I like cattle and chickens very much. I think that "Woman's Friend" was a little bit wrong, but I think that she is getting roasted a little too much and if I were a bachelor I would leave her alone. I would like to correspond and 25 years old. "Wood Violet." and 25 years old.

Are You a Good, Steady Farmer?

Lloydminster, Alta., Oct. 13, 1907. Editor .--- I have for some time been a reader of your valuable paper and have been very much interested in the correspondence columns. After reading the letters in the July number, I have decided to join in the ranks.

I am 23 years of age, 5 feet 6 inches tall and weigh 120 pounds. I have a dark complexion, brown eyes and dark hair. I have a good education, having taken a course in the medical college. At present I am living on a farm, as I find that no life is so enjoyable as that of the country, therefore, I should like to get in touch with some good steady farmer, who neither drinks nor smokes. I am a good cook, can milk and make myself generally useful about the farm.

joy myself, too. I am not pretty, neither am I very homely. I have lived in the city but prefer the country. Am not afraid of work; can neither milk cows nor play the piano, but can keep a house clean and cook a meal.

I would like to correspond with a young man who has lots of ambition, not afraid to do any kind of work. Don't care how much he is worth financially. There are lots of bachelors around here but they are too old for me and not anxious to marry. Perhaps "Casey" in July number would have some sympathy for me as his is a similar case. I am a Protestant. "Nora."

Wild Charlie Not Particular.

Tuxford, Oct. 14, 1907. Editor .-- I am a very interested reader of your magazine and I am proud of some of the letters in the correspondence columns and the good work that's going on between the young girls and the Western bachelors. I am a farmer myself but not a bachelor. I have a farm of 480 acres six miles from Tuxford, Sask. My sister has kept house for me for the past two years and I am sorry to say she has got married and I am in need of a housekeeper. I am an Ontario boy of 23 years of age and stand 5 feet 10 inches high and weight 165 pounds. I have a dark complexion and heavy black head of hair. My father is well known and a well-todo farmer 18 miles west of Toronto. I do not indulge in liquor or use tobacco in any form. I do not pretend to be very religious but attend services as regular as possible. I am jolly and full of fun and believe in having a good time. I would be pleased to correspond with some young lady between 20 and 25 years of age. Anyone may get my full name from the editor. I would be pleased to exchange photos or call at young ladies' homes or where they reside.

Please put me in correspondence with some young lady as soon as possible. Twin Sisters, of Ebor, Man., who had a letter in W. H. M. will do. Please print this in your wonderful paper as it might cheer the heart of some poor girl that's tramping the streets of some city or town and has no home and doesn't know where her next meal is coming from. "Wild Charlie."

Wants Wife to Help His Mother.

Editor.-As I am not a subscriber for Central Butte, Oct. 18, 1907.

I have my mother with me at present. I have my mother with me at present. She is keeping house for me, but she is not with me all the time, so when she is gone it makes more work for me as keep a hired man through the sum-I keep a hired man through the sum-mer. My mother is very good to get along with if she is use right, and she is a good cook and will show a good girl how to cook if she doesn't know how and is willing to learn and not too lazy. The reason I want to get a wife is because the work is too hard for her to do alone and it would be lots easier on her to have help.

to do alone and it would be lots easier on her to have help. Now, I would like a girl between 21 and 24, between 5 feet 3 or 5 inches in height, well built, good looking, weigh-ing somewhere around 140 pounds, with good character and nice parents. If she should have a brother 10 or 12 wors old that is a good how and will do chores around the house and barn and go to school, I will do well by him if she will bring him along. Of course, I want to see both before I marry. I will exchange photos first. No girl

I will exchange photos first. No girl that isn't nice need write. Now, about myself. I am not pretty nor very bad looking. I do not use liquoratall; I smoke, but don't chew, never smoke in the house; don't dance because I can't learn, and don't know anything about playing cards, and you will always find me houset. This is will always find me honest. This is a lot to say, but it is all the truth and if you ever have any dealings with me you will find me right. Now, I have described the kind of a girl I want and if I can't find one to answer my description I will go without. I will never ask a woman to milk unless I am away from home nor feed pigs, calves or any other animal, as I think a woman has all she can do if she keeps the house tidy, and she must be a neat housekeeper.

I have a large camera and lots of supplies which I make plenty of money with, taking views through the country. I would also teach the girl how to take pictures and give her the machine. I also have a nice horse and buggy which I will let her drive at all times when there is no work to be done and she has time. Now, I am giving a nice girl a chance to win a home if she wants it, and would ike to hear from some one that means to do right. Send photo in your letter and you will receive one by return mail. Goods Delivered Without Charge

N order to put Mail Order customers on precisely the same footing as City Shoppers, and give them every advantage of Toronto styles and prices, we will pay all the cost of sending goods from the Store to their nearest Railway Station in Ontario and the Eastern Provinces, and as far West as Winnipeg, on all orders of $25 or over. There are one or two necessary exceptions in the case of extra heavy goods, of which our Catalogue gives full particulars.

Whatever advantage there is to enormously big stocks, exclusive styles, and close prices, is at the service of every family, with freight or express charges fully prepaid. The further fact that we handle only reliable goods gives every assurance of satisfaction, and Toronto's reputation for style adds to the attractiveness of our special delivery offer.

Politeness: Hall Mark of Good Breeding.

By HELEN OLDFIELD.

the degeneracy of the present day and generation find nothing in which is has so sadly deteriorated as the stately courtesy formerly observed toward women by all men who claimed to be gentlemen. Sir Charles Grandison and Lord Chesterfield have left no heirs to their punctilious politeness, and to those who regret them the world answers, if it answers at all, that life is too short and too strenuous for such fine manners. The man who is hurrying to catch a car or a ferry boat has no time to doff his hat and make stately bows; a hasty nod is all that he can spare to his dearest friend, under penalty of being too late.

December, 1907.

Perhaps the world is right, and society may have caught the infection of the mad hurry which, it is claimed, is one of our American characteristics. Yet against this theory stands the fact that American men, rush as they may, are by far more courteous to women, as such, than the men of other nations. One may seek in vain upon the boulevards and in the buses of Paris for the French politenessness of which one reads so much, and an American woman, for several months resident in London, declares that only once in all that time was she the recipient of ordinary politeness from a stranger, when an ex-army officer stood aside to let her precede him into a "lift" at The Army and Navy Stores.

Undoubtedly it is true that he who has one set of manners for company and another for every day never can be thoroughbred; the mask of behav-iour will slip aside sometimes, and the true man beneath will be revealed. The iron hand of business will forget. to don the velvet glove worn for society, and the roughness will be felt by those whom one wishes to please. But does this account for all of it? Are not the women themselves responsible for whatever lack of courtesy they may meet from men? In the first place the foundation is laid and the earliest seeds are sown in the nursery where women hold absolute sway. The boy who is allowed to be rude to his sister and disrespectful to his mother cannot reasonably be expected in after years to be polite and courteous to other women. It may seem hard that the boy should yield always, yet if the rights of the weak as such are not respected we must perforce go back to the motto of Rob Roy: "Let him take who hath the power; it is for him to keep who can." No one who takes note of the free and easy manners of the girls of the period-misses still in short dresses, or in their first long frocks, hail-fellow-well-met with all the boys of their acquaintance--can wonder that the lads so treated treat them in turn the same way; that it never occurs to them that gentleness and courtesy should be the first attributes of every man in his dealings with women. There never was, nor will be, any better definition of the word "gentleman" than the old one, which, if well worn, has also worn well: "As gentle as a woman and as manly as a man." "The shrieking Sisterhood," clamouring for equality between the sexes, have a large share of responsibility. Leaving, aside, altogether, the question of "women's rights," as also that |

Old fashioned people who bewail | whether the rare individual, a perfectly healthy woman, is or is not the physical equal of man; as the case stands he possesses the advantage, and "with a fair field and no favour" the woman must go to the wall. Human nature is undeniably selfish; consideration for others is a virtue which is acquired, not born, and although most men who deserve the name are ready to succour and defend that which appeals to them for protection, there are few or none who care to be always. giving up when they receive no thanks for so doing. Therefore, when a map finds that his sacrifice of self is accepted as a right, not as a favor, he is apt to hesitate before making it the next time. If a woman fails to thank the man who surrenders his seat in a street car to her, he is more than likely to make her ungraciousness an excuse for keeping his place thereafter, and the rudeness of the one woman may thus recoil upon another to whom the rest would be a charity. Yet a man may be tired, in spite of his boasted masculine strength, and it is not always easy to tell what women are able to stand and who are not.

It may be laid down as a rule that the woman who thoroughly respects herself will command respect from others, whatever her situation or occupation in life. Such self-respect, which by the way is no bit aggressive, invests its possessor with a quiet dig nity which is like unto the invisible and invulnerable garment of the old fairy tales; an armor which opposed no perceptible barrier, yet which was, everywhere and under all circum-stances, an efficient protection to its wearer. The girl of the period is prone to undervalue this shield of quiet womanly dignity, to be loud and push-ing if not actually fast. Much of this tendency is due to the natural exuberance of youth, and much to careless training from thoughtless mothers. Then, too, the woman who has her own way to make in the world is too apt to think that she must "Be bold, be bold, and everywhere be bold," ignoring the fact that always upon some doors is written: "Be not too bold." A girl may pass through such an ordeal safely, and profit instead of losing irremediably by her mistakes. Moreover the tomboy may outgrow her exuberance and settle down into a sober, staid matron who shall do her duties to the full as well as her neighbor who has been demure and quiet through her entire girlhood. Then, too, the women who are forced out the world of men in order to earn into the world of men in order to earn a living often lose the aid and comfort which the men might give them, by the aggressive, half defiant manner in which they claim to be able to stand alone, yet lean heavily, all the time demanding the rights of a man while assuming all the privileges of a wo nan. When Anna Dickenson first lectured in Philadelphia upon woman suffrage in Philadelphia upon woman suffrage she one afternoon entered a crowded street car. Her lectures had been well advertised and her picture on posters was familiar to every one. Miss Dickinson stood before a meek looking man who was seated, and "fixed him with her eye." Presently he inquired: "You are Miss Anna Dickinson, ain't

It is passing strange that so many It is passing strange that so many women fail to perceive that in point of fact it PAYS to be womanly. The women whom the world honors, who have obtained not only notoriety, but distinction, have always remembered their womanhood. Unfortunately brass in some circles passes readily in lieu of better coin and so women in lieu of better coin, and so women, with small ability and much strength of purpose, who must earn their own living or starve, follow the example of the woman in Scripture who, we are told, succeeded with an unjust judge "because of her importunity," and strive to their utmost to push themselves into success where else they know such to their cost, and it is they who bring discredit upon women in journalism, and cause editors to dread the sight of a rusty black gown, or an M.S. over an unfamiliar feminine name.

To hark back to the beginning: The remedy for all these evils lies within the reach of the women them-selves, and it is in the nursery that the reform must begin. From their earliest years children should be watched and taught politeness to each other as well as to their elders. "Thank you," and "If you please," should be early words and late, taught to the babies with the prayer at, the mother's knee, and used not only for show but among themselves as household words. The stately manners of our ancestors—when a within the reach of the women themmanners of our ancestors—when a child, although grown to man's es-tate, dared not sit down in the pres-ence of a parent without that parent's gracious permission to do so; when a lady in company was illbred did she touch the back of her chair—are gone, neither are they to be regret-ted; but politeness is not stiffness, and courtesy is by no means to be confounded with rigid ceremony.

An inspector on his regular rounds rang a bell at the door of a small dwelling. A little tot, acting as maid, opened the door, and the following colloquy took place: "Tell your mother that the water inspector would like to see her." "Yes, sir. But will you please turn your back?" "What? Will I please do what?" "Just turn your back a moment, sir;

"Just turn your back a moment, sir; for I don't want to shut the door in your face."

Some men seem born A STORMY CAREER. to a stormy career. Cromwell was born in a storm and died amid one of the greatest storms that ever swept over England. Charles Stewart Parnell died in an hour when a great storm passed over Ireland. Napoleon, too, made his exit from the world in an hour when the angry waves of the sea beat high and tempestuous on the rocky island of his captivity. Knight, in his history of England, says: "At St. Helena, on the 5th day of May, 1821, died Napoleon Bonaparte. A hurricane swept over the island as he was dying, shaking houses to their foundation and tearing up the largest trees. To Napoleon the war of the elements seemed as if "the noise of battle hurtled in the air," and he died uttering the words "Tete d' Armee."

you read his story of the life of Napoleon? Perhaps he is not always to be relied upon, but what he says is always expressed in an interesting way. Bourrienne remarks: "At that time, when he saw glory and power augmenting, he said to me in one of our walks at Malmaison, in a moment of hilarity, and clapping me on the shoulder, 'Well, Bourrienne, you also will be immortal!—'Why, General?'—'Are you not my secretary?'—'Tell me the name of Alexander's' said I. Bonaparte then turned to me and laugh-ingly said, 'Hem! that is not bad.'" Napoleon had always a lingering thought in his mind that the memory of his earthly achievements would not last beyond ten centuries. He remarked, "at the end of ten centuries a page or paragraph in an enclyclopaedia will be sufficient to tell the story of my life." It may be so.

Napoleon's favorite word DUTY VS. GLORY. was "Duty." Napoleon

"tore the heart out of glory." Wellington enthroned the word "Duty." Samuel Smiles, the well-known English writer, calls attention to this fact in one of his books in the following words: "Napoleon's aim was 'chory;' Wellington's watchword, like Nel-son's, was 'Duty.' The former word, it is said, does not once occur in his dispatches; the latter often, but never accompanied by any high sounding professions. The greatest difficulties could neither embarrass nor intimidate Wellington; his energy invariably rising in proportion to the obstacles to be surmounted. The patience, the firmness, the resolution, with which he bore himself through the maddening vexations and gigantic difficulties of the peninsular campaigns, is perhaps, one of the sublimest things to be found in history. In Spain, Wellington not only exhibited the genius of the general, but the comprehensive wisdom of the statesman.

He actually believed the star of good tiny." fortune hung, suspended, immediately over his own head. He makes constant reference to his "star," as the following incident will illustrate: "Napoleon, looking out through a window, as one of his Marshals was advising him against the Russian campaign, asked his counsellor to look at the sky and see Napoleon's star there. 'I see no star,' said the Marshall. 'I do,' said Napoleon, and impatiently shut the window." Napoleon's star of destiny did him good service 4 until he began to depend upon it. Napoleon was lucky until he began to depend on his luck. An ounce of pluck is better than a ton of luck.

