CHAPTER XXXIII.

"Quite right, quite right," says Mr. Palmer, with a pompous smile. "I'm what you like, Stancy; anything to make the ladies happy; and never mind the expense; do the thing 'and-some,' and with his old watchword on his lips he makes his adieu.

"Good-night, dear," murmurs May, "we shall see each other to-morrow, sha'n't we? Oh! I am happier to-night than I have been for such a long time."

Paula goes back to the window and looks far out to sea. Her brain feels confused; the reappearance of the Palmers has recalled the past, that past which had been growing dim and obscured as if a veil were falling between it and her. Then something else seems to haunt her, and suddenly she discovers that it is the pale, wan face of the girl in the bath-chair; but she is not to be left long in silence to commune with her thoughts.

Alice, who has been humming one of the light airs with which the band favours them daily, breaks off abruptly.

"Well," she says, coming into the bay and locking her arm in Paula's, "a penny for your thoughts, my dear?"

"You'd get a bad bargain," says Paula, quietly.

"Should I, Miss Doleful?" she retorts, lightly. "What a pleasant evening we have had! Oh, it seems like new life! Is that true about the yacht?"

"Mr. Stancy said something about it."

"Mr. Stancy! How formal we are!" says Alice, with a laugh. "Really, it's awfully good-natured of him. But he always was good-natured, and how much he has improved!"

Paula looks round at her to see if she is indulging in sarcasm, but the clear, cold eyes meet hers unflinchingly. "So much more to say for himself, so very pleasant. What a singular thing it is that he won't get married."

He is an awfully good part, you know. Oh, my dear, simple Paula!" and she puts her arm round Paula's waist, "what a lucky girl you might be. How many young persons would give their eyebrows to be in your place."

"And yet there is a dreadful draught here," says Paula, looking at the window with a smile.

Alice laughs.

"You foolish girl!" she murmurs, chidingly. "You remind me of the child that cried for the moon on a cold night when there was a good fire for him to sit by if he only chose! What would I give for your chance! Of course you see it; you would be blind if you didn't. It is plain to all of us."

"What is plain?" asks Paula, desperately.

"That Stancy de Palmer is still waiting to make this foolish sister of mine the future mistress of Powis Court."

"Is it?" says Paula, with a flush on her face, and a light in her eyes. "And is it not equally plain that she is not willing to be mistress of Powis Court or any other court?"

Alice laughs.

"Don't fly at me like a tigress, my dear," she says, "and don't make hasty resolutions. Let us wait awhile. Even you"—accidentally—"can't sit and weep forever for a man who doesn't and never did care a pin for you!"

Pale and trembling, Paula looks down at her steadily.

"That is between me and—him," she says in a low voice. "Leave the past alone."

But Alice is not discouraged.

"I shall be charmed, my dear," she says, "if you will do likewise, and think a little of the present. But that is what you sentimental people will not do, is it? Of all selfish classes, commend me for pure, unadulterated selfishness to the disappointed lover. You think me selfish, and heartless, and worldly; but, my dear, I cannot hold a candle to you. Here are we—not only we two, but poor Bob, poor Bob you are so fond of, you know!"—with a sneer—"struggling with genteel poverty which you could raise us from with a word—for you could make your own terms with the Palmers, but you will not; you prefer to sit and weep over that miserable scapegrace, while your nearest and dearest lie in the gutter! It does not strike me as very noble, my dear Paula; but then, you see, I have never had the good fortune to be jilted by that flower of his sex, Sir Herrick Powis!"

And with a shrug of the shoulders that gleam whitely through her muslin dress, Alice turns away, and Paula is left to digest the bitter words and make the best of them.

With a gasp as if for breath—with the low, inarticulate cry of a wild animal driven to bay—she covers her face with her hands, and sinks to her knees, shuddering with horror and loathing.

No! no! not even for Bob's sake could she do this thing which Alice wants her to do—not even for Bob's!

CHAPTER XXXIV.

When she came down next morning, pale and heavy-eyed, Paula finds her sunshade lying on the table of the sitting-room, beside it a small bouquet of hot-house flowers. Tied to the handle of the holder is a small slip of paper with "For Miss Paula Estcourt, with grateful thanks," written on it in a thin, Italian hand.

There is something else for her on the table—nothing less than a letter bearing the huge crest of the Palmers, and addressed to her in the scrawling handwriting of Mr. Stancy. It is to the effect that he has hired a yacht of a man he met at the hotel after he left "the delightful society of Miss Paula last night," and that the writer will be much honoured if Miss Paula and her sister will try the vessel to-day.

Paula crushes the letter in her hand and flings it in the grate; the bouquet and its tiny note she carries to her own room, with an instinctive desire to conceal them from Alice, who comes down radiant and full of anticipatory joy.

"Anything from Stancy?" she asks.

"He promised to let us know the first thing this morning."

"Yes," says Paula, indifferently. "There was a note from him, asking us to try a new yacht he had hired. He wants us to go this morning."

"No! Really?" exclaims Alice, delightedly. "Of course we shall go."

"Not I, I think; indeed, I'm sure," says Paula, trying to speak carelessly and, if possible, avoid the torrent of remonstrance and expostulation, not to say indignation, which she knows will presently overwhelm her.

"Not you!" retorts Alice, incredulously. "Why—why—what nonsense! Why not?"

"I don't want to," says Paula, with a shrug of her shoulders. "Perhaps I'm afraid of the treacherous ocean. Indeed, I feel like the man in the comic song, 'That I was never meant for the sea.'"

"That's all nonsense and—and subterfuge," says Alice, angrily. "You know he has got this yacht expressly for you! You know he only cares about your going."

"I know nothing of the sort," says Paula, a touch of crimson coming into her face, and her brows drawing straight and ominous. "And I do not wish to know it. Why do you worry me?" she says, with an unusual burst, half-indignant, half-pleading.

"Worry you!" exclaims Alice.

"Yes, worry me. Why should I do this or refrain from that when I choose to be exactly the reverse. Have I ever worried you? Ever since I can remember I have leant to your will, Alice, and indeed I have not minded the submitting—not much—but when it comes to this—" she turns her head away.

"To what, pray?" demands Alice, with an air of injured innocence. "To simply asking you to avail yourself of the first opportunity of pleasure and enjoyment that has fallen in our way for nearly a twelvemonth?"

