The Royal Commission

Number of Witnesses, Whites and Chinese, Were Examined Yesterday Afternoon.

Two Prominent Grocers Tell of Chinese Peddlers' Competition—Aid. Kinsman Testifies.

(From Friday's Daily.) The first witness at the Royal commission yesterday afternoon was James Shaw, a market gardener, who gave evidence regarding the cheap labor and low prices of Chinese, which he claimed made competition impossible.

The second witness was Mr. Bradburn, who gave evidence regarding the Chinese peddlers' competition. He had lived here for eight years. He was two years in the cannery, and five years peddling fish, and the other years was devoted to more salubrious employment. In the cannery he received an advance of $20 and the fish did not come, so he made no money.

The third witness was Mr. Kinsman, who gave evidence regarding the Chinese peddlers' competition. He had lived here for eight years. He was two years in the cannery, and five years peddling fish, and the other years was devoted to more salubrious employment.

The fourth witness was Mr. Munn, who gave evidence regarding the Chinese peddlers' competition. He had lived here for eight years. He was two years in the cannery, and five years peddling fish, and the other years was devoted to more salubrious employment.

The fifth witness was Mr. Clark, who gave evidence regarding the Chinese peddlers' competition. He had lived here for eight years. He was two years in the cannery, and five years peddling fish, and the other years was devoted to more salubrious employment.

The sixth witness was Mr. Munn, who gave evidence regarding the Chinese peddlers' competition. He had lived here for eight years. He was two years in the cannery, and five years peddling fish, and the other years was devoted to more salubrious employment.

China. The last time he went to China he took $25. This was 12 years ago, and since then he sent home about $80, Mexican money, per year.

In reply to Mr. Foley he said he paid his own passage here. To the president of the commission he said the Chinese peddler made from four to ten thousand cigars per month.

To Mr. Bradburn he said his cigars were sold at On King's establishment, on Store street, at 5 and 10 cents each. Lee Coy, a fish peddler, was the next occupant of the box. He had lived here eight years. He was two years in the cannery, and five years peddling fish, and the other years was devoted to more salubrious employment.

He received an advance of $20 and the fish did not come, so he made no money. The second year he got $15 for a week, not pay for his board. Peddling fish, he made sometimes $2 or a little over per day, and some days made nothing.

available the Japs have to be obtained. He believed that the presence of Chinese and Japanese here was a necessary evil, but he did not regard the cannery industry as depending on them.

Asked as to whether it would be eventually necessary for a white man with a family to come down to the living price of Chinese to obtain employment, he said he considered it unwise for a man with a family, for instance, to come here unless he had something definite in sight. He would not advise a family to come here with existing conditions.

He did not necessary follow, however, if the wages were reduced the profits would be increased correspondingly. From a national standpoint if the middle class of the country was encroached upon by the Chinese, it would exercise a deleterious effect.

In fact Canada would eventually become Chineseized. No Chinese, nor anybody else, should be allowed to come here and monopolize the trade of this country to the detriment of the white man. He believed that the Chinese immigration had an injurious effect on other immigration. He mentioned a conversation with a gentleman from England, in which the latter told of his disinclination to compete in market gardening with the Chinese whom he saw digging vegetables by moonlight.

for the great influx of Chinese or Japanese. The American canneries employed the individual Chinamen, and probably engaged them by the month. Some, they say, they pay as much as $60 per month, and others at $30. Some of them were expert and others were common laborers.

There were between 60 and 70 canneries in this province, and an average of 75 Chinese each would be employed. This would approximate from 3,000 to 5,000. There were that many Indians on the coast, but they could not be secured, as some of the work required expert labor. The white men could not do it at the above mentioned rates of wages.

He pointed out that the canning season was short, and men would probably only be employed from four to eight weeks. He thought there were a sufficient number of Chinese here at present to supply the demand. He preferred some classes of white people if they could be obtained at reasonable rates. There were, of course, some classes of whites no more desirable than Chinese.