Napoleon was the author of THE HEAVIEST the famous saying: "God is ARTILLERY. on the side of the heaviest artillery." Such a statement is an incarnation of practical infidelity. Dr. Talmage calls attention to the fact that Napoleon's career was the best contradiction of the proverb coined by the great warrior. The great preacher says, "At Waterloo, the one hundred and sixty guns of the English overcame the two hundred and fifty guns of the French. God is on the side of the right, and one man in the right will eventually be found stronger than six hundred men in the wrong."

Fame came to Napoleon at NAPOLEON AT an early age. Youthful in TWENTY-FOUR. appearance and youthful in years he found himself in command of men much his superior in years and experience. How to retain his appointments and how to secure the respect of generals ten and twenty years older than himself became a question of vital importance. He says, "My extreme youth when I took command of the Army of Italy made it necessary for me to evince great reserve of manners and the utmost severity of mortals. This was indispensable to enable me to sustain authority over men so greatly superior in age."

Napoleon was the incarnation NAPOLEON'S of audacity. He had one great AUDACITY. characteristic which belongs to military leadership, namely, daring. This was apparent even in civil affairs. You could always depend on Napoleon to do the unusual thing. In Abbotts' history of Napoleon we read the following: "The Senate had chosen and proclaimed him emperor. The pope was brought from Italy to consecrate the ceremony of coronation. The pope anointed the emperor, blessed the sword and sceptre, and as he approached to take up the crown, Napoleon firmly and with dignity took it in his own hand and placed it himself upon his head. This characteristic act produced an indescribable effect upon the assembly."

Napoleon was quick to "CANNONADE THE recognize an opportunity. Wellington said it ICE." was not safe to make a mistake in the presence of Napoleon. He was sure to recognize every false step and to avail himself of every wrong move on the part of the enemy. An American writer in emphasizing this characteristic remarks: "A characteristic incident, which reveals by a flash the source of the terror that Napoleon's name inspired in Europe, occurred at the close of this battle. Broken battalions of the enemy were escaping across the ice covering a small lake. The French were firing at them, yet letting them get away. The Emperor, who meant that this victory sould be so crushing as not to call for a second, galloped to the front, his eyes ablaze. 'You are losing time, firing at men! he exclaimed, 'can-nonade the ice!' They broke the ice with cannon balls, and, according to some accounts, twenty thousand Russians and Austrians were engulfed!"

Napoleon was small, SMALL OF STATURE. stout and stocky. He had the brain of a king, but the body of a mechanic. On horseback he looked commanding, but no position in the parlor or drawing-room would lend him grandeur. All men are equal in the things which they look. If you have wealth, I have health. What you have I lack. What you lack, I have. Thus the need of one man fits the surplus strength of another. Dr. Lord says concerning Napoleon: "He would have made great sacrifices to have added three inches to his height. He walked on tiptoe. His costumes were studied to form a contrast with the circle which surrounded him, by extreme simplicity or extreme elegance. Talma taught him attitudes."

Thomas Carlyle once GREATNESS AND asked, "Where can sleep HAPPINESS. be bought?" The tired author would purchase sleep for his weary body and racked brain. Of what value is fame, and glory, and honor, and power, and position, and authority if they cannot purchase peace, rest and happiness? The truth is, the man who gains a throne must guard it. Ah! There's the rub. "Napoleon, while yet emperor of France, sat down dejected, his hands over his face. A lad came in with a tray of food and said: 'Eat, it will do you good.' The emper-or looked up and said: 'You are from the country?' The lad replied, 'Yes.' 'Your father has a cottage and a few acres of ground?" 'Yes.' 'There is happiness,' said the dejected emperor."

Napoleon had some NAPOLEON'S "STAR." strange notions concerning himself. He evidently regarded himself as "a man of des-

They tell the story of Napoleon that once he ordered a mechanic to make a coat of mail. When the artisan had completed it, he delivered it to the emperor. Napoleon thereupon said to the mechanic, "Put it on!" And then Napoleon, taking a pistol fired shot after shot at the man, thus testing the quality and character of his work. The coat of mail stood the test and the honest mechanic was generously rewarded. But what an illustration of the directness of genius! The man of genius knows the main point and finds it at once.

N a p oleon A FAVORITE CHARACTER. seems to be a favorite of every student of history. You can scarcely finda historian who has not made some reference, directly or indirectly, to his tremendous achievements. Here is a suggestive clipping from the writings of Dr. John Lord, author of "The Beacon Lights of History:" "Napoleon always made use of the same quotations, which he must have drawn from a few books, especially abridgments. His heroes were Alexander, Caesar, and Charlemagne. He laid great stress on aristocratic birth and the antiquity of his own family. He had no other regard for men than a foreman in a manufactory feels for his work-people. In private, without being amiable, he was good-natured. His sisters got from him all they wanted. Simple and easy in private life, he showed himself to little advantage in the great world. Nothing could be more awkward than he in a drawing-room."

Napoleon was doubt-FAREWELL, FRANCE, less cruel and with-FAREWELL! out a deep human affection. That he was a mortal without a conscience goes without saying. In him the moral qualities seem to be absolutely lacking. And yet he seems to have a strange fascination for us. We cannot refuse to study the story of his startling career. Perhaps the sad ending of his life is the thing which holds our attention. Behold him! A captive on his way to St. Helena. Jacob Abbott says: "Beholding the receding vision of his native land he uncovered his head, bowed to the distant hills, and said, with deep emotion, 'Land of the brave, I salute thee! Farewell! France, farewell!""

Newspapers and Political Parties.

One of the signs of the times is the steady nd deliberate breaking away from the party braldom which more and more marks the leading newspapers of Canada. There are very few id-line "party organs" left. In both political arties the movement away from unwavering nd unreasoning partyism has been gaining orce alike among the people and in the Press. Iewspapers, like individual citizens, still range hemselves as Liberal or Conservative, according their antecedents or preferences or political ympathies; but the line or the degree of upport they give either to a measure or to a colitician is not a matter of course, but of deberate and responsible choice.—Toronto Globe.

The Seven Lean Years.

The recent discoveries of Brugsch Bey in connection with the Egyptian hieroglyphics which he deciphered are the subject of an article in the Oesterreichische Wochenschift, in which the writer says that it is no longer difficult to understand the origin of the "seven lean years" narrative in the book of Genesis. The inscriptions as translated by Brugsch show that 1,700 years before the Christian era the Nile for seven consecutive years did not overflow, and famine, pestilence and misery followed. "We know," says the writer, "that the date of the seven lean years of fruitlessness mentioned in Genesis was 1700 B. C., and thus what has been looked upon as a fancy has through these hieroglyphics become a matter of history. The failure of the Nile to overflow, the withering of the vegetation, the lands devoid of crops, famine and the consequent scourges are all depicted in the pictures which the student has been able to decipher."-New York Tribune.

Japan Preparing a World's Fair.

The Government has officially received Japan's invitation to participate in the great national exposition at Tokio in 1912, an enterprise whose line has never before been seen in the Orient. and for which Japan has been preparing for a year or more with the intention of making the exposition rival in attractiveness anything of the sort previously held. The Tokio Fair has been in itself a sufficient answer to those who have imagined that Japan contemplated warlike adventures in the near future. The Japanese Government is to finance the exposition, and is already resolved to spend $10,000,000 upon it. That money would build a first-class battleship of the largest size, and no Government thinking of war would spend it on an exposition of the arts of peace. A trip to Japan in 1912 should be anticipated with pleasure by thousands who will be able to take advantage of the low transportation rates of that year. The period of the great show will embrace the seasons of the cherry blossom, and the chrysanthemum. - London Times.

Political Vituperation.

This is not a new vice under the sun, but its age does not give it any measure of decency or attractiveness. In reading recently a splendidlywritten monograph on the growth and establishment of responsible government in Canada, we were struck with the fact that the politicians of the old school knew how to belittle and besmirch their opponents, and that, evidently, their knowledge of how to do it had come with much practice and a genuine liking for the talk. Men whom the verdict of history has given high and honorable place among the true statesmen of our land were, fifty or sixty years ago, branded with nearly every doubtful and unsavory epithet in the calendar. The mud-slingers of those days now cut a somewhat ungracious, not to say foolish, figure in the light of what the years have brought forth. And yet mud-slinging has continued to be the chief art and occupation of not a few politicians right up to the present time.—Christian Guardian.

The "Treating" Evil and Prohibition.

Chief among the practices that make the liquor problem a vital one in this country is that of "treating." If six men meet in a barroom, the chances are that four at least will get drunk. One comes in to buy a drink, and he treats the crowd. That puts it up to the others to treat back, and even though some of them have sense enough to "take a cigar this time" occasionally all of them get more than they wish, and go home more or less befuddled and considerably out of pocket. Men who grudge their wives a spare dollar for their own wearing apparel, who complain if the table costs too much at home, will spend enough in an hour, under this treating system, to keep their families several days. It is due to the abuses of drinking in this country that prohibition is gaining such rapid headway. It is swiftly covering the South, and is spreading in the North. Where it will stop no man can tell. The cities will present a strong barrier against it for a time, but in states where the country vote predominates state-wide prohibition is by no means an unlikely ultimate reinvested in the business, turns the remainder of the profits over for public purposes. While the Public House Trust endeavors to promote temperance by giving its managers a share of the profits derived from the sale of non-intoxicants, Bolag, being a trust and possessing a monopoly of the sale of intoxicants, is content to allow people to drink what they like, though it is expected that temperance will be promoted because the dealer will have no inducement to force sales. Under the new law there is a change in the method of dividing the profits. Formerly the municipal authorities received seven-tenths of the profits, one-tenth went to the local agricultural society and two-tenths to the general Government. It is alleged, however, that the cupidity of the local authorities and the taxpayers has in many cases supplied the stimulus to excessive consumption. Accordingly.under the new law the share of the municipality is reduced from 70 to 20 per cent., diminishing from 19 in 1908 to 1 in 1920, half of the decrease being thus made gradual, in order not to unduly embarrass the municipalities by so seriously reducing this source of income. The theory of the change is that it will do away with the disposition of some Small individual machines-air bicycles, as it were-offer a tempting and practical field for invention; and here you have an element of por-tentous importance. Behold man, winged and engined, buzzing off like a huge cockchafer, to soar and circle, dip and rise as he will! Where, then, is security for private property? And where the bonds that shall confine him who long has laughed at locksmiths? Must our windows and skylights be barred as those of dungeons? whose fruit trees will be safe when fluttering flocks of little winged boys-by no means cherubs-may surround them at night and pluck de-lightedly from the outer branches? The gentlemanly burglar, carrying a light kit for noiseless glass removal, may pick and choose among many windows, and be off before capture at a moment's fright. Only the shotgun can reach him. "Stop-or I'll shoot! Hold up your wings! Come down, you!" This might arrest his fleeing —we cannot say "steps," it must be "flaps"—his fleeing "flaps"—yet a little bomb thrown at our home would make him master even so. When it is no burglar but a Romeo-what then? In sober sadness, there is before us here, first a great danger and then a greater good. The increased possibility of evil is so patent that in the end there is but one way to meet it. There will, no doubt, be at first strong repressive measures. We shall try our best to police the air; we shall stretch and revamp our laws to reach these new offenders; but the field is far too wide to cover so. The real result, the big result, will be a lifting of the standards of humanity. Winged, we must be well behaved.—Harper's Weekly.

Would you study the character of a man who achieved a wonderful success At twenty-four years of age, poor and unknown; at twenty-six, a famous general; at twentyseven, a general of generals; at thirty-three, supreme in France; at thirty-nine years of age, supreme on the continent of Europe, having conquered all European powers except England and Russia. He may have lacked conscience, but one thing he did not lack—ability. At twenty-nine he exclaimed, "Glory itself is stupid. I have exhausted everything." He made himself an emperor and his brothers and sisters, kings and queens. He placed almost every member of his immediate family on a throne. He said one day to his brother Lucian, as he threw open on the centre table a splendid map of Europe, "Choose any kingdom you please and I will pledge my word of honor, as a brother, that I will maintain you in it." Great as a warrior. Great as a statesman. Great as a ruler. One of the few men in history worthy of the name and title of "genius." A captive on the Island of St. Helena he spreads a map of Europe over his knee and dreams of what new and strange combinations of military force he might have effected had he not been chained to a rock. His scheme of warfare was four-fold: (1) Divide the enemy. (2) Centre on the weak point. (3) Use the artillery wherever and whenever possible. (4) Swift and sudden movements. He said concerning his enemies: "They do not know the value of time." , ellington said that Napoleon's sudden appearance on the field of battle at the moment of crisis was equal to a reinforcement of forty thousand men. One general who feared him said to those under his command: "Attack Napoleon where he is not" -that is, attack the soldiers not under the immediate influence of the personality of Napoleon. Woman Suffrage and Liquor Restriction.

Woman suffrage in Finland has been followed by prohibition. This is what we have always been told would follow woman suffrage in this country. Now, if the Finnish law goes into force, we snall see how woman suffrage will affect its enforcement. Will the ballot in the hands of the women enable them to compel their officials to do their full duty? In such parts of this continent as have tried various sorts of prohibitory measures, feminine opinion has been strongly on their side; but, without the ballot, it has not been able to compel enforcement. Still it constituted as strong a force of public opinion as it could if each lady had two ballots; and public opinion is a mighty factor in law enforcement. The experiment in Finland will be watched with a great deal of interest; for it seems to be a sweeping measure and to have been carried by the woman vote.—Toronto. sult .- Duluth Herald.

Count Tolstoi and Mr. Rockefeller.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily Mail sends a curious account of a correspondence which passed some time ago between Mr. John D. Rockefeller and Count Tolstoi. The American millionaire is stated to have asked the Russian visionary what was the best way to employ wealth for the greatest good of humanity. Count Tolstoi replied: "To the questions which you address to me to know in what measure wealth is compatible with the Christian doctrine which you profess I make this answer: Apart altogether from the teaching of the Gospel, plain common-sense tells us that wealth in itself is incompatible with an absolutely good life." Tolstoi goes on to say that "the money I keep in my pocket, in my strong-box, or in a bank constitutes, without the least possible doubt, a sort of weapon against the man who has none-the poor man." What strikes us most in Count Tolstoi's letter is the tendency to attach undue importance to money and its possession. His dread and hatred of money is as perverse as the miser's love of it. One makes it a devil and the other a god. No doubt the rich man is exposed to many special temptations, but then so is the poor man. Yet both may, and do, resist them. —London Spectator.