"It would be no pleasure nor enjoyment to me," says Paula, quietly. "You must go along with May. Please go and enjoy yourself, and—with a laugh—"I hope you won't be ill, I'm sure, or nearly sure, that I should."

Alice opens her lips to renew the argument; but there is something about Paula's face, a light in her eyes, that warns Alice that even Paula can be driven too hard.

"Very well, dear," she says. "Of course I shall go, and of course Stancy de Palmer will be very disappointed;

but I'll make the best of it."

"I am sure that you will do that," says Paula, with a laugh; and she goes upstairs.

As she has no wish to meet Stancy de Palmer, and have to contend against his remonstrances and exhortations, she puts on her hat immediately after breakfast, while Alice is decking herself in a galatee—a wretched costume, which has been lying by in anticipation of some such chance as this—and goes down to the beach.

There, in a sheltered nook between two rocks, she coils herself up, book in hand, and watches the green sea ruffling in over the yellow sands, which are already dotted by the various specimens of Nouvelle society.

But they pass unheeded, as usual, before Paula's absent eyes. She is thinking that to-day the mail will come in from the colonies; that, perchance, there may be a letter from dear Bob, fighting with Nature, and trying to wrest from her iron grip the wherewithal to enable him to keep his promise to May.

With a little sigh she opens her book; but as she does so, happens to look up and sees the maid, who walked beside Miss Hamilton's chair, standing at a little distance from her.

Paula lays down her book, and goes up to her.

"Good-morning," she says. "How is Miss Hamilton this morning?"

Weston makes her a respectful little bow.

"Thank you, miss. She seems about the same; I think she's a little paler and weaker, perhaps."

"I am so sorry," says Paula. "She will not be out to-day, I am afraid!"

Weston shakes her head.

"No, miss; she said she shouldn't go out to-day. Sometimes she'll stay in for days and days together, lying on her sofa and looking at the sea, or watching the people."

"I wanted to thank her for the beautiful bouquet she was so kind as to send me," says Paula.

Weston bows.

"I'll tell her, miss."

"Do, please; and will you say that I hope she will be better, and soon able to get out again? This air must be good for her."

"Yes, miss," says Weston; then she looks at Paula, wistfully and hesitatingly.

"Well!" says Paula, with a smile of encouragement, "what were you going to say?"

"I was going to presume, miss—to ask if you'd be so good—you were so kind yesterday—as to come and see my mistress."

Paula colours, conscious of the existence of a desire on her part to comply.

"She sees no one, and it is so dull," says Weston, pleadingly; "and—begging your pardon, miss—she seemed to take to you so yesterday."

"Do you think so?" says Paula, with a little blush. "Well, I shall be very pleased, if you think she would like to see me. When shall I come?"

"Will you come now, miss?" asks Weston. "I am sure she will be pleased to see you, miss, quite sure."

Paula picks up her book at once—and yet a strange feeling of hesitation, almost of repugnance, seizes her; but she shakes it off, and there is no sign of it on her face as she climbs the gentle slope beside Weston, who ventures to make some truly British remarks on the customs of the Nouvillites.

RAILWAY STRIKE THREATENS FRANCE.

Their principal claims are for modification in pension scale, release on bail of an engineer charged with responsibility for a recent wreck, and reinstatement of a carpenter dismissed from one of the workshops of the line. #### BRITISH PARLIAMENTARY NEWS.

LONDON, Feb. 25. Continuance of the war emergency laws, which had already been discussed at a whole sitting of the House, was brought up on the report stage in the House of Commons last night, and the debate was further adjourned. Members were informed in reply to questions that an agreement had been made to exchange prisoners with Russia, that it was hoped that the appointment of an Ambassador to Russia would shortly be announced, and summer time would last from March 28th to September 27th. Mr. Winston Churchill stated that the Treaty provisions in regard to the German army reductions were, broadly speaking, being satisfactorily adhered to. Joseph Caillaux, former Premier, explaining his activities in Italy on resumption to-day of his trial before the Senate, sitting as a High Court, on a charge of having had treasonable dealings with the enemy, said he foresaw in 1916 the economic conditions that would prevail after the war. He declared he had sought an economic alliance with Italy within the Entente so that Italy's and France's interests should be safeguarded at the Peace Conference. At no time, M. Caillaux asserted, was there any question of politics or a peace of compromise.

DIAGNOSING TYPHOID FEVER.

CHICAGO, Feb. 25. A new method of diagnosing typhoid fever, which can be performed in ten minutes at the bedside, aroused interest yesterday among physicians attending a meeting of the American Congress of International Medicine. The test was discovered by Prof. Bass, of Tulane University, New Orleans, who will give a practical demonstration of his methods. "The present method of determining typhoid fever," said Dr. F. Smithie, Secretary of the Congress, "usually takes 12 to 14 hours. Bacterial culture is made and a laboratory examination is required. Dr. Bass performs a blood test at the bedside which can be done in ten minutes. Such rapid method would not only permit earlier treatment, but would serve to check materially the spread of the disease."

WILSON'S NOTE REACHES LONDON.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25. Charles R. Crane, of Chicago, business man, millionaire and world traveller, who was appointed United States Minister to Chili by President Taft, and recalled while on his way to Pekin, for talking too much, has been selected by President Wilson for the same post to succeed Dr. Paul Reinsch.

Presentation Convent Association Elects Officers for 1920.

A meeting of the Presentation Convent Association was held on Sunday afternoon at the Presentation Convent School Rooms at 3 o'clock for the election of officers for the coming year and to make arrangements for a series of entertainments with which to augment the funds of the Association. Before the meeting a letter was read from His Grace the Archbishop regretting the fact that he could not be present, and asking the Association to elect their officers, and asking those elected for office not to refuse, as he was anxious to have the Association keep together, not only until the present amount needed had been subscribed, but that he desired that the Association should not disperse at any time as the Sisters with an ever increasing number of pupils would always have many wants to be attended to. His Grace eulogized the work done last year under the President, Miss Furlong, the amount handed in for last year being over $7000.00. This was beyond his highest expectations, and he heartily congratulated the Association on the years work. His Grace also mentioned in his letter that although the Sisters of the Presentation order were getting from the Government the same assistance as that given the Brothers teaching our boys, nevertheless the Brothers' Funds are greatly augmented by an annual collection, which in 1919 amounted to $3,000, so that it is absolutely necessary for the welfare of our Catholic Girls that the Association continue the good work.

