culous a scene as ever took place within the Legislative Halls of the Colony. An eye-witness has furnished us with the following graphic sketch thereof: THURSDAY, Feb. 12th.

At 20 minutes to four p.m., Mr. Lawrence Barron was admitted to the House, and received instructions from Ambo as to what time the latter would be going home.

Ten minutes after the doors were opened for the public—The Speaker being in the Chair. All the government als. members in attendance—the Opposition seats vacant. Mr. Carter showing uneasiness at the absence of "the other side."

4 o'clock,-The Premier still uneasy, and nervously says—" I'll wait five minutes longer." Shea in trouble-his back turned to the people (as it always has been) and his head down. The Speaker moved Burton into the chair. Chair taken-Burton looking very wise, Mr. Bowring rose and said-" Mr. Speaker, I move that the-that is, I don't mean Mr. Speaker -I beg your pardon Mr. Speaker. Mr. President, I move that the addressgentlemen, I should have said Mr. Chairman, and must acknowledge ahthe observances, ah-of the House ah tives and Liberals. Whites way's face, after getting off this joke, looks like a whitewashed skull. Every. thing is at a dead lock. Bye and bye. McNeilly rises and says, The Opposiproceed with the Address." Solemn mate. silence prevails for ten or fifteen minutes, Shea and Carter consulting. In about twenty minutes the Speaker calls upon the Premier to have address proceeded with. No reply from Carter or Shea. Ten minutes elapses. Mr. Winter said it was too bad the way Govern. 31. members were treated. He was of oppinion that the Address should be proceeded with. Some people, he said, came here to have fun, and others to hear the business of the country attended to; but it was his (Mr. W's.) sopinion that the government members were the laughing-stock of the country-sitting here, looking at each other, and doing nothing. The Opposition were treating the Government members v ry badly. Mr. Winter then sat down, and there was silence for some minutes

"Question," cries McNeilly. "Question," cries the Speaker. Silence again for some time. Then Mr. Carter rose and said it was really too bad, but he thought hon members were engaged in looking over some election matters, Mr. Carter sat down looking daggers at the vacent seats op posite. Silence again for nearly ten minutes. Mr. Shea then rose and said, no matter what hon members were about, he would show up to the country what the opposition were doing the last four years. The day would come when he would expose them, Resents an insult put upon her. All hail, then, to the "Niebe." The British good ship "Niobe," That sailed the Spanish main! Hail to the crew that manned her, Hail to her brave commander, Sir Lambton Loraine!

Defenceless the "Virginius" lay, A hopeless prize in Cuban waters, While o'er that tranquil azure bay The musket volley told of slaughters; Rife in the ranks of men in chains, By brutal hands in horrid manner, And, trampled under bloody stains, And mocked at, lay our starry, banner. No ship to call a pause had we, Until the good ship "Niohe" Sail d up the Spanish main; And out spoke—ne'er debating, With his shotted guns in waiting, Sir Lambton Loraine:

"Look that no further crime appears, Ye murderers without love or pity, Or round about your craven ears I'll knock the fragments of your city!

Albion can lend her lion's grip For liberty and human feeling!" But four guns had the "Niobe." But skulked beneath her frowing lee The brutes, like whelps in pain; And laughed at their repinings, At Butcher Buriel's whinings; Sir Lambton Loraine.

Forget we not his name to raise. But sound afar his meed of praise From a fair nation, grateful-hearted; it was all about, did you, Phebe? Sound it afar o'er land and wave, From frozen peaks and Arctic highlands To where the corsair billows rave On silver shores of tropic-islands!