The agricultural interests of the Eastern States are also opposed to it. In course of time this project will, despite all opposition, undoubtedly become a realized fact. But such a waterway, though it will have far-reaching results of great import-ance to the United States, will not destroy the supremacy of our existing St. Lawrence waterway as a route to the European markets, to say nothing of the Hudson Bay outlet, which, be-cause Western Canada is determined to have it, is a project which will also without question be realized—possibly, and probably, before the Chicago-to-the-Gulf project is.

"At length the man perceives it die away,

And fade into the light of common day." This is the course of nature; and it is not for intelligent workers in this workaday world to regret it. We cannot always be "at play i' the sun," and must leave to the little ones the pursuit of the paths where no pain or sorrow should enter. It is the blessed privilege of returning to those paths that makes Christmas time the most sacred and most precious of all our annual round of days. To share heartily and hap-pily with the boys and girls their Christmas celebration, to become as children again and enter into the whole-souled spirit of the holiday —this is to make the most of the day set apart to be commemorated as the birthday of Our Saviour.

And as the inner meaning of the great annual festival of peace and good will is the renewing of the hope that Christ may be born again in each and all, it is fitting that a week from Christmas should bring us to the great stock-taking that compels us all to THE YEAR'S look back over the road we AUDIT. have traveled during the year. The cynic derides the good resolutions made at the annual audit of the soul. With all his assumed acuteness, the cynic is wrong. If it be a pity that a good im-pulse should die, how much greater a pity if the faculty for good impulse were altogether out-worn. That person would be in a sad condition,

One of the most notable events of the past month has been the publication of the Letters of Queen Victoria, under the direction of her son, the King. These volumes form the rich-est contribution to political history that has been made in this

QUEEN VICTORIA'S generation. It is LETTERS. interesting to note that the young

Queen was unfavorably impressed by Lord Durham and Sir Charles Bagot, who advocated self-government for Canada, and shared strongly the opposite view, which was held by Lord Metcalfe. The Duke of Wellington, to whose opinion she naturally paid deference, was vio-lently opposed to Canadian self-government. When Sir Charles Bagot, as Governor-General, consented to the formation of the first Lafontaine-Baldwin Government, the Duke denounced it as "a tame surrender to a party still affected by treason," and almost created a ministerial crisis in England. In 1846 the Prince Consort wrote that "Canada is a source of weakness to the Empire and will probably remain so for a long time." Happily, Queen Victoria lived long enough to see the results of the policy of allow-ing Canada to govern itself. Under that policy Canada, instead of being a source of weakness to the Empire, became a source of pride, of strength, and of hope. She ascended the throne in 1837, with Canada in the throes of a rebellion; she died after having experienced wonderful evidences of the loyalty of the Canadian people. And the cause of the change was self-government.

orted upon by the Divorce Committee of the Senate, sitting at Ottawa. This state of affairs destroys constitutional uniformity and varies the causes for which divorce is granted. This should not be; the law should be the same from end to end of the Dominion.

In one of the Winnipeg papers recently it was stated that a stonemason "of unquestionable veracity," name not given, who formerly lived in Winnipeg and worked on the University building, used to declare that in Scotland he TOAD IN A STONE stone split open and a live toad hop out of it. This toad-in-a-AND MUMMY WHEAT. stone legend, like the mummy wheat legend, is a hardy perennial. It will continue to bloom as long as credulity and the love of the wonderful continue to be human characteristics. The latest re-vamper of the mummy wheat fable, a gifted hoax-preparer for one of the Sunday papers across the line, over-shot the mark through being unaware that the word "corn" is used in Great Britain to mean grain of any sort, such being its meaning in the Bible. He had evidently been reading Sir Gardner Wilkinson's book on Egypt, in which this legend was brought before the attention of the learned world years ago: and he took "corn" to mean Indian corn, which, like tobacco, was not introduced into the Old World until after Columbus had discovered the new. He fabricated a most marvellous story, based upon his error. In a small Pennslyvania town a retired clergyman received from a friend who had recently returned from a visit to Egypt "a sealed package of corn found in Egyptian ruins known "Sour grapes!" said the fox, when he could not reach the clusters on the vine. In the same spirit Mr. Thomas Bent has declared at Mel-bourne that it was better to five in Australia A FAR-FLUNG FLOUT than in the Canadian climate on cleven." The AT OUR CLIMATE.

Melbourne people are sore because settlers flock to this country, and do not flock to Australia; hence these unpleasant antipodean re-marks about our bracing climate. There is no-thing new in such remarks. "Some acres of snow" was the arch-sneerer Voltaire's descrip-tion of Canada. Sir Francis Bond Head, who immediately upon being appointed Governor of Canada in 1836 proceeded to provoke the rebel-lion of 1837, said that "a country with Canada's climate could never amount to anything" As climate could never amount to anything." for Mr. Thomas Bent, of Melbourne, even in his far-flung flout at our climate he has to admit that the home-maker in this country prospers as he cannot hope to prosper in Australia.

other words, if we have perfect circulation we will have perfect health. There is a constant wearing out of the tissues invough the veins carries off this waste or dead matter, while the blood coming from the heart through the veins carries off this waste or dead matter, while the blood coming from the heart through the arteries brings the fresh, new, living the arteries brings the fresh, new, living the arteries brings the fresh, new inter-tor and the replacing of it with new matter, about seven years a complete change has been ef-ected. Thus every man and woman has an entirely different body in every particle of it from the or she had seven years before. It sometimes happens, however, from a var-fety of causes, that the blood becomes congested in the circulation in that section of the body be-omes aluggish and stagmant. The consequence is any partially carried away, and that but little of the new, vital matter is introduced there to build and strengthen the tissues and new. This condition invariably exists in all cases of female disorders. The dead matter retained in the circulation, which should have been expelled in the destorders. To obtain relief, it is evident that the first thing to be done is to get rid of the dead matter in there a species of blood poisoning will result, and nature will endeavor to rid of it by forming ulcers, tumors, etc. The above explanation will also show why ORANGE LILY is so successful curing this condition. It is a local treatment, and is applied direct to the coted organs. Its curative elements are absorbed into the congested tissue, if from the very start the dead matterbegins to be discharged. A feeling of mease relief, both mental and physical, accompanies it, and the improve-nt is constant and positive. This feature of the expelling of the dead tter is always present to a greater or less extent, and in some cases it is marked as to be amazing. might also be called, is nearly here and the question uppermost in many of our minds is doubtless what shall we give? The stores are only beginning to decorate their windows and to display their holiday goods, but even without a single peep behind the scenes we can think of many things the handy girl can make.

For the housewife there is a pair of stenciled window curtains done on cheese cloth or checked muslin, pretty table accessories, dainty embroidered blouses, some young girl who is begin-ning to put away things for a certain special occasion will appreciate any-thing in the way of fine table linen, or even bed linen. Her initials worked in the corner will add greatly to the value of it in her eyes.

It is not too late even yet to start a lily or hyacinth for some friend who appreciates flowers. Suppose you choose a chinese lily. It grows very rapidly and can be forced more than most bulbs. I had one last year which was very backward until I put it on the top of the kitchen range. From that time on it could almost be seen growing.

giving well, to those who have touched your life very intimately and no others. And I like the idea of giving to please and for no other purpose. Perhaps I have not made my meaning very clear. I am not quite sure that it is clear in my own mind, but it is something like this. The Christmas spirit seems to me to be that men shall have what they please rather than what they need. this may be heresy, but I like the idea of utility being left out of the question for one day in the three hun-dred and sixty-five. If what we please is useful so much the better, but at any rate let us try to make happiness by fulfilling some darling wish of our friends on this one day of the long year. No one can help you to do this as you can help yourself, for no one knows your friends as you do. To be sure some magazines print long lists of suggestions all classified like this, gifts for old men, for mothers, for brothers; and these would be very help-ful and instructive if people always fitted into the class to which according to age they belong. A little story I read some years ago will illustrate my point. A mother and her little boy were doing some Christmas shopping and the mother asked the little lad what they would get for grandfather. He promptly pointed to a splendid toy engine on the shelf and said, "O, mother, let us get him that." She laughed at first, but being a wise woman she saw farther than most people. They bought the engine and would you believe that it kept grandfather and all the little grandchildren amused not only on Christmas day but for many days td come. You see what I mean, do you not? What would please one person not? would be in another's way. The thing that one wife would lie awake to think about another would hide on the closet shelf. A little pug-nosed dog might delight some girl while only a sense of gratitude would keep her chum from. having it shot. The appropriate gift is the thing your friend wants and wants badly. It may be a granite coffee-pot or an embroidered opera cloak. I knew

If the presents had been reversed the berrybowl would have been sent to the attic and the poser, or the story of the composer's nut plate used as a butter dish and life in good binding will be acceptable put in the oven when the butter was How are we to know what to give? This is true of any one I think; if There is only one way: Spend all your spare time in thinking of your friends, one at a time. Think of their habits, of them more intimate. It is the same their dress, of the qualities that drew with subjects and places, so that if you to them, of the good times you your friends are fond of reading and have had together, and of the peculiar conditions that surround them and as surely as I sit writing in the twilight if you think long and unselfishly enough the very spirit of Christmas will Speaking of Christmas reminds me said, "The beautiful is often more of another shopping experience of mine, useful than the useful." night she invariably turned up the next through the mental process of reportwhen the bill of fare consisted of can-ned salmon and jam. But to return to my subject. She happened along just ing them dismissed by departments before my friend appeared around the corping to do and I volunteered to go with her.

Our first stop was at a large depart-mental store where we hunted out the leather goods counter and looked at some postal card albums. My friend asked the price of each one and looked it up carefully on the inside and won-dered whether she could afford any she liked or liked any she could afford and finally whether the person for whom she was buying it would like one at all. As a last resort she asked my advice. I pointed out one I did not like and that settled the question. She bought it without another word and we passed on to the millinery department where a pale faced girl with a pretty French accent came to wait on us. The question up for our consideration here was how to buy one of her daughters as pretty a hat as she had bought for the other in Toronto, before the season opened, and not pay any more for it. We looked at hats gray, white, blue, red, brown; at hats big and small, fancy and tailored, and came to the conclusion that Winnipeg is a terribly dear city. Finally I drew the pins from my own hat and allowed her to try them on me hoping it would assist her to a decision, but after I had played the judy for half an hour and been turned to the light and away from the light and had excited the sus-picion of all the clerks, she told me in disgust that there was absolutely no use in me trying them on as the same hats wouldn't suit us anyway. So after that we looked at them without a judy, discussed their wearing qualities, orig-inal cost of materials, and probable profit of the retail dealer and having figured out the latter to be something like eighty-nine and a half cents on the dollar we determined to show him at least two people were not going to be duped by him. In the coat department a still greater shock awaited us. It was childrens' coats we wanted to see, something warm and pretty and cheap. I think we had just finished the second rack when it occurred to us that it would be cheaper to make one at home and straightway we started to look for the velveteen counter. It was downstairs and in order to reach it we had to pass through the millinery department where we saw a new table of hats, one we had not seen before and stopped to price them. A little farther on some ribbons attracted our attention and my friend nearly made a purchase here.

before luncheon and we went out to- ner. With the most amiable of smiles gether. Afterwards she had some shop-ping to do and I volunteered to go up a corner of the sateen, sniffed, picked up another corner, sniffed again and said in a tone of unutterable disgust, "Is that the best they have. I can do better than that at home."

hope she did. That finished our shopping in that store but as you will emember the hat question was still uncecided, which necessitated a trip to another some blocks away. When we reached the street we found it was still raining and though my friend had an umbrella it would never go up except on very fine days. So she carried it under her arm, while we plodded cheerfully through the mud. Once inside, again, however, we were all right and entered into the hat question with renewed into the hat question with renewed zeal. This time the prices were even more extortionate and the hats even less satisfactory than before so we de-cided to leave the matter unsettled until she had gone home and thought the matter over. Having reached this conclusion I supposed we were ready to go home and rang the bell for the elevator but before it reached us my friend saw some caps at the far end of the store and went off hurriedly, promising to be back in a minute. I excused myself to the elevator boy and followed her to find her fitting red caps on a venerable gray headed clerk, who sub-mitted meekly to being turned around and around for inspection.

After the word of warn-New Boarding in the last number of ing House. the Monthly many of my readers will be interested to know that the Young Women's Christian Association of this city have opened a new boarding house for girls at 373 William Avenue, just opposite the public library.

The building is not a new one but what a lot of energetic women can do with an old one is surprising. The home was still only in the early stages of preparation when the writer had the pleasure of visiting it and even in that time much had been done with the help of soap and water, so that if spotless floors and shining windows are any guarantee of comfort it is surely to be found there. Most of the rooms have been freshly papered. All the bed-rooms on the ground floor are single and have the cutest little single beds with all-wool mattresses and homemade comforters. No, I'm not joking, the ribbon was one of those hard velvet ribbons sometimes used for trimming and it really was cracked.

Right in front of us when we came out of the elevator was a table full of ribbons reduced to ten cents and we stopped to buy a yard to replace the cracked piece upstairs we didn't buy.

We got along famously at the velveteen counter until the time came to decide whether the coat should be green, or blue like her last one, which upon my voting for the blue, resulted in a decision for the only alternative. Before the clerk sent it to be parcelled up she made him cut off a sample which she handed me to take to the lining counter and get matched and save time. She was in a terrible hurry you understand. Well I went and the clerk got down what looked to me like an extra good piece of

For all these single rooms the charge, with board will be four-fifty per week. Besides this there are what they call dormitories: three large rooms with three single beds each. One of these will make a lovely summer bedroom for some lucky girls. It has two large windows reaching nearly to the floor and overlooking the avenue and a door opening on to a balcony. It has only one drawback—there is no clothes' closet; but the ladies have mad a brave attempt to overcome this difficulty by making two corners do duty instead, where a judicious arrangement of shelves make an excellent substitute. The rate for these dormitories is fifty cents a week less. Altogether it is expected the new home will accommodate thirty-five girls and they should be able to have a very good time since

The Western Home Monthly

As I write I can hear Warming The Home. the peculiar rattle of coal being shovelled into a cellar and it suggests subject I have had on my mind very much of late, namely the proper heating of our homes and schools. This is a subject on which I can speak feelingly, my feet at this very moment being numb with cold.

It seems to me there is no one thing for which people spend money as grudgingly as for fuel. I know it is very dear and very scarce, and some people have not the money, and some cannot get it. It is not of these I complain, but of those who have money to spend for everything else. I am to spend for everything else. I am not exaggerating when I say that I have slept in bedrooms so cold that the weight of the quilts on the bed would have kept me awake even if the cold had not. I have shuffled into my clothes with numb fingers and aching feet, praying like Hamlet, "O that this too, too solid flesh would melt and thaw." I might just say here that it very rarely did so before eleven o'clock. A fire in the kitchen stove there A fire in the kitchen stove there was, of course, and one in the sitting room when company came, that is if the company was grown up. Small visitors were made very much at home, allowed to spend the evening in the kitchen and retire in the cold.