The election of officers for the coming year resulted as follows:
President—Mrs. Otto Emerson.
Vice-Pres.—Mrs. John Curtin.
Treasurer—Miss Agnes Doyle, re-elected.
Secretary—Miss Margaret Walsh, re-elected.

Last year's Committee consisting of Mesdames Redmond, Shortall, Bearns, Fortune, Smyth, Donnelly and Miss O'Regan has been added to by the following names: Mesdames T. H. O'Neil, W. Lawlor, Ollphant and Payne; Misses Phelan, Clancey, Murphy and Bailey.

At the conclusion of the election a vote of thanks to the retiring President was proposed by Mrs. Emerson, and seconded by Miss Katie Duff, after which Miss Furlong thanked the members for their co-operation with her in all the work undertaken during her term of office, and wished them every success in the future. The President then addressed the meeting, and made arrangements for the annual St. Patrick's Day entertainment, which will be held, thanks to the courtesy of Rev. Bro. Ryan, in the Auld Maximilian College. The entertainment will take the form of a sketch and concert, and by the advertisements later will be seen what is in store for those who attend. A dance is also in preparation for Easter, and many other attractions that will be announced in due time. The meeting then adjourned.—Com.

Family Told She Would Die And Children Summoned to Bedside—Recovering After Taking Tanlac.

Many wonderful endorsements have been given Tanlac, but the statement made by Mrs. G. W. Williams, of Gadsden, Ala., is in many respects so remarkable as to be almost incredible. Her complete statement follows:
"For nearly fifteen years I have had kidney trouble. I also had stomach trouble and suffered from nervous indigestion. I could take no nourishment except a little sweet milk, and would have vomiting of the heart and nervous headaches and terrible pains in my sides and back. I got so weak I had to take to my bed and I stayed there eighteen months. Doctors called two or three times a day, but I kept getting worse and fell off until I was almost a skeleton and had to be turned in bed, and only weighed ninety pounds.
"My husband spent more than $800 trying to get me well. Finally I got so bad I was told that I could live only a few days. I believed, of course, that I was going to die, and told my husband to telegraph Thomasville, N.C., for my son and to Atlanta and Birmingham for my other children.
"When my daughter-in-law, Mrs. R. C. Nelson arrived from Atlanta, she begged father to get me Tanlac. He went right down to Vance's drug store and got me a bottle. I began taking it and on the second day I began to get hungry, and asked for something to eat. They gave it to me and it agreed with me, and I got so I could eat anything I wanted and just as much as I wanted.
"After this I improved right along, and it wasn't any time hardly before I was out of bed. It just seemed like the more Tanlac I took the better I got, and I have actually gained forty eight pounds in weight. I sleep good now and am not nervous any more like I was. Yes, I feel almost as well as I ever felt in my life and am doing nearly all of my housework and milk the cow and churn the milk.
"After I got able to go about I visited my daughter, Mrs. Short, at Ensley, Ala., and have just returned from a trip to the shore. I don't do anything but talk about Tanlac. All of my neighbors are talking about it, too, and think it is wonderful how this medicine has helped me."
Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors, under the personal direction of a special Tanlac representative; in Harbor Buffett, by Thomas Wakely & Sons; in Placentia, by James Murphy & Son; and in Topsail by J. K. Bursell.—adv

Old, But Ever Knew.
"All the old nursery rhymes," says the London Daily News, "are bursting out with fresh flowers of illustration, and it is interesting to know that the rhymes which are still first favorites have held their position for hundreds of years. 'Three Blind Mice' appeared in a music book dated 1608. 'Sing a Song of Sixpence' was sung by children over 250 years ago. 'Pussy Cat, Pussy Cat' was written in Elizabeth's reign, over 300 years ago. 'Lucky Locket' is not quite so old. It was produced in London in 1580, at the same time as 'The Frog and the Mouse.' 'Little Jack Horner' is over 300 years old. They are all likely to be as popular 300 years hence as they were 300 years ago."

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

RUTH CAMERON

AND YET MEN WANT TO VOTE.

In the state of New York, a woman was elected to the legislature at the last elections. When she chose her seat, opportunity of choice is given to according to seniority she found only the front and back seats left. Wishing to be able to hear, as she was there on business, she took one of the front seats.

Later, one of the men remarked upon her choice of a seat: "It's all right now," he said, "but toward the end of the session the men begin to get a little tired and uneasy, and sometimes they throw things around. When I read that my mind immediately commented: "And yet men want to vote."

What They Always Say About The Follies of Women.

Ever since I have been knee high a grasshopper I have heard every feminine frivolity and folly commented on in that way. Women go about with low shoes and silk stockings in the winter, and wear furs in the summer, and yet they want to vote. Women say illogical, silly things—yet they want to vote. Women themselves all out bargain hunting and save a dollar or two at the end of several hours' time (very rarely they had the time and didn't save the dollar or two) and yet they want to vote!

Now why should not men's wish to vote be held up to ridicule in the light of their follies? They really are them, you know. They have worn for many years a style of hat which is unspeakably ugly in itself which is coming to about one man in 500, and which is said to make the hair drop out. They are absolute slaves to fashion—and yet they want to vote.

Are Five Times As Susceptible As Women.

Men are five times as susceptible to flattery as women and yet the sex which has this great weakness of character wants to vote.

I don't expect any believer in equal suffrage ever expects to hear the last of the fact that when the first Congress-woman was faced with the terrible alternative of voting for one of the two most dreadful things in the world—namely, war or the other most dreadful thing; a dishonorable peace she broke down and wept. I haven't a doubt that on the annals of Congress we could find records of occasions when men have wept, and surely they could have nothing any more worthy of lamentation.

Just Because They Weep Instead of Swear.

Besides weeping is women's substitute for swearing, and I don't suppose profanity is exactly unknown in Congress.

I am not ashamed of Jeanette Rankin for weeping. I don't believe that the fact that women have a different way of expressing their emotion proves that they should be disfranchised.

If two women were elected to a get into a dispute and "throw things around," wouldn't the country ring with the fact? It would be given headlines in all the papers, and all the anti-suffragists would say, "And yet women want to vote."

And yet for years men have been doing the same thing as a matter of course. One almost wonders why someone hasn't suggested an anti-suffrage for Men League.

Mainly About People.

Henry E. Huntington of New York has one of the finest collections of Shakespeare in the world. He paid $75,000 for a 2 x 3 inch volume of Shakespeare's "Venus and Adonis," which was printed in 1599 and weighs only two ounces.