It is well that the inhabitants of these homes are not generally troubled with a hankering for solitude. from the floor, leaving a ventilator where it is not wanted. Coming in cold from a long drive it would be cruelty to ask the children to take their seats and rest their already cold feet on the frozen floor. But it is school time, so the half frozen teacher at the blackboard directs the classes as best she can.

All rural schools are not as bad as this. No, some of them have storm windows, frequently put on in Febru-ary and taken off in June, but they are storm windows nevertheless, and some of them have a caretaker and are kept really warm, but they are the exception, I believe, and not the rule. "Then why do not the teachers complain?" some anxious mother asks. I have known them to do so and the answer has been something like this. "Dear me, that school ought to be warm. I'm sure Thomas has spent enough money on it." and that is allowed to settle the question

If these conditions existed only in new settlements it would not be so bad, but that it should be true of a district of well-to-do farmers with big farms and money in the bank is deplorable. and mounting birds, animals, game heads and all other trophies. The call for the skilful taxidermist is almost unlimited. It requires almost no capital at all to hang out a sign as a professional taxi-dermist when the profession is once learned, and every taxidermist who is skilled in his work gets more to do than he can take care of. And like the skilled doctor, the taxi-dermist may charge what he chooses. Many of the best known taxidermists think nothing of charging $200.00 or more for a single order. Often they charge this amount merely for mount-ing a small bird, game head or animal. Such taxidermists get work from all over the world, for there are many specimens worth thousands of dollars when they are well mounted, and the people who secure such specimens don't want to take the chance of having them spoiled by having someone who isn't skilled do the work. Besides being a most lucrative pro-fession, taxidermy is a very entranc-ing art for private use. Hunters, fish-ermen and naturalists who know taxi-dermy can mount their own valuable trophies and decorate their homes, of-fices, or dens with them. Taxidermy is now taught successfully by mail by N. W. School of Taxidermy, Omaha, Neb. This school guarantees success to its students or no tuition is charged. Write to this school today and get free a beautiful illustrated book entitled: "How to Learn to Mount Birds and Animals." Mention the name of this paper.

Enormous Fortunes in Coal.

Few small investors have a true con-ception of the great profits that may be made from a small investment in stock in a coal property. To illustrate what we have in mind, we will repro-duce here a portion of the official re-port upon the International Coal and Coke Company, Limited, Coleman, Al-berta. This Company paid dividend No. 3, August 1st, 1907, amounting to $42,000. The International Coal and Coke berta. This Company paid dividend No. 3, August 1st, 1907, amounting to $42,000. The International Coal and Coke Company, Ltd., has a capital of $3,000,-000, shares having a par value of $1.00 per share. The total amount of shares outstanding are 2,800,000, there being 200,000 shares in the treasury. Dividends are being paid quarterly at the rate of six per cent. per annum, the last one paid being August 1st, making a total of about $98,000,000 paid to shareholders this year. The latest report from the secretary of the company to the shareholders shows a surplus on hand of $393,469.84. The engineer of the company gives an estimate of the coal developed and now on hand ready to be broken down from the rooms, as being 1,600,283 tons. The International Coal and Coke Company, Limited, shares are now sell-ing on exchanges at 90 to 92 cents per share. Three years ago they could have been bought at 10 cents per share. To-day the British Columbia Amal-gamated Coal Company's stock can be bought at 15 cents a share which, if all prodictions come true, will equal the International Coal and Coke Company as a money maker. The par value of the shares is one dollar. Should the B. C. Amalgamated prove as remunerative to investors as the International Coal and Coke Co. did, every dollar invested in ths property now will be worth six dollars to the investor in three years' time. Shrewd investors in financial centres have been making heavy purchases in British Columbia Amalgamated stock lately, and it is only a question of a very short while before the price of the stock will be advanced. Dairying That Pays.

Datrying That Pays. A few farmers make a handsome income from their dairy; many achieve a moderate success; some do not begin to make as much money out of their cows as they should. There is a good profit in milk. The farmer must know, first of all, what this profit is, and second, how to get the profit out of the milk. PROFITS-Western Coal Companies have made and are making enormous profits for those who were fortunate enough to invest in the stocks in the early stages of development when shares were at the minimum price. It takes two or three years to bring a coal company to the dividend paying stage. By that time the stock should be worth par value or better and the dividends-which are always paid on the par value of the shares-will. represent a very high percentage on the investment at 10 or 15 cents per share.

> We Recommend This Investment; we believe that at 15 cents per share it will make Big Profits for the Stockholders.

> TRY IT. Send in your order NOW. If cash in full accompanies the order 5 per cent. may be deducted. Or we will sell stock on the instalment plan. Send 25 per cent. of price with the order. You can pay balance in three equal monthly payments. In this way a larger block can be secured.

$100 placed in the Savings Bank at three per cent will only be worth $109 in three years time. $100 invested now in B. C. A. Coal shares may be worth $1,000 in three years' time. TRY IT.

An enjoyable concert arranged by the schoolmaster, Mr. J. M. Marshall, was given at Brancepeth on Thanksgiving Day. Selections of music were excel-lently rendered on the guitar by Prof. Brooks, of Tiger Hill, while Mr. Mar-shall himself was as strong as usual with the comic element Others who with the comic element. Others who assisted were the chairman, Geo. Taylor, Ida and Vera Taylor, Geo. Tay-lor, Ida and Vera Taylor, Geo. and Vic-toria Lvons, Pearl Tavlor, Miss T. and Agnes Korsmore. Rev. C. Cunningham told some funny stories. Refreshments were served and the proceedings con-tinued till a late hour.

A highly successful concert was held at Camrose, Alta., on Thanksgiving Day. The following was the pro-gramme:—Part I.: Selection, Band; cor-net solo, Mr. Helgerson; solo, Miss Smart; piano solo, Prof. Melonson; reading, Mr. Darling; violin solo, Mr. Defferon; solo, J. E. The hospital concert on October 31st, The hospital concert on October 31st, at Virden, was a conspicuous success, a large crowd being present. The pro-gram was quite lengthy and to special-ize would be but to repeat expressions of delightful satisfaction with those parts of the programme contributed by the local talent and the beautiful solos by Mr. Thompson. of Winnipeg, and Miss Hood, of Oak Lake; but we can-not help referring to the Japanese song and chorus by a number of young ladies in costume, with appropriate stage setting. It was really one of the most meritorious items on the pro-gramme. gramme.

Sherlock Holmes, The Girl I Left Behind Me, and Her Own Way held the boards for the first three weeks, and then the farcical element was represented by the offer-ing of the late Augustin Daly's success "A Night Off." As the months go by, the two stars, Miss Rebecca Warren and Mr. Geo. Alison, add fresh laurels to their histrionic fame, while the rest of the company have won nothing but golden opinions from press and public alike. In these days of vulgar musical comedy it is indeed pleasant to find a company which is content to offer its company which is content to offer its patrons the legitimate drama.

A successful concert was held at the Opera House, Virden, Man., on Novem-ber 12th, in aid of the local Fire Bri-gade. The double quartettes by Messrs. Hill Wilson, Yewdall, Hobday, Sales, Creelman, Gilchrist and Bremner were rendered in excellent style, the voices harmonizing nicely, and music-lovers will certainly be pleased to hear them again. Mrs. P. H. Lobb sang her num-bers in her usual good style. W. Clarke was seen to advantage in his character songs, which were a source of great pleasure to the large audience. Mrs. Menzies, who is among the new contributors to Virden concert pro-grammes, gave a couple of plano solos, which showed that she is a player of more than ordinary ability. M. P. WHEAT MARKETS.

The improvement in financial conditions due to the action of the Dominion Government in furnishing funds to the banks doing a large grain business, although but slightly felt, is restoring additional confidence among traders. There is a gradual loosening up of money which is bound to be more noticeable as the season advances. The sudden and sensational drop in wheat prices a couple of weeks ago no doubt was attributable in a large measure to the money stringency. The infusion of additional currency into the regular avenues of business channels was a commendable act of the Government and is sure to bring a return of better prices. The advance may not be alarmingly rapid, yet a gradual improvement, may be confidently looked for and will come surely. The Western farmers should bestir themselves and endeavor to market their low grade wheat before navigation closes.

There appears to be a good demand for low grade wheat in Ontario where the farmers there will use it for feeding stock.

Both commission men and farmers are experiencing difficulties that breed dissatisfaction over the marketing o. this low grade stuff. Wheat which leaves the shipping point apparently quite dry, arrives in Winnipeg in a tough condition, showing a good deal of moisture and is graded accordingly. The farmer very often is not satisfied because the grade is much below the quality of the wheat shipped. Oftentimes the farmer will ask for a regrade at Port Arthur, and the grain not improving the longer it remains in the car, a still lower grade is made. If the farmers are alive to their own interests they will market all low grade wheat now. If not marketed now it will spoil on their hands before spring and as a result the farmers will be the losers.

Wheat Shipments Less.

Ottawa, Nov. 25th .- Warehouse Commissioner Castle, of Winnipeg, reports to the trade and commerce department that during September and October shipments of grain from Port Arthur and Fort William were less than the previous year.

This year the wheat shipments were 8,882,755 bushels or 2,282,255 less than 1906. Oats 808,711 bushels, or 274,-368 less, and barley 263,642 bushels, or 80,777 increase.

To Duplicate the Christmas Tree, Number 2, place a wooden box on a large chair with arm rests. Cut a hole in the top of the box large enough for a small stick to pass through. Two irons placed in the bottom of the box will hold it in place. Place a board for tree support, as shown in the sketch, as far back on the arms of the chair as possible. Stick small branches of a Christmas tree in the holes. Cover the rest of the board with white cotton sheeting and lay some sheeting beside the branches to give the effect of snow. Place a mask of Santa Claus at the top of the board, surrounding it with greens and holly. Greens may be hung from the ceiling to the picture moulding and extend out into the room, forming an entire room decoration, showing Santa Claus in the centre. Tie to the stick in the box a large doll dressed as a fairy with a wand in one hand, and a present tied in white paper with red ribbon and a name-card in the other. The other presents, tied in the same way with ribbons and name-cards attached, may be grouped upon the floor around the base or laid upon the arms of the chair. WAS struggling to get a foot-hold in a great city; Christmas was dreading it, for I had neither time nor money to spend. I remember coming back to my room tired and discouraged one evening, and taking an old volume of fairy tales from my bookshelf. Most people outgrow fairy tales, but I often read them in those days and still do-because their easy magic rests me. When one's own life seems difficult and without magic there is a certain com-fort, I think, in reading about rags be-ing turned to ball gowns, and pump-kins to coaches, with no trouble to any-of the magic purse, the purse which in the miser's hand contained only a few poor coins, but in the hands of him who would spend from it was always full-the more one spent from it the more there was to spend. My Uncle Ezra used to tell me that all good and lasting fairy stories were founded on some truth which could be applied practically in our own lives. I instinctively looked for some hidden meaning in this one. It came to me at last almost suddenly. "I suppose," thought I, "that with love and patience and a great many more things, its just like the magic purse-the more one gives the more one has from which to gives the more one has from the the more it a good deal. Then at last I de-

The idea pleased me, and I thought over it a good deal. Then at last I de-termined that in those three weeks before Christmas, since I had no money to spend, I would try spending, instead, as much love and sympathy and inter-est as I could find in my nature. I would act out in my own life, if pos-sible, the story of the magic purse. Perhaps in this way my Christmas need not be altogether bare and meagre, after all. I remember that the next morning my

after all. I remember that the next morning my laundress came, apologizing for delay. Her little lame son was not so well. Here was an opportunity to put my resolves into practice. It came to me rebukingly that I had seen this woman every week for months and did not even know she had a little lame son. Now I gave her all the frank interest and sympathy I could. She seemed glad to tell me more, until at last I had the whole sorry story of her many misfortunes.

had the whole sorry story of her many misfortunes. "Oh," said I, as she was leaving, "if only I were wealthy, so that I could be of some use to you and of real help." "But you have helped, Miss," she said, almost brightly. "It's when folks don't care whether you live or die, it's that, on top of being poor, that makes it seem right hard sometimes." "Well." I care at any rate

At last I hit upon a plan. Why not lend some of my books as Christmas gifts? Yes. Christmas morning should find my bookshelves empty and my book-favorites off a-visiting. I knew a young girl in a tenement downtown who loved books. I selected four of my dearest ones. I wrote that I was not sending them as a gift, because it would seem to me unfaithful to give away such old friends, and some of them had been given me by those I love, but that she must keep them just as long as she chose; that the gift lay in the splendid thoughts that were in them and that I wanted to share them with her. To this I added some loving Christmas sentiment and left the books to her. to her.

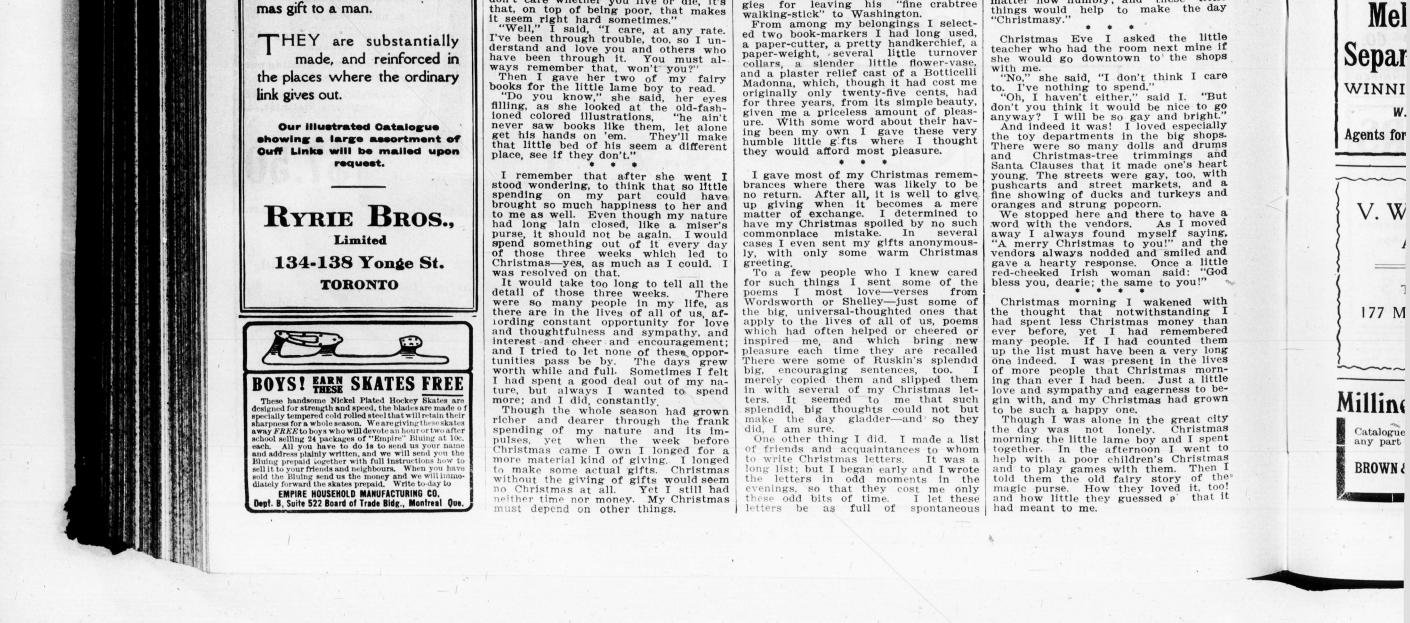

to her. It was good fun determining which books should go to the different ones. My Leigh Hunt and Lamb's bright and human Essays I sent to a little old lady whose days were full of stupid book-keeping. My Coleridge and Tennyson and Wordsworth went to a young fel-low I had met a week before, who had told me how he loved the poets and meant some day to have copies of them. My volumes of Emerson I divided between a little cobbler I know, whose wife reads to him in the evenings while he mends shoes, and an art student whom I knew to be in need of cheer and encouragement. Some of my novels I sent to a teacher I knew who was ill; and my Keats and Shelley to a young girl who, more than any one else, would be sure to love them. Hamilton Wright Mabie's "Under the Trees" I sent to a young dry-goods clerk who, when I was buying some-tning of him one day, told me he loved the country but had not been able to get to it for more than three years. In each case I sent with the books some warm messare of interest or love and Christmas greeting. Yet when I found suitable places for some warm message of interest or love and Christmas greeting. Yet when I found suitable places for my book-friends to spend their Christ-mas there were still many people, inti-mately my friends, whom I had not re-membered. What gifts could I give them? them?

I began looking through my rather meagre possessions. Almost every one has some little trifles which one can give, at this season, without really robbing one's self. "Things which have been one's very own make all the dearer, better gifts," thought I. I re-membered that Petrarch bequeathed his "winter garments" to his friend Boc-caccio "to study in"; and that some-where in his essays Leigh Hunt re-minds us that Franklin made no apolo-gies for leaving his "fine crabtree gies for leaving his "fine walking-stick" to Washington. "fine crabtree Christmas love and good wishes as I was now full of them. I kept back nothing; spent freely. I tried to re-member all who had ever meant much to me or helped me either consciously or motorsciously, whether I was in the habit of corresponding with them or not. I wrote to two of my old school-teachers, for instance, and tried to tell them just a little of how much I felt I owed to their long-ago patience and finduence in my life. I wrote to the first editor who had ever encouraged me in my literary work and told him how much that encouragement had minister at home just to tell her that in all the turmoil of city life I did not forget her and her dear, old-fashioned councils. I wrote to a faithful old schod had been unfailingly good to me, and I let her know the real truth of hood had been unfailingly good to me, and I let her simple, old, comforting ways. I wrote to a young fellow in my home town to whom some honors had lately come, telling him how genuine a pleasure I took in his suc-cess.

cess. These were only a few of the letters I wrote, but you see how full and rich my Christmas was growing to be. Still no money to spend and very little time to give, but I had gotten the magic purse open now and was spending from it freely. I was giving of my-self. How good it was, too! As I spent, and my nature seemed to grow richer and fuller all the time, I grew correspondingly happler, of course. Christmas had never meant so much to me. Others might spend themselves poor in money if they chose—I was spending myself rich. The only money I spent besides that for postage was a dollar and a half for nuts and candy and tarletan, and twenty-five cents for a copy of "Aurora Leigh," which I sent anonymously to a patient little seamstress I know. From the tarletan I made little bags and filled them with candy and nuts. I made fifteen of these. On Christmas morning the little lame boy must have one, and the laundress, and the little cobbler and his wife, the funny cross little tailor around the corner, and two or three little newsboys who sold me papers, and the corner policeman and the postman who brought me my let-ters; so they were soon all disposed of. They were the merest trifles, to be sure, but that fact did not deter me. Everybody likes to be remembered, no matter how humbly; and these little things would help to make the day "Christmas. Eve I asked the little teacher who had the room next mine if Holiday Experiments.

Holiday Experiments. The Mimic Vesuvius.—This experi-ment is a demonstration of the heat and light which are evolved during chemical combination. The substance phosphorus has a great affinity for oxygen gas, and wherever it can get it from, it will, especially when aided by the application of heat. To perform this experiment, put half a drachm of solid phosphorus into a Florence-oil flask, holding the flask slantingly, that the phosphorus may not take fire and break the glass; pour upon it a gill and a half of water, and place the whole over a tea-kettle lamp, or any common lamp, filled with spirits of wine; light the wick, which should be about half an inch from the flask; and as soon as the water is boiling hot, streams of fire, resembling sky-rockets, will burst at intervals from the water; some par-ticles will also adhere to the sides of the glass, immediately display brilliant rays, and thus continue until the water begins to simmer, when a beautiful imitation of the aurora borealis will commence, and gradually ascend until ful powers. Upon the strength of this he is given a drink of the punch. He is then led over to look at the bust. (If the player is a man, he is shown Venus only; Apollo being out of sight. The ladies, on the contrary, are shown only the bust of Apollo.) He is pro-vided with a paper and pencil, and told to go to some other part of the house, compose a verse of from three to six lines. The subject of the verse must be the likeness of one of the ladies present to Venus, the Goddess of Beauty. The ladies must write verses, composing one of the men to Apollo. When every guest has tasted of the Ambrosia, become inspired, and com-posed his verse, the papers are signed, collected and read. To the one who has written the best verse award a very small scrap book. On the first page have pasted a picture of Venus, and on the second, one of Apollo. The other pages are blank, but the winner is given all the signed verses composed by the defeated poets. These he may paste in his scrap book and so carry home a most unique souvenir.

Cader Idris.—This game, which means "Chair of Fate," is played as follows: Supposing there are twenty guests. Provide a chair for each, and three ex-tra ones, all arranged in the form of a circle. One at a time the guests are sent out of the room. When a guest goes out the players decide which of the vacant chairs is the fatal one. Having agreed upon it, the guest who has gone out is called in. If he sits in the Cader Idris he must deliver a reci-tation, sing a song, or in some way con-tribute to the entertainment of the company. If he misses the fatal chair he goes free, and another player is sent out. The players then change seats and another Cader Idris is se-lected. lected.

whither Goest Thou?—Take a pack of plain white cards and write at the foot of each the name of a city, in rather small letters. Above this, in generous-sized letters, write one thing for which the city is noted. Then have at hand a box of poker chips or simi-lar counters. Give each player as many counters as he has cards. Player num-ber one reads his description, and who-ever first calls the name of the city gets the chip. If no one can guess the city, then the one who asked the ques-tion keeps the chip. A tiny handbag filled with chocolates would make a suitable prize to offer to the player who, at the end of the game, holds the most chips. The questions should run like these: I am going to the cleanest city in the most of Whot is the (Answer Paris).

Ignis Fatuus.—A merry chase can be led by one with a sense of humor, com-bined with a proper respect for the fitness of things. Provide the leader with an electric pocket lamp, turn out all the lights in the part of the house used, let the leader show his will-o'-the-wisp—and all are off! The leader may institute any humor-ous performance (within reason) which comes to his mind, or which the time and place suggest. He may dance in "comic opera" fashion through the hall; he may sit "side saddle" on the balus-trade and slide down; he may kiss the cat; he may fill his mouth full of water and run around the outside of the house; or do any other absurd thing which occurs to him. The others are bound to follow.

Ambrosia.—Have a committee of two. This committee retires to a specified room. Here it must be all dark, except one corner, where, from behind a screen, come the rays of a rose colored lamp. On a table behind the same screen rests a bust of Venus, and one of Apollo. On a table at the other end of the room, and therefore in the gloom, is a bowl of punch, or some other beverage, made with a view to pleasing the tastes of those present. The company is left outside, preferably in a dark hall, where an air of quiet and mystery will be more likely to brood. When all is ready, the commit-tee calls one guest in. The Knife and the Decenter.—To per-form this trick take a decanter about half full of water, and place it before you on a square table, about three inches from the edge of the same, then procure a dessert knife and insert the blade between the table and the de-canter, just sufficient to allow it to re-main in a horizontal position, as repre-sented in the cut. You can now inform the company that you intend to intro-duce the knife into the decanter by one blow of the hand, and at the same time strike the handle of the knife a sharp blow with your index finger (as repre-sented in the cut), and if skillfuily done, you will cause the knife to fly upwards and descend into the mouth of the decanter. The Hem.

The Hem. The three little letters that go to the making of our topic seem absurdly few when compared to the large place the hem occupied in the annals of our childhood. It was an unequal struggle —that of our small fingers with this formidable branch of the sewing art. If the seam had been long the hem was baffling and combatively deter-mined to reveal all the shortcomings of our youth on the right side of grand-mother's pocket-handkerchief. It was wept into before its time—th's pocket-handkerchief of grand-mother's and the punctures and needle marks on our little pink fingers were but the visible

Then, holding the basted hem between the thumb and finger of the left hand, pass the needle through the material, taking up only two or three threads, and with the same thrust, pass it through the fold of the hem, taking enough threads for firmness, but, being careful not to take the stitch too deep for neatness. The fineness of the ma-terial and its purposed uses must de-termine the length and exquisiteness of the stitches. The blind hem is only a slight variation of the ordinary hem. It need not snow at all on twilled ma-terials, because in making it only one or two threads of the material are taken up by the needle, which passes being held loosely in order to avoid the slightest puckering of the cloth, which would betray the citches. The slip-stitch hem is another variation. It is that has been pressed between the useful for silks and wools where the invisible hem is desirable. For the slip-stitch hem the needle catches only a thread or two of the material and a thread or two of the under part of the fold, and the thread is kept parallel with the thread of the material instead of having somewhat the effect of over-handing, as in the ordinary hem. The French hem is excellent for table damask. Following are the directions for it: Fold a hem on two adjoining sides of the damask, from one-eighth to three-sixteenths of an inch wide, ac-cording to the quality of the linen. Before beginning to hem, open out the hem, and fold the corner toward you, creasing it one eighth of an inch out-side the point where the creases for the hems meet. Cut off the corners on the crease, then fold the hem at the right of the bias edge. Then, holding the wrong side toward you, fold the hem back and crease the material so as to make it even with the hem. 'Overhand the folded edges together, being careful not to take the stitches too deen into the cloth, thus avolding long stitches on the right side. Now, turn the hem on the second side and fold under the bias edge on the corner and hem it down. Continue in the same way on on the second side and fold under the bias edge on the corner and hem it down. Continue in the same way on the remaining sides. The rolled hem which is purely a hem of utility, may be briefly mentioned here. It is made by rolling the edge of the material between the forefinger and thumb of the left hand hemming as the material between the forefinger and thumb of the left hand, hemming as rolled, using the plain hemming stitch. The "hemstitched" hem is made by drawing six threads as far from the edge of the material as you wish the inner fold of the hem to come. Baste the hem even with the drawn threads; then, pointing the needle towards you. take up four or five of the cross threads. Draw the needle through and take one stitch as in ordinary hem-ming. Repeat this until the hem is completed, being careful at each stitch not only to take up the little group of threads with the needle, but to pass How

Every time you wash with Baby s Own your skin is benefited.

- While Baby's Own as a Soap is a perfect skin cleanser it also acts like a superfine toilet cream.
- Its cream-like lather is permeated with minute globules of the finest vegetable oils.
- These oils are eagerly absorbed by the skin, rendering it soft and smooth, and giving a feeling of freshness and comfort.
- Therefore, to prevent chafing and cracking of the skin use Baby's Own Soap daily for your own toilet and in your nursery.

Treble crochet (t. c.): Thread over needle as if to make a stitch, hook through work, thread over and draw through, making three stitches on the needle; thread over, draw through two, over draw through remaining two. Double treble crochet (d. t. c.): Like treble, except that the thread is put over twice before insertion of hook in the work; draw thread through, making four stitches on the needle; take up thread, draw through two, again, and draw through remaining two. In the extra long treble, which is seldom used, the thread is put over three times before insertion of hook in work, the stitches being worked off by twos as directed. hook through the work, draw the thread directed.

Short treble (s. t.): Like treble, ex-cept that after thread is drawn through the work, making three stitches on the needle, it is taken up and drawn through all three at once, instead of two.

Picturesqueness is rather an unusual quality in a garment designed for purely utilitarian purposes, but it is the distinguishing feature of the work apron illustrated, the shaping of which is as effective as it is novel. The apron is ingeniously cut in one piece, the front being in princess style, while the back is gathered into a belt. The square cut body portion with exten-sions, forming epaulettes, gives a very smart appearance to the apron, which

A negligee gown or tea-gown is ad-A negligee gown or tea-gown is ad-mittedly a necessity of life to the modern woman, especially the Ameri-can woman, whose hours of activity are usually so strenuous that freedom are usually so strenuous that freedom and comfort are absolutely essential in her daily hour or so of leisure. The gown illustrated is a charming com-bination of the wrapper and the house dress, displaying the luxurious ease of of the one mingled with the up-to-date elegance of the other. It is shaped to the figure by means of graduated tucks at th ewaist line, a most becoming ar-rangement for the slender type of wo-man. The three-quarter sleeves are sim-iliarly tucked, and a novel feature is the tucked Colonial collar which finishes the V-shaped neck. The gown is here made of fine French challis, but foulard, crepe de Japon, nun's veiling or any crepe de Japon, nun's veiling or any supple fabric, would develop prettily by this model. 9% yards 27 inches wide are needed for the medium size. 6979-6 sizes, 32 to 42 inches bust measure.

975-6976—. Charming Development in Broadcloth.