Miss Hazel Riley, who is a deputy sheriff of Oakland, Cal., is the only woman law officer in the United States, if not in the world, who uses an airplane in the discharge of her official duties. She calls it her patrol wagon. She keeps a sharp lookout for violators of the automobile speed laws.

Senor Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the Spanish author, after visiting many American cities, gives the preference to New York. He is going to Mexico to secure material for his next novel. He speaks of New York as the paradise of women because of the influence they exercise and the freedom they enjoy in the great metropolis.

William Butler Yeats, the Irish poet and playwright, who insists that "Ireland has politics on the brain" and will never quit "until Home Rule is obtained," is now in America. He looks the part of the poet and dreamer; is more than six feet tall and has a great shock of iron gray hair. He speaks English with an Irish accent. He is an Irish Nationalist, but declares the Sinn Feiners are the strongest politically.

Madame Patti was very fond of birds, whether stuffed or alive, and she had a collection of stuffed songsters from all over the world at Craig-y-Nos. They were artistically exhibited in glass cases, and had a large room to themselves; but the live birds were perhaps more interesting. There were seventeen of these, all parrots, many of them of most beautifully hued plumage. This fondness for parrots was one of the few traits in Madame Patti that were characteristically Italian.

The Prince of Wales seems likely to become quite an Empire tourist. He will probably leave for Australia and New Zealand in March. But this is not all. It is rumored that afterwards he will visit India like his illustrious father and grandfather before him. Those who are really intimate with the Prince realize how annoyed he is by the rather silly title "Prince of Wales" that was bestowed upon him by some of the papers in the United States. It is too fanciful entirely for King George's eldest son, who has a healthy contempt for flattery. In this respect he resembles King Edward, who hated the name of "Eddie" given to him in certain quarters long before the man-in-the-street affectionately dubbed His Majesty "Teddie."

Illustrating British ingenuity during the war, Sir William Sutherland, M.P., tells a good story of an Englishman's adventure in Budapest when Bela Kun and the Bolsheviks were in possession of the town. The Englishman, he said, was anxious to leave, but could not get a passport or other facilities. At last he went and sat in a train trusting to luck to escape. Bolsheviks approached the carriage and spoke to him, but he made signs that he did not understand. They brought some higher officials and he was interrogated again. This time he heatedly remarked: "Oh, buzz off! Buzz off!" These words seemed to make a great impression, said Sir William. Obediences were made, a notice put on the window, the carriage door was locked with the Englishman alone inside, and the train moved off. On the outside of the carriage was a notice bearing these words: "This compartment is reserved for Count Buzz Off."

Gentlemen,—It affords me great pleasure and must be gratifying to you to know that after using 30 bottles of your Liniment on a case of paralysis which my father was afflicted with, I was able to restore him to normal condition. ### HOME AND THE OFFICE.

Home is the place where the laughter should ring,
And man should be found at his best.
Let the cares of the day be as great as they may,
The night has been fashioned for rest.
So stand at the door when the tolling is o'er
And leave all your burdens behind,
And just be a dad to your girl or your lad—
A dad of the rollicking kind.

The office is made for the tasks you must face,
It is built for the work you must do;
You may sit there and sigh as your cares pile up high,
And no one may criticise you;
You may worry and fret as you think of your debt,
You may grumble when things go astray,
But when it comes night, and you shut your desk tight,
Don't carry the burdens away.

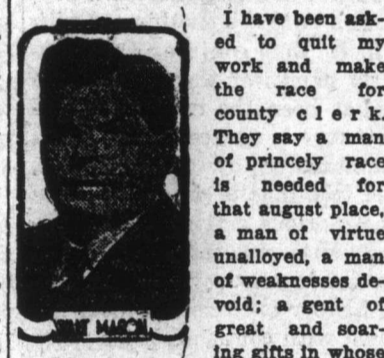

Keep daytime for toll and the nighttime for play,
Work as hard as you choose in the town,
But when the day ends, and the darkness descends,
Just forget that you're wearing a crown—
Go home with a smile! Oh, you'll find it worth while,
Go home light of heart and of mind;
Go home and be glad that you're loved as a dad,
A dad of the fun-loving kind.

Demand for Men.

The request, "Please bring a man!" appearing on invitation cards addressed to young girls by the hostesses of private and subscription dances has roused parental anxiety in many dove-cotes in suburban London. Since the war, there has been a "heavy shortage" of desirable young men at these functions, and there is also the problem of "how to get the girls home?" The hostess finds a ready solution to her difficulties in that happy phrase, which has been in vogue for the past three years: "Please bring a man!" "The result of this form of invitation," writes the father of a family of girls, "is that girls without brothers and their brothers' friends are either unable to accept invitations or have to ask a man—and I am led to believe in some cases any man they can get hold of—to go with them.

OFFICE.

THE MARCH

I have been asked to quit my work and make the race for county clerk. They say a man of princely race is needed for that august place, a man of virtue unalloyed, a man of weaknesses devoid; a gent of great and soaring gifts in whose renown there are no riffs; 'tis such a paragon they need, and so they come to me and plead. But when I see the weary jays who are in office all their days, who sometimes die but don't resign, I say, "No public snap in mine!" When I turn out a hand made song, the smiling neighbors come along, and say, "Old scout, you're doing well! Your latest anthem rung the bell!" The man who has a private task gets all the praise he could ask, if he gets down and does his best, at duty's eloquent behest. But when he finds himself in charge of public office, small or large, he cannot do his work so well that voters won't rear up and yell, as voters evermore have screeched, and say he ought to be impeached. I get a little word of praise when I produce some ringing lays, but if they made me county clerk, the populace would roast my work.

Famous Names.

"What's in a name," Shakespeare makes one of his heroines, Juliet, say, "that which we call a rose by any other name would smell as sweet." But it is not so in the British Navy. With my Lords of the Admiralty and the ratings of the fleet from the Admiral down to the cabin boy, names are something with which to conjure, particularly names of warships, which it has been the custom to perpetuate in successive ships, maintaining by this practice, the traditions of famous vessels and glorious actions from generation to generation in British naval history. What student of history is there who does not thrill with conscious pride when reading such names in the Navy list as Royal Oak, Revenge, Ramilies, Royal Sovereign, Benbow, Agincourt, Audacious, Centurion, Orion, Colossus, Vanguard, Temeraire, Bellerophon, Agamemnon, Swiftsure, Implacable, Vengeance, Glory, Magnificent, all ships of the present age, named in succession after their originals, each and all of which were ships of the line in the days of the wooden walls, the hemp and canvas. And each one has its individual history surrounded by a halo of glory and gallantry. Those named above are but a few, selected at random, from the many. Others there are equally distinguished, whose names will be carried into perpetuity so long as ships will be built for fighting purposes. When the days of battle are done, and the nations have "beaten their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks," the mere mention of the names of these fighting units will still be to their glorious and immortal memory, and a review of their career will conjure up many mental pictures of the days when Britannia ruled the waves.

Now comes the news that the custom of the Admiralty—though to a lesser extent—is about to be applied to the British merchant marine, a recent announcement by the Cunard Company being to the effect that six large ocean-going steamships now under construction are to be named after vessels of that fleet, which were lost during the war. It is doubtful, however, if the company will rename another Lusitania. To do so would revive sad memories of that tragic and terrible disaster of brutal murder on the high seas, done by the despicable Hun, but it would perpetuate and ever keep fresh in British minds the greatest horror of the war and serve as a reminder of the inhumanity and barbarism of this piratical and bloodthirsty deed. It would be a constant and ever present warning of the perfidy and slaughter lust of our late enemy, and would stand as a mentor between us and future relations with the descendants of the tribe of Von Tirpitz, et hoc genus omne, as an everlasting caution "Lest We Forget." Writing on the names of lost Commanders and the preservation of their fame, the Halifax Morning Chronicle says: "There will be a new Franconia, for example, to replace the steamer of that name which was sunk by a torpedo on October 1, 1916, while carrying troops between Malta and Greece. The Alaunia is to recall the vessel torpedoed fifteen days later off a lightship in the English Channel, and the Laconia, her predecessor, sunk on February 25, 1917. The Aurania was struck early in the following January near Londonderry, drifted for two days and nights and, going ashore at Tobermory, Island of Mull, became a total wreck. Seven lives were lost by the explosion of a torpedo which, on January 26, 1918, sank the Andania off the north of Ireland.

"The Ausonia had many adventures. One of the services she performed was to convey 2,000 refugees from Belgium to La Pallice in February, 1915; she was disabled by a torpedo in June, 1917, but signalled for help and was safely towed into Queenstown Harbor. On a later trip in May of the following year, when more than 600 miles from land, she became the mark for a German torpedo. About 150 of her passengers and crew took to the boats, and largely owing to the skill and heroism of the captain all succeeded in reaching the west coast of Ireland, where they were rescued by destroyers.

"These and many other ships of the merchant marine, which were lost during the war, contributed greatly towards the Allied victory, and it will be fitting and inspiring to maintain their glorious record and at the same time honor the noble services of the merchant marine, by perpetuating their names in new ships of the Cunard and other lines."

The Veterans' Wood-Working School.

One of the most interesting developments in connection with the re-training of our returned men has been the Wood-Working School established in the Callahan, Glass & Company's premises, Theatre Hill, and directed by Mr. W. B. Smith, formerly of the Empire Wood-Working Company. This institution commenced operations shortly after the New Year when the top flat was taken over by the Civil Re-establishment Committee and was quickly transformed into a practical workshop where many phases of wood working and carpentry are now being taught. Last week the Vocational Officer inspected the classes—numbering some twenty-two students—and made a close examination of the variety of the work being handled under the supervision of Mr. Smith. Beginning with the simple instruction in the handling of tools, etc., the students are rapidly advanced to rough sketching, planning, and final developments of mortise fitting, framing, box building and similar work which, in the brief period of two months, shows in a remarkably manner the intensity of the training being given there. Few, if any, of the veterans had handled carpenter's implements to any extent prior to their admission to the school, but those who have seen them after a fortnight's attendance will admit that they are almost adepts in the work already.

The training is interesting and varied. The most casual observer cannot fail to be struck with the air of industry and application which pervades the institution and that the course will be useful goes without saying. The utmost harmony exists between the veterans and their instructor, and the latter seems most anxious that only most proficient students should pass out of the wood working classes. Very little is known of the re-training which is now in progress in the several branches of Vocational work, but those who are conversant with the details are unanimous in their opinion that the present form of intensive instruction has meant a complete upheaval of their former theories of apprenticeship.

Schooner Abandoned and Recovered.

On Monday night, near Mutton Head, Trepassy Bay, the schooner Lila Boutlier, salt laden from Santa Pola, Spain, was abandoned by her crew on account of supposed danger resultant from her proximity to the land. Later, however, the crew returned to the vessel and on Tuesday night succeeded in working her to an anchorage in Trepassy Bay.

At the Majestic.

An all-Fox show—the first to be seen at the Majestic so far—was thoroughly enjoyed last night by a packed house. Gladys Brockwell, in the splendid feature "The Divorce Trap," starred to great advantage. There was a Fox comedy and a Mutt and Jeff cartoon which kept the hall in roars of laughter. Without doubt, however, the feature picture was the star attraction, for the plot and story were the most compellingly forceful screened at the leading picture house for months. Pretty Gladys Brockwell was never better and her supporters were drawn with a taste that could be owned by no one but William Fox. The topic treated was one that is of vital importance to the entire civilized world—divorce. The handling of the subject is trebling worth seeing.

The Evil Dope.

Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir,—The uncalled for attack on Judge Morris in this morning's News in a letter headed "The Dope Evil," contributed by one who signs himself "Methodist," is one of the most cowardly insults that could be hurled at the head of the rawest recruit in the police force, let alone a Judge of the Central District Court. The writer, after lauding to the skies the untiring efforts of Inspector General Hutchings, in enforcing the provisions of the Prohibition Act, turns the fire of his wrath and indignation on Judge Morris. For the information of your readers permit me to quote in full that portion of "Methodist's" letter which I, and I feel confident all fair-minded citizens, are disgusted with, viz.: "On the other hand, the action of Judge Morris on several recent occasions when he has sweepingly accused a large section of the public of being hypocrites and fanatics because they supported prohibition, is not calculated to advance the Bench he occupies in public esteem or confidence. There are many prohibitionists who resent such epithets being thrown at them promiscuously by a Judge of the Central District Court, notwithstanding recent events." Whether or not Judge Morris is going to let such statements as these go unchallenged, I cannot say, but knowing the Judge for his goodness of heart towards his enemies, I am not prepared to see the dignity of the Court dragged down into the gutter by the ravings and rantings of such irresponsibles. "Methodist," like a good many others, labors under the false impression, that the people of the Methodist faith are the one and only people who brought about prohibition, forgetting the fact that the thousands of good and well meaning Anglicans, Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, Salvationists and others who favored the measure, took just as much interest in the movement, and are therefore entitled to the same measure of praise. This kind of cheap talk smacks too much of Who Won the War. Why misjudge the Judge? Thanking you for space in your highly esteemed paper, I remain, Yours truly, PROTESTANT. Feb. 26, 1920.