The new materials afford a wide range of selection to the woman of taste, and the latest costumes have taste, taste, and the latest costumes have been designed with a view to their artistic development. The costume sketched is modelled in one of the fashionable breadcloths, with garni-tures of embro dery and soutache braid, though it would make up equalbraid, though it would make up equal-ly well in any soft wool fabric. The waist (6975) owes its chief distinction to the wide square bertha, which ex-tends over the shoulders in a pecu-liarly smart effect and at its scalloped upper edge is adjusted over a removX A Theatre in Your Own Home NAN AN That is what you will have if you get a Berliner or Victor Gram-o-phone Primula Forbesii, better known as Baby Primrose. Nothing of late introduction is more charming. I do not know when I have enjoyed a flower more. The plant does not depend on size of bloom nor bril-liancy of color, for its attractiveness. It is a modest thing, and it wins its way to your regard by its simplicity and its quiet, unassuming beauty, just as the wild Violets and the Hepaticas, and the Trilliums do in the spring. The Baby Primrose is easily grown from seed, which should be sowed along about mid-summer to produce plants for winter flowering. Those who want to try the plan this season can pur-chase seedlings from the florists. I know of no plant that is more likely to succeed under amateur culture. Give it a light, porous soil, containing con-siderable fibrous matter and keep it al-ways moist, and you will have flowers all the time. The individual blossom is quite small, but there will be so many in each cluster that the effect is quite as fine as from many plants hav-ing larger flowers. The color is a soft pink suffused with lilac, with a green-ish-yellow eye. A plant as a Christ-mas gift to a friend will afford far greater pleasure than a more expensive gift, because one does not tire of its beauty. Every day in the season it will develop fresh charms.

Frosted Plants.

It sometimes happens that, in spite of all our precautions, our plants get nipped by frost. The first impulse is, to put them in a warmer place to thaw out. But don't do this. Instead, put them in a cool room—one whose tem-perature is but a few degrees above the frost mark—and shower them with cold water. Do this as soon as you It sometimes happens that, in spite seems incredible that a creature so minute can injure a plant, but he will do it, every time. Dip the plants in tubs of water heated to 120 degrees. This may seem too hot to be safe, for tender plants, but it will not injure them. After having used this bath two or three times a day or two apart, shower your plants daily, all over. Keep up the shower bath treatment, and keep basins of water on the stove or register, to evaporate and supply the air with moisture. The more moisture the air of the living-room contains the better the plants in the windows will grow. grow.

Very likely some of the tenderest por-tions of them will have to be removed, but I have often seen quite delicate plants come out of the ordeal appar-ently uninjured after this treatment. It is quite important that they should not be allowed to thaw before the showering. Put them in the cool room immediately. If this is not done until

The Kingdom of Cnow.

There's a wonderful place called the Kingdom of Snow, on the furthermost side of the moon, place it would take you a twelvemonth to go, if you started your journey right soon Where are queer little men, not much larger than boys, who just chatter and jabber with glee As they bend o'er their benches and make all the toys that old Santa Claus hangs on the tree The walls are of snow and the ceilings of ice and the millions of icicles drip— You press a small button, and, lo in a trice every one has a flame at its tip!

I cure rupture without operation, pain danger or loss of time. When I say cure I do not mean hold, but a cure that stays cured and does away with trusses for all time. To convince you and your ruptured friends that my Discovery actually cures I want you to test it without one cent expense to yourself. Remember, I am not trying to sell you a truss, but I offer you an absolute, perfect and permanent cure that means freedom from pain and suffering, a largely increased physical and mental vigor, a fuller en-joyment of life's blessings and years of comfort and satisfaction added to the length of your life. Don'tsend any money, simply fill out the coupen below, indicate on the diagram the location of the rupture, and mail it to me. Don't neglect this important matter a single day or continue to be tortured any longer by cheap, ready-made trusses. My remarkable offer is the fairest ever made and should be taken advantage of immediately by all rupture sufferers. tip: Till the glitter of light will bedazzle your eyes, and Oh! Oh! it would thrill you to see These queer little men, hardly more than your size, making presents for you and for me.

You never, no never, in all of your days, heard such clatter and chatter and noise

Of these queer little men bearing bundles and trays filled with won-derful, wonderful toys!

The rap of their hammers is tuneful and clear—here's a little man making a box, And a round, pudgy fellow with bow legs stands near making colored wild animal blocks. The buzz of their saws makes a musical din, and the sawdust flies thick in the air; They're making big Arks to put animals in, and are covering dolls' heads with hair!

After all the guests have arrived and viewed with delight the great tree with its burden of goodies, tinkling bells announce the approach of dear old Santa Claus. Down the staircase he troops, with his big sack on his back bursting with presents for the children. Dressing a Tree. In selecting a tree, get one with broad branches, so that they can bear their burden of good things. Fasten the tree securely in position, after putting a sheet on the floor to hold the box, and then the sheet can be tucked in folds all around the base of the tree. A roll of snow-flake cotton is pulled to pieces and put over the sheet, when thus arranged. Diamond dust should be sprinkled on the tree from the top, so that the flakes that do not adhere to the tree will fall on the cotton, making a very beautiful effect. I would only use the tinsel and gilt ornaments that are to beautiful effect. I would only use the tinsel and gilt ornaments that are to be bought for a penny each. SUPERVISED BY THE CHEF OF THE MARRIAGGI, WINNIPEG CHRISTMAS DISHES. English Mistletoe Cake .- This cake Orange Salad .--- Use sour oranges or Orange Salad.—Use sour oranges or strain over sweet oranges a little lem-on juice. Cut in slices, take out the seeds, arrange in rows and turn over them a French dressing. This is a de-licious salad to serve with game. English Flum Pudding.—One pound of raisins, one pound of currants, one pound of suet, one pound of flour, half a pound of citron, one nutmeg, one tablespoonful of allspice, six eggs, one pound of brown sugar, one wine glass-ful of brandy; boil six hours,

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS

English Mistletoe Cake.—This cake is both ornamental and toothsome, for it shows the genuine Christmas colors. For the layers allow three ounces each of butter and sugar, three eggs, one-half-pound of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder and one wineglassful of orange flower water. Separate the eggs and beat the whites to a stiff froth, the yolks to a cream. Beat the sugar and butter together, add the yolks of the eggs, the flour sifted with the baking powder, the orange flower water, and, lastly, the whites of the eggs. Bake in three layers. For the filling whip one-half pint of cream until stiff, sweeten slightly and divide into two portions. Color one with spinach green, and add grated cocoanut to the other. Spread the green cream over the first layer of the cake, cover with the sec-ond, spread over the white cream and place the third layer on top. Ice thickly with plain boiled icing and decorate while fresh with bits of candied citron cut to represent mistletoe leaves, using silver comfits for the berries. Christmas Sherbet.—One dozen blood oranges, one quart water, one pint sugar; peel the oranges, cut them in halves across the sections, remove the seeds and press out the juice, add the sugar and water, and when the sugar is dissolved strain it into the can and freeze. Boned Chicken.—Boil a chicken in as little water as possible until meat will fall from bones; remove all skin, chop together light and dark parts, season with pepper and salt. Boil down liquid in which chicken was boiled, then pour it on the meat, place in tin, wrap tightly in cloth, press with heavy weight for several hours. Serve cold, cut in thin slices.

CHRISTMAS CONFECTIONERY.

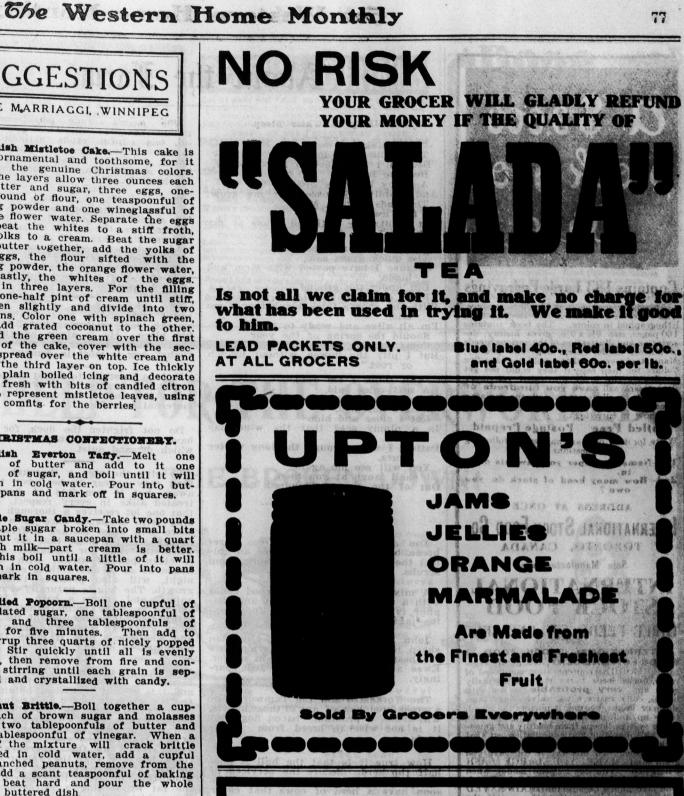

English Everton Taffy.—Melt one pound of butter and add to it one pound of sugar, and boil until it will harden in cold water. Pour into but-tered pans and mark off in squares.

Maple Sugar Candy.—Take two pounds of maple sugar broken into small bits and put it in a saucepan with a quart of rich milk—part cream is better. Let this boil until a little of it will harden in cold water. Pour into pans and mark in squares.

Candied Popcorn.—Boil one cupful of granulated sugar, one tablespoonful of butter and three tablespoonfuls of water for five minutes. Then add to the syrup three quarts of nicely popped corn. Stir quickly until all is evenly mixed, then remove from fire and con-tinue stirring until each grain is sep-arated and crystallized with candy.

Peanut Brittle.—Boil together a cup-ful each of brown sugar and molasses with two tablepoonfuls of butter and one tablespoonful of vinegar. When a bit of the mixture will crack brittle dropped in cold water, add a cupful of blanched peanuts, remove from the fire, add a scant teaspoonful of baking soda, beat hard and pour the whole into a buttered dish.

Salmagundi.—Take one pound of sugar and half a cupful of cold water and boil together until it becomes brit-tle when dropped in cold water. Do not stir after the sugar melts. Butter a shallow tin and cover the bottom closely with almonds, hickory, pecan and hazel nuts, then strips of cocoanut, stoned dates and bits of figs. When the candy is done add to it a tablespoonful of lemon juice and pour it over the nuts and fruits. Mark in strips or squares when cool.

Boast Goose or Duck.—Singe and wash the skin well and flatten the breast bone by striking it with a roll-ing pin. Stuff partly full with mashed potatoes highly seasoned with sage, onion, salt and pepper, with a little butter. Put in a deep pan and baste often. Allow eighteen minutes to the pound for cooking a young goose, half an hour for an older one. Serve with apple sauce.

Mince Pie.—Boil four pounds of lean meat, chop very fine and add twice the quantity of apples, also chopped, and half a pound of raw suet chopped very fine, then add three pounds of raisins, seeded and chopped, two pounds of cur-rants, one heaping tablespoonful each of cinnamon and nutmeg, the same of cloves and half the quantity of mace. Sweeten to taste with brown sugar and add three pints of cider and one pint of brandy.

Aspic Jelly.—Boil two quarts of clear consomme with one sprig of tarragon and one tablespoonful of tarragon vine-gar or lemon juice, until it is reduced to one quart. Take from the fire and add two tablespoonfuls of wine or sherry, then add two tablespoonfuls of granulated gelatine, dissolved in one-half cupful of warm water. Strain and use as a mold for meats or salads, or pour into a shallow pan. When cold, cut into cubes and use as a gar-nish.

Salted Chestnuts .- Cut off the shells

Queen of Custards.—Beat the yolks of eight eggs and the whites of six to a froth. Add eight tablespoonfuls of sugar and beat again, then add one quart of milk and stir all together. Put into a double boiler and cook slowly until the custard clings to the spoon attiving all the time. Add a few slowly until the custard clings to the spoon, stirring all the time. Add a few drops of vanilla and pour into a long-stemmed glass. Beat the whites of two eggs to a stiff froth. Boll half a cupful of white sugar with six table-spoonfuls of water until it forms a thread, then pour over the beaten whites and beat until it is stiff enough to spread. then heap high on top of the to spread, then heap high on top of the custards.

Light Fruit Cake.—One-half cupful of butter, one cupful sugar, one-half cup-ful milk, two cupfuls flour, one and one half teaspoonfuls baking powder, whites of four eggs, one-half cupful seeded raisins, one-half cupful sliced citron, one-third cupful chopped blanched almonds, one-fourth teaspoon-ful of salt. Mix flour, baking powder and salt. Dredge fruit with flour. cream, butter and sugar, add beaten whites and beat hard; add flour and milk, and beat again; stir in the pre-pared fruit. Line a loaf pan with paper and bake cake one and one-half hours in moderate oven. Light Fruit Cake .- One-half cupful of in moderate oven.

Marshmallows.—Six tablespoonfuls of water; two teacupfuls of white sugar. Stir until it begins to boil, then boil until it will form a soft ball when dropped in cold water. Soak two table-spoonfuls of gelatine in six tablespoon-fuls of water about twenty minutes and pour into the syrup until thick. Season to taste. Pour the candy into a suitable dish well powdered with three X sugar, spread out and dust well with sugar, set away to cool—in cold weather three hours will be long enough—in warm weather it should stand all night. Marshmallows .- Six tablespoonfuls of stand all night.

Chocolate Caramels.-Break into small pieces half a pound of Baker's choco-late; put it in a saucepan with a small cupful of cold water. Boil until a little of it hardens in cold water, then and two teaspoonfuls of butter and two teaspoonfuls of vanilla. Turn into buttered pans and cut into squares. Should you like a soft caramel, stir the mixture hard for several minutes after you take it from the fire; but should you prefer the sticky kind, add four tablespoonfuls of molasses to your sugar when you put it on to cook and do not stir it after it leaves the stove.

Novel Glace Muts.—Take a sheet of white writing paper and make it in the shape of a baking tin about an inch deep; pin the four corners securely so it will hold water. Fill this about a third full with white sugar and cover with water, letting it boll slowly-over a moderate fire. Take off the scum which rises, and when nearly done sprinkle over it the chopped meats of different nuts. When you have tried a little in cold water and find it is done, stand the paper in a shallow dish of cold water for a few minutes, and when the candy is hard, unpin the cor-ners, peel off the paper, and you have the candy in one piece. the candy in one piece.

Live Stock Notes.

You can breed a scrub from pure-breds, but you can not produce an ani-mal the equal of a good pure-bred from scrubs.

A mixture of charcoal or wood ashes with a small quantity of salt and sul-phur is highly recommended for keep-ing pigs in order.

John Campbell, the noted Canadian sheep breeder, says Swede turnips are the best for growing lambs in winter. Ewes and lambs should be fed sparingly.

The Yorkshire and the Tamworth, or a cross-bred hog of any of those breeds, will make a profitable bacon hog; but it is not wise to breed from crossbreds.