 Heavy losses have been inflicted by French troops upon Turkish irregular forces near Marash, in the Vilayet of Aleppo, Syria, it was announced in the House of Lords by the Earl of Crawford to-day. General Gouraud has sent important reinforcements to the scene, which he hoped would be sufficient to control the situation, Lord Crawford added.

SMITH ARRIVES AT MELBOURNE.
LONDON, Feb. 25.

KAISERISM IN LABOR.
Mr. Richards, M.P., General Secretary of the South Wales Miners' Union, addressing a meeting of workmen and discharged soldiers at Ebbwvale, said that the working classes were, by reason of their strength, beginning to boss everyone, but they might cease the worship of the German ideal that might was right.

CONSIDERING H. C. I.
LONDON, Feb. 25.

REPORT ON IRISH CONDITIONS.
LONDON, Feb. 25.
 The report of the commission of Labor men, which recently investigated conditions in Ireland, is a strong denunciation of what is characterized as British misrule of Ireland, which the report declares, "would drive any spirited nation into deep seated and dangerous discontent," adding that where the administration is not merely unintelligent, it appears to be deliberately provocative. The economic regeneration of Ireland, which would help materially to destroy existing animosities, and speedily efface the memory of historic wrongs, the report adds "cannot be successfully achieved, unless and until the political problem is solved. The fundamental necessity therefore is a change in the political system." The report consists largely of detailed examples of "the senseless attitude of the administration's regressive measures with the result that every institution of which the British citizen is so proud, free press, freedom of speech, liberty of subject and trial by jury is a thing of the past in a large part of Ireland." The report continues, "while unreservedly condemning political outrages, such as the shooting of policemen, we are bound to say that no evidence is forthcoming that such shootings preceded the application of the policy of rigorous repression."

NEW HOME RULE BILL.
LONDON, Feb. 25.
 The bill for Irish Home Rule, long promised by the Government was presented in the House of Commons to-day. The first reading was of the title alone, and was a mere formality preliminary to taking up the measure at the session to-morrow. The present bill, it is understood, adheres fairly closely to the measure as outlined by Lloyd George in the House in December last. The Government's project centers on the setting up of two parliaments in Ireland, one South and one North. Home Rule as the Government hopes to give it to Ireland, is based primarily upon the declaration of the Premier in his Dec. speech, that "Great Britain cannot accept separation" but the largest opportunity will be given to the Irish people to unite into one constitutional parliament in the course of time, which will embrace Ireland as a whole. For the North of Ireland the area embraced will probably include the six counties mentioned by the Premier in his original outline, with possibly some slight modifications, as a consequence of which the Northern parliament will be a very much smaller body than the Southern organization.

FLEEING FROM ARCHANGEL.
CHRISTIANIA, Feb. 25.
 Russian ice-breakers, with General Miller, Governor General at Archangel, members of the former White Government, and about two thousand fugitives, arrived at Hammerfest, Thursday from Archangel.

LONDON, Feb. 25.
 Advice received in London are to the effect that there was a serious mutiny, several days ago, among native troops stationed at Kovno, Lithuania. The mutiny was quickly suppressed and the situation is now normal. The despatch said it was believed that the mutiny was due to Polish intrigue, but that investigation indicated that Bolshevik agents were responsible for it.

Stowaways Seek Redress

Three natives of Barbados, in summer raiment, complained to the court to-day that they were compelled to sleep on deck in a vessel which recently arrived from their native land, and that they had been ill-fed and otherwise badly treated by the ship's crew. They asked that the captain be compelled to take them on board ship and land them home again. The negroes are stowaways.

In the Prize Ring.

JOHNNY KILBANE COME BACK.

Jersey City, Feb. 4.—Johnny Kilbane is as foolish as a fox. That accounts for the featherweight champion "retiring" since 1917 when he was knocked out by Benny Leonard, lightweight leader.

Johnny won the title on points from Abe Attell in 20 rounds in 1910. From then on until 1917 he cleaned up everything in sight in his division so well that there was nothing for him to do but step out of his class. He stepped out too far, however, when he took on the champion of the lightweight division.

After being put to sleep by Leonard, Kilbane announced that he would retire from the ring. This at once brought out any number of feathers who were willing to accept the title. Seeing a lot of nice purses along the horizon Kilbane decided to postpone his retiring act for a while.

Things were shaping up nicely for the champion when the war came on and the boxing game fell asleep. Kilbane hired himself to a cantonment and became a boxing instructor for the soldiers.

The war brought out a lot of new seekers for Johnny's title and he again decided to play and extended "farewell" engagement. This has lasted

Lord Bryce and the Fate of the Near East.

Turkish Rule Must Vanish From the Lands It Has Ruined—No Turkish Control East of the Taurus Mountains.

"The Eastern Question has been for a century or more the standing difficulty of European diplomacy. It would have been settled many years ago but for the jealousies of Russia, France, Britain, and, lastly, of Germany also, each of which had what it deemed to be its special interests, interests which, in some points at least, we can now see to have been misconceived."

—Viscount Bryce.

"The time is now at hand," writes Lord Bryce in the Contemporary Review, "when the Treaty with Turkey has to be negotiated which will settle the fate of the peoples of the Near East for years, possibly for many years to come, and when it becomes a matter of supreme importance that its terms should be just, should conform to those principles of nationality and self-determination which the Allied and Associated Powers have clearly and repeatedly proclaimed as the basis of their joint policy, and should be a true expression of the sentiments and wishes of the free Allied peoples which entered on the war with a sincere desire to build up upon the foundations of justice and right a peace that will endure."

What of Constantinople?

"What is to become of what was in 1914 the Turkish Empire? I will confine myself to three branches of it, the arrangements to be made regarding Constantinople, regarding Asia Minor, and regarding Armenia."

"Constantinople, the city of two continents, with its unrivalled strategic and commercial position between two great seas, controlling the passage from one to the other, cannot be left in the hands of the Turk. It has been for a century a focus of political intrigue. It had been, for a long period, the greatest nest of scoundrels the modern world has known."

"All sorts of greedy and unscrupulous adventurers from every part of Europe and of Western Asia have congregated there and thriven in the foetid atmosphere which a corrupt Government created. That atmosphere will last as long as that Government lasts, and will work evil to all the surrounding regions. Whatever administration may be installed, Turkish administration and Turkish sovereignty must be expunged."

Not a Muslim City.

"Attempts have been made recently to alarm British public opinion by representing that to extinguish Turkish rule in the city would give offence to Muslim sentiment all over the East, and especially in India. As to this three remarks are to be made."

"The first is that Constantinople is not a Muslim city. The majority of the population is, and has been ever since its capture by the Sultan Mohammed II. in A.D. 1453, Christian and not Muslim."

"Secondly, it is not to Muslims a sacred city. Mecca and Medina are sacred; Jerusalem is, Damascus is, Kairwan is, or, at least, was, till its great mosque was desecrated by the French troops in their conquest of Tunisia more than thirty years ago. But Stambul, as the Turks call it, is not sacred. The only place to which any sanctity in Muslim eyes attaches is the tomb of Eyoub, a Muslim, who fell in one of the Arab sieges of the city in the seventh century."

"Thirdly, the Khalifate is not, as has been erroneously stated, in any way connected with Constantinople."

"There is not, in the opinion of many high authorities upon Islamic beliefs, any reason to apprehend that offence would be given to Muslim religious sentiment by the transfer of the Khalifate to any other seat of royalty, and many of those who well know the East tell us that to recoil before shadowy terrors of this nature would do far more harm to European and in particular to British prestige in the East than a firm exertion of the rights which the victory of the Allies has given them to accomplish what the interests of justice and peace require. It would be culpable weakness to show favour to a Government guilty of the gigantic crimes the Turks have perpetrated."

What of Asia Minor?

"This brings me to the second question: What is to become of Asia Minor? by which I mean the peninsula lying between the Black Sea on the north and the Levant on the south, and bounded on the east by a line drawn from Trebizond on the former sea to Alexandretta (at the corner where Cilicia and Syria meet) on the latter. This line corresponds, roughly, in some districts, with the general direction of the great mountain range we call Taurus."

"Now the question of the disposition of Asia Minor is complicated by the existence of an agreement secretly made during the war, between the Governments of Russia, France, Great Britain, and Italy assigning different districts of the then Turkish Empire to the protection or control of one or other of these Powers."

"In the interior of Asia Minor and along the coasts of the Black Sea westward from Trebizond, the bulk of the rural population is Mohammedan, and might desire to remain under a Mohammedan Government, bad as that of the Turks has been. In principle, therefore, there seems to be no objection to leaving these regions under a Sultanate, which might have for its seat Konia, once the capital of the Seljuk Sultans who preceded the rise of the Ottoman power."

A New Khalif?

"If the Mohammedan world should prefer to recognize as Khalif such a Sultan rather than the King of the Hedjaz, whose claim would (according to the law of Islam) be far stronger, he may have the Khalifate as well as his Sultanate. It is better to leave that matter to be settled by Muslim opinion."

About Armenia.

"The responsibilities which a mandate for Armenia would involve have (I venture to believe) been much exaggerated. The various sections of the non-Christian population would be almost as glad as the Christians to be rid of their old oppressor, and could get on well together when he had vanished. Only a comparatively small military force would be needed, for the forces already at the disposal of the Armenian Republic would, if supplied with munitions of war and receiving some high officers to train and command them, be able to protect the country against the Turkish or Kurdish bands, while American civil officials and engineers were creating a local administration and developing by road-making its abundant, though long neglected resources.

"Whatever arrangement may be made to secure peace and a prospect of prosperity for these sorely-ried Christian peoples, upon whom at last some rays of hope have begun to fall after centuries of gloom and misery, one thing is essential. Turkish rule, in any form, or under any pretext, must absolutely vanish from the lands it has ruined. 'No Turkish control east of Taurus mountains' must be the principle from which any plan for the future administration of those lands will have to start."

"The Turk is hopeless, incapable, incurable. To replace him as a ruler over populations of another faith and race, whom he has plundered and slaughtered for many centuries, would be a crime against those principles of right and humanity for which in this war millions of noble lives have been given," concludes Lord Bryce.—Public Opinion.

Making Deserts to Blossom.

"If war has devastated much of Europe it has undoubtedly re-created Mesopotamia," says the Manchester Guardian.

"The British army has there carried out for its own purposes such a programme of public works as has no parallel in that ancient land since one of its first conquerors, Alexander the Great, started the scientific irrigation system on which its prosperity depends. Adequate and permanent roads have been made, linking Basra with Bagdad and beyond. Through the desert lands that fringe the Euphrates a railway runs that has given new life to the country. Sanitation, town-planning, bridging, and building have been carried on apace. Above all, the canalisation and damming of the great rivers that give life-blood to the land have been done with an energy of which the Turks were incapable. The British Army has thus left a rich legacy for the new Arab State."

"Who is to bear the cost? A report just issued tries, with admirable fairness, to separate, in the list of new public works, those which should be a charge on Imperial army funds from those which should be charged as a debt to local resources. The amount suggested as a fair charge on the revenues of the new State is some two millions, and it is in respect of irrigation works, roads, bridges, and the like. But the canalisation and fertilising that made possible the feeding of our armies on the spot instead of with imported grain which would have employed transport badly needed for other uses was a necessary military measure; so, too, was the construction of roads, railways, and bridges; and it is difficult to discover a principle on which any moiety of these costs can be debited to the new State, greatly though it will benefit by the whole expenditure."

"Is the sum worth haggling about? Would it not be more dignified and also more expedient to make to the new nation, for whose government we shall hold the mandate, a present of the public works we have constructed in the securing of its freedom, rather than to seek to exact from it an

The Ill-Fated Jacobite Rising.