How true it is that the bull is one-half the herd. Secure the services of a sire of high breeding and you can soon have a herd of cows that carry 50 per cent. of the best dairy blood.

One gailon crude petroleum, half gallon kerosene oil, half gallon fish oil, one cupful crude carbolic acid, mixed all together and applied in a upray over the cattle two or three times a most motor of three times a week, makes a good cure for the horn fly.

The man who now has a good flock of sheep, be they pure-breds or grades, has a gold mine on his farm; and with proper care the crops of lambs this and coming years, will yield the easiest made and most profit of any operation on the general farm. If you have not a flock don't sleep thil you get one, is the advice of a successful Canadian sheep keeper. sheep keeper.

The old-time four or five hundred pound hog is a back number. The smooth, early maturing hog has taken his place. He is about one-third as heavy, but is making the money. The "baby" hog is most in demand.

It is a mistake to breed a sow too young. It dwarfs her growth and pre-vents the fullest development of her maternal capacity.

Do not frighten the flock, for sheep have sensitive and nervous natures which demand quiet.

To give the pigs a thorough scrub-To give the pigs a thorough scrub-bing may appear to be labor thrown away, but if two lots of hogs are treated alike in every respect, except that one lot receives a thorough scrub-bing with soapsuds once in a while, there will be a marked difference in favor of the hogs that are washed when the time for slaughter arrives. A clean bed of straw, with a dry house, so as to afford them comfort at night, will also promote thrift and growth. The hog is naturally a cleanly animal and enjoys a bath. If con-sidered a filthy animal that devours animal and enjoys a bath. If con-sidered a filthy animal that devours filthy food, it is because of the treat-ment given. Hogs will select clean and wholesome food if given the opportunity to do so.

Weight is the main object of the farmer in fattening stock for market, and this weight is easiest obtained by feeding grain in order to produce fat. Farmers have long been taught by ex-perience that fat is a desirable quality and that it adds to the attractiveness of a carcass on the stall. It has been demonstrated at the experiment sta-tions, however, that the weight can be secured at less cost, with a greater proportion of lean interspersed with the fat by feeding a nitrogenous ra-tion, which means that, in addition to a liberal supply of grain, an animal should receive a variety of food that is not so rich in oil, starch and sugar as is corn. This fact is worthy of con-sideration.

The greatest reason for using pasture The greatest reason for using pasture is not alone in the cheapness of the food which they furnish, but because of the condition in which it leaves the swine feeding upon it. Swine feeding upon a pasture probably require more food than do those in yards, because more energy is required in grazing than in lying around in a yard. But they get more out of the food given them while in pastures than otherwise because of the nature and likely com-binations of the food and the greater activity of the digestive organs brought activity of the digestive organs brought about by exercise. The green food in-creases the digestive capacity of young pigs and puts them in better condition for later feeding.

A very wonderful physical endow-ment is the distinctive odor of each and every member of the animal world. A dog will trail its master or mistress through countless multitudes of men through countless multitudes of men and women. The setter will cross the trail of rabbits, squirrels, deer, foxes, grouse, wild turkeys, etc., without pause of its pursuit of the quail. The bloodhound will track a murderer hun-dreds of miles without losing the scent, though an army may have cross-od the trail ed the trail.

Poultry Pickings. Hens kept in flocks of thirty or forty, with about two males, produce the best results.

The floor of your poultry house should be higher than the surrounding ground.

The axe is a good remedy for many of the egg-eating hens. It kills the hen, but it also kills the habit.

If you are making a business of rais-ing poultry, keep the males by them-selves except during the breeding season.

A feed of rice, either cooked or raw, makes a good change for poultry, both old and young.

"Waiter, can you bring me a nice young chicken smothered in onions?" "No, sah! We don't kill 'em dat way. We cuts off d'er heads."

Eggs kept sufficiently cold will not spoil. There are records of eggs be-ing hatched after remaining in cold storage for several months.

The old theory, and as good as any, is that pointed eggs hatch roosters, and rounded ones produce hens. Every one can try so inexpensive and harm-less a theory for himself.

Purchasers should be cautioned against buying an incubator of large size for experimental or farm work. The so-called 100-erg size is large enough for the beginner. One tray and one egg chamber are enough.

The use of any preservative or col-oring matter is an aduiteration, and its use by a producer or shipper will be a sufficient cause for the exclusion of his product from, for instance, the City of New York. In addition to the above rules they make a few suggestions that are ap-plicable to most any dairy. Among these are the following: The barn yard should be well drain-ed and dry and manure should not be allowed to collect in the yard or against any of the buildings. It is desirable that the place where the cows are kept be used for no other purpose.

purpose. The practice of moistening the hands with the milk is to be condemned. The first few streams from each teat should be rejected as this contains more bacteria than the rest of the milk. Milk strainers should be kept ex-tremely clean and scalded twice before using, and if cloth strainers are used several of them should be provided in order that they may be frequently changed.

About Silos.

At this time of the year, and espec-ially during a season like the present when all kinds of feed are extremely high, the owner of a silo feels like congratulating himself, and his neigh-bor who has been provided with less foresight will vow not to pass another year without one. Not only does the silage give a succulent and nourishing food the year round, but it enables the farmer to secure a maximum amount of profit. We know of no part of the dairy farm equipment which yields more profit upon the original cost than the silo and it is rapidly coming to be considered an indispensable part of the equipment of every dairy farm. A con-tages to be gained from feeding silage in the following manner. First, silage enables a cow to produce milk economically. Second, the silo increases the given Storing root crops or other foods in the cow barn at any part of the year is liable to leave odors or dust which will readily get into the milk. The ceiling of the cow barn should be tight to prevent dust and chaff from falling through. Whitewashing the stable twice a year is very desirable. The floors should be swept at least an hour before milking time in order that the dust may have a chance to settle. ANADIAN ORRESPONDENCE OLLEGE LINITED

HELP FOR THE OVERWORKED.

THE BROKEN DOWN!

In thunderous tones to-day the world calls for Men of Action-Producers

In the business world, in mine and mill, in the factory, in the field, new and swifter methods have supplanted theo d and worn-out systems, a. d competitive zeal de-mands the Men of Action—'he Men able to "do things."

Rush! Hurry! Strive from morn-ingtill night! Clang and hammer! Ham-mer and clang!

No wonder men break down! No wonder the world is full of Dyspeptics. Nervous Wrecks! No wonder that "Doc-tors" are at their wits' end to relieve the thou-sands of cases of Ner-vous Disorders. Nervous Prostration and kindred diseases that daily confront them. No wonder that they call this the "Age of Nervousness".

In a big establishment I visited recently, where several hundred men are employed, I saw a big sign with just these words; " Get busy; Do it now." Short shrift to the laggard, "Make good or get out;" that's the advice he gets. They want men who can "deliver the goods," more palatable. Sixth, there are no aggravating lumps of straw in the manure where silage is fed.

Fifth, silage is much more easily handled than dry fodder, besides being

First, silage enables a cow to produce milk economically. Second, the silo increases the given number of stock which can be kept up-on the average farm from a certain number of acres of land. Third, it improves the physical con-dition of all kinds of stock, this being especially true during the winter months.

Fourth, it prevents waste.

Seventh, the silo will make palatable food that would otherwise be rejected. Eighth, it enables the farmers to preserve a certain amount of green forage regardless of unfavorable weather con-ditions at the time when the forage is put up.

Ice for Next Summer.

If farmers realized the comfort and luxury there is in having a plentiful supply of ice during the hot weather that will surely come, and must come if they are to have any harvest next year, they would surely plan to have it. Now is the time not merely to think about this supply, but to actually get it. The first thing to do is to de-termine to have ice. The next thing is to plan to build an ice house; the next, to build it, and make it large enought and the next, to fill it in such a way that it will keep, with enough ice for yourselves, for the sick folks among your neighbors, and have some left over.

among your neighbors, and have some left over. It is not necessary to picture out to the young people the bountiful dishes of ice cream which will surely appear if there is plenty of ice in the ice house, and the gatherings of young folks if there is promise of it; nor of the additional amount of fresh meats there will be when it can be kept for two or three days; nor the splendid ice-cold sweet milk that "goeth down sweetly," like the wine Solomon talked about, "making the lips of them that are asleep to speak;" nor of the butter that is able to stand alone instead of spreading all over the plate. It may involve you in a little more expense, possibly a little more trouble, but it will make farm life much more de-sirable and much more comfortable.

No matter now big the results to-day, to-morrow's must be bigger. Hence, greater and ever greater the demand upon body and brain.

All this effort, this tremendous wear and tear is concentrated upon the Nervous System, and when the Nervous System is overstrained down goes the man; the organs of his body refuse to work; its normal functions become impaired, and he's ready for the scrap heap.

Overworked, broken-down men and women, do not despair! There's help for you in my Dr. McLaughlin Electric Belt! It has made thousands (f vigorous and healthy men and women out of Mental and Physical Wrecks! Its glowing current of Electric Life, fed into your tired and aching body, will succor every weakened nerve, every debilitated organ! Use it, and get back your Strength, and Energy.

The "Drug Doctor" has not kept pace with the times! He's like Rip Van Winkle, only worse, for he's been asleep for more than 20 years. Electricity is the "up-to-date" remedy-the remedy for you!

The Dr. McLaughlin Electric Belt is a sure cure for all signs of Breakdown in Men and Women. The Vitality of the body is Electricity -the force in the Nerve Cells. My Electric Belt will give you back this power and enable you to fight on in the Battle of 1, ife !

A Calcutta Beggar.

One of the most picturesque charac-ters in Calcutta is the typical city beggar when he is pursuing his daily vocation. He narrowly escapes being a "beggar on horseback," and doubless would be one in reality were it not for the fact that his low, primitive cart drawn by a steer is much more comfortable than the back of a horse. Since 1773, when Calcutta became the seat of British government for the whole of India, the city has been fav-ored with an almost unbroken record of progress and prosperity in which the beggars of the place have shared.

Eight Millions for Toys.

The real amount of cash money paid out in the United States alone for toys that on Christmas morning gladden the hearts of American children is conserv-atively estimated at $8,000,000. This means about 60 cents apiece for the something like 13,000,000 of 5 to 12-year old children. The children of no other country on the globe have any-thing like so lavish an average amount of money expended for toys for them, not even the children of Germany— Germany, the home of toy-making and

Germany, the home of toy-making and toy-giving. Verily, indeed, the lot of the American child has been cast in the richest sort of clover when it comes

Here the conversation ceased. The wife of the eminent financier waited a moment longer, then knocked lightly on the door, and went in. "Why, Jasper," she said, surprised at finding him alone, "I thought I heard you talking to somebody." "Quite likely, my dear," he answered, with a large and genial smile. "I was talking to myself." Etiquette of the Indian Tepee.

Unequal to It.

'Well, I'll see you again tomorrow, and we will arrange for the deal.' Here the conversation ceased.

December, 1907.

"If you should ever go into an Indian tepee," said a westerner, "remember they have rules of etiquette that are more rigidly adhered to than in our "I have here," said the man with the square jaw, "the positive proof, backed up by expert analysis, ample details, and a score of affidavits, that the Bonparlors. "Do not think they are not sensitive for they are more so than the Japs. If you make fun of his layout the whole family will remember the insult for a lifetime. The seat of honor is just opposite the door, across the fire pit. Wait until you are invited before you take that seat. If you go bolting into an Indian's tepee and rush over and take this vacant seat he may not take you by the nape of the neck and throw you out, but he would like to if he thought it could be done without cutting off his rations. "In leaving the tepee never pass be-tween any one and the fire. An old anza Gas company, which furnishes this town with alleged gas and charges us a dollar and a half a thousand feet for it, makes a clear profit of over a dollar on every thousand, and mixes 40 per cent. of air with the gas, at that. I want this published in the interests of a plundered people and for the purpose of showing up a heartless, conscious gready corporation."

"Why—h'm—I am sorry to say," re-sponded the editor of the Sokauld In-dependent, "that we shall not have room for it. It would require at least a column, and—aw—we haven't the column."

"I see," said the caller, rising and putting the documents back in his pocket. " see. You haven't the spinal column. Good day, sir."

A Weakness Only.

Sin is the only evidence of weakness -weakness of character. If we would turn men from the error of their ways we must supplement our efforts to we must supplement our efforts to shield them from temptation by help-ing them to gain strength to resist it.

Her Prophetic Soul.

Harriet Beecher Stowe was showing Harriet Beecher Stowe was showing the manuscript of her immortal story to one of her most intimate friends. "Don't publish it," pleaded the friend. "It will rouse a slumbering volcano. Its effect will be to plunge the country into the most terrible war in history!" "I think not," she answered. "The war is bound to come, anyhow. Nothing I can do will either hasten it or hinder it. But think,"—here her voice faltered —"of the never ending 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' troupes it will inflict upon the coming generations!" Yet she suffered her scruples to be

Yet she suffered her scruples to be overcome by other and less disinter-ested advisers—and behold the result!

A Peak of Snowy Beauty.

While there are among the Rocky Mountains scores of peaks whose cloud-capped summits rise to a height of from ten to fourteen thousand feet, many of these are disappointing in appearance from the fact that they rise from tablelands in themselves of great altitude, and are surrounded by numer-ous lesser peaks, which have a tend-ency to dwarf their loftier neighbor. Not so, however, with Mt. Shasta, one of the glants of the California coast. Shasta is a mountain of peculiarly im-posing appearance because its great posing appearance, because its great bulk rises in one vast mass from a broad, treeless plain, and there is no-thing to rob the monarch of the ma-jesty that is rightfully his.

The Economy of the Bee.

At one time the bees were male and

Somehow, by and by, they came to see the advantage of communal effort, and, just as women say to one another now, "If you'll wash the dishes I'll wipe 'em," one feminine bee said to the other, "I'll be the mother if you'll get the living." It was a bargain, and the accommodating females took drones in to board.

The Christmas Pie.

To the Yule-log, with the legends that cluster about it; the Christma. tree, and the Twelfth Night cake, which have for centuries lent their merriment to the Christmas festival, may be add-ed the "strictly up-to-date" Christmas and may be served in the parlor or in the dining-room. A suitable time is the afternoon of Christmas Day, when friends are gathered together in a social way, or immediately after the usual Christmas dinner. Line a large usual Christmas dinner. Line a large dishpan with soft shaded brown paper. Within this "crust" put any number of small gifts that may cost from 3 to 25 cents each. Automatic toys such as mice, flies, toads or turtles may be used for the filling of the pie. Something that is antirely appropriate preculiarly for the filling of the pie. Something that is entirely appropriate, peculiarly significant, or very absurd, should be chosen for each guest. For instance, a pair of miniature dancing shoes for the minister; a butcher knife for the young surgeon; a toy sword for the so,dier boy, etc. Each article is tied with a doint bit effective to which is

with a dainty bit of ribbon to which is attached a card bearing the name of the one for whom it is intended. When the pan has been filled with the little gifts the cover, or "top crust," is then cut round and tied down se-curely over all, and the rim decorated with holly leaves and berries.

with holly leaves and berries. The one who serves should be quick-witted and jovial, so as to make as much of the office of serving as pos-sible. Before serving cut the pie through the paper crust in the usual way with a knife, or perhaps better, with a pair of scissors. Lay the sections back from the centre and take out the articles one by one, from the opening made. The decorations of the pie are thus preserved throughout the ceremony of serving.

"The Other Fellow."

Most men think that the "other fellow" has a better job than they them-selves have. Very likely, when two men meet, the thought is often mutual, men meet, the thought is often mutual, as men generally exaggerate one an-other's prosperity, and while a man may have a difficult time to make both ends meet, other people may be car-ried away by his outward appearance when they ought to be congratulating themselves that they are not in his po-sition. There is a wholesome lesson in this. Don't judge too much by ap-pearances and "style." Don't envy other people. "Hold up your own end." You stand in your own shoes, and more than likely if you got into the other man's, you would find them anything but well fitting and comfort-able. able.

Hearing voices inside the room, the wife of the eminent financier paused at the door of his office and heard this conversation:

Mark Twain, the Philosopher. No humorist has ever won perma-nent fame by virtue of his humor alone. The jokes of Aristophanes were excru-clatingly funny in their day, but if our appreciation of this old Attic comedy depended on its power to keep us laugh-ing now, the shelves, whereon it re-poses would be even dustier than they are. Mark Twain holds his place be-cause he has thought deeply and seri-ously about mankind and its needs. The thought has been colored, of course, by his own situation and ex-periences. Moffet in the Amer-ican Review of Reviews, and the prizes of life were fresh and sweet and the road from success to success stretched invitingly ahead, and the Great Divide seemed a long way off, his feelings were optimistic. He looked on the bright side of everything. If every-thing were not for the best in the best of all possible worlds, things were at least doing very well, and this was a pretty good world. Later, when be-reavements came, and disappointments, and the rough edges of life intruded where their touch seemed a profana-tion, and fame seemed to have less en-chantment in the possessing than had glowed about it in the winning, and the snow fell upon the hair of friends, and ife offered little more to look forward to, his thoughts became more somber. Nobody ever needs to ask where he stands. It is enough to know that a wrong has been committed to know that he is against it. The sufferer may be an American negro, an Indian, a Chinaman. a Fili-pino, or a Coneo savage—he will find a defender in Mark Twain. And with all that there is charity for the oppre-sor, too, unless he has sinned against the light. The sympathy with the slave in "Huckleberry Finn" was no more perfect than the sympathy with the slave-holder who suffered from the same system. That is why the world is learning to call Mark Twain something more than "humorist."

Across the twilight fields of time they ring Those Christmas bells of all the van-

Make Social Drinking Unpopular.

If social drinking in the society world could be made unfashionable the cause of temperance would be greatly ad-vanced. If social drinking among men could be made unpopular total abstinence would receive a mighty impulse. It is as a social custom that strong drink begins its deadly work. The young man does not take his first drink because he likes it. He takes it because he thinks it will make him seem manly and up to date to do no seem manly and up-to-date to do so. He does not purchase a bottle of whis-key and go off by himself to drink it. He may do that later on; but at first he drinks for the social pleasure he expects to derive from it.

Temperance workers find their main fields of work among the children and the drunkards. One class devotes its the drunkards. One class devotes its chief efforts to pledging the children, and the other class applies its energies to saving the drunkard. But between these two extremes is the great recruit-ing ground of inebriety—the social drinking customs of the country. Visit any restaurant where liquor

Visit any restaurant where liquors are served at any hour when they are crowded with guests and it will seem to you that every patron of the estab-lishment, whether man or woman, is drinking cocktails, champagne, or beer, with an occasional order for straight whiskey. Judging by such appearances to you that every patron of the estab-lishment, whether man or woman, is drinking cocktails, champagne, or beer, with an occasional order for straight whiskey. Judging by such appearances you may think that drinking is largely on the increase. And perhaps it is true that there is more social drinking than formerly. Modern demands have not reached this branch of the liquor problem. But it is believed that there is not so much drunkenness as there used to be. Not because people have become more abstemious in their de-sires, but because sobriety has become a business requirement. The social drinker is in a sort of fool's paradise. He imagines he is having a good time; but he is blocking his way to advancement. The man who carries a whiskey handicap has a hard road to travel. Nobody wants him. The real rulers of the world have de-cided against whiskey. Railroads and corporations have adopted rigid rules with regard to strong drink. They will not continue in their employ men who are known to use intoxicating liquor. Trades unions are beginning to hard Trades unions are beginning to bar the drinking man. They are finding him an expensive proposition. By their rules there is a scale of wages for certain kinds of work. But the drinking man fails to make good. He reduces the average and brings reproach on worthy members. worthy members. In these days of close competition and small margins it is necessary for a man to be at his best if he would suc-ceed; and no man can be entirely fit who is ever so slightly under the in-fluence of strong drink. Then there is the domestic, or home, side of the drink question. The man who drinks brings wratchedness and Then there is the domestic, or home, side of the drink question. The man who drinks brings wretchedness and misery to his family. He is not a good husband. He is not a good father. He defrauds those whom he has sworn to love and cherish. He robs them of their birthright of honor and protec-tion. If whiskey makes him vicious they fear him. If it makes him stupid they are ashamed of him. If he is poor they suffer privation and want. poor they suffer privation and want. If he is rich they look to the time when bad management or neglect will reduce them to povery, and added to reduce them to povery, and added to the humiliation of his habits there will tions. Send no money but write her to-day if your children trouble you in this way. Don't blame the child, the chances are that it can't help it. This treatment also cures adults and aged people troubled with urine difficulties by day or night. But in spite of business requirements and domestic needs, social drinking continues. There is something incom-prehensible about the tolerance of a custom which, if continued, may ruin a man's prospects. Sobriety is stock in trade for the am-

Sobriety is stock in trade for the am-bitious man. It opens the door of op-portunity. It gives him a chance to utilize his ability. It converts his energy into cash. It materializes his aspirations. Inebriety blights ambi-tion, closes the door to opportunity, paralyzes energy, and destroys the as-pirations pirations.

Sobriety builds up. Inebriety pulls own. The two are antagonistic. They down. have nothing in common. And yet, at the very time when sobriety is at the highest rate of premium, and drunken-ness at the lowest rate of discount, we are told that social drinking is on the increase

There is more than a note of incon sistency in a policy that finds its plea-sures in undermining its possibilities. Social drinking does not in all cases lead to drunkenness; but nearly all lead to drunkenness; but nearly alt drunkenness begins in social drinking. The young man who begins to drink does not intend to become an inebriate. He means to be a moderate drinker. He knows of prominent business men who drink moderately, but who are respect-ed and honored citizens. If he thinks at all, he thinks he will be like them. Unfortunately there are plenty of such men-men of wealth and promin-ence, who by their example say to the young man, "It is right and possible to drink moderately." As has often been said in these col-

As has often been said in these col-umns, all men are not equally affected by the poison of alcohol. Many men can never be moderate drinkers. For them there is no half-way ground. They must let drink alone or they will drink to excess drink to excess. It must be remembered that the mod-

It must be remembered that the mod-erate drinkers who occupy high posi-tions have reached those positions in spite of their drinking practices, and not because of them. While they might defend those habits in themselves they would be quick to object to them in those who asked their assistance. There is no profession or position or occupation where drinking habits are a recommendation. If they are tolerated they are not approved. Science and Industry have pronounced against them. It remains for Fashion to say the final word.

Note just two or three points of superiority.

Begin at the bottom. The front legs are on wheels making it easy to move the churn whether empty or filled. Suppose that the floor is uneven, all that you have to do is to loosen the screw on the upright back board at the bottom and insert enough paper to make the feet ret evenly on the floor. And then it is the essiest churn to set up, because it is put together with only two machine made bolts. No other churn has this handy feature.

Did you ever sit down to your butter making and do something else while churning? You can do this with a "DAISY" churn.

The "DAISY" churn is fitfed with a foot pedal and a bow lever, so that it can be oper-ated by the foot or by the hand independently or together and either standing or sitting.

The bow lever being attached to both sides of the barrel makes it revolve evenly.

And then there are the Cream Breakers. This devise makes the butter come quicker and the "DAISY" cream breakers can be put in or taken out in a jiffy — a feature not found in any other churn.

Last of all; - Even if you are now a good butter maker, the "DAISY" churn will make

We believed that the "DAISY" churn was the best on the market but now we have facts which prove that the Canadian people think so too. That's what having these 100,000 customers who are pleased with the "DAISY" churn means. But before we tell you about our GREAT OFFER we want to make you understand pre-cisely what the "DAISY" churn is and what the "DAISY" churn can do. We don't deny that there are other good churns in the world, all we claim is that the "DAISY" churn is the strongest, handlest, most ser-viceable and the best butter maker on the market.

Customers

you a better butter maker.

Remember that this claim is backed by nearly 100,000 housekeepers who use the "DAISY" churn and declare it to be absolutely the strong-est, surest, quickest, best and in view of the improvements, the cheapest churn on the market.

OUR GREAT OFFER

We will ship the "DAISY" churn to your address and PAY THE FREIGHT on re-ceipt of price. Keep the churn on 30 DAYS' TRIAL. If it is not in every partic-ular all that we claim it to be and the most satisfactory churn you have ever used, ship it back to us and we will pay the freight and return your money.

December, 1907. Rupture

New Scientific Appliance, Always a Perfect Fit-Adjustable to Any Size Person-Easy, Comfortable, Never Slips, No Obnoxious Springs or Pads-Costs Less Than Many Common

Trusses - Made for Men Women or Children.

Sent on Trial I have invented a rupture appliance that I can safely say, by 30 years' experience in the rupture business, is the only one that will absolutely hold the rupture and never slip, and yet is light, cool, comfortable, conforms to every movement of the body without chafing or hurting and costs less than many ordinary trusses. There are no springs, or hard, lumpy pads, and yet it holds the rupture safely and firmly without pain or inconvenience. I have put the price so low that any person, rich or poor, can buy, and I abso-lutely guarantee it.

I make it to your order—send it to you-you wear it, and if it doesn't satisfy you send it back to me and I will refund your money.

That is the fairest proposition ever made by a rupture specialist. The banks or any responsi-ble citizen in Marshall will tell you that is the way I do business—always absolutely on the way I do business—always absolutely on the square. If you have tried most everything else, come to me. Where others fail is where I have my greatest success. Write me to-day and I will send you my book on Rupture and its Cure, showing my appliance and giving you prices and names of people who have tried it and been cured. It is instant relief when all others fail. Remember I use no salves, no harness, no lies. Just a straight business deal at a reasonable price. C. L. BROOKS, 5488 Brooks Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Grayce—"Edythe is dreadfully for-ward. She stood under the mistletoe for an hour last evening, and when that failed to work, she inveigled that young broker Stocksley into the con-servatory and asked him to explain to her what vas meant by a 'squeeze." Gladys—"What did he do?" Grayce— "What could he do?"

Just before the youngster dozed off to sleep, he opened his eyes and ex-claimed: "It's a good thing elefants don't wear stockings, isn't it?" "I don't suppose elephants care to wear them." "If they did, it wouldn't be fair. It would be just the same as hanging up four coffee sacks every Christmas Eve."

Struggling Pastor—"Nearly all the congregation have subscribed liberally for the Christmas tree fund, and I feel sure that I can also have your hearty co-operation. How much will you—" Mrs. Leader—"Let me see. Oh, I am the only member who has a carriage and coachman, I think." "Yes. The rest are poor." "Well, I will drive around and collect the subscriptions."

How to Make Clothing Fireproof.

Light, fluffy garments of children, as well as the heavier textures worn by adults, can be made nearly fireproof, at least so much so that they will be difficult to ignite, by use of a simple and inexpensive chemical. The dis-covery is accredited to Dr. Doremus, a "After the loss of a young son, whose summer dress took fire from a candle flame, I made a thorough search among chemical agents to determine which would most effectively render dresses non-inflammable. None equalled ammo-nium phosphate. Each time the underclothing and dresses of my children are washed this chemical is added to the starch solution, which makes them flame-proof. For forty years I have urged the employment of chemical agents to save life, but the apathy of the public surpasses belief."

Scalds and Burns.

In case of burns or scalds cover the burned section with cooking soda and lay wet cloths on the burn. Other good remedies are white of egg and olive oil; olive oil or linseed oil, plain or mixed with chalk or whiting; sweet or olive oil and lime water.

First Aid in Case of Burns.

When a person is seriously burned with hot water or steam, of course the first thing to do is to send for medical assistance, but in the interim the inassistance, but in the interim the in-jured person's clothing should be re-moved and bandages soaked with sweet oil, and lime water should be lightly applied to the burned parts. If steam has been inhaled, sweet oil should be swallowed by the patient in use. Will keep any length of time. If bottled it will sell readily at a profit of over 200 per cent. Apply with a sponge and rinse with clear warm water.

Block magnesia, such as is used for cleaning hats and gowns, is also use-ful in the kitchen for restoring the luster to dull silver. Applied with a soft cotton cloth it imports a beauti-ful brilliancy to the article so treated.

Few people know the value of bran water for household use. For cleaning woodwork, and particularly paint, it is invaluable, for not only does it remove all dirt, but it also leaves the paint in as good condition as new, as it does not affect the varnish or finish as does an alkali. Colored goods, prints, etc., which under ordinary conditions fade in washing, will never lose their color or newness if washed in bran water. In washing the hair it will be found a thorough scalp cleanser, and the fair will retain its natural color and appear thorough scalp cleanser, and the fair will retain its natural color and appear glossy. The water is easily prepared. Fill an ordinary salt bag with bran, place it in a pail or other receptacle, then pour hot water over same and it is ready for use. The hands never suf-fer from the use of this water. On the contrary, they are softened and whitened.

Sleeplessness .- When the nerves are unstrung and the whole body given up to wretchedness, when the mind filled with gloom and dismal forebodings, the result of derangement of the digestive organs, sleeplessness comes to add to the distress. If only the subject could sleep, there would be oblivion for a while and temporary relief. Par-melee's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will act so beneficially that the subject will awake refreshed