Like all the other schemes of the Jacobites, upon whom Destiny appears to have laid the curse of inefficiency, the rebellion of 1715 was ill-planned, ill-concerted and ill-conducted. It followed, therefore, as a matter of course that it was ill-fated. The indecisive battle of Sheriffmuir took all the vigour out of it in Scotland; in England it came to an ignominious collapse with the surrender of the Jacobites, after a feeble resistance at Preston. Forster, who commanded, was no soldier; the Scotsman McIntosh, while a good soldier, had no influence; of the other leaders, the most notable was the Earl of Derwentwater, and his judgment never really had approved of the venture into which he was hurried by his wife's impetuous spirit. Born in 1689, he was but 26 at the time, and though gifted with much charm of manner, had no great force of character. The other lords, Nithsdale, Kenmore, Winstoun and Carnwath, were Scots with no influence in England, and brought with them no following from Scotland. The first is best known by his escape from the Tower through the devotion of his wife, who changed clothes with him. Forster, also, escaped from Newgate, with McIntosh and many others, in circumstances suggestive of connivance on the part of the keepers. Winstoun and Carnwath were pardoned, but Derwentwater and Kenmore had to pay the penalty, the king repulsing all solicitations on their behalf. Accordingly, they were executed on Tower Hill, Feb. 28, 1716, and died with fortitude. Of men of inferior rank, twenty-six were executed, and so the curtain fell on the ill-starred attempt. Thirty years later, it was to rise on a similar drama, destined to have a similar ending.

England's Financial Dilemma.

The dilemma in which England finds herself with regard to money matters is one over whose solution leading bankers and financial men are divided, along diametrically opposed lines of thought, according to Arthur W. Kiddy, Financial Editor of The Morning Post, writing in the Journal of the Canadian Bankers' Association.

"Briefly stated," he says, "opinion at the present time, even in the highest banking circles, is sharply divided with regard to the policy which should be pursued in the future. One school of thought advocates that the course of money rates should be kept as low as may be consistent with safety, the idea being that low money rates will stimulate production and that the only way to get prices of commodities down, and indeed the only way to get anything like a return to normal conditions without undue social disturbance, is to wait patiently until production has begun to overtake consumption when (so it is urged) matters will be adjusted without any undue social disturbance. To attempt in any way at the present time to curtail either credit or currency would be to risk a severe financial and commercial crisis, with consequent unemployment, which, added to the financial disturbance, might occasion something approaching a semi-revolutionary movement.

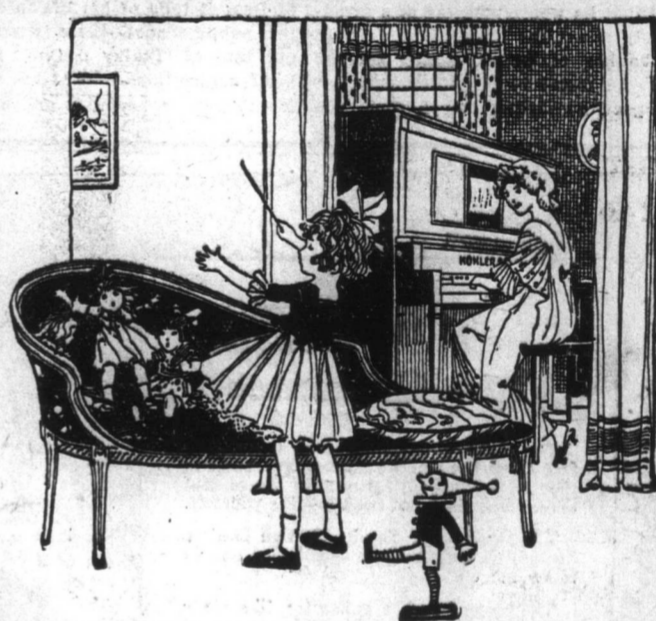

"On the other hand, those who advocate the imposition of dearer money and a gradual process of deflation urge that such measures are necessary in view of the part which has been played in raising prices of commodities by extended credit and expanded currency. Moreover so far from checking healthy trade expansion, it is maintained that there is at the present time a tendency on the part of manufacturers to hold up goods in the expectation of still higher prices, and this, it is considered, would be checked if these manufacturers and traders were unable to carry these stocks on cheap money.

and with much truth, that both here and in the United States there has been considerable abuse of low money rates in the sense that they have ministered to speculative operations when every farthing of credits was acquired to finance genuine trade activities. And further, it is also maintained that if gradual deflation is not commenced at once there will be just as much danger of social disorders arising out of inflation and high prices of commodities as would arise from any temporary inconvenience occasioned by gradual contraction."

Mr. Kiddy leans rather strongly towards the latter alternative, pointing out that in similar crises history shows that any trouble which has arisen has been due to sudden restriction of credit facilities rather than to dearer money. "Let it be known that at a price there are ample credit facilities," he says, "and usually nothing worse happens than a severe economy of credits, so that bankers and other great dealers in credit see to it that such facilities are not frittered away in speculations, but are used for genuine trade purposes."

Historic Firth of Forth.

The Firth of Forth is, of course, one of the most notable things in all Scotland. From Kinross, where it officially begins, to that imaginary line just west of the Isle of May, from the East Neuk of Fife to the mouth of the Tyne, in Haddingtonshire, where it officially ends, is a distance of 48 miles; while from shore to shore the expanse of water measures anything from one and a half miles, at Queensferry to seventeen and a half miles off the Isle of May. Within this great expanse of water whole fleets may ride at anchor in perfect safety, and although little is known of the great scenes which must have taken place in these waters during the last four years, the story of the Firth of Forth during the great war, culminating as it did with the surrender there of the German high seas fleet, will be not the least interesting of the many stories which still remain to be written.

A Comforting Opinion.

"There will be no recurrence in this generation of the flu epidemic," says one of Ottawa's foremost physicians, Dr. H. C. Church. "Chicago and New York haven't got the flu at all," he declared, recently. "The cases reported are nothing more or less than what is popularly known as grippe. The symptoms are not different and the death rate no higher than the old and more familiar affliction. In my Ottawa practice I do not know of one person who had been attacked with the flu who has had a recurrence. The attack seems to have immunized those who once fell victims and survived, while those not attacked were not susceptible to the disease at all. This scourge undoubtedly has swept the world in past ages. Its origin is mysterious and its sweep is widespread and disastrous. But a generation, or perhaps many generations, will elapse before it comes again in the deadly form that it did in 1918."

A Human Quadruped.

A young officer at the Front wrote home to his father: "Dear Father—Kindly send me fifty pounds at once. Lost another leg in a stiff engagement, and am in hospital without means."
